Mr. WOODSWORTH: Undoubtedly at the present moment that proposition would be repudiated, as the applause would indicate, by both the present government and the official opposition. Certainly it would be repudiated by the group in this corner. But behind the urge for a national government there lies a genuine desire to meet real need. It is felt by many that the present parliamentary system is failing to function properly in providing for the needs of the people. I see the ex-Minister of Justice shaking his head.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I agree with my hon. friend so far as the present government is concerned.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, and thereby he brings this right back to party lines. I am trying to get away from party considerations. At the present time the government says that it is responsible and it will not permit us to offer much in the way of suggestions or real cooperation. If we cooperate, we must cooperate on the government's own terms, they having all the sweets and emoluments of office and all the rest. At present, with an election in sight, the Liberals are of course feeling very cocky and self-confident, and they would refuse to cooperate because in a very short time they have bright hopes, especially after last night—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): They are not so bright this morning.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Well, perhaps they are not so bright the day after, but they have bright hopes that before so very long they will have the exclusive responsibility for the government of the country and they again will enjoy all the sweets and emoluments of office to the exclusion of any other party. In this way we saw backwards and forwards, and for this no blame can be attached to any member of the house individually. I think most of the members are concerned about such a problem as this, but as we are lined up in two or three, if not antagonistic, then rival parties, it becomes almost impossible for us to discuss a question of this kind on its merits. It was only the other day I was re-reading a most interesting report presented to the British house in 1928 by the Right Hon. the Earl of Donoughmore, chairman of a special committee on a constitution for Ceylon. In that report they advocated that the parliament should adopt more or less of the county council plan or that carried out by the League of Nations; that is, that they meet together on common ground and discuss matters in departmental committees; the committee takes the responsibility for action and in that way they overcome the necessity for anything like purely party decisions. In view of the present emergency we might very well consider some modification of the organization and rules of this house so that we might get down to real business. The emergency, as the hon. member for East Toronto has said, is comparable to that which arose at the time of the war, and it ought to be met in some such spirit as was then manifest.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): Mr. Chairman, we are now considering bill 41 for the relief of unemployed throughout the country. The preamble of this bill is as follows:

Whereas the provinces may require further assistance in carrying out necessary relief measures and in meeting financial conditions as the same may arise; and whereas in such event it is in the national interest that parliament should support and supplement the relief measures of the provinces and grant them financial assistance in such manner and to such extent as the governor in council may deem expedient.

Do you not think, Mr. Chairman, that we should take this opportunity to avail ourselves of the benefits offered by this bill, in order to support an institution that is truly national by its nature: I am referring to the great French university, of this beautiful university which we have in this country, the University of Montreal.

Some years ago, full of confidence in the future of our race and of our province, a few courageous men decided to enrich our metropolis with as perfect a university as could be justified by the place that we occupy in the world, as the second largest French city.

It was a grand undertaking, but it was also a plan that sprang from the purest patriotism, from the legitimate pride of our race and from our desire to give the intellectual elite of our province the means of improving their university training and teaching, in order to produce a greater number of highly qualified men, so that the people of our race may take their rightful place in the intellectual and economic spheres, and also to rouse dormant talents, to bring them to light and make them contribute to a larger extent to the intellectual and material progress of Canada.

Seven million dollars have been spent on that building and since three years all work has been stopped for lack of funds; seven millions engulfed in that undertaking; seven millions which remain unproductive. The future of our race is linked with the development of our higher studies. If we suffer from a marked inferiority wherever education counts, in the industrial field as well as in the technical departments of the Dominion or even provincial government, it is because we always lacked the financial means to properly develop our higher studies and produce capable men which among our people are ever present in a latent state.

I do not wish to establish as a principle that only educated men may succeed in the material sphere. That would mean that all our business men and all those who acquired wealth owe their success to their higher education. No, that is not true, but it is a fact that all those who succeeded owe it mostly to their ability in surrounding themselves with educated and competent men whose efforts they directed for their own benefit. Well, our English speaking fellow citizens had among their own people a larger number of competent men whose services they utilized to build up their fortune; and we unfortunately realize that among our own people, those who succeeded owe it to their association with another race than their own, not because we are less intelligent, but because we are not as well prepared for the acquisition of wealth.

The distinguished rector of Laval University of Quebec, Mgr. Camille Roy, sounded the alarm in his last lecture before the Canadian Club in Quebec. He attributed our inferiority in industry and the civil service to the insufficient development of our higher education, due to a lack of funds among our universities. When such a distinguished man, who has devoted all his life to education and who is perhaps the highest authority among our educational leaders, points out so clearly what our educational system lacks; when he mentions what is probably the greatest cause of our inferiority in this Dominion, can we possibly fold our arms and witness the falling off of our educational system without raising our voice?

We are a race of individualists, ordinarily incapable of voluntarily sacrificing ourselves to allow others to build with our money, although, in times of crisis, we are ready to sacrifice ourselves enthusiastically for the common salvation. So great is our respect for civil and religious authority, so strong is our belief in the strength and power of the church and of the state that we never seriously entertain the idea that they may really need our help. We are accustomed to leave our educational problem to our clergy and our religious institutions with never a thought of helping them. And our clergy perform each year the miracle of providing us with an education as nearly perfect as possible with a budget five times smaller than that of the English schools and universities.

Compare, for instance, the resources of our university with those of McGill. McGill university, with endowments and investments amounting to $18,566,463 and grounds, buildings and equipment valued at $12,826,845, has total assets of $31,393,308 and enjoyed, in 1931, a revenue of $2,480,911. For the same year, the University of Montreal owned in endowments and investments the sum of $221,366, compared with McGill's 18 millions, and grounds and buildings valued at $7,898,010, making total assets of $8,119,376, against McGill's 31 millions. Our university's revenue amounted to $253,644, against McGills' two and a half millions. I shall spare you further statistics for the moment, but these figures alone show the miracle which our university accomplishes each year in giving us so complete an education with such limited resources. There is one thing, however, that makes us hope to possess some day a university as complete as McGill. Our university buildings are valued at 8 millions, compared with McGill's 12 millions. About three million dollars more are required to complete the work undertaken, so that when these three millions have been spent we will have a university fully as well equipped as McGill.

The question now arises of where to get these three millions. In the face of the present world-disrupting crisis, we do not know what to do. It is clear that, had the prosperity of 1927 continued, we would have no university problem; the public would have subscribed all the money required. But prosperity is no longer with us. Why? To a certain extent, we do not know. However, the condition exists and we have to fight it. But it is useless to recriminate and to attribute the responsibility to others, as each one is probably responsible to some extent for the present state of affairs. The crisis seems to be largely due to a lack of general orientation. Every man and every government knows something about it, but the policy followed with the greatest conviction by every one is to do nothing. Feeling ourselves isolated and not knowing which way to turn, we have so to speak organized a strike of our resources and capital.

To put an end to this intolerable situation, there is need of a practical policy founded on order, logic and method. What solution have we so far found for this problem? Direct relief. It is generally admitted that the direct relief system is demoralizing our population and leading us inevitably to ruin. We cannot much longer continue maintaining in idleness a portion of our population, for that is the surest way to bring about communism. All our governments admit it, and the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) stated on the radio that he wished to abandon as soon as possible the system of direct relief, in order to undertake public works that would provide our working population with remunerative employment. It is following this speech that I conceived the idea of suggesting to the Prime Minister of my country that he contribute one million dollars towards the completion of the University of Montreal. This million dollars would be used entirely to pay wages to workers who would be taken from the ranks of the unemployed. For a few dollars more per week, we could provide our working people with employment, instead of, as at present, doling them out, thus humiliating and demoralizing charity. Direct relief is already costing millions to the federal government.

It must not be forgotten that the number of assisted persons would be doubled if every man out of work applied for relief. Fortunately for the federal treasury, our people are proud, and so long as some member of a family has some resources he uses them to assist his relatives and sometimes his friends. That is why I insist so strongly on doing away with the system of direct relief that tends to demoralize our workers and destroy their willingness to work and their initiative. It is work that we want for our labouring classes. And we want useful works that will be a credit to the country as a whole.

Is it possible to find a nobler institution to build up than a great university that could impart to our population the education necessary to the formation of competent men in all fields of our national life? The development of our higher educational system is of prime necessity to the prestige and success of our race. Consequently, we must give it all the encouragement possible. Our individual means may not be great, but our moral power is enormous and we have a right to our fair share of the national resources.

We have a right to demand that our share of these resources be applied in such a way as to do us the greatest good. If the people of Montreal and all the organized bodies in the city would unite with me in an effort to ask the Dominion government to devote a million of the relief money to the completion of the University of Montreal buildings, I am sure the government would grant that request. The more so that, if the Dominion government would grant us that money, the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal would do likewise, and we would have three millions to complete this undertaking.

Every country is proud of its universities and I am sure that, in all those who are listening to me, a patriotic chord is vibrating when I ask for a Catholic and French university that would proudly stand on the slopes of Mount Royal, for a magnificent monument that would be an attraction for all visitors and a source of pride for all French Canadians. But there is also the practical side: the establishment of a centre of learning that will properly develop the natural gifts of our race in all spheres of national life. I think our duty is to enrich the city of Montreal, the second largest French city in the world, with a university worthy of its high standing; and I would like to see those buildings entirely completed by the unemployed of the city, with the hope that the completion of the work will coincide with the end of the depression. And I firmly believe that, if the Dominion government decides on a rational policy of public works, it will bring peace to the minds of our people and will give to the rest of the country the confidence that is essential to put back to productive use non-active assets, as are those of our university at the present time.

Mr. Chairman, I earnestly invite you to heed the voice of our members of parliament; I appeal to all French speaking members of my province and of the country; I urgently ask them to unite on this question, which I consider a national one, and to take the steps to have the necessary amount voted for the University of Montreal. It is an enterprise of which you all want to see the completion, and the only influence I ask for is your outspoken support. You may rest assured that my voice will then be heard in this parliament with all the more strength that I shall be speaking on behalf of three million French Canadians.

Mr. MacINNIS: Mr. Chairman, I have not very much to say in connection with this bill. I find myself in complete agreement with what was stated yesterday by the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe). Much as I respect him it is not very often I can agree with him on matters of policy. I must say however that I am quite in accord with everything he said about this measure. The party at present in office were elected in 1930 on a policy of ending unemployment; they gave the people of this dominion to understand that they had a solution for the problem. Generally speaking hon. members in this corner of the chamber have been very patient; as a matter of fact I believe we have been too patient. We have given the government every opportunity to fulfil its promises, and on many occasions we have offered every assistance to put into effect a program which would end unemployment.

Not only in 1930 but again, immediately before calling this session of parliament, the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) told the people of Canada he was going to start the machinery moving which would improve conditions. Some hon. members have said they have been disappointed but I have not been disappointed because I did not expect anything. I knew very well the Prime Minister could not improve conditions without laying hands on the sacred rights of private property, and I am quite convinced he has not yet reached the point where he is willing to do that. In his last radio speech he said:

> In the main I have really tried to make these business talks. To tell you the truth I am so gripped by the necessity for action, I am so anxious about the development of these reforms that I have little time to think of politics.

After giving us that very strong statement we now have dished out to us this warmed-over bill, one which we have had placed before us for the last four years. It has been warmed over each year. Some of the ingredients may be left out in the present instance, or some others may be included, but on the whole it is the same bill. I notice the preamble begins with the usual statement that—> —the provinces may require further assistance in carrying out necessary relief measures and in meeting financial conditions as the same may arise.

There is no "may" in the matter, at all. The provinces do need assistance. The western provinces are practically bankrupt and cannot meet the obligations confronting them without the assistance of this government; and carrying on as we do I am quite convinced that even this government cannot continue much longer to carry the burden. However, until that time comes I think the government should do everything that is necessary to improve the living conditions of the people.

My colleague from North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) for comparative figures of unemployment and those on relief during the last year, and the minister replied that he did not have the figures with him at the time. However, a parliamentary return was brought down a few days ago showing the number on relief month by month from January, 1934 to January, 1935, and despite the apparent improvement which the minister told us of yesterday, according to the figures given in that return there is little diminution in the number of those receiving direct relief.

In the parliamentary return which I have before me I find that in January, 1934 there were 1,292,065 persons receiving direct relief, and in January of this year the number was 1,183,690, a drop of a little over 100,000. Now if you take the figures in the return you will find that since April of last year the number receiving relief decreased until the month of October, 1934, and then the number began to increase and it has increased ever since. If we take the amount of the increase in 1934 and assume that there has been a similar increase in 1935 there would have been at the end of February over 1,200,000 on direct relief. That is besides those who have been receiving relief in an indirect way, in the National Defence camps, for instance, and working on various government projects.

Mr. GORDON: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. member would permit me to interject so that the members will not be misled by the calculations and assumptions made by the hon. member? I may say to him that the preliminary figures for February, 1935, which have just come to hand in the last day or two, disclose that there were across Canada on direct relief only 1,054,821. Always bear in mind that these figures are received by us from the provinces, and they are compiled showing the number of persons, men, women and children, who receive direct relief, not thirty days in the month, but if they receive only partial relief they are included in this figure. It is most difficult, and in fact every country in the world recognizes the difficulty, of trying to set up figures that reflect certainties with respect to matters like unemployment. The mobility of the individual and the very nature of the thing itself renders it impossible to have authentic figures which will show at a given time those who may be unemployed or on relief, and information of that kind.

Mr. HEAPS: Arising out of the figures which the minister has just given, may I ask if the 1,054,821 was not the actual number of men, women and children, in receipt of government relief in February last?

Mr. GORDON: Direct relief, yes, for varying periods of time.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am pleased that the minister has been able to give to the house the correct number of people on direct relief during the month of February last. I am glad also to note that seemingly there has been a drop since January. However, the drop is a very small one, and after five years of solving the unemployment problem, and after five radio speeches, as one of my colleagues suggests, it is not a very good record. It does not show any substantial improvement in industrial conditions in this country.

In the figures that were given yesterday it was overlooked altogether that, though there may have been some increase in the number of those employed, the population of the country has been increasing, and this would be reflected in the number of those who were unemployed.

Mr. GORDON: May I interject again? The hon. member says that there is no appreciable improvement, but if we go back to the low point of the depression we find that in April, 1933, the figure was almost 1,600,000, and to-day it is just slightly over 1,000,000. So do not let us be too pessimistic and gloomy. Try and cheer up a little.

Mr. MacINNIS: It is exceedingly easy for the minister to be cheerful in the matter.

Mr. GORDON: No, it is not. All I want to be is correct, and cheerful.

Mr. SPOTTON: Perhaps the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. MacInnis) is not cheerful because he may lose his job.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am not the only one who is likely to lose his job, and I am afraid my hon. friend would find it more difficult to do hard work than I would. I have done it before and am quite willing to do it again, and that is more than can be said of some others. I say it is quite easy for the minister to be cheerful in the matter, but the record is not a cheerful one, and until we have a much more cheerful record and a much greater improvement I do not think there need be much crowing from the other side of the house. But even if conditions are improving, and let us say they are, the condition of the provinces and the municipalities is daily getting worse. Anyone who has been reading the papers from western Canada, from British Columbia, for instance, during the last few months, must realize the situation there. The city of Vancouver is practically bankrupt, and if it defaults I do not think there is any possibility of the province of British Columbia saving itself. It will be involved in the default of the city of Vancouver, and the same is true of the other western provinces as well.

I think it was the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Willis) who said this afternoon that some people think that governments are a kind of Santa Claus who should provide for everybody. As a matter of fact, if the people of Canada have the idea that the government is a sort of Santa Claus, it is the political parties of this country who have given them the idea, because in every election they come before the people and tell them, "Elect us and everything will be fine; we will see that you will have work and wages; unemployment will be ended; business will improve," and all that sort of thing, without any help from the people themselves; it is all going to be done by Santa Claus—the government. I have never led the people to believe that the government should be a Santa Claus. As a matter of fact, governments have nothing to give unless they first take it away from the people. Whatever they have they must first get in taxes, and taxes come out of produced wealth. Let us follow this a bit further.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, Hear.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am glad my hon. friends are in agreement. Taxes come out of produced wealth. There are only two classes which produce wealth, the working class in the city and the farmers in the country. During the past few years the production of wealth has decreased to a very great extent, and you cannot increase taxation when the production of wealth is decreasing. The production of wealth will continue to decrease as long as markets continue to decrease. Production to-day is dependent upon the making of a profit. Markets will continue to decrease, consequently, the wealth out of which taxes are paid will also continue to decrease because the produced goods cannot be sold. No matter how much hon. friends opposite may try to improve conditions, they cannot do it under these circumstances. There is only one way in which the lot of the working class can be improved and that is by releasing production from the restrictions placed upon it by the profit motive. That is the only way in which we can get over our difficulties, but it is not likely that it wil lbe done. This government has forfeited any right which it may have had to consideration in connection with this or any other matter, and any hon. member who opposes this measure is well within his rights. The people are asking for bread and the government is offering them a stone.

Mr. COOTE: Mr. Chairman, could the minister give us the total expenditures which have been made for relief by the various governments? If we are to deal effectively with unemployment in Canada we should give some thought to the causes of unemployment. We seem to overlook the fact that agriculture is the basic industry of Canada, and when the purchasing power of the farm people has been as low as it has been during the past four years we cannot expect anything but unemployment in the cities. We have permitted economic conditions to get out of balance. Hon. members are apt to forget the terrific drop which has occurred in the prices of farm products with the consequent decrease in the income of people living on the farms. The revenue received by the farmers of Canada represents the greatest source of purchasing power in this country. I think it is worth while to draw to the attention of the committee the fact that the net farm income of Canada for the years 1931 to 1934 was only $1,744,000,000, as compared wih a revenue of $4,012,000,000 for the period 1926 to 1929. In four years there was a drop in purchasing power of $2,268,000,000 or fifty-seven per cent. The net revenue received by the farmers in the latter period was only forty-three per cent of what it had been in the four years preceding 1930. There was an average yearly drop of $560,000,000 in the purchasing power of the farmers of Canada. In my humble opinion this decrease in purchasing power is the chief cause of the unemployment which exists to-day. It is also the cause of the municipal debt situation. It is not that this debt has increased so much since 1929 but that we are trying to carry on with less purchasing power circulating in the hands of the people. If the government wants to deal effectively with unemployment and the situation on the farms which makes it necessary for some farmers to seek relief, they must deal directly with farm prices. These prices must be raised, and the best way of doing this is to devalue the Canadian dollar outside of Canada and bring it down until it reaches sixty-five or seventy cents in United States currency. This would bring about a rise in the level of farm prices and would prove a worth while step towards restoring prosperity on the farms, which in turn will mean more prosperity in the cities and less unemployment. Again I ask the minister if he has the total contributions made by the dominion, provincial and municipal governments to as late a date as possible?

Mr. GORDON: I have not the figures for the provinces and the municipalities, but during the five year period the dominion has spent $170,000,000 in relief of various forms. This includes the relief granted to the dried out areas, the wheat bonus and other forms of relief. If comparisons are helpful, it may be interesting to note that this is less than was spent in 1930 on our railroads, hotels, golf courses and things of that kind.

Mr. HEAPS: I would like these figures in a more detailed form. Can the minister give us the amount spent in urban and in rural centres? I should like the capital account items for public works to be separated from the current expenditures.

Mr. GORDON: Under the terms of the relief act a report is required to be tabled within fifteen days after the end of the fiscal year. Such a report is now in course of preparation and as soon as the books are closed at the end of the month it will be brought in without delay. This report will disclose the figures to which reference has been made. It would take some time to make the breakdown of figures suggested by the hon. member, and if there is no immediate need I would suggest his waiting until the report is tabled.

Mr. HEAPS: That is all right so far as the present fiscal year is concerned, but I should like to get these figures for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1934. I want to know how much was spent in the way of relief in the rural sections and how much in the urban sections.

Mr. GORDON: I direct the attention of the hon. member to the report which was tabled in the first week in April of last year. This will give him the information he desires.

Mr. HEAPS: I should like to have it as soon as possible.

Mr. GORDON: I have not an extra copy of the report here but I can easily get it for the hon. member.

Mr. HEAPS: My question arises out of the discussion that took place this afternoon with reference to the question of relief so far as it affects both rural and urban areas. There has been some complaint about the amount of relief given the cities, and I am anxious to know how it compares with the relief given in rural areas.

Mr. GORDON: The report was never designed to disclose the difference between the urban and rural sections; no such thought was in my mind nor do I think it was in any one else's as to the break-down of the figures along those lines. The report contains a great amount of detail as to what has been done under the various relief acts. I will do my utmost to get any special information the hon. member wants, but it is obviously impossible for me to pick out the figures from the reports I have.

Mr. HEAPS: The problem of relief is entirely different in the city from the problem in rural areas. Farm relief is given to farmers in these dried out areas for different reasons from those that govern the distribution of relief in the cities. In the city relief is given because of unemployment and of the inability of the recipient to obtain the necessaries of life, but the same thing hardly applies to relief given to farmers.

Mr. GORDON: Under the agreements entered into with the provinces in 1934 and up to the end of this month, instead of dealing in percentages an arrangement was made with each province whereby a specific grant in aid was made. We found by experience that if every dollar had to be earmarked for a particular situation that might arise in a province great delay occurred in attending to necessitous cases and in relieving acute need in various sections of the provinces. Therefore a grant in aid of a lump sum was made to the provinces on the distinct understanding, reflected in the agreements themselves, that this grant in aid might be applied in any way that the province considered most desirable so long as it was applied to relief purposes. In Saskatchewan a slightly different situation arises by reason of the great dried out areas, and that is administered on an entirely different basis. That is the only place where it is administered differently. Whether or not I can prepare figures which will separate the rural from the urban sections I do not know; I do not believe we can do it without having recourse to the various provinces to get statements from them. However, I will get whatever I can.

Mr. HEAPS: I do not want to have any special work devolve upon the department, and if they have not made the tabulations I will not ask that this be done. But perhaps the minister can give the amounts which the department expects to have spent in all forms of relief for the fiscal year ending this month together with the same figures for 1934.

Mr. GORDON: For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1935, the total amount which the dominion will have distributed will be around $32,000,000; I do not think that will be found to be far out. For the previous year it was about $41,000,000.

[Mr. Gordon.]

Mr. HEAPS: Does that include the dried out areas?

Mr. GORDON: Yes.

Mr. HEAPS: Any capital expenditures?

Mr. GORDON: No, that is under the Public Works Construction Act.

Mr. COOTE: The minister mentioned $170,000,000 as the amount spent, I think, for the last five years.

Mr. GORDON: Yes.

Mr. COOTE: By the federal government alone?

Mr. GORDON: Yes.

Mr. COOTE: Has the minister the figures showing the amount spent by the different governments and municipalities?

Mr. GORDON: No.

Mr. COOTE: These figures are not known to the department?

Mr. GORDON: Not accurately. We could estimate them but we do not know them.

Mr. COOTE: What is the basis on which the advances to the provinces were figured out for the year 1935?

Mr. GORDON: Up to the end of July, 1934, a percentage of all relief in municipalities was assumed by the dominion—one-third. In unorganized territories the percentage assumed by the dominion was fifty per cent, with the provinces. After July 31, and after the conference was held between the dominion and the provincial premiers, for the reasons I have already stated amongst others a lump sum grant in aid was given to each province. There were discussions with the representatives of the provinces and the amounts were arrived at after a review of what the situation had been in the years prior to 1934 and what the provinces thought they needed and the dominion considered it could give to them. I do not think that in any instance there was at first unanimity of opinion because it does not need much argument to show that that could scarcely happen, having regard to what had taken place in the years before the grants in aid to the provinces were determined. I will frankly admit that some of the provinces were not satisfied, and with equal frankness I admit that they never would be satisfied no matter what the grant was.

Mr. COOTE: It was simply a matter of negotiation?

Mr. GORDON: Quite.

Mr. COOTE: There was no basis of so much per family?

Mr. GORDON: No, that is entirely in the hands of the provinces, as to administration and how much should be given per family.

Mr. COOTE: Then the allotment to rural and urban areas would be a matter of negotiation between the province and the municipality?

Mr. GORDON: Yes.

Mr. COOTE: It would be correct to say that the dominion government had nothing to say with regard to that particular part of it, that is to say, the share of the province and that of the municipality?

Mr. GORDON: No, the agreement does not cover that. The grant in aid was given to the province to be applied by them in any way their best judgment suggested. Administration has always been and is now entirely in the hands of the provinces. Of course, discussions take place and have taken place constantly between myself and the various representatives from the provinces. I have many times urged the provinces to organize this relief administration, so that on the one hand people who cannot support themselves will not suffer and on the other there will be no waste of public money. Further than that the dominion has had nothing to do with the settlement of the amount each family will get.

Mr. RINFRET: There are two questions that I want to put to the minister and that I think can come under this clause. I had the impression yesterday that the minister had not concluded his speech when we reached six o'clock—

Mr. GORDON: I thought hon. members were tired listening to me.

Mr. RINFRET: —and I thought he would give us more information regarding this bill. He chose to-day, apparently with good judgment, to let the vote be taken on the second reading, but I suppose he reserved for this stage further information on the matter. The first question I want to put to him is this: His department has adopted for the last few months a policy of paying a fixed amount to some of the provinces, at least to Quebec. Is it the intention under this bill to carry on the payment of a fixed amount, or will the department resort to the former policy of a proportionate payment according to the needs of the particular province? The trouble with the bill, as I pointed out on second reading, is that it is too elastic; the government may do more or may do less than the house expects, and we do not know. Perhaps the minister will reply to that question and another one I am going to put to him at this moment. The minister gave us to understand during his curtailed speech that before the session is over other measures will be brought down covering unemployment. Is he in a position now to indicate to a certain extent what those measures will be?

Mr. GORDON: My view is that arrangements with the provinces after the end of this month will probably follow the line of a fixed grant to them, on a descending scale I hope, because there are not as many on relief as there have been heretofore. However that is a matter I or the government will have to determine after consultation with the provinces. At the moment I cannot say anything more than that.

Other measures which I hope will be brought down later in the session are now under consideration by the government. It is not an easy task to outline sound plans to provide work for the unemployed in a country such as Canada, but there are under consideration plans which the government hopes will provide at least a considerable amount of employment to those out of work. With respect to those who are unable to work as well as to those who will not work, who do not want to work, they will I assume be taken care of as has been done in the past. I do not think I can go further than that.

Mr. WEIR (Macdonald): To go back to the remarks made this afternoon by the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance) and the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) with respect to clause 2 of the bill, the marginal note of this clause reads:

Loans to provinces, and Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited.

Everyone knows that under number 20 on the order paper provision is made for the creation of a Canadian grain board. When we see this item included in this bill, we are naturally anxious to know whether this means the elimination of number 20 on the order paper, or just what is the position of the government with respect to it? The house has waited now since 1930 for some statement of policy with respect to the marketing of wheat. Hon. members will remember that in that year the Prime Minister went to the imperial conference in the old country and took with him the late A. J. McPhail, and upon his return to this country, Mr. J. I. McFarland was appointed manager of Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited—to dispose of the balance of the 1928-29 wheat crop of some 76,000,000 bushels. From that day until now the house and the country have had really no statement of policy and no details of the position of the organization or of the responsibility of the government with respect thereto. A dominion election is approaching, and I certainly think the government should provide the house and the country with the fullest possible details with regard to the operations that have been carried on by Mr. McFarland under this legislation. To do so would be only right and proper so far as all those who are interested in the matter are concerned—the dominion government, the public at large, and the pool organizations themselves.

Further, in recent months there has been a good deal of discussion in the papers with respect to Mr. McFarland's operations, and no one knows definitely whether the charges, if I may use that word, in this regard are correct or not. Consequently it is all the more desirable that a clear statement of policy be made without further delay. We on this side have been tolerant of the government in not pressing for information. The hon. member for Souris (Mr. Willis) referred this afternoon to Mr. McFarland having been called before the banking and commerce committee last year. No attempt was then made to force him to disclose information which he felt it would not be in the interest of the public to reveal. But the time has now arrived when the house is entitled to some statement. Moreover, with all respect to the stabilization operations, the farmers are complaining of the uncertainty in connection with any policy involved. They intend to put in a new crop this year. What is going to be the policy of the government with respect to marketing in the future? I think we are entitled to a clear statement with respect to the policy that has been pursued so far and what the policy will be from now on. I can quite conceive that the farmers have been in a state of uncertainty in regard to this whole policy; no one knows what is going to happen or what the policy of the government will be or anything else. I would therefore respectfully request that the minister advise the committee just what is going to be done with respect to the wheat situation and when we may have an opportunity of securing information regarding the operations of Mr. McFarland, his stabilization scheme and its relationship to Canadian Co-operative Wheat Producers Limited.

[Mr. H. G. Weir.]

Mr. GORDON: The question of the desirability of disclosing the position of Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited in the wheat market I do not think has changed since the matter was before the banking and commerce committee. I am not as fortunate as the western farmer members, who are apparently gamblers and who know a great deal about gambling in wheat and matters of that kind. I am not a gambler; in this business of hedging, selling short and selling long and things of that kind I must say I am a bit beyond my depth, so the farmer members from western Canada on the other side of the house have me at a great disadvantage. I should think, though, that if one is in the market, whether on the short or on the long side, it would be a most undesirable thing to advertise to others in the market and the world in general the exact position of any considerable trader. That is only a suggestion, coming from one who is unacquainted with stock market trading.

What the dominion government endeavoured to do, and I think largely succeeded in doing, was to make these guarantees to Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited in order that they would be able to stabilize the wheat market for western farmers. Whether they accomplished the object sought may be subject to differences of opinion. I have heard many people say that by reason of the guarantees and the operations of Mr. McFarland through the agency of this company a stabilized market prevailed. Personally I am of opinion that it would be highly undesirable to have the market position of this company made known to other traders.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Do you think they can keep it from the traders?

Mr. GORDON: They might not be able to keep other traders from guessing at it, but if I understand anything at all about the market you are doing pretty well when you keep the other fellow guessing a bit.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am afraid it has been the other way round.

Mr. GORDON: It may have been; again we have the suggestion of the dark clouds hanging low in the sky, but I cannot help that. At any rate the objective of the government in making guarantees was just as I have indicated. My hon. friend from Macdonald says no policy has been announced in regard to selling the wheat of western Canada. Well, we inherited a tremendous carry over and prior to 1930 I never saw any great activity on the part of the late dominion government in outlining a policy in connection with the selling of the wheat of western Canada. It may be that on the return of the Prime Minister, which I trust will not be too long delayed, what I have given as an answer to the question of my hon. friend may be amplified, and perhaps more information may be given. My own view, however, is that it would be highly undesirable to disclose to the other wheat traders the position of this company in the wheat market. I do not believe Canada will suffer any loss in the grain market. That is only my belief. I may be wrong; others may know better than I.

Mr. WEIR (Macdonald): With all due respect to the minister, and without wishing to disclose any information with regard to the position of Mr. McFarland and Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited in the wheat market, I should think that for the protection of the institution itself and of the government the time has come when the statements that are being made in the public press, and supported by responsible grain men and others who are conversant with the grain trade, should be corrected otherwise, those impressions are going to continue to spread.

Mr. MANION: Some of them were corrected at Moose Jaw very recently by Mr. McFarland.

Mr. WEIR (Macdonald): I am not so sure that he gave a complete answer in any sense; I thought he was more interested in the continuation in power of the Prime Minister and the Conservative party.

Mr. MANION: Some of his critics merely took the other side.

Mr. GORDON: Well, that is synonymous with the survival of western Canada.

Mr. WEIR (Macdonald): I am afraid the minister did not get my point or the point the hon. member for South Battleford really had in mind when he brought up the matter this afternoon. I should like to know just what is intended by this provision in view of the fact that the order paper contains notice of legislation to create a wheat board. Is this bill going to continue the present scheme for another year, or when is it going to end? Is the present bill merely to continue the arrangement now in force until the legislation creating a wheat board can be enacted? That is the first point I should like answered. Then what is the wheat board, or whatever agency is created, going to do? Is it merely going to take over the present obligations with respect to wheat and withdraw from the market, or is it going to continue the policy that has been carried on in the past?

May I say to the minister that I am not addressing the committee in any critical sense at all; as a matter of fact I can quite conceive that at the time Mr. McFarland was appointed it was inevitable that something of this kind should be done. Nor am I making any particular complaint with regard to the creation of a wheat board. I am quite prepared to concede that the situation that existed at the time Mr. McFarland was appointed made such an appointment, or the creation of some such agency, quite necessary, and I support the idea that a board would be an even better arrangement than having one man direct an institution such as we have had for the last four and a half years. Nevertheless the fact remains that the country as a whole has become involved to a very substantial degree through these operations, and we have had little or no information with regard to the policy that has been followed. Beyond doubt a dead line must be established some time, and with all deference to the minister I submit that we should have some information with regard to this policy. The real point I have in mind at the moment with respect to this legislation, however, is whether it is to continue the present policy just until a wheat board is created, or whether this policy is to be continued for another year and probably reenacted next year.

Mr. GORDON: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member need have no great fear for the future in connection with this matter. The bill under discussion is the same bill that has given the government power to make guarantees to this company. That power ceases by passage of time on March 31 next. Surely it is obvious to every hon. member, whether the government was right or wrong in taking the course it did to support the grain market in western Canada, that having done what it did it must continue after March 31. It is quite true that on the order paper there appears a resolution with respect to a grain board. All I can say—and the hon. member knows this very well—is that when that legislation comes down its intent will be made clear, and the extent to which it will supersede the present policy or whether the board will be entirely separate from that policy. I can say no more about it; the legislation when it is brought down will speak for itself.

Mr. WEIR (Macdonald): The minister is quite prepared to say that the passing of this legislation does not prevent the bringing of other legislation before the house?

Mr. GORDON: Quite so.

Mr. HEAPS: This afternoon there was a discussion as to the assistance the government had given to the provinces and, in turn, the provinces had given to the municipalities. I made the plea that the government should at least make some attempt to make provision whereby the municipalities might be relieved of some of the burden they are now carrying. Evidently my plea and that of other hon. members has not fallen on receptive ears, because only a few moments ago the minister informed the committee he hoped that when in the near future his department met with the provincial premiers there might be provision whereby the amount allotted by the government to the provinces for relief would be lower in the coming year than it has been in the past. I believe I am not far from the mark, and if I am wrong I hope the minister will correct me, when I say that the amount the government has given to the provinces and, in turn, the provinces have remitted to the municipalities for direct relief, would amount to approximately twenty-five per cent of the expenditures. I believe I am fairly close to the mark when I say the amount would be about twenty-five per cent. In previous years the amount given by the government was one-third of the total, the provinces contributing one-third and the municipalities the remaining third. I say the additional eight and one third per cent has been carried by the municipalities, and in most cases the load is too heavy for them. I believe it is admitted on all sides that unemployment is not primarily a municipal problem. It is a national problem arising as a result of national conditions for which the municipalities are in no degree responsible.

Years ago, before we suffered from an acute unemployment problem, or one similar to that with which we are now faced, it was within the purview of the municipalities to grant relief to indigent cases which came under municipal control. Those indigent cases were due primarily not to problems of unemployment but rather to conditions arising out of sickness, invalidity or old age, or circumstances under which people were physically unable to find employment. However, since we have been troubled with an acute unemployment problem we find a completely new difficulty facing our municipalities, and I say we should not expect them to carry a load ranging between thirty-five per cent and forty per cent of the cost of maintaining the unemployed. It is quite true that the problem may adjust itself; with the advent of public works and with improved economic conditions the difficulty may be lessened, but even then I say the federal government should assume its just share of the responsibility in meeting the difficulty. I am wondering whether or not the government would return to its former basis of granting relief rather than follow the practice of granting a lump sum to the provinces, not knowing whether such sum would be sufficient or insufficient to meet the necessities of the situation. I am wondering whether they would go back to the method employed prior to 1934, that of giving relief on the basis of a percentage of the cost of unemployment relief within the boundaries of the municipalities.

I am informed the province of Quebec made an offer to the government to the effect that it would asume half of the responsibility of unemployment if the federal government would assume the other half. I do not know whether any other provinces have made similar offers, but as unemployment is a national problem I do think the federal government ought to assume a much larger share of the cost than it now assumes. A few moments ago I asked the minister if he could give the figures showing how much had been spent by way of relief to rural and urban municipalities. He was unable to give the figures, but made the statement that for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1935, approximately $32,000,000 had been spent. That figure does not convey all the information I should like to have, because some of the money was spent in the drought areas and could not be said to have been spent for the relief of the unemployed. If we had more detailed figures showing the amount actually spent we might then have some idea of what the added burden to the federal exchequer would be if the federal government assumed a larger share than it assumes at the present time. I stated earlier in my observations that the amount assumed by the federal government was approximately 25 per cent, as compared with 33⅓ per cent in previous years. Perhaps the minister would give us the correct figures in that respect. I should also like to know if at this time he is prepared to state on behalf of the government whether or not it would grant to the municipalities more relief than they have been able to obtain from the government during the past twelve months.

Mr. GORDON: I can add nothing to what I have already said. The figures have not been prepared in the manner the hon. member has suggested, and I doubt very much whether they could be broken up to disclose the difference between the urban and rural contributions. However I give the hon. member the assurance that we will endeavour to comply with his request. I cannot say that we will be successful in an attempt to set up figures which would be accurate and dependable, but we will do the best we can.

Mr. HEAPS: I know the amount paid by the federal government to the government of Manitoba resulted in the city of Winnipeg being compelled to spend far more per head for municipal relief than it had to pay when they were receiving a grant of one-third of the cost. The amount received to-day by urban centres for municipal relief would amount to approximately 25 per cent. I do not believe I am in any way underestimating the amount granted by the federal government for this purpose. The minister may not be able to rake up those figures, but I am informed that in 1934 the figure was about $40,000,000, and that this year it will be about $32,000,000. The difference represents a drop of about $8,000,000, or 20 per cent. Across the country there has been a diminution to the extent of 10 or 11 per cent in the number of those receiving relief this year as compared with the number in previous years. Consequently there has been a greater drop in the amount of money granted than there has been in the number drawing relief, a circumstance which would seem to bear out my contention.

Mr. VENIOT: I should like to get some information which the minister may not be able to provide to-night but which he may furnish later. I should like to get from him the amount of money the federal government paid per month as its share for each county in New Brunswick. May I repeat that I want to have the dominion's share, paid to the provincial government, for each county of New Brunswick for each month of 1933. If the minister cannot give the information offhand he might prepare a statement and let me have it within a few days.

Mr. GORDON: It would be difficult to comply with the request of the hon. member for Gloucester, because the dominion has contact only with the provincial government. We make our grants to the provincial governments. If the report that was tabled last year does not give the information the hon. member has asked for I shall endeavour as soon as I can to get a compilation of figures that will reflect the information sought by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. VENIOT: That will be quite satisfactory. The information is important in view of something that is to take place in the very near future in consequence of statements that I have made on the floor of this house, which statements in regard to relief are quite correct, but I wish to have them substantiated by official figures from the department. While I am on my feet I would ask the minister if he can make any statement to-night as to the agreement between the provincial government and the federal department of Labour in connection with the trans-Canada highway in the province of New Brunswick. Have the arrangements been concluded between the provincial and federal governments as to the share the federal government is going to pay, and the route to be followed, on which the payment will be based?

Mr. GORDON: The trans-Canada highway in New Brunswick has been designated so far as our contribution to the work is concerned, from Hartland to Woodstock in the county of Carleton. The work is the laying of a three-inch asphaltic and concrete base, wth one-inch sheet asphalt surface for about a mile. The amount is $3,905 for the dominion contribution.

Mr. VENIOT: It is not necessary to give all those details. Can the minister say what route is to be followed?

Mr. GORDON: From Fredericton to McGinley Ferry; from Saint John city, Westfield Corner to King's and Saint John; from Sussex to Penobsquis, King's county; from Moncton east and west, county of Westmoreland. Those are all the approvals that we have made of suggested work on the trans-Canada highway in New Brunswick.

Mr. VENIOT: Has the minister any information as to the route of the trans-Canada highway as defined by the provincial government? Is it from Moncton to Sackville by way of Shediac, cape Bald, and Port Elgin?

Mr. GORDON: The only order in council that has been forwarded to the dominion government by the province of New Brunswick designating the route of the trans-Canada highway covers only a portion I believe of the route. Perhaps it would be best if I read the description:

Beginning at a point from the boundary line between the province of Quebec and the province of New Brunswick where the main trunk highway route No. 2 intersects the said boundary line of the western side of the Madawaska river; thence following the main trunk highway on the west side of Madawaska river to Edmundston; thence along the eastern side of the Saint John river to Grand Falls; thence along the western side of the Saint John river to Andover crossing Saint John river to Perth; thence down the east side of Saint John river to Hartland; thence down west side of Saint John river through Woodstock, Fredericton, Oromocto, Gagetown, Westfield to Saint John; thence from Saint John through Sussex, Moncton and Sackville to the Nova Scotia boundary near Aulac.

Mr. VENIOT: That is quite satisfactory; thank you.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Agreements with provinces.

Mr. COOTE: It seems to me it is quite evident that, whether a grain board is set up or not, clause 2 is necessary. The wheat that is held under government guarantee, whatever form that guarantee may take, must be carried for some time, and I may say frankly that that is one of the main reasons why I voted for this bill, which contains many features I do not approve of. I would ask the minister how long the present arrangement with the provinces is to continue and whether a conference has been arranged with the provinces in connection with the grants that are mentioned in clause 2.

Mr. GORDON: The agreements with the provinces expire by the effluxion of time on the 31st of this month. Arrangements will have to be made without delay with a view to determining what assistance the provinces may need. It seems to be the judgment of some hon. members that of necessity the dominion taxpayer must give more to the provinces than has been the case in the past. I am not at all prepared to acknowledge that to be the situation. I wonder if we in this chamber remember that we have only one set of taxpayers in this country. I sometimes wonder if we are not forgetting that. These matters are in a measure determined by the capacity of the various taxing authorities to raise the money that is thought to be necessary. Arrangements with the provinces will be carried on temporarily after the end of this month until a conference with all the provinces, or with some of them where the arrangements will have to be changed, can be brought about. I cannot give the hon. member the day when such a conference will be convened. It would be utterly impossible for me to do it.

[Mr. Gordon.]

Mr. COOTE: One reason why I asked the minister the question I did was that in my constituency three large coal mines have been shut down for some time. The last word I had was that they were shut down due to the fact that the railway company had not placed any orders for this year. I do not know just what developments may have occurred during last week. I have taken up this matter with the government and with the railway company in an effort to see if some orders cannot be given to these mines. The whole population of three towns is dependent upon the mines, there being about 900 miners involved. When I received this telegram two weeks ago two of the mines, employing 600 miners, had not worked for three weeks. I understand that the other mine has since stopped operations. The total population of these towns is between three and four thousand, and as the municipalities are wholly dependent upon the operations of the mines they are unable to make any worth while provision for relief. I suppose all they can do is to appeal to the province, and I was wondering if the minister could give us some assurance that when the province makes application to the government, as I suppose it must, there will be as little delay as possible in making some provision for these towns. It is generally agreed that the financial position of the western provinces is not such as to enable them to take care of any considerable addition to their unemployment relief bills. I have no intention of bothering the minister about the matter in connection with this bill, but I do want to impress upon him the seriousness of the situation. I am sure these municipalities have not the resources with which to meet a situation of this kind, even for a period of a few weeks. I do not know to what extent the province will be able to take care of it without some assistance from this government. I urge upon the minister that he hold himself in readiness to give what help he can to these cases. Perhaps the government could persuade the Canadian Pacific Railway to spread its coal orders to take in the three towns involved.

Mr. GORDON: Mr. Chairman, it must be remembered that this government has been and is now assisting coal production by means of subventions, with the result that Saskatchewan coal has practically displaced competitive foreign fuels in the province of Manitoba. But the paradox is that instead of any control being exercised over coal mines in Alberta, about fifty new mines have been opened in the last few years. All mines in the province are under the control and jurisdiction of the provincial government. These small mines used to be called waggon mines, but they are now known as truck mines. The result is that the large employers of labour have been eliminated from the home market. I believe the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) is well acquainted with this situation. While the dominion taxpayer is contributing to these coal mines by way of subventions, the Alberta government is charging a royalty on the coal mined.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have some sympathy with the minister in this connection. My hon. friends over there who talk so glibly about cooperation, about marketing and over-production might well take a hand in their own province to see what they can do about coal mining. This simply demonstrates how difficult it is to do anything like this. I have been intimately acquainted with the Alberta coal mines for at least twenty-five years. Coal is so plentiful and so easily produced that it is very difficult to control. I remember at one time we had 350 mines operating when fifty would have been sufficient to supply the market. May I say to the minister that I also have some sympathy with the Alberta government. It is very difficult to regulate things of that sort.

Mr. GORDON: From a political standpoint, yes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If this government is going to regulate business, if it is going to control everybody and everything produced, it has a very good example in Alberta coal mining of how far it will get. The theory is good but the difficulty is that it does not work out in practice. These people are anxious to sell their coal in eastern Canada and they could sell it if it could be brought down. The difficulty is that there is over-production. There is no question in the world that we have not solved the problem of over-production of coal. This brings me to the question of wheat. This afternoon the minister gave a new angle on wheat marketing as carried out by the government. I did not know that they were gambling in wheat.

Mr. GORDON: I said I was not a gambler.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I thought they were buying wheat and holding it.

Mr. MANION: He was referring to your critics.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I did not understand it in that way. From the very meagre information which the government has let out from time to time I understood that the wheat was being purchased outright through the agency of Mr. McFariand and that the government now owned such wheat as might be in their possession. Other countries having wheat boards give out statistics which are published by our statistical department, but we are denied any information as to the year after year straight purchasing by this government. I do not understand why the government wants to keep this a secret. If they think the grain trade is not aware of what wheat they are holding they are greatly mistaken, because these gentlemen have ways and means of telling exactly the amount of wheat being held. Any western member knows this. These gentlemen are able to ascertain fairly accurately the amounts held in the farmer's bins. To me the thing is a huge joke, but I suppose as long as this government is in power the joke will be perpetuated. I hope the government gets out of it with a profit, as we would like to see the government clean up this mess before we have anything to do with it.

Some hon. member on the other side remarked that when this government took office there was a vast amount of wheat being held. The Liberal government never embarked on the purchase of wheat. It did not need to do that, as in those days the wheat pools were doing all the marketing of the wheat of western Canada. But they finally found themselves in difficulty and appealed to the provincial governments. Later on this government got into wheat marketing, and I am not going to say whether they were right or wrong. As a western farmer there is one thing I do know: Since the government has been operating I have taken the lowest prices for my wheat in all the years I have been raising wheat in western Canada. I do not say that this condition was brought about because the government engaged in the marketing of wheat, but that has been my personal experience. The Prime Minister has once or twice said, "If we had not purchased the wheat you would not have got anything for it." I have some doubts about that and I will reserve my remarks in regard to the wheat situation until the bill comes down, when we can discuss every aspect of it.

Although I realize how useless it is, I must protest against the wide powers contained in this bill. Ever since it has been in office this government has repeatedly come here, year after year, and said, "All the information we can give you is with regard to what happened last year, but we will spend any amount of money we like, in any way we like, in any place we like, when this bill is passed." In the Department of the Interior, over which I had the honour to preside, hon. gentlemen opposite when they sat over here made meticulous demands to know where every dollar would be spent, and now when the estimates for that department come down no one knows how much will be spent, in the parks, for instance. That is a right the government has taken away from parliament. My hon. friends opposite can spend any amount anywhere in the construction of roads, public buildings and so on, and parliament has no voice whatever in the matter. I cannot help thinking that hon. gentlemen opposite know just as much as we do over here about what will be done; they have not a particle more knowledge than we have. The men who constitute the government sit around a table and make these allocations as they please. I protest now, as I have protested before and will continue to protest, against this method. It may be necessary to have unidentified sums voted for the purpose of assisting the provinces, but there is certainly no excuse on earth that I can think of for the expenditure of public money in the parks under the guise of relief without having that money voted, as it has always been voted in the past, thereby preserving the rights of parliament in the matter. And the same applies to every other expenditure of public money on undertakings which the government itself is carrying out; they should be separated from this act. If there is any excuse on earth for this bill it can only be the fact that my hon. friends do not know how much they will spend in conjunction with the provinces, but there is no excuse whatever for including in the bill the right of the government to make expenditures over which they have complete control, without the money being voted. There is not much use protesting, however. Our good friends say it is remarkable that the Liberal party should be agreeing with the Conservative party in all these matters of social reform now being passed. What is the use of protesting? My hon. friend from Macleod (Mr. Coote) has just remarked that he voted for the bill this afternoon—I was not here—on the ground that it contained a provision for continuing cooperative marketing. Well, he need not have worried because the government own the wheat and will have to sell it. They are bringing down a bill under which they will operate next year—I fancy that will be the effect of it—and if he objects to the rest of the bill I do not see that there was much necessity for his voting for the bill to continue the wheat operations seeing that the government of Canada practically speaking own all the wheat now. However I want to make it quite plain that I am protesting as strongly as I can against the practice that has been followed by this government, without letting us know the details as to place or anything else, or spending public money in the way that has been done. Possibly they do not know themselves, though they should know. All we know is that the returns come in as provided for under the act and we are so informed when parliament meets. Talk about autocracy: we have it in the fullest measure year by year, and again this year in the particular bill which we are now discussing.

Mr. COOTE: I want to refer briefly again to the coal mines I have already mentioned. These mines are producing bituminous coal, not domestic coal, eighty-five per cent of which is used by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and they were all operated almost to capacity during the war. They are still there, but unfortunately there is not now as great a demand for coal as there was at that time. A community has settled around each one of these mines, with municipalities dependent on the operation of the mines, and that is why I take the liberty of bringing the matter to the attention of the minister. I should like to be assured that in passing this bill we are making provision whereby, if the government are appealed to, they will be able to deal with a situation which someone should look after if these mines are closed for any considerable period.

Mr. DUPUIS: How much has been spent during the last year in connection with each province by way of grant, loan, advances or guarantees, public works or direct relief? I think it would be interesting to know these details by provinces.

Mr. GORDON: It would be very difficult to give the exact amounts. Of course, we could not give them up to the end of this fiscal year but I would point out that in the province of Quebec—there may be reasons for it—we cannot determine how much we have yet to pay because the accounts are very slow in coming in. I am not saying this in any spirit of criticism of that province, but I do know that we get the accounts six months and even as long as eighteen months after the work has been done and the money expended. I have in mind now some instances of accounts coming in from the province of Quebec two years old, so that it is extremely difficult for me to give an accurate picture to show what is spent in each of the provinces. Ontario is exceedingly prompt in sending in accounts, and so is Manitoba; others are not so prompt.

Mr. DUPUIS: Which?

Mr. GORDON: The tables themselves will disclose that. If the hon. member will be patient the report will be tabled in the course of a few days and will disclose all these accounts as between the dominion and the provinces. I could not put on the record at the moment the figures he has asked for, but they will appear in the report.

Mr. DUPUIS: In section 2 of the bill I see that the government is coming to the relief of Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited. I have nothing to do with and I do not intend to go into the intricacies of the operations of the wheat producers, but I represent producers of other agricultural commodities who are very much interested in this matter. For instance, in my riding the production of vegetables on a very large scale is carried on, among them being potatoes, tomatoes and so forth. I have also in my constituency many dairy producers. This afternoon I heard some hon. members asking the Minister of Railways whether he could not reduce freight rates for I believe the potato producers of New Brunswick. That minister replied that if he had nothing to do but to answer all those requests favourably. the railways of Canada would have to run without making any charge. Perhaps the Minister of Railways cannot do anything; but just to equalize grants among the provinces in a spirit of equity and justice, would it not be possible for the Minister of Labour, in this very clause in which he is providing something in favour of the wheat producers, to which I have no objection, to provide something by way of a premium for instance to the butter producers? Could he not give a premium which would cover the freight rate reductions that were sought by the members who spoke on the subject this afternon, or make a grant to the potato producers of that province? I am inclined to think this would be an excellent way of demonstrating the desire of this government to help our farmers, whatever they may produce.

Another aspect of the question which I should like to bring before the committee is the financial situation of the municipalities. I heard many members this afternoon and evening speaking of municipalities being on the verge of bankruptcy. I do not think such statements constitute a very good advertisement for our municipalities, nevertheless I am sure the minister will admit that this state of affairs cannot continue very long before the municipalities in general will be unable to bear their share of direct relief or contribute toward the construction of public works. I know in my riding at least one municipality which is unable to pay a single cent for the purpose of relieving the unemployed. This municipality, a small one, was living by the taxes of workers in the brick industry. Since 1930 those brick plants have been idle and at least a hundred families are practically in a state of starvation. They are all small, humble proprietors and consequently unable to pay their taxes, and the municipality is—I hate to use the word "bankrupt"—really unable to provide the money to come to their rescue. The minister is in a better position than I am to know how many municipalities throughout Canada are in a similar situation. The hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) a few minutes ago spoke of one municipality being unable to provide its share of relief expenditures. How can the government undertake to carry on this new policy of giving a fixed amount to each province, when already in each province, municipality after municipality is becoming unable to provide a single cent of its share of relief? I should be glad to see this government give evidence that there is less unemployment to-day than there was last year, but the figures that have been given so far prove the contrary; there are more unemployed this year than there were last.

Mr. DUPRE: No. Why does the hon. member say that?

Mr. DUPUIS: The last figure given was 1,300,000.

Mr. DUPRE: No.

Mr. DUPUIS: Maybe not unemployed, but on relief. As regards the question of unemployment we have had from the government side many figures starting from the Prime Minister's statement at first that there were about five hundred thousand. Then another minister stated that there were about twice as many. We do not know yet what the facts are.

Mr. DUPRE: What other minister said so?

Mr. DUPUIS: The Solicitor General should follow these debates every day. I do not blame him for not following them as closely as he should because he is a very busy man, but if he will look in Hansard he will find out that several statements were made that were entirely at variance.

Mr. DUPRE: Will the hon. member give the name?

Mr. DUPUIS: I do not want to start an argument about the matter, but the question is sufficiently serious this year and the signs of improvement are so scarce that we should expect from the government a policy not so rigid, one rather in the spirit of the promises made before the last election, one that would be more in accord with the situation at the beginning of the present administration in 1930 when they were ready to end unemployment, to give work to everybody, to develop industries, to transform raw materials into finished products to be sold in this country, and to prevent importations. That was the policy of this government. What has occurred? Nothing has been done. Day by day we see statistics showing that every month raw materials are being exported to the value of hundreds of thousands of dollars to foreign countries to be manufactured there, though the present government made specific promises that if they ever came to power they would try to encourage industries in Canada to carry on this work of manufacture. That has not been done as yet, after five years of tergiversation. I am convinced that it is high time this government came to a decision in line with their policy of 1930. This is not a farce; we have a serious state of affairs in this country. The eyes of the people are on this parliament, and the people are hoping that before a general election this government will come to their rescue. The purpose of this bill is to relieve the unemployed and needy. The people of this country are not looking for direct relief; they are looking for work, but if this government are unable to give them work at least they should give them relief according to the needs of the municipalities and provinces.

Mr. GORDON: Before the section carries, Mr. Chairman, I notice that there is a slight typographical omission. The clause should read, "upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon." The word "be" is left out, and I would move that it be inserted.

Mr. REID: I should like to direct a question to the attention of the minister. Last year a report was presented to the house by the auditor general, having to do I believe with a survey ordered by the government covering the whole dominion in connection with the administration of relief and the expenditure of money by the various provincial governments. In that report an item appeared in connection with the province of British Columbia, amounting to some $62,000 expended on stores, which remained unaccounted for. I wonder if the minister has any statement to make as to whether that matter has been looked into, where the money was spent and who got it.

Mr. GORDON: The item to which reference is made, together with other items that are in the course of adjustment, is still the subject of correspondence between this government and the government of British Columbia. Representatives of that government and the auditor general's office still have that and other items under advisement.

Mr. REID: I would urge upon the minister that this item, at any rate, should be pursued.

Mr. GORDON: They will all be pursued.

Mr. REID: Because $62,000 of stores disappeared.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Shall the section as amended carry?

Mr. DUPUIS: In the course of my remarks I directed some questions to the minister, and I should like to have him answer them. I want to know particularly if under the bill this government intend to help other producers than wheat producers.

Mr. GORDON: This government have already helped vegetable and fruit producers in Canada by committing what I assume hon. gentlemen opposite would call another great crime, that is, by establishing a very high seasonal tariff against the importation of competitive fruits and vegetables. They have also passed and made available to those engaged in the growing of such produce as that to which the hon. member has made reference, the marketing act, though I believe up to the present the producers in the province of Quebec have not availed themselves of it. I have no doubt that they will do so, and I believe that if they do so they will be benefited very materially. So far as my information goes and I believe it to be accurate, already the market gardeners have received great benefits where the act has been applied. I do not think I can say more.

Mr. DUPUIS: The minister says the province of Quebec has not availed itself of the provisions of the marketing act. If I am correctly informed in the western provinces a vote was taken as to the advisability of taking advantage of the marketing act and a great majority of the producers refused to do so because of the results that have been obtained so far. I should like to know from the minister how and when the farmers of this country derived any benefit from that act.

Mr. GOTT: What about the price of tobacco?

Mr. DUPUIS: I am not speaking of onions now.

Mr. GOTT: I am speaking of tobacco.

Mr. DUPUIS: The minister mentioned a seasonal tariff. That was imposed in the Dunning budget, but the Dunning tariff was far better than the tariff imposed by this government. I might just cite an instance in which this government raised the tariff. In 1931 the tariff on potatoes was increased to 75 cents per hundred pounds. I mentioned this fact a week or two ago and some hon. member opposite denied it. I have looked up the record since then, and I find that I was correct. What was the result? After this government raised the tariff from 50 cents to 75 cents per hundred pounds our neighbour to the south raised the tariff to the same level. In that country the tariff was 50 cents; it was increased to 75 cents, and although the consumers of the United States required our potatoes and came to buy them, they could not afford to pay the freight and the customs duty, so our producers were deprived of that market. That is the only result of the action of this government, though they come here and say they did so much for the farmers of this country by raising the tariff in 1930. If this is the only thing they have to their credit I should be afraid if I were to your right, Mr. Chairman, to face the electors at the next election.

Section 2 agreed to.

On section 3—Maintain peace, order and good government.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Shall the section carry?

Mr. RINFRET: On division.

Section agreed to on division.

Sections 4 to 11 inclusive agreed to.

On the preamble.

Mr. SPENCER: Before the preamble carries I should like to refer to a statement made a few moments ago by the hon. member sitting to my right. He referred to a vote taken in connection with the marketing act, and stated that a great majority had voted against the act. If I am correctly informed a majority in the three provinces, taken together, voted for the act.

Mr. DUPUIS: In one province, for one product, they voted against the act.

Mr. HACKETT: Chickens only.

Mr. DUPUIS: Chickens are very important.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask the Minister of Labour when I may expect to have some information about the classification of the unemployed, and if it will take long to get it? No answer? Well, you see, we have the same performance in the present instance as we had when the post office estimates were before us. The minister wants his bill to pass, and the Postmaster General wants his estimates to pass, but neither wishes to give any information. "Wait and see." "Wait until this has passed, and then I will give you some information"—which no one will be able to discuss. This is most extraordinary. How can the minister say he will bring relief to the unemployed if he has no information concerning the trades or professions of these unemployed people? The only answer I have received was from the Prime Minister when on one occasion last year he said they were doing their best. I wonder if the best the government can do is nothing, or if it is something. How can the minister do anything for any person, or for any of the unemployed, if he does not know the trade or profession of each unemployed person? How can he bring relief to the unemployed without having due information? This is basic information. The Minister of Railways and Canals, who is now in his seat, is always complaining that the opposition does not offer constructive suggestions. This is a constructive suggestion, and he will not deny it because it has the sanction of his chief.

Hon. gentlemen opposite say that by voting such and such an amount we will bring relief to the unemployed, and there has been blank cheque legislation by virtue of which the government has lent money to Newfoundland, lent money to the Canadian Pacific Railway, increased the value of the stock held by the Sun Life Assurance Company, and so on. The reason the government come again with blank cheque legislation is that they have no policy. They bring it to cover up their ignorance of facts, and I am sorry for them. I am sorry, too, for those who are suffering on account of this government's action. The unemployed are not only those who get relief but they are those who had positions in the towns and who because of a decrease in trade have not been able to continue and have had to return to their fathers for their livings. I am sorry for them.

When I ask the minister for information, fundamental and basic information, he cannot answer because he has not the information. Did the Prime Minister tell the truth when he said he was doing his best in that regard? He was speaking on behalf of the government, on behalf of the Minister of Labour as well as the other ministers. What did the Prime Minister mean when he said, "We are doing our best with regard to the classification of unemployed"? Is the minister willing to answer this pertinent question? No answer yet. As Shakespeare has said, silence is the answer.

Mr. LOUCKS: Everything comes to him who waits.

Mr. POULIOT: It is a very sad performance. Here we have the Minister of Labour who gives lectures to all the provincial governments about the way they should deal with the unemployed, and yet he has not the basic facts. He has no more basic facts than the Postmaster General had, nor has he more than most of his colleagues have. I am sorry for one thing only, and it is that some of the ministers are able men, but they will look after only the immediate business of their departments. That procedure is a credit to them, but they take very little interest in the general policy of the government. They leave that to the other ministers. So far as general policy is concerned they lean on the shoulders of others. That is why a member cannot get an answer when he asks a pertinent question. Sir, on behalf of those whom I have the honour to represent and on behalf of the Canadian people as a whole I have the right to ask the minister please to answer this question: What did the Prime Minister mean when a year ago he said, "We are doing our best with regard to the classification of the unemployed"? May I ask this question of the minister?

Mr. GOTT: Carried.

Mr. POULIOT: No, sir; I want an answer. I want to know what the Prime Minister meant, because he is the superhead of the Department of Labour; he is the superhead of any department of the government, and the information he had is the information the minister should now have. Therefore if the Prime Minister had it the Minister of Labour should have it, and especially when he has in front of him not only his deputy but also the gentleman in charge of relief. If he does not know, his deputy should know, and if his deputy does not know, the head of the relief branch should know. If no one of the trinity knows, then let us dispense with them.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Carried?

Mr. POULIOT: No. I shall give due time to the minister to answer, but I want an answer and the country wants an answer.

Mr. LOUCKS: How do you like the way you are getting it?

Mr. GOTT: There is no answer.

Mr. POULIOT: No answer.

Mr. GOTT: No.

Mr. POULIOT: I have more to say to you. Hansard is recording the fact that several times the minister has not answered this very pertinent and legitimate question.

Mr. GORDON: I am waiting until the hon. member gets through.

Mr. POULIOT: I sat down four times.

Mr. GORDON: The hon. member for Temiscouata wants me to state whether or not on an occasion in the past the Prime Minister was telling the truth. I believe in substance I have stated his question. All I can say is that I have known the Prime Minister for about thirty years, and my relations with him in the past five years have been rather intimate. From my acquaintanceship with him I would say he is a man who sticks religiously to the truth in all matters. I have no objection to making any possible explanation with respect to the matter of registration, about which the hon. member has quite properly asked. In 1931 even before the census was completed the provinces were asked by the dominion to make a registration such as the hon. member for Témiscouata has suggested. Ontario made a registration, and it was disclosed that in the registration made by that province school children and everybody went on the registration list. People came in from the country and registered in the city purely for the purpose of getting on relief. When that was made abundantly plain the province notified the dominion that the registration made was of little value. I think they said we could safely divide it in half.

The province of Quebec would not make a registration because the premier of that province said that in his judgment it would only be an open invitation—I think I am not overstating the case—to make the registration that was suggested. I do not think a registration ever was made in that province. One or two of the smaller provinces made a registration, not a complete but a partial one, and they give us the benefit of the information they obtained. That is the situation. We rely, and must of necessity rely, upon the provincial machinery for information of that kind other than the information which is collected by the Labour department through the agency of the trade unions.

Mr. DUPUIS: Is there any registration in Ontario?

Mr. GORDON: Not at the present time. I have just been explaining that they tried to make a registration that would be helpful but it was found to be entirely inaccurate for the reasons I have indicated. That is the situation so far as registration is concerned. I think that what the hon. member for Temiscouata has suggested is quite a sound thing if it could be done, and we have repeatedly asked the provinces, being constantly in contact with their people, particularly in connection with the administration of relief, if they could devise some scheme whereby a continuous registration could be available. They say they cannot, and I can well understand that there would be grave and serious difficulties in the way of doing it. That is what has been attempted, and that is what has been the result.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank the hon. gentleman, but first I wish to tell him that I did not say that the Prime Minister did not tell the truth. Otherwise I would not have asked him that question. It was because I believed the Prime Minister was telling the truth that I asked the question, and again I thank the hon. gentleman for the explanation he has just given to the house and the country. The minister says that my suggestion, although good, is not practical from a certain point of view because the federal government can get that information only through the provinces.

Mr. GORDON: Except the information we get from the census.

Mr. POULIOT: Oh yes, but that is an old story. To come down to modern history, to the number of unemployed at the present time and their classification by trade or profession, it is very easy to gather that information, and if there is to be an interprovincial conference this important question should be brought before the provinces in order that the country may be well posted on it. May I say to the minister that prominent members of the St. Vincent de Paul Society have told me that the information could be secured within twenty-four hours, that it was there and had only to be compiled. That information could also be secured, not through trades unions, but by charitable organizations like the Red Cross, the Salvation Army, and the St. Vincent de Paul Society which I have already mentioned. Therefore in the interests of the country I now ask the Minister of Labour to take due steps to have the unemployed classified. It would serve the government well because as soon as that classification is made the governments, whether federal or provincial does not matter, and I use the plural intentionally, will be able to distinguish between those who are really unemployed and those who take advantage of relief in order to get assistance to which they are not entitled. The saving of money thus made would compensate for any expense that might be incurred in making such a classification. I cannot close my brief remarks without thanking the minister for his answer. It has taken me a long time, five years, to get that answer from him, but at last to-night I have got it, and I am satisfied he is now on the right path and I hope he will continue in it.

Preamble agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, on division, and passed.

SUPPLY

RAILWAYS AND CANALS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Morand in the chair.

Miscellaneous—
To assist in promoting tourist business in Canada, $200,000.

Mr. THOMPSON (Simcoe): Before this vote is carried I should like to say a few words, and first of all I should like to congratulate the Minister of Railways upon his very able presentation of the case for Canada as a country offering many attractions to the outside tourist. I think the whole country owes a debt of gratitude to Hon. Mr. Dennis, Senator from Halifax, because it was upon his initiative that the Senate appointed a special committee last session to inquire into the possibilities of the tourist traffic and to ascertain what steps could be taken to encourage and develop this traffic. As a result of the work of that committee a publicity department was established, from which excellent results are to be expected.

Among the facts brought out by the committee was that in 1929, the last year in which good times prevailed in the United States, Canada received a revenue of $310,000,000 from the outside tourist trade. Those who have made a study of this matter anticipate that when times once more become normal the trade will provide a revenue of $500,000,000. I think that this is the opportune time to make a special drive for this trade. It is said that 20,000,000 people visited the Chicago fair in 1933, with possibly a like number in 1934. It is natural to expect that many of these people will be looking for a new place in which to spend their vacation this year, and there is no country with the attractions of Canada. If a special drive is made immediately we could expect a large share of this trade. The whole dominion is interested in this question, but Ontario is particularly interested because of its proximity to the more populous centres of the United States. In addition our province has the added advantage of good roads and easy access by rail and water.

There is no trade or industry—I think we can call it that—which provides such general and in some cases generous benefits. Practically all classes of the community receive benefits from this trade. The hotel keeper, the boarding house keeper, the merchant, the garage man, the mechanic, the cook, the guide, the boat livery man, the farmer and the market gardener all receive direct benefits from this trade, and through them the benefits are spread to all classes in the community. Large sums of money have been spent upon our railroads and highways, and if this tourist traffic is encouraged we will be able to obtain some return on our investment. Those who have spoken before me on this question have laid before the house some of the special attractions which their particular province or constituency possesses, and perhaps I may be allowed to do the same thing.

I consider that my riding of East Simcoe possesses unique advantages because of its history and scenery. The history of this riding goes back to 1615 when Champlain, that great adventurer from France, journeyed up the Ottawa river, passed into lake Nipissing, came out into Georgian bay, then down to Penetanguishene, finally landing at Orillia. He wintered there in anticipation of joining the Huron Indians on a warlike expedition against the Iroquois. Through the public spirit which is characteristic of them, the citizens of Orillia have erected a monument to the memory of Champlain which is said to be the finest of its kind in Canada. This was made possible only after a considerable expenditure of time and money, aided by contributions from the dominion, Ontario and Quebec governments. Every year thousands of tourists from Canada and the United States visit Orillia in order to view this monument. I suggest to the minister that in any publicity issued in connection with the tourist traffic particular mention should be made of this monument.

Adjacent to the town of Midland is a martyr's shrine erected to the memory of those heroic Jesuit missionaries, Fathers Brebeuf and Lallemant, who were taken captive by the Iroquois and so cruelly tortured to death. This shrine is a most attractive spot for tourists from Ontario, Quebec and the United States, and I think it should be emphasized in any publicity which is issued.

Penetanguishene celebrated its tercentenary in 1919, a delay of four years having occurred because of the war. The chiefs of the Huron and Iroquois tribes were invited to be present, and they met and smoked the pipe of peace and entered into what is hoped will be a lasting treaty. During the war of 1812 Penetanguishene was selected as the proper place for the establishment of a naval and military station. At the conclusion of the war the American war vessels Tigress and Scorpion, which were captured from the Americans at Mackinaw, were sunk. Recently one of them has been brought to the surface and provides an object of great interest to American tourists. So much for the historic points in my riding.

I shall deal now with the points of special scenic beauty. My riding lies at the gateway of the thirty thousand islands of the Georgian bay. This area has recently been made a national park by the dominion government. The trip from Midland to Parry Sound through the inside channel is said to be the finest trip of its kind in Canada. I suggest to hon. members that if they want to see something of the beauties of Ontario they should take that trip. In addition to the wonderful trip among the thirty thousand islands we have the Severn river which forms the northern link of the Trent waterways connecting Georgian bay with lake Couchiching. Thousands of tourists spend the summer there and there is room for thousands more. I have mentioned briefly a few of the attractive points in my riding and I am sure I voice the views of my constituency when I say that we are heartily in favour of this vote.

Mr. PECK: I would not consider it necessary to speak but for the fact that the people I represent are very much interested in the tourist traffic. The county of Peterborough offers a great deal of attraction to tourists who come by thousands to enjoy the scenery. We are able to give them and we do give them a very pleasant time and they come again. I agree with my hon. friend from East Simcoe as to the attractiveness of that general system that runs from Georgian bay to the Trent, known as the Kawartha system, comprising islands, lakes, rivers and canals. It attracts many thousands of people to its shores every year and those whom I represent are particularly interested in promoting the traffic. Other places in Canada are similarly situated and are looking for tourists. I am quite sure therefore that the government is doing the wise thing in setting aside a sum of money to advertise the traffic and to make provision for tourists to see that they are properly guarded against exorbitant charges. The bureau can do a great deal in furnishing information to the prospective tourist. After all, the best advertisement that Canada can have is the good will of those who visit the country and report favourably upon its advantages. That is the first essential. Further, the bureau should be in a position to give information to those who are ignorant of the country and are anxious to know where they can spend a happy and profitable holiday at reasonable cost. It will be the function of the bureau to collect all this information and to check it over, and it can do many things to smooth the way for the tourist. The tourist wants a reasonable means of approaching the particular point on which he has set his mind; he wants to know that he will be comfortably looked after at moderate cost; he wants to know that fishing is provided for, and he wants to know particularly that he will be able to get into ready communication with his own home by mail, telegraph or telephone. A good many inquiries are made respecting the district I come from with regard to these points particularly which I have enumerated, and the officer in charge of the bureau can do a good deal in cooperation with the various departments to clear up such points. Every man coming to visit us wants to know, as I have said, that he will be able to get into ready communication with his home in case of emergency. From every point of view therefore we can commend this appropriation and I congratulate the government. I assure them it will do a great deal to improve the tourist traffic and increase the numbers of those who visit us.

Mr. SPENCER: Before the house rose a few days ago I mentioned the great buffalo park situated between Wainwright and Hardisty in Alberta. There are a few particulars which I wish to put on record with regard to this park, which has the reputation of being the largest buffalo park with the largest herd of buffalo in the world. The park is situated on the main line of the Canadian National railways, 127 miles east of Edmonton and 199 miles west of Saskatoon. It has an area of 125,000 acres. The buffalo were first introduced into the park in 1910, and the locality being exceedingly good for them, and great care having been taken of them, they have increased enormously; from 748 they have increased to 24,000. Various means have been taken to keep the herd within reasonable numbers owing to the limited pasture. In the years from 1925 to 1928 no less than 6,673 were moved north to the Wood Buffalo park in the Great Slave lake region, and during recent years a great number of the older animals have been slaughtered—to be exact, 10,545. We still have approximately 5,000 in the park. Besides buffalo we have 1,000 head of elk, 2,500 mule deer, 95 moose and a small herd of yak. There are many interesting crosses between the buffalo, the yak and the domestic, which are of considerable interest to visitors. Last year visitors to the park numbered 12,631. The park is surrounded by a high wire fence, nine feet high, stretching for over one hundred miles. I am glad to say that we have at Wainwright Park a very able administrator in Mr. Smith, who goes to a great deal of trouble to give every consideration to visitors. I want to put these facts on record because I think the parks should be advertised more extensively. I believe that the money being spent by the government in advertising these different parks is all to the good. Apart from the park there is another attraction in the Wainwright area, where we have the second largest oil field in Canada, so that if people get tired looking at the buffalo they can look at possible investments in this important oil field.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): There has been such unanimity with regard to this appropriation that I hesitate to take up the time of the committee, but it would be most unusual and neglectful if on such a discussion as this the province of Nova Scotia were overlooked. That province is the playground of the Atlantic, and the constituency which I have the honour to represent is from the tourist standpoint the chief asset of that province. In addition to the attractions that should be held out to tourists and that have been mentioned by the minister and also by the hon. member for East Simcoe; in addition to the courtesy, kindness and hospitality that should be shown to tourists, there should be attractions in the shape of good roads, hotels and tourist camps which also should be developed.

The hon. member for East Simcoe in his very worthy address referred to the historic aspects of his constituency. Well, the tourist that comes to Nova Scotia in nine cases out of ten wishes to see the one historic point in Canada that is probably more important than any other, and that is the old town of Louisburg. They read about it in their schoolbooks many years ago, and as the years went on their interest no doubt grew. Perhaps as they took a deeper interest in Canadian history they got a better view and a keener realization of the importance of the fall of Louisburg in 1758. At that time Louisburg was the key to the gulf of St. Lawrence; the taking of that town meant the taking of the French citadel on the Atlantic coast. The following year the British were enabled to make Louisburg a strategic point from which to take Quebec. Had it not been for the capture of Louisburg in 1758, it would have been very difficult if not impossible to take Quebec the following year, and thus students of history recognize that in that old town was fought out and probably settled the destiny of Canada and probably of the whole North American continent for all time to come.

I admire the efforts of hon. members who have already spoken in praise of the beauties of their various constituencies, but I wonder what would happen to them and to their point of view if they visited the province of Nova Scotia and the county of Cape Breton. There is where the east begins; there is where the sun first kisses the eastern shore of Canada, and I venture to say that in the course of its long journey until it sets in the waters of the Pacific it does not look upon a more beautiful scene than that which greets it at dawn in Nova Scotia.

I wish I could induce some hon. members to visit the island of Cape Breton and take just a short trip around it. The first spot I would take them to would be the village of Margaree, where is possibly the most fertile valley in the eastern provinces. There is to be found the celebrated Margaree river, the paradise of the angler, where salmon and trout abound and where the greatest hospitality is extended to the tourist. The tourist after a few days' visit there goes home satisfied with the treatment he has received, with the fish he has caught and probably with material enough to furnish conversation for many a long evening. From there I would take him along the celebrated Cabot trail over the tip of Cape North, up the side of a mountain the size of which is such that it makes even the Alps and the Rocky mountains dwindle, and on which cars go in low gear until they reach the top. From that point of vantage you can see in the distance Prince Edward Island, the garden of the gulf, so described by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Myers) the other day. Turning your gaze to the right you see the distant shores of Newfoundland, then down the Atlantic coast over the mountain of Smoky is the village of Baddeck, made prominent many years ago by Charles W. Warner, and now the resting place of Alexander Graham Bell, the great inventor, who having travelled over the world picked this spot as one of the most beautiful he had ever seen. It was there that the first aeroplanes flew in the Dominion of Canada, and there opens to the eyes of the public the beauty of the great Bras d'Or lakes. A little further on we come to the village of St. Ann's, the birthplace and resting place of the celebrated giant McAskill.

When hon. members who speak of the attractions of their constituencies refer to fishing such as is afforded by the lakes of Ontario and other small spots, they are speaking simply of minor league fish. If they want to have big league fish they have to come down to Cape Breton island. There we have a fish called the tuna, a member of the horse mackerel family. I might read just one short description of it:

> In no other waters of the world are there found so many world champion heavyweight deep sea fighters and few with so abundant a variety of lightweight sport fish. They range along the south shore and off Cape Breton. Nova Scotia tuna—the battling giants of the sea! The biggest thrill awaiting those who find their sport with rod and line! The gamest and most enduring fighters in the ocean are the tuna found in Nova Scotian waters.

Progress reported.

KINGSTON PENITENTIARY

Mr. J. P. HOWDEN (St. Boniface): I would like to ask the government a question in regard to a rather important matter. Have they any information regarding a rumoured revolt and fire at Kingston penitentiary?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister): Revolt and what?

Mr. HOWDEN: There is a reported rebellion and fire at the Kingston penitentiary, I understand.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I have heard nothing about it, and the Minister of Justice is not here to-night. He will take note of the question.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, March 22, 1935

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE—MR. MACKENZIE KING

DENIAL OF STATEMENT APPEARING IN PRESS CONCERNING PROGRAM IN ONTARIO LEGISLATURE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on a matter affecting the privileges of this house and a question of personal privilege I desire to direct the attention of your honour to an article appearing in the Ottawa Morning Citizen of March 22, 1935—to-day—headed as follows:

Leave separate school request over until fall.

Special session then will also deal with social reform program of Ontario government is report.

Revamped municipal taxation plan looms.

Say committee to study unemployment conditions after prorogation.

Then in brackets "(Special to the Citizen)". The article continues:

Toronto, March 21.—Following a discussion with right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King yesterday, Premier Hepburn has definitely decided to forego the separate school request for a share of corporation taxes and to postpone enactment of the extensive social reform program which he promised in the last election campaign, it was learned from sources close to the Ontario premier to-day.

All these measures will await special session of the Ontario legislature which Mr. Hepburn will call as soon as the dominion election is over, it is said. Before the house adjourns, a special committee of the legislature will be appointed which will make a study of unemployment conditions, provincial and municipal taxation, and social reforms.

Then a little farther on in the same article.

At his conference with the dominion Liberal leader yesterday, it is reported—

Referring to Mr. Hepburn—

—he was assured of a much larger contribution to unemployment relief should the Liberals be returned to power in the general election.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that when the Hon. Mr. Hepburn and some of his colleagues did me the honour of attending a dinner tendered me by the Liberal party the night before last at the Chateau Laurier I met Mr. Hepburn during the course of the evening. The only conversation I had with Mr. Hepburn while he was in Ottawa was at the dinner table itself and at no time in conversation did Mr. Hepburn make any mention to me or did I make any mention to him of any matter connected with any "separate school request for a share of corporation taxes" or with respect to any "social reform program" of the Ontario government, or with respect to the question of unemployment relief.

An hon. MEMBER: What did you talk about?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I wish to say—

Mr. MANION: Otherwise the report is correct?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that the statements in these particulars contained in this article are wholly false, untrue, misleading and without any foundation, also that, as a matter of fact, at the present time I have no understanding or agreement with any leader of any provincial party in any of the provinces of Canada, whether he be in office or out of office, as to what will be even considered, let alone done, by the Liberal party, should the Liberal party be returned to office as a result of the next general election. I have never had any understanding or agreement of the kind with any provincial leader at any time, and so long as I am the leader of the Liberal party in Canada there will not be any understanding or agreement of the kind, other than what is declared publicly from the platform as part of what would be government policy. I should regard any course such as indicated in this article as being reprehensible and dishonourable, and I hope I would not be thought capable of anything of the kind.

May I say I have made inquiries as to the source of this article, and I learn that a similar article appears in this morning's issue of the Toronto Mail and Empire, sent by that paper's correspondent from the press gallery here. I understand the Hon. Mr. Hepburn has issued a statement in Toronto in which he categorically denies the statement which appears in the Mail and Empire of that city, and which was similar in effect to the statement I have read. May I say if it were not for the fact that I have no desire to embarrass any member of the press gallery I would ask this House of Commons to appoint a committee to inquire into the source of this article, because it is perfectly apparent as the matter stands that it is in the nature of party political propaganda, and as such is both reprehensible and dishonourable.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION FOR SUSPENSION OF STANDING ORDER TO PERMIT PRESENTATION OF BUDGET SPEECH

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister) moved:

That the provisions of standing order 28 respecting the committee of ways and means be suspended for this day.

He said: This is to permit presentation of the budget.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall the motion have the unanimous consent of the house?

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Shelburne-Yarmouth): Mr. Speaker, just before the motion is put I hope that it will be satisfactory to the government, after the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) has concluded his speech on the motion for the committee to go into ways and means, for the debate to be resumed on Tuesday.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: That is satisfactory.

Motion agreed to.

KINGSTON PENITENTIARY

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF JUSTICE AS TO DISTURBANCE CREATED BY PRISONERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, last night before adjournment a question was asked in the house during my absence with regard to a disturbance that occurred yesterday among some prisoners at Kingston penitentiary. I regret to inform the house that there was a disturbance yesterday afternoon in Kingston penitentiary, and from the reports that have so far come to hand I may tell the house that it occurred just at the time of the closing of the shops in the institution, a minute or two before five o'clock. In the west shop block eighty-three prisoners were employed. At closing time these men are marched back to the main prison. Twenty-five of the eighty-three had been marched back when a halt was made with the remainder, and they immediately seized the three guards in charge of the men, searched their pockets, took from them matches, lighters and keys, immediately closed the main door and proceeded to barricade it with material that was at hand or taken from other rooms.

The west shop block contains the tailor shops on the ground floor; the shoemaking shop on the second floor; and part of the second floor which is called the north end is to be used as a new shoemaking shop in the future but it is not yet equipped.

When the guards were seized they were taken to the basement of the block and held there for a time, and their arms and legs were tied. They were subsequently removed to the second floor, to the unoccupied room which I have described as the new shoe factory. Fourteen prisoners went down into the basement and barricaded the door there, and the remaining forty-four went upstairs to this vacant shop block.

A good deal of the machinery in the tailor shop was destroyed; the damage to the machinery is estimated to be $2,000. More damage was done in the shoe shop on the second floor. There a fire was started, and there is damage by fire and smoke and by water and also from broken machinery, which cannot yet be estimated.

The barricade of the doors kept up until the doors were forced open from the outside. I believe they are metal doors and had to be cut. When the outside guards arrived they went down into the basement, found the fourteen prisoners who had gone into the second floor room, and found the forty-four prisoners and the three guards. The disturbance seems to have quieted down very quickly after that. By six-thirty the prisoners were all back in the main prison and in their cells, but the fire had gained considerable headway, and lest it should spread it was thought better to call on the Kingston fire brigade, which immediately sent a detachment to the scene and extinguished the fire. The fire was all out I believe at about eight p.m.

Three prisoners were slightly injured. One had his lip cut, necessitating two stitches from the surgeon, one had an eye injured, which had to be dressed, the injury being very slight, and one had his fingers cut. From the report of the surgeon I gather that all these injuries were inflicted by prisoners upon prisoners. It is estimated, so far as one can at the moment, that probably thirty to thirty-five prisoners were engaged in this disturbance. The rest were there and they seemed reluctant.

No cause can yet be assigned for the trouble. The warden happened to be at penitentiary headquarters yesterday, but as soon as he learned by telephone of the outbreak he immediately returned to the penitentiary. He reported between eight and nine o'clock that all was quiet, that a count had been taken, that all the men were in their cells and the fire was out. To-day he is holding an investigation. The shops were not open this morning but I expect they are this afternoon. It is possible that during the course of the day I shall receive a further report.

UNIVERSITY OF MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. VINCENT DUPUIS (Laprairie-Napierville) (Translation): I have a question to direct to the ministers from the province of Quebec. Yesterday, during the discussion on Bill No. 41, the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé (Mr. Barrette) delivered an eloquent speech on behalf of the University of Montreal, and he asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) to devote to that institution a part of the relief money. Would the French-speaking ministers inform me whether the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé (Mr. Barrette) approached them on that subject, and whether they have submitted the question to the cabinet in order to get a favourable answer. Might we expect that answer soon?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that the hon. gentleman put his question on the order paper.

Mr. SPEAKER: Before government orders are proceeded with, by consent I would ask the house to revert to the order, First reading of Senate bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Bill No. 43, for the relief of Clarence MacGregor Roberts—Mr. Bury (for Mr. Bell, St. Antoine).

Bill No. 44, for the relief of Agnes Mabel Potter Brockwell—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 45, for the relief of John Henry Ley—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

DOCTOR A. G. DOUGHTY

RETIREMENT OF DOMINION ARCHIVIST—HONOUR CONFERRED IN RECOGNITION OF DISTINGUISHED SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, on the orders of the day I would ask permission to state that the retirement of Doctor A. G. Doughty, dominion archivist, by reason of his attainment of the age of seventy-five years, is effective to-day.

In view of Doctor Doughty's monumental achievements as archivist of Canada, his excellency the governor in council will confer upon him the titular distinction of dominion archivist emeritus, provide for him suitable accommodation at the archives, and retain his services as chairman of the public records commission, which is not subject to the provisions of the Civil Service Act.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that as it has become necessary for Doctor Doughty to retire as dominion archivist on account of the civil service requirement respecting age, I believe all parties in this house and equally the country generally will appreciate the action of the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) in seeing that for as long as possible Doctor Doughty is retained in immediate connection with the archives, and that due provision will be made for him there. So far as any department of the public service may be said to be the creation of one man, the department of public archives is certainly the creation of Doctor Doughty, moreover the value of the archives to the government and to the public is in a very large measure immediately dependent upon the personal knowledge of what is therein contained and of sources of information in Doctor Doughty's own mind.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the announcement of the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan), may I ask him whether a decision has been reached as to who is going to replace Doctor Doughty at the head of the archives? May I express the hope that we shall not have to wait as long for the filling of this position as for the filling of the positions of Deputy Minister of Marine and Deputy Postmaster General?

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Speaker, an acting dominion archivist will be appointed forthwith. The appointment of a permanent official will depend upon the action of the governor in council.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

He said: Mr. Speaker, one year ago in presenting the budget I stated that the low point in the long depression had been reached and passed, that considerable progress had already been made in this and other countries in the restoration of normal conditions, and that the prevailing economic trends were in the direction of further progress. In actual experience the accuracy of this statement and forecast has been established and it is my very good fortune to review the course of business and the trend of public finances during a year which has been marked by continued—and substantial—progress, and a nearer approach to sound and satisfactory business and financial conditions.

If we take the most comprehensive index of Canadian economic activity compiled by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, we find that the physical volume of business in Canada was in February of this year (based on preliminary figures) no less than 48·5 per cent above the low point of the depression. When we keep in mind that this means practically a fifty per cent increase, on the average, in the number of automobiles, barrels of flour, pounds of sugar, pairs of shoes, tons of steel, tons of newsprint, feet of lumber, yards of cloth, tons of mineral, kilowatt hours of electricity and corresponding units of other articles produced by practically all our leading industries, as well as freight cars loaded, construction contracts awarded, and the volume of trade, we cannot belittle its significance. No less important is the fact that the improvement is continuing, for this index after a slight recession has again risen to the peak reached last May and is now 15·2 per cent higher than in February, 1934. Moreover, the progress in 1934 was more general than in 1933, as gains were registered in nearly all branches of activity. In view of the unsettled international conditions during the past eight or ten months, this may well be regarded as a real achievement for Canadian business.

In this respect Canada's record compares most favourably with that of other countries. The League of Nations publishes monthly a table showing general index numbers of industrial production for nearly all the leading countries. If we take the fifteen countries for which the figures are available for one of the last three months of 1934 and compare the increases in industrial production since January, 1933, we find that in the degree of advance from January, 1933, to the end of 1934 Canada easily occupies first place. Over this two-year period industrial activity in France showed a decline of 7 per cent and in the Netherlands of 5 per cent. The increases for the other countries are as follows: Belgium, 3 per cent; Japan, 13·2 per cent. Czechoslovakia, 14·7 per cent; Chile, 19·8 per cent; United Kingdom, 22·3 per cent; Norway, 23·3 per cent; Austria, 24·9 per cent; Italy, 26·5 per cent; Sweden, 30·9 per cent; United States, 32·3 per cent; Germany, 36·9 per cent; Poland, 43·1 per cent; and Canada, 46·2 per cent. Canada's progress reflects in part the world-wide recovery based on the automatic working of normal economic forces which have always brought an end to previous depressions, but it is apparent that the greater speed and consistency of our advance must have some real relation to the sound policies which this government has instituted in order to preserve the integrity of our economic and financial structure, to restore equilibrium in our economy and to stimulate the forces making for recovery.

It is not my purpose to weary you with over many statistical details but it may be well to call attention to a few of the more striking evidences of improvement in particular branches of our economic life.

Our index of manufacturing production, based on 29 factors, was in Januray 10·2 per cent higher than in January a year ago and 51·4 per cent above the low point of the depression. As measured by this index, manufacturing activity during 1934 was exceeeded by that of only five of the sixteen years of the post-war period, namely, the years from 1926 to 1930. Furthermore, during the past year considerable progress was made in adjusting the disparity between durable goods and consumers goods industries which is so characteristic a feature of major depressions. The greater recovery in durable goods industries during the last two years may be illustrated by pointing out that in February the production of pig iron, steel and automobiles was, respectively, 509, 353 and 450 per cent in excess of that for February, 1933, the low point of the depression. The output of automobiles and trucks during the full year 1934 was 116,890, an increase of 92 per cent over 1932.

Closely connected with this improvement in the manufacture of durable goods was a welcome change in the construction industry. Contracts awarded increased 29 per cent over 1933, and the index for February was approximately double that for February of last year. While building activity is still at a low level, construction will benefit materially during the balance of this year from the Public Works Construction Act appropriation, the bulk of which has still to be spent, and all signs, including the greater abundance and cheapness of mortgage money, indicate that the period of abnormally low activity for this important industry has been reached and passed.

The value of mineral production in 1934 surpassed not only that of 1933 but also that of any other year in the history of the industry except 1929 and 1930. In physical volume, the output of metals established several new all-time records. Nickel production, for instance, showed an increase of 56 per cent over 1933 and 18 per cent over 1929, the previous record year. Copper output was 22 per cent above that for 1930, the previous high year, while lead and zinc also established new records. In ounces produced, the gold mining industry did not reach the output of its maximum year 1932, but it showed a small increase over 1933 and at current world prices, averaging $34.50 per fine ounce in 1934 against $28.60 in 1933, the value of its product exceeded $102,000,000, a new high record. The figures so far available for February show substantial increases over February of last year for copper and nickel exports and the production of gold, zinc and asbestos.

In the forestry group of industries activity during 1934 was greater than in any year since 1930. Lumber production in British Columbia exceeded two thousand million board feet, representing an increase of 26 and 42 per cent as compared with 1933 and 1932 respectively. The bureau's index for employment in the logging industry was 87·5 per cent higher than in 1933. The increase in lumbering activity was reflected in an active export trade in planks and boards, the export movement being greater than in any year since 1930 and exceeding 1933 by over 34 per cent. The important newsprint industry regained in 1934 a level of activity exceeded only by that of 1929 but distressingly low prices and surplus plant capacity still leave this industry in an unsatisfactory condition.

The output of electric power in 1934 was the highest ever recorded in this country. Kilowatt hours produced registered a gain of 20·6 per cent over 1933 and one of 17 per cent over 1930, the previous maximum year. The expansion in this industry reflects increasing industrial activity but it is also in part due to the increased use of electrical appliances or processes in home and factory and the increasing sales of secondary power for steam production.

Appreciable gains were also shown by our transportation statistics which are among the more significant measures of general business improvement. In 1934, total freight cars loaded were 14·4 per cent in excess of 1933, and for the first nine weeks of 1935 the increase over the corresponding period in 1934 was approximately 6 per cent, despite the lessened movement of grain. The gain in gross operating revenues of the Canadian National for 1934 was 11 per cent while the Canadian Pacific reported an increase of 10·2 per cent over the preceding year.

When we come to agriculture, we also find substantial improvement. The wheat crop was only slightly above that of 1933 but the average cash price of No. 1 Northern at Winnipeg was 81 cents per bushel from August to December, 1934, compared with 65·1 cents in the corresponding period of 1933, and consequently the value of the crop was over 33 per cent greater. According to the estimates of the bureau of statistics the value of all field crops produced in 1934 was $544,975,000, a gain of $91,377,000 over the preceding year. For our live stock industry one of the most reassuring developments in recent years has been the revival in the last few weeks of the export of Canadian cattle to the United States. After being practically excluded from that market by the Hawley-Smoot tariff of 1930, and the very low prices prevailing in that country during 1933 and 1934, our cattle are once more on an export basis due to the recent sharp increase of prices in United States markets, and shipments during the three weeks ended March 15 were approximately double the total for the entire year 1934. This welcome development does not appear to be merely a temporary one, in view of the drastic reduction in the number of live stock in the United States resulting from last season's drought and feed shortage.

However, it must be admitted that conditions in agriculture still leave much to be desired. It is for this reason that so much of the legislation sponsored by this government during the last two or three years has been devoted to improving the condition of the farmer. I refer particularly to the Natural Products Marketing Act, the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act and the various amendments to the Canadian Farm Loan Act designed to provide agricultural credit at low rates, and also to the assistance given by way of guarantee to prevent demoralization in wheat prices.

The unsatisfactory conditions in agriculture and certain other primary industries are in the main due to the low level of international trade resulting from the spread throughout the world of exaggerated economic nationalism, excessive interferences with trade through quotas and exchange controls, and fluctuating currencies. In these circumstances it was inevitable that those countries which chiefly produce primary products—which must depend in large part upon world markets for their sale—were bound to be adversely affected by these world-wide conditions.

At a later stage I will discuss in some detail the statistics regarding our export and import trade. But before doing so it is well to call to mind the forces and policies which govern international trade to-day and their operation and application in every leading country in the world. In a word, it is idle to expound theories and futile to expatiate on the obvious desirability of greater freedom of trade. We are confronted with realities—in other words, we must face facts.

In 1930, when this government came into office, tariffs were higher against the products of Canada in the markets of the world than at any previous time in our history. In many countries throughout the world new and higher barriers had been erected against Canadian exports. In June, 1930, the Hawley-Smoot tariff had come into operation in the United States, increasing to practically prohibitive levels the duties on many of our leading products and imposing duties on other Canadian goods which had formerly been free of duty. In Europe, which provides the outlet for most of our wheat, drastic measures had been enacted to protect domestic producers from the effect of the marked fall in prices. The milling quota, the most effective device which could be employed in keeping out our product, was first introduced in Germany in July, 1929, and was subsequently adopted in France, Italy and many other countries which heretofore had afforded our best markets. Coincident with the introduction of this device the duties on wheat were increased to levels considerably in excess of the world price of this commodity.

With the wave of economic nationalism spreading throughout the world we accepted the logic of the situation and directed our efforts towards expanding our markets in those countries associated with us by special ties. Within a few weeks of assuming office the Prime Minister in the autumn of 1930 at the imperial conference strongly advocated the adoption of a policy of reciprocal preferential tariffs within the empire, and this policy was ultimately adopted at the conference which met in Ottawa in response to his invitation in 1932. The trade agreement concluded with the United Kingdom at the Ottawa conference gave Canadian primary products a privileged position in the world's greatest and most stable market, and also embraced larger preferences in the vast colonial empire which have been of great value to our trade in automobiles and other manufactured goods.

Other agreements were concluded at this conference with the Irish Free State, the Union of South Africa and Southern Rhodesia. Prior to the conference, trade agreements had been negotiated by the Canadian government with Australia and New Zealand, both of which have had very beneficial effects on our trade. There can be little doubt that this series of agreements with empire countries has been of vast assistance in enabling Canada successfully to weather the storm of the present depression. Upon reflection one can readily discern what would have been the dire effects upon our trade without these agreements during a period when other countries were progressively closing their markets to imported goods.

In 1933, at the world economic conference the delegates from Canada strongly advocated the general adoption of a policy of removing the excessive restrictions which were strangling world trade, and the responsibility for the failure to adopt it must rest elsewhere. Since that time we have been carrying on negotiations with various individual countries some of which have been completed, others are still in progress. During the last few days you have been made acquainted with the comprehensive trade agreement which has been concluded with France and which, it may be said, for the first time places our trade relations with that country on an entirely satisfactory basis. Negotiations have been practically completed with Poland for a treaty which will enable Canadian trade to be carried on satisfactorily with that growingly important country from which, in the absence of a treaty, our products have been hitherto almost entirely excluded.

During recent months, an opportunity has presented itself for the first time since this government assumed office to enter into negotiations with a view to effecting a trade agreement with the United States of America.

In June last, the United States congress passed an act which empowered the president to enter into trade agreements with foreign countries, and where necessary or appropriate to carry out the terms of an agreement to proclaim decreases to an amount not greater than 50 per cent in existing duties without the necessity of ratification by congress.

Pursuant to the provisions of this act, the Secretary of State on January 21 last gave formal notice of his intention to negotiate a treaty with Canada. In conformity with the terms of the act, the dates of March 11 and March 18, respectively, were fixed for the reception of written and oral representations with respect thereto by a committee appointed by the president for this purpose.

These negotiations will be actively prosecuted by the government of Canada, and every possible step is being, and will be taken with the object in mind of effecting a satisfactory trade agreement, having for its aim the lowering of trade barriers with consequent increased flow of trade resulting in mutual advantage.

It may also be added that negotiations are now in progress with the representatives in Canada of two other important countries, looking toward an agreement which will mean wider markets for some of our chief primary products.

This brief outline of trade and tariff developments would be incomplete—especially as indicating the purpose of the government to stimulate trade—without summarizing our accomplishment during a period when trade barriers have been higher and more difficult to surmount or remove than at any time in world history. We have not only maintained the trade agreements which were in effect when we assumed office, but we have also greatly improved our position by making the following additional agreements, several of which are of major importance:

1. A comprehensive preferential agreement with the United Kingdom embracing within its terms the colonial empire as well.

2. A new and enlarged agreement with Australia.

3. For the first time, formal agreements with New Zealand, South Africa, Southern Rhodesia, and the Irish Free State.

4. A trade treaty of broad scope with France, which, for the first time, is mutually binding and mutually satisfactory, in place of one which involved the granting of fixed rates by Canada without corresponding obligations by France and which did not give us the French minimum tariff on all our leading exports to that country.

5. A commercial arrangement securing most favoured nation treatment from Germany, a country with whom our trade relations had long been unsatisfactory.

6. An arrangement securing most favoured nation treatment from Austria.

7. An arrangement whereby we obtained most favoured nation treatment from Brazil.

8. A comprehensive agreement with Poland now ready for signature.

In addition, we have entered into negotiations for trade agreements with the United States of America and with two other important European countries.

This record of accomplishment speaks for itself.

Reference has been made to the expansion which has occurred in most of the major branches of economic activity. It is pertinent to ask what has been the effect of this business expansion upon the absorption of unemployment, the most pressing social and governmental problem of the depression years.

A much higher level of employment was maintained in 1934 than in the preceding year, a gain of 15·1 per cent being registered by the bureau's index of employment. On February 1st this index stood at 99·9 a rise of 3·5 per cent from February 1, 1934, and of 25·8 from April 1, 1933. Based on reports from 8,992 employers, the bureau of statistics estimates that the total increase in employment in Canada during the past year was at least 65,000 persons, and since April 1, 1933, the low point in employment, no less than 340,000 persons. Advance reports for March 1st show a substantial further improvement in the employment situation. Despite this increase in employment, the number remaining on the relief rolls is still large. For February, the latest month for which the information is available, the number of families on relief was 259,918, which represents a decrease of 23,756 families from the same month of last year and a decrease of 25,921 families from March, 1933. The total number of individuals on relief, including dependents, was 1,229,935 in February which is a decrease of 117,285 from February of last year, and of 265,031 from March, 1933. These numbers should be substantially further reduced during the next few months as a result of the public works construction program undertaken by the government which is to be augmented by legislation to be introduced later in the session.

In the budget a year ago were reviewed the steps which the government had taken to foster a rise in commodity prices and promote a lowering of interest rates. These efforts have been continued but because of obvious international factors the movement towards rising price levels has made comparatively slight progress during the past year. In Canada fluctuations in wholesale prices during 1934 were of minor importance. The index, it is true, averaged 6·7 per cent higher than during 1933 but it did not at any time move far from the line of 72 per cent of the 1926 average and on March 1, 1935, stood at 72·3 as compared with 72·2 on March 1, 1934. But while the index as a whole remained comparatively stable, a most reassuring development occurred in the form of a considerable correction of some of the disparities which the drastic fall of prices had created and which constitute the most serious aspects of a depression. Thus during the year ended March 1, the wholesale prices of Canadian farm products rose by no less than 8·6 per cent, as contrasted with practically no increase at all in the general index. Similarly the prices of raw and partly manufactured goods increased 3·7 per cent while those of fully and chiefly manufactured products showed no change. The correction of such maladjustments between the various types of prices is one of the most significant measures of the progress of economic recovery.

Interest is one of the rigid factors in our price structure, and as the burden of interest charges still constitutes a pressing problem for most public bodies and many private individuals, it is gratifying to record the rather striking success which has attended the comprehensive program sponsored by the government to bring down interest rates to a level more in line with other prices and with our present productive capacity.

The various steps in this program are a matter of record. With our encouragement, the rate paid on savings deposits by banks and other financial institutions, which is the basic rate in our interest rate system, has been lowered in two or more successive stages to a minimum of 2 per cent. Huge conversion operations have been undertaken to refund outstanding dominion direct and guaranteed loans on a lower interest basis, as such loans matured or became callable. In the last five years this government has converted over $1,100,000,000 of public debt with an attendant saving in fixed charges of over $14,600,000 per year. During the present year, if market conditions continue favourable, we expect to effect further substantial economies through the same process. In this connection it is of interest to note that if we assume that the total dominion and Canadian National Railway obligations which become due or callable before the end of 1937 could be refunded at approximately the present level of interest rates, the total saving in interest plus the increase in income tax due to the elimination of our remaining tax-free bonds, as nearly as can be estimated, would relieve the dominion exchequer of not less than 16 million dollars per year.

A beginning has been made in improving the organization of the short-term money market in Canada and we are hoping that a further substantial contribution to this end may be made by the Bank of Canada. Short-term money rates have been somewhat out of line with long-term rates in this country and their abnormally high level has been a factor retarding the trend to lower long-term rates. We have also so administered the inadequate machinery of the Finance Act and so used the resources provided by the Dominion Notes Act amendment last year as to contribute to greater monetary ease and prevent a tendency towards deflation and the consequent strain that would probably otherwise have prevailed. Finally, and perhaps of most importance, we have striven under great difficulties to press forward towards budgetary balance with all reasonable speed, and to deal with our finances generally in such manner as to deserve the high credit standing which alone justifies and secures low interest rates.

That our efforts have been successful is amply confirmed by the rise in high grade bond prices and by the high prices at which our obligations are currently selling in the investment markets. During 1934 the bureau's index of interest rates fell 21·6 per cent. The bid quotation for the dominion government 4½ per cent bond due in 1959 rose from 99·37 at the beginning of the year to 110·75 at the close. Perhaps the best indication of the improvement is to be found in the fact that in December last we were able to sell a 16 year 3 per cent guaranteed Canadian National Railways bond in the amount of $20,500,000 on a basis to yield the public 3·02 per cent. Such a rate has never before been attained in this country.

This improvement in the yield on dominion bonds has been reflected in more or less similar advances in provincial, municipal and corporate bonds, depending on the credit of the particular borrower. This is characteristic of the rise of security prices in all periods of revival; recovery comes first in the prices of bonds of the highest grade, and then spreads out gradually to the second and other grades of securities. Last fall some of the eastern provinces were able to borrow on exceptionally favourable terms and two of the western provinces succeeded in selling moderate-sized issues on a yield basis to the public of 4·36 and 4·20 per cent, respectively. It appeared that the time was fast approaching where practically all public bodies could secure the advantages of refunding outstanding issues at substantially lower interest rates, but a temporary clogging of the market and certain unfortunate, widely heralded statements have clouded the outlook for the time being. It is to be hoped that this situation is only a temporary one but it behooves all debtors to remember that credit is a tender plant and must be carefully cultivated.

Some of the provinces and many municipalities, have not yet been able to take advantage of the facilities now offered for refunding existing obligations at substantially lower rates but, provided that nothing untoward is done to affect adversely the credit of the particular borrower or the state of the general market, it should not be long before the present low interest rates can be made available to all worthy borrowers. It is recognized that for the time being the burden of fixed charges on outstanding debt incurred at relatively high rates in past years when borrowing was undertaken in some cases too optimistically, presses heavily on the financial resources of the public bodies concerned, especially when regard is had to the expenditures which have to be made for unemployment relief. This general problem has received the most careful consideration of the government and, as will be disclosed by our accounts which will be reviewed a little later, the dominion has come to the financial assistance of several of the provinces and indirectly through them of several municipalities, to the extent of approximately 75 million dollars.

From time to time suggestions have been made looking to elaborate programs for refunding the outstanding debt of all public bodies. These have all received detailed study and will continue to receive our attention. In the budget last year, I discussed some of the difficulties involved, including the technical difficulties resulting from the form in which most of our financing was done in the war and post-war years and the more important difficulty arising out of the fact that so large a proportion of our obligations is held by external investors. It may be taken for granted that neither this house nor the Canadian people would be willing to consider any program that involves any measure of repudiation. Consideration therefore has been given to the possibility of enabling the provinces to refund their floating debts by giving a dominion guarantee to new refunding issues. It will be recognized that such guarantees would imply adequate control over future provincial borrowing and the factors that might make such borrowing necessary. It is doubtful whether the provinces would be willing to meet the only conditions under which this type of solution would be practicable and sound, both in the interests of the dominion and the provinces themselves. This same type of consideration arises also in connection with the proposal to establish a loan council in Canada, somewhat along the lines of the Australian model. The wisdom of securing some such type of control as a loan council could give has long been recognized, if the financial mistakes of the post-war period are to be prevented in future, but whether the rigid type of control implied by a loan council or the more flexible and gradually evolving influence which the Bank of Canada may exert through making competent and disinterested advice available to public bodies is a question upon which opinions may well differ.

It will be recalled that last summer the Prime Minister issued an invitation for a dominion-provincial conference to be held before the close of the year. On the agenda of this proposed conference was placed amongst other matters the problem of the financial relations of the provinces and the dominion, including the consideration of a possible reallocation of tax sources as between the two jurisdictions and the practicability of various methods of cooperation in tax administration. It was not found possible for all provincial premiers to agree to a date for the holding of such a conference prior to the assembling of this parliament and the proposal had to be allowed to drop for the time being. It is unfortunate that it was necessary to postpone joint consideration of these and other similar important matters.

In the field of agriculture it was widely recognized that existing debts were in many cases clearly beyond the capacity of farmers to pay, even assuming reasonable improvement in business and commodity prices. It was the part of wisdom, therefore, to provide simple and inexpensive machinery whereby the liquidation of farm debts might be effected with due regard to the rights of debtor and creditors in each individual case and, so far as possible, by the process of negotiation and compromise. That machinery was provided by the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act and its success after only a few months of trial is now a matter of record. In numerous cases farmers have had their debt structures simplified and their fixed charges reduced to a point within the capacity of the farm enterprise to pay. From the national point of view, the benefit of restoring their confidence and enabling them to remain on the land as willing and efficient producers is difficult to exaggerate. Admirably supplementing this act is the new Canadian farm loan legislation which provides for releasing to agriculture ample government funds at the cost to the government plus the expense of administration. Changes in the organization of the farm loan board will make it possible to bring these funds to efficient farmers in all provinces with a minimum of red-tape and a maximum of expedition.

The benefit of these steps which have been taken to reduce interest rates is not confined to the lessened burden of fixed charges to public bodies and private borrowers. Perhaps a more important advantage will accrue from the powerful stimulus which lower interest rates exert on business recovery. It is generally agreed that in the United Kingdom the recovery which has taken place traces its origin in large part to the creation of a condition of cheap and abundant money. Lower interest costs affect profits directly and make possible expansion of plant and equipment that would otherwise have been impossible because unprofitable. Low yields on high grade bonds force financial institutions and individual investors to seek out the larger returns that come from corporate securities and from mortgages. Already in Canada there are evidences that more and cheaper money is becoming available for mortgage purposes. This augurs well for further revival of the construction industry in which activity has been abnormally depressed and unemployment serious.

In the banking field the feature of the year has been the establishment of the Bank of Canada which began operations on March 11. The management which has been provided for this new institution commands, I am certain, the entire confidence of the Canadian people. The bank begins business with the goodwill and the support of the public as well as with the cooperation of the chartered banks with which it will have largely to deal. It may not be able to work the miracles which are expected from it in certain quarters but I am confident that in the coming years its contribution to the economic welfare of this dominion will be an important one. It will provide, what has long been needed, an undivided control, solely in the public interest, of the volume of currency and credit in use. It will, it is hoped, contribute to greater stability in our economic life, so far as this may be possible by the use of monetary methods. It will provide leadership for the first time to the financial community and assist in several ways in improving the organization and working of our whole financial system. I also expect much from the disinterested and competent advice on financial matters which it should be able to give, not only to the dominion government but also to provincial governments which may have found it difficult to keep closely in touch with conditions in the world's financial markets and which may in future avail themselves of the bank's services.

