OFFICIAL REPORT

Friday, February 22, 1935

The house met at three o'clock.

HOUSING POLICY

Mr. G. D. STANLEY (East Calgary, for Mr. Ganong) presented the first report of the special committee to consider and report upon the inauguration of a national policy of house building, as follows:

Your committee recommends that it be granted leave to report from time to time.

Your committee also recommends that five hundred copies in English and two hundred copies in French of the proceedings and evidence to be taken before the committee, and all papers and records to be incorporated with such evidence, be printed from day to day; and that standing order 64 be suspended in relation thereto.

Mr. STANLEY moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

EIGHT HOUR DAY

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 21, to provide for limiting the hours of work in industrial undertakings to eight in the day and forty-eight in the week, in accordance with the convention concerning the application of the principle of the eight hour day or of the forty-eight hour week adopted by the general conference of the international labour organization in accordance with the treaties of Versailles and St. Germain.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

WEEKLY DAY OF REST

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 22, to provide for a weekly day of rest in accordance with the convention concerning the application of the weekly rest in industrial undertakings adopted by the general conference of the international labour organization in accordance with the treaties of Versailles and St. Germain.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

IMPORTS FROM U.S.S.R.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Was the importation into Canada of coal, wood pulp, pulpwood, lumber and timber of all kinds, asbestos and furs from the U.S.S.R. prohibited by order in council P.C. 463, dated February 27, 1931, for the following reasons: (a) because such country was not a contracting party to the treaty of Versailles, and (b) on account of the documentary and other evidence which had been received by the various departments of the public service in Canada? If so, (a) was the latter objection dropped before Canada signed the telegram dated Geneva, September 15, 1934, inviting the U.S.S.R. to enter the League of Nations? (b) Does the former objection still stand since the U.S.S.R. have entered the League of Nations?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Stands as notice of motion.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

BILL TO PROVIDE FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF AUDITORS

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved the second reading of Bill No. 20, respecting the appointment of auditors for the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. EULER: Explain.

Mr. MANION: If hon. gentlemen opposite are satisfied probably it would be better to go into committee on the bill at once. Otherwise I would have to explain it on the second reading, and that is a little more difficult because questions may be asked that I should like to answer. After all the principle of the bill, I think, is acceptable; we must appoint auditors for the Canadian National Railways. There may be some discussion, but perhaps I might be permitted to ascertain whether or not I should proceed now or whether the house will permit this bill to be considered at once in committee of the whole.

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, if I may I would make this suggestion. When the auditors were appointed on previous occasions the names of the auditors were not inserted until we went into committee. If we are not committed to the principle of the bill by permitting second reading without discussion I do not suppose there is any particular objection to the bill going to committee. I hope I have not exhausted my right to speak, because I should like to see what the minister has to say in this regard.

Mr. MANION: I am quite agreeable to that. The only principle accepted by allowing second reading would be the appointment of auditors. The question as to who should be the auditors is for this house, because they are appointed by parliament. If that is satisfactory we might go into committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

On the short title.

Mr. EULER: I would like to ask the minister why the change is being made in the personnel of the auditors.

Mr. MANION: Ordinarily I should not have expected much discussion on this question but I think, quite unjustly and unfairly, a few of the daily journals of Canada—

Mr. McINTOSH: Would you specify them?

Mr. MANION: I could do that, but there is no need for it at the moment. Before I am through perhaps I will do so. A few newspapers have taken the attitude that this is a sort of revenge upon George A. Touche and Company for their temerity in suggesting that there should be a recapitalization of the financial set-up of the Canadian National Railways. I only mention that because the whole suggestion seems to me almost too ridiculous to be printed. My hon. friend wants me to name these journals. I will name one at any rate. In the issue of the Toronto Daily Star that came in this morning appears a rather severe article criticizing the government. I should like to read one paragraph of that article, for it justifies me in mentioning the matter. The heading is "Unfairness to Canadian National Railways," and the last paragraph reads:

Far from welcoming the proposal of the auditors that the grossly inflated debt of the Canadian National Railways be pared down the Bennett government is demanding that the auditors be dismissed.

[Mr. Manion.]

In that regard I might just say that they are not being dismissed; the auditors are being changed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MANION: There is a difference, and a little later I will deal more fully with that. I am surprised that my hon. friends should laugh, because to change auditors is quite within the right of any business institution, while to dismiss the auditors would mean severely reprimanding them for something they had done or left undone. However, I will finish the paragraph I was reading:

The explanation that will be given for the proposed dismissal of the auditors no doubt will be that the firm has its headquarters in England—

I did not know that until this morning; I made inquiries, and I think that is correct.

—but so it had a year ago when Mr. Bennett and Doctor Manion were loud in praise of its work.

I am not going into any great detail, but that is why I wish to deal with this question to some extent. In the first place I want to make it clear to the committee and to the people in general that the thing furthest from the mind of the government, or of the Prime Minister, myself or any member of the government, was that George A. Touche and Company were being punished in any way because they suggested a recapitalization of the financial set-up of the Canadian National Railways. The idea behind such a change is exactly the idea that applies to the banks of this country and which is contained in the Bank Act, which I hold in my hand. A bank cannot retain the same auditors for more than two years. If that is a good rule for the banks, after George A. Touche and Company have been auditors of the Canadian National Railways for eleven or twelve years surely if the government thinks new auditors may bring a new slant or new outlook upon the operations and condition of the Canadian National Railways the government has a perfect right to suggest to this house—because they are parliament's auditors —that we should have a change. I should like to read that provision in the Bank Act, which is found in subsection 5 of section 55:

The shareholders—

After all it must be remembered that the auditors being appointed to-day are the shareholders' auditors for the Canadian National Railways. This has nothing whatever to do with the trustees. One article which I read in another newspaper, criticizing the government rather severely, suggested that we had over-ruled the recommendation of the trustees in this regard. As a matter of fact the trustees have nothing to do with the appointment of these auditors; the auditors are appointed by this parliament as the shareholders of the Canadian National Railways, so the trustees do not enter into the picture at all.

—shall, at each annual general meeting, appoint two persons, not members of the same firm, whose names are included in the last published list, to audit the affairs of the bank, but if the same two persons, or members respectively of the same two firms have been appointed for two years in succession to audit the affairs of any one bank, one such person or any member of one such firm shall not be again appointed to audit the affairs of such bank during the period of two years next following the term for which he was last appointed.

In brief that simply means what I think it very clearly states, that the banks of this country cannot have the same auditors for more than two years. Every two years the shareholders of the banks must change their auditors, and it is on exactly that principle this proposal is made.

It will be remembered that I said these were parliament's auditors. For the benefit of those who have not studied the question I should like to read the two sections dealing with this matter from the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act of 1933, under which these auditors are appointed. Section 13 reads:

(1) A continuous audit of the accounts of national railways shall be made by independent auditors appointed annually by a resolution of parliament and annually reporting to parliament in respect of their audit. Their annual report shall call attention to any matters which in their opinion require consideration or remedial action. They shall be paid by the national company such amounts as the governor in council shall from time to time approve.

Then section 14 reads:

The trustees shall make a report annually to parliament setting forth in a summary manner the results of their operations, any cooperative measures, plans or arrangements, effective pursuant to this act, any economies or more remunerative operation thereby produced, the amounts expended on capital account in respect of national railways and such other information as appears to them to be of public interest or necessary for the information of parliament with relation to any situation existing at the time of such report, or as may be required from time to time by the governor in council.

I had that marked, although it has not really any bearing on the question. But as a rule the trustees themselves do incorporate the auditors' certificate in their report.

Mr. HANBURY: Does the second to last clause refer to the trustees' report?

Mr. MANION: Yes. I just wish to make it clear that the auditors we are appointing to-day are the auditors appointed by parliament under that act. There is no connection whatever between a change in auditors and their recommendation.

In regard to these recommendations may I say that they did not originate with George A. Touche and Company. I have made it my business to look into the history surrounding this whole matter in connection with the recommendation for recapitalization. The first person who made any real proposal in connection with a proposed recapitalization of the Canadian National Railways was Sir Joseph Flavelle. In a letter written to Right Hon. Arthur Meighen in 1921 he made that suggestion. We might as well suggest that Sir Joseph Flavelle was dropped from the Grand Trunk board because he had the temerity to suggest a refinancing or a change in the financial set-up of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. HEAPS: He knows something about set-ups, doesn't he?

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend says so, and I do not quarrel with him.

Mr. POULIOT: Does the minister take his inspiration from Sir Joseph Flavelle?

Mr. MANION: No. In 1923, 1924, and again in 1925, the late Sir Henry Thornton in the annual report of the Canadian National Railways made to the government of the day suggested—well, so that there may be no misunderstanding I shall read one or two sentences from the annual report of 1923. Sir Henry said:

Consideration is being given to the policy to be followed with respect to the capitalization of the system, and the extent to which, if at all, the advances made and capital held by the government should be written down to a figure which may be regarded as consistent with the earning prospects of the railway. In the consideration of such a problem, the interests of the government, which is to say the people of Canada, must be given due weight. On the other hand it would seem unreasonable to burden the Canadian National railways with a load which is beyond its conceivable earning capacity.

Again in 1924, a similar suggestion was made, which I shall not quote. Then, in 1925, the following clause appears, bearing on the question in hand to-day:

The work is being performed effectively and it is expected—

The work of studying the financial set-up—

—that, during the current year, definite proposals having for their object the placing of the company's finances on a sound and permanent basis will be presented.

That is what was done in 1923, 1924 and 1925. I am pointing out merely that Sir Henry Thornton made the suggestion to the late government, and followed up his suggestion by submitting in 1928 or 1929—I am not quite sure of the date, because I did not have time to look into the report—to the late government, at least a year or perhaps two before they left office, a suggested change in the financial set-up. If I remember correctly—and I must say I read the report a couple of years ago, and have not seen it since—he suggested in that report which was prepared by Mr. Gaston, the $62,000-per-year man, who was brought across to study the situation, if for anything, that the government of the day should wipe out something like $700,000,000 of the government liabilities of the Canadian National Railways.

However, I make reference to these points to-day to show that this is not a new question. The government of that day, feeling that it was an important matter—and I am not criticizing them—did not choose at that time to act upon the report of Mr. Gaston and Sir Henry Thornton. Then, I received a letter from Sir Henry Thornton written in February, 1931, the first year after this government took office, and in it Sir Henry stated that he did not think at that time we would be warranted in dealing with that question. He said it was much too important a question to deal with at that time and—I am attempting to give the gist of it—he believed that due to the depressed condition of business, and for other reasons, it would be better to leave the matter over until a later date. In general, that is the whole history of the matter. I repeat that the late government did not see fit to make any change and so far this government has not seen fit to make a change. As a matter of fact legislation would be necessary to effect such a change. We would have to have the authority of the house to wipe out some of the stocks, and so on. In view of the fact that it does not make one particle of difference to the earnings of the Canadian National Railways, it is not in my view a live question, at all.

I do not understand—and I make this observation sincerely—all the excitement which has crept into some of the articles one may see written by private individuals and by editorial writers regarding the necessity for the Canadian National Railways to refinance, or to change the capital setup. I pointed out only a few days ago, when we were discussing a resolution offered by the hon. member for North Vancouver. (Mr. Munn) that unless we wiped out nearly $1,500,000,000 charged up on the books of the company, and in addition charged up to the people of Canada some of the bonded indebtedness owing to the bondholders in the United States, England and Canada, you would achieve nothing. Since not one cent of any of the government debt has been paid back, and not one cent of interest has been paid upon it, and since the Canadian people are to-day paying nearly all of the interest owing by the Canadian National Railways to bondholders, there is no method in the world at the moment whereby by writing down the capitalization of the Canadian National Railways you would better, even to the extent of one cent, the position of Canadian National Railways.

Therefore I say that the question is not a live one, and never has been a live one. It is quite untrue to say that it would have any effect upon the Canadian National Railways, or their earning power, in any shape or form. Sometimes the claim is made that it would have a beneficial effect upon the morale of the management and the men. Frankly speaking, I believe the morale of the management and men is excellent to-day. With the exception of certain extravagances with which I have already dealt, I believe the morale of the men was just as good in the past. I do not believe their morale has been affected to any degree by the question of recapitalization. For that reason I submit in view of the fact the matter has been dealt with so elaborately in past years the question of recapitalization is not sufficient to warrant us considering dropping Touche and Company, and I say to the house that that side of the matter never entered the head of any member of the government, so far as I know, and was not considered in any shape or form when the suggestion was made last year to deal with their report.

In a few minutes—and I shall not be long—I shall deal with their report of last year. The hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) and other members who sat on the committee will remember that during the sittings of the special railway committee of last year we had before us first the report of the trustees and secondly the report of the auditors. The report of the trustees was considered. The report of the auditors which recommended cutting down the government debts of the Canadian National Railways we also considered. We discussed those matters at some length. I hold in my hand a copy of the proceedings of the committee for Wednesday, June 29, 1934, containing the report to the house. In some meetings of the committee we discussed fully the question of recapitalization, as suggested to us by Touche and Company, and a member of the committee—I am not sure whether it was the hon. member for North Waterloo, or some other member—suggested that Touche and Company elaborate their ideas. They did not bring in their report before the sittings of the committee were completed. The sittings at which evidence was taken, ended on June 20, and no elaboration of the report had been given.

In some sections of the press much has been made of the fact that we seem to have been concealing this second report. As a matter of fact the report came after the active sittings of the committee had ended. There was a copy in my deputy's office which, quite frankly, I had never seen until recently. By some misunderstanding it was not sent to my office, or must have been mislaid somewhere between the office of the deputy and my office. But that does not matter. The hon. member for North Waterloo, I think it was, suggested that that supplementary report be tabled. It was then that I knew there was a supplementary report. I looked into the matter and I had the Touche Company written to and asked for copies of the supplementary report, and this morning the copies have come to hand and are ready for distribution. We got twenty-five copies. There were perhaps twenty-three members of the committee, but we asked for twenty-five copies and they will be distributed to the members of the committee, who I think have more claim upon them than has anybody else. I point this out to show that it was not our fault that the Touche Company did not bring in their supplementary report. It was merely an accident that it has not been tabled. There is nothing in it so far as I can see that does other than elaborate somewhat the report which was already before the committee last year.

It must be pointed out as well that the Duff commission report, upon which the legislation of 1933 was based, suggested the appointment not only of trustees but of auditors, as I read from the act only a few moments ago. The commission suggested that the trustees at the earliest convenient time look into the capitalization of the Canadian National Railways and make a report to this house. The trustees have not yet done so. It must be remembered, however, that the trustees were appointed only a little over a year ago and they took over an immense job in the handling of the Canadian National Railways. The financial structure of the Canadian National Railways is a very complicated matter in itself, and I have heard many members of this house who have been here for a good many years make statements about the Canadian National Railways' financial structure both in recent years and before this government came into power which showed that although they had made a very close study of the question they had not comprehended all the facts in the Canadian National set up. The trustees when appointed were exactly in the same position. It is true that two of them had been directors previously. Mr. Fullerton had been chairman of the board of railway commissioners, but I presume that not one of the trustees had previously given thorough study to the question. At any rate they have not yet submitted to us any proposal to make a change in the capital structure of the Canadian National Railways so far as it affects the government.

It was not the auditors who were to make the report on that subject, although they did submit one. I found no fault when they made a report last year, but it was the auditors and not the trustees who made the report. I say that the Duff commission recommended, and so far as I am concerned I have been living within the rules set out in the Duff report, that the trustees give consideration as to the capital structure, but no suggestions have been made by that body.

I do not wish to deal with the matter any further at the present moment. I merely complete my few remarks by repeating that no reflection was implied upon George A. Touche and Company, in any shape or form, although I must say this, that since it has been announced in the House of Commons that there was going to be a change there has been a propaganda in regard to George A. Touche and Company and against the government for presuming to change what this parliament had a perfect right to change. I have been told that that propaganda was stirred up to a certain extent by the Touche company themselves, which I cannot believe, but if I did believe it I would think that we had waited altogether too long to remove the Touche company from their position. I hope that some evidence may come from the Touche company that they had no hand in the propaganda that has gone forth, although I must say that some of the material that has been used in the press and which has been discussed by some members of this house was material which looked to me as if it could only come from the auditors. However I do not wish to prejudge them. As far as the Touche company is concerned as auditors of the Canadian National Railways in the past they have I think given satisfactory service in every way, but the government is of the opinion at the present time that nothing but benefit can result to the Canadian National Railways and the people of this country and indeed to members of this house by taking on another outstandingly able auditing company of Canada to deal with this question.

Mr. EULER: Mr. Chairman, in what I have to say I desire to assure the committee that I have no brief for the Touche company. I have had no communication with them since the proposal has been made to replace them by another firm, nor have I any prejudice against the firm which it is proposed to appoint, although I must say that they have been in receipt of large fees from this government and previous governments and have done a great deal of government work. I was glad to hear the minister say that the Touche company are not being dismissed, if I might use the word, because of the fact that they made certain recommendations with regard to the writing down of the capitalization of the Canadian National Railways. I should not like to believe that the government would do that.

I must also say, with all respect to the minister, that the reasons which have been given by him do not appear to me to be quite adequate. His chief reason for changing the auditors is that the government is acting as they would act in the case of auditors of banks who are required to be changed every two years. In the first place, if that is the government's conviction it seems rather strange that they waited for four years until they made such a change. There is also some distinction between banks and the Canadian National Railways. The Canadian banks are the custodians of the moneys of the people of Canada, in charge of trust funds, and it is especially desirable that they be safeguarded in every way, perhaps by the appointment of new auditors from time to time. But the same conditions do not entirely obtain in regard to the Canadian National Railways.

It was only last year that the Minister of Railways stated in connection with a possible change of auditors—he will correct me if I am wrong—that it was rather an undesirable thing to do because it took some considerable time, I think he said some months, for new auditors to familiarize themselves with the method of keeping the accounts of the Canadian National Railways, and I thought that was a very good argument.

Mr. MANION: I will answer that at the moment or afterwards, as my hon. friend desires.

Mr. EULER: If a firm of auditors is capable, and I think the Prime Minister has admitted that this firm is capable, and the minister said it again to-day, there should be some very special reason before you subject them to the indignity, shall I say, or disgrace or loss of prestige which must of necessity come to them by reason of the fact that they are relieved of duties which they have carried on satisfactorily for a period of eighteen years.

Mr. BENNETT: My hon. friend is mistaken. Their term of office expired on December 31, 1934.

Mr. EULER: The right hon. gentleman means to say that the appointment is made from year to year. I know that just as well as he does, but there is no getting away from this fact, that when a firm has been kept in the employ of the government or any other employer for a long, long period of years, and then suddenly a change is made, that in effect means dismissal; at least, it appears to the public and certainly to the firm themselves as a matter of dismissal.

Mr. BENNETT: They were only kept by the government one year. The company itself appointed them previously.

Mr. EULER: I let that go because it is not the chief argument I desire to make.

Since the affairs of the Canadian National Railways are each year referred to the committee on railways and shipping, it might not have been out of place to submit a matter of this kind for discussion to that committee, but that was not done.

The chief reason why I would say the time is inopportune for a change of auditors lies in the very report which is being discussed by the Minister of Railways this afternoon. The committee last year had no opportunity, or practically none, to discuss that report. The minister said a few moments ago that that report was discussed, but I will leave it to every member of that committee, whether he sits on that side of the house or on this side, whether we did in effect have any real opportunity to discuss either of these reports, the financial report of the board of trustees, which is a voluminous document, or the report submitted by the auditors themselves, which also is a document of very considerable proportions. We had I think only three meetings of that committee. I do not know why that committee was not called together before it was. I am not casting any reflections, but I do not know why we did not have that opportunity. The fact remains that that committee had the opportunity for only three meetings. I say it is utterly impossible to examine and discuss the two reports that were submitted to that committee for consideration. In the auditors' report there was one recommendation which I regard as important, and in that respect I must disagree with the minister. The part of the report I regard as important is the one that refers to the writing down of the capitalization of the railways.

For a good many years in this house and outside of it it has been urged that something should be done to place the capitalization of the national railways on a fair basis, a basis such as would make it impossible for the enemies of the publicly owned Canadian National railway system to misrepresent the position of the railways. I have myself urged it from time to time, perhaps half a dozen times in the last ten years. But it was never done. The minister says that Sir Henry Thornton made a certain suggestion to the late government. That may be so, but my impression is decidedly this, that no really definite or concrete suggestion was ever made for the writing down of the capitalization of the national railways.

Mr. MANION: My hon. friend is entirely wrong about that and I correct him in order to keep the issue straight. I have it in my office.

Mr. EULER: If I am wrong I am ready to admit it, but my impression is, and I had a fairly close association with him as far as the national railways were concerned, that they were never quite ready to do it; and one of the reasons was that it was extremely difficult to accomplish such a writing down because of the fact that the Canadian National Railways consisted of an aggregation of something like one hundred joint stock companies, with all their various bond issues and matters of that kind. It should have been done long ago, but we had always thought that it was a very difficult thing to do; and therefore it came as a matter of surprise and satisfaction to me in the committee last year when the auditors, Messrs. Touche & Company, made a very simple suggestion which would have dealt with the question in what I regard as a very reasonable way. And that is why I bring it up to-day I bring it up now for this reason. I think that the auditors should be retained for at least another year because they are thoroughly familiar with their own recommendations and since we could not discuss it last year in the committee and bring the recommendations before parliament, we should have an opportunity during this session to discuss the whole matter in an intelligent way; and we should be materially assisted in that regard if the auditors who made the suggestion were permitted to be present at that gathering rather than an entirely strange body of auditors who perhaps might not be in sympathy with the suggestion.

I wish to discuss the recommendations made, and I should like to discuss the matter of removing from the public mind some misapprehensions. That is what the auditors desire to do. The debt of the railways to the government is given in the auditors' report—I am using round figures—at $1,771,000,000. That is to say, that sum is carried on the books of the railway as the debt to the federal government. And here is the strange situation disclosed in last year's meeting of the committee, that while the railways carry this liability to the federal government on their books the federal government does not carry it as an asset on the federal books. I had on the order paper a few weeks ago a question as to how much of the debt owing by the railways to the government was already included in the federal national debt, and the reply came, as given by the Minister of Railways, that practicilly the whole of the debt of the railways to the government itself was already absorbed into the national debt. That national debt, in round figures, is $2,770,000,000, and the debt of the railways to the government is $1,770,000,000. Now if the whole of that liability by the railways to the government is absorbed into the national debt, then certainly those are wrong who take the whole debt of the railways to the government amounting to $1,770,000,000 and $1,250,000,000 to the public by way of bonds and add it to the $2,770,000,000 of Canadian government debt. In that way they add the two together, making the debt of the Canadian people, through the government itself and through the railways, approximately $5,500,000,000. In other words, they are adding to the amount that has already been absorbed into the national debt, given by the minister as $1,500,000,000, putting it in twice and exaggerating the debt of the Canadian people in the two ways, through the government itself and through the railways, by about $1,500,000,000.

The reason for that is this. There has always been some misunderstanding with regard to the debt of the Canadian National Railways. Now I say that we have not had a fair picture of the situation of the Canadian National Railways. It is bad enough, and during the present year we shall still fall short of paying interest on the bonded indebtedness to the public by about $50,000,000. But when you figure that according to the Canadian National books there is still owing by the railways an additional $1,700,000,000, then the people are almost justified in figuring interest on that $1,700,000,000, and it is very easy then to put the deficit of the Canadian National Railways at upwards of $100,000,000.

It is not fair to carry on the books of the Canadian National Railways that sum of $1,770,000,000 owing to the Canadian government, and the reasons are given in the auditors' report. That is why I propose to take a few minutes discussing that aspect of the subject. That sum of $1,770,000,000 owing by the railways to the government is made up as follows, in round figures:

Old Grand Trunk stock	$165,000,000
Canadian Northern Railway Stock	100,000,000
Old Grand Trunk debentures	15,000,000
Government advances for deficits	324,000,000
Government loans for capital purposes	337,000,000
Interest accrued by railways on government advances and loans	424,000,000
Government expenditure on Canadian government railways—what is known as the Intercolonial	404,000,000

That makes a total, again in round figures, of $1,770,000,000.

Mr. DUFF: When was that made up to?

Mr. EULER: This is in the auditors' report of last year. I will read briefly from that report to show how they propose to deal with the matter; they indicate that the amounts I have just given are not a truly accurate reflection of the position of the Canadian National Railways, and why they propose to adjust them so that they will give a fair picture of the situation. They say:

Misconceptions of net debt and annual budget position of Canada.

We consider that we should call attention to the effect upon the public mind in Canada and elsewhere when the national system and dominion public accounts are considered on a consolidated basis. In the last two years or so we have observed a tendency on the part of many to think erroneously of the national system capital liabilities and annual deficits as being additions to the net debt and the annual budget deficits of the dominion.

[Mr. Euler.]

Then they discuss the misconceptions. I have not time to quote the report in full, but they go on to say:

Recommendations with a view to correcting misconceptions of Canada's financial position.

With a view to establishing in the public mind a fundamentally correct interpretation of the effect of the national railways finances upon the dominion public accounts we would suggest that consideration be given to the following recommendations:—

I am going to boil those down just as much as possible and discuss the items which I have placed upon Hansard, not at any great length but discarding as far as possible what I think is unnecessary for my argument.

First, with regard to the old Grand Trunk stock of $165,000,000, the auditors would write that out completely. Why?

Because the Grand Trunk board of arbitration in 1921 declared the stock worthless and found the intrinsic property investment values to be substantially overstated on the books.

The stock is worthless, yet that amount of $165,000,000 has been carried on the books of the Canadian National, inherited from private ownership—and let those who favour private ownership not forget that point—as a liability when it was worth absolutely nothing at the time it was turned over to the Canadian National.

Second, they would write down the second item of $100,000,000 of Canadian Northern stock to $18,000,000—

—taking the Canadian Northern board of arbitration findings in 1918 as a basis for the capital stock valuation and the relative effect upon property investment account at that time.

The direct cost to the government was $10,000,000.

So there we were carrying another $100,000,000 of liabilities of the Canadian National as owing to the government for something which actually cost the government $10,000,000.

Third, they would write out completely the government advances for deficits—there may be some disagreement with regard to that, but I will give the report of the auditors—aggregating $324,000,000, "because it represents nothing but a contribution by shareholders to replace their impaired capital," just as in a private concern if money had to be placed in a private company to repair losses it would not be regarded as a debt; it would be simply replacing the capital. The report says:

This principle is already recognized in the absorption by the government—

That is the present government and I think they did right in this regard.

—of the 1932 and 1933 system deficits to the extent of $120,266,721.26.

They are simply advising that we do with past deficits what the present government has done with the deficits of 1932 and 1933.

Fourth:

Writing out completely the governmental grants in aid of construction represented by the old Grand Trunk debentures to the amount of $15,142,633.33 ... because this portion of the grants was placed junior to the old Grand Trunk stocks which were declared worthless in the 1921 arbitration.

That leaves two items; the amounts that were advanced specifically for capital purposes, one of something like $355,000,000. That actually went into the construction of the road, being actual capital invested. The suggestion of the auditors is that, instead of this amount plus the amount of $404,000,000 that was expended on the Intercolonial railway, being carried as an ordinary liability by the Canadian National Railways, they should issue to the government of Canada $760,000,000 in common stock, upon which necessarily no interest would be paid. That is, that amount which has actually been expended in capital would in an ordinary company be raised no doubt by subscriptions for stock and it then would not be an ordinary debt upon which interest would be paid, but it would be capital stock upon which dividends would be paid if any were earned and if they were not earned, it would not be kept on the books as a liability upon which interest would be compounded and pyramided from year to year. If these recommendations were carried out, there would be this situation according to the auditors; items now totaling $1,011,000,000 would disappear entirely from the railway company's account with the Dominion of Canada and the remaining $760,000,000 would appear not as a debt owed by the railways as a debtor to the government as a creditor, but as an investment by the government as I have explained before, and it would be subject as is said, to the ordinary risks of business. If there were a profit, the government would get a dividend. If there were a loss, it would not be carried on the books as a liability of the company for all time to come.

I have given this information for the purpose of showing that this matter is of very considerable importance to the people of Canada. It is only fair to the Canadian National Railways that the books should be rectified so as to show the exact condition of the railways with regard to their relation to the dominion government. The minister has said: Even if you write this down, it will not relieve the people of Canada by one cent from the necessity of paying interest. That is quite true and I for one would like to correct any opinion that has gone abroad, if it has, that if we write down the capital, we shall save interest. We shall not save anything at all. The amount of the Canadian National Railway debt that has already gone, that has already been absorbed into the debt of the country, is taken care of by payment of interest from time to time as the interest on the federal bonds matures. As regards indebtedness owing to the public, it goes as a matter of course that the interest on that has to be paid. But this would put the Canadian National Railways at a fair valuation in the eyes of the people of Canada; they would not be constantly told that this railway has cost us $2,700,000,000 or $2,800,000,000 and that our deficit from year to year is about $100,000,000. It is worth while doing this because if one thing has occurred within the last two or three years—and I regret it very much and I think some other hon. members also regret it—it has been this, that by misrepresentation of the condition of the Canadian National Railways either in regard to expenditures or capitalization the confidence of the people of this country has been shaken in the principle of public ownership of railways in a way that is not at all justified by the facts. As I said a while ago, the situation is bad enough, and speaking for myself I have advocated one way of avoiding the extreme waste by way of duplication and so on as between the two railways. I did not however rise to say that to-day because it is entirely a personal opinion.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Hear, hear.

Mr. EULER: The hon. member will have an opportunity of expressing his own views.

In conclusion, I would say that these changes if they are made would be in keeping with the facts and with common sense, and I think the government should give its immediate attention to the recommendations that were made in good faith by the auditors who are now being replaced. I would like to repeat: My chief reason for suggesting that the change in auditors be not made now is in order that the present auditors may appear before the parliamentary committee on railways which will be appointed, I hope soon, and which will be given an opportunity of meeting a little sooner than it did last year, and they may be of assistance to the committee by explaining the terms of their recommendations so that after the committee rises we may make an intelligent report to the house.

Mr. MANION: In regard to the last suggestion of my hon. friend, I am glad to tell him that the present auditors will appear before the committee this year. Nobody else could, they are the only people who know anything about it. Those we are appointing now naturally will not know anything about the matter yet, so when the special committee does meet it will be Touche and Company who will come to explain everything; my hon. friend need have no worry in that regard.

Mr. GRAY: I do not propose to follow at any great length the very able statement made by my colleague the hon. member for North Waterloo with respect to the report of Touche and Company of last year, in which they advocated that the debt structure of the Canadian National Railways be written down, as the hon. member has covered it very fully. It is quite true, as pointed out by the Minister of Railways, that there have been previous recommendations with respect to this matter. I think it was investigated by the board of audit in 1925 and subsequently. But I say that the report of Touche and Company made to the committee very late last session was the most comprehensive of all reports that have been made. Further, the minister states that there has been no requisition or suggestion by the board of trustees that any action be taken. It is true that the Duff commission in their report stated—I think this is the way it was put—that they frankly recognized that a very substantial part of the money invested in the railways comprised in the Canadian National system must be regarded as lost, and the capital liability heavily written down; and, as stated by the minister, asked that it be reported upon by the board of trustees. Hon. Mr. Fullerton, the chairman of the board, told the committee last year that he had been studying the matter ever since he was appointed. Mr. Fullerton said on May 25 last year, as reported in the first minutes of proceedings, pages 3 and 4, that he has been giving the matter of this writing down of the capital structure serious consideration, has studied the report fully; and on page 4 he says:

> It appears to me that it could be argued with much force that the writing down should even go further than has been recommended. However the matter in the final analysis is one for the parliament of Canada to determine.

I suggest to the minister that in Mr. Fullerton's recommendations as presented to the committee, he there and then said, I approve of what has been recommended by Touche and Company, and I pass this on to parliament, represented by the Minister of Railways and the government, to take action.

I recall quite well that we there and then urged that the minister, even at that session, or certainly at this, should bring in a bill to give effect to the recommendations of Touche and Company and the trustees. The minister cannot argue that we are still waiting for some further recommendations from the board of trustees. On this point I am in full accord with what the hon. member for North Waterloo has said, that we have not finished with this, in view of the fact that this report was not acted upon by the government, and regardless of the statement by the minister: Oh well, these auditors will still appear before the committee. Of course they will, because in fact they have been acting since January 1, 1935. The Prime Minister said a few minutes ago that their term of office expired December 31, 1934. But who has been acting since that date? It is a continuous audit. At the end of the first quarter we are asked to strike out the name of Touche and Company and substitute that of Clarkson, Gordon, Dilworth and Company. I urge upon the minister that Touche and Company be permitted to finish, and to give again their recommendations and conclusions since the last report, in view of the fact that the government have not acted upon it. I think that is only right. I cannot appreciate the very fine distinction drawn by the minister to-day between dismissal and a change. I say to him, and I think upon consideration he will agree, that when he cast the reflections that he did upon this company—

Mr. MANION: I cast no reflections.

Mr. GRAY: Well, the minister can use his own judgment what term is suitable for his statement that he had heard that they had been a party to the propaganda that he said was being sent out about the government. The Minister of Railways said either too much or too little.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. GRAY: It is certainly up to him to substantiate these remarks on the floor of the house, because this is a reputable firm. Then for the purpose of his argument the minister goes to the Bank Act and states that bank auditors are changed every two years. The Prime Minister interrupted my hon. friend from North Waterloo when he said that this company had been auditors for some ten or twelve years, the Prime Minister said, No, only one year under the government. Well then, if under the government they have only been there one year, if it is only one year that this government have recognized Touche and Company, surely they should be given at least the time that auditors are given under the Bank Act.

The minister has stated, and I think quite honestly, that these auditors are satisfactory. Let us see what the minister thought about changing auditors when this matter was first discussed, back in 1933, at the time of the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific bill. The minister's remarks will be found at page 4083 of Hansard for that year. The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. McGibbon) urged that year and again the next year that the auditors should be changed from time to time, and the Minister of Railways had this to say:

Mr. Manion: While I agree that if there is any reason for changing auditors, it should be done, at the same time my hon. friend should remember that the auditing of the Canadian National Railways' accounts is a huge job which requires special training and the following of a complicated set of rules. The auditing requires very elaborate work on the part of the particular firm that is doing the auditing, and unless there is good reason for a change, I do not think it would be wise for any government to change the auditors every year. The new auditors would have to learn the very complicated and elaborate system of accounting which is used, and I do not think a yearly change would be practicable.

Mr. MANION: Hear, hear, I still think that.

Mr. GRAY: Mr. Arthurs interrupted, saying:

You might trade with the Canadian Pacific every other year.

Mr. Manion: My hon. friend mentions the Canadian Pacific. I do not think the Canadian Pacific or any other big company changes its auditors yearly. I agree that if there were any reason for the change it could be made, and that is why it is proposed that the auditors shall be appointed annually, to give an opportunity for making the change if necessary.

Yet this government, if we are to accept the Prime Minister's theory, have changed them after one year, as far as the government appointment is concerned.

I agree that if there were any reason for the change it could be made, and that it is why it is proposed that the auditors shall be appointed annually, to give an opportunity for making the change if necessary.

And I ask the minister to note these words of his:

I think however it would be better to retain the same auditors so long as they were satisfactory.

"So long as they were satisfactory." Will the minister state to-day that Touche and Company are not satisfactory?

Mr. MANION: No, but I hope the new appointees may be more satisfactory.

Mr. GRAY: Then let us see what the minister had to say when this matter came up for consideration in 1934, as reported at page 845 of Hansard:

It has been decided, after a good deal of consideration, that the auditors who have been doing the work for a good many years—I do not know exactly how long, but eight or ten years at any rate—are so well trained in the work and are so capable that it would be wise to appoint them at least for this year. I am informed by the railway people themselves that it would take quite a long time for any group of auditors to learn the method of auditing such an immense system of books and accounts as are contained in this vast business. For example, I am told that there are no other chartered accountants in Canada who are familiar with the interstate commerce commission's type of accounting and the accounting of the Canadian National Railways is carried on under the same rules as those of the interstate commerce commission for the railways of the United States.

Mr. MANION: Was not that the same discussion as the other?

Mr. GRAY: No, this was last year.

Mr. MANION: Then we must have appointed them two years in succession.

Mr. HANBURY: You were consistent for one year.

Mr. MANION: That is more than you are.

Mr. GRAY: Let me go back. In 1932-33 we were merely discussing the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific bill. February, 1934, was the first time the bill was brought in by the minister under the act.

The Clarkson firm is one of the oldest in Toronto; its reputation is well known, but after inquiry the minister found that Touche and Company were the only auditors capable of performing the audit under the interstate commerce commission method of auditing. The minister so stated on the floor of the house, and we must ask the minister now what has brought about this change during the months that have passed since he made that statement in 1934. Is it part of the changing policy of the government? The minister said:

If it be true, as I am informed, that there are no other companies of chartered accountants in Canada who are familiar with that type of auditing, it would probably take many months for a new company to assume charge of the auditing and become familiar with it. Therefore, after a good deal of consideration, we felt that it would be wise, at any rate for this year, to appoint George A. Touche and Company, and I intend to move that the name

"George A. Touche and Company, chartered accountants of the city of Toronto" be inserted in section one of this bill.

I ask the minister if he has been quite fair in his statements to-day, and if there is not something that he has not told us with regard to this change. We can go back to the day when the Prime Minister, in connection with that same bill, told us that the railways no longer belonged to the people of Canada but belonged to those holding bonds. We can go back to his radio broadcast of January 2, 1935, when he told us that the return to prosperity depended upon the solution of the railway problem, but he left it at that for the next four or five broadcasts without explaining what he meant. We can follow him on to Toronto, to a board of trade meeting at which he stated that the solution of the railway problem is not a responsibility of the government but a responsibility of the people, and by that statement I say that he meant that it was a responsibility of the people to return him to power so that he could bring about the amalgamation of these two roads.

The minister says that adjustment of the capital structure is a dead issue. It is not a dead issue to the enemies of the Canadian National Railways. I agree that it does not make any difference with regard to the interest that may be paid, but it does make a great deal of difference to those who are piling up and pyramiding the interest on that debt structure. So while the minister deprecates it, laughs at it and says there is no justification whatever for it, I do submit that he has not satisfied very many on this side of the house with the explanation he has given for the substitution of the Clarkson firm for George A. Touche and Company.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, I rather think it would be somewhat difficult for those on this side of the house to satisfy hon. gentlemen on the other side, so I am not particularly worried about not satisfying them. Even if they were perfectly satisfied, as they indicated they were by their vote on the unemployment insurance measure, they would continue to criticise us, so it is a little difficult to satisfy my hon. friends, and particularly I have no hope of satisfying the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, and who has made every endeavour to turn this into a political question. He even dragged in by the hair of the head the old question of amalgamation, for which, by the way, no one on this side of the house has ever spoken so far as I know; not a man on this side of the house has ever come out for amalgamation, but at least two hon. members on the other side of the house have done so. So it is rather far fetched to try to drag in the question of amalgamation and use it against us. Within the last two months as Minister of Railways I have made two speeches, one in Smiths Falls and the other in Brockville, both of them against amalgamation, and I think probably I can speak more for the government than my hon. friend can, with all due respect to him.

For a few moments, Mr. Chairman, I wish to deal with the remarks of my hon. friend from North Waterloo, which were a good deal more moderate than those of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. The hon. member for North Waterloo discussed the question of the recapitalization of the Canadian National. I quite admit his right to do so; I quite admit that it enters into the discussion here to-day, and I have no criticism to offer in that regard. But I do say that it is a very debatable question, and I am sure my hon. friend will agree. I admit as well that there are some items in the Canadian National balance sheet, charged against the Canadian National and debited to them as owing to the government, that might well be wiped out. I do not quarrel with that, but the question is the same as it was when his government was in power; the difficulty is to arrive at something in the way of a fair decision in regard to that balance sheet. I quite agree that the day will come when the balance sheet will have to be straightened out.

The hon. gentleman dealt with some of the items, and with some of his statements I have no quarrel at all. I agree that some of the items might well be dealt with but, as was realized by the late management and the late government, and as is realized I think by the present management and the present government, it is a question that requires a great deal of investigation in order to decide rightly as to what should be done. For example, supposing we did as the hon. gentleman suggests and wiped out, not the $270,000,000 of stocks which are charged up against them, which item I think should be reduced to about $18,000,000, but a great part of the other liabilities charged up to the Canadian National in the railway balance sheet. It must not be forgotten that the greater part of those debts represent actual money paid either for capital expenditure or for interest upon some of that money. My hon. friend agrees that this is correct. Well, there are those who rightly say, "Why should we hide the picture?" That is the argument of the other side, and if we carry out the suggestion of the hon. gentleman and wipe out some of the capital liabilities of the Canadian National to the government, then the charge will be made that this government or whatever government takes that step is merely trying to hide some of the cost of the Canadian National to this country. If my hon. friend has any idea that by hiding these costs instead of keeping them in the open, on the books of the Canadian National, we will stop those who want to talk about them, he is much more optimistic with regard to the enemies of the Canadian National than I am.

Mr. EULER: Why, then, are they absorbed in the national debt and not carried on the books as an asset?

Mr. MANION: The answer, obviously, is that they do not consider them worth anything.

Mr. EULER: Then why carry them as a liability on the books of the Canadian National?

Mr. MANION: We do not carry them as Canadian National debts.

Mr. EULER: Who controls the Canadian National?

Mr. MANION: It is controlled to a large extent by the trustees, but of course they could not make a change of that kind without the statutory sanction of this parliament. But I do submit that if we wiped out some of these debts we would be simply hiding them, and the very same people who are going around the country to-day talking about the debt of the Canadian National Railways would make the statement that the government was being unfair to the people of Canada in trying to hide part of that debt. They would use the same figures, because those figures are easily obtainable. Any member of this house can ask for a return showing just how much money has been paid to the Canadian National, the Canadian Pacific or any other railway company, and they have done so. Surely my hon. friend does not suggest that if part of those debts were wiped off, the enemies of the Canadian National would stop speaking about them. If he does make that suggestion I do not agree with him.

Mr. EULER: I do not like to interrupt my hon. friend because he is arguing reasonably to-day.

Mr. MANION: Why "to-day;" I am always reasonable.

Mr. EULER: I should like to ask the minister this question: We know that comparisons are always being made between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways. Supposing, for example, that in any one year the Canadian Pacific Railway lost, we will say, the sum of $25,000,000 or $50,000,000, would that be charged up as a liability to stand against them forever? No, they would simply absorb the loss and forget it. Why should the Canadian National Railways carry those losses as a debt against themselves and the Canadian government?

Mr. MANION: I do not quarrel with the hon. member for having used that argument. That is what a private corporation would do, undoubtedly—but this does not happen to be a private corporation. It happens to be a public corporation owned and more or less controlled by the government of Canada. I admit quite freely that the hon. member has some right in his argument, but I contend that on the other hand the other side has rights. I submit they could not be prevented from speaking about the hidden debts simply by hiding them.

I wish to point out just how difficult it is to understand the situation. The hon. member for North Waterloo, who is one of the intelligent members in the chamber—and I say that quite frankly—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member has been studying the question for many years. He has spoken about public ownership, and yet he stood in this chamber this afternoon and made a wrong statement in regard to interest charges accrued on the books of the Canadian National Railways. I use this illustration simply to point out how difficult it is to understand the matter. The hon. gentleman said that while we are telling throughout the country that the Canadian National Railways deficit was nearly $100,000,000 there was $1,700,000,000 charged up by the government against the Canadian National Railways, and that the interest on that amount was being charged against the railways.

Mr. EULER: No, I never said that.

Mr. MANION: The hon. member gave that impression, probably he would correct it.

Mr. EULER: This is the statement: When those who are the enemies of public ownership figure out the deficit on the Canadian National Railways they will take, first, the interest on the funded debt to the public, which this year is about $50,000,000, and which has to be raised out of taxation. Then there is the other debt owing to the government of $1,700,000,000 which they say the government has advanced in one way or another to the Canadian National Railways; but that is not true. It is true to some extent—deficits, loans, advances and so on; those are accurate. But some of the other items the minister knows should not be included. For instance, there is the value of stock taken over from the Canadian Northern and from the Grand Trunk. Then the enemies of public ownership take that $1,700,000,000 and say that since the Canadian government advanced that money there is interest to be paid on it. Then they figure the interest on that amount, add it to the interest on the funded debt and make up a loss or deficit of $100,000,000 or more.

Mr. MANION: That was the hon. member's statement, and that is exactly what I said.

Mr. EULER: It is not untrue.

Mr. MANION: I will show where it is untrue. They do not compute the interest on $1,700,000,000 at all.

Mr. EULER: Who does not?

Mr. MANION: They compute the interest on $600,000,000. My hon. friend is a good mathematician, and he could very easily figure out that if you take five per cent of $1,700,000,000 you have $85,000,000 of government interest, alone.

Mr. EULER: So you would.

Mr. MANION: Yes, but they do not take that. What they take is this: The money that was put out by the Canadian government in the past decade for the Canadian National Railways was, first, the money paid for the construction of the Intercolonial railway, and the Transcontinental and other government lines amounting to $400,000,000. But no interest has ever been charged on that—none whatever. That is the first.

Mr. EULER: But—

Mr. MANION: Let me finish. The hon. member may correct me if I am wrong—but I am not wrong. Then, secondly, there was a little over $600,000,000 loaned by the Canadian government to the old Grand Trunk, to the Canadian Northern and so on. It is only upon that sum that interest is ever charged. It is not charged upon the $1,700,000,000.

Mr. EULER: By whom?

Mr. MANION: By the railway books. But let me finish.

Mr. EULER: All right.

Mr. MANION: As my hon. friend has said the deficit last year was over $50,000,000. In that year, 1933, the railways were $3,500,000 short of paying the interest charges on the debt due the public. Since the interest last year was a little less than $57,000,000, roughly speaking, and they were $3,500,000 short on income account the deficit was roughly $60,000,000 that year. Then they get the figure of $100,000,000—sometimes $90,000,000 and sometimes $100,000,000—by adding the interest charged in the books of the railways on that $600,000,000. If my hon. friend will look up the report he will see that that is correct. I know I am right, because I have the figures right here. The interest figures on government loans given at the bottom of page 11 of the Canadian National Railways report for 1933 is shown as $36,000,000. That is accrued annually against the Canadian National railways on the books of the company as owing to the government. That is interest. It is shown plainly in the balance sheet. The balance sheet shows the government railway construction account as $404,000,000, and no interest has ever been charged upon it at any time. Then the balance sheet statement shows $661,000,000 as loans from the Dominion of Canada. Part of that was used for deficits, and as the hon. member pointed out quite properly, part of it was used for the capital expenditures of the Canadian National railways.

It is only upon that $661,000,000 of government loans that interest is charged—not on the total liability figure of $1,700,000,000 at all. That is what I have been pointing out to the hon. member. I am not finding fault with him, but I wish to say to hon. members of the committee that the hon. member makes a mistake when he stands in this chamber and in discussing this matter states that we have charged the railways with interest on $1,700,000,000.

Mr. HANBURY: The minister did not understand what the hon. member said.

Mr. MANION: He repeated it a moment ago; however we will leave it to Hansard. I am not trying to find fault with the hon. member. I am merely showing the difficulty which any ordinary citizen must meet who does not understand the situation; the facts are very difficult to understand. Hon. members find difficulty in understanding them, because they are dealing with a most complicated matter. I should like to ask the hon. member or any other member in the chamber how many citizens in Canada could state the national debt, if they were asked. I would say that probably not one in a hundred thousand could tell what our national debt amounts to. So if the hon. member thinks we will help out the situation confronting the Canadian National Railways by hiding some of the moneys actually paid by the government of Canada and putting it behind a curtain, so to speak, he is much more optimistic about it than I am.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: If it is so difficult for the minister and members of the committee to understand the position of the Canadian National Railways does he not think that fact would be a good argument for keeping the present auditors.

Mr. MANION: Well, if the present auditors have been on duty for twelve years, as has been pointed out, and we have not succeeded in learning much about the situation, I do not think it is necessary to keep them for another twelve years. However, that is by the way.

I think the hon. member said that we had waited four years to make the change. He intimated that we had been in power four years and that the same auditors had done the work. But if we took the attitude that because other auditors coming in will have to learn the methods of the inter-state commerce commission, as was pointed out by the hon. member, and if it is going to take them some months to learn all the details, then, following that argument we could never change the auditors of the Canadian National Railways. We would never be in a position to do that. My hon. friends opposite would come back and try—no doubt they probably would—to change from Touche and Company to some other firm. They might very well do that, without any reflection upon Touche and Company, and they would be tied up with the same argument. In other words, if that were the case we could never make a change.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: The reason I asked the question was that the minister made the statement that Touche and Company were very competent.

Mr. MANION: I do not question that. I consider Touche and Company are competent, but I also submit the firm of Clarkson, Gordon, Dilworth, Guilfoyle and Nash are competent.

Mr. EULER: Do you think the railways can carry all that?

Mr. MANION: They have carried a good deal.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Another liability.

Mr. MANION: This is one of the outstanding firms in Canada; of course there are others. For instance the Canadian Pacific Railway do not employ Touche and Company but they seem to have their books audited all right.

Mr. HEAPS: Has the Canadian Pacific Railway changed auditors?

Mr. MANION: I do not think they have in recent years.

Mr. GRAY: The Canadian Pacific Railway are not under the inter-state commerce commission.

Mr. MANION: Quite true.

Mr. GRAY: In the second place the minister said they should not be changed as long as they were satisfactory, not merely that their services were satisfactory.

Mr. MANION: Well, perhaps I did although I do not remember saying quite that, but I will accept the hon. gentleman's word. But I submit that I am of young enough mould that I can change my mind. I take that for granted, and let it go at that. I am not going to argue about that at all. Lincoln once said that anyone who does not know more this year than he did last had not much brains to know anything at all.

Mr. HANBURY: What do you know more this year than you did last to account for this change?

Mr. MANION: It is simply that I and the government are of the opinion that it would be a good thing to bring in new blood, a powerful organization to come in and make suggestions, just as it would be in regard to other matters.

I do not agree with some of the remarks of some hon. gentlemen opposite. I think it was my hon. friend from North Waterloo who said this was an indignity.

Mr. EULER: I think I said that.

Mr. MANION: He said that it was an indignity upon Touche and Company that they should be changed. There is no indignity cast upon them at all. They have not a perpetual stranglehold on this job. It pays $50,000 a year, plus some expenses, not very great. Is it to be taken that for all time, from now until eternity, if we still own the railways when eternity has arrived, we must keep Touche and Company? Have not other people some rights? Cannot the auditors be changed without casting any reflection upon Touche and Company at all?

I want to deal now with one or two other points. My hon. friend mentioned that he would like to see the special railway committee meet early. Well, that committee meets when there is business for it to deal with. We cannot meet at the present time because we have nothing for that special railway committee to deal with. The committee meets as a rule as soon as the report of the Canadian National Railways is submitted.

Mr. EULER: It did not last year.

Mr. MANION: It may be that it did not meet quite so soon last year, but it will be meeting soon this year. Last year it met on May 25 for its first meeting, and its last meeting was some two or three weeks later, on June 6. We were entirely in the hands of the committee. I can well remember that some members of the committee, and they were not all on this side of the house, suggested—let us get through with this committee; have we not dealt with the matter long enough? Finally after some lengthy discussions the committee as a body—I do not control the committee—adjourned. As I say, its last active meeting was on June 20, and it did not put in its report until June 29, and consequently we could have gone on and met for weeks after the committee adjourned. I had no way of controlling the meetings of the committee. It can meet just as often and for as long as it likes, providing only that we are willing to discuss the different matters that come before it.

The hon. gentleman said that his chief argument against this change was that he wanted Touche company before the committee again this year. I want to emphasize that they will be there again this year because they were the auditors for 1934, looking into the affairs of the Canadian National Railways.

I just want to say this in conclusion, and I say it very sincerely. I have tried to carry on the debate in a reasonable way, perhaps just a little more reasonably than my hon. friend from West Lambton, but we will let that pass. There is no mare's nest about this thing, no plot, no attempt to strangle the Canadian National Railways in any shape or form. Incidentally it might be of interest to this committee to know that within the last six weeks, in the first six weeks of this year from January 1 to February 14, the Canadian National Railways, according to the reports given to me, increased their earnings over the same six weeks last year by $1,223,905, while the Canadian Pacific had a decrease in the same period of about half a million dollars. I mention that to show that the Canadian National seems to be taking care of itself pretty well, and that it is efficiently and well managed. It seems to be doing its share of the business and I do not think there should be such a hurry on the part of a member or two to endeavour to show that we are trying to injure the Canadian National Railways in some way or other. I do not think any decent Canadian would attempt to injure the Canadian National Railways. After all we own the road, we have put our money into it, and I do not think any member would intentionally try to damage the road. We may do so unintentionally, as I charged my hon. friends opposite last year with doing, but not intentionally, although perhaps I might have done even that in the heat of the moment. As Canadians, I do not think any of us would try to do harm to the Canadian National Railways. We have too much interest in it, too much at stake. If we injure the Canadian National Railways we injure the credit of the whole country.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Did not the minister try to injure it when he recommended the construction of the Mafeking cut-off?

Mr. EULER: Probably the discussion is more or less purposeless, especially the personal interchanges. I was referring to the statement of the minister when he credited me with a certain amount of intelligence and said that nevertheless I had made a mistake. Yet he himself was so absolutely sure. I say to him, and it may not be for any lack of intelligence because he is intelligent, that he is quite wrong. He says that I stated a certain thing. As a matter of fact we are talking about two different things, and I will be generous enough to say that we are probably both correct. He stated to the committee, and he will probably correct me again, with regard to that $1,700,000,000 owed by the railways to the government, that I had said the railway figured interest on that amount. I never said anything of the sort. I said that the enemies of public ownership, and he can look for them in a great many places—

An hon. MEMBER: Around him.