The bank will also provide an effective mechanism by which Canada may at the appropriate time execute such national policies as may be determined upon in regard to our future monetary standard. I have already referred to the retarding effect upon international trade of the chaotic condition of the world's basic currencies. For Canada, so heavily interested as she is in foreign trade and with such huge obligations payable abroad, this monetary instability is a factor of major importance. For a time last year it appeared that an approach to stability was gradually being achieved and that the working of economic forces was beginning to reveal the natural rates of equilibrium between certain countries which would make de facto stabilization possible. Recent events, however, indicate upon how slender a thread hangs the integrity of certain currencies, and suggest the possibility of a period of renewed fluctuations with consequent disturbances to trade and finance.

This is but one of the international factors which must be taken into consideration if we wish adequately to appraise the outlook for the coming year. The brief review given of economic developments in Canada during the past year would seem to justify a substantial degree of optimism as to the immediate future. That would be the case if we could consider solely our own position. But in these days nations do not live unto themselves alone, perhaps least of all, Canada! And no one can look out upon the world to-day without recognizing the political frictions that exist, the apparent beginning of a new armament race among the nations, the social and economic tensions that persist in many countries, the financial and exchange uncertainties, the obstinate adherence to extreme policies of economic nationalism, and the general absence of confidence, mutual trust, goodwill and the cooperative spirit upon which alone the needed international solutions of our common problems can be based.

As long as these adverse influences continue in the international field, they must be taken into our reckoning. We in Canada have long since passed the low point of the depression. We have been making splendid progress and that progress should continue—rapidly if world conditions favor, less rapidly if they impede. We have important continuing problems still to solve—the railway deficit, unbalanced budgets, unemployment—but these will be solved at the same pace as we succeed in restoring normal business conditions. We have moreover the more fundamental problem of adjusting our economic system to enable it to function with greater stability and with a greater measure of social justice. To this problem and its solution the government has devoted itself.

TRADE OF CANADA

The expansion of our external trade has continued on an accelerated scale. In the previous fiscal year the total of imports and exports showed a gain of 15 per cent over the year before. In the eleven months' period ended February 28th last, the rate of increase was 18 per cent over the corresponding period of 1933-34. The actual increase was $168,000,000 and the total volume was the best since 1931. Imports expanded at a rate of 23 per cent over the previous year, and exports by 15 per cent. In the earlier stages of trade recovery exports were increasing faster than imports.

World statistics show that in 1934 Canada again occupied fifth place in export trade, and stood ninth in imports and eighth in total international trade.

A statement of the total trade for the eleven months ended February 28th, with comparative figures, follows:

Trade of Canada
(excluding gold coin and bullion)
(000 omitted)

	Eleven months ended February 28, 1934	February 28, 1935	Increase
Imports	$ 386,279	$ 474,240	$ 87,961

Foreign produce	5,585	6,731	1,146
	$ 913,570	$1,082,347	$ 168,777

For the fourth successive year Canada's exports have exceeded imports, the favourable balance in the eleven months' period being nearly $134,000,000. This figure is for merchandise only and does not include the export of current gold production which adds a further $100,000,000 annually to credits available in external markets for the liquidation of interest due abroad and other debit items in international settlements.

The following statement shows the balance of trade in merchandise for the past six years:

The effective operation of the empire trade agreements is reflected in the statistics of intra-empire trade. In the ten months ended January 31st, the latest date to which figures of trade by countries are compiled, exports to the United Kingdom, our largest market, recorded an increase of nearly 22 per cent. For all empire countries the increase was 24 per cent. Exports to Australia showed a gain of 52 per cent, to New Zealand, 72 per cent, to British India, 21 per cent, and to South Africa, 76 per cent.

On the other hand, exports to foreign countries increased by only 6 per cent. Exports to all countries increased by nearly $71,000,000 in the ten months' period, and of this amount, $56,000,000 or 79 per cent was accounted for in increased exports to empire countries.

Since 1932, the year of the imperial conference, the value of our export trade to the United Kingdom has increased by 52 per cent. This gain has been a material factor in improving conditions in a wide variety of Canadian industries. In 1934 the exports of agricultural products exceeded those of 1932 by $16,600,000; in animals and animal products, the advance was $24,000,000; in wood products, chiefly lumber, it was $14,500,000, and in nonferrous metals and their products, including copper, lead, nickel and zinc, the gain was $31,000,000.

Imports from the United Kingdom have increased in the last ten months by $8,000,000, or 9 per cent. In 1934 they exceeded those of 1932 by 21 per cent. The main increases in imports were in textiles, iron products and chemicals. Imports from other empire countries increased in the ten months' period as follows: Australia, 19 per cent; New Zealand, 22 per cent; and British India, 31 per cent.

Figures showing the trade with the empire in the last ten months are as follows:

Intra-Empire Trade of Canada
(excluding gold coin and bullion)

	Ten months ended January 31, 1934	Ten months ended January 31, 1935
Imports from United Kingdom	$ 87,114,091	$ 95,292,201
Exports to United Kingdom	191,277,804	232,987,396
Imports from British Empire	116,599,414	134,246,466
Exports to British Empire	231,648,330	287,587,697

Empire countries are supplying a little over 30 per cent of our purchases abroad. At the same time, they absorb over one-half of our exports.

A statement, by percentages, showing the distribution of import and export trade, excluding gold coin and bullion, follows:

Percentage Distribution of Trade of Canada
(excluding gold coin and bullion)

	Imports		Exports
	Ten months ended January 31		Ten months ended January 31
	1934 %	1935 %	1934 %	1935 %
United Kingdom	24.70	21.80	39.53	42.01
British Empire	33.06	30.71	47.87	51.85
United States	53.73	56.91	33.04	33.74
Other Countries	13.21	12.38	19.09	14.41

Despite many unfavourable influences, further progress has been made in the restoration of world trade from the disastrously low levels to which it had fallen. Canada has been in the forefront of the leading countries of the world ranked according to the rate of improvement, thus testifying to the effectiveness of our trade agreements and the initiative and enterprise of those engaged in industry and trade. The improvement which has taken place in this, as well as in the other fields of activity to which reference has been made, has had a favourable influence upon the dominion's financial statement, which will now be reviewed.

REVENUES 1934-35

As the current fiscal year has still some days to run and more than a month will elapse before the Dominion accounts are closed for the year, it will be understood that the figures now to be presented, both as to the year's revenues and expenditures, are to some extent estimated. Judging by past experience, however, they may not be expected to vary materially from the final result.

For the first time since 1930, receipts from taxation will yield the expected return. When presenting the budget last year, the outlook for a greater volume of business was so promising that substantially increased yields from current rates of taxation were forecast. Notwithstanding some loss in revenue due to changes made in taxation measures when the budget was before parliament, the receipts from taxation will amount to $306,050,000, almost the identical figure estimated in the previous budget. This is an increase of $34,200,000 over the previous year and is all the more satisfactory in the light of the substantial reductions in taxation effected last year, particularly the fifty per cent cut in the sugar tax and in the special excise tax on imports under the British preferential tariff which, together, involved a loss in revenue of not less than $10,000,000. It is noteworthy that every month in the year showed an increase over the corresponding month of the previous year and the rate of improvement has been maintained throughout the year.

Customs

Reflecting the continued, even though moderate, expansion in international trade, customs import duties will yield $77,300,000, an increase of $11,000,000 over the previous year. Excise duties, imposed chiefly on liquors and tobaccos, will amount to $44,600,000 exceeding the collections of 1933-34 by $9,000,000.

The income tax, the rates of which were not altered last year, will bring in a total of $65,600,000, the highest figure for four years, and $4,200,000 in excess of the previous year's collections. To the extent of about $3,100,000 this increase is due to credits transferred from the gold tax at the end of the fiscal year to be applied, in accordance with the statute, against the income tax liability of gold mining companies. This amount can be regarded as in the nature of a prepayment of income tax.

With the adjustments that have been made from time to time in the scale of taxation, the income tax has been one of the steadiest sources of income in the past four years, notwithstanding fluctuations in the general level of incomes and profits.

Upwards of $11,000,000 more than in the previous year will be obtained from the sales tax, the yield from which will be $72,600,000. The other special excise taxes will bring $39,800,000, a decline of $5,300,000 from the year before due to the reductions in taxes already referred to.

The gross collection from the gold tax to the end of the fiscal year will be $7,084,000. It is estimated that $3,100,000 of this amount will be applied as a credit on the income tax payable by the several mining companies subject to the tax. This will reduce the net return for the year from the gold tax to $3,984,000.

The following table sets out the yield from taxes for the past five years:

Non-Tax Revenues

Revenues derived from the various departmental services of government, will amount to $53,300,000, an increase of $1,100,000 over the previous year. The main items under this heading are interest on investments, which is expected to amount to $11,400,000 (some $260,000 in excess of the amount from the same source the year before), and Post Office revenues which will be $31,184,000 an increase of almost $300,000 over the previous year. On reference to the expenditure statement, it will be found that the operations of the Post Office were conducted without any increase in cost, in fact, there was a slight reduction from the previous year the expenditure being $30,528,000. The surplus on Post Office operations will therefore be over $600,000 as compared with one-half that figure a year ago. The accounts of the Post Office do not, of course, take into consideration the rental value and other costs of premises occupied. On the other hand, no credit is given the Post Office for services rendered other departments through the free use of the mails.

EXPENDITURES 1934-35

Ordinary Expenditures

The ordinary expenditures for the year, it is estimated, will be $356,600,000, which is approximately $2,200,000 lower than the amounts authorized by vote and statute. While there is an increase of $10,000,000 over the figure of the year before, it is $26,000,000 below the ordinary expenditure in the year 1930-31. The increase has not resulted from any general expansion in departmental activities but rather is accounted for, in the main, by increases in several of the uncontrollable expenditures and by provision made for some new services. The largest single item of increase is for Old Age Pensions which will require $2,600,000 over the figure of the previous year. The expenses of the dominion franchise commissioner in connection with the registration of voters and preparation of the election lists, will involve a new expenditure of $1,560,000. An increase of $1,500,000 under the Department of Railways and Canals is made up, in part, of the special vote of $500,000 for the railway grade crossing fund, $100,000 for the encouragement of tourist traffic and $785,000 being the dominion's contribution towards the cost of a subway tunnel under the Lachine Canal in the city of Montreal. Under the Department of Pensions and National Health an additional expenditure of $500,000 has been required for war veterans' allowances. In addition, there has been absorbed, as new services, the cost of administration of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act and the Natural Products Marketing Act.

Capital Expenditures

Under capital expenditures, the chief item amounting to $4,900,000 is for dredging the river St. Lawrence ship channel. Comparatively small amounts have been required for the Welland ship canal and towards completion of the Hudson Bay railway and terminals. The total for the year will be $7,100,000, an increase of $600,000 over the expenditure of the previous year. The estimates provided for an expenditure on capital account of $7,246,000.

A comparative statement of capital expenditure over the five year period follows:

Special Expenditures

Special expenditures will total $66,100,000, of which $60,400,000 represents payments in the fiscal year for unemployment relief measures. This amount is much greater than in any previous year as will be seen from the following statement of expenditures for unemployment relief since 1930-31:

1930-31	$ 4,432,000
1931-32	38,295,000
1932-33	36,721,000
1933-34	35,898,000
1934-35	60,448,000
Total	$175,794,000

The estimated expenditure in the present fiscal year has been made for the following purposes:

Direct relief	$33,500,000
Dominion contribution to provincial and municipal works and undertakings	5,110,000
Public Works Construction Act, 1934	8,500,000
Dominion contribution to relief in Saskatchewan drought area	5,000,000
Other expenditures, including dominion projects, camps for single homeless unemployed men, etc.	8,338,000
Total	$60,448,000

The disbursements for direct relief have been much greater than the actual expense incurred in the fiscal year period. In the first place, it will be remembered that the Relief Act of 1933 limited the amount which could be expended for direct relief to $20,000,000. This resulted in a carryover from last year amounting to $9,360,000, which has been disbursed in the present fiscal year. Furthermore, the institution of monthly grants in aid to the provinces covering the dominion's contribution for relief expenditure from August 1st last, has had the effect of bringing up to date the dominion's share of direct relief expenditure, whereas in previous years the usual delay in the presentation of accounts first by the municipality to the province and then by the province to the dominion, had the effect of creating a very considerable lag in the disbursements. At the present time, the monthly grants to the provinces amount to $1,751,000.

It is estimated that up to the end of March, $5,000,000 will be paid out by way of advance to the province of Saskatchewan for relief in the drought area and actual disbursements by the province are being checked by a representative of the dominion stationed at Regina. A final decision has not yet been reached with the province as to the amount of the cost of these relief measures which will be assumed by the dominion and, in the meantime, the sums which have been advanced have been accepted by the province as loans for which security has been given. In order, however, that our statement of expenditures for the year may be as inclusive as possible of obligations relating to the year, our estimated expenditures as listed above include the whole of the $5,000,000 made available to Saskatchewan to date for disbursement to farmers in the drought area.

The program of dominion public works under the Public Works Construction Act passed at the last session, provided for a total expenditure of $39,690,000. While the actual disbursements to the end of the fiscal year will be about $8,500,000, contracts and commitments actually made to date are in the neighbourhood of $25,000,000.

A comparative statement showing Special Expenditures under the different heads for the past five years follows:

Loans to Provinces

It has again been necessary, as in the previous three years, for the dominion to assist the four western provinces by the granting of loans to enable them to finance, in part, provincial and municipal expenditures for relief and to make loans to farmers in distressed areas for the purchase of seed grain, feed, etc.

During the year, several of the provinces were able, by reason of their improved budgetary position and the strength of investment markets, to make public issues of securities and they were not obliged to rely wholly upon the dominion for their borrowings. The aggregate of the loans by the dominion, however, was large, the net amount, after crediting repayments, being $23,300,000, divided among the provinces as follows:

Manitoba	$ 2,900,000
Saskatchewan	10,500,000
Alberta	1,900,000
British Columbia	8,000,000
	$23,300,000

The net amount of loans outstanding at the end of the previous fiscal year was $51,300,000 which, with the net loans granted in the current year of $23,300,000, brings the total of dominion assistance to the four western provinces by way of loan under the relief acts, to $74,600,000. Short date Treasury Bills bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent to July 1st last and 4½ per cent thereafter, have been tendered by the provinces in respect of the loans. Interest has been paid in cash by the provinces of Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia as it became due, but the province of Saskatchewan, being unable to meet such payments, has covered the interest accruals by tendering their treasury bills.

A statement of the loans to date by provinces, showing the purposes for which they were granted, follows:

Loans and Advances—Non-active

The total outlay under this head will be $1,700,000, as compared with over $3,000,000 last year. These are amounts paid for deficits and capital requirements of the Canadian National Steamships, the deficit of the Jacques Cartier bridge, Montreal, and for loans to several of the harbour commissions. Being non-interest producing, these advances are treated as additions to the net debt.

It is gratifying to note that the operations of the Canadian National Steamships have shown a marked improvement over the previous year. The cash deficit of the West Indies Service amounted to $567,000, as compared with $968,000 in 1933. The ships remaining in the Canadian Government Merchant Marine fleet operated in 1934 at a cash loss of $127,000, as compared with $18,000 in the previous year. In addition, $43,000 was provided from dominion funds for capital expenditures on the West Indies ships. The total amount required for the steamships in respect of operations in 1934 was therefore $737,000. The merchant marine, due to curtailment in operations, found it possible to return to the dominion a further $250,000 advanced some years ago for working capital, and with the application of this credit, the net amount required for shipping services this year will be $487,000. The amount paid to the Montreal harbour commission for the deficit on the Jacques Cartier bridge was $434,000, bringing the total amount which the dominion has had to pay since 1930, to $2,022,000.

Non-active loans to the harbour commissions at Chicoutimi, Halifax, Quebec, Saint John and Three Rivers, will total $802,000.

A statement of non-active advances for the past five years follows:

In addition to the advances to harbour commissions treated in our accounts as non-active, there has been made in the past year a comparatively small amount of loans to the harbour commissions at Montreal and Vancouver. As interest is paid by these commissions on the loans which they have received from the treasury, they are carried in the accounts as active assets.

For purposes of record, there is submitted a statement showing loans to all harbour commissions for the past five years and the aggregate to date, which has now reached the large sum of $138,000,000:

Canadian Farm Loan Board

New capital furnished to the Canadian Farm Loan Board in the year will amount to $353,000, bringing the total investment of the dominion to $8,856,000.

Bonds of the board are now purchased on a basis of 4 per cent instead of 5 per cent, as formerly, and a corresponding reduction has been made in the cost of money to farmers who borrow from the board.

Canadian National Railways

The amount required in cash from the dominion treasury for deficit of the Canadian National Railways decreased by $10,500,000 in 1934, as compared with 1933. Increased earnings, on the one hand, and decrease in the charges for exchange involved in payment of interest abroad, were the main factors in this improvement. Gross earnings were greater by $16,400,000, or 11 per cent, and while operating expenses were somewhat larger than the estimated figures presented in the railway budget, the outcome on the whole was slightly better than anticipated at the beginning of the year. The amount required for deficit, after payment of interest due the public, and taken into the accounts of the dominion as an expenditure for the year, amounted to $48,400,000, as compared with $58,900,000 in 1933. While this reduction in the deficit affords a very welcome relief to the treasury and tax-payer, the deficiency which still remains is of such proportions as to constitute a most serious drain on our resources.

Actually, the books of the company show a loss in 1934 of $89,600,000. This figure can be reconciled with the amount of our payment by deducting $36,000,000 for accrued—but unpaid—interest on government advances and $5,200,000 for various charges not involving cash outlay on the part of the railway.

In addition to provision for the deficit, the dominion furnished by way of loan $579,000 for capital expenditures and $10,170,000 for retirement of miscellaneous maturing debt, making a total paid on all accounts in respect of the operations in the year 1934, of $59,100,000. The budget of the railways, as presented to parliament, provided for a total amount of $65,200,000. It will be seen, therefore, that the net requirements for the year were $6,000,000 less than estimated, accounted for mainly by savings in capital expenditures.

In addition to the assistance granted in cash, the dominion guaranteed an issue of 3 per cent 16-year bonds to the amount of $20,500,000 issued and payable in Canada only, for the purpose of refunding $17,060,000 Canadian Northern dominion guaranteed 4 per cent debenture stock which fell due on September 1st last and $3,510,000 Great Northern Railway Company of Canada 4 per cent bonds due October 1st last. The cost of this flotation to the company was 3·10 per cent, the resultant saving in interest charges being about $200,000 annually.

On February 15th last, another issue of Canadian Northern Railway Company 4½ per cent dominion guaranteed bonds fell due, payable in Canada and New York, and was provided for, pending a suitable opportunity for the issue of long-term securities, by the issue of 2 per cent temporary guaranteed bonds. No public sale took place in this connection, $6,831,000 having been advanced from the dominion treasury and the balance of $10,169,000 having been secured by the sale of temporary bonds to trustees of railway equipment issues.

The debt of the Canadian National Railway system, outstanding in the hands of the public is now $1,238,000,000, having been reduced by $15,000,000 in the past year. Of the amount outstanding, $956,000,000 are obligations guaranteed by the dominion.

A further improvement in railway earnings is anticipated in the year 1935 and the estimates of the company are based upon a further reduction of $4,400,000 in the deficit, bringing the loss to $44,000,000. In addition, the company will require $5,500,000 for capital expenditures and $25,700,000 for retirement of capital obligations, including sinking funds and equipment principal payments and the $17,000,000 bond maturity on February 15, 1935, already referred to. The total of these amounts is $75,200,000.

The following statement summarizes the financial requirements of the Canadian National Railway system in respect of the calendar year 1934, as compared with their budget figures and with their actual requirements in 1933:

Summary of Expenditures

The grand total of expenditures for the year, under all heads, including relief and railway deficit, will be $480,000,000. This is an increase of $22,000,000, as compared with 1933-34, which is more than accounted for by the increase in unemployment relief outlays.

A summary of expenditures, with comparisons for the previous four years, is now submitted:

*Corresponding figures for operations in the years 1930 and 1931 were $28,425,000 and $52,256,000 respectively. The losses in 1930 and 1931 were financed by loans and/or guarantee of securities. Government loans of $41,121,000 in respect of 1931 operations appear in the above statement under Loans and Advances Non-active for the year 1932-33.

Net result of Year's Operations

Taking the ordinary revenues for the year at $359,300,000 and ordinary expenditures at $356,600,000, there is a resulting surplus on ordinary account of $2,700,000. This is the first surplus on ordinary account since 1929-30, and compares with a deficit of $22,000,000 last year and $43,000,000 the year before.

There are, of course, to be taken into consideration, capital and special expenditures, less special receipts, and loans and advances non-active, to arrive at the net result for the year on government operations. These amount to $72,000,000, and wipe out the surplus on ordinary account, producing a deficit of $69,300,000.

Adding the railway deficit of $48,400,000, the total increase in debt for the year becomes $117,700,000. The corresponding figure for the previous year was $133,500,000, indicating an over-all improvement of $15,800,000.

It may be useful at this point to analyze the increase of debt which the dominion has had to assume in the past five years and to indicate briefly the purposes for which the added obligations have been incurred. The net debt has risen by $669,900,000 since the end of 1929-30. The present administration took office in August, 1930, after the budget for 1930-31 had been determined and, with the exception of unemployment relief expenditure of $4,400,000, the deficit of $83,800,000 incurred in that year cannot properly be attributed to its period of office. For the purpose of making a complete presentation, however, the year 1930-31 is included in this computation.

The largest single factor contributing to the increase of our debt has been the deficits of the Canadian National Railway system. The total expenditure in that connection has been $223,900,000, accounting for 34 per cent of the increase in debt in the period. Undoubtedly, the falling-off in traffic due to the depression would in any event have imposed serious burdens on the public, but the problem was rendered particularly acute by reason of the dead-weight of railway debt incurred for railway expansion in the previous eight-year period, much of it payable in external currencies.

Next in order of importance comes the expenditure for unemployment relief and wheat bonus, aggregating $188,500,000, representing 28 per cent of the total increase in debt.

Deficits on ordinary account, due to the falling off in taxation revenues and notwithstanding drastic curtailment in expenditures and personnel of government departments, amounted to $135,350,000, or 20 per cent of the additional debt incurred in the period.

Capital expenditure on public works totalled $67,300,000, or 10 per cent. Of this amount $28,200,000 was incurred in the year 1930-31 alone.

Loans and advances, non-active, chiefly to harbour commissions and steamships, amounted to $40,200,000, or 6 per cent. The greater part of the expenditure for harbour commissions, amounting to $35,600,000, arises out of projects initiated and carried on before the present government took office. The expenditure was then carried in the accounts as active assets and excluded from the net debt. These so-called assets were written down in 1932-33, as the commissions had no revenues over operating expenses to support this debt.

The balance of the debt increase is made up of miscellaneous special expenditures, totalling $14,500,000, or 2 per cent.

A brief statement accounting for the increase of debt is now submitted:

Increase of Net Debt, March 31, 1930, to March 31, 1935

	Amount	Per cent
Canadian National Railway deficits	$223,970,000	34
Unemployment relief and wheat bonus	188,500,000	28
Deficits on ordinary account	135,350,000	20
Capital expenditures	67,380,000	10
Loans and advances, non-active	40,200,000	6
Other special expenditures, less special receipts	14,500,000	2
Increase in net debt, 1930-35	$669,900,000	100

While the debt figures have grown in the five year period to the extent indicated, fortunately the annual interest burden has not increased in anything like the same proportion, due to the notable savings made through debt refunding operations. In actual fact, the annual charges on the total interest-bearing debt of the dominion, funded and unfunded, have increased by only $14,300,000 in the five years. This is the measure of the additional burden in fixed charges in the period of the depression. Had the new debt been incurred at the average rate now prevailing, and had there been no such savings through refunding. the addition to the debt charges would have been almost twice as large.

Furthermore, it should be pointed out that $3,450,000 of the increased debt charge of $14,300,000, arises out of the transfer this year of 3 per cent dominion bonds to the Bank of Canada in respect of the outstanding note issue not covered by gold or silver. There will be on the revenue side an off-setting item, at least in part, to the interest payable on these bonds in the profits which the bank will turn back to the government. The transaction is more in the nature of an internal financial arrangement than the creation of a new debt, an interest bearing liability having, for the purposes of the establishment of the bank, been substituted for the non-interest bearing liability formerly represented by the uncovered note issue.

Controllable and Uncontrollable Expenditures

The fixed and uncontrollable expenditures of government in the current year will total about $233,000,000 and the controllable, $138,000,000; that is, out of every $100 spent by the government, nearly $63 is required for interest, pensions, provincial subsidies, ex-soldiers' care, and similar items. This computation, as in past years, excludes the cost of unemployment relief and the Canadian National Railway deficit.

It may be opportune to call attention again to the reduction which has been made in controllable expenditures since 1930-31. While uncontrollable items exceed those of 1930-31 by $21,500,000 the main increases being in interest on public debt and old age pensions, the controllable expenditures on ordinary account now stand at $45,500,000 below the figure of four years ago, a reduction of 26 per cent. Capital and other expenses are down by $33,600,000, making a total reduction of $79,100,000.

The decrease in ordinary expenditures has involved not only the closest scrutiny of estimates and careful administration on the part of the spending departments, but a continuous supervision of personnel and spending policy through the treasury board. The actual decrease in the number of government employees since 1930, including fluctuating as well as permanent staffs, has been 12,700, with a resultant saving in salaries and wages exceeding $12,000,000 a year, apart altogether from the amount of $7,300,000 arising from the operation of the Salary Deduction Act.

The first and fundamental step in the strengthening of treasury control of expenditures in the past four years, was the revision of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act and the consequent reorganization of governmental accounting staffs instituted at the instance of the Prime Minister in 1931. Since that date, there has been an increasing degree of treasury control of expenditures. The advantage to the tax-payer has been apparent from the figures cited above. It is to be expected that with the addition of new governmental functions under the legislation of parliament, as, for example, unemployment insurance, there will be some expansion in the ordinary expenditures of government and, with improvement in business and expanding revenues, some additional amounts will be required for existing services which have been placed upon short ration in recent years. Nevertheless, the dominion's fixed obligations are such as to require, for some years in the future at least, most prudent and economical administration. To that end, the technique of control, which has been developed in recent years, will need to be maintained and strengthened wherever possible.

In submitting the expenditure statement classified under the headings "Controllable" and "Uncontrollable," the comparative figures for the year immediately before the war, 1913-14, are given as a matter of record. It will be recalled that last year attention was drawn to the fact that after eliminating Post Office expenditures, for which there are compensating revenues, the ordinary controllable services were costing on a per capita basis practically the same figure as in 1913-14. The same situation holds in so far as the current year's expenditures are concerned. As pointed out last year, this fact is all the more impressive in indicating the economies which are now being observed when one considers the large amounts involved in expenditures to-day for which there was no counterpart in 1913-14, for example, air services, radio services and broadcasting, research bureau and coal movement subsidies.

A statement comparing the controllable and uncontrollable expenditures in the years 1913-14, 1930-31 and 1934-35, showing the percentages of the total required for the various services, is now submitted:

LOAN FLOTATIONS

In the fiscal year 1934-35 the dominion issued loans in three markets—London, New York and Canada. These loans were made for refunding, as well as for current requirements.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

In May last, an issue of £10,000,000 3¼ per cent registered stock was sold in London at a price of 96.50, or at an interest cost of 3.48 per cent. The issue will mature May 1, 1955 with the right to call at par on or after May 1, 1950. Part of the proceeds of this issue was used to pay off the 3½ per cent sterling loan dated June 1, 1884, and maturing June 1, 1934. The amount of this loan outstanding was £4,822,029, of which £2,086,776 was held in the sinking fund. The balance of the proceeds was used for current purposes, including a temporary loan to the Canadian National Railways to enable it to redeem stock on the London register of the issue maturing September 1st, already referred to. The government was later reimbursed by the issue of guaranteed railway securities in Canada.

The $60,000,000, 4 per cent notes due October 1, 1934, in New York, were called for redemption on September 1st. A one-year banking credit was obtained from New York banks at a rate of 2 per cent to the amount of $50,000,000 to pay off the called notes. The balance of $10,000,000 was met out of current cash resources.

On November 1st, last, the unconverted balance of the 1919-34 Victory loan amounting to $222,216,850 matured. To meet this maturity, the 1934 Refunding loan was issued in Canada on October 15th. This loan was offered in four maturities; two-year bonds with interest at 2 per cent, five-year with interest at 2½ per cent, eight-year with interest at 3 per cent and fifteen-year bonds with interest at 3½ per cent. The fifteen year bonds were made subject to call, at the option of the government after ten years. The two-year bonds were offered at 98.90 to yield 2.57 per cent, the five-year at 98.15 to yield 2.90 per cent, the eight-year at 97.00 to yield 3.43 per cent and the fifteen-year at 96.50 to yield 3.81 per cent.

A small concession in interest and, on the two longer maturities, a premium on the maturing bonds, was offered to those who converted into the new issue. The total amount of Victory bonds converted into the new issue was $157,369,900, or nearly 71 per cent of the amount outstanding. Cash subscriptions totalled $119,405,100, of which only $86,170,200 was accepted.

The practice of issuing treasury bills by public tender was continued. The most recent issue, was made yesterday when $15,000,000 of three months' bills were sold at an average discount rate of 1·76 per cent. The following is a statement of the issues made:

The School Lands 5 per cent debenture stock, issued to the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, matured on July 1, 1934, and was extended for a period of one year at the same rate of interest.

The issue of one-year 3⅞ per cent treasury bills to the amount of $50,000,000 that matured on August 1, 1934, was replaced by an issue of one-year treasury bills bearing interest at 2⅞ per cent.

In connection with the opening of the Bank of Canada there was issued to that institution in accordance with the Bank of Canada Act, $115,013,636.82 of 3 per cent five-year bonds. This issue was to provide for the portion of the dominion note issue that was not covered by gold or silver. On the same date $35,000,000 of three-months treasury bills were sold to the Bank of Canada at a discount of 1¾ per cent, to replace a similar amount of 4 per cent treasury bills held by the chartered banks.

Reference has already been made to the large savings in interests charges arising from refunding operations in the past four years. It is noteworthy that as a result the average interest rate on the dominion's funded debt and treasury bills has now been reduced to 4.15 per cent, compared with a hight point of 5.204 per cent in 1922.

The following is a statement of the unmatured funded debt and treasury bills of the dominion outstanding at March 31st, 1935, showing also the annual interest charges thereon:

Indirect Liabilities

Bonds bearing the guarantee of the dominion outstanding in the the hands of the public, at present amount to $987,300,000, a decrease of $6,000,000 in the year.

With reference to guarantees under the relief acts, no new commitments were entered into during the year and substantial reductions occurred in the amounts outstanding under guarantees given in previous years.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

The guarantee in connection with the financing of the completion of the Beauharnois power project terminated during the year without cost to the government. The Canadian Pacific Railway repaid bank loans to the extent of $12,000,000, reducing the amount of the guarantee correspondingly. The guarantee in connection with the province of Manitoba savings office was reduced by some $1,500,000. The guarantee of bank advances arising out of the operations of the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited in connection with the marketing of wheat, was continued.

Apart from the wheat guarantee, which is for an unstated amount and is subject to fluctuation from day to day, the aggregate of guarantees under the relief acts is $65,717,000, a decrease of $27,500,000 in the fiscal year. The amounts of the different guarantees are as follows:

Guarantees Under Relief Acts	Estimated principle amount of guarantee outstanding Mar. 31, 1935

WAYS AND MEANS, 1935-36

There remain to be considered proposals affecting our revenue position for the coming year. The gain of 12 per cent in the yield from taxation in the current year, after absorbing losses from downward revisions effected in the last budget, gives ground for satisfaction. The upward trend is continuing and I believe we are justified in anticipating with confidence further substantial additions to our income based upon the existing rates of taxation. It must not be overlooked, however, that some new expenditures will have to be met, including grants to the maritime provinces and British Columbia, reinstatement of a portion of salary deductions and expenses incidental to the operation of several of the important measures being dealt with by parliament at this session. Furthermore, although employment is increasing and railway earnings are higher, there will still be a heavy drain on our resources for unemployment and farm relief and payment of railway deficit.

Under these circumstances and with the expectation that improved conditions will render the burden somewhat less onerous than in the past few years, it seems to be the part of wisdom to budget for a further substantial increase of revenue, retaining, except for some adjustments that are not expected to alter the yield materially, the present scale of excise duties and taxes and securing some additional amounts from the income tax.

Income tax

In an address delivered a few weeks ago the Prime Minister made certain references to the necessity of changes in our income tax structure. It was pointed out at that time that incomes may be regarded generally as falling into two categories, which may be described broadly as earned income and investment income, and that this distinction which is recognized in the tax systems of other countries might fairly be held in mind when the question of distributing the burden incidental to providing increased social security was being considered.

With this principle in mind an important amendment to the Income Tax Act is being made. In order to provide additional revenue, it is proposed to levy a surtax on investment income. By investment income is meant interest, dividends, royalties, and like returns. This tax will not apply to wages and salaries up to $14,000. All income in excess of $14,000, for the purposes of this tax is to be regarded as investment income. A specific exemption of $5,000 is provided. That is to say, income up to $5,000 will not be subject to surtax even though all such income be investment income. Furthermore, if the ordinary personal exemption and the allowance for dependents exceed $5,000, exemption to the higher amount will be allowed.

The rates of surtax which are to apply to investment income range from 2 per cent on such income in the lowest category to 10 per cent on all income in excess of $200,000 and are as follows:

Included in any income exceeding	$ 5,000	but not exceeding	$ 10,000	— 2 per cent
Included in any income exceeding	10,000	but not exceeding	14,000	— 3 per cent
On any income exceeding	14,000	but not exceeding	20,000	— 3 per cent
On any income exceeding	20,000	but not exceeding	30,000	— 4 per cent
On any income exceeding	30,000	but not exceeding	50,000	— 5 per cent
On any income exceeding	50,000	but not exceeding	75,000	— 6 per cent
On any income exceeding	75,000	but not exceeding	100,000	— 7 per cent
On any income exceeding	100,000	but not exceeding	150,000	— 8 per cent
On any income exceeding	150,000	but not exceeding	200,000	— 9 per cent
On any income exceeding	200,000			—10 per cent

Further changes in the Income War Tax Act are to be made as a result of new arrangements regarding the tax on the premium value of gold. You will remember that the Prime Minister, when discussing this tax last year, emphasized its temporary nature and also that specific provision was made in the act for its termination. It was recognized that increasing costs due to a rising price level must inevitably wipe out the extraordinary gains which were the basis of this tax. Consequently, the tax was levied only for a definite period which expires May 31, 1935. It has been decided to adhere to the original intention and the tax therefore lapses on that date.

However, changes are to be made in the income tax regulations providing for depletion allowances, which, together with the remaining two months' yield from the gold tax, should compensate for the termination of the gold tax.

With regard to the existing regulations allowing depletion to mines, it is believed that several of these provisions have been unduly generous in their operation. Not only has it been pointed out that the specific rate of 50 per cent, in the case of precious metal mines could fairly be reduced, but also that the granting of depletion at the present rates to both corporation and shareholder cannot well be defended.

The rate of depletion allowance granted to precious metal mines is to be reduced from 50 per cent to 33⅓ per cent.

And, dividends received by shareholders are to be taxed by reducing the allowance from 50 to 20 per cent.

Other changes in the Income War Tax Act include an increase in the corporation income tax from 12½ per cent to 13½ per cent and more drastic provisions with regard to consolidated income returns designed severely to restrict this privilege and, when consolidation of returns is allowed, the rate of tax is to be 15 per cent as compared with the present 13½ per cent rate.

Finally, it is proposed to levy a tax on gifts. This form of tax, adopted by many countries, is being imposed primarily to operate as a deterrent to transfers of property by gift, chiefly within family groups which would have the effect of reducing personal income to lower brackets and thus securing income tax assessment at rates lower than would otherwise be applicable. It is particularly expedient to introduce this measure at this time in view of the higher rates of taxation provided for in the new surtax on investment income. Not only should this tax put our income tax structure on a more secure foundation but also it should operate in a like manner with regard to succession and inheritance taxes levied by the provinces.

The rates at which gifts are to be taxed are as follows:

Up to and including	$ 25,000			2%
Exceeding	25,000	but not exceeding	$ 50,000	3%
Exceeding	50,000	but not exceeding	100,000	4%
Exceeding	100,000	but not exceeding	200,000	5%
Exceeding	200,000	but not exceeding	300,000	6%
Exceeding	300,000	but not exceeding	400,000	7%
Exceeding	400,000	but not exceeding	500,000	8%
Exceeding	500,000	but not exceeding	1,000,000	9%
Exceeding	1,000,000			10%

The tax shall not apply to gifts between husband and wife, nor to gifts to minors, as under the present act the donor in such cases continues to be taxed on the income from the property so transferred.

Certain classes of gifts are to remain free from tax such as, for example, gifts made for charitable, religious, educational, scientific or literary purposes, or to the dominion, any province or political sub-division thereof for public purposes. Furthermore, gifts in the aggregate not exceeding $1,000 a year are to be free from tax.

The above amendments are to come into force as from the commencement of the 1934 taxation period and to be applicable to fiscal periods ending therein, and to all subsequent periods, except in regard to depletion allowances to those mining companies whose principal product is gold and which have been subject to the gold tax, in which case the change will be effective as from the commencement of the 1935 taxation period and will be applicable to fiscal periods ending therein and to all subsequent periods. The gift tax also shall only be applicable with respect to gifts made after the commencement of the 1935 taxation period.

It is estimated that on account of the above changes in the Income Tax Act revenues therefrom will be increased by not less than $12,000,000.

Sales tax

The proposed changes in the taxes levied under the Special War Revenue Act are few in number and of minor importance. Most of the changes are merely to remove existing anomalies.

With regard to the sales tax the present 6 per cent rate will be continued and the only changes in the exemption list are the addition of casein, grain separators or seed cleaning machines, pit props and packwood for use exclusively in mines. Two other alterations have been made in order to provide that goods given away or distributed free, that is to say, advertising samples, will not be subject to the sales tax and that articles produced in institutions for the deaf and dumb shall be taxed at only half the standard rate.

Excise taxes

The present excise taxes now being levied will remain unaltered. It is proposed, however, in order to prevent the falling off in revenue now obtained from the tax on matches, to impose a new tax of 20 per cent on cigarette lighters.

With regard to the 3 per cent special excise tax on imports you will remember that last year a reduction of one-half was made in the rate applying to imports under the British preferential tariff. It is now proposed to grant complete exemption to these imports in future. Otherwise, apart from a minor addition to the exemption schedule, the special excise tax remains unaltered.

Excise duties

With regard to excise duties we are making an important change in order to protect our revenues. The present levy on spirits, which is $7 per gallon, is to be reduced to $4. Our revenues from spirits, including customs and excise duties, have fallen from 41 million dollars in 1930 to 12¼ million in 1934. It is apparent from these figures that drastic action is necessary. Not only from our own point of view is this reduction expedient, but many of the provinces also have indicated the extreme difficulty of maintaining revenues which it is claimed are being seriously undermined through the unduly high rates of excise now obtaining and the wide discrepancy which exists between our rates of duty and those which are in effect in the United States. This lowering of the rate will bring our levies on spirits into line with those which prevail south of the border, and should be effective in eliminating illicit sales which would otherwise continue as a constant menace to our revenues. Our object is to secure increased returns by diverting into legal channels purchases which are now made illegally. Our gain will be at the expense of the existing illicit trade.

In order to ensure that the consumer will obtain the full benefit of this reduction and that our efforts to stamp out the smuggling trade will not be nullified, it is provided that in event of the failure of other authorities to pass on to the public the full amount of this decrease the governor in council may at any time suspend the operation of the new rate and the existing $7 rate will then again come into force.

It might be mentioned here in passing that appropriate reductions are also being made in the customs duties on spirits imported into Canada.

Customs Tariff

Proposed amendments to schedule A of the customs tariff, while not numerous, are of considerable interest, from both a Canadian and an empire point of view. In a general way, these may be tabulated as follows:

Reductions under all tariffs	12
Reductions under British preferential tariff only	34
Reductions under intermediate tariff only	1
Reductions under British preferential and intermediate tariffs	1
Increases in intermediate and general tariffs only	3
Increases under all tariffs	1
Clarifications of wording	24

I may here interject that any and all increases thus indicated were arrived at as a result of the findings of the tariff board in a number of cases, which I shall file at the conclusion of my address.

Reductions in the British preferential tariff are numerous and important. The following goods are accorded free entry under that tariff: fire brick; chequered steel plates; piston-ring castings, not machined; box-end machines; diesels and semi-diesel engines; low-rating internal combustion engines; chassis for electric trolley buses and for motor-driven cars for use on railway lines; artists' and pupils' colours; chloride of lime; aircraft and parts; press matrices, and advertising matter descriptive of empire products; toy construction sets; brass band instruments; unbound and paper bound books; wooden doors; melton cloth and slipper cloth; and mining locomotives.

Under the same tariff—and that only—the following are reduced in rate: Certain woollen and worsted fabrics (following an inquiry by the tariff board); various essences and extracts; cigarette papers, whether gummed, ungummed or in books or tubes; cut, pressed and moulded glass products; fire engines; pressed steel railway wheels; linen fire hose; leather belting; toys of pressed steel; and rugs and carpets of stated values per square yard.

One other commodity group has been selected for a drastic reduction, limited also to the British Preferential tariff, viz.; spirituous liquors. It is proposed to reduce by $3 per gallon of proof the preferential tariff rate on imported spirits, to accompany the excise reductions previously referred to. Further, action by order in council is contemplated whereby, in future, the internal excise duties levied in British countries will be disregarded in ascertaining the value for duty of liquors imported into Canada under the British preferential tariff. A feature of these downward revisions in the spirits schedules is provision for a three dollar per gallon reduction in the duty levied on rum from the British West Indies.

Enumeration of those goods in which tariff reductions are limited to the British preferential column leads, at this point, to a brief reference to the fact that, under a resolution moved to-day, the governor in council is empowered to extend within the confines of the empire the benefits of the most favoured tariff treatment accorded to any foreign country. Anomalous as it may seem, no empire area has, in the past, been treated as a "most favoured nation" in that sense of the term, and to-day's proposed legislation is, for various reasons, of more than academic interest and value. It may be announced at once that the first order to issue under this enabling legislation will be one extending these benefits to the United Kingdom and Northern Ireland.

Reference to the fact that to-day's resolutions add no fewer than twenty important commodities to the free list under the British preferential tariff provides an opportunity to point to the record of this government in that regard. Since the emergency session of 1930—in spite of the distressing conditions then and later prevailing, with increases in tariff the order of the day rather than reductions—more than 250 items of the Canadian schedules have been definitely reduced in rate under the British preferential tariff, and of these at least 150 have been made entirely free of duty. These calculations are in general, and are not meant to include those reductions in duties, or removal of restrictions, which have been incidental to amendments in the wording or arrangement of items in the schedules.

Reductions are not confined to the British preferential tariff. Those intended to apply under all tariffs relate, inter alia, to diabetic breads, titanium pigments, certain films, several gauges of fence wire, chock releases, backed burlap, cocoa matting and various parts for motor trucks.

Increases under all tariffs number one: On slide or hookless fasteners. Three commodities will bear higher rates under the intermediate and general tariffs only, namely, adhesive materials in flake or grit form, dressed or dyed rabbit skins and toiletware of sterling silver.

The preference provided in our tariff for Australian raisins and currants is extended until March 31, 1936; and provision is made whereby oranges the produce of Palestine may be imported into Canada by way of British areas, rather than direct, as heretofore required.

The outstanding amendment to the drawback schedule is to the effect that, in order to qualify for the drawback of duty on imported bituminous coal used in its manufacture, coke produced in Canada must be actually sold for use as fuel. Another drawback item sets a precedent in that its benefits will apply only as regards importations under the British preferential tariff.

Empire Content

One change in respect of empire content of imported goods is contemplated. From 50 to 25 per cent in the case of antimony oxide. Action will be taken by order in council.

The Tariff Board

Apart altogether from its work as a forum of appeal from administrative decisions regarding customs and excise, the tariff board has dealt during the year with many important matters referred to it by the Minister of Finance. There will be tabled to-day some twelve or more of its reports, which are reflected in certain of the budget resolutions to which brief reference has been made. Outstanding among these is the report on reference No. 1—the first sent to the present board—re wool goods of various kinds. Other reports to be tabled to-day include those on sterling silver toiletware, fence wire, zipper fasteners, cocoa mats and matting, paper caps, wooden doors, rabbit skins, skelp iron, adhesive flakes, diabetic breadstuffs and dextrines. Information from the board is to the effect that several other reports will shortly be presented to the minister and these will, in their turn, be presented to parliament.

ESTIMATED REVENUE, 1935-36

After giving effect to the changes which have been enumerated, it is estimated that the revenues for the year will aggregate $392,100,000 from the following sources:

Taxation revenue—
Customs duties	$ 88,000,000
Excise duties	48,500,000
Income tax	76,000,000
Sales tax	82,500,000
Manufacturers', stamp, importation and other special taxes	41,200,000
	$336,200,000
Non-tax revenue—
Post Office	32,000,000
Interest on investments	11,500,000
Other sources	12,400,000
	$55,900,000
Total	$392,100,000

The ordinary expenditures for the year will, it is estimated, amount to $370,600,000. With receipts of $392,100,000, the resulting surplus will be $21,500,000. This will be a substantial amount to be applied upon capital expenditures, for which the estimates are about $6,000,000, and special expenditures including unemployment relief and railway deficit.

This is the last budget to be presented before a general election, and while fully aware of the popular reaction to reduction in taxation, the government recognizes its paramount duty is to the state and its well-being. Reduction in taxation can only be justified when it is associated with a fully balanced budget accompanied by a reduction —however gradual—in the national debt.

Whilst it is gratifying in these difficult days to be able to forecast a surplus on current account for the ensuing year of the considerable sum of $21,500,000, it must not be overlooked that not only will this amount be absorbed in special requirements for deficits on the Canadian National Railway, unemployment relief and capital expenditures, but that these inescapable obligations will entail still further borrowings with consequent additions to the national debt.

Meantime recovery will be hastened if we face our obligations courageously. To attempt to run away from them by failing at least to strive to pay our way, would not only retard recovery but this course would in the long run entail much greater sacrifice.

Without attempting to minimize in the least our difficulties, we must keep in mind that we have borne the shock of a world war, we have paid—and will continue to pay—the attendant price in blood, in suffering, and in treasure, and we have had added thereto five years of the miseries of a world depression as great in magnitude and as disrupting in its effects as the war itself. And yet we have won our way through. There is on every hand unmistakable evidence that we are making steady progress toward that complete recovery which I am fully confident will be our portion.

RESOLUTIONS

Mr. Speaker, I beg to give notice that when we are in committee of ways and means I will move the following resolutions:

Income War Tax Act

Resolved That it is expedient to amend the Income War Tax Act and to provide—

1. That (a) "earned income" be defined to include salaries, wages, and other personal earnings, including income derived from the carrying on of a trade (as a sole proprietor or in partnership), vocation or calling; provided however that the total amount of the "earned income" derived from any source, or combination of sources, shall in no case exceed $14,000 per annum;

(b) "investment income" shall mean any income not defined as "earned income."

2. That rates of surtax be imposed on all persons, other than joint stock companies, in respect of investment income as follows:

Included in any income exceeding	$ 5,000	but not exceeding	$ 10,000	2%
Included in any income exceeding	10,000	but not exceeding	14,000	3%
On income exceeding	14,000	but not exceeding	20,000	3%
On income exceeding	20,000	but not exceeding	30,000	4%
On income exceeding	30,000	but not exceeding	50,000	5%
On income exceeding	50,000	but not exceeding	75,000	6%
On income exceeding	75,000	but not exceeding	100,000	7%
On income exceeding	100,000	but not exceeding	150,000	8%
On income exceeding	150,000	but not exceeding	200,000	9%
On income exceeding	200,000			10%

3. That the following income shall not be liable to surtax, either—

(a) all income up to five thousand dollars; or

(b) "earned income" up to but not exceeding fourteen thousand dollars; or

(c) income equal in amount to the sum of the exemption and allowances for dependents to which a person is actually entitled under the said act;

whichever is the highest.

4. That (a) in determining "earned income" the amount of any salary or bonus shall be subject to adjustment commensurate with the services rendered and any amounts in excess of such adjustment shall be regarded as "investment income";

(b) where an expense is common to both "earned" and "investment" income the expense shall be apportioned.

5. That the corporation rate of tax be increased from 12½ per cent to 13½ per cent.

6. That consolidated returns be not permitted except in cases where a subsidiary company is wholly owned by another company (directors' qualifying shares excepted); is in the same general class of business; the fiscal periods of the companies are co-incident; and both companies are operating in Canada, and under such other regulations as may be prescribed. When consolidation is permitted the corporation rate of tax on such returns shall be increased from 13½ per cent to 15 per cent.

7. That dividends received by shareholders be taxed by an allowance for depletion of 20 per cent in lieu of the present allowance.

8. That depletion allowance to be allowed to mining companies, the principal product of which is gold and silver, shall be 33⅓ per cent in lieu of the present allowance.

9. That a tax of five per centum be imposed at the source on all royalties payable by Canadian debtors in respect of books, music and articles in magazines, to non-residents of Canada. The 12½ per cent deduction to be abolished in respect of the foregoing.

10. That a tax be imposed upon gifts inter vivos at the following rates, unless the income from such gift continues to be taxed against the donor, as provided for in the act;

Up to and including	$ 25,000			2%
Exceeding	25,000	but not exceeding	$ 50,000	3%
Exceeding	50,000	but not exceeding	100,000	4%
Exceeding	100,000	but not exceeding	200,000	5%
Exceeding	200,000	but not exceeding	300,000	6%
Exceeding	300,000	but not exceeding	400,000	7%
Exceeding	400,000	but not exceeding	500,000	8%
Exceeding	500,000	but not exceeding	1,000,000	9%
Exceeding	1,000,000			10%

Provided that the rate be not applicable to gifts in the aggregate of $1,000 or less in any one year.

11. That amounts charged by any company or organization outside of Canada to Canadian companies in respect of management fees, services, use of patents, processes or formulae used in Canada, shall not be allowed as a deduction if the non-resident controls the Canadian company through the holding of shares, by affiliation with other companies, by agreement, or in any other manner.

12. That in respect of any taxpayer claiming reciprocal relief for taxes paid in Great Britain or any foreign country, such taxpayer shall not be allowed as against profits taxable in Canada the losses sustained in any such country.

13. That the amount received from income bonds or debentures shall be deemed to be a dividend for the purposes of the act and shall not be a deduction before determining the taxable income of the corporation paying any amount in respect of such income bonds or debentures.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

14. That any enactment founded on the foregoing resolutions shall be deemed to have come into force at the commencement of the 1934 taxation period and to be applicable thereto and to fiscal periods ending therein and to all subsequent periods, with the following exception:

(a) As to any mining company, the principal product of which is gold, which has contributed to the tax on the premium value of gold as enacted by Part XV of the Special War Revenue Act, any enactment founded on resolution No. 8 shall be deemed to have come into force at the commencement of the 1935 taxation period and to be applicable thereto and to fiscal periods ending therein and to all subsequent periods.

(b) That any enactment founded on resolution No. 10 shall be deemed to have come into force at the commencement of the 1935 taxation period and shall be applicable thereto and to subsequent periods.

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE ACT

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend the Special War Revenue Act and to provide:

1. That Schedule I to the said act, as amended by section twenty-six of chapter fifty of the Statutes of 1932-33 be amended by adding thereto the following words:

"Devices commonly or commercially known as lighters, which produce sparks, flame or heat, n.o.p., 20 per cent.

Such devices when combined with pencils, cigarette or other cases, on the combined value, 10 per cent."

2. That Schedule III to the said Act, as enacted by section eighteen of chapter forty-two of the Statutes of 1934, be amended by adding to or inserting therein the following words:

"grain or seed cleaning machines; pit props and packwood for use exclusively in mines; casein."

3. That Schedule IV to the said Act, as enacted by section twenty-nine of chapter fifty of the Statutes of 1932-33, be amended by adding thereto the following words:

"Articles manufactured or produced by the labour of the deaf and dumb in institutions in Canada established for their care, or under the control or direction of such institutions."

4. That Schedule V of the said Act, as enacted by section nineteen of chapter forty-two of the Statutes of 1934, be amended by adding thereto the words "goods enumerated in Customs Tariff Item 692."

5. That the said Act be further amended by repealing subsection two of section eighty-seven thereof, as enacted by section twelve of chapter fifty-four of the Statutes of 1931.

6. That the said Act be further amended by repealing subsection two of section eighty-eight thereof, as enacted by section twelve of chapter fifty-four of the Statutes of 1932, and subsection three of the said section eighty-eight, as enacted by section ten of chapter forty-two of the Statutes of 1934 and substituting for the two said subsections the following subsection:

"2. The tax imposed by this section shall not apply to the articles enumerated in Schedule V to this Act nor to any goods imported into Canada which are entitled to entry under the British Preferential Tariff or under trade agreements between Canada and other British countries."

7. That any enactment founded on paragraphs one to six of this Resolution shall come into force on the twenty-third day of March, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-five.

EXCISE ACT

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend the Excise Act 1934, and to provide:

That section one of the Schedule to the said Act be amended by striking out the words "seven dollars" in the second line thereof and substituting therefor the words "four dollars", and to provide, further, that in the event of any duty imposed under this Act upon spirits, malt or beer having been reduced, if it is made to appear to the Governor in Council that in any province the prices of spirituous or malt liquors to the consumer have not been reduced to, or are not being maintained at, levels which will give the consumer the full benefit of any such reduction, the Governor in Council may order that such reduction shall be no longer in effect and, upon publication of such order in the Canada Gazette, the full rates of duty theretofore payable on such goods shall again be in force and effect.

That any enactment founded on this Resolution shall some into force on the twenty-third day of March, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-five.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

1. Resolved, That the customs tariff, being chapter forty-four of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, as amended by chapter thirty-nine of the Acts of 1929, chapter thirteen of the Acts of 1930 (first session), chapter three of the Acts of 1930 (second session), chapter thirty of the Acts of 1931, chapters six and thirty-seven of the Acts of 1932-33, and chapters thirty-two and forty-nine of the Acts of 1934, be further amended by adding to section 4 thereof the following subsections:

(i) from time to time, grant the most favoured foreign nation treatment to any British country or to any territory administered under a mandate of the League of Nations by any British country; and from and after the date specified in the order in council the most favoured foreign nation treatment shall apply to goods the produce or manufacture of such British country or mandated territory, subject to the provisions of this Act;

(j) from time to time, withdraw the most favoured foreign nation treatment from any British country or any territory administered under a mandate of the League of Nations by any British country to which it has been extended; and from and after the date specified in the order in council the most favoured foreign nation treatment shall cease to apply to goods the produce or manufacture of such British country or mandated territory, subject to the provisions of this Act.

2. Resolved, That the aforesaid section 4 be further amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

(4)A.—For the purposes of this Act, the Netherlands Indies, Surinam and Curacao shall be regarded as comprising one country with the Netherlands.

3. Resolved, That the aforesaid customs tariff be further amended by deleting from section 11 thereof the words "reductions on Canadian products" and by substituting in lieu thereof the word "concessions."

4. Resolved, That the aforesaid customs tariff be further amended by adding thereto the following section, as section 18 thereof:

(18) In the event of any duty imposed under this Act upon spirituous or alcoholic liquors having been reduced, if it is made to appear to the governor in council that in any province the prices of such goods to the consumer have not been reduced to, or are not being maintained at, levels which will give the consumer the full benefit of any such reduction, the governor in council may order that such reduction shall be no longer in effect and, upon publication of such order in the Canada Gazette, the full rates of duty theretofore payable on such goods shall again be in force and effect.

5. Resolved, That Schedule A to the Customs Tariff, being chapter forty-four of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, as amended by chapter seventeen of the Acts of 1928, chapter thirty-nine of the Acts of 1929, chapter thirteen of the Acts of 1930 (first session), chapter three of the Acts of 1930 (second session), chapter thirty of the Acts of 1931, chapter forty-one of the Acts of 1932, chapters six and thirty-seven of the Acts of 1932-33, and chapters thirty-two and forty-nine of the Acts of 1934, be further amended by striking thereout tariff items 28, 28a, 39, 99c, 101b, 156, 156a, 159, 164 (a and b), 169, 180c, 187a, 208a (i), 242, 255, 281a, 326, 384, 386 (k), 388, 388b, 401 (d), 407, 407a, 413a, 424, 434, 435, 438f, 440l, 451, 464b, 475b, 522d, 542b, 546, 547, 554b, 554e, 571a, 572, 598, 603, 609, 621, 624a, 650a, 682, 691, 696, and 783, the several enumerations of goods respectively and the several rates of duties of customs, if any, set opposite each of the said items, and by inserting the following items, enumerations and rates of duty in said Schedule A:

1044	Fire brick.....	When used by manufacturers of iron or steel in the construction or repair of a blast furnace, open hearth furnace or rolling mill furnace.....	99 p.c.
1049	Bituminous coal, imported on or after March 23rd, 1935.	(a) When converted into coke and the coke sold for use as fuel in other than a coke or gas plant.....	50 p.c.
		(b) When converted into coke and the coke sold for use as fuel in other than a coke or gas plant; provided that not less than thirty-five per centum, by weight, of the bituminous coal so used, as covered by each drawback claim, was mined in Canada.....	99 p.c.
		Provided that drawback payable under this Item is in lieu of drawback payable under any other item.

7. Resolved, That Schedule C to the Customs Tariff, as amended by chapter thirty-two of the Acts of 1934, be amended by striking thereout Tariff Item 1212 and by substituting therefor the following:—

1212 Aigrettes, egret plumes or so-called osprey plumes, and the feathers, quills, heads, wings, tails, skins, or parts of skins of wild birds either raw or manufactured; but this provision shall not apply to:—
(a) the feathers or plumes of ostriches;
(b) the plumage of the English pheasant and the Indian peacock; the plumage of wild birds of groups recognized as game birds in any Canadian game law, and for which an open season is provided thereunder;
(c) the plumage of birds imported alive; nor to—
(d) specimens imported under regulations of the Minister for any Natural History or other museum or for scientific or educational purposes.

8. Resolved, That any enactment founded upon the foregoing resolutions to amend the Customs Tariff or Schedules thereto shall be deemed to have come into force on the twenty-third day of March, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-five, and to have applied to all goods mentioned in the foregoing resolutions imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on and after that date, and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that date.

On motion of Mr. Ralston the debate was adjourned.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Morand in the chair.

To assist in promoting tourist business in Canada, $200,000.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose last evening I was speaking about the attraction offered by the fisheries of the maritime provinces, and I called attention to the different species of fish in those waters. Some people may have doubts as to the accuracy of my statements, because they have never contemplated fish six or eight feet in length which afford sport to the sportsman. For the information of the committee I shall read from a pamphlet entitled "Deep Sea Fighters."

Try to imagine an attempt to conquer, by means of a rod and line, the biggest and most determined bull that ever came out of the wild west. Add to this picture, flying spray and the swift manoeuvres of a motor launch on a heaving sea, and you have some vague idea of the thrills of this grand game. It's the finest sport the sea offers, a royal pastime!

These silvery torpedoes of the deep have true fighters' hearts. They never quit while there is strength in their tremendous stream-lined bodies. The greatest battlers of the tuna tribe, however, are the ones found in Nova Scotia waters. Nowhere else in the world are the tuna as large or as game, and every record breaking specimen in twenty-eight years—with the exception of one lone fish—has been taken in the coastal waters of Nova Scotia.

These tuna are big league fish for the most experienced sportsmen in the world and that is why each year sees an increasing number of anglers coming to Nova Scotia in hope of a record capture. Zane Grey, the famous novelist, had a grand battle in Nova Scotian waters off Liverpool with the 758-pound giant he conquered, and he has declared frequently that this adventure was the finest sport in the world.

Many times it is the quarry which is declared winner. Commander J. K. L. Ross, of Montreal, hooked a giant tuna in St. Ann bay, Cape Breton Island, Nova Scotia. It was 11 o'clock on Saturday morning, and the battle began with terriffic rushes and mighty leaps that tested nerve and tackle. All the afternoon the fight went on. The tuna would tow the boat for miles, then would sound again and again, until it seemed that the line must yield. But, at the last second, up he would come in a magnificent surge of foam and silver, and Ross would have new hope. Darkness fell but the battle went on. Ross was determined, and so was the big fish. When daylight came it was the man who was tiring, not the tuna, and the renewed skirmishes became so exhausting that at 6 a.m. Ross was compelled to cut the line and admit defeat.

Thomas Howell, veteran Chicago sportsman, hooked a tuna off Liverpool, Nova Scotia, at eleven o'clock Monday morning, August 6, 1934. The giant fish was a fighter of the finest calibre and towed the big fishing launch exactly sixty-two hours. The great battler weighed 792 pounds, and was over nine feet in length.

That, Mr. Chairman, gives you some idea of the character of the sport that is afforded in the waters of Nova Scotia. But in addition to the tuna there is another large fish known as the swordfish, and the Nova Scotia swordfish are comparable only to Nova Scotia tuna as supreme gladiators of the sea:

They are considered by many the greatest battlers of the deep and the very elite of their kind. These are the Broadbill, or true swordfish. They are rarer and much larger and fiercer than the marlin or Roundbill swordfish found in southern waters. They have the upper jaw prolonged into a two-edged swordlike weapon and know well how to use it.

I need not continue along that line because I think I have already given sufficient to excite the curiosity of the committee as to the attractions we have to offer to the true sportsman, the big league sportsman who is looking for thrills in this particular sport.

Sir EUGENE FISET: And not very expensive.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton): This fish that Commander Ross caught was found in St. Ann's bay in the county of Victoria. That is the spot that I mentioned at the last meeting of the committee, where rest the bones of the famous giant McAskill. His grave is found there and also some specimens of the clothing and shoes that he wore. A biography of this giant has been written by a literary gentleman down there, named James Gillis, which I take pleasure in recommending to every lover of literature, and I might add that I envy them the pleasure they will have in reading that piece of contemporary literature.

On the harbour of St. Ann's are also to be found many evidences of the French occupation before the taking of Louisburg. Another event of historic interest was the great exodus of Presbyterians that took place from St. Ann's about a hundred years ago. To the village of St. Ann's about a century ago came a Presbyterian minister named MacLeod from Pictou, and with him he brought his whole congregation. He was in many respects a wonderful man, and the stories that still are told show him to have been a man of the most determined and forceful character—a great preacher, a great teacher, a law giver, and an autocrat, as my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Cantley) suggests. But autocrats were necessary in those days just as they are now sometimes. This man left his imprint on the character of all the people in that district. If there is anything good in Presbyterianism, and I am not saying that there is not, I venture to say that this man exemplified it in his life and in his preaching.

When referring last night to the village of Louisburg I forgot one very interesting thing that is still a subject of conversation among our older people when gathered around the fireplace in the evening, and that is that on certain days as they recall the great battles of the past there may be heard in the stilly silence of the night the tramp of soldiers marching and the thud of hoofs.

I ask you, Mr. Chairman, where in all Canada is to be found a spot so rich in historic incident as you will find right at St. Ann's in the county of Cape Breton? In the county of Cape Breton we have also the coal mines of the Dominion Coal Company, very large mines which contribute greatly to the revenue of the province of Nova Scotia, and in the city of Sydney are established the steel works. Tourists who are industrially minded have here an opportunity of seeing some of our advanced industrial methods.

During this coming summer the city of Sydney will celebrate its one hundred and fiftieth anniversary, and to it are being invited notables from all over the old country and from Canada, including the lineal descendants of Governor DeBarre, who laid out the city of Sydney a hundred years ago. We also hope to have with us on that occasion His Excellency the Governor General and men eminent in political and public life in Canada and the United States, as well as warships from almost every nation. I cordially invite the members of this house to be present with us down at Sydney from July 29 to August 4 of this summer.

In answer to my hon. friend from North Renfrew (Mr. Cotnam), who holds out as an inducement to visit his riding the successful efforts of the smugglers, I may say that in spite of the budget we have heard delivered this afternoon we hope that the activities of the smuggler will not be curtailed to such an extent off the coast of Nova Scotia as to deprive us of necessary stimulant.

Nova Scotia is doing its share to secure a tourist business. We have now three or four tourist bureaux operating throughout the province, all bending their efforts to induce tourists to come to the province. In addition to the program for this summer that I have already mentioned we are also preparing to receive the Olympic and three other ocean liners and several men of war this summer. We are also furthering plans for a meeting of the Maritime Aquatic Association which is holding a competition in Nova Scotia this year. We expect that more tourists will visit Nova Scotia this summer than ever before. I hope hon. members will not think that what I have said is overdrawn. I hope they will come to see for themselves, and when they do I am satisfied that they will give me universal approbation as being the most veracious member of the house.

Mr. WILLIS: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to refer to the beauties of Nova Scotia, which are very well known, but I do intend to refer to beauties which are not so well known and which perhaps need some advertising. I have in mind the Turtle Mountain forest reserve which is located in my constituency and within which is the International Peace Garden of America. This peace garden is situated partly in the American state of North Dakota and partly in the province of Manitoba, and is the only peace garden on the continent. Its site was selected by international representatives who endeavoured to choose the most suitable place on the continent at which to locate an international peace garden. There is a highway running along one side of the garden. In the United States this highway is an all-weather road and it is hoped that this same condition will soon apply to the Canadian portion. Last year more than 8,500 persons entered this port.

I bring up this matter at this time in an effort to interest the government and others in the International Peace Garden. A portion of this vote should be used in an endeavour to attract the tourist trade to this garden. Its site was selected by a committee composed of members of the National Association of Gardeners of America, the largest horticultural association on the continent. Last year a group of 250 men was employed by the federal government of the United States to work in the American portion of the garden. This was possible because of assistance from the federal government which we in Canada have not been able to obtain. This is because of a lack of cooperation between the provincial and dominion governments. I should like to see a work camp established in this area. The Turtle Mountain forest reserve is close to the drought area of the province of Manitoba where the dominion government is spending a considerable amount in the way of relief. If it is not possible to establish a work camp within the garden, it should be established within the Turtle Mountain forest reserve. Reforestation or other work would prove helpful to the people and at the same time act as an attraction to the tourist trade. I think the provincial government should transfer at once the property which it has promised to transfer. I should like to request the minister to see that all maps issued by his department indicate plainly the present location of the International Peace Garden, which demonstrates better than anything else the fact that for one hundred years there has been peace between Canada and the United States. This fact has been brought to the attention of the house by many hon. members, and I trust an effort will be made to establish a work camp, either in the reserve or in the garden, to provide employment and increase the attraction to the tourists who come to this area all the way from Mexico city in the south and northern Manitoba in the north.

Mr. SHORT: I am pleased indeed that my colleague, the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacDonald), has had something to say about the beauties of Nova Scotia. Nova Scotia is the greatest tourist province in the dominion, and I was afraid it was going to be left out of things. I was not present when this discussion first started or I would have had a word to say at that time. Nova Scotia has been catering to the tourist trade for a longer period than any other province—upwards of fifty years—and I think it is the best equipped of all provinces in the way of hotels to cater to summer visitors. We have as much as or perhaps more than any other province in the way of scenery and amusements, and I feel I should be remiss in my duty if I did not bring these things to the attention of the house.

The western part of the province is only a night's run from Boston and twenty-two hours from New York by the best class of palatial coastwise steamers. The hon. member for Cape Breton South has referred to the tuna and swordfish fishing, but in addition there are the salmon trout fisheries, the finest in the country. We have also the finest scenery in the dominion. Unfortunately we have not paved roads to offer the tourists, but we hope to have them in the near future. I am pleased that an appropriation is being made this year to provide for the advertising of the beauties of this country. Canada as a whole is a beautiful country but the greatest beauty is to be found in the maritimes, particularly in Nova Scotia.

Mr. VENIOT: What about New Brunswick?

Mr. SHORT: I said in the maritimes and particularly in Nova Scotia. I think the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) will admit that New Brunswick does not have the beauties which are to be found in Nova Scotia.

Mr. VENIOT: I could not admit that.

Mr. SHORT: I hope that Nova Scotia will receive her full share of this money when it is being expended. We have room for more tourists than are coming at the present time and this year we are looking forward to the greatest influx since 1929. When the minister is allotting this money to the different provinces, I hope he will see that Nova Scotia gets her full share. I am sure he will, because he realizes that we are entitled to it. We have every attraction to offer the tourist—deep sea fishing, tuna fishing, inland fishing and every sport that he is looking for. I can only join with my colleague from Cape Breton in extending to hon. members a cordial invitation to visit the most beautiful province in the dominion.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): I wish to express my approval of this item in the minister's estimates. I have listened with considerable pleasure to those who have spoken on the item advocating the beauty spots in their respective provinces, and I trust that when this money is being spent for advertising, the beauty spots of Saskatchewan will have due consideration; and I plead particularly for Qu'Appelle. I think we have in that constituency some of the finest scenery to be found in Canada. I refer to the historic Qu'Appelle valley and river, which got its name, as history relates, from this incident. An Indian woman went to draw water from the lake; she heard an echo in the ravine and she replied, "qu'appelle?"—who calls? This valley runs parallel to the Canadian Pacific Railway and No. 1 highway from the Manitoba boundary about two hundred miles. It is a picturesque valley and in different sections it widens out a mile or two, forming lakes. These are peaceful lakes in the middle of the valley. At lake Kalipwa, at lake Echo and at lake Qu'Appelle we have beautiful scenery, and I would mention the historic town of Fort Qu'Appelle, where there was once established the old Hudson's Bay fort. At one time we thought that this particular site would be the capital of the territory. Along these lakes we have summer resorts and camps and it is a splendid place for tourists who wish to spend a few days of quiet. Sports of all sorts can be indulged in, golfing, tennis, fishing, bathing and everything that adds to the pleasure of the tourist. To get into this valley there are very good roads branching from No. 1 highway and leading through the great wheat plains of Saskatchewan. The wheat plains between the main highway and this valley are the plains which were first settled by the pioneers who went into that province, and in August you can go through miles of waving grain. It is a magnificent sight.

I know that there are many other hon. gentlemen who are anxious to speak on this item and I do not want to take up too much time, but I trust the minister will see that when advertising is being done we shall get our due share. I think this is a splendid thing. The Canadian people should be encouraged in their efforts to induce our friends from the south and from other countries as well to come to Canada and enjoy our scenic beauties. I fully support this vote.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Unlike hon. members who have preceded me, I am not going to boast about the native beauties of my own constituency; I think they are well enough known to need no further word from me. I do wish however to direct the attention of the minister to one way in which this vote might be usefully disposed of. There is to the north of this capital city a beautiful territory with certain peculiar characteristics that are unexcelled. There is very good skiing in winter, and in summer this territory cannot be surpassed for the sheer pleasure of travelling and, I should have hoped, for fishing. I regret to say however that while it is one of my great privileges to be able to travel through the Gatineau country a few times every session, I have noticed in recent years that there has been serious destruction of the forest along the roads. No one knows better than the minister that roads stripped of trees are quite unsightly; they are not attractive, because people do not care for a country that has been stripped of its forest timber. What steps the minister can take I do not know, but if he could see to it that the trees along the roads in the Gatineau are no longer cut down, he would to some extent preserve some of the beauties of that country, which would continue to attract tourists.

I have also complained in the second place —this time the complaint would more properly be registered in the provincial house in Quebec, but I make the complaint publicly so that it will reach them—against the practice of leasing the fishing rights on the lakes and streams in the Gatineau and other districts to a few wealthy Americans and in some instances Canadians and people of other nationalities, such leases running from five to nine years or longer. It means that for a certain type of tourist there is no particular attraction to that country at all. All the fishing advantages of a territory like that could be preserved by fair and rigorously enforced legislation—game protection, fish protection and so on. But where it is turned over to a few individuals who can afford that sort of camp, and the beauty of the lakes and rivers is closed to the public, we cannot expect the tourist traffic into that country to continue, a country so badly afflicted with that type of law. I suggest to the minister that, with respect to territory of that sort, he take the matter up with the provincial governments with a view to modifying their leasing system in regard to fishing. This does not apply to Quebec alone but to the maritimes as well; it applies to some of the most beautiful streams down there. I should like to see a little more freedom in regard to the fishing rights in this country, particularly for the ordinary man who cannot afford more than a holiday by car, spending his time at touring camps, and getting any fishing he can. Such people cannot pay the high licence fees required in territories where fishing rights have been let to individuals in the way I have stated, nor can they afford even the ordinary fishing licence required for day to day fishing. In regard to these two particulars, the clearing of timber along the road and the over-restrictive methods in connection with fishing, there lies one of the serious difficulties in the tourist business, and I hope the minister will look into the Gatineau district problem as soon as possible.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): I congratulate the minister on the increase in this vote. It so happens that in my country of origin it was realized half a century ago that tourists are a national asset. Since I came to this country I have located in British Columbia, the most beautiful province of the dominion. I have had occasion to visit quite a number of places, from the South Sea islands to the European continent, from the Mediterranean to the North cape, and in those different parts of the world there is nothing to excel what we have in Canada. So far as British Columbia is concerned, the inland passage is fully equal to anything that one can see in the northern fiords; the mountain scenery which we have in British Columbia along the coast and also in the interior is fully equal to anything that one can see in the Alps, and as regards the coast of the maritime provinces with its fish and game, which is such a drawing card to the tourists, I may point out that we have all that in British Columbia, as can be seen by taking the trip from Puget sound via the inland passage to Alaska.

I repeat that I compliment the minister and the government on increasing this appropriation. The government evidently realizes that the tourist traffic will be one of our national assets for all time to come.

Mr. HOWDEN: We have heard members from all parts of Canada singing the praises and beauties of their respective constituencies. All this goes to show that no one part of this dominion has a corner on attractions. I have grown up in what used to be called the great lone land of the northwest—Fort Garry. It is a great lone land no longer; we have there one of the most enterprising and attractive cities in the dominion. In the thousand lakes and hills that span the upper part of Manitoba there are unsurpassed beauties. In the deltas around our lakes we have the most excellent wildfowl hunting, and in various part of the province big game hunting is unsurpassed by that in any other part of Canada; neither do we take a back seat in fishing, because in lake Winnipeg and lake Manitoba the whitefish and the sturgeon compare favourably with any similar fish that are found elsewhere in this country.

I did not however get up to sing the praises of Manitoba, but I should like to point out that there is no other part of Canada which has the beauty and natural attractiveness that my province has. The thought that was in my mind was this: this appropriation of $200,000, or at all events some of it, could be put to very good use in hastening the completion of the transcontinental highway, because when that road is built from one coast to the other there will be no more beautiful or interesting automobile route anywhere else in the world. I have not travelled very much myself, but I have been across the prairies of Canada to the west coast and I know my own province pretty well. I believe the best thing we can do with a good deal of this money is to spend it on improving the national highway. When it is improved and completed, we shall not require to spend very much money on advertising the beauty or attractiveness of this country; our chief difficulty will be to regulate the traffic on the road.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: In the Vegreville riding we have a park known as Elk Island park, which is so beautiful that if I tried to describe it adequately, words would wholly fail me. Therefore I do not wish to spoil the picture by any word description of my own, but I suggest to the minister that when he finally decides to issue circulars, or whatever he wishes to do in regard to this matter, he let the tourists who visit that part of the country know that a few miles south of Lamont there is a park called Elk Island park. In this circular I hope he will picture this park in larger capital letters than any other parks that have been mentioned here to-day.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: So far as tourists are concerned, may I say there is nothing finer or more attractive in Canada than the Prince Albert National park. There are other parts of Prince Albert constituency which are equally beautiful, and I hope the tourist bureau will do justice to them, or rather attempt so to do.

Mr. BROWN: Hon. members have all been singing the praises of their respective constituencies. In the constituency of Lisgar we have a resort that is recognized by both political parties as the finest in Manitoba or, indeed, in the west. In 1925, when Right Hon. Arthur Meighen was aspiring to become prime minister and was touring the country, his party chose Rock lake as a place to give a great demonstration, and it was truly a magnificent crowd that assembled there to hear the right hon. gentleman. Similarly when my right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) toured Manitoba and the west a short time ago, the Liberal party chose Rock lake as the most suitable place for the clans to come together to welcome their chief. So we have the endorsation of both political parties that Rock lake is the finest spot in Manitoba.

I think it would be very desirable that a small portion of this appropriation or some other money should be spent on building just a few miles of highway to make a better connection between that beautiful summer resort and the country to the south. That would attract large numbers of tourists from the south. As I have said, we have the endorsation of both political parties that Rock lake is the one point at which they can best show their appreciation of their respective leaders.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I am surprised, as I listen to all the boasting about the beauties of the maritime provinces and western Canada, that everybody seems to have forgotten that when one goes down to the maritimes, one must go through the beautiful province of Quebec. The loveliness of the south shore of the St. Lawrence, especially between Quebec and the maritime provinces, is unequalled in Canada. I appeal to the Minister of Railways, who travelled last year through this famous garden that we call the Gaspé peninsula, and I ask hon. members when going down to the maritime provinces to stop on the way at Rimouski, where they will be well received.

Mr. REID: There is one practical suggestion I should like to make to the minister which has not so far been offered. The minister in his opening address I think said that when the bureau was sending out pictures and advertising matter, the pictures would be sent out without the provinces being specifically mentioned on them. For instance, if pictures of mountains or lakes are used, those pictures would not inform the public where the particular spots are. Speaking from a little experience I know the people of the United States are not as discerning as we are in this country. A car may enter the republic from any province and the people there will simply say: "Oh, there is a Canadian car," irrespective of what province it may come from. I do not know whether we are better educated in this country, but I know that when American cars come here we observe what state they come from. I would thereforce suggest to the minister that in the pictures and photographs that go out it would be well that the provinces in which the places shown are situated should be mentioned, so that tourists may know where to find that beautiful scenery. I shall not take any more time talking about British Columbia, but if material for the proposed advertising is to be culled from Hansard I would just say that if any visitor comes to Canada and fails to see British Columbia his visit has been in vain.

Mr. HEAPS: So much has been said about the beauties of the various provinces that I do not wish to add anything on that aspect of the matter, because other members know a good deal more about it than I do. Yet there are many beautiful parts in Manitoba, and not the least of our beauties is the Red river, and the Red river flows through North Winnipeg. But it is not now the beauty spot it once was; in fact the Red river to-day in the neighbourhood of Winnipeg has become more or less a plague spot that people try to get away from. So I have a suggestion to make to the government which I hope they will not only take into serious consideration but on which they will act in the very near future. The Red river has been polluted with sewage both in the United States and in Canada. At the present time Winnipeg and neighbouring municipalities have made a request to the government for assistance in providing sewage disposal works. I raise the question because I should like to be able to say for the Red river what others have been saying for their various constituencies. I should like the tourist bureau in getting out literature concerning Winnipeg and the adjoining districts to be able to show the Red river as one of its beauty spots, but before that can be, something must be done in regard to scientific and up to date sewage disposal. I suggest to the acting Prime Minister, who is now discussing the matter with the Minister of Railways, that prompt action be taken by the federal government in the way of assistance to the province of Manitoba to restore the attractions of the Red river.

Mr. VENIOT: I do not want to take up much of the time of the committee, but I have listened to everyone praising his own province and merely want to say that there is no need of singing the praises of New Brunswick; its beauties are too well known. I merely call the attention of the committee to two things which we possess in New Brunswick which are not found elsewhere, namely the reversing falls at Saint John and the heavy rush of water in the Petitcodiac river creating what is known as the Moncton bore. That is all I want to say.

Mr. PICKEL: Before this vote carries I should like to say a word on behalf of the eastern townships of the province of Quebec. I do not need to say much, but I would draw attention to the fact that it is one of the finest scenic areas in the whole dominion and has natural attractions unsurpassed anywhere. It is a region of rivers, lakes and mountains galore. I know of one mountain 2,900 feet high from which I can view twenty-one small lakes, all teeming with fish, mostly trout. Of course they are not as large as they catch in some parts of the lower provinces or in British Columbia, but that does not seem to make much difference to the ordinary fisherman. As a general rule the ordinary fisherman is as much interested in what he takes with him and his surroundings when fishing as in what he catches, and I may say that remark is not confined to liquid refreshments.

It seems that this appropriation is about half what it should be, if all the requisitions of hon. members who have spoken are to be met.

Mr. CANTLEY: I just want to remind the committee that I have the privilege of representing the Garden of Eden in the county of Pictou.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What about Eve?

Mr. CANTLEY: She is there too and we also still use the original language of the garden of Eden. So we have a history of at least six thousand years of close association with the early times of the race. No one could find a better place in all Canada in which to spend a summer holiday, particularly in view of the reductions in excise and the reduction of customs duty on West India rum of which we have heard this afternoon.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

CANADIAN MARCONI COMPANY

Mr. F. W. TURNBULL (Regina, for Mr. Sullivan) moved the second reading of Bill

No. 27, respecting Canadian Marconi Company.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. TURNBULL: I move that the bill be referred to the private bills committee.

Mr. SPEAKER: May I ask the hon. member to explain upon what ground? Under standing order 104 a bill of this kind should be referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Mr. TURNBULL: I do not personally know very much about the contents of the bill. I made the motion the hon. member for St. Ann (Mr. Sullivan) requested me to make, but if there is any difficulty about it I suggest it stand.

Mr. SPEAKER: It will be allowed to stand. Second reading will stand, too, with the consent of the house.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Motion for second reading stands.

SECOND READINGS

Bill No. 34, for the relief of Marie Philomene Florence Maher McCaffrey.—Mr. Heaps.

Bill No. 35, for the relief of Stuart Lewis Ralph Henderson.—Mr. Moore (Chateauguay-Huntington).

Bill No. 36 for the relief of Charles Henry Campbell.—Mr. White (Mount Royal).

Bill No. 37, for the relief of Maria Elphinstone Hastie Kinnon.—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed from Tuesday, March 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Reid for the second reading of Bill No. 38, to amend the Railway Act (rates on grain).

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, on the last occasion this bill was before the house I had only three or four minutes before nine o'clock in which to speak. In that time I pointed out some circumstances which, so as to make my argument more complete, I shall repeat to-night.

In the first place I indicated that a bill such as the one before us is really not a private bill, from the standpoint of the functions of parliament, because parliament is not a rate making body. This is not the body which sets railway freight or passenger rates. Neither the government nor the parliament of Canada has the proper machinery with which to deal with this very complicated matter. The matter of freight rates is perhaps one of the most complicated which could be placed before any commission, and one which requires special machinery by way of experts and authorities.

I pointed out, further, that if freight rates were set in this House of Commons we would have so many bills like the present one placed before the House of Commons that we would have no time for anything else. The matter of freight rates would become a political question because almost every constituency in Canada has some particular commodity in which it is interested, and each member would be subjected to public pressure to bring before the House of Commons questions of freight rates on the commodities produced in his particular section of the country. As a result there would be the danger of log rolling, in the worst sense of the term. We would have one member assisting another in his effort to secure satisfactory freight rates on the understanding that, in return, the other would assist the first. Ultimately parliament would be inundated with bills to cut down freight rates on pulpwood, wheat, hay, potatoes or some other commodity. Speaking of potatoes may I say that only within the last week I have had communications from people outside the house and have had a number of hon. members approach me regarding the rate on potatoes from one section of the country to another. Special rates for potatoes have been requested by the maritime provinces and by the province of Quebec. Therefore I submit that we would have an impossible situation if the parliament of Canada were permitted to deal with freight rates.

The hon. member now sponsoring the bill has introduced a similar bill on four previous occasions and, incidentally, has approached the board of railway commissioners in regard to the same matter. Receiving a judgment from the board which was not in his favour, he has appealed to the privy council. That appeal, by the way, is still before the privy council and will have to be dealt with in the future.

In his speech the other evening he made a number of statements upon only a few of which I shall now touch. I pointed out on the previous occasion that the export rates are set for the purpose of permititng the products affected to compete in the world market. Generally speaking they are not set on the basis adopted in connection with domestic rates, because domestic rates are enforced so as to deal with the matter from the standpoint of local consumption. When a commodity comes under an export rate it is on the way to a foreign market and is in a position where it must compete with the products of different countries of the world. Therefore, generally speaking export rates in Canada are not on the same basis as domestic rates, nor are they on the same basis even so far as mileage is concerned. For example—I assume my hon. friend knows this but the house generally may not—the rates from Edmonton to Vancouver, Calgary to Vancouver, and Edmonton to Prince Rupert are all exactly the same, 20 cents per 100 pounds, yet the distance from Edmonton to Vancouver is 765 miles, from Calgary to Vancouver 642 miles, and from Edmonton to Prince Rupert 973 miles.

Mr. HANBURY: Those are export rates?

Mr. MANION: Yes, and they are all put on the same basis because if one or the other route had an advantage even according to mileage it would get all the grain exported—I am speaking of grain at the moment—and the others would get none. It is the same with regard to Halifax and St. John. The rates from Montreal to Halifax and St. John are exactly the same, for the reasons I have just mentioned, although there is a great difference in the mileage.

The United States export rates are much higher than ours. It is true that in some cases, perhaps many cases, their domestic rates are lower than our normal domestic rate, but their export rate, which is also their domestic rate, is considerably higher than our export rate. For the information of the house I am going to put on Hansard a few of those rates, though some of these rates have been put on Hansard before.

The rate from Shelby, Montana, to Seattle, domestic or export, a distance of 757 miles, is 38½ cents per 100 pounds. The rate from Bissell, Alberta, to Vancouver, a distance of 758 miles, just one mile more, is 20 cents; that is the Canadian rate is 20 cents as against the American rate of 38½ cents. From Livingston, Montana, to Seattle, a distance of 897 miles, the rate is 39 cents, while from Greenshields, Alberta, to Vancouver, a distance of 893 miles, practically the same mileage, the rate is 22 cents; that is 22 cents on the Canadian side as against 39 cents on the American side. I am informed by railway authorities that practically all the rates on grains for export are in favour of Canada; that is they are lower to the Canadian shipper. It is true that the domestic rates in the United States, which are the same as the export rates, are lower in some cases than ours, but due to the special domestic rate which through efforts of my own to a large extent and of the Minister of Agriculture we obtained about a year and a half ago from the prairie provinces to British Columbia, our feed grain rates are lower than the rates on the same quality of grain for domestic consumption in the United States. The same is true of our emergency rates obtained a few months ago for the purpose of shipping to the United States grains of lower quality, what are called feed grains. So on those two grades of grain, feed grains and grains of the lower grade—I have forgotten the exact classification—our rates are considerably lower than United States rates.

My hon. friend complained, and rightly, that our rate on burnt wheat unfit for human consumption was as high as the rate on other grains, but recently the railway commission instructed the railways that burnt wheat should be treated on the same basis as the lower grades of wheat moving from the prairie provinces to British Columbia.

My hon. friend also mentioned the rates from Calgary or Edmonton, or from the prairies for that matter, to Vancouver, as compared with the rates to Fort William. The rate from Calgary to Vancouver is 20 cents, and the rate from Calgary to Fort William is 26 cents. But the hon. gentleman, if I understood him aright, in comparing these two rates brought into the comparison the distances. I must submit to him and the house that grain at the head of the lakes is not in the same position as grain at Vancouver because grain at Vancouver is all the year round right on the seaboard, and in a position to be shipped across to Europe, whereas at Fort William it has to go at least one thousand miles to Montreal, and a great deal further if it is shipped in winter to Halifax or Saint John. So there is no fairness in comparing the rate on grain from the prairies to Fort William with the rate from the prairies to Vancouver, because the grain at Fort William is still inland and has to go at least as far as Montreal, and in winter to Halifax or Saint John, before it is in a position to be shipped to Europe.

But Vancouver has this other advantage. It is open the year round, whereas it is possible to ship grain from the head of the lakes by water only during seven months of the year, and as the rate is so high by rail from Fort William to Montreal or to the maritimes, that is practically a paper rate; in other words, almost no grain is shipped from the head of the lakes to either Montreal or the maritime ports of Halifax and Saint John in the winter, and it is only during seven months of the year it can be exported. Therefore when grain gets into the elevators at the head of the lakes it stays there till the following spring because the rate is too high to ship it out.

It is true that the domestic rate from the head of the lakes to Montreal is lower than the export rate, but they are both paper rates. Neither of them is used because grain can go from the head of the lakes in the summer by water to Montreal for something under 4 cents a bushel; in fact, the rate during the whole season of 1933 averaged 3·79 cents a bushel. It is obvious therefore that when grain can be shipped in the summer for 3·79 cents a bushel, less than 4 cents a bushel, by water, it will not go by rail and pay a rate of 25 or 34 cents per 100 pounds, as the case may be, from the head of the lakes to Montreal or the maritime ports. Water competition controls, and my hon. friend complained a little of that, I think; but the fact remains that if the railways are to get any of the traffic between any two points they must compete with whatever other competition there is, and I have given the rate for the water competition. That competition is so severe that except for an emergency small shipment, a carload or some very small shipment, the railways will not get any, and even then they would have to compete to a certain extent with the lake rate or the lake and rail rate.

Another point which I wish to submit to the house is that the railways are to-day giving to Canada, as I stated and as has been stated by many railway authorities—I am not one of them—the lowest rates in the world for like distances, and consequently in view of the financial condition not only of the Canadian National but of the Canadian Pacific it would be of the most serious consequence to them if they were forced to give rates which would not pay them. Remember that if the railways of Canada, which are to-day having great difficulty in getting along at all, were forced to cut down their rates still further, they might be put in the position of threatening very seriously the maintenance of adequate railway services from one part of Canada to the other. All railways, not only Canadian railways but the railways on the American side, have, during the past few years, found it necessary to defer maintenance on their roads because they have not been earning sufficient money to provide themselves with rails and railway equipment, even with ties and various other materials which they require to keep them going so far as maintenance is concerned.

[Mr. Manion.]

Therefore if they were forced to lower their rates still further they would to a still greater degree be forced to defer maintenance; that would automatically lead to a greater amount of unemployment among those who carry on the maintenance, and that would mean a greater tax upon the Canadian people.

It is also well to remember that this country because of its great distances cannot get along without railway services, and if we put the railways into still greater difficulties we are really cutting our own throats because we are putting ourselves in a position in which we could not continue to exist.

It is perhaps as well to point out that the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1934, so far as my information goes, just earned its interest on its bonds, and the Canadian National, as this house knows well, is about fifty million dollars, in round figures, short of earning its interest payments for the past year. I submit that they could not stand very much pressure in the way of lower freight rates although individual sections might be served.

The hon. member also argued that the rates to British Columbia should be lower on certain lines through the rockies because of their lower grades. He did not mention an obvious fact, that the construction costs through the mountains are exceedingly heavy and the running of trains is difficult and sometimes hazardous. There is hardly any local business through the mountains. We all remember that only a few weeks ago a severe snow storm tied up trains in the Rocky mountains for as long as nine or ten days. This is something which does not occur in any other section of the country and it illustrates the difficulty of operating trains through the mountains.

I do not know that my hon. friend used the argument the other evening, but it has been argued before that the parliament of Canada passed the Crowsnest pass rates. However, it should be remembered that the act covering these rates was passed in 1897, seven years before the board of railway commissioners was set up. At that time parliament was justified in acting, but at the present time I submit that it is not justified in dealing with such a complicated question as this. I might tell the house that the board of railway commissioners has been rarely overruled by the government. I made it my business to-day to obtain some information from the board as to the number of appeals which have been made against their judgments. They furnished me with the information that appeals to the governor in council had been made from forty-five of their judgments in the period from February 1, 1904, when they were organized, to December 31, 1934. Of those appeals, forty-two were disallowed, referred back, dismissed or abandoned; in other words, the judgments were not interfered with. Of the three appeals which were allowed, one was in connection with a railway crossing, nothing whatever to do with freight rates. Another was in connection with the National Dairy Council of Canada and was against a ruling of the board dated November 21, 1922, in connection with a twenty per cent increase in cream rates. This was a protest against an increase in rates. The third appeal was made in 1924 when the governments of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba appealed from order number 408 dated October 14, 1924, regarding the Crowsnest pass rates. This appeal was allowed because of a decision of the supreme court. The supreme court had decided the case and the government merely accepted its decisions. In the period from 1904 until the end of 1934 there were forty-five appeals and in no case was a decision given by the government putting into effect a lower freight rate so far as any normal or standing freight rate was concerned.

I shall not take up any more time except to say just a few more words. I compliment the hon. gentleman upon his persistence. He has had this matter up before this house four times; he has had it up before the board of railway commissioners, and he is now making an appeal. However I submit with all deference that his persistence does not make his bill a proper one. I do admit that the freight rate structure of Canada is antiquated. It is in a more or less chaotic condition and I believe there will have to be something in the way of a complete investigation into the freight rates in the near future with the purpose of wiping out some of the chaos which exists and putting the freight rates in a more equitable condition. While I admit that an investigation is needed, that is a different question from the parliament of Canada attempting to adjudicate upon a question of this kind. The government feels, as we have felt for the last four years, that we cannot take the position of making freight rates in this house and we must therefore oppose the second reading of this bill. I submit to hon. members opposite with the best intention in the world that if they are by any chance the winners at the next election and the hon. member introduces a similar bill, they are likely to be embarrassed due to the fact that some of them have voted as they have. The government of that day might be in the rather awkward position, if it were consistent, of trying to adjudicate upon a question of this kind. I merely mention this in passing.

Mr. CANTLEY: It is a long way off.

Mr. MANION: Yes, I think probably it is, but I am just pointing that out. For these reasons I submit that this question is not one upon which this parliament could give a decision favourable to the hon. gentleman.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I intend to detain the house but a few moments in connection with the bill introduced by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid). This bill seeks to add to subsection 5 of section 325 of the Railway Act the following words:

> —and to all such traffic moving westwardly from Fort William, and from all points on all lines of railway west of Fort William, to Vancouver, British Columbia and to points on the Pacific coast,—

I desire to take this opportunity of complimenting the hon. member for having made his plea year after year ever since he came to this house. He has made this matter a live issue as far as the interests of the people of British Columbia are concerned. Regardless of any political affiliations he has acted in their interests and the interests of the people of western Canada generally.

In the few minutes I have at my disposal I shall refer to the five reasons given by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) for opposing this measure. Those five reasons, while they may be worthy in themselves, are entirely inconsistent in the general composite structure of the opposition which he is offering. The first submission made by the minister was that parliament is not the proper body to make freight rates, that the building up of a freight rate structure should be left to a body of technical experts. He contended that the board of railway commissioners had been specifically created for this purpose. I agree with the minister so far as the general details of a freight rate structure are concerned, but here we have at stake a basic principle of fundamental justice. When we must make a decision in regard to such a principle, the proper body to adjudicate upon the equity and justice of this principle is the court of last resort, the parliament of the Dominion of Canada, and not any body of experts. I am endeavouring to differentiate between the details of a common freight rate structure as they apply to any section of the country and a violation of the basic principle of fundamental justice and rankest discrimination against a splendid section of this country.

The second point made by my hon. friend had nothing whatever to do with the ability or inability of this parliament to adjudicate a question of justice which concerns British Columbia and western Canada. I cannot quote him word for word but the sense of his remarks was that there was no fairness in comparing rates from the prairies to Vancouver with those from the prairies to Fort William. He stated that many of the rates applying in eastern Canada were paper rates, in other words, that British Columbia and in particular the ports of Vancouver and Prince Rupert, must suffer the inequalities and injustices of an unfair structure of freight rates because the ports are open the year round. We are being made to pay for our climatic superiority through an unjust discrimination in favour of certain sections of eastern Canada.

I have come now to the third reason given by the minister. He said that if the railways are going—

Mr. MANION: I am sorry to interrupt my hon. friend, but I am sure he wishes to be fair. I was dealing not with the rates from the prairies to Fort William but with those from the head of the lakes to Montreal. I say this so that the record may be straight. That was a different thing from the rate from the prairies to Fort William.

Mr. CHAPLIN: How long has this injustice been going on?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It has been going on —

Mr. CHAPLIN: It went on for ten years under the previous government.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I am not discussing what has happened under either party; I am arguing for simple justice for the west. With all respect to the minister, I took down his words and I think Hansard will bear me out when I quote him as having said that there is no fairness in comparing the rates from the prairies to Vancouver with the rates from the prairies to Fort William.

Mr. MANION: That is correct.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): And he said that the rates from the head of the lakes to Montreal were largely paper rates and were dictated by cheaper water competition.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend has me right now; he did not have me right the other time.

[Mr. I. Mackenzie.]

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I am dealing with two different things. The minister did discuss a comparison between the rates from the prairies to Vancouver as against the rates from the prairies to Fort William, and he said —

Mr. MANION: I said that the comparison was unfair, not because it was a paper rate but because the grain at the head of the lakes was still inland and had to go a thousand miles.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I agree with the minister, and that is my point. I contend that you are building up a discrimination in freights against the open ports of the Pacific inasmuch as geographically you are compelled to have the grain locked up for several months. But why should we suffer the inequalities in this freight rate structure merely because we have been given by providence certain ports which are open the year round?

The next point made by the Minister of Railways was this—and here he went off at a tangent—that the rates are now the lowest in the west, that the railways could not maintain equipment, that there would be increased unemployment and greater taxation if they forced to lower their rates still further. He also said that the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1934 had barely earned its interest on its bonds. Let us analyze the significance of that argument. Vancouver, Prince Rupert and Alberta are to be discriminated against because the railways of Canada are facing at the present time a severe financial stringency. But, I submit, why should we be the ones to suffer as a result of the financial conditions in which the railways of Canada find themselves to-day? Should not this be the proper course? Should we not in the first place establish a uniform system of equity and justice in the freight rate structure of the country, and then on that basis of equity of contribution and sacrifice do everything possible to assist both the privately owned railway and the public system?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): On the basis of my hon. friend's argument, the establisment of an equitable base, would he be willing as a first step to scrap the Crowsnest rates?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): My hon. friend as usual is trying to draw a red herring across the trail. I think that one of the greatest tasks ahead of some government in the future is to establish for the first time in Canadian history a scientific freight rate structure, because the entire structure as it exists to-day is lopsided, having been built up from the point of view of sectional interests since confederation—concessions here and concessions there. From our point of view we can prove that there has been the rankest discrimination against us in the west from the operation of the freight rate system of Canada as we have it now.

The fourth point made by my hon. friend is the very old and ineffective argument, that construction costs were exceedingly heavy in the Rocky mountains while local business was small, therefore we in the far west must pay the penalty of our geography. I do not believe that argument is based on fundamental justice. All that my hon. friend from New Westminster wants, all that the people of British Columbia are asking for, irrespective of party, is that there shall be applied to this question the fundamental principles of simple justice. My hon. friend's next point was that the board of railway commissioners was pretty much a sacrosanct institution, that it had always been successful in its decisions and that appeals against it had failed; therefore, according to my hon. friend, we should look to it as the court of last resort. They had ruled against the contention of my hon. friend from New Westminster and therefore they were the court of last resort.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend is not fair. I did not say that because they ruled against the hon. gentleman's contention we should therefore accept them as the final authority. I said that all governments had accepted their rulings, in practically all of forty-five cases.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I accept my hon. friend's amendment. But these are days of new deals, especially in the ministry to which the hon. gentleman belongs. But even granting that in the past governments have accepted with a degree of finality the judgment of the board of railway commissioners in these matters, surely my hon. friend must recognize that to-day we are endeavouring to meet new conditions, and we are appealing for justice to be meted out to the west and particularly to British Columbia.

The final point made by the minister was one that was not worthy of him, if I may say so in all kindness. He said that if we were sitting where he is now, inside of two or three months—and we certainly shall—and we were confronted with the same problem, we might feel a certain degree of embarrassment if my hon. friend from New Westminster should bring up the question again. Let me say to the minister that those of us who come from British Columbia, and possibly this will apply to my hon. friends from that province sitting on the other side of the house, regardless of the issue of the next election, intend to continue to fight to see that justice is done our province and Alberta and western Canada generally with respect to this question of freight rates, which at the present time works the cruelest discrimination against the whole Pacific coast and the western plains of this dominion.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I wish to say a word or two in support of this bill. I introduced the same subject many years ago, not perhaps by way of a bill but by way of a resolution and when the estimates were under consideration. I introduced it a number of times before the hon. member who sponsors this bill came to the house, but when I found that he attacked the injustice with so much vigour and energy I was glad to leave the matter in his capable hands. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Chaplin) has asked how long this injustice has continued. I can recall the time when he sat in the opposition for a number of years—and when you are in opposition is the time to be virtuous—and I cannot remember his ever lending the weight of his influence and his voice to support the cause when I urged it. I know he has a good memory because he has checked me up more than once, and if he supported me on those occasions I shall be glad to be corrected. I cannot remember however that he ever did so.

The Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion), in opposing this bill, has made allusion to appeals to the privy council, otherwise the cabinet. The Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) discussing this matter some years ago, said that it was not a wise thing, the arrangement that existed of taking appeals to the privy council, because it was taking them to a body whom he termed politicians, a political body, and he gave reasons to show how it had originated in that way. He said the arrangement was no longer desirable, and with that I agree to some extent, as I did then. But I suggested then, as I suggest now, that the proper appeal should be to the exchequer court where it would not be considered by a political body and there would be none of the dangers attending an appeal of that sort.

The minister said that this parliament was not a rate making body. May I point out that we passed a vital act dealing with Crowsnest rates in 1923 or 1924. Then he speaks about its being undesirable to interfere with it because it is such a complicated structure. But who asks him to change the structure? We are merely asking him to remedy an obvious injustice, something which is so obvious that a schoolboy can see the logic of it. We do not propose to tear down the whole structure; that is not suggested. Perhaps I might give an analogous illustration. If my wife asked me to fix a screen door on which one of the hinges was lose, needing a nail and I said, "Woman, I cannot possibly build a house," the obvious answer to that would be, "It will be time enough to talk about building a house when you are asked to build one; in the meantime the hinge needs to be fixed and can be fixed." But there is one thing in all the arguments—and I have heard a great many in the last fourteen years—and it is this. I have never heard anything said really to justify the existence of the differential between the export rate and the domestic rate. Attempts have been made to cover it up, to sidetrack it, but I have never heard an attempt made to justify it. The minister spoke about the heavy snowfalls causing increased transportation costs on grain going through the Rocky mountains, but snow falls on the just and unjust alike; it falls on trains carrying export as well as domestic wheat. Therefore that argument in favour of a differential is quite absurd.

Mr. MANION: I was only pointing out the high cost of operation in the mountains. If the hon. member will take my arguments and deal properly with them, I have no objection; but I do object to his twisting my statements. I said that operating costs were higher in the mountains than on the prairies.

Mr. NEILL: Why did my hon. friend say that if he did not use it as an argument?

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend from New Westminster in his speech had argued as to the low grades and cheap operating costs in some sections of the mountains. I used the argument as contra to that.

Mr. NEILL: Then they were both illogical, as the cost does not affect the differential.

Mr. MANION: There is only one logical man in the house, I suppose.

Mr. NEILL: There is, I am glad to say, generally one person right in an argument. The minister spoke about the cabinet not being in a position to handle this question. I quite frankly admit that the cabinet is not the best body to handle it on an appeal, but the cabinet have given an illustration of what in part they have already done, and they could do this: they could put pressure on the railway companies to reduce the differential not only to the extent they have already done it—for they have only cut it in half and at present this applies merely to No. 4 tough wheat and coarse grains and lower—but if they could apply it to No. 2 tough and lower and all mill feeds a good deal of this trouble would be eliminated. There is no justification whatever for making this apply to some grades of wheat and not making it apply to mill feeds. I believe mill feeds were originally left out more or less by a misunderstanding than on account of anything else.

The minister says that the railways might lose money and curtail their services to the people. He does not need to worry about that because I am credibly advised that the putting on of that reduced rate resulted in increased traffic that was profitable to the railway companies, as the rate is still much higher than the export rate; and I will defy anyone to say that the export rate is not profitable to the railways, otherwise they would not be so keenly competing with each other to get the traffic. Therefore it is profitable for the railways to carry export grain at a fixed rate, and consequently it must be profitable for them to carry domestic grain, which does not cost any more to haul and which is of less value, at a price something less than double the export rate. If the minister could use his influence—and he can because he has used it already and the Prime Minister has used his—to have this rate apply to No. 2 tough wheat and lower and coarse grains and mill feeds, it would meet a great deal of the complaint this bill seeks to remedy.

Mr. THOMAS CANTLEY (Pictou): I listened with a great deal of interest to the speech of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) and with rather less to some of the speeches that followed. The minister suggested that perhaps railway rates to-day are antiquated. They may be, but the man that undertakes to revise and redraft railway rates in this country is undertaking a pretty big task. There is no possible doubt that Canadian export rates are to-day the lowest in the world and are not made on any reasonable scientific method of providing the railways with adequate revenue for the work which they perform. Roughly our export rates are about fifty-five per cent of the United States rates for like distances or like commodities; that is a fact which cannot be successfully controverted. If the Canadian National Railways were able to-day to get the rates that are extorted by United States and continental roads, not only would they show a surplus, but with that surplus they would be able practically to rebuild their entire motive power and their rolling stock as well. I am quite satisfied that any hon. member who gives close study to the matter and looks into the whole structure of railway rates in this country for the last twenty or thirty years will bear me out in the conclusions I have reached. I know of no branch of industry in Canada that has a poorer showing for its investment for the energy and ability with which it has been managed, than has our railway system.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): I do not know whether I have time at my disposal this evening to deal with all the arguments which have been advanced by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) against this bill, which I have introduced now for the fourth time. At the outset he spoke about the House of Commons not being the proper place for rate making. Were I bringing up the general question of freight rates in the house, there might be some force in his argument, but I am not doing that; I am asking parliament to give British Columbia what parliament in 1925 gave for all grain traffic going to Fort William, a rate which had been in existence since 1897. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hanson) interrupted to ask whether we would care to advocate the abrogation of the Crowsnest pass rate. No, we are asking: Give us the Crowsnest pass rate. When speaking the other day I said that the government would not dare to abrogate that rate.

Mr. MANION: Have you not the Crowsnest pass rate on export grain now?

Mr. REID: I contend that we have not. It is still two or three cents higher if you take the actual mileage, but I am not bringing up that point just now; I am asking that the domestic rate be the same as the Crowsnest pass rate.

Mr. MANION: That is a different matter, but you have the Crowsnest pass rate at the present time on export grain.

Mr. REID: That is a debatable point, but I am not going into that because I am dealing with grain for domestic purposes in British Columbia and I am asking that that grain be given the Crowsnest pass rate.

As regards the minister's remarks about export rates being competing rates, might I point out that argument has been advanced many times by the railroads, but when it suits they are very good at changing their ground. When we quote certain rates to them, they have other excuses to offer. When we said that the domestic rate from Fort William to Montreal was twenty-five cents and the export rate was thirty-four and a half cents, they had no answer to give. Let me point this out to the house; the railways have never shown that export rates at present in existence from Calgary or Edmonton to Vancouver mean a loss to them. I maintain that the rate of twenty cents is a paying rate and two of the members of the board of railway commissioners say the same thing. If that rate is a paying one, why should we in British Columbia for the grain we use have to pay one hundred per cent more than do our competitors in other lands? It is no wonder that at one time the people of British Columbia were seriously thinking of buying Canadian grain in Japan or England and bringing it into that province. There was a time in 1934 when Canadian grain, Nos. 2, 3 and 4, could be purchased in Yokohama, Japan, and brought into the Fraser valley at twenty-five cents a ton cheaper than the price at which it could be brought in from the prairies. I was one of those who advocated that we do this and thus prove the utter absurdity of charging us forty-one and a half cents a hundred pounds for inferior grain when our competitors in Japan could purchase the same or higher grades at a much cheaper rate.

The minister spoke about the United States rates, but he was not exactly fair in that. I have before me the whole rate structure as presented by the railway companies in the appeal last fall. I shall take the time to dispute the statement made by the minister, even if the discussion has to continue at the next sitting. Take the case of Cut Bank, Montana, 732 miles. It is true the old domestic rate was 38½ for wheat as against 41½ for our domestic rate. I admit that tariff No. 145 is now 30½, but the Minister of Railways ignored entirely the fact that there is another rate for coarse grains.

Mr. MANION: In the United States?

Mr. REID: Yes.

Mr. MANION: I apologize for interrupting, but I think my hon. friend is wrong.

Mr. REID: These are figures presented by the railways before the board of railway commissioners. A copy was given to me by counsel.

Mr. MANION: Will the hon. gentleman read the rates?

Mr. REID: Yes, I shall take Shelby, Montana: distance, 757 miles; old domestic rate, 38½; coarse grains, 34½. Now, 34½ for coarse grains and mill feed is considerably better than 41½.

Mr. MANION: But it is not as cheap as our rate on low grade grain at the present time.

Mr. REID: The trouble with the minister is that he is not conversant with feed requirements. In the Fraser valley, and I suppose in other farming districts where they keep cows and chickens, mill feeds represent fifty per cent of the requirements.

Mr. NEILL: More.

Mr. REID: A grave injustice was done in not including mill feeds in tariff No. 145. The farmers who have cows and stock to feed are still paying 41½ cents on mill feed as against 20 cents per hundred pounds on low grade grain. I could quote many rates from the United States, but if you look at coarse grains all the way through you find that they are carried at far cheaper rates than mill feeds to British Columbia.

It is unfair to quote the export rates in the United States, because the United States have practically no export of grain as compared with the Canadian side. Only something like twenty-five per cent of their grain is exported, against seventy-five per cent of Canadian grain. They are not a wheat exporting nation, but with us wheat constitutes the great bulk of our exports and of the traffic on the railways.

Then coming to the question of grades in the United States, they do not compare with the low grades in British Columbia. I think the minister rather questioned my statement that construction and maintenance costs in British Columbia are less. I am quoting from evidence given in the general freight rate investigation, and will quote the construction costs at a few points, because it should be driven home to many hon. members that the trains do not go up over the mountains and then drop down into the valleys; the grades in British Columbia are comparatively the lowest in Canada. Coming to construction costs, and taking the Canadian Pacific—because they have the heavy grades—from Kamloops to Hope the distance is 168 miles, and the cost was $133,563 per mile. That is the cost with the heavy rock work. Compare that with Montreal to Ottawa, which you would think is a nice grade—111 miles, and the cost was, $178,614 per mile. Yet from year to year we have the Minister of Railways telling the house that construction costs in British Columbia are higher. Let me give another example: Hope to Fraser River Junction, 77 miles, cost $51,544 per mile. Compare that with Joliette to Garneau Junction, 61·5 miles, cost $62,394 per mile. These were sworn statements made before the board of railway commissioners; they were not just picked up anywhere.

We come then to operating costs. In 1925 in British Columbia the figure is $3,825 per mile, and on the prairies, that some people think are as level as a billiard table, the cost was $4,702. In British Columbia we have the finest and best grades in the whole country, and I wish hon. members would stop talking about higher grades in the mountains. I repeat that operating costs, maintenance costs and construction costs were lower in British Columbia, even on the Canadian Pacific, which has the highest grades, than in many sections of the prairies and many sections of the east. I have the facts before me in sworn statements made before the board of railway commissioners in the general freight rates investigation.

When it comes to the question of the cost of hauling grain, or any other freight, there is not an expert for the railways, or in fact anyone who can tell what it costs to haul a ton of freight a mile. They all say it cannot be done. So the question of costs cannot enter into it. It is just that the Canadian Pacific railway back in 1886 said: We will soak British Columbia for something, after having been paid heavily for going into that province, and they have maintained that attitude ever since.

I want to put one or two more figures on record, because this is probably the last appeal I shall be making before this government. The Minister of Railways warned and almost threatened us to-night, saying: Don't you Liberals vote for this or else if you get into power you will be in a fix. But if I am fortunate enough to be in the next parliament this will be one of the first bills on the order paper; I will not be like some members from British Columbia who when in opposition say they are in favour of this but will not support it when their party is in power. It is true that this question has been brought up in the house many times by way of resolutions and in speeches, but before I came here I recognized that this was the place to fight British Columbia's battles for equalization of freight rates and so have persistently kept up the fight. As regards eastern points, and the maritime provinces especially, I do not want to raise the question of east against west, but let me point out that if British Columbia gets equalization on the basis of the Crowsnest pass rates, the eastern provinces will still have lower rates.

Why can they not join with us and help British Columbia to get this? What are they afraid of? We are asking only for justice. I am going to put on record rates to the maritimes to prove to the minister that they are not as he stated, merely paper rates, because some quantities of grain go through the maritime ports as well as Montreal and Quebec. I have the figures here.

Mr. MANION: I did not say it was a paper rate from Montreal to the maritimes; I said from the head of the lakes to Montreal.

SUPPLY

NATIONAL DEFENCE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Morand in the chair.

Salaries, $402,692; contingencies, $45,948.

Mr. HANBURY: Would the minister make a statement as to the progress being made in the construction of the armouries for the Seaforth Highlanders in Vancouver?

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Minister of National Defence): Tenders are about to be called for; they have not yet been received.

Mr. HANBURY: Are public or private tenders to be asked for?

Mr. STIRLING: A list of contractors are being asked to tender.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Private tenders.

Mr. HANBURY: Would the minister give the names of the companies which will be asked to tender?

Mr. STIRLING: I am afraid I have not a list with me, but I shall be very glad to get it for the hon. member.

Mr. HEAPS: Will the barracks put up by the government be government property after its erection or is it being put up by a private organization?

Mr. STIRLING: I do not understand the question.

Mr. HEAPS: We had instances last year when certain private organizations put up barracks with the assistance of government funds and government guarantees. Is the barracks at Vancouver being put up entirely by the government and will it be the property of the government or, as has happened in other parts of western Canada, will the completed building be the property of a private corporation?

Mr. STIRLING: I think the hon. member is referring to the basis of rental-purchase. This barracks is not being built under that arrangement, but is under the Public Works Construction Act.

Mr. HEAPS: Will the construction of these barracks, wherever they may be, be done on that basis, and not on the basis of rental-purchase? Will that be the policy of the department?

Mr. STIRLING: Yes. Speaking generally, and not binding myself to any definite statement on the subject, I would say we are not now proceeding under the rental-purchase system, but rather under a system of direct construction.

Mr. HEAPS: What need is there in Vancouver for the construction of this building?

Mr. STIRLING: For the accommodation of the non-permanent active militia of that city.

Mr. HEAPS: How many members are there in the non-permanent active militia, and what quarters have they at the present time?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): As I happen to be conversant with the situation perhaps I might reply to the hon. member. I wish to support the minister to the utmost degree and to state that the present headquarters of the Seaforth Highlanders in Vancouver is entirely inadequate, nor is it sufficient to carry out the duties of one of the oldest militia units in Vancouver. I am in favour of the vote for the building of the armouries for the Seaforth Highlanders.

Mr. HEAPS: If the minister cannot tell me, possibly the hon. member for Vancouver could tell how many members there are in the organization?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That would depend on the number of recruits, from year to year. It would depend, naturally, on the number in the active militia and in the reserve battalion. There are three or four hundred in the militia, but the number could be increased over night to several thousand, if necessary.

Mr. MacINNIS: The last time this item was up for consideration I asked if the minister had an estimate of the value of the work done by the men in the National Defence unemployment relief camps. At that time I believe he said he had an estimate, and I should like him to give me the figures.

Mr. STIRLING: The hon. member has asked for the expenditures on relief camps?

Mr. MacINNIS: No; I asked for the value of the work done by the men in the National Defence unemployment relief camps.

Mr. STIRLING: I have the estimated value of the work done up to September 30, 1934. It is based on an average efficiency of relief personnel of fifty per cent, and the figure is given as $6,747,331. The total man days of relief afforded to that date was 7,569,199.

Mr. MacINNIS: Is that for the whole of Canada?

Mr. STIRLING: Yes.

Mr. MacINNIS: Is the twenty cents per day allowed the men in the relief camps paid on days when the weather is not fit for the men to work?

Mr. STIRLING: If the men go out at all to work they receive the allowance.

Mr. MacINNIS: If the weather is so bad that they cannot leave the camps they are not paid the allowance?

Mr. STIRLING: Under those circumstances they do not receive the allowance.

Mr. MacINNIS: Some little time ago about forty men were arrested for getting relief under false pretences. I believe they went into the camps under assumed names. Who authorized the arrests? Was it the Department of National Defence?

Mr. STIRLING: Could the hon. member give me some further information in the matter?

Mr. MacINNIS: Some of the arrests took place in the city of Vancouver, and some of them in other British Columbia camps.

Mr. STIRLING: When?

Mr. MacINNIS: Approximately three weeks ago.

Mr. STIRLING: I am without information with regard to the matter. I do not recollect anything of the sort coming before the Department of National Defence.

Mr. HEAPS: In years gone by we have protested about the inadequate allowance given by the government to the young men who are forced to go into the relief camps and to accept twenty cents a day or about $5 a month. I was glad to observe the government saw fit to bring in a measure providing for a minimum wage, and as a result of which I hope before long we will have a national minimum wage in effect. In the event of the minimum wage law becoming effective will the Department of National Defence live up to government regulations and pay these men in the camps the minimum wage prescribed in their legislation?

Mr. STIRLING: I believe the hon. member is referring to a discussion which took place on a previous occasion when this estimate was before the committee. The hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) raised the same point. I believe these hon. members have failed to realize that the handling of relief is as a result of arrangements made between the federal and provincial governments after the provinces had asked the dominion for assistance. By agreement the dominion took over the care of the single homeless unemployed men and stipulated that in certain places throughout Canada camps should be erected in which those men could find work to do. In the event of the men accepting the work provided they were to receive certain food, clothing and shelter, plus an allowance of twenty cents per day. By agreement with the provinces that was undertaken, and the men who choose to comply with the regulations obtain work and receive the returns.

Mr. HEAPS: That does not answer my question. As I said before, in years gone by several of us in this part of the house have protested against the totally inadequate allowance given by the government to these young men who are compelled by force of circumstances and through no fault of their own to go into these relief camps. Now that we are trying to bring about better social conditions throughout the country and improve the lot of the under dog I think it would be an appropriate time for the government to step in and give to these young men who are rendering useful service to the country something more than the twenty cents per day that they are now receiving. I have had many complaints from the camps. I received one only this week from a camp somewhere near Hudson, Ontario, along that very line. Men leave the camps often without a cent in their possession because of the very low allowance they receive from the government, and they go out into the world almost penniless. If they are doing work at all they should be paid a proper rate by the government for what they do. I know that many young men are forced by the regulations in some of our municipalities to go into these camps, otherwise they cannot get relief from the municipality. In view of these circumstances, when they are compelled to go into the camp and are forced to work they should be given more than twenty cents a day.

As I have said, the government contemplates introducing minimum wage legislation, and I am now speaking of the principle of that minimum wage legislation. If we are to adopt the principle of the payment by employers of labour of a minimum wage for services rendered in any part of the dominion, I think one of the first to recognize that principle should be the government themselves; for how can we expect any private employer of labour to accept the principle if right off the bat, so to speak, the government refuse to adopt the very principle which they are responsible for, and for which no doubt they will take so much credit when the time arrives? So my plea to the minister is that he should not only take into serious consideration but act favourably upon the idea of paying to these young men who are in the camps a proper wage for the work they do. That at least would be comforming with the idea the government has in mind in submitting to parliament minimum wage legislation.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I wonder if the minister would be kind enough to inform me if he has received a request from the officer commanding Les Fusilliers du Bas-Saint Laurent for an extension of the present headquarters of the armoury at Rimouski and also for the erection of a new armoury at Mont Joli in the county of Rimouski. I think that a recommendation was sent to the general officer commanding the Quebec district and that it was strongly endorsed by him, and the officers of the regiment were rather encouraged by headquarters to believe that the recommendation would be favourably considered and acted upon out of the general relief appropriation.

Mr. STIRLING: I did receive such a communication, and the question is under consideration along with the requests of many other regiments who have made similar applications.

Sir EUGENE FISET: During the last war this regiment under the voluntary system furnished 2,500 men to go overseas, and the bulk of them formed part of the 22nd regiment. It is one of the most deserving units you could possibly find in the whole of Canada, and if the minister could see his way clear to helping them I think it would be rendering a great service to the cause.

Mr. STIRLING: I shall be very glad, Mr Chairman, to give the matter full consideration.

Mr. MacINNIS: May I ask the minister if the twenty cents a day which the men receive in the unemployment relief camps is a wage or an allowance?

Mr. STIRLING: It is an allowance.

Mr. HEAPS: An honorarium.

Mr. MacINNIS: Then if it is an allowance why is it not paid on the days the men do not work as well as on the days they do work? The men believe it is a wage, and I think there is some logic in their argument. I would ask the minister to take into consideration recommending to the government that this allowance be paid regardless of whether the men work or not, that is if the man is willing to work. I have a letter here from a young chap in one of these camps, and he says in part, "In the event of the weather being so unfit that we cannot work we lose a day's pay. Yesterday we were not able to work, so we lost twenty cents." Now twenty cents is not a great deal to the minister but it is a great deal to the men in these camps. Circumstances alter cases, and I am sure that if the minister was in the camp at twenty cents a day he would like to get that twenty cents. My correspondent goes on to say, "Believing that the government would not stop that twenty cents if they knew about it, I am risking writing to you and losing my job in the bargain if caught." I would like to impress on the minister that here is a young chap who still has some faith in the government, and I think the government needs all the faith that is possible in these hard times. I suggest that the government stretch a point here—it is not a very great stretch—and consider giving to these men the allowance regardless of whether the day is fit for work or not. I hope the minister will take that suggestion into consideration.

Mr. STIRLING: Certainly. Every suggestion made in this committee will be taken into very serious consideration.

Mr. HEAPS: I am always afraid, Mr. Chairman, that when these suggestions are taken into serious consideration they usually go into the waste paper basket.

Mr. STIRLING: Oh, no.

Mr. HEAPS: I would much prefer that the minister say to my hon. friend from Vancouver South (Mr. MacInnis), "Yes, we will accede to your very modest request." After I have been asking that these men be paid the minimum wage I am surprised that my hon. friend from Vancouver South should come along with such an exceedingly modest request as he has made. It has left me almost speechless. I woud seriously ask the minister not to take my hon. friend's request into serious consideration, but here and now to give assent to it so that the men in the camps shall at least be assured of twenty cents a day whether the weather is fine or not.

Mr. MacINNIS: I almost feel like apologizing to my hon. friend from North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps), but my ancestors were Scotch. I think the minister should give me a definite answer to this very modest—much too modest—request, so that I may have a reply to send to my correspondent.

Mr. STIRLING: I suggest that the hon. member reply to his correspondent that on the 22nd of March he brought the matter up in committee of supply and the minister responsible assured him that, just as every suggestion would receive earnest consideration, his would.

Mr. HEAPS: And sympathetic consideration?

Mr. STIRLING: Yes, and sympathetic consideration.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I want to join my voice to the protests of other hon. members in this corner of the house with respect to this twenty cents a day business. I frankly think it is a disgrace to this country, particularly after all we have heard to-day regarding our wealth and returning prosperity, that this twenty cents a day, this miserable and utterly inappropriate pay, be continued even if it is called an allowance.

But I rose for another purpose, in connection with a complaint that I placed before the minister some time ago in regard to some of the camps out from Calgary. Since taking that matter up I have received from the office of the city clerk of Calgary some correspondence in connection with this case. I find that on February 5 the city clerk, J. M. Miller, wrote a note to his worship Mayor Davison in the following terms:

Dear Sir:

I beg to advise you that council, at its regular meeting held last evening, adopted the following motion:—

"That this council authorize His Worship the Mayor to direct to the attention of dominion and provincial government officials the plight of single men at present in Calgary, formerly of relief camps, requesting that some provision for their maintenance be immediately undertaken and the present situation thereby rectified.

"Further, that an investigation be immediately undertaken by the dominion and provincial governments concerning reported unsatisfactory conditions at the various relief camps and a report thereon furnished this council."

Kindly give this matter your attention.

Yours truly,
J. M. Miller,
City Clerk.

Mr. STIRLING: What is the date of that letter?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): February 5. On February 6 the following letter was written by A. Davison, the mayor of Calgary, to the Honourable Wesley Gordon, Minister of Labour, Ottawa, Canada:

Dear Sir:

The following resolution was passed by our city council at its regular meeting on February 4th, and I forward same to you for your consideration and action.

"That this council authorize His Worship the Mayor to direct to the attention of dominion and provincial government officials the plight of single men at present in Calgary, formerly of relief camps, requesting that some provision for their maintenance be immediately undertaken and the present situation thereby rectified.

"Further, that an investigation be immediately undertaken by the dominion and provincial governments concerning reported unsatisfactory conditions at the various relief camps and a report thereon furnished this council."

A considerable number of single men are now drifting into Calgary from the various camps, and we are fearful unless some action is taken that a serious situation may develop locally. Your early attention to this matter will be much appreciated.

Yours very truly,
A. Davison,
Mayor.

The last paragraph had been added by the mayor. On February 20 the following letter was sent by J. M. Miller, city clerk, to Brigadier General D. W. B. Spry:

Dear Sir:

The council, at its regular meeting held with date of February 18th, had before it for consideration clause 1 of the report of the city commissioners' dated February 15th, and which concerns reported complaints to the council respecting single men's camps. A copy of the clause refered to, together with the correspondence referred to therein, is attached for your information.

In dealing with the matter the council instructed that the various features referred to in the reports of the investigating officers be directed to your attention and with a recommendation that better water supply be afforded, better recreational features furnished, that the men be permitted to formulate committees for the purpose of presenting their grievances, and if at all possible, that permission be granted the men to come to the city at times within reason.

Might I respectfully request that after the council's representations in this respect have received your attention that I might receive your report thereon.

Yours truly,
J. M. Miller,
City Clerk.

On February 22, Brigadier General D. W. B. Spry wrote to the mayor as follows:

Dear Mr. Mayor:

Receipt is acknowledged of the communication from the city clerk of February 20, 1935, attaching the correspondence of the city commissioner and the reports of the gentlemen you asked permission for to visit the Department of National Defence camps in the Kananaskis valley.

It does not appear to be clear to your committee re the point raised in regard to water supply, that these camps were under construction and final completion of wash houses had not been completed. Further, that it is the policy that all these camps are constructed by the men themselves. During construction it is only normal that improvised systems have to be employed. The water supplies are now practically all completed, leaving no further grounds for reasonable complaints.

In regard to recreational facilities, as you are no doubt aware a recreational hut is supplied by the department, but that all equipment, such as books, games, radios, gramophones, et cetera, are obtained from private subscriptions, in which the citizens of Calgary have assisted very materially, and the profits from men's canteens; mostly, however, by private efforts as canteen profits are of necessity small. Should your council feel inclined to assist us in this work by a grant for camps in the vicinity of Calgary, or to which Calgary men are admitted, it would be very greatly appreciated.

With regard to the method of registering complaints, the following are the regulations in this respect as laid down by the Department of National Defence for all camps in the dominion:

"The following rules regarding complaints will be observed:

(a) One of the fundamental and most necessary rules for the administration of unemployment relief camps is to forbid anything bearing the appearance of combination to obtain redress of alleged grievances. Appeals for redress by means of any document bearing the signature of more than one complainant, or by organized committees combining to make a complaint are strictly forbidden.

(b) If any man has a complaint or accusation to bring against a member of the supervisory or administrative staff, such complaint should be laid before the camp foreman, who, if necessary, will transmit it to district headquarters or camp superintendent.

(c) If the camp foreman neglects or refuses to attend to a complaint, the complainant may bring the matter to the notice of the district headquarters or camp superintendent.

(d) The department will not countenance any steps to bring accusations before the tribunal of public opinion, either by speeches, or letters inserted in the newspapers, by men actively employed on relief work. Such a proceeding is a glaring violation of the rules and shows a contempt for properly constituted authority.

(e) It is the duty of the camp foreman to investigate all complaints and, when receiving complaints for transmission to superior authority, to point out to the parties concerned any irregularity in the means they employ in seeking redress. In hearing complaints or statements, et cetera, camp foremen are advised to invariably have another member of the supervisory staff present as a witness to all proceedings. The complaint, when forwarded to district headquarters or camp superintendent, is to be accompanied by a statement and recommendation, if any, of the camp foreman.

(f) No application or complaint should ever be made to the civil power, except through the camp foreman or with his sanction."

Trusting the above is the information you require.

Yours truly,
D. W. B. Spry,
Brigadier General,
D.O.C., M.D. No. 13.

I have never heard of any such document outside of an internment camp during war time.

An hon. MEMBER: That would be in the army.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The army is about the only place where you might expect such a suppression of individual and private rights. I resent this and I protest to the minister and to the government that these men should have the right to organize their complaint committees. I believe this government would be well advised to permit within the camps the form of self-government which is permitted within our universities.

Mr. McINTOSH: The right of assembly.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): At least the right of assembly to secure redress of wrongs. This is a violation of every decent law of British justice and practice, and the fact that such a Prussian-like document is presented as the official rules regulating a camp in Canada is certainly an indication of the ruthless character of the system which has thrust these men into the camps as the only means of escaping their misery and starvation. I want to make my protest in this matter as forceful as I can, and I repeat the words of Brigadier General Spry, as follows:

One of the fundamental and most necessary rules for the administration of unemployment relief camps is to forbid anything bearing the appearance of combination to obtain redress of alleged grievances. Appeals for redress by means of any document bearing the signature of more than one complainant or by organized committees combining to make a complaint are strictly forbidden.

What kind of men are these with whom we are dealing? Are they brutal men? Are they revolutionary? Are they not Canadian citizens who through no fault of their own are in this terribly unhappy condition? Surely the minister himself is sufficiently British in his instincts, a sufficiently good sportsman to understand that this is not sportsmanship. It is not even decency; it is sheer Prussian oppression. Under subsection (d) we find:

The department will not countenance any steps—

Note that; the department will not countenance any steps.

—to bring accusations before the tribunal of public opinion.

And so we have turned these relief camps definitely into military secret camps where the most rigid discipline—yes, more rigid than in war time, even worse than the discipline which the soldiers had to undergo—is carried out. These men are under more rigid discipline than is necessary for the maintenance of armed forces.

Mr. GRAY: Will the hon. member repeat the date?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): February 22, 1935.

Mr. HANBURY: Are you sure it isn't 1535?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am not so sure about that; it might be under Cromwell. The department, we are told, will not countenance any steps to bring accusations before the tribunal of public opinion.

—either by speeches or letters inserted in the newspapers by men actively employed on relief work.

Mr. HANBURY: Employed?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes; "employed" is good in view of the discussion which we have had.

Such a proceeding is a glaring violation of the rules and shows a contempt for properly constituted authority.

The writing of a letter to my hon. friend here is a flouting of properly constituted authority, and so is the making of a speech in Calgary or in a camp or anywhere else.

Mr. HEAPS: Or in parliament.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Well, we are not on relief yet.

Mr. HEAPS: Not yet is right.

Mr. MacINNIS: There is no civil authority.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): As to the replies received from the department, I have the following report to make. I asked the question:

Have men been ejected from this camp for having registered complaints?

The reply from the department was a categorical denial in the form of a negative—no. I at once took this matter up with my correspondents in Calgary and I am informed that the reply to the question, to use their own language and not my own, is "an absolute lie." They say:

Our committee have dealt with innumerable cases and this was confirmed by the foreman on our visit by the delegates.

In other words, men have been ejected for registering complaints, according to these people who have actually discussed the matter with the foreman. Moreover, when men are dismissed from camps we are told that adequate clothing is left them. On leaving the camp, I am informed, the men have to hand in all the clothing that they received on loan, except bare necessities. In the provincial camps, those operated by the provincial government, the clothing becomes the property of the man if he remains in camp for thirty days, but in the dominion camp the clothing is always lent and has to be restored as soon as the man leaves the camp or is discharged therefrom. I asked another question:

Are men who have been ejected from one camp under this department refused entrance into any other camp?

I received from the department, signed by the deputy minister, this reply:

Yes, unless the district officer commanding is satisfied that there is reasonable probability of their behaving properly in future.

I am informed that there is not a single instance, in connection with these particular camps, of a man who, having been discharged from one camp, was ever permitted to enter another under this department at any time, certainly never under the name by which he had been employed previously. This is the information that has come to me and I am passing it on to the minister in the hope that he will take the matter up. In subsection (f) of Brigadier General Spry's document of war I find this:

No application or complaint should ever be made to the civil power except through the camp foreman or with his sanction.

After all these people might as well be Armenians under the care of the Turks of old when they are so ruthlessly bereft of every civil liberty, every decency which we ought to expect among men. They cannot assemble to make their complaints vocally in the proper way, nor may they write letters to the press, and they are not allowed to make public speeches. They must submit themselves utterly to the discipline, the rigorous military discipline of the relief camp. Is it any wonder that the city of Calgary has put on record two resolutions under date March 7, following the discussion we had previously in this house on this very question? The covering letter to myself reads:

Calgary, Canada, March 7, 1935.

Mr. E. J. Garland, M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Canada.

Dear Sir:

Re: Single men's relief camps as operated by the Department of National Defence

For your information and attention I beg to enclose herewith copies of resolutions adopted by the city council from time to time, together with copies of correspondence which has taken place between responsible officials in this above connection.

The council in dealing with the communication of Brigadier D. W. B. Spry, D.O.C., military district No. 13, instructed by resolution that this matter be directed to your attention with a request that the various recommendations as set forth in resolutions of the council, copies of which are attached hereto, be carried out.

For the purpose of more clearly outlining the council's wishes in this respect, please find set out hereunder formal resolution adopted by the city council on the occasion of its regular meeting held with date of the 4th instant, namely:—

"That council's previous action, together with copy of regulations governing camps, as furnished by Brigadier Spry, in respect of complaints re single men's relief camps, be directed to the attention of the Right Hon. the Prime Minister of Canada and Dr. G. D. Stanley, M.P., with a request that our recommendations be carried out.

Further, that copies of resolutions and correspondence in this connection be forwarded to Mr. E. J. Garland, member for Bow River riding, with a request that the matter also receive his attention."

May I respectfully request, on behalf of the council, that the various matters receive your attention and consideration and that I be furnished with your reply thereto at the earliest convenience.

Yours truly,
J. M. Miller,
City Clerk.

The first resolution reads:

That this council authorize His Worship the Mayor to direct to the attention of dominion and provincial government officials the plight of single men at present in Calgary, formerly of relief camps, requesting that some provision for their maintenance be immediately undertaken and the present situation thereby rectified.

Further, that an investigation be immediately undertaken by the dominion and provincial governments concerning reported unsatisfactory conditions at the various relief camps and a report thereon furnished this council.

Evidently the conditions are still unsatisfactory, and I would sincerely ask the minister to have a further investigation made into the whole question. This is the other resolution:

That the various features brought out in the report of the reporting officers before this council, re single men's relief camps, be referred to the proper authorities in an endeavour to have better water supply afforded, better recreational features,—

Evidently the report was not satisfactory.

—permission to the men to formulate their complaint committees to present their grievances and to permit of the men coming to the city at least within reason. That a report on these matters be received by this council from the proper authorities.

I have not much more to say on this matter other than to convey to the minister this paragraph from a letter received from the United Workers' Council of Delegates of Calgary under date of February 20:

When a man is fired in the afternoon and no transport available he has to remain in camp until next morning, then he has to pay fifteen cents for breakfast.

After the munificent remuneration or honorarium of twenty cents a day has been paid.

The men are given transport to Seebe crossing and then told to fend for themselves. This means that they must walk two miles to the highway or risk their lives by boarding a freight, and they can then be picked up for breaking the law. When these men come into Calgary we always try to get them sent to a provincial camp, but they bring out records and I can assure you they have all their records except finger prints, and about the most they can find against these men is that they are not satisfied with their conditions, and we believe they have every reason to be dissatisfied when they get a miserable pay of twenty cents a day for a day's work.

Last October we had thirty men in from Coleman and the following facts were brought out in the police court here when nineteen men were given thirty days in Lethbridge for obtaining a meal without means to pay for same.

1. The men were transported to Frank and then told to board a freight to Calgary.

2. The camp foreman Captain Coates fired the men on the advice of the straw boss without questioning the men whatsoever.

3. The men were fired for complaining and organizing and the camp rules forbid organizations for the purpose of adjusting grievances.

4. Most of these boys had never been inside a police court before and the magistrate said he must punish them or many more men would leave the camps for the cities.

From a moral standpoint the camps should be abolished, but until they are able to do this they should at least pay a day's pay for a day's work and then a man could at least be able to leave the environment of the camps and come to the cities for recreation once in a while.

Thanking you for your attention and quick action on our previous letter, I remain yours fraternally,

E. Le Vesionte,
Secretary-Treasurer.

I think I have given enough to the minister to justify my asking him once more, first of all without any further investigation to grant to these men the right of organizing their complaint committees. That is not too much to ask. These men are not criminals; they are not in penitentiaries. We are treating them as though they were, and this is not right. They should be given the right of protesting when they feel justified in doing so, and they should be permitted to organize in order to present their complaints in a proper fashion. Let them have an authorized and well known complaints committee in each camp; let them elect their men by popular ballot within the camp; let the chairman of the complaints committee be in touch with the local foreman or supervisor, and let him be recognized as spokesman for the men. If the minister will do these things, he will have much less trouble and the men themselves wlil be much better satisfied.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The conditions described by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) are certainly appalling, and I sincerely hope the minister will give some satisfactory explanation and will repudiate the sentiments expressed in the letter from the commanding officer at Calgary. Those men, as my hon. friend says, are not criminals; they are working in the camps. They are on relief possibly through no fault of their own, and to say that they cannot give voice to complaints and expose their grievances is taking away from them the right which belongs to every Canadian citizen; they are not being treated like human beings. When they work in the relief camps they are not in penal institutions. I join my protest to that expressed by the hon. member for Bow River, and if the policy which is formulated by the commanding officer at Calgary is the one which prevails in all the other camps under the minister's department, I say that it is an insult to Canadian dignity and even to manhood.

Mr. STIRLING: The hon. member for Bow River started by referring to a resolution which was passed by the city council of Calgary on February 4 and which I believe was transmitted to Ottawa. On February 7, presumably by direction of the mayor or the city council of Calgary, the medical health officer for that city visited the camps referred to, and I propose to read to the committee the report which he submitted to his worship the mayor of the city of Calgary on February 8:

[Mr. E. J. Garland.]

Dear Sir,—As instructed by you, yesterday accompanied by Mr. Cowey of this department and representatives from the United Workers' Council of Delegates, I conducted a sanitary survey of the camps established by the dominion government, Department of National Defence, under project No. 155. These camps have been established, I take it, for the express purpose of clearing up undergrowth and thinning out trees in connection with activities of the forestry department. There are four camps: Seebe, Lusk Creek, Eau-Claire, and Barrier, and it is assumed that these camps will—at capacity—take care of 138 men in each camp. They are at the present time separate units, all under the supervision of Mr. Armstrong who officiates in the capacity of resident engineer. Visits were made to the four camps and I have the following to report:

The camps are situated on high, dry locations and I think the sites very well chosen, having regard to access of water and general satisfactory surroundings. They consist of huts in which the men are housed, kitchen and dining rooms, bath house, stores, blacksmith shop, garages, and administrative office. It would appear that in the Seebe camp the aim is to house twelve men in each hut. This, in so far as cubic capacity is concerned would be quite satisfactory but I might here suggest that possibly a much more satisfactory purpose would be served by limiting the capacity to ten men, having regard to the perforce location of the stove, tables and such like designed for the comfort of the men. It must be thoroughly understood that these camps were not organized until late in November, 1934, and consequently, structural matters have not yet reached completion. In the three other camps other than Seebe camp, there is up to the present time makeshift bath or wash houses. This condition, whilst resulting in some inconvenience is rapidly being remedied. The bath houses presently under construction (and which I was assured would be finished very shortly) are complete with shelves upon which are several wash basins and there are five showers. The shelves and the floor and walls of the showers are lined with galvanized iron and properly drained. Water is being laid on and from the layout I would say would be adequate. Pumps, storage tanks, heaters and necessary plumbing for the bath houses and kitchens are in process of completion and I think will result in a very nice situation. Washing machines are provided and adequate hot and cold water is to be supplied.

The kitchens and dining rooms were scrupulously clean; crockery ware is provided instead of enamel ware; dining tables are covered with white oilcloth and some of the kitchen tables are covered with galvanized iron. The quality of the cutlery is such that, in my mind, bids for a most attractive atmosphere. The party had the privilege of eating lunch at Seebe camp and indulged in the routine bill of fare. Personally I am all for it; the food was very nice, well cooked, ample and plain and sustaining withal. The kitchen equipment is practically all new; stoves, equipment and stores were perfectly clean. Kitchen waste is disposed of in gravel leaching pits; new pits are dug as required. The storage of meat is taken care of in usual camp manner by hanging from trees. Store houses and root cellars are being erected and ice is to be provided to care for perishable foodstuffs.

The stores are well stocked with clothing and the men are furnished with new clothing by submitting that which is worn out. The clothing is designed for comfort and service.

It is the intention to provide a recreation hut and canteen facilities. Construction of this is completed in Seebe camp. For a time it is thought that profits from the canteen will go to purchase a radio for each of the four camps.

The water supply is from the Kananaskis river or wells, depending on the location of the camp, and in the last or Barrier camp, from a spring emanating from Barrier mountain. It is understood that this spring has formed the bone of contention, but I cannot see where there is any ground for complaint in this respect. There is an abundance of water and it is hoped to intercept the spring at a higher level and bring the water to the camp by gravity. All water supplies are obviously of the pure type.

It was suggested that some difficulty had obtained in having adequate water supply for bathing purposes in the past. I cannot see that this complaint is justified, for each camp approximates an adequate supply of water and, in the event of anybody wanting to take a bath, it would be only a matter of a few minutes to obtain water for such a purpose.

The Barrier camp is not as near completion as the other three. It was established on 20th December, 1934, and, therefore is right in the midst of construction activities.

I was given to understand that all four camps are to be of the same type and with the same facilities and conveniences. There is an abundant supply of firewood; the men are not required to take care of their own huts, other men being detailed for this service. There are men on night duty to attend to fires and maintain heat in the huts whilst the rest of the men are sleeping.

Toilet facilities are adequate; they are of the privy pit type, of good construction and adequately supplied with toilet paper.

To conclude I feel that at the present time, and allowing for present conditions, these men live under as near ideal surroundings as could be created. I asked as to the work required of them and was assured by several of them—to quote their own words—"there is nothing to it."

Medical attention is provided by a physician from Exshaw who visits all the camps. There is also a first-aid man on duty at each camp.

Respectfully submitted,

W. H. Hill,
Medical Officer of Health.

Doctor Hill is the medical officer of the city of Calgary, and this is his opinion, as a medical man, of the condition under which these men live and work. With regard to the complaint so strongly expressed by my hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Garland), I would repeat that all the arrangements, the work in the camps, the living conditions, and what they have to do if they desire to receive this shelter, food, sustenance and allowance, is laid down and explained to the men. It was arrived at by arrangement between the dominion government and the provincial government; in this case the Alberta government signed the agreement under which these regulations are accepted. If the men do not consider that they are conditions under which they desire to live, they can leave. We had the instance referred to a few evenings ago by the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Barber) of a fit, husky young man aged twenty-five, who had boasted that he had not done any work and had no intention of starting now. In these camps are men of every description. There are men who desire to conform to the arrangements laid down and who are working happily under them. I myself have visited many of the camps. We have had representations from all types of citizens from all parts of Canada giving their opinion of the conditions under which these men live and work; they are satisfied with them. But of course in a body of men of such numbers, and under conditions such as we are passing through in this country—yes, and in the world—there is bound to be a certain number of trouble makers, and it is to endeavour to handle the trouble makers that we safeguard ourselves by the regulations laid down.

Mr. GRAY: Does the minister then approve of the letter of Brigadier General Spry?

Mr. STIRLING: When we realize that agitators are coming into the camps for the purpose of stirring up trouble, the arrangements to deal with these agitators must be such as will properly handle them. To my mind it is a perfectly reasonable condition that the occupants of these camps should have every right to make their complaints to the foreman. If the man is not satisfied with the reply he receives from the foreman, it is perfectly proper that he should go to the superintendent. There is no doubt therefore that the complaints made by the individual reach headquarters and are there considered. But the regulations laid down have been arrived at by agreement between the dominion and the provinces, and the regulations must stand.

Mr. SANDERSON: Regarding the document read by the hon. member for Bow River, apparently under the signature of Brigadier General Spry, a departmental document, one that is posted up in the camp, does the minister take the responsibility for those orders? I assume that the order comes from headquarters at Ottawa. Am I right?

Mr. STIRLING: Will my hon. friend proceed to make his remarks? Then I shall reply.

Mr. SANDERSON: My question is a simple one. I do not want to make a speech, but I ask the minister if he assumes responsibility for that document.

Mr. STIRLING: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I accept responsibility for that document.

Mr. SANDERSON: Then does the minister approve of those regulations?

Mr. STIRLING: Obviously if I accept the document I approve of it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am sorry the minister did not read the letter from the other delegate who also visited the camps. I am sure it was an oversight on his part. Let me, however, touch for a moment on his closing words. He referred to a young man, cited by the hon. member for Fraser Valley, a man twenty-five years of age, who, according to the statement, said he had never worked and never would work. A shame, of course. But does the minister overlook the fact that that boy was just past nineteen when this depression hit him and he could not get a job? After all when one has been out of a job four or five years in the formative period of life, when indelible impressions are made, is it any wonder that he has become embittered against society if it has nothing more to offer him than relief camps? I need make no excuse for him, but it is a wonder that there are not more like him. Let me say that the reason I asked the minister to permit the formation of recognized complaints committees, in touch with the foremen all the time, was to prevent the very danger he foresaw, that of agitators getting in and undermining the morale of these men who under present conditions have no proper outlet for their complaints. The minister says they may complain to the foreman. Let me give him a statement that I have from these people who have investigated the matter.

Mr. HANBURY: Who are they?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I shall tell you in a moment.

The foreman stated that he only saw one man at a time with a complaint, and that man was invariably fired. The superintendent stated he never overrode a foreman's decision. We (the United Workers' Council Delegates, of Calgary), have handled hundreds of cases of men fired or quit, and as yet have not met with one who has had a chance to appeal to military district 13. Our delegations have appealed several times to military district 13 for these men to be reinstated, but on each occasion have been met with blank refusal and we have eventually got them accepted by the provincial relief commission.

So much for that statement, I now turn to the report of the other delegate. He received permission to visit the camp at the same time, and in company with Doctor Hill. Hon. members will note that Doctor Hill, according to the minister's statement, was to report on the sanitary conditions. I have raised no complaint, nor do these men raise any complaint about the sanitary conditions in the camp. They are complaining about the Prussian character of the discipline—the un-British type of discipline.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): They want the right to complain.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The second report is as follows:

Labour Temple,
229 Eleventh Ave. East,
Calgary, Alberta,
February 8, 1935.

A. Davison, Esquire,
Mayor, City of Calgary.

Your Worship:

Following up my visit to Seebe with Doctor Hill I beg to inform you that I found the following conditions:—

Notice how fair the man is, all the way through.

The general complaint was shortage of water, the supply at Seebe camp has to be hauled from the river. A pump and pipe line is being erected, so this difficulty should shortly be overcome; then there will be hot and cold showers available. There were plenty of wash basins of a very small shallow type for ablution purposes and a large galvanized tub for bathing and laundry purposes. A new washing machine was available and I was informed that this had been in the store since the camp opened in November last but only produced for use three or four days ago. The wash basins also had been issued late last week.

Upon entering camp men are supposed to get an adequate supply of clothing, some of the men stated they had been in camp three weeks or a month and had not yet received the requisite clothing.

The food was plentiful and of good quality; the dining rooms were excellently fitted up and comfortable; the wash houses in Lemusk, Eau-Clare and Barrier camps were just marquees and new huts are being erected to replace these. The water supply at the latter camp was just a spring at the foot of the mountain. A hole has been dug and boarded for storage of water but appears totally inadequate.

The authorities appear to be doing the best they can to make the men comfortable, but considerable time is needed yet. There is a first-aid man in charge of the hospital cabin in each camp and a full first-aid kit available. The doctor visits the camp twice a week and men have free access to see him.

The principal complaints were as follows:—
The camp foreman refuses to see more than one man on any grievance or complaint. If a man complains he is invariably fired. The superintendent stated that they would allow no agitators or any organization of any kind. The foreman's word is final and the superintendent never overrides the foreman in a decision.

When fired the men have to hand in their clothing, except bare necessities. They are transported to the level crossing at Seebe and left to fend for themselves. Should transport be available they sometimes give the men a ride to Cochrane and on one occasion to Calgary. There is little or no recreation available and the men would welcome a radio, football, games of any description and particularly a supply of good books.

The pay is twenty cents per day when work has been done. Hours of labour are eight to twelve and one to four-thirty p.m. The foreman stated that a fair day's work was expected for what the men received, and no loafers would be tolerated. In my opinion the trouble has been caused through taking men out to the camps before proper facilities were available, and that the whole of the trouble could have been obliterated if the men had been allowed a proper grievance or camp committee.

Respectfully submitted on behalf of above council,

Fred Peat,
President.

The minister has not made an adequate answer at all. The only answer he has given is that he personally regrets this type of rigid, penitentiary discipline as necessary in our relief camps. I resent that attitude on the part of the minister. I repeat what I said before: these men are not criminals; they are fellow Canadians. They are men who through no fault of their own are out of work. They are ordinary flesh and blood men born in this country, for the most part, and they deserve to be treated as you would expect to be treated and as I would expect to be treated. They do not deserve to be treated in this way. I protest; that is all I can do.

Mr. ELLIOTT: When was the regulation made? As I understand it this is a departmental regulation, known as letter No. 4, sent from headquarters in Ottawa to all the relief camps in Canada. Am I correct in that? If so, when was it made and by whom?

Mr. STIRLING: I take it the hon. member is referring to the standing instructions issued for all relief camps.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Quite right.

Mr. STIRLING: Those are the instructions for the administration of unemployment relief camps. So far as the present instance is concerned, they were agreed to by Alberta and accepted as the basis of our joint operation. The dominion comes into the picture through its assistance to the province.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Surely the minister understands my point. The document states:

With regard to the method of registering complaints, the following are the regulations in this respect as laid down by the Department of National Defence for all camps in the dominion.

I am asking when that was laid down. It is not an arrangement between Alberta and the Department of National Defence; it is a set of regulations laid down by the Department of National Defence for all relief camps in the Dominion of Canada. I point out that it is not an agreement between the province and the camp; do not let us get off on that angle. Apparently it is prepared right here. By whom and when was it prepared?

Mr. STIRLING: I have not seen the document the hon. member is reading, but I presume—

Mr. SANDERSON: The minister has already assumed responsibility for it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would ask the minister to look at paragraph 4 of the document I have handed him, and he will see what I have read. These regulations have been made here, and they apply to all camps.

Mr. STIRLING: Yes. That which follows the bracketed letter (a) is one of the regulations laid down for the conduct of the unemployment relief camps.

Mr. ELLIOTT: How about the rest of it?

Mr. STIRLING: Then there follow (b), (c) and (d).

Mr. GRAY: All part of the regulations?

Mr. STIRLING: Yes, part of the regulations.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Beginning with paragraph 4, to which reference was made by the hon. member for Bow River, would the minister tell me when the regulations were put into effect, and how? By whom were they prepared and by whom were they recommended to council? Was an order in council passed, or what is the procedure by which the people in the camps are brought under that system of regulation?

Mr. STIRLING: The copy I have before me is from the Department of National Defence and is dated April, 1933.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Was there an order in council?

Mr. STIRLING: No, not that I am aware of.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Then under what power or authority was a regulation of that kind issued?

Mr. STIRLING: The power behind it, I take it, is the bill which was passed last session, respecting relief measures. It was passed by this House of Commons in 1934.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Oh, it is part of the provision for peace, order and good government; is that right?

Mr. STIRLING: No; it comes under the relief measure to which I have referred.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is just about what you would expect.

Mr. SPENCE: That is right, keep on talking.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would suggest quite the reverse for my hon. friend.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Keep silent.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Could the minister state if it was brought before the council, or is it just issued under the act?

Mr. STIRLING: I could readily find out, but at the present time I am not aware whether or not it was.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Could the minister tell us who prepared it?

Mr. STIRLING: It was prepared in the Department of National Defence; I cannot name the individual.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There was one copy sent out to each of the different camps? By whom was it sent, and by whom was it signed?

Mr. STIRLING: A copy of the regulations goes to each project.

Mr. ELLIOTT: By whom were they signed?

Mr. STIRLING: They would go out as regulations, but would not be signed; they would be regulations of the department.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Did they go out from the Department of Labour or from the Department of National Defence?

Mr. STIRLING: National Defence.

Mr. GORDON: After consultation with the Department of Labour.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Could the minister produce the letter which was sent with them to the different camps? It is called letter No. 4, so it is likely a departmental letter.

Mr. STIRLING: I am afraid I have not got any such letter as the hon. member mentions.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Who would send them out in the normal course to the district officers commanding in the various provinces?

[Mr. Stirling.]

Mr. STIRLING: The officers of the Department of National Defence.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Which specific officer?

Mr. STIRLING: Under the administration it would be the adjutant general.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Then it becomes clear, Mr. Chairman, that this is the work of the Department of National Defence entirely, that instructions have been sent out by that department. They were not included in an order in council or anything of that sort. My hon. friend suggested at the opening of his remarks that this was part of an understanding with the province, but clearly he was mistaken in that view. This is merely a direction by the Department of National Defence and it is quite important that we should know it in a definite way. If these instructions as expressed in the letter of Brigadier Spry have been submitted to the province of Alberta, there should be a record of that submission, and the minister ought to be able to show that the province has accepted such regulations or instructions. Otherwise I do not think it is fair to say that the provincial government are responsible for instructions such as are conveyed in that letter. If they are not responsible, then it is wholly the work of the National Defence department, and I would implore my hon. friend the minister not to attach his own responsibility to those instructions, but to cancel them as quickly as he can.

Mr. HEAPS: On several occasions, if my memory serves me rightly, we were informed that there was no military discipline in these relief camps. In past sessions, if I am not mistaken, that information was given to this house.

Mr. McINTOSH: Seven times seven at least.

Mr. HEAPS: Now we are informed through documentary evidence to-night that there is a most rigid form of military discipline in these relief camps under the jurisdiction of the Department of National Defence. Personally I regret exceedingly that the minister has taken the stand that he has here to-night, and I think that on due reflection probably the minister himself will regret it; for if he upholds what is contained in the document that has been read here to-night it means that he is in favour of suppressing the very liberties of a great section of the younger generation in the Dominion of Canada. I think that the type of person who through no fault of his own is compelled to go into the relief camps ought to be dealt with a little more sympathetically than is evidently the case from the evidence that has been submitted here to-night, and as many of us have known during the past few months. In many instances all the family connections of these young men have been broken up and the family separated much against their will; these young men are taken away from respectable homes, young boys of eighteen and nineteen, and compelled by economic necessity to become inmates of these camps. When a young boy goes into a relief camp the last thing he ought to be subjected to is that rigid military discipline which it has been disclosed in the communications read to-night exists in the camps.

I think it was a very unfortunate remark the minister made here to-night when he said that if these boys do not like it they can leave. In the first place it is economic necessity that has driven them into these camps, and then after the almost inhuman treatment they received at some of the camps they are told, if they do not like it, to get out. These boys, mostly young men, go into these camps not because they want to, but because there is no alternative for them. The government provide these camps for the young men, and mind you this is the younger generation of Canadians whom we expect to take our place in the future and help build up a country that is worth while. We have been told, of course, that in some respects they are well treated. I am not going to deny everything that the minister has said in so far as that communication is concerned, but the complaint is not about the sanitary conditions of these camps. The complaint is chiefly against the suppression of those liberties which had the minister himself been in opposition I think he would have been the first to champion if this complaint had been brought to his attention.

Mr. GORDON: What liberties does the hon. member suggest have been withdrawn?

Mr. HEAPS: I will read section (f) again:

No application nor complaint should ever be made to the civil power, except through the camp foreman or with his sanction.

In other words, an inmate of one of these camps is deprived of communicating with a newspaper; he is deprived of the right of complaining to the municipal authority, deprived of the right of going into the city and speaking of conditions as he has found them; he is deprived of the right of communicating even with a member of parliament.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Or even with his mother.

Mr. HEAPS: Possibly that is so as well. What I am complaining about is this. We are putting in these camps the younger generation of Canadians and we might reasonably hope that they would receive their good training in Canadian citizenship, but when they get to the camps they find an iron clad rigid military discipline which hardly allows them to call their souls their own, and they have to submit to this for twenty cents a day and their keep. Leaving aside for the moment the amount of money they receive for the services they render, what we are stressing at the moment is the rights and liberties of the individual of which these young men are now being deprived. I would urge upon the minister that in these matters of unemployment and unemployment relief the military authorities should not be allowed to be supreme over the civil authorities or in any way to deprive these young men of their liberties. If I were in the position of the minister and for the first time a document such as the hon. member for Bow River has read to the house to-night was brought to my attention, I would at once repudiate the document entirely, and not only would I repudiate it, but I would fire clean out of the service the men who are responsible for such a thing. The individual possesses certain rights, and when those who are responsible to the civil authorities send out such a document they must know that it is going to create a feeling of hostility. Apparently they feel that in some way they are superior even to this parliament. No document of that type could stand the scrutiny of any body of honest citizens. For the sake of parliament, for the sake of the minister and for the sake of the young men who are compelled to go to these camps, I think something should be done right now in this house to repudiate entirely the document. The men in these camps should be given a fair chance in life.

Mr. SUTHERLAND I think I should say a few words on this question, as this system of camps was inaugurated while I was head of the Department of National Defence. The minister has sketched the beginning of the movement and indicated why these camps were started. Back in 1931 and 1932 there were a large number of younger citizens who were moving around from one place to another and in many instances were getting into cities which were not their homes. There was considerable difficulty in looking after these young men and in time it became an acute problem. During the summer they were moving around on the trains and there were many accidents. I am told that practically all the hospitals in northern Ontario had some of these young men as patients. This scheme was evolved to give them some place to go. The camps were not started with the primary idea of giving employment for wages; they were started as a temporary measure to provide comfortable surroundings, clothing and food. The allowance of twenty cents per day which was given was in no sense a wage; it was only a little extra pocket money to buy some of the things which were not issued.

As I say, this scheme was started in 1932 and it went very well for a couple of years and in most of the camps everything is going very well to-day. The former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), who spoke on this matter, is familiar, I think, with the situation in his own city and in the camp at Valcartier. To my knowledge there have never been any complaints of this type in connection with that camp. Everything goes along smoothly, and while I was in the department I received many expressions of appreciation from the people down there as to the way in which the department was looking after this great problem. The young men at Valcartier come from a large area in Quebec. There is a large camp at Halifax, at the citadel. This camp has been in operation for about three years and nothing of this kind has occurred. There is a large camp at Petawawa, Ontario, at which there are young men mostly from Montreal. There are two camps at Kingston and other camps in northern Ontario. No complaints of the kind referred to to-night have been heard from the Ontario camps. The hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) referred to inhuman treatment, but I do not think that term can be applied to these camps. I do not think there has been anything even approaching inhumanity.

These camps are different from the ordinary labour camps. The men in the ordinary labour camp are hired for some certain purpose and the aim and object of the employer is to get work out of his men. The employees quite rightly and properly ask the right to organize in order that they may present their side of any difference which may arise. In these camps everybody is working with the same end in view. The Department of National Defence has started these camps with the sole object of helping these men. There are not two sides of opinion in the camps. Naturally the men want the best they can get, and when parliament passed the money to provide for such camps, that was the sole object in view. While I was in the department we had trouble at only one camp, the one located at Long Branch near Toronto. This trouble was caused by agitators getting into the camp and trying to create an organization where one was not necessary. There was some difficulty for a short time, but I maintain that there has been nothing out of the way in any camp, and especially nothing of the nature referred to to-night.

A committee inspected these particular camps and they admit that the food and surroundings are good. Some complaint was made about the water at one camp, but as I understand it the camp was in process of construction. I think it was said that measures were being taken to deal with the matter. The clothing furnished was the same type of clothing as we all wear, substantial and warm. The food bought for the camps is just as good as we get in the parliamentary restaurant, although it may not be served up with as many frills. The fact that good substantial food is furnished has been borne out by the statements made to-night. I do not think the department can be criticized, because it is only in this particular case that I have heard of any complaint of this kind. I have heard one of the hon. members for Vancouver bring up matters in connection with the camps in British Columbia, but I think it must be admitted that when you have a number of young men in a camp they are bound to be full of life and vim and will have opinions of their own. This will happen no matter how the camps are run. If the men are warm, if the clothing provided is good and the food substantial, I do not think there can be anything to complain of. The camps are not permanent; it is not as though the men were going to be there for some time and had to build up some system of rights. Instead of having this odium cast upon the department and its officials, I think they are entitled to a great deal of praise for the manner in which they have handled the matter. No one knows better than I do the difficulty and anxiety in connection with this work. I presume that there are over 20,000 men in the camps in the winter and some 12,000 in the summer.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not think that this committee is concerned about the food or clothing or water; that is not the complaint. Of course, when camps are being laid out there is always a little difficulty at the start so far as the water supply is concerned, but that is not the difficulty here. Perhaps my hon. friend would answer this question. Does he know who made these regulations, who issued them, when they were issued and whether or not all the relief camps in Canada are subject to them? If I remember rightly, the document which my hon. friend was good enough to let me look at says:

"The following are regulations as laid down by the Department of National Defence for all camps in the dominion." The question that interests me, and I believe it interests a great many members of the committee, is this: When were these regulations made, by whom and on what authority, and did the minister know about them?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: My hon. friend has been in charge of a department and he knows that if something is done in the department the minister takes responsibility for it; that is his job and he does not fall back upon someone under him and blame that subordinate. While I was in the department I took responsibility for everything that went on there; that was part of my job, and if it was wrong I took responsibility for it. I did not look for someone to put the blame on, and I am sure that my hon. friend knows very well that there have to be regulations in connection with a vast scheme of this kind, where young men are constantly coming into and going out of camps. You must have regulations.

Mr. ELLIOTT: How long have these regulations been in force?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: They were in force before a single man was ever in the camps. There had to be preliminary regulations, though I have no doubt at all that from time to time they have been amended and added to as necessity arose.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I want to get it clearly because I want to be absolutely fair to the minister and the ex-minister. Do I take it that these regulations were issued before the camps were laid out, before any difficulties arose, and were sent out to the various camps by the department as being what they considered proper regulations approved by the minister in charge?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Undoubtedly the regulations would be sent out before the camps were started at all. I am not prepared to say that these precise regulations were sent out from the first, because they would have to be amended from time to time. I am absolutely of the opinion, in spite of what some hon. gentlemen have said, that there is nothing wrong with regulations of that kind. You could not start a camp of that kind and allow an agitator to go in among these young men whose minds are not fully developed and who can be the prey to some agitator in regard to anything—the water, for instance. Some man might have been dismissed for perfectly good reasons and he would be made a martyr of, and these young men would be gathered together and addressed by some agitator and so trouble would start. To guard against such a possibility some regulations must be put into force. These regulations are merely intended to be helpful; they are not meant to be absolutely lived up to as would a military order in time of war; there is nothing of that kind. But there is in connection with these camps necessity for planning ahead as far as that is possible.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Time is passing and I should like to get into my head exactly what happened with regard to these regulations. The minister makes it clear now that he approves of them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I say I accept responsibility for them.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The minister said he approved of them; he saw nothing wrong about them. I want to know whether he approved of them before they were sent out.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I do not recall that all were brought to me. Some of them I remember were brought to me and I might mention one in particular. The former Minister of Labour, Mr. Heenan, brought up the question regarding the making of speeches in the camps, and he cited a regulation which forbade people going into camps to make speeches. I looked into the matter and found that there was such a regulation and I changed it, and on the floor of the house I informed him that it had been changed. I had heard of that regulation and thought that it would probably be better to have it changed.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Would anyone else than the minister in charge of that department have authority to send out to all relief camps in Canada such regulations? Would anyone else have authority to send out such regulations without consulting the minister and having his approval?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Whatever was done the minister is responsible for; the hon. gentleman knows very well that it is so. You cannot trace back to find out what an office boy in the department might have done; it is the minister you have to deal with.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): This was not an office boy.

Mr. MacINNIS: Is Brigadier General Spry an office boy?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I am citing an instance; I am not dealing with that particular case. The ex-Minister of Public Works (Mr. Elliott) wants to trace back somewhere in the department to the man who wrote a particular letter, and I hold that that is not necessary at all, because there are responsible ministers in charge of departments, and it is their business to be responsible for everything that goes on in the department. I accept responsibility for anything done while I was there.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think it is only fair to the committee to make it clear that Brigadier General Spry is not responsible for the regulations. As I understand it, he is the officer commanding the district, and he merely states, "I am sending you regulations that have been forwarded to me." There is no responsibility resting on him, so far as I can see. I do not at all agree with the ex-Minister of National Defence, that he is responsible for what someone under him did without his authority and if he did not know about it. If someone without his authority sent out something that he knew nothing about and did not approve, that is a different matter altogether, and he knows that perfectly well. But he now approves of it, and I take it that he approved of it before it went out. But I want him to be frank with the committee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I cannot understand exactly what the hon. member does want. In this particular case he evidently wants to find somebody that wrote a letter and to blame him. In most cases—and I have very often heard of this being done—he would only be looking for an opporunity to blame the minister for what happened in his department. That is the general rule. A minister, if something goes wrong in his department, is undoubtedly to blame. I want to go further than this and to say that I cannot see anything particularly out of the way in having among the regulations one of that kind, because it is impossible to run such a camp if you have some organization meeting there and saying: We will go up and complain about something to-day and about something else to-morrow and so on. That would be an impossible situation and make the whole camp and system a prey to agitators. I appeal to the good sense of the committee that the only proper method on which to run such a camp is to impose regulations of that kind. The proof of what I say is that all through eastern Canada and west as far as Calgary the same system has been in force without any trouble arising. It is not only the Department of National Defence that has had these camps run in the same general way, but the Department of the Interior has had similar camps. I must be frank; I do not want to say that the same regulations are in force there because I do not know, but the same rate of wages and the same general system of supplies have been in force. I cannot see that there is anything out of the way in what has been the subject of discussion to-night.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I want to say just a word in answer to the minister. While I have and I believe the house generally has the greatest respect for both the ex-Minister of National Defence and the present minister, I was surprised to hear first of all the present minister defending these regulations and I am surprised to hear the ex-minister continuing to defend them. After hearing them read, and I heard them to-night for the first time, while I believe we must have discipline in our relief camps as well as in other places—

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The hon. gentleman does not know the situation or the background involved; I do not think he has a very clear idea of the situation.

Mr. ELLIOTT: One does not need to know the situation to realize that regulations such as have been read here to-night and are contained in that document are surely not proper, decent regulations to send out to govern the conduct of men in these relief camps. That is my very strong impression, and I believe it is the impression of every member of this committee. My knowledge of relief camps is not very extensive, but I know something about them, and while I understand there must be discipline, I believe the men should have a right to submit a grievance, if they have one, to some authority and not be gagged.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: They are not gagged; they have a right to submit their complaints.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I should like to know, if I may, just when these regulations were issued. I should like to see the first order that was sent out instructing that regulations of this kind should be sent out to all the camps. I suggest to the present minister, the ex-minister and all other ministers that these regulations should be revised to the extent of cutting out completely the clauses that sound to me so very objectionable, starting at number four in the document that we heard read to-night.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): If the lawyers have finished examining the minister and the ex-minister, I am just wondering whether it will be in order for a merely practical man to make some suggestions. I have had a good deal to do with camps both military and otherwise, such as mining, lumbering and all kinds of camps, and I have visited several of those so-called relief camps. We hear a great deal about this twenty cents a day, and I do not think some hon. gentlemen are treating this matter as fairly as they might. I understand that it costs about $34 a month to take care of each man in the camps, and I think the sum involved should be referred to as $34 a month and not twenty cents a day. The department should keep that fact before those men, and if they were to do so there would be less misunderstanding and less trouble.

I can quite understand that regulations are necessary. I have lived under the king's regulations and orders, and having served in both the Canadian and the British army, I have suffered through those regulations as have many more. But it just occurs to me in regard to this matter of complaints, that nobody can deny a man the right to make a complaint if he finds that something is wrong. After all we are Canadians. I would suggest to the minister that I do not think it is up to the men to run around looking for a foreman to whom to make complaints. When I was in the army my turn sometimes came to be orderly officer and I had to go through the dining room and other rooms where the men were and ask them if they had any complaints. If they had found sand in the sugar or stones in the beans or a piece of hoof in Flavelle's corned beef, of course they would tell me. I think if a little diplomacy were exercised and the foreman would walk through the camp at meal hours and say: "Well, boys, any complaints?" and show he is human and working with them, a great deal of this trouble would be avoided. I have a relief camp in my constituency; it is not under the Department of National Defence; it is a federal-provincial camp. I know the foremen there and they never have any trouble with their men because they are human and the impression they create with the men is that of working with, not against them. A little humanity, a little common horse sense, is all that is needed.

We are told that these are not military camps, but all I can say is that from the regulations read it would appear that they are. If they are to be run as military camps, they should be made so in every sense of the word. But I would suggest that the fact be kept before these men and the country generally that they are working for $34 a month and not for twenty cents a day. The government I understand are bringing in a minimum wage bill, and I hope when they do introduce it they will apply it first to their own camps, because I am not very proud of this wage of even $34 a month. We should pay the men a fair wage and demand a fair day's work.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Then they would be out of work.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): No, these men are human and if they are paid a fair wage they will probably do a fair day's work. I hope the time is not very far distant when this happy condition can be brought about and a few of the suggestions I have made in all sincerity will be passed on to the men in charge of the camps.

Mr. GERSHAW: Before the discussion started on this phase of the problem, I desired to ask the minister a question on a different aspect of the matter. The discussion has rather thrown a new light on it. From the larger cities one can understand how it is quite easy for these single unemployed homeless men to get into the camps, but it is a problem in the smaller cities and towns. A large number of young men drift around from place to place looking for work; either they cannot find it or the work does not last long and they are again on the streets. They go from door to door begging for meals and help and thus become a burden to the citizens and to the municipalities; for of course they must be fed. Then in connection with the trains, especially on the main lines, these boys are going back and forth all the time at great danger to themselves and great annoyance to the train crews. The whole situation is very unfortunate. My question is: when the cold weather comes and they cannot travel, how can men who find themselves stranded in the smaller cities or towns get into these unemployment camps?

Mr. STIRLING: By presenting themselves at the camp.

Mr. GERSHAW: But they are long distances from the camps. They are a burden on the municipality where they happen to be and it is imposible for them to get to a camp.

Mr. STIRLING: My hon. friend surely realizes that this is a duty which is incumbent on the provinces. First of all the province receives the information, presumably through the municipality concerned. When the province cannot handle the matter it comes to the dominion government and asks its assistance. Then by agreement under certain methods laid down the dominion government comes in and helps. But it does not remove from the provinces the responsibility of caring for these people.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. MacINNIS: The unemployed need something more than grunts from the opposite side of the house; a little help would be in order. The minister has stressed, and it has often been stressed here, that these men can take their complaints to the foremen. I find in these regulations the following:

(b) If any man has a complaint or accusation to bring against a member of the supervisory or administrative staff, such complaint should be laid before the camp foreman, who, if necessary, will transmit it to district headquarters or camp superintendent.

As a matter of fact the attitude towards these men is exhibited in these regulations. They have no rights in the matter. They are in the camp because there seems to be no other place to put them. Along with the hon. members for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) and Vancouver North (Mr. Munn) I had an opportunity before coming here of meeting some of these men. They made complaints to us that have been substantiated by the statement of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) to-night. Not only did the men make the statement on that occasion, but I had occasion myself to intercede with the authorities in Vancouver to reinstate some of them. The moment a man makes a complaint to the foreman the foreman fires him. He is out on the road before the day is finished.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I do not think the hon. member can back up that statement.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): My answer to the minister is that I had already read out of the records to-night before he came in—

Mr. SUTHERLAND: That is one case, an allegation by someone in Calgary.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It was from someone who investigated the complaints, involving some thirty men.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: But the hon. gentleman states that it is the usual thing that if anyone complains out he goes, which is not so.

Mr. MacINNIS: That was the statement made before us. The man was anxious to have his statement investigated as to whether or not it was true, and no investigation has yet been held.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Hear, hear. He asked for one.

Mr. MacINNIS: Further on the instructions say:

Camp foremen are advised to invariably have another member of the supervisory staff present as a witness to all proceedings.

Yet while the foreman is advised invariably to have another person present, the man making the complaint is not allowed to have anyone present who may substantiate his statement.

Mr. STIRLING: Can my hon. friend substantiate that statement?

Mr. MacINNIS: It is here in the regulations. Let me read the regulations signed by D. W. B. Spry, D.O.C. military district 13:

(e) It is the duty of the camp foreman to investigate all complaints and, when receiving complaints for transmission to superior authority, to point out to the parties concerned any irregularity in the means they employ in seeking redress. In hearing complaints or statements, et cetera, camp foremen are advised to invariably have another member of the supervisory staff present as a witness to all proceedings.

Mr. STIRLING: If I may interrupt, I understood the hon. member to say that the man making the complaint might not have anyone with him. That is the statement I asked him to substantiate.

Mr. MacINNIS: I shall do that. Regulations (a) and (b) read:

(a) One of the fundamental and most necessary rules for the administration of unemployment relief camps is to forbid anything bearing the appearance of combination to obtain redress of alleged grievances. Appeals for redress by means of any document bearing the signature of more than one complainant, or by organized committees combining to make a complaint, are strictly forbidden.

(b) If any man has a complaint or accusation to bring against a member of the supervisory or administrative staff, such complaint should be laid before the camp foreman, who, if necessary, will transmit it to district headquarters or camp superintendent.

Mr. STIRLING: But it does not say that no friend may be with him.

Mr. MacINNIS: But if there is more than one it is a combination.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacINNIS: That is what it says, and it means it. Further on it says:

(c) If the camp foreman neglects or refuses to attend to a complaint, the complainant may bring the matter to the notice of the district headquarters or camp superintendent.

How is the man to know—

Mr. GOTT: Mr. Chairman, I call to your attention the fact that it is now eleven o'clock.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Monday, March 25, 1935

The house met at three o'clock.

PERFORMING RIGHT SOCIETY

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER TO INQUIRE INTO LICENSING

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I wish to lay on the table copy of an order in council dated March 22, 1935, P.C. 738. This order appoints His Honour Judge James Parker, senior judge of the county court of York, in the province of Ontario, as commissioner under part 1 of the Inquiries Act, pursuant to the provisions of section 10 of the Copyright Amendment Act, to investigate and report:

(a) Whether the Canadian Performing Right Society Limited or any other society, association or company unduly withholds the issue or grant of licences for or in respect of the performance of dramatico-musical or musical works in Canada;

(b) Whether the Canadian Performing Right Society Limited or any other society, association or company proposes to collect excessive fees, charges or royalties in compensation for the issue or grant of such licences;

(c) Whether the Canadian Performing Right Society Limited or any other society, association or company otherwise conducts its operations in Canada in a manner which is deemed detrimental to the interests of the public.

The commissioner is also specially authorized and required to investigate and report on the fees, charges or royalties which the Canadian Performing Right Society Limited, or any such other society, association or company, should be entitled to collect from licensees in compensation for the issue or grant of such licences, and the bases on which such fees, charges or royalties should properly be computed.

This order in council has been passed in compliance with the request of a large number of members on both sides of the house who have insisted that there should be an inquiry into the operations of the Canadian Performing Right Society and its associates.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

BANK OF CANADA

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver):

1. What amount of gold was taken over by the Bank of Canada from each chartered bank separately?

2. What was the value of the gold taken from each bank separately?

3. What was the amount of bank gold left with each chartered bank separately?

4. What was the value of such gold left with each chartered bank separately?

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, this question cannot accurately be answered in its present form because in putting it my hon. friend apparently has assumed that it was competent for the banks to retain a portion of their gold, whereas if he will look at section 28 of the Bank of Canada Act he will find that the banks have to transfer the whole of their gold.

There is the further question as to that portion which should be allocated as against their foreign liabilities, and that question cannot properly be answered until the governor in council has taken action with respect to the valuation and allocation of profits.

If it meets with my hon. friend's approval I would suggest that he drop the question and put it in a revised form.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I am quite willing, Mr. Speaker, to do what the Minister of Finance suggests. I had intended on the orders of the day, as a matter of privilege to refer to the replies that I received the other day with respect to the Bank of Canada. The minister may recall that on March 14 I asked what was the total amount of gold transferred from all the chartered banks, and this question to-day refers to the amount of gold taken from each of the chartered banks separately.

With respect to the former question I was only referring to section 28 of the statute. I am very well aware of the provisions of section 28 and I was simply wanting the assurance that the provisions of that section had been complied with. My question of March 14 has not yet been answered. The government has not yet informed me what was the total amount of gold that was taken over from the chartered banks, in compliance with the provisions of section 28 of the statute and transferred to the Bank of Canada when it commenced its operations. I shall be very glad to comply with the suggestion of the minister but may I repeat that I am very well acquainted with the provisions of section 28.

Mr. SPEAKER: Question dropped.

CLOVER SEED IMPORTATIONS

Mr. GOULET:

1. What was the quantity, in pounds, of (a) Red clover; (b) of Alsike clover seed imported into Canada from September 1, 1934, to March 1, 1935?

2. From what countries were said seed imported and what was the quantity from each country?

3. What duty was paid on said importations?

4. What were the names and addresses of the importers?

5. What were the different qualities of seed imported, and amount of each?

Mr. CAHAN: 1, 2 and 3. Imports by countries of Red clover seed and Alsike clover seed entered for consumption in Canada with import duties collected, September 1st, 1934, to February 28th, 1935:

(a) Red clover seed	Pounds
United Kingdom	423,064
United States	15,000
New Zealand	22,400
Total	460,464
Import duty collected	$450 00
(b) Alsike clover seed	Pounds
United States	439,146
Import duty collected	$13,174 38

4. It is contrary to the established practice of the Department of National Revenue to give information which would disclose the business of an individual or corporation.

5. The Department of National Revenue has no record of different qualities of seed imported.

HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR CANADA

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Referring to the answer of the right hon. acting Prime Minister to a question about the powers of the High Commissioner for Canada in London (Hansard, March 6, 1935, page 1582), what administrative steps were taken in 1931 to insure more effective execution of order in council P.C. 330?

2. At whose request and why were they taken?

3. Was the matter decided by order in council?

4. If so, on what date and what is the number of said order in council?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY:

1. Instructions were given by the ministers of the departments concerned to their officers in London to bring them more effectively under the supervision of the high commissioner.

2. These measures were taken, following discussion with the high commissioner, in order to increase the effectiveness of the administration of Canadian affairs in the United Kingdom.

3. No.

4. Answered by No. 3.

STEVEDORING AT CHURCHILL

Mr. DONNELLY:

1. Who has the contract for stevedoring grain at port Churchill?

2. If a company where and when was it organized, and who compose it?

3. What charge is levied for stevedoring grain at port Churchill, and how many men are employed in connection with this work?

Mr. MANION:

1. The department has had nothing to do with stevedoring contracts at Churchill. It is a private contract between boat owners and Louis Wolfe & Son, Limited, of Montreal, Vancouver, and Saint John, N.B.

2. No information.

3. The department is advised that charge is $4.00 per 1,000 bushels, and 9 cents per sack for trimming; the whole less 10 per cent. The number of men varies with the number of boats to be loaded, and fluctuated, in 1934, from 20 to 100.

NEW RICHMOND, QUE., WHARF

Mr. MARCIL:

How much has been expended by the Department of Public Works on the departmental wharf at New Richmond, Quebec, including the original cost of construction up to date?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): $36,279.22, expended from 1904 to 1930. No expenditure has been made since 1930, as this wharf, due to the shallowness of water at its outer end, does not provide accommodation for the present class of shipping requiring wharf accommodation in this district, and the estimated cost of the dredging to make this wharf available to coastal steamers is $170,000.

TAX FREE BONDS

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver):

1. What is the total amount of tax free bonds now outstanding in the dominion?
2. At what dates do these issues respectively mature?

Mr. RHODES: 1 and 2.

Due August 1, 1935. .. .. ..$	874,000
Due March 1, 1937..	89,787,100
Due December 1, 1937.	236,299,800
	$326,960,900

FRENCH TRANSLATION OF SENATE DEBATES

Mr. RAYMOND:

1. Who was in charge of French translation of the Senate debates for each session during the last four years?
2. What was the cost of French translation of the Senate debates for each session during the last four years?
3. To what person or persons was that amount paid, for each of the aforesaid sessions, and under whose recommendation or certificate was each individual payment made?

Mr. CAHAN: The Department of the Secretary of State applied to the clerk of the Senate for the information required by this question and received in reply a communication stating that a question relating to the internal affairs of the Senate could be answered only on receipt of a message from this house. I suggest therefore that the hon. member drop the question.

Question dropped.

SUPREME COURT OF CANADA VACANCIES

Mr. MULOCK:

1. Is it correct that due to a vacancy and the absence through illness of several judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, a number of Ontario appeals entered for hearing at the regular February session of the Supreme Court of Canada will not be heard until the later session of the court?
2. If so, what date will the said session commence?
3. If so, having in mind the inconvenience and expense which such delay will involve for litigants, will the government fill the existing vacancy in the Supreme Court of Canada and arrange with the Chief Justice of Canada for the appointment of the necessary judge or judges ad hoc to permit of the hearings during the present session of the court of the appeal cases remaining on the current list?

Mr. GUTHRIE:

1. Owing to the indisposition of two judges of the court, nine appeals which were inscribed on the Ontario list for hearing at the session of the court which began on February 5 last, were adjourned to the April session, to be placed at the head of the Ontario list for that session.
2. April 23, 1935.
3. Answered by No. 1. It is anticipated that the cases remaining on the current list will be disposed of before the April session.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—PURCHASE OF RAILWAY TIES

Mr. FAFARD:

1. Did Mr. Elzéar Côté, sell either directly or through the firm of Anselme Côté and Sons, any railway ties to the Canadian National Railways?
2. If so, what kind, at what price, what quantities, and what was the total amount of the sales during the years 1930, 1931, 1932, 1933, 1934, and 1935?

Mr. MANION: I must inform the hon. gentleman who asks this question that similar questions have been received in the past but the railway company has always refused to give the answer. If the hon. gentleman will suggest to an hon. member who is a member of the railway committee to ask for this information I shall endeavour to have it at that time.

Question dropped.

FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT—OFFICIAL RECEIVERS

Mr. ROBERGE:

1. Has Mr. J. Albert Bouchard, of Ste-Claire, Dorchester county, been appointed official receiver for the province of Quebec in connection with the administration of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act?
2. If so, what salary does he receive?
3. What is the nature of his duties?
4. What is his age?
5. What was his business experience??
6. What was his legal experience?

Mr. RHODES:

1. Yes.
2. $150 per month.
3. To act as official receiver as provided in the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, with duties as set out therein and set out in the rules and regulations passed pursuant thereto.
4. The government has no information.

5 and 6. His occupation is that of a merchant.

1. Has Mr. Alzire Tardif been appointed official receiver in connection with the administration of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act?

2. If so, what is the extent of his jurisdiction and the nature of his duties?
3. What salary does he receive?
4. What is his age?
5. What was his business experience?
6. What was his legal experience?

Mr. RHODES:

1. Yes.

2. Appointed for the judicial district of Beauce. To act as official receiver as provided in the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, with duties as set out therein and set out in the rules and regulations passed pursuant thereto.

3. $150 per month.

4. The government has no information.

5 and 6. His occupation is that of notary public.

COLONIZATION CONGRESS

Mr. BARIBEAU:

1. Did the hon. Minister of Colonization for the province of Quebec, Mr. Irénée Vautrin, invite the federal government to send representatives to the colonization congress?
2. If so, who were the representatives of the federal government?

Mr. GORDON:

1. Yes.
2. Mr. W. M. Jones.

PURCHASE OF LETTER BOXES

Mr. LAFLECHE:

1. How many letter boxes were purchased from Arthur Lesieur, in what year, and at what price?
2. If such boxes were recommended, was such recommendation contained in a verbal or written report, and what was the nature and conclusion of such report?
3. Were such boxes inspected by a competent official upon each delivery of same?
4. How many boxes of a similar type were purchased: (a) since 1931; (b) from 1925 to 1930, and at what price?
5. At what price are such boxes sold to individuals and since when have such sales been effected?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. There were no letter boxes purchased from Arthur Lesieur but rural mail boxes were purchased from Amédée Lesieur, as follows:

December 23, 1931—10,000 rural mail boxes as per standard sample submitted and accepted at a price of $2.75 each, plus 6 per cent sales tax.

2. Recommended by mechanical engineer, post office department, by a written report as follows:

"Re—Rural mail box—circular model with full opening—swivel type—illustrated by accompanying photograhs I am instructed by the deputy postmaster general to report to you on the above subject.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

Dimensions, 23 inches by 10½ inches, Metal gauge, body 24—door 22.

Design of door admits of the use of full clearance of box and is unique in this respect.

Door is of the gravity type—no springs.

Mounting is rugged in design and economical in material and is extended completely around the box adding considerably to its strength.

The cost of the present box in use is $2.80 each in large quantities with freight allowances to destination and I understand the price of the box in question is under this amount. Altogether the proposed box is superior in both appearance and utility and by reason of its design is much more convenient to operate and maintain."

3. Boxes were examined by mechanical engineer, Montreal post office, and each box was stamped on inside of cover "Passed Official inspection 1932."

4. (a) Nil
(b) 40,000—June 8, 1927
10,228—January 26, 1928

$2.80 each, plus sales tax not to exceed 10 cents per box, f.o.b., Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto, London, Moncton.

5. $4 each, which has been the standard price for many years.

Since June, 1932, sales have been made to patrons in the following postal districts, and no complaints received as to quality:

Montreal, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

SQUARE TIMBER SUPPLIED TO RIMOUSKI DISTRICT

Mr. FAFARD:

1. What quantities of square timber were supplied to the Department of Public Works, Rimouski district, by Mr. Elzéar Côté himself or on behalf of his firm, Anselme Côté and Sons, during the years 1930, 1931, 1932, 1933, 1934, and 1935?

2. At what price per foot was the timber purchased, what was the total amount purchased during each of the said years?

3. What quantities of lumber were purchased from the same firm, at what price per thousand feet, and what was the total amount purchased during each of the above years?

4. What merchandise and other goods, including hardware, gasoline, oil, etc., were purchased from Elzéar Côté himself or from his firm, Anselme Côté and Sons, by the Department of Public Works, Rimouski district, at what price, and what was the total amount paid in this connection during the last five years?

FARMER'S CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT.—OFFICIAL RECEIVERS

Mr. ROBERGE:

1. What are the names, professions, addresses and jurisdiction of official receivers appointed in connection with the administration of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, in the province of Quebec?
2. What was each such appointee's business experience?
3. What was each such appointee's legal experience?

Mr. RHODES: Return tabled herewith.

PROMOTION OF CIVIL SERVANTS

Mr. DORION:

1. What civil servants, permanently or temporarily employed, in the various departments, were promoted, by way of reclassification or otherwise, since the passing of the order in council of June 14, 1932 (No. 44-1367)?
2. What salary increases did such promoted persons receive?
3. On what date was each such person promoted?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

BANK OF CANADA —OFFICERS, EMPLOYERS, AND BRANCHES

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre):

For a return showing,—
1. The centres where branches of the Bank of Canada have been opened.
2. The names of all employees of such bank in such centres with total salaries in each case.
3. The names of all officers and employees of such bank at headquarters in Ottawa, with total salaries in each case.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Speaker, there is no objection to this motion passing with the reservation that the government can furnish only the information which happens to be in its possession. We can submit a list of those who were transferred from the currency branch and from the office of the assistant receiver general, together with their salaries, but we have no information as to other employees of the bank or the salaries they are paid.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver) Mr. Speaker, on a question of personal privilege, I submit again that the privilege of every hon. member is involved in the reply just made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes). I had intended to refer to a statement made last year by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) when the house was debating the Bank of Canada bill. My colleague, the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) moved at that time in the banking and commerce committee that the deputy minister of finance be made a member of the executive committee of the bank and he was told that this was sufficient to assure this house that at all times it would receive full information with regard to the activities of the Bank of Canada. If the policy of the minister is to be taken from his answer, I may be constrained to raise this question at some future date.

Mr. RHODES: The relations of the government to the bank is one question but it is an entirely different thing to say that it is competent for hon. members to ask for detailed information with respect to the internal workings of the bank. I do not think hon. members should be permitted to ask how many are employed, their names, the colour of their hair, their ages and so on.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Their political complexion.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend may have that point of view but I think he will find that the reply I have made is in keeping with the ruling that the government is competent to give only that information which it has in its possession.

Motion as amended agreed to.

CUSTOMS TARIFF CHANGES

Mr. STITT (Nelson):

For a return showing all increases in the customs tariff passed by the parliament of Canada in the years 1929-1930; return to show former rates as well as increases and dates when changes were made.

JAPANESE IMMIGRATION

Mr. NEILL:

For a return showing the number of immigrants of Japanese nationality admitted into Canada during each of the fiscal years between March 31, 1930, and March 31, 1934, and showing in each of the above years how many were: (a) adult males; (b) adult females; and (c) children; also the number of people admitted into Canada during each of the above years of Japanese birth, but of British nationality, showing: (a) adult males; (b) adult females; and (c) children; and giving their names and the date and place where each were naturalized as British subjects.

He said: Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the house and the consent of the minister perhaps I may be permitted to insert the words "and occupation" after the word "names" in the last line.

Motion as amended agreed to.

ST-PASCAL, QUE., RURAL MAIL CARRIER

Mr. BOUCHARD:

For a copy of all papers, correspondence, letters, telegrams, reports of inspections and inquiries, and other documents in the possession of the Post Office Department, regarding the dismissal of Hector Hudon as rural mail carrier at St-Pascal (Kamouraska) and the appointment of his successor.

SQUAMISH INDIAN ACCOUNT NO. 54

Mr. MUNN:

For a return showing,—

1. The receipts and expenditures of the Squamish Indian Account No. 54, from the 1st of January, 1933, to the end of December, 1934.

2. Particulars, with names of the individuals who have received relief or other benefits, to whom such benefits were paid, and what amounts were paid to each.

3. Full details in regard to receipts received, from whom and for what.

WATERLOO, QUE., POST OFFICE BUILDING

Mr. TETREAULT:

For a copy of the report of the royal commissioner on the royal commission investigation held in the town of Waterloo, the 20, 21, 22, 26, 27, 28 and 29 December, 1934, by order of the governor in council, under the terms of the Inquiries Act, respecting the construction of a post office building.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I beg to inform the house that this document was tabled on the 20th instant and that the hon. member has consented to the motion being dropped.

Motion dropped.

PUBLIC WORKS CONSTRUCTION ACT

Mr. POWER:

For a return showing,—

1. The services carried out by the Department of Marine up to date under the authority of the Public Works Construction Act.

2. A list of all works which the said department is authorized to undertake under the same act.

ILLNESS OF PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister): The house will be interested to know that yesterday I had quite a long talk with the Prime Minister and his condition is daily improving. My own impression is that when the period of rest which has been prescribed for him has expired, which will be in the course of another ten days or so, he will be all right again. The doctor has given me a further report, dated to-day, which is couched in careful language, as it is quite proper that a medical man's statement should be:

The Prime Minister's condition shows further improvement and his progress during the past week has been satisfactory and uneventful. While some further rest in bed is necessary, his recovery is as rapid as can be expected.

R. S. Stevens.

PRIVILEGE—Mr. MACKENZIE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I am sure the house will welcome the declaration just made by the acting leader of the government. I wish to raise a question of privilege with respect to the question I asked the government dealing with the amount of gold taken over by the Bank of Canada, and to request that the question be answered. I will deal with the first three subsections:

1. When did the Bank of Canada open for business?

2. How much gold was taken over from the chartered banks of Canada?

3 At what valuation?

There are certain other subsections which are not material to the present point. The answer reads:

1. On March 11, 1935.

2-9. Section 28 of the Bank of Canada Act requires that every chartered bank shall transfer to the Bank of Canada all gold coin and bullion owned and held by it in Canada. The transfer is made at the present standard value fixed by the Currency Act. The Bank of Canada Act provides that any profit resulting from the sale of gold transferred to the bank, or resulting from any change in the monetary standard, shall be paid into the consolidated revenue fund. It is provided, however, that if the governor in council is satisfied that the gold at the time of transfer was held against liabilities elsewhere in Canada, the profit shall belong to the chartered bank. The governor in council has not yet taken action under this provision.

My point is that the government has not answered my question as to what was the total amount of chartered bank gold transferred to the Bank of Canada. The second question of privilege is this. I asked whether the Bank of Canada had appointed any particular firm of solicitors and, if so, what firm; and, further, what were the terms in regard to salary and so forth. The answer is that the government has no information.

I submit that I should have a reply to that question.

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): I shall be very pleased to look at the first question. As a matter of fact the quantity of gold transferred will be disclosed by examination of the respective statements of the banks. With respect to the second question, may I say to my hon. friend that the answer is in strict conformity with the facts.

FARMERS' CREDITORS ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. E. MacLEAN (Prince): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance with respect to the following press dispatch from Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island:

At a meeting yesterday of the provincial board of review in connection with the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, the board declared that in the case where mortgagees have actually paid cash in giving loans to the farmers, neither the principal nor the interest will be disturbed.

Is this in keeping with the terms of the act?

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): I have not seen the statement and I shall have to look into it before giving an answer. The policy pursued by individual boards of review will be entirely within their own competence.

PRICE SPREADS REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GEORGES BOUCHARD (Kamouraska): Can the Secretary of State say whether the French translation of the report of the commission on price spreads and mass buying is being proceeded with as expeditiously as we were led by the government last year to hope?

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): With the printing and publication of the price spreads report, as Secretary of State I have nothing to do; it is entirely within the purview of the commission.

EASTERN POTATO GROWERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): Has the Minister of Agriculture information to the effect that the province of Quebec will join the eastern potato marketing board?

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): I have no official information to that effect but I understand that they are giving the matter further consideration and expect an answer this week.

HUDSON BAY INSURANCE RATES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister): During the last year or two the government has been doing everything possible to get the insurance rates reduced in connection with Hudson bay voyages. After spending such a lot of money on the building of the Hudson Bay railway we are all very anxious that it should be used as much as possible, and one of the ways in which we hope to bring that about is to endeavour to get insurance rates reduced. If the house will permit me I will read a dispatch which has been received in regard to this question:

A cable dispatch received from the High Commissioner for Canada in Great Britain on Hudson bay marine insurance rates indicates that "the joint Hull committee has agreed with the imperial shipping committee to recommend to underwriters in London and Liverpool that for the season 1935 there shall be for well found ships a reduction of 25 per cent on 1934 minimum additional premium for suspending the warrant. Vessels equipped with a gyro compass may be allowed 25 per cent off that part of the new additional premium which is calculated on insured value of ship. The dates of opening and closing of season will remain unaltered, but surcharge of 25 per cent for leaving Churchill after 7th but before October 15, being calculated on new rates of additional premium, will represent a corresponding reduction. The full report of the imperial shipping committee will be presented to the governments concerned.

I may add that the insurance rates in a case of this kind are based on actual facts; that is, they have to wait a few years to see what losses there are in order to arrive at their rates. One of the difficulties in connection with Hudson bay insurance rates is that the number of vessels going there is very small and therefore the risk at Lloyds or elsewhere is not spread over as many vessels as it would be in other parts of the ocean. But I think I am safe in saying that this concession will be greatly appreciated and will help to increase shipments from Hudson bay.

MARKETING OF WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): In view of the fact that the relief bill was passed the other day, under the authority of which the stabilization of the wheat market is maintained, can the government indicate just when we may expect the resolution now standing on the order paper in the name of the Prime Minister to be before the house? I refer to the resolution with regard to the creation of a grain board.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister): I am sorry, but I cannot give the hon. gentleman that information at present.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

ORGANIZATION OF BODY TO COORDINATE WORK OF DEPARTMENTS AND TO INVESTIGATE AND ADVISE UPON SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister) moved the third reading of Bill No. 39, to establish an economic council.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

EIGHT HOUR DAY

BILL TO LIMIT HOURS OF WORK IN INDUSTRIAL UNDERTAKINGS

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour) moved the third reading of Bill No. 21, to provide for limiting the hours of work in industrial undertakings to eight in the day and forty-eight in the week, in accordance with the convention concerning the application of the principle of the eight hour day or of the forty-eight hour week adopted by the general conference of the international labour organization of the League of Nations, in accordance with the labour part of the treaty of Versailles of June 28, 1919.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec-East): The question of jurisdiction has been argued many times and I do not want to say a word about it to-day except that I would like to place on Hansard an order in council just for the purpose of making complete the record on this question. This is P.C. 2325, an order in council concerning a draft convention limiting the hours of work in coal mines, adopted on October 26, 1932, and I would like to draw the attention of the house to the fact that this order in council was passed a year after the judgment in the radio case and eight months after the judgment in the aviation case. The order reads:

The committee of the privy council have had before them a report, dated 13th October, 1932, from the Minister of Justice, submitting that he has had under consideration, upon reference from the Department of Labour, the authentic text of the draft convention limiting hours of work in coal mines, adopted by the international labour conference at its fifteenth session (28th May-18th June, 1931), with a view to determining whether and to what extent the subject matter of this draft convention lies with the competence of parliament or of the provincial legislatures, in order that the said draft convention may be brought by the dominion government, in discharge of its obligation under article 405 of the treaty of Versailles and the corresponding article of the other treaties of peace, before the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies, for legislative or other action.

The minister—

That is the Minister of Justice.

—observes that the draft convention embodies various provisions with regard to the regulation of hours of work of workers employed in coal mines, that is to say, in any mine from which hard coal or lignite, or principally hard coal or lignite together with other minerals, is extracted. It contemplates that such provisions shall be given compulsory effect against the management of every mine to which such provisions are to be respectively made applicable. Ratification of the convention would consequently involve an obligation on the part of each government concerned to give effect to the provisions of the convention by legislative action in so far as existing laws may not afford adequate authority for that purpose.

The provisions of the convention which require legislative action to make them effective clearly involve legislation which, in its subject matter, would be directly concerned with classes of subjects assigned exclusively to the provincial legislatures by section 92 of the British North America Act, 1867: in particular "local works and undertakings" (section 92 (10)); "property and civil rights in the province" (section 92 (13)) and perhaps also "generally all matters of a merely local or private nature in the province" (section 92 (16)). While legislation upon the subject matter of the provisions of the convention might perhaps be enacted by the parliament of Canada in an ancillary or incidental way in relation to any coal mine which has been declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada: (section 91 and section 92 (10) (c), British North America Act, 1867); Union Colliery Company of British Columbia versus Bryden (1899), A.C. 580, 585, the Minister of Justice is of opinion that legislative jurisdiction touching that subject matter is, as regards those parts of Canada included within the several provinces, primarily vested in the provincial legislatures and that it is within the competence of the several provincial governments by appropriate legislative action to give effect to the proposals of the convention generally and comprehensively, except for those parts of Canada which are not included within the limits of any province. As to the latter, exclusive legislative jurisdiction in relation to the subject matter of the convention is vested in the parliament of Canada. The minister observes that the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the matter of legislative jurisdiction over hours of labour (1925) S.C.R. 505, affords strong support for the opinion above expressed.

The committee—

That is the whole government.

—concur in the foregoing and advise that a copy hereof, together with an authenticated copy of the draft convention, be transmitted to the lieutenant-governors of the respective provinces for the consideration of their respective governments with a view to the enactment of legislation or such other action upon the subject matter of the draft convention, within the provincial sphere of jurisdiction, as each government may be advised to take.

All of which is respectfully submitted for Your Excellency's approval.

E. J. Lemaire,
Clerk of the Privy Council.

I wish only to say that the law in 1932 is still the law in 1935.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): Just a word in reply to my hon. friend's statement. In my opinion the statement of law as set forth in the order in council just read is correct, but the situation is not the same to-day as it was then. The situation to-day is that this house has approved a convention submitted under the provisions of the treaty of Versailles and we have undertaken new responsibilities under the terms of that treaty. The opinion expressed in the order in council was correct, but the convention having been approved by parliament, the whole situation is changed, and I submit that parliament now has jurisdiction.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Why did the government not have the convention approved in 1932?

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): I have no doubt that the constitutional point raised by the former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) is a very important one to those people who are versed in constitutional law; possibly to them it may be an all-important question, but apart from that aspect of the question, there is another and more important feature involved, and that is the principle of the measure itself now before parliament. I believe the people who are to-day interested in the question of the shorter work week are ever so much more numerous than those who are interested in the constitutional aspect. I realize however on the one hand that the latter part of the question must be settled before parliament can effectively legislate along the lines as proposed in this bill; but I am satisfied on the other that the government with its legal advisers and the number of lawyers who happen to be members of the government would not have undertaken the step they did unless they felt they were justified from a legal standpoint in so doing.

The purpose I have in rising to-day is not to deal with the constitutional aspect because even if I wanted to, I could not do so. After all very often in matters of this kind the constitutional question is only relative, because our constitution changes with the needs of the times. That, I believe, is the history of the British constitution. What may have been illegal forty or fifty years ago may to-day be legal, without any change in the statutes of the country. On this occasion the government have thought fit to introduce a bill to establish in Canada a forty-eight hour working week. As far as the bill itself is concerned I do not regard it as a very important measure, but I regard the recognition of the principle of a maximum working week as of considerable importance. For that reason I am supporting the measure, and I am pleased indeed to see the government taking this step, even though it is so many years since the signing of the Versailles treaty. On previous occasions when I have spoken on labour problems in this house I have said that I attach more importance to legislation concerning hours of work than to some of the other legislation introduced here. We are confronted to-day with a very grave unemployment situation. Vast numbers of our citizens, men and women, are unable to find means of livelihood. I have contended in the house year in and year out, that one of the first steps we should take in order to absorb these people into industry is a considerable reduction in the hours of labour. That is why when the unemployment insurance bill was before the house I claimed that in itself it was no remedy for unemployment and could hardly be called a palliative. But now that we have this measure before us dealing with hours of labour, I hope that it will be much more far reaching in its effect than merely restricting working hours to forty-eight per week, otherwise it will not be of much more importance than the unemployment insurance measure.

I want to go back to a little over a year ago. On February 5, 1934, this house passed a resolution dealing with the shorter working week, when I introduced the following motion:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should take into immediate consideration the necessity of reducing the hours of labour of those engaged in industry, and also increase the purchasing power of the masses of our people in order that they may absorb the goods produced, thereby creating a more equitable distribution of our wealth production.

On that occasion the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) accepted the resolution on behalf of the government, and that motion carried unanimously. It asked for a reduction in the hours of labour and also for an increase in the purchasing power of the masses of the people. I think on that occasion I argued for a shorter working day and a thirty hour week, and this afternoon I intend moving an amendment to the resolution also asking this house to approve of a thirty hour working week.

Now shorter working days in themselves of course are very important, but unless we give to the masses of the people increased purchasing power they will be very little better off with the shorter working day than at present, because it would only mean spreading out the purchasing power now existing without increasing it to any extent. Now why have I always argued in this house and outside in favour of a shorter working week and increased purchasing power? I think it has begun to be realized that if we are going to absorb the vast number of unemployed into industry it can only be done by decreasing the hours of work, and by facilitating absorption of the goods that we are able to produce. I do not think that any one would argue that our ills to-day are due to lack of productive capacity. We have tried other remedies; for some years now we have tried public works, but even at the best public works are only a temporary palliative, they are like putting a plaster on an ulcer, covering up the sore spot but not curing the evil at its root. The question also arises whether the conditions through which we are now passing can be called abnormal. For some time it has seemed to me that these conditions which have existed for the last five years are really becoming normal. There is no person who can say that the present unfortunate conditions as to employment are not going to continue. I think we must be prepared to accept these conditions as likely to exist for some time to come in spite of all the legislation that is now before parliament. As a result of unemployment we are carrying a load which threatens to break down the financial structure of the country. The burden is becoming too great for our municipalities, our provincial governments are unable to bear it, and the federal government even cannot finance unemployment relief out of current revenue and are compelled to finance it out of borrowings or otherwise on capital account. This unemployment relief expenditure is a huge, unproductive outlay, returning nothing as far as the country is concerned, but creating untold hardship and misery. What is more important than the mere money aspect and the cost to the municipalities and the provincial and federal exchequers is the injury to the morale of the unemployed. Do we give enough attention to that? Do we think of these young boys who since leaving school have been unable to find any useful occupation which they may enter and take their part in the normal activities of life? Many of these young people have been out of school four or five years and have been unable to get a useful day's work. Think of the plight of the unemployed, always looking for that elusive job which cannot be found; which is something like prosperity, always around the corner. That vain search for the elusive job does more to sap the morale of many of our unemployed than anything one can imagine.

I believe on the other hand that the capitalistic system as we have it to-day cannot cure the conditions which it has created. Our economic system to-day demands on the one hand economies, and on the other huge expenditures. Our governments have been compelled to come to the assistance of many of our large financial and industrial institutions; we have been compelled to give guarantees to the banks, to give guarantees to the railways and to give guarantees to large power corporations. Yet the heads of those same institutions keep telling parliament that expenditures must be still more restricted and that the government must keep out of business. If the government did keep out of business very long these institutions would be in much worse plight than they are. Our present system compels us, in order to find employment for those out of work, to produce goods years ahead of actual requirements. Buildings have been constructed which in many cases are not required, our railway building and equipment has been in advance of our needs; that goes to indicate the chaotic condition of our economic structure at the present time, when we go on constructing things years ahead of requirements, and yet thousands of our Canadian people are compelled to go without the necessaries of life.

To-day we are living in an age of what we term contracting capitalism. Some years ago, in the middle and towards the end of the last century, we were living in an age of expanding capitalism, and as long as capitalism expanded we were able to find markets in different parts of the world for the surplus goods we produced. To-day, however, because of our tremendous productive capacity, those foreign markets are fast disappearing, and we in Canada in this connection are in exactly the same plight as are the people in other parts of the world. For instance, we supply the other parts of the world with capital goods which ultimately come into competition with the very goods we produce in this country. After a time, after we have provided these so-called backward countries with articles we ourselves produce, we find that they are competitors of ours in the markets of the world, and with the increasing production in all parts of the world we have a glut of commodities on all sides with no purchasing power in the hands of the masses of the people.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that was amply recognized when we had the international labour conference at Washington in 1919. I believe that was one of the reasons which brought about that conference, at which the different nations tried by some means or other to cope with what was already, at that time, a very difficult situation, namely the over-production of commodities and the number of people even then who found themselves out of work. That was sixteen years ago, and at that time the forty-eight hour week was approved. But a great many things have happened during the past sixteen years, and I claim that in the year 1935 a forty-eight hour week or eight hour day is entirely obsolete and out of harmony with existing productive capacity. Since 1919 we have tried all kinds of remedies to meet the situation in this country. We have tried public works, relief works of one kind and another, high tariffs and many other things, but nothing has met the situation and I claim that nothing we have tried so far is able to meet the situation as it exists in the year 1935.

There have been tremendous economic changes since 1919, and one of the most important of these changes has been the vast increase in the productive capacity of the economic machine. According to a well known United States statistician, Doctor F. C. Mills, between 1919 and 1933 the productive capacity of the United States increased by 71 per cent. That was over a period of sixteen years, the exact period with which we are dealing at the present time. I would venture to assert that these figures which this eminent statistician gives in connection with the United States have been followed very closely in Canada; I think there has been a similar increase in the productive capacity of our people in Canada. Then if that is the case, Mr. Speaker, I think there should be a considerably greater reduction of hours of work, beyond forty-eight hours a week. A few weeks ago our bureau of statistics issued a bulletin to which it is well worth while to refer for a few moments. On February 7 last our statistical branch issued some figures in connection with the production of our textile industries, which I think are of significance to us under present conditions. It is pointed out that the value of production in the cotton textile industry in 1933 was $58,461,000, an increase over the previous year of $13,110,000, or 28 per cent. In 1933 there were 17,885 persons employed in this industry, or 1,067 more than in the previous year. In 1933 the wages amounted to $13,220,000, an increase over 1932 of $61,000, or one-half of 1 per cent. I want the house to appreciate these figures. Though there was an increase in production of 28 per cent, in the same year there was an increase in wages of only one-half of 1 per cent. Though there were 1,067 more persons employed in 1933 than in 1932, wages increased by only one-half of 1 per cent. If those wages were divided equally among those employed I believe there would be an actual decrease in the wages paid the men and women employed in our textile industries, in spite of the fact that there was a 28 per cent increase in production.

That is simply an example of what is taking place all the time. When the government issue figures from time to time tending to show that production has been increased by so much, in textiles, in boots and shoes, in furniture and so on, it does not necessarily mean that more people have been employed. Probably it only means that the machines have been a little busier and have turned out more goods than in the previous year. That has been one of the main factors in the creation of that vast army of unemployed in Canada to-day, despite the fact that there has been a certain increase in our production in the last year or so. In this country we can always produce far more than we can reasonably consume, and in addition to our huge surplus of production we have a vast reservoir of workers anxiously awaiting the opportunity to be absorbed into gainful production. With the increasing use of machinery, however, these men and women are denied the opportunity of making a decent livelihood. I say, Mr. Speaker—and I am arguing for a shorter work day—that if as a result of the ingenuity of man during past generations we have reached the stage in our civilization when we can produce such a superabundance beyond our own requirements, then man ought to have the benefit of these scientific inventions, and that benefit should be in the form of giving the individual greater leisure than he has at the present time.

The forty-eight hour week, as provided for in this measure, does not give us very much. In a few isolated instances across this country those who to-day are working a little longer than forty-eight hours a week may be affected. There are not very many of them; my hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Garland) suggests night watchmen and members of parliament. I think very few unemployed would be absorbed into industry in those few instances. If we are really to give useful work to our unemployed there must be a considerable reduction in the hours of labour, much below the forty-eight hours suggested in the present bill. I say this in spite of the fact that I give the measure my blessing and am happy, in a way, to see it introduced in parliament. I venture to assert, and this has been stated by many economists, that if we would absorb into productive employment these men and women who are to-day out of work and we put them all doing something useful, a three hour day might be sufficient to satisfy human requirements, but I am quite prepared on the present occasion to compromise on the six hour basis. In the United States at the present time there is before the Senate a bill for a six hour day being favourably considered. Why should we be behind the United States? There a similar bill was reported favourably upon last year, and the men who introduced that bill before the Senate and argued in its favour took the very same stand that I am taking here this afternoon, that if we are ever going to get back to anything approaching normal there has to be a shorter working week and a considerable increase in the purchasing power of the great masses of our people. I believe the very fact of this bill being introduced here this afternoon is a recognition of that principle, and the only difference I suppose now between the different groups in this house, if the house accepts the principle of a shorter working week, is the number of hours per week that should be worked in order to absorb the unemployed workers of this dominion.

So far as I am concerned and in this I am speaking I believe for those in this corner of the house, I am strongly opposed to the curtailment of production in whatever shape or form it may take, whether on the farm or in the factory or in the work shop. It is a form of industrial sabotage to which I am totally opposed, for I feel that the greater our productive capacity and the more we produce the better it ought to be for all concerned. But unfortunately that has not been the case during the past few years in this Dominion of Canada, nor for that matter in any other part of the world.

The hours of labour ought to be regulated according to the needs of the times. If through some catastrophe that might take place the average workman in this country were called upon to work eight or ten or twelve hours a day, he would be glad to work to the utmost of his capacity provided there was the need for it, but on the other hand when there is no need for it, the great masses of our people should be given the advantage and blessing of modern invention, modern ingenuity and modern equipment.

Then there ought to be some close relationship between our productive capacity and our consumptive opportunities. To-day there is absolutely no relationship between the two. We produce goods in abundance in a haphazard way and then let them lie on our shelves and go to waste or sometimes rot while our people throughout the country are wanting these very goods but have no opportunity of consuming them. In my opinion a thirty hour week would be more than sufficient, so far as our work shops and our factories are concerned, to produce all that we could reasonably consume here in this dominion. I say that there must be a reasonable balance between production and consumption, with production always a little ahead of consumption.

I know that some people might say, and say with certain justification, that in the United States they have tried certain experiments which were not successful. Speaking in this house a little over a year ago, I said then that I did not expect very much success from the experiments that were being made in the United States because what they were doing there was trying to increase production ostensibly in order to absorb labour. The result was that the machine worked and profits were greater as a result of the increased production, and very little of the benefit of that increased production went to those who were actually engaged in a productive capacity.

Secondly, in the United States they tried to make codes and regulations, to establish a sort of cooperative system within the confines of the competitive, and sooner or later one had to give way to the other. Either the competitive had to give way to the cooperative, or the cooperative had to give way to the competitive. The result in the United States was that the cooperative efforts that were attempted to be established soon had to give way to the competitive, and the competitive system ran wild, with the consequent chaos that we see in the United States to-day.

Personally I would like to see us avoid the chaos that they have gone through in the United States, and I think it could be done if the government would give serious study to some of the points I have outlined in my remarks here this afternoon. We are borrowing vast sums of money, just as they did in the United States. I have forgotten how many billions of dollars the United States has borrowed in the effort to borrow themselves back into prosperity. No nation can borrow itself back into prosperity. That is false economics all the way through, for the more they borrow the more they owe, the greater their indebtedness and the greater the load, and the moment the borrowing ceases you revert back to a condition which may well be worse than the first. There is an obvious reason for that. As long as you are living on borrowed money there is a fictitious sort of prosperity, but the moment the money that was borrowed has been spent and you have to pay it back, the conditions become entirely different. Therefore I say that we must get down to something more fundamental than the borrowing of money to bring about a prosperous condition among our people. As I have pointed out in this house year after year, there is to-day a huge gap between our production and our consumption. I said a few moments ago I am opposed to cutting down on production. What I want to see is an increase of the consumptive opportunities of our people throughout the length and breadth of this dominion, and by increasing those consumptive opportunities we shall be able to keep the industrial machine going, though I am free to admit, it may interfere with the large profits of those who own the machinery of production and distribution. But if in this house one has got to choose between the profits of a few individuals and the well-being of the great masses of our people, I am compelled to choose and be on the side of the masses of the people of this dominion.

It may be argued that a shorter work day will increase price levels and may perhaps hurt the position of the farmer, but I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that the farmer can be hurt very much more than he is at the present time. I as one coming from an industrial constituency, elected as a labour member and representing a labour constituency, am just as anxious for the farmer to be placed in a sound and secure position as I am to see the man in the industrial centres enjoy that security which he lacks at the present time. Price levels, important as they are, are not the all-important thing. I think the most important thing is to put into consumptive channels the goods we produce. In other words, there has to be a more equitable distribution of our wealth production in this dominion. The wealth of a nation is not determined by price levels. The wealth of a nation is determined in the first place by the wealth that nation has within its geographical borders, its mines, its forests, its fields, its factories and its work shops. They are wealth, or potential wealth, and when the hand of man is put to these raw materials and potential wealth he produces the essential things of life. We are not short of wealth in this country, whether the price level is high or low. I was in Germany in 1923 when the price level was abnormally high, and just for an ordinary collar I would pay may be one quarter of a million marks, but that extraordinary high price level did not bring about prosperity in Germany. Nor does a low price level bring prosperity to the people of China. Prosperity can only come with high productive capacity, and when the results of that production are equally distributed among the people of that country, and that is exactly what I want to see in this dominion. We have that high productive capacity, and let us now bend our energies towards distributing our wealth production amongst the people who produce it so that they may enjoy the results of their labour.

We find that in this country we have more clothing probably than we know what to do with. We can produce clothing in abundance right from the raw materials almost through to the finished product. We have more wheat than the farmer knows what to do with. But the farmer cannot get the clothing he requires, and the man in the city has a mighty difficult task to get the flour to make into the bread that he needs. The only body that can deal with a question of this character is this parliament. We are the only logical body to deal with it, and any jurisdictional difficulties that might arise I think are infinitesimal as compared with the difficulty which the Canadian people have to-day in making a decent livelihood and finding a certain amount of security in life. To-day they have neither the opportunity of making a decent livelihood nor the opportunity of obtaining any security in life. Private initiative has failed completely in this respect just the same as it has failed in the United States during the past two years. Our people are compelled therefore to look to parliament as the only place where redress can be obtained. The provincial governments say that they cannot act in the matter and in spite of what some hon. members may say as to the difficulties presented by our constitution, I feel sure that if this parliament will show the ways and means of grappling with the unemployment situation in a serious way none of the provincial authorities will question its jurisdiction.

Just as in the case of an eight hour day, a six hour day will mean more control and regulation and possibly more ownership of certain things by this parliament. After all there is not a very great gap between control and regulation and ownership. I do not contend that those who are in control or ownership of industry are anxious to see unemployment in our midst because I believe that if they had the power to eliminate it they would do so immediately. But the power of coping with this grave situation which now exists is beyond the control of the employers of labour.

Hon. members on the government side have referred to the new social order which will be created by this legislation but I cannot see that this legislation, the unemployment insurance legislation or other legislation which has been brought down ushers in a new social order. They may prove a fine gesture but I am afraid they will not go far in overcoming the difficulties of the situation.

The amendment which I propose to move to the motion for third reading will reduce the hours of work per week from forty-eight to thirty. I submit that this parliament could do something which will offer redress to those men and women who find themselves out of work. I venture to assert that should the forty-eight hour legislation become effective within the next few months very few additional men and women will be absorbed into industry. After all, the important question to be considered is : How many more people will find work? Perhaps I had better read my amendment in order to give hon. members an opportunity of seeing what it contains. I intend to move, seconded by Mr. MacInnis:

> That all the words after "that" be struck out, and the following be substituted therefor: "Bill No. 21 be referred back to the committee of the whole with instructions that they have power to amend same by striking out the words 'forty-eight' where they appear in the said bill and substituting the word 'thirty' therefor, and also by striking out the word 'eight' where it appears and substituting the word 'six' therefor."

The adoption of this amendment would reduce the hours of work from forty-eight per week to thirty per week by means of a five day week of six hours each. I hope the government will give this matter sympathetic consideration. As I said a moment ago, in the United States at the present time the government is considering the adoption of a six hour day. This matter was reported on favourably last year and I have every reason to believe that this year that government will pass legislation to enact a thirty hour week. Not only does the resolution now before the Senate of the United States provide for a thirty hour week but it stipulates that there shall be no reduction in pay. In other words, a person receiving $25 per week for a forty hour week would receive the same wages for a thirty hour week.

Mr. J. H. STITT (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, it strikes me that the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) is moving an amendment which, if carried, would cause more unemployment. In fact, it would bring about the bankruptcy of all our industries. I am sympathetic with the objects which seem to be in the mind of the hon. member for North Winnipeg but under the industrial system which we have at the present time and in which the profit motive is the dominant one, how can we expect to have more employment if we ask the employer of labour to pay more for less? That is what this amendment means. If it asked that the whole matter of hours of employment be referred to the League of Nations, then I think any hon. member with any element of logic in his makeup could support the motion.

During the course of the remarks of the last speaker I was talking with a gentleman who has quite a lot to do with industry in this country. He told me that during the last four years he lost practically all the reserves which had been built up, a total of over a quarter of a million dollars. I wonder if those who are employed in the country at the present time really expect, except with the advent of socialism to-morrow, that any employer will pay them just as much money as they are paying them to-day for a shorter day of work or for less production. And after all, is not the prosperity of this nation based largely upon the possibility of the expansion of our export trade? I have heard my learned friend—

Mr. HEAPS: I am not learned.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): Well, he is very learned, in fact if not by courtesy, and I have heard him say that he was not in favour of tariffs but of world trade. Surely if you are in favour of world trade you are in favour of this country participating in world trade, and why should you put this country on the basis of more expensive production and expect it to obtain a larger share of the world's market? How is that possible in a world which is dominated by the profit motive? This resolution, if it were passed and if proper laws were enacted to enforce it in this country, would be the last step under our present system and the first step to complete socialism, and in my opinion it would lead to chaos. I think that is what it means. I want my hon. friend from North Winnipeg to realize this. I know that as time goes on, even at present, we ought to have fewer hours of labour; there is no doubt about that. But how can we get so far ahead of world progress so long as we have to bear in mind the existence of the profit motive? Why do men go into business? Why does any man work? Under our system men work for wages, and they establish industries and go into trade for the purpose of making profits. Employment is all based on the wage motive or the profit motive. I believe that if the resolution were passed and if this country set up the necessary administrative machinery to enforce it there would be more unemployment to-morrow than there is to-day and there would be chaos.

Mr. HEAPS: Can the hon. member tell me why they are trying to do it in the United States?