Mr. EULER: I do not know that they are around him, but I say that the enemies of public ownership, journalistic or otherwise, do figure the interest on every red cent that ever was put into the Canadian National Railways or is charged against the Canadian National Railways on the books of the company.

They charge it on every amount they possibly can. I have seen them in some newspapers swell the deficit to over $100,000,000. That is what I said. I did not say that the interest on the whole sum is credited to the government on the books of the company.

I am in entire agreement with the minister in his last remarks. Although I do not agree with it usually I do not believe this government is deliberately setting out to wreck the Canadian National Railways. I would not like to make that charge against anybody, no matter how bitter an opponent he might be. The only purpose I had to serve was this, to conserve the Canadian National Railways and to preserve the morale of the Canadian people so that they are not misled. Let them get a true picture of the liabilities of the Canadian National Railways, nothing more and nothing less.

Mr. HEAPS: I would like to say a word on this question. The debate this afternoon has resolved itself more or less into a discussion of the capital structure of the Canadian National Railways. During the whole course of this discussion I have waited for some reason to be given for this change in auditors, but so far I have not heard one word given as to why such a change is necessary in the auditors for the Canadian National Railways, except this, and I do not think this could be given as a valid reason or even as an excuse, and that is that the banks change their auditors every two years. I think, Mr. Chairman, that governments in the past have been too apt to follow the lead of the banks and I think if they would follow the lead of some other interest it might be more beneficial to the people of Canada.

I do not know the firm of Touche and Company at all, and I know very little of the other firm that it is proposed to appoint in their place. But if the services of Touche and Company have been satisfactory I can see no good reason why they should be changed, except for the reason the minister gave in his last sentence or two when he said that bringing in a new and a powerful organization might lead to the government receiving certain suggestions in regard to the railway; in other words, bringing in a new doctor to look over the patient.

Mr. MANION: Or new members of parliament, as is often done.

Mr. HEAPS: Or new undertakers. May I give this illustration to the minister? Probably in the next few months the government will appeal to the people and no doubt they will tell the people what a splendid record they have behind them in the past four years.

Mr. MANION: Hear, hear.

Mr. HEAPS: The minister agrees with that statement. On the strength of that record for the past four years the government will appeal to the people for a new mandate. They do not expect a change, do they?

Mr. MANION: But they may get it.

Mr. HANBURY: They certainly will.

Mr. MANION: One never knows in politics; the government in Ontario did, you know.

Mr. SPOTTON: Now that the election is over, who is the new Minister of Railways?

Mr. HEAPS: My hon. friends feel that because of the good service they have rendered they ought to be retained in office. Should not the same principle apply to those in the government service? If a firm of auditors have given good service, I do not think there is any valid reason why they should be changed.

An hon. MEMBER: But you object to monopolies.

Mr. HEAPS: This is not a monopoly. When an employee of the government has given good service—and in this instance it is generally recognized by the government, by the opposition and by all parties that these people have—I do not see any good reason for the change. I think the principle is bad, unless it has come to be recognized as the practice to change auditors every few years. But that has not been the practice. I asked the Minister of Railways whether the auditors in the Canadian Pacific Railway had been changed and his answer was in the negative. Well, if that principle is good enough for the Canadian Pacific Railway surely it is good enough for the Canadian National. I was anxious to hear something said as to why there had been a change in the personnel of the auditors but we have been given no reason at all, and unless there is something more valid than the reason given so far by the Minister of Railways for changing auditors, unless it can be shown that their services have not been satisfactory or that better results can be obtained by dispensing with them, then I submit that no change should be made.

Mr. NEILL: One of the effects of this bill is to remove the firm of George A. Touche & Company from a no doubt profitable contract with the dominion government. If that is the object then I am tickled pink to vote for it. It is a long lane that has no turning. My mind goes back to the spring of 1932 when a special committee was appointed to investigate the price of gasoline, and that committee appointed George A. Touche & Company to make an investigation into prices charged. I was not a member of the committee, but one member in discussing the matter in the house spoke as follows, as reported at page 1645 of Hansard of November 25, 1932. He said:

If two experts had been sent out by the oil companies to justify a higher price for gasoline they could not have found two men who could have done the work better. These men reported that the oil companies were not charging too much. . . . At that time the committee said, "We do not want that sort of information; we want the facts and figures in order to draw our own conclusions." As a matter of fact the auditors brought in their conclusions without the actual figures. After arguing with them for a whole day we did manage to obtain a few figures, and they told us that if we wanted the other information they could figure it out but they did not have it prepared. So far as the committee was concerned the work done by those men was very unsatisfactory, though no doubt it was satisfactory to the oil companies in general.

Because of that job we had to pay $11,233, and I brought the matter up in the house. The Prime Minister used this language:

I may say that like the hon. gentleman I thought the amount was very large. . . . We did not ask that the account be taxed, because you cannot tax it, but we asked that it be moderated.

Further on I protested again, and the right hon. gentleman said:

No bargain was made antecedent to the employment being given to this firm. They have rendered an account which was referred to me personally and I could find no way by which it could be reduced.

That shows the spirit in which the Prime Minister regarded it, and I thereupon replied:

If that is the case, there is no use in my wasting the time of the committee. At the same time, it is a good thing to uncover these things as they can be remembered the next time we need the services of accountants.

It was also complained that they had brought back a whitewashing report which they had not been asked for. It is said in Scripture that he who is faithful in a few things will be faithful in many, and the converse is true. These men gouged us three years ago and I am pleased to vote for their removal.

Sir EUGENE FISET: To come back to the discussion of the bill itself, has the government taken steps to consult the trustees or to obtain from them a recommendation with regard to the change of office? It seems to me, in view of the numerous statements that have been made by the minister himself that the government has had nothing to do with the administration of the railways, and as we have taken the trouble to place in the hands of the trustees the complete and absolute administration of the system I think it would have been at least a matter of courtesy for the government to ask for a recommendation from the trustees themselves.

Mr. MANION: The hon. gentleman has asked a proper question, but I do not consider that this or any other government should consult the trustees in this regard because this is an audit for the parliament of Canada. They have their own auditors, and they have nothing whatever to say in regard to these auditors. I will read once more a section of the act passed in 1933 bearing on this subject:

A continuous audit of the accounts of national railways shall be made by independent auditors appointed annually by a resolution of parliament and annually reporting to parliament in respect of their audit.

That is section 13, subsection 1, of the act of 1933. These are our auditors, not the trustees', and I do not consider that the trustees should be consulted. Indeed, if we did consult them I think we should be doing wrong, because they have their own auditors.

Sir EUGENE FISET: The answer to my question is no.

Mr. HANBURY: Who have been acting as auditors since December 31, 1934?

Mr. MANION: The same firm, and they will continue to act, unless they are recreant to their trust, until the others take over; and they will be paid in the ordinary way. I do not think there is any reason for assuming that they will not report.

Mr. EULER: When will the others take over?

Mr. MANION: Not until we pass the bill, I have not thought of the date, but it will be perhaps the middle of next month.

Mr. HANBURY: The statement has been made here this afternon that we have as yet been given no reason why a change is being made. I think the minister has given a very good reason why it is being made. He said it was the opinion of the government that the new auditors would be more efficient.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): More satisfactory, he said.

Mr. HANBURY: I am going to give him credit for meaning efficient. If that is the opinion of the government I am prepared to subscribe to it. I do not see any reason why auditors should be continued in office year after year regardless of their efficiency, and there is only one suggestion I have to make to the minister, a suggestion which I think in all fairness he should adopt. The minister left the impression with me, and I think with a good many other hon. members, that he had some reason to believe—he used very guarded language—that the present officers of Messrs. Touche & Company had been lending their assistance to propaganda that had been spread across Canada in the newspapers, in order that the government might be embarrassed in making the change. That is the impression left on me and I believe on many others, and I submit that in fairness to the members of the committee as well as to Messrs. Touche & Company he should either go further in his statement and try to show to what extent it is true or else make an absolute retraction so that the members of the committee will feel that perhaps the matter is not as bad as we have been led to believe. The minister has said also that all the members on the government side of the house were supporting the Canadian National Railways and that there was no suggestion by any member of the Conservative party that there should be any amalgamation or unification. I am quite prepared to accept that; I cannot give any evidence to the contrary. But I do say this, and I say it in fairness to the government and in all seriousness, that there are many people in Canada to-day who question the policy of the government with reference to amalgamation and would welcome a reiteration by the Prime Minister of his 1930 slogan—amalgamation never, competition ever. I am suggesting to the Minister of Railways that in view of the situation and of the agitation that has been carried on for the last few months and, indeed, for the last few years, it is only fair to the people of Canada that the Prime Minister should again make a statement in that connection.

There is one suggestion I will make to the minister and of course he knows whether he will accept it. He says that Touche and Company have been acting as auditors so far this year, and, further, that they will be appearing before the special committee on railways and shipping, so that their work will continue for some time. I suggest therefore that the date in this bill might very well be changed so as to appoint the new auditors for the year 1936. In other words, let us continue the present auditors during the year 1935. That would in the first place answer any possible suggestion that Touche and Company were being discharged on the basis of inefficiency, and in my opinion the government would be quite justified in making the change in view of the fact that they have the responsibility of saying who the auditors are to be. But as the present auditors must of necessity carry on for some time and as the change should be made at the end of the calendar year, if the minister would make the suggested change in the bill to have it read: "1936," that would meet the situation and satisfy everybody; in so far as I am concerned it would satisfy me.

Mr. MANION: In regard to the first statement made by the hon. gentleman as to what I have said about Touche and Company, I shall endeavour to repeat my words so far as I can remember them—and I did not say them without ample thought—because I do not think he will claim I have anything to withdraw when I repeat them so far as I can remember. My statement was that I had been told that Touche and Company encouraged the propaganda, or something to that effect. I said that I hoped this was not true and I could not believe it was true because if it were, they would have proved themselves recreant to their duty and should have been removed. That is what I intended to say and I think that is what I said.

Mr. HANBURY: May I interrupt the minister? If he did not believe it was true, why did he even make the suggestion? Was it fair to do so.

Mr. MANION: Well, that is questionable. I did further state that some of the information that was being used almost looked as if it came from the auditors, and I repeat that. I have not anything to withdraw. I have said this afternoon three or four times that I am not nor is the government reflecting on Touche and Company. So far as I am concerned that is sufficient for them; at least it is all they are going to get. So that probably is clear enough.

In regard to my hon. friend's suggestion as to the carrying on of the present auditors, I think there is very good ground for what he suggests, and as a matter of fact the thought came into my head that we would have to do something of the sort, because the auditors of last year, that is Touche and Company, really were automatically discharged on December 31. In the original act under which we appoint these auditors, the one from which I quoted, the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act of 1933, section 13, subsection 2 reads:

> Notwithstanding anything in this act contained the now existing auditors of the Canadian National Railways shall continue in office and perform their duties as such until their successors have been appointed under this act and have commenced to perform their duties.

I think wording such as that would cover the ground. I would not like to do this right off the bat, so if my hon. friend will accept my word, on the third reading of the bill I shall endeavour to cover the ground suggested by him when the time comes.

Mr. HEAPS: When do the services of Touche and Company terminate?

Mr. MANION: I pointed out to some other hon. member that they will automatically carry on until their successors take over. We are legalizing this.

Mr. HEAPS: When will that be?

Mr. MANION: I am afraid my hon. friend was not listening. A few minutes ago somebody else asked the same question and I said that it could not be until after the act received its third reading; it will be some time after that. It will be the earliest time possible after the act has received its third reading, had the approval of the other house and is assented to by His Excellency.

Mr. SANDERSON: I take it from the minister's statement of a few minutes ago that the remuneration to Clarkson, Gordon and Company will be $50,000 plus expenses. About how much would the expenses be?

Mr. MANION: I had occasion to look that up. Last year they were between $4,000 and $5,000. I am speaking subject to correction, although I think I am right. No expenses are paid for services in Montreal, but expenses are paid where any of their auditors are sent out on the line. Any auditing firm auditing such a huge business organization as the Canadian National Railways must have auditors on the work continuously and some of them have to travel throughout the country. When they do so, they are paid expenses. Last year they amounted to something like $4,000 or $5,000.

Mr. SANDERSON: What is the amount that has been paid to Touche and Company?

Mr. MANION: It is $50,000 a year.

Mr. SANDERSON: There is no change in that amount?

Mr. MANION: No.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I am not particularly interested in the discussion as to the change in auditors although I think the minister might have had a better reason for suggesting the change than the one he has offered, for after all, from the statement of the minister, those auditors appear to have been giving perfect satisfaction. But I want to say something in connection with all this railway discussion and particularly with regard to the propaganda that is going on from some sources in Canada and that persists in going on despite the repeated statements of the minister himself, speaking on behalf of the government, that there is no intention on the part of the government to consider amalgamation of any sort. That should settle the matter so far as the government is concerned, but despite those statements there is a persistent propaganda being carried on throughout Canada that the Canadian National Railways is the big problem or one of the big problems to be met and settled by the government either now or at some future date.

I would like to suggest to the minister that he consider the writing down of the capitalized debt of the Canadian National Railways because I agree with the hon. member for North Waterloo that the government persist in capitalizing this road to the fullest extent possible, charging interest upon this capital and thereby presenting such a picture to the Canadian people that if amalgamation or perhaps absorption, which would be worse in my opinion, of another corporation were considered, that would perhaps meet with some approval by the public. I am one of those who dread that sort of thing because I have lived in western Canada under conditions where we had one corporation. I do not say that they did not render service, but they rendered service when it pleased them and not when it was satisfactory to the shippers. I think anyone who has lived through that period will agree with me.

I was a member of a government that did perhaps foolish things in order to try to correct that situation; I admit that now. Those are all incidents of the past, but we have this problem on our doorstep and it is one that, I agree with the most ardent propagandists with regard to the matter, is giving us the greatest concern. In the first place I would like to see the capital structure reduced to proper proportions; I do not think it should be carried in the condition it is in to-day. This is not the first time I have voiced this opinion. I believe also during these troublous periods, this period of depression, both railways have not been paying proper attention to maintenance and a heavy bill for maintenance charges is being piled up that some day or another will have to be met. That is, maintenance will have to be undertaken much more extensively than is now being done by either railway company. I do not think one can criticize one any more than the other. They are absolutely necessary for the people of this country. But I ask the Minister of Railways and the Prime Minister to place before the Canadian people something that is never emphasized as it should be, namely that we enjoy a lower passenger and freight rate structure in this country than do our neighbours to the south, where the railways are under private ownership. That is something that is largely lost sight of. When there is so much talk about the capital and debt structure of the Canadian National Railways, and the interest charge that the Canadian people are paying, it seems to me that the other side of the matter should be brought to the attention of the Canadian people. I am not in possession of actual figures, but perhaps the contribution which we are making by way of interest charges from public revenues is largely offset by our lower traffic rates. That may or may not be a good thing, but if we ever get into the situation of having no national railway it would not be long before the Canadian people would be asked to make good that so-called loss in interest by way of increased traffic charges. That is one reason why I am very much in favour of preserving the national railways as a national undertaking, controlled by the government of this country. I think it is highly important. I know that is foreign to the present discussion, but I want again to emphasize that point, as I have on former occasions, because I believe it is one that is being ignored by those who oppose the situation as it exists to-day, and it is not constantly placed before the public as it should be as a reason why we have to carry that added burden during this troubled period. I suggest to the minister that he give earnest consideration to the writing down of the debt structure.

I know nothing about Touche and Company or the abilities of the gentlemen whom it is proposed to place in charge. The government will have to take the responsibility for that; they have taken the responsibility for making other changes in management and will have to bear any criticism that may result from the exchange. But the other matter I think is highly important in view of the propaganda that is being constantly launched against this undertaking from one end of the country to the other.

Mr. BENNETT: The railway rate structure in this country is, as the hon. gentleman says, very low. But I wonder if he has noticed the advertisements appearing in the eastern press lately quoting a Vancouver newspaper editorial in which the demand is made that there be an immediate reduction in freight rates?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, I have.

Mr. BENNETT: On every occasion that I have had the opportunity, and I think the same statement is true about most public men in Canada, we have pointed out that, for instance, grain rates in western Canada for some hauls have been as much as twenty per cent lower than in the United States. And frequently we find Americans pointing to our rates as being lower than theirs. But the other side of it is indicated in the advertisement to which I have just directed attention.

With respect to the capital structure of the Canadian National Railways, I could not be in the chamber during the whole of this discussion, but there is one reason why at present it cannot be touched. Doubtless every hon. member knows that the Grand Trunk people are still proceeding with their litigation against this country in connection with the taking over of that system. Mr. Lovibond's case in Ontario was disposed of by the Canadian courts adversely to his contention, but there is now before the privy council a petition from that gentleman in which he asks that certain things be done. To disturb that capital structure until this litigation is ended is something that I think almost any man would agree should not be done. I do not know how many hon. members have studied the situation, I assume many have; it is a most complex and difficult one. Scarcely any Canadians go to London without someone beginning to talk to him about the Grand Trunk situation, and undoubtedly many receive letters about it. Litigation was commenced in the United States and in the courts of Ontario. The case of Lovibond versus the Grand Trunk—or the Canadian National, I think it was; I forget the exact name of the defendant—was disposed of by our courts, as I have said, adversely to his contention. Now the matter stands with this petition asking the privy council to reopen and hear again the whole matter.

I do not suppose many hon. members have really followed the point at issue. It will be remembered that this country offered to settle with the Grand Trunk for a certain figure. That offer was declined.

Mr. HANBURY: With the shareholders.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, it was a representative of the company. There are so many classes of shareholders. Certain difficulties arose to which I shall presently refer. Then the matter was arbitrated, and it will be recalled that the case went ultimately to the privy council, and the privy council sustained the arbitration award. But that has not stopped the agitation on the part of certain classes of shareholders, who contend that their position was not properly represented, either at the arbitration, in which Chief Justice Taft of the United States represented the shareholders of the Grand Trunk, or to the Canadian government. They have proceeded with litigation. I do not know whether or not the house recalls the fact that the legislation which enabled action to be taken was placed upon the statute books by the government of which Mr. Meighen was the head, but the arbitration was not disposed of in the privy council until after he had been succeeded by the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). When the Grand Trunk arbitration decision was given by the privy council, in virtue of legislation which had been passed an order in council was put through here that wiped out the Dashwood house register of shareholders of the Grand Trunk, and substituted the name of the Minister of Finance as the shareholder of the road. You can readily see what opportunities for differences of opinion might arise from the enactment of that statute and the passing of the order in council under it. This litigation which is still pending is of such a character that I do not think that this country should lightly disturb the status quo with respect to capitalization until it is disposed of. That was in the mind of the former president of the Canadian National, I know, because he was not aware of the position which was taken by these shareholders until after he went to England and a number of them waited upon him, as they did also upon the former prime minister. One set of them demanded a fiat on a petition of right. They did not endeavour to secure the fiat for a long time, and then successive governments have not taken any action in that regard, so they launched a simple action in the courts, which has been disposed of by the court of appeal in Ontario and is now in the position I have indicated. I think most members of the committee will realize how unwise it would be to touch this matter until such time at least as this litigation has been disposed of.

Mr. EULER: It was valueless before they took it over.

Mr. BENNETT: It could not have been done without the action of this parliament, representing the people of the country, and it is well that the people should have before them a constant reminder of the mistakes they have made in the past, in order that they may be avoided in the future. It is like punishment in criminal cases, which is for two purposes; one the mere punishment, the other for deterrent purposes. I think the deterrent effect of being constantly reminded of something is very useful. It cannot affect rates, as the hon. member for West Edmonton realizes; it cannot affect anything at all in connection with the company, except to remind us that we made tremendous mistakes and that it will be a very long time before we can eliminate the results of those mistakes. It does not, as my hon. friend the Minister of Finance says, help us any in regard to having to continue to pay in hard cash the deficits that accumulate from year to year. If cutting down this capital structure would lessen the deficit that had to be paid one could understand something about it, but when it does not touch that obligation in any shape or form, direct or indirect, the idea of entirely eliminating it would mean that we would hide from ourselves the position that we ourselves created, and assume that we were in a position which we were not in, for we still have to pay the deficits which arise out of the operation of the property.

My only reason for rising at all was merely to indicate what I trust the committee realizes, how unwise and unsound it would be to endeavour to take any action with respect to the matter when litigation so serious in its possible consequences is still pending.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): The answer given by the Prime Minister is the one I received from colleagues of my own when I pressed the same question, but I have always felt that it afforded opponents of the national system the opportunity to make unfair comparisons between the national system and the privately owned system, owing to this very debt structure.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, no.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I will just take a moment to explain why I say that. The right hon. gentleman knows better than anyone else the amount of land contributed for the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway. In no way does that appear as a charge in the capital debt of that railway.

Mr. BENNETT: It is an asset.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Yes, but it is not set out in the capital debt of the railways, and it is just as much a contribution by the Canadian people as the cash that is turned over to the national system every year. On that count alone I have always urged that the two lines should be treated alike. Surely this land was worth money; undoubtedly it was. I will agree at once that until the construction of the Canadian Pacific railway its value was very doubtful, but on the construction of that railway it became worth a very considerable amount of money. When we come to compare the capital debt structures of the two lines of railway, however, it appears very much as though the national system was carrying a very much larger capital debt than that of the privately owned system, and whether we like it or not people will always make comparisons between the two systems. For these reasons I desire once more not to plead the case of the Canadian National Railways but to put it in such a light that it can be judged on its merits in regard both to construction costs and the cost of operation. Personally I do not think there was very much difference between the construction costs of the two lines. Despite all that has been said about the cost of constructing the Canadian National and all the railways that have been taken over by it, I never could believe that the cost was very much more than that of the Canadian Pacific railway, but that is being constantly held up as an argument against public ownership. That was why I wished to make these few remarks.

Mr. CANTLEY: Mr. Chairman, I should like to refer to the remark of my genial friend the hon. member for West Edmonton with regard to the upkeep of the road, and his suggestion that a large expenditure would have to be made in the near future. In that connection I would remind the hon. gentleman of the fact that conditions have changed. Twenty years ago we had fifty-six pound rails. Then they were sixty pound rails, then sixty-seven, then eighty, then ninety pounds and up to one hundred and one hundred and ten pounds. That one factor plays a great part in the question of repairs and renewals. In addition, in recent years we have been using a hardened steel rail which has given three times the service that was given by the rails rolled twenty years ago. Instead of ordinary ties of cedar, hemlock or pine, according to the part of the country through which the road passes, in the main we are now using creosoted ties, which have a life of twenty years or more; just how long they last and can be used has not been determined as yet. These ties are now protected by tie plates, which we did not have in any quantity twenty years ago, which is another important factor. To-day we also have rock and slag ballast, which tends to cut down the cost of maintenance.

These are the main factors to which I should like to refer. The railway picture is bad enough without adding to it the suggestion of my hon. friend that the railway is going behind enormously because of neglected repairs. In my view that is not a fact. So far as rolling stock is concerned, that is quite a different matter. To-day the railway has probably fifteen or sixteen thousand derelict cars on sidings all the way from Sydney to Vancouver. Those will have to be replaced and additional modern motive power provided just as soon as we can find the money with which to do it, but as regards the roadbed I submit we need have no great concern for some little time.

Mr. HANBURY: To-day in Canada we have a nationally owned and a privately owned railway. We have no basis of comparison in regard to the various services they perform, because the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific have not the same system of accounting. I think it would be very much in the interests of the Canadian people and of the railway companies themselves if they were on a comparable basis, and I suggest that the minister give some consideration to the question of bringing a bill before this house placing the responsibility on the railway commission, probably, to see that a uniform system of accounting is adopted by the two railways so that the Canadian people may have some basis for comparing the results that are being obtained by the privately owned company on the one hand and by the publicly owned company on the other.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REFUNDING OF MATURING AND CALLABLE FINANCIAL OBLIGATIONS

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 19, respecting the Canadian National Railways and to provide for the refunding of maturing and callable financial obligations.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton) in the chair.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

On section 3—Issue of substituted securities.

Mr. EULER: I am not sure whether it is in order on this section, but I should like to bring to the attention of the minister a question I asked him the other day, namely as to whether or not these bonds would be issued direct by the government or issued by the railway company and guaranteed by the government. I note that one of the clauses of the bill provides for an issue by the railway and a guarantee to be given by the government. Would the minister state the reason why that is being done? It was understood by the railway committee that we could finance more cheaply by having a direct government issue rather than an issue by the railways guaranteed by the government.

Mr. RHODES: This bill contemplates the refunding of guaranteed securities.

Mr. CASGRAIN: By whom?

Mr. RHODES: Hon. gentlemen will note that section 8 of the bill authorizes loans to the Canadian National out of the consolidated revenue fund, which would constitute a direct obligation. The question as to the extent to which it would be advisable to substitute direct obligations for guaranteed securities is a large question of major policy.

Mr. EULER: I should like to be clear on the point. Does the bill give the government authority to change the proposed action? That is, they could take either course?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. EULER: Would the minister state the present intention?—because I suppose action will be taken immediately.

Mr. RHODES: It will depend entirely upon the circumstances.

Mr. EULER: There is no decision yet as to which the government will adopt?

Mr. RHODES: No, nor could there very well be. The decision will depend entirely on market conditions, and the type of bond.

Mr. EULER: There is no decision now?

Mr. RHODES: As I said the other day the difference between the guaranteed security and the direct obligation of the dominion is, in our own market, very slight.

Mr. EULER: Is the minister making them callable?

Mr. RHODES: Yes, every one of them.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I was under the impression when two or three years ago the policy was inaugurated whereby we introduced the estimates of the Canadian National railways by resolution rather than by items in the estimates, part II of the bill provided that any loans of the Canadian National Railways should in the future be floated directly by the government. In the same year we had a discussion in the railway committee and ascertained from the auditors and also from the officials of the Canadian National Railways that either in the floating or in the refunding of a loan the government by direct issue could save at least one-third of one per cent. That is why we are anxious to ascertain the policy the government intends to follow.

Mr. RHODES: The matter to which the hon. member for Rimouski refers had no reference to refunding. This bill has to do entirely with the refunding of existing issues.

Mr. EULER: What difference is there? Is there any difference in the principle?

Sir EUGENE FISET: I think the minister is making a mistake. I do not think it provided only for refunding for the same year in which the discussion took place. I believe however that the matter of refunding at least one loan was mentioned in the bill.

Mr. RHODES: I must agree to disagree with the hon. member because I am advised that there never has been any commitment of that kind, either by the committee or by the house.

Sir EUGENE FISET: In committee, I discussed the matter of refunding and the floating of new loans. I took the trouble to ascertain from officials of the Canadian National Railways and also from the auditors what the saving would have been if the funding had been done differently, and we were given a figure of one-third of one per cent. That is why I say the matter was discussed in committee.

Mr. RHODES: It should be understood that that statement referred to new capital; it did not deal with the refunding of existing obligations. The amount involved would run into many hundreds of millions of dollars.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I understand that.

Mr. RHODES: From the national point of view the credit position of the country might be far better if we did not attempt to take over the whole load at once.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I am simply calling the attention of the minister to the fact that this matter was discussed in committee, that we had the advice of the auditors, and that we were given a positive statement, both on refunding and on the floating of new loans, that one-third of one per cent might be saved if they were floated directly by the government instead of by the railway.

Mr. RHODES: As a matter of fact the auditor may make any recommendation he wishes. The question of a major national policy or a decision as to what is in the best interests of the country is quite another matter. It is a very large question. May I point out to the hon. member that there is no question of a difference of one-third; the difference in Canada to-day is somewhere about one-tenth of one per cent.

Mr. HANBURY: That was two or three years ago.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Yes, that is what I said.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Does this bill provide for payment in Canadian currency?

Mr. RHODES: That would depend entirely upon the condition of the market, and, to use a homely phrase, the man who pays the piper calls the tune. We have to deal with existing maturities and they have to be paid in the terms of the obligation. But so far as possible all issues will be made in Canadian funds. The hon. member will recall that some of these maturities fall due in England and some in the United States.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): I realize that, but I thought they were made payable in Canadian currency no matter where they fell due.

Mr. RHODES: Of course if a bond falls due payable in pounds sterling we cannot pay it in Canadian currency unless the person who owns the bond is prepared to accept Canadian currency. So far as possible we will make them payable in Canadian currency.

Mr. HANBURY: The minister has said that if it falls due in United States funds or pounds sterling he cannot refund it in Canadian funds?

Mr. RHODES: Not unless the holder of the bond agrees.

Mr. HANBURY: Perhaps the minister would let me place my interpretation upon it. He may not be able to replace it on the same basis, but it is just a question of the price he will put on his issue, and what he will pay for it.

Mr. RHODES: The hon. member might add to that that if you are refunding—and that is what we are dealing with—

Mr. HANBURY: Yes.

Mr. RHODES: If the bondholder insists upon having either his cash or a substituted bond payable in pounds sterling, then we have no option.

Mr. HANBURY: I still submit that the minister could probably induce some of the old country and United States investors to take bonds payable in Canada, if it were necessary to give them a slight premium over what they would otherwise receive.

Mr. RHODES: We will do that, wherever possible.

Section agreed to.

Sections 4 to 7 inclusive agreed to.

On section 8—Loans authorized to National Company not exceeding aggregate amount of $200,000,000.

Mr. EULER: Perhaps the minister is not in a position or would not care to say what the rate and terms of the bonds will be.

Mr. RHODES: Of the securities to be refunded?

Mr. EULER: Yes.

Mr. RHODES: If my hon. friend will look at Hansard of February 14, page 808, he will find a detailed list of all the maturing securities.

Mr. EULER: I meant the rate at which the new bonds are going to be issued.

Mr. RHODES: Oh, that will depend entirely on the market. The last one was at three per cent.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Morand in the chair.

Care of patients and medical examination respecting pensions; hospital allowances (compensation), $3,200,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): There is no difference at all in the amount of the vote this year?

Hon. D. M. SUTHERLAND (Minister of Pensions and National Health): No, it is the same as last year.

Item agreed to.

Salaries—
Departmental staff, $2,375,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Does this include the departmental salaries at the various institutions throughout Canada?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes, it includes all the administrative salaries, but not the doctors on schedule of fees.

Item agreed to.

Unemployment relief, $2,100,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Is the scale of unemployment relief uniform in all the provinces?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: No. The general plan that is adopted is to bring the amount up to the scale of relief in the municipality for the smaller pensioners who are eligible under this vote.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): So that because of the lack of uniformity in the scale of relief in the different municipalities there is a lack of uniformity in the relief granted to pensioners under this vote?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: That is it.

Mr. SPENCER: Are the unemployed ex-soldiers always treated separately from the general unemployed?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The pensioners are.

Mr. COOTE: Would the minister give us some idea of the variations which exist in the amount of unemployment relief paid to ex-soldiers in various cities or in different parts of Canada? This is a subject on which there is a great deal of complaint, and I think a statement from the minister would be useful.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: It depends upon the scale the municipality is paying. If, for instance, a married pensioner is drawing a pension of $15 and the municipal scale of relief for a married man who is not a pensioner is $25, his relief would be brought up to $25. Another pensioner in another city might be drawing a pension of $22 and the city scale of relief be $27. Here again the pension would be brought up to the amount the city was paying.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What are the qualifications for entitlement to relief under this vote?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: A man has to be a pensioner or else have received a final payment as distinct from a gratuity, instead of one of the smaller pensions.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Is there any difference as regards municipalities within the province in the scale of relief?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: There are variations. There might be a different scale of relief in Prince Rupert, for instance, from the scale in Victoria or Vancouver.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Is it necessary to have any specific percentage of pension to qualify under this vote?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It is regardless of any specific percentage?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes.

Mr. POWER: Did the vote of $2,100,000 last year cover all expenditures?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes, it is estimated that it will cover the expenditures for the remainder of the year.

Mr. POWER: Is medical treatment given to pensioners under this vote?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes, treatment is given to the pensioner, but not to his family.

Mr. POWER: No medical treatment for his family?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: That is the general rule, but if there is an emergency case that our men see, of course it would be handled.

Mr. POWER: Is clothing given to members of the pensioner's family?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Clothing is given in some cases where there is a very urgent need.

Mr. POWER: And fuel?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Fuel is always given.

Mr. POWER: Is not one of the causes of complaint that all the municipalities make arrangements for the medical care of ordinary civilians who are on relief but that the same arrangements are not made for the families of pensioners on relief? Is not that one of the causes of complaint?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Undoubtedly there have been representations made.

Mr. POWER: And what is the reply of the department to that complaint?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The reply has always been that in no case has the dominion accepted responsibility for medical care for anyone who was not a pensioner. In the arrangements made by the Department of Labour with the various provinces medical care has never been recognized as a dominion responsibility, and so far as the families of the pensioners are concerned it has been felt that they have not lost the right to be considered eligible for receiving medical care from the municipalities in which they reside.

Mr. POWER: The same argument applies to clothing, I have no doubt?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes, but we have given clothing.

Mr. POWER: You have given clothing, but as a matter of compassion rather than as a matter of right.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: That is right.

Mr. POWER: The complaint is this. Ex-soldiers are constantly writing in—I get many letters from them—to the effect that they are discriminated against, and it would appear from what the minister says that there is some foundation in fact for these complaints, though I am not blaming the department for that. But the fact would appear to be that in a great many municipalities, in almost all the municipalities, some degree of medical care is given unemployed persons on relief and their families, and to some extent also they receive a clothing allowance or clothing, whereas the families of returned soldiers do not receive this medical care nor do they receive clothing from anybody. The municipalities take this ground: You are an ex-soldier and consequently a responsibility of the federal government; therefore we will not have anything to do with you. If you want anything, go to the federal government, to the Department of Pensions and National Health, and they will look after you. That appears to be the great difficulty; it is the great cause of complaint. I am not suggesting that there is any negligence on the part of the government or of the department, but the facts are there. Throughout the country returned soldiers are complaining very bitterly that they are being discriminated against. Whether the department should contribute clothing and medical attention to the families of returned soldiers on relief is a matter of policy regarding which it is not for me to make suggestions; but I think that after four years of this kind of thing with these complaints being made the department should at least have come to some conclusion as to what the future policy will be. I think the minister ought to give an explanation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: There have been complaints from some municipalities but really, considered as a whole, from very few, because in the vast majority of instances the municipalities have realized their responsibility for medical care. With the exception of a few municipalities, though a good deal has been said about the question, the situation has not become an acute one.

Mr. POWER: The moment a man is known to be a returned soldier you will find in most municipalities that he is told to go to the federal government. Hon. members generally, I believe, have had the same experience. We have all had letters from returned soldiers all over Canada complaining that the municipality absolutely washes its hands of them if they are in the category of a pensioner, high or low, or of one who is entitled to relief. In some instances they go a step further. If a man is a returned soldier, even if he is not entitled to relief from the department, a great many municipalities say, "Go to the returned soldiers' organization or to the department." Unfortunately, or fortunately, perhaps, some returned soldiers' organizations have in the past had certain sums of money which they could dispose of to look after their own people. The army and navy veterans in Quebec expended large amounts derived, as we are told, from the illegal and immoral practice of running lotteries, but those amounts were expended to very good purpose in looking after the returned soldiers and their dependents not only in Quebec but throughout the country. But as a result of the activities of the soldiers themselves and of the department, a great many municipalities would not look after the soldiers any longer, whether they were entitled to relief under the department or not. I do believe it is a matter that should be looked into and handled perhaps more efficiently by the department than it is at the present time.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What amounts have been expended in the various provinces under the vote?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: In the Quebec district, $212,149; that takes in the province of Quebec; in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, $43,344; in eastern Ontario, taking in Kingston and Ottawa districts, $135,054; in central Ontario, taking in Toronto and Hamilton, $638,241; in western Ontario, $157,487; in Manitoba, $278,183; in Saskatchewan, $64,178; in Alberta, $118,133; in British Columbia, $247,524; in New Brunswick, $18,272.

Mr. GEARY: Take, in the working out of this plan, an instance such as the minister gives where the municipality pays $25 a month and the soldier gets $15. The department makes that up to $25 and in that case the municipality is relieved entirely of what otherwise would be a charge upon it of $25 for the man. Under these circumstances I think the municipality should see that any incidental relief, like clothing, fuel and medical attention, should be given that person without any difficulty. But has the minister realized that in some municipalities the total allowance for an unemployed single man is $15? The soldier is drawing $15 and he is then in exactly the same position as the unemployed single man, but he is in this difficult position, that the very fact of his being a pensioner indicates that he is not as well able to take on casual jobs as the ordinary unemployed single man. The pension of $15 may cover some difficulty of a leg or an arm; I know of one man who is practically stone deaf and cannot get casual labour. It occurs to me that perhaps the minister might consider whether that factor should not enter into the calculation to some extent. In the city of Toronto a $15 pensioner is really at a disadvantage with the single unemployed man who draws $15 from the municipality.

Mr. POWER: What is the total amount of pension the unmarried pensioner can draw?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Fifteen dollars.

Mr. POWER: Is that the total all over Canada?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The basic scale of the department for a single pensioner $15; for the married pensioner without children $25; for the pensioner with a wife and one child $30, with $2.50 for each additional child. The municipality has a figure corresponding to each of these amounts.

Mr. POWER: What is the highest for a single man?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The maximum with rates previously in effect was for the single man $30; man and wife, $45; man and wife and one child, $57, and for the man with two or more children, $67.

Mr. POWER: Sixty-seven dollars is the maximum paid anywhere in Canada. What about the man with a wife and five children? While the minister's officials are looking up the matter, will he explain how this thing works? As I understand it, from the total of $67 there is deducted first the amount of pension which the man receives.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes.

Mr. POWER: Suppose he is getting a $10 pension; that is deducted from the $67. Is there any deduction for any gainful employment which he may have?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: He would be allowed $10 a month for casual employment.

Mr. POWER: Without deduction?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes.

Mr. POWER: Suppose he earns $20, is there any deduction of any kind or is he taken off relief altogether?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: There would be a deduction of the second $10 off the increased amount.

Mr. POWER: What is the total amount he must earn so that he will not get any relief at all?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: If the total amount was $67 and he was working and earned the difference between the pension and that, he would automatically go off relief.

Mr. POWER: There are two sides to this story. Is there any incentive for that man to work? In other words, would it pay a pensioner of the category mentioned by the minister simply to stay on relief or would it be better for him to get a job and do something?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Unfortunately on the part not only of returned soldiers but of others, there is an inclination rather to stay on relief. That is human nature, and returned soldiers are no different from other people. Some of course would rather get out and fight against this inclination, but undoubtedly if a man saw a job drawing $15 a month, he would figure he would get about as much by sitting still with the pension coming in, and there might be a tendency to sit back; I cannot deny that.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Are the costs the same in the winter as in the summer?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: They are a little more in the winter on account of the fuel. According to the weather, when the necessity comes on for fuel, the costs would be more.

Mr. POWER: Is the change made on April 1?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: No, depending altogether on the weather.

Mr. POWER: When was the change made last year?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: It would vary according to the climate. In Victoria they would not require fuel as soon as in Quebec, or in Ottawa.

Mr. SANDERSON: What is the difference between summer and winter costs?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Principally the cost of the fuel.

Mr. SANDERSON: I know that, but in dollars and cents?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: In the year 1933-34 it was as follows:

Month—	Amount
April	$106,518
May	177,550
June	148,528
July	135,216
August	126,954
September	124,144
October	134,451
November	156,187
December	180,316
January	200,522

This shows that the cost increases in the cold months.

Mr. SANDERSON: I would like to get the figures for the individual. If a returned man was getting $15 a month in the summer, what would he get in the winter?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: There would be the difference of the price of the fuel, probably $6 to $8 a month in the case of married men.

Mr. SANDERSON: That would be $15 in the summer and $21 or $23 in the winter?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: In some instances that would be the case; that is the main item.

Sir EUGENE FISET: The minister said that these amounts are paid not only to pensioners but to all returned soldiers who make application for them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: No, the hon. gentleman misunderstood me. It is only to pensioners.

Sir EUGENE FISET: It is all very fine and easy for those gentlemen who are living in big cities where relief of some form is obtainable, but in the small centres, the rural districts in the constituency that I have the honour to represent, there is no such thing as state aid or municipal contributions toward unemployment relief. I would like to ascertain from the minister the mode of procedure to enable any of our pensioners to obtain relief. Have they to apply directly to the department at Ottawa? To whom should they make application and what are the means to be taken in order to secure some part of that relief?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: If someone with a small pension living in the constituency of the hon. member were in difficulties, he might write to Ottawa or to the hon. member himself, but his proper procedure would be to get in touch with our relief official in Quebec city, who would look into the matter possibly by communication with the reeve or mayor of the municipality and find out the man's condition. Such a pensioner would not get as much as one would in a city, because undoubtedly in the smaller places living would be cheaper, but he would be looked after and given every assistance that could properly be given to him.

Sir EUGENE FISET: May I bring to the minister's attention a concrete case that will perhaps illustrate the point. This was a pensioner receiving prior to last year a pension of $100. By decision of the department this was reduced to $20 a month. This man has a wife and family and he is a cripple and in bed. He has tried and I have tried myself for the last six months to induce the department to review the case. He has made four different applications to the official in charge in Quebec so far as the department is concerned without receiving any answer. This year I wrote to the department, placing the facts before them, and I got an answer from Doctor Henderson stating that if this man would make direct application to Ottawa he might have a chance to get his case reviewed by a quorum of the new commission that has been created. I was always under the impression that in accordance with the decision given by the Prime Minister last year or two years ago this man would be entitled to draw the full amount of his pension, $100 a month, until his case would have been reviewed, but the decision of the department has been absolutely to the contrary. The only recourse he has now is to have his case reviewed by a quorum of the new commission that has been created. I want to ascertain from the minister whether, if this man makes application directly to the department at Ottawa, supporting his application first of all by medical evidence, second by a certificate of the mayor of the municipality in which he lives, and third, by letter from the parish priest, he will have a chance to come under the provisions of this appropriation?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: What the hon. gentleman is speaking of is a reconsideration of the man's pension; there are so many cases that are individual and the hon. gentleman knows I have no control whatever over the pension commission or the pension appeal court.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I am talking about relief.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes, certainly.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

PROPOSAL TO BRING COASTAL SHIPPING UNDER JURISDICTION OF RAILWAY COMMISSION

On the order being called:

Resuming debate on the motion of Mr. Neill for the second reading of Bill No. 12, an act to amend the Railway Act (traffic by water).

Mr. NEILL: Stand.

Mr. MANION: No, Mr. Speaker; I regret I cannot agree to the hon. gentleman's request to have the bill stand. I had the floor the other evening, and on the matter being called I have either to take the floor or to pass up the bill.

The house resumed from Tuesday, February 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Neill for the second reading of Bill No. 12, to amend the Railway Act (traffic by water).

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): I do not intend to take up much of the time of the house, but I may say at once that after consideration the government feels it cannot agree to the second reading of the bill. I shall take a few minutes to give the reasons.

I well remember when I first came into the house some eighteen years ago listening to the late Mr. Joseph Armstrong who for some years put on the order paper each session a bill dealing with inland water shipping. His suggestion was that inland water shipping should be put under the board of railway commissioners in the same way as the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) to-day suggests that coastal shipping should be put under that board. It is true there is a difference, but frankly I cannot see how one could be handled any more easily than the other. I well remember when Mr. Armstrong again and again brought up the bill the government of the day and succeeding governments refused to permit it to go through. In the same way this bill strikes me as not feasible. For example, according to this bill a coastal vessel starting at Vancouver would be under the jurisdiction of the board of railway commissioners as far as Montreal, should it go that far, but if it went west of Montreal, for that part of the voyage it would not be under the board. There are other anomalies of the same type in the bill which to my mind would make it not easily workable.

The section of the Railway Act which it is proposed to amend is section 358. I will read it:

> The provisions of this act shall, in respect of tolls, tariffs and joint tariffs, so far as deemed applicable by the board, extend and apply to the traffic carried by any railway company by sea or by inland water, between any ports or places in Canada, if the company owns, charters, uses, maintains or works, or is a party to any arrangement for using, maintaining or working vessels for carrying traffic by sea or by inland water between any such ports or places.

That was in the original bill as enacted in 1906. The board of railway commissioners, on February 15, 1911, endeavoured to put that into effect, but six weeks later, on March 28, 1911, having given it further consideration, they sent out a circular containing the following words:

> And it has decided, in view of the difficulties that will be placed in the way of companies operating ships engaged in port to port traffic in competition with local boats free from the provisions of the act, that the board is of the opinion that the present necessities of the case do not require enforcement of section 7 of the Railway Act.

That was their attitude. Those branches of shipping are as exempt to-day as they were made in 1911; they have remained exempt ever since.

Mr. NEILL: Do I understand the minister to say that the board of railway commissioners passed an order that the act was not to be enforced?

Mr. MANION: First, on February 15, 1911, they passed an order that it was to be put into effect, but six weeks later, on March 28, 1911, they said they had reconsidered the matter and put out a circular with the words I have just read, exempting the port to port shipping of the railway companies.

Mr. NEILL: Can the board of railway commissioners by issuing a circular do away with the law of the land?

Mr. MANION: I do not know; I cannot go into the details of that. I assume—I am only guessing now—that this act was to be put into effect by the board of railway commissioners, and they attempted to do it and found it was not feasible. I am giving the facts as given to me by my officers as part of the history of the attempt to put under the board of railway commissioners the port to port shipping of the railways. I do not believe that it is any more feasible to-day than it was at that time.

But in addition there is this to remember —at least this is how I understand it: that if this bill should become law Canadian shipping would be under the control of the board of railway commissioners, but tramps and foreign ships, would not, or at least they could so arrange shipping and rates that they might not be, so that it would result in unfair competition to our Canadian shipping.

Then another point is that the Department of Trade and Commerce handles the subsidies paid ships for carrying mails, for example, or passengers over certain routes. Shipping to which the Department of Trade and Commerce pays these subsidies is to-day under the control of that department in regard to rates and tolls just as it is proposed by this bill to give control to the board of railway commissioners. The subsidized steamships are to-day controlled by the Department of Trade and Commerce in that respect.

I am merely mentioning these things briefly; I am not attempting any elaborate discussion of the matter, but I have looked into it sufficiently to become convinced that it is not feasible. While far from questioning the hon. member's good faith—I concede that at once—at the same time I think the matter requires further consideration by the hon. gentleman himself and certainly by the government, before we could consent to have this bill put upon the statute book. There has been no public demand for it that I know of. The hon. gentleman has made his own case, but I have heard of no others who have asked to have this bill enacted. On the contrary, since the hon. gentleman introduced his bill three or four weeks ago I have received very many protests, and I am sure other members of the house have received them also. The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Hanbury) nods his head; he has received protests. My hon. friend the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Stirling), the British Columbia minister, has received many protests as well. For example, I have received protests from the Vancouver Merchants' Exchange, the Vancouver board of trade, the Halifax board of trade, the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National steamships and from a number of private companies as well, of which I will name four. They include the Anglo-British Columbia Packing Company, Associated Timber Exporters, British Columbia Packers Limited and the Canadian Fishing Company Limited. Those are some I have under my hand.

In view of all these protests, therefore, with all due deference I suggest to my hon. friend that he might well withdraw this bill at this time, and if he and we come back here next year, after having given it further consideration he may desire to introduce it again then. It may be, though it takes a rather long stretch of the imagination, that he will be on the government side of the house at that time; one never can tell what may happen after an election, but I do suggest in all sincerity that the hon. gentleman might withdraw the bill now. I think that would be better than to have us vote it down. I do not think there is any need for that, but if he will not withdraw the bill the government will have to take the position of opposing it.

Mr. D. B. PLUNKETT (Victoria, B.C.): Mr. Speaker, representing as I do a section of the country where there is a large coastal trade this matter has been brought to my attention very forcibly by the business men of that district. I cannot see any advantage to be gained by putting the shipping business under the control of the board of railway commissioners. Are we to educate those commissioners so that they will understand shipping? We would have to do that if we wanted to be fair to the shipping interests, because it could be hardly expected that a mind trained in railroad matters would be equally trained in shipping matters.

The protests I have received come from various large commercial and industrial houses of the west. One is from the British Columbia Cement Company. I do not propose to read the telegrams; they are too numerous for that, so I will just name the companies concerned. I have a telegram from the Moore Whittington Lumber Company; another from the Cameron Lumber Company; another from J. H. Todd and Sons Limited, and one from one of the very largest wholesale hardware houses in the west, Messrs. McLennan, McFeely and Prior. In addition I also received a protest from the Vancouver Merchants Exchange, which the minister mentioned.

In these times of business depression, when business men are straining to the utmost to carry on their activities, will it be of any value to us as a nation to bring in legislation which may make it even more difficult for them to carry on? Take the case of a hardware firm, such as the company that sent me a telegram. They receive large consignments from the east. Should they be put at the mercy of the railways if they can bring in larger and more varied supplies by sea? Would it be fair to them to take away the competition of water traffic? When I mention competition I must say that there would be the danger of the railway commissioners being influenced to a certain extent by their association with the railways. Both the railway companies have shipping interests as well, and they might so arrange matters as to have vessels at the ports just at the right time to take the freight, and the independent shippers would be placed in a precarious position if they were unable to compete for freight being handled by the railway companies. We had a merchant marine service owned and controlled by the government, and surely those ships were in a position to give good service at as reasonable a rate as possible, but what happened? The government had to dispose of many of those vessels because they could not be made to pay. Even the United States have found it difficult to build up a paying merchant marine, and many of their ocean liners are subsidized to a certain extent. So I say, Mr. Speaker, that the day we try to have this business handled from the railway commission point of view will be disastrous to us. It will mean more regulations, more examinations and more supervision; it will mean another commission set up, because surely both railways and shipping could not be put under one commission. With the trade of the country just beginning to pick up I think it would be unwise to make this change, particularly when we have substantial proof of the disapproval of the business men who use this service. I cannot see any reason why we should support this measure, and I intend to oppose it.

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, generally I like to agree with the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill), who at various times has made useful and practical suggestions to this house, but so far as this bill is concerned I feel constrained to oppose it. If this measure passes and becomes law there will be a conflict of authority between the railway commission and the government of the province of New Brunswick. In that province we have what is known as a ferry service, with boats carrying both passengers and freight from the islands to the mainland. This service serves three islands in the bay of Fundy and two or three islands in the bay of Chaleur. In the county I have the honour to represent there are two islands served by this ferry service. In the past the federal government granted a subsidy to the ferry system of Gloucester county. For the last year or two that subsidy has been withdrawn, but the provincial government has continued to subsidize the ferry system of the province, and under that arrangement it has authority to fix passenger and freight rates. If this bill goes through that authority will be taken from the provincial government and vested in the railway commission. I claim that unless it goes to a very great deal of trouble the railway commission will not be in a position to regulate freight and passenger rates in connection with our ferry system as efficiently as the government of that province can at the present time, and for that reason I regret that I must oppose the passage of this measure.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I was more than astonished when, about a minute and a half before the notice was called, I was informed that it was the intention of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) to go on with this bill to-night. I had allowed the bill to stand previously at his request, and I thought perhaps there might be such a thing as reciprocity in these matters. With regard to the criticism that has been advanced by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot), that is entirely a local matter which could have been adjusted in the railway commission if the bill had been allowed to go there. With regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Plunkett), I will not waste the time of the house in replying to them because his ignorance of this subject is too profound. He should have consulted his predecessor, Doctor Tolmie, on the subject before discussing it here.

With regard to the Minister of Railways, he goes back to the introduction of what he says was a similar bill by a gentleman named Armstrong, the then member for Lambton. The minister says this gentleman brought up this matter year after year. So far as the records show he brought it up twice, and he received a much more favourable reception from the Minister of Railways of that day than I have received.

Mr. MANION: It was brought up four times.

Mr. NEILL: So far as I can see it was discussed only twice. The first year it was introduced late in the session and died on the order paper; in the second year, through the courtesy of the Minister of Railways, it went to the railway committee. It was discussed in that committee at considerable length, but they did not report favourably upon it. As a precedent for rejecting the bill the minister draws a parallel between it and the one introduced by Mr. Armstrong. Surely the minister knows that the two bills are totally different; Mr. Armstrong's bill had nothing to do with the matters now under discussion. His bill dealt entirely with the great lakes.

Mr. MANION: I said that.

Mr. NEILL: Where is the resemblance?

Mr. MANION: Simply because it was shipping, that is all. It was lake shipping, instead of coastal shipping.

Mr. NEILL: One dealt with shipping on the great lakes and the other with shipping on the coast; there was no parallel between the two. The minister has said that the bill standing in my name is not feasible. His only reason for making the statement seemed to be that he had certain telegrams. I believe if he would study them he would find that with one possible exception they objected to the measure being made to apply to traffic passing from the Atlantic to the Pacific and vice versa. Again, that is a matter which could easily have been adjusted in committee. As a matter of fact I had drawn an amendment to omit the objectionable part, as the minister might have seen in the press. Such an amendment would have avoided ninety per cent of the objections in the telegrams to which he referred.

The extraordinary part of the minister's presentation was his admission that the section he read—I have not the act before me because I have been taken unawares—which states clearly and distinctly that the control by the board of railway commissioners extending to all vessels owned, operated, chartered or controlled by the railway companies has been cancelled by a circular. That has been the law for twenty-nine years, but the minister waves his hand and states that the provision was done away with, and that therefore it has no force or effect. How was it done away with? Why, they issued a circular! I never heard of a circular before.

Mr. MANION: That does not prove it is not true,—simply because the hon. member did not hear of it. There are many things of which he did not hear.

Mr. NEILL: Any person could give such a smart-aleck retort. The point is, why did I not hear about it? Because it is in the form of a circular. Was the circular issued to him, or made public? We do not know. One of the leading men in the service of the Canadian Pacific Railway had no knowledge of it. That section, as I read it and as the minister read it, is in force. It certainly is in force.

Mr. MANION: My information is that it is not in force.

Mr. NEILL: The minister states it is not in force by virtue of the grace of God and a circular.

Mr. MANION: I did not mention God.