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): Are they trying?

Mr. HEAPS: Certainly. It is now before the Senate.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): The United States is practically in the position where its whole export trade only amounts to between eight and ten per cent of its entire business. Look at the wheat situation in this country, however. The United States is a far more self-contained nation than we are. Suppose we applied the six hour day to agriculture, considering the difficulty we have at the present time in getting any kind of reasonable price for our wheat. Suppose we increased the farmer's cost. This resolution if enacted would increase the cost of every commodity that enters into every kind of production including agriculture. The farmer's machinery would cost more; transportation would cost more; everything he uses would cost more. There is no doubt that if we were living in a socialistic or communistic world, a world in which profit had been absolutely abolished, it would be possible to enact and administer such a measure. But with the world as it is, when we are moved no doubt by the deplorable conditions that exist in the country, moved no doubt by the strongest possible desire to remedy the situation, why should we forget the facts and in a measure of abstract idealism bring ruin to the whole industrial and trading fabric of the nation? We have to face these things in a real. honest, genuine way. My hon. friend advances many resolutions which I support theoretically, but when it comes to the real application of these measures, how can we do it? How can you ask an industry which is exporting agricultural implements or automobiles to compete with Japan at the present time and reduce its hours of labour by thirty-three per cent and increase its cost? How can it be done? After all, states like great engines move slowly, and though the object which my hon. friend has in mind is a laudable one I do not think it is possible of accomplishment. He says that the question of jurisdiction is a small one.

Mr. HEAPS: No, I did not.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): Well, not very important.

Mr. HEAPS: It is not as important as the unemployment situation.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): Of course it is not; there is no doubt about that. But the question of jurisdiction may be a great question in the next election.

Mr. HEAPS: I am satisfied with the Prime Minister's stand on that.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): Our whole jurisdiction is based on an international treaty or arrangement. We have not made any international agreement for a six hour day and it is the only basis on which we can get jurisdiction, unless the state of the nation becomes so deplorable that under peace, order and good government we have to enter into the whole realm of business, and then society will be in a state of collapse. And I believe that is what would happen if this proposal were enacted. What about human nature? What about the railway men at the present time? The railway men who are employed want to run their 3,600 miles a month. They do not want to cut down their right to earn money and to have the work distributed to their brothers who are out of employment. Although ideally they preach that doctrine they do not live up to it in practice.

I think the object which the hon. member has in view is perfectly laudable and there should be a reduction in the hours of labour. But until we find ourselves in a world which is more in agreement than at the present time, there is no use destroying the whole fabric of industry and trade. It seems to me that any resolution for a six hour day at the present time would certainly be more productive of evil than of good, unless it were regarded merely as a lamp to guide us on our way or as the first step towards a proposition which might be explored by the League of Nations we might in such a case achieve some measure of improvement in human welfare if we could secure world agreement. But to pursue a policy like this in isolation is nothing short of abstract madness, which would lead us immediately to chaos.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I was hoping that the government would indicate its attitude toward the amendment of the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps). I hate to come to their rescue, but I am afraid I shall have to. First I may say that with some of the views expressed by my hon. friend I would be in agreement. It is true that the labour people in the world to-day are not much interested in a forty-eight hour week as was indicated last year at the international labour conference where a draft convention was submitted for a forty hour work week and, as I said on the second reading of this bill or when the draft convention was submitted to the house, was adopted by the convention but failed of having any effect because there was not the quorum required by the rules of the conference owing to the fact that most of the government delegates, including the one representing Canada, were absent when the vote was taken. However the conference adopted a resolution to place this draft convention upon the agenda for the next conference which takes place in a week or two. This will be the first matter to be considered there, and the government might have waited until this draft convention is disposed of by the labour conference before dealing with this matter. However we have before the house this bill for a forty-eight hour week, and the government is basing this legislation on the draft convention adopted at Washington in 1919. This is part of the preamble of the bill:

> Whereas a draft convention respecting hours of work in industrial undertakings was agreed upon at a general conference of the international labour organization of the league of nations, in accordance with the relevant articles of the said treaty, which said convention has been ratified by Canada; and whereas it is advisable to enact the necessary legislation to enable Canada to discharge the obligations assumed under the provisions of the said treaty—

And so forth. The draft convention of 1919 is for a forty-eight hour week. It is the only thing that might give an appearance of right to parliament to enact this law which is, as everybody will agree with me, primarily under provincial jurisdiction. But the motion of my hon. friend for a thirty hour work week and a six hour work day is not based on any draft convention or indeed on anything; it is clearly provincial in its sphere. This parliament has no right to pass that even on the claim of the government that the draft convention of 1919 gives them jurisdiction for the present bill; it would not give them jurisdiction for the amendment of my hon. friend.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Does the draft convention not say "forty-eight hours or less"?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): "Not exceeding."

Mr. LAPOINTE: "Not to exceed." But I do not think this will mean what the amendment involves, because the conference finds it necessary to pass another draft convention to cover a forty hour week. Under the circumstances, as I have more than grave doubts that the courts will decide that the present bill when enacted will be valid, I think if the amendment of my hon. friend is inserted. the situation will be still worse. I want to give to the legislation which parliament is going to enact at least the chance, when it stands the test of a judicial decision, of not having the tail which my hon. friend is imposing upon it.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): In making a short reply to the observations of the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) I trust he will not charge me with being a sceptic with respect to his conception of what might happen in industry and the world. The amendment suggests that the work week be reduced from forty-eight to thirty hours and the work day from eight to six hours. If parliament has its right founded in law to enact the present measure, it finds that right in the draft convention which was approved at Washington in 1919.

Mr. POULIOT: It was a draft convention, not a convention.

Mr. GORDON: On every occasion I believe when organized labour appeared before the various governments of this country since the approval of the draft convention at Washington, organized labour has urged the passage of a measure such as is before the house to-day; organized labour has asked for a forty-eight hour week and an eight hour day. When that draft convention was approved at Washington, there was a very large gathering of representatives of the various countries of the world that had become signatories to the treaty. The Labour Gazette of December, 1919, in reporting that labour conference at Washington has this to say at page 1425:

The first international labour conference, convened under the authority of the treaty of peace, assembled in Washington, D.C., on October 29, and concluded its labours exactly one month later on November 29. The purpose of this organization is to promote the international regulation of labour conditions.

It was the first time that representatives of governments, and of employing and employed interests assembled in an international conference to consider labour problems. The agenda of this first conference had been fixed in the peace treaty and the proceedings in Washington were entirely confined thereto. The matters under consideration related to the permanent organization of the international labour body and the following specific subjects of reference, namely: The application in the countries represented of the principle of the eight hour day or forty-eight hour week, the question of preventing or providing against unemployment, various proposals relating to the employment of women and children. Considering the diversity of the interests represented, it was the general feeling that the discussions and decisions of the conference gave evidence of a sincere desire on the part of the participants to fulfil the purposes for which the organization had been created.

I would like to draw the attention of hon. members to the last paragraph:

The conference gave evidence of a sincere desire on the part of the participants to fulfil the purposes for which the organization had been created.

Then the report goes on:

The following general principles are enunciated in the treaty of peace as comprising the methods and principles for regulating industrial conditions which all industrial communities should endeavour to apply so far as their special circumstances will permit.

It proceeds then with quotations from the treaty itself.

The high contracting parties,—

And Canada was one of them:

—recognizing that the well being, physical, moral and intellecutal, of industrial wage earners is of supreme international importance, have framed, in order to further this great end, the permanent machinery provided for in section I and asociated with that of the League of Nations.

With that general thought in view the conference proceeded with its labours. We had at that conference a very large and very representative body of delegates and advisers, numbering twenty-six in all. They included Hon. G. D. Robertson, Minister of Labour for Canada, and Hon. Newton W. Rowell as government delegates. We had as advisers, F. A Acland, Deputy Minister of Labour, Mr. Loring G. Christie, Mr. Daniel A. Cameron, Hon. C. W. Robinson, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Mr. Louis Guyon, Doctor Walter A. Riddell, Hon. Thomas H. Johnson, Mr. T. M. Molloy, Hon. C. R. Mitchell, Mr. J. D. McNiven, Mr. Gerald H. Brown, Mr. S. R. Parsons, Mr. Sam Harris, Mr. J. T. Stirrett, Mr. E. Blake Robertson, Mr. J. B. Hugg, Mr. J. G. Merrick, Mr. P. M. Draper, Mr. Tom Moore, Mr. Arthur Martel, Mr. Robert Baxter, Mr. David Rees, Mrs. Kathleen Derry. So hon. members will see that Canada was represented at that conference by very eminent persons, meeting for the purpose of formulating and adopting draft conventions, and unquestionably assuming some responsibility to see that those draft conventions were something more than mere expressions of pious wishes. Certainly there must have been some assumption of obligation on everyone represented there to see that these draft conventions were ultimately given effect to in the countries to which they applied. Now the right hon. leader of the opposition was at that conference, and doubtless displayed his usual activity. I think I can surmise that he took a very active part in seeing that that draft convention was brought into being and carefully revised.

As I say, year after year organized labour in Canada has asked that that draft convention be given effect to. What was the result? Less than three years afterwards the government in Canada changed and a Liberal government came into power. What was the attitude of that government with respect to these draft conventions which have become the subject matter of legislation during this session of parliament? They went into the depths of cold storage. Nothing was ever done to bring them into effect. Yet the right hon. leader of the opposition, always interested, like the rest of us I hope, in promoting peace and good will in the world, and professing a desire, and I believe trying at times to do something for labour—I do not want to detract from what the right hon. leader of the opposition has done—with respect to these draft conventions he did nothing. During those intervening years from 1922 until a few weeks ago, the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) was one of the foremost men in Canada advocating the League of Nations, the treaty of peace and all these complementary things that have to do with them. Now what happens? The very moment a government in Canada seeks to give effect to these draft conventions the right hon. leader of the opposition drags out old ultra vires, and the hon. member for Quebec East resigns from leadership of the League of Nations society in Canada.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Keep that for the platform.

Mr. GORDON: Well, if I am wrong I stand to be corrected.

Mr. LAPOINTE: It is nonsense.

Mr. GORDON: Now, as to this amendment if the government is right in its legal position that, having become a signatory to the peace treaty and having approved and adopted a draft convention in this parliament and having by reason thereof a right to found legislation upon the convention, then of necessity if the government's view is to prevail it must follow the terms of that convention in substance. But the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) advances an amendment which by its very terms will place those who seek to impeach this bill in the position that suits their purpose, that of being able to say that we have departed completely from the convention. The amendment would enable them to advance that argument before the courts as a reason why this legislation should be declared ultra vires of the dominion parliament. I do not know why my hon. friend advanced that amendment, for he must have known what its effect would be.

For my part I suggest that working hours should be reduced just as rapidly as can be done with safety, but that it would not be of benefit to the working people of this country to assume deliberately an attitude that will nullify this great forward step, as I believe it is, of placing in the power of this parliament through our participation in the League of Nations the right to control these very vital matters that experience is disclosing must in a measure be controlled by the central authority. I am not going to endeavour to go into the legal position concerning this bill. I have heard it discussed here, I have read the discussions in another place in parliament. I think I have said before that we can learn a lot of law from all the discussions. But when I find very eminent legal gentlemen such as the hon. member for Quebec East, very eminent constitutional authorities such as the right hon. leader of the opposition, and very eminent lawyers like the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and the leader of the Senate, not seeing exactly eye to eye on this question, I get some comfort out of the thought that, while I am sure this legislation is within our competence, I feel so for reasons different from those expressed by these other gentlemen. So we have a pretty general disagreement of opinion both here and in the Senate.

I think this legislation will stand the test of our courts. The hon. member for Quebec East says a further measure is now pending before this same tribunal which will still further reduce the hours of labour, and he suggests that we should wait until we see the fate of that further convention before proceeding with this measure. I think the sound course, if the government is right, is to go ahead now, adopt this convention and, have it understood across Canada that, through the agency of this treaty, the federal parliament has the right to do what we are now doing. Then if at some near future date the international labour organization, with all the nations of the world represented, comes to the conclusion that a further or different arrangement can be safely offered to the signatories of the treaty and those nations that are members of the labour organization, then it will be time for this parliament to undertake to draft legislation founded on that new convention.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I had rather hoped that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) would have found it possible to get this social legislation through by discussing it on its merits, and wait until the time of the general election to make his stump speeches. However, he has evidently found the temptation too great to resist, and has sought to imply, to say the least, that the present leader of the opposition, having been one of the many advisers who were present at the international labour conference held at Washington in 1919, was to-day opposing legislation which at that time he was partly instrumental in having recommended.

Mr. GORDON: I did not say you were opposing it now.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Then we will put it in this way, that I was objecting to the jurisdiction of this parliament to deal with the matter. At any rate my hon. friend found it necessary to depart for a time from the legislation itself and devote a few remarks to myself. Perhaps he will pardon me, therefore, if I find it necessary to say a word or two about my position in connection with that international conference, for what light it may help to throw on the present situation. I recollect very well that at the time the conference was meeting in the United States, in 1919, the Union government was in power in this country, and the Hon. N. W. Rowell was a member of the administration. If I recollect aright the invitation to me to be an adviser came either from Mr. Rowell or from the late Senator Robertson, who was then Minister of Labour.

Mr. GORDON: If I might interject, the notes of the conference suggest that the right hon. gentleman was nominated by the province of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Possibly my hon. friend may be correct; I would be representing Prince Edward Island in this house at the time, but I am quite distinct in my mind that it was due at least in part to the fact that both Hon. N. W. Rowell and Senator Robertson knew I had been Minister of Labour and deputy minister for a number of years, and was interested in these matters, that the invitation came to be extended to me to be one of the advisers at the conference at Washington. My hon. friend the Minister of Labour read to the house the list of those present. As he was reading it my colleague the ex-Minister of Justice remarked that there was a very large number of representatives from Canada. I gave my colleague the answer as to why the list was so large, and I will give it to this house. It was assumed at that time, as all of us, on this side at least, assumed up to the beginning of this year, that matters respecting hours of labour came within the jurisdiction of the different provinces, and for that reason all the provinces of Canada were asked to be represented at the international conference in Washington. That, by the way, will explain how my attendance as an adviser came to be in connection with the province of Prince Edward Island; I was one of the provincial representatives duly authorized by the provincial government. I am quite sure that as representing Prince Edward Island at the time I would have taken and did take the position that the enactment of legislation respecting the eight hour day came within the jurisdiction of the government of that province.

At any rate I know that all those who were present, both the ministers of the crown representing the federal government at the time and the representatives of the several provinces, were of one mind with respect to which legislative body had the competent jurisdiction in the matter of dealing with hours of labour. While all were equally desirous of seeing an eight hour day generally applied in Canada, I know all were equally of the view that if it were to be part of the law of this land, it would have to be enacted via the provincial legislatures in the first instance. The procedure laid down by the international labour organization, as fashioned by the League of Nations, was that the draft conventions, in the first instance, would in federal states come to the federal government and later where necessary because of jurisdiction would be referred by the federal government to the different provinces.

Now may I point out that this meeting in Washington was held in 1919. It was December, 1921, before the Liberal administration took office; until that time either the Union government of Sir Robert Borden or the Conservative government of the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen was in office. If hon. members will look at the records of the privy council for that period they will find that the then Minister of Justice, Hon. Mr. Doherty, was responsible for the order in council which set forth the method the government of Canada should adopt with respect to the various conventions that came from the labour conference. I placed that order in council on record when I was speaking previously, so I need not read it now; it will be found in the remarks I made at the time the first draft convention was discussed during this present session of parliament. It distinctly set out—and this by a Conservative minister of justice—that the obligation of the federal parliament with respect to these conventions concerning hours of labour and the like was to transfer them to the competent legislative authority of this country, and that the competent legislative authority with respect to the eight hour day was the provincial governments. Hon. gentlemen will find that Hon. Mr. Doherty and the Conservative government of the day fulfilled the obligation, as they then understood it, by seeing that the draft convention respecting the eight hour day was referred to the various provinces. If other governments that have succeeded have taken a similar course it is because each and every one has been advised by the law officers of the crown that that was the proper method to pursue.

The Minister of Labour says these draft conventions were kept in cold storage from 1921 to 1930, and I can only speak for that period. From our point of view they were not kept in cold storage at all; they were referred, as the law officers advised the treaty obligations required, to the various provinces. During that period of time the Liberal government had many conferences with the provinces, some of which specifically considered the question of whether among themselves the provinces coulld not agree to see that as between themselves there would be uniformity of legislation, particularly with respect to these matters which came to the provinces via the federal government, from the labour office at Geneva.

So that far from having draft conventions in cold storage we were doing our utmost during our time to see that they were enacted, that they were not allowed to remain mere recommendations, but that in so far as it was possible for the federal government to influence the provinces, the provinces would be influenced in the direction of carrying them out. As a matter of fact, most of the provinces had already enacted all that was requested. But since my hon. friend has spoken of cold storage, may I remind him that he and most of his colleagues have been members of the present government now for nearly five years, so according to his statement they have evidently been viewing these draft conventions as being left in cold storage. They are the ones who have taken the view that what ought to be done with these conventions was to keep them in cold storage up to the last moment because we have not had any of them brought before parliament until this year.

Mr. GORDON: It took us four years to get them thawed out.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am afraid it will take longer than that to get the administration thawed out with respect to a good many questions which they ought to have considered by this time. But may I say what my hon. friend the Minister of Labour and all hon. gentlemen on that side know to be the fact, and that is that they themselves have stated—the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) has stated, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) has stated—that the view as set forth by the Hon. Mr. Doherty when Minister of Justice was the correct one with respect to these various draft conventions. They believed, and so stated to this parliament over and over again, that they were fully discharging every obligation that was imposed upon the federal government when they saw that these various conventions were referred to what they stated and believed were the bodies that had competent jurisdiction in the matter. It is only this year, only after the radio broadcasts that we have had, that this new theory is advanced, that this parliament has authority in the matter.

May I say this? When I made the statement the other day that we wished to see these measures enacted, I meant exactly what I said. I did not mean that we wished to see a lot of make-believe legislation placed on the statute books. What we wanted to see was eight hour day and other social legislation in a position in which it could be enforced in this country, a position which would not permit of any doubt arising over any question of jurisdiction or constitutionality. There can be no question at all that the provinces themselves are competent to enact this eight hour day legislation, and I think that that will be admitted by the government itself. The eight hour day could be made generally applicable from one end of this country to the other by agreement between the provinces with respect to it. Similarly it could be made generally applicable by the British North America Act being amended so as to give this parliament power to pass legislation of this kind, amended with the consent of the provinces, which I believe could be and would be obtained, and would have been obtained long before this had hon. gentlemen opposite not needed that thawing out process to which the Minister of Labour has just referred.

Mr. ARTHURS: What about the years from 1919 to 1930?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I say that if hon. gentlemen opposite have for the last five years entertained the view they now hold, their attitude is unpardonable in not having introduced this legislation long before this. Entertaining the view that they did, if they had had at heart at all the desirability and necessity of having legislation of this kind enacted by the federal parliament, I say that they should have and would have provided for it by having a conference with the provinces which would have brought about agreement in these matters, or would at least have brought about an amendment to the British North America Act that would have given this parliament power to act at the present time without any question or doubt arising in the matter at all.

I think it is perfectly clear just why, of necessity, the position that I personally at any rate have taken in this matter has been what it is. It has been what it has among other reasons for the one cited by the Minister of Labour this afternoon, that I was present at the international conference that met at Washington when this matter was discussed and the draft convention framed, and I know that it was the view of dominion and provincial representatives alike that the eight hour day legislation so far as Canada was concerned, if it was to be enacted and made effective, would have to be provincial legislation.

The government is now hanging its whole case in regard to the possibility of this legislation being intra vires on the slender thread that this house has approved the draft convention. It is not any longer on the ground of the draft convention itself. The Minister of Justice this afternoon told us that the situation had altered since this house had approved the convention. That is the slender thread on which all of this social legislation hangs. I do not wish to use a term that will belittle what is being attempted here, but I do say that in the absence of an authoritative basis, all that we are doing at the present time is putting ourselves in the position of passing so much make-believe legislation.

I am anxious, nevertheless, to have this legislation, such as it is, given the best possible chance that it can have before the courts, and for that reason I would not wish to prejudice its chances, however slight, by supporting the amendment which has been moved this afternoon by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North (Mr. Heaps). That amendment, as has been stated by the Minister of Labour this afternoon, is altogether beyond the scope or provisions of the draft convention, and consequently beyond the grounds on which the government says it has any authority whatever to deal with this matter. Assuming that my hon. friend's amendment were to pass and the bill were to be modified as he suggests and that later on it were to come before the courts, where the argument would be made which the government has urged this afternoon, that because this parliament has approved of the convention we have the power to legislate, and with nothing more than that to support it; what would become of the whole legislation? It would be thrown sky high on the simple discovery that there is nothing in the draft convention anywhere which touches the question of a six hour day or a thirty hour week.

Mr. HEAPS: Section 3 of the bill distinctly states that the hours are not to exceed forty per week.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I know, but I think my hon. friend will find that that is a matter of legal drafting, and the less experimenting there is at the present time with what is purely experimental the better perhaps it will be for what may happen in the long run. The chances of this legislation, from the point of view of some of us at least, are precarious beyond all words, but I feel that the chances would be utterly hopeless if we tried to go beyond what even the government itself says is the one slender thread upon which the whole of this social legislation hangs at the moment. For that reason, in order that whatever possible chance the government may have at all in the matter may not be spoiled utterly, I am going to vote against the amendment of my hon. friend.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to make any observations with respect to this bill had it not been for the remarks of the right hon. leader of the opposition. But in the course of his remarks he used the belittling term of "make-believe" with regard to this legislation, and that statement was the culmination of a long line of similar characterizations of the government's social legislation. In other words, before this house and before the country he challenges the sincerity of the administration with regard to all this legislation, and in particular the eight hour day bill, the day of rest bill and the unemployment insurance measure. I think that is not straining his position at all, that it is stating his position exactly. He challenges the sincerity of the Prime Minister above all, and that will be the cry in the country with respect to this class of legislation and with respect to these bills.

Well, if that be so, I wonder what the opinion of the house and the country will be with respect to himself when I recall to your mind, sir, and to the mind of the house and the country that as long ago as August, 1919, when the right hon. gentleman was elected leader of his party he put into the platform of that party—I say that he put it into the platform because he was the leading authority on social legislation in his own convention—the following plank: Limit hours of work to an eight hour day and forty-eight hour week along with a weekly rest of at least twenty-four hours. I ask the right hon. gentleman if that was make-believe, if that was put forward to fool the people and if that was put in as a test of his sincerity? The net result was that not a thing was done in all the intervening years.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my hon. friend will read the whole of what was set forth he will see that that statement was accompanied by another statement that it would be in accordance with the intent of the labour articles of the league and the reference of these matters to their competent jurisdiction.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That cannot be quite so because as I recollect it the Liberal convention was held in August of 1919 while the Washington convention did not take place until October or November of the same year. That argument simply will not hold water.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Read it, it is there.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I have read it ad nauseam for the last ten years. Not more than twenty-five per cent of the Liberal platforms was put upon the statute books and it was never intended that any more should be put upon the statute books. I would point out that section 132 of the British North America Act was in existence in 1919. I do not recall whether the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) had been a law officer previous to that time but he certainly stood high in the councils of the Liberal party and must have known, as any legal member of this house knew, that the provisions of section 132 were open to the leader of the opposition in 1919 just as they are open now in 1935. The only difference was that there had not been the ingenuity or thoughtfulness to put that section into effect in order to achieve something which could never be achieved without amending the British North America Act or having the unanimous consent of the provinces.

Did the right hon. leader of the opposition ever call an interprovincial conference during the nine years he was in power for the purpose of amending the British North America Act or to ask them to put into effect uniform social legislation?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, he did.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): He did not have much success.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Did you?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): My recollection is that he had innumerable interprovincial conferences but never had any success along the lines I have suggested. I have not had the time to go back to review the proceedings of the conferences but I venture to say that the question of the adhesion to the principles of this 1919 Washington declaration was never brought up at any interprovincial conference. During this time most of the provincial administrations were Liberal. Since 1930 efforts have been made by this government at provincial conferences to obtain uniformity of legislation in certain matters which were said to be within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures. The most notable instance I call to mind at the moment is with respect to the jurisdiction over companies. My impression is that the provinces as they are at present constituted will never willingly give up jurisdiction in any matter. This is not because they want to seize or retain jurisdiction merely for the purpose of having jurisdiction, they do not want to give up any jurisdiction because they fear they might be doing something which would prove detrimental to their interests as provinces. This is the reason why nothing can be done through conferences with the provinces. They are not willing to release any part of what they consider the rights of the provinces as opposed to the central authority. I think if I were a member of a provincial government I would be bound to project the consideration of these constitutional questions along the same lines. As far as company law is concerned, I have always thought that it would be all to the good if the authority could be centralized and we could have a uniform law, but everyone does not agree with this point of view. We should have some regard for the opinions of others on questions which are, to say the least, controversial. The provinces have never been willing to give up jurisdiction over corporations. Even though no progress was made by my right hon. friend in connection with this matter, the way has been opened through the application of section 132 of the British North America Act. I do not think he should use the belittling term of "make believe legislation" and question the motives of his opponents who are triyng to do something for the working people of this country.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, from the remarks which have been made on both sides of the house it is quite evident that both major parties intend to vote against the amendment moved by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps). Therefore, I suppose that anyone who now stands up and says that he is going to vote for the amendment will be liable to the charge that he is playing the cheaper kind of politics in making an appeal to his labour constituents when he has full knowledge that this amendment will not pass. I shall have to take that risk because I intend to vote for the amendment. Briefly, I shall state my reasons for voting in this way.

The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stitt) argued that the passage of this amendment would mean more unemployment rather than the creating of more employment. He went on to say that those who worked only six hours would not be able to compete with those who worked eight hours. This argument must be at least one hundred years old and there are hundreds of pages of history dealing with it. At one time little children and women in the nail making industry in Lancashire were forced to work stripped to their waists because of the intense heat. They had to work twelve and fourteen hours a day and it was suggested that these women and children of eight to ten years of age should not have to work such long hours under such conditions. Hundreds of pages of the press of that day were filled with the same argument which we recognize as being offered this afternoon in a more moderate form. This afternoon the question was asked: What would happen to the industries? It was stated that they would all be ruined.

There is much truth in the statement that in order to be truly successful such legislation should be universal or nearly universal. This may be so but are we to wait forever until the other man or the other nation gives the lead? The hon. member for North Winnipeg stated that legislation was pending in the Senate of the United States which looks toward a six hour day. The former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) stated that a similar suggestion was being placed on the agenda of the next meeting of the League of Nations. What would be the effect in Washington and Geneva if this house passed the resolution proposed by the hon. member for North Winnipeg? Would it not give them a tremendous lead to go and do likewise? I care not who opposes the idea, or however able he may be, it is obvious that labour will never be able to take up the slack caused by the efficiency of machinery unless by means of shorter hours. No matter what other palliative you suggest, that is the crucial and final remedy—shorter and shorter hours for everybody.

It is said that the matter is one of provincial jurisdiction. Well, it is much harder to start anything like this under provincial jurisdiction than it is in the larger unit of the dominion, because the larger the unit the more likely will the step be successful. If it were done by a province they could not compete in the production of goods or of raw products with a neighbouring province or state in which there were longer hours. So that the larger the unit under which it is first begun, the more likely it is to be successful.

The Minister of Labour, the ex-Minister of Justice and the leader of the opposition said that the passage of this amendment would imperil the whole act, and from the arguments adduced I think that is probably correct. The passage of this amendment might result in the whole act being disavowed. But I do not think that is so very important, because the eight hour day is general throughout the country now. But if this amendment were adopted it would be important as a gesture; it would be significant if this house adopted the proposal and took a definite stand in favour of shorter hours. We are liable to be brought into the position recorded in one of the books of the Apocalypse or somewhere else—I forget precisely where. There was a great revival on the earth, threatening to assume considerable proportions and to be highly successful, and Satan gathered his satellites around him and said that something must be done about it. He said he would give a prize to anyone who would suggest a scheme which he might carry to the earth and put into practice. One devil said, "Send me; I will tell them there is no God." Satan replied, "You are a fool, for everyone knows that there is a God." Another devil said, "Send me; I will tell them there is no hell" and Satan replied, "You also are wrong, because everyone knows there is a hell and there are a good many people living in it now." Finally one wizened, old devil in the background said, "Send me; I will tell them there is a God and there is a hell and a heaven, but I will tell them there is lots of time." Satan replied that he was the man, and he was sent and the revival was defeated. That is the sort of danger we are going to be in. We are all in favour of shorter hours as an ideal; that is the standard we are aiming at; but we are going to stand by and say there's lots of time yet, and that will kill the effort, without any question. I do not for a moment suggest that the Minister of Labour is not sincere when he says that it is his ambition to see the proposal adopted. But the danger is that if we do not deal with it drastically and firmly it will never be done. I firmly believe that even supposing this bill were declared ultra vires parliament would be doing a splendid thing and setting an example to the rest of the world, if the proposal were adopted. It would be a step towards the rehabilitation of civilization, even if it resulted in the act being declared ultra vires, because as I say, it would be a gesture and would give a lead to the other nations of the world. The very news that Canada, the largest dominion in the British empire, had passed such a law, would ring round the world and set an example to every nation in the empire, and in the world; it would induce the others to take a step in the same direction, and if all or even a fair number adopted it there would be no danger of the troubles referred to by the hon. member for Selkirk. Moreover, it would be much more far reaching than any of these tinkering pieces of social legislation which we have had this session. I do not say they were bad; they were worth while as far as they went, but of necessity they were extremely limited in their scope and more than doubtful of success. If we adopted this proposal however it would lead to other nations taking the same action, because people pay a good deal of attention nowadays to sentiment, and news of that kind would attract the attention of a world waiting for bold leadership.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): We have witnessed a remarkable contest in unrestrained verbal vigour on the part of two ambitious ministers on the front benches this afternoon, and the statements of the minister who spoke last seemed to me to be atrocious. In the first place he accused us of challenging the sincerity of the administration with respect to some of their social reform measures, whereas only a week ago his own late colleague on the treasury benches, the hon. gentleman who preceded him as Minister of Trade and Commerce, himself challenged the sincerity of the government concerning their social reform legislation. It therefore does not lie in the mouth of the new Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hanson) to make such an accusation against us when his predecessor in office, who was kicked out of this administration because he believed in social reform, according to the correspondence, has challenged the government in this respect. If you analyse that correspondence you will see that he was compelled to leave the administration because his attitude towards certain public questions was not countenanced by the government of which he was a member, and now the new Minister of Trade and Commerce tells us that we are impugning the sincerity of the administration.

The hon. gentleman has advanced some strange and startling doctrines of law. He said that we had the Liberal convention in 1919 and that the international labour convention did not take place until October of that year. May I read two brief extracts from the resolution in regard to the labour question, which resolution was moved at that convention:

[Mr. Neil.]

Resolved, that the committee recommends that the national Liberal convention accept in their entirety as a part of the Liberal platform, in the spirit they have been framed and in so far as the special circumstances of the country will permit, the terms of the labour convention and general principles asociated with the League of Nations and incorporated in the conditions of peace.

And No. 4, dealing with the subject matter of this specific bill, recommended the adoption of the eight hour day and forty-eight hour week as the standard to be aimed at where it had not already been attained. As a result of this action, the province of British Columbia from which I come, with a Liberal government in power, was the first province to pass eight hour legislation. The provincial authority was invoked as the result of action taken at the meeting of 1919.

Mr. GORDON: The province of Ontario passed eight hour day legislation in 1914.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Yes, but not nearly as comprehensive as the legislation adopted in British Columbia.

Mr. REID: It was never enforced.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The legislation now before us in this bill is not as effective as the provincial legislation which we have at the present time and have had since 1923 under the administration of a Liberal government in the province from which I come. My hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce said, "You had section 132 of the British North America Act in 1919 why was it not invoked during nine years of Liberal rule?" Has he forgotten what his own leader, the Prime Minister, said? Has he forgotten the declarations of the Minister of Justice, which have been placed on the record during the course of the debate on this legislation? Has he read the letter which the Prime Minister sent to the various provinces in August, 1934, differentiating between exclusive and concurrent jurisdiction among the provinces? Yet, in defiance of the opinion of the Right Hon. Mr. Doherty; in defiance of the opinion of the present Minister of Justice; in defiance of the opinion of the Minister of Justice of the Liberal government; in defiance of the opinion of his own leader, the Prime Minister; in defiance of the edict of the Supreme Court of Canada, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, with his newly acquired constitutional learning, refers us to section 132 of the British North America Act and asks us why we did not invoke it when we were in power.

That was not the crux of his crimes, the greatest height of the dialectic atrocity which was committed by my hon. friend in the course of the debate. He said that the present administration had had various conferences with the provinces. There was never a conference held by this government with any province since 1930 but the government met the provinces with loaded guns. There was never a conference held between this administration and the provinces but an ultimatum was submitted to the provinces as soon as their representatives arrived here. A conference lasting a day or a day and a half with each province is absolutely useless.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: When the hon. member makes a statement like that, he ought to give some proof of it.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I know whereof I speak and I have several sources of authority with regard to the situation. Some of the conferences were terminated very abruptly as a result of an ultimatum being laid down by this administration as to the course to be pursued.

Now we have a new doctrine. The Minister of Trade and Commerce made this statement: "The provinces will never willingly give up their jurisdiction and you cannot do anything by conferences." Let us analyse that statement. The provinces will never willingly give up their jurisdiction; therefore let us pass this legislation; let us bludgeon the provinces into submission; let us take away from them the jurisdiction which they have claimed as their right since the days of confederation. That is done as a result of the new constitutional doctrine that is preached here to-day by the new Minister of Trade and Commerce who is in direct conflict with every constitutional authority who has spoken from either his own party or indeed from this party and all the authorities since 1919. He is also in direct conflict with the opinions at least inferentially expressed by his leader the Prime Minister in a letter which he sent to the provinces in August, 1934.

Had the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) been moving a general resolution in the house in favour of a six hour day and a thirty hour week I should be very glad to support such a motion. I am in favour of and believe in shorter hours, but the amendment couched as it is and moved at the present time, takes away even that faint possibility of jurisdiction which is being summoned up by this administration to buttress its eleventh hour repentance in regard to this make-believe reform legislation.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): I wish to say just a few words in support of the amendment moved by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) and seconded by me. It would be well if the house assumed that the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) was to-day quite correct as to the attitude that had so far been adopted in this country in regard to legislation of this kind, that is that it was a matter of provincial jurisdiction. However the government now seems to have changed its mind and has come to the conclusion that in certain particulars the federal parliament has some jurisdiction. Whether that turns out to be the case, I am not greatly concerned. I hope it turns out that the government is correct, but if it is not, then I believe if we have a Liberal government after the next election they will be bound to try to find some ways and means of either bringing this subject under federal jurisdiction or getting the consent of the provinces to legislation of this kind; I am quite satisfied they will have to do that.

As regards the point raised by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) that this amendment if adopted by the house would infringe upon the legality of the legislation, I do not think that is so. Of course I have not a legal mind or training, but we know from experience our legal friends are wrong just about as often as are the rest of us, so there is no reason why even a layman should not give an expression of opinion. This legislation is based not only on the draft convention of the labour organization but also on the treaty of Versailles itself, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), if my memory serves me aright, placed more emphasis on the treaty than he did on the draft convention. If parliament has jurisdiction over an eight hour day, then it has jurisdiction over a day of six hours or five hours or any number of hours. The Minister of Labour mentioned that the trades and labour congress had asked for the passing of this legislation. That is quite correct; the trades and labour congress have been for the last fifteen years or so advocating the passing of an eight hour day and a forty-eight hour week, but in their various conventions during the last four or five years they have put themselves on record as being in favour of a thirty hour week and a six hour day. So while they have been asking for the minimum of the convention of the labour organization, they have realized that will not meet the present situation and we must go beyond it.

The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Stitt) in his remarks on this debate mentioned that the amendment was a most laudable one but that it could not be put into effect; that we must wait until some other country took the lead.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): That is not what I said. I said that we had to wait for world agreement.

Mr. MacINNIS: At the rate at which we are proceeding toward world agreement, it will be a long time to wait until some other country takes the lead, so that my hon friend is in as bad a position with the correction as he was before.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. MacINNIS: Yes, and the opinion of the hon. member for Vancouver South is just as good as that of the hon. member for Selkirk.

Then he raised the point, as all good representatives of capital do, that to put a six hour day into effect would cause industries to go into bankruptcy. Well, industries are going bankrupt as matters stand now, and if we are going to take the position that a shorter day will bankrupt them, why not make it a ten or a twelve hour day and put them all back on their feet again? I am not sure whether my hon. friend would advocate that.

Whether the house agrees with this amendment or not, the day is not far distant when it will have to take adequate steps to deal with hours of work more drastically than any action we have in mind now contemplates, and I believe we should give our support to this amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Heaps) negatived.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister): Before the main motion is put I should like to say a few words on another aspect altogether of this problem. The constitutional issue has been threshed out at some length; the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) himself very lucidly explained the situation, therefore there is nothing I can add to what has been said in that regard. What I wish to speak about is the action, or rather the inaction, of the Liberal opposition regarding these social and reform measures that we have introduced. As I understand it, it is the duty of the opposition to try to make the legislation brought in by the government as nearly perfect as possible. It has always been so in all the years that I have been here; that has been one of the things the opposition have tried to do. But in this instance what have the opposition done? They have simply criticized everything that was brought in and then voted for it.

Mr. McINTOSH: That is bothering you.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: It is not bothering me at all. I only want to put before the house and the country the position taken by hon. gentlemen opposite so that they will understand it.

Mr. McINTOSH: That is where we fooled you.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Never in my long experience have I seen an opposition adopt such an impossible and untenable position. After all, they are following the same plan this year as they have in all the sessions since this government have been in power. I will not call it a policy, but that is the plan that they have adopted in regard to the measures that have been brought in—the Bank of Canada Act, the railway legislation, and all the others. They have consistently from the beginning, day by day and month by month, criticized in very shape and form—

Mr. POULIOT: I am against it.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Yes, my hon. friend is against everything as a rule.

Mr. POULIOT: And rightly so.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The Liberal opposition, I submit, have made no constructive suggestions throughout this session to try to help the country or the people who have been having such a hard time during these years of depression—nothing whatever. We all agree that we have had a difficult time in this country; there is no difference of opinion on that subject. Many people are suffering now from the effects of the depression and many are unemployed, but we know this condition prevails in very country in the world. The Liberals know, as everyone knows, and as I am sure they will acknowledge, that Canada has come through these trying years better than almost any other country in the world. But my hon. friends opposite perhaps think this is not generally understood.

Mr. POULIOT: I am sorry to interrupt, but this has nothing to do with the bill.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I am speaking about the attitude of the opposition regarding all these measures of social reform brought in by the government this year. They have consistently criticized every measure, but voted for it. I suppose the right hon. gentleman and his followers still hope that the people do not realize the position they have taken and will vote for them. In that I submit that they are making a great mistake. We have brought in these reform measures in an endeavour to help this country and the people of this country. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) has stated in this house that he will not permit these social reform measures to be made an election issue, but the right hon. gentleman will find that they will be the election issues. This government has brought them in to help the people, and the Liberals have done nothing but criticize. They will be the election issues, and the leader of the opposition cannot help himself.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is an admission.

Mr. McINTOSH: We have an issue now.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The right hon. gentleman says that the Liberals have always favoured social legislation. They have talked about it through the years, but they never did anything at all. Even when they were in power and had the opportunity, they did nothing. Now they sit still, they make light of our efforts, but they support all our measures. Why do they support them? Because they dare not oppose them. That they believe we have been doing the proper thing, that we have brought in good legislation which they dare not oppose but which in order to save their faces they must criticize and make light of, can be made evident by reference to what has been said during these debates. I shall quote only one of the many that might be mentioned, namely the statement made by the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) on March 19, as reported on page 1837 of Hansard. He said:

> I think it is glorifying this bill to oppose it in this way. I do not think there is anything in this bill. It is like the rest of the program of reform, and the quicker we pass it the better.

Yes, the quicker they agree with it the better. They dare not oppose it; they can only try to belittle it. All I can say is that if the hon. gentleman does not like our legislation, if he does not like our way—

Mr. LAPOINTE: I like you. I like my right hon. friend.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Thank you. But what the people of this country want is a man of courage. The Prime Minister has shown that he is a man of courage. He has brought in these measures of social reform; but what do we get from the hon. member for Quebec East and other hon. gentlemen opposite? Simply cold blooded cynicism. They say in effect: "We cannot do anything about them; they are good measures; all we will do is try to belittle them, but we have to vote for them whether we like it or not." I submit that the policy of the Liberals during this session has been one of simple negation. They have done nothing. But what the country needs and wants and will support is a man of high courage who endeavours to do something to better the condition of the people, instead of sitting still and doing nothing as my hon. friends opposite wish us to do. That is the lead given by the present Prime Minister to the people of this country, and I feel sure he will get a favourable verdict from the voters when they go to the polls.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): My right hon. friend the acting leader of the government (Sir George Perley) has said something about the attitude of the opposition. In reply may I say a few words about the attitude of the government?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I am sorry to interrupt, but has not my right hon. friend spoken already?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have spoken on the amendment. My right hon. friend has made a long speech condemning me for my silence, and now when I rise to speak he takes objection to my saying anything.

Mr. McINTOSH: He wants the last word.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say that if ever there was an example of an administration throwing up the sponge we have had it this afternoon. What have we had from hon. gentlemen opposite as their cry from the beginning of this parliament, the one they hoped to make the most telling before the people of the country? It was that the Liberal opposition did nothing but oppose their measures, that we were wasting the time of parliament by opposing the legislation brought in; no matter how good it was, all we could do was to find fault. Now, when my hon. friends bring in legislation which the leader of the government says is good, intended to help the people, he condemns us because we do not oppose it. He said it was our business to try to make the legislation perfect. But when introducing it he told us that it was perfect; why then does he have to look to the opposition to make it perfect? That is a new role for the opposition, when the government feels obliged to admit that the legislation which it introduces is imperfect and that it is our duty to make it perfect.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Not at all. I may say to the right hon. gentleman that if we had not done that when we were in opposition a great many of his measures would have been very much worse than they were.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am prepared to allow my right hon. friend all the field he can take. But as to what he has just said, if examined closely, it will not be found there was need for much in the way of improvement of anything brought in by the Liberal government.

My right hon. friend says we have not been consistent in our attitude. May I recall what was said by myself on the address, after we had heard the speech from the throne, in which we were advised that the government were going to bring in this social legislation. I think it will be within the memory of my right hon. friend and hon. gentlemen opposite that I said that the sooner the legislation could be brought in, the sooner it could be put through this house and the sooner we could get to the country, the better it would be for all concerned; that what we of the opposition believed was needed was not taking up the time of parliament in fruitless discussion, but arriving as quickly as possible at the moment when the people themselves would have the right to say who should govern the country. That was the position we then took, and I offered the leader of the government at that time to ask hon. members on this side of the house to refrain from any discussion on the address. Does my right hon. friend complain that we did not debate the address at great length? In previous years I have heard hon. gentlemen opposite complain that we took up too much time discussing the address. Now when we allow the address to go almost without discussion, in order to hasten the moment when the people may have a chance to say who should govern the country, hon. gentlemen opposite begin to condemn us for that.

I recall also that I made the suggestion that if hon. gentlemen opposite would bring forward their legislation we would do all we could to expedite it, even to the extent of promising to let all supply go through very rapidly. We wanted to get on with the social legislation; we did not want the government to delay bringing forward their social legislation by wasting a lot of time on estimates and other matters such as private members resolutions. That was what I said at the time, but the government had not their social legislation drafted. No wonder the acting leader of the government says the legislation needed perfecting; it was not even drafted at the time we had the declaration that we were to have this social program put before us. It was partly drafted, but not completed. More than that, the acting leader of the government will remember that I indicated other ways in which I thought the business of the session could be expedited, all based on the ground that so far as this social legislation was concerned we on this side of the house were in favour of the principle it embodied, and that the only question that arose in our minds, which, however, was the question that lay at the bottom of all else, was whether this house had jurisdiction in the matter.

What was a further step suggested by the opposition? It was that the opinion of the supreme court of this country should be obtained as quickly as possible, so that all doubt might be removed as to whether or not this parliament was the body competent to deal with this legislation.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The right hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that the supreme court could merely give an opinion on such a subject.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It would remove sufficient doubt to justify this parliament in proceeding to consider and discuss the legislation in detail. But may I ask the acting leader of the government why, within the last year, his government referred three different statutes to the supreme court in order to get their opinion, if that opinion would not help remove doubt. Evidently the right hon. gentleman has forgotten for the moment that the enactment with respect to the supreme court contains specific clauses setting forth that one of the purposes of the court is to permit of a judicial opinion being obtained which will serve to remove any question of doubt which may arise as to the jurisdiction of the federal parliament or of a provincial legislature. If provisions were not there there might be something in what my right hon. friend says, but this parliament in the past clearly forsaw that questions were likely to arise from time to time with respect to jurisdiction, and that it was not wise to waste the time of parliament or the money of the country or, what is more important than all, to run the risk of completely disappointing all those on whose behalf parliament was supposed to be legislating, by proceeding in the dark, by proceeding in direct opposition to the grounds on which heretofore it has been held that the very opposite was the case to what is now being assumed to be correct. When my right hon. friend says we have not put forward any constructive suggestions, may I say to him that there could not be a constructive suggestion more to the point than the suggestion that in the first instance, or as speedily as possible, this legislation ought to be referred to the supreme court in order that the question of the competency of this parliament to deal with it might be definitely decided.

Might I ask the right hon. leader of the government what he wants the opposition to do from now on, for the rest of the session? Does he want us to oppose everything he introduces? Is he going to say, with respect to the rest of the legislation to be brought in by the government, that it is not perfect and that it is our business to be here to perfect it?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say that as I see it the duty of the opposition at the present time is to do all in its power to give the people of this country the opportunity to say who is to govern from now on. When the government introduced this legislation they did not expect that they were going to put it through at all; it was a make-believe business from the start. Nothing else can describe the attitude of the government, despite what the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hanson) has said this afternoon. When there was a broadcast proclaiming this social legislation; when the government in the speech from the throne announced these various social measures, hon. gentlemen opposite expected that the opposition were going to oppose all that legislation, that as might well have been assumed we were going to take the ground that this government had been defeated in by-election after by-election, that it had lost the confidence of the people of this country and had no right to continue to carry on, and that we would put forth strenuous opposition to these measures the mere introduction of which would have served the purpose of the government. After we had opposed them for a certain length of time, suddenly this parliament would have been dissolved. We would then have had the government going to the country for a mandate to put through this social legislation which the opposition had not permitted them to put through at this session.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: That is all imagination on the part of the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, it is not imagination.

Mr. COTNAM: A stump speech.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my right hon. friend had been sitting where I am standing, and had been able to see his own countenance and that of his colleagues at the time I made the statement that we did not intend to oppose this legislation but that we wanted to see it put through as rapidly as possible, he would have known that there was no imagination in what I am saying at the present moment. More than that, speaking of imagination, I do not think I am unduly employing that faculty when I say that when the cabinet met this afternoon they quite evidently had these matters under discussion, and that they came to the conclusion in cabinet council that, after all, this social legislation was not making quite the impression that it was expected to make, and that the attitude of the opposition in not opposing it had more or less taken away some of the virtue they thought it was going to possess as a result of strenuous advocacy by the government and opposition on the part of those on his side.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): You flatter yourself.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Just a moment. They decided that the time had come; that they must not wait until a general campaign but that before this parliament was over, in fact right now, in connection with this eight hour day bill, they should seek to make it appear to the country that the opposition, in not opposing this legislation, was belittling it, ridiculing it and the like. If the legislation amounts to anything—

Mr. SPEAKER: May I point out to the right hon. leader of the opposition that it is a little after six o'clock.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I must apologize, but I think I have said all that need be said.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Motion (Mr. Gordon) agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No opposition.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Gobeil in the chair.

The Canada Grain Act, including management, operation and maintenance, also equipment of elevators, administration of, $1,981,006.90.

Mr. COOTE: Mr. Chairman, a few years ago the Canada Grain Act was amended so as to prohibit the mixing of wheat in grades Nos. 1, 2 and 3 northern, and before this vote is carried I hope the minister will tell us what steps are being taken by the grain commission to see that that provision of the Canada Grain Act is being carried out.

While I am on my feet there is another matter I should like to bring to the attention of the committee. Even if those provisions for the prevention of mixing may be carried out, another practice apparently has grown up which lowers the standard of No. 1 and No. 2 northern in particular so far as shipments overseas are concerned. It is quite a common practice, I am told, for cars of No. 1 and No. 2 northern wheat which are sampled at Winnipeg to be tested for protein content by the grain companies. Word is sent ahead to the terminal at Fort William, and if this wheat is of a high protein content in many cases it is binned by itself and certain bins apparently are held for what is called selected No. 1 northern, high protein. The result of this practice, it seems to me, must be to lower the grade of the bulk of the wheat that goes out to our overseas customers. I assume that most of this selected wheat is shipped to the United States. I do not know whether the commission are aware of what is going on, but I take it for granted that they are. I should like to know whether they approve of this practice, whether they have any way of stopping it, and whether they think it should be allowed to continue. I have in my hand some of the loading orders that are issued by one of the grain companies at Fort William. They are really instructions to their elevator man to load so many thousand bushels of selected No. 1 northern into a certain hold of a steamer, and I have seen enough of these orders to convince me that this is quite a common practice.

There is another matter with which I might as well deal while I am on my feet, and it is in connection with the grading of durum wheat. I do not think the law prevents the mixing of the various grades of durum wheat, and possibly there is a great deal of mixing being done. The factor that determines the grade of durum wheat is mainly the amount of spring wheat it may contain. The definition of No. 1 durum is set forth in the act. It may contain a maximum of five per cent of spring wheat, and that is increased up to an additional five per cent for the lower grades. But whatever grades of durum are received in the private terminals, I do not think there is very much durum wheat shipped out except that which goes out as No. 1. So it does appear that there is more No. 1 durum going out than there is going in. The average quality of the No. 1 durum which is being shipped out cannot in that case be as high as it would be if the mixing were not permitted, and the elevator companies had to ship out the same quantity of each grade that they took in. It does seem as though there was a great deal of mixing of durum wheats, and it is almost self evident, I think, that it would be to the advantage of the grower of the high grade durum wheat if the elvators were not allowed to mix the lower grades with it and then put it all out as high grade wheat. I am told that in some of the terminal elevators they have machines for taking out the ragweed, I think it is. They use water to float this weed seed out of the wheat, and the result is that the wheat which has been through the water carries a pretty heavy percentage of moisture, but they are able to mix it with the No. 1 straight durum and still have a moisture content of the whole mixture that is not higher than that allowed under the act.

These are two questions particularly that I wish the minister to deal with. Are these practices being carried on; if so does the commission see any objection to them, and have they any way of dealing with the matter to see that the average grade of the wheat going out of the terminal, in the case of both northern wheat and durum wheat, is as good as that of the wheat that goes in under the different grades? Further, do the commission approve of the practice of special binning for high protein wheat and the mixing of the durum wheat which I believe is going on in the private terminals at Fort William?

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The hon. gentleman has put on the record a considerable number of questions, and I shall deal with them in the order in which he has raised them.

First with respect to the amendments which were made to the grain act last year in relation to garnet wheat, it is the intention of the government so far as I am aware to allow the legislation to go into effect, but the matter has not been finally concluded and consideration is being given to representations which have been made from time to time during the last few weeks as the time approaches when the amendments to the act are to go into effect.

With respect to the second matter to which my hon. friend alluded, namely, the special binning of wheat at terminal elevators, I am advised that a perusal of the grain act will show that this is a perfectly legal process under the provisions of the act itself. This special binning of select wheats by terminal elevators is legal under the grain act and is controlled by the commissioners, in so far as the special bins leased for this purpose have to be authorized by them. It would not appear that this matter is of any considerable importance, because out of a total of 62,000,000 bushels which came to the head of the lakes during the past season, only 820,000 bushels have been so binned. This is only about one and one quarter per cent of the total. This facility of special binning is open to all interests, including the Canadian mills. In order to specially bin wheat it is necessary for the purchaser to obtain the owner's consent, thereby assuring an equitable return of the premium paid in this connection. An objectionable practice which was stopped in 1930 was that of permitting the diverting of special wheat without the owner's consent and frequently without any premium compensation being paid to the owner. I am advised by the commission that the only possible objection to this practice is that it more or less reduces the average quality of the outgoing shipments, that is the shipments which go to the export trade. However, this has not assumed such proportions as to make it important. Furthermore, the principle of the owner of the wheat disposing of it to the best advantage has not yet been set aside by the grain act.

With respect to the third matter to which the hon. member referred, I understand that the mixing of durum wheat is legalized by the statute. The commission had applied to the grain standards committee for the setting up of an out-turn standard, but this was rejected.

Mr. COOTE: I should like to know what steps are being taken or have been taken by the grain commission to see that no mixing occurs in the terminal of numbers 1, 2 and 3 northern?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury) I am advised that they weigh out the elevators annually and check that with the warehouse receipts. This would appear to be all that they can do. I am further advised that the practice of mixing durum is not very general although it is permitted to a degree.

Mr. COOTE: This matter was discussed in the committee, where it was contended that if mixing was prohibited the services of an army of inspectors would be required to see that the provision was carried out. I have been asked on more than one occasion to inquire if the commission really knew whether mixing was going on.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am advised by the chairman that he is personally satisfied that there is no mixing of the grades to which the hon. member alluded. Unless the hon. member has evidence to that effect I think he should accept the chairman's statement.

Mr. COOTE: I have no evidence that it is being done, but I should like to know if the commission could tell us at any time the number of bushels of each grade which may be shipped into the terminals at the head of the lakes and the number of bushels which may be shipped out?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not know that that information is available at the moment, but it will be produced by the chairman.

Mr. COOTE: Some time ago I had a question on the order paper asking for the number of bushels of each grade of durum wheat which was graded into the terminals and the number of bushels graded out. As I remember the answer, it was to the effect that the commission did not have that information.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not recall the question, but I am advised by the chairman of the commission that that information can be obtained and I will see that the hon. member gets it.

Mr. COOTE: Can that be given for the private terminals?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No, only the public and semi-public.

Mr. COOTE: I understand that the government elevator at Port Arthur has been leased. Is it being run as a private or as a public terminal?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): As a semi-public terminal.

Mr. COOTE: The figures would be available as to the in-turn and out-turn of that elevator?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Yes.

Mr. COOTE: Can the minister give us the terms upon which that elevator was leased?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I think the answer to that question was put on the record a short time ago.

Mr. DONNELLY: I understand that numbers 1, 2 and 3 northern are checked into these terminal elevators and then they are weighed out at the end of the season, and if the weigh-out does not come up to a certain percentage, or if it does not balance within a certain percentage, the amount which happens to be over is confiscated or taken away. Could the minister advise the committee the leeway allowed and the amounts which have been confiscated in different years?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I understand the allowance is one-quarter of one per cent. I shall get the other information.

Mr. DONNELLY: Is the terminal elevator at Port Arthur run by the government at the present time, or has it been leased to a private individual?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That elevator has been leased.

Mr. DONNELLY: When?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): August 1 of last year.

Mr. DONNELLY: What rent is being paid?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Approximately $40,000 per annum.

Mr. DONNELLY: In the checking in and out of numbers 1, 2 and 3 northern at this elevator, has there been an overage, and if so, how much?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): We have no record of any overage.

Mr. DONNELLY: If it did not come up to the one-quarter of one per cent you would not have a record of the overage?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The commission would have a record.

Mr. DONNELLY: But there was no overage?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No.

Mr. DONNELLY: Could the minister give me the number of bushels of wheat which will be affected by giving a special grade to garnet wheat?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): There are approximately 50,000,000 bushels of garnet wheat in the country at the present time, but I do not know how many bushels there will be on July 31.

[Mr Coote.]

Mr. SPENCER: I should like to ask the minister a question in connection with the strike of farmers in the Myrnam district in Alberta about a year ago. As the minister no doubt knows, this district is in the northern part of the province where there is a fairly good fall of rain. It occurs quite often that the grain comes out tough and the people in that vicinity were of the opinion that they were not getting a fair deal from the elevator companies. Practically all the farmers in that district went on strike and refused to deliver their grain. The board of grain commissioners were informed of this trouble and I believe went up to the district in an effort to settle the difficulty. I should like to know the findings of the committee and what was done in an effort to settle the difficulties which the farmers were facing at that time.

Mr. HANSON (York Sunbury): I do not think the hon. member is referring to Myrnam; I think he means the strike at Mundare, because the other was the year before.

Mr. SPENCER: I am referring to the one at Myrnam; the other is in the district represented by my hon. friend from Vegreville.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I have no information regarding the strike at Myrnam, but I have regarding the strike at Mundare in October, 1934, and that I will place at the disposal of the committee. With reference to the strike that occurred the previous year, I will get the information.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Each year that this item has been under discussion up to the present time I have inquired of the previous minister whether there was any evidence of the restored mixing of wheat grades. The practice was general years ago. The answer which that minister gave was invariably, no. Well, each year I hear further reports of it. I am not making any charge just now but I want to put the government on their guard. It is easy to start these practices but difficult to stop them. These practices invariably begin under Conservative governments and then it takes the succeeding government nearly all their time in office to stop them. In 1930 an attempt was made by some of us to prohibit the mixing of grades and a compromise was reached, prohibiting mixing in the four top northern grades and permitting it in the rest of the grades. As a matter of practice anything that is not prohibited under the grain act is usually done; that is the substance of the matter. It is not particularly made illegal, but it is not prohibited and therefore it is gone ahead with. I have grave suspicions and pretty reliable information that the law is being broken with respect to the four top grades. I did not hear the first remarks of the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), but I understood him to be drawing attention to the special binned top grades. These grades are isolated and special binned for their quality and are sent to the United States, where a premium is paid therefor. That is exactly the way it started before, only it was with carloads; carloads were switched and cut out and sent somewhere—usually to our millers. To the extent that that was done, what was exported overseas was correspondingly impoverished in quality.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I read to the committee a statement from the grain commission with respect to this question of special binning. I will not repeat the statement because the hon. member will read it in Hansard. I understand that this is quite legal under the act of 1930 which I believe the hon. gentleman himself piloted through the house.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I did not pilot it.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I take that back; it was the former Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not know that special binning is absolutely prohibited, and anything that is not prohibited the elevators always do if it suits them. But special binning, I understand, is being done on the protein basis. High protein cars are specially binned, and a guarantee of a certain protein content is sold to the millers in the United States, who pay a premium thereon. When the wheat is bought from the farmer he does not know what the protein content is and it is nonsense to say that the premium goes to the producer; it goes to the mixer or special binner. Furthermore, it impoverishes the great bulk of the wheat that goes overseas, where we have the keenest competition. It certainly violates the spirit of the act when you isolate the best type grades with the highest protein—and the value of our wheat is set by its protein content and quality of protein. That is what they are buying—protein—and when you isolate a lot of that and send it to one market, giving that market our choice wheat as to protein, you impoverish the great bulk of the wheat that goes overseas when the price is set. The more that is done the more you impoverish the rest of the wheat, and that is a violation of the spirit of the act. I understand it is being done right along.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No grain is special binned without the consent of the owner, and that ensures the premium to him if there is one. As regards the quantity of wheat special binned during the past season, it has been only about one and one-quarter per cent of the total output, so that it is not very large. As regards my hon. friend's point, that there is no guarantee that the premium goes to the producer, my information is that there shall be no special binning under the act without the consent of the owner, whoever he may be, whether producer or anyone else. He gets the premium, and that is the intention.

Mr. VALLANCE: No; the minister is entirely wrong. The grower does not get it.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I said owner.

Mr. VALLANCE: I contend that the grower does not get it. Once it passes out of his hands the owner gets the premium because of the privilege of special binning. Under the act it is regrettable that we do not grade our wheat according to protein content, and until that is done you cannot pass the premium on to the grower. The present abuse cannot be prevented under the act as it stands; it is quite legitimate. My point is that you cannot pass the premium on to the grower. I have no doubt that the percentage which the minister has mentioned—one and a quarter per cent—is correct, but still it deteriorates the great bulk of the wheat to that extent. If you take one and a quarter per cent of high protein content out of the wheat the rest of it deteriorates to that extent. I appreciate the point the minister is trying to make, but I contend that you cannot get the benefit to the grower; it goes to the man who buys it from the grower. The elevator may special bin it at the terminus, and that cannot be prevented under the act.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): There is a good deal in what the hon. gentleman says: it all depends on who the owner is. In some instances the commission man probably does not pass it on, but I do not think that is the grain commission's concern. They cannot be charged with the distribution of the premium, but there is a premium and it goes to the owner, whoever he may be. As regards the degradation, by reason of this special binning, of the quantity that goes into the export trade, I agree with the hon. gentleman. But it is permitted by the act and I do not think that any great harm is done where the quantity is so small. I believe that is the opinion of the commission. Of course, if it assumed larger proportions it would be a different matter.

Mr. DONNELLY: Two years ago the different wheat exporting nations—Canada, the United States, the Argentine, and Australia—met at Rome and the secretary of our high commissioner in London attended as Canadian representative. At that meeting it was decided that all exporting nations should have a quota. Well, they did not decide at that time at Rome as to what the quota would be, and they adjourned to London. While they were there, they decided what the quota for the different nations would be. Our representative I understand was a lawyer from Regina. The quotas were set, but everybody came home and they practically decided to break the agreement; at least no one of whom I have knowledge has kept it. We did not sell our quota, but the Argentine republic sold theirs and more than theirs. Then we lent them some of ours, but the Prime Minister told us that we were to get this all back the next year. However the next year we did not get it back and the Argentine republic oversold their quota. We are now told that this commission business and the quota have all gone by the board and that all the money we have put up in this connection has been of no account whatever. I assume the minister will be able to give us a detailed statement in regard to all these matters; how this has happened; why we were told that this quota was to be such a wonderful thing; why it is now all being abandoned and what we are going to do with our quota. I remember seeing somewhere in Hansard this statement made by the Prime Minister:

> In any event it would be merely a loan of a part of our quota until next year, so that we would not lose anything if we made an adjustment with the Argentine.

In other words, we made a loan to the Argentine and were to get it back the following year. When are we going to get this loan back?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Any discussion on this particular question has no reference to the item before us. Furthermore, the quota system broke down because Argentina would not play the game with the other nations.

Mr. BROWN: I think it would be very unkind to compel the minister to give an explanation.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Perhaps I am not as good at explaining as are some other people, but I shall at least do my best. The quota system fell down because another nation did not keep the arrangement.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We did not ourselves.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That may be true, but so far as this department and this appropriation are concerned, we have no responsibility in the matter.

Mr. POULIOT: That is not what the hon. member for Willow Bunch has said—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I know what he said.

Mr. POULIOT: The minister did not understand it. The hon. member for Willow Bunch repeated what has been stated in the house by the Prime Minister, namely, that the quota was a certain quantity of wheat which Canada was allowed to sell and that she loaned part of her quota to Argentina. The question the hon. member for Willow Bunch has just put to the minister is this: First, what is the amount of wheat which was allowed for Canada's quota? Second, what amount was loaned to Argentina? Third, was it given back to Canada? I understood the hon. member very well; I was sitting next to him and I would like the minister to give a clear answer to that. I am ready to act as an interpreter at any time.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The hon. member for Willow Bunch made his question quite clear and I answered it.

As regards this question of mixing, the hon. member for Melville said that he had a very strong suspicion that the law was being broken in connection with the four top grades. My information from the grain commission is that there is no mixing in the four top grades, and unless my hon. friend has evidence, the question should not be pursued further. If he has evidence, he ought in justice to all concerned to submit it and I will ask him to be good enough to do so.

Mr. DONNELLY: I want to know plainly the position in which we stand at present in regard to the quota. Is this all gone by the board?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I shall have to get the information for the hon. gentleman; I do not have it now.

Mr. DONNELLY: I notice there is an increase of about $170,000 in this estimate. How much did this conference at Rome cost us? How much money did we pay into this?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): It is not dealt with in this appropriation at all.

Mr. DONNELLY: What appropriation does it come under?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I shall have to find out; it does not come under my department.

Mr. DONNELLY: It is the marketing of wheat.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The marketing of wheat does not come under the grain act, and nobody knows that better than does the hon. member for Willow Bunch.

Mr. DONNELLY: Does the minister mean to tell me that the Department of Trade and Commerce has nothing to do with the marketing of wheat?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): We have nothing to do with that.

Mr. DONNELLY: What department does it come under?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I shall have to find out. We do not sell wheat. So far as I know, no department of the government has anything to do with the marketing of wheat.

Mr. DONNELLY: We understand that perfectly, but on the other hand the regulations concerning the marketing of wheat come under the Department of Trade and Commerce and no other department that I know of. This is something new to us that is taking place.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The Department of Trade and Commerce has to do with the grading and warehousing of wheat. Any marketing of wheat that is going on in this country is under the auspices of the selling agency and that is all I have to say in regard to that.

Mr. DONNELLY: That selling agency has existed only since it was put into operation by the present government. We have had private individuals marketing wheat for years and years, and there is no doubt that has all come under the Department of Trade and Commerce. We have always said that the marketing of grain should be under the Department of Agriculture instead of the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. POULIOT: It comes under the Post Office Department; it is sold by parcel post.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The wheat selling agency was set up not by this government but by the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers, Limited, commonly known as the wheat pool, and all this government has to do with the matter is in connection with the guarantees given to the banks under the relief act.

Mr. DONNELLY: The pool agencies in the west do not cover more than half the quantity of wheat in western Canada. What happens to the rest? Do they dump it into the ocean or what do they do with it?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): It goes out through the export agencies.

Mr. DONNELLY: What department does that come under?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): It does not come under any department; it is free from government control.

Mr. BROWN: I just want to call attention to what the minister has said. He has said that the marketing of wheat does not come under his department or any other department of government. Perhaps hon. members will remember the charge that was made against the Minister of Trade and Commerce in the late government and the taunt that was hurled at him very frequently when he said that the government was not marketing wheat; that the wheat was marketing itself.

Mr. MANION: No; the hon. gentleman said that he was not interested in the marketing of wheat. That is slightly different.

Mr. MACKKENZIE (Vancouver): The word "interested" was not used by the then minister.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend was not in the house at that time and I was.

Mr. BROWN: Nevertheless the taunt has been hurled against the then Minister of Trade and Commerce, that he said he had nothing to do with the marketing of wheat. That was the situation at that time. Now we talk about the marketing of wheat being under the sales agency, but there was no sales agency then. The other night when the hon. member for Lethbridge was discussing this matter he was entirely out of order or I would have taken the question up myself at the time, when he stated that this government had marketed more wheat every year since 1930 than the former government did in the last year they were in power; that was the crop of 1929-30. At that time if the former government or anybody else had undertaken to interfere with the marketing of wheat, the wheat pools and all the grain companies would have been down upon them like a ton of bricks; they would absolutely have refused to allow the government to have anything to do with the marketing of wheat, and it was under those circumstances the former Minister of Trade and Commerce made the statement he did. It has been entirely unfair for hon. members opposite to make the taunt as they have so frequently done in regard to the words that were used by the former Minister of Trade and Commerce. Now the present Minister of Trade and Commerce says that the marketing of wheat does not come under his department or under any department of government. It is true that a different situation prevails now from that which prevailed when the crop of 1929 was being handled, but it was not until about February, 1930, that the marketing of wheat began to assume a serious aspect. It was at that time the former Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Malcolm) made the statement he did. I call attention to this because it is an entirely unfair charge against Mr. Malcolm, and I think the situation should be understood by the committee.

Mr. DONNELLY: I want to clear this up. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said that neither his department nor any department of the government had anything to do with the marketing of wheat. If they have nothing to do with the marketing of wheat why was the government sending a commissioner to Rome to set a quota? Why did they go to London and set a quota? Why are they interfering at all with the marketing of wheat? How much did all this cost the government, or why was it done, if they had nothing to do with the marketing of wheat?

Mr. HANSON (York Sunbury): The hon. gentleman has put a very narrow construction on what I said. The government of Canada, representing the people of Canada, is very much interested in the marketing of the wheat crop. Furthermore the government of this country has placed the credit of the country behind the wheat growers. Is the hon. member opposed to that?

Mr. DONNELLY: I shall answer it when the time comes. I am asking the minister a question now.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): As far as the Department of Trade and Commerce is concerned, under the administration of the Canada Grain Act we are not in the business of marketing wheat but we are in the business of warehousing, grading and whatever is provided for under the Canada Grain Act.

Mr. VALLANCE: It is rather regrettable that this discussion about the marketing of wheat has come up. Whether the minister likes it or not, whether any department of the government is responsible for the marketing of wheat or not, power was given by this government to a body already in existence to market the wheat of Canada.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No, that is not a correct statement.

Mr. VALLANCE: Oh, but it was. You are operating to-day under the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited, and the power was given by this government to that body to operate. I think it was pretty cute, if I may say so, for the government to give that function to that body and leave no department of government responsible to parliament. There have been only two occasions on which we might deal with the whole matter, and one of them is past. That one was when the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) the other day was putting through the relief bill, under which John I. McFarland operates, and it went right through from resolution to third reading.

Mr. GORDON: I answered all your questions.

Mr. VALLANCE: We had an assurance from the Minister of Labour that the resolution now standing in the Prime Minister's name on the order paper would come before this chamber, and on that assurance we abstained at that time from discussing the wheat situation. I am rather of the opinion that the grain board resolution will not come before the house.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): Where do you get that opinion?

Mr. VALLANCE: Your are operating now for another year under the authority you have operated on up to now. Why should the government subject itsef to the criticism which will be levelled at it when it asks that this grain board be set up?

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): Because we are not afraid of it.

Mr. VALLANCE: Then why did the minister not avail himself of the opportunity to give the information demanded?

Mr. GORDON: I gave all the information asked for.

Mr. VALLANCE: You gave us no information.

Mr. GORDON: You were satisfied.

Mr. VALLANCE: No, we were not.

Mr. GORDON: Well, you looked satisfied.

Mr. VALLANCE: The Minister of Labour and the government are satisfied with what happened the other day when he put through that relief legislation. I will wager with the minister now that this grain board bill will never come up, because you are not going to reveal your hand. I was one of those, as I told the minister when he was putting through his relief legislation, who believed up to this time that it might not be in the interests of the grower to make the position public. But what right has this government to ask the people of Canada for a vote of confidence with no knowledge of what has happened through the activities of John I. McFarland? I know the Minister of Trade and Commerce cannot give it; I do not think it is fair to ask him. When he says no department of government is responsible he is right, and that is what I object to. There is no possible way in which we can get at the operations of John I. McFarland in wheat unless it is through the Department of External Affairs headed by the Prime Minister.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No, the hon. gentleman is wrong, if he will allow me. In the first place his statement that this government has authorized the wheat selling agency is fundamentally wrong.

Mr. VALLANCE: Tell us what you said.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): If you will refer to the evidence given before the banking committee last year, a statement was there made by John I. McFarland which I understand has never been challenged, that he was asked by the directorate of the wheat selling agency to accept the position which he did accept and still occupies. That agency of course could not carry on the operations which he is and has been carrying on without some backing from the country's credit, and it was got through the relief act. That is where the matter to which hon. gentlemen are referring ought to be discussed. As to whether the information should be made available to the public at this time, I hold the opinion the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance) held about a year ago in the banking and commerce committee. The hon. gentleman said he would not take the responsibility of revealing to the public just what the commitments were, in view of what was taking place outside of Canada.

Mr. VALLANCE: I said it here.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): And the position has not been altered.

Mr. VALLANCE: Oh yes, it has.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Not materially. We shall have to agree to disagree about that. I do not understand that it has been altered. There may be a difference in degree, but I doubt that.

Mr. VALLANCE: Does the minister believe that it is fair to the people of Canada to ask them to vote confidence in the present government without a knowledge of what the operations of John I. McFarland amount to?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Yes, I think so. I think the people of western Canada who have been reaping the benefits of Mr. McFarland's operations—

Mr. VALLANCE: If any.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not think there are two opinions among the growers there as far as I have heard. Those people will vote confidence in the government because of the operations of John I. McFarland. It is my view that this discussion is entirely out of order under this item.

Mr. VALLANCE: So do I. I entirely agree with the minister.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: I have risen now for the thirteenth time, and I hope that by so doing I shall not elicit an unlucky answer from the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I wish to vary the question asked by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) in regard to strikes of farmers in Alberta. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is no doubt aware that there was a strike there that lasted through November and December in the vicinity of Mundare, Two Hills, Smokey Lake, Lanuke, St. Paul, Lake Bellevue, Kaleland, Vilna, Bellis, Edward, Rich Valley and Hoadley. The grievances were concerned with (1), dockage; (2), grading; (3), installation of cleaners in elevators, and (4), a price commensurate with the cost of production. As the fourth item does not come within the purview of the board of grain commissioners I do not think it fair to ask the minister to make a statement thereon, but so far as the other three items are concerned I would ask the minister what stand the Department of Trade and Commerce has taken on this and also what the stand of the board of grain commissioners is with respect to these matters. I also know that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has received communications from certain bodies in that district in regard to the spread between certain grades of wheat as well as the spread between street prices and spot prices, which more accurately represent the true value of the grain. Furthermore it was resolved that legislation should be enacted at the next session of parliament to enable the board of grain commissioners to investigate, and to regulate in the interests of the producer, all matters relating to grain marketing in western Canada. I do not know whether or not the board of grain commissioners have the necessary powers to investigate these matters or, if they have not, whether the minister intends to give those powers to the board, but I should like the minister to make a statement in that regard.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): In regard to the last question, the matter of spreads is outside the jurisdiction of the grain commission at the present moment, but they have filed with the royal commission which is now considering its report—which we hope will be brought in very soon—a brief on the whole subject which makes plain their attitude in regard to this matter. I have not had the privilege of reading that brief, so I cannot speak of its contents, but this is a matter that was referred to the royal commission as being within the purview of its inquiry. I do not know whether or not they will make a recommendation on it; we will have to wait and see.

With regard to the strikes that took place in the hon. gentleman's constituency, correspondence has passed between the hon. gentleman and myself, and a statement has been prepared which I desire to place on record for his benefit and the benefit of members of the house generally.

In November, 1934, the board of grain commissioners received complaints from a number of shipping points in northern Alberta, including Mundare, in regard to the marketing of the crop of that year. The complaints had to do with four different matters: first, dockage; second, grading; third, installation of cleaners in country elevators, and fourth, a price commensurate with the cost of production. The last complaint, namely a price commensurate with the cost of production, was clearly outside the jurisdiction of the board, but in order to be fully informed the board held a number of meetings throughout the area affected.

The situation at Mundare appeared to be the most critical; the complaints had assumed the form of a strike in which certain farmers had agreed not to deliver their grain to the elevators at Mundare or other shipping points. They also are said to have picketed the roads to prevent other farmers from delivering their grain. The board decided to make a thorough investigation of the situation at Mundare. A cut-off was made at the same time in each of the eight elevators at that point. Inspection officials were sent in to grade the stocks in store. The investigation revealed that only in one instance did the grade of the elevator agent agree with the grade of the board's inspectors. In all other instances the agents of the elevator companies had over-graded; that is to say they had given the grain a higher grade than in the opinion of the board's inspector it was entitled to receive. If the grain had been shipped as of November 15 the companies would have stood to lose approximately $3,200. As a result of the investigation the board could come to no other conclusion than that the complaint at Mundare with respect to grading was not well founded.

In regard to the demand of the farmers that country elevators be required to instal grain cleaners, after assembling all the information available the board came to the conclusion that in northern Alberta at the present time the dockage in grain is of such a character that it would not be economical for the farmers to pay a reasonable charge for cleaning. At a later date the board presented its finding at a public meeting at Mundare, to a large number of farmers and others, and in a short time the strike was lifted and marketing conditions became normal.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I wish to bring to the attention of the minister a matter of a different nature which, strictly speaking, possibly should not be considered as coming under this item. It should have been taken up under the vote for the research council, but it so happened that that vote slipped through here one evening, because of the enthusiastic speed of the official opposition, and some of us did not get a chance to discuss it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: You must have been asleep.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I said "enthusiastic speed", which is not disparaging. Perhaps the matter I am going to bring up will have a soothing effect on the official opposition; it is the question of using wheat to make alcohol. After all the turbulence we have witnessed perhaps this is a good time to bring in this matter for the good effect it may have.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Speak for yourself.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: There is a great deal of wheat in store at the present time; in fact our surplus is becoming rather alarming in quantity, and of course the west keeps on producing wheat, so that people are led to cast about for various ways of taking care of this surplus. I know the best way is to sell it and ship it overseas, but in recent years markets have not been available, and during the past few years the price of wheat has been very low, so perhaps this is an opportune time to raise this question, and with the minister's consent I will endeavour to place some facts before the committee.

There is a very great deal of gasoline used in Canada for motor fuel purposes. According to my information, based on statistics for 1932 and 1934, approximately 500,000,000 gallons of gasoline are used in Canada every year. Practically all the raw material used for making that refined gasoline is imported. In 1934 we imported crude and partially refined petroleum oil to the extent of 1,063,539,693 gallons, at a cost of over $25,000,000. That amount of money went out of the country, chiefly to the United States, Colombia, Dutch West Indies, Peru, Venezuela and Trinidad. The first cost, of course, went to these various countries, while a small share, amounting to a little over $300,000, went to our government in duty. In addition, in that year there were 15,108,093 gallons of refined gasoline imported, at a total cost of $1,706,796, coming chiefly from the United States and Dutch West Indies. So it will be seen that there have been large expenditures for motor fuel purposes, most of the money going outside Canada, and in addition in 1934 we had to import tetraethyl lead, which is mixed with gasoline to do away with what are referred to as the knocking qualities in gasoline. We imported 1,398,928 pounds of tetraethyl lead, at a cost of over $1,000,000; this came entirely from the United States. In 1934, therefore, we paid out to other countries something over $27,000,000, in addition to $793,000 in duties to this government, or a total of over $28,000,000 for this purpose.

I am giving these figures, Mr. Chairman, to show what large sums of money go out of our own country in order to supply us with our gasoline requirements. The question of making alcohol from wheat has been investigated very thoroughly. I have here a report of the national research council dated May, 1934, in which they give a detailed account of their investigations in connection with this matter. They tell us that one bushel of wheat will produce approximately two gallons of alcohol. Their proposal as outlined in this report is that we could very well use a ten per cent mixture of alcohol with our gasoline. That would mean ten per cent of 500,000,000 gallons, or 50,000,000 gallons of alcohol which might very well be mixed with our gasoline for motor fuel purposes. To produce that 50,000,000 gallons of absolute alcohol would require 25,000,000 bushels of wheat. Now if it can be shown that that alcohol can be produced at a cost that is not too exorbitant, it will perhaps appeal to us that it would be something at least worth trying.

This gentleman who operates under the national research council has given us the conversion cost, that is the cost of converting wheat into alcohol, and he takes care to include every little detail. In the first item he has overhead, depreciation, taxes and return on investment, and the cost per gallon under that item is 4.5 cents. The second item is operating charges, labour, fuel, water, chemicals, barley, and so on; that comes to 6.5 cents; dehydrating and denaturing 2 cents. The total cost is 13 cents per gallon. You will notice that he takes in every detail, even allowing for a return on the investment, and of course we know that in recent years a great many concerns have been carrying on without any return at all on their investment. He also points out that in a large plant, and under favourable conditions, this cost of 13 cents per gallon might be reduced by two or three cents. He points out that no allowance has been made for by-products such as yeast or carbon dioxide, which if sold would reduce that cost of 13 cents.

Now take the matter of wheat prices. In recent years the price of wheat has been very low, and that is what opens up the thought that we might use wheat to advantage for this purpose. From the bulletin I have here I find that over the four years, 1931, 1932, 1933, 1934, the average price of wheat in Saskatchewan and Alberta was as follows:

	Saskatchewan cents	Alberta cents
1931	38	36
1932	35	32

So we see that the price of wheat has been extremely low in those four years. The research council has taken the three years, 1930, 1931 and 1932, and they have given us the average price in those years of No. 1 northern and No. 5 wheat. The price of No. 5 in 1930 averaged 51 cents; 1931, 46 cents; 1932, 39 cents. They point out that No. 5 wheat is very useful for the making of alcohol; in fact, it does not need to be a high grade wheat. The lower grade wheat serves fairly well, while it does not produce as much alcohol per bushel. I think it would be fair to assume that the average price of No. 5 wheat would be 50 cents a bushel in view of what prices have been over the past few years. We find that in the province of Manitoba the use of alcohol in the way suggested a ten per cent mixture, would increase the price of motor fuel by 2.7 cents per gallon; in Saskatchewan it would increase the price by 2.5 cents per gallon, and in Alberta by 3 cents per gallon. They point out that the domestic freight rates are so high for wheat moving to British Columbia that it might be cheaper to manufacture the alcohol in Alberta and ship it to British Columbia, and so they do not give us any price for that province. In Ontario, allowing for the shipping of the wheat from the west to the east, the increase in price would be 3.9 cents per gallon, and in Quebec and the maritimes it would be practically the same. Taking the average for the various provinces we find that the increase in price would be about 3 cents per gallon for a motor fuel with a ten per cent mixture of alcohol added to the gasoline. Let us take that figure and consider what it would mean spread over the whole dominion. In British Columbia it would mean an increased cost to the purchasers of motor fuel of $1,170,000; in Alberta, an increase of $902,000; in Saskatchewan, an increase of $714,000; in Manitoba, an increase of $700,000; in Ontario an increase of $8,260,000; in Quebec, $3,276,000; in the maritimes, $1,260,000. So that the total increase in the cost of the total quantity of gasoline consumed in one year would be $16,282,000. That may look like a large sum of money to put upon the shoulders of the users of motor fuel, but when we remember that approximately half of that $16,000,000 odd goes into the pockets of the farmers of Canada and the balance into lake and rail freight, elevator charges, manufacturing costs, freight on alcohol, and so on, it does not look so terribly extravagant, because a few minutes ago we pointed out that over $28,000,000 was being sent outside the country for the purpose of supplying us with our motor fuel.

I want to give some of the benefits that would come from a mixture of alcohol with our gasoline. Perhaps one of the most important benefits is obtained from the anti-knock qualities of gasoline when mixed with alcohol. That is the reason that refiners of gasoline have to import tetraethyl lead to mix with gasoline to eliminate the knocking properties which gasoline naturally has. By mixing absolute alcohol with the gasoline it is not necessary to use tetraethyl lead. In fact, we are told by these research men that the use of alcohol has a better effect on the gasoline than the use of tetraethyl lead.

Another advantage would be that it would reduce the formation of carbon in the engine, reduce the oil consumption of the engine, and give a longer life to the valves and the engine parts in general due to the smoother operation. While we have no absolute figures or estimates on these points, that is the conclusion of the research council as to the effect of mixing alcohol with gasoline. Also, Mr. Chairman, it would reduce our imports considerably, thus helping our trade balance. Another important point in its favour is that it would tend to give an impetus to the distilling business in Canada. In 1933 we had eighteen distilleries in Canada, which produced a little over 3,500,000 gallons of absolute alcohol.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): I do not wish to interfere with the hon. member's remarks, but unless he has the consent of the committee he is certainly out of order.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I agree, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member's remarks are out of order, but he was good enough to write me a letter saying that he intended bringing this matter up. I have no objection, and with the consent of the committee I would ask that he be allowed to proceed.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I have no objection to the hon. member proceeding, but I hope the minister will show the same courtesy to the rest of the members.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I shall be courteous to everyone.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: The minister is very good natured and I thank him for it.

Mr. DUFF: It is not only the minister who is good natured. Before the hon. member proceeds I think he owes hon. gentlemen on this side an apology, as he can proceed only with their consent. We shall be glad to make the consent unanimous if an apology is forthcoming.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I shall be glad to accommodate the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff). I am ready to apologize or do anything else in order to keep going.

I was referring to the good effects which might be expected to accrue from the use of alcohol in gasoline, and the last one I mentioned was the benefit which the distilling business would gain. We have eighteen distilleries which produced 3,500,000 gallons in 1933, and if provision were made for the production of 50,000,000 gallons, there would be a great impetus to the business as well as an increased pay-roll. There would also be provided a new domestic market for 25,000,000 bushels of wheat as well as for a considerable quantity of barley.

There is another important point to be kept in mind. We are told that the reserves of gasoline are not inexhaustible and that as they gradually decrease there would be a rise in the price of gasoline. Some authorities predict that this will come about within the next ten years. I should like to give certain facts in connection with other countries. At the present time England is erecting a plant for the hydrogenation of coal to produce gasoline for fuel. It is expected that 30,000,000 gallons per year will be produced. This fuel will cost from 16 to 18 cents per gallon while gasoline costs only six cents per gallon delivered in British ports. In order to assist the coal industry the British government is bonusing this hydrogenation process to the extent of eight cents per gallon. This will encourage the use of British coal to produce a fuel within the country rather than to be dependent upon imports.

There are eleven countries in which motor fuel containing alcohol is being marketed. Germany is making alcohol from potatoes and molasses and mixing it with her motor fuel. France is making it from cane and beet molasses while Italy is making it from molasses and grapes. Sweden is producing alcohol from sulphite liquor; Czechoslovakia is producing it from potatoes and molasses; the Philippines use molasses in this process while Latvia uses potatoes. Australia, Cuba and South Africa use molasses in the process. Hungary is producing alcohol but I have not the product they use. The use of alcohol varies from ten to twenty-five per cent. There are several other countries considering the use of alcohol in their motor fuel, such as Brazil, Chile, Austria, Equador, Poland and the United States. The products to be used include molasses, potatoes and corn. India and the Irish Free State are providing government assistance for the production of motor alcohol.

Having placed these facts before the committee, the minister and the government—and for that matter the official opposition, who hope in the not distant future to be returned to power—I should like to suggest that this matter be considered and carried beyond the experimental work being done by the national research council. This council has done excellent work in bringing these facts before the public and I commend to any hon. member who may be interested the reading of this book. I suggest that a further step be taken and that alcohol be manufactured on a larger scale. Perhaps this may not be done to the extent of producing 50,000,000 gallons, but I think it should be tried out in order to test the facts brought out by the research council. If the advantages are such as are pointed out in this book it may be that none of us would object to paying three cents more per gallon for our gasoline when we obtain a fuel of a superior quality. When the refineries commenced using tetraethyl in their gasoline they charged the customer two cents per gallon extra because of its superior quality. If the mixing of alcohol will provide a fuel of a superior quality, an extra charge of three cents per gallon will not be of much importance. I thank the minister and the committee for giving me the opportunity of placing these facts before them.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Mr. Chairman, I shall not detain the committee very long in continuing this discussion. As I am reminded by the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff), it has often been said that gasoline and alcohol do not mix. However, we are not using that statement in the same sense as the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Carmichael). This whole matter was the subject of an investigation by the national research council and a memorandum has been prepared on the possible utilization of grain alcohol in motor fuel in Canada. The first finding was that the manufacture of alcohol from wheat offers no technical difficulty. Second, they found that the use of such alcohol in admixture with gasoline for motor fuel is technically possible, as demonstrated by its continued sale for this purpose in France, Germany and other countries. Third, alcohol cannot be made as cheaply as gasoline by any process known at the present time. For this reason the blending of alcohol with gasoline is bound to increase the cost of motor fuel. Four, other things being equal, the addition of ten per cent of alcohol would be expected to increase the cost of motor fuel by at least three cents per gallon on an average for all Canada. This figure is based on the use of No. 5 wheat at a price of sixty cents per bushel at Fort William, approximately the present price. About 25,000,000 bushels of wheat would be required annually. Five, the addition of alcohol to gasoline improves the anti-knock qualities and lessens carbon formation. These advantages are partly offset by certain unfavourable characteristics. Six, in order to produce the alcohol required for a ten per cent blend, it would be necessary to increase the capacity of the distilling industry. Seven, it is believed that motor fuel made by the hydrogenation of Canadian coal would be considerably cheaper than motor alcohol made from wheat costing sixty cents per bushel. I shall be glad to direct the attention of the officials of the research council to the speech of the hon. member for Kindersley and ask them to look into the matter with a view to having further investigations made.

Mr. DUFF: Is it not true that cars in which alcohol is used go faster than those using gasoline?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am not an expert and I do not know.

Mr. DONNELLY: The hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance) referred to the activities of Mr. John I. McFarland and this government in the wheat market. I desire to ask the minister if he will assure the committee that an opportunity will be given before the end of the session to discuss the activities of Mr. McFarland and the government in the wheat market. If the minister can give us that assurance I shall content myself with correcting just one statement which he made. The minister stated a while ago that all that this government did was to guarantee the account of Canadian Co-operative Wheat Producers Limited at the bank and had nothing whatever to do with sustaining the market or with speculating or gambling in wheat. I want to show him that that statement is wrong when viewed in the light of a statement made by the former Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens). On March 28, 1933, the former minister, when dealing with this matter, said that he recognized this fact but appreciating the loss which would be entailed, particularly to the producer, the government authorized John I. McFarland to purchase grain for future deliveries. I understood the minister to say that the government had not authorized John I. McFarland, that it was the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited that authorized him. But the former Minister of Trade and Commerce states definitely that it was the government that authorized him.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not understand that statement to be correct; I understand the statement to be correct which I made, that Mr. McFarland was appointed by the selling agency and that all that this government did as such was to pass an order in council under the relief act guaranteeing the banks against ultimate loss through his operations.

[Mr. R. B. Hanson.]

Mr. DONNELLY: I am giving the words of the former Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not understand it in that light.

Mr. DONNELLY: I cannot read it in any other light. What does the minister say now in regard to the possibility of discussing the activities of John I. McFarland?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I have every reason to believe that the resolution standing in the name of the Prime Minister will be proceeded with, and when that is done there will be ample opportunity to discuss the whole question. The present intention of the government is to proceed with that bill.

Mr. DONNELLY: If it is not proceeded with will the minister assure us that we shall have an opportunity to discuss the subject?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I cannot give that assurance. The proper place to have discussed this whole question—and I believe it was discussed—was under the relief act, because technically this whole question comes under the relief legislation.

Mr. DONNELLY: The minister will remember that for three or four years we have discussed under this very item the activities of the government and of John I. McFarland.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am not aware of that, but I take the hon. member's word for it without any verification because he has been in the past much more interested in the subject than I have been. But technically the proper place to have discussed the item was under the relief act.

Mr. VALLANCE: I agree with the minister that possibly this is not the proper time to discuss the subject, but as the hon. member for Willow Bunch has pointed out, it was discussed in 1932 in connection with the estimates. I have here volume 2 of the session of 1932, and on April 15 you will find at pages 2078-9 and elsewhere trade and commerce supply, and the whole question was then under discussion. I will read a few extracts:

Mr. Young: Last year the government gave a guarantee of a minimum price of wheat. Has the minister any statement to make to the committee as to how the government stands now as a result of that guarantee?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That in itself was not a quite correct statement. There never was any other guarantee given except that against ultimate loss.

Mr. VALLANCE: The minister's predecessor took the same position that he does, but only up to a certain point. Let me quote his reply to the hon. member for Weyburn:

Mr. Stevens: There was no government guarantee of the price of wheat. My hon. friend is perhaps giving a wrong impression.

I quote that to show that a discussion did take place. Now John I. McFarland is to-day performing a dual function, both as head of the sales agency of the pools and as stabilizer for this government, and it is the stabilization effort of John I. McFarland that we want to get at. When the minister says that we should have discussed the subject under the relief measure, I think he is right. But we had an assurance from his colleague the Minister of Labour, because of the position I pointed out, that one of two men should be on the floor of the house, either the Prime Minister, who we are sorry is not able to be here, or John I. McFarland; and because neither of them was here —Mr. McFarland was not sitting in front of the minister, and the Prime Minister was absent—the Minister of Labour was asked for the assurance which the hon. member for Willow Bunch has requested again, that the resolution now standing in the name of the Prime Minister would be proceeded with for the setting up of a grain board. And the Minister of Labour assured us that it would. If the Minister of Trade and Commerce gives us the same assurance, I am absolutely in agreement with him that the proper time to discuss the subject is when you are setting up a grain board, inasmuch as Mr. McFarland's activities cannot continue if a grain board is set up. But that is why I make the statement that a grain board will never be set up, because we have the assurance in connection with the relief act that John I. McFarland may operate for another year.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I have no doubt that the opening statement of the hon. gentleman is correct, that this subject has previously been discussed under this item; I have not the slightest doubt that the discussion did take place. But on that point I can only reaffirm the position I have already taken, that any discussion of this matter was not germane to the inquiry, though I never raised that as an objection. With respect to the assurance which hon. gentlemen have asked me to give, I can only repeat that it is the government's policy to proceed with the resolution standing in the name of the Prime Minister for the formation of a grain board, and ample opportunity will be given when that is reached to discuss the whole question. That is the position I take, and I can give no positive assurance. But I know of no other line of policy on the part of the government, and I am not prepared to say that any consideration has been given any other course.

Mr. VALLANCE: To-day, on the orders of the day, I asked the acting leader of the government when we might expect the resolution now standing in the name of the Prime Minister to come before the house, and we got the same evasive reply which we have now received from the minister. I realize the minister's position; he is only administering a department of government. But we did expect that the leader of the government would give us some assurance to-day in reply to the question put to him. I have nothing further to say.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The resolution standing in the name of the Prime Minister has not been proceeded with on account of his absence; that is the reason and nothing else. It is hoped that the Prime Minister will be in a position to take care of the matter himself before prorogation. That is the hope of the government.

Mr. VALLANCE: I am prompted to say another word. If you glance at the order paper you will see that there are two or three items standing in the name of the Prime Minister. Two have been proceeded with by other ministers, and I think that the acting Prime Minister should be in a position to give us an assurance, in view of the fact that the other two pieces of legislation standing in the name of the Prime Minister have already been proceeded with, that possibly some other minister may proceed with the resolution on which it proposed to base a bill for the establishment of a grain board.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Because other items standing in the name of the Prime Minister have been proceeded with by other ministers, it does not follow that this will or will not; I do not think there is any relation between the two. But it is desirable that the Prime Minister should proceed with this, and that is the hope and expectation of the government.

Mr. GERSHAW: This item calls for $1,900,000. I understand that a charge is made for each bushel of grain handled under the act; and in the budget, in the list of non-tax revenues, there are items each year roughly corresponding to the amount of this vote.

How much per bushel does the government charge under this act? Is it enough to cover the administration? Is there a surplus or a deficit?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The charge is $1 a thousand bushels for inspection and $1 a thousand bushels for weighing, and in a good year there is a little credit balance; in a poor year it is the other way. Generally speaking the charges take care of the operation of the act. I could give the hon. gentleman the exact figures for the year if he desires them, but they all appear in the public accounts for previous years and we have the latest figures.

Mr. SPENCER: May I ask the minister a question with regard to garnet wheat? As I came in I thought I heard him say that there was a possibility of the legislation passed last year not being put into operation for this year.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not think I said that there was a possibility.

Mr. SPENCER: I would like to get exactly what the minister said.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I said that the government's intention at present was to let the legislation go into effect, but that representations had been made with respect to holding up the operation of the act for a period of time, and the question is now really being considered by the government. None of the reasons which occasioned a change in the statute last year has altered. The present consideration has been given because I am advised by the board of grain commissioners that in the event of considerable quantities of No. 2 northern wheat being in store on July 31, the quantity being wholly problematical, considerable difficulty will be occasioned by this fact. It is therefore on the grounds of expediency only that the postponement of last year's legislation is even being considered. There is in this year's estimates an item of $75,000 which is intended to finance the shipment of commercial quantities of garnet wheat in an effort to establish the commercial spread of pure garnet with the regular class grades. At the moment I am not able to say that a decision has been reached one way or the other with respect to garnet. We do not think we have to make a decision now, but if it is decided not to do anything, of course the act will automatically come into operation on the first day of August next. If it is decided to do anything, due notice will be given.

[Mr. Gershaw.]

Mr. SPENCER: The reason I bring this question up is that in the west spring will probably break in about two weeks. The western farmers have been led to believe it will be wise for them on account of the legislation passed last year to get into some other wheat, but if that legislation is not going to come into operation, many of them would like to get garnet seed wheat as soon as they can.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): A decision will be reached before seeding begins. If it is decided not to do anything, the farmers all know this legislation is on the statute books and it will automatically go into effect.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: It is rather surprising to find such ambiguity thrown into this matter—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): There is no ambiguity.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: —after all the time put in last year in the committee on agriculture investigating and hearing evidence on the question. After evidence from those who are expert in the matter, the act was amended and a year's extension of time was given in order that no hardship might be worked on the growers of garnet wheat. I am surprised to hear this expression of opinion on the part of the minister that now there is a possibility of the act not becoming operative.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is an inference the hon. gentleman is drawing. I said that the matter was being considered; I did not intend to say that the government had come to any conclusion. The elevator people have made representations to the government and these of course have to be listened to as representations coming from any responsible source have to be listened to. But so far the government has not changed its attitude with regard to the matter just for the very reason the hon. gentleman has stated. My information is that this question was debated for two full years in the committee on agriculture; that parliament in its wisdom passed this amendment in 1934, and that due notice was given; it was held off for over a year in order that those vitally interested might inform themselves and conform to the decision of parliament after all representations had been heard. The only point to my mind is: should we give any effect to the representations that have been made to us? So far it has not been the intention of the government to do so.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: As a representative from a farming community that is very much interested in maintaining the high standard and grades of our marquis wheat, I want to emphasize the advisability of letting the legislation come into effect in due course. Ample consideration was given to the question by all sides in the agriculture committee over a period of a couple of years, and I do not like the idea of a consideration that might change what was the considered judgment of the agriculture committee given by a large majority.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am very glad to have the hon. gentleman's opinion, and due weight will be given to it.

Mr. COOTE: In regard to a question which I raised a few minutes ago, that is the special binning of high protein wheat, are the records of the board of grain commissioners kept in such a way that it would be possible to find out the quantity of such wheat that is handled by the various elevators?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am informed that it would be possible to have that information. I am not sure that I have it here. Of the 822,368 bushels which were specially binned in terminal elevators at the head of the lakes from August 1, 1934, to February 8, 1935, the Bawlf elevator had 88,026 bushels; the federal elevator, 174,911, and the Saskatchewan pool number seven, 559,431 bushels, making the total mentioned. The total receipts at the head of the lakes during the same period was 62,111,779·3 bushels.

Mr. COOTE: Are any figures given for the McCabe elevator, that is the special one that was leased by the government last year?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The commission have no record of any special binning there, but if the hon. gentleman thinks the matter of importance we will get the information. It is a semi-public elevator and I think the information can be obtained.

Mr. COOTE: I shall put the question on the order paper later.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Can the minister say how many public terminal elevators there are now at the head of the lakes?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am informed that there are no public terminal elevators; they are all semi-public; that is, the government is not operating any elevators at the head of the lakes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: The government elevator that they have recently leased to the McCabe Elevator Company was the last terminal elevator at the head of the lakes?

Mr. POULIOT: I wish to make my position clear with regard to the question that was asked of the minister some time ago about the loan of wheat to Argentina. A quota was allotted to Canada for the sale of wheat to Great Britain. That quota is so much, and if Canada is in a position to fill it, it should be filled as long as there is one bushel of wheat in our elevators. That is the way I understand the matter, and according to the reports of the department the warehouses are still full, so that there was some grain left in the elevators although part of our quota was loaned to Argentina. On May 11 of last year, in answer to a question put by a member from Montreal, the Prime Minister admitted that Canada had loaned part of her quota to Argentina. Such action was absurd. He continued to say that he was sure that loan of wheat would be given back to Canada in due course. I want to know whether it has been given back as promised by the Prime Minister last year. I know very well that the minister did not make that loan, but my question is very simple and that is all I want to know from him.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is a very courteous question and I shall be glad to answer in this way: I have not the information before me but I shall be glad to obtain it and send it to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank the minister. I shall not press the matter further at the moment, but I would remind him that on a previous occasion I asked him a question about our exports to England and he gave me the same reply, but I have not yet received the information. I hope I shall have both at the same time.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: In regard to this terminal elevator at Port Arthur, I am told by the minister that the last remaining public terminal elevator at the head of the lakes has been rented by the government to a private concern without any conditions at all as to whether the new tenant is to operate a semi-public or a public terminal. As I think the committee know, the public terminal elevators do not do any mixing of any kind, wheat, oats, barley or anything, but the semi-public terminals, such as that of the McCabe company, sometimes called semi-private, mix everything under the sun except the four grades that are prohibited, and there is grave suspicion that even those grades are not exempt from their mixing practices. In fact the minister has admitted to-night that the special binned wheat in this one-time public government terminal has been shipped out to the United States on the basis of protein content. That is exactly the same thing as mixing. The mixing of different grades of wheat was prohibited in order to prevent the practice of degrading our wheat, deteriorating it down to the very minimum. If you take a lot of the best milling wheat of a certain grade, the average of the rest will not be as good, that is obvious. And the minister has admitted that that is what is going on, the high quality and high protein stuff being switched to the United States and the deteriorated remainder going overseas to the world market where prices are usually established. I wonder if the minister realizes that that public terminal at Port Arthur was put up by a government of his own party, in 1912 I think it was, as security and assurance to those shippers who wanted to store their wheat where they would be sure to get out the same quality as they put in. Now that assurance is gone. Without any reservation or qualification the government, because they were losing a little money on the elevator, have deliberately leased it to a private concern that seems to know everything there is to know about mixing. That is the situation. The minister admits that the law permits the binning of wheat on a protein basis; then he is admitting that the very worst kind of mixing is being practised.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I think I can perhaps make the matter clear to the hon. gentleman. Up to 1930 there was necessity for public elevators for certain reasons, one of which he has just mentioned. But upon the consolidation and revision of the grain act in 1930 the purposes for which public elevators were established by this government ceased to exist. At that time private elevators were made semi-public and the jurisdiction of the board of grain commissioners was extended to them. Therefore the public elevators were not used; they did not get any business. The fact that it was losing money was not the primary or the real reason why the elevator was leased in 1933, although it certainly was losing money. But it was leased because the purpose for which public elevators had been established and existed ended on account of the changed provisions of the act in 1930; at all events that was my advice and I believe it is correct.

With respect to the question of special binning, I think I made it clear that it is and has been for some time perfectly legal. If it is considered a bad practice then the act will have to be amended to prevent it. But it is the opinion of the grain commission—I think I should quote their opinion—that so long as the practice does not exceed its present proportions it does not have any detrimental effect on the quality of our export wheat. Surely the department is entitled to take the advice of the grain commission on that point. If the hon. member were in my place I think he would be guided largely by the expert opinion of the chairman of the grain commission. It is the considered opinion of the commission that so long as the practice does not exceed its present proportions no great harm is being done to our export trade.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is the sort of plausible excuse that is always put up. These practices always start in a small way and get larger and larger until the whole situation is debauched. That is the way it happened in 1917. The very fact that we are having this discussion is evidence that the knowledge is getting out all over that the practice has been engaged in ever since the American market became available—the last three years, the last two years a little more, the last year still more, and the dribble threatens to back into a stream. That practice has again started. It is also being revealed that other dubious practices have started. The ground I take is that the one bulwark that was established as a sort of elevator police measure to guard against this danger has been leased by the government to one of the most skilled mixers of the lot. It is no excuse for the government that because they were losing some money—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is not the excuse.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, it is one of them.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No, that is not the reason.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: You might as well argue for taking the policeman off his beat because there was no particular depredation committed there last night. That is the part this elevator was playing, to see that justice was done to those who wanted to preserve the integrity of their wheat. Now the government have sacrificed that one assurance, the one institution that mixed nothing. I remember the agriculture committee in 1930 made some compromise to secure agreement, but compromises are usually unsatisfactory, and to say to those semi-public terminal elevators now, because the last public one has gone, that they can mix all wheat below

No. 3 northern and all other cereals but cannot mix Nos. 1, 2 and 3 northern or No. 1 hard wheat is just putting temptation right under their noses. All they have to do is turn a tap when they are loading and the belt accepts anything that is shot on to it. Suppose they are loading out a boatload of No. 4; it is quite legitimate to mix that, but mixing No. 3 is illegal. However the least thing will turn the stream and perform the function of mixing.

I do not want to press my good friend the minister upon this matter. I did not make this statement for the purpose of making a charge. I would much rather his predecessor were there, because each year I have been asking about this mixing, and we did not know until quite recently, since the government leased this elevator, that the practice of isolating cargoes on the protein basis to one market, namely the United States, was being followed. This discussion is being carried on in a friendly way, I hope; I would be the last to want to embarrass a new minister. I was a new minister myself once and I know the difficulty of the position, especially on an intricate question such as this. My hon. friend thought I should give some evidence that any mixing was going on, but he has admitted it himself; he says there is "practically no mixing." But that word "practically" is highly elastic, it may cover a multitude of sins. There is mixing in so far as there is degrading—for that is what this type of mixing is—by isolating the extra good to one market, the balance going to the other, and the other being the one that sets the price. If my hon. friend the minister, who I am sure is desirous of getting at some of the salient features of this business, will just examine it, he will find that it is a wrong practice to permit, because there is nothing in the act about grading on the basis of protein. When these people are permitted to do that and rob the balance of any surplus virtue, then they are doing exactly the same thing that was done under the old practice of mixing the grades. It has exactly the same effect and it is violating the spirit of the act, at all events, if not the letter. I do not suppose we will have time for any very thorough investigation this year, but I have seen these cycles before. Every five or six years there is a great commotion against this practice of mixing and deteriorating our grades on the British and other markets. A great protest came from over the water some years ago, why, they were very nearly refusing our wheat certificates at that time, and some of us in this committee worked very hard to remedy the situation. Now it is beginning again in a different way right under our noses, and I hope the minister and his advisers will hearken to what we have to say, because there is no stopping it by inaction once it starts. I have no doubt, from what I have learned, that every terminal elevator, now being a semi-private elevator, carries on this same practice of grading on a protein basis for the United States demand with the exception of the interior terminal elevators on the prairie. Those elevators were placed there largely for extra storage purposes, largely as public terminals, and I am quite sure nothing like this is practised there. Formerly there was no mixing being done in the Port Arthur government terminal elevator, but now the government have deliberately given away or rented their bulwark, their safeguard, their elevator policeman, by renting the Port Arthur elevator to a private concern.

Mr. COOTE: I am not disputing the information given by the minister as to the amount of special or select grains that has been special binned, but may I point out that one shipment was brought to my attention of, as nearly as I can remember—I have not the papers before me—practically 700,000 bushels from one elevator that the minister did not mention, which is more than the total he gave for the three he did mention. I could not help wondering whether the commission have the exact information with regard to the special binning that has taken place.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The remarks of the hon. gentleman in this connection will be noted. I am informed that the chief commissioner believes the figures to be correct. He has not checked them personally, but he has received them from his officials and he believes they are correct, but he will see that they are rechecked.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Live stock, including assistants to fairs and exhibitions, $1,628,302.

Mr. DONNELLY: In connection with this item concerning live stock, either last year or the year before the minister went through the west and at Brandon and I believe some other places announced a new policy in connection with stallions. I asked the minister some questions in this connection but I received no satisfaction whatever; in fact the information was hardly correct, because the changes the minister said had been made were not in accordance with the information I obtained from other sources. I understand, however, that there is some further policy now under which certain stallions have been bought and left at the experimental farms. Will the minister tell us his policy in this connection?

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): In the first place I do not know to what the hon. member refers when he suggests that the policy announced at Brandon was different in any way from the present policy.

Mr. DONNELLY: I did not say it was different from the present policy; I said it was different from the policy in force two years before that.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The announcement at Brandon was that there was to be a change in that policy which might be considered supplementary for the time being until it got under way, when it was contemplated that the policy of club assistance might be radically changed. The policy is this: some of the best horses of the different breeds that could be purchased were placed on certain experimental farms in each of the provinces and it is possible for owners of what are termed premium mares to have the free use of these horses if at the time they give the government an option on the male progeny, which are to be placed with associations having a stipulated number of qualified mares, on the condition that association shall pay half the price. The option is taken at $500, which is subject to change from time to time if it should be considered more advantageous to put up these progeny at public auction. The association pays half the price of the horse and the government stands the other half; if the option price of $500 should continue, then these horses would be made available throughout their lifetime at a cost to the goverment of $250 per horse. A number of Percherons and Clydesdales, and only one Belgian, have been purchased up to the present.

Mr. DONNELLY: When were these horses bought? When did you begin to buy them and how many have you bought up to the present time?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The first one, a colt called Don Laet, was purchased in the spring of 1933, in Ohio, and it is stationed at Morden, Manitoba. The next was Chief Laet, owned by Michigan State college, which was purchased at the international exhibition, 1933. That horse is stationed at Lethbridge. Another Percheron Mel Laet the second, is stationed at Fredericton. Another Percheron, Black Diamond, was purchased at Ste. Anne de la Pocatière. A number of Clydesdales were purchased in Scotland in 1934. One of them, Windlaw Gayman, a five year old horse, remains at the experimental farm at Ottawa. He was a proven sire in Scotland. Strathmore James is at Lacombe, Alberta. Woodbank Agent is at Brandon, Manitoba, and Muirton Tide is in Saskatchewan at the Indian Head experimental farm. The Belgian was purchased at the international from the Michigan State college. It is to be placed in the province of Quebec.

Mr. DONNELLY: I just want to bring the minister's attention to the fact that on February 28, 1934, I asked him the question: Has the dominion changed or improved or extended its horse club policy, and if so what are the changes? I also asked if any stallions had been purchased or options taken under the said scheme, and the reply was, no. Now the minister tells me that they have bought seven.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I think there was a misunderstanding. The hon. member asked two questions. One was, was there a change in the horse clubbing policy? There was no change in that.

Mr. DONNELLY: In the answer which the minister gave a year ago he said that there were certain changes, and he was going to announce them. At that time he also said the policy had not been extended, and now he says it has.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): There was no change at that time so far as the horse club policy was concerned. If there was an error it may have been because of the fact that I was giving one answer and two questions were asked. There was no desire on the part of anyone to state that horses had not been bought if they had been, because the records would be available to anyone.

Mr. DONNELLY: In connection with federal assistance to horse breeding, the minister gave the changes that had taken place in that policy. First he said there was no extension of the policy at all, and then he gave us the changes. Then a year ago he said that horses had not been bought, and now he says that they have been.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No horses were bought under the horse clubbing policy.