Mr. NEILL: The grace of God should be left out; the minister is right there. I should have said it is not in force by the grace of the railway board and a circular! I am sorry that a person occupying the proud position of minister of railways should have to shelter himself behind a circular which has put out of existence a statute which has been in force for twenty-nine years. He said the provision has been done away with by a circular which was issued by the board of railway commissioners in 1911. That is an extraordinary situation. Are we to pass laws in this parliament and then twenty or twenty-five years later find that they have become ineffective because of a circular—not even an order in council?

Mr. MANION: As a matter of fact I stated that the law was never put into effect. I stated the order had gone out by circular that the law should go into effect on February 15, and that on March 28 by another circular the railways were instructed not to bother filing their records. It was never put into effect.

Mr. NEILL: The act was revised in 1919; was there any circular after that year?

Mr. MANION: It was never in effect since 1911.

Mr. NEILL: This is the position. We pass an act in 1904—

Mr. MANION: 1906.

Mr. NEILL: 1906—and the minister states it did not come into effect until a circular was issued. But no such condition is mentioned in the act. We know what the routine must be. On certain occasions we say that a measure shall come into effect, or that certain sections shall become effective—as in the shipping bill—after proclamation by order of the governor in council; but they do not come into effect because of a circular. However, we are told by the minister that the board of railway commissioners issued a circular, and that later on they got cold feet and issued another circular ending the matter. This feature seems to me preposterous. The circular of beloved memory was issued in March, 1911. The act was revised in 1918 or 1919—I shall not pledge myself as to the exact year, but I know it was about that time. Was the revised statute again killed by this dead and gone circular which had been issued seven years before? If so it would seem a most extraordinary position. I should think the matter ought to be referred to the railway committee so that that phase of the matter could be investigated. In fact, the appointment of a special committee would be justified to find out whether or not circulars are running this country. We have heard a great deal about government by order in council, but here is an act passed twenty-nine years ago and revised from time to time which is alleged to be non-operative because of a circular issued by the board of railway commissioners.

The minister makes the suggestion that shipping not owned by the railways might be brought under control. Certainly; that is the object of the bill. I do not believe my record will indicate that I have been an advocate of vested interests in railway companies, but if it is right and proper that a steamship owned by a railway company should be under the control of this act, is there any reason why a shipping company which does not happen to be owned by a railway company should not be governed by it? If it is right and proper that the ships owned by a railway company should have control exercised over their rates, their itinerary, and so on, is it unfair to think that the shipping owned by shipping companies which do not happen to be connected with railways should be subject to the same regulations?

The minister undermined his own argument, because after proving that it would be utterly impossible to enforce such a law in any way, shape or form he went on to say that a great deal of shipping on the Pacific coast is under such control now because any boat subsidized by the government in any way is subject to the rules and regulations of the Department of Trade and Commerce. Well, is it all right to have rates, itinerary, ports of call and so on under the supervision of the Department of Trade and Commerce and all wrong to be under the control exercised by the board of railway commissioners?

Mr. MANION: The Department of Trade and Commerce subsidized them and has some right to call the tune.

Mr. NEILL: Yes, and because they are subsidized I propose they should be placed under the same board which controls the boats owned by the railway companies, a board accustomed to doing that type of work. I would say the Department of Trade and Commerce could hardly be considered to be expert in the control of traffic. Most of the companies on the Pacific coast are subsidized by the government.

Mr. MANION: A great many of them are not.

Mr. NEILL: I differ from the minister on that point, so far as the Pacific coast is concerned. I do not know about the Atlantic coast. In a naive and almost pathetic manner he held out the hope that perhaps conditions would be more favourable next year for the passage of this bill.

Mr. MANION: No, for the consideration of it.

Mr. NEILL: I certainly hope they will be.

Motion (Mr. Neill) negatived on division.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT

ABSENTEE BALLOT FOR MEN IN UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF CAMPS

The house resumed from Tuesday, February 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. MacInnis for the second reading of Bill No. 16, to amend the Dominion Elections Act, 1934.

Mr. MacINNIS: Mr. Speaker, there is not much more that I wish to say in connection with this bill. I would like to point out, however, that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) was evidently under a misapprehension as to the purpose of the amendment when he spoke in the house on Tuesday evening. In refusing to accept this amendment he said, at page 982 of Hansard:

> I think it is going beyond the bounds of common sense. It is not a reasonable request that men from Nova Scotia or New Brunswick or the prairie provinces settling in Ontario, say, should be entitled to vote in a constituency in which their camp happens to be situated.

The amendment did not ask for any such thing. As a matter of fact, all that the amendment asks for is that the same provision shall apply to the men in the unemployment relief camps as now applies to other categories of electors who may vote by absentee ballot provided they are twenty-five miles or more distant from their electoral district or polling division on election day. First of all, the men in the camps must be registered in some constituency in the province in which they desire to vote. If they have not been long enough in the province to acquire domicile there, then of course they are not eligible for registration and are therefore not qualified to vote. In any case the reason for the amendment is that generally speaking these men are not allowed to vote in the constituency where the camp is situated. The Minister of Justice went on to say:

> There is nothing in the election act to prevent these men from voting in their own localities.

Then he gave the reason himself why they cannot vote in their own localities. He said:

> The question of transportation is a serious one, but I am not in favour of the proposal.

It is altogether a question of transportation, Mr. Speaker—question of the impossibility of these men going into the constituency where they are registered in order to vote on election day. The hon. member for Kingston City (Mr. Ross) was under the same misapprehension, and I understand that he was also opposed to the amendment because the vote could not be controlled. I am not interested in controlling the votes. All I am interested in is that these men should be given the opportunity to exercise their franchise as ordinary citizens do, and that they should not just because of their circumstances, over which they have no control, be prevented from exercising their franchise on election day.

Shortly before I came east along with other federal members from greater Vancouver I met some of these men, and I think the other Vancouver members who were with me will remember this circumstance. One of the men that we met was an upstanding young fellow who, asked if he had served overseas, said that he had served overseas for four years. He is a British subject and had lived in Canada some fifteen or sixteen years. When he was overseas he was entitled to vote during the elections of 1917, even in France, but now he is in an unemployment camp and just because he cannot afford the transportation from the camp to the constituency where he may be registered, that is if he is registered, he is prevented from voting. I would ask the members to take this into serious consideration before they refuse to accept the amendment. There is equity, there is justice in this proposal, and to accept it would be doing something for men who are unable under the circumstances to do anything very much for themselves. I would therefore ask the members of the house to support the amendment.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. MacInnis), which was negatived on the following division:

SUPPLY

PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

Unemployment relief, $2,100,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I understood the minister to say that any pensioner could qualify for this relief. Can pensioners of the higher scale qualify?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Not if the pension is over the maximum.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): I took it from what the minister said that a pensioner with a small disability which had been cleared up by a lump sum payment would be eligible under this vote. Is that so?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: If he has commuted a pension, between five and twenty per cent, and taken a lump sum, then he is not out unless the disability on re-examination has been found to have disappeared or to be less than five per cent.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): If his pension was under five per cent and was paid to him in a lump sum without any option does he qualify?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: No.

Mr. POWER: Will the minister explain that again? I understood him to say that if a pensioner commuted his pension he was no longer eligible for relief. He knows that under the legislation of 1930 pensioners who commuted are allowed to go back on pension at the rate fixed by legislation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: These are the ones that are eligible according to the statement I have before me: former members of the Canadian Expeditionary Force who are in receipt of pension payable by the pension commission; former members of the imperial forces or the forces of His Majesty's allies who were resident in Canada on or before December 1, 1924, who are in receipt of pension payable by their respective governments, or who have received a final payment under the provisions of any act or regulation for permanent disability assessed between five and twenty per cent.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): This afternoon the minister gave the amounts by provinces; can he give the numbers of those who are drawing this relief?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The figures are as follows:

District—	Number
Quebec	989
Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Is.	363
Eastern Ontario	640
Central Ontario	3,026
Western Ontario	784
Manitoba	1,161
Saskatchewan	402
Alberta	452
British Columbia	1,487
New Brunswick	148

Mr. RALSTON: Are the numbers increasing?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: During December, counting pensioners, their wives and children, there were 31,454. On January 31 there were 33,464.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): How do the numbers compare with a year ago? Are they increasing from year to year?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: For January, 1934, the number of pensioners was 9,728; for January of this year it was 9,410, or just a few less.

Mr. FRASER (Cariboo): The case I had in mind when I asked the question of the minister was of a veteran who had been pensioned and allowed three per cent disability. Of course he had no alternative but to take a lump sum for his pension in full settlement of his claim. He is now unable to work. Under the statement the minister has just made this man is excluded from relief. He made application for the war veteran's allowance and he was also denied the privilege of receiving that. The treatment of this case is rather hard and it should receive consideration from the government. He is excluded from all classes of pension and he gets no relief at all. If he is not eligible for the war veteran's allowance and if his pension is paid up and he is also excluded from other relief, why should he not come under departmental relief?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I think in that case he should come under municipal relief.

Mr. MULOCK: Where municipalities are not paying relief, what can be done for men in a similar position with pensionable disability of the rate mentioned?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: In cases like that, if the municipalities were not issuing relief—and this would probably be in the smaller municipalities—the rate for a single pensioner is $15; for the married pensioner without children, $25; for the pensioner with a wife and one child, $30, with $2.50 for each additional child.

Mr. MULOCK: Where would the man apply? For instance, in North York constituency, would he apply to Christie Street hospital?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes.

Mr. REID: Might I draw to the attention of the minister cases in muncipalities in Fraser Valley, and I think the cases I shall cite should prove to him that to bring the allowance up to what the municipalities are giving is not a fair method of dealing with the matter so far as the returned men are concerned. In the Fraser valley there are municipalities that are unable to pay even the government scale. The government have set a scale of relief so that if a transient comes in, he would be entitled as a single man to $12.50 or $15, or for a man, wife and child, to $30. But most of the muncipalities out there are unable to pay that, with the result that the relief has been cut down in some instances to one-quarter. Some of the municipalities cannot even pay $7 to a single man, a transient, with the result that some men are drawing only $3.75; others are getting $5 per month, and the rate is made up to the $7 allowed by the municipality. Surely the minister must realize that that is very unfair.

Again, the complaint is made by great numbers of returned men that they are told by the municipalities: Go to the pension board; this is not a case for us at all. I am stating actual facts; the municipalities are compelled to do this because they find themselves faced with so large a number of unemployed and so many appeals to aid returned men, that they are saying to these men: We can do nothing for you. The minister should this new year review the whole matter of the relief basis and not only in such cases as I have cited where municipalities are paying only $7 to single and $11.50 to married men. He should take note of that and also of the fact that many returned men are being denied relief and so find themselves up against it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The hon. member is partly in error when he states that if a municipality were giving $7 to single men, and a returned man was drawing a pension of $5, we would make it up to $7. We would make it up to $15 regardless of what the municipality was paying. We have a basic rate which is a minimum rate. It is only when the municipalities pay more than our basic rate that we put the latter up. In case such as he has cited we would bring the amount up.

Mr. REID: I am glad to hear that. I can assure the minister that those complaints were made to me in all seriousness before I left for Ottawa. Has the minister any statement to make regarding the returned man not on pension? I know every consideration should be given to those who have been wounded, but there are others who find themselves in pretty bad circumstances not only physically but financially and who are being turned down by municipalities that say: It is too bad, but you should apply to the pension board for assistance.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: That is a very rare thing for municipalities to do, because if a man has not a pension we can take it as a general rule that his value on the labour market is not impaired or diminished by any war disability.

Mr. REID: It is not a case of the labour market. We perhaps have peculiar conditions out there. We have hundreds of men on small holdings who are being kept by the municipalities, many of them being returned men. It is a case of destitution, not of the labour market.

Mr. POWER: It seems to be thought that there is a discrimination in favour of imperial soldiers and men who served in allied armies, in the matter of distribution of relief. As the minister read out the categories entitled to relief I understood him to say that first, Canadian pensioners who are obtaining a pension of from five to twenty per cent, and secondly, enumerating the classes who served in the imperial army or allied armies, he stated that in those cases a man who had received a gratuity in lieu of pensions was entitled to relief, whereas a Canadian soldier was not entitled to relief at all if he had received a final gratuity. Am I right?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: No, these are all pensioners, former members of the imperial forces or the forces of His Majesty's allies who were resident in Canada on or before December 1, 1924, who are in receipt of pension payable by their respective government—

Mr. POWER: Read on.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Or who have received a final payment under the provisions of any act or regulation for permanent disabilities assessed between five and twenty per cent. That last clause of course applies mainly to Imperials. Canadians who received a final payment other than a gratuity, are entitled to relief if the pensionable disability has persisted.

Mr. POWER: I understood from the minister a moment ago that Canadians who had received a final payment were not entitled.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Yes, that is the answer that was given.

Mr. POWER: Did I understand the minister aright?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I referred to those who have received a final payment under the provisions of any act or regulation for permanent disability assessed between five and twenty per cent.

Mr. POWER: They are not entitled to relief?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes, they are subject to the condition I have named.

Mr. POWER: Then I take it that Canadian soldiers not entitled to relief are those who received a final settlement of less than five per cent, that is the $75 or $100 gratuity which was granted on discharge?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: That is right.

Mr. MULOCK: That does not change what was said before. Pensioners who are in receipt of pensions between five and twenty per cent are entitled to the benefit of this legislation?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Correct.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Suppose that in my own district, where it is all rural municipalities, not very anxious to give relief, a small pensioner is out of work and the municipality refuses to recognize him; is there any place he can go to get redress?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes, he should make application at Deer Lodge hospital.

Mr. RALSTON: Is there any connection between the staff, or is it the same staff that investigates the needs of the applicant under war veterans' allowance legislation and applicants for relief? Are they the same people?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes, to a large extent they would be.

Mr. RALSTON: For instance, not to mention any names, in Montreal or Halifax is it the administrator of the unit who has charge of the investigation as to the need of the applicant?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: In Montreal say, has he a board of two or three?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: No, there is no board. The district administrator would be governed by the general regulations and he would have to make the decision.

Mr. RALSTON: Would he make a personal investigation?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes.

Mr. VENIOT: I wish to ask a question concerning the methods adopted in New Brunswick to ascertain who are entitled to allowance. Suppose an application in my home town is made by a pensioner under this act I understand an inspector is sent or asked to make a report upon the applicant. I forget the inspector's name—he resides in the county of Northumberland. Has that inspector authority to decide upon the amount of relief that pensioners should get?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: No, he would first have to make a report to Lancaster hospital in St. John.

Mr. VENIOT: Well, it is not being done. The inspector goes to the house, questions the family and tells them right then and there, "you can get so much and no more." I know one case where the pensioner was getting about $13 a month. He was a major in the army overseas. He was out of work and applied for relief. He finally got word from this inspector in the next county, who sent an order for groceries to the amount of $4.28 per month, I think. That was all he could get. That inspector never inquired what was being granted by the county of Gloucester or the municipality; all he allowed that family to get—husband, wife and I think two children certainly one—was $4.28 a month for groceries. I do not think that is right.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: If the hon. member will drop me a line giving the name I will look into it. I think he is entitled to more relief than that.

Mr. VENIOT: Well, the man has work now; he does not require relief. But he certainly did at that time, and he refused to accept that order; he felt it was an injustice. He said he was not looking for charity, and he refused it. He brought the order and showed it to me. He said: "If I cannot be treated better than that I will not accept it at all." This is going on in Northumberland and Gloucester.

Mr. HOWDEN: I have a matter to bring to the attention of the minister. It may not properly come under this vote, but I consider it important. Perhaps the quickest way to present it would be to read a communication from the office of the ladies' auxiliary, Canadian War Disability Pensioners' Association:

On behalf of the Ladies' Auxiliary to Canadian War Disability Pensioners' Association, I am instructed to call to your earnest attention the fact that we are suffering grievously by not being able either to get free medical relief or to pay for it. Our incomes, as you know, are very small, and it is utterly impossible to pay medical fees, consequently we have to suffer.

A short time ago the child of one of our Winnipeg pensioners died for lack of medical attention. This has been verified by a letter to the press, by Dr. McPhail of Winnipeg, the doctor who was called in after the disease had gained too much headway. This is only one case—there are many, many others.

People on relief in this city, even the former enemy people, are able to get free medical assistance in time of sickness, but we whose husbands gave their best to the country have to go without and suffer in silence. Many of our members (including myself) and our children are in need of medical and dental assistance right now, but cannot get this help. We would also like to be allowed to engage our own family doctors, as is now being done by families on relief in this city.

Sick benefits are given to needy pensioners—why not extend it to their dependents—their needs are equally great.

This is a decided injustice, and we believe that if this is brought to the attention of those in control, that the situation can very easily be remedied, therefore, we hope this matter will have your careful and immediate attention.

That is signed on behalf of the above association by a number of ladies, whose names it is not necessary to read. I may tell the minister that this is not the first I have heard of this state of affairs; it has been put up to me, as it were, a number of times by the wives and widows of overseas men that it was impossible for them to obtain medical relief for either themselves or their families. It seems a pity to think that they should be penalized merely because their husbands were overseas and rendered service to the country, because all others in our part of the country, just now at all events, certainly can get medical relief when it is needed. I am not very familiar with the regulations in connection with war pensioners, but I have read this letter to the minister and I would like to hear what he has to say in regard to the matter.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: That brings up the matter we were discussing before recess. The dominion government has never recognized that it was responsible for medical relief. During the last few years, since the question has been brought up, we have gone on the assumption that it was the duty of the municipalities to look after medical relief, with the exception of the pensioners themselves. We have taken the ground that because a man went overseas, his wife and family have not lost their rights of citizenship or their right to secure certain care such as medical relief from the municipalities in which they reside. We maintain that the municipalities taking that stand—there are not many—are hardly playing fair with those people.

Mr. HOWDEN: Possibly it would not be a practicable procedure, but I suggest to the minister that some action might be taken by his department in regard to these people and the municipalities in which they live. It seems too bad that municipalities should shrug their shoulders and refuse to have anything to do with them. There must be some responsibility somewhere, and if it does not rest with the Department of Pensions and National Health someone ought to point out to these municipalities that these people are very seriously in need. It might not be the business of the minister's department to take up the matter, but it seems to me that in a large way it is the business of the federal authority at all events to see that these people get the succour they deserve. I am just leaving it with the minister in that way, in the hope that something may be done.

Mr. MacINNIS: I was just going to bring up the point that has been raised by the hon. member for St. Boniface. Mine is not a particular case, but rather a general complaint from the pensioners on relief in the constituency which I represent. They make the same complaint, that while city relief recipients receive medical attention and medicine to some extent at least through the civic authorities, the pensioners on relief are not allowed the same advantages. There is also a complaint in regard to the fact that relief is not paid in cash. I would like to ask the minister how the relief is paid.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: We never pay in cash; we pay in orders for goods such as groceries and fuel, and for rent.

Mr. MacINNIS: Is there any good reason why payment should not be made in cash? I believe the municipalities are adopting that method now. When relief was started I think the practice was to handle it by means of relief vouchers, but now I think most of the municipalities are paying in cash; at least the tendency is very much in that direction. Has the minister considered that matter, and is there any possibility of payments being made in cash?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Of course there is this difference, that the pensioners are receiving their pensions in cash; that is not affected at all. It is simply the supplementary relief that is issuable by these orders.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am aware of that, but I have before me a typical case of a five per cent pensioner who also receives an allowance. The pension amounts to about $7.75, and that is paid in cash. The relief allowance—this is for a family of five—amounts to something like $34.65, which would be paid in vouchers for certain kinds of goods. Are the particular commodities and quantities stated in the vouchers?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I am informed that they do not specify a pound of rice or a pound of meat or anything like that; they are for so much food.

Mr. MacINNIS: Is there any allowance in the vouchers for medical attention or medicine?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Medical treatment is only for the pensioner himself.

Mr. MacINNIS: Of course that makes it rather difficult, because where there are families usually it is the families that need the medical attention. I think the allowance is altogether too small. In the case I have before me the pensioner on relief receives a pension of $7.75 and a relief allowance of $34.65, or a total of $42.40. Out of that comes fuel, an average of $5 a month, which I think is a very low average even for the lower mainland of British Columbia. There is an allowance of $1 a month for electric light, which I think also is very low. Then there is 60 cents for an evening paper, $1.25 for car fare and $12 for rent. It will be noticed that the rent accounts for a large portion of the allowance. That amounts in all to about $19.85, leaving a balance of $22.55 for food for the family for a month. That works out to about $4.50 per person per month, or about 5 cents per meal. With food prices going up I think that is altogether too little. I was wondering if the government had considered restoring the cut that was made some two or three years ago.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The grant depends entirely on the municipality. They know the cost of living in their own district, and when they set a level we conform to it. We rely on the judgment of the people who are acquainted with local conditions.

Mr. MacINNIS: Then will the minister take under consideration the payment of the allowance in cash?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: In my judgment it works out better according to the present plan. I have not heard any particular complaints about it; I think everyone is fairly well satisfied.

Mr. MacINNIS: Evidently these people are not satisfied.

Mr. MULOCK: Has the minister the amounts paid for unemployment relief in the last four years, and are they less than they were four years ago?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The figures are as follows:

1930-31	907,010
1931-32	2,082,052
1932-33	1,978,284
1933-34	1,912,563

Mr. MULOCK: Has the minister the number of people benefiting in each of those years?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes. The figures are:

1926-27	4,079
1927-28	4,182
1928-29	4,647
1929-30	5,548
1930-31	8,811
1931-32	12,303
1932-33	14,368

Mr. MULOCK: Was there a change in rate a few years ago?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The rate has been changed gradually. As the municipalities changed their rates, for various reasons, then our rates would change.

Mr. MULOCK: Has the rate been increased or lowered?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: As a rule it has been increased.

Mr. MacLEAN: There is another class of returned man who receives no benefit under this form of relief. I refer to the man who suffers from severe disabilities, whose case has been heard and turned down by the pensions authorities but who is not given any relief. In Prince Edward Island the matter of relief is handled by the provincial government, and the amount allowed is very small. The greatest amount paid is $5 per person, and at the present time we have many cases of extreme need among our returned men. I know the minister will reply that because those men are not receiving a pension they cannot come under the scheme, and cannot obtain an order for groceries or supplies as could a pensioner. Has special consideration been given to that class of men? They suffer from disability, they are not able to earn their living, and employment is very scarce. Yet they cannot get relief under any of the schemes, and they are suffering a hardship which the department of pensions would do well to consider. I know the minister will reply that before he could do anything the act would have to be changed. In many cases those men are suffering actual disability but unfortunately they cannot link up their disability with overseas service, and for that reason are turned down. They receive no assistance from the government despite the fact that they gave of their best in the world war.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: We have given a good deal of consideration to those men, and I have every sympathy with the class the hon. member has mentioned. No matter what our law may be there will always be certain cases on the border line. It is impossible under this type of relief to have any other basis of entitlement. The municipality should assist where the men are not getting pensions.

Mr. SANDERSON: A few moments ago the minister said that the department did not pay out any cash in connection with the relief fund, but that they issued vouchers. Who issues the vouchers?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: In a Stratford or Woodstock case it would be a relief officer from London.

Mr. SANDERSON: An officer in London would issue the vouchers for St. Marys and surrounding country?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes.

Mr. SANDERSON: On whose authority would he issue them?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I know that not long ago a relief officer was in Woodstock and the people who thought they were entitled to relief got in touch with him and made their arrangements. I have no doubt the same applies to St. Marys and Stratford.

Mr. SANDERSON: Can a returned man who receives a voucher go to any store he chooses? Are they honoured in all stores?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: No, but the man may select his own store.

Mr. SANDERSON: As a matter of information, and without any desire to criticize, may I ask by what means those requests are placed before the minister or his department? If he decides relief should be granted, what happens? Do the requests come from the individuals who are interceding on behalf of the returned man?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: They may come in one of several ways. A man may communicate directly with London. He may communicate with my hon. friend, and we would get in touch with London. Then, the head of the legion might write.

Mr. SANDERSON: There must be some overlapping if those who are entitled to relief are to get it. Undoubtedly there are many persons who do not know about the relief. As the minister has said, they might come to me, as a member of this house, or they might go to the mayor of the town, or to the legion; but apparently there is no plan under which urgent cases may be dealt with without going through a procedure which would use up a considerable amount of time. I am not suggesting the department should advertise that it is giving relief, but is there no policy under which a returned man may know that there is an unemployment relief fund and that he may obtain relief without delay or red tape?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I do not think there would be anyone who would not know he was entitled to relief. They are pensioners receiving their cheques each month, and they may write to the district administrator and receive immediate attention. In all cases our officers are instructed to act with the greatest possible dispatch.

Mr. SANDERSON: I suppose the representative in London, for instance, has several men working under him?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes.

Mr. SANDERSON: Do the officials acquaint themselves with the case of every individual who applies?

[Mr. Sanderson.]

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Oh yes. They check up on the statements and as to the need, whether they are working and so on.

Mr. SANDERSON: Do they travel around or do they do it by communicating with someone in the town from which the clain comes?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: In both ways. They would probably get in touch with the man personally, and they might follow that up by letter. They do keep in very close touch.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I should like to emphasize again a point that has been raised by a number of hon. members, and that is in respect of the medical attention necessary for the families of pensioners who are on relief. The minister knows that in practically every municipality where a system of civic relief is being carried on, accompanying the relief is a modicum at least of medical attention supplied to the familes on relief which they are unable to pay for themselves. I have no such cases in my territory because it is a rural territory, but I have had the matter brought to my attention rather forcibly by citizens of Calgary and Edmonton who have sent to me a number of requests individually and from organizations and have cited cases in both these cities. In both Calgary and Edmonton not only is nursing and medical attention given to the families of those on municipal relief, but in many cases where the condition of a member of a family requires it special allowances are made for special diets and so forth in the case of certain illnesses and weaknesses. None of that, however, as I understand it, is provided for the families of pensioners who are receiving this form of relief. It has been suggested, of course, that the municipalities, being relieved of any other burdens with respect to the families of pensioners, should be glad to look after their nursing and medical attention, and possibly they should, but the fact remains they do not. They assume no responsibility whatever in respect either of the pensioner or of any member of his family. Although the intention of the act and the policy of the department is to bring these small pensioners up to a parity so far as relief is concerned with the civilians on relief in that particular municipality, the fact remains that the returned men are not on a parity because it is a certain drain on their resources to provide the medical attention that their families require. I am not certain as to the extent to which the act would make it possible, although I am reasonably familiar with the act, of course, having been working in that connection for a great many years. I am not certain that the act itself would allow sufficient latitude, although I am inclined to think it would. If it does not, having regard to the fact that the present situation is not in consonance with the desire of the house, the policy of the department, or the statute itself, the desire being to put the pensioners on a parity with those on civilian relief, I would suggest that, if it is necessary, a slight amendment be made to the act to enable that to be done. If the necessary power is already contained in the act I suggest that the regulations be extended to make this possible, because I can assure the minister from a number of cases with which I am reasonably familiar that because of this possible lack of specific provision in the statute there is a distinct hardship in a certain number of cases. Moreover it does create what we are anxious to avoid, that feeling amongst the returned men that they are not being dealt with on a parity with the civilian population; that instead of discrimination, if any, being in their favour as most of them think it should be, and as I believe it should be in that respect, it is against them. Of course I am perfectly aware that this has been carried on under this and other governments, that it has been the practice for many years, but at the same time it is not a practice of which I approve. The cost would be insignificant in relation to the good, both actual and physiological, that would be done by taking that wider and more generous view of the statute, and it would be worth while both as a matter of physical aid and in respect of the contentment of mind that would follow on the part of those so treated.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: That undoubtedly is the view of a great many, but the point is this: If these people are discriminated against it is not the dominion that is doing it; it is the municipality. These people did not lose all rights as citizens of the municipality because they went to the war. There is also this about it. In the two municipalities which my hon. friend mentioned, Calgary and Edmonton, I am informed that we are getting very few complaints. There were some in Calgary at one time, but now I understand the matter is being looked after there. There never has been any complaint from Edmonton so far as I have heard.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I am very glad there is not, because it is not so very long since that a complaint was registered with me. They were not complaining as to the administration of the act. The officials were perfectly sympathetic. It was the policy that was complained of.

May I just suggest this to the minister? He is perfectly right in saying that these pensioners by reason of their being returned men have not lost their civilian rights. They still have all the rights of civilian citizens of the municipality, and the municipality might very well provide such medical care as is required. But the dominion government has taken over the responsibility not only so far as the men themselves are concerned, but in respect of rentals and fuel and food for their families. They have taken over the entire responsibility for the men and their families. I think they have taken the ground, and it is sound ground, that were it not for the condition of the men it is possible that they would be able to look after themselves and their families. That permeates our entire federal legislation with respect to the returned men—our pension law, our veterans' allowance legislation and most of our acts in relation to the returned men. The responsibility for the dependents of the returned men is included in the responsibility for the returned men themselves. That is in our pension act, where the state assumes the responsibility of paying not only a pension but an additional allowance for the wife and each of the children of the pensioner. Responsibility for the family is assumed as part of the state's responsibility for the man himself, and I suggest that it is not out of the way to carry that assumption of responsibility one step further in dealing with what is one of the most difficult features of the whole situation. As the minister very well knows, the difficulty arises partly from the fact that the pensionable disability bears but little relation to the entire disability. The pensionable disability frequently means the whole difference between employability and unemployability. That a man has a low rate of pension does not mean that he is suffering from that same degree of disability in the employment market. Having regard to all the precedents we have set in our federal laws in dealing with returned men and the interpretation which has been placed upon that responsibility, the minister would do well to consider this matter further.

Mr. MULOCK: A few moments ago I understood the minister to say that these vouchers were given out by relief officers. I assume he means relief officers representing his department and not the municipality.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Pension appeal court, $19,800.

Mr. MULOCK: I understand from a statement made the other day that there have been four more appointments to facilitate the hearings of these appeals. Is that correct?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: This is the pension appeal court item; that is under the pension commission.

Mr. MacINNIS: Where the pension board appealed from the findings in the first instance and the appeals were lost, from their point of view I should like to have some information regarding five cases that have been under consideration. One of them was settled last year and of the other four, one of the pensioners, a Mr. Smith of Vancouver, has written to me. These four are still waiting on the acceptance of the findings of the commission in their cases. Can the minister give me some information regarding these cases?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: These cases were decided as to entitlement and the matter is now receiving final consideration by the chairman of the pension commission. It came up the other day. Someone wrote to me and that was the information.

Mr. MacINNIS: The persons concerned may expect final settlement shortly?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: They will receive final consideration shortly, yes.

Item agreed to.

War veterans' allowances, $2,250,000.

Mr. SANDERSON: How many are now receiving assistance from the war veterans' allowances?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The total number in force on December 31 last was 6,755, and there were dependent allowances of 97.

Mr. SANDERSON: How does that compare with the year before?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: On March 31, 1934, there were 5,837. It is gradually increasing.

Mr. REID: What would be the cost if the age limit were lowered from sixty to fifty-five?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: If the age of entitlement were changed from sixty to fifty-five it would cost some two million dollars a year more.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Has the minister before him the numbers in the two classes—that is, the class that are in receipt of allowance because they have arrived at the age of sixty, and the class that are in receipt of allowance because, although not yet sixty, they are so disabled mentally or physically as to be unemployable. The answer the minister gives will have a bearing on this question, because a large proportion come under the class who, though below sixty, are receiving allowance on account of disability that makes them unemployable, and that class would not increase by the lowering of the age of entitlement.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Under sixty there are 2,065, and over sixty there are 4,690.

Mr. REID: In view of the fact that over two million dollars is provided for relief for unemployed pensioners, I wonder how many of those would come between fifty-five and sixty. It is true it would take two million dollars more if the age limit were reduced, but has the minister considered exactly what the actual cost would be provided those on relief were taken up and the limit lowered?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: This takes into account everyone who would be eligible between the ages of fifty-five and sixty whether on relief or not. If they were on relief they would be eligible for this if the age were made fifty-five.

Mr. POWER: Only yesterday I made inquiries of the officers of the department as to what the extra cost would be if the age at which the war veterans' allowance began were lowered from sixty to fifty, and I was told that next year instead of $2,500,000 it would run to $7,500,000, and within ten years the total xpenditure on the upward curve would run into $106,000,000 instead of $42,000,000. These figures seem to be in the hands of the officers of the department and it would be well to have them known to the public before further agitation is carried on to lower the age from sixty to fifty. If the cost is only $2,000,000 we may have an agitation, but if it is clearly shown that we shall move by leaps and bounds and that the very principle on which the War Veterans' Allowance Act was founded will be destroyed, then that ought to be made quite clear right at the beginning of any propaganda for lowering the age limit; because the principle on which this whole legislation was founded was the presumption that a man of sixty was likely to be incapable of earning a living. But I have never heard anywhere that a man of fifty was to be put aside as incapable —let us hope not, as I believe the Minister of Railways suggests. I think the country ought to know just what expense would be involved.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The estimated expenditure during the coming fiscal year, as the act is at present, will be approximately $2,500,000. If the age were changed to fifty-five it would cost $4,500,000. For the period of the next ten years the cost, if the act were left as at present, would be $42,000,000. If the age were changed to fifty-five the cost would increase to $68,000,000.

Mr. POWER: Increased to or by $68,000,000? It increases from $2,000,000 to $4,000,000 in one year, and I can imagine that if at one period it is $42,000,000 it would increase to at least $80,000,000.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Of course, a certain number drop off all the time; a number of them are dying.

Mr. POWER: But there is an upward curve that runs up to 1950 when it will be well over $12,000,000.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I do not think these figures are wrong; they are dated just last week. If the age were changed from sixty to fifty the cost for the next fiscal year would rise from $2,500,000 to $7,500,000, and for the period of the next ten years the cost would be $103,700,000 instead of $42,000,000, which it will cost if the act is left as at present.

Mr. GERSHAW: I understand that a returned soldier may qualify for this allowance at any age if he is totally and permanently unemployable. There is a great deal of difficulty about proving that condition and I should like the minister to tell us what evidence he requires before admitting that a man is totally and permanently unemployable.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: They have to take the opinion of doctors; they are dependent upon a medical examination to be made by departmental doctors. In that connection it is rather interesting to note the different ages at which people are drawing this veteran's allowance. There is one man eighty-nine years old who is drawing it; one, eighty-eight; two, eighty-four; six, eighty-two; four, eighty-one, and then to go to the other extreme, there is one, thirty-two years; eight, thirty-three; twenty-one, thirty-four. That shows the tremendous spread in ages of those brought in under this act.

Mr. POWER: How was that man who is now eighty-nine years old ever allowed to enlist? He must have been sixty-nine when he enlisted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: That is the extraordinary feature; sometimes they got in.

Mr. SANDERSON: Could the minister give by provinces the number who are receiving aid under this act?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The figures are as follows:

District—	Number
Quebec	624
Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Is.	402
Eastern Ontario	321
Central Ontario	1,564
Western Ontario	405
Manitoba	684
Saskatchewan	330
Alberta	529
British Columbia	1,698
New Brunswick	198

Mr. MULOCK: When they are deciding whether a man is unemployable under this act, do they take into consideration his former occupation only?—because he is simply handicapped in the labour market to-day, and that is the difficulty in regard to some of these cases. If his condition as it was before the war in connection with the kind of work he was doing is to be the basis, I think it would be well if this were made known in certain districts, because there is a little misunderstanding on that point. As an hon. member stated a moment ago, that is the difficulty in deciding whether a man is employable or not. That is where the difficulty has arisen in quite a few cases under the act.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: To come under this act if he were under sixty years of age, he would have to be considered permanently unemployable.

Mr. COOTE: Is that absolutely so? I must confess I have not looked at the act for two or three years. I was on the committee that drafted it and naturally I used to be familiar with it. But my recollection is that a certain amount of casual earnings was permitted without the man being deemed to be ineligible for the allowance.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Certain casual earnings are allowable.

Mr. COOTE: My recollection is that there is a certain latitude in the case of small, casual earnings, but apparently that does not apply to a man under sixty.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: It is really the old age pension scale. We are allowing $365. A single man would get $240, but he would still get the $240 if he had $125 from some other source.

Mr. COOTE: That is if he is sixty years old or over?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: It applies in both cases.

Mr. COOTE: But in order to be considered as sixty before he reaches that age, he must be wholly unemployable?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes.

Mr. HOWDEN: Who would be the referee in the matter of these disabled individuals? Naturally he would be a medical man, but I assume he would be in the employ of the department.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The final decision rests with the War Veterans Allowance Committee which has a medical adviser.

Mr. VENIOT: I wish to direct attention to a case that recently came under my notice. Under the act a soldier's widow who remarries, if her second husband dies within five years, can become pensionable again.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: That is correct.

Mr. VENIOT: I know of one or two cases where the widow remarried after drawing a pension for, say seven or eight years or five or six years and now she is a widow again. Her second husband has died, but she is over the five year period, having been married more than five years the second time. These women are in desperate circumstances, and I was wondering whether the government has taken into consideration amending the act in that regard. Of course the second marriage saved a lot of money to the government in pension, but I do not think they would lose anything if they extended the period beyond five years, making it ten years, so that the woman would again be entitled to pension.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: As the hon. member knows, that would have to be given considerable thought.

Item agreed to.

National Health—
The administration of the acts respecting food and drugs, opium and narcotic drugs and proprietary or patent medicines, including the laboratory of hygiene, $130,000.
Public health engineering, $15,880.
Marine hospitals, including burial expenses of destitute deceased mariners, and grants to institutions assisting sailors, $163,500.
The administration of the acts respecting quarantine and leprosy, $150,000.
Immigration medical services, $126,920.

Mr. HOWDEN: It was pointed out last night in the course of the discussion on the unemployment insurance bill that the Department of Pensions and National Health had quite wide powers in regard to the health of the Canadian people. In that connection I should like to ask the minister whether any survey or inquiry has been made by the department at any time of which he has knowledge into the cost and efficiency of medical service to Canadian people.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Nothing has been done in such detail as that, because it has been realized, or at least I have realized—and I took a great interest in this work even before I took charge of the department—that the assistance and cooperation of the medical profession are of great importance in such a survey. As the hon. gentleman well knows, that aspect of the question has received a great deal of care from the medical associations, both dominion and provincial. All that work is in process of completion and I do not see any use in trying to duplicate that investigation. As soon as it is finished, it undoubtedly will form a splendid basis for possible further investigation in detail.

Mr. HOWDEN: Surveys of this kind have been made in both Canada and the United States. I believe it has been estimated that the cost of medical service to the Canadian people, largely a direct charge, is about $311,000,000 a year. On the other hand it has been estimated that the cost of medical service to the people of the United States is something over $3,500,000,000 a year, which figures out in both instances at around $30 a head. During the regime of President Hoover an inquiry was undertaken as to the cost of medical service to the people of the United States. Of course the United States is not Canada, but the two peoples live side by side; they have a common language and to a large extent their civilizations are similar. Before this inquiry was entered upon it was realized that there was a great deficiency in medical service to the American people, and on the other hand it is well known that medical men are driving taxis and doing manual labour and institutional work for which they receive little or no remuneration. An inquiry was therefore set on foot; a survey was made of some 1,800 families in all economic grades, and some very interesting facts were ascertained. I do not propose to burden the committee with much detail, but I will state a few of the facts that were ascertained. The matter is covered in a synopsis appearing in a current journal. It was found that 52 per cent of the American people receive no services from a physician. I think these figures would largely correspond with conditions in this country. It was found that 79 per cent get no attention from a dentist, that 89 per cent receive no health examination or similar preventive service, and 62 per cent receive no medical, dental or eye care of any sort. These statistics are for the prosperous years of 1928-29. Conditions are indubitably much worse now.

On the other hand it was ascertained that although many doctors have good incomes, one-third of all the physicians in the United States had incomes of less than $2,500, even in 1929. More doctors were found in the $1,000 to $2,000 class than in any other. It was also found that 16 per cent of American families spent less than $10 a year for medical service; forty-six per cent spent less than $40 a year; four per cent spent more than $500, and one per cent spent more than $1,000. It will be readily apparent that those who spent only $10 a year were not a matter of great importance, or even the $40 class, but for the four per cent whose expense for medical service was over $500, and that one family out of a hundred which was called upon to bear an expense of over $1,000, it was a very serious matter. While one family in every hundred was under an expense of $1,000 a year it must be evident that in a great many instances other families needing similar service could not possibly bear that expense. In such event there would be only two alternatives, one to go without medical attention, and the other to seek free service at the expense of the medical man or the community. Some people pay their way, but the expense of those who are unable to pay their way must either be undertaken by the municipality or the doctor must render free service. It is customary I admit for medical men to make those who do pay bear to some extent the cost of those who do not pay, and perhaps the cost to those who pay is increased by the idle time of the physician waiting for potential patients who fail to seek his assistance. The consequence is that those who do pay are called upon to pay heavier fees, and as fewer are seeking medical assistance all the time, the fees to those who do seek it and who pay their way must rise. It must be evident that very few people could bear an expense of $1,000 a year for medical service. But there is a means by which the matter could easily be taken care of. It was found that the expense averaged $30 per head to the American people for a very inefficient service, whereas for very little more, that is for about $36 a year, a complete and efficient service could be supplied to the people of the United States, and I assume to the people of Canada as well, by bringing together the sick on the one hand and the idle doctors on the other. This would have to be done either by a form of sickness insurance or by state intervention of some nature, and I suppose if we are going to have state intervention it would have to be some form of sickness insurance or else of state medicine. I do not propose, however, to take the time of the committee to-night in a discussion of that point. At present most of the provinces of Canada have state medicine; the municipalities are paying for medical service for their residents in the form of fees according to a regular scale. But when by a little effort, by the establishment of a system of sickness insurance or state medicine, we could cover this entire field and give everyone a satisfactory medical service, it seems so desirable to do so. It is clear that it is a matter for the Department of Pensions and National Health, and the national health of the people far outweighs the pensions side. It is a matter which this department should take into serious consideration.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I am sure everyone has been much interested in the remarks of the hon. member for St. Boniface. In my judgment the country is gradually tending towards some form of state medicine, for the reason that he has mentioned, that at the present time the full advantage of medical knowledge and treatment are not available to all the population. But while realizing the desirability of some form of state medicine, I suggest that the matter has to be approached very gradually, because the medical profession have to go along with it; and there is this point to be considered as well, that, as every doctor knows, the personal element is very important in the relationship between the doctor and patient.

Mr. HOWDEN: The personal element need not be lost.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: It must not be; I think the whole scheme would fail if it were. But if all the doctors in the country were put on a panel system or a salary system I am afraid that unless great precautions were taken the personal element would be lost. With fifty per cent of the people who go to a doctor it is not medicine that is needed, but sound advice, and if the doctor does not take time to consider the personality of his patient that important element is lost. Everyone knows that there may be one doctor who is very brilliant, perhaps having taken a gold medal at school. He goes out to practice; he is capable of giving the very best attention and he does a great deal for his patients, yet he does not get along and does not secure the number of patients that may seek the services of a man who is not so highly qualified. That is where the personal element comes in. The possibility of doing away with that, as might happen if we went too hurriedly into any scheme of state medicine, is something which must be kept in mind.

I must say that in Canada the health of the people is being looked after pretty well. In the earliest days the municipalities provided the small amount of care needed for indigents, and the system has progressed from that time on. Preventive medicine has been carried on by the municipalities and the provinces, and that is being looked after exceedingly well. One hon. gentleman who spoke the other night rather questioned our policy in Canada in regard to health, but statistics prove that in this regard Canada compares very favourably with any country in the world. It has been shown that any controllable disease, such as diphtheria, typhoid fever and tuberculosis, is definitely on the down grade in this country, because the people have been taught how to look after themselves, and for that reason our record is good. Some people seem to delight in saying that the health of our people is not being looked after and is becoming poorer, but as a matter of fact it is being looked after exceedingly well. The other night the hon. member for St. Boniface made a point which is absolutely true, when he said that the people are receiving care, though the doctors may not be getting their pay. Everyone who has taken any interest in the question knows that. In my own county no one has to go without the treatment he needs, either operative or medical, and I think that applies to a great extent all over Canada. I may tell the hon. member for St. Boniface that the government are seized of the necessity of giving this matter the most thorough study, of trying to correlate the various efforts being made along these lines, and of associating themselves with the various agencies working towards this end. I think, as the hon. member thinks, the time will come before long when steps in this direction will have to be taken, but it must be a gradual process.

Mr. HOWDEN: I very much appreciate the remarks of the minister; I am glad to hear him speak as he has, and I agree with almost everything he has said. I do believe, however, that for a number of years the subject has not received the serious attention and thought it has deserved, though now the public is making a general demand for medical service, and when the public makes a general demand for anything it usually gets what it wants in a comparatively short time. What I think is neither here nor there, but, as the minister said a moment or two ago, in many parts of the country, certainly in that part from which I come, people are getting a very fair medical service. They are getting the services of medical men and the drugs they require whenever and wherever they require or demand them; but as I have said before, the whole cost is falling on the municipalities which are struggling to keep their heads above water. As a consequence the medical men are not being paid for this service. I am not holding a brief for the medical men. I simply say that if the medical men are rendering good service —and I believe they are giving the people throughout the west and very largely throughout Canada a very satisfactory service—I think they ought to be paid a reasonable fee for it. If the fees now being paid by the municipalities could in some manner be augmented, then the people could have the doctors of their choice, and could have hospitalization whenever they required it. The difficulty with regard to the personal element, to which the minister referred, would be eliminated; people would have their own doctors and those doctors would receive reasonable remuneration for their services. The municipalities cannot do this alone; the little, struggling municipalities in western Canada can no more perform this service unaided than they can fly. I am appealing to the minister to-night because even with the assistance of the provinces the municipalities can barely perform the necessary services. I believe we require the joint action and interest of the three authorities, federal, provincial and municipal. If we can get that joint action we will have a satisfactory, non-compulsory system of state medicine which will be very much to the benefit and advantage of the Canadian people.

Mr. SPENCER: The minister made a statement a few moments ago that I cannot let pass without at least questioning it. He will correct me if I am wrong, but I understood him to say that the health of the people is being looked after exceedingly well. I have no doubt the medical profession do their best, but may I suggest that among the people requiring medical attention there are three main types. The first class consists of those who can well afford to pay for medical aid. The second class is composed of those who have not the means to pay and who therefore usually are looked after by charity, in most cases with the help of the municipality, either urban or rural. But there is another very large class between those two, composed of people who also suffer but who do not want to go on charity. At the same time they cannot afford to pay to have themselves looked after, and as a result they go to the doctor only at the last moment. The doctors must know this very well. I do not know the situation in this part of Canada but I do know it in western Canada. The problem of caring for their health is one of the biggest problems confronting the Canadian people, and it is a nightmare to those with families. Great loss has been sustained by the country simply through illness that might have been prevented if it had been looked after in time. I have been told on good authority, and I have never heard it contradicted, that the yearly loss to Canada through sickness and untimely death is about $300,000,000. Surely if that is true it is not correct to say that the health of the people is being looked after exceedingly well.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: May I ask my hon. friend to repeat that figure?

Mr. SPENCER: $300,000,000.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: That represents what?

Mr. SPENCER: That is the annual loss through inability to work because of illness, and untimely death.

I am going to credit the minister with enthusiasm in the discharge of his duties, and with having attempted to do something the department has never attempted before, namely, to conduct an energetic drive towards cooperating with the provinces in a health policy. I am quite sure, however, that we will not have that drive if when we look at the situation to-day we say that the health of the people is being well looked after. I feel the medical profession are doing what they can, but on account of lack of policy and lack of coordination there are many people who because of the high cost of sickness, fear sickness more than anything else. For that very reason they will not seek medical aid, until the very last moment, and by doing that they are not fair to themselves or to the doctors.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The hon. member must realize that we will always have a great deal of sickness and loss of time. The best that preventive medicine can do is to prolong life by five or ten years. Unfortuately we cannot prolong it indefinitely. We will never reach the point where we can stop sickness or death.

Mr. SPENCER: I hope the minister appreciates that through preventive measures the amount of sickness could be greatly reduced.

Mr. BLAIR: I approve of the movement now on foot, but I believe we must move with considerable caution. I met with some organizations in Ontario who were asked whether they approved of the principle of the dominion parliament interfering in matters of health. I am inclined to agree with the minister when he states that the public are being fairly well looked after. To-day we protect them from diphtheria and use other methods of preventive medicine which we did not have a few years ago. Speaking for the province of Ontario—I would not care to speak for the rest of the dominion—I should say the people are fairly well cared for. There is one point, however, to which I should like to direct attention. While guardians are punished if children under their care are not sent to school, on many occasions the health of those children is neglected, but the guardians are not punished. I believe some provision should be made to correct that condition.

If we are to introduce any measure for state medicine I believe the doctors as a profession must keep their prices at rates the public can pay. The figure of $360,000,000 per year for 10,000,000 people, or $36 per person, is far too high, and the public would be justified in resenting it. I believe the service could be given for a great deal less. The difficulty to-day is that the doctors are not being paid. I believe the municipalities and the provinces should shoulder the burden of caring for the people. So far as the federal government is concerned, I do not know where the money would come from, because after all this federal parliament is made up of members from the provinces. Further, the matter should not be considered too quickly. I was warned by medical men in Ontario that we must approach the subject very slowly because if rapid advances were made, public sentiment might condemn it. I believe the minister is acting properly in gathering information and permitting the public to feel its way. Eventually we may reach a point where there could be no reverses, and at a time when the public may demand further action we could go ahead and do our best. Although I am in favour of making inquiries, yet I feel caution should be exercised. Undoubtedly a reduction in fees such as has been suggested is required.

Mr. VENIOT: I notice under this item we have quarantines and leprosy. Could the minister give me information about certain work contemplated for the Tracadie lazaretto, and could he tell me what that work consists of? I believe a bowling green, a rink and the purchase of a certain number of radios has been considered.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: There was a plan whereby a large building would be erected for skating.

Mr. VENIOT: Skating for whom?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I presume for the attendants, and I understand two or three of the lepers skate. That is my information received from the deputy.

Mr. VENIOT: What about the bowling green?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The hon. member does not seem enthusiastic about it.

Mr. VENIOT: I certainly am not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I may relieve his mind by stating that we are not proceeding with the work at the present time. It has been stopped, pending further investigation.

Mr. VENIOT: I hope the minister will never go on with it. There are nine or ten lepers in the lazaretto, and of that number no more than two or three could avail themselves of a rink which would cost $5,000 or $10,000. So far as the bowling green is concerned I do not believe three of the total number of lepers could use a ball. Most of them are advanced cases. The intention was to place six or seven radios in the lazaretto.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I never heard about that.

Mr. VENIOT: There was an idea to that effect. The former minister advertised it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I suppose he was going to donate them.

Mr. VENIOT: No, he was not; he is not as generous as all that.

Mr. HOWDEN: With regard to the narcotic drug act, are the offences as frequent as they formerly were? Is the matter now more under control than it was?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The number of addicts within our knowledge is becoming smaller, and the prosecutions are fewer. The convictions in the last few years would indicate that. In 1929 there were, 567; in 1930, 458; in 1931, 338; in 1932, 340; in 1933, 240.

Mr. HOWDEN: Looking over this item there was something that has always occurred to me, and I mentioned it on the last occasion this item was up. The minister is familiar with what we call the infectious papilomata. There are three of them—leprosy, syphilis and tuberculosis. The scope of leprosy is fortunately very limited at the present time, but that is not so with these other two diseases, which are very similar in their pathology, in their general infection, and their widespread dissemination. If the government feel it incumbent upon them to assume control in the case of leprosy, I do not see why it is not equally incumbent upon them, if not more so, to do so in the case of these other two diseases. Their widespread occurrence is of intensely serious import, and it is hard to choose between them as to the damage they do to the human race. The suffering and tragedy they cause lead me to believe that the federal authority could very well take under its own charge the control of syphilis and tuberculosis and take the necessary steps and precautions to control their spread and fulmination. I think this is well worthy of the government's consideration.

Mr. RALSTON: I want to ask the minister to have a case looked into that has been brought to my attention. It is that of E. T. McKeen, inspector at Sydney, who was retired about two years ago and died a week ago. I have been asked to make an inquiry whether or not it was possible in view of his good service to make some allowance to his widow for pension. I do not know very much about the circumstances or how he was employed, whether he was a permanent officer or not, but I would ask the minister to look into it if he will.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes.

Mr. HOWDEN: What does the minister think about the propriety of the department taking control over the two diseases I mentioned a moment ago? It is a very serious national matter.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: My information is that tuberculosis is being exceedingly well looked after at the present time. We owe a great deal to the Canadian Tuberculosis Association, which for many years has been spreading among the people the doctrine of prevention and care and treatment. I do not think any one disease we are subject to has received as much attention and care as tuberculosis, and in an effective way too, because tuberculosis is declining in Canada and we can hope that it will gradually be eliminated. It is not, of course, a disease like leprosy, where the possibility of cure is remote, although the chances even there are better now with a certain treatment that has been discovered. But leprosy is a loathsome disease and the sufferer from it must be segregated, whereas the tubercular patient after a certain period of sanatorium treatment can go home and, having learned to care for himself at the sanatorium, can carry on his treatment at home and have a certain amount of family life. I do not think it is necessary for the state to take charge of that disease as my hon. friend suggests. With regard to syphilis, that is on a different basis. If a case develops and is diagnosed it will get treatment and there is no doubt that there is treatment for it in the first or second stages. It will receive treatment under the prevailing methods and means that we have. I do not think it is necessary to go to the extreme of the dominion taking over the responsibility for institutional treatment of either of these two diseases which my hon. friend has mentioned.