Health of Animals, administration of Animal Contagious Diseases Act and Meat and Canned Foods Act, $1,833,189.

Mr. REID: Has the minister any information as to how the experiments in the Fraser valley with regard to diseases of cattle are progressing?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The investigation is still being carried on. No definite conclusions have been arrived at from the information that is available, but investigations and research work is proceeding.

Mr. REID: There is another matter I should like to bring to the minister's attention regarding the controversy that has taken place during the past winter in British Columbia in connection with the pullorum disease of poultry. Regulations were passed in Saskatchewan and Alberta under which no chickens could be imported from British Columbia or elsewhere unless the poultry flocks had been tested for B.W.D. I think that comes under the health of animals branch.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Under live stock.

Mr. REID: In Saskatchewan and Alberta the veterinaries recommended what is known as the long test; I think the minister understands what I mean. That has caused a great deal of misgiving among the poultry men of British Columbia. In British Columbia they have been experimenting to a considerable extent with both tests, and while it is true that the dominion government provided financial assistance this spring so that the poultry men of the province might have their poultry flocks tested free of charge by the long test method, the fact remains that this question so far as our province is concerned is very much in doubt.

May I point out to the minister that the poultry men of British Columbia have made many tests in the matter, and while there is no infallible test for pullorum disease—I think that is generally agreed—if the method that has been adopted and pursued by Saskatchewan and Alberta, and approved by the federal department, is carried out it will mean an excessive financial burden on the poultry men of British Columbia. By the quick test method the poultry man can make the test himself and tell in a short time whether his poultry have pullorum disease or not, but if he is going to be compelled to carry out the regulations laid down by Saskatchewan and Alberta it will mean a cost to him of between six and seven cents per head of poultry. Not only that but Saskatchewan and Alberta do not go into poultry raising so extensively as British Columbia, and in Saskatchewan and Alberta the regulations provide that the whole flock must be tested. Such a regulation would work a great hardship with us because the average poultry man with a flock of one or two thousand head may have a breeding pen of only six hundred or so, and if he is compelled to comply with the regulations laid down by Saskatchewan and Alberta and approved by the federal department he will be out six or seven cents per head of poultry for every chicken on his place.

I am going to urge upon the minister that the whole matter be reviewed. I know that the veterinaries will contend that their method is the best, but as a poultry man and from the information that has been given to me I can say that neither of the two tests is infallible. You can test a chicken to-day for that disease and get a clear test, and to-morrow the chicken may have the disease. There is no infallible test. I think I am about correct in saying that it is impossible to tell which is the better method. One is just as good as the other. I appeal to the minister on behalf of the poultry men of our province who have now to comply with the conditions laid down by Saskatchewan and Alberta, and laid down, I think I am safe in saying, to prevent the selling in Alberta and Saskatchewan of day old chicks from British Columbia. Their regulations were engineered, I believe, by some hatchery men in Saskatchewan and Alberta, helped out by the veterinaries of the department. These regulations are aimed principally against British Columbia. British Columbia, of course, is carrying on just now under a provincial and a dominion policy, and they are carrying on this past season because they have been helped financially. We do not know what policy will be adopted next year, but if the health of animals branch insist that the test must be carried out as laid down by the veterinaries, it will mean a cost of six or seven cents per head of poultry to the poultry men of British Columbia. Not only that, but it takes from twenty-four to thirty-six hours to carry out the test, whereas under the method which has been tested both by the university of British Columbia and by practical poultry men the quick test can be carried out on the spot by the plate method, which is just as effective. It means a saving of time and also a great saving of money. I have attended many of the meetings of the poultry men before I came here which were attended by the representative of the federal department and by the provincial Minister of Agriculture, as well as by leading poultry men, and being a poultry man myself I was able to follow the matter intelligently. What I am saying now I am saying in all good faith. I do urge upon the minister that this whole matter be reviewed because if the veterinaries are going to get away with it, it will mean quite a heavy expense to the poultry men of our province which they cannot very well afford.

Mr. BRADETTE: I want to say just a few words about the tuberculin test in my section of northern Ontario. There are three systems of inspection: first there is the plan applied in the two Cochranes; second there is the accredited area for pure bred cattle, and third there is the restricted area with government compensation for reactors. That is the test we want in our section of the country. The area is so wide that it is almost impossible for one veterinary or inspector to give all the necessary tests in our section of Ontario. It is true that the herds are rather small in comparison with those of eastern Canada or of the western provinces, but the fact remains that the test is very necessary in our new section of colonization and because of climatic conditions in northern Ontario. At least ninety-five per cent of the farmers and settlers in this section want to come under the scheme. At the present time no compensation is paid and the farmers feel they should be given some consideration when the farmers in the older sections of the other provinces are paid compensation up to fifty per cent. I think the minister will realize why these men are so keen to come in under system number three. I understand that the provincial government has asked the dominion government to restrict these sections. Everyone knows the development which has taken place in this part of the country, and more milk is being sold all the time. Children prefer cow's milk to condensed milk, and these farmers are in position to supply the domestic requirements of the two Cochranes. I make this appeal in all sincerity. We have had no quarrel with the large sums of money spent to bonus wheat or to assist the dried out areas in the west, but we feel that we should have the benefit of these tuberculin tests. It would be of the greatest benefit to these farmers. They are willing to have their herds tested and to make the necessary expenditures to provide graded stock.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): If the farmers in the district to which the hon. member has referred wish to have their district made a restricted area they must first petition the provincial government. A vote will then be taken and if two-thirds of the cattle owners within the area are in favour, the province then submits the petition to the federal government. It is then brought before the governor in council when a decision is made as to whether or not the district shall be declared a restricted area. My information is that no petition has yet come forward from the provincial government, and until this is received this government can take no action.

Mr. BRADETTE: Would the first move have to be made by the provincial or federal government?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The farmers of the district petition the provincial government; then it comes to the federal government.

Mr. BRADETTE: Does that apply to every farming section? It must be remembered that many of our townships are still unorganized and it would be very difficult to take a vote in view of the distances. For instance, it is nearly three hundred miles from Hearst to Ramore and there are similar distances to be covered in the Porcupine and other districts. I think the minister will realize that it would be impossible to take a vote under these conditions.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The vote does not have to be taken on the basis of townships, but that is the only way under the act in which the federal government can set aside a restricted area. I understand that the work is usually done by district representatives.

Mr. BRADETTE: I have another request to make. For years I had asked that a poultry promoter be sent to my district, and this was finally done in 1933. Mr. L. J. Maltais was appointed as poultry promoter but he was withdrawn after he had been there but a month and a half. He had got a number of farmers interested in poultry raising and general agriculture, and certain expenditures had been made at the time he was withdrawn. I have in my hand a letter from the Department of Agriculture stating that this man was withdrawn because of the need of economy. But this is false economy. We do not object to the millions of dollars spent for wheat bonusing; we are quite satisfied that the farmers in the west should be helped by the federal government, but we cannot understand why this man should be withdrawn. He came to the district quite early in the spring and held conferences with the farmers. Some of the farmers spent considerable money in the purchase of lumber and other supplies with which to erect hencoops, and then this man was withdrawn at the beginning of the summer. His salary was not very large, yet the statement was made that this action was taken because of the need for economy. Across the border in Quebec in a district not so large and not so wealthy one or two poultry promoters are maintained. I believe the minister wants to be fair to our section, and I always point that out in my constituency. Surely the federal government can spend a little money to help the settlers in this part of the country, as there is almost an unlimited domestic market for eggs and chickens. The department stated that they were well satisfied with this man, and I believe the population as a whole thought he was all right. He made some expenditures himself in the purchase of a car and so on, but I suppose that is a secondary matter. I do not think we have been unfair in our demands on the federal department, and I think a poultry promoter should be sent immediately to our section of the country.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Although this matter does not come under the vote we are discussing, I shall answer the hon. member's question. In the first place, the letter to which he referred and which was sent out by one of the officials of the department did not make a correct statement, as the change was not made for purposes of economy. This matter will be looked into and inquiries will be instituted as to why a misleading statement was made. That was one of the subjects discussed at the interprovincial conference with the ministers of agriculture—that the work of production is more provincial than federal. In Ontario there is a large number of district representatives, and there are district representatives in the province of Quebec also, whose special duty it is to do work of this kind. I will look further into the matter and shall be glad to bring it to the attention of the provincial government at Toronto, that this work is not now being carried on by them as it was understood it would be. No one appreciates more than I do the importance of giving greater assistance to the outlying pioneering districts than is given to the older districts that have more advantages right at their door.

Mr. BRADETTE: I think I was right in stating that this was done for the sake of economy, because I have here a letter—

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I did not question the hon. gentleman's accuracy in regard to his authority. What I said was that the officials of the department were wrong in stating that it was in the interests of economy.

Mr. BRADETTE: I would ask the minister if it is at all possible to let us have the official at the earliest possible moment. I do not know any section in Ontario where there is a poultry promoter under provincial control. The official sent out two years ago was from the federal department and he gave entire satisfaction to every section. I hope the minister will appoint another man or the same man as soon as possible.

Mr. NEILL: I endorse strongly the representations made by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) in connection with the testing of poultry. Everything he said I can endorse from my own experience with poultry men in my district. There was a large number of poultry men in my district but the number is getting smaller every year; they are being frozen out, and this system will not help them. They are up in arms and I support their attitude. They agree that a test is necessary; they are as keenly aware of the need for it as any department of agriculture can be, because it is their bread and butter. But they claim that they are being grossly put upon by the system imposed upon them. It is a case of some official having said, "We will do so and so," and once having put his foot down he will go ahead in spite of all representations made. I am not referring to the minister but to some official; once the official makes that decision that ends the matter. These men say that a better system has been discovered, a cheaper system which they can carry out themselves, and besides being cheap it is quick. They take the bird and the test is made instantly and there is no further trouble. But with the system followed by the department the bird is often retarded from laying for two or three weeks, because so to speak it is a major operation. A lot of complaints come in that the birds are delayed from one to three weeks in laying. I would be the last to say that there should not be this test if it were the only way; but I do not think it is seriously denied that the new system known as the quick test is ample, and it is far better for the reason I have stated. The poultry men are desperately hard up for the reason, amongst others, that they have not that support from the government which they might expect in connection with freight rates. And here they are met with a substantial tax. It is all very well to say that it costs only a few cents; but if you have four thousand birds being tested at from five to seven cents each, that is a serious item, when you do not get enough to pay for their feed. I should like the minister to make an announcement as to whether he will not investigate the quick test and accept that in lieu of this older and much more extensive system. Possibly the answer will be that Alberta wants this test. Well, the Department of Agriculture have some influence with the department in Alberta and could make fitting representations. It is a very serious thing indeed for the hard pressed poultry men in British Columbia.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I appreciate the fact that even one cent a chicken makes a big difference to income in large flocks. There have been different ways of testing for the presence of the disease pullorum, and it was at the instigation of the provinces, who asked that an official test be agreed upon so that there would be uniformity, that it was laid down that the tube test method should be adopted as the most accurate of all tests known, although none of the tests are infallible. The authorities who have done most work in various countries are of the opinion that so far it is the most accurate test that has been discovered. Other tests have been used, but the tube test method has proved the most reliable. The test referred to by the two hon. gentlemen who have spoken is in the experimental stage. It has not yet been accepted as being as accurate as the test I have mentioned. There is nothing that the department would rather do than adopt the test to which they referred as soon as it has been verified, although we have had no complaints from any of the poultry breeders in British Columbia against the test that is being used there. It is not necessary for them to use that test unless they wish to trade with other provinces. The whole matter is this. The different provinces asked for a uniform test, and the authorities in the best position to advise did advise that the most accurate test was the one that is being used. The other is in the experimental stage and as soon as it is admitted that it is as accurate as the test I have discussed, and the cheapness of it is established, it will be, I should say, favourably considered.

Mr. NEILL: Did the minister say he had received no complaints from the poultry men of British Columbia?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): As to the effect on the birds. Comparatively recently a committee of the poultry breeders in British Columbia have sat in with their minister of agriculture and agreed on this method that is being followed at the present time. I can assure hon. gentlemen that very careful consideration will be given the statements they have made in this connection.

Mr. HOWARD: In view of the large number of horses killed in the eastern townships last year, supposed to have been affected by glanders, has the minister had any further investigation made, and has he any statement on the matter?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): A very full investigation has been made with regard to horses tested for glanders. As soon as it was discovered that glanders existed, the most experienced veterinaries in the service were sent to the area to deal with this outbreak. Colonel Tamblyn was sent to the district and performed a number of post mortem examinations along with other veterinaries who wished to be present to demonstrate beyond doubt that it was glanders. Others asked for post mortem examinations, but in this disease there is danger unless the examination is carried out with the greatest care. I think what the hon. member has in mind is that some of the horses tested, that were suspicious, were not destroyed, while other horses that were tested, and did react, were destroyed. It was within the option of the owner of a horse, if it was tested and reacted for glanders, to request that it be not destroyed, and if he could give an assurance that that horse would be kept in absolute isolation for further tests, the department if it could satisfy itself that the undertaking would be lived up to without danger of the disease being spread, would quarantine the horse for further tests.

Mr. MYERS: Has a request come from the Prince Edward Island department of agriculture for a retest of the cattle in that province, and what is the intention of the federal department in the matter?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): A request has come and a test will be proceeded with.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: How many outbreaks of hog cholera have there been in Canada during the last twelve months and where have they been located?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): We do not know the number of outbreaks, but this statement gives the number of hogs slaughtered to December 1, 1934, with the compensation given:

Province—	Number of hogs slaughtered	Amount of compensation
Quebec	1,351	$ 9,737
Ontario	1,679	9,489
Manitoba	1,146	6,663
Total	4,176	$25,889

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That would represent half a dozen different places, would it? It does not say how many different places.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The record does not set out the number of different places, but I am informed that there would be at least thirty or forty different places where there was hog cholera.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is an unusual record for hog cholera. I am afraid the minister has been trying to economize a little too much on this appropriation and I am glad to see that he has increased it. Hog cholera in years past used to be kept down almost as strictly as glanders was. As a matter of fact glanders was almost exterminated in Canada. Now we find it bobbing up anywhere. I have not heard of it until recently in the eastern townships and I do not know how many cases there were then. We used to have outbreaks in New Brunswick opposite Maine. Logging teams coming over from the woods of Maine would sometimes bring the disease over with them and great care had to be exercised to prevent its coming over in the embryo stage and breaking out in Canada. These are virulent diseases that spread with great rapidity. I am not blaming the minister; he can spend only what money is voted, but it is only by the exercise of eternal vigilance that these diseases can be kept down. All these outbreaks of hog cholera indicate a skimping of the inspectional staff that has been so vigilant in years past. I do not want to criticize severely, but I hope the increase that is being made in this appropriation will be used in strengthening the inspectional staff numerically and that an endeavour will be made to keep down these losses which mean a tremendous amount to the individuals upon whom they fall.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Perhaps I misled the hon. member for Melville. There were outbreaks in two centres but in about thirty or so premises.

Mr. BEAUBIEN Is the epidemic of hog cholera in southern Manitoba pretty well in hand?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Experimental farms, including investigations concerning plant diseases, $1,937,898.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: This was the appropriation on which the minister was going to give us an explanation of the policy of the government with respect to the drought areas in the western provinces. Possibly he would like to elaborate what he has already said and thus dispense with a number of questions that would otherwise be necessary. I should be very glad to hear him disclose his policy. I have before me some newspaper clippings taken from such a reliable authority as the Toronto Mail and Empire, which should be good enough for a good Conservative, indicating the intention of making a sort of crown colony of that western country, taking over the whole thing. We do not want to be hypercritical about how the assistance is to be given, but it occurs to some of us that some sort of co-operation between the federal and provincial governments might be practised to advantage in carrying on this tremendous work, because it is a tremendous task.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The appropriation now under discussion, that is experimental farms, does not include the money for this work that is contemplated and that is to commence almost immediately now in connection with the drought areas in the three prairie provinces. So far as many newspaper reports are concerned, I think the hon. member for Melville has perhaps had somewhat the same experience that I have had, that one reads more in the press about what is going on in one's department than either the officials or the minister himself could have any idea is supposed to be going on. There is no thought in the mind of the federal Department of Agriculture of changing its policy of cooperation with any provincial department of agriculture. This is really an extension of survey work that has taken place during the past two or three years and a continuation of undertakings that were started in 1927 as a result of the work commenced at the Manyberries station. Illustration stations have been set up in increasing numbers throughout this area to deal with various small districts as one farm, but it was felt, because of the smallness of that experiment and the undue effect of local conditions, the work should be extended to include larger areas. It was decided with the cooperation of the farmers on the land to increase the number from twenty-one to forty-one. In addition to that there will be new areas in cooperation with the farmers of two sections. Besides that, it is contemplated to set up five townships of thirty-six square miles each one in Alberta, three in Saskatchewan and one in Manitoba. Some of those will be used in an endeavour to demonstrate that even with a continuation of the drought, results even better in many cases than under present conditions can be achieved. The first aim is to demonstrate, in conjunction with what knowledge we already have, whether or not if the drought continues farmers can by certain practices do more towards obtaining a livelihood than they are doing at the present time. I believe that there are many farmers in the drought area who if they had sufficient capital—for their capital has been drained over a period of years—could have available at all times seed such as fall rye or sweet clover or grasses so that when there are rains throughout the summer after the wheat is put in they could seed some land with these grasses and have at least some feed for the winter. It is to demonstrate some of those things that these experiments are being conducted; also how far we should use the strip farming system. I may say this for the information of hon. members, especially those from the west, that for the last two or three years in these illustration stations the cultural practices adopted have shown better results than those obtained by the average farmer in the neighbourhood. It is true these stations have been selected with considerable care and it is not altogether fair to compare work done in them with the work done by the average farmer in the same neighbourhood. In addition to illustration stations, outstanding farmers will be assisted financially in this connection in carrying out some of their own ideas under supervision. Where it is felt that conditions are suitable, some townships will be used for the planting of trees, because there are instances even in almost the centre of the drought areas where certain farmers believe they have obtained better results by the use of shelter belts not only around the buildings but fairly extensive belts throughout the farm. This supervised work will take in almost all conditions in the west, on areas of greater size than the smaller illustration farms. In addition we also purpose undertaking investigational and demonstration work in areas that have been abandoned entirely, for the purpose of seeing what can be done to reclaim them. Furthermore a survey has been made, and I believe last year close to a thousand applications were made at Manyberries station alone to Mr. Thompson, the officer in charge, for expert advice and assistance with reference to the making of small dams to obtain a larger supply of water. These may be just mud dams with a small spillway that farmers can build themselves, but they require engineering advice as to where they should be situated. Then there is also need for larger dams costing from $10,000 up to $15,000. By holding the freshets in the spring they might assure to farmers or ranchers a supply of hay and green feed for the winter and for a dry year. It was felt that because of the nature of this work and what has been done by our federal officers this clean cut program should be set out and put under the supervision of the experimental farm system. Thus there is no lack of cooperation with the provinces. The same rule will apply in this work as has applied—for it is an extension of work that has been done in the past—that is, a full measure of cooperation.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Then I understand that the system of demonstration plots which was established about twelve or fifteen years ago more or less all over Canada has been evolving into these larger plots. For instance, south of Yellow Grass in the burnt-out area there is a plot consisting I think of a half section. North of Piapot near Maple Creek there is another. I think in the last few years a whole section has been devoted to demonstration purposes, trying to overcome some of these terrible difficulties that have prevailed in that area for some years. The proposal now is to extend these demonstration plots into five larger areas each eighteen miles square, and continue the practice of experimentation and demonstration, including the planting of shelter belts in suitable places, the making of dams, and the digging of reservoirs. I have no exception to take to that; but we have always been doing something of that, if not by the Department of Agriculture by the provincial public works or highways departments. Since 1914 a large number of dams and reservoirs in suitable runways have been constructed. This is merely an extension or an evolution of what has been taking place for many years. Does the minister not think that the first thing to do in that country is to try to keep the soil at home? Some of those areas we must admit are unsuitable for tilling; every time you stir the soil with a plough or any other implement it takes wings and off it goes and lands in Ontario or somewhere, just as Oklahoma and Kansas and Colorado, are now sending their dust storms north, so that probably some of our lost prairie land will be restored to us. But I think everyone admits now that some of those areas should not have been cultivated, although in wet years they grow good crops of the highest quality. There is no part of the west that has grown larger and better crops in wet years than that same area. Nevertheless there are some marginal lands, and if we want to keep them at home they must at the earliest opportunity be seeded down, through government support in some form. Two or three years ago the federal Department of Agriculture started out bravely enough distributing small amounts of grass and clover seed, but so far as my information goes very little of that was done in this dried out area. It should be done there, for even if only thinly seeded it will soon spread. As a matter of fact there is a large area between Medicine Hat and Brooks that has gone back to grass, has a fine sod on it, better than the prairie. But that had not been under tillage very long, consequently it was not difficult to regrass naturally. But as to this area we are talking about, which has been under tillage for a quarter of a century, a lot of it will take a long time to regrass. It will soon get covered with some form of vegetation, however, for nature abhors a vacuum; the Russian thistle will soon cover it and perhaps hold the land from drifting. But something of more value than the Russian thistle should be introduced—grasses and clovers including crested wheat grass which survives the drought better than any other known grass so far. I think the federal government will have to take charge of that and seed down those large areas in cooperation with the prairie provinces, as it is to them these abandoned lands will revert automatically.

I do not know whether or not the minister contemplates establishing what we call district representatives. I recall that back in 1914, when the first tremendous drought struck that area, the dominion government of the day became quite anxious and established district representatives without consulting the provinces at all, so we had two sets of these officers, one representing the federal and the other the provincial government. I submit that that should be avoided as far as possible, and I am sure the minister knows the enormity of that undertaking. If there is any way at all, by friendly cooperation with the provinces, of avoiding overlapping, against which the minister has always expressed himself, I hope that will be done. I assume that this abandoned property naturally reverts to the municipalities, because of the unpaid taxes, or else to the provincial government. How does the minister propose to overcome that situation and at the same time seed down these larger provincial or municipal areas which have been found to be unprofitable except in the very best years?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): With reference to the distribution of grasses, the same distribution—and perhaps more so—has been made in the drought area that has been made in the other parts of the province.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Perhaps the minister will tell us how they succeeded?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The difficulty was that because of the small plots that could be seeded with the grass seed given them, they were blown out, and results were not satisfactory. Perhaps another reason was that they were seeded in the early part of the year, whereas the intention now is to have a supply on hand when moisture does come, and these grasses can be seeded late in the fall or early in the spring. It is not only necessary to have a relatively large supply of seed; we feel that it is necessary to have enough seed so that it can be almost wasted in these localities. It very seldom happens that a plant particularly suited to the drought area is suited to other areas, yet it was necessary to obtain a supply of grass seed, and that was one of the investigations we carried on. Much to our delight it was found that this grass seed suitable in the south in particular also does very well in the north, so much so that it will increase from two pounds to six hundred pounds an acre. The best of that seed has been retained and is being distributed in the north, under very careful supervision to hurry its propagation. Investigation was carried on in connection with the difficulty of getting nurse crops to assist these grasses, and it has been found that the natural nurse crop of brush and thistle, when ripe, is perhaps the best that we can get.

Mr. HOWARD: I just wanted to make an appeal to the minister. In the section from which I come we have one of the finest experimental farms in the dominion. An experimental farm is valuable inasmuch as it renders service to the public. We also have a very large acreage almost bordering on the experimental farm that has been entirely destroyed due to the acid from the mines which was carried over the land in a flood period several years ago. These cases have been before the courts for some three years; finally a settlement has been arranged, but about thirty farmers are left with this eyesore in one of the finest sections of that part of the country. I think it only right, and I ask the minister to see to it, that the employees of the experimental farm assist these farmers in getting that land back under cultivation.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Experiments are being conducted with that in mind.

Mr. BOUCHARD: May I ask the minister how many illustration farms there are in the constituency of Kamouraska at the present time?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I do not think we have the information in that form, but I shall be glad to give it to my hon. friend.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Does the opening of a new experimental farm near the town of Melfort mean the gradual elimination of the Rosthern farm?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): No, it will not affect the Rosthern farm in any way. A certain program has been carried on in connection with the Rosthern farm; that is being enlarged and proceeded with. There has been no change in the policy in connection with the Rosthern farm as the result of the establishment of the Melfort farm, nor will there be any such change.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I happened to be up in my hon. friend's area last harvest, and there was a good deal of discussion about the experimental farm at Melfort. Of course all rumours must be discounted a good deal, but at that time it was rumoured that this property had been expropriated without the consent or knowledge of the owners, and that the two farmers who formerly owned the property knew nothing about it. I do not know that this would be particularly harmful; indeed if the government thought they were going to miss the opportunity of getting the property that would be the correct thing to do, though of course it is desirable to avoid it if possible. Perhaps the minister will tell us why that particular property was chosen. I understand that it is three or four miles from the town of Melfort and not very accessible to visitors. Perhaps all these matters will be explained to the committee. I should like to know just why that choice was made. I do not suggest there was anything improper about it; so far as I know it is quite suitable, but they seemed to be in a great hurry about it. Temporary stables were rushed up and cattle were sent there just at the beginning of winter, when there was no shelter for them. There seemed to be just a certain amount of time and everything had to be done within that time limit. I am sure the minister will be able to clear up the situation with a word.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The owners of the farms were negotiated with and it was understood that they were willing to accept certain prices. Then difficulties arose and it was decided that it would be fairer to everyone concerned to make it a matter of expropriation. This farm was selected as being typical of that area. It was not intended that we should have an ideal farm, because an ideal farm would not provide a fair comparison for the problems existing in that district. The farm is situated on the highway and is readily accessible from Melfort. I believe the corner of the farm is about two miles from Melfort. There was no particular rush in connection with the farm; its establishment had been contemplated for some time, for the reason that in this whole area, extending from Dauphin to Lloydminister, no farm existed. The conditions in that area are very different from the conditions with which the Rosthern farm has to deal, and for a good many years it was felt that a farm should be established in that area. I believe the hon. member gave that question very serious consideration when he was Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Perhaps the minister will tell us where the foundation live stock that we sent to the Melfort farm came from.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, March 26, 1935

The house met at three o'clock.

MR. J. E. LAURENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, on March 14 I inquired of the Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) the amount paid each year to Mr. Laurent of Montreal. I was promised that I would have this information last week but so far I have not received it. I should like to know when I will have it.

Hon. ARTHUR SAUVE (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, it was my intention to give this information to the hon. gentleman to-day. On March 14 when the estimates of the Post Office Department were under consideration the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) asked for certain details in connection with a temporary contract awarded to Mr. J. E. Laurent for the carrying of parcel post and mail matter in Montreal. At that time I stated that I had not all the details but would furnish all the information to be found in the department as soon as possible, some of the details dating back as far as four years. I have been informed by the officers of my department that before May 1, 1932, the carrying of mail matter between the post office and the Stephens building in Montreal was done exclusively by the department. At that time the department maintained a garage containing eight trucks and one motorcycle. The cost of gasoline, oil, et cetera, amounted to $4,977.06 while $19,920 was paid in salaries.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. The information now being given by the Postmaster General is entirely outside of the question I asked. I wanted to know the amount paid to Mr. Laurent each year and the minister is now making an apology for his dealings in the matter.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not want to waste the time of the house.

Mr. SAUVE: I want to give an explanation to the hon. member for Témiscouata, in accordance with his questions.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would point out that under orders of the day questions are directed to ministers of the government only with respect to matters of policy and so forth. In view of the nature of the question asked by the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), I think the answer should be as brief as possible and there should be no argument or debate with respect to the subject matter of the question.

Mr. SAUVE: Further costs were: garage, $4,644; depreciation, $3,454.22; interest on capital invested, $829. The total cost of this service was $33,824.28. By reason of difficulties we met in the control of this service, and also of the abuses we discovered, the department had to dismiss employees and thought it advisable to try a new method, that is, to give this service to a contractor for a trial. The contract was awarded to Mr. J. E. Laurent at $27,000, as I said, including the insurance and all the obligations and responsibilities relating to the service. The new method being a trial, the department has adopted the principle of a temporary agreement, which the previous administration had followed from 1921 to 1930, in regard to the Canadian Transfer Company. Under the present contractor this service, from March 1, 1934, to February 28, 1935, has cost the department $28,593.60. But it is due in part to the fact that the normal increase of the parcel post in Montreal has advanced by about seven per cent. These two services cost the department, before Mr. Laurent, $57,220.53.

Mr. POULIOT: I rise to a point of order. There are only two official languages, English and French. The minister is now speaking the Esperanto language, and no one has understood a word of what he has said. Therefore he should translate either in plain English or French what he has already said in Esperanto.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. SAUVE: If Mr. Speaker understands it, and the house, I am satisfied.

Mr. POULIOT: It is Esperanto.

Mr. SAUVE: Since Mr. Laurent has had the contract, the services are costing the department $55,593.60. Not only has the service been improved but the rolling stock has also been improved to answer the needs of the postal service. The contractor, instead of putting in eight hours a day as previously, must work two extra hours as his trucks must leave at six o'clock in the morning instead of eight o'clock on account of the signal system, and for other reasons. In spite of the increase in the parcel post in Montreal and the improvement in the service, the department realized last year a saving of $1,626.93.

MILITARY EXPENDITURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): I have a question to direct to the Secretary of State. On February 18 last an order was passed in my name for a statement of all expenditures for military and police purposes since the present government came into office in August, 1930, including expenditures for the said purposes, actual or contemplated, under the Public Works Construction Act, 1934. I would remind the minister that on March 11 he made a statement—I will not take the time of the house to read it—in which he said that it would take at least two weeks longer to get the information. I would remind him further that the two weeks has expired, and two days in addition thereto, and that it is five weeks and two days since the order was passed.

Mr. SPEAKER: Will the hon. member be good enough to state his question?

Mr. SANDERSON: The question is, When may I expect the information?

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): Just as soon as the clerks of the different departments can obtain the information and put it in typewriting.

PURCHASE AND SALE OF GOLD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): According to press dispatches the United States government is offering gold for silver. Is the government considering taking up that offer with a view to augmenting the gold stocks of the country?

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): I will look at the question submitted by the hon. gentleman, but I take it that the answer will be in any case that the government will pursue the policy which it has hitherto followed of disposing of Canadian gold at the highest market price, whether in the United States or Great Britain.

[Mr. Sauvé.]

RELIEF TO MUNICIPALITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. CARMICHAEL (Kindersley): I have a question to ask, which perhaps might properly be answered by the Minister of Agriculture. I have here a letter from the secretary of the rural municipality of Kindersley in regard to the borrowing of money from the banks for taking care of spring relief, buying seed, feed and tractor fuel. He states that the bank refuses to loan money to the municipalities on provincial government guarantees. They state that they will not advance any money until the dominion acts jointly with the province in guaranteeing the loans. Has such a request been made to the dominion government and if so what action is being taken?

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): The hon. member's question will be taken as a notice. It will come under the Finance department, although it is primarily a provincial matter.

ILLUSTRATION STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): On Monday, March 18, I inquired of the Minister of Agriculture whether he was considering the establishing of another illustration station north of the North Saskatchewan river in northwestern Saskatchewan. He did not have the information that day but he promised an investigation and reply. He has not yet given the reply. Can he give it to-day?

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): No. I have not the information at hand but I shall be glad to send it to the hon. member.

THE BUDGET

DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Friday, March 22, consideration of the motion of Hon. E. N. Rhodes (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Shelburne-Yarmouth): With those on this side of the house I have listened, as we always listen, with a great deal of pleasure to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) in the presentation of his annual budget speech. We listened this time with perhaps rather more interest, because we realized that the Minister of Finance was playing the leading role in the farewell performance of this government in that annual play of lights and shadows which is called the budget. I wish to congratulate my hon. friend, as I always can, on the way in which he filled the role. He lived up to the best traditions of the high office which he occupies. But I do feel that when the time comes for the authors of the piece—and after all many a good actor is spoiled by the lines he is given—for his collaborators, his colleagues in the government, to come before the curtain, the results in the nine by-elections which have already taken place and in the four provincial elections indicate pretty well the reception which they will get.

My hon. friend's speech was, if I may say so without offence, a bit dreary. I noticed a number of hon. members opposite who succumbed to the arms of Morpheus during its delivery and there may also have been those on this side who did likewise; I do not know. But there was to those of us who sit on this side of the house at least one very interesting feature of the budget, and that was the indication which ran like a red thread through the whole speech that at long last the government had come to realize that the trade and tariff policies which had been nearly the ruination of this country for the past four years had been futile. We were reminded—and I shall compare portions of what my hon. friend said in his budget speech with them—of some utterances which were made just before the last election and which were couched in an entirely different tone from that employed by my hon. friend the other afternoon. I refer to the speech of the Prime Minister at Vancouver when he said:

> If Mr. Mackenzie King thinks I will not so build up our agricultural and industrial life that its strength will drive our products into the markets of the world, then he is wrong. For that I will do. If he thinks I will not establish new markets for these products, strive with all my heart to retain them, drive our products with all my power into new markets, into old markets, into reluctant markets, he is wrong. For that I will do.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. RALSTON: If my hon. friends will applaud—what is the fact—that in the last year the total trade of Canada was just one-half the average trade of the last five years of Liberal rule, they will realize how successful that driving has been. This is another speech made in Winnipeg when he said addressing the farmers:

> Tell me, when did free trade fight for you? You say tariffs are only for the manufacturers. I will make them fight for you as well. I will use them to blast a way into the markets that have been closed to you.

And then at Victoria he said:

> It is true we must have foreign markets—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. RALSTON: There are signs of conversion even across the way among my hon. friends.

> It is true we must have foreign markets, and as I said the other evening we will blast a way to those markets on a worldwide basis with any exportable surpluses. We do not have to worry about that.

What a change there has been. After these speeches the Prime Minister went to Great Britain in 1932 with his policy of blasting a way into the markets of the world, having made a ten per cent increase in tariffs before he went, and demanded that they must take steps without delay; that there was no room for compromise; that it was a time for plain speaking; that they must decide once and for all, and my right hon. friend with his musket on his shoulder, a machine gun under one arm and an ammonal tube under the other started out to blast a way into the markets of the world. The government put up tariffs; in 1930 they raised the tariff on one hundred and six items; in 1931 on a hundred and twenty-nine items and in 1932 on one hundred and thirty-eight items or a tariff increase on three hundred and seventy-three items altogether. They invented a new form of dumping duty, a provision whereby valuations for duty purposes should be based not on the domestic price of the goods which were being imported but on the cost in this country. That however was not good enough and they changed it next year so that valuations need have no principle, no standard whatever in order to be fixed by the Minister of National Revenue. They put on exchange dumping and they provided for seasonal valuations; they did everything they could to provide for exchange controls and invented every possible device by which the business men and consumers of this country might be irritated. That was all done as a means of blasting a way into the markets of the world. Now, having led the world in that, having taken a place in the vanguard of economic nationalism, because that is what they did, having proclaimed the doctrine of Canada first, they come here in 1935 with the Minister of Finance giving utterance to these words:

The unsatisfactory conditions in agriculture and certain other primary industries are in the main due to the low level of international trade resulting from the spread throughout the world of exaggerated economic nationalism, excessive interferences with trade through quotas and exchange controls, and fluctuating currencies.

I say that we welcome this budget in that it indicates at least a last-minute repentance, a last-minute change, an admission now that the tariff policies which were laid down in 1930, 1931, and 1932 were wrong.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Not at all.

Mr. RALSTON: The Minister of Finance in the budget speech mentioned in one place:

The obstinate adherence to extreme policies of economic nationalism.

But he is not alone in that; his right hon. leader went to Kingston the other night where he is reported in the Ottawa Journal of February 21 to have said:

With the Aladdin lamp of modern production at their elbow, with large sections of their population in want, tariff barriers are erected, quotas established, exchanges controlled, in an ever-failing effort to restore the productive machine by creating a semblance of scarcity.

With all due respect, to hear this government rebuke economic nationalism sounds extremely like Satan rebuking sin. Could one imagine a more complete turnover than that which is evidenced by the sentiments in the budget speech, by the boasts which are being made, not about blasting our way into the markets of the world, but about reductions in duties and apologies for increases in tariffs on the ground that they are made on the recommendation of the tariff board? That does not sound very much like the government of a few years ago. To-day the order of the hour is to see how many duties can be reduced. Why? In order to curry favour with the people of the Dominion of Canada who realize that the avenues of trade have been blocked for the last four years, resulting in this country being reduced to its present condition. That is one of the things which is interesting in this budget. Then, in order that my hon. friend may indicate how much interested the government has suddenly become in international trade, you will find in the speech reference to negotiations with the United States. The minister boasts of reductions in tariffs. I will undertake to say that very seldom have you found a Tory budget speech boasting about reductions in tariffs. But on page 1988 you find this:

Reference to the fact that to-day's resolutions add no fewer than twenty important commodities to the free list under the British preferential tariff provides an opportunity to point to the record of this government in that regard.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Too late.

Mr. RALSTON: As my hon. friend the former Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) says, it is a bit too late.

An hon. MEMBER: Don't you hate it.

Mr. RALSTON: I wonder if it has anything to do with elections? I wonder if it is part of the reform program? I wonder if it has been induced by the results of the by-elections last September? Have they caused this government to see the error of its ways and to realize that the thing to do is to remove the barriers to trade rather than put up others? It is possible.

I want for a moment to make an examination of one or two items in the tariff to see whether close examination reveals a real change of heart, or whether like other features of the reform program it is mostly on the surface and by way of pious phrases. The woollen schedule has interested the people of Canada for the last two years particularly. The woollen schedule includes goods used by those engaged in the primary industries, by the ordinary citizens of the dominion. The woollen industry has been the subject of representations to the government and to the tariff board. In 1932 I pressed on the government one particular item in the woollen schedule, item 554 of the tariff, as to which I contended that the duty under the British preference was practically 61 per cent on most goods coming under that item. That was an inclusive item which covered clothing and material used in clothing for the ordinary individual in this country. Why do I say that the duty was 60 or 61 per cent? Under the British preference the duty was 27½ per cent ad valorem and added to that was 18¾ cents per pound specific duty. Taking the cost of the average material under that item used by the average man it worked out at 61 per cent. What do we find under this budget? Three of the forty-seven items on which there is a reduction under the British preference have to do with the woollen schedule. And what is the reduction under the professions made by my hon. friend in respect to his conversion to lower tariffs? The 27½ per cent ad valorem still remains on this item, but the specific duty has been reduced, the 18¾ cents per pound now becomes 17 cents. A reduction of 1¾ cents per pound. I made inquiry and I am sure that it does not mean more than 2 per cent reduction, and it may not mean more than 1 per cent. So I think I am correct in saying that in respect to at least some items in this schedule, which is a most important one to the average people of this country, there are shown no very substantial "works meet for repentance." The Minister of Finance took up the time of the house putting these three items in the schedule and calling attention to the reductions which had been made. I call attention to the hollowness of those reductions, when one comes to compare them with the tariffs that existed before.

I find another interesting item; overcoats for fishermen, farmers, miners, lumbermen, get only 1 per cent reduction, but overcoats for tennis balls go on the free list altogether. They had 27½ per cent ad valorem against them and 18¾ cents per pound specific, but now Melton cloth to cover tennis balls has been put on the free list as far as the British preference is concerned. That is the gesture my hon. friend makes to the people of this country on the woollen schedule.

I find another class of articles which have been put on the free list, toy construction sets. I understand that in the course of a year there are perhaps $25,000 to $30,000 worth of those goods coming in; not a very large item. The question has occurred to some on this side of the house: is it possible that this has something to do with the government's relief construction program, that these toy construction sets are to be used in connection with that toy relief bill on which $40,000,000 was voted last year and in connection with which only $8,000,000 has been spent? I submit that taking items like the woollen schedule and toy construction sets and counting them as reductions would rather indicate that this program is very much related to that reform program, and that there is just about as much substance in this reduction of tariffs and about as much relief to the consumer as there is to the aid to be given the taxpayers of the Dominion of Canada by their national economic advisory council that is going to sit twice every year as part of the reform program. Or there is going to be just as much benefit to the consumers of Canada from these nominal reductions as there is to the working man who is out of a job to-day by reason of the fact that there is going to be an unemployment insurance act on the statute books whereby provided he has paid contributions for forty weeks he may be able to get some insurance for a few weeks when he is out of work.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that perhaps one might say without offence that this whole program of reform and of tariff reductions takes somewhat the form of a make believe program. It is a sort of "let's pretend" reduction and the budget itself as far as reductions in tariff are concerned could, I think, fairly be classed as a make believe budget.

I notice another item. I notice that slipper cloth is substantially reduced.

Mr. VENIOT: For the sleepers.

Mr. RALSTON: I think there will be lots of opportunity for the use of carpet slippers on the part of my hon. friends opposite after the next election, when they may warm their feet by the winter fire instead of coming here. Possibly it may have been self-interest to some extent, not at all corrupt self-interest, which influenced the reduction of that particular item. We on this side of the house submit that that tendency, that feverish anxiety which is suggested in the budget regarding international trade and the confession of the undesirability of economic nationalism, is a belated and ludicrous attempt to make the people of Canada believe that the government have been converted.

Turning now for a moment to the matter of an agreement with the United States, my hon. friend the Minister of Finance took a good deal of space in his budget speech to discuss negotiations with the United States. There was a time when negotiations with the United States were not to be mentioned among Christians, particularly on the opposite side of the house. The right hon. Prime Minister in 1911 is reported in Hansard, 1911, on page 23, as saying:

> One of the strongest reasons I had for opposing the reciprocity agreement was that it threw into the melting pot for solution a question that involved a problem of patriotism.

Yet to-day they are engaged in negotiations with that country with the problem of patriotism still before them.

Mr. GOTT: What year was that?

Mr. RALSTON: The year 1911. It will be recalled that a gentleman who for many years occupied a front seat on the other side of the house and who unfortunately is gone from us now, said on more than one occasion, and publicly too, that he believed it was a serious thing for the Dominion of Canada when reciprocity was defeated. In 1911 we had my right hon. friend the present leader of the government urging that a problem of patriotism was involved, and that therefore he was against reciprocity. Then 1933 came along, only a year ago. What was the attitude of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance then? Was he keen about an agreement with the United States? This is what he said in his budget speech a year ago:

> We can only be ready and willing to avail ourselves of any proposals that are fair and reasonable and not of such character which will involve injury to this country if they are speedily terminated.

At that time I urged my hon. friend to pursue negotiations. We pointed out to him, however, that we were afraid his hands were tied to a considerable extent by the Ottawa agreements, in view of the fact that on 159 items we had agreed to preserve the margin of preference to Great Britain and that therefore the duty had to remain as it was because of the fact that those items were on the free list to Great Britain. Last year my hon. friend was only ready and willing to avail himself of any proposals that were fair and reasonable; now there is the sound of going in the tops of the mulberry trees. Now, according to the budget speech, we are not simply ready and willing to avail ourselves of any proposals; we are the aggressors now; we are the ones who are anxious. The minister said:

> These negotiations will be actively prosecuted by the government of Canada, and every possible step is being, and will be taken with the object in mind of effecting a satisfactory trade agreement having for its aim the lowering of trade barriers with consequent increased flow of trade resulting in mutual advantage.

That is very different from the static attitude of last year. I wonder if that has any reference at all to the by-elections of last September, and if that hitches up with the reform program and the reductions in duty which are mentioned in other parts of the budget. That, Mr. Speaker, indicates a complete change of front, and the ubiquitous minister to the United States is burning up axle grease and rails at the present time travelling back and forth, endeavouring to see if it is possible to effect some sort of agreement. I do not want to be discouraging, but I do not take too much stock in the eleventh hour activities of this government in connection with trade agreements, any more than the working people of this country are taking too much stock in the unemployment insurance measure which was brought down during this session and which has proved to be such a hollow echo of the announcements made on the public platform. The people of this dominion have pretty well in mind the attitude of this government with regard to the exchange and tariff restrictions that have been imposed in the last three or four years. Business men will not soon forget the plight in which they found themselves and the desperate situation which resulted in employees being thrown on the streets because the business men could not because of the uncertainties of the tariff policy of this government make plans in order to carry on their enterprises. That point is made very effectively, not by anyone in politics but by a man who is known pretty well all over this dominion and respected by the business community. It appears in the annual address made by President McLeod of the Bank of Nova Scotia, which can be found in the Financial Post of January 26, 1935. He said:

> I will not attempt to describe here the mesh of tariffs, quota regulations, manipulations of currencies, exchange controls and exchange clearing arrangements by means of which all international trade, including our own, is being hampered to-day. No language at my command could exaggerate the destructive influence of these restrictions or the need for removing them as soon as possible. All countries including our own have played a part in weaving this mesh of repressive measures. All are more or less responsible for the present obstacles to trade. All must cooperate in the removal of them if the commerce of nations is again to start moving freely.
> It is still true to say that we are only moving in world commerce two-thirds of the goods that were so moved five years ago.

If Mr. McLeod were referring to Canada he would say only one-half.

> It logically follows from this that a large proportion of the workers employed in the world's export industries five years ago—workers who should now be making goods for exchange one with another—remain unemployed.

That is the situation in Canada. If my hon. friends on the other side had devoted themselves a little more assiduously to keeping the channels of trade open they would not have had the railway deficits and the special grants for unemployment relief that they have had.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to refer to a less sombre picture presented by my hon. friend in his budget speech; that is the reference which he makes to improved conditions in this country. That should have awakened the sleepers on his side of the house. The minister claimed that business was improving, and we on this side say Amen, so mote it be. But obviously there ought to be some time when gains should be registered. We cannot go along all the time at the very bottom, and while it is a matter of satisfaction to know that our industrial production is increasing in physical volume it seems to me we should make some comparison with countries other than ourselves. It is no use for us to go down into the sub-cellar and then, because we get to the first floor of our own house, say we are making progress. Let us compare ourselves with our neighbours all around us. In regard to the physical volume of production the best my hon. friend can say is we have actually reached the position we occupied last May; in other words, we are not losing much. Last May, he says, we were in the position we occupy to-day so far as physical volume is concerned; we went down, and now we are up again. All right; let us praise anyone who is entitled to praise for that, but it certainly does not indicate a very substantial advance. I submit that comparisons with other countries are perhaps more informative to Canadians who want to know the truth. My hon. friend makes comparisons with other countries; at page 2126 of unrevised Hansard he compares industrial production in Canada with that in other countries, but he makes a most peculiar comparison. He does not compare the volume of industrial production in Canada with other countries; he does not compare the amount of increase in industrial production in Canada with that in other countries. What he does is this: He says "I take January 1, 1933; I take an index figure as to the volume of industrial production in each of the countries referred to, and then I take, not the actual increase, but a percentage of the increase, and I say that Canada heads the list." Let us be glad that Canada does head the list in that respect, Mr. Speaker; but whether we can really rejoice depends on what position Canada occupied on January 1, 1933. Was she on a par with these other countries? If she was, and if her physical volume of production increased by a greater percentage than the others, then she is outstripping them.

I obtained the figures on industrial production as of January 1, 1933, the very figures used by my hon. friend, and here they are. Mr. Speaker, I call your attention to the fact that this shows that Canada was next to the bottom among the sixteen countries for which figures are given. If Canada was practically at the bottom is it any great wonder that Canada improved more than the others, if she was going to keep her place in world trade at all? Yet the only comparison given by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance with regard to Canada's progress is a comparison with other countries taking Canada as at January 1, 1933, when she was next to the bottom in industrial production. Then he says she has improved more than the rest. In order to place it on record so that there may be no question I give the indexes of the industrial production in leading countries of the world as of January 1, 1933:

Chile	120.3
Norway	105.0
Denmark	102.9
United Kingdom	89.9
Sweden	83.7
France	78.7
Netherlands	76.6
Italy	70.9
Belgium	69.5
Germany	62.9
Czechoslovakia	61.7
Austria	60.6
United States	58.6
Canada	52.8
Poland	52.5

That, Mr. Speaker, gives us a rather illuminating idea of the value of the comparison my hon. friend made, and in connection with which he exhausted a whole paragraph in the budget speech, when he placed on record the percentage increase of Canada as compared with these other countries since January 1, 1933.

I do wish to give one or two comparisons which it seems to me are informative and which, I am sorry to say, do not give quite the same result so far as this country is concerned. I do not know what other people may think—and I must say I have heard a good deal about home markets—but I can never quite get over the idea that one of Canada's first and greatest concerns is her export trade. I have before me a comparison between the export trade of Canada and that of other countries of the world. I have not taken only one date. I have however taken the year 1932, and I have compared the increase in volume of exports which she has had as compared with the increase of other countries. What do I find? I find that between the years 1932 and 1934, out of eighteen countries Canada stands eighth. In other words seven countries have shown a greater recovery in exports between 1932 and 1934 than Canada has shown. That is not a bad position for Canada to hold. She is eighth, while there are seven countries with a position better than that of Canada. I have taken the figures for the following countries: The Argentine, Australia, Belgium, British India, Canada, Denmark, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, The Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, the Union of South Africa, the United Kingdom, the United States. The exports in thousands of dollars are as follows:

Countries—	1932 (In thousands of	1934 Canadian dollars)	Percentage inc. (+) dec. (—) 1934 compared with 1932 %
Argentina	376,358	374,763	— 0.4
Australia	298,705	391,559	+31.1
Belgium	468,300	632,582	+35.1
British India	410,157	558,347	+36.1
Canada	493,809	652,887	+32.2
Denmark	231,688	261,027	+12.7
France	876,349	1,158,300	+32.2
Germany	1,547,854	1,624,896	+ 5.0
Italy	396,413	443,674	+11.9
Japan	440,611	630,547	+43.1
Netherlands	387,276	474,797	+22.6
New Zealand	122,433	187,903	+53.5
Norway	114,676	143,043	+24.7
Sweden	198,507	333,195	+67.8
Switzerland	176,463	270,559	+53.3
Union of South Africa	367,781	387,542	+ 5.4
United Kingdom	1,452,884	1,976,814	+36.1
United States	1,790,956	2,080,946	+16.2

In the last column of the statement which I shall hand the reporter the percentage of increase is shown, and Canada stands eighth in the list. These percentages are, in part:

	Per cent
1. Sweden	67.8
2. New Zealand	53.5
3. Switzerland	53.3
4. Japan	43.1
5. United Kingdom	36.1
6. British India	36.1
7. Belgium	35.1
8. Canada	32.2

I shall not content myself with simply taking the year 1932. The year 1928 is supposed to have been a year when world trade was fairly standard. One would of course expect some reduction in exports in 1934 as compared with the year 1928. I have had a table made up showing the reduction in exports of these same countries in 1934 as compared with the exports in 1928. Does Canada lead in having the lowest reduction in exports, as my hon. friend would suggest, in connection with industrial production? No, I am sorry to say she does not. In this table I find that Canada comes fifteenth, and that out of eighteen countries there were fourteen which had less reduction in exports from 1928 than had Canada.

That it seems to me is a disturbing factor, because Canada is a great exporting nation. When you find Canada fifteenth in export trade in 1934 as compared with the year 1928, you must come to the conclusion she is not attaining the position in regard to export trade which my hon. friend would have this house and country believe. This table, too, is prepared by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, external branch, and if the house would permit I should like to place it on record without having read it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall consent be given?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: The table follows:

United States	5,029,700	2,080,900	41·4

NOTE.—In the case of the Union of South Africa, the exports include gold bullion, whereas in the case of Canada, the gold bullion is excluded.

As you will observe from this table there are fourteen out of the eighteen countries mentioned which had in 1934 a higher percentage of exports than Canada as compared with exports in 1928.

Then I have had prepared also by the bureau of statistics, a comparison between 1930 and 1934. This time I have not taken in simply the export trade but I have taken the total trade. In this list I believe there are no figures for the Union of South Africa. Of the seventeen remaining countries I find Canada coming fifteenth, so far as a comparison of total trade with the year 1930 is concerned.

Note.—Impossible to furnish information respecting the total trade of the Union of South Africa, as the import figures for the calendar year 1934 are not available.

This shows that in total trade for 1934 there were fourteen countries which stood higher than Canada as compared with 1930.

Those it seems to me are figures which should have the attention of every thoughtful Canadian. They indicate where Canada's trouble lies. Her trouble is not in industrial production, but it is in the falling off of exports and external trade and not getting it back as fast proportionately as other countries. I think these facts would be disturbing even to those members, if they are here to-day, who slept through a portion of my hon. friend's speech when presenting the budget. I think if the minister had given the figures I have indicated those hon. members would not have gone to sleep, particularly if they had also realized, that my hon. friend's budget showed that there was a debt increase of $117,000,000 for the year, and possibly a further debt increase of $100,000,000 to $150,000,000 for next year and that nearly 1,250,000 of our population are on relief, including about 250,000 heads of families.

My hon. friend may say—and I have no doubt some hon. members opposite are now muttering the suggestion, that I am running Canada down, and that, to use the expression used a short time ago by the Minister of Labour, we are fouling our own nest.

Mr. CHAPLIN: You would never do that!

Mr. RALSTON: No; but I want to say if that is the case I have fairly good company. I should like to read a paragraph from a speech given over the radio on January 3, 1935, by the Prime Minister, in which he stated:

> Canadians are not those from whom unpleasant facts should be concealed. The people of this country were born optimists, but they were born realists as well. They demand the truth, however disturbing it may be. And the truth is disturbing. The world is in tragic circumstances. The signs of recovery are few and doubtful. The signs of trouble are many, and they do not lessen.

I put these observations, Mr. Speaker, beside the optimistic references of the Minister of Finance, and I ask hon. members as Canadians to look the facts in the face and realize that it takes more than the Minister's table of industrial production showing comparisons with January 1, 1933, to show that all is well in the Dominion of Canada.

Another passage in the budget speech deals with the trade of Canada, and in this regard my hon. friend has been more generous than is his custom. This year he has devoted some space to it for the reason, I think, that this government is becoming alive to the fact that it is absolutely necessary to take some interest in the promotion of trade. The budget speech for this year does omit—and it is a rather important factor, it seems to me—the trade for the years 1926 to 1930. The table my hon. friend has placed on record—and I can understand why he did it—is somewhat difficult to follow. It is a table for the eleven months trade ending February 28, 1935. The reason for only eleven months being included is the fact that March had not been completed. I suggest to him that it would have been much easier for us to follow these figures if an estimate of March trade had been based on one-eleventh of the trade of the previous eleven months. This would be similar to his estimates of expenditures and revenue which are made based on the previous year. In order to complete this portion of the budget speech I have had prepared by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics a table which shows the total imports, the total exports and the total trade year by year for a five year period ending March 31, 1930, and for a five year period ending March 31, 1935. The figures for the year 1935 have been estimated as one month is not yet complete. This table is as follows:

Note.—The two right hand columns do not appear on the Bureau of Statistics statement—they are computations from the other figures.

Here is a summary of the table divided into two five year periods:

Five year period ending March 31, 1930
Imports into Canada	$ 5,581,130,376
Total exports	6,279,830,614
Total trade	11,860,960,990
Average annual total trade	2,372,192,198

Five year period ending March 31, 1935
Imports into Canada	$ 2,857,878,701
Total exports	3,097,046,493
Total trade	5,954,925,194
Average annual total trade	1,190,985,038

It will be noted that I have not just taken, say the year 1929 or 1930 to compare with 1935; I have taken a five year period which goes back to 1926, and these figures show that the trade under the present government for five years was just one-half the trade for a similar period under the previous government.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): What was the world trade average?

Mr. RALSTON: I cannot give that but I have given my hon. friend a few things to think about in connection with exports.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): World trade fell from $66,000,000,000 to $25,000,000,000.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend will have an opportunity of making his speech and I think it will take all of his time to deal with the points I have raised in connection with the export trade of Canada. I have given him sixteen countries to think about and he will see what the relative exports are for 1928 and 1935, 1932 and 1935 and the relative total trade for 1930 and 1935.

My hon. friend has made a point in connection with United Kingdom trade. I find —perhaps the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hanson) has these figures in his department—that our share of United Kingdom imports for the year ending September 30, 1932, just before the Ottawa agreements were made, was 5·20 while our share for the year ending September 30, 1934, was 6·33. In other words there was an improvement of one and one-half per cent. My hon. friends will say that this was due to the Ottawa agreements. It was not a very large increase and I think when a comparison is made between 1932 and 1934 it will be found that there are obvious causes other than the Ottawa agreements for the increase in imports into Great Britain from Canada. In the first place the buying power of Great Britain has been immeasurably improved by the rise of the pound; in the second place, the financial position of the British people was greatly improved in 1934 as compared with 1932. If my hon. friends are so proud of the Ottawa agreements, why has the motion of the hon. member for Toronto-Scarborough (Mr. Harris) been allowed to die? That motion offered an opportunity for my hon. friends to have a vote on these agreements. Although I understood that we were to get that opportunity, it has not come. All that we get in the budget speech are a few general statements with regard to the increased trade with Great Britain. The difficulty is that my hon. friends know perfectly well that if the Dunning budget of 1930 had been in effect every item of trade which has moved between Great Britain and this country would have moved under the generous provisions of that budget; it would not have required any bargaining at Ottawa to insure the flow of trade between these two great countries. From 1920 on we had a two to one preference as far as our trade with Great Britain was concerned; we sold them $4,000,000,000 worth of goods and we bought only $2,000,000,000 worth from them. Our relations with Great Britain were extremely good. But then my hon. friends came along with their bargaining attitude. The Prime Minister when he was leader of the opposition used to stand in his place and declare that Great Britain would get nothing from us unless there was a quid for our quo; we would give nothing unless Great Britain gave us something in return. Where has that policy gone in the light of this budget? This seems to be another recantation. We find in this budget that forty-seven items in the British preference have been reduced without Great Britain being asked for anything in return. This budget indicates a complete repudiation of that policy which was advocated so strenuously by the present government from this side of the house. My friends have given these things and they do not indicate that Great Britain is to give anything for these concessions, comparatively small though they may be. This is another instance in which they have apparently seen the light.

Practically every year hon. friends opposite applaud the fact that the Minister of Finance is able to show a favourable balance of trade. This balance was $134,000,000 this year and $145,000,000 last year. I suppose I must repeat myself, but I contend as I have contended before that the benefits of a balance of trade depend altogether upon how that balance is brought about. If it is brought about by reason of larger exports it is a good thing, because then you have the substance wherewith to buy and trade. But if it is brought about by starving yourself for the things you need through a restriction of imports, then the balance of trade is nothing to boast of. This is the sort of balance which is represented by this budget. I notice the Minister of Trade and Commerce is taking notes and I assume he is to follow me in this debate. I should like to quote from a publication issued by his own bureau. In a statement covering the years 1926 to 1932 this publication states that "Balance of trade figures are frequently misinterpreted due to the persistence of the doctrine long ago exploded that a nation's trade is necessarily in a healthy state when exports exceed imports, necessitating the import of gold to make up the difference." I should also like to quote from another publication which I believe some of my hon. friends will regard as an authority. I quote from the Financial Post of February 9, 1935, as follows:

> Most of the debtor countries of the world have increased their so-called favourable balances of trade since the depression began. No doubt, in all of these countries, the politicians are pointing to this achievement as an evidence of the prosperity created by the particular policies invoked by those politicians. A favourable balance of trade, if it were the result of a large volume of inward and outward transactions, might be something to crow over. But a very small total trade showing a favourable balance is no evidence in itself of prosperity in a country.

And further down:

> But it is suggested that the current tendency to use a favourable balance of merchandise trade as an index of a country's prosperity is based on economic errors so gross as to be something of a political crime when politicians and after-dinner speakers utilize the device.

I submit that in view of the fact that the average total trade of this country for the last five year period has been only one-half of the average total trade for the previous five year period and because this favourable balance of trade has been produced by a restriction of imports rather than by an increase of exports, it is not necessarily evidence of a healthy state of trade in this country.

I pass over very briefly a matter to which I have referred at greater length on previous occasions. My hon. friend and his predecessor have repeatedly indulged in predictions as to what might be the result of the year's transactions. The hon. gentleman's predecessor, the Prime Minister, used to lecture those of us on this side of the house with regard to the responsibility of a Minister of Finance who ventured a forecast which proved to be in any substantial measure out when the results of the year's operations were known. He indicated that the Chancellor of the Exchequer was held to the strictest accounting in connection with any predictions he made. As I have had occasion to point out in this house before, my right hon. friend in 1931 predicted that the figures which he presented would indicate a balancing of the budget by a substantial margin. Well, he had a deficit of $81,000,000. In 1932 the present minister predicted that "reductions in expenditure and probable additions to revenue would represent a complete balancing of the budget on ordinary account"—these are his words—and he had a deficit of $53,000,000. I left him in the hands of his leader. Then in 1933 he predicted a surplus of $2,000,000 and he had a deficit on ordinary account alone of $24,100,000. This year he has done a little better; gradually he has come up the scale. Last year he predicted a surplus of $8,800,000 to apply on extraordinary expenditures, and he reports a surplus of $2,700,000 on what he calls ordinary account. You can have surpluses if you leave out enough obligations, and to achieve his result my hon. friend has left out unemployment relief, railways, the construction program—in fact, he has left out about everything except what could be regarded as bare operating expenses. It is very different from the days when budgets were presented by the predecessor of the hon. gentleman and of the Prime Minister, when the accounts showed definite surpluses year after year, piling up to the amount of $257,000,000. All that my hon. friend says about his estimate is this. He says, "After we get through we have a deficit of $117,700,000." But he tells us to cheer up because the deficit for the previous year was $133,500,000, and that this year's figures indicate an over all improvement of $15,800,000. In other words, although we are not better we are less bad—$117,000,000 deficit this year but last year it was worse. I have had occasion before to deal with the question of the public debt, and on this occasion I feel—in fact, I know—that the situation is much more serious than it has ever been in the past. My hon. friend has a way of computing increases in the debt which may be all right so far as bookkeeping is concerned but which, according to some whom he regards as very high authorities, is absolutely incorrect as representing the accurate debt condition of the country.

My hon. friend shows in his budget speech this year an increase in the net debt, since the end of 1929-30, of $669,900,000, and he says that, included in that, is $83,000,000 for the year 1930-31. And this, he says, should not be charged to the government. I say to him, what I said to his leader in 1931: You are responsible for the year 1930-31 except for the first four months, inasmuch as you had full opportunity to cancel any expenditures you wanted to cancel. All that had been done was that parliament had voted the money.

Mr. MANION: We cancelled $75,000,000 of wild railway expenditures.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend cancelled $75,000,000 on account of railways, which he and his friend the former Minister of Trade and Commerce, but particularly the latter, voted for unanimously in the committee.

Mr. MANION: The matter was never put to a vote, as it happens.

Mr. RALSTON: And Sir Henry Thornton had received the congratulations of the hon. gentleman's colleague.

Mr. MANION: Not from me.

Mr. RALSTON: No. My hon. friend is now trying to get out of it, like others over there, but there was a time when the Canadian National was taken to the bosom of the government opposite and regarded as their baby. Only since it began to have large deficits have they decided to shift the responsibility to others.

Mr. MANION: There were large deficits all through your regime.

Mr. RALSTON: The question is whether the deficit of $83,000,000 for the year 1930-31 should be charged to my hon. friend's administration. My hon. friend, as usual, has included it; he has not quibbled about it, because as I have pointed out, after the first four months my hon. friends had full charge, and the Minister of Railways confirms me now when he says that they cut out many items amounting to $75,000,000. We have therefore no quarrel on that score. They had control and they took control, and if there was a deficit at the end of the year they are responsible for it. The Liberal budget for 1930-31 had included $440,000,000. Now note. This budget, according to the Minister of Railways, was cut down by $75,000,000, and the next year the government, of which the Minister of Railways was a member, budgeted not for $440,000,000 less $75,000,000 but for $430,000,000, only $10,000,000 less than the Liberals had done the year before. So that it would rather indicate that they were fairly well satisfied with the 1930-31 budget that had been brought down by the Liberals.

The question I put to you, Mr. Speaker, is this: Is $669,900,000 the correct figure for the increase in the debt including the 1930-31 year as being under the Conservative administration? I say that, on the authority of the Prime Minister and on the authority of the hon. gentleman who occupies the position of Minister of Justice at the present time, that is not the correct figure. My hon. friend the Minister of Justice, in a speech in 1929, when he was occupying the position I now occupy, made this statement in reply to the budget:

> We have never had very serious controversy about the funded debt of the country, but I am glad to note that in his speech last Friday the minister for the first time took serious account of what we know as the funded or bonded debt or, as he put it in his remarks, the dead weight debt of the Dominion of Canada. That, after all, is the important item in the financing of this country. The net debt is not a matter of the greatest consequence; in England they never refer to it all. There they use the one term "dead weight debt," and I am glad that the minister has used that term on this occasion, because that is the debt which counts. It is the amount for which the government of this country has issued in solemn form its bonds and obligations, signed, sealed and delivered, which bonds are now held by people who have invested in our securities. These bonds have to be paid at maturity, and in the meantime interest must be met. They therefore constitute the real burden which the people of this country are compelled to carry.

The net debt is comparatively unimportant; it is a matter very largely of bookkeeping and depends upon how you see fit to estimate the value of your assets. We have assets that are certainly good liquid assets, but we have a lot of assets in this country which we carry as non-active assets, and if you want to transfer some of these non-active assets to the active list you can immediately decrease your net debt. It is, I say, a matter largely of bookkeeping. But the debt which counts is the dead weight debt.

Note that, Mr. Speaker, it is the "dead weight" debt which he says counts. Then the Prime Minister speaking from about the same position in 1928 said this, as reported in Hansard of that year on page 1246:

> May I venture to point out, sir, that it should not be difficult to ascertain what the debt of the country is, and I say further that there is no need to talk about "net" debt or "gross" debt. The proper term to apply is funded debt, and the funded debt of Canada means "the mortgage on the farm." Now if the mortgage on the farm is $5.000, payable the 1st of January, 1929, and you have in your current account at the bank $1.000 which must be used to pay taxes, for seed grain and various other demands, at the end of the year the $1,000 may be partly or wholly exhausted, but the mortgage on the farm still remains $5,000 and must be treated as such.

There are two hon. gentlemen who do not talk about net debt, and yet that is what the present Minister of Finance talks about all the time. He says that there is an increase in the net debt of $669,000,000 from 1930 to 1935. I quote these authorities as indicating that that is not the correct practice according to his own colleagues. These are some of the things which are included in assets as shown on the balance sheet on page 1984 of Hansard and which would enter into the calculation of the net debt:

Loans to provinces..	$74,649,000

That is counted as a cash item. The question is whether those loans can be realized or not.

Loan to Roumania..	$23,969,000

That is counted as a cash asset.

Loans to harbour commissioners—
Montreal..	$58,519,000
Vancouver..	22,921,000
New Westminster..	275,000

[Mr. Ralston.]

Those are loans. Those are all included, and deductions are made for them in estimating the net debt. I want to be quite fair; on the other hand there are superannuation funds and cash, but the point is that there is a definite balance on the assets side due to the building up of items such as those I mentioned a moment ago.

If we take then the funded debt, the "mortgage on the farm," what is the increase in debt under this government? During the five years of Liberal rule from 1925 to 1930 there was a total reduction of $257,000,000; I will not give the odd thousands. The funded debt on March 31, was as follows:

Year	Amount
1930..	$2,194,000,000
1931..	2,319,000,000
1932..	2,501,000,000

Or an increase in two years of about $307,000,000.

1933..	$2,649,000,000

Or an increase of $455,000,000 from 1930 to 1933.

Or an increase in the funded debt from 1930 to 1934 of about $594,000,000. The funded debt on March 31, 1935, according to the account submitted by my hon. friend, is $3,007,408,000, or an increase over last year of about $218,000,000, or an increase from 1930 to 1935 of $812,061,000. The difference between $812,000,000, which is the increase in the funded debt, in the mortgage on the farm, and the $669,000,000 to which my hon. friend refers, is a mere matter of $143,000,000, and what is that between friends? The interest on the increased debt of $812,000,000 is, as the house will realize, something like $32,000,000 to $33,000,000, or $2.50 to $3 a head for every man, woman and child in the dominion. It means that the increase in the funded debt for this year, 1934-35, is the largest that has ever been under my right hon. friend's administration, or $218,000,000. Do you wonder that I say that the situation with regard to the debt is serious when we find an increase of $812,000,000 in five years in the funded "dead weight" debt of the dominion?

My hon. friends opposite have said something about conversion. The Minister of Finance in his budget speech spoke about conversion loans, saying that there has been a reduction in interest charges. That is so, but as is pointed out by the dominion statistician, Doctor Coats, in a letter to one of the members of parliament:

Refundings which have taken place in the past four years have reduced the interest charges upon previously existing national debt by something like $14,600,000 although this has been largely offset by increases in principal of our national obligations.

We are all glad that the rate of interest has been reduced, but a conversion loan does not mean anything so far as relieving us of interest charges is concerned, if the next minute we start in to borrow more money. The conversion loan of which my hon. friend rather boasts in his budget speech is nothing new; all it means is that the government, just like an individual, finds the goods it has to sell have a favourable market and it goes out and sells them at a higher price. There is no magic about that; there is nothing but good business judgment. I remember that conversion loans were effected under the former administration by which some $5,000,000 of interest was saved. This is therefore not an extraordinary transaction. We congratulate the government on having made the conversion; it was the proper thing to do in order to reduce the interest rate, but there is nothing specially outstanding about it in the way of business acumen or financial skill. So, while the rate has been reduced, while we have been able to sell government bonds at a higher price, we have had to make more loans and the result is that the reduction in our interest charges is largely nullified. But the point that troubles me and I believe troubles the people generally is that the reason the government is able to get cheap money is that there is a lack of confidence by investors in industry and commercial enterprises. A government bond is the best thing the people can get and therefore they put their money into it. The banks are holding over fifty per cent of their liquid assets in government bonds at the present time and this money is not going into industry. Cheap money for the government means that confidence has been lost or has not been restored in connection with industrial and commercial enterprises. That is the point which should trouble Canadians although rejoicing in the fact that the interest rate is being reduced so far as our national debt is concerned. I would rather see relief from the interest loan brought about in the way it was in the five years before 1930 when it was accomplished by paying off principal, not leaving any hangover whatever, when $257,000,000 of public debt was paid off entirely and the interest load reduced accordingly.

In that same connection I want to discuss a matter which it seems to me ought to occupy almost paramountly the attention of the public authorities of this country, and that is this whole matter of public finance. I have had a statement prepared and I find that the public funded obligations of Canada are as follows:

Dominion obligations—
Total funded debt	$3,007,000,000
Guaranteed bonds	987,000,000
	$3,994,000,000
Nearly four billion dollars.
Provincial obligations—
Bonded or debenture debt	$1,224,000,000
Treasury bills	110,000,000
	1,334,000,000
Municipal obligations—
Bonded or debenture debt	1,386,000,000
Total	$6,714,000,000

All public finance, public indebtedness in this country.

I have also had prepared a statement showing the relative interest load borne by the residents of the different provinces in respect of that debt. I am not going to take the time of the house to read the individual columns, but I would like to read the total per capita interest load borne by the citizens of the various provinces in respect of the combined dominion, provincial and municipal debt. You will understand that these figures are not complete in some cases. I think in connection with both New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island they are not altogether complete, but so far as we can get them they are as follows:

Total per capita paid for interest by the residents per year
Prince Edward Island	$16.10
Nova Scotia	21.34
New Brunswick	21.90
Quebec	21.79
Ontario	27.28
Manitoba	26.69
Saskatchewan	21.93
Alberta	25.08
British Columbia	30.27

My hon. friend has mentioned, for the purpose of drawing the attention of the country to it, a possible scheme for refunding or dealing in a broad and comprehensive way with the whole matter of the public finance of the dominion, and has raised the question whether or not that can be done by what he speaks of as a loan council, or whether it could be done better through the more elastic organization, and the assistance I presume he means, of the central bank. I say to him that I agree that there should be something done by way of collaboration, by way of consultation, with regard to public financing in Canada. I am doubtful, and I think he is, whether the provinces would agree to federal control of finance. I think he makes that fairly clear in his speech. But I feel that there is a possibility of having some sort of organization whereby there will be, not control, but whereby in the first instance there will be consultation and study and working together rather than a degree of rigidity or authority. The point is that the dominion authorities apparently have admitted that the finances of the provinces are of vital interest to the dominion. I am one who has not been so sure that that is correct. Sometimes I have felt that the Prime Minister—I speak of him particularly because he is taking special interest in these things—has gone perhaps further than was necessary in that regard. I feel satisfied as one citizen of the dominion that he went altogether too far in protecting the credit of the dominion when he gave guarantees for Newfoundland. Whether or not that applies to the guarantees for the provinces of Canada I am not prepared to say. But we have in these accounts this fact, that the dominion of Canada, for better or for worse, has admitted some interest in the credit of the provinces, in view of the fact that there have been guarantees given in respect of provincial obligations to the extent of $74,000,000. If that is the case I submit that the time has come for some concerted and definite and serious attempt to put the public finances of the dominion on a sounder basis. It may be that my hon. friend is correct, and that the Bank of Canada may afford a nucleus for that organization. I believe that the provinces will have to be willing and enthusiastic participants before the thing can be a success. Interest charges on municipal, provincial and federal obligations are all paid by the same people and out of the same pocket, there is no such thing as separating the citizen of the Dominion of Canada from the citizen of any province or of any municipality. They are all one and all pay these taxes. Obviously since there is a disparity between the interest load of the different provinces it may be possible that there is a difference in the borrowing power and in the advisability of borrowing on the part of the different provinces. In some provinces there may be a possibility of public works that are nearer self-liquidating and of more productive capacity than in others. But if the credit of the various component parts of the dominion is affected by the action of others then the financial operations of each are of concern to the others. And if the dominion is concerned with possible unsound finance of the provinces I think the provinces have a right to say as well that they are concerned with possible unsound finance of the dominion, and that they should meet in the first instance as willing and enthusiastic participants rather than simply to meet under federal authority.

I therefore submit that it would be good common sense, good business, good government, for all concerned to apply their minds to the formation of some organization, for which I have suggested for want of a better name, that of public finance council. In that connection I am not suggesting the setting up of any super board, I am speaking of an organization formed of representatives of those concerned. This council ought to have, first, the power and opportunity of considering the great problem of refunding and lightening the burden of interest on loans already effected; second, of considering the wisdom of further borrowings and the capacity of the citizens to carry the burden; third, the effect of further borrowings on the credit of the constituent members represented on this council; fourth, and this is most important, the orderly offering and marketing of public issues. We have seen too often the provinces, the municipalities and the dominion rushing to get to the money market first in order to catch the opportunity of getting rid of their issues, leaving the others to drag. Again it seems to me that such a council could well consider standards of administration and efficiency respecting not only capital but current expenditures. And I want to make this point; I have never been a believer in centralization, I believe rather in decentralization and in preserving the pride and esprit de corps of the provinces and the municipalities. But I believe in working together in sound consideration of common problems because the political divisions of this country cannot live to themselves alone any more than nations can. We have tried that experiment in recent years and found it a dismal failure. Therefore in connection with this particular passage in the budget speech I believe that the getting together of a representative body in Canada constituted to suit our particular conditions, would work not only without injury to the local esprit de corps but with distinct benefit to the pride, self-respect and self-confidence of the citizens of every part of the dominion.

Now I come to a more contentious subject, as indicated by the fact that my hon. friend the Minister of Railways rose a few moments ago. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance on this occasion, as he has previously and as have his predecessors, rather treats the Canadian National Railways as a drag on the wheels, as something which comes in at the last minute to take all the joy out of life, to take all the cream off the milk. In computing his deficit this year he first shows his surplus of I think $2,700,000, then proceeds to take off something for unemployment relief, something for capital expenditure, and for everything else, and finally brings in $48,000,000 for the Canadian National Railways as the last straw. I submit that we cannot too often put before this house and the people of the country the position of the Canadian National Railways and of our railway problem. I am not going into it at length today, I have discussed it before in this house, but I want to remind the house that the situation is this: There have been large commitments and advances by Canada on account of the roads which now comprise the Canadian National Railways; the Canadian National railway system is a combination, a conglomeration of what were regarded as almost junk railways, that it is as if you had taken three or four carts and taken a wheel off one, a pair of shafts from another, a box off another and put them all together and made one cart and then proposed that that cart should do the work and pay the carrying charges of the four carts which originally composed it. It cannot be done. It is no use to set the Canadian National Railways up in a corner and say that that railway as a system is what is losing our money. It is not fair to the railway or to the finances of the country or to ourselves who have put the Canadian National Railways in that position. I say, as I said to the Minister of Railways, speaking of capital expenditure from 1921 to 1930, everyone in the house voted for it; everyone patted Sir Henry Thornton on the back; everyone—cities, municipalities, provinces, corporations, individuals and the dominion—was spending money, and the man who could spend the most money was the most popular man, the man who was doing the biggest things for his country. There is no use coming along now and talking about what has gone by; we all voted for it. Now the question is what we are going to do about it when the time comes to pay the bill.

My hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) speaking from his place in this house in 1928, at a time when the Canadian National Railways had a deficit of $5,516,000 after paying interest to the public, said at page 1122 of Hansard:

> Nobody will pretend—not the Minister of Railways, for he knows too well, nor the Minister of Finance—that this government or any member of it is entitled to a particle of credit for the improved showing made in connection with the Canadian National Railways. The management of the road is supposed to be entirely divorced from government control. It is under the absolute control, so far as management goes, of Sir Henry Thornton and his board, without government interference, and they are entitled to the full credit for the result obtained —$125,000,000 of relief for the treasury of Canada in four years.... The real fact is that the finance minister and the Minister of Railways are endeavouring to appropriate to themselves the credit that is due to Sir Henry Thornton. They are endeavouring to bask in the reflected glory of the president of the Canadian National Railways without there being the slightest foundation for their claiming any credit for his achievement ... the point which I desire to make is this, that if credit be due to anyone in respect to the reduction of the net debt of the dominion, that credit is directly due to the management of the Canadian National Railways; for the improved showing which they have been able to make and for the relief which for the last four years they have been able to afford to the treasury of Canada. Without one move of the hand or one stroke of the pen by the finance minister or any of his colleagues, Sir Henry Thornton and his board have accomplished that feat, and to them credit is due, and to them the thanks of the country should be returned.

That was in 1928. Now I quote from Hansard for 1929, at page 742. In that year the result of the operations of the Canadian National Railways was a deficit of $3,185,000 after paying interest due the public. The present Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) said:

> The result of operations for last year was very gratifying, and I would ask the Minister of Finance to note that the treasury of this country has been relieved very substantially for the last four or five years through the successful operation of Canada's national railway system. On January 1, 1924, an announcement was made by the president that for the first time in its history the national system had produced a net revenue over operating expenses, for the year 1923, amounting to $4,155,000; in 1924 that revenue had increased to $18,000,000; in 1925, it had increased again to $33,000,000; in 1926 the revenue was $48,000,000; in 1927 it dropped back to $42,000,000; and for 1928 we have the wonderful result of a surplus in net operating expenses amounting to $58,000,000. It will take $50,000,000 of that amount to pay the interest on the bonds which the public hold. I understand the management of the road will pay that interest this year, and will still have on hand a balance of $8,000,000 for other purposes.

That was the attitude in which the present Minister of Justice, representing the Conservative party, viewed the Canadian National Railways at that time. Before I am through I will give the house the benefit of another extract. They regarded it as the child of the management; they were congratulating the management on the way it was getting on. There was no talk then of spending too much.

These are the points, Mr. Speaker. First, these roads are a conglomeration of a number of bankrupt roads. Second, they are a combination of the policies of all parties, not of one party alone. The Minister of Railways has come to that conclusion himself; he expressed that view in a speech he made in Ingersoll last fall. According to the report in the Toronto Globe of April 10, the minister said:

> Turning to the railway situation in Canada, the minister reviewed the construction of the transcontinental line, declaring that each party should go fifty-fifty in the matter of blame for this.

All three transcontinental roads were the policies of everybody. I made that statement in the house on one occasion and someone interrupted to say that it was not so. After that I had occasion to look up the records, and I think I convinced even the doubters that that was the case, and that the three transcontinental railways were advocated and supported by no less a gentleman than the Prime Minister. Sir Robert Borden approved the building of a second road, another transcontinental railway, in the amendment which he moved to the Grand Trunk Pacific Act, in 1904. The Grand Trunk Pacific and the National Transcontinental were built soon after. In 1912-13 a Conservative government granted a subsidy in order to permit the completion of the Canadian Northern through to the coast. That made the third transcontinental railway. This is what my right hon. friend the present Prime Minister said during the course of that debate, according to Hansard for June 3, 1913, at page 11777:

> Mr. Bennett: Do not we require a third transcontinental line as a spout for western grain? And hence is not the construction of the road from Fort William to the seaboard absolutely essential if the value of the other lines is to be maintained?

Then further down he said:

> I suppose the hon. gentleman will admit that the railways had to run parallel; they went through the same pass; it was a physical necessity.

That is the road in connection with which my right hon. friend indicated that he almost felt ashamed, as he went past Sir Wilfrid Laurier's monument, to think how far Sir Wilfrid had gone astray in connection with the railway policy of this country. All three railway lines were advocated and supported by all parties in this country.

In the next place, Mr. Speaker, the advances by the government have been wiped out by common consent. In a passage which I will read in a moment or two, quoting from the remarks of the present Minister of Justice, my hon. friend regarded the money which was paid by this country for the roads making up the Canadian National Railways as a bookkeeping item, and he thought no endeavour should be made to have it paid back. The sum of about $1,700,000,000 incurred when these roads were taken over before the Liberals came into power in 1922 is the big item in connection with our railway obligation. Fourth, the capital expenditures were approved by all parties in the house. Fifth, the revenue losses —and I want this to be noted—on the Canadian National are no greater than the revenue losses on the other great railway system in this country; they run along neck and neck. The railway is well operated. Sixth, the capital is represented by bonds which are an annual charge, and that is the difference between the financing of the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific. The Canadian National has every dollar of its capital shown in the way of bonds, with fixed charges. The Canadian Pacific has, besides debentures, stock, on which it is not required to pay dividends unless there is a profit. Seventh, the management was approved by all parties.

The railway is the property of the people of Canada, taken over under the authority of their representatives. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance, as I say, treats it as a sort of drag on the wheel, and the Prime Minister made a most astounding statement a short time ago. Speaking in Toronto, as reported in the Ottawa Journal of January 29, 1935, the Prime Minister said:

> It far transcends the importance of any political party—it is your problem—not Bennett's and not the government's.

I thought my right hon. friend was running the government, and I thought this was one of the problems with which the government had to deal. According to the budget speech there is an item for that purpose, and I say to my right hon. friend that he cannot get rid of his obligations as head of the Government in that way. He cannot throw up his hands and say, "I have no responsibility for the Canadian National Railways," nor can this government say so. They should tackle the railway problem courageously, and not pass the buck as they do. I say the Canadian National Railways are part of Canada's national equipment. They were undertaken, put together and financed by the people of this country, and the government of Canada have no right to throw the problem out of the window, or to attempt to get rid of it by leaving it on the door step of the nation. I say also—and in this I may be treading on delicate ground, but I am going to say it—that the chairman of the Canadian National Railways has just as much right to stand up and tell the people of the Dominion of Canada about the Canadian National Railways as the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway has to tell them about his road. I say that has not been recognized by this government. Some statements were made in Halifax, but apparently the chairman of the board of trustees of the Canadian National Railways was promptly told—

Mr. MANION: I do not like to interrupt, but I do it in good part. My hon. friend said he considered that the government should tackle the question courageously and deal with it. Would he elaborate that statement, or does he care to?

Mr. RALSTON: I was not born the week before last, and my hon. friend was not born the week before that. That is not a usual question for a front bencher to ask anyone on this side of the house. I just give my hon. friend this suggestion, and I give it in good part, without intending to be scarcastic; I would say to my hon. friend that if he and his colleagues would be sincere enough to make use of the legislation they brought down in this house two years ago, providing for arbitral tribunals to eliminate duplications where possible and which so far as I know never has been used, we would learn whether the thing called compulsory cooperation would work in this country.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend knows that we cannot have an arbitral tribunal except at the request of one of the railways, and no railway has requested it.

Mr. RALSTON: I think my hon. friend will find that no railway has requested an arbitral tribunal because of the fact that the government has not seen fit to appoint a chief commissioner of the board of railway commissioners.

Mr. MANION: That is not the reason at all.

Mr. RALSTON: That is the reason.

Mr. MANION: None of them have asked for it.

Mr. RALSTON: I ask my hon. friend to provide the machinery for an arbitral tribunal and see whether they will or not. As a matter of fact the chief commissioner is supposed to preside over an arbitral tribunal, but at the present time there is no chief commissioner and the position has been left vacant a long time. If my hon. friend would inquire—and I am not so sure he has not now the information—I think he would find that some applications are pretty nearly ready, or probably have been ready for some time and something could be done, if there were some machinery whereby they could be presented.

My hon. friend has asked me what to do. I say to him that he should try the legislation he brought down two years ago. Then we will see if this thing works out, if it is possible for men to get around a table, and to find out whether or not there may be certain portions of the roads, in one place or another, where the services might be undertaken by one and abandoned by the other. That has not been tried, at all. There has not been one blessed thing done, so far as I can find out, with regard to lessening of expenditures as contemplated by that legislation. But my hon. friend comes here year after year complaining about the deficit of the Canadian National Railways. The Prime Minister goes to Toronto, throws up his hands and says, "It is your problem." I submit the Canadian National Railways have not been treated fairly. Why do they not try out the legislation which they themselves provided and which, I believe, they thought would work at the time.

Let me say a further word more about the railways, I have suggested one solution. My second solution is this—perhaps my second should have been the first; probably the order should have been changed. However the solution is, that if the trade of this country could be improved, and if my hon. friends opposite would adopt a policy which would move the wheat, if they would develop external trade and thus provide freight for our railways from coast to coast they would probably get somewhere near to solving the problem, just as the Minister of Justice throught our railway problem was being solved in 1928-29 when we nearly balanced the payment of interest to the public.

On this point regarding trade policy as affecting railways let me now quote the president of the Bank of Nova Scotia, who indicates just what he believes is the real trouble behind our railways in Canada. Here is what he states:

> I shall have something to say presently regarding the strangulation of the world's trade, which we have witnessed during the past few years, and its consequences, direct and indirect. It suffices here to remark that there have been no more unfortunate victims than the Canadian railways, of the passion for economic nationalism, which has been dominating and still in a measure, dominates the world.

That is the trouble with the railways in Canada to-day "unfortunate victims of the passion for economic nationalism". Take the machinery which has been provided, and if that machinery does not provide a solution probably my second suggestion would. But in addition to what I have said may I remind my hon. friend, when he asks what I have to suggest, that the leader of my hon. friend while sitting in opposition used to say, "as Mr. Gladstone once said, When I am called in I will prescribe."

Mr. McPHEE: It won't be long now.

Mr. RALSTON: I said I would quote one other reference made by the Minister of Justice and I find it at page 743 of Hansard for 1929. This is what my hon. friend thought of the Canadian National Railways at that time—and I suppose he expressed the opinion of the Minister of Railways and Canals:

But what about the money it owes to the dominion treasury? The minister intimates that the sum of $32,000,000 odd is owed this year to the government for interest. It is put down in the books as a debt of the railway, but is purely a book-keeping transaction, and I presume it will be added to the $1,258,000,000 which the company owed to us at the beginning of the year, making the total indebtedness of the system to the dominion treasury about $1,300,000.000 and to the public about $1.000,000,000.

In this respect, however, to the National railways we on this side of the house are all optimists. We look upon that railway as practically our own infant and our own creature.

He continues at page 745:

Now, when this wonderful Canadian National railway system has more than justified itself, now, that it is rapidly becoming in the nature of a great national asset, now that we may look forward to a day, not perhaps in my lifetime, but in the lifetime of some here, when this system will start repaying the government of Canada part at least of the money it owes to the treasury, to the day when it will have a clean sheet, as it ultimately will have, in regard to its bonded indebtedness to the public; now that the system is in this, a thoroughly prosperous condition—

Under a Liberal government.

—this government desires to treat it as its own creature. Whereas in 1919 it tried to cast it out as base-born, now it wants to consider it as its legitimate offspring, and to profit by its success. Let me say, in concluding my remarks on this phase of the subject, that the national railway system in this country constitutes a lasting monument to the ability and statesmanship and determination of a single man, a member of a former Conservative government, and subsequently Prime Minister of that government. It is to his ability and foresight, to his statesmanship and determination that the people of Canada are indebted for this wonderful system of national railways.

I suggest to my hon. friend that he might go to the present leader of the Senate and find out from him what to do about these railways, as according to the present Minister of Justice the national railways are a monument to his statesmanship and determination. Go to him and find out what his advice would be about the railways for which according to the Minister of Justice we are indebted to the present leader of the Senate.

Now we come to the budgeting for the next year—and here is where I have to find serious fault with my hon. friend. As best he could he has given us a report of what took place last year, and to some extent at least he has given a forecast of expenditures and receipts for the next year. Here again I would remind him, to use that well known phrase, that the Chancellor of the Exchequer in delivering his address to the British parliament is always held to "strictest account" for the extent to which he has been able to realize his expectations. At page 2168 of Hansard for 1931 this question was asked by the Prime Minister:

Will any hon. member on the other side of the house say that last year there was any estimate given of expected revenues? Was there any estimate given of expected expenditures? Was there any word given of a $75,000,000 deficit? What did they do? What the then government did was merely to bring down estimates for moneys to be raised by taxation without any estimate of what was to be realized. I said frequently in this house in those days, and I now repeat, that not in any municipal council in this country would the people tolerate their mayor and councillors conducting business without giving an estimate of expected expenditures and revenues for the current year. It is the basis of responsible government, it is the basis upon which representative institutions have been established, and that responsibility can only attach when there is some estimate as to what is being received by the country from the taxation imposed...

My hon. friend has budgeted for a surplus of $21,500,000. But he says there will be some special expenditures the amounts of which he does not give. I should like to attempt to complete the budget; he has left some things out. There will be $6,000,000 on capital account, and how much for unemployment relief? Surely under this government there will be no necessity for unemployment relief. I shall not read that classic passage from the speech the Prime Minister delivered at Moncton during the 1930 campaign, but I will make mention of one made five years ago at Victoria. On June 17, 1930, he is reported to have said:

You have my promise that if the Conservative party is returned to power that as soon after July 28 as possible parliament will be called together to deal with the problem of unemployment by providing, not doles, but work and that legislative action will be taken to bring about the future security of our country and the well being of its people . . . . We cannot tolerate the dole. Men and women of this country want work, not charity.

Here is another speech which has not been quoted so often. At Quebec on July 14, he said:

> There was no necessity for a conference on unemployment. The solution was too apparent. "What you want is work," he exclaimed, "not conferences, and you are going to get work." Unless his promises to the people of Canada were kept if elected to office, Mr. Bennett said he wanted Quebec and other members of his party to vote him out of office.

Of course that Moncton speech we all know so well is written in the copy books of the school children from Halifax to Vancouver. There were to be no doles but work. But now, after five years my hon. friend brings down a budget in which he proposes to spend a huge amount for unemployment relief. Compare the Prime Minister's remarks at Vancouver, Quebec and Moncton during the campaign in 1930 with what the Minister of Finance states in 1935:

> The total number of individuals on relief, including dependents, was 1,229,935 in February which is a decrease of 117,285 from February of last year, and of 265,031 from March, 1933.

Notwithstanding all the assistance given by government work, government projects, and relief construction, notwithstanding the enormous expenditures already made, these are the people on relief in Canada—or, at least, this number were on relief at the time this paragraph in the budget speech was prepared. As yet there has been no considered program with regard to unemployment and there has been no considered program with regard to relief. It has been helter skelter, hit or miss. One year it has been public works, another year it has been relief, another year it has been public works and relief; one year it has been a certain percentage of contribution by the provinces and municipalities, and then this has been changed; there has been no uniformity.

There never was a finer program given to the government than was included in the speech by Miss Charlotte Whitton to the Canadian Chamber of Commerce in Winnipeg. She pointed out the absolute necessity of a national relief council if there was to be any proper administration of relief in this country.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We suggested the same thing.

Mr. RALSTON: My right hon. leader points out that that policy was suggested by him at the first session in 1930, and he has repeated it year after year but to deaf ears. This matter must be treated from the dominion point of view. There should be some general, coordinated policy. It must be seen to that standards are the same and that services furnished are similar. Consideration should be given to the needs of the individual but there should be no exodus from one part of the country to another in order to secure a higher scale of relief or more extensive relief benefits thus enabling the locality which is paying less to get rid of its obligation. These are things which have not been considered by this government, yet in 1935, when we have 1,229,000 on relief, my hon. friend comes down with his budget and says: "I cannot tell you how much we are going to pay for relief; I can just tell you that we are going to have a surplus of $21,000,000 and we will have to pay relief out of that." We paid $49,000,000 for relief last year and my hon. friend says that there was a carryover from 1933 amounting to $9,000,000. Five million dollars was paid to Saskatchewan on account of drought relief and my hon. friend thinks that that may be paid back. However, I am striking that off with the $9,000,000. That makes $14,000,000 which leaves $35,000,000 which ought to be added to the estimated expenditures for the coming year.

What about the Public Works Construction Act? The total vote for this was approximately $40,000,000 but only $8,000,000 was spent last year. If this program is to be carried out it will be necessary to spend $32,000,000 this year, but that is not referred to in the budget forecast. The money will have to be got somewhere if it is to be spent this year and if my hon. friends do what we expect they will do, namely, start to erect a lot of public buildings and projects on the eve of the election. That is another $31,000,000. But is that all? There are rumors about an additional public works program. I do not know whether this is right; my hon. friend does not tell us anything about it in his budget speech. I thought that if this were so it would need an amount similar to that which was voted in last year's estimates. Perhaps it will not be this much, but I have put it in at an additional $40,000,000. The railway deficit is still to be provided for. My hon. friend takes an optimistic view about this. Last year the railway showed an surplus of $6,000,000 before the public interest was paid and he expects that next year the deficit will be reduced by $4,400,000. That leaves about another $44,000,000 to be provided for.

Lastly, there is the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited. Two years ago I suggested in this connection that $20,000,000 should be provided but the Prime Minister later indicated that there might be a loss of $15,000,000. I have put in $20,000,000. So we have $6,000,000 for capital expenditure, $35,000,000 for relief, $32,000,000 for a construction program, $40,000,000 for a further construction program, $44,000,000 for the railway deficit and $20,000,000 for a possible deficit in connection with the wheat transactions. This gives a total of $177,000,000, but I will make it $150,000,000, against which there is a surplus of only $21,000,000. There would seem to be the possibility of our debt being increased next year by $125,000,000. So far under Conservative administration our funded debt has been increased by $812,000,000 and with this addition for next year it will have been increased by nearly one billion dollars. I think my hon. friend is quite right when he says in his speech at page 1989 of Hansard:

> Meantime recovery will be hastened if we face our obligations courageously. To attempt to run away from them by failing at least to strive to pay our way, would not only retard recovery but this course would in the long run entail much greater sacrifice.

We should pay our way but we have not paid our way in any single year since this government came into office. I venture to predict that if this government stays in power we will continue not to pay our way. If we are to pay our way we must start doing things in a businesslike way, and I believe the people of Canada will see to this at the first opportunity. In the final result, the financial statement offered by my hon. friend is not a budget because he ignores entirely these items which are bound to come up for payment, with the possible exception of the added public works program.

I should like now to refer to the wheat guarantee. I do not intend to take up much time in this connection as I understand we are to be given an opportunity to discuss this matter in the near future. On page 2149 of Hansard is a table of loans and guarantees made by the government. There is a loan to British Columbia, to Manitoba, to the Manitoba savings office, to the Algoma Steel Corporation, to the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation, to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and to the government of Newfoundland. Amounts appear opposite all these items, but the next item concerns the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited, and in this instance the amount is "unstated"—another blank cheque. I should like to refer for a moment to the transactions which gave rise to this guarantee. I shall do so very briefly, as in the very nature of things an opportunity should be given to discuss this matter before dissolution.

This guarantee was originally granted by order in council P.C. 2238 dated September 12, 1931. Hon. members will remember that in January, 1931, the Prime Minister issued a letter by which he guaranteed the advances made by seven banks to the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited in connection with the handling of the 1930 crop and the order in Council was passed nine months after. Mr. McFarland took over the job; in fact he took over two jobs. One was to dispose of the 1930 crop, and the other was to see that the market would not be unduly depressed by this action. I do not believe there has ever been a definite statement made by anyone in authority in connection with this matter, but the reports are that Mr. McFarland commenced his job by purchasing 75,000,000 bushels of wheat. When the Minister of Finance brought down his budget in 1932 mention was made of this guarantee, and more definite information was given at that time than has been given in any subsequent budget. On page 1759 of the Hansard of 1932, the Minister of Finance stated:

> Based upon present market prices, the expectation is that, when all accounts are settled, the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited, will be able to settle all advances without recourse being had to the dominions guarantee.

So in 1932 the minister was predicting that there would be no loss to the dominion on account of the guarantees. During the fall session of 1932 this matter came up again and the Prime Minister is reported on page 1176 of Hansard as saying:

> Except for the mention of the exact financial amount involved, which obviously it is difficult to give, I think I have answered all the questions asked.

Of course it was difficult to give the financial amount involved without giving the amount of wheat purchased. The dominion had guaranteed the loans made by the seven banks to the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited covering the full amount of the commitments made by Mr. McFarland in purchasing wheat. This matter was again before the house in 1933, and the Minister of Finance is reported on page 3455 of Hansard of that year as saying:

> The question of ultimate liability will depend entirely upon the future course of wheat prices.

In March, 1934, the Prime Minister became a little more communicative; he indicated to the house that there might be a loss of $15,000,000. Now in 1935, just before the government goes to the country, the Minister of Finance gives us the laconic information that the amount of the guarantee is "unstated." And I now give the whole reference which appears in the present budget to this rather important and somewhat large commitment of the Dominion of Canada to the banks of this country through Mr. McFarland. At page 1983 the minister says:

> The guarantee of bank advances arising out of the operations of the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited in connection with the marketing of wheat, was continued.
> Apart from the wheat guarantee, which is for an unstated amount and is subject to fluctuation from day to day, the aggregate of guarantees under the relief acts is $65,717,000, a decrease of $27,500,000 in the fiscal year. The amounts of the different guarantees are as follows:

And then he quotes the guarantees under the relief act and gives the list which I read a few minutes ago, concluding with "Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited," and under the column headed "Estimated principal amount of guarantee outstanding March 31, 1935" appears the one word "unstated." I wish to make it clear—and I do not think there is need to emphasize it—that I am finding no fault with the government's action in connection with the first transaction of participating with the western wheat producer in an endeavour to dispose of the crop. That is not what we are objecting to. What I am objecting to is the method that has been adopted by Mr. McFarland as the dictator of Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited, and the method adopted by the Minister of Finance in this house with respect to the submission of this information, keeping the house entirely in ignorance of the liability involved and not even giving an estimate. I have no criticism of the objective which was aimed at originally, but what I have the strongest criticism to offer in respect of is the method and the motives which seem to have actuated Mr. McFarland in carrying out his mandate. This is a blanket guarantee, a guarantee which has been running for four years in favour of seven of the chartered banks of the dominion; and instead of the grain being disposed of which was supposed to be disposed of soon after the 1930 crop year, instead of seventy-five million bushels or so being disposed of, if the reports are correct, there is between two hundred and twenty-five and two hundred and forty million bushels of wheat on hand at the present time. That is the note which the dominion endorses. My objections are these. In 1933 when wheat went to a price substantially above what it had been, Mr. McFarland, instead of selling wheat held it—or if he did sell it he went into the market and bought again. That was a transaction which, I submit, had the effect of rank speculation on the part of the dominion, speculation with the money of the people of the country; and as my right hon. leader suggests, it was done under an order in council which depended for its validity on the peace, order and good government provisions of the British North America Act—a rather remarkable situation, a situation which is not usual in any country I know of, that a peace, order and good government statute should be used for the purpose of speculation, taking the credit of the people of this dominion and putting it behind one man in order that he might deal with that credit, not for the benefit of the western wheat producer—and I shall show that in a moment—but for the possible eventual glorification of Mr. McFarland and this government.

In the fall of 1933 wheat was pegged on the Winnipeg market, and pegged at the instance of Mr. McFarland, who was acting under the authority of this government. There is no doubt about it that he was the agent of this government; that has been abundantly shown in this house and in the committee on banking and commerce as well. My hon. friend the former Minister of Trade and Commerce, speaking in this house in 1933, made the following statement, as reported at page 3718 of Hansard:

> The government authorized Mr. John I. McFarland, the head of the pool sales agency, to purchase grain for future delivery when it was necessary to do so in order to hold the market steady.

The evidence of Mr. Logan, the general manager of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, before the banking and commerce committee in March, 1934, as reported at page 133, was:

> Since the 31st of July, 1931, the banks have loaned Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited such amounts as have been required to carry such quantities of wheat and/or contracts for future deliveries of wheat as in the estimation of the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited and with the approval of the Prime Minister have been necessary to ensure the orderly marketing of the Canadian wheat crop.

That would indicate, I should think, that Mr. McFarland was acting at the instance of this government; the government was the guarantor and he was acting under its authority. Mr. Logan says that it was with the approval of the Prime Minister that the banks made the advances. As I said wheat was pegged on the Winnipeg exchange in 1933 at the instance of Mr. McFarland who was to all intents and purposes the agent of the government. Now let me read what one gentleman thought of pegging a little earlier than 1933. Here is what the Prime Minister said in this house in 1931, as reported at page 781 of Hansard, referring to the government:

It did not peg the price; no government of which I am the head ever will. I have seen artificial prices placed upon commodities and whether that commodity be wheat or anything else, it matters not, I know the inevitable result. It cannot advantageously be done; it will not succeed. It may cause a temporary advantage, but that disappears. Look at the situation in the United States to-day. Mr. Legge, with all his vast experience, with all the millions and hundreds of millions of dollars that he has behind him, declared that the principle of artificial price fixing was unsound, and it has been abandoned.

Nevertheless wheat was pegged on the Manitoba exchange in 1933 at the instance of Mr. McFarland, he being to all intents and purposes the agent of the dominion government—a government that was going to see to it that wheat would never be pegged.

And then Mr. McFarland told us in March, 1934, before the banking and commerce committee, as reported at page 129 of the proceedings, that the position with regard to wheat was such that if there were a ten per cent increase in the price of wheat the government would be even with the market, or, to use his exact words, it would "create a condition where there would be no calls under government guarantees." In the banking and commerce committee we were trying to get a statement from Mr. McFarland, the representative of the government, as to what obligation was involved in order that we might know something about the country's financial commitments, and that was the nearest we could get, that ten per cent would relieve the government entirely. And the Prime Minister a few days after, at page 2057 of Hansard, said:

> If the price of wheat were to rise ten per cent above what it was to-day, the guarantor would be under no liability.

In other words, if wheat rose by ten per cent we could get out and the people of Canada's endorsement would be relieved. What happened after that announcement was made? May wheat was then over 67 cents, and on May 31, only two months after the Prime Minister had spoken, it was over 81 cents, and that was away above the ten per cent spread. And yet Mr. McFarland stopped selling wheat. What has been the result? The result has been that Argentine wheat has been going into Great Britain and that the Canadian producer is losing his market there. During the fall of 1934 shipments have been the smallest of any fall since 1929, and that notwithstanding the fact that Russia is out of the market and that the United States is taking a good deal of durum wheat, and frosted wheat for feed. I infer that the idea was that either Mr. McFarland or the government for whom he was acting wanted to make a reputation as astute market operators and possibly to get some glory out of the distribution of the profits later. We find that in the fall of 1934 the prices of Canadian wheat in the British market were something like 22 cents above Argentina and something like 14 cents above Australia. What has been the result of the gambling attitude? In the first place the dominion as it wanted to do, shared with the western wheat producer in the responsibility for marketing the 1930 crop, and nobody finds any fault with that action; both parties joined in approval of it. There has never been a word of criticism upon that score because everybody recognizes the importance of the western farmer as a producer, as a consumer and also as a citizen. What is the criticism? It is first from the point of view of the western farmer that the government instead of marketing the grain has virtually become his competitor. What do I mean by that? I mean that the government through Mr. John I. McFarland, who is its agent, becomes in effect the potential holder of 200,000,000 or 225,000,000 or 250,000,000 bushels of wheat that should be off the market in order to enable the western producer to dispose of his 1935 crop. That quantity is still here; it is still in the hands of the Canadian government. The Canadian government cannot be depended upon to keep it forever. That wheat should have been cleared off the market just as the Argentine wheat was. In Argentina they kept the bins clear; they sold the wheat, and the result is that in Argentina there is very little carry-over and their operation has come out practically square, due in some measure at least to the fact that there has been an advantageous exchange. Nevertheless the Argentine government saw to it that there would not be a great big pile-up and carry-over of wheat. That is not what has taken place in this dominion, and the result is that the government instead of helping the Canadian farmer in effect stands in the market as his competitor.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: And losing the market all the time.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, and losing the market all the time. That brings me to the next point. We have been teaching the best customer of the Canadian producer to get along without our wheat; that is what has happened. The British miller, finding out more and more as he has that Canadian wheat is being held away above what he regards as the market price, is purchasing in other directions. I have before me a brief statement which I propose to read, showing the shipments that have been made under a spread of twenty cents over the Argentine price and fourteen cents over the Australian price, indicating that the British miller, regardless of questions of patriotism, because he is as hardheaded as anybody else, is going to buy the cheapest wheat and is learning to get along without ours. What are the figures?

Imports of Wheat into the United Kingdom

From September 1, 1932, to January 31, 1933

	Bushels
From Argentina	3,635,531
From Australia	10,358,656
From Canada	51,696,757

From September 1, 1933, to January 31, 1934

	Bushels
From Argentina	12,176,787
From Australia	17,661,950
From Canada	29,406,944

From September 1, 1934, to January 31, 1935

	Bushels
From Argentina	26,019,155
From Australia	15,972,551
From Canada	27,747,169

Mr. McFarland predicts, as I understand the matter, that there will probably be a carry-over of only 100,000,000 and possibly it may get down to 81,000,000 bushels for this year. I understand that from the time he made that statement, which was on February 16, something like 10,000,000 bushels of wheat a week would have to go out of this country to get the carry-over down to Mr. McFarland's prediction before the new crop year. This is a record of weekly export clearances.

Seasonal Analysis

Period	1933-34 Bushels	1934-35 Bushels
Aug. 1 to Nov. 30	67,972,365	53,436,359
Dec. 1 to Mar. 2	33,550,495	21,352,654
Jan. 4 to Mar. 16	28,279,227	19,919,276
Weekly Clearances
February 2	3,081,462	2,216,490
February 9	2,388,271	2,209,360
February 16	2,013,367	1,207,504
February 23	2,620,873	2,768,741
Total	10,103,973	8,402,095
March 2	3,563,683	1,006,700
March 9	1,910,350	1,765,404
March 16	1,866,143	2,602,291
Total	7,340,176	5,374,395

The foregoing does not include clearances to the United States until cleared from a United States port.

Therefore, for at least ten weeks prior to March 16 the shipments have averaged 1,900,000 bushels a week instead of an average of something like 10,000,000 bushels which should have been shipped if the bins are to be cleared to the extent Mr. McFarland predicted. First, the Canadian farmer finds this wheat overhanging this market; second, he finds his customers buying somewhere else and third, he finds something else. If I may presume for a moment to speak on behalf of the western farmer, what is going on out in the west is this: Mr. McFarland is absolute autocrat of the situation out there with the directors of the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited simply more or less figureheads. The cooperative spirit, the spirit in which the western farmer takes some interest in what are his own affairs, is being killed. The result is that Mr. McFarland is becoming the dictator of the wheat situation in the west with the western farmers' organization out of the picture. That is one of the most dangerous things which could happen in the Dominion of Canada, and particularly in Alberta and Saskatchewan. More dictatorship, as my hon. leader suggests! The ideas of the people who have had experience, who all their lives have been engaged in the grain business, who can contribute something and who have a real financial interest in the situation, are completely disregarded and a dictatorship is set up in the person of Mr. McFarland, who presumes to conduct the wheat business for the whole country!

Let me quote an article from the Financial Post of August 19, 1933, with regard to this very situation. This is what the Post has to say about what was developing at that time. This was at the time when wheat had risen in the Canadian market and when Mr. McFarland did not sell, when wheat was held, as I submit, for speculative purposes. This is what the Post says:

> But a new objective appeared to emerge when the price of wheat began to rise some months ago, that of making a large profit. Party newspapers began to talk of the government's huge profits in wheat. Government holdings, taken on under the excuse that there were no other purchasers in sight, were retained when other purchasers appeared and clamoured to be allowed to buy. As a result, wheat prices soared to levels that could not be maintained, to levels that shut off our export business, and to levels from which there has been an inevitable reaction.
> The profit that seemed to be almost in hand has entirely or in large measure disappeared, but not before discussion began as to whose profit it was. It was said to belong to the pools, presumably to the farmers who had wheat in the 1930 pool, the marketing of which was the nominal excuse for the continuance of the agency. Politicians began to calculate the possible effect on the next election of the distribution of some millions of dollars through the pool organization.

I have enumerated some of the effects on the western farmer. What about the effect on the country? It is simply this: the Minister of Finance brings down his budget and our liabilities on account of the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers are "unstated." The dominion is endorsing a note for an unlimited amount; its agent, the government, refuses to disclose the amount of the liabilities and how much wheat is on hand. This government proposes to go into the election, having committed the country to seven banks in respect of a transaction which is said to amount to between 200,000,000 and 240,000,000 bushels of wheat, and no one is to know what liability is involved! Without a statement from the Minister of Finance as to the extent of the present holdings and the prospective liability in respect of this wheat guarantee, this so-called budget is a delusion. I submit that any parliament which allowed this budget to pass without proper information would not be worthy of the name. Finally I submit that the unhappy position in which we find ourselves is due to lack of appreciation of the duty of the government to the wheat growers of western Canada and to the whole country to dispose of that wheat with all possible expedition and not to condone and support a huge gambling operation in the hope of being able to point to gains as evidence of efficient administration.