Mr. BLAIR: I wish the minister could give us some reassurance about the tubercular patients. I know of many homes where the tubercular patient is allowed to associate with the other children in the home, and I know of homes where one of the parents is tubercular. There are many families who cannot afford to send the tubercular patient to the hospital, and if some form of hospitalization for tubercular patients could be provided it would be of great assistance and mean a great deal to the families of these sufferers.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Of course the hon. gentleman well knows that if a case of tuberculosis occurs in his municipality, the patient can be sent from his district I suppose to the Queen Alexandria sanatorium at London, and the municipality has to send the money to pay for the patient. There is a provision in the Ontario law that these cases must be looked after. Also in western Ontario, where we both come from, there are as the hon. gentleman knows travelling tuberculosis clinics which no doubt visit my hon. friend's part of the country, and any case that a doctor is a little suspicious about can be brought into the clinic for diagnosis. If the diagnosis is positive or it is a border line or suspicious case, or even one that would perhaps be better for sanatorium treatment for a little while, these cases are taken care of.

Mr. BLAIR: I realize that they can send the patient to the hospital, but the charge comes back on the farmer, who is not able to afford it. In many cases the expense keeps them from sending the patient to hospital because they have no resources with which to pay for the treatment, and the patient consequently stays at home with the rest of the family.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: It does not take a very long course of institutional treatment to teach a tubercular patient to look after himself so that he can go back and live with his family without being a menace. Undoubtedly there are some cases that are very difficult to deal with, even after they have been taught how to look after themselves; they go back and do not carry on the proper treatment. But where the father or mother is interested and will watch the patient, it requires only a very short period of institutional treatment for the patient to learn the routine and the regimen that is necessary to look after the disease.

Item agreed to.

European war—naval, militia and air forces after the war, $42,000,000.

Mr. RALSTON: What is the situation with regard to the marriage cases which gave us so much trouble last year? According to the Minister of Justice there were between 550 and 600 of these cases which had been referred to the Department of Justice. How many of them have been disposed of, and how, and how many are still in suspense?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I have not that information. I realize that this item can hardly be finished to-night, and the next time it is called I shall have the information. I know that the acting chairman of the commission has been giving his personal attention to these cases individually. They are not completed, but there will be a definite and detailed report on the present situation.

Mr. RALSTON: I would refer the minister to the statement of the Minister of Justice to be found at page 1784 of Hansard of 1934, where he gave a classification of the cases. Perhaps that would help the minister to collect the information under these heads.

Mr. POWER: Has the minister any information with respect to the cases that were in the same category as the Skitch, Ouellette and other disputed cases? The Ouellette case is still before the court.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I have not that information here. If the leader of the house would suggest adjourning at this time, I will have the information the next time this item is called.

Mr. POWER: Will the minister let No. 66 stand?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Yes.

Progress reported.

On motion of Sir George Perley the house adjourned at 10.50 p.m.

Monday, February 25, 1935

The house met at three o'clock.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF GEORGE A. TOUCHE AND COMPANY

On the order for motions:

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, I desire to lay on the table parliamentary return No. 135, the report submitted by George A. Touche and Company, auditors of the Canadian National Railways, in connection with the writing down of the capital. While I am on my feet may I say that we did not receive a sufficient number of copies from George A. Touche and Company to supply all the members of the committee, but we have supplied them in alphabetical order as far as they would go, and we are getting others run off which will be supplied as soon as they are ready.

Mr. WILFRED HANBURY (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the information which has just been laid on the table of the house for the first time was previously handed to the newspapers. I should like to know if the minister has any explanation to make in that regard.

Mr. MANION: I have no explanation to make, because I did not hand it to the newspapers. The report as we received it was supplied to some of the members, and quite possibly some member has handed it to the newspapers. We did not do so.

QUESTIONS

FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT—ST. FRANCOIS, QUE.*

Mr. LAFLECHE:

What are the names and addresses of the farmers of the judicial district of St. François, who have made arrangements pursuant to the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act?

Mr. DUPRE: Mr. Speaker, I am advised by the hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Laflèche) that this question is to be dropped.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

POULTRY POOL SCHEME LECTURERS*

Mr. GERSHAW:

1. How many lecturers have been appointed in Alberta to promote the poultry pool scheme?
2. What are their names?
3. What remuneration is received by each?

[Mr. Sutherland.]

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): As this question is now worded there is no answer, as there is no scheme called the poultry pool scheme, and my information is that there has been no scheme submitted by the Alberta poultry pool. I presume the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Gershaw) has in mind a scheme known as the Alberta poultry marketing scheme. We understand that lecturers have been appointed, but at present their names are not available to the Department of Agriculture. Neither does the department know whether wages are being paid to these lecturers. When the returns are submitted by the sponsors of the scheme showing the expenses that have been paid, those returns will contain the names of the lecturers, and we will be glad to give the hon. member the information.

Mr. SPEAKER: Answered.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I would suggest that the Minister of Agriculture try to secure from the pool the names of the lecturers. I understand the vote has already taken place. The selection of the lecturers must have been completed by this time and it would be only a very small matter to obtain from the pool the names, the addresses and the remuneration received. If we have to await the return made by the pool we may not receive the information before next September or October, and we are very anxious to get the information if it can be obtained in this way.

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): I thought I had made the matter abundantly clear when I spoke previously. We have no means of telling the remuneration paid, until returns are received. So far as the government is concerned we do not know whether or not any wages have been paid—certainly they have not been paid out of funds advanced by the government or by the dominion marketing board. I said to the hon. member who asked for the information that as soon as the returns were received showing how the money had been spent I would supply the information, and he seemed content. There will be no delay; as soon as the information is received it will be passed on.

Mr. VENIOT: That will cover all three provinces?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): The other information will be available as soon as it comes in.

FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT—SWIFT CURRENT

Mr. BOTHWELL:

1. Who is the official receiver under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act at Swift Current?
2. When was he appointed?
3. On what basis is he paid?
4. What territory is comprised within his jurisdiction?
5. What amount has been paid or accrued to him since the date of his appointment up to the 31st of January, 1935?
6. How many farmers in his district have availed themselves of the provisions of the said act up to the 31st of January, 1935?
7. In how many cases has an adjustment been made?

Mr. RHODES:

1. W. W. Smith.
2. September 1, 1934.
3. Remuneration, $150 a month.
4. The judicial district of Swift Current.
5. $750.
6. 400 farmers have been interviewed by the official receiver; 16 proposals have actually been filed and many others are in process of being filed—correspondence being carried on in respect thereof. Three assignments have been made.
7. Thirteen adjustments have been made, one as the result of a formal meeting and the others independently, with reduction in debt load of $52,000.

SWIFT CURRENT, SASK.—PUBLIC BUILDING

Mr. BOTHWELL:

1. What was the total cost of painting and other repairs to the public building at Swift Current during the year 1935?
2. Was the work done by contract or days work?
3. If by contract, who was the contractor?
4. If by days work, who was the supervisor and what rate of wages was paid to the men employed on the work?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. $910 (1934-1935).
2. No work done by day labour—local tenders called for painting and general repairs.
3. Bert Allen, painting and general repairs.. .. ..$ 624 00
W. J. Burden, fencing.. .. .. 123 25
W. J. Burden, relaying cement walks.. .. .. 60 00
W. Ashly, work on grounds.. 47 00
J. Alexander, repairs to plumbing and heating.. .. .. 40 25
W. J. Burden, repairs to locks.. 15 50
4. Work done under supervision of district resident architect and caretaker of the building.

EMPLOYMENT OF LABOURERS

Mr. CHEVRIER:

1. Has the government any control over the employment of labourers for the construction of the departmental buildings on Wellington street, Ottawa?
2. If so, to whom must one seeking employment thereat apply in order to secure such employment?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. No; Employment under control of the contractor for the building, U. Boileau Limited.
2. Answered by No. 1.

OLD AGE PENSIONS ACT

Mr. COOTE:

1. How many persons were receiving pensions under the Old Age Pensions Act on March 31, 1934?
2. What was the total amount paid to pensioners under this act in the year 1933-1934?

Mr. GORDON:

1. 86,873.
2. $16,566,116.74.

GOVERNMENT ANNUITIES BRANCH—VANCOUVER, B.C.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver):

1. Who is the representative in the city of Vancouver, of the Government Annuities Branch?
2. On what basis is he paid?
3. What remuneration did he draw in 1934?

Mr. GORDON:

1. D. McL. Anderson.
2. Commission.
3. $9,460.86.

FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT—THREE RIVERS

Mr. BARIBEAU:

1. Of what counties is the judicial district of Three Rivers composed?
2. How many farmers residing in this district have availed themselves of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, since it was put into force?
3. How many cases have been settled to date?

CAP DE LA MADELEINE, QUE., VIADUCT

Mr. BARIBEAU:

1. Did the government of the province of Quebec request the federal government to share in the cost of the construction of a viaduct in the city of Cap-de-la-Madeleine, Champlain county?

2. If so, have the said works been approved by the Department of Public Works?

3. Are such works being carried on at the present time?

4. If not, what is the reason for the delay?

Mr. GORDON:

1, 2, 3 and 4.

Under the agreement entered into between the dominion and the province of Quebec under the provisions of The Relief Act, 1933, the province submitted for dominion approval the following proposed works bearing schedule No. 457 which schedule was in due course approved.

Schedule No. 457

Champlain county, highway No. 19, Cap-de-la-Madeleine. Construction of a concrete viaduct over the C.P.R. track. To remedy unemployment at Cap-de-la-Madeleine.

Total estimated cost, $35,000.

Total estimated labour cost, $24,000.

Man-days work provided by project, $15,000.

Basis of contribution, 50 cents per man-day.

Dominion proportion, $7,500.

The date set for the completion of the above project was March 31, 1934, that being the date on which The Relief Act, 1933, expired. As no accounts have been received from the province with respect to schedule No. 457, it is not known whether work was proceeded with or not.

BERET IMPORTS

Mr. BARIBEAU:

2. What are their names and where do they reside?
3. How many examinations have been made and what numbers are examined daily by each of the said doctors?
4. What amount is allowed for each one examined, and what was the total amount paid each doctor during the calendar years 1932 to 1934?

STEAM RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

Mr. COOTE:

1. What was the number of employees on steam railways in Canada in each year from 1913 to 1934, inclusive?
2. What was the total amount of wages paid in each of these years?
3. What was the total amount of salaries paid in each of these years?
4. What was the total amount of interest paid by railway companies in each of these years?

Mr. MANION: I would suggest that this question stand as an order for return, with the understanding that we will table all the information received from the railways.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands as an order for return.

TRANSLATORS

Mr. CHEVRIER:

1. What are the names, and the respective departments or branches, of all the translators transferred to the bureau for translation?
2. What are the names, and the respective departments or branches of all the translators who, to date, have not been so transferred?
3. For what reasons have these latter not been absorbed by the central bureau?

REGISTRATION OF VOTERS

Mr. FERLAND:

1. What was the number of electors registered on the federal lists in each of the counties of the province of Quebec in 1926?
2. What was the population of each county in the province of Quebec in 1926, according to the previous census?
3. What is the number of electors presently registered on the federal lists in each of the counties of the provinces of Quebec and Ontario?
4. What is the population of each of the counties of the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, according to the census of 1931?

Mr. CAHAN: I should like the question to stand as an order for return. Such information as is available will be given in compliance with it. I do not know whether or not we have the list for 1926, but if we have the full information will be given. Meantime I should like it to stand as an order for return.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands as an order for return.

BUTTER PRODUCTION

Mr. BARIBEAU:

1. What quantity of butter was manufactured in each province of the dominion during the years 1933 and 1934?
2. What grades of butter were manufactured in each province during 1933 and 1934?
3. What quantity of cheese was manufactured in each province of the dominion during the years 1933 and 1934?
4. What grades of cheese were manufactured in each province during 1933 and 1934?

GRANTS TO YUKON

Mr. HANBURY:

1. What amount has been granted to the Yukon every year from 1920 to 1935?
2. What amount of special allowance was made each year separately to the members of the Royal North West Mounted Police, or Royal Canadian Mounted Police, in the Yukon, from 1920 to 1935?

HOPE, B.C., AIRPORT, PROJECT 26

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver):

1. How many acres are being used at project 26, Hope airport?
2. How much per acre was paid for this land, and to whom?
3. What was the total amount expended by the Department of National Defence on project 26, Hope airport to the end of January, 1935?
4. How many men are there in camp at project 26, Hope airport?
5. How many acres have been cleared at project 26, Hope airport?

HOPE PRINCETON ROAD—CAMP BUILDINGS

3. Was any embargo placed against the exportation of any of our raw, natural products from Canada during the years 1931 to 1934, inclusive; if so, specify for each year separately?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

STE. ADELAIDE DE PABOS, QUE., BREAKWATER

Mr. BRASSET:

For a copy of all paylists, accounts for materials, iron, stone, etc., in conection with the work done by the Department of Public Works on the breakwaters at Sainte Adelaide de Pabos, during the year 1934-1935.

STE. ANNE DE BEAUPRÉ, QUE., WHARF

Mr. POWER (for Mr. Casgrain):

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, correspondence and other documents, exchanged between the federal government or any of the ministers of the crown and any other person or persons in connection with requests for grants to repair the government wharf at Sainte Anne de Beaupré; also, copy of all lists of salaries or remunerations paid to those engaged in the supervising of the above works, from the 1st of January, 1934, to date.

LAKE SAINT-PIERRE SOUNDINGS

Mr. CHEVRIER (for Mr. Boucher):

For a statement showing the names, addresses, and salaries, of all persons employed in connection with the soundings made by the Department of Marine in lake Saint-Pierre, during the present winter; also, a copy of all telegrams, letters and correspondence, passed between the Minister of Marine, his department, A. K. Laing, and any other person or persons, concerning the appointment of the above persons.

SAINT-FRANÇOIS DU LAC, QUE., POST OFFICE

Mr. CHEVRIER (for Mr. Boucher):

For a copy of all documents, correspondence, complaints, petitions, reports and other papers, in the hands of the Post Office Department, since July 30, 1930, concerning the post office at Saint-François du Lac and the postmistress thereof.

CHARLEVOIX-SAGUENAY PUBLIC WORKS

On the motion of Mr. CASGRAIN:

For a copy of all paylists and accounts for materials in connection with work done by the department of Public Works in the county of Charlevoix-Saguenay, during the years 1933 and 1934.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I would suggest that this motion stand until the hon. member is here, because I have had some discussion with him about it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Stands.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF LEGISLATION—GUARANTEES

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver):

For a return showing in respect of guarantees given by the government under unemployment relief legislation: (a) nature of the guarantee; (b) name of bank receiving guarantee; (c) number of order in council governing each case; (d) amount of guarantee in each case; (e) amount, if any, by which guarantee reduced in each case.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF DISBURSEMENTS

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver):

For a return showing dominion disbursements under unemployment relief administration since August 7, 1930, for the years 1930, 1931, 1932, 1933, 1934 up to January, 1935, inclusive, and showing in each case to whom such disbursements were paid.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Mr. Speaker, part of this motion is quite in order, but I would suggest to the hon. member that the request contained in the last expression "and showing in each case to whom such disbursements were paid" is almost impossible to fulfil. The expression to which I have referred involves three departments, namely the Department of Labour, the Department of National Defence and the Department of the Interior. To give the particulars in each case would involve over a million documents. I would suggest that the motion would be satisfactory if the hon. member would stop after the word "inclusive."

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is satisfactory.

Mr. SPEAKER: Motion as amended agreed to.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF STATISTICS

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver):

For a return showing the number on direct relief in Canada by months 1934-1935 under the following headings: (a) number of heads of families; (b) number of dependents on heads of families; (c) individual relief cases only.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: In part (c) does the hon. member refer to the number of individual relief cases?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): A similar return was made two years ago.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: But not the individual cases.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The number.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I would suggest that part (c) be changed to read "the number of individual relief cases only."

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Satisfactory.

Mr. SPEAKER: Motion as amended agreed to.

ST. ROMUALD, QUE., PROTECTION WALL—SUPPLIES

Mr. POWER.

For a return showing: 1. The names of all persons who furnished supplies or services in connection with the construction of a cement protection wall at St. Romuald, county of Levis, Quebec.

2. The amounts paid to each such person.

ST. ROMUALD PROTECTION WALL—PAY LISTS

Mr. POWER:

For a copy of all paylists in connection with the construction of a cement protection wall at St. Romuald, county of Levis, Quebec, from August, 1934, to date.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I submit, Mr. Speaker, it has not been customary to bring down some of the information asked in this motion. For instance, there is correspondence within the department among department officials.

As the Minister of Trade and Commerce is not here to-day I would suggest that the motion stand, and that the hon. member might consider if he could not reword it in order to comply with the custom of the house not to bring down correspondence or papers between officials of a department and the minister.

Motion stands.

CUSTOMS TARIFFS CHANGES

Mr. B. M. STITT (Nelson) moved:

For a return showing all increases in the customs tariffs (British preferential, intermediate and general) passed by the parliament of Canada between April 1, 1922, and July 1, 1930, statement to show former rates as well as increases; also dates when changes were made.

Mr. CAHAN: Mr. Speaker, I will call the attention of the mover of this resolution to the fact that there are over one thousand items in the tariff and that to compile a list of changes in the several items during a period of eight or nine years would require many weeks of labour. I would suggest that the hon. member withdraw this motion, and if there are changes in the duties on particular commodities or in particular items of the tariff which he desires to consider, we will furnish him with as complete a statement as possible with regard to those items or those special commodities, but if the motion were to go through in this form it would be very difficult to comply with it, and it would require a long time to make up the complete list.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): If I heard the minister correctly he stated that it would take several weeks to assemble these increases in the tariff that were made by the Liberals when they were in power.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. McINTOSH: You did not catch his point.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion is not subject to debate.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): I am quite willing, Mr. Speaker, to revise this motion. Some of the statements that have been made by the Liberals have been misleading.

Motion withdrawn.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, whereas we have seen in the press of to-day that Paraguay has withdrawn from the League of Nations, and whereas the acting leader of the government has particular knowledge of South America, may I ask him what stand has been taken by the government in the matter?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister): In reply to the hon. gentleman I would say that I have never been in Paraguay, but I accept his question as a notice and will have the matter looked into.

SALE OF BUTTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. R. MOTHERWELL (Melville): May I ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) a question? I have not given him the usual courtesy notice, but I am sure his attention must have been drawn to the front page prominently displayed heading in this morning's Journal which reads thus: "150,000 pounds of adulterated butter are sold daily in Montreal, is the claim." As this is a very serious and illegal practice we shall be glad to hear anything the minister has to say regarding whether the report is true or not. I hope that he will be able to deny it.

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): As the hon. member suggests, when I saw the item in the press this morning I made inquiry, and the information given me in this connection was that tests were made of 1,396 samples of butter taken in Quebec in 1934, and out of this number there was only one case in which adulterated butter fat was found, and a conviction was obtained in that case.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Then this report would seem to be practically unwarranted.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REPRESENTATIONS OF EMPLOYEES RESPECTING CONSTRUCTION OF EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. SANDERSON (South Perth): I have a question to direct to the Minister of Railways. On January 21 and 22 last I asked the minister if he or the government had come to any decision in regard to the construction of new equipment for the Canadian National Railways, and whether it would be constructed in the Canadian National Railway shops by Canadian National Railway employees, or by private concerns. On both occasions the minister replied that no decision had been arrived at. Will he be good enough to tell me if he has yet come to any decision on the matter?

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): The matter, Mr. Speaker, has not been further considered.

REPORT OF GEORGE A. TOUCHE AND COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. L. BEAUBIEN (Provencher): Can the Minister of Railways inform me to what members of the committee copies of the supplementary report of Touche and Company have been sent?

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways): Before the hon. gentleman came in I made a short statement. However, I will briefly explain the matter again. I think it was on Friday that we received, at our request, a number of copies of this report from Touche and Company. They were not sufficient to go round, but on Saturday I instructed my department to distribute them to the members, and some have already been distributed. They have been distributed alphabetically, and as the hon. gentleman's name is high up on the list he should be among those who have received copies. His copy may be in his box. Some were distributed on Saturday and some to-day, and we are getting others copied from the ones we have kept so that we shall complete the list and distribute them to the members of the committee. The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Hanbury) mentioned that the press had obtained the report. Some members of the committee had it and I presume one of them allowed the press to see it, but after all there was nothing secret about it. The report does not contain anything except an elaboration of their previous report, and as I say, members of the committee will have copies as soon as we have them prepared.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): I notice that there are 5,783 civilian purchasers of soldier settlement board land, and also 2,077 of these farms are being taken up by British family settlers. Can those farmers who have taken up deserted land under the soldier settlement board take advantage of the benefits of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act and thereby start with a new contract?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration and Colonization): I have not the statute before me, but my view is that all settlers operating farms under a contract with the director of soldier settlement may apply for the benefits of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act.

MARKETING OF POTATOES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): The Minister of Agriculture was kind enough to send me a copy of the regulations relating to the marketing of potatoes in the eastern markets. I have received numerous requests for copies of these regulations and I understand that they are not printed in any quantity. I wonder if the minister can arrange to have them printed for distribution.

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): I shall be glad to look into the question and advise the hon. gentleman.

LIQUIDATION OF MERCANTILE DEBTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): I have a question to direct to the Minister of Finance. Under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, 1934, and amendment thereto, now before parliament, farmers are provided, for the adjustment of their obligations, with a provincial board of review. The retailers of the country, whose debts run into millions, have no such machinery provided for their financial protection. May I ask the minister whether the government has given any consideration to providing adequate debt adjusting machinery to help the several independent retailers of the nation.

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): That is a rather comprehensive question to be submitted without notice. It will require an answer involving major policy. The question will be considered and an announcement made as and when a decision is arrived at.

ALGERNON LIGHTHOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. FERDINAND FAFARD (L'Islet) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) whether he has been informed that the lighthouse at St. Roch Crossing, situated at the most dangerous point of the St. Lawrence river, has recently been carried away by the ice? If so, does the minister intend taking immediate steps for its reconstruction and will the work be done by day-labour or by contract?

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine) (Translation): I have not been officially informed that this lighthouse has been carried away by the ice; I learned the fact indirectly and have requested the officers of my department to investigate and report.

CITY OF OTTAWA AGREEMENT

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of public Works) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to authorize the Minister of Public Works, on behalf of His Majesty, to enter into an agreement with the corporation of the city of Ottawa to extend the period of the existing agreement with the corporation for one year from July 1, 1934.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The object of this resolution is to authorize the continuance of an agreement between the Dominion of Canada and the city of Ottawa for a further period of one year. The matter has been before the house on other occasions during the last three or four years, and it simply continues the existing agreement under which $100,000 is paid for water supplied by the city of Ottawa for fire protection in connection with the parliament buildings. The water which is supplied to the buildings used as offices is paid for on a meter basis, and the agreement also contains certain provisions with respect to the maintenance of streets, pavements and bridges. This continues the existing arrangement for another year.

Mr. ELLIOTT: How long has the present agreement been in force?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The agreement was made in 1924 for one year, to July, 1925, and then it was extended for five years from July, 1925, to 1930, and the amount was increased from $75,000 to $100,000 per annum. It has been extended annually since that time on the basis of $100,000 per annum.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Has there been any change either in the amount or in the terms since 1930?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No.

Mr. AHEARN: Were any representations made this year by the mayor or the city officials with regard to increasing the grant?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I do not think any representations have been made in connection with an increase in the amount desired for this service. There were representations in connection with other matters in which the city of Ottawa is interested but which are outside the scope of this agreement entirely. There was some suggestion that the amount paid was not all it should be, but it never took the form of any definite negotiations.

Mr. AHEARN: I take it from what the minister says that it was never pointed out that, while the government property cannot be taxed, nevertheless the total assessment has been made by the assessment commissioner of Ottawa. Can the minister tell us what that amounts to?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have not that information before me. The property of course is by statute exempt from taxation. I believe they do carry on their assessment rolls a valuation, but the procedure is an innocuous one, because there is no power to assess.

Mr. AHEARN: I know. I will be glad to tell the minister what the amount of assessment is on the rolls. I admit the property cannot be taxed, but nevertheless the assessment commissioner of Ottawa each year places the assessment on the rolls. The value is $40,907,484. If this were taxed at the general public school rate of city taxation, the tax would amount to $1,505,394.41 per annum. I got that information from the city officials. I merely want to point out to the minister that we are not over-generous to the city of Ottawa and that the grant is pretty low.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This is rather a big subject, and as I have said, it is outside the scope of this agreement. I would like to ask my hon. friend whether the total assessment of $40,000,000 includes all the buildings that are occupied by the government and for which they pay rent.

Mr. AHEARN: I understand this is on government owned property in the city of Ottawa. I may be mistaken, but that was my information.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Of course, as my hon. friend knows, in respect of buildings which the government rents—and there is a large number of them and the rental paid is very large—they are not exempt from taxation; we pay taxes either in rental or specifically.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Does the minister think this represents a very fair bargain on the part of the government for what the city does?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is an agreement made some years ago. As I have pointed out, for all the offices where water is supplied we pay on meter the regular city rate. This is only for water for fire protection and for the parks. Whether it be fair or not is a very big question and it cannot be determined exactly by itself, because it is linked up with other matters such as grants to the federal district commission and other features that are taken into consideration. I would not like to say whether the amount is too much or too little, but I think it is fairly reasonable. It is based on an agreement anyway and shows an increase of $25,000 per annum over the amount that was agreed upon previously. I think it is fairly reasonable, but all these matters are, as I say, more or less connected and will have to be considered together.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Has the city of Ottawa expressed its approval of this proposition?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The city of Ottawa would perhaps like to get a larger amount, but unless a bill founded on this resolution is passed there will not be any authority for paying any amount.

Mr. HEAPS: Could the minister state how the amount of $100,000 was arrived at?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): By negotiation and agreement between the city and the government. As I said, prior to 1925 the amount was $75,000 and it was then increased to $100,000, the amount that has been paid since.

Mr. HEAPS: The mere recital of figures does not convey very much meaning to me. I would like to know what value the government obtains in return for this expenditure of $100,000 per annum.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): We get water for fire protection and for services in the parks.

Mr. HEAPS: What is actually the amount of water used in the parks?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There is no meter, I believe, for that. The meter is on the buildings and offices, but I do not think there is any meter on the quantity that goes this other way.

Mr. HEAPS: I would have preferred it had the minister given to the committee some method by which the amount of $100,000 could be computed, so that we could vote on the matter more intelligently. I do not know whether the amount is too large or too small. Naturally I can understand hon. members representing Ottawa constituencies trying to obtain from the government as good a measure of support for the city as they possibly can; on the other hand, those who do not come from Ottawa would like to have some idea of the equity of the amount arrived at as between the city and the central authority. At the present time, while I certainly cannot object to the amount, neither can I approve it because in what the minister has said there is nothing to give me an intelligent idea as to how to vote on this particular question.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am sorry I cannot give the hon. member the information because the agreement was negotiated before I had anything to do with this matter. All I can say is that it is the result of negotiation embodied in an agreement. It must have been considered fair at the time the agreement was made.

Mr. HEAPS: On the face of it, it seems a rather large sum of money to pay for the services rendered. I may be wrong in my understanding of the matter and as I say, I would be able to understand the matter better if we had the agreement before the committee; we would then know a little more about the matter than we do at present.

Mr. MITCHELL: Do I understand from the minister that the government pays $100,000 a year merely for watering the lawn in front of the parliament buildings?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No, that is for fire protection and parks all through the city. The park system is under the control of the federal district commission; it is rather extensive.