With regard to ways and means, my hon. friend makes some proposals in regard to taxation to which I want to refer briefly. He retains his virtual twenty-five per cent tax on sugar, a household necessity, but he reduces his tax on liquor by over forty per cent. I had hoped, and others on this side and I believe a good many on the other side had hoped, that the Minister of Finance had intended to cancel the sugar tax this year. We supposed he put it on as an emergency tax. He put on the gold tax, he said, in order to permit the sugar tax to be reduced by half; last year in making his statement to the house he said that to replace the revenue lost by the reduction of the tax on sugar it was proposed to levy a tax of ten per cent on gold. The gold tax is gone, but half of the sugar tax still remains. I think my hon. friend will find it very hard to explain to the people of Canada how he can collect a greater amount of taxes from liquor with lower rates of excise taxes and customs duties. It is peculiar that it is only being discovered just on the eve of an election that they can reduce the tax on liquor and at the same time maintain the revenue. Sugar, a necessity of life, bears a twenty-five per cent load, while the general sales tax is six per cent. My hon. friend has picked out this commodity for taxation without regard to the fact that it bears on the masses of the people. Why? Simply because it is easy to collect. Seventeen millions were collected the first year, I think, and $8,000,000 or $9,000,000 last year—a very fine tax, but my hon. friend must remember, and the government must remember and the people of Canada will remember, who has to pay this enormous levy on a necessity of life.

With regard to the gold tax, my hon. friend remembers that last year we on this side of the house protested as vigorously as we could against the unfairness of the way in which this tax was to be levied, namely as a tax on production and not as a tax on profit. It was being levied on one of the basic products of this country, a commodity by the way which has probably done as much as any commodity to keep this country out of bankruptcy. My hon. friend and his leader after consideration accepted our suggestion, changed the gold tax and made it in effect a tax on profit by making it applicable only to mines which paid dividends. Now that gold tax comes off, and another tax takes its place, a tax half on the mine, and half on the shareholders. It remains to be seen what the effect of that will be. I am a bit sceptical with regard to how this tax will emerge from the committee of ways and means. I have hardly ever known a tax proposed by this government that has emerged from that committee in the same form as it went in. My hon. friend always has to alter his taxation proposals. I shall not be at all surprised if there is a change in connection with the gold tax—

Mr. GOTT: You will be surprised if there is a change of government.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend himself will be surprised if there is not a change of government.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): I think you would be shocked.

Mr. RALSTON: I remember in 1931 an income tax proposal was made the effect of which would have been that the tax on incomes in the higher brackets would be reduced, and that after a very vigorous attack by the former Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret), that resolution was withdrawn by the Prime Minister, because, as he indicated, of some personal affront which he had taken at the remarks which had been made. It has taken three years for the government to realize that what the former Secretary of State said was correct, and that here was a possible source of revenue in higher taxation of the higher incomes. Now, at the last session of this parliament, after a speech made by the Prime Minister in Montreal recently, a tax is put upon two forms of income, first upon earned income amounting to over $14,000, and secondly on a form of income which is called investment income. I must say that this surtax on incomes is to say the least rather delicate on the higher incomes. It does not bear too heavily on them, having regard to the motives which were supposed to be behind it. Looking at the table of proposals I find that the man who has an income of between $14,000 and $20,000 pays three per cent surtax on the excess over $14,000; that a man whose income is say, $280,000, to take an amount twenty times more, does not pay twenty times as high a rate of income tax but his rate is only three times higher; he pays ten per cent on the excess over $14,000. So I do not think this tax can be said to partake of the characteristics of the "share the wealth" program of the senator south of the line, or that anything drastic is going to happen on account of it.

The Prime Minister in his radio address in Montreal, the one delivered I think on January 9, warned the rich people of this country that they were going to have their patrimony taken from them and that they had better take it philosophically. After seeing this budget they will perhaps not feel so badly. Here is what he said:

> Selfish men, and this country is not without them....

This is after he had talked about taxes on income from investments.

> Selfish men, and this country is not without them, men whose mounting bank rolls loom larger than your happiness, corporations without souls and without virtue, these, fearful that this government might impinge on what they have grown to regard as their immemorial right of exploitation, will whisper against us. They will call us radicals.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

> They will say that this is the first step on the road to socialism.

A ten per cent surtax on incomes of $280,000.

> We fear them not. We think that their ready compliance with our program would serve their interests better than any ill-timed opposition to it.

Then down below the report says:

> He had reached the end of his outline of what had been done, the reasons behind his recovery measures, and the need for further action. More detailed information would be given parliament.

And we have the detailed information today. These selfish men had better not whisper against us; we fear them not; we are going to put a ten per cent surtax on incomes of $280,000. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I have a right to conclude that this socialism, this radicalism, this red policy is really only a pale pink after all. With regard to the corporations to which my hon. friend referred in those resounding phrases as corporations which were without souls and without virtue, he has increased the tax on corporations four times, and the only result has been that every time the rate was increased he obtained less revenue. In 1930-31 he increased the tax and he obtained $44,000,000. In 1932 the tax was increased again and he obtained $36,500,000. In 1933 the tax amounted to $36,340,000; in 1934 he received $27,400,000 and in 1935 he obtained only $25,000,000. Now that the rate is being increased from 13½ per cent to 15 per cent presumably the receipts will go down to $20,000,000, according to the law of diminishing returns. Still my hon. friend will have had the satisfaction of going after these corporations without souls and without virtue.

Speaking generally with regard to ways and means and the tariff I think I might be permitted to forego further reference until the resolutions are in committee.

Now may I just say a word with regard to the record of this government on taxation, since we are on that point. The house is familiar with the statement made by the Prime Minister in 1931, when he deplored the fact that he would never have an opportunity to write a budget containing the sort of taxes he would like to put on the backs of the people of this country. He said:

> I should like to have seen applied in Canada some new system of taxation, and he—

Referring to the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa):

> —is quite right when he says it is not at all probable that I shall ever have a chance to try a new form of taxation, because it is not at all likely that I shall ever again submit ways and means to this house. I am not without hope, however, that some Minister of Finance reviewing the means by which taxes may be raised will realize the values and benefits accruing from a turnover tax.
> Sir, it has not been my privilege to introduce any new forms of taxation to this country at this time.
> I do not for a single moment disguise the fact that I would like to have done so. I should like to have written a budget which would have expressed my views with respect to taxation in Canada. That privilege has not been given, and it never will be.

Now I am going to just look over the taxes that have been imposed to indicate that while the Prime Minister may not have written the budget, at the same time he has had a hand in imposing almost every kind of tax the wit of man could devise. I have a list of some of the new taxes which have been imposed by this government.

They have put on a special excise tax first of one per cent and then raised to three per cent; a tax on berths and parlour cars; a tax on cable, telegraph and radio messages; a tax on telephone calls; a tax on rubber tubes and tires; a tax on malt products; a tax on unfermented wort; the tax on sugar; a tax on toilet preparations, a tax on toilet soap and a tax on cigarette papers and tubes. Then the tax on corporations has been increased. In 1930-31 it was increased from 8 to 10 per cent. In 1931-32 it was increased from ten to eleven per cent. In 1932-33 it was increased from 11 to 12½ per cent. In 1933-34 it remained the same, and now it is proposed to increase it to 13½ and in the case of consolidated returns to 15 per cent. Then there is the new tax of five per cent on non-resident remittances and five per cent on premium payments to residents in Canada. Then there was the increase of the sales tax from one per cent to four per cent and then to six per cent. I have made a summary, Mr. Speaker, and I find that under the brand new taxes of this government which have been imposed there actually has been collected from the people of Canada, up to February 28, 1935, a total of at least $80,000,000. That is on new taxes. Then there is the sales tax, which was increased from one per cent to four per cent, and again to six per cent. The increases of sales tax have cost the people of Canada in the neighbourhood of $180,000,000. From the increases in the income tax on corporations the government have collected $37,300,000. In other words, the total of new taxes, together with the increased sales tax and increased corporation income tax, is about $298,000,000, or in round figures $300,000,000. And that figure is probably a very modest estimate. But in addition there has been an increase in the individual income tax. The exemption stood at $3,000 when this government came into power. That exemption was twice reduced, first to $2,400 and then to $2,000, so as to hit the man with the small income, and the twenty per cent discount was removed. The exemption for children also was reduced from $500 to $400. In 1933 there was the change in the first bracket, increasing the tax from two per cent to three per cent, and the increase continued all the way up. There was an additional income tax on all incomes over $5,000. There is no possible way by which I could figure out the total increase put on the backs of the income tax payer by all these changes, but I think the estimate I have given regarding the new and increased taxes other than the personal income tax is well within the mark, namely that they have resulted in over $300,000,000 more being collected from the people of Canada during the life of this government than would have been collected if taxes had remained as they were when this government took over.

So I come to sum up the financial record of the government during the past five years because after all, as I said, this is their farewell budget. During the past five years Canada has dropped in world trade from fifth to eighth place. My hon. friends can give all the world statistics they like; that is the situation. Canada, one of the countries away up in total world trade, has dropped from fifth to eighth place; that gives the Minister of Trade and Commerce the comparison he asked for. Then, during the past five years her average total trade has been $1,200,000,000, or only one-half the average total trade during the previous five years. In the next place, under the previous five years of Liberal administration there were surpluses on ordinary account totalling $413,000,000, though taxes had been reduced by an estimated total of $180,000,000. Compare this with the five years of Conservative administration when there have been deficits on ordinary account totalling $157,000,000, though new and increased taxes have brought in over $300,000,000 without taking into account the heavy increases in personal income tax. In the five years of Liberal administration the debt was reduced $257,000,000, while under the present government the debt increase has already amounted to $812,000,000, and we are facing a deficit of probably $125,000,000 to $150,000,000 next year. Lastly, in spite of all the promises of 1930 there are over 1,200,000 people on relief in Canada at the present time.

My hon. friends say, "Oh, well, but you are not taking account of the depression." Canada was in the best position of any country in the world to ride through the depression. Canada was a country that sold the necessities of life. People had to eat; people had to live, and Canada was a country which provided the things they needed. Yet our trade has been crippled and strangled. This government has had all the power of parliament, it has had a majority which could put through any legislation it required; it has had the full resources of the treasury in the form of a blank cheque forced from parliament, and it has had and has made full use of the most autocratic and dictatorial power. They have had their own way absolutely in trying out their policies and at the end of five years this is the record as I have just given it.

Sensing their danger, as a result of the by-elections they put on a most remarkable profession of repentance and announce a program of reform. The details are withheld, but are to be given to parliament. The details are now disclosed, and we find a series of measures which prove to be only a hollow echo of the flow of fulsome rhetoric with which they were announced, and the principles of which are altogether foreign to the policies previously espoused by this government. This budget, in its expression of sudden concern in regard to external trade, is just a part of that same weird change which has taken place in government thinking since the by-elections of last September. What this government cannot seem to realize is that the sincerity of all these new professions is being tested in the country by the recollection of the solemn pledges of 1930. And they are only fooling themselves if they believe that these last minute recantations are going to make Canadians forget. There is no escaping the issue; and we on this side of the house believe we express the views of the great mass of the citizens of this country when we say that what the people of the dominion are waiting and anxious for is a chance to register at the polls their opinion regarding the record of this government in the past five years and the grotesque attempt it has made to obscure that record by these eleventh hour professions. The results in nine by-elections and four provincial elections from the Atlantic to the Pacific leave no room for doubt regarding the temper of the electors. We call upon the government to finish the business of the session, to dissolve parliament, to let the people speak at the polls and to make way for an administration fresh from the electorate with a mandate to undertake the task of repair and reconstruction on principles of Liberal economics and Liberal ideas. Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, I beg to move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie):

That all the words after the word "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

This house regrets that the proposals submitted by the Minister of Finance on March 22 are entirely inadequate to meet the serious and acute situation prevailing in Canada and afford an additional reason why appeal to the people should not be longer delayed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. MYERS: Mr. Speaker, will you call it six o'clock?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Where is the government?

Mr. POULIOT: No, no.

Mr. SPEAKER: Six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

SECOND READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Bill No. 27, respecting Canadian Marconi Company.—Mr. Sullivan.

Bill No. 43, for the relief of Clarence MacGregor Roberts.—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed from Friday, March 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Reid for the second reading of Bill No. 38, to amend the Railway Act (rates on grain).

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, when nine o'clock was called the other evening I was replying to some of the arguments advanced by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion), and this evening I propose to deal with them at further length. The minister has commended me upon my persistence in bringing this matter before the house, and it has been said that this question has been the subject of debate for many years. I would point out that the Railway Act amendments were passed in 1925 but the question was not presented in form of a bill until 1931. As I said at that time, and as I repeat now, I believe that the House of Commons is the place to settle this particular question, and before I finish I shall endeavour to prove this contention.

In my previous remarks I stated that the rates to the east were considerably less than those to British Columbia, and the other evening the minister replied by stating that the rates to the east were largely paper rates. I have before me some information which I should like to put on record in connection with the grain movement through eastern and Pacific ports. I have the figures from the year 1929 but I shall only give those for last year. Over 6,000,000 bushels of grain passed through the port of Saint John. The grain movement to Halifax totalled 2,301,937 bushels, while 49,788,385 bushels passed through the port of Montreal. I want these figures to be on record because I am contending that the greatest revenue derived by the railway companies is that derived from the handling of grain through Pacific coast ports.

Mr. MANION: I am sure the hon. gentleman has no desire to be unfair and he must admit that practically all of that grain would be carried water and rail. I said that the rail rate from the head of the lakes to Montreal was largely a paper rate.

Mr. REID: I admit that I am not quite sure but I would be inclined to believe that the grain shipped from Halifax and Saint John had been shipped during the winter months.

Mr. MANION: That may be correct but it would have reached Montreal by water and rail.

Mr. REID: Perhaps we can agree to differ on that. I still contend that the rate set by the railway companies was more than a paper rate; it was intended that business would be done with those rates. This argument has been used quite often by the railway companies when they appeared before the board of railway commissioners but I still claim that it is an actual rate.

The railways derived their greatest benefit from the carriage of grain to British Columbia as over 100,000,000 bushels of grain passed through the Pacific ports last year. A large portion of this grain went to the old country via the Panama canal. Compare this to the total movement of only 83,000,000 bushels through Montreal, Saint John, Halifax and all other ports on the eastern Atlantic. If I had the time I could place on record figures which would show that there would be a greater return to the railway companies if more encouragement was given to the shipment of grain via the Pacific coast. Although there is a handicap of $9,000 per ship as a toll through the Panama canal, more grain left the Pacific ports for the old country than was shipped out of the eastern ports. I do not think these figures can be refuted.

The other evening the minister disputed the statement I had made that the export rates to Vancouver or New Westminster were not on a par with and were in fact higher than the export rates to Fort William. It was not my intention to deal with export rates at any length but I think I should attempt to prove my contention that the export rate to Vancouver is higher than the export rate to Fort William. In order that the house may more easily understand my figures I have reduced them to net ton miles. I shall first take the Canadian Pacific railway, over which the distance from Calgary to Vancouver is 642 miles. The export rate is 20 cents per hundred pounds, and if one reduces that to ton miles it means ·6 cents per ton mile, so that the railway is carrying grain for export through the ports of New Westminster and Vancouver at the rate of 60 cents per ton for every hundred miles. Coming to the Calgary-Fort William stretch, the distance is 1,243 miles. The rate is 26 cents per hundred pounds for export and 26 cents for domestic. The 26 cents works out at ·3 cents per ton mile and for 100 miles per ton the rate is 30 cents—just one-half. Yet the minister rose in his place to contend that we were on a level with the rates to Fort William. I want to put on record another comparison—Red Jacket to Fort William, which is under the Crowsnest pass rate. The distance is 646 miles, four miles greater than from Calgary to Vancouver, and the rate there is 18 cents per hundred pounds. How can the minister say that the rates for export through the Pacific coast ports are equal, or that we are enjoying Crowsnest pass rates? I dispute that statement. I do not want to be drawn into a controversy over export rates; that can come up later. I want to develop the argument that we in British Columbia are being soaked in connection with the grain requirements we use in that province. The minister made the statement that at the present time the railways are having financial difficulties and that this would not be the proper time for a change inasmuch as it would mean a loss in revenue. Let us see what they are doing as regards passengers, and compare that with the freight business. I suppose he would argue that this is not the proper time to reduce passenger fares.

Mr. MANION: No; I agree with my hon. friend in that regard.

Mr. REID: Yes, but he stops at passenger fares. He takes the view that it is all right to induce passengers to travel, but when it comes to encouraging freight, oh no.

Mr. MANION: The reason is that passengers are all being carried by motor busses and we want to have passengers on the railways.

Mr. REID: Well, if no change is made in freight rates a great part of the traffic in this country will ultimately be carried by trucks. Last year I pointed out how many trucks had hauled apples from Okanagan to Vancouver. I showed also the traffic that was being carried by the railways before the trucks began to be used extensively. The trucks have entered into competition with the railways and no effort is being made by the railways to encourage that traffic. Even before 1925 every appeal that was made to the board of railway commissioners or to the railways themselves met with the argument now advanced by the Minister of Railways, that it would never pay them to lower the rates. They used that argument when times were good, and as a matter of fact it is their stock argument: This is not the time to do it. The fact is that no time has been the right time so far as the railways are concerned; no time has been the right time from the point of view also of the board of railway commissioners, and I suppose that no time will ever be the right time until parliament takes upon itself the task of compelling them to take the necessary action. Lower rates, I maintain would mean greater returns to the railways in consequence of increased traffic.

I am surprised at the attitude which labour has sometimes taken in this regard. Some of them seem to think that if freights were reduced it might result in the dismissal of some employees, and therefore some sections of labour have been rather opposed to the reduction of freight rates. I would point out to labour however that any time a reduction has taken place an increase in traffic has generally followed, with the result that more employees have been engaged. I do not believe therefore that there is any danger from that point of view, and past experience leads me to make that assertion. I have placed one or two figures on the record to show that the rates in the United States for coarse grains were lower than we in British Columbia have paid.

Mr. MANION: I know that my hon. friend does not wish to misrepresent the situation. I have checked up these figures since, however, and I have statements from the board indicating that the hon. gentleman is wrong. He quoted, in regard to low grade grains in the United States, a statement which he held in his hand the other night—I think it is the same statement I have here—which shows that the domestic rates went out of operation about six months ago. They are not in force at the present time. I wished to correct my hon. friend before the evening was over, and I should like him to deal with that aspect of the matter if he will.

Mr. REID: I will deal with that. Coarse grains are carried from Cut Bank, Montana, a distance of 732 miles, at the rate of 38½ cents per hundred pounds. How does that compare with 41½ cents for a distance of 642 miles to Vancouver and New Westminster? Is that a higher rate or a lower? I maintain it is a lower rate. The railways of the United States are carrying flour and coarse grains 732 miles for 38½ cents under the new rate as compared with 41½ cents for a distance of 642 miles, as paid by us in British Columbia.

Mr. MANION: But those were not the figures the hon. gentleman gave the other night.

Mr. REID: I gave 34½ cents.

Mr. MANION: Which was wrong.

Mr. REID: I still maintain that the rates there are lower. The minister may change the figures if he will, and I will take him up on any figure he likes to quote. From Billings, Montana, to Seattle, a distance of 1,012 miles, they are carrying coarse grains for 40½ cents per hundred pounds, carrying it at the rate of one cent per hundred pounds less, and for a distance of 1,012 miles as against 642 to Pacific ports.

Mr. MANION: But we are carrying feed grains for 30 cents, 10 cents less.

Mr. REID: We were glad to get that small reduction, but may I point out that that is a temporary rate.

Mr. MANION: I do not think so.

Mr. REID: Well, when it was introduced in parliament it was stated by the minister that the agreement would last one year and at the end of one year it was said the rate would continue a little longer. If that is not temporary, what is it?

Mr. MANION: It has been in force two years.

Mr. REID: But it may be discontinued at any time. At any rate it is only a sop handed out to keep us quiet. There is another aspect of this matter which I want to touch upon, something that is very important and that the minister has not discussed. While they are carrying coarse grains into the state of Washington, a greater distance and for less, they are also carrying produce from Washington state to the Atlantic; and are carrying eggs and butter at cheaper rates back to Chicago and New York than the rate charged us from British Columbia. So that both ways the railways in the United States are carrying coarse grains at a cheaper rate, and are besides carrying the produce of the American farmers into the eastern markets at a far lower rate than we in British Columbia are charged in connection with our produce.

I maintain that the attitude of the Canadian Pacific Railway has been one of obstruction so far as British Columbia's effort for redress is concerned. I would point out to the minister that the Canadian Pacific Railway, the dominant railway in this country, has taken an attitude of hostility to British Columbia. In carrying grain to the Pacific coast the Canadian Pacific Railway have an advantage first of all of 132 miles over the mileage of the Canadian National railway, and in addition they receive $3.50 for every car of grain that goes by the Canadian National to the coast. The Canadian National is therefore penalized a total of $8.75 per car on all grain that goes into the city of Vancouver, and of that amount the Canadian Pacific take $3.50, so that they have the advantage over their competitor by that sum and they also benefit by the fact that the mileage from Calgary to Vancouver is 132 miles less, which is a very considerable advantage, because that distance, I believe, means the services of more than a day's train crew. I understand a crew runs about a hundred miles a day.

As regards the people in central Canada, the population from the great lakes east in Ontario and Quebec get their feed and flour requirements carried there at half the cost that we do in British Columbia, with the result that the eastern farmers, those who go in for stock raising and so on, are able to obtain their bran and shorts and mill feed requirements much cheaper than we can do in British Columbia, although they are further removed from the wheat fields than are the people of our province. They are able to get that advantage owing to the fact that when grain leaves for the east, there is no such thing as a domestic rate: the grain is designated simply as grain; but when it leaves for western points the railways designate it as either for export or domestic, although both kinds of grain are carried alongside each other by the same train crews over the same route and at the same time.

As regards the board of railway commissioners I do not know whether it was the fault of there not being a chairman that we lost the appeal last fall; but when one looks over the evidence one can realize—and I say this in a kindly spirit—that we could hope for little from the acting chairman, because ever since he has been a member of the board his decisions have been against appeals made by British Columbia. After consideration, in my opinion the board of railway commissioners have never protected the western provinces.

Might I point this out for the benefit of the house: British Columbia is paying much higher rates not only for her grain requirements but for all products shipped to the east, and I am surprised that the east has not given that province support in her fight for equality, because British Columbia has I believe dealt very kindly with the manufacturers in the east. In 1933 it is estimated that British Columbia bought from eastern Canada a total of $81,000,000 worth of goods, and all eastern Canada bought from that province in that year was $4,500,000 worth, so that the advantage is all in favour of the east.

The minister in his remarks—and I was very sorry to hear him make this statement—almost threatened the Liberals. He said: "The government is going to turn down this bill and I warn the Liberals that they had better be very careful before they get into power, if they do so, how they vote on this bill." He also took a little time to put on the record how many appeals had been made to the board of railway commissioners, and he said that out of forty-eight appeals only some three had been allowed. He was telling us in plain language: You people from British Columbia might just as well quit fighting for your rights; parliament is not going to do anything for you; you need not go to the board, nor need you appeal to the governor in council, because since 1904 the governor in council has only dealt with three appeals out of forty-nine. Is it any wonder that in that province you hear some people saying we should secede from the east? I am not advocating that we should do so; far be it from me, but it is little wonder that the minds of the people are turning toward secession when they realize the treatment they have been receiving for many long years. And might I point out if British Columbia had her own customs and excise, something she had before confederation, she would not be as badly off as she is to-day; she could probably then take care of the freight rates, or at least the burden would be a little easier on her people.

Mr. MANION: I do not like interrupting, but as the hon. member knows I have no privilege of reply because he is closing the debate, and I know he does not desire to give the record wrongly in any detail. I mentioned one in an interjection I made a few minutes ago. The other evening he stated that from Montreal to Ottawa the old Canadian Northern cost $187,000 a mile. My question is: Did he not include in that—and I believe he did—the cost of the Mount Royal tunnel of $13,000,000? I am informed that he did, and I should be glad to have him deal with the matter.

Mr. REID: As to that I am not at all sure, but the record from which I obtained the information and which I have under my hand gives no account of the Montreal tunnel.

This came up in evidence before the board of railway commissioners and Commissioner Oliver is the authority I quote.

Mr. MANION: I believe the hon. gentleman is correct about that. I am informed that it did include the Mount Royal tunnel.

Mr. REID: Even if it did, why should it not? Was it not a cost? That does not detract at all from my argument.

Mr. MANION: Except as speaking of one particular section with the very high cost of a tunnel added to it.

Mr. REID: I have not added the cost of the Quebec bridge, which cost $30,000,000; that would be a higher cost per mile.

Mr. MANION: The hon. gentleman objected to my adding in the mountains, so I was just wondering.

Mr. REID: Neither the minister nor any other person, I say in all kindliness, has ever been able to disprove the statement that it cost less to construct the railways into British Columbia; the construction, maintenance and operation costs in the east were higher. If I had time I would be able to show that the grades into Fort William are steeper than the steepest in British Columbia. I was rather surprised to realize this; I looked them up again only to-night. However I see my time is going on, but whenever the minister wants to stage a debate on this, why that is all right with me.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MANION: May I be permitted with the consent of the house to suggest that the hon. gentleman be allowed to go on for about ten minutes more—

Mr. REID: Five minutes more.

Mr. MANION: —five minutes more, because I did interrupt him a number of times.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. REID: I will come down now to my final appeal, and I thank the house for allowing me the extra time. The minister might review very carefully both lines of railway. We are to-day looking for a solution of our railroad problem, and in looking over the roads I have come to the conclusion that so far as British Columbia is concerned the Canadian National could probably be used more and to better advantage for the hauling of freight at least than could the Canadian Pacific. The Canadian National is a more recently built railroad and it has the finest and best grades in Canada. When one considers that the same type and weight of engine can take fifty cars of grain by the Canadian National as against eighteen to twenty cars by the Canadian Pacific, I think my suggestion is very obvious. One must not lose sight of the fact that only sixteen per cent of the Canadian Pacific is main line—I refer to the prairies—and over eighty-four per cent are branch or secondary lines, which are more costly in operation.

I will close by making a final appeal to the house. Apparently the board of railway commissioners have told us that owing to past judgments we need not come before them any more, that the case is finally disposed of. I have an appeal before the governor in council, which is slightly different from what is sought by my bill. It asks that rates on feed grain and mill feeds be reduced to the level of export rates. This bill asks that the Crowsnest rates apply to all grain and grain products coming into British Columbia for domestic purposes. Surely I have a right to come to the court of last resort. I am not bringing into the house the general question of freight rates. Even in 1925 the government did not object very strongly to the bill on the Crowsnest pass rates; they said "carried on division." They were careful not to register a vote against the Crowsnest rates being put into effect. We are asking only for the same consideration on feed grains and mill feeds as this parliament by statute in 1897 and again in 1925 gave to the east and the maritime provinces. I am appealing for support from all members including the eastern members. I have no fault to find with the members from the maritimes; they have a case of their own, but might I point out to them that, leaving aside the fact that they get between six and seven million dollars returned to them by way of subsidy, their schedule rates are lower than in British Columbia. Surely they can join with us at this time and give us the justice that we have been seeking to obtain for the last twenty or thirty years.

Mr. BARBER: If I may ask the hon. gentleman a question, as one who has represented the provincial government in this case before the board of railway commissioners, do I understand him to say that the appeal has been carried to and is now before the governor in council?

Mr. REID: I said that the appeal before the governor in council was a little different from the present bill. The appeal I made to the board of railway commissioners and which is now before the governor in council asks that the rate on feed grains and mill feed be reduced to the export basis. The present bill asks that the Crowsnest pass rates apply on all grain and grain products going to British Columbia for domestic purposes.

THE BUDGET

CONTINUATION OF DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. E. N. Rhodes (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the proposed amendment of Mr. Ralston.

Mr. J. H. MYERS (Queens): Mr. Speaker, in rising to say a few words on the budget I wish first to congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) on what I consider was the clearest and most complete statement of the business of the country that Canada has heard for many a day. I wish also to congratulate the Prime Minister of Canada and the present government for having so conducted the affairs of Canada during the five difficult years through which we have just passed as to make the delivery of such a budget possible.

I listened with my usual interest to the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) who always acts as the financial critic for our friends on the other side. I have always admired the cleverness of an orator and, may I say that on former occasions the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth has excelled himself as a financial critic. To-day however I felt sorry for him, because at the beginning of his remarks he was attempting to criticize the budget of a government whose actions have met with the approval of the Canadian people. Throughout his observations the hon. member laboured very hard to make the best of a very bad cause, and had it not been for the fact that he is a skilful lawyer and has an exceptional gift of oratory, I do not believe he would have succeeded. Listening to him this afternoon I concluded he was a much better lawyer than politician and a much better politician than Canadian citizen, or he would never have attempted to criticize the budget presented by the Minister of Finance.

Canada has come through four or five very difficult years; these have been trying times not only in our history but in the history of the whole world. It is pleasing to note that notwithstanding the fact the government faced an almost impossible situation when it came into office, both as to finances and as to trade, we now have succeeded on ordinary account to the extent of having a substantial surplus to our credit. It is pleasing also to note that the Minister of Finance has budgeted for a surplus approximating about $21,000,000 for the coming year.

Unfortunately problems over which this government or the governments of any country have little or no control must enter into the picture. In Canada we are faced with a railway problem and must decide what we will do with it. It is not necessary nor is it my intention to follow the many figures quoted by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth, but in passing I should like to say that all hon. members are interested in the Canadian National Railways. We wish all our railways well, and it should be the aim and object of every true Canadian citizen to try in every way to promote the interests of those railways. Especially should this be true so far as the Canadian National is concerned, because the Canadian people have a direct interest in that system. I believe the railway management as at present constituted is doing its very best under difficult circumstances. I would go further and state that railway employees throughout the dominion are loyal to the railway system, whether they be connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Canadian National Railways. They are endeavouring to the best of their ability to further the interests of the roads with which they are connected.

We need not look very far to encounter some of the difficulties. Hon. members opposite will say that the high tariff policy of the Conservative party has clogged channels of trade, that we have done this, that and the other thing, and that we have not acted in the interest of the railways. One need only walk down the streets of this city of Ottawa to observe one factor which has had an adverse effect on the development of our railways. The condition, which I shall describe in a moment, is common to every country and at present I can see no way of getting rid of it. As a matter of fact I do not believe the people of Canada would want to get rid of it. I refer to the motor trucks and the large transportation outfits we see in our cities and on our highways. Only to-day I saw on Bank street the largest transport I have ever seen. It had come to Ottawa from the city of Montreal, and is operating in competition with the railways in which we have an interest. I do not know what can be done about it. The figures given by the Minister of Finance would lead us to believe that trade is recovering quickly, and it would seem to me that in years to come the railways may make a better showing than they are now making. Yet I am not prepared to say, in view of what may be seen abroad in the land to-day, that our railways will ever be able to make revenues and expenditures balance. We must make up our minds to assist the railway by subsidies, by payment of their deficits or by whatever method may be found necessary.

One fact is certain, namely that we cannot do without railway facilities. The great distances to be overcome, the heavy commodities to be transported, such as wheat from western Canada, coal from the maritimes and Alberta, lumber and farm products from other sections of the country which can be moved only by railway, lead us to believe that railways are a necessity, and that being so we should do our very best to assist them in every possible way.

Much has been said about the unemployed and unemployment relief. I believe the government has dealt with those problems most generously. All hon. members regret that a portion of our citizens is unemployed, and regret further the fact that many of our people have found it necessary to accept relief. Possibly more are depending on relief than should be depending upon it. However, be that as it may, we must face the problem of unemployment and deal with it as best we can. I repeat that this government has been most generous in the way it has dealt with relief, with the unemployment question and in its treatment of the different provinces and municipalities. I noticed in the press of this morning that about eighty mayors of different cities throughout Canada met yesterday in Montreal. There is no reason why mayors of cities should not meet, but we know that sometimes at their meetings they make strange statements and pass stranger resolutions. So far as unemployment relief is concerned they were of the opinion that all they had to do was to pass the responsibility over to the dominion government. They would let the dominion government put up the money and foot the bills of the cities, the municipalities and the provinces. While reading the newspaper article and again while the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth was speaking so eloquently and stating his belief that after the next election the Liberal party would be returned to power, I thought it strange in view of the assurance which he seemed able to give the house that the mayors who met in Montreal yesterday had not postponed their meeting about six months until the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), so famous for his generosity as expressed in 1929, came back into power. Then all they would have to do would be to come to him and he would hand out five cent pieces for the whole Dominion of Canada.

Mr. QUINN: He said, "Not a five cent piece."

Mr. MYERS: The Dominion of Canada, along with the rest of the world, has been facing difficult times, but we have another problem on our hands which has not faced the other countries. I refer to the drought stricken areas in the western provinces, a most unfortunate situation. I had the privilege of going through that country two years ago and I saw what it looked like. As a farmer I am able to realize what it means to a man to go out in the spring of the year with high hope in his heart to put in a crop which he may never reap. I commend this government for every effort put forth on behalf of these people in the western provinces who have been stricken so severely. Not a dollar spent on their behalf has been wasted, and it is a credit to this country that this problem has been dealt with in such a generous manner.

The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth sought to convey to the house and to the country the impression that the present government has always tried to increase the tariff. To my mind nothing is further from the truth. Ever since this government came into office it has been seeking in every way possible to clear the channels of trade and to lower the tariffs against countries which show an inclination to do the same thing for us. Time will not permit me to go into this matter to any great extent, but figures have been placed on Hansard time and time again in connection with the tariffs of other countries, both at present and for the past five or six years. I could give the tariffs at present prevailing in Germany, in France, in Italy, in Czechoslovakia, in the Argentine, in Ireland and in many other European countries, but these have been given time and time again and no purpose would be served by repeating them. Whatever my opinion may be worth, it is that the tariffs of these countries are at least fifty per cent higher than they should be. There is one fact which I would draw to the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite: these tariffs were raised during the life of the previous government. There is not one single instance that I know of where an increase occurred in the tariff of a foreign country since this government came into office.

We were told by the Minister of Finance that since this government came into office and through the workings of the Ottawa agreements the tariff has been reduced on 250 items while 150 items have been put on the free list. This was done to facilitate the movement of trade and commerce between the different parts of the British empire. A reading of the reports issued by the bureau of statistics or of the newspapers of the country will show an increase in trade and commerce brought about by these agreements.

A statement was made the other evening which I cannot allow to pass without correction. The debate on the budget is more or less a free for all fight and an hon. member is entitled to bring anything he wishes to the attention of the house. I have not the pleasure of the immediate acquaintance of the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) and I cannot say whether he is in the house this evening, but on March 21 he made the statement that this government had increased the duty on potatoes since coming into office. This statement will be found on page 1951 of Hansard. If there is any one thing that I claim to know a little about, it is potatoes, potato shipments and tariffs on potatoes. I took the trouble to find out just what had happened in connection with the duties against potatoes. My information is that prior to May 2, 1930, potatoes which were imported into Canada from the United States were subject to a duty of 35 cents per hundred pounds. Under a tariff change which went into effect on May 2, 1930—

Mr. QUINN: A Liberal government.

Mr. MYERS: —potatoes entering Canada were made free of duty with the proviso that should any country impose a duty against potatoes from Canada, an equal duty would be imposed against potatoes coming from that country.

Mr. QUINN: A countervailing duty.

Mr. MYERS: That was one of the countervailing duties in the Dunning budget. On May 2, 1930, the United States imposed a duty of 50 cents per hundred pounds against potatoes from Canada and a countervailing duty of the same amount immediately came into effect. Under a tariff change which occurred in the United States on June 18, 1930, the duty was increased to 75 cents per hundred pounds and a similar countervailing duty was immediately put into effect in Canada. After this government came into office and during the short session of 1930 the countervailing duty was repealed and replaced with a straight duty of 75 cents per hundred pounds. This duty was imposed subject to the maintenance by the United States of the same duty against our potatoes. At that time I happened to be in the very thick of this fight, as I was a director of the Prince Edward Island Potato Growers' Association. I should like to quote the president of the association as follows:

> The greatest national service the Prince Edward Island Potato Growers' Association rendered was in 1929, when the industry was threatened by a tariff duty on the part of the United States which would have completely lost to Canada the large markets already mentioned had it not been for the prompt and insistent efforts of the Prince Edward Island Potato Growers' Association, backed by the organizations it had built up in New York, New Jersey and the southern states. The association, through these organizations as spokesman, employed an outstanding firm of barristers in Washington, specializing in tariffs, prepared and submitted an intensive brief to the committee on ways and means of the United States House of Representatives, covering years of marketing, and vigorously set forth reasons protesting against any further increase in tariff.

[Mr. Myers.]

The association, without the help of any dealers either in this province or any other province of Canada, faced this crisis alone; and at a cost of approximately twenty thousand dollars, five thousand dollars of which was later paid by the provincial Department of Agriculture, were successful in preventing the duty on potatoes from being raised for the 1929 crop; when some time later the tariff was increased, the increase was kept down to 25 cents a hundred pounds.

It was the intention of the Americans at that time to put on a duty of $1 per hundred pounds against Canadian potatoes going into that country, and it was only through the efforts of the potato growers' association of Prince Edward Island that the duty was kept down to 75 cents. There was so much heat over the question in the United States, and the state of Maine fought it so vigorously, that the congressmen from that state refused on that occasion to take their seats in congress until the president assured them that a tariff of 75 cents would be placed against Canadian potatoes. Let me tell the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville that when next he undertakes to discuss the tariff on potatoes he had better first acquaint himself with the facts which he intends to present to this house.

I understand that I have but twenty minutes left, and I will use the time to my own advantage and that of the province from which I come. Every man can best discuss the things he knows most about, and I desire in the short time that remains just to tell this house what we in the maritime provinces think of the late Liberal administration, the treatment we received from them, and also the treatment that has been accorded us as maritimers and, speaking for my own province, as Prince Edward Islanders, during the term of the present government.

Prior to 1926 the maritime provinces, and I believe rightly, considered that they had not been getting fair treatment from the federal government. I am not here to say whether or not the contention was jusitified, though I believe it was. At any rate, the Liberal administration, taking cognizance of these protestations from the maritime provinces, in 1926 appointed a commission to deal with these maritime claims. That body was known as the Duncan commission and was headed by a very clever man in the person of Sir Andrew Rae Duncan, from the old country. It carried on its investigations, and here I should like to read to the house a part of the conclusions at which the commissioners arrived:

The terms of readjustment—

That is, speaking of financial readjustments between the maritime provinces and the federal government.

—are obviously a matter for detailed determination and assessment, so that the actual amount—as well as the reasons and purposes attaching to it—can be recognized by the rest of Canada as fair and equitable. It is not posible, therefore, to make a final recommendation as to the increase and form of dominion aid which is required to satisfy the just claims of the maritime situation,—

The house will pardon me when I say that I took the privilege of underlining those two words, "just claims."

—but we recommend that the dominion government should give immediate consideration—

And I have also underlined these two words, "immediate consideration."

—to the whole of this subject, with a view to a complete revision of the financial arrangements as between them and the maritime provinces.

That was back in the year 1926, when the claims were spoken of by the Duncan commission as just claims, and were recommended for immediate consideration. Now what consideration did they get? The party opposite was in power four years after this report of the Duncan commission was brought down. The Duncan commission on that occasion realized that the situation was so desperate that they awarded the maritime provinces interim payments. Nova Scotia was awarded $875,000 annually; New Brunswick, $600,000; and Prince Edward Island, $125,000. And that is where it remained right down to the present day, even though this was their own commission, set up by themselves, even though the claims were acknowledged to be just and the recommendation was made that they should be given immediate consideration. All through the remainder of their term of office they made no move to see that the recommendations were implemented.

Mr. VENIOT: I know that the hon. gentleman wishes to state the facts, but does he mean to say that up to the present time the interim payments have never been made?

Mr. MYERS: The hon. gentleman misunderstood me. I said that the situation was so desperate that the Duncan commission recommended, and there were made, interim payments. But the final settlement was never made until this present session of the House of Commons. This government does everything in a businesslike way and it appointed the White commission, whose report I believe is in the hands of hon. members—I received mine a few days ago. I was pleased to note that that commission gave Nova Scotia an additional $425,000; New Brunswick $300,000; and Prince Edward Island, $150,000.

The question I would put to my Liberal friends from the maritime provinces—and I might include in this the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot), though he will never be back in this house—

Mr. VENIOT: What!

Mr. MYERS: Does he think he will?

Mr. VENIOT: I am sure of it.

Mr. MYERS: I am very glad to have that assurance from the hon. gentleman, because I have come to be very fond of him during the last four or five years, but my information is that he is to be beheaded at the end of this session. The question I want to put to my Liberal friends from the maritimes is this: How will you justify yourselves in the eyes of the people for keeping Nova Scotia out of $425,000 for the past nine years? How will you justify yourselves in the eyes of the people of New Brunswick for keeping that province out of $300,000 for the last nine years? And I shall be happy to go back to the people of Prince Edward Island and tell them that when we wanted the terms of the Duncan commission's report fully implemented we had to come to a Conservative government led by the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett to have it done.

There was another question that was agitating the minds of the people of my province, another recommendation of the Duncan commission, and that is with respect to the car ferry between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. It was recognized by the Duncan commission that there is a pact of confederation between our province and the federal government that there shall be maintained continuous steam communication between that province and the mainland the year round. That is a contractual obligation; those were the terms under which we were induced to come into the union. Even though that obligation is there, under the Liberal administration they continued to charge up the cost of the operation of that car ferry to the Prince Edward Island Railway, so that when we wanted any improvements on our island railway we were always met with the fact that there was a huge deficit which was attributable to the operation of the car ferry that was a direct responsibility of the federal government. Here again let me say that that situation was not rectified, we were not able to have our claim in that regard corrected until last session, 1934, and the credit for having that done goes to the present Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion). Further, under Liberal rule, when we crossed on that car ferry we were charged $4 for an automobile one way and $7 return. Last session we were able to present our claims in that regard to the Department of Railways at Ottawa, and again with the sympathetic help of my good friend the Minister of Railways we were able to have that charge for automobiles crossing on the car ferry reduced to $2 one way and $3 return. Therefore when any hon. members visit our province during the coming tourist season—and I hope they will all do so—it will cost them only the very small sum of $3 for a return ticket for their automobiles crossing between Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick.

I have a great many notes before me and would like to have been able to take the time to develop them fully, but there is no use in skimming over a subject. Therefore I will mention just one more item. I would like to put this question to the Canadian people: We all realize now the advantage to Canada of the empire trade agreements that were entered into in 1932; every man who is fair realizes it. But let me point out to the house that this measure together with every other that has been brought before us by the present administration has received the sternest opposition at the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite. The question that I want to put to the Canadian people, that I want to put to the electors in my constituency at the present time, is this: Those agreements were made for a term of four years and naturally that term is up in 1936. Whom do you as Canadian electors want to have to renew those agreements? Will it be hon. gentlemen opposite who have fought those agreements in season and out of season when they were going through this house for ratification? Is it hon. gentlemen opposite to whom you want to entrust the renewal of those agreements, or is it to the man who had brains and courage enough to go over to the old country, to tell the authorities there what he wanted and to come home with the bacon?

Just one more point and I shall be through. I speak now of the farm loan act. I am sorry to have to hurry over this because there are many other matters that I should like to speak about, but I shall wind up with just this one. In the budget speech of the Minister of Finance there is a statement that struck my attention very forcibly. In speaking of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, one of the many advantageous measures that the government has had passed on behalf of our farmers, the minister made this remark:

> Admirably supplementing this act is the new Canadian farm loan legislation which provides for releasing to agriculture ample government funds at the cost to the government plus the expense of administration. Changes in the organization of the farm loan board will make it possible to bring these funds to efficient farmers in all provinces with a minimum of red-tape and a maximum of expedition.

I am more than interested in that farm loan act. I am a farmer myself, and without being egotistical I doubt if there is any other man in this chamber or indeed in Canada who better understands the difficulties that have beset the farmers of the dominion for the past five years. The situation was well outlined to us to-day by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth, although it rather amused me to hear a lawyer talking about the problem of marketing wheat. The situation among the farmers to-day is this: The farmer who has held his own in the last five years has done wonders. But time never stops. In the last five years the farmers of Canada have not been able to lay aside any money. We have boys growing up. What are we going to do with them? We have made no money in the past five years to buy them new farms. Are we going to let them drift into the cities, to go into the relief camps, to swell the ranks of the unemployed, or are we going to try to buy them farms and keep them in the country where they should be? To my mind that is the use that should be made of this farm loan act. I know of many fathers to-day who would like to be in a position to buy farms for their sons; but they have not the money; they have not made a dollar clear in the last five years. A boy who was twenty years old five years ago is now twenty-five; if he is worth his salt as a young Canadian he is thinking of establishing himself, of making a home for himself, and he should receive the encouragement that I believe he will get under this farm loan act. I hope to see this legislation made use of in every province, so that money will be available at a low rate of interest for farmers who want to buy farms on which to settle their own sons and thus prevent them from drifting into the cities as too many have done during the past few years. There is no doubt that one of the great difficulties that we have in Canada to-day is that too many people have forsaken the farms and have drifted into the cities. I heard a great deal of discussion the other night in the house about relief camps. Let me say at this point that these camps are not employment but unemployment camps, and one point that should be impressed upon every young man in them is this: You should try to get out somewhere; get a job for yourself; make yourself independent, self-reliant, so that you will not have to be leaning on the state or the taxpayers. There is a great deal more that I could say, but my time is about up and when a man is through, I think the correct thing to do is to stop.

The Acting SPEAKER (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): The hon. member has spoken for forty minutes.

Mr. MYERS: I will bow to your ruling, sir, and sit down, with this prophecy, that when the next election is over, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) will be back to lead this house and this government.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): As I have only forty minutes, I shall not attempt to follow the speech made by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) this afternoon or the one made this evening by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Myers), particularly as I have an amendment of my own to move. For the last five years the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) and his predecessor have struggled in vain to balance the budget; they have practised the most drastic economy that could be thought of and tried all sorts of new taxes, but in spite of their best efforts the total deficits of the five budgets they have introduced amount to over $600,000,000. I am not criticizing them for not balancing the budget, but I do feel like criticizing them for adding this amount to our interest bearing debt. The additional interest bearing debt amounts to $60 for every man, woman and child in Canada.

I have here the figures of the total public debt and I should like to put them on Hansard, but I do not think time will allow me to give the details, except to say that the total debt of the dominion, the provinces and the municipalities, both direct and guarantees, as of March 31, 1934, was shown to be $7,160,000,000 and the total interest charge thereon $330,765,000. Most of this debt was created prior to 1929, and due to the change which has taken place in price levels, the burden is now equal to what a debt of $10,000,000,000 would have been in 1926 to 1929.

I have also a statement showing the total revenue, total interest charges and percentage which interest bears to the total revenue, for the federal, provincial and municipal governments in Canada. These figures are so illuminating that I should like to place them on Hansard.

	Total revenue	Total interest charges	Percentage interest charges to total revenue
Dominion fiscal year 1933-34 (net figure—interest receipts deducted from revenue and from interest payments)	$313,323,040	$188,518,573	60.2
Provinces, fiscal years ended 1933, except B.C., where 1932 figures are used (gross)	183,188,327	62,546,592	34.1
Municipalities, 1932 (gross)	374,663,231	79,700,447	21.3
	$871,174,598	$330,765,612	38.0

We are spending the best of our energies in attempting to pay this interest. Speaking for myself I am growing very tired of it, and many others are also. The deficits, I said, amount to over $600,000,000, and of course the government revenue reflects in some degree the financial position of the people generally. Federal, provincial and municipal governments, struggling to balance their budgets, and the people, suffering poverty in the midst of plenty, are victims of the money policy of this government. That money policy is one under which our money is theoretically based on gold, in reality based on scarcity, because gold is the scarcest commodity known. It is a policy under which money is king and everything else is subservient to money. The chances of the people to work, to produce, and to consume, are dependent on the whims of international bankers. For five years we have slavishly followed the policy dictated by the bankers of New York. The president of that country compared them to the money changers who were driven out of the temple. I believe Canada should have its own money policy. We should be masters in our own house, and we could then control conditions in Canada. The previous speaker (Mr. Myers) said we were victims of circumstances largely beyond our control; I say we are victims of a policy which is largely within our own control. If we would control our money policy we could make conditions in Canada so different from what they are to-day, that it would seem like another country. Had the government been less orthodox we might have followed a policy suited to our own needs as Australia did. I know that the Minister of Finance would be disappointed if I did not draw his attention to conditions in Australia. Australia abandoned the gold standard, stopped deflation, and the result of that and of the reduced interest rates was an increase of revenue to a point where they had budget surpluses instead of deficits. In 1931 their budget deficit was $53,788,000 as compared with Canada's $83,849,000. For the following years the figures are:

Year	Canada Deficit	Australia Surplus
1932..	$114,000,000	$ 6,570,000
1933..	220,000,000	17,730,000
1934..	133,000,000	6,507,000

Then let me also draw attention to the amount of interest on the national debt in the two countries:

Year	Canada	Australia
1931..	$122,229,000	$115,000,000
1932..	125,643,000	83,061,000
1933..	135,000,000	76,607,000
1934..	139,894,000	73,797,000

The figures for Canada do not include interest paid on account Can. Nat. Railways.

It will be noted that in 1931 the interest payable on the Australian national debt was $115,000,000, but by the next year, 1932, without any material change in the amount of the debt, the interest charge was reduced to $83,000,000, an actual saving of $32,000,000 or 27 per cent. Between 1931 and 1932 a deficit of $53,000,000 was changed to a surplus of $6,570,000. These changes were brought about as a result of legislation reducing the rate of interest on both public and private debt, and the adoption of a different financial policy under which the gold standard was abandoned and the currency of Australia allowed to depreciate in foreign countries.

The real burden of debt is determined by the amount of goods that have to be produced to pay the interest. In Canada due to low price levels, it has been increased by over thirty per cent. In connection with these public debts that I have mentioned I think it is fair to state that public debt is immortal, it never dies, it lives forever. But we poor mortals must continue to pay interest on it, and the rate of interest is the most important thing to consider. In the final analysis it is more important than the amount of the debt. Australia not only reduced the rate of interest by legislation but reduced the burden of debt on their people by raising the commodity price level. The price level for agricultural products in Australia for the last four years has averaged forty per cent higher than in Canada, yet the cost of living in Australia in June, 1934, was still one point below what it was for Canada.

The government of Canada to-day have many problems. I shall not attempt to list them all, but in addition to the debt problem we have a farm problem—which I consider the most important of all—an unemployment problem; and a railway problem. Under the present orthodox financial policy there is no solution of any of these problems. I make no apology for emphasizing the question of finance, as the budget deals primarily with the financial position of the country, and the solution of every one of these problems involves the question of money.

I want now to invite the attention of the house for a few minutes to this very important question of money. In this very complex system in which we live or are trying to live, speaking in the material sense, money is the most important factor. Man must have money for his three primary requirements, food, clothing and shelter. I will not enlarge on that, but merely tell the story I heard a few years ago about a man in this city going home one night and on one of the side streets he was held up by a thug who said: "Hand over your money or I'll blow out your brains." "Well, go ahead," the man said, "I can live in Ottawa without brains, but I can't live here without money." That, of course, applies to other cities besides Ottawa. The man who has all the money he wants can buy anything that it is physically possible to create. He can have anything for himself from a super airplane to a private submarine and everything in between. The man who has plenty of money to-day can live in a style that Solomon in all his glory never dreamed of. Mankind has always sought Utopia, and I think it is fair to say that the man with all the money he wants has found it; if he has not it is his own fault. Our scientists, engineers and workmen have solved the problem of production, in a comparative sense at least. We have over eight million horse-power mechanical energy developed and installed in factories and power houses. When that is harnessed to our modern, labour saving machinery, we have the equivalent of eighty million slaves to work for us, a nation of ten million people. As Stuart Chase says, we have eighty million big, black slaves that do not need to be either fed or clothed and that are willing to work for us twenty-four hours a day.

As the result of the work of our scientists, inventors and engineers we have a wonderful social heritage of which we are not making very good use. Our productive system was so efficient in 1929 that we were told we got into this depression through over-production. One of our leading bankers made that statement a few years ago, and one of his friends said the way out was to work harder. Every member of this house knows that if you get into a jam by producing too much you cannot get out of it by working harder, but perhaps we might get out by thinking harder. The banker does not realize, or this banker did not, that we have passed from the age of scarcity into the age of potential plenty, that the cause of the depression through which we have been passing was under consumption rather than over production. The cure is to consume more. We now have mass production, but of what use is it unless we can get mass consumption? The people would consume more if they had the purchasing power, and when I say purchasing power I mean money. A money system that would give us purchasing power sufficient to buy back what we can produce might be called the key which will unlock the door to the age of plenty. The present money system is obsolete. I have a clipping from the press which states that even Mr. Frank Vanderlip, past president of the National City bank, says the gold standard is abandoned forever. Let us hope he is a true prophet.

The next thing I should like to point out is that money is not wealth. Money is a title to wealth. Money is a purely artificial thing; as Stuart Chase says, it is a creature of man and strictly subject to his control. To-day money might be very well described as a system of tickets to goods, and when I say money I mean all purchasing power whether it is in coin, paper notes or bank deposits, and the bulk of our money is of this latter kind, that is, bank deposits. I should like to give some figures as of October 31, 1929; I take these figures because at that time we were supposed to be enjoying prosperity. Bank notes outstanding at that time totalled $185,000,000; dominion notes amounted to $211,000,000 while bank deposits amounted to $2,368,000,000. It is quite evident to any person, then, that at that time approximately $2,000,000,000 of bank deposits was created by bank loans. I need not labour this point; I need only state that if within the boundaries of any nation you consider all the banks as one system, practically speaking, every bank loan and every bank purchase of securities creates a deposit. The repayment of a bank loan and the sale of a security by a bank destroys a deposit, and in the words of Right Hon. Reginald McKenna, "the amount of money varies only with the action of the banks." Some people think the amount of money does not vary; they say there is just as much money in the world now as there ever was, but generally they wind up by asking where it is. That is not true; the amount of money does vary. That is well illustrated by the case of the United States, where in 1929 bank deposits amounted to $55,000,000,000, while in 1933 those deposits had shrunk to $38,000,000,000. In other words, $17,000,000,000 worth of money had disappeared in that country. I asked the banker who gave me these figures where that money went, what became of it, and he said, "Why, it was destroyed."

The bulk of our money to-day is credit extended by the banks. That credit is created by the action of the bank when it takes our chattels, our goods or our bonds as security and writes for us a credit in its ledger. Money, then, is largely a system of bookkeeping, and I would suggest that the first step we should take in order to get out of this condition of poverty in the midst of plenty should be to institute our own system of financial bookkeeping. Establish a national bank, or credit house, call it what you will —we could use the Bank of Canada. Then make the right entries in the financial books. That is the first step to take to solve this problem of distribution, which is the greatest problem facing this and almost every other civilized country to-day. The problem of distributing among the people the goods which they are able to produce is without a doubt the greatest problem we have to face. On what basis should the entries be made in the financial books? I would say on this basis, that what is physically possible should be financially possible, and I challenge any hon. member to say why any proper financial system should not be of that kind, capable of making financially possible everything that is physically possible.

It was proved during the war that this could be done. We financed the war not by borrowing but by creating the money in Canada. Whenever we wanted anything for the army, if it was physically possible to create it we did so, and we created the money. We never failed to create anything that was required by the army if it was physically possible to create it; we did not say, "We have no money; we cannot afford it." But that is what we have been saying to the unemployed and the poor farmers in this country. We could afford it if we had the right system. The present system does not reflect reality; we are told that things which are physically possible are not financially possible. Many things are physically possible, socially desirable and almost necessary; in fact they are necessary, yet we are told that we cannot have them because there is no money. We suffer to-day under the tyranny of money, and money is an awful tyrant. As Lord Melchett said, we have made money a rod for our backs. There is plenty all round us, but with the money system that exists at present we cannot have it.

Credit should be based upon the ability to produce goods as required, when required and where required. If this country and this government had the courage to do so a system could be set up under which credit would be issued on that basis. This credit should be issued without interest, and I want to say emphatically that credit and money can be issued without interest just as well as with interest. It should be issued in sufficient quantities to enable us to produce all the goods socially desirable and physically possible, for home consumption or for export in exchange for other goods.

I want to make it clear that what I propose would not interfere in any way with our ability to export goods; as a matter of fact it ought to enable us to export more goods, because I am sure it would enable us to produce them much more cheaply. At the same time we should see that there is sufficient purchasing power in the hands of the people to buy back all the goods we produce for home consumption plus the imports we receive in exchange for the goods we send out. What we suffer from chiefly at present is a chronic lack of purchasing power. Purchasing power, where it is required, must equal the selling price of the goods produced. To correct the situation which exists at present, this chronic lack of purchasing power, it will be necessary to issue credit for consumption. Under the orthodox system, in the main, credit is issued only for production, but what is the use of this production if we cannot consume it? So why not see that the amount of credit that is available for consumption will equal the value of our production, at fair prices, as I have said already?

[Mr. Coote.]

We have in Canada a wonderful cultural heritage to which I have already referred, and we have a perfect right because of that cultural social heritage to distribute a national dividend in Canada. An accurate bookkeeping system will enable us to determine the amount of that national dividend. We have a competent bureau of statistics which could tell us the amount of goods produced, and we want a bank or credit house that will make the entries in the financial books which will equal the entries in the production books.

In other words, see that sufficient purchasing power is issued where it is needed to buy back these goods. Some people say, "Oh well, you would have inflation under that." We can guard against inflation, but at the moment there is nothing more needed in Canada than some reflation. You would have to have considerable of what some people call inflation to get us reflated back to the point where we could carry this terrific debt without sinking ourselves up to our necks in the mire. Some of this money which I am suggesting should be paid out for consumption would go to replace part of the money which is now created as a result of bank loans at six and seven per cent. The amount of money needed would have to be determined by the management. They would use the index of employment and the average price level just as the engineer would watch the throttle on his engine. He advances the throttle when he wants the engine to go faster and closes it down when he wants the engine to go more slowly.

May I quote from the Southampton Chamber of Commerce, a very respectable body indeed:

> We must be able to spend money while the machine works.

And again:

> Production should determine the basis of money and credit instead of money determining production, as it does now.

When men are displaced by machines they and their families must be fed and clothed. Our job to-day is to bring the machines under control; at present they are our masters. As Stuart Chase has said, money and the machine are trampling around through the populace as though they had equestrian rights from God. Our task is to lead them back into the stables, where they belong. Money and the machine, are both labour saving inventions, and they should be the servants of man. They have become our masters.

In considering what methods the government should adopt to distribute this purchasing power which I have suggested must be paid out I believe the standard we should use when we are deciding the proper measures to take should be that of the maximum of human happiness. That should be the standard by which all reforms which are passed or considered in this chamber should be judged. In the past we have used many false standards, one of which was called efficiency. Every day in the year we have sacrificed human happiness for efficiency. So far as I know we go through this life only once; I believe the good Lord intended us to be happy and placed in this world things which if properly used would be sufficient to make us happy. The first requisite to human happiness is economic security. How many people in Canada have economic security to-day? We have productive capacity sufficient to give every person economic security. After all, the term "economic security" simply means a guarantee of food, clothes, shelter and those comforts and services which we could easily supply to every person. With conditions as they are to-day, after five years of depression, when we have over 1,000,000 people on relief, about 600,000 unemployed, about 200,000 people over the age of twenty-one years who have never had any worth while jobs, and $1,600,000,000 of life insurance policies lapsed in the last four years, economic security has gone so far as most of our people are concerned.

Even before the depression the chances for economic security were none too good. Statistics gathered by a life insurance company in the United States covering the lives of one hundred men, starting at the age of twenty-five, show that at sixty-five they stood as follows:

42 dead.
1 wealthy.
2 well-to-do.
5 able to live off their savings.
28 still working.
22 destitute, living off the state or relatives.

Because of these conditions, with economic security gone for so many old people, I would suggest that we set up a superannuation system for all persons over a certain age, and that such payments be made by way of a national dividend. I would not be dogmatic about the age. In western Canada I would set it at fifty-five years, while in Ottawa I would have to raise it a little to, say, sixty years, so as not to shock any person. I would suggest that we set up a superannuation system for these people as we are now doing for judges, and civil servants, as banks do for their employees, as churches do for their ministers. Why should we not have a national superannuation plan for all our citizens? I have suggested the age of fifty-five or sixty years, and that we should guarantee work at decent wages for people under that age. I would not make a superannuation system compulsory, but would give it to those wishing to retire. I believe in a year's time we could retire 300,000 people and thus provide jobs for 300,000 young men and women who have been going without work. I had better make it clear that this plan would apply to the women as well as to the men. I am not going to be dogmatic as to the amount of superannuation, but I would suggest that phase of the matter would have to be worked out by our bureau of statistics. I am sure however that we would be quite safe in suggesting a beginning of at least $50 per month. I believe that that system would in the course of a year or so take care of at least 300,000 people and the extra purchasing power involved under the scheme I am suggesting would I am sure give employment to another 100,000. According to the census figures for 1931 there were gainfully employed in industry 79,000 people over the age of seventy years, 99,000 between the ages of sixty-five and sixty-nine and 354,000 between the ages of fifty-five and sixty-four. It would be safe to estimate that there would be more than 300,000 people over sixty years of age gainfully employed at that time.

May I point out to this house that in a report made to the president of the United States concerning the automobile industry it was stated that men of forty years were considered old in that industry. Even in Canada, if a man employed in industry or business is laid off after reaching his fiftieth birthday, does any hon. member believe that man could get another job? I do not believe he could.

Mr. PECK: Would you superannuate a man at forty?

Mr. COOTE: No, I have suggested fifty-five or sixty years. I would be content to begin at sixty years.

Mr. PECK: Would the hon. member answer this question—

Mr. COOTE: Would the hon. member mind asking his question when I have completed my speech? I have only forty minutes.

May I in this connection cite one incident which came to my notice. A coal miner in my constituency told me he had mined coal in Canada for thirty-two years, and in the old country for fifteen years, and was still at work. Although a frugal man he has not acquired sufficient funds to retire. This man has two sons over the age of twenty-one who have never worked. He said to me, "Why could I not be retired and my boys be allowed to mine the coal"? There are many men on our farms to-day who have reached the age of seventy but who still go out to the fields, drive their teams and engage in their occupation, a great deal of which is dangerous and which at their age they should not have to do. I do not think we can over stress the point as to the desirability of having economic security for all our citizens.

There are several other ways in which we could make use of a national dividend, and one of these would be to make provision for the widows and the blind. Disability and health insurance and grants to education should be financed in this way. It is my view we should make use of part of this national dividend to relieve the small taxpayer. And, last but not least—as a matter of fact this is one of the most important—we must take steps either by use of a national dividend or by some other method to restore the purchasing power of the people on our farms. Forty-five per cent of our people are on farms. Whereas in 1928 the average income of these farmers stood at $1,600, in 1933 it had gone down to $640. To my mind nothing could be more important than a restoration of purchasing power to these people, if we wish to bring back anything like a condition of prosperity. There are 728,000 farms in Canada. I would say that on the average one more man could be used on each farm. Suppose, however, that one farmer out of every four hired a man, they would in that way engage the services of about 200,000 young men and take that number from the ranks of the unemployed. In the reforms I have suggested to-night, and the means I have suggested of taking care of the unemployed, I believe provision could be made for all the unemployed men. There is a lot of work to be done.

I should like to say one more word with regard to what we could do for the farmers. I would call the attention of the house to what has been done in Australia. That country did not hesitate to bonus its wheat producers. During the last four years the commonwealth government has voted $44,000,000 for wheat bonuses to farmers. Last year they voted $58,000,000 to be loaned to farmers without interest for a period of years. These loans were to be made to farmers who found it necessary to make compromises with their creditors.

[Mr. Coote.]

I should like to give a few statistics to show the amount of work which could be done on farms. There are 650,000 farm homes with no bath rooms with running water. There are 600,000 farm houses without radios, and 500,000 without telephones. There are 400,000 farms without motor cars, and less than five per cent of the farms have electric lights. Canada has the resources, the material, the engineers, and the workmen, so why not do the work? In addition to building houses, considerable work could be provided by creating safe railroad crossings and building additional national highways. I do not believe in work for work's sake, but in a young country like this there is much to do and we should be able to provide work for all those under a certain age. The time may come when there may not be work for all, but by that time I hope we shall be able to declare a national dividend for every citizen. It is to be hoped also that before that time arrives the people will have been educated for leisure. I should be satisfied to give the assurance of economic security to every man and woman who is willing to do his or her share. When that has been done they can develop the cultural side of their lives in a way that is not now possible.

The matter now before the house is the amendment moved by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston). Personally I have no objection to this amendment, but I have been given the task of moving another amendment which expresses the views of the group to which I belong. This amendment contains a constructive suggestion to the government, but it does not fit in very well with the last clause of the amendment, which reads:

—and afford an additional reason why appeal to the people should not be longer delayed.

There is nothing that we here in this corner can do at the moment to accelerate or delay the date of the election. I desire to move, seconded by Mr. MacInnis:

That the amendment be amended by striking out all the words after the word "Canada" and adding thereto the following:

"and would appear to be based upon the assumption that poverty and debt are inevitable conditions within the country;

and whereas the real and potential wealth of the nation, based upon our natural resources and our capacity to produce, is such as to make possible an abundant provision for all the requirements of our people;

Therefore, this house is of the opinion that the government should take immediate action to insure the fullest and most equitable distribution possible of our socially-created wealth and that, as a first step in this direction, the measures which may be necessary to meet the pressing needs of the farmers and the unemployed should be financed by the social credit of Canada, thus avoiding a further increase in the debt burden of the country."

Mr. W. K. ESLING (West Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to add my congratulations to those of other hon. members to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) on the presentation of his budget? I should like to express the hope that he suffered no discomfort this afternoon because of the gas bombs which were hurled across the floor of the house. We can hardly expect hon. members opposite to be enthusiastic over a Conservative budget, and especially one which reflects so favourably the accomplishments and businesslike achievements of this administration. No more can we expect hon. members opposite to be enthusiastic over the social legislation which has been brought down by this government. They will recall that some of this was contained in their platform of 1919, but it was left to this government to put it on the statute books. So, Mr. Speaker, as usual you observe promises to your left and performances to your right.

As the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Myers) has said, Canada along with every other country in the world has experienced the most trying times in her history. On the one hand we had the earnest, determined and successful endeavours on the part of this administration to preserve the financial integrity of the country and restore conditions to normal. On the other hand, the people of this dominion have witnessed an equally earnest and determined endeavour on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to discredit the helpful legislation which this government has brought down. They argued against it and in many instances obstructed the legislation, but they finally acknowledged that it would be helpful and showed that acknowledgment by voting for it. They have put themselves in a position where they can meet any requirement of political expediency. When they are speaking in one part of their constituency they will be able to assure their listeners that they were opposed to this legislation, and when they go to another part of their riding they will be able to tell the people there that they voted for it.

When this administration assumed office in 1930 the markets of every country in the world were closed to Canada by insurmountable tariff barriers. In the case of the United States there was duty and excise against our lumber of $4 per thousand feet. The duty against copper was four cents per pound; against our cattle, three cents per pound, and against our fish, two and a half cents per pound. Our poultry, dairy and farm products were faced with correspondingly high tariffs. They kept out our wheat with a duty of forty-two cents per bushel. In France it was 85 cents, in Italy $1.08, in Germany $1.65. So that every country in the world determined simply to live within itself. The hon. member this afternoon referred to trade. Well, this government has been busy in its endeavour to recover the trade which hon. gentlemen opposite lost. We shipped into the United States in 1921 farm products and manufactured goods to the amount of $190,000,000, and in 1930, the last year in which the party opposite was in power, these exports to the United States had been reduced by $100,000,000. We had at the same time about seventeen trade treaties in force, whereas to-day this administration has twenty-two in force and more in the making. In 1929 hon. gentlemen opposite, when in power, had an adverse balance of $90,000,000, and in 1930 they had an adverse balance of $103,000,000; in other words, they had bought that much more than they had sold. The hon. member (Mr. Ralston) this afternoon said that trade balances were not a matter of so much importance, but we all recognize that business methods must be applied to governments as well as in commercial circles, and if a man buys more than he sells there is only one end to that course.

At the time that the Liberals went out of office all the manufactured products from cheap labour countries and from countries with depreciated currencies were being dumped into this dominion. The United States was dumping all its surplus farm products here, and it was for that very reason that the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) called parliament in special session and put into force such tariffs as would bring that practice to an end. Then the Prime Minister, as a man of action, went to the economic conference; and, as the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth told us this afternoon, he spoke to the delegates there in no uncertain terms and told them that the time had come when the people of the empire must adopt the principle of British preferences. He pointed out that there was no time for delay or compromise and that steps must be taken to put that principle into operation. And again, being a man of action, he invited the delegates to meet at Ottawa where these trade agreements were consummated.

As to the importance of the trade agreements, while hon. members opposite may be inclined to belittle them, the country at large has come pretty well to realize that there has been no greater impetus to business than these same agreements. It is true that when the delegates arrived here the Prime Minister, on behalf of this dominion, endeavoured to make the best deal possible, and he did grant a preference on such articles as would not injuriously affect the Canadian producer. The Dunning budget, to which hon. gentlemen opposite like to refer so often, gave a preference on something like six hundred odd items, and there is now a preference on about nine hundred items. The Minister of Finance of 1929 said, however, "We are giving these preferences gladly; we are not bargaining at all." Well, no one can blame anybody for bargaining. The hon. member this afternoon referred to bargaining, and I would point out that bargaining is the basis of business. We on this side of the house think, as the country at large thinks, that the Prime Minister made a very good bargain so long as these preferred items do not interfere with the Canadian producer.

Hon. members opposite may recall that in 1926 they did some very effective bargaining with the Progressive group; they gave a preferential invitation to that group to come into the Liberal fold, and some of them came, in return for which there was the political salvation of the party opposite. Now, when it comes to the actual results in trade following the consummation of these agreements, one may take by way of illustration a few items the correctness of which cannot be challenged. Take the export of apples from Canada to the United Kingdom; it has doubled since the consummation of these agreements in 1932, and lumber exports have increased sixfold. No one can question that; the figures can all be verified by reference to the bureau of statistics. The export of hams and bacon from Canada to the United Kingdom has increased nine times. Then we come to poultry products, for which there was little export market up to the time of the agreements. To-day the export of poultry, dressed and undressed, from Canada to the United Kingdom has increased thirty-three times—not thirty-three per cent but thirty-three times the volume of 1932. Take canned meats: that has increased, not thirty-three times but seventy-eight times—seventy-eight times the volume of canned meats has gone to the United Kingdom in consequence of these agreements.

I do not know what the Liberal party will do if they have to forego, as they will have to do henceforth, the pleasure and privilege of branding the Conservative party and its Prime Minister as being dominated by financial interests. That has been a subject of propaganda, insinuation, innuendo, anything that the Liberals could offer to saturate the public with political prejudice against this party. They led the man in the street to infer that the financial institutions, the great corporations, the banking interests and so forth dominated the Conservative party. Well, I think the public has come to know the facts to such an extent that that propaganda will end and the people will draw their own conclusions in that regard. For nine years since the former revision of the Bank Act there was contained therein a provision for a seven per cent interest rate, but no penalty was attached thereto and it remained for this Conservative administration to insert a penalty of $500 on any bank and $100 on the manager of that bank for every instance in which interest in excess of seven per cent was charged for a loan.

Again, a great privilege which the banks enjoyed was the circulation of their own bills; they were permitted to issue those bank bills to the extent of their paid up capital by paying merely a tax of one per cent per annum and the cost of printing the bills, which was trivial. They are now deprived of that privilege. That privilege meant that among the chartered banks of Canada they had approximately $140,000,000 worth of bank bills to carry in their tills, to circulate freely and to lend to you, me and others at seven, eight or nine per cent as the case might be. That privilege will now be withdrawn; where formerly if a chartered bank wanted to issue $5,000,000 worth of its own bills, it cost that bank $50,000 to do so, from now on it will have to apply to the Bank of Canada and instead of its costing that bank $50,000 for the privilege of issuing $5,000,000 worth of bills, it will cost it $125,000, at the current interest of 2½ per cent. Is that any indication that the banks control this Conservative administration? The whole question is answered by the Bank of Canada Act and the latest revision of the Bank Act.

What did this government do about gold? There was some $40,000,000 worth of gold in the tills and vaults of the chartered banks, and the Prime Minister simply said to them: You did nothing to enhance the value of this gold or to deserve the profit; therefore we will take this gold over at the statutory price of $20.67, and the profit thereon will go into the consolidated revenue fund. As we all know, there is under the act a statutory sum permitted to remain with the chartered banks, to care for foreign commitments but on the whole they certainly have realized that the dominating factor lay in this administration.

We often hear, from the man in the street who is actuated by Liberal propaganda, about the Conservative party being subservient and submissive to the corporations. Well, it will be found that under this budget the corporations of Canada are to-day paying a higher tax than has ever before in the history of Canada been levied on them. There is also to contradict this propaganda the fact that under this budget the income tax on wealth is higher and heavier than at any previous time in our history. That I think is an effective answer to the rumours which are so generously spread about the Conservative party being dominated by the financial interests, because precisely the reverse is the case.

I would like to remind the house that this depression perhaps more than anything else has made us realize our obligations to our fellow man. In this connection I would like to offer a word of commendation to the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. Cotnam) who in the early part of this session introduced a resolution advocating pensions or other assistance for the blind. Those of us who are not so afflicted have little realization of the discomforts, inconveniences and privations endured by those who have not their sight. But I would say that there was no more forceful demonstration needed than the attendance of members of the House of Commons at the meeting of the committee on industrial and international relations at which there appeared delegates from the various blind associations to submit their claims in favour of assistance. I do trust this government may see its way clear to lend to the blind such aid as may permit them to face the future with more hope. In this connection I would like also to include the case of those who are appealing to parliament on behalf of the burnt-out ex-service men who are unable to accept employment and who have reached the age of fifty and are at present not eligible for help until they are sixty. I think the opinion of all parties of the house would be unanimous in urging the government's sympathetic consideration in that regard.

As the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Myers), who spoke a short time ago, referred to his constituency, perhaps I may be permitted to ask the house to visualize conditions in West Kootenay, a district which is devoted largely to fruit growing and mining. We have there a very large number of cooperative organizations; the farmers are getting down to business methods and they hope in a short time to have such pre-cooling facilities as are essential to the proper marketing of fruits and vegetables. Last year there were shipped from the city of Nelson some 40,000 crates of cherries. Unfortunately in the absence of pre-cooling facilities, those cherries became affected with a little mould. We hope by this fall to be shipping from the federal district of West Kootenay the finest cherries produced in the Dominion of Canada.

As for mining, we are enjoying very great activity. Gold production has been the stimulus and the salvation of this dominion in the last two or three years, and British Columbia has been in the forefront of gold production. The old historic mining camp of Rossland, which in the early days produced some $80,000,000, is again coming to the front. In 1934 it was the largest gold producer in British Columbia, with the exception of the Pioneer mine; it shipped to the Trail smelter just $1,000,000 in gold. We also have at the city of Trail the largest metallurgical plant in the world, and in connection with that smelter we have perhaps the richest lead-zinc mine in the world, for the Sullivan mine at Kimberley produces nine per cent of the world's output of lead and zinc. We have also at Trail a very extensive fertilizer plant which produces fertilizer as a by-product from the waste materials at the smelter.

The government has brought down at this session social legislation designed to advance and add to the comfort and standard of living of the wage earner. I think if those engaged in industry would exercise a little more human consideration and copy the methods followed by Doctor S. G. Blaylock of Trail—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Hear, hear.

Mr. ESLING: —conditions throughout this dominion would be very much improved for the wage earner and the industrial classes. This institution of which I speak employs five thousand men, and to its credit be it said that throughout all this depression those men have so spread their hours of work that not a single man was laid off.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. ESLING: The industry is in its splendid position by reason of the fact that a cooperative workmen's committee practically directs every matter as between employer and employee. It is a method which was put into operation by Doctor Blaylock, and it has done away entirely with any evidence of organized labour. From the many departments of this great plant, the lead department, the zinc department, the copper plant, the machine shops, the fertilizer plant, the foundry and carpenter shops and the innumerable other departments, the men elect by secret ballot a delegate, who is their representative, and at stated intervals the delegates from every department meet in a room provided by the company. The manager is not present. Any man who has a complaint or grievance of any kind, no matter how trivial, or a suggestion for the betterment of conditions of employment or safety, or any suggestions about pay, hands it to the departmental delegate and that delegate presents it to all the delegates and they discuss it. If they think the grievance is unjustified they simply send it back to the complainant, but if they think it is well founded they adjust it if they can, and if not they call in the manager. Every applicant for employment in that plant is given the most careful hearing. After a man is employed he feels absolute security in his position, for the reason that no foreman can discharge him or act in any spirit of ill will towards him. A man has three chances; if one foreman discharges him he is transferred to another department, and he has three opportunities before he loses his position entirely. The company neglects nothing that would contribute to the comfort and convenience and health and safety of its employees. Every employee enjoys the benefit of a pension, non-contributory, solely due to the good will of the company, and in order to create an interest on the part of the workmen in the efficient conduct of the works. In addition the company provides group insurance for every one of the five thousand. It gives him gratuitously an insurance policy for $500 when he starts work; after he has been in the employ of the company for six months the amount of the policy is increased to $1,000. When he has been there another six months it is increased to $1,500, and it does not cost him a cent. If he chooses to put on another thousand dollars he pays for it the nominal sum of ninety cents a month. In addition to this, every one of the 5,000 employees receives, in addition to his day's pay, a bonus for efficiency, a bonus on the rise in the price of lead or zinc, and a bonus on the price of silver.

The workmen's committee of which I spoke looks after medical conditions and hospitalization. A nominal fee is agreed to by the committee with the various members of the clinic, and by paying that fee not only the workman but every dependent member of his family enjoys the advantage of medical attention and hospitalization. The single man contributes just the same as the married man; he helps to bear a part of the burden of the wife and dependents of the married man.

Then the company has contributed generously towards the provision of a very fine memorial hall, in which the employees enjoy the facilities and comforts of a library, a gymnasium, a bowling alley, and a swimming pool. Furthermore the company has contributed a sum in excess of $50,000 towards the construction of an artificial ice rink. To every employee after he has been in the service three years the company gives a share of stock. It matters not whether the market value of that share is $25 or $500, it goes to the employee just the same. They have followed that practice for several years. Then, just to increase the human touch as between the company and its employees, the company encourages them to own their own homes, and it has lent to these employees approximately $1,000,000 for the construction of these homes. The company advances the money and provides a supervisor to see that the letter of the contract is carried out in the most minute detail, and it accepts repayment monthly at a minimum rate of interest. In addition, if the man does not desire to remain in the vicinity of the works during the summer the company will help him to acquire a summer home; it has been just as generous in assisting its employees in the construction of summer homes as it has been in providing them with homes for use the year round. I want to commend to the industrialists of this dominion the splendid service initiated by Doctor Blaylock, and I am sure that every hon. member will join with me in the belief that far better results would be obtained through this generous attitude on the part of employers towards their employees than ever will be obtained through legislation placed on the statute books.

May I extend to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to every member of this house, a most hearty invitation to visit this wonderful metallurgical plant at Trail. At the same time you will have to go only a short distance to see the most complete power plants on the Kootenay river, in which some 225,000 horse-power at present is being generated for the operation of this huge plant. In addition you will see the company's model farm, on which there are some 170 head of pure bred Ayrshires providing milk for the men working in the plant. This milk is served to the men as an antidote to any possible ill effects from smelter fumes. Again, Mr. Speaker, I extend to every hon. member of the house a hearty welcome to Trail.

On motion of Mr. Manion the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Rhodes the house adjourned at 10.45 p.m.

Wednesday, March 27, 1935

The house met at three o'clock.

STANDING ORDERS

Mr. A. U. G. BURY (East Edmonton) presented the first report of the select standing committee on standing orders, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 46, to amend the Weights and Measures Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The object of this bill is to define a cord of wood or other substance under the Weights and Measures Act; it is to set up a standard and also to provide that the governor in council may make regulations in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

ST. ROMUALD, QUE., PROTECTION WALL

Mr. VERVILLE:

1. What was the cost to the government of the protection wall built at St. Romuald?
2. How many bags of cement were used, and what was the total cost?
3. How much was expended by the government for uncrushed stone, by the yard, on the site?
4. What was the cost of sand on the site?
5. How much each did the government pay for piles?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. $24,021.19.
2. (a) 7,396; (b) $4,404.65.
3. 1931-32—$1.05 per yard (field stone for cement work). 1934-35—$1.10 per yard (quarry stone for cement work). 1934-35—$0.85 per yard (stone for backfilling).
4. 1931-32—$0.95 per yard. 1934-35—$0.85 per yard.
5. 1931-32—121 pieces or 1,785 feet at 16 cents, $285.60. 1934-35—223 pieces or 3,575 feet at 15 cents, $536.25.

ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR SMUGGLING

Mr. DORION:

1. What are the names of the alleged smugglers who are actually being given a preliminary hearing in Montreal on a charge of smuggling alcoholic liquors?
2. In connection with the aforesaid matter, was it the federal Department of Justice, or the attorney general of the province of Quebec that requested that such persons should stand trial at the assizes without a preliminary hearing?
3. Did the attorney general of the province of Quebec refuse to comply with the request of the federal Department of Justice?

Mr. GUTHRIE: As the cases above referred to are at the present time before the courts, it is not considered in the public interest to supply the information requested.

SOREL, QUE., SHIPYARDS

Mr. BARRETTE:

1. Did the Minister of Marine receive a petition signed by the employees of the Sorel shipyards?
2. If so, what is the nature of the petition and what are the names of the persons who signed same?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1. No.
2. Answered by No. 1.

HERMENEGILDE BOULAY

Mr. MICHAUD:

1. Was one Herménégilde Boulay at any time appointed postmaster of the town of Rimouski, Quebec, or to any position in the postal service at Rimouski, Quebec?
2. If so, to what office, how long did he hold the office, and what was the remuneration paid for his services?
3. If removed from office, at whose request, and for what reason?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.
2. Mr. Boulay was acting postmaster at Rimouski from the 24th to the 27th of November, 1930. He was paid $39.42 which includes the salary of the staff for the period he was in charge.
3. Because the department was informed that Mr. Boulay was not, in the sense of the law, a resident of Rimouski.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

HARBOUR COMMISSIONS—LOANS

Mr. MUNN:

1. What amounts have been advanced to the following port authorities—Halifax, Quebec, Montreal, St. John, and Vancouver, up to the 31st of December, 1934: (a) by way of grants; (b) by way of loans?
2. How are the loans secured?
3. What rate of interest is charged by the government?
4. What amount of interest has been paid to the government by each?
5. What amount of interest is delinquent by any?

6. What amount of principal has been returned by any?
7. What amount of sinking fund has been set up by any?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Return tabled herewith.

ALCOHOLIC LIQUOR SMUGGLING

Mr. DORION:

1. What are the names of persons who stood trial at Quebec in the years 1933 and 1934 on a charge of smuggling alcoholic liquors?
2. What are the names of the persons who stood such trial at the assizes without a preliminary hearing?
3. Was the decision to have such persons stand trial at the assizes without a preliminary hearing taken by the attorney general of the province or the Department of Justice?
4. Did the federal Department of Justice or the attorney general of the province of Quebec intervene, in any manner whatsoever, so that such persons should stand trial at the assizes without a preliminary hearing?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Return tabled herewith.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

PORT LA TOUR, N.S., BREAKWATER

Mr. DUFF (for Mr. Ralston):

For a copy of all papers, correspondence, telegrams, bills, paylists and other documents in the possession of the Department of Public Works with respect to any work done or material supplied on the breakwater at Port La Tour, Shelburne county, Nova Scotia, since the work referred to in return No. 234, dated April 5, 1934.

WEST BACCARO, N.S., BREAKWATER

Mr. DUFF (for Mr. Ralston):

For a copy of all papers, correspondence, telegrams, bills, paylists and other documents in the possession of the Department of Public Works with respect to any work done or material supplied on the breakwater at West Baccaro, Shelburne county, Nova Scotia, since January 20, 1934.

TARIFF DECREASES

Mr. McPHEE:

For a return showing all decreases in the customs tariff passed by the parliament of Canada in the years 1922 to 1930; return to show former rates as well as decreases and dates when decreases were made.

Mr. BROWN:

For a return showing all increases and decreases in the customs tariff passed by the parliament of Canada in the years 1929-1930; return to show former rates as well as increases and decreases and dates when changes were made.

DOMINION LIVE STOCK COMMISSIONER—
DAILY MARKET REPORTS

Mr. T. E. SIMPSON (West Algoma): May I, with the leave of the house, be permitted to move on behalf of Mr. Stevens the motion standing in his name, as follows:

For a copy of all the daily market reports of the dominion live stock commissioner for the months of January, 1934; March, 1934; September, 1934; December, 1934; January, 1935; and February, 1935, as forwarded from the Toronto representative of the Department of Agriculture for distribution to the markets of the west and to the press, showing:—

(a) The opening prices of live stock on the Toronto market;

(b) Copy of the report of the dominion live stock commissioner's representative in Toronto on the Toronto live stock market as handed by him to the press from day to day regarding the sales and prices on that market.

Mr. DUFF: I am very glad to second that.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNOR GENERAL OF CANADA

APPOINTMENT OF MR. JOHN BUCHAN TO SUCCEED THE EARL OF BESSBOROUGH

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister): I have the honour to inform the house that His Majesty the King has been graciously pleased to approve the appointment of Mr. John Buchan, Companion of Honour and Member of Parliament for the Scottish Universities, as Governor General of Canada, such appointment to be effective upon the relinquishment of office in the autumn of this year by His Excellency the Earl of Bessborough.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I say that personally I am very much pleased at the announcement which has just been made by the acting leader of the government (Sir George Perley) to the effect that Mr. John Buchan will succeed Earl Bessborough when His Excellency's term of office expires. I think the appointment is an excellent one.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

DRYDOCKING OF CANADIAN GOVERNMENT MERCHANT MARINE SHIPS AT UNITED STATES PORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): I would like to submit a question to the Minister of Railways and Canals in regard to a protest made against the repairing or overhauling of government steamships in United States docks. The matter has already been before the house, but I wish to submit the following question to the minister: Can he inform the house in the case of the Canadian Highlander if any inquiry was addressed at any time to the dry dock at Saint John, New Brunswick, as to whether that dock was available, and in the case of the Canadian Britisher whether any such inquiry was made prior to a dock having been already booked at New York?

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): The question of the Highlander and the Britisher, as the hon. gentleman has remarked, was up a few days ago on a question by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Quinn). I wish to say that at that time I gave to the house a statement which was given to me by Mr. Fullerton and which I presume was given to him by the steamship management under him, which statement I believe has since been shown to be somewhat inaccurate. In other words, my understanding to-day is that as regards the questions asked by the hon. gentleman, the answer to that regarding the second boat, the Britisher, is: Yes, an inquiry was made of the Saint John dry dock, to see if it could accept that ship; but in regard to the other, I am informed more or less authoritatively that such inquiry was not made. Since there was some question as to the truth of the statement, which I made here, of course on the authority of the management who are entirely in control, I informed Mr. Fullerton that the government desired a complete investigation into the whole question. We insisted that as far as possible all ships of the Canadian fleet must be repaired in Canadian shipyards, even if sometimes that makes it necessary to repair them in advance of the regular time. The investigation is now going on, and as the matter is in a sense sub judice I do not think I should say anything further at present.

PETITION FOR CLEMENCY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS L. CHURCH (East Toronto): I should like to address a question to the government. Has clemency been asked for Mrs. Thomasina Sarao who was sentenced to be hanged for murder in Montreal next Friday? If so, what action has been taken, and is there any hope of sentence being commuted, as she is a woman?

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): A petition was received on behalf of the woman prisoner mentioned by my hon. friend, but it has been decided that there should be no interference with the sentence of the court in that case.

WHEAT QUOTAS—ARGENTINA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): On Monday evening last the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), and I think also the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) put a question to me when the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce were under discussion, with reference to Canada having loaned part of her so-called quota to Argentina. These questions are found on pages 2070 and 2081 of Hansard.

I desire to say that no part of the Canadian wheat export quota for the crop year 1933-34 or for the crop year 1934-35 was in fact transferred or loaned to Argentina. If the statement made in the House of Commons on May 11, 1934, by the Prime Minister, to which the hon. member for Témiscouata referred, is read carefully it will be seen that what the Prime Minister actually said was:

> Any concessions that might be made to the Argentine by reason of the extraordinarily large crop they had would not involve Canada in the loss of any shipments that we might be able to make, for the quota we had for the year was a quota that was greater than we should be able to fill under existing probabilities. In any event it would be merely a loan of a part of our quota until next year, so that we would not lose anything if we made an adjustment with the Argentine.

The Prime Minister was referring to conversations then in progress during which the other overseas wheat exporting countries had expressed their willingness, subject to certain safeguarding conditions, to transfer temporarily to Argentina part of their export quotas that were unlikely to be used. In the event, Argentina was not willing to subscribe to the safeguarding conditions, and so no transfer of quota from Canada to Argentina ever took place. There is therefore no question of Argentina returning something which that country never received.

CONFERENCE OF MAYORS

REPORTED REQUEST OF REPRESENTATIVES OF CANADIAN CITIES AND MUNICIPALITIES TO BE HEARD AT BAR OF THE HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): I should like to ask the acting Prime Minister (Sir George Perley) if he has received any request from the mayors who are now assembled, or have been assembled for the past two days, in Montreal that they be received at the bar of the house and allowed to state their grievances to this parliament? If so, what action have the government taken in the matter?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister): The government has received no request from the mayors to be heard at the bar of the house.

Mr. HEAPS: According to press reports the mayors assembled in Montreal made a request to be heard at the bar of the house. According to the same report that request has been refused. I regard the matter as one of urgent public importance, and therefore I beg leave to move the adjournment of the house to call attention to a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the request of the mayors and representatives of the following cities and towns in the Dominion of Canada to be heard at the bar of the house, in order to lay before parliament the critical conditions prevailing.

The list of the mayors and reeves or representatives of municipalities throughout Canada who have made the request is as follows: Camillien Houde, mayor of Montreal—

Mr. SPEAKER: May I interrupt the hon. member to point out that according to standing order 31 which governs such a motion—

Mr. HEAPS: May I without being discourteous to the chair—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HEAPS: This is part of the motion.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HEAPS: I was just pointing out—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order. Sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER: I point out to the hon. member who is asking leave to propose this motion that the first paragraph of standing order 31 states when such a motion shall be made, that it shall be before notices of motion. That order on the order paper is past, and the motion which he is now making is too late.

Mr. HEAPS: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has the right, and I shall allow any member of the house to discuss the matter in the regular way.

Mr. HEAPS: Standing order 31 also says:

> Leave to make a motion for the adjournment of the house (when made for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance) must be asked after the ordinary daily routine of business (standing order 15).

I submit with all due deference that the ordinary routine business has not yet been disposed of. We are now on the orders of the day, with private members still having precedence, and until the private members are through with their questioning I claim that I still have the right to place this resolution before parliament.

Mr. SPEAKER: The routine proceedings are as set out at page 2 of the routine proceedings and orders of the day of Wednesday, March 27.

Mr. HEAPS: Louder, we cannot hear a word.

Mr. SPEAKER: The routine proceedings are set out on page 2. Then follow the questions. Following questions are notices of motions for the production of papers.

The learned author of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms has pointed out, what I think was pointed out by the hon. member who spoke to the point of order, that standing order 15 does set out what the routine proceedings are, and they always are carried on daily and are strictly observed in drawing up the orders of the day. As I read paragraph (1) of standing order 31, a motion to adjourn the house must be made after the daily routine business has been concluded and before notices of motion. It occurs to me that the time is now too late to make the motion.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): May I call Your Honour's attention to the orders of the day for Wednesday, as shown on page 40 of Beauchesne. They are as follows: questions; notices of motions; public bills and orders; government notices of motions; government orders. Now we have not yet reached the proceeding of government orders; in fact we have not even reached notices of motions. Consequently, I think the hon. member for North Winnipeg is in order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I could not quite hear the first part of the hon. member's remarks. Is he referring to page 40?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, page 40, the routine proceedings for Wednesday, that is to-day.

Mr. SPEAKER: Questions; notices of motions; public bills and orders; government notices of motions; government orders. That is the business of the day; that is after routine proceedings. If the hon. member would refer to paragraph 2 on the preceding page he would see that the ordinary daily routine of business is set out, consisting of presenting reports by standing and select committees; motions—including notices of motion for the production of papers—and introduction of bills. Those are the routine proceedings according to standing order 15; they are always so designated in the orders of the day presented to the house each day.

Mr. HEAPS: But may I point out that paragraph 134 on page 42 says:

The time for asking leave to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance is after "routine proceedings" and before notices of motions or orders of the day are entered upon.

The word "or" is there which, according to my interpretation of this paragraph, means that my motion is perfectly in order.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I think Your Honour is quite right in your interpretation of the rule. I would put it to my hon. friend from North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) in this way: Under standing order 15 there is a list of the routine proceedings. Then it says:

The order of business for the consideration of the house, day by day, after the daily routine, shall be as follows:—

And on Wednesday:

Questions; notices of motions; public bills and orders—

So questions come after routine. That appears on page 40; questions and notices of motions come after the routine proceedings are concluded. Therefore according to this rule, which was quoted by the hon. gentleman also, routine proceedings have been concluded; the routine business was concluded before questions were answered.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the whole question hinges on whether the order, on page 7 of the orders of to-day, of notices of motion for production of papers is synonymous with the order for notices of motion on page 10 of the orders of the day. If Your Honour decides that notices of motion for production of papers means notices of motion under standing order 15, then I think Your Honour's ruling is correct. On the other hand I think there is force in the contention that the rule refers only to the notices of motion which come after the orders of the day, on to-day's order paper. In that event, sir, I think the hon. member for North Winnipeg is quite entitled to proceed. I think there is distinct ambiguity under this rule, and because of that ambiguity I think the hon. member should be permitted to proceed.

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, there does appear to be a very profound doubt in your own mind as to the ruling you should give on this occasion. With all deference I submit to Your Honour that the question at issue is of such vital importance to the whole dominion, involving as it does in the words of the mayors themselves the very peace, order and good government of Canada, that it would be a dangerous thing to deny the hon. member for North Winnipeg the opportunity of presenting this case to this house at this time. I do not think the house can afford to overlook this matter, especially as Your Honour does appear to have some doubt on the point.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is there any further discussion on the point of order?

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): I wish to say a word on the point of order. It strikes me, Mr. Speaker, as it always has struck me that the proceeding of the house under which any motion such as this should be made is distinctly set out on page 2 of the order paper. First comes reports by standing and select committees; then comes the routine proceeding of motions. That does not apply only to government motions; private members have the same right to submit motions as have members of the government. Very many private members on both sides of the house submit motions of one kind or another under that order, and I think the hon. gentleman should have submitted his motion under the order of motions, just as you have pointed out.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): But motions are a part of routine proceedings, and this rule specifically states that motions must be proceeded with after routine proceedings are disposed of.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend may be right, but I am giving my opinion. I think this should have come up under motions.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. President,—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: There are two official languages used in this house, and if I choose to use the French form there is no reason why I should not do so. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the reason for this rule is that on any sitting day of the house, if there is a matter of definite urgent public importance an hon. member should have the right to bring it to the attention of the house. I cannot conceive that this rule 134 is very clear. The time for asking leave to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of moving a definite matter of urgent public importance is after routine proceedings and before the orders of the day are entered upon.

That seems to be perfectly clear. Up to the present the orders of the day have not been entered upon. If this is not the time, would you, Mr. Speaker, indicate just when is the time, because undoubtedly these proceedings of which we have already disposed, including notices of motion for the production of papers, are a part of routine proceedings, and so with questions. At that time we could not enter upon a discussion of the matter. I do not see any other time when it would have been proper to introduce a motion of this kind. On a number of occasions in the past fourteen years I have introduced motions of this kind, and unless my memory fails me they were introduced on the orders of the day. I should have to look that up, but I think that is the case, and I do not see that the rule is very clear.

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I do not often intervene in a debate of this kind, but it seems to me that the argument is concerned purely with a matter of technicality. I would suggest to you, sir, and to the house that as this matter seems to be of very considerable importance, the house be generous enough to revert to that order of business which will permit this motion to be proceeded with.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In any case may I submit that we have not yet reached notices of motion.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Notices of motion appear on page 10 of the orders of the day of to-day, Wednesday, March 27.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Just before you give your ruling Mr. Speaker, may I say that I am anxious to support the Speaker in any ruling he may give which upholds the rules of the house, and I am prepared to do so. At the same time I favour the point of view presented by the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) who has just spoken, and I would express the hope that a generous attitude might be taken by the house itself on this matter and that we might return to the order of proceedings which would permit of the motion being discussed. The point that is being raised at the moment, as to the time at which this motion should be introduced, is purely technical. Once the motion is introduced it can be discussed and will have to be discussed on its merits. I would favour a generous view being taken as to the introduction of the motion.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: So far as this side of the house is concerned we have no objection whatever to this matter being discussed, but we think the hon. gentleman is out of order and should withdraw his motion. Then if he chooses to move that we revert to the order of motions, which would sustain the ruling of the Speaker, so far as I am concerned I would have no objection to doing so.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does the hon. member for North Winnipeg accede to the request of the acting Prime Minister?

Mr. HEAPS: On the understanding given by the acting Prime Minister I am glad to withdraw my motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall consent be granted?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SPEAKER: Now may I crave the indulgence of the house with respect to standing order 31? I am very glad that this matter has been brought up to-day, and I purposely intervened when the hon. member rose to his feet. There is no standing order of the house which has given me more concern in the last two months than has the rule now in question. Hon. members may recall a discussion which took place in this chamber two years ago. Undoubtedly the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) will remember it, and if the Prime Minister were here I believe he would remember it too. The question arose as to whether or not under section (3) there would be an appeal from the decision of the Speaker.

May I say to hon. members that I have given the general provisions of this section the utmost consideration within my power, and I have no hesitation in saying that the section is ambiguous from beginning to end. There is ambiguity in section (1) about which I raised the point a few moments ago, for the purpose of obtaining a definite opinion. Hon. members will know I asked for discussion of the matter. The whole proceeding under section (3) is upon the assumption that an affirmative answer has been given throughout whereas, as a matter of fact, there may be a negative answer. That is, there may be a negative answer under section (3) with regard to the statement which is offered for discussion before the house. There may be a negative decision on the point as to whether or not the matter is of urgent public importance or as to whether the actual form in which the motion is couched is correct. There is nothing in the provisions of this standing order which provides for the reading of the statement to the house, unless the Speaker finds that throughout the procedure everything has been in order—an almost impossible situation.

I draw this matter to the attention of hon. members. It is my belief that arrangements should be made for a small committee of the house to discuss this section of standing order 31 so that it may be revised and made clear with a view to following more easily proper procedure. I crave the indulgence of the house for having taken this length of time in a discussion of this particular section. However this matter is of importance; the sections are certainly ambiguous and indefinite and should be made as definite as possible. Will the hon. member kindly proceed.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would move that we revert to whatever may be the proper motion or order under which this matter could be discussed.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is the motion carried, with the unanimous consent of the house?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SPEAKER: Will the hon. member proceed.

Mr. HEAPS: I wish to thank you, Mr. Speaker, the acting Prime Minister and the house for the kindness of interpreting the rules of the house so that I may have an opportunity of moving what I consider to be a somewhat important resolution. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. This is a matter of extreme importance, and it is very necessary that the remarks of the hon. member be heard in all quarters of the house.

Mr. HEAPS: I beg leave to move the adjournment of the house to call attention to a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the request of the mayors and representatives of the following cities—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Speak up.

Mr. HEAPS: I cannot do better than I am doing. I beg leave to move the adjournment of the house to call attention to a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the request of the mayors and representatives of the following cities and towns in the Dominion of Canada to be heard at the bar of the house, in order to lay before parliament the critical conditions prevailing. Then, Mr. Speaker, the list which I shall now read is a list of the mayors who have requested to be heard before parliament. The list is as follows:

P. R. Carter, Mayor, Simcoe, Ont.
Herbert Andrews, Ald. representing Mayor Queen, Winnipeg, Man.
Leo Trépanier, Ald., Montreal, Que.
H. S. Johnstone, Mayor, Moose Jaw, Sask.
Fred Bancroft, General Secretary.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I did not wish to interrupt the hon. member when he was reading his petition, but as a matter of fact I am very anxious that this procedure should not be considered a precedent. I call Your Honour's attention to the fact that this is not a proper way to present a petition—that is to read it. It is supposed to be sent in, and should not be read in that way, in full. I thought that under the circumstances I would not object earlier, but I do urge that the presentation of a petition in the manner it is now being presented should not be made a precedent.

Mr. HEAPS: May I point out to the acting Prime Minister that this is not a petition. I have read my motion, with a list of the mayors and representatives of the municipalities in Canada who are anxious to appear before the house.

Mr. CHAPLIN: Are there six mayors in Montreal?

Mr. HEAPS: No, there is one mayor, and there are one or two other representatives. I have now moved my motion, which has been seconded, and I assume I have leave of the house to proceed with my motion for the adjournment.

Mr. SPEAKER: Will the hon. member state briefly to the house the question he proposes to discuss?

Mr. HEAPS: I have; I sent you a copy.

Mr. SPEAKER: The house has not heard the motion.

Mr. HEAPS: I moved it. I moved the following, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre:

> I beg leave to move the adjournment of the house to call attention to a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely, the request of the mayors and representatives of the following cities and towns in the Dominion of Canada to be heard at the bar of the house, in order to lay before parliament the critical conditions prevailing.

I read that at the beginning.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. HEAPS: I assume, having now obtained—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has stated the matter, and I take it the motion he has sent to me is the statement to which reference is made in subsection (3), May I repeat what I said a minute ago—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Speak out.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have always endeavoured to speak loud enough in this chamber. May I point out that the motion directed to the house brings out the ambiguities that arise under the standing order. Subsection (3) states:

> He then hands a written statement of the matter proposed to be discussed to Mr. Speaker, who, if he thinks it in order, and of urgent public importance, reads it out—

Which is not what has been followed in this case—

> —and asks whether the member has the leave of the house. If objection is taken—and so forth; I shall not proceed any further with that. As the question, however, has been read to the house I am going to crave the indulgence of the house to refer to it. The motion is for leave to move the adjournment of the house to call attention to a matter of definite and urgent public importance, namely, the request of mayors and representatives. As yet we have no evidence of any request. There has been none presented to the house. That is one ground upon which I would rule that the motion is out of order.

But may I point out something further, that the motion by its very wording is out of order as it states finally, "in order to lay before parliament the critical conditions prevailing." It speaks of something prevailing. Now the definite rule of the house with respect to a motion of this kind is that it must refer to a matter of recent occurrence, but here is something which has been prevailing.

May I point out also that it covers a universal field, not one particular item, but the critical conditions prevailing. So I rule that the motion is out of order.

Mr. HEAPS: Mr. Speaker, I would respectfully dissent from the ruling because I feel that similar resolutions of a nature such as I have put before the house have been discussed time and time again.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. member to show to the chair that deference which I am sure he feels by not discussing the matter further.

Mr. HEAPS: I want to appeal from your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: That is different.

Mr. GOTT: Before the orders of the day are called—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I understood, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) had appealed from your ruling, and in that case, sir, I must ask you to put the question.

Mr. SPEAKER: Before I can put any question there must be the usual number arise.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The question has not yet been put to the house.

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, may I just say one word with respect to the point of order, and that is to raise the question as to whether there is an appeal or not from Your Honour's ruling, because if reference will be had to subrule 3 on page 72 of our Rules and Forms it will be observed that it reads:

He—

That is the member who desires to move the adjournment of the house.

—then hands a written statement of the matter proposed to be discussed to the Speaker, who, if he thinks it in order,— and so forth. In other words, it is in the discretion of the Speaker as to whether it is a subject coming within the scope and intent and purpose of this very rule, and I submit under these circumstances that this is a case where the question is peculiarly within the right of the Speaker to decide. He is not giving a decision with respect to the interpretation to be placed upon a rule but he is exercising a discretion which the rules of the house have reposed in the chair.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, I submit that there is a motion before the house regularly moved and seconded, and following that, Your Honour has definitely declared that motion out of order. Under those circumstances there seems to be nothing that can be done other than to put the motion involved in the appeal against the Speaker's decision.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is there any further discussion?

Mr. HEAPS: Mr. Speaker, do I understand that there is no appeal in a matter of this kind against the ruling of the chair? I think there is, and I think it should now be the duty of the Speaker to see whether his ruling is sustained or not.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): In other words, forfeit his own discretion.

Mr. SPEAKER: As I stated a moment ago, in a statement perhaps too lengthy, I had the gravest doubts in my own mind with respect to the proper interpretation which should be put upon the words which have been drawn to the attention of the house by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes), and owing to the fact that there is a doubt in my mind I am going to rule that there is leave to appeal. I should like to say that I agree in a general way with the interpretation which has been placed on these words by the Minister of Finance, but it is by no means clear, and it is one of those cases to which I referred a short time ago, that where there is any doubt I do not think the Speaker should take the attitude that there should not be an appeal from his decision. I shall therefore allow the appeal.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Heaps, seconded by Mr. Woodsworth, has asked for leave to move the adjournment of the house—shall I dispense?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Dispense.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have ruled the said motion out of order, and from that ruling the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) now appeals.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chair be sustained? And the ruling was sustained on the following division:

THE BUDGET

DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Tuesday, March 26, consideration of the motion of Hon. E. N. Rhodes (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the proposed amendment of Mr. Ralston, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coote.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways): I should like at once to congratulate my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) on the clear, frank and very able statement which he has given of conditions not only in Canada but in the world at large, so far as business affairs are concerned, and I congratulate him as well upon the fearless yet fair application of taxes to those best able to bear them. Since the presentation of the budget the press of Canada has been very generous in its praise; in fact, the approval of the budget has been so general that, it seems to me, rarely has such unanimity been in evidence, in all the years that I have been a member of this house, as there has been on this occasion in connection with the present budget; and probably the best compliment which was paid the Minister of Finance was in the more or less unanimous nickname, if I may so describe it, which was given the budget when it was called "the poor man's budget." I believe it is a poor man's budget inasmuch as it goes further than we have yet gone in this country in the redistribution of wealth and in placing taxes where they should be placed—

An hon. MEMBER: On the poor man.

Mr. MANION: In this budget there are no taxes on the poor man, but they are placed on those who are well able to bear them.

I have listened, as I always do, with a great deal of interest, to my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston), the official financial critic of the opposition. In a speech which took two hours and forty minutes, the hon. gentleman I must confess almost rivalled his leader in the length of the addresses which that right hon. gentleman gives, and he still maintains that air of pessimism and defeatism which he displayed last year and the year before, in spite of the fact that so far as Canada is concerned—and I think so far as the world generally is concerned—the corner has been turned in regard to the depression. In fact it was turned well over a year ago, but my hon. friend, or I think I should say my hon. friends opposite, find no gratification in that. There is no pleasing them with anything. I am sorry for them; they cannot cheer up. The hon. gentleman in his usual eloquent manner wept, wailed and gnashed his teeth about the terrible conditions in Canada. I believe he did endeavour on one or two occasions to say that he was very glad conditions were getting better, but he proceeded immediately to show that they were getting worse. As I listened to him—and I did attentively—I decided that there could be a very good biblical description of his speech: it was a strange mixture of the wailings of Jeremiah, the doubtings of Thomas, and a few dashes of the flavouring of Ananias. My hon. friend is being affected I think by the fact that he does not remain in his own province. He comes I am told from a very charming constituency, that of Shelburne-Yarmouth, a constituency that juts out into the broad Atlantic where the tang of the salt air comes in and keeps the cobwebs out of people's brains. Yet the hon. gentleman has come up to live on St. James Street where budgets are always unpopular, because the moguls down there, before the budget comes out, fear they may be taxed, and after it comes out, they usually find they have been. Consequently I am afraid my hon. friend is being affected by them. I would suggest to him with all due respect and the utmost friendliness that he go back and spend more of his time in his constituency, in which event he would probably not only be sure of re-election, but would also clear out from his brain those cobwebs of depression.

I notice that the opposition seem to be in this mood: if the general depression continued to lead the people of Canada down into the valleys, they would be happy, because then they would be able to float on the tide of discontent that is present always in crises of this nature, once more back into power. But as they see business picking up in this country and conditions improving throughout the world, they feel that hope of victory which they did possess a year ago, and I think with some just cause owing to conditions, is gradually being banished from their minds and they are getting more and more afraid that we shall perhaps hold the election off until much better conditions have finally arrived and the people can judge normally as they should, and return to power an administration which has given Canada such splendid government.

The Liberal motto seems to be not "country first," but "party and politics first"; that is their attitude. There is no acknowledgment of world conditions, no acknowledgment of a crisis that was more severe than the world has seen in its economic history, a crisis in which two-thirds of the world trade was wiped out altogether, in which tens of millions of people in the industrial countries were unemployed, in which economic nationalism has been rampant throughout the world, in which dictatorships have sprung up in half the countries of Europe, and in which repudiation of interest and even of debt has become quite common. In a time when the maintenance of the democratic institutions in which we believe is an achievement, my hon. friends opposite talk as if conditions in the world were all normal. May I ask them this question: What country or what people escaped the world depression? The answer is obvious: No country and no people. My hon. friends opposite have a habit—and my hon. friend exhibited it in his speech—of showing business conditions in Canada between, say 1926 and 1929, and trying to take the credit for them. All they were doing at that time was floating forward on a wave of the wildest kind of boom, and if they must get the credit for that, then they must also take the blame for the depression which followed and for all the tragedy that succeeded upon the depression of 1929. To the Liberals, apparently, at any rate to the Liberals in the house, it seems to be no achievement that Canada came through at least as well as if not better than did any other country. They set off on a smug pretence of cooperation with and assistance to this government, when as a matter of fact all we have received from them in the five years during which we have been in power, has been criticism, fault-finding, and every possible attempt at embarrassment that they could think of. They have become the party of reaction, of stand-patism, of laissez-faire. Apparently those are their principles at the present time.

Even if I wanted to, I could not for lack of time go into every detail of the speech of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth, because he spoke for two hours and forty minutes and I have not that time at my disposal. But if I had the time I could do this: I think I could take almost every positive statement that the hon. gentleman made and show that in most or practically all of the cases he twisted the facts to suit his own purpose, or if he did not do that, he did as at least some lawyers have such an ability to do; he twisted the argument in such a way as to deprecate the achievements of the government. The hon. gentleman has now a habit, which he has practised at least since he has been in opposition, of keeping always down in the valleys. He seems to forget that sometimes the sun is shining on the hill tops. He keeps on dealing with small matters when, with his natural ability, he could be on the hill tops dealing with the bigger questions, and he could deal with them very ably.

I am going to discuss a few of his statements and show what I mean by saying that most of them could be disproved. For example he stated that the Minister of Finance had spoken of the wiping out of trade restrictions only as a preelection discovery. I had on my desk in my room the budget speeches for the past two years, 1933 and 1934, but apparently I forgot to bring them down with me. I meant to quote the 1933 one, that is two years ago, in which the Minister of Finance very clearly pointed out to the people of this country that there was too much economic nationalism; that tariffs were too high throughout the world; that no individual country could lower its tariffs, but that all countries should wipe out so far as they could the economic nationalism which was swamping world trade. He pointed that out in 1933 and again in 1934.

Then the hon. gentleman belittled the tariff changes in the budget. Last year, as I remember very well, he attacked us in this way: I do not know his exact words, but he implied that we were treating the tariff board with some contempt. This year he forgot to mention what is a fact, namely that all the tariff changes—and there are some forty-five decreases in the tariff—in the budget of this year were based upon the findings of the tariff board.

Mr. RALSTON: Tied down by the terms of the Ottawa agreements.

Mr. MANION: I do not quite get the point that the hon. gentleman is making; I simply state that every change in the tariff made by the Minister of Finance this year was made on the recommendation of the tariff board.

Mr. RALSTON: No, only twelve.

Mr. MANION: My colleague, the Minister of Finance corrects me. I understood that it was the decreases. The minister says that any increases in the tariff—and there were only three—were based on the recommendations of the tariff board. I misunderstood him when he told me this yesterday. However, I am on as solid ground I think on that as the other. The hon. gentleman if he had been fair, as he usually is, would have admitted that he did not find the same reason for pointing out the contempt which the government was supposed to be heaping on the tariff board this year as he was supposed to have found when he spoke last year.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend was very fair yesterday. When I referred to the raise in the tariff I expressly mentioned that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance had apologized for it and had said it was because the tariff board had recommended it.

Mr. MANION: Well, we will pass it up; it is not very important. I did not intend to waste time; I am merely dealing with a few of the hon. gentleman's statements.

My hon. friend also made a great ado about toy construction sets. He has a habit of picking out two or three unimportant items out of thirty or forty tariff reductions; he picked out toy construction sets and made a great joke about them and his friends laughed hilariously over the fact that the tariff on toy construction sets had been lowered. But I may say that as a matter of fact the British government specifically requested that lowering, and as it was done at the request of the British government they must have considered it of some importance.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MANION: I do not object to interruptions, I welcome them if they are real questions, but I do not know that there should be general growling from the other side. My hon. friend ignored altogether such items as aircraft, locomotives and other major items.

Then he stated that this is a "make believe budget." He belittled the cuts in every way, and he praised very highly, as do all hon. members on the other side, the Dunning budget. He lauded that budget to the skies. But if there ever was a budget brought into this house which was filled with make believe it was the Dunning budget. He did not mention that in the Dunning budget they made items free which never in her history were produced in Great Britain, many of them in fact which the people of Great Britain never see unless they come to Canada. We do not import from Great Britain eggs in the shell, wheat, beans, barley, cornmeal, oats and oatmeal. Every one of these things Great Britain has to import. Yet they were in the Dunning budget. Rye, and rye flour, hay and straw, natural cut flowers—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MANION: They would be in a nice fresh state by the time they got here. And there is a full page of fresh vegetables and fruits, such as rhubarb, tomatoes, parsnips. And worst of all, a full range of agricultural implements, which were never made in Great Britain, which most people in Great Britain never saw at all I think, such as mowing and reaping machines, harvesters, cultivators, harrows, seed drills, ploughs, corn-husking machines and so on. Talk about a make believe budget, if ever there was a make believe budget brought into the House of Commons of Canada it was the much praised —by the other side—Dunning budget. It is no wonder that Charley quit the house after it, and that the people of Regina when they woke up to the kind of make believe budget he brought in helped him along in the quitting. There are always three things out of which I get a good laugh, one is the Dunning budget when hon. gentlemen opposite talk about it, the second is the 1919 Liberal platform, and the third is that book Industry and Humanity.

Mr. DUFF: What about the bed time stories?

Mr. MANION: I leave them to my hon. friend. I saw an item in one of the newspapers the other day, sent out I think by the Canadian Press, that up in London someone had asked for Industry and Humanity and it said it was the first time in ten years it had been asked for. It is so little in demand that it is news when anyone asks for it. When a man bites a dog, it is news. The request for the book is in the same class. I was going to suggest to the right hon. gentleman that the next time he writes a book he should add a few lighter touches, or make his books interesting like those of the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Moore), which I read with great pleasure, although I do not always agree with him. The right hon. gentleman writes a little too heavily. The next time he writes a book he might ask the hon. member for Ontario to give him a few literary touches. The hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) could also help him, and the member for Cartier (Mr. Jacobs); I was wondering if they might not add a chapter on Abie's Irish Rose. Or the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) might contribute some stories about piracy on the high seas.

Mr. DUFF: Mr. Speaker, I would not like to say what stories the doctor from Fort William could give us.

Mr. MANION: Well, I think I could improve the book no matter what I might give, almost anything would improve it. Then I was going to suggest to my right hon. friend —I am sorry he is not in his seat—that if those that I have already suggested do not help him, he might call on the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Brown) to contribute a few spicy stories.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MANION: If at the head of every chapter he would put one of those spicy stories, and then shorten the rest of the chapter very materially people would like the book much better.

Mr. BROWN: What is my hon. friend's idea of a spicy story?

Mr. MANION: I could tell my hon. friend in parliament my idea of a spicy story but I am quite sure he could not tell his idea of one.

Now to be serious again—

Mr. VALLANCE: Why "again?"

Mr. MANION: I did not know I would get such applause from my hon. friends opposite. The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth made much ado about the changes which may have to be made in the budget when it reaches the committee stage. Of course, changes are always made in budgets in committee stage. I merely wish to mention two great changes that come to my mind that were made in former budgets, those by the late Mr. Robb in connection with the automobile tariff after the people concerned came down and interviewed him and his leader, and the others made by Mr. Fielding, including very marked changes in the cigarette tax. Every budget that is brought in undergoes changes in the committee stage, because of inadvertent injustices done, as nearly always happens when a budget is being drawn up, some technical error or something of that kind, so that changes are essential.

Then the hon. gentleman pointed out, as usual, that the export market was a big and important market, and he rather seemed to deride the home market. I point out that with the exception of wheat, agricultural products of this country are practically all absorbed by the home market.

Mr. TOTZKE: They have to be under this government.

Mr. MANION: We consume the greater part, about 98 per cent, of our butter, ninety per cent of our bacon, ninety-eight to ninety-nine per cent of our beef—

Mr. TOTZKE: How about cheese?

Mr. MANION: Well, we export a good deal. But we consume in the home market eighty-five to ninety per cent of our agricultural products if wheat is left out. So the home market is rather an important market.

Then he referred to the public debt. He said the Minister of Finance had understated the public debt, and that there should be something like $140,000,000 in round figures added to the total given by the Minister of Finance. I might point out that in his addition of $140,000,000 my hon. friend included $115,000,000 of securities which have been transferred to the Bank of Canada, and which are merely an internal financial arrangement. It is an arrangement whereby instead of the notes that have been issued in the past by the government, securities were transferred to the Bank of Canada to the extent of $115,000,000.

Mr. RALSTON: Will my hon. friend permit me there, because I think that is an important distinction. That $115,000,000 in debentures issued to the Bank of Canada is to cover a liability of the Dominion of Canada which the Bank of Canada took over in the shape of an issue of dominion notes; therefore there is a direct liability to the public of that $115,000,000.

Mr. MANION: Yes, but I made inquiries of the officials of the Department of Finance, and they told me it was largely a bookkeeping entry; that is all it amounts to. However, I am dealing with a good many points and I do not intend to argue this one at length. The hon. gentleman can have one of the following speakers deal with the matter if he so desires.

Mr. RALSTON: Three per cent interest bearing debentures.

Mr. MANION: I did not even hear what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. RALSTON: If my hon. friend will permit me—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. RALSTON: I think it is most important, because I know my hon. friend does not want to misrepresent the situation. Those were three per cent interest bearing debentures maturing in 1940, bearing the seal of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. MANION: Yes, but we should not forget that whatever earnings are made by the Bank of Canada come back to the dominion after a very low rate of interest is paid to the shareholders, so the dominion will get its money back.

Then my hon. friend spoke of a number of assets which he said were treated as non-active assets. I submit that the non-active assets as set out in the budget are practically the same as those that were set out by my hon. friends when they were in power, with this exception, that since we came into power at least $22,000,000 of harbour commission loans have been transferred to the non-active assets, which under the regime of hon. gentlemen opposite were kept under the active assets.

Now just a word in regard to balancing the budget. The hon. gentleman criticized the Minister of Finance very severely because he was not balancing the budget, and he also criticized us because during our regime we have added to the public debt. I should like to ask him or any hon. member who speaks what country has balanced its budget during these trying times. I do not know any country of any importance that has done so. Let us take France, for example, one of the richest countries in the world. The other day I read a statement, which I hold in my hand, made by the Minister of Finance of that country. It is dated at Paris, and according to this statement France has to borrow $1,326,000,000 in order to balance its budget. The statement is as follows:

Paris, January 23.—France must borrow approximately 21,000,000,000 francs (about $1,326,000,000) in 1935 to balance its budget and prime its economic pump, Louis Germain-Martin, finance minister, told the finance committee to-day. The money so raised would be in addition to the budget income estimated at 46,991,000,000 francs (about $3,101,406,000).

Just in passing I should like to mention that the $3,000,000,000 which France collects in taxes is nearly ten times the amount we collect in Canada, but France's population is not four times the population of Canada. In other words they collect in taxes about twice as much per head as we do in Canada.

Then there is England. In my address on the budget last year I pointed out that England is not balancing its budget, because England is not paying interest on its war debt to the United States, which amounts to nearly $200,000,000. If we did not pay the interest on our war debt we would not find very great difficulty in balancing our budget, because in round figures the annual interest on our war debt amounts to $100,000,000. For fear someone may say that I am incorrectly stating the facts I am going to quote a few words from the budget speech of 1934 of Mr. Neville Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer in England:

> Neither last year nor the year before did I make any provision for the payment of the war debt to America nor for the receipt of war debts or reparations by ourselves. In the absence of any future development, I propose to follow precisely the same line this year.

Again I should like to point out that the taxes collected in England amount to half a billion dollars more than the taxes collected in France, or about $3,500,000,000, which works out at about $90 per head while our taxes in Canada to-day, even if you include provincial taxes, amount to about $45 per head. So if we in Canada imposed taxes on the same basis as they are imposed in England, instead of having a deficit we would have $300,000,000 or $400,000,000 with which we would not know what to do.

Then let us look at the situation in the United States. This year that country has a deficit of between $4,000,000,000 and $5,000,000,000. I hold in my hand a statement from a financial paper, either the Wall Street Journal or Barron's Weekly, I think the Wall Street Journal, of a few weeks ago showing that they expect a deficit of $4,500,000,000 in the United States. That works out at about forty times our deficit, though their population is only about twelve times the population of Canada. So on a basis of population their deficit is about three times as great as the deficit of the Dominion of Canada.

It is true that we have a deficit quite large enough; if you include everything it amounts to about $117,000,000, and the Minister of Finance admitted an increase in the public debt of $670,000,000 since we came into power, though he claimed that part of that sum should be charged to the late government, and I think he was right. However, we will take it as $670,000,000. That is a very serious addition to the public debt and I am not going to belittle it, but at the same time I would point out that if the war had continued for another year we would have added almost that amount to our public debt, but we would not have closed our doors; we would not have pulled down our blinds and quit the war. I submit again, and with all seriousness, that while our public debt is quite serious enough it would be diminished very quickly with a reasonable revival of world trade, not only Canadian trade but world trade. During that period we would be able to take into this country, as we can take in during normal times, a proper proportion of immigrants, and as we get a larger population our problems will vanish like mists before the rising sun. We have this advantage over European countries, that we have great vacant spaces, and when world trade picks up and the world becomes normal again, we will fill those vacant spaces. So, sir, I submit that this is not a time to paint our picture darker than it really is; it is a time for optimism, not a time for blue ruin.

The hon. gentleman said that by increasing our trade we could not only balance our budget but solve our railway problem. He said we were strangling trade, though I noticed he was not so emphatic in that regard this year as he was last year, doubtless because we have increased the total trade of Canada in the past year, as compared with 1932, by something over $300,000,000. Trade has been strangled throughout the world because of the economic nationalism and the self sufficiency that has been desired by the countries of the world in case of another war. I submit, sir, in all sincerity, and I am sure my hon. friends cannot deny it, that ten million people in the Dominion of Canada are not sufficiently powerful to control world trade. Did the Liberals control it when they were in power? One must ask that question. If you look over our exports of farm products to the United States while the Liberals were in power you will see that they decreased by 75 per cent during their regime, from $160,000,000 in 1921 to just about $40,000,000 in 1930, and in that year the Hawley-Smoot tariff made it practically impossible for us to export agricultural commodities to that country. That prohibitive tariff was brought in while my hon. friends were in power. What action did the Liberals take to force our farm products into the markets of the United States; what did they do? When we asked them their only only reply was that they did not dare provoke the United States.

In that connection, the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth also quoted Mr. McLeod of the Bank of Nova Scotia, in a manner which made it appear that Mr. McLeod was speaking only of Canada when as a matter of fact Mr. McLeod made it very distinct, even in the quotation given by my hon. friend, that he was speaking of world trade in general rather than Canadian trade in particular. Another particular in which our trade was strangled to a large extent before we came into power was in regard to the export of our wheat to European markets other than Great Britain. Up to 1929 our wheat had free entry into Italy, France and Germany, but during the regime of my hon. friends opposite a duty of 73 cents per bushel was imposed by Italy, 85 cents a bushel by France and 98 cents a bushel by Germany. These were practically prohibitory tariffs against our wheat, but what action was taken by the Liberal party to counteract them? There was no action that anyone knows about. So, sir, when we point out that our total trade has increased by $300,000,000 in the past two years, do we receive any commendation from hon. gentlemen opposite? Is there any satisfaction expressed by them or any pride in their country; No, sir; the only thing they are thinking of is politics and it would not be good politics to admit that conditions are improving. They would rather belittle the accomplishments of their country and leave the congratulations to foreign commentators such as the League of Nations, Roger Babson or Isaac Marcosson, all of whom within the last few months have commended Canada on the improvement of her trade.

I should like to make a few observations in regard to empire trade. I well remember that during the last election campaign, at a time when the right hon. gentleman opposite was Prime Minister, he preceded me—or I followed him, I believe I should say—I followed him out through the west. I was only two days behind him, and in British Columbia, particularly, he pointed out that we were not treating Great Britain fairly, so far as our proposals in regard to trade were concerned, and he indicated, too, that his object was to favour the British Empire. Yet, in spite of the fact that through the empire trade agreements we have raised the trade within the empire we get no word of commendation or of satisfaction from the right hon. gentleman opposite.

[Mr. Manion.]

Let us consider the position in regard to cattle, for example; I shall mention only cattle and lumber, although there are other commodities which could be mentioned. In 1929, the year before the election, no cattle were shipped from Canada to Great Britain. Yet, in 1934, last year, we shipped just under 54,000 head. Then, in regard to lumber may I say that I have before me a report from The British Columbia Lumberman, the official journal of the British Columbia lumber industry. This report is dated January, 1935, only a couple of months ago and from it I intend to quote only one sentence. They say:

> The exports of British Columbia lumber in 1934 easily beat all previous years with a total of 860,000,000 (feet board measure). Note how gains in empire trade have more than compensated for the loss of the United States waterborne trade. More lumber was exported to the United Kingdom alone last year than was ever shipped by water to the United States of America in any twelve monthly period.

That is something of which all of us may be proud; that is something over which we may express satisfaction, and it is all due to the empire trade agreements. However, hon. members opposite voted against those agreements, and naturally they do not dare say a word in their favour. Almost solidly—with the exception of the hon. member for Hants-Kings (Mr. Ilsley)—they voted against these trade agreements. I notice now, however, that they are shifting their ground. I notice that not long ago at a conference of Liberal chieftains from all parts of the country which met in the city of Ottawa in December, the right hon. gentleman made the following statement, as reported by the Canadian Press:

> If a Liberal government came into power the trade relations of Canada to the other parts of the empire would be the subject of discussion and negotiation.... The Liberal leader made it clear that ruthless scrapping of empire agreements was not planned ... nothing would be done without discussion and negotiation between the interested parties.

Then, when he came back from that trip to England, a trip which he made in company with the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe), he made the statement that he had met nobody over there who favoured the empire trade agreements. My personal view is that he was in bad company. He probably stayed with our friends the editors and writers of the Manchester Guardian, for example. I hold in my hand the statements of two very outstanding men he might very easily have met over there, both of whom have recently expressed the view that they think a great deal, from their standpoint, of the empire trade agreements. The first person to whom I refer is the Earl of Derby who, speaking at a great banquet at the Mansion House, said:

I cannot avoid politics and you must forgive me. We have been aided in the struggle to recovery by the Ottawa agreements which have forged a new economic link between the component parts of the empire, the full benefit of which we can hardly expect to see in the course of two years.

Then I have another quotation worthy of being placed on Hansard. This is a statement by Neville Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer. Dated at London, January 19, Neville Chamberlain said:

I believe that historians will look upon the Ottawa agreements as a great landmark in the history of the empire. Up to the present the benefits to the dominion are more apparent than those to the mother country, yet substantial increases are visible in empire exports, and to arrive at the true value it is necessary to take a longer view, looking to the time when the populations of the dominions are many times what they are to-day. Preferences will then go far to compensate Britain's loss of foreign markets.

And then he added the significant sentences:

The government hopes to carry the notion of imperial unity still further in the coming year—they are planning in anticipation of a resumption of emigration for the settlement of new areas.

Those, sir, are some observations which show the feelings among sane Britishers in regard to the empire trade agreements. Therefore it is no wonder that the Liberal chieftains and hon. members who follow them are shifting their ground in their public remarks regarding those agreements. May I point out that in the coming election the people of Canada must ask themselves the serious question: "Is it advisable to elect a party which by vote opposed and by speeches derided the empire trade agreements?"

Then the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth spoke about the balance of trade, and again, in a general way, derided our ideas of the improvements which have been made, and the fact that the balance was favourable rather than unfavourable. If the hon. gentleman was not very clever I would think that in making such an attempt he was stupid, because I do not know how any debtor country can pay its debts until it exports more than it imports, or is a borrower of money. Borrowing in outside countries is not popular, at the present time. We have improved the balance of trade to the extent of $250,000,000. In the last year hon. members opposite were in power the adverse balance against us amounted to $100,000,000. In other words we imported into Canada $100,000,000 more of goods than we exported from Canada. On the other hand, in the past year we exported $150,000,000 more than we imported. This constitutes a change in our favour amounting to $250,000,000.

Canada is a debtor nation and she must export more than she imports. On the other hand, England is a creditor nation and must import more than she exports. Upon consulting the figures yesterday I found that England's imports are greater than her exports by £300,000,000 or about $1,500,000,000. In past years the difference has been even greater than that. Therefore—

Mr. HANBURY: They are much greater every year, but they have an invisible balance.

Mr. MANION: Yes, but our balance, including the invisible, is very much against us, and therefore we must export. May I say, further, that the section of the country represented by the hon. member who has just spoken is one which has benefited greatly by the empire trade agreements.

The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth spent some time in a discussion of the wheat policy of the present government. May I say there have been two wheat policies, one being a wheat bonus by which the government of Canada gave to the western farmers, in round figures, $13,000,000, in that year when wheat was exceptionally low in price. At least there should be some gratitude from western people for that action taken by the government. I believe the action was just and fair. The second policy concerning wheat was that of the stabilization of prices. This point, of course, is debatable; I do not question that. Certainly, however, whether or not it is debatable or whether we were wise or unwise in our action, no person can say that our action did not favour the farmers of western Canada. The ultimate result has been—and I personally believe the ultimate result will be reasonably satisfactory to the whole of Canada—the ultimate result has been that the western prairie provinces in a time of great need and great crisis have profited very much by the action of the present government. I shall quote in a few moments to prove my statement.

I do wish to point out before referring to the quotation that the carry-over in 1929, the year before hon. members opposite left office, was 127,000,000 bushels. That is more than half of the carry-over at the present time, taking for granted that the figures appearing in the press are correct. From July, 1925 to July, 1930 the three countries I mentioned previously, namely Italy, France and Germany imported on an average of 192,000,000 bushels yearly, partly from this country and partly from the rest of the world. May I repeat that they imported 192,000,000 bushels. But last year they imported only 20,000,000 bushels. May I repeat: They imported just 20,000,000 bushels. That condition arose because of the tariffs that were put up in June, 1930, and earlier before hon. members opposite went out of power.

Mr. McPHEE: And increased in 1932.

Mr. MANION: Yes, and increased, but when you get them up to 75 cents or—

Mr. McPHEE: In 1932.

Mr. MANION: Yes, but when you get them up to 75 cents and 98 cents the harm is done. You could quadruple the amount, if you liked; it would not matter. When you get up to 75 cents a bushel it does not matter how much higher you go.

John I. McFarland whose actions have been criticized by hon. members opposite made a statement in Moose Jaw only a few days ago which I shall quote to the house. On February 14, he spoke in the city of Moose Jaw, and at page 9 of the pamphlet I hold in my hand he is reported to have said:

> It is therefore evident from whatever angle we approach the question of exports, our carry-over will be well under 100,000,000 on August 1 next.

And later on the words are added:

> With a prospective carry-over down to around 80,000,000 bushels.

Of course, he is not infallible, but we hope he is correct. And if his statement is correct, Canada will be in a splendid position. On page 10 he says:

> No one will ever be able to estimate the great benefits the producer and the people in general have received as a result of the government's support of the price structure on the last five crops of Canada.

And further on:

> I want to say to you without prejudice ... that in the absence of government support it is clear to me there would have been such chaos that I am sure I would not care to have been a resident in these parts of the world.

I notice that in the last few months some of my hon. friends from the west, on the estimates and on the relief act I think, were demanding a good deal of information about the wheat situation. I should like to remind them that some of them at least were members of the banking and commerce committee last year and they requested similar information there. Mr. McFarland appeared before that committee. I was not a member of it, but I happened to wander in there one day and I heard Mr. John I. McFarland offer to give them all the information they wanted.

Mr. DUFF: You can't get away with that. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. ERNST: That is correct.

Mr. DUFF: That is not correct. I was examining Mr. John I. McFarland, and the majority of the committee would not allow him to answer my questions even with regard to the quantity of the wheat he held or the guarantee which the government had given.

Mr. MANION: If my hon. friend had waited till I finished my sentence he need not have interrupted at all. I pointed out, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. McFarland was willing to give them any information they wanted, but someone in the committee objected—

Mr. DUFF: The Conservative members on the committee and the chairman.

Mr. MANION: And some of the Liberal members too. The question was put to a vote and the vote was 33 to 9 against allowing Mr. McFarland to answer. In that 33 were included a lot of Liberal members of the committee, although not my hon. friend. The committee voted 33 to 9 against Mr. McFarland giving the information to the committee. Those are the official figures of the vote, and I have the report of the banking and commerce committee here if anybody questions it. That is just another instance, Mr. Speaker, of the Liberal party demanding one thing and voting in the other direction. They have been doing that all this session, criticizing every piece of legislation, and voting for it when the time for a vote comes. In this case they demanded the information but when it came to a vote in the banking and commerce committee—

Mr. DUFF: Every Conservative member voted against it.

Mr. MANION: And rightly, I think, and Liberal members of the committee voted with them. I am pointing out that they should not take the attitude in the banking and commerce committee that the information should not be given and then come here and demand the information which they could have got in the committee had they voted the other way.

Mr. ERNST: Every western Liberal voted against the information being given.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend from Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Ernst) says that every western Liberal voted against the information being given.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I did not.

Mr. MANION: I well remember the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) voting for the information. I noticed it because, so far as I remember, he was the only one. I was speaking of western Liberals from the prairies, not from British Columbia, and the only one of them I noticed was the hon. member for Willow Bunch, and there were a few other Liberals from the prairies sitting on that committee.

Whatever the results of the wheat price stabilization that we have carried on, there is no doubt that the prairie farmers and the people on the prairies owe very much to the government for the courage they displayed in going into the wheat market, and they owe it in the increased price which they received for their wheat. Whatever that price may have been, if they had been forced to dump their wheat on the markets of the world, undoubtedly the price would have been lower in Canada, and, as well, I think they owe a great deal of gratitude to the government for the $100,000,000 which has been given in relief or lent to the prairie provinces in the last four years.

Mr. DONNELLY: Why throw that up?

Mr. MANION: I will throw it up, if my hon. friend likes that expression. Does he think we should never mention it at all? Perhaps $100,000,000 is nothing to the hon. gentleman, but I consider that it is not a bad figure with which to help the three prairie provinces, and if they show any gratitude whatsoever to the government of this country they will vote solidly behind this government when the time comes.

Now I wish to deal briefly with the railway question which my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth dealt with at length in his speech yesterday.

Mr. DUFF: Forty-six minutes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MANION: What does the hon. gentleman say? The hon. gentleman is wrong because I can go on till six o'clock if I like. I do not intend to, but I could.

The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth spoke of the railway question. Now if there is any group in this country which should hesitate to talk about the railway question it is the group directly opposite, because they handed over to this government a railway mess the like of which Canada never had before, although we have had some messes. The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth again brought up that old chestnut that he pulls off every time he speaks, that the Liberal party during their regime saved the people of this country on the national debt $257,000,000. But he always forgets the other half of the story; I pointed it out over and over again and I am going to point it out again to-day because it should be known. The other half, or the other three-quarters of the story is that while the Liberal government were saving on the national debt, they were adding to the railway debt by $461,000,000 during the time they were in power. In other words, the net addition to the public debt for which they were directly and indirectly responsible is well over $200,000,000, and so it is no wonder that I jocularly added Ananias to the other biblical characters I mentioned in describing the hon. gentleman's speech. I have in my hand a sheet showing the interest payments due by the Canadian National Railways from the years of their incorporation down to the present time, and I intend to refer briefly merely to the time when my hon. friends opposite were in power.

In 1921 the interest owing to the public was $35,000,000 in round figures. When hon. gentlemen went out of power in 1930 the interest owing to the public was exactly $51,000,000. In the following year, due to the expenditures they made, it was $55,000,000, nearly $56,000,000. So between the time they came into power and the time they went out of power the interest owing to the bondholders of the Canadian National Railways was increased by over $20,000,000 for which hon. gentlemen opposite were entirely responsible due to the heavy capital expenditures which they made. The funded debt was increased by $461,000,000 and the interest charges by over $20,000,000.

But that is not all, because there was the government debt as well. The interest owing to the government in 1921 was $20,000,000, and that had increased in the year hon. gentlemen opposite went out of power to $32,000,000. If you add the two increases together it means increased interest charges during the regime of hon. gentlemen opposite of $32,000,000. It is true that so far as the interest due to the government of $12,000,000 is concerned it was not paid, and probably never will be, but those figures show the great increases which my hon. friends opposite made in capital expenditures.

There was another boast which the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth brought up last year and again this year about the national railways. He said that during the years the Liberals were in power the railways had earned an average of $24,000,000 above operating expenses. I will admit that that is correct. But my hon. friend always forgets the other half of that story as well, and that is that though the railways earned an average of $24,000,000 above operating expenses they were still down, at the end of the nine years my hon. friends opposite were in power, $140,000,000 on interest account to the bondholders. In other words, in those nine years the railways were short of paying interest by $140,000,000. I mention this because the facts should be kept straight. I do not think that half truths of that sort should go out to confuse the people of this country.

My hon. friend used a phrase that has been used very often in this house and elsewhere. He said that the Canadian National Railways were a "conglomeration of junk railways" when taken over.

Mr. HOWARD: Hear, hear.

Mr. MANION: And my hon. friend from Sherbrooke says hear, hear.

Mr. HOWARD: When taken over.

Mr. MANION: I will put up against the hon. gentlemen a gentleman whom they praised very highly and whom they boasted of having brought to this country, and that is Sir Henry Thornton. He was appointed in October, 1922, and after he had made an inspection with the boards of directors of the Canadian National Railways of the roads he said in his report of 1923:

> On behalf of the board I would like to state that after inspection—

Get that—after inspection:

> —of the main arteries of the system we find that the three groups of lines, until recently the Canadian National Railways, entered the consolidation in excellent physical condition and operating at a high mark of efficiency as regards actual performance or movement of traffic and other factors controllable by management.
> On some of the older sections there are still improvements that should be undertaken but in the main the lines are modern in character and were built or have been brought up to standards which are ahead of actual traffic requirements, except under stress of seasonal movements.

I will leave that statement without discussing it any further. My hon. friend quoted me as having made this statement at Ingersoll—that the mess which this country got into in the early years of this century, in consequence of the building of too many railways—two other transcontinental lines where one would have sufficed—must be ascribed to both the old parties; he said that I declared at Ingersoll that probably the old parties deserved blame to the extent of fifty-fifty. I do not withdraw that statement. I think that probably the whole populace of Canada in the early days of the century were insanely optimistic, and though the building of railways on this scale really started under the Liberals—in 1904 when the Transcontinental was under discussion, and again in 1908 when there was further talk about the other transcontinental—I say that everyone must share in the responsibility. I accept the statement which I am supposed to have made at Ingersoll; I do not remember having made it, but I neither withdraw nor deny it. At the moment however I am not dealing with the past history of the railway problem in Canada. What I complain about is this, that during the time when my hon. friends opposite had these railways in trust for the people of Canada, expenditures were made which I submit should not have been undertaken, and that is what I criticize. In the pre-election year, 1929, I pointed out that they had spent money, or perhaps had forced the Canadian National Railways to spend money to a scandalous degree. They either permitted or forced the Canadian National to spend money on this scale—I do not know which term to use, though I am sure that no sane railway men would have allowed themselves willingly to spend as was done in 1929. At any rate, my hon. friends, if they did not force the railways, allowed the management of the Canadian National Railway System in 1929, one year before the election, to add to the debt of this country the huge sum of anywhere from $200,000,000 to $250,000,000 to be spent on hotels, terminals, passenger ships, which are rotting at the docks, branch lines and purchases of all kinds of old lines which have never paid their way. They added $10,000,000 a year to the annual interest payments of the Canadian National Railways. I do not suggest that all this sum, between $200,000,000 and $250,000,000, was wasted, but I do contend that very much of it was. I say that most of it was of no use to the Canadian National Railways, and it did not serve any purpose so far as the employees themselves were concerned. It merely added annual charges to the Canadian National Railways, and in respect of a branch of service which has always been losing money—that is, the passenger services. The passenger services of the Canadian National Railways lost, in the year 1926, the huge sum, on operating, of $4,000,000, and every year after that until 1931, a period of five years, the losses have mounted up in gradual progression until they reached in 1931 the sum of $24,000,000 on account of operating. And yet it was upon these passenger services—steamships, Montreal terminus, hotels, radio and things of that sort—it was upon these services, a losing branch of the system, that these huge sums were spent. Then I will refer to one sentence in the report of the royal commission on railways. They contrasted the construction costs of branch lines built by the Canadian Pacific Railway and by the Canadian National Railways in the years between 1923 and 1931 inclusive, because those were the years of new management and of consolidation of the railways, and they found that the Canadian National had a total excess cost of over $30,000,000 on 1,895 miles of construction. That was during my hon. friends' regime, and what I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, is this. They were the trustees of the Canadian people with respect to these railways; they were in charge of the system for the people of Canada, and they should have maintained a greater control over the management than they did. They should have insisted upon a board of directors who would not be merely rubber stamps; they should have seen to it that the management prevented such a condition of affairs from developing.

Well, we cleaned up that mess, and I say now to the credit of the Canadian National Railways that we have to-day an efficient and economically managed railway system. Some of the figures in regard to gross earnings will prove this statement, because if we can get back to $250,000,000—and in the last ten or fifteen years we have had around $250,000,000 gross earnings in about half of them—the railways would be very close to the position where they would pay interest on their debt to the public. At any rate, the system would be so close to that position that the people of Canada could easily absorb the balance and take care of it as an investment on behalf of the development of the country generally.

But in spite of the results which we have obtained in economical and efficient management of the Canadian National Railways, there are still insidious rumours abroad, a whispering compaign against this government, to the effect that we are out for amalgamation. There are stories of unfair treatment of the Canadian National Railways on our part; there are tales of our favouring the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is a whispering campaign of the most vicious sort. I brand it to-day as a whispering campaign of the most vicious sort, and I will give proof for that statement, because these rumours reach me as Minister of Railways. They come from all parts of the country. For example, on March 22, five days ago, a Colonel Streight, a Liberal candidate in one of the Toronto constituencies, is reported as follows in the Toronto Star:

> Score rail merger at Liberal meet.
> If Bennett plans allowed 75,000 men will be jobless.
>
> Denouncing any merger of Canada's railways, Colonel J. E. L. Streight, Liberal standard-bearer in West York federal riding, last night promised the Humbercrest and South Runnymede Liberal Association a Liberal government would not permit such an amalgamation.
> Plans are already being made by the Bennett government to complete the merger,—

May I say that this is just a plain, ordinary, everyday falsehood.

> —if returned to power, he told his audience, largely composed of railwaymen, and declared if such a move is permitted 75,000 railroad workers will be thrown out of employment. The Canadian Pacific Railway has already been advanced $60,000,000 without interest, he said.

The Canadian Pacific Railway has not been advanced any part of the $60,000,000 by this government. The government guaranteed it, but that is a small matter—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MANION: Well, it is a small matter compared to these vicious charges based on falsehood. This gentleman may be straight in name but he is crooked in his political methods. As the Minister of Public Works points out, we have good security for the guarantee of the $60,000,000.

With respect to these rumours which are afloat against this government, most unfair and vicious rumours of all kinds, let me say that there has been no thought on the part of this government of bringing about amalgamation of the two railways. No one on this side of the house, either in the front lines or in the rear, so far as I know, has come out for the amalgamation of the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway. My right hon. leader (Mr. Bennett) in Winnipeg used a phrase which has since been quoted and which he has never gone back on—Competition ever, amalgamation never. This government is not favourable to amalgamation. In the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific railway bill of 1933 we incorporated clause 27 which forbids amalgamation. Yet certain people—I do not say my hon. friends opposite, because they are too honourable, but some of their friends—continue to spread rumours and tales of this kind, vicious stories not based on the truth. The only man in this house who has come out openly for amalgamation is the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler). He called it unification, but that to my mind is another name for the same thing.

I repeat here, what I said at Brockville and at Smiths Falls, that under present conditions there is no solution for the Canadian railway problem by means of amalgamation. The only possible solution for the railway situation in this country is a revival of world business and world trade, and we have no control over that. I repeat, a country with a population of ten millions cannot control world trade, and to my mind this country cannot continue paying its debts without a revival in world business and world trade. Personally I think world business and trade are going to continue on the upward trend as they have been doing for more than a year past. All the railways on this continent have been hit by the depression. Many railways in the United States have gone into bankruptcy and more of them would have done so if they had not been helped by the United States government. But I repeat there is no cure for the railway question if by cure or solution you mean the payment of all the interest owing to the public through any such idea as unification or amalgamation, and I would point out that a united railway made up of the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National would make a huge monopoly in this country with, say in round figures, 175,000 employees who with their friends and relations would have a voting power of something like 300,000 people, in addition to which there would be the power of a huge system such as that in its purchases and other methods of getting support. I have never said this before, but I say it to-day: To my mind such a huge monopoly as that would be a menace to the political and economic life of this nation; that is my feeling about the matter. It would also bring about political and public pressure so severe, as spoken of in the Duff report, that probably no government could live under it. I do not intend to deal further to-day with the question of amalgamation, but I want it clearly understood that this government is not for amalgamation, has never come out for it, and anybody who makes statements to that effect wilfully tells what is not true. I have tried to make that as clear as I can.

Mr. SANDERSON: When the minister makes such a statement about amalgamation, is he speaking for the government?

Mr. MANION: Yes, of course. I do not make any official statements in a case like this without consideration; I am naturally speaking for the government. In fact I used the term "this government."

Mr. SANDERSON: If the minister will permit me, he is speaking for the government and the Prime Minister?

Mr. MANION: Certainly; the government includes the Prime Minister, and I am speaking for the government and the Prime Minister if the hon. member wants them enumerated separately.

Another matter in regard to the railways which the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth mentioned, was the question of arbitral tribunals. He was most unfair in his statement; he said that there would have been arbitral tribunals set up if we had appointed a chairman of the board of railway commissioners. I make the statement that neither President Beatty of the Canadian Pacific nor Chairman Fullerton of the Canadian National nor anybody else representing them has directly or indirectly ever asked us for an arbitral tribunal. We could appoint a chairman to the board of railway commissioners in just about fifteen minutes, and I say now that we shall do so if either one of them wants an arbitral tribunal. I hope that is clear enough also.

That is another slander that has been going around in some of the Liberal press and repeated by some of the Liberal members. The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth unworthily took it up yesterday and cast it across the floor of the house. There has been no request by either railway for an arbitral tribunal, and the law is that the officers of one or the other must ask for an arbitral tribunal. We have been given no indication direct or indirect that they want one, and I say quite frankly, in my opinion neither one of them does. I do not say that one of them should not, but neither one of them has hinted that it wants an arbitral tribunal. When they want one, all they have to do is to ask for it and they will get it quickly.

I have practically finished with the speech of the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth, but I wish to spend the remaining portion of my speech—and I hope I am getting toward the end of it, but I have had quite a few interruptions which have delayed me—in reviewing the record of this government. It is so well worth spending time on that I want to tell the country something about it. This government went through four years of economic storm such as no previous government of this country ever went through, and I may add that our accomplishments did not wait, as has been implied by some of my hon. friends in their speeches, on the radio addresses of the Prime Minister in January. For five years courageous and aggressive administration has been carried on in this dominion by this government, and I intend to tabulate in just a sentence or two for each, the couple of dozen outstanding achievements of this government in the last five years:

1. We spent about $175,000,000 for relief, public works, assisting the provinces, the municipalities, the trans-Canada highway and the relief camps.

2. We looked after 300,000 people and we are now looking after something like 150,000 in the drought areas in Saskatchewan. Further, an investigation has been instituted by the Department of Agriculture into that whole question.

Mr. BOUCHARD: It takes more money than brains.

Mr. MANION: Well, I am quite sure the hon. gentleman will have to have a lot of money because he has not much of the other. I have sat in the house with the hon. gentleman for quite a few years. He is a professor in one of the Quebec colleges and I have never heard him do more than utter some little insignificant interjections in this house. He seems to have a habit of interjecting rather insulting little remarks when I am on my feet and I just thought the next time he did so, I would tell him about it.

3. We preserved the credit of the dominion, the provinces and the railways. There is not one of the four western provinces that to-day would not have had to repudiate its debts, had it not been for this dominion government.

4. We put into effect the empire trade agreements with which I have dealt, and we also effected trade agreements with France, Poland, Germany, Austria and Brazil.

5. Then there was the wheat bonus and stabilization.

6. The establishment of the central bank.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Oh, oh!

Mr. MANION: I do not know what the hon. member for Vancouver Centre is laughing at. Foolish people may laugh at these things, but they cannot laugh them away. These are actual accomplishments, not something just put in books or in platforms. We established a central bank which my hon. friends opposite say they were always in favour of.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Not that kind.

Mr. MANION: I continue:

7. We had passed the Natural Products Marketing Act, and it is in effect.

8. We put on the statute books the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act which is saving and will save thousands of the farmers of this country from foreclosures of mortgages.

9. We amended the Farm Loan Act and improved it.

10. We lowered the interest rates in this country. In all the nine years my hon. friends opposite were in power, interest rates remained the same.

Some hon. MEMBERS: They went up.

Mr. MANION: All right; some hon. members say that the rates went up. I will take their word for that; I do not remember about it. At any rate interest rates did not go down and we have brought them down. The interest rate in savings banks was lowered to two per cent and other interest rates followed suit.

11. We established a Canadian tourist bureau which every member in the house supported and praised.

Then there were the five pieces of legislation this year:

12. Unemployment insurance.

13. Eight hour day.

14. Six day week.

15. Minimum wage.

16. The economic council.

Out of twenty-four achievements by this government which I am mentioning here, there are fifteen which are all in accordance with progress and reform.

17. There is the setting up of the price spreads commission and there will be legislation submitted to the house when that commission makes its report.

18. Then there were loan conversions which the minister mentioned in the house of $1,100,000,000, bringing about a saving to the dominion by way of interest amounting to about $14,500,000.

19. There was a reversal of trade balances from $100,000,000 against us to $150,000,000 in our favour.

Finally there were the following in this budget:

20. An increase in the income tax on unearned incomes, that is on incomes from dividends and so forth. That is a redistribution of wealth.

21. There was the mines tax which was improved and raised, not lowered as has been suggested, and incidentally mining production is at a greater height than ever before.

22. A tax on gifts of any proportion has been imposed. That is another redistribution of wealth. These last three redistribute wealth and impose taxes on those best able to bear them.

Veritably this is a poor man's budget, one which taxes those who have and eliminates so far as possible in a time like this the taxes on the poor.

23. Then we cleaned up the railway mess with which question I have dealt sufficiently this afternoon.

24. Lastly we have under advisement the United States negotiation regarding a trade treaty.

Mr. HANBURY: "Advisement" is good.

Mr. MANION: It is a good deal more than the hon. gentleman did anyway. In that regard by the way, I have something here to show the type of campaign that is being carried on. I do not know whether the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Campbell) is in his seat, but on March 4 he made a speech regarding reciprocity and it is reported in the Toronto Globe of the same day. The report says:

Mr. Campbell saw marked evidence on the part of the Bennett government in its reciprocity proposals with the United States.

I do not understand that sentence.

During his by-election campaign last summer Mr. Campbell said he was taken severely to task by Hon. Doctor Manion for stating that he was in favour of reciprocal relations with the United States.

And he goes on:

Hon. H. H. Stevens, he said, had made a second trip into the riding in order to advise the electors not to support Campbell because he favoured reciprocity.

Well, I cannot speak for Mr. Stevens—he can speak for himself—at the same time I am sure he took no such attitude, and I know I did not. I never opposed reciprocity, even in 1911, so when the hon. gentleman says that I talked in his riding against reciprocity he just states what is not true. I do not accuse him of saying it intentionally, but he said it, and I say it is not true.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I think the hon. gentleman in his excitement—

Mr. MANION: Let the hon. gentleman ask a question or make a statement, not a speech.

Mr. CAMPBELL: The hon. gentleman and I met in joint debate at the nomination meeting in the by-election—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MANION: Let the hon. gentleman contradict me if he likes; at present I have a few minutes more. I make the statement here and now that I did not in any shape or form criticize him or anyone else for attempting to enter into reciprocity arrangements with the United States. I say further that in that same joint meeting to which he refers either he or the hon. member for Northumberland, Ontario, (Mr. Fraser), I forget which, made this statement on the platform, that President Roosevelt of the United States had said publicly that he would not deal with this government in regard to trade matters. I do not remember which one of them it was, but one of them said it, and he can deal with it when his turn comes. That is the type of campaign that is carried on against this government, based upon vilification, innuendo, abuse of the Prime Minister, a whispering campaign of the ugliest kind. I intend to correct it when the correction should be made.

I have dealt with our record to some extent. I say that we have given five years of progress and reform such as Canada has never had in its history. One hon. member of the third party in the southeast corner of this house met me at the Royal York hotel in Toronto, when I was up there speaking for my hon. friend the member for Toronto East (Mr. Church) in his by-election campaign. This member said: "Manion, your government has given in the last session more progressive legislation than was ever brought in by any government in this country since confederation"

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MANION: I do not get the joke. The joke is on hon. gentlemen opposite, but they are getting into a habit, when they cannot talk of something unconstitutional, of laughing uproariously—the loud laugh that speaks the vacant mind, I suppose. Not long ago the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth called this progressive legislation tub-thumping, when the Prime Minister was speaking about improvement of the capitalistic system.

The Liberals have been opposed to everything that we have brought in of a progressive nature; they have either ridiculed it or opposed it as unconstitutional. Yet this session, although they ridicule and oppose it in argument, they always vote for it. The Liberal party in this house have been and are the party of reaction, the party of laissez-faire, the party of stand-patism, if they have any policy at all. No one has been able to see any sign of a policy as far as we can learn, no one has stated a policy for them except when my hon. and eloquent friend the member for Vancouver Centre

(Mr. Mackenzie) gets up and waves his arms and tells us a few things. They claim they supported every one of these pieces of legislation when they were out of power; they put them in a book or in the 1919 platform. But no one reads the book, and the platform is forgotten even by them. They have had two good chances in recent months to state what they stand for, but no one knows it. I challenge them to tell the people what they stand for, if they stand for anything but reaction.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): They told it in the by-elections.

Mr. MANION: They held a large conference last November, and all we got was a speech on peace from the leader of the opposition. The other evening they gave the right hon. leader of the opposition a very fine dinner, and I congratulate both him and them on it. After all, the right hon. gentleman has given many years of service to his country, and it is only right that democracy should honour its leaders. I often disagree with the right hon. gentleman both in the house and out, but I respect him because I believe he sincerely endeavours to do what he believes best for his country; and I may add that it is the sincerest wish of my heart that his health may continue good so that he may continue for many years as leader of the opposition. He is sure of four more years anyway; I can vouch for that.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Give us a chance.

Mr. MANION: You will get a chance, and when you get it you will be pretty sick. They have offered no policy and as far as we know they have no policy except do-nothing. The people of this country know that they have a do-nothing policy, and when the time comes they will vote accordingly. We have been going through a world crisis for four years but apparently the Liberals in this house do not know it. In 1930 before they went out of office we spoke to them about the unemployment which was beginning then—and has increased since, I will say it so that they do not have to interject—due to world conditions, but their leaders took the attitude that there was no unemployment in this country. Then when the world crisis took place between 1929 and 1933 they have never admitted there was such a crisis. Now, when the world is going ahead in a progressive manner as it never did before, they do not see it.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MANION: I said the world, I did not say Canada particularly—the whole world including Canada. We have suffered two great crises—probably I should say the world—in the last fifteen years; from 1914 to 1918, the war, and, rather strangely, four years again, the economic crisis, the depression, from 1929 to 1933. The latter has been almost as tragic to the world in general as was the war, except in our case we lost 60,000 of our young men who in the springtime of youth gave their lives for their country. They form a lost generation. Men from different parts of the country who would have been prominent in this house are among that lost generation, men who would probably be here instead of some of us had they come back. They were leaders at the front; they would have been leaders here. I have never forgotten the beautiful lines on the monument to the fallen in Glengarry county, which to my mind are among the finest words ever written about those who gave their lives in the war:

> They shall not grow old as we who are left grow old;
> Age shall not weary them nor the years condemn—

Those are the first two lines; I think I could remember the rest, but in any event they are a noble expression of our feelings. Yet I sometimes think that some of the men who stayed over there escaped tragedy which they might have encountered had they come back. But, sir, I want to point out that the tragedy from 1929 to 1933, was also a terrible trial to the young men throughout the world. I also want to point out that during the war there was a Liberal opposition in this house. My hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) and a number of hon. gentlemen opposite were members of the opposition at that time. But that Liberal opposition cooperated and assisted in every way. I was in the house in 1918, the last year of the war, and during that time the opposition assisted in every possible way. I do not understand why that is not the case to-day with hon. gentlemen like the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth, who had a magnificent record at the front, and I pay him all homage for that splendid record. At the front it was cooperation, assistance, playing the game and general leadership that were needed, and the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth exhibited all these to a marked degree together with my hon. friend from Quebec South (Mr. Power) and a number of other hon. members.

Mr. POWER: What was it I did?

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend may deny it if he cares to do so, but I should be afraid to deny it. However, these hon. gentlemen showed a willingness to cooperate and play the game over there, and I do not understand why they do not show a greater desire to play the game in times like these with a government that has had its own problems in a crisis such as that through which we have passed. I suppose it was too much to expect that the Liberal party would step right in and assist us to pilot the ship of state through the turbulent waters of the last few years, but I do submit that they ought to stop endeavouring to destroy the steering gear or blow holes in the bottom of the ship. That is what they have been doing. In some countries there is a crime called sabotage; workmen endeavour to destroy or cripple the plant and machinery of the institution in which they are employed. In Russia they shoot people for that sort of thing. But for five years in this house the Liberal party have been carrying on political sabotage against their own country. When they, and the rest of us, are old and grey, sir, if we are living, and a new generation has grown up which does not remember all the details of these tragic times, and when some of these young people ask my hon. friends opposite what they did in this parliament to help out during this economic crisis, if they tell the truth there is only one statement they can make, and that is to say, "We sat on the side lines and squawked."

Sir, Canada is on the march to better things. It will never be the same again, irrespective of the reactionary attitude of my hon. friends opposite or of any attitude on our part. Canada and the world are on the march. There is a great progressive movement under way but unfortunately our hon. friends opposite do not even recognize it. I admit with all humility that our program has been far from perfect, but it has been a program of progress and reform. Capitalism needs correction; no one realizes that more than I do. Those capitalists who do not realize it are short sighted; indeed they are blind. Our legislation, such as it is and with all its imperfections—and I admit them—is for the purpose of correcting the evils of capitalism. There are business men, I admit, who take the attitude that we should not be bringing in such legislation. Some hon. members here have defended that attitude of the business men, and I do not question their right to do so. But I think they are also blind, sir, because to my mind if those of us who believe in democracy and those of us who believe in the capitalist system, as I do, do not correct these evils from within, then the day will come when these evils will be corrected in an appalling manner from without. Only one country has given up capitalism; that is Russia, and to my mind Russia has been a failure. Last year that country allowed five or six million people to starve, and over there if a man has an opinion of his own it is only too common for him to be sent off to Siberia or put up against a wall and shot. Therefore I submit that we must live under democratic capitalism if we are to go ahead. Capitalism is far from perfect, but it deserves much credit. It has been going on now for 150 or 200 years and during that time the population of the world, perhaps particularly in industrial countries, has been increasing by leaps and bounds. By a large, and in a general way, that population has been getting more comfort, more advantages in regard to health, better education and greater luxury than they would have known otherwise, and indeed than many of the medieval monarchs knew. It is true that some have been in want, but I do not think even those who have been in want—certainly in our own country where they have not been allowed to starve—would have willingly given up the adventure of life which they have experienced. They have had that adventure, and I do not think any individual would prefer to have missed the adventure, even though they have been through the trying times through which they have passed. I agree with Shakespeare, as I think we all do, when he says:

> The weariest and most loathed worldly life
> That age, ache, penury and imprisonment
> Can lay on nature is a paradise
> To what we fear of death.

So I say that at any rate, even those who have been in want have had the adventure of life. When days brighten, when business comes back throughout the world as it is coming back, once more they will get their chance. Mankind is groping for better things. Those of us who call ourselves leaders or are attempting to lead, my hon. friends opposite and those on this side as well, are groping for some remedy for the conditions with which we have been faced. We realize that there must be a fairer distribution of the wealth of the world. We realize that the problem of production has been solved, but that the fruits of that production must be more evenly distributed. We have not succeeded as yet. No country in the world—we are no exception—has succeeded in solving that problem of distribution. The young men of our country, as of other countries, must be given a chance to work; they must have an opportunity to attain their ambitions. They must be given, in simple language, a fair deal.

I say, sir, that the policies of this government and the statutes introduced by this government, imperfect though they may be, all are in line with that idea. The Conservative party in Canada is leading the Canadian people forward and upward in a progressive way, whereas hon. gentlemen opposite have been merely floating on the tide of discontent resulting from the unrest throughout the world, hoping to float back into power on that tide. But the people of this country are not blind; they see through the attitude of hon. gentlemen opposite, and when the time comes the people will treat them accordingly. Sir, Canada is leading the world out. All the indices, whether in regard to trade manufacturing, railway revenues, production, commodity prices or anything else, show that.

I see there is no time for another speaker to follow me before six, but I am practically finished—and I have lost the final page of my notes. Probably my hon. friends will say that is not important. For a moment or two I am going to quote some United States commentators who have expressed opinions upon Canada's condition. Before doing that, however, I should like to quote just the heading of the last daily bulletin issued by the bureau of statistics, dated March 22, just five days ago:

> Weekly review of economic statistics. The business index was higher in February than in any other month for about four years.

Then I should like to quote from the Ottawa Morning Journal of November 15, 1934:

> Toronto, November 14.—Officials of the Babson statistical organization at a "clients' conference" here to-day declared Canada had made the greatest recovery from the depression of any country.

Then here is a quotation from the business bulletin of the Cleveland Trust Company dated November 15. I will quote just the last paragraph:

> The Canadian record in the reemployment of industrial workers is better than ours, although the difference is not so striking as is that relating to production. In September Canadian employment in industry was 82 per cent as great as it was in 1929, while in the United States it was only 70 per cent as great as the 1929 average. It is particularly noteworthy that in the first nine months of this year both industrial production and employment have made large net gains in Canada, and small net losses in the United States.

That is the view, sir, of men who look at us from the outside. I have mentioned Isaac Marcosson, who wrote an article which appeared not long ago in the Saturday Evening Post, and which I think was read by many of us, entitled North of the NRA. He loudly praised the work of this country and of the Canadian people. Sir, it is something of which we may well be proud. I submit that when the time comes in the near future, within the next six months, that the people of Canada are given the opportunity to vote upon the activities and policies of this government, they will support it much more emphatically than they did in 1930. I know hon. members opposite boast that they want an election. I remember well that they boasted to the same extent about victory in 1930, and they came back sitting to your left, Mr. Speaker. They will come back to your left again in 1935, just as surely as they are to your left to-day.

In closing may I say there have been two amendments, one offered by the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth which is merely a negative of the whole budget resolution, and the other is an amendment by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) on behalf of the third party and which amendment at the present time I do not intend to discuss. The government cannot accept either amendment. Both involve a want of confidence in the government, and for that reason the government cannot and does not intend to accept them. I now urge the appeal, as I have in the past, that in the future hon. members opposite, even at this late stage of the session, give us more of that cooperation about which they boast and less of the criticism in which they so frequently indulge.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, would you call it six o'clock? I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

PRIVILEGE—MR. BROWN

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. This matter may not seem very important to many hon. members, but may I observe that while speaking the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) suggested I might provide a few spicy stories. I did not wish to interrupt him when he was speaking, but I believe at this time I should bring the matter to the attention of the house. Only a few days ago I heard a man describe as spicy reading the evidence coming from the Senate divorce committee. I hope the minister did not mean to imply that I was in the habit of telling stories spicy in that sense of the word. I should like him to say—and I am sure he will—that such an implication would not be warranted.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, I very gladly assure the hon. member that I was not serious so far as that observation was concerned. I believe I made that quite clear.

Mr. HANBURY: And during the whole speech.

Mr. MANION: I was just joking with my hon. friend, and the loud laughter which greeted my remarks, even from his own colleagues, should have indicated to him the good humour in which the observation was made.

Mr. BROWN: But some people would be glad to take it seriously.

Mr. HANBURY: We took the whole speech that way.

At six o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, March 28, 1935

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS COMMITTEE

First report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. Stinson.

PRIVATE BILL

WAPITI INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. W. G. WEIR (Macdonald) moved:

That the petition of the Wapiti Insurance Company of Wawanesa, Manitoba, presented on the 27th instant, praying for an extension of time in which to apply for a licence to operate, together with the report of the clerk of petitions thereon, be referred to the standing committee on standing orders for the purpose of considering the suspension of standing orders 92 and 93 (3) (a) and (c) in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

COMPLAINT OF INADEQUACY IN NUMBER OF REPORTS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): I would like to direct the attention of the committee on the British North America Act to the fact that there seems to be an inadequacy in the number of reports printed. I have received only one set and yesterday when I had occasion to request a second set, I was unable to secure it, being informed by Mr. Doyle, secretary of that committee, that the number available is exhausted; that is, they have all been allocated. I suggest that this matter is of sufficient importance to justify the committee considering printing additional copies.

[Mr. Brown.]

2. To what amount are such federal government bonds which are redeemable on call payable (1) in Canada; (2) in England; (3) in the United States?

Mr. RHODES: Return tabled herewith.

PRIVILEGE—MR. GORDON

PAYMENTS FOR RELIEF BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TO PROVINCE OF ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, the Toronto Globe of the 23rd instant carries a report of discussions in the provincial legislature of Ontario on the 22nd instant.

The article to which I want to draw attention appears under the caption:

No Ottawa help for relief works—Ontario has not received "one red cent" from federal government, Croll tells legislature.

The article commences with a quotation from Mr. Croll's speech as follows:

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Bennett's relief policy is not a five cent piece—it's not a darn cent.

Now let us examine the facts.

Mr. CASGRAIN: You have to take it.

Mr. GORDON: Let us see. First in regard to direct relief expenditure prior to August 1, 1934, there was paid by the federal government to the province of Ontario $5,227,143.98.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I submit this is not a question of privilege, it is an argument. If the minister is allowed to do that every member will have the same privilege.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Why do you want to shut it off?

Mr. CASGRAIN: Take your medicine.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the hon. minister has a right to give a brief statement of the facts.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I shall have the same latitude?

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) will get exactly the same treatment as any other hon. member.

Mr. GORDON: Secondly, in respect of grants in aid, from August 1, 1934, to January 31, 1935, the federal government paid to the province of Ontario the sum of $4,250,000.

In respect of relief land settlement the federal government paid the sum of $32,316.41, and in respect of relief works, under the 1933 act payments were made amounting to $255,271.58 and for relief works in the year 1934, $2,248,770.20, making a total for relief works of $2,504,041.78, and a grand total for direct relief, grants in aid and relief works paid to the province of Ontario since the present Ontario government took office of $12,013,502.17.

PRINTING OF ELECTORAL LISTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I think I saw the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) take a little slip from his vest pocket.

[Mr. Gordon.]

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): The inquiry I assume is in regard to the electoral lists. The electoral lists for the 243 electoral districts comprising 5,808,684 qualified electors have been all set up in type at the government printing bureau except the lists for two polling divisions in the electoral district of Skeena which have not been received. I have not yet been able to ascertain whether these polling divisions are still in existence or not.

The electoral lists for 214 electoral districts have been printed, bound and delivered to the franchise commissioner for distribution, and distribution began, or instructions were given for distribution a week ago to-day. Lists for the 29 other electoral districts are already in type, a large number have been printed and they are at present being bound, and I trust they will be completely bound and ready for distribution during the present week.

That hon. members may appreciate the enormous amount of work involved, I may say that the type alone used in the printing of these lists, which is kept standing, amounts to 350 tons, and the paper required is a very large quantity indeed. This additional work has been performed by the printing bureau while maintaining its ordinary services for government departments and for this parliament. I think that the officials and employees of the printing bureau, both men and women, have shown a degree of interest, speed and efficiency which is entirely commendable. There are no other two or three printing establishments in the Dominion of Canada combined which could have carried through this work in the same time.

Mr. DUFF: When are you going to have the election?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Might I ask the Secretary of State how he proposes to find out whether those two missing polling subdivisions are in existence?

Mr. CAHAN: I think some Indian guides should be sent out to inquire.

Mr. McINTOSH: I think the hon. member in that riding is safe anyway.

SUPPLY

RAILWAYS AND CANALS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Morand in the chair.

Maritime Freight Rates Act—Additional amount, in excess of the sum of $1,440,000 already appropriated, required to provide for the payment from time to time during the fiscal year 1934-35 to the Canadian National Railway Company of the difference (estimated by the auditors of the said company and certified by the said auditors to the Minister of Railways and Canals as and when required by the said minister), occurring on account of the application of the Maritime Freight Rates Act, between the tariff tolls and the normal tolls (upon the same basis as set out in section 9 of the said act with respect to companies therein referred to) on all traffic moved during the year 1934, under the tariffs approved, on the eastern lines (as referred to in section 1 of the said act) of the Canadian National Railways, $338,239.21.

Mr. VENIOT: I should like to discuss this item.

Mr. RHODES: The Minister of Railways is absent to-day, but my hon. friend will appreciate that there are other railway items standing on which he can discuss any matter he so desires.

Mr. VENIOT: Very well.

Item agreed to.

Amount required to provide for payment to the Canadian National Railway Company of the net income deficit including profit and loss, incurred by the system during the year 1934, as certified to by the auditors in the annual report of the company for the year 1934, but exclusive of all non-cash items, including interest on dominion government advances, as further certified to by the auditors and approved by the Minister of Railways and Canals; this payment to be applied in reduction of accountable advances made to the company from the consolidated revenue fund under authority of the Canadian National Railways Financing Act, 1934:

Canadian National Railways, excluding eastern lines, $42,589,824.96.

Eastern lines, excluding Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals, $5,434,133.74.

Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals, $383,942.

Mr. EULER: May I ask the minister whether the department is to follow the practice adopted for the last two years, I think, of charging the Canadian National Railway deficits directly against the general account rather than against the national railways account?

Mr. RHODES: Yes, my hon. friend is quite right; we are pursuing the same practice with respect to this vote as we followed last year. We are merely voting now that sum which was included in the Canadian National bill, which was passed upon also by the railway committee. We are merely voting the amount required now, and it will be charged up to the general fund.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If no inconvenience would be caused anyone connected with the Canadian National system I submit that this item might well stand, involving as it does this large amount, until the Minister of Railways is here and a discussion can take place on the whole question of the Canadian National system.

Mr. RHODES: May I point out, Mr. Chairman, that there are other items in the main estimates which would permit a wide discussion as far as railway matters are concerned. This, of course, is a matter for the committee to determine, but unless we pass these supplementary estimates for this year and put through the bill covering them the votes will not be of any benefit to those to whom the money is supposed to go. Under the ordinary practice we put through the supplementaries for this year and then pass a bill based upon them. The supplementaries for next year will follow in the course of a few days or weeks as the case may be.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Then if it is understood that the widest possible scope will be afforded in connection with the other items I have no further objection.

Mr. RHODES: Certainly. This is merely to enable the accounts to be paid within this year, because my hon. friend will appreciate that the fiscal year ends March 31.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Annuities Act — further amount required, $50,000.

Mr. POULIOT: I should like to point out that there are many sections of the Annuities Act which are in conflict with the unemployment insurance bill. I am sorry the Minister of Labour is not here, because he might be able to give us some light on the matter.

Mr. RHODES: I hope my hon. friend from Témiscouata will be content if he has full freedom of discussion on another item which appears in the main estimates. I have not the details before me, but as I understand it this sum is required for expenses in view of the circumstance that larger numbers of annuities are being taken out, so this sum is required to make good that increased expenditure within this present fiscal year.

Mr. POULIOT: Certainly I will agree to the request of the Minister of Finance, but I should like to direct another question to him. I should like to ask when the returns in connection with taxation will be tabled. That is a different matter, but I should be glad to have the information.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend will appreciate that I have no knowledge of the matter at the moment, but I shall be glad to make inquiries.

Item agreed to.

PUBLIC PRINTING AND STATIONERY

Printing, binding, etc., the annual statutes—further amount required, $10,713.64.

Mr. BOUCHARD: Under this item may I ask the minister if the speeches broadcast by the Prime Minister last January were printed and distributed to members of the house? By the answers given me to-day I gather that the translations of a number of addresses broadcast by the Prime Minister in January of this year were made by members of the staff of the bureau for translations, debates division. In reply to my second question, as to who gave the instructions, I am informed that the copy for these addresses was received by the bureau for translations in the usual course from the office of the Prime Minister, that being so should not any member of this house be entitled to obtain those speeches in both English and French, since they are considered official documents? Personally I have always considered them political propaganda.

Mr. CAHAN: If the hon. gentleman's question was answered in that way, then those translations were made by the bureau for translations. I am not the collector of accounts, but I assume that if it was a personal matter the Prime Minister would be billed for the work. This item covers printing of statutes at the printing bureau. I have no idea as to whether or not any printing to which my hon. friend refers was done at the bureau; I cannot follow every item. I do know, however, that on two occasions—as hon. members will have noticed in the reports of the printing bureau—when I have sent matter to the bureau to be printed, the printing bureau always sends me a bill and I pay for that printing at the end of the month if it is not deemed to be official work or closely related to the official work of my department. This item simply covers the printing of the annual statutes. Last year the statutes were very voluminous, but the receipts from the sale of those statutes go into the treasury. I must have a vote to take care of the extra printing that was done last year.

Mr. POULIOT: I do not object to this vote, but I should like to ask the minister whether, since the typesetting of the voters' lists was started, any printing has had to be done outside the bureau in connection with official publications.

Mr. CAHAN: None at all.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): Could the minister give us any idea as to what amount comes to the treasury through the sale of the statutes?

[Mr. Rhodes.]

Mr. CAHAN: I could ascertain that amount, because I believe it appears in the annual return, if my memory is correct. Except for the so-called official list and those which go to several of the universities of which a list has been established over a long series of years, the statutes are paid for as they are distributed, and as payments are made the cheques go into the consolidated revenue fund from day to day.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Following the answer given to the hon. member for Kamouraska do I understand hon. members of the house may avail themselves of the services of the bureau for translations? If hon. members are willing to pay for the translations, may they ask the translators to do the work, as it was done for the Prime Minister?

Mr. CAHAN: As a matter of fact I had no personal knowledge that that translation work had been done. I do not follow the day to day work of the translation bureau, but if that bureau receives work from any department of the government it is not for the superintendent to decide as to whether or not it is personal or official. Therefore the superintendent did exactly what he should have done under the circumstances; he put through the translation. I think possibly if the right hon. leader of the opposition or the former Minister of Justice had some text which either of them wished to have translated, and if there were time to do it, undoubtedly the translation bureau would do it for him. If it appeared that the work was of a personal nature I am sure the comptroller of the treasury would see that compensation was paid for the work.

Mr. DUFF: It seems to me the hon. member for Kamouraska has made a serious allegation. He has stated a private speech made by a private citizen of Canada was afterwards sent to the bureau for translations, and that this country paid for the work. Does the Secretary of State mean to say that if I make a speech in English at Port Felix, Harbour au Bouche, or some other point, I may send that speech to Ottawa, to the department where the translation is done, and have it translated by the public translators? It seems to me that is a rather strange way to do the business of the country. My understanding is that the public bureau for translations paid for by the taxpayers, is to be used only in connection with public documents. Surely the Secretary of State does not mean to say that any private member could go out and get off a lot of bedtime stories or make speeches throughout the country and then send them to a government department to have them translated,—even if such private member were willing to pay for the actual translation? I hope the Secretary of State will investigate the matter and find out whether or not the Prime Minister or any other member of parliament, no matter how meek or little he may be, may take advantage of the bureau for translations or the public printing bureau to have his speeches printed at cost price.

Mr. CAHAN: As a matter of fact any translation that was done by the bureau either in whole or in part of any addresses given by the Prime Minister was performed before any speech was delivered. In the ordinary course the bureau for translations received certain documents from the Prime Minister's office with a request that they be translated. The bureau translated them. The matter was not referred to me nor did it come within my knowledge, but the bureau acts at the request of a public department as they receive work to do from day to day.

Mr. DUFF: The question is as to whether or not the work to which reference is made constituted a governmental document. If the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State or any other minister wished to issue a governmental document to the public it would be all right to have that document printed in English and French by the public printing bureau, or to have it go to the translators to have translations made. I understand the allegation made by the hon. member for Kamouraska is, however, that the Prime Minister was taking advantage of the fact that he was Prime Minister to have a private and political speech made by him in a certain part of this country translated into French at the expense of the people of Canada,—although I will admit he may have been willing to pay for the actual cost of translation.

I wish to say to the Secretary of State the taxpayers are not paying translators who translate into either the French or the English language to translate speeches of private members of parliament made outside of this house. My understanding is that the translators, whether they translate into English or French, have to translate only what happens within the precincts of parliament, and not anything which may arise from a happening in Halifax, Vancouver, Montreal or the Prime Minister's quarters at the Chateau Laurier.

Mr. RHODES: I had no knowldege of the matter raised by the hon. member for Kamouraska, and his having done so brought to me the first intimation that any such question had arisen. I rise for the purpose of saying that the fullest information will be gladly disclosed, and that we will secure complete information. I feel quite certain that as has been the case hitherto, if any printing or translation was done for the Prime Minister he would have arranged in advance to pay for it. There was no printing; it was a question of translation. I have risen to state that the item now under discussion has to do with printing and binding of the statutes, and the moneys required therefor. Those moneys are necessary in the present fiscal year. There will be an item in the supplementary estimates for the next year; this will come down in the course of the next few days, and will provide ample opportunity for complete discussion of this matter. Therefore I hope that under the circumstances hon. members will permit the item to pass on the understanding that full opportunity for discussion will be available when the item comes down, as undoubtedly it will.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Before the minister secures the information may I draw his attention to the answer which was given. The question was asked, "Were the translators paid any extra salary for that additional work?" and the answer was "No." They were paid no extra salary; they have only their usual annual salary. Then the question was asked, "Was that translation work given to the translators as part of their official duty?" And the answer was, "Yes."

Mr. RHODES: This is the first time I have had the matter brought to my attention. The statement is made that no additional salary was paid to the translators by reason of certain work having been done, but it by no means follows that because that statement was made the work was not paid for. So I think it would be unfortunate to have a wrong impression created without first having full knowledge of the facts. I suggest the discussion might take place to greater advantage in connection with an ensuing item at a time when we will have all the facts.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am greatly relieved, because I was wondering how the broadcast we Liberals expect our leader to make at a later date would be translated. I now find the method of doing it.

Mr. POWER: I should like to ask the Secretary of State if it is a fact that any member of parliament may go to the bureau for translations and have newspaper clippings translated for the purpose of preparing his speech? Is that the custom?

Mr. CAHAN: I do not know of any such custom. I shall make inquiries and ascertain the fact. I should think that if any hon. member for the purpose of his speech wished to have a short translation made from English into French or from French into English and asked permission of me to have it done I believe I would see that it was done.

Mr. POWER: Would it be permissible to have translations of clippings for the purpose of having them inserted in party propaganda or electoral literature?

Mr. CAHAN: I think if such a request were made to me I would refuse it.

Mr. POWER: Will the Secretary of State inquire as to the hours the traslators worked on these speeches? My information is that on the very speech which laid down the principle that we must have certain maximum working hours the translators were obliged to work until two or three o'clock in the morning, and at ordinary rates of pay, in order to have the speech ready at the proper time. If that is the case I should like the Secretary of State to inquire into the matter.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Slavery.

Mr. CAHAN: May I say to the hon. member that this item does not include translations, but refers to the public statutes of Canada. These are translated by translators in due course. So far as the hours of labour of the translators are concerned I have made a full report, to the minute, for each day up to the date of the inquiry as to the hours employed for the translation of debates. As to the ordinary documents of the house, they are translated in the usual hours. It is true that for the purpose of procuring the translation of the official Hansard the work is done at night, exactly the same as the printing of both Hansards is done at night.

Mr. POWER: I am not concerned with the printing of Hansard, and it is really out of courtesy to the Secretary of State that I am suggesting these questions now because when the time comes to discuss them on the vote for the translation bureau I propose to question the minister pretty thoroughly as to the time employed by these translators who are doing this work of translating the broadcast speeches.

Mr. CANTLEY: Then why not leave it till that time?

Mr. POWER: Simply out of courtesy to the Secretary of State. I want to warn him so that he may come here prepared to give us all that information, and I am sure the Secretary of State will thank me for doing it.

While I am on my feet, may I ask the Secretary of State whether the communiqué that was distributed all over Canada by the ex-Minister of Trade and Commerce and to the Study Club of the Conservative members of the House of Commons was also translated by the bureau?

Mr. CAHAN: If that question is put on the order paper or stands as a notice I shall make inquiry.

Mr. BOUCHARD: As we were given so many beautiful hopes last year about the translation service, I would ask the hon. Secretary of State if we may have a French copy of the estimates that are now under discussion. I asked for a copy, and the page told me that they were not available.

Mr. CAHAN: I have nothing to do with furnishing French copies of the estimates. When the estimates are laid upon the table they are sent to the translators, I suppose, by the officials of the house unless they have been translated prior to that time.

Mr. POWER: I do not think there are any copies in French of the estimates we are considering, Mr. Chairman, and I do not think we ought to proceed with them without a French copy.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would like to ask two questions. Does the minister regard it as part of the official duties of the translators to translate the speeches that he may make outside the house? That is No. 1. The second question is this: If he does regard it as part of their official duties to translate such speeches, are they entitled to additional remuneration? Or in the event of the minister regarding that as not part of their official duties, are they not then entitled to additional remuneration? And to whom does the privilege apply of having private speeches made outside the house translated by the translation bureau?

Mr. CAHAN: I think, Mr. Chairman, that I have given a full answer to these questions, as the record will show.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, I am most surprised to hear this discussion about the translation from English into French of the right hon. the Prime Minister's speeches. I will tell you why. It is because some time ago the Tory correspondent of a Tory newspaper in Montreal wrote in very plain language that the Prime Minister was bilingual. Now if the Prime Minister is an accomplished bilinguist, that translation by the translators was superfluous. It would seem that the speech must have been prepared by someone else than the Prime Minister, by Mr. Finlayson, Mr. Herridge or someone else. Surely it could not have been prepared by the right hon. the Prime Minister himself for he would have dictated it both in French and in English. I strongly protest against the answer which has been given by the government to my hon. friend from Kamouraska because the government should have answered that the Prime Minister dictates his speeches in English or French according to the occasion. I do not think the government has been respectful to the Prime Minister, and I strongly object to that. The discussion which has taken place is absolutely irrelevant.

Item agreed to.

PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH

War veterans' allowances—further amount required, $20,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): May I ask the Minister of Pensions (Mr. Sutherland) when he expects that the report of the special committee that is considering the question of unemployment among ex-service men will be submitted to parliament, and is it the minister's intention then to submit the report to a special committee of this house?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: That has not yet been considered. As the hon. gentleman knows, the committee has been sitting only about a week, and as soon as I have any idea of the time when they will make their report I shall be very glad to give the information.

Mr. COOTE: There are quite a lot of war veterans' in Canada receiving the war veterans' allowance who are homeless men, and I would ask the minister whether his department would not consider using the old Brant house at Burlington, which I think is government property, and is now vacant. It could be fitted up as a home for these men who are now homeless and in receipt of war veterans' allowance. I think they would be far better off in a home like that where they could be cared for properly, and I do not think it would cost the department any more money. I think the suggestion is certainly worthy of investigation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The idea has some merit undoubtedly, and sooner or later I am of the opinion that some step of that kind will have to be taken for that type of men. As to the particular building which the hon. gentleman suggests I am a little doubtful as to its suitability, and particularly as to whether the building is a good fire risk, and of course every building of that kind must be almost fireproof because old soldiers like to take a smoke at two o'clock in the morning, and there is more risk of fire in consequence. That building was an old summer hotel, and I do not think it would be fit for the purpose.

Mr. COOTE: If that building is not just as fit as the minister thinks it should be, would not the department consider fixing up some building for the purpose? The only reason I suggest that building is that I know it is standing idle and it seems to me it is well located, but it may be that the fire hazard would be too great. The minister says that sooner or later something of this kind will have to be done. It is now more than fifteen years after the war and I think it is time that the department did establish some such home for the veterans. I want to take this opportunity of pressing on the minister that he give the suggestion very serious consideration with a view to providing an item in the estimates for that purpose next year.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: These patients are being looked after to a certain extent by the civic hospital. My own opinion is that the existing hospitals will gradually become institutions of that character. Cases of acute illness will have to be dealt with by the general hospitals under some arrangement. The department is giving a good deal of attention to this matter.

Mr. COOTE: It is true that many of these patients are being cared for by the hospitals. I have in mind one man who has been in Belcher hospital for about six years. I understand that on three different occasions the hospital authorities have threatened to carry him out of the hospital and leave him on the door-step of the rural municipality. I have had to appeal personally to the minister to prevent this being done. There is no hospital in the municipality where this man can be cared for and he should not be in the position of being dependent upon a member of parliament going to the minister to prevent his being turned out of the hospital. Surely this problem could be dealt with in a national way. As a matter of fact Belcher hospital is not the proper place to keep a man of this type. It is located in the noisiest section of Calgary. An old business house was taken over which was located alongside a freight track while Eighth avenue, along which there is a very heavy traffic in street cars, is on the other side. I do not want to hold up the work of the committee except to say that this is a problem which should have been dealt with long ago. I think the department should bring forward proper recommendations to deal with cases of this kind. Six years ago this man was declared to be one hundred per cent disabled, not being able to put on his own clothes. He could not obtain a pension and it was only through my representations to the former Minister of Pensions and National Health that he was admitted to Belcher hospital. I am sure that this case is typical of hundreds of others. This country is well able to take care of these men and I submit that at the next session the department should present some scheme for taking care of them in a better way.

Mr. CAHAN: I have made inquiry and have found that the French translation of these supplementary estimates has been available to members at the distribution office ever since March 20.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): Mr. Chairman, I should like to refer briefly to the Brant military hospital at Burlington. During the last few years this group of buildings has been inspected several times by officials from the department. The buildings are in a very poor state of repair and it would cost probably thousands of dollars to make them habitable. There is one section which is in a fair state of repair but even that has not been used for a number of years. I think these buildings should be looked at to see if they would not be suitable for use. They are located on the shore of lake Ontario amid beautiful surroundings and I think they should be made use of. The Department of Public Works has considered the taking down of the oldest building while certain other buildings in the park have been removed. There are still three or four left, one of which is being used by the watchman. The Department of the Interior has been requested by the people of Halton to take over this park and make it a national park in memory of Chief Brant, whose old residence was located there, the one he used when he was living in that section of Ontario.

Mr. POWER: I am under the impression that all items for the Department of Pensions and National Health have been passed; is that right?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I believe there will be a small supplementary estimate for the coming year. This item is for the current year ending March 31.

[Mr. Coote.]

Mr. POWER: Will the minister undertake to provide an opportunity to discuss matters relating to pensions and national health, particularly those relating to relief for pensioners?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I am glad to give an undertaking that such an opportunity will be provided.

Item agreed to.

TRADE AND COMMERCE

Royal commission on price spreads and mass buying, $75,000.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): What has been spent on this commission up to date?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): There was a specific vote last year of $170,000, all of which has been spent. A sum of $155,000 was provided by governor general's warrants and orders in council, of which $6,674 is still available. A further amount of $80,274 is required for outstanding accounts and estimated expenditures. And this $75,000 additional estimate will cover the entire requirements. I am not sure but that there is some duplication in these amounts and I can only pass on the information I received from the chairman. I shall be glad to get the exact information.

Mr. LAPOINTE: What amount is being paid at the present time to counsel?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The counsel were let go as soon as the evidence was concluded, the only expense now is for clerical assistance, and I understand this is very small.

Mr. POULIOT: The members of the House of Commons who composed this commission are deserving of credit because of the long hours they gave to this work, but I contend that their work is still incomplete. In order to make it complete it would be necessary to have several commissions working for years and years. We will have only part of the story. Not only that, but I complain, for instance—

The CHAIRMAN: I would suggest that a discussion on the report of the price spreads commission is out of order.

Mr. POULIOT: Let me tell the committee why I hesitate to vote this amount of money, $75,000, which is a very considerable sum. I am entitled to do that, I will do so shortly. and my remarks will be to the point. In the packing business, do you know, sir, that there are two sets of ledgers.

The CHAIRMAN: I cannot permit the hon. member to discuss something that is not before the committee and the report is not before us.

Mr. POULIOT: I am not discussing the report nor anything which has come before the commission; I am mentioning matters that have not come before it, and I say that the appropriation should be considerably increased in order that the whole business throughout the country may be investigated. Although $75,000 is a considerable sum, we have only part of the picture.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): May I interrupt? This is an appropriation for a royal commission and any discussion of the report or of the proceedings of a royal commission is out of order.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The hon. member is discussing the mechanism of it and he is quite entitled to do that.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): If it were a committee of the house, I would say that the discussion was in order, but in the case of a royal commission, the matter is different.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Surely the committee is entitled to discuss the method of expenditure of any sums it is voting.

The CHAIRMAN: Provided that the hon. member is discussing the method of expending the money and not the report, he is in order.

Mr. POULIOT: I am not touching on the report. If I were discussing McLean's evidence about the packing business, the matter would be different, but I am not discussing what he has said. I claim that more money should be voted in order that we may have information about their other set of ledgers for their own use in the hog-packing business.

The CHAIRMAN: That is not in order. Surely the hon. member is an old parliamentarian and he knows that is not in order.

Mr. POULIOT: I regret I have to differ with you, sir, but I always bow to the ruling of the chair, and therefore I shall not continue on this point. But may I say on the first point that although the members have done their best while they have been sitting on either the committee or the commission—and it was a very dull proposition to sit there—they have only part of the picture, and to have the whole picture, several commissions should be appointed to sit at the same time and for years in order to present a complete report. Moreover, the evidence is so considerable that men have been employed to assist the members of the royal commission. I can discuss that because part of the salaries of the men who do that work is included in the item. That appropriation would never have come before the house had the profiteers not been protected by tariff walls since 1930.

The CHAIRMAN: Again I must insist that such a discussion is certainly not in order.

Mr. POULIOT: On a point of order I will explain to you, sir, that it is quite legitimate to state the reasons for an appropriation. If you suppress the cause, you suppress the effect. Therefore if you suppress the cause of all that fattening of public exploiters, you suppress the effect, namely, the exploitation of the public by those men, and thus you save money for the people. What I am after is the saving of money, and I repeat that due to present conditions the amount set forth in the appropriation is not sufficient. If however a different policy had been adopted by this government—

The CHAIRMAN: Again that is not in order.

Mr. POULIOT: —we would never have had this appropriation to consider in the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Can the minister advise the committee as to when the report may be expected?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): We have been making very honest efforts to ascertain that fact. Within the past hour the chairman of the commission interviewed me with respect to this appropriation and I asked him the question. The report is now in course of final preparation and it is expected that it will reach me early next week. That is the best information I can give the committee.

Mr. CASGRAIN: When will it be tabled?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not know whether I am supposed to read the report. I understand it will cover about 500 pages of printed matter. If I were to apply myself, I might get through and digest it in a week. Then it has to go to council. Due expedition will be used, I assure the committee, to get the report on the table of the house as soon after we receive it as possible.

Mr. POULIOT: According to a return which has been tabled, part of the cost of that royal commission has been as follows:

Mr. Norman Sommerville.. ..	$ 32,581 96
Mr. W. W. Parry, K.C.. ..	11,742 10
Total cost of auditors..	192,064 44
Total cost of investigators..	30,016 68
Total cost of investigation to March 14, 1934..	354,951 38

This does not include cost of messengers, stationery, printing and other costs of government employees.

This is a good deal of money we have to pay in addition to taxation for the protection of profiteers.

Item agreed to on division.

Miscellaneous—To provide for grants to veterans of the Northwest Mounted Police, who served in the Northwest rebellion of 1885, in lieu of scrip, $300 each, as authorized by the governor in council, $3,000.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): How many veterans remain?

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is assumed that there are a few. From time to time they are turning up in different parts of the country. The original vote was $30,000 and that is exhausted. It is assumed that ten will cover the remaining number of veterans; perhaps there will be only six or seven.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Has the minister finally concluded his investigation and come to a decision about pensioning the few odd mounties?

Mr. GUTHRIE: I have a very elaborate report on the matter and when the estimates come up I shall be glad to discuss it.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous—Loan to the Chicoutimi harbour commissioners for the construction of harbour improvements and facilities, additional to the amount authorized by the Chicoutimi Harbour Loan Act, 1931, and to be subject to the provision of the said act, $256,500.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would like to ask the minister whether this harbour commission makes a report and also a financial statement to parliament. The sum of money advanced is very large and it is one of those nonactive investments of the government that it is very difficult to justify in general terms.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend will realize that I had expected the Minister of Marine to be present and I am not in a position to give him as complete information as I would wish. With respect to the immediate item, my recollection is that this is to cover an amount which has already been expended by the commission and which they have borrowed from the bank under the authority of an order in council. It is an item which has stood for some time. The bank interest naturally would be higher than our own, so we thought it the part of wisdom to advance the money at the interest rate which is available to us rather than pay a higher rate to the bank.

With respect to the other part of the hon. member's question, the harbour commissioners do report to the Minister of Marine, and I assume, although on this point I cannot be certain because I have not had opportunity to inquire, that he in turn tables these reports in the house. But on that latter point I am subject to correction after verification.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would like to have a copy of that report and the financial statement. It is hardly fair—but I shall also ask the minister to request the Minister of Marine to advise the committee at another sitting as to the expenditure last year of this harbour commission, and the total amount voted by parliament since the commission was set up.

Mr. RHODES: I shall be very happy to undertake to see that a complete statement of the expenditure and commitments respecting Chicoutimi harbour is furnished, and I shall also direct the attention of the Minister of Marine to the hon. member's question. But I undertake myself to see that he gets a complete statement.

Item agreed to.

Resolutions reported, read the second time, and concurred in.

Mr. RHODES: There is on the order paper for the purpose of the budget debate a motion that we resolve ourselves into committee of ways and means. I ask unanimous consent that we may go into committee of ways and means for the purpose of passing the resolution to enable me to bring in the bill based upon these resolutions.

And consent having been given.

WAYS AND MEANS

INTERIM SUPPLY BILL

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Morand in the chair.

Mr. RHODES moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1935, the sum of $49,285,095.37 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Rhodes thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 47 for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending March 31, 1935.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Morand in the chair.

On section 1—On the short title.

Mr. POULIOT: I shall not discuss anything on this to-day if I am told when the External Affairs estimates will come.

Mr. RHODES: I am sorry I cannot inform my hon. friend. If he is anxious to know I shall endeavour to find out when they will be brought in.

Mr. POULIOT: What I am asking is if he will be kind enough to tell me if all the estimates for External Affairs are passed.

Mr. RHODES: I cannot answer offhand. I shall have to examine the list.

Mr. POULIOT: If they are passed may I ask the government if any minister or envoy plenipotentiary of Canada in other countries has been authorized to lend his name directly or indirectly to the advertising of any manufactured product?

Mr. RHODES: If my hon. friend will look up his estimates, page 55, item 203, he will see that there will be ample opportunity afforded him to put his question.

Mr. POULIOT: Then I shall not insist on that now.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In that connection may I say that on several occasions, whether purposely or inadvertently, the estimates of the Department of External Affairs have sometimes been presented without very adequate notice. I wish it were possible that the house should be given fair notice of when these estimates will be up so that we may have an opportunity to be present.

Mr. RHODES: I shall do the best I can to accommodate my hon. friend in giving notice.

Mr. LAPOINTE: There is a vote for ocean and harbour services. Some time ago I asked the Minister of Marine whether in the public works which have been carried on in the harbour of Quebec under the Public Works Construction Act public tenders had been asked, and he said no, that tenders had been asked only from certain local firms, in order to keep the work for local workmen. Afterwards I asked what firms had been invited to tender, and the minister gave me a list of six or seven names which did not include the most important contracting firms in Quebec city. I sent the minister a letter, because there is other work to be done under the same vote and under new votes this year, in which I gave a list of fifteen of the leading contracting firms of Quebec city, asking the minister, if he does not invite public tenders, at least to request tenders from these reliable firms. As yet I have not been privileged to receive an answer from the minister, but I should like my hon. friend to bring this very important question to the attention of the Minister of Marine and to assure him that I will not leave him free of this matter before the end of the session.

Mr. RHODES: I shall be very pleased to undertake to direct the attention of my colleague, the Minister of Marine, to the question raised by my hon. friend from Quebec East. In that connection I would point out to him that in the main estimates two items still remain to be passed, and I trust that my hon. friend can look for his reply when those items are called.

Mr. POWER: I would direct the attention of the minister to the fact that while there may be some improvement in the list of contractors when the names suggested by the hon. member for Quebec East have been added to those names already carefully selected by the Minister of Marine and his friends, it might be well if a few contractors in Quebec South were added to the list. I propose to make this suggestion later on also.

Mr. RHODES: I shall be very happy to direct the attention of my colleague, the Minister of Marine, to the remarks of my hon. friend from Quebec South.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I may tell my hon. friend that in order to make my list as imposing as possible I have included his contractors as well as my own.

THE BUDGET

DEBATE ON THE ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed from Wednesday, March 27, consideration of the motion of Hon. E. N. Rhodes (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the proposed amendment of Mr. Ralston, and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Coote.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the course of his speech last evening the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) gave a very impressive list of the legislative measures which have been brought down by the government. I think some of us are quite willing to concede that, especially last year and this year, the government have broken new ground, but I submit that the program of the government offers no solution at all to our outstanding economic problems. Hence I agree with the statement contained in the earlier part of the amendment:

> —that the proposals submitted by the Minister of Finance on March 22 are entirely inadequate to meet the serious and acute situation prevailing in Canada—

In one point I agree with the Minister of Railways; that is in his appeal to the official opposition to state their alternative proposals. It seems to me the opposition have taken an exceedingly weak position in simply calling attention to the inadequacy of the government's proposals while giving no alternative program at all, merely calling for an election. It is all very well to call for an election, but before the people can intelligently decide any matter at an election they should have a definite alternative program placed before them. The Liberals are not playing fair with the electors unless at this session of the house they state definitely their program.

Apparently once again the Minister of Railways would give the impression that prosperity is just around the corner. I submit that the statement of the Prime Minister in his radio addresses was much closer to the real facts of the situation. It will be remembered that he said:

> The truth is disturbing. The world is in tragic circumstances. The signs of recovery are few and doubtful. The signs of trouble are many, and they do not lessen.

If that is true of the world at large I believe it is also true of our own country. The signs of recovery are few and doubtful; the signs of trouble are many and they do not lessen. A review of the situation in Canada such as was included in the earlier part of the budget speech would be hardly complete unless it frankly stated that there is continued stagnation in business, notwithstanding the array of statistics that are sometimes brought forth to the contrary. The ordinary man on the street knows perfectly well that he is still on the very ragged edge of things and that the present situation is by no means satisfactory.

We are faced, not merely in this house but also in the provinces and in the municipalities, with mounting debts. There seems to be no way out, and in addition we have a most serious unemployment problem, which is not lessening. Yesterday we had a conference of mayors meeting with a number of members of parliament, when they presented a case—and I think a very strong case—for immediate action on the part of the dominion government. I have no doubt that most hon. members have received from this body a comparative statement of the relief situation in Canadian municipalities in relation to municipal finances. It is not my intention to burden the pages of Hansard with many of the figures therein contained, but I should like to direct attention to one or two significant statements. In a total of some ninety cities and towns in Canada we find there is an average of 16·7 per cent of the entire population on relief. Further, the ratio of relief expenditures in the municipalities to their entire expenditure is 10·3. That is indeed a very serious situation. Then, turning to the gross total of bonded indebtedness of all classes of municipalities we find that Canada with a population of 9,860,400 has a gross bonded municipal indebtedness of $1,385,-071,100, or a per capita of $140.47.

I believe no one could listen to the presentation made last night by the representatives and mayors without feeling something of a breath of reality that is not very common in this House of Commons. It has become the practice in this chamber to put the best face on matters or, on the other hand, to draw an exaggerated picture of the difficulties into which the government policy has brought us. But here was a group of men representing, pretty directly, as they themselves put it almost half the population of Canada. Some of them belonged to one party and some to another, but they came direct from the people and from actual problems urging that some action be taken. In view of the visit of that delegation, the timing of which I do not think has any political significance, I do not think we can say that the situation in Canada is at all satisfactory. We have the growing debts and the condition whereby municipalities are no longer able to maintain the care of the unemployed which hitherto they have given. I cannot see how this government can much longer avoid accepting the responsibility which the municipalities have urged we should assume. In fact we had the warning from the responsible heads of these municipal bodies that unless the government did come to the rescue it would be only a matter of time before there would be riots in our cities.

Looking at the economic situation in a larger way may I point out two very great changes which have taken place in comparatively recent years. The first is that to which the Prime Minister himself in his radio addresses called attention, namely, that we have no longer an open market. Free competition, with the amount of natural regulation which it entailed, has been swept away, and we find a certain measure of planned regulation or monopoly. For me that is the challenge which meets the Liberal party with its older Liberal traditions. I know that sometimes the leader of the opposition protests that he does not cling to the laissez-faire policy, but if he does not I say he has no right to call himself a Liberal of the old school. That is essentially the traditional policy of Liberalism, and one which I maintain is altogether inadequate to meet the situation now facing us. Undoubtedly the open market, with all that is involved by way of free competition in that market, has gone; for that reason I believe the government is quite right in feeling its way towards greater regulation and planning. I take it that whatever government may be in power in the future will have to adopt a program of regulation.

There is another development in the economic world however which the Prime Minister did not stress, namely, the passing of world markets. Years ago when his party was seeking power the Prime Minister, as is well remembered, said that he would blast his way into the markets of the world. A year or so ago he returned from Europe a sadder and wiser man, because his message was practically this, "There are no markets." That, it seems to me, is about the truest statement the Prime Minister ever made, and one which is not fully recognized either by his followers or by hon. members of the official opposition. In view of the economic developments which have taken place in recent years I do not believe we can ever hope to have the expanding markets the world once enjoyed. Nearly all the leading countries of the world have adopted the capitalist system, producing not only for their immediate needs but to supply external markets. Those countries which were once our customers are now our competitors; that is a chronic situation. Under these circumstances it seems to me that we will have to revise our whole national economy. Those people who to-day talk about securing markets or rebuilding external trade fail to realize the very great economic changes which have taken place in our own day.

The budget it seems to me is quite in line with the so-called reform legislation which we have had this year, that is to say it is wholly inadequate; in fact, it is a bitter disappointment. In his radio speeches the Prime Minister divided all the recipients of income into two classes, the non-producers on the one hand, the people living on their investments, and the producers or workers on the other hand, the people living as the result of their labour. He suggested there was inequality in the incomes received by the producers and the non-producers. He suggested, further, that taxation might be used in order to redistribute the national income and to secure a greater measure of equality between these two groups. Let me read a paragraph from the Prime Minister's second radio speech:

> I think there is from all worth while points of view an inequality in the distribution of income; and I think, as between the non-producer and the producer, there must be devised, by some plan of taxation to be considered at once, a better balance, not only in fairness to the producer but also in the interests of the non-producer.

And again:

> It is both uneconomic and unfair to trespass, at least farther than we have already, upon the non-producer's income which is only sufficient to maintain the possessor of it in the ordinary necessities and comforts of life. Incomes which are much in excess of this properly irreducible minimum are subject to another rule.

May I say parenthetically that the great majority of the people of Canada are not receiving incomes sufficient to enable them to obtain the ordinary necessities and comforts of life. However, that was the Prime Minister's proposal in the radio addresses. Those addresses have gone far and wide, but how does the Prime Minister now implement the suggestions made in those addresses? He or the Finance minister brings down a provision for a surtax on large incomes. I need not read the table, but the surtax in the case of incomes over $5,000 but not exceeding $10,000 is two per cent, and from $10,000 to $14,000 three per cent, and so on up to incomes of $200,000 which pay a surtax of ten per cent. These sliding scales or percentages may look all very well on paper. It is quite true that the man with a large income pays a larger surtax than the man with a small income. But this is really a delusion, Mr. Speaker, if it is meant to be an equalization of income. A man getting an income of $200,000 may pay $20,000 in surtax, but what is a tax of $20,000 on $200,000? It still leaves him $180,000.

Mr. RHODES: If my hon. friend will permit me, his statement is not accurate, because he is dealing only with the surtax.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Quite so. That is what I said.

Mr. RHODES: But the hon. gentleman said that he had left $180,000, which is not correct. Actually it is a very heavy tax.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Of course, he has to pay the regular income tax, but $180,000 is the actual amount he has left to be taxed with the ordinary tax.

Mr. RHODES: No, Mr. Chairman, that has no reference to it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The surtax, if I understand it, means a tax over and above the regular income tax.

Mr. RHODES: Yes, quite so, but its measure is not upon the tax already paid but upon unearned income or upon a stated salary.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is quite right, and that is what I am trying to say. Using the Minister's own words would make my case all the stronger, for he points out that this is unearned income. That is what I want to impress upon the house, and the payer of that tax has a very substantial amount left.

Mr. RHODES: But not $180,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No.

Mr. RHODES: Quite so.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: My point is this. These sliding scales may look all very well on paper, but what we ought to look at is not the amount paid but the amount that is left after the ordinary tax and the surtax have been paid. That is what I want to impress upon the house. I think I gave several years ago to the house this illustration which I saw in a cartoon I think published in an English paper. It showed a long ladder reaching from high up in the sky down into a deep pit filled with water, and the various classes of income tax payers were hanging on to different rungs of the ladder. The Minister of Finance comes along and says, "We want equality of sacrifice. Everybody one step down." One step down for the man high up on the ladder does not amount to very much, but for the man near the bottom it means that he is plunged into misery or oblivion.

The Minister of Finance in his surtax has improved a little bit on that procedure because he has arranged that the different classes move down a fraction of a rung, but the principle is there still the same. I would submit that we have to reconsider the whole question of unearned incomes. In Canada to-day incomes bear no relation whatever to the real service given to the community by the receiver of the income. Many of the great fortunes in this country were made during the war. Had we had a proper system of finance then, it would not have been possible to make those fortunes, or had we had a proper system of taxation it would not have been possible to make those fortunes. Some of them were made by plain graft, for it can be called nothing else, and others were made because of special privilege. There is no doubt of that. The great fortunes in this country have not been made, to use a phrase that has been used in this house before, by the sweat of one's brow. The great fortunes in this country have been made because certain people were granted special privileges. Yes, and as my hon. friend from Bow River (Mr. Garland) suggests, some have been made by financial chicanery, but I am leaving out the fortunes that were made by doubtful means. The very best you can say in regard to any of them is that they were made by special privilege, and it is the business of this house to see that there is some sort of equality among the various classes in the community. I take it that that is what was in the mind of the Prime Minister when he made those radio speeches, and if that was not in his mind there was no sense in making those speeches.

What are the means by which we can bring about that equality? One means by which we can atone for the mistakes of the past is by some sort of equalization of income, and instead of taking off $20,000 more or less from an income of $200,000 we might very well take everything above ten or twenty or thirty or forty or fifty thousand dollars, and put it into the treasury. Beginning with a tax of two per cent on $5,000 we might have a tax of one per cent on each additional thousand, so that it would not be very long before you got to the point where the income receiver would have nothing left above a reasonable amount. That surely is the position to which we ought to come in this country. Somebody laughs. I quite admit that the old idea has been, each for himself, and I suppose it worked fairly well when each had a fair chance, but there is nothing particularly sportsmanlike in giving one man tremendous privileges and putting others under a severe handicap. That is the position we have to-day, and it is this house that makes the rules. There is no doubt about that whatever.

I noticed in the Evening Citizen of March 23 the statement made by Mr. C. Fraser Elliott, the dominion commissioner of income tax, that dividends paid in Canada during 1934 reached a total of approximately $350,000,000 as compared with $150,000,000 for the previous year. That is, the arrangements in this country for which this parliament is responsible have enabled the dividend receivers of Canada to obtain $200,000,000 more in the past year than in the year before. Now I cannot think that that is a matter for congratulation so far as the country at large is concerned. If everyone was benefiting in this way, we might think it was a very happy condition, but everyone is not benefiting in this way.

Recently I had occasion to make a study, with the help of some friends, of some of the statistical information supplied by the Year Book and from the census. If the income tax returns are combined with the figures of earnings it is possible to show the distribution of income among a very large section of the population. I may say that we were not able to secure any information as to the distribution of farm incomes. But leaving out farm income, we have some 2,713,000 wage earners and other income receivers for whom it is possible to estimate the distribution of income for the year 1930-31. I have before me a table which gives the distribution of the number of income receivers, other than agricultural, and their income in Canada for the year 1930-31. This is a short table, and with the permission of the house I will place it on Hansard in its present form. It reads:

Table 3.—Estimated Distribution of Number of Income Receivers (other than agricultural) and their Income, Canada, 1930-1931

Size of Income	Number of persons (Male and female)	Per cent of total	Income (millions of dollars)	Per cent of total income
Under—$ 1,000	1,526,000	56.2	790.0	25.4
$ 1,000— 1,500	643,000	23.7	805.0	25.9
1,500— 3,000	448,000	16.5	896.0	28.8
3,000— 10,000	85,000	3.2	401.0	12.9
10,000—and over	11,000	0.4	219.0	7.0
Totals	2,713,000	100.0	3,111.0	100.0

From this table it will be seen that 56·2 per cent of the income receivers, both males and females, receive less than $1,000 per year. The total earnings of these workers constitute only one-quarter of the total income of all persons, although they form more than half of the aggregate number. Slightly less than one-quarter of the workers have incomes between $1,000 and $1,500, and the aggregate incomes of these persons are a little more than one-quarter of the total. The two groups receiving less than $1,500 per year thus form approximately 80 per cent of the total number, yet they received only a little more than half of the total income. The other 20 per cent of the income receivers, those getting more than $1,500 per year, secured almost half of the total income. The group with the highest incomes, those getting more than $10,000, was composed of only 11,000 individuals, and yet this small group received an aggregate income equal to that of more than 400,000 of the poorest paid workers.

According to this statement, the great majority of the income receivers, that is, 1,526,000, receive less than $1,000 per year. I would point out that the family budget as published by the Dominion Department of Labour provides for $800 for food and housing for a family. On that basis a family would need an annual income of from $1,200 to $1,500 to meet the requirements for a decent standard of living but according to the statistics of the government the vast majority of the people of this country are forced to live on a standard below what would be considered as reasonable. There is no need for such things in a country like this possessing such great resources and splendid equipment. I think I did it earlier in the session, but I should like again to place before the house a statement taken from a national survey of potential product capacity made for the federal government of the United States. This report was prepared by some sixty technicians who worked for a period of seven months. According to their report it is quite possible with the present equipment in the United States for each family to have the equivalent of an income of $4,400 per year. No thought was taken of new inventions or new methods, they were dealing only with the present resources and equipment, which if properly organized would provide that income for each family. Similar conditions exist in Canada. So under a proper system Canadian families might receive an income of upward of $4,000 yet we have seen that the great majority of families have an income of less than $1,000. As long as this is true I cannot accept the policy of the government as satisfactory.

I should like to direct the attention of the house to the physical conditions under which so many of our population are forced to exist. Not long ago I received a copy of the report of the Lieutenant Governor's committee on housing conditions in Toronto, 1934. I think it would pay every hon. member to obtain a copy of this report in order that he might understand the serious conditions which exist in one of the wealthiest of our Canadian cities. Let me turn for a moment to the east, to Montreal, the largest of our Canadian cities. In the Gazette of January 29, I find a report of General C. E. McCuaig, given before the emergency unemployment relief committee and the Protestant employment bureau which met at the Mount Royal hotel. This report reads:

> There is for instance, within what is actually a stone's throw from the centre of our shopping district, a block of dwellings built on a back lot and closely surrounded by other buildings. It contains 19 four-room apartments with but three baths between them in which dwell no less than 148 persons, a concentration equal to 1,400 persons to an acre. In one of these apartments of four rooms there are 13 persons living; in another, 12; in another, 10; in two, nine persons, and in the others from four to eight persons.

Another paragraph reads:

> Close to Sherbrooke street is a complete block of dilapidated dwellings with sagging walls and floors. Bad sanitary conditions, dampness, leaking roofs, vermin, in fact many conditions exist in this block any one of which should render it unsatisfactory as a dwelling place. Yet in it are crowded men, women and children, three and four to the room. In one five-room apartment there is a family of two parents and seven children, five of whom have been hospital cases this year and another is now suffering from pleurisy.
> Families live in basements below the street level under cold and damp conditions. Old houses in the centre of the city have been converted by means of thin boards into apartments with as many as twenty people of four, five and six families sharing one community bathroom, sometimes without a bath. These conditions exist within our city and despite our city and provincial laws. They are a challenge to our civic pride, not only through their effect upon the health and morals of those who are forced to live in them but as centres from which pestilence and vice may easily breed, to spread to your home and mine.

That is a challenge, not merely to that city and province but to the whole of this dominion. From this corner we have repeatedly urged that instead of providing a dole such as is done, we should have some definite construction work which would eliminate such conditions. We should at the same time provide the people with real work and higher living standards. There is no indication whatever in this budget that any far-reaching program of that kind is to be undertaken.

I should like to crave the indulgence of the house while I read a letter from the local council of women of Calgary, dated March 20, 1935. I have referred to conditions existing in the east but I should like to turn now to the west and listen to the voice of the women. This letter comes from the home city of the Prime Minister and it gives a careful analysis of the conditions existing there. It reads:

> Dear Mr. Woodsworth:
> As a result of tragic events an emergency meeting of the local council of women of Calgary was called yesterday and the following analysis of the situation is hereby submitted to you for the earnest consideration of yourself and your colleagues.
> Within a period of two weeks, March 4, and March 15, 1935, two youths, aged twenty and eighteen years, of the city of Calgary, have taken their own lives. Both cases were reported briefly in the local papers as accidents, doubtless with the considerate intention on the part of the press to spare the families avoidable pain. But both cases were stark suicide. How much mental anguish preceded the final tragic acts can only be surmised.
> Those who dare to face the facts realize that, in these two cases, self-destruction was the reaction of temperaments sensitive to the impact of intolerable conditions, economic, social and psychological. These conditions today are general and to a greater or less degree are alarmingly affecting the whole generation of our times.
> Where does the responsibility lie? We have in Canada an abundance—indeed a glut—of material things. The intelligence quotients and the percentage of literacy of the Canadian people are notably high. We possess able and trained men and women ready and eager to attack and to solve our problems. Does our governmental system make it impossible to intelligently recruit and coordinate the services of able, selfless men and women in the great cause of the public interest?
> We bring our children along through childhood and early youth with a highly motivated devotion, in our homes and in our schools. We teach them by implication at least, that life is sacred, a worth-while and a glorious experience; that the individual is valuable; that to each belongs the privilege and the obligation to make his or her social contribution; that the contribution of each is acceptable so long as it is his or her best.

Our children pass out of childhood. They reach the biological age when it is essential to normal development that they emancipate themselves from the shelter of homes and schools and when the biological urge is strong and suppression is disastrous and dangerous. Under the conditions of to-day these young people are confronted only with frustration and denial. They find themselves—like our vast stores of wheat in a country of hungering people—a cause for public perplexity and embarrassment, simply because they exist.

Everywhere a vast diversity of services is needed to make the lives of our people tolerable, healthy and secure, services which, with an intelligent organization, these young people could be directed to render.

Where does responsibility lie? How many young lives must be partially or wholly blasted before their cry will be heard by those who have accepted responsibility for managing and directing our social system?

We, therefore, unanimously urge that emergency action be taken, while long term plans are evolving, to provide our young people with normal opportunities in life.

Very truly yours,
M. A. Hall,
Corresponding Secretary.

The reading of a long letter like that may not be considered a sign of a good speech, but some of us have reached the point where we are more interested in getting these questions discussed than we are as to the particular quality of our speeches.

I would like to support the amendment of the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote). It seems to me that we have in this country abundance to provide for the needs of all our people and to meet such conditions as are outlined in the letter I have read from the women of Calgary. Canada is not a poor country; she is as wealthy as she ever was, wealthy as she was in the boom times. The real wealth is all here. The trouble is that the wealth is not available for the people. We in this corner of the house have tried again and again to show some of the reasons why that wealth is not available. The fact of our abundant wealth cannot be doubted or controverted by anyone. Let me put the case very simply: we have piles of leather that frequently are rotting on the farm because the farmer cannot receive anything worth while if he takes the hides to market. We have the machinery that is capable of transforming that leather into boots, but the machinery is rusting through disuse. We have over yonder large numbers of people, even boys and girls, who are going with poor shoes. Why cannot that leather be put into that machinery and made available in the form of boots for the needs of the people? That exemplifies the real situation existing to-day in every department of our economic life. We may put it in more general terms than that, but that illustration may suffice to drive home the case. We have reached the point when we shall have to regard the great resources and equipment of this country as essentially the property of the Canadian people to be administered in supplying the needs of the masses.

Mr. J. A. FRASER (Cariboo): I should like to add my words of commendation to the excellent effort of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) in presenting the annual budget. It cannot be questioned that the budget is a story of definite and unmistakable progress, and I think the people of this country will realize that a budget which shows such definite and unmistakable progress is entitled to some measure of commendation.

Before I proceed with the remarks I have to make, I would like to spend just one minute on the observations of the previous speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). As the leader of a party in Canada who is submitting his proposals to the people for their approval in the approaching general election, he says that the government has no program that is adequate to meet existing conditions. He makes that statement definitely and he spoke for forty minutes. I want any hon. member to point out to me any one proposal he mentioned that would cure the situation that we have at the present time, or that would improve it in any shape of form. Let me go further: I have listened in this house and in the country to the remarks of hon. gentlemen who sit in the extreme left corner and who call themselves the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, and I fail to find in anything I have ever heard them say where they have any policy of any kind to submit to the people that will improve conditions in this dominion. What remedies does he offer? The last remark he made was: Why cannot the leather be put into the machines and passed on to the boys in the shape of pairs of boots? Can he show us the way to do that sort of thing?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): Did he attempt in any shape or form to show this house how that could be done?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes, often.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): Well, we have not heard it.

An hon. MEMBER: Where has the hon. member been?

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): Perhaps I was one of those who were asleep the other day according to what the financial critic of the opposition said, but upon my word anything that I have ever listened to from the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation group in the extreme left corner in the way of proposals to improve conditions in this country will not have effect in that regard.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Did the hon. gentleman ever hear the quotation: "There are none so blind as those who will not see"?

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): Well, I am getting pretty well on in years, but I have a little eyesight left yet. I have spent a little longer than a minute and I do not want to take any more time with this, because after all they do not and they never will amount to anything, for there is not a practical suggestion they have ever made in this house or outside and I do not think they have a practical idea in their heads from one end of the group to the other.

I said that the budget was a story of definite and unmistakable progress. That is confirmed by our own bureau of statistics which indicates that the physical volume of business is up by 48·5 per cent as compared with what it was at the low point. That is some advance. We are getting along fairly well. In addition to that an outside authority, the League of Nations, says that Canada leads all the nations of the world, with its index figure of 46·2 per cent. If we are to be blamed for going down surely we must get some credit when we commence to go up. I think there is a great deal of credit coming to the government for the policies they have pursued. The improvement has been the result of the intelligent action of this government. Let me point out some of the signs of improvement in this country. Take the export of lumber. Our lumber exports last year were at the all time peak.

Mr. MUNN: Would the hon. member permit a question? He speaks of the all time record, does he refer to world shipments or United Kingdom shipments?

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): All exports.

Mr. MUNN: World shipments?

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): Export shipments, yes, I did not confine it to the United Kingdom.

Mr. MUNN: Well, that is different.

[Mr. J. A. Fraser.]

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): It is not different from what I intended to say. As a result of the shipment of that lumber there came into this country a sum of $278,000,000 of new money. The export of a great deal of that lumber is a direct result of the policies of the present government, and I think the people of British Columbia particularly, and my good friend who is an operator out there appreciate that fact. I would not be surprised to find my hon. friend voting for this government next session; he cannot help himself.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): For the government, but not for this government.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): He will be voting for us, and it would be a good thing if other hon. members would use a little common sense and do the same.

Then the next thing is wheat; the value of the wheat crop is up 33 per cent. The value of the field crops of Canada is up 16·7 per cent. Live stock prices are up, and so it is all along the line. For the information of the house I should like to read a record which I have just got of live stock prices during last year:

Cattle and Calves

Stockyard sales of cattle were 700,817 head, against 604,077 in 1933. Calf sales were 371,110, against 317,110 in 1933.

The weighted average price of all cattle combined, for all stockyards combined, was $3.10 per hundredweight, against $3 in 1933. Calves —$4.10, against $3.75 in 1933.

Good to choice butcher steers averaged $4.85 per hundredweight at Toronto and $4.40 at Winnipeg.

The total value of stockyard sales of cattle in 1934 (estimated) was $21,015,336, against $17,575,996. Calves—$2,815,638, against $2.914,876 in 1933.

Exports of cattle to the United Kingdom were 53,852 head, against 50,317 in 1933.

Exports of beef to all points were 15,092,200 pounds, against 10,007,700 pounds in 1933.

Hogs

Sales at yards and plant were 3,038,155 head, against 3,172,980 in 1933.

Average price of select bacon hogs—$9.10 at Toronto and $8.12 at Winnipeg, against $6.17 and $5.36 respectively in 1933.

Average weighted price of all hogs at al. yards combined—$7.70, against $5 in 1933 (includes all grades and weights).

Stockyard value — $14,950,000, against $10,352,544 in 1933.

Exports of bacon—119,707,600 pounds, against 71,524,700 pounds in 1933. Value—$18,754,113, against $8,071,803 in 1933.

But still we hear hon. members talking about lack of results, nothing definite received by this country as a result of the Ottawa agreements. Then we have sheep and lambs. Here is a remarkable showing:

Slaughterings—852,222 head, against 868,679 in 1933.

Average prices at stockyards, $5.60, against $5.35 in 1933, for all grades.

Average price for good handyweight lambs at Toronto $7.17 and at Winnipeg $4.75. Toronto price range $4 to $12, Winnipeg's $2 to $10.50.

Exports practically nil. Listen to this, those of you who remember how much mutton we used to import from New Zealand not long ago; Canada is now on a self-supporting basis as far as mutton and lamb are concerned. Some record, I say.

The next thing to which I have to direct the attention of the house is the improvement in the fruit and vegetable markets. They have been steadied by the intelligent application of the dumping and exchange duties and things of that kind, not the harebrained application that prevailed during the time of my hon. friends opposite. As a result of the proper application of tariff measures of one kind and another there were imported into Canada last year 700 carloads less of apples than in 1930. Would any hon. member tell me that the fruit growers of the Okanagan or of any fruit-growing district throughout Canada do not realize what that means to them? That is all a result of a little good judgment, of knowing how to apply the tariffs intelligently so as to get major benefits from their application.

Mineral production was very close to its all time peak, I think in the neighbourhood of $278,000,000, but I shall have something more to say about that in a minute.

Since the low point of the depression in 1933, 340,000 people have been put to work. Then I turn to some financial measures, for instance, the establishment of the Bank of Canada, a major operation I should say, one which will have a very material effect on the commercial and industrial life of this country. Bank interest rates are down. That is because the government applied pressure to the banks. Heretofore the situation was that we had on the statute books an act that provided for a maximum interest rate of 7 per cent, but there was no penalty provided and the consequence was that that provision was flagrantly violated. Now, severe penalties are imposed for evasion of the statute in any form. Since 1933, this government has converted $1,100,000,000 of outstanding debt to lower rates of interest with a resulting saving of $14,600,000 in interest charges. That is an accomplishment, something for which this government certainly should get credit. In these days we hear a great deal of talk by irresponsible people with regard to the reduction of interest rates, but the government of this country has been carrying on quietly, going its way from day to day, discharging its ordinary duties and doing something concrete to improve conditions in that way. People who had money to loan were encouraged to charge these high rates of interest during the tenure of office of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Then we have increased car loadings on both railways, together with an improvement in their earnings. The government also provided assistance for the agriculturists of this country. Last session we passed the Natural Products Marketing Act. I need not say anything about that at the present time, because it is only commencing to operate, but I venture to say that when full advantage is taken of the provisions of that act it will mean a great deal to the agricultural communities of this country. We also passed the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, the value of which to the farmers of Canada it is difficult to estimate at the present time. But when you look at the farm mortgage debt of this country you can imagine the benefit that is going to accrue from that act. We also amended the Farm Loan Act, under which credit is to be advanced to those farmers who are in need of long term money. And mark this, Mr. Speaker; the former government provided an amount of only $10,000,000 under this act. They did not want to get their feet very wet, but we have increased that amount to $90,000,000, and we are not afraid that the agricultural communities of this country will misuse that amount of money. Last year we also provided for a public works program amounting to $40,000,000 of which $8,000,000 has been expended already, with the remainder to be spent during the present year, and this is such a reasonable and businesslike government that I am very hopeful that we will have an additional amount provided before the end of this session.

In addition to all this we have the assistance that has been extended by the central government to the provinces and municipalities that found themselves in difficulties. I am not going into this matter to any great extent, but I should like to note what has been done for the province of British Columbia, from which I come. On March 28 the net loans outstanding to the province of British Columbia amounted to $15,014,234. The total cash given British Columbia for relief amounted to $14,158,837, while $3,643,682 had been spent on relief camps in that province. In addition $352,987 had been expended in connection with the national parks and public works contruction relief program. And I do not think for a moment that British Columbia has been treated any better than any other province that was in necessitous circumstances.

Then we have the outstanding feature, so far as I am concerned, of the whole relief program; that is, the assistance that has been extended in the drought stricken areas of Saskatchewan. For a considerable period of time we took care of practically 300,000 people in that area, and at present I believe something like half that number are still being supported by the government. That is a national responsibility; these people have suffered calamity and they are entitled to the support they are receiving. We only hope that in a very short time conditions will be such that they will be able to take care of themselves. As nearly as I can figure it out, and I may be wrong, the total amount spent by the government in connection with relief is about $175,000,000, but the demand for relief seems to be worse at present than it has been in the past. I do not understand why that should be so. With improved conditions and with the assistance that has been extended to the provinces and municipalities I do not understand why we do not see some improvement in general conditions, but apparently, from what has taken place in Montreal during the past few days, these people in the provinces and municipalities seem to have thrown up their hands entirely and said they could not go on any longer. I cannot see that angle at all. I think they should have a little more courage; with all due deference to those gentlemen I think if they put a little more effort into their work of taking care of local matters of this kind they would not have to call on the federal government so much.

I think all hon. members will remember what happened in 1932 when the house was considering the Ottawa agreements. The opposition claimed that we were ruining our foreign trade. They said we were not going to have any more foreign trade, that no one would do business with us. Since that time, however, we have gone on and made trade treaties with foreign countries to the advantage of both this country and those foreign countries. We have done just as the Liberals did when they were in office, except that we have made better and more equitable trade arrangements which will stand up under any sort of criticism they have to offer. The most astonishing feature of the whole situation is that when these treaties come up in the house for review we do not hear any opposition to them. Hon. gentlemen opposite know they cannot be criticised.

Mr. MUNN: Did you make any treaties with our nearest neighbour, the United States?

[Mr. J. A. Fraser.]

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): I shall have a word to say about that in a moment, if my hon. friend will be patient. We have entered into trade agreements with France, Poland, Germany, Austria and Brazil, and the other day we were told that treaties are pending with two other important foreign countries. I do not know whether or not the United States is one of those countries, but we all know that negotiations with that country are under way at the present time. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem rather afraid that we may be rather successful in making a good treaty with that country.

Mr. MUNN: No, I am all for it.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): Certainly my hon. friend is all for it. He will be all for it after we pass it, too; he will not have a word to say about it, but just the same he will go out in the country and say this government is no good.

Mr. MUNN: They will leave it to the next government.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): The next government wil be all right, too.

Now I should like to say a few words in regard to tariff matters, and I should like my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) to put down his newspaper and listen to me for a moment. He is the chap who talked about the ramparts of ruin that were thrown around this country by this government, and I want to tell him something if he will listen for a moment. To listen to hon. gentlemen opposite one would think this government had imposed unbearable taxation on the people due to the application of excessive duties. He spoke about the duty collected per capita. Hon. members could get this information themselves. I think this fellow, this hon. member, is pretty intelligent, and the other day when he made his ramparts-of-ruin speech he must have known the facts. In 1911 after fifteen years—or somethink like that—of Liberal government they collected from the people of Canada per capita in tariff duties $10.17, and in 1934, after this government had raised the ramparts of ruin, the collection was only $6.75. There are your ramparts of ruin! Those figures indicate the exaggeration which hon. members opposite have to use in order to make any case at all.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): We have no trade; that is why.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): In 1911 the per capita taxation, so far as the tariff was concerned, amounted to $10.17, and in 1921 it had risen to $19.89. Mark this, from 1921 to 1930, the party opposite was in power—this low tariff party, the party which is going to reduce the tariff every time it comes into office, and the party which promises to remove oppressive taxation from the shoulders of the poor people of Canada. In 1930, after nine years of office they had reduced the per capita taxation, so far as the tariff is concerned, from $19.89 to $19.50. In other words they reduced the figure by 39 cents in ten years. That is some record! And mark this, while in 1930 the per capita tariff taxation was $19.50, in 1931 after we had raised the ramparts of ruin it was $14.37.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Trade went down.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): In 1932 it was further reduced to $10.85; in 1933 to $7.23 and in 1934 $6.75.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Slipping all the time; trade going down.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): How does it sound? Then, another gem from the observations of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre; I mean his reference to the greatest example of tariff raising in our history. I have given the record—from $19.50 down to $6.75.

I am not through with the hon. gentleman. Let us turn to the average rate of duty, another very interesting study. I shall not go into many details, but shall be content to go back to the year 1921. In 1921 the average rate of duty on total imports stood at 14·1 per cent. In 1930, with a low tariff government in power it was 15·9 per cent. That indicates an increase of 1·8 per cent, if my mathematical calculation is correct. In 1931 it had gone up to 16·4 per cent, an increase of ·5 per cent. In 1932 it went up to 19·7 per cent; in 1933 it went down to 19 per cent and in 1934 it stood at 16·9 per cent. The ramparts of ruin which we have raised around this country between the years 1930 and 1934 are, so far as rates of duty are concerned, exactly one per cent. The increase has been from 15·9 per cent to 16·9 per cent.

Another factor which has something to do with export and import trade, and a difficulty which this government tried to correct by way of the Ottawa agreements, is that of deflecting our excessive exports and imports—or, only imports, if you like—from the United States to a country more friendly to us in a trading way. In 1921 the percentage of total imports from the United Kingdom stood at 17·3 per cent. In 1931 the percentage had been reduced to 16·5 per cent, and in 1934 as a result of the Ottawa agreements, and for no other reason, the proportion had increased to 24·2 per cent. Our exports too had increased. In 1921 we exported to the United Kingdom 26·3 per cent of our total exports, in 1931, 27·2 per cent and last year 39·3 per cent.

We have heard a great deal about the duty against imports from the United Kingdom and the excessive rates of duty we have levied on textiles particularly. The total rates of duty levied are as follows: In 1930 we imposed a rate of 20·5 per cent; in 1931 19·6 per cent, while in 1932 the rate was 20·5 per cent, an increase of a little more than one per cent. Then in 1933 the percentage decreased to 18·6, while last year it was back to 20·5. Notwithstanding all the hot air we have heard about the increase of duty on goods from the United Kingdom the fact is that we have reduced the rate by nine-tenths of one per cent on the total imports.

In all reasonableness why should the financial critic of the opposition say that the tariff policy of this government has been futile when that policy has been the means of increasing our trade? We are not substantially increasing restrictions on trade. If I understand the signs of the times we propose from time to time to reduce duties. We are not going around the country telling people that we are going to reduce them and then, upon taking office, failing to carry out our promises. We say before we take office, "We are going to impose a reasonable and a fair tariff," and when we take office we impose that reasonable and fair tariff.

I do not see why the financial critic should say that these tariff policies are futile when they are increasing our trade. They are improving the position not only of Canada but of the old country and they are hurting no person. Then we have the criticism that the Prime Minister did not blast his way into the markets of the world. The statement is made that he promised to make tariffs fight for Canada. I think he has been doing just that very thing; I do not know what else one could call it. If one were to study the situation and if he were to take the trade returns received from time to time he must conclude that for some reason or another from day to day the trade of Canada is increasing. Of course, being a good supporter of the government I say the government should receive the benefit for that increase in trade.

Mr. POULIOT: The Prime Minister was K.O'd in that prize fight, and he still thinks he is O.K.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): Now I come to a subject which is of greater concern to the province of British Columbia than are matters which have to do with agriculture. I refer to the mining industry, and in this connection I shall try not to take up too much time of the house. I believe the mines of Canada furnish one of the most important natural resources we have, resources capable of vast expansion. If cared for they will add very materially to the progress and prosperity of the dominion. The production in 1934 was very close to the all time peak of production in Canada. We produced minerals in Canada last year to the value of $278,337,000, and that was up twenty-five per cent from the preceding year.

Now for the place that Canada occupies in the mining world. In the production of asbestos and nickel Canada stands in first place in the world. Canada stands second place in the world in the production of platinum, cobalt and radium. Canada stands third place in the world in the production of gold and copper, and Canada stands fourth place in the world in the production of lead and zinc. There is another factor which I should like to bring to the attention of the house, and that is that Canada produces more nickel than any other country, and probably more than is produced by all the rest of the world put together.

Now to come to British Columbia, in order to show that the mining industry in British Columbia is feeling some of the benefits of the policy of this government, I want to put on the record the production in our province.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Do you include the gold tax as a beneficent policy?

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): I thought we fixed that gold tax.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I am glad you did.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): I think we will have to take some measures to fix you.

The mineral production in British Columbia in 1934 amounted to 307,700 ounces of gold and by the way let me remind my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre that the government did not impose a tax on placer mines, and placer gold mining is the principal industry in Cariboo. British Columbia, as I say, produced 307,700 ounces of gold in 1934, valued at $10,480,000, and prior to 1933 British Columbia had never produced over $6,000,000 in gold in any one year. In that same year, 1934, British Columbia produced 8,907,000 ounces of silver valued at $4,197,800; 340,700,000 pounds of lead valued at $8,313,080, and 49,400,000 pounds of copper valued at $3,566,630.

Let me give one other item with respect to the mining industry in Canada before I deal further with the province of British Columbia.

There are in operation in Canada at the present time seventy-three metallurgical mills reducing the ores of this country and extracting from them valuable metals. Of this number thirty-one are in Ontario, twenty-one in British Columbia, nine in Quebec, eight in Nova Scotia and four in Manitoba. Here is a remarkable thing, and I wish hon. members would take note of it and think over it for a few days and see what they feel about it. In all the seventy-three mills that are in operation in Canada at the present time the metallurgical processes in operation in each and every one of them have been passed on by the Department of Mines in the city of Ottawa. You have in the city of Ottawa to-day one of the most up to date and one of the most efficient mining departments that you can find anywhere in the world, and I think this government is to be congratulated on the efficiency of the staff which they have been able to secure to direct and experiment in connection with the mines of the Dominion of Canada. In British Columbia in January, 1933, we had eight of these mills in operation; at the end of 1934 there were seventeen, and at the present time there are twenty-one.

Just to give the house some idea of some of the mines we have out there in British Columbia let me call attention to the record of the Pioneer mine. The Pioneer mine in 1934 produced $3,045,000 in gold. It has produced altogether $7,957,800 in gold. It has paid in dividends $2,940,540. The Pioneer mine employs three hundred men and supports six hundred persons. Its milling capacity is 400 tons per day. In 1924 this property changed hands for $8,000. To-day its estimated value is $21,000,000. Listen to this, you speculators!

Mr. CASGRAIN: What about the government?

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): Order, Mr. Speaker, please. Listen to this. An investment of $100 in the Pioneer mine in 1925 is now worth $265,500.

Mr. DUFF: Not enough.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): Better than fish. Then the Bralorne mine produced in 1934,

$1,560,000, and its production to date is $2,740,878. Bralorne paid in dividends in 1934, $775,000. It has a milling capacity of 400 tons per day.

Take another mine, Cariboo Gold Quartz. This mine produced in 1934, $470,000 worth of gold, and its total production to date is $700,000. This mine, which began large scale operations only two years ago, has now five miles of underground workings and a capacity of a hundred tons per day.

Other gold mines in the district which I have the honour to represent are Vidette, which milled in 1934, 7,217 tons of ore and produced 3,589 ounces of gold, 7,242 ounces of silver and 9,189 pounds of copper, with a total value of $129,415; the Island Mountain mine, which went into operation early in November and has produced $55,000 in gold—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. DUFF: Finish your sentence.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): Then we have the following mines, all situated in the Cariboo district, Minto mine, Wayside, Taylor, Windpass, Grange Mine, Windfall, and Nicola, and scores of other mines which are only at the present time what you might call prospects.

A most remarkable phenomenon of the depression has been the implicit confidence that has been shown in gold all over the world. Wherever possible people converted their resources into currencies whose convertibility into gold seemed secure, and, when this convertibility was in doubt, into gold itself. Nobody has shown any reluctance to accept gold in settlement of debts. The demand for gold always seems to be greater than the supply. Governments, bankers and bullion merchants are ready to take all offerings. There seems to be no let up in the demand. Every gold mining engineer can now get employment. Prospectors range in every conceivable quarter of Canada, wherever traces of gold are indicated. Higher prices of gold caused the producing companies to tackle low grade possibilities. The total output of gold has not risen appreciably, but the life of existing mines has been considerably extended. Let me say in that connection that the rise in the price of gold has made it possible for these low grade mines to continue and extend their operations. I do not know of any one factor in this country which could add so much to the stability of the country as the extension of that gold mining, because this is the history of gold mining in my own district: The gold was first discovered and attracted people there. A large number of people came in to mine the gold; some of them were not successful and were attracted to the fertile areas of land in the district. They proceeded to clear those lands, and when the mines were worked out the lands were still producing. That is the history of gold in every part of the world. Wherever you find a gold mine you have a valuable asset for a little time, a wasting asset, but alongside it you will find valuable natural resources and land which will continue to produce for all time.

I have not said one-half, Mr. Speaker, of what I had intended to say; I have only got started, and I think you must have cut me off a little short.

Mr. F. W. GERSHAW (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may be permitted to omit the preliminaries. At the present time there is an uncertainty in the conducting of business affairs, there is hesitancy on the part of business men to make commitments; war clouds are hanging over Europe, and for these reasons I am of the opinion that the people of this country want a general election at the earliest possible moment. I believe that a parliament fresh from the people would restore confidence and be able to deal more adequately with the great problems which are presenting themselves.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) pointed out in his budget that there has been an improvement in business conditions in Canada. He told us of the mounting revenues, the increase in transportation and production, at which we on this side of the house rejoice. As good Canadians we are glad to know that these changes have occurred, but we should also remember that the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) has said that the signs are few and uncertain. We should remember also that the mayors of the various cities of Canada came here last night and the message they presented was not one of optimism, but rather one of doubt and pessimism. We must remember also that at the present time we have a great problem of unemployment, there being more than 1,000,000 people on direct relief. We cannot expect that the line marking the upward trend of business will go uniformly or continuously upward without there being dips and depressions. We must realize that some of the great basic problems have not yet been solved.

If the farmers of the country are prosperous the retail merchants, the wholesalers, the transportation companies and the bankers will share in that prosperity. Forty-six per cent of the people of this country are employed on farms, and we find that many of them are either in bankruptcy or rapidly heading toward that state. In 1928 the average farm income was $1,600, but in 1933 it had dropped to $640. The farmer may not be the forgotten man but I think he is the submerged man. He is submerged in a sea of debt, charges, taxes and tariffs. He is helpless against the high prices which he must pay for the things he needs and the low prices which he receives for the things he produces. He has been discouraged by crop failures and lack of feed and seed, and has no credit. He has been producing products which he has been forced to sell at a price below the cost of production. It costs 65 to 68 cents to produce a bushel of wheat but he has been forced to sell his wheat for 40 to 50 cents a bushel, or even as low as 26 cents per bushel.

Another great industry is cattle raising, and I should like to put on record the costs of production in southern Alberta and southern Saskatchewan. Twenty-five ranches were investigated, each having from 300 to 3,500 head of cattle. The investigation covered a total of 10,000 head of cattle. It was found that it cost $28.13 per head or 7·25 cents per pound to produce calves of an average weight of 388 pounds. Yearlings averaging 710 pounds cost $49.58 per head or 6·98 cents per pound to produce. The cost in the case of two year old steers averaging 1,000 pounds was $64.16 or 6·42 cents per pound; while for three year olds averaging 1,275 pounds the cost was $78.44 or 6·15 cents per pound. These figures were based on a 70 per cent calf crop and 50 acres of range land for each animal. I think the calf percentage is high while the other is low. A study of one ranch which was considered as typical of many ranches in the two provinces showed the following costs:

	Per cwt.
Cows	$6 36
Two year old steers	8 50
Three year old steers	8 00

Mr. MULLINS: Where did the hon. member get those figures?

Mr. GERSHAW: They were compiled at the Manyberries range station.

Mr. MULLINS: That is my old ranch and my costs were never that high.

Mr. GERSHAW: They were compiled by Mr. Hargrave.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. GERSHAW: When the house rose at six o'clock I had given some reasons why I thought the Canadian people wanted a general election at the earliest possible moment. I had pointed out that the farm problem and the unemployment problem had not yet been solved and I gave some figures that had been worked out showing costs of production on certain farm commodities. I would like to indicate that at the time those costs were operating, the selling prices of those same products were down very low, the price of meats being down to from one and one-half to three and one-half cents per pound. We have been told that a reciprocity agreement with the United States may be consummated in the near future, and I hope when that time comes the live stock industry of western Canada will not be forgotten, because the United States is the natural and usually the most profitable market for our live stock. Even at the present time, when there is a duty of three cents a pound against our cattle going into that country and one and one-half cents for expenses, our products are being sold there. Last year practically all of the 50,000 head of cattle that we exported went into the United States. In the week ending March 7, four carloads of Canadian live cattle sold for eleven cents a pound, while the following were the prices at different points in Canada:

	Per 100 lbs.
Edmonton	$5 75
Prince Albert	4 75
Moose Jaw	6 00
Saskatoon	5 00

Hogs are also bringing a good price in the United States. During the same week they were selling at Buffalo at from $9.90 to $10, while at Toronto the price was $7.25 to $7.75 per hundred pounds.

We have gone and are going through a very serious stage, and it is to the credit of the governments of Canada that while some people have been broken down by worry and some have been undernourished, practically no one in this country has been starved. At the same time I will say without hesitation that there has been a lack of uniformity and an unfairness in the administration of relief in the dominion. The leader of this party (Mr. Mackenzie King) suggested some three or four years ago that an unemployment commission should be set up to look after unemployment for the whole country in the interests of uniformity, and I believe had that suggestion been carried out, money would have been saved and the relief would have been distributed more evenly. In Canada there are cities in which a sum of $48, $49 or $50 per month is given to a family of five. There are others where $10 or $11 per month is given to a similar family. At other places in the country the prevailing rate for a family is $8 or $10.

The constituency which I represent borders for two hundred miles on Saskatchewan, and year after year I have pointed out to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) that there was a great difference in the way in which relief was administered in those two adjoining provinces; that whereas it seemed to be fairly easy in Saskatchewan to get relief, yet right across the border where the same climatic conditions prevailed it was extremely difficult for the most deserving to secure relief because of the difference in the manner of administration. Probably there is as much money as ever in Canada, but most certainly that money is not in the hands of the people who need food, clothing and shelter, not in the hands of those who need furniture, equipment and farm machinery, and for that reason the purchasing power of our people is at a very low ebb.

I wish to discuss briefly a few methods by which I think the purchasing power of the country could be improved. First of all I will deal with tariffs. In 1930 the present government seemed to think high tariffs were the panacea for all our troubles, and duties were raised as may be indicated by the following examples:

Commodity—	Increase From Per cent	To Per cent
Cotton print	19	34
Flannelettes	16	33
Agricultural implements	7	25
Blankets	21	50 (nearly)

These high tariffs have not solved our problem and nothing is clearer recognition of that than the course the government has pursued in bringing down this budget. During recent months economists have spoken and written much; there has been chaos and little agreement on anything, but there is one point on which they are all agreed, namely that budgeting for scarcity will not solve our problem. All agree that economic nationalism and high tariffs will not cure the present depression.

The last speaker, the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Fraser), said that tariffs would fight for the farmers of this country. I want to give at least one illustration by way of showing the extent to which a class of people are benefiting by high tariffs but dodging their obligations. In 1932 I had the honour of moving in this house a resolution calling upon the government to investigate and support the sugar beet industry in Canada. They were kind enough to send that resolution to a committee and the subject was investigated. The report that was brought in ends thus:

> Your committee further recommends that if no succesful attempt is made in the immediate future by the refineries to increase the facilities for the manufacture of beet sugar, the government will take into consideration means to accomplish this end.

Since then we have had hard times. One factory has signified its intention to build another branch in southern Alberta, but the government has taken no steps to enforce the findings of the committee. I claim that in Canada there is much room for the expansion of this industry. In 1933 the consumption of sugar in Canada was 871,590,054 pounds and of that only 131,000,000 was made from home grown raw material. While Great Britain and the United States manufacture around twenty per cent of their requirements from home grown raw material, we in Canada, a strictly agricultural country, make only fifteen per cent. So there is great potentiality for expansion of this industry. For instance, one factory in Canada, manufacturing only five per cent of the sugar consumed, employs 350 men in the factory, 2,200 workers in the fields, and 700 growers. So as a means of helping employment, because of its advantage in the rotation of crops, the help it would give to the transportation industry and to the live stock industry through the use of the tops and the pulp, the quantities of fuel, lumber and lime that would be required, and the benefit to the irrigated districts, this industry should receive more consideration. It has great potentialities for good in the economic life of the country.

As showing the fall in the consumption of sugar I may say that in 1930 each man, woman and child in Canada consumed 97·83 pounds; in 1931, 96·77 pounds; in 1932, 90·51 pounds, and in 1933, 80·47 pounds.

One other means that could be adopted in order to increase purchasing power would be an adjustment of exchange rates. Here I would point out that the primary producers of this country have been impoverished by adverse exchange rates during the last few years. When Great Britain went off the gold standard Canada did not follow, and the result has been that during all those years the British pound in Canada has been worth $3.60, $3.80, $4 and up to $4.87, whereas in the countries that compete with us in agricultural products in the markets of the world—Denmark, Australia and the Argentine—the British pound has been worth $6, $6.10 and even up to $7. These countries have thus been able to undersell us and take from us our markets in oriental countries.

Now we come to the reform measures which have been brought down at this session. Such reforms as the unemployment insurance bill, the forty-eight hour week, the weekly day of rest, the minimum wage, are all right in themselves but they are of no immediate help to the people who are in the greatest distress at the present time; they are not intended to be. In my opinion the greatest reform of all was that put into operation by the Liberal government when they were in power; I refer to the Old Age Pensions Act of 1927. By it men and women of seventy years of age, subject to certain conditions, can get a pension of $20 a month for the rest of their lives. This brings comfort and security to them in their declining years and is a small recognition of what they have contributed to the welfare of this country. I have seen many people approaching the sunset of their lives made happy by the sense of security which that pension has brought them. We spent last year $12,314,000 on old age pensions. According to the last census statistics there were in Canada 344,907 people over seventy years of age. Of people over sixty we have 870,000, and if the same proportion qualified, pensions could be given to those over sixty at an annual cost of $31,047,600. Again if the veterans' allowance were changed so that the age of entitlement was fifty instead of sixty, it would cost $7,500,000 instead of $2,500,000. We have many different kinds of pensions in Canada. I believe in the idea of having pensions or dividends, for a very definite reason. We have judges' pensions, civil service pensions, and many other kinds. It seems to me that these should be reviewed, with the purpose of seeing to it that those who have the best organization and are in the best position to press their claims do not necessarily obtain the best treatment. I believe in the idea of giving dividends, because in no other way can purchasing power be put into the hands of a deserving class of people. We want these people to have purchasing power; we want them to have a reasonable standard of living, and in no other way can that be accomplished. Everyone will agree that the average man should carry insurance, also that if he can he should contribute to an old age pension, but there is a large class who find that quite impossible. It is hard for us to imagine a state in which all have the same degree of comfort; owing to the difference in our endowments some are better providers than others, and fortune does not smile with equal favour upon all. This condition of poverty for some has always been regarded as inevitable. Those of us who found ourselves in that position had either to work through or around it or to endure it. But I find in a book by J. A. Spender these words:

> The self-consciousness which recognizes poverty as a curable evil is of comparatively recent growth, and may well be held hereafter to have been the most beneficent of all the changes of thought in the nineteenth century.

If we are to regard poverty as a curable condition we must make some preparations for curing it.

To whom should dividends be given? I would say first to the blind. We are all glad to know that at least some of the blind people are likely to get a pension in the very near future. I would say, second, to the fathers and the mothers who have children who should be at school. No one wishes to see young boys and girls forced out into the hard work of life when they should be in school. I would say, in the third place, to those who cannot provide sanitary homes for their families; to the under-privileged; to those who have given meritorious service to their country; to the disabled. Let us suppose the bread winner of the family is disabled; had he been killed his wife would have received the mother's allowance and would live in comfort, but as it is the disabled head of the family is left at home to be dependent upon charity. Then most particularly I would say that when men and women have reached a certain age they are entitled to a pension if they will retire from the labour market and make way for the younger men and women who are growing up. You may destroy the morale of a young person by a pension, but you would not destroy the morale of a person sixty or over.

Now, why should dividends be given? Because the classes of persons to whom I suggest they should be given are citizens of a solvent country and are entitled to share in its natural resources. During the last fifty years great changes have taken place; machines have been invented; there have been advances in scientific thought. Drudgery is no longer necessary to the extent that it was, and more time should be given to leisure and to artistic pursuits. Dividends would give people an opportunity for enjoyment, and their cultural heritage is their claim on a share of Canada's assets.

Then the question is where the money would come from. If a war broke out to-morrow the money would be forthcoming, and peace has its emergencies no less than war. Again, if we are to say that first things should come first, as my hon. friend from Ontario (Mr. Moore) has said, and if we are to put forward a definite national purpose, what better objects could we have? Could we not divert some of the money now being used for the construction of barracks or public works, which we do not need, and devote it to these worthy veterans who would make good use of it and to whom it would be a great blessing? Then, while the business people of this country are taxed almost to the limit, at the present time there are pools of wealth which have been accumulated by special privilege, by the watering of stock and things of that kind. Those pools should be found and taxed. A slight increase in business would mean a great increase in the revenue of the country.

Then there is one other source to which we should look for money. We have in this country a central bank, which we on this side of the house desired to be owned by the government. The governor of that central bank has been given something like $107,000,000 in gold. According to the regulation that amount of gold would provide currency to the extent of $420,000,000 at a valuation of $20.67; if the valuation were put at $35 it would increase that amount of currency by three-quarters, yet in Canada to-day we have only $220,000,000 in currency and of that amount only about $35,000,000 is actually in circulation. So surely we should look to the central bank to provide some of this money, and more and more as time goes on, because of the assets that have been given to it. That could be done without the security of government warrants bearing three per cent interest.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would say that in the last analysis the object, the aim and the end of all legislation should be to make conditions better in the homes of the people of this country, and we in this parliament should not vote for anything unless it will make those conditions better. I say the younger men and women of this country are crying loudly for equality of opportunity. All are calling for greater equalization of wealth and for the stamping out of selfishness and greed in high places. If we are to be worthy of the age in which we live we must try to preserve democracy, personal initiative, liberty and freedom, and if we are to be true custodians we must guard what has been attained by the long, long struggles of the past.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. F. T. SHAVER (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, I observe that many hon. gentlemen opposite desire to have the question put, but there yet remain a few of us on this side who, having held our peace for quite a considerable time, desire to express our opinions.

I am sure that while many congratulations have been extended to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) upon the able and comprehensive way in which he has explained the financial position of Canada and upon the budget which he has presented to the house, we all agree that he well deserves those congratulations, to which I desire to add my own. I think the Minister of Finance not only deserves the congratulations of the members of this house; I believe he deserves the thanks of the Canadian people for the very efficient way in which, during the last few years, he has handled the difficult portfolio which he holds.

I trust that the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Gershaw), who preceded me, will pardon me if I do not refer to his remarks at any length. It is always a pleasure to listen to the hon. gentleman; he is always fair, moderate and courteous in debate, but there is one point to which I should like to refer. Once again the hon. member brought up the question of the beet sugar industry, which I presume is quite a considerable industry in his constituency. I give my hon. friend credit for being interested in that industry; I think any member of this house who has in his constituency an industry which employs a number of people should not be ashamed to rise in the house and stand up for those people. But as I mentioned last year it seems rather strange that the hon. member should expect some particular consideration to be given that industry, aid by way of bonuses, assistance by way of reduced freight rates or something else, while at the same time he finds fault because the textile industry, which gives employment to several thousand people in my constituency, receives protection against the textiles which would be dumped into Canada from every other country in the world if that protection did not exist.

There were a few high lights in the budget speech of the Minister of Finance to which I should like to refer briefly, because to me they seem very important, since they indicate that conditions are improving. There was the fact that the physical volume of business was 48·5 per cent above the low point of the depression; that the League of Nations' comparison of increases in industrial production from January, 1933 to the end of 1934 placed Canada in first position with an increase of 46·2 per cent; that last year our field crops increased in value by $91,000,000 as compared with 1933; that there was a marked increase in mineral and forestry production and an increase of 65,000 in employment over 1933, with an increase of over 340,000 as compared with the low point of the depression. It was gratifying also to note that Canada still occupies fifth place in export trade; that there was an increase in trade during the eleven months period amounting to $169,000,000 and a favourable trade balance for the same period of $134,000,000. It is also gratifying to note that the good effects of the empire agreements are still making themselves felt, as evidenced by the fact that our export trade with the United Kingdom increased in 1934 by 52 per cent as compared with 1932.

Many hon. gentlemen opposite have urged the necessity of holding a general election as soon as possible, and that point was also mentioned by the hon. gentleman who preceded me; as a matter of fact it was his first point. It did seem to me that this evening my hon. friend spoke with a rather greater degree of pessimism than he usually shows when speaking in this house. It appeared to me that the idea of an immediate general election—and no doubt the possible effects of that general election—had saturated his whole consciousness to such an extent that he exhibited an extreme feeling of pessimism. While we are all aware of the fact that this is the last session before a general election, we know that the electors throughout the country from one end of Canada to the other are beginning to consider, and no doubt already have considered, the issues upon which this election will be fought. It seems to me that the electors are asking themselves, perhaps not in express terms but in their minds, certain basic questions with regard to the government of the country. It is quite natural that the electors should ask themselves about the record of the government appealing to them for support. The budget which has been presented gives answers to many of these questions. The first question the electors will be asking from now until election day—and it is the most important question they will have to answer—is this: "Has the present government administered the affairs of Canada with honesty, efficiency and economy?" To this question I believe any person who has studied the situation carefully or has reviewed thoroughly and dispassionately the record of the government must give an affirmative answer.

The Minister of Finance was able to point to a reduction in the interest rate on our funded debt, and a civil service reduction amounting to 12,700—which was effected without working any hardship upon civil servants—and a consequent saving in salaries of over $12,000,000. The fact that the per capita basis of controllable expenditure was last year practically the same as in the year 1913-14, before the war, is the best evidence that the government which has been conducting the affairs of Canada since 1930 has administered those affairs with the most rigid economy.

Hon. members opposite have spoken about the increase in the public debt. We admit that; but they did not for a moment consider the fact that other countries in the world have increased their public debt. They did not consider Canada's public debt from the standpoint of comparison with the debt of other nations. They seem to have forgotten the wealthy nation to the south of us, I suppose the wealthiest nation in the world, which has now before congress a work relief bill amounting to nearly five billion dollars, which will have the effect of increasing the debt of that country to thirty-four billion dollars, or nine billions more than the peak of the war debt. We are informed, from very reliable sources, that there are now 20,000,000 people in the United States supported either in whole or in part by public funds. This is a much greater proportion than that existing in Canada. Compared with our great sister nation we are only small and comparatively undeveloped. Yet, in all these respects, we are in a much better position than is the United States.

The next question the electors will ask, and to which they will deserve a clear and definite answer, is this: "Is the present government responsible for the depression?" To hear the observations of some hon. members opposite, hon. members who utter lurid fulminations against the government, one would be led to believe that the present government was responsible for the depression not only in Canada but in every country of the world. Yet they know and every Canadian citizen knows that the tide of the depression was running across Canada like a flood for almost a year before this government took office. The government of hon. members opposite were to a great degree responsible for that condition. For nine years they had floated along on the tide of world prosperity. For nine years they had seen the markets of the world closed against the products of Canada, and particularly was that true of the great market to the south of us. However, they did not do anything. They just sat quietly and drifted along. Therefore when the depression came, all those nations which were trying if possible to get rid of their surplus goods began to dump them into Canada. Immediately those nations, the buying power of which was cut off by the depression, stopped buying from Canada, with the result that in one year while hon. members opposite were still in power there was a drop in Canada's exports amounting to $243,958,005. In arriving at this figure I have compared the figure for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1929, with the figure for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1930. Hon. members opposite were still in power in those days, and even for a few months after that.

The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) referred to the reduction in exports which had occurred while the present government held office. If there had been a reduction of nearly a quarter of a billion dollars each year this government has held office our exports would have been nearly wiped out. There was not the same reduction in our imports, because with our low tariff barriers the nations which were trying to get rid of their goods found it possible to ship them into Canada at distress prices. The result was that the reduction in imports amounted to only $17,405,509. The total decrease in our foreign trade in that one year, while hon. members opposite were still in power, was $261,363,514. The favourable trade balance of $123,216,984 which we had in 1929 was changed in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1930, to an unfavourable balance of $103,335,512.

The next question the electors throughout the country will have the right to ask is this: "Has the present government taken the proper action to lighten the effects of the depression, and to help end it?" The first action—and it is the action for which I highly commend the government—is that when they took office they had the courage sufficiently to protect our industries, a protection to which they were entitled. There was an increase in the tariff on textiles. If one tariff has been attacked more than another by hon. members opposite, I would say it has been the textile tariff. When we consider that the primary textile industry in Canada is the main industry in 160 municipalities, comprising a total of 450 mills, and that in the last year it supported a pay-roll of $40,000,000, we will have some idea of the importance of the industry. Then, there was protection given against dumping; this is one of the main charges hon. members opposite lodge against the government. They say unfair dumping duties were placed against textiles from other countries. Hon. members will recall the classic example given by the late Minister of National Revenue, Mr. Ryckman, who told of an importing firm in this country which wanted to bring in 10,000 dozen children's dresses. The cost of production in Canada was one dollar per garment, but they could be imported at thirty-three cents each; therefore it was necessary to threaten a dumping duty of two hundred per cent to keep the dresses out. I am absolutely in favour of that practice because the manufacturing of 10,000 dozen dresses in Canada would give employment to a great many men and women, not only in the primary textile industry where materials are fabricated, but in the factories where the dresses were completed.

May I draw the attention of the house to the fact that the rayon industry has received a protection which has assisted it greatly. The woollen industry, which had almost been destroyed by hon. members opposite, has been restored. Then, the Canadian farmer has been given protection which has meant a great deal to him, a condition with which I shall deal in more detail in a few moments. Wider markets under the empire agreements have been offered. Trade agreements have been completed with France, Germany, Austria, Brazil and Poland.

The manner in which this government has handled unemployment relief, to which reference was made by the hon. member for Medicine Hat has been attacked vigorously by hon. members opposite. If they study the conditions in other countries they will find no government which has had the interests of the suffering, the destitute and the unemployed more at heart than has the government of Canada. Further, they will find no government which has made more practical efforts to relieve conditions. Last night we had an example of the type of attack made against the present government when the mayors from different Canadian cities met with members of parliament. They put forward the proposition that all unemployment relief should be financed by the dominion government, that the municipalities should be relieved entirely from any share in caring for the unemployed. A most unreasonable proposition, unreasonable on the face of it because, as anyone can see, if the dominion government were to advance all the cost of relief, immediately every municipality from the Atlantic to the Pacific would be grabbing to see who could get the most out of the dominion government's pocket. I was pleased to see that the mayor of a city located in my own constituency, the town of Cornwall, was one of two mayors who stood up in Montreal and said that they were not in favour of that sort of thing. The mayor of Cornwall said that it was not a fair or businesslike thing to suggest, and that so far as he was concerned he stood for the principle of the municipality paying a portion of the relief. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that if Mayor Parisien of Cornwall, who is a self made business man who has made good on his own initiative and energy, had been selected as one of the men to address us at the meeting last night, it would have made a greater impression on the members there assembled than the addresses of some of the impractical spellbinders who did speak.

The next question, Mr. Speaker, which the electors are asking is this: Has the government adopted adequate safeguards, so far as possible, against another depression? We know that the channels of foreign trade have been opened. We know that progressive measures of social justice have been introduced, and many of them put through, to a greater extent than at any other period in Canada's history, in order to meet the needs of to-day; for instance, the Bank of Canada Act, the marketing act, the Canadian Farm Loan Act, the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, the Unemployment Insurance Act, the Eight Hour Day Act, the One Day's Rest in Seven Act, the federal Minimum Wage Act, the setting up of an economic council, the price spreads investigation and the legislation which undoubtedly will arise therefrom. All these are measures to assist in securing social justice for all the citizens of our country. I approve of these measures, particularly because they seek to assist the farmers and the working people who are the very backbone of our national existence.

While it is true that the electors will ask questions concerning the government that will demand a clear and definite answer, they will also ask questions about the opposition. Do not let the opposition members any longer think, as they did a few months ago, that the people of Canada are going to accept them holus-bolus, and allow them to slip into office without considering their record at all and without their placing before the people a definite plan. The first question which the electors will ask of the opposition is what action did the government of the Right Hon. Mr. Mackenzie King take to avert the depression that was rolling over Canada for nearly a year before his government gave up office. As I said before, they took no action at all. They left our country exposed as a dumping ground for every other nation of the world, as the trade figures I have given indicate. For a considerable period of time they even denied that a depression existed, and in the setting up of relief measures the Prime Minister of that day refused aid to provinces which might happen to have a Conservative administration. The Canadian people passed judgment on the government of the right hon. gentleman opposite on July 28, 1930. The people considered their record; they looked at what they had done to assist our country in that crisis, and decided that the government should be turned out of office.

The next question they are going to ask is this: Has the Liberal opposition during the intervening period done anything to cause the electors to change their minds or alter the verdict they rendered on that occasion? What has the Liberal opposition done to assist Canada during the past four years? I think that every member will agree that the responsibility rests on every citizen to do his share, and from the individual standpoint every member of the opposition has done his share just as much as every member on the government side of the house. We are all interested as individuals in the welfare of our country, and we all do what we can. But what have hon. gentlemen opposite done as a party? They have had very many opportunities, headed as they are by a leader with long political experience, with a wide economic training, a training which entitled him to write a book on certain social questions which some claim is a masterpiece, and supported by many men sitting behind him of wide business training and long political experience. But what have they done? Those who have been present in the house during the last four years know how they have hampered and delayed the passing of legislation.

When tariff changes were brought in to assist the agricultural industry, they were opposed by hon. gentlemen opposite. When the empire agreements were brought into the house, one of the best measures which was introduced on behalf of the Canadian farmer, for two months hon. gentlemen opposite opposed them. When the marketing act was introduced, one of the most advanced pieces of legislation to assist the Canadian farmer ever introduced in the House of Commons, they opposed it. This has been their record all the way through.

Another question which the electors will ask is this: What constructive suggestions has the combined genius of the Liberal party to offer? We have heard only two from the right hon. leader of the opposition. One of them was lower tariffs, the old panacea which the Liberal party have always preached, and sometimes they have practised it and sometimes not. I am old enough to remember the time when they were preaching commercial union and free trade as they had it in England, and so forth, but there has always been that question of lower tariffs.

The other suggestion of the leader of the opposition was that the Liberal party want a commission to deal with unemployment. Those are the only two proposals that I have heard the right hon. leader of the opposition propound, although he did surround those two ideas with a great multiplicity of words.

What has been the attitude this session of hon. gentlemen opposite? They profess a belief in reform and then try to destroy the reform measures with constitutional difficulties. They vote with the government in the house, and then go out to their meetings and attack the government. The other evening a great meeting of the Liberal party was held in the Chateau Laurier, a banquet to their leader, and I opened the newspaper the next morning with a great feeling of anticipation. I expected to find the report of a constructive policy laid down by the leader of the opposition on that occasion, and what was his policy?

Mr. MUNN: The meeting was not called for that purpose.

Mr. SHAVER: That is perhaps a very good excuse, but at any rate we would have expected, and the people expected—several people so expressed themselves to me—that he would lay down a policy.

Mr. MUNN: You will get it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Don't worry, there will be a policy.

Mr. COTNAM: It's in cold storage yet.

Mr. SHAVER: The people expected that the leader of the opposition on that occasion would present a program. Well he had a program, but it was in three words—moderation, conciliation and toleration. Those are very pious platitudes to which every member will subscribe. We are all agreeable to these ideas of moderation, conciliation and toleration, but what practical suggestion is there in those words to cure the evils from which Canada is suffering?

I desire to speak for a very few moments about conditions in the county that I represent. I have done that on former occasions in the house, and I make no apology for it. As I said at the beginning, I think it is the duty of every member to be interested first of all in the affairs of his own constituency and then in the affairs of the country as a whole. Each constituency throughout Canada is interested in some particular phase of industry. In Stormont we have the advantage of having a constituency partly urban, including the manufacturing city of Cornwall, one of the most progressive and up to date cities in Canada, and partly rural, including four townships, a mixed farming section which is an especially good agricultural area. As I have pointed out in the house before, there has been a considerable expansion of industry in my county since this government came into power, and that expansion of industry has assisted in providing a home market for the farmers of my own county and of the surrounding counties as well. Where you have an industrial town with a population of 20,000 people and a payroll running into many thousands of dollars per week, there is a considerable quantity of farm products purchased.

I should like to make a short comparison between two reports of presidents of the board of trade of Cornwall. The first one was issued on February 6, 1930, and covered the year 1929. It gave the activities of eighteen industries. Hon. gentlemen opposite were still in power in 1929. There were 3,780 employees in these industries, a decrease of 280 from 1928. Salaries and wages paid amounted to $3,703,737, a decrease of $42,559 from the amount paid in 1928. The depression had already struck our town. The next report is dated March 8, 1935, and covers the year 1934. This report covers only sixteen industries, as the information concerning two had not been included. There were 4,173 employees, an increase of 651 over 1933. The wages and salaries paid amounted to $3,749,061.69.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): I suppose there is no one on relief in that town?

Mr. SHAVER: The number is comparatively small. The reason there are any on relief is the fact that the prosperity of Cornwall has been so widely advertised that many more people have flocked in than can be accommodated by the industries. The population of the town and its suburbs increased from 16,000 to 20,000 in that period. The buildings erected in 1929 had a value of $425,275 and the permits issued for 1934 had a value of $490,955. These figures do not include additions made to factories or new industries. I might mention that the two gentlemen from whose reports I have quoted are prominent business men of the town and are both members of the Liberal party. It cannot be said that their reports contain any partisan bias.

The rayon industry has been extended considerably since 1930 due to the increase in duty put through in the short session of 1930. Two extensions have been made to the plant at a cost of between five and six million dollars and the number of employees have increased from 1,000 in 1930 to 1,700. These employees receive good wages and work under excellent conditions. This industry like any other textile industry prior to 1930 had to face strong competition from Europe and especially from Japan. Were it not for the dumping duties imposed by this government, for which I give them great credit, it would have been impossible to meet this competition. Every hon. member knows how the Japanese manufacturers have been getting into the markets of the world. This is the case not only with cotton and rayon, but with other manufactures. When we realize that the wages paid in Japan in a textile industry range from $1.21 to $1.65 for a 60 to 72 hour week, we have some idea of the living conditions of the people. Japanese rayon yarn is selling to-day in Cuba for twenty-five cents per pound, which is less than half the cost of production in Canada.

There are three cotton mills in my constituency. These mills suffered considerably because of the tariff policies of hon. gentlemen opposite. In 1922 revisions were made in the tariff on textiles, and this occurred again in 1928. This brought about increasing importations from every cotton producing country in the world, which importations were greatly accelerated by the depression. This condition was remedied to a large extent by the specific duties which were added to the ad valorem duties at the short session of 1930. Because of the empire agreements a considerable portion of the textile goods imported from the United States was diverted to Great Britain and one large American firm found it advisable to erect a branch factory in Canada. In looking for the most suitable location they chose Cornwall. This industry now gives employment to 225 people.

The fine paper industry was benefited by the repeal of tariff item 1060 and the increased duty which was placed on magazines. I understand that one of the fine paper mills in my constituency is to erect an extension this summer. Men's and boy's clothing manufacturing was protected by the dumping duties put through by this government. The manufacturing of furniture, fibre conduits and steel beds has received protection because of the policies of this government. Canadian Industries Limited have found it advisable to erect a new plant in my constituency at a cost of a million dollars. This plant commenced operations a few weeks ago.

During the fall session of 1932 the right hon. leader of the opposition stated that if he were returned to power he would restore duties to what they were when he left office and increase the British preferential to fifty per cent of the general tariff. He amplified this statement during this session. He is reported on page 383 of Hansard as saying that the Liberal party will abolish the extravagant increases in the tariff made by the present administration. As I have pointed out already, the increases in the tariff and the dumping duties put into effect by this administration have proved life savers for industry, not only in my constituency but in other places throughout Canada. During the same debate the right hon. leader of the opposition stated that duties were so high that goods were not coming in from Great Britain. This argument has been used time and time again. I should like to give some figures to show how incorrect this statement is. I shall give the imports from Great Britain of cotton yarn and cotton piece goods. The figures are as follows:

Cotton Yarn

	Pounds
1930	1,505,900
1932	2,048,400
1934	4,097,100

Cotton Piece Goods

	Square yards
1930	32,423,100
1932	27,238,000
1934	63,821,000

While it may be true that a large part of these increases was due to a shifting from other countries to the United Kingdom, yet it seems to me that these imports have reached a stage where they are proving to be a considerable handicap to the Canadian manufacturer. I want to say quite frankly that I am opposed to the reduction of one and one half per cent in the excise tax on imports of cotton from Great Britain. I was opposed also to a similar reduction made last year. The Canadian cotton manufacturer has to pay a three per cent excise tax on his imports of raw cotton, on his imports of dyes and the other things which he needs, and it seems to me to be only fair that imports of cotton goods should pay the same tax, no matter from what country they come.

This government has given considerable assistance to the farmers of this country by way of tariff protection. This point has been dealt with by other hon. members, particularly by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil). The hon. member referred to the advantages accruing to the farmers of Canada by the shutting out of New Zealand butter. Hon. gentlemen opposite laugh very often when we mention New Zealand butter, but let us look at the facts. In 1930, 175,000,000 pounds of New Zealand butter were exported to the United Kingdom. That was the year in which they exported 40,000,000 pounds to Canada, but this country was never a large market for the New Zealand butter manufacturer. The United Kingdom was always his large market, the one upon which he depended to take the bulk of his butter export, so that he was always ready to accept from the Canadian buyer the United Kingdom price plus one cent a pound duty and another cent a pound added for other costs. The result was that at the time New Zealand butter was being flooded into our market, the Montreal price was always down within two or three cents, usually within two cents of the London price. I want to give a comparison of the average prices in 1934 and 1930. This is the average price for choice quality butter:

Montreal

Year	Average price cents
1930	31
1934	22.4

There had been a drop in the intervening period of 8·6 cents per pound.

New York

Year	Average price cents
1930	36.4
1934	25.2

A reduction in price of 11·2 cents.

London

Year	Average price cents
1930	29
1934	14.59 to 15.82 (average 15 cents)

Or a reduction of 14 cents a pound. So that the fact that New Zealand butter has been kept out of Canada owing to our getting the protection we have enjoyed for the last few years, has added at least three and possibly four or five cents at certain periods to the price of butter.

Reference has been made to hog prices. An hon. gentleman opposite not long ago compared the price of hogs in Chicago with the price at some points in Canada. I looked up the prices on the date mentioned, and I found that if you took the processing tax off the Chicago price, the result was almost the same as the price in Montreal. They have raised the price in the United States by artificial methods, first of all by destroying 6,000,000 hogs at a cost of $30,000,000 to the United States government, using most of those animals for fertilizer; by the processing tax and by arbitrary methods of restricting production. The price in Canada has been raised by the natural method of creating a wider and assured market in Great Britain. As an illustration of what that means, may I call attention to the fact that in 1930 our exports of bacon and ham to Great Britain amounted to 13,114,000 pounds, and in 1934 this had increased to the large total of 119,707,600 pounds.

The same thing is true of eggs. The fact that the Canadian farmer is receiving protection; that his market is not flooded with eggs from China and the United States, has brought about much better prices. Ever since the present government imposed the duties enjoyed by our egg producers, there has been an average annual spread between Montreal and Chicago prices of about ten cents per dozen in favour of Montreal.

What would be the result on our farm products if hon. gentlemen opposite came back into power? I assume if they remained true to the ideals they have proclaimed, they would reduce the duty on New Zealand butter. If they remained true to their ideals of lower duties, we would be flooded with farm products from every other country in the world.

With regard to the cheese industry, it is true that the price is very low, but as I pointed out last year it seems to me that if action were taken under the marketing act something could be done for the industry. A dairy products marketing scheme has been proposed by the national dairy council and the Canadian Farmers' Federation. This has been approved by the Ontario cheese patrons' association, and if it is endorsed by a sufficient number of farmers to put it into operation, it will undoubtedly have the effect of raising the price of cheese and other dairy products.

I see that my time is nearly up. Our Prime Minister just a few short weeks ago in his radio addresses sounded the clarion call of progress and reform to the Canadian people. That has made a striking appeal to the youth of our country, young men and women of high ideals, many of whom will be voting for the first time during the coming election. Those addresses have also appealed to all men of progressive thought who desire conditions improved, who have at heart the interests of their fellow men throughout the length and breadth of Canada. The illness of the Prime Minister has indicated to him, I am sure, and to those of us who sit on this side of the house, how much his efforts have really been appreciated by the Canadian people. There have been expressions of sympathy and good will all across this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, voicing the desire of the Canadian people that he may soon be restored to health. I am quite certain that it is also the earnest desire of perhaps not all the Canadian people but at least a fair majority of them that he may be enabled to serve his country as prime minister for at least another five years.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): With the hon. members who have preceded me, may I compliment the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) upon having so ably presented this year's budget in regard to which he has had a very difficult task. However with his great ability he presented that budget to the House of Commons and painted conditions in Canada in such colours that anyone who did not know the real situation might have thought all was well. I was interested also in listening to the critic of the opposition, the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston), who painted the other side of the picture and made it exceedingly blue. In criticizing the budget he moved an amendment which opens with the following words:

> This house regrets that the proposals submitted by the Minister of Finance on March 22 are entirely inadequate to meet the serious and acute situation prevailing in Canada.

Then in the second part of his amendment the opposition recommended that the people of Canada go to the polls to send back possibly another government. While we can agree entirely with the first part of the amendment, because the proposals in the present budget do not meet our problems, we certainly cannot see any good in supporting the second part, as it would have the effect, even if the opposition were returned at the polls, simply of putting them into power in place of the present government, and we are going to the polls anyway. I have had the honour of being in this house for fourteen years, and during the last five, although we have not agreed with many proposals the government have put forward, I must admit, to be fair with them, that they have put far more progressive legislation on the statute books in the last five years than the opposition did during their nine years' regime. Therefore, in considering the budget as presented by the Minister of Finance, we moved through the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote)—who presented our subamendment in a very able way—the following motion:

> This house regrets that the proposals submitted by the Minister of Finance on March 22 are entirely inadequate to meet the acute and serious situation prevailing in Canada and would appear to be based upon the assumption that poverty and debt are inevitable conditions within the country;
> And whereas the real and potential wealth of the nation, based upon our natural resources and our capacity to produce, is such as to make possible an abundant provision for all the requirements of our people;
> Therefore, this house is of the opinion that the government should take immediate action to insure the fullest and most equitable distribution possible of our socially-created wealth and that, as a first step in this direction, the measures which may be necessary to meet the pressing needs of the farmers and the unemployed should be financed by the social credit of Canada, thus avoiding a further increase in the debt burden of the country.

Anyone who has followed the situation in Canada at all during the past few years knows perfectly well that we have some very serious problems facing us, problems in relation to agriculture, railways, trade, health, debt, and taxation. It is for that reason that we saw fit to move our subamendment; we could not see anything in the purely negative amendment and we wished to submit something constructive. The government intimates in the budget that poverty and debt are inevitable. With this we do not agree. Real wealth in Canada to-day is greater than it has ever been. All across this country in after dinner speeches one hears time and time again of the wonderful potential wealth of Canada. There is too much lip service given to the potential wealth of the country and not enough real consideration of how that great wealth might be properly distributed. Our problem to-day, as so many hon. members admit, although they do not act upon it, is one of distribution, not of production. Physically we are a very rich nation; we are poor only financially. Under our present economy we are in the extraordinary position that the more we produce or the richer we become in physical assets the poorer we become financially. In other words the more we produce the more poverty we have, particularly in our urban centres.

Take for example the wheat problem; if next year we have a large crop and there is also a good crop in the rest of the world, our farmers will find themselves in a situation as bad as or worse than they are in to-day, because the price of wheat will go down far below the cost of production if something is not done to stop it. With our present possibilities of production, poverty in our midst is inexcusable. It is a social crime. And we have to admit that poverty is the mother of crime. I do not think for a moment that things are done perfectly in Great Britain, but I would remind the house that Great Britain discovered some years ago that if she could get rid of the extreme poverty that existed in some parts it would have the effect of getting rid of a great deal of crime. So she set to work to get rid of much of that extreme poverty, with the result that for several years she has been closing some of her gaols. Yet we in this young country, with a virile people, with great possibilities and enormous potential wealth, have actually been adding to our gaols instead of closing them. Last year, I think it was, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) admitted that the prison population had doubled in twelve months. Surely that situation is inexcusable considering the fact that we have in this country not only great real wealth but great potential wealth as well.

I want to refer to some legislation that has passed the house during this session and in previous sessions since 1930. I refer particularly to reforms with reference to so-called labour. We have put through a minimum wage bill, a maximum hours bill, an unemployment insurance bill, and some others. I supported them because I think they are good, and I welcome the effort to correct abuses. But I ask: what of the farmer? Some legislation has been passed with regard to the farmer, but I remind the house that the legislation that I have just mentioned will have the effect of increasing prices. It will I hope have the effect of increasing wages to the employees, but this only adds to taxation. It will affect those who are on the land and who have difficulty in passing on taxation. Then we have legislation in regard to agriculture; we have the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, an act passed in self-preservation because it was feared that if something like that was not done we would lose large numbers of people off the land, and that would be a national loss. It is the purpose of that act to cut down the debts of the farmers, and I think it is working all right, only too slowly; at the present pace it will take ten years to get all the debts written down to where they should be. I might remind the house here that farmers' debts have been doubled in weight owing to deflation. Their position has been made much worse on account of what has been termed the sound money policy; for dear money meant cheap goods. Then we have the Canadian Farm Loan Amendment Act, which will enable the farmer to get into debt, but at a reduced rate of interest. Then we have the National Products Marketing Act, in which there are great possibilities if the farmers will only take advantage of it and organize. Then for one year there was a bonus given on wheat of five cents a bushel, amounting to about $12,000,000. Added to that there has been some relief given in the drought areas, particularly in Saskatchewan, out of a total of relief money spent by this parliament of $175,000,000. I give the government credit for stabilizing the price of wheat; it was a good action and I think it has had beneficial results. But I would remind the house that it benefited not the farmer only but the whole business life of Canada; so it cannot be said that that was legislation passed specially for the benefit of the farmer. I think most people will agree that the greater part of the taxes come from the first six inches of the soil, and it is very difficult to pass them on.

We are to have the report of the price spreads and mass buying commission; as it is not yet before the house I cannot debate it, but I hope there will be some legislation based on the findings of that commission which will be of benefit to the farmer.

We have had in Ottawa during the last two days large numbers of mayors representing the cities of Canada. I attended their meeting last night and listened to them again to-day. They want the federal government to take over all direct relief. If the federal government does that, it is simply a matter of transferring the administration, but it is not going to reduce taxation, that is if the money is found in the orthodox way; for the taxable people are the same. However, they may expect, and I hope the expectation will be fulfilled, that the government will make use of the national credit through the central bank and provide the money in that way and not by taxation.

May I refer for a moment to some of the problems that face this country. We in this corner of the house have stressed the serious problems of debt and taxation. I want to remind the house again that the biggest single item we have to pay is the interest on our national debt, amounting to about $140,000,000 this year. In addition, of course, we have the debts of provinces and municipalities, as well as private debts, in a somewhat similar ratio. The system itself is debt creating. I notice the Minister of Finance mentioned that sixty-three per cent of our total expenditures goes to pay interest, pensions and subsidies, but most of that money goes in interest. May I remind the house once more that since the war we have paid out in interest alone no less than $1,900,000,000, but we have not been able to pay any principal. Figures I received the other day indicate that of the debt of over $2,000,000,000 created during the war years, no less than $1,393,000,000 was in the form of tax exempt bonds. I do think something should be done in this regard. I know that any new bonds that have been issued have not been exempt from taxation, but there is no reason why the people who bought those tax-free bonds should not bear their share of the losses that have occurred in the last five or six years.

I should like to refer for a moment to another subject on which I have spoken in this house several times; I refer to the matter of health which is becoming an increasing problem in these times when many people are not living on a decent standard. I should like to remind the house that we have a daily sick list in Canada of no less than 180,000 people. Of course this costs a great deal, taking into consideration hospital and doctor bills, loss of work and so forth; in round figures, the annual loss is about $300,000,000. Yet we are only spending about $6,000,000 annually in connection with health, taking into account both federal and provincial expenditures. I make the plea that it would be a good investment to spend more money in preventive medicine and so keep down the loss from sickness. Uncertainty of employment, poverty, debt and the fear of penury and penniless old age all have the effect of developing ill health, and they are doing so at the present time.

Usually in my speech on the budget I have something to say with respect to the matter of immigration, and again I want to state my position in that regard, because I believe the subject to be important. I am not against immigration if it consists of volunteer immigrants of the type we desire, who come into Canada after a real mental and physical test, but I am absolutely against spending public money to bring people here by flowery promises with the result that many of them are disappointed and go back to their own country and Canada is given a bad name. I should like to give the house some figures with regard to the number of people brought into this country between 1901 and 1931. In that period we brought in no less than 5,084,000 people, large numbers of whom were placed on the land. Unfortunately, due to disappointments of one kind and another, we lost no less than 3,409,000 of those immigrants, leaving a balance of 1,675,000. To bring that number of people to Canada cost this country no less than $50,000,000. There is no reason at all why Canada should not support a much larger population than we have at the present time, but so long as we have 500,000 people unemployed and have over one million on public relief it seems to me that it would be absurd indeed to try to force people into this country.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, too many people in trying to solve this problem have looked upon unemployment as a cause rather than as a result. Until we realize that it is the result of certain factors and until we find out what those factors are we will not solve the problem. More people all the time are realizing that it is brought about very largely through the mechanization of industry, but we should remember that by this agency we are able to speed up production. That is so much the case that we find ourselves fifth among the exporting nations of the world. The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth questioned that statement and said we were eighth among the nations of the world. Even if that be so it is not a bad position. But through the mechanization of industry we find that we can produce much more goods with less man power, and that being so there is no reason why we should increase our pauper population. We should realize that with our powers of production, which have been brought about not by one or two individuals but by the progress of society that has been made in past years, and that there is a cultural heritage coming to every one of us, and if we can produce this material wealth so easily we should find ways and means of distributing it. Unfortunately we lack purchasing power with which to buy these goods, and various methods have been adopted to get rid of them. Perhaps one of the most generally adopted methods is that of selling goods on time, with people going into debt for them. That has only a temporary effect, and every time a period of deflation develops the situation is made so much worse. Then some people suggest that we should export the surplus. It does not pay a country to export goods unless it is prepared to import goods, and allowing for what Canada owes in interest and for services, there is no advantage at all in exporting more goods than we import, for if we do we simply give the goods away. People seem to eulogize the idea of sending goods out to supply foreign countries, without giving a great deal of thought to the necessity and the wisdom of supplying our own people. I do not know just what part of our total trade is made up by our internal trade, but I think it is something like seventy-six per cent. We know that our people are not living at a very giddy height or on a very high average, so it stands to reason that if we found the means to do so we could consume within the country a vastly greater amount of goods and services than we are consuming at the present time.

The budget that has been presented by the Minister of Finance, which is similar to other budgets presented not only by him but by other ministers as well, seems to stress the matter of debt and rather develops the scarcity complex. The country might be thought to be in a state of siege when you hear many people in high places advocate that people should work harder and harder in order to produce more and more, while at the same time they are cautioned to consume less and less. In other words it is the process of tightening the belt. I think those suggestions are entirely out of date. We have entirely different conditions from those we had in past years or past generations, and we have to find newer remedies. In Canada, with our vast productive possibilities and our smaller consumptive realities, it would seem that we are afraid of allowing the Canadian people to trade among themselves. What is needed is more spending money, more money in the pockets of our people. One way to supply that deficiency would be to circulate money through various government works such as those which at the present time are being carried on on a small scale. I understand the government has plans to enter upon a more extensive works program. This is all to the good, although it may not be the best way to put money in the pockets of our people. For it has the effect of temporarily quickening the business cycle and as soon as the program has been completed we drop down to a condition of slackness or deflation. When referring to public works may I remind the government that there are no less than 25,000 houses in Montreal classed as unsanitary by the board of health of that city, and a similar condition obtains in Toronto. The same story would be true of many of our larger cities. While referring to the cities I do not for one moment wish to leave the impression that people in the country, and particularly those on the prairies, are housed satisfactorily or in houses people may be proud to call their homes. Much more work could be done in connection with such houses, and particularly in supplying the inside conveniences.

In the problem of income or purchasing power we have two situations. First of all we have the inequality of income which has been brought about through various reasons which, had I time to do so, I could enumerate. All hon. members know there is great inequality of income, as shown by income tax returns. Secondly, there is at all times a shortage of money necessary to buy the total of goods on the market. That is an all important factor.

I am pleased to note that in the present budget the government has increased the tax on larger incomes. It could have gone further, but what it has done is certainly a step in the right direction. In 1927 and 1928 similar action should have been taken, but in those years instead of increasing the tax we found that the tax on incomes was reduced by ten per cent. When all is said and done our problem is to a great extent a money problem. Money is a man made device, made for a certain reason, namely to get away from the slow and tedious system of bartering. The purpose is to speed up the exchange of goods and services between one person or one body and another. To the extent that it does not fulfil this function, just to that extent does it fail. At the present time, with on the one hand our vast riches in potential and real wealth, and on the other the great numbers of poor and many approaching conditions of poverty, we must admit that money has failed. Otherwise we are enslaving ourselves to money instead of making money the slave to mankind.

I should like to support most heartily the suggestion made by the hon. member for Macleod to the effect that all people over the age of sixty years should, if they wish, be pensioned. I support the hon. member without hesitation because it is a fact that in Canada to-day large numbers of people cannot obtain work. Among those numbers we find many in the prime of life who would be better at work and are anxious to get it. The census figures prepared in 1931 show that 460,000 boys under nineteen years of age were at work. We know that about 200,000 boys and girls are graduating from schools each year with little hope of work. Yet, at the same time we find that more than 80,000 people over the age of seventy years are still at work. Surely it would be good business to give the people who have reached that age the benefit of a pension. Let them take things a little easier; let them enjoy life and have a little rest in their later years, thereby giving the younger generation a chance to earn a living.

Again I state that we are physically wealthy; we are only financially poor. Until we recognize that fact and bring about a definite change, which we could do, we will continue to look upon ourselves as a poor country. If I were to make one or two recommendations I would say this: In making up our national bookkeeping we should pay more attention to our total production in relation to our total consumption. Each year when the budget is brought down we should consider for instance, the total production of Canada plus the total of imports plus the total appreciation, and against those figures put the total consumption plus the total of exports plus the total depreciation. If we subtracted one column from the other we would find a great difference between the two. In my opinion there is no reason in the world why, with the power parliament has, we should not, through the central bank, monetize to a safe extent the difference between those two amounts. We could open a national credit account, monetizing our social credit, just the same as a bank to-day monetizes the credit of an individual when it makes a loan to a client.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): This parliament has no control over the central bank.

Mr. SPENCER: It has, if it wants to exercise it.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Not unless we change the present act.

Mr. SPENCER: I shall have a word to say about that in a minute. The bureau of statistics has placed the total wealth of Canada at about thirty billion dollars. Our liabilities are about half that amount. In that figure I have not placed any value upon man power, although if you take the value of man power, a value which is worked out by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, we would find a very high figure. There is no reason why we should not put a value on man power, because we take a great deal of trouble to save life, and spend great amounts of money at times in an attempt to increase the population of our country.

[Mr. Spencer.]

I believe that henceforth the federal government should stop borrowing. I can see no reason in the wide world why we should borrow on our own credit through a third party, and a private commercial house at that. What is social or public credit? I would say it is the joint creation of (1) a stable government; (2) a functioning industry, and (3) a consuming public. With any one of the above missing there could be no such thing as public credit. To-day we have a stable government, and I hope we always will have. We have a functioning industry, but we have not a consuming public, except to about one-half our proper capacity. The formation of a national credit account—the mechanization of it—would be no more difficult than the creation of a loan in a commercial bank. In support of my contention may I quote one or two authorities. J. M. Keynes, world famous economist, states:

> There can be no doubt that all deposits are created by the banks.

Here is another quotation from the Right Hon. Reginald McKenna, chairman of the Midland bank, and at one time chancellor of the British exchequer. He says:

> I am afraid the ordinary citizen will not like to be told that the banks can, and do, create and destroy money. The amount of money in existence varies only with the action of the banks in increasing or decreasing deposits.... They who control the credit of the nation direct the policy of governments, and hold in the hollow of their hands the destiny of the people.

I am sorry I have not time to cite further, although I have here some excellent quotations that I should like to give to the house.

The central bank could be used, and I think we should amend a certain clause in the Bank of Canada Act which would allow it to monetize the credit of this nation, not at the limited amount of to-day, but limited only by the fullest needs of the Canadian people. This particular account that I suggest could be increased by the extent to which our production increases out of proportion to our consumption. In other words, the more the people of Canada produce of worth while goods that are wanted, the more real wealth they would have, and they could monetize it and draw upon it to meet their needs. If there was a slacking off in production the addition to the national credit account would be reduced thereby.

The greater the production of a nation the higher its standard of living should be, but unfortunately under our present orthodox thinking the more we produce in most things the more poverty we have around us, the more unemployed there are to feed and look after, and in many respects the poorer are we financially. Every precaution, of course, could be and should be taken against any dangers of inflation, and I have not the slightest doubt in my mind that that could be taken care of.

The proposal I have put forward, which I might say is not new, is one on which I stand absolutely. It is criticized by those who have not looked into the subject, on the ground that it would lead to inflation, but I am confident that we could quite safely guard against that difficulty.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I remind the house that the solution of the problems I have mentioned are entirely in our own hands. This parliament is all powerful. If it has not got the power, it can take it. The crisis through which we have been passing in the last five years is a man made crisis, and as a man made crisis can be man mended. Parliament will be held responsible to get us out of our present difficulties. If it fails to do so, the fault lies with parliament, and no doubt parliament will be blamed by the people of this country.

Mr. ERRICK F. WILLIS (Souris): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) has asked the very important question, what about the farmer? To that largely I desire to address myself in my remarks this evening, and particularly so because of the remarks made by the official financial critic, the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston), in regard to the wheat situation in this country.

May I point out to him and to the house that before this government came into power the wheat markets of the world were already closed. On August 1, 1930, the duties against our wheat going to Italy were 86 cents, France 85 cents, Germany 97 cents, Greece 56 cents, the United States 42 cents and Japan 34 cents. May I indicate to the house as well that these duties are so high that it matters not whether you increase them by two dollars; the result is precisely the same. They are so high already that no wheat can enter those countries. In addition to that, there were restrictions on imports in Europe, and quotas, which made it entirely impossible for us to ship our wheat to those countries.

Mr. John I. McFarland was appointed to handle the wheat situation on behalf of the central selling agency on November 24, 1930. At that time the price of wheat in Canada was the lowest in the history of this country. It was then hovering around fifty cents a bushel. The federal government immediately guaranteed the banks against any loss in supporting the market, on behalf not only of the western wheat grower but of the people of Canada from one end to the other. Since 1930 the federal government have been supporting the wheat market. In 1934 not only did they continue that support but they pegged the price at seventy-five cents a bushel for No. 1 northern at Fort William. By that pegging, in addition to the support which they had previously given, they increased the price at that time by sixteen cents a bushel over the price of the previous year.

May I point out that at the present time European imports are the lowest they have been in thirty years, due to the tariffs which were put on as I have indicated, to restrictions in regard to quotas, and to the milling regulations.

May I point out to those in this house and in the country who advance the argument that we should dump our wheat on the markets of the world, take our loss and get out of the market, as the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth indicated on behalf of the official opposition, that forced sales of wheat still form part of the world's carry-over whether that wheat is here or whether it is in Europe. It matters not how much wheat we sell to Europe; if it is held in Europe in store it still remains part of the world's carry-over; it still remains hanging over the markets of the world. Therefore forced sales do not, as has been indicated, reduce the carry-over.

It will be well within the memory of this house that Mr. John I. McFarland appeared before the banking and commerce committee in 1934 and gave evidence with regard to his operations. Many on the opposition side indicated that he was gambling in the wheat of this country and that he was gambling with the taxpayers' money. May I quote what Mr. McFarland said at the conclusion of his evidence, when he had convinced most of those people who stood before him, and who previously were his critics. He said:

> But if you will only realize that in these three years, or a little more than three years, the western farmer has marketed upwards of one billion bushels of wheat—and he has marketed that under these operations—and again nobody knows to what extent he has profited on a billion bushels; I do not know what he has profited, but $100,000,000 would be a small guess, and all that has gone to the benefit not of the western farmer only, but to Canada as a whole.
> How can anybody complacently stand by and see the western farmer eliminated when he has contributed some 31 or 32 per cent of the external trade of this country for the last twenty years? Could we stand by and let him be eliminated in a world that has barricaded itself against other exporting countries to support their farmers?

Apparently the contention of the press in some parts of this country, and apparently the contention of some hon. members who sit opposite, would be that that should be done.

May I again quote Mr. McFarland, perhaps the world's greatest wheat expert, who in a speech at Moose Jaw on February 14 last said:

> Men say, "Let the price go down to any disastrously low level to which speculators may drive it," and proudly boast that that would reduce acreage and production. Yes, my friends, they are correct, that will do it, and would have done it, in Canada, and with a vengeance. Such men do not consider how cruelly unfair it would have been to our citizens to leave our farmers to fight such an unequal contest, when all other exporting countries have been assisting their farmers in various ways, so as to maintain them on the land.

And again:

> With the world wheat situation nearer to normal than at any time for the past six years; with present subsoil moisture conditions on this continent far below normal, we should not regard a probable carryover in Canada of 80 million bushels or even more, as a calamity to be avoided by now attempting to force our wheat on world markets at a price below what it has cost to produce.

And he concludes:

> No one will ever be able to estimate the great benefits the producer, and the people in general, have received as a result of the government's support of the price structure on the last five crops of Canada, which produced the grand total of 1,750,000,000 bushels. I want to say to you, without prejudice, and based upon my inside observations of our own market conditions, in conjunction with those of the world's market in general, that in the absence of government support, it is clear to me that there would have been such chaos, that I am sure I would not care to have been a resident in these parts of the world.

If I am correct in interpreting the arguments of hon. members opposite, that is precisely what they desire us to do. They say that this wheat should be dumped upon the markets of the world at a time when there is a shortage and at a time when we will soon have an advantage because of the quality of our product. They are suggesting that we sacrifice the farmers of this country by throwing upon the markets of the world their wheat at a price below the cost of production. The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth is one of those who advocates this action. I would not have the temerity to speak with regard to fish, which he may understand, and I do not think he should have the temerity to speak as a wheat expert.

[Mr. Willis.]

In addition to carrying the wheat crop for the last five or six years this government has sent out additional trade commissioners who have been selling wheat in a way it has never been sold before. Then there was the bonus paid on wheat of five cents per bushel for one year. As a result of this bonus a total of $12,706,000 was paid in one year to the farmers of western Canada. It is true that some of the farmers did not receive this, but I think it is the first time in the history of Canada that a government has had the courage to bonus the western wheat producers. This is also the first government which has had the courage to indicate that such a bonus was to compensate for conditions brought about by tariffs. Because of the Ottawa agreements we have a six per cent preference on wheat entering Great Britain, and this has permitted us to sell large quantities which otherwise would not have been sold.

I have a vivid recollection of the campaign of 1930 and I remember the former Minister of Education of the province of Manitoba going about my constituency and indicating to the people that if the Conservative party was returned to power they would never get the Crowsnest rates on the Hudson Bay railway. That was one of the first things done by this government but as a result of the speeches made by that gentleman—no doubt there were dozens of others saying the same thing—hundreds of votes were lost to me and I suppose thousands of votes were lost to other hon. members.

I should like to refer to the question raised by the hon. member who has just preceded me (Mr. Spencer). He asked: What of the farmer? I should like to direct the attention of the house to the functions of the federal government in connection with relief and particularly in connection with agricultural relief. The municipality has the first responsibility with regard to agricultural relief. The municipality has the machinery to handle the situation, the councillors and other representatives of the municipality are on the ground and know the situation. When the municipality is unable to handle the situation it must of necessity go to the province. Why is this? It is because the province created the municipality; the municipality obtains its legislative authority from the province. There is no connection whatever between the municipality and the federal government. The federal government begins to function when the province asks for assistance. At that time the necessary advances are made to the provinces with which to handle relief. The federal government does not handle relief, and particularly agricultural relief.

The first policy of the federal government with regard to relief was that of public works. My constituency includes all the drought area of the province of Manitoba, and in one year some $46,000 was spent on public works in that area. Subsequently the public works were carried on under the joint responsibility of the provincial and federal governments. There are many who say that this should have been continued, and I should like to state to the house why this policy was discontinued by the federal government. I should like to qoute from two speeches which were made in this house. It will be remembered that in 1932 a dominion-provincial conference was held in Ottawa. The provincial premiers met here in secret but I shall quote from two speeches made in the House of Commons about that time. On May 4, 1932, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) was introducing an act with respect to relief, and he referred to the dominion-provincial conference in the following words:

On April 8 the provincial premiers came to Ottawa and on what remained of that day and throughout the following day the whole situation was considered with a view to checking up on the work accomplished and to formulate a course for the future. I think I am stating it fairly when I say the premiers and those representing the provinces were unanimous in the decision that the provinces and the municipalities within those provinces were financially unable for any length of time to carry on the program of public works projected, or to carry out the scheme formulated since the last session of parliament.

That is why the public works program was discontinued at that time. On November 22 of the same year the Prime Minister was speaking on unemployment, and he is reported at page 1455 of Hansard for 1932-33 as follows:

This I should like to say, not to anticipate what will be said by the Minister of Labour at the appropriate time. Last spring the government called a meeting of representatives of the provinces, who concluded that it was not expedient to continue their efforts for relief along the lines that had prevailed theretofore. They decided they would have recourse to direct relief. The conference was very well attended; half a dozen of our ministers were there, and that conclusion having been arrived at, the action indicated was taken.

That is why we have been granting relief rather than carrying on a program of public works within the municipalities and the provinces. The amount of relief given is measured by the need of the locality. Those areas in the west where there has been the greatest drought for the greatest number of years naturally receive the greatest attention. In Manitoba we have an area known as drought area A where there has been no crop for five years. This area was defined at a conference held in Ottawa at which I had the honour of attending. The provincial treasurer of Manitoba attended and I accompanied him at the request of the provincial government. Subsequently another area known as drought area B was defined, at another meeting at which I was not present. Those areas have been defined and treatment is given in that way and loans are advanced by the federal government for the purpose of supplying seed grain. This government pays one-half the freight on cattle, horses and equipment going out of that area, and also on their being ready to return to it the federal government pays fifty per cent of the freight. It pays fifty per cent of the freight on hay which is trucked into the area.

The loans for seed grain constitute one of the difficulties at the present time. The federal government has advanced recently to Manitoba, for the purpose only of the drought areas, these amounts:

November 15 last..	$75,000
December 10 last..	75,000
February 9 last..	75,000

And under a recent order in council dated March 25, there has again been advanced to Manitoba the sum of $275,000. Thus there has been advanced to that province since November 15 last, for the drought areas only, the sum of $500,000, which is to be used for seed grain, feed and relief, and for present purposes that amount seems quite adequate. In addition to that the federal government has, as I have indicated, paid for freight in regard to feed and equipment for the drought areas a sum amounting to $77,264. That in itself is a large sum. In toto, for relief and other purposes, the federal government has advanced to Manitoba now between $13,500,000 and $14,000,000, which at the present time has not been paid back. There are those who say from time to time: What is the federal government doing in regard to direct relief? May I point out what it is doing in those areas in Manitoba. First in regard to direct relief it is paying its one-third; it is advancing to Manitoba the one-third payable by that province, and it is advancing to Manitoba the other one-third which the province in turn hands over to the municipalities. The resultant picture is therefore that the federal government is paying outright one-third; it is lending the other two-thirds, and has as a consequence one hundred per cent of the responsibility in that regard. As I have said, the federal government has advanced to my province for relief and other purposes between $13,500,000 and $14,000,000, and I leave it to the house whether that amount will ever be paid back.

I hear from time to time from those within my constituency and those outside it; they are continually writing to me—on Monday last I got forty-eight letters—largely to this effect: I am not getting sufficient relief; the standard of relief in my municipality is such and so and I do not think it is fair; I do not think it is sufficient. To all those people I answer, as the answer must be: The question of how much relief you get, the question of the security which is taken, the question of the forms which you sign, are matters entirely for the municipality, subject to such restrictions as may be placed upon that municipality by the government of the province. The restrictions can be placed upon those municipalities only by the province and not by this government, owing to the fact that the municipalities exist because of the Manitoba municipal act, the fact that they are creatures of that province. If I as a federal member for a Manitoba constituency were to go to the municipalities and make suggestions to them or try to order them about, their only answer to me need be: Go roll your hoop, because the federal government has no authority over the municipalities, no authority in regard to the security or amount of relief. The federal government merely supplies adequate funds to Manitoba and leaves to it the question of the amount of relief that shall be given. That subject has been one of the greatest difficulties in my constituency; it is a difficulty which has taken up most of my time during the period I have been there, a difficulty which has kept me within the constituency going about from place to place, seeing municipal councils; that is my main business.

I should like now to speak in regard to the question of debt, because that is very important. The federal government has put on the statute books of this country the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act for the purpose of scaling down debts of farmers only. The machinery is simple; the cost is nil; the forms are given entirely free. The farmer has merely to fill out a very simple form which goes to the official receiver. The official receiver then calls together a meeting of the creditors who, sitting down together, decide what should be done with regard to the situation. The farmer has an opportunity of formulating his own proposal which he brings to the meeting. He settles on his own basis or he need not settle at all. Contrary to what some members have said in the house, I contend that is one of the greatest things which has ever happened to the farmers within my district, that they have an opportunity of scaling down their debts in that way and on such a basis that they know they will receive fair treatment without cost to them. In particular this is a definite and final debt adjustment; it is not debt postponement, as so many of the provincial acts are.

To return again to the question raised by the hon. member for Battle River—what of the farmer?—the government this year is advancing the sum of $90,000,000 in connection with the Canadian Farm Loan Act. I had occasion to speak of that previously and I expressed an opinion then which I would express anywhere again. One of the most important points is this: the Canadian farm loan board must be willing to grant loans throughout Canada on the ordinary business basis. They cannot set apart an area and say it is too dry. They cannot overlook the fact that within such areas during the years from 1924 to 1929 there were grown the best crops that were raised within Manitoba. I think the government was very wise in doing away with the provincial boards, particularly the one in Manitoba which has shown poor judgment in regard to the loans which it has advanced. In addition to that, as I have indicated, it may be necessary with the board at Ottawa so to surround the present commissioner that his ideas may be changed, because if his ideas are precisely as they were before; if he as an individual is still permitted to dominate that board, the policy will likely be a continuation of that of the past where they merely played safe. They asked merely the one question: Did it rain on your land last year and not the question: What is the quality of your land? What is your experience as a farmer Have you made money in the past? Have you shown ordinary energy in pursuing your occupation None of those questions was asked. They do not ask, even as bankers do: What is the character of the individual? They ask you: What area are you in? Perhaps, because that has been designated as drought area A or B, they say: No, we cannot advance loans there, not knowing that drought areas are still designated in that way because spots within them are completely dried up.

Speaking also in regard to the drought areas and the situation of the farmers, may I congratulate the government on the reclamation scheme which they propose to put into force? That scheme, which is not yet before the house, has potentialities beyond measure.

If they can carry on their cultural practices which will indicate what should be done in a crisis such as this; if they can demonstrate the kinds of grasses that can be raised within that area, the way in which trees should be planted to stop drifting, methods by which streams may be dammed and the spring freshets held, that in itself would be a tremendous help. All these schemes are useful; nothing should be disregarded. The difficulty with experts is that they see only their own part of the picture. For instance, the engineer sees only the dam; he has no idea of the usefulness of trees. The tree expert is just as narrow with his view. All these are useful; the only thing is the government should make all speed in getting to the work.

What benefit does the farmer receive from the Ottawa agreements? I would point particularly to the cattle restrictions which for thirty-seven years prevented cattle being sent from Canada to the old country. These have been removed. In 1930 we shipped no cattle to the United Kingdom; in 1934 we shipped 53,863 head.

But particularly have the Ottawa agreements helped those in Canada who produce hogs. The Canadian production of hogs is in round figures 6,000,000. Immediately following the Ottawa agreements, due to the preferences given in the British market, the price was increased by two and a half cents a pound. Figuring that out on the basis of a hog weighing two hundred pounds, you will find that the producers of hogs received an additional income of $30,000,000. The next year the price was increased to eight cents, so that they received that year on the basis of 6,000,000 hogs an additional amount of $48,000,000 as a result of the Ottawa agrements. Since that time the price has further increased and is now around eight and a half cents.

I would further point out that by reason of the tariff imposed on corn coming into this country, for the imposition of which I take some credit, the market price has been increased. The duty was imposed on June 2, 1932. The total imports for the year ending March 31, 1931, were 9,500,000 bushels; in 1934 they were down to 5,200,000 bushels. There are those who say: That is all very well, but we have increased our imports from South Africa. But that is quite untrue. From South Africa in 1931 we imported 1,117,000 bushels, and in 1934 that figure had been reduced to 198,000 bushels. That has had the result of giving the market to the producers of barley in this country; it increased the price and decreased the carry-over.

Then to those who have to borrow money —and we all have to borrow from time to time —I draw attention to the fact that interest rates have been reduced by this government. Savings bank interest has been reduced to two per cent, the result is that the ordinary depositor will not now leave his money in the bank at two per cent but will seek other avenues for investment, with the result that more money is spent. In addition, it has had the general effect of reducing interest on all debts. Interest rates have also been reduced by this government by the refunding operations that have been carried on, as a result of which taxpayers in Canada are paying in interest $14,600,000 per year less than when this government came into power. Those who deal with the banks now have the satisfaction of knowing that the bankers cannot charge more than seven per cent, where formerly eight per cent was a common rate, and by subterfuge the banks were able to evade the legal restriction. Owing to the penalties now imposed that can no longer be done.

Before this session ends we shall have legislation relating to matters dealt with by the price spreads and mass buying commission. I do not desire to discuss it now, as the commission has not yet reported, but in my opinion it was the greatest weapon that has ever been fashioned in this country against the concentration of wealth in the hands of the few.

Speaking again with particular regard to the farmer I would mention the central bank, because whether people know it or not it will have a tremendous effect on the credit of this country. One important function of the central bank is that of controlling and regulating credit. Another function is to advise governments in regard to their financial policies.

In regard to the control of credit I point out that the bank has unlimited resources, and its actions are necessarily dependent upon that fact. In boom times the bank has the necessary machinery to control the boom. The governor of the bank would go to the general managers of the chartered banks and say: I think you are lending too much money for purposes of gambling. If the general managers said to the governor: Well, would you mind going and running your little bank and we will run ours—then the governor of the bank would say: Very well; I used to work for you gentlemen, but now we will refuse to do your discounting and by that we will freeze up credit in your bank. If that be not sufficient, then through open market operations the central bank, known as the Bank of Canada, will step into the market and sell securities, causing the depositors to take their money out of the banks to buy securities, having the effect of freezing up credit. In times of depression the central bank will be equally effective. The governor of the bank will say to the commercial banks: You have some frozen paper; probably you would like to discount it. The central bank will take over these frozen assets and give the bank's money in place of them, thereby forcing money into the credit system of the country. If that be not sufficient the Bank of Canada will itself go into the open market and buy securities, thus placing money in the hands of the banks, and the banks must use that money, because three-quarters of the deposits of this country are in savings accounts on which the banks pay two per cent, so they cannot allow it to remain idle; they have to put it out. So far as credit in this country is concerned that is one of the greatest things we have ever had, the Deputy Minister of Finance says the greatest thing since confederation.

Then I would point out that the central bank took over from the chartered banks of this country some $39,000,000 in gold. It was taken over at $20.67 an ounce and the present price is around $35, so there is a profit of some $15 an ounce. Some of that gold was held for foreign account—I do not know how much, but I should think $9,000,000 would be a large estimate, due to the small number of branches they have in foreign countries. If that be a correct estimate there is on that gold an immediate profit to the people of this country, not to the bank but to the consolidated revenue fund of over $20,000,000 which is not doing badly out of the banks of this country.

I should like to compliment the government on the fact that Mr. Justice Taylor, formerly of the province of Manitoba, has been appointed to the pension commission. I believe his appointment will have a good effect on the administration of our pensions. I should like also to refer to the nationalization of our radio, which has had a great and beneficial effect on the country.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Has it been satisfactory so far?

Mr. WILLIS: It has been entirely satisfactory to those people whom I represent.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): It has not been satisfactory in the rest of the country.

Mr. WILLIS: I think if you went to the country on the radio policy of this government you certainly would be defeated; if you do not think so get your leader to go to the country on that issue. I defy him to take that step.

In addition the live stock industry of this country has derived benefits due to the fact that we have a preference in the British market. There are great possibilities also in regard to the United States trade agreement which may or may not be consummated; in any event we are striving to carry it through. The other day I was surprised to hear hon. gentlemen opposite trying to disparage the work of this government in connection with trade agreements. We have negotiated nine new trade agreements during the life of this government, and we have cancelled none. It may be said that we have cancelled two, but those have been renewed, so the policy of this government has been most successful in that connection.

Finally I should like to say a word about the balance of trade. We now have a favourable balance of $134,000,000 as compared with an adverse balance of $90,000,000 in 1929. That has the effect of allowing this country to borrow more than we could otherwise borrow. It also has the effect of allowing us to borrow at the rate of two per cent in some instances, something never done before in Canada.

I should like also, if I had time, to deal with certain other matters concerning the present policy of the government, and in particular I should like to refer for a moment to that accusation which is made so often, that the reform policy of the Prime Minister indicates an about turn on his part. That is contrary to the truth. Those who say the reform policy of the Prime Minister is an about face have not read the first speech he made in the House of Commons on November 20, 1911. I should like to quote from the Toronto Globe of February 15, 1935; Mr. Anderson, editor of the Globe, refers to an interview he had with Mr. Bennett twenty-one years ago. These were Mr. Bennett's words at that time:

> Let me tell you that if ever this young country should run into a period of serious and prolonged depresion—such a period of hard times and unemployment as has been known to other countries in world history—those then at the helm will have to pay in costly measure for the prodigality of to-day. They will have to atone for the exploitation of the public at the hands of self-centred and predatory interests by bitter doses of taxation, by radical enactments, by revision and reform of the whole capitalistic system—or face something of far sterner significance and more devastating consequences.

This is the comment of Mr. Anderson:

> These words were spoken twenty-one years ago. The comparatively young member for Calgary, serving his first term in the House of Commons, was pacing his room in the old, now gone, building on Parliament hill. He spoke to the writer—spoke urgently and emphatically—of what was taking place.

This indicates that as long ago as that the change was taking place. I should like to take time also to read a portion of the speech delivered by Mr. R. B. Bennett in the House of Commons on November 20, 1911:

> In my judgment, in this complex civilization of ours, the great struggle of the future will be between human rights and property interests; and it is the duty and function of government to provide that there shall be no undue regard for the latter that limits or lessens the other.... If there be certain immunities and rights and privileges which flow to men who constitute themselves into corporations, it follows that the parliament or legislature that created them, that gave them birth and existence, has the power to impose upon them limitation commensurate with the demands and necessities of the people.... I submit that in this country we should at the earliest possible moment give our best attention to the consideration of some measure that will provide a tribunal that will limit the issue of securities by corporations, and will protect the public by enacting some measure by which they can know the real value of those securities.

Later on the same gentleman complained in this country and in this house against the lobbying by the rich people that took place on Parliament hill. At another time he indicated that he thought levies should be made on the insurance companies of Canada, and during the Beauharnois debate he indicated that he snapped his fingers at the financial interests of this country. The Prime Minister has always been a reformer and a realist; the reforms he is bringing forward at the present time indicate that he has had these matters under consideration for a very long time. The reform program deals with minimum wages and maximum working hours; child labour and sweatshop methods; unemployment, health and accident insurance; income tax; an economic council; old age pensions and farm loans.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman has spoken for forty minutes.

Mr. WILLIS: It includes the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act and the central bank. When people say these are all very well at election time may I say that they are not promises; they were not placed in a book; they are not like the 1919 Liberal platform of which we have heard. These are matters which have become the law of this country. That is why it cannot be said that this is an election policy; these are the laws of the country.

Mr. R. K. ANDERSON (Halton): Mr. Speaker, a great many compliments have been paid the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) on the splendid budget he has presented to parliament this session, and with those compliments I wish to associate myself. I believe this is the most comprehensive budget that has been delivered in this house during the time I have been a member. It presents a clear and complete picture of the financial, industrial and commercial activities of the Canadian people during the past year, and contains a wealth of information that will well repay any person who studies it. In one respect this budget has attained the impossible; it has been received without opposition by the great masses of the people.

Of course we do not expect that the financial critic of the opposition will agree with any budget. It is his duty to rave and shout loud nothings in order to discredit and ridicule the budget in an attempt to blind the people to the benefits it confers. The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) did his work well; his particular mentality lent itself to that kind of oratory. That was why he was put up as financial critic. During the course of his speech he tried to give the impression that this government was in the van in regard to economic nationalism. That is not so; economic nationalism had been rampant in the world long before this government took office; it had reached its peak before that time. I have before me some of the duties imposed by other countries in order to shut out the goods of the Dominion of Canada. These figures are very illuminating. So far as I am aware, after this government came into office no country, with the exception of the United States, raised its tariff against outside countries. When this government took office in 1930 it found that during the regime of the Liberal government in Canada the government of the United States had on two occasions raised its tariffs, once under the Fordney-McCumber tariff and later under the Hawley-Smoot tariff, whereby prohibitive barriers were raised against the products of this country. The result was that our exports to that land reached almost the vanishing point. The rate on wheat stood at 42 cents per bushel; on sheep and lambs it had been increased 50 per cent to 200 per cent, on beef 300 per cent, on pork from 2½ cents per pound to 3¼ cents per pound, on butter 14 cents per pound, on cheese 7 cents per pound, and on eggs 10 cents per dozen. Against a tariff of that kind our products could not enter the markets in the United States.

Germany had increased her duty on wheat to 78 cents per bushel, on cattle to $2.90 per hundredweight, on apples to $2.50 per barrel, on honey to $7 per hundredweight. Italy placed her tariff on wheat at 86½ cents per bushel. Belgium levied a rate of 91 cents per hundredweight against cheese and $1.25 per hundredweight against condensed milk. France placed a rate of $2.15 per hundredweight against condensed milk, $1.90 per bushel on wheat and $3.56 per hundredweight on cheese. These are the conditions which obtained when this government took office.

During the nine years hon. gentlemen opposite were in office they did not make a single effort to prevent or raise a single objection to the economic nationalism that was being developed in outside countries to the disadvantage of Canada. They made no effort whatsoever to protect agriculture or other industries in Canada against the economic nationalism obtaining outside the dominion.

Just before the election in 1930 hon. gentlemen opposite presented the Dunning budget which contained provisions for countervailing duties. This was a system by which foreign countries had the privilege of changing our tariff, raising it or lowering it at their pleasure, and we had no control whatsoever. If that practice had been followed for a number of years a staff of hundreds of civil servants would have been required to keep track of the changes occurring from day to day. During that period the tariffs in the United States had the effect of closing their markets to our agricultural products.

In 1921 our exports of farm products to the United States were valued at $174,000,000, while in 1933 the value had dropped to $4,000,000. The following table will serve to indicate the decrease in the value of exports to the United States in these years:

	1921	1933
Cattle	$ 21,240,091	$194,960
Sheep	1,676,445	151
Oats	1,531,623	1,186
Wheat	101,997,224	130,869
Wheat flour	12,686,807	4,659
Beef	4,485,133	24,673
Cream	2,086,880	80,051
Butter	2,293,980	4,348
Milk, fresh	409,212	127
Flaxseed	5,045,206	662,601
Wool	2,226,780	107,882

Hon. members will see from these figures that our export market in the United States had almost completely vanished, and that country looked upon us as its best customer. They adopted a most extraordinary method of treating their best customer. Between 1921 and 1930 the Liberal policy of freer trade was in existence, a policy which was supposed to stimulate trade. It did stimulate trade so far as imports are concerned, but it reduced exports. We had a favourable trade balance in the years preceding 1930, but that favourable trade balance disappeared to the point where in the year 1929-30 we had an unfavourable trade balance of $103,000,000. In the year 1930-31 the unfavourable balance stood at $89,000,000. After the present government assumed office immediate action was taken to offset this economic nationalism. Tariffs were raised, and in two years we had a favourable trade balance amounting to $9,000,000, while in 1934 our favourable trade balance stood at $151,000,000. That figure is on the right side of the ledger. The same principle applies to governments as to individuals. If a person buys more than he can sell, he either goes into debt or into bankruptcy. In order to remain sound and solvent a person or a government must sell more than is bought.

The statement has been made, and I believe with some truth, that this is a poor man's budget. It takes from those who have and gives to those who have not. It is a warning to so-called big business that the day of reckoning is nigh, if they do not change their methods and give more to their employees. It is a step in the levelling process by which a greater share of the wealth produced by industry may be distributed among the workers. It is a pledge of the earnestness behind the new policy enunciated by the Prime Minister in his radio addresses. The surtax on incomes over $5,000 derived from investments, and on incomes over $14,000 from any source, is expected to produce an increase of $12,000,000 in the income tax. This is an effort to make those who are able to pay assume a larger share of the burden of taxation. This $12,000,000, added to $65,600,000 which was the amount collected last year, indicates an estimated revenue from income tax in the ensuing year of $77,600,000. That is a large amount of money to collect by way of income tax from the people in this young country of Canada.

Income tax is the third largest source of revenue open to the government. The revenue in 1934-35 from customs import duties was $77,300,000; from sales tax, $72,600,000; from income tax, $65,600,000 and from excise duties, $44,640,000. From these four sources of income the government collected $306,050,000. The total income from all sources amounted to $362,370,000.

The surtax on income is one of the steps taken to help correct the abuses of capitalism. The Prime Minister has set his face to the correction of those abuses, and this is one of the methods adopted. It is an attempt to take from the greedy capitalist some of his undue profits and distribute them to the people forced to accept relief. It is a sign-post which points the way to the future, and if the capitalist does not accept the warning the government will take further and more drastic methods to compel him. It is also another pledge that the Prime Minister's new policy is to go forward to a brighter day for the average man.

The charge of insincerity which has been levelled against the Prime Minister is disgraceful and itself smacks of insincerity. The wish is father to the thought in the mind of the doubting Thomas who makes the charge. The leader of the government has given ample evidence of his genuine belief in the policy he enunciated over the radio, and his every step in legislation since he came into office leads inevitably to that conclusion. I should like to quote from an article that appeared in the Toronto Globe a short time ago under the caption of "Crusader of 1914 crusades again, but is he late?" The article quotes the present Prime Minister as follows:

> Let me tell you that if ever this young country should run into a period of serious and prolonged depression—such a period of hard times and unemployment as has been known to other countries in world history—those then at the helm will have to pay in costly measure for the prodigality of to-day. They will have to atone for the exploitation of the public at the hands of self-centred and predatory interests by bitter doses of taxation, by radical enactments, by revision and reform of the whole capitalistic system—or face something of far sterner significance and more devastating consequences.

"Mr. Bennett the crusader of 1914 crusades again, but is he late?" Mr. Anderson of the Globe asks the question, and the reply has been made from the southeast corner of the house that he is late. But suppose we look at the facts. Is he late when he was the only man in Canada twenty-one years ago who had the vision to see and to watch the trend of events as they marched on to a culmination? Is he late if he is the first man in Canada to grapple with the problems of to-day and attempt to correct them by legislation? I would say no; the charge of insincerity does not apply. If the Prime Minister in 1914, when he was a young member of this house, had the courage of his convictions then to vote against his party on a question whether or not the predatory interests in this country should be dealt with, he cannot be accused of insincerity. If he had the courage in that year, is it not likely that he has the courage and determination in this year, 1935? I should say he has.

The first thing that the Prime Minister did when he came into office in 1930 was to lay the foundation for his new policy. He called a session of parliament within a month or two of taking office, and in that session he revised the tariff schedules on a large number of items in order to protect this country against economic nationalism. He also put into effect a ten per cent preference as regards trade within the bounds of the British empire. This has been the basis for his plan of preferences between the different parts of the empire on a mutual benefit basis. Economic nationalism throughout the world made it imperatively necessary that we should get markets for our exportable surpluses, and the government of the day naturally turned their attention to the British empire.

The estimated total trade of the world is $55,000,000,000 per annum. This is divided into imports of $28,000,000,000 and exports of $26,000,000,000, the balance being taken up by services, freight and insurance. Empire trade is 27·8 per cent of the total world trade, or $15,000,000,000, divided into imports amounting to 29·6 per cent of the total world imports and 25·7 per cent of total world exports. Great Britain had a trade in 1930 of $8,500,000,000, divided into imports of $5,200,000,000 and exports of $3,300,000,000. Surely that was the spot for the Prime Minister of Canada to go to find a market for the surplus products of this country. Of the total world production of certain commodities the empire's percentage of production is as follows:

	Per cent
Wheat	22
Tin	43
Wool	44
Rice	52
Rubber	58
Gold	71
Nickel	88
Asbestos	90
Jute	99

Surely with such a production throughout the empire we can find a market for our exportable surplus. The British empire comprises one-uarter of the earth's surface and one-quarter of the world's total population, amounting to almost one billion souls.

In 1930 the Prime Minister went over to the imperial economic conference and presented to the delegates there assembled a detailed plan for mutual trade pacts within the empire. It was the first time in the history of imperial conferences in England that such a plan had been submitted. The Prime Minister's personal courage and ability stirred the convention and shocked many of the delegates, shocked some of them to such an extent that the Hon. Mr. Thomas, Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs, called the speech a humbug speech. The conference dissolved without taking any action upon the plan, and because of that, considerable discontent was caused throughout the old land. Sir William Morris, chairman of the British national council of industry and commerce, said:

> The council is dismayed by the failure of the imperial conference on the economic side, which failure was rendered inevitable by the British Labour government's course in subordinating economics to politics.

The repercussions became so great that they resulted in the collapse of the Labour government in England early in 1931. Then a national government was formed which went to the country on a platform of empire trade, and it was returned by the biggest majority that any government had ever received in England. This was a signal victory for the Canadian Prime Minister, and he loomed large amongst the statesmen of the empire. The new government acted quickly. In November, 1931, it passed the Abnormal Importations Act, instituting duties on imports into England as high as thirty-three per cent to protect home industry. It meant the abandonment of England's former policy of free trade. Early the next year, in March, 1932, they passed the Import Duties Act, giving a preference to goods of empire countries, as proposed in Canada's plan. This preference was to terminate on November 15, 1932, if the economic conference at Ottawa was non-productive of results. But the imperial economic conference at Ottawa in July and August of 1932 resulted in the signing of eleven trade treaties within the empire, in four of which Canada joined, namely, the trade treaties between the United Kingdom and Canada, the Irish Free State and Canada, the Union of South Africa and Canada, and Southern Rhodesia and Canada. I should like to direct the attention of the house to the successful outcome of this conference of the brightest minds from among more than one-quarter of the world's population, which outcome was an outstanding tribute to the ability and courage of the cabinet and the civil service of the dominion. I think it is something of which the people of this country should be proud. In my opinion the success of the 1932 conference was a final and complete vindication of the policies of the Prime Minister. At this point I should like to express my appreciation of the high courage and ability of the Prime Minister in the bringing of this conference to a successful conclusion. Anyone who will take the trouble to look into the negotiations which led up to the conference will admit that it was no small achievement. The Prime Minister was the only man who could have brought this conference to Canada.

What have been the results from the conference? They began to show very quickly. Within five months Canadian exports to Great Britain had increased by $10,000,000, while exports to other empire countries had increased by ten per cent. The imports from empire countries increased by four per cent while a corresponding decrease of four per cent showed in the imports from the United States. The statement has been made that these agreements would limit our trade with foreign countries, but the effect has been the very opposite. We have had increases in our trade with Holland, Belgium, Sweden, Spain, Germany and Roumania. Foreign countries have been anxious to compete for our markets because of their increased prestige through these trade agreements. The following table shows the increases in imports from empire countries:

Canada's Total Imports From Empire Countries
Twelve Months Ended December 31

Imports from:	1932	1933	1934	Per cent increase 1934 over 1932
British Empire (Total)	$128,058,000	$132,684,000	$157,067,000	22.7
United Kingdom	93,508,000	97,878,000	113,418,000	21.3
Australia	5,845,000	5,080,000	6,374,000	9.1
British South Africa	4,085,000	4,537,000	3,007,000	-26.4
Newfoundland	576,000	626,000	1,422,000	146.9
New Zealand	856,000	2,013,000	2,893,000	238.0

The increases in exports are shown by the following table:

Canada's Total Exports To Empire Countries
Twelve Months Ended December 31

Domestic exports to:	1932	1933	1934	Per cent increase 1934 over 1932
British Empire (Total)	$217,157,000	$255,181,000	$335,245,000	54.4
United Kingdom	178,172,000	210,698,000	270,334,000	51.7
Australia	7,133,000	10,208,000	16,870,000	136.5
British South Africa	4,416,000	5,974,000	12,103,000	174.1
Newfoundland	5,645,000	6,025,000	6,597,000	16.9
New Zealand	3,406,000	3,833,000	6,821,000	100.3

These figures show that our trade has been helped by the trade agreements which have been denounced so vigorously by hon. members opposite. In connection with trade with England, Mr. Colville, secretary to the overseas trade department, has stated that some nineteen foreign countries asked for negotiations on tariffs a short time after Great Britain changed its tariff policy, but the government refused to negotiate until after the Ottawa conference. He stated further:

Exports to the dominions in the first nine months of 1933, compared with the first nine months of 1932, increased by the following amounts: Canada, £2,383,000; Australia, £4,950,000; New Zealand, £621,000; South Africa, £8,488,000; Newfoundland, £116,000; British India, £373,000; and Southern Rhodesia, £366,000. There was a total of £17,297,000 increase of sales to the dominions following the Ottawa agreements.

About the same time a vote was taken in the British House of Commons on a Liberal amendment in connection with these agreements. Only 25 members voted for the amendment while 358 voted against, giving a majority of 333 in favour of the agreements. Mr. Frederick Hudd, chief Canadian government trade commissioner in the United Kingdom, has the following to say in connection with the expansion of Canadian sales in the British market:

Among noteworthy evidences of the expansion of the Canadian sales in the British market are apples, which increased to a value of $11,412,562 in the twelve months ending September, 1934, as compared with $6,943,659 in the corresponding period of the previous year. In the same period canned goods increased to $1,003,951 from $896,861; canned vegetables to $745,056 from $385,410; furs to $9,450,997 from $6,899,056; meats to $19,506,075 from $7,517,923; bacon and hams to $17,272,171 from $6,113,096; fibres and textiles to $2,131,708 from $1,550,017; wood and wood products to $24,787,880 from $13,633,601; iron and its products to $7,823,737 from $4,069,096; and non-ferrous metal products to $43,883,011 from $25,403,809.

These figures would seem to show that the Prime Minister and his cabinet were right in supposing that the empire trade agreements would be of benefit to Canada.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.