Mr. HEAPS: We have heard the Ottawa representatives complaining about the amount. There are civic parks in all parts of the dominion and the local authorities are compelled to pay for their own water. Evidently the federal authorities are providing Ottawa with parks at federal expense and in addition we have to provide and pay for the water which we use in the beautification of those parks for the benefit of the people of this city. We have, I suppose, other similar expenditures to consider and I certainly would like to have if possible a little more information from the minister in regard to the equity of this agreement.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think the treatment of the city is fairly generous. I do not know how the members representing the city of Ottawa will take that remark, but when all that is being done by the government in every direction, of which this is only a very small item, is considered, I think after all the city is receiving fair and generous treatment from the government.

Mr. HEAPS: Would the minister be prepared to do for other cities what it is doing for Ottawa?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I believe we would be prepared to do the same for any other city in which the capital might be located.

Mr. ARTHURS: I understood the minister to say that this agreement included some other services. I would like to speak of the lighting system on Wellington street in front of this building. During this winter I have seen a couple of narrow escapes from accidents; owing to the green light being of short duration, people coming north toward this building or departing from it find it impossible in many cases for one proceeding at an ordinary pace to cross the street while the light is green. Some change should be made in order to make that period somewhat longer.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That is a matter which, I understand, is under the control of the city which regulates the traffic on the streets and the signals. I shall see if anything can be done about the matter.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Stewart (Leeds) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 23, to authorize an agreement between His Majesty the King and the corporation of the city of Ottawa.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN ACT

AMENDMENT TO FACILITATE AND INCREASE THE EXTENSION OF CREDIT TO FARMERS

The house resumed from Friday, February 15, consideration in committee of Bill No. 15, to amend the Canadian Farm Loan Act—Mr. Rhodes—Mr. Smith (Cumberland) in the chair.

On the short title.

Mr. POULIOT: This bill is supposed to give the farmers a chance to borrow $90,000,000. They need that money. In fact they need much more than that, because as I pointed out on June 6, 1934, as recorded in Hansard, the value of fourteen farm products in 1932, the year of the imperial conference, was $440,000,000 less than in 1930. Since then the loss has been still greater. It means that since this government came into power the loss to the farmer has been nearly $2,000,000,000 on only fourteen farm products. I see the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. MacMillan) laughs.

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): I did not.

Mr. POULIOT: It is a most serious matter and it should not be taken with a laugh.

Mr. MACMILLAN (Saskatoon): I was reading the paper, I was not talking to you.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Order, please direct your remarks to the chair.

Mr. POULIOT: My words were not addressed directly to the hon. gentleman, they were addressed to the chair; therefore I am in accord with the rules of procedure in this chamber.

Now, Mr. Chairman, mark you, the loss to the farmers on fourteen farm products only during the five years this government has been in power is $2,000,000,000. Now the government say to the farmers, We will save you by lending you $90,000,000. A nice proportion. This is how they are going to save the farmers. They are proud of their legislation. Some help! Great help, great assistance for those people who in the words of the Prime Minister have shown so much fortitude during these years of stress. Fortitude! They need help; he gives them words. But unfortunately they cannot swallow them as well as the Prime Minister swallows his own words. And it is better for them not to swallow the words that come from the government because they would make them sick. Here we have this legislation to lend $90,000,000 to the farmers. They need money, but would it not be better if the finance minister came to the house with other legislation, to remove the tariff barriers that prevent the farmers from trading with the other countries of the world.

Who will pay for this? Will the farmer be self-sustaining with that legislation? No, sir, because the finance minister answering the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Gray) said, The farmer will have to pay that money back to the government. And that surely is a business proposition. But will it put the farmer on his feet? No, sir. Just humbug once more, just bluff. It is just an expedient to get past election time and afterwards the farmer will not be any better off than before. The government comes with legislation to serve as steps to enable the farmer to get over the tariff wall, but there are no steps and no ladder for him to come down, therefore the farmer is in danger of breaking his neck coming down the high tariff wall that has been built by this government. Sir, although it is necessary to come to the rescue of the farmer I find this legislation silly. If the government had been wise enough, the tariff barriers would have been destroyed and the farmer would not have had to get over this wall, he would have been able to pass through. The only blasting that the Prime Minister should do is to blast his own tariff walls, this would be the most sensible thing.

An hon. MEMBER: Will he do it?

Mr. POULIOT: He has not enough kick to do that. This is what he should use the ruthlessness of his iron heel against; he should destroy these tariff walls and blast them with the dynamite and pep of his supporters.

Sir, here we have legislation which means that a man who has a little money left will have to pay more taxes in order to give the farmer a chance. It is all right to give a chance to the farmer, I am for it, but the Minister of Finance, who is one of the ablest men in the government—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. POULIOT: Who is much abler than his own leader—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS: See him smiling.

Mr. POULIOT: The Minister of Finance will understand very well that it would be much more logical, much more sensible, to destroy those tariff barriers which prevent the farmer from trading with the other countries of the world, so that he can sell his products outside of Canada, thereby putting him on his feet at no cost to this country, instead of lending him $90,000,000 and leaving him in trouble. This is what I do not understand. If the members of the government are sincere in saying that they earnestly wish the welfare of the farmer there is only one thing for them to do, that is to repair the wrongs that they themselves have done to the farmer. This is what should be done. They can do that very easily; they have only to cancel the silly legislation which has been forced upon this house by their brute majority. That is the only thing which they have to do, and if it is done this bill will be superfluous. It will not be necessary, except perhaps at the start, while on the other hand the farmer will be able to repay the government. If that is not done, next year whatever government is in office will have to loan the farmers much more money, unless the tariff walls are demolished.

That is the situation. Now I should like to ask a question of the minister who, as I say, is a very sensible man, and who in addition possesses manners, which is something that counts. The farmers of this country have lost two billion dollars on the sale of only fourteen farm products during the five years this government has been in power. My hon. friend cannot challenge those figures, which have been on Hansard since June 6, 1934. I should like to ask the minister how the farmers who have lost so much because of the policies of this government will be made more comfortable by being able to borrow a sum which does not represent even one-half of one per cent of their losses. They have lost two billion dollars; you offer to loan them $90,000,000. That does not amount to even one-half of one per cent on their losses on only fourteen farm products. Far from being exaggerated my figure does not represent the actual loss, since it does not cover everything produced on the farm. The minister knows very well that we do not exaggerate the problems and worries of the farmers, and he knows very well that less than one-half of one per cent of their losses will not give the farmers very great comfort or help. So I should like to ask him if he does not think it proper now to do something more for the farmers, to steal a stick of dynamite from the office of his leader and blast holes in the tariff wall in order to give the farmers a chance to trade with the other countries of the world, thus lessening the responsibilities of the government and the taxpayers of this country and relieving the farmers.

Mr. VALLANCE: It is not my intention to quote any further statistics with regard to the position of the farmer, but many of us in the house are receiving letters from every province in Canada, I believe, from farmers who want to know when it will be possible for them to get some of this $90,000,000. I have only one suggestion to make to the minister, and it is this. Why not give the farmers this money at cost? It is costing the government 3½ per cent, so why not give the farmers the money at cost in view of the fact that the farming industry is not being included under the unemployment insurance measure and in view of the further fact that, as taxpayers, the farmers must contribute a considerable share of the amount the government will be compelled to pay for administration and as their contribution to the fund? It seems to me this is one way by which the government could assist agriculture to a very great extent, and I would ask the minister to take this suggestion into consideration.

Mr. RHODES: I am quite sure my hon. friend from Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) would be the last to expect me to reply to his political address, which I take it he was rehearsing here for the purpose of relating to his electors during the peaceful days of spring in the beautiful countryside which he represents. If his address had been in order at all it might have been in order on the second reading of the bill, but I submit to my hon. friend that he has not thrown any great amount of light upon the particular section of the bill now under discussion. At the proper time and in the proper forum I should be delighted to engage in a political discussion with my hon. friend, but I am sure that upon reflection he would be the last to expect me to do so under these circumstances. For the moment I shall content myself with saying that I do not accept his figures, his arguments or his statements, but I do not propose to attempt to controvert them in detail at this moment.

My hon. friend from South Battleford (Mr. Vallance) has raised a large question. I speak very frankly when I say that I believe the government would be doing the farming population of this country a disservice if it offered first mortgage money at 3½ per cent. That is my own view, and I will give my reasons. It would dry up all sources of private funds, and unless the government was prepared to take the position that it would take over the total mortgage obligation, which to-day exceeds, $600,000,000, it would be a very sad thing for the farmers of the future if they could have resort only to government borrowing, and that to a limited extent. Three and a half per cent is not the cost to the government by any means. The cost of administration takes one full per cent.

Mr. VALLANCE: But I want you to bear that.

Mr. RHODES: Quite so, but that is not money at cost; that is money at less than cost. I stated the other day that it should be the policy of the government to loan money to the farmers at a rate as low as possible consistent with the general well being of the country at large and of the farmer himself. I can see another very grave danger. There would be an inducement to many farmers whom I know personally to have not a dollar of mortgage upon their property to seek to get money at 3½ per cent when they could turn around and loan it in their own neighbourhood at 5½ and 6 per cent. We must look at these things in a practical way, and I believe as much harm as good would be done by loaning money to the farmers at such a low rate. Having said so much let me repeat that I should like to see the farmer get his money at as low a rate as is consistent with the general interest, including his own interest.

On that point let me say that in the United States where, as is well known, they have been very generous with public funds under the land banks which were set up for the purpose of loaning government money to farmers. At the present moment they charge 5½ per cent, with the proviso that for a period until 1938, I think, the money is subject to a lowering of the interest rate by one-half per cent. Under the agreements they pay 5 per cent until 1938 and after that they pay 5½ per cent. Even where the government loans money to cooperative associations of farmers set up in communities, where these farmers in turn guarantee the mortgage of each individual farmer, that money is loaned to the associations at the rate of 5 per cent, and in addition the farmer must make a subscription of 5 per cent to the stock of the association, which means that his interest is increased to the extent that interest would be added to that 5 per cent.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

We have every reason to expect that in Canada we will have money for the farmer at 5 per cent.

Mr. DONNELLY: Could the minister tell us when these land banks were started in the United States?

Mr. RHODES: I believe they were started in 1917, but I am speaking of conditions at the present moment.

Mr. DONNELLY: But they have not changed since they were started?

Mr. RHODES: I could not say as to that; I am speaking of the rate at the present moment. I have a wire here, dated February 5, from the governor of the farm loan bank in the United States, addressed to the Canadian farm loan board, containing the information which I am giving at the moment. I believe it is reasonable to assume there will be five per cent money. That may be too high, but it is a fair subject for discussion. I do submit, however, that three and one-half per cent is entirely too low. It will be found in the light of certain amendments which I shall propose to the bill that in other respects we are lightening the load of the farmer by the legislation now before the house. In every possible way it is our desire to go as far as is reasonable, having regard to the general public interest.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Mr. Chairman, I believe the intention behind the legislation passed in 1927 was to loan money to farmers so that they would be in a position to carry on their farming operations. I believe, further, that it was the intention to loan money at as low a rate as possible, having regard to the cost of operation. It seems to me that an entirely different situation prevails to-day from that which obtained in 1927. At that time it appeared good business policy to loan money to farmers for purposes of production and for the general extension of farming operations. So far as my personal knowledge of present conditions in Saskatchewan goes, however, it would seem a first class policy not to loan money under prevailing circumstances to any farmers. I speak for the prairie provinces, with which I am more familiar. I make that statement because to-day the farmer cannot pay the interest on loans made to him, nor has he been able to do so for the past three or four years. I do favour the legislation however because I believe we are acting wisely when we attempt to make money available for the farmer who finds himself confronted with a considerable overhead of debt at a high rate of interest.

It seems to me that this money should be earmarked so that it may be loaned to farmers for purposes of first mortgages and perhaps second mortgages, and for the purpose of discharging obligations to the banks or machinery companies.

Mr. VALLANCE: You cannot get it.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: The money should be made available at the lowest possible rate of interest. When the amendments were before the house last year the Prime Minister stated that the margin was being increased from $15,000,000 to $40,000,000 so that this measure might work in conjunction with the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act to make money available for the retirement of obligations contracted by farmers, and for the lowering of interest rates. My own opinion is the amount of money available should be increased for those purposes. There are scores —yes, hundreds of farmers on the prairies who would be glad to have facilities for refunding their obligations at a lower rate of interest, and I should like to endorse all that has been said about making the rate as low as possible. I believe the two per cent margin charged for the cost of operation—

Mr. RHODES: One and one-half per cent.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Well, it seems to me that even one and one-half per cent is one-half per cent higher than it should be. I recall that in 1927 we were given information in committee which showed that the actual cost of operation would be about one per cent. Possibly it would be good business to have one-half of one per cent in excess, but I believe it would be a better procedure to give the benefit of the one-half per cent to the struggling farmer. If the money can be borrowed by the Canadian government at the rate of three and one-half per cent there should be no greater increase than the one per cent to meet the actual cost of operation. If the money were made available for the purposes I have mentioned there would be many grateful farmers throughout the country.

Mr. RHODES: I agree with the hon. member for Kindersley when he states that we should loan the money to the farmers at as low a rate of interest as we can. In making that statement however I should not like to go the distance the hon. member for South Battleford has suggested. It is the intention that cases such as the hon. member has instanced should be cared for by the farm loan board, provided always that the individual farmers commend themselves to the judgment of the board. I stated a few days ago that it must not be assumed a farmer could go to the board simply as a matter of right. However a farmer who is worthy, and in need, may without any difficulty have his situation improved by a loan from the farm loan board. As I stated before each individual case will be considered on its own merits.

Miss MACPHAIL: I should like to urge upon the Minister of Finance the necessity for the government to carry the costs of administration of farm loans. They are carrying the administration costs in connection with the measure for unemployment insurance, they carry the administration costs in connection with old age pensions, and they have to carry the costs in other instances. Under present conditions in agriculture the Farm Loan Act is in the nature of a relief measure set up to relieve the farmer in his difficulties. As the government may know short of a straight bonus difficulty is found in finding ways of helping the farmer directly, and I suggest that we now have before us the means for helping him.

A very great percentage of farmers have some debt. Although not all have mortgages against their property, many would like very much to take out a small mortgage in order to settle irritating debts, grocery bills, doctor bills, twine bills, machinery bills and other bills they may have to meet. There would be no use offering them a loan at five per cent or five and one-half per cent because they would not be able to pay the debt. The legislature of the province of Ontario proposes to pay one per cent, thereby lowering the rate to four and one-half per cent. Even at that rate however agriculture could not pay. To-day we are facing new conditions, conditions we have never met before, and whether we must spend a great amount of money or not I feel that the federal government could best serve agriculture by carrying the administrative costs of the farm loan operations thereby, according to the statement of the Minister of Finance, cutting the interest rates by one and one-half per cent.

It is true, further, that government policies, such as tariff and immigration policies and exchange rates affect farmers' prices. We know that world conditions affect the prices the farmer receives and in many cases the cost of his requirements. I believe it is admitted that government policy in the past has not been of a kind likely to assist the farmer of to-day. I believe it is admitted that the policy of solicited immigration which has obtained, until recently, for the past thirty years or more has not led to any improvement in the present condition of the farmer. I believe it is admitted, further, that high tariffs have been detrimental to his interests, and that an exchange rate which did not place Canadian money on a par with British money in the first year or so in which this government held office undoubtedly adversely affected farmers' prices. And so all these things being true I feel, though it may seem a radical departure and to the minister may even seem in many ways an unwise step, that it would be much better, to carry the administration costs and thus enable the farmer to pay interest on his loans than it would be to load him with the administration costs as well as four per cent, making 5½ per cent altogether, which he is entirely unable to pay and, as time will prove, will not pay. I am sure that the minister wants the loans repaid and the interest payments kept up, and for that reason I feel that it would be better for the government to assume this responsibility. Indeed why should the government not assume the responsibility for agriculture's load just as much as it assumes responsibility for the administration of these other measures, such as unemployment insurance, which does not affect agriculture at all except adversely, and old age pensions, and so on. If it is true then that other groups of citizens should be served by having the administration costs carried by the federal government I can see no reason at all why the same service should not be given to farmers in this their day of extremity.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend from Southeast Grey will I think appreciate that it would be improper for me to be drawn into a discussion which is perennial on the subject as to how far the farmer is prejudiced by the incidence of the tariff. Certainly on this bill, as I said in the case of the matter brought up by the hon. member for Témiscouata, I do not propose to be drawn into a discussion of that question, but upon another occasion that is a different thing.

My hon. friend has put forward the suggestion that the government should carry the whole administrative costs of the Farm Loan Act. That is a fair subject for discussion. I have in mind the statement made by one member who is himself a farmer, who said that the farmer is not looking for charity. Well, he is getting charity if he asks that the taxpayers of the country at large shall bear the cost of administering the Farm Loan Act. Having said that, I say very frankly to the committee that I have an open mind on the question. It might be sound policy to do it; I am not so sure about that. But when my hon. friend was referring to interest rates she took the rate of five and a half per cent. That is the rate at the moment, but as I have said, I think we can safely anticipate a rate of five per cent or possibly a little lower. But let us take five per cent. Until the suggestion was made to-day by the hon. member for South Battleford the lowest rate I have heard mentioned here is four per cent. Everybody has been pleading for four per cent money. My hon. friend from Southeast Grey quite properly pleads the case of the poor farmer who has not a mortgage on his land but has some debts and wants to compound them and take a small mortgage on his farm. I presume she means a mortgage of $1,000. If she does—I may say that the average of all farm loans in Canada is slightly above $2,000,—the difference between four and five per cent for a $1,000 mortgage would be $10 a year. Well, Mr. Chairman, while I sympathize with the farmer every day as I do with many others in all walks of life because of their sufferings and trials and difficulties due to this period through which we are passing, you cannot tell me that $10 is going to make the difference between the success or failure of a farmer who is a farmer on any farm. I only say that in passing. I do not know that I stress it, but we must look at these things in their proper perspective.

I come back to the question of the cost of administration. It is a fair subject for debate, although I must say this, that I still have the feeling that if we put out mortgage money at 3½ per cent we would make a grave mistake from the national point of view and the viewpoint of the farmer himself. I may be all wrong about that, but that is my opinion.

Mr. HANBURY: You would have to provide about $900,000,000 instead of $90,000,000.

Mr. RHODES: Quite so. I indicated at an earlier stage that it would dry up all sources of private lending.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Does not the minister think that the sources from which a farmer can borrow to-day are all dried up and have been dried up for quite a long time? The farmer cannot borrow a nickle to-day.

Mr. RHODES: I will say this to my hon. friend. I believe no other factor has contributed so much to the drying up of the sources of credit money as the moratoria acts that have been passed by the different provinces in Canada. I do not believe any one thing has done a greater disservice to the farming population of this country although I have no doubt that the legislation was well designed and was put on the statute books with the best intentions. I do not find fault with any government for that, but I believe that that was the greatest damage done to the farming population that has been done in any quarter century in the history of Canada. I know that there is any quantity of private money to be loaned on farms to this day, and would be but for the moratoria laws that are to be found in the different provinces.

Mr. POWER: Will not the farmers' debt adjustment act have the same effect?

Mr. RHODES: I do not think so, for this reason. It is intended to deal with a situation that exists. There are farmers to-day, and we need not enter into a discussion why it is so, but there are good farmers, hard working, thrifty, honest men who because of an accumulation of circumstances find themselves carrying such a crushing burden of debt that they cannot stagger along under it.

Mr. POWER: Will not the farmers' debt adjustment act have the effect of restricting the farmers' credit for the future?

Mr. RHODES: It may, so far as the immediate future is concerned, but if that farmer is placed on his feet by reason of the operations of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, and is given new courage and a new outlook, and especially with improved conditions as we have a right to expect, I believe that in the natural course of events he can rehabilitate himself so that his credit will depend upon the manner in which he conducts himself in the future. It may be that the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act does dry up to some extent the farmers' sources of credit, but on balance I believe that it will do far more good than harm. I know that there is money available at the present time, and it will be available in the future, and even the farmer who has availed himself of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, if he lives up to his revised obligations, will I think be able to find more fresh money in the future.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I understood from a statement of the minister that he has in mind some amendments to be made to the act. I wonder if he would be good enough before he sits down to indicate them to the committee so that we can be considering them as we go along.

Mr. RHODES: I have no objection. The first one is a revised definition of "farmer" to make it conform to the definition contained in the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. The second one is to enable the farmer who to-day owes the farm loan board, under agreements, payments of interest at the higher rates to secure money at the same rate as the existing loans carry.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What if there is a drop in the interest rate?

Mr. RHODES: There will be anyway for that farmer immediately this act passes, because we are loaning money to-day at five and a half per cent while the old rate went up to six and six and a half per cent. So there will be a drop of one per cent and probably one and a half per cent.

Another amendment is for this purpose: At the present moment in virtue of the amendments passed last year to the Farm Loan Act we are authorized to make loans up to fifty per cent on the land and twenty per cent on the buildings. We now propose to make it fifty per cent on land and buildings. And to indicate the favourable nature of that amendment, may I point out that under the existing legislation in the United States they lend only fifty per cent on land and twenty per cent on buildings. Another amendment provides that the five per cent which has hitherto been subscribed by the farmer shall be credited immediately to his account. That means in effect that he will be saved interest on that sum from this date on. Then there is another amendment designed to meet a situation which arises in the province of Quebec. It will be recalled that last year, in providing for second mortgages, we authorized the board to take in addition chattel mortgages. But they have no chattel mortgages in Quebec; and whereas we can loan up to sixty-six and one-half per cent where chattel mortgages can be taken under the act, where they cannot be obtained, as in the province of Quebec, it would restrict the opportunity of loaning in that province. And so we propose there, notwithstanding the fact that we cannot secure chattel mortgages, to make loans up to sixty per cent. Those are the important provisions.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): I rise to support this motion for one reason only; I believe that any legislation put forward by the government to assist the primary producer should be supported by everyone. But after listening, not only this year but during the last three or four years, to what has been said on this subject, I have come to the conclusion that all the help that has been extended to primary producers has been given almost entirely to farmers, and I do not know what constitutes a farmer. We have swivel chair farmers, speculating farmers, homesteaders and others. If the government intends to pass legislation to assist home builders, then it should receive everyone's support. I would point out to the government however that when we are discussing the necessity of assisting farmers, who are no doubt the backbone of the country, the time has come to give some consideration to those who are handling the other natural products which we have in this dominion. I refer to fishing, lumbering and mining; no assistance has been given to these industries. Three years ago this parliament assisted the farmers of Canada to the extent of five cents a bushel on the wheat they raised, and those who produced wheat were assisted, but those who produced no wheat got no assistance. Consequently that was a failure. Another scheme was tried of assisting the farmers by giving so much per acre, and I understand that also was a failure. Now the government comes along with $90,000,000 to help agriculture, to provide loans on farms at a cheaper rate of interest. But I think—and there are others who feel the same way—that the more money you lend to the farmers the more difficult their situation becomes; some classes of farmers should not get any more money. We have tried assisting the farmers—those from the west will pardon me for saying so—and I think we should now try to help some other industry in Canada as well. I am going to support this legislation, but I do submit to the government that they should give some consideration to the other natural products of which I have spoken.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend will remember what is said in Scripture, that to him that hath shall be given, and from him that hath not shall be taken even that which he seemeth to have.

Mr. POULIOT: Teach yourself before teaching others.

Mr. RHODES: I appreciate the plea the hon. gentleman has made on behalf of the fishermen and lumbermen. It may be that we are doing too much for the farmer; apparently that is his complaint. But that is a larger question which we cannot discuss in committee now.

Mr. VENIOT: I understood the minister to refer to an amendment whereby there would be paid back to the farmers, who have already borrowed, five per cent—

Mr. RHODES: No, it will be credited to him.

[Mr. O. Hanson.]

Mr. VENIOT: It will be credited on principal?

Mr. RHODES: Credited on principal immediately.

Mr. VENIOT: Has the minister taken into consideration the point I raised the other day with regard to fixing the legal fees instead of leaving it to every lawyer to charge as he sees fit? I think the government should have a standard, fixed legal fee for searching of records and making out mortgages, and also a standard fee for the valuation or appraisal of property. If that were done a good deal of the expense now entailed would be saved and it would perhaps provide the minister with a means of lowering the interest rate to a greater extent than he anticipates at present. Legal costs are terrible.

Mr. RHODES: There is in existence a scale of fees provided by the farm loan board, and I am advised by the solicitor of the board that there has been no complaint with respect thereto. The trouble my hon. friend has in mind is the one I referred to the other day, the question of search. I have known of instances where the cost of search has been more than the value of the land itself, and the charge was not high having regard to the amount of work done. You cannot avoid that.

Mr. POWER: Some provinces pay it.

Mr. RHODES: That may be so. I appreciate what the hon. gentleman says, and the idea will be to make the charges as reasonable as possible.

Mr. COOTE: The minister said that the protective legislation that exists in certain of the provinces was responsible for the fact that there was no credit available for the farmer.

Mr. RHODES: I did not assign that as the sole reason; I said that was the greatest contributing factor in my judgment.

Mr. COOTE: I will not quarrel with the minister over that, but I do say that the real reason why so little credit is and has been available for farmers in the last three or four years is the collapse of farm prices. I do not need to give a lot of statistics to show what has happened, but I have here a copy of a statement which was received by one of my neighbours in connection with a cow he sent to Calgary in the summer of 1934. It was sent to Adams, Wood & Weiller, live stock commission agents, on July 18, 1934. The cow weighed 870 pounds and brought a price of 50 cents per hundred. The freight on 870 pounds at 30 cents represented $2.61; yardage, 35 cents; hay, 30 cents; yard fire insurance, 5 cents; commission 75 cents; brand inspection, 10 cents. All these charges came to $4.16, and the total selling price was $4.35, which left the farmer with 19 cents for his cow. On the bottom of the statement there is this note: "Please call at the office the next time you are in town and we will give you this credit in cash. We cannot very well issue a cheque for this amount." When that neighbour was discussing this question at the table one day, one of the men said to him, "It is a good job they did not send you that cheque." He said, "Why"? The man replied, "Well, you would have had to pay fifteen cents exchange on it and probably thirty cents for a telephone call to Calgary to see whether there were sufficient funds for the cheque." The minister said a little while ago that he could not believe one per cent difference on the interest rate was such a vital matter as some hon. members had been trying to make out. There was a time when this cow would have brought this man nineteen dollars. This summer she brought nineteen cents. It is true she was a canner cow.

Mr. HEAPS: Did he cash the cheque?

Mr. COOTE: No, because he did not get it. I said to him, "Why are you so anxious to get this cheque"? He said, "I am anxious to frame it, and if when my young son grows up he complains about the price of farm products I shall show it to him and say: You have no kick coming because this was the price I once got." The commission man got 75 cents while the man on the farm got nineteen cents for the cow.

There have been other instances nearly as bad. I remember two years ago last summer when I went home, a five gallon can of No. 1 churning cream brought ninety cents; that is about eighteen cents a gallon for cream. Someone can work out how much that means for a quart of milk. A returned soldier was trying to make a living milking cows. He said that one day as he was milking he endeavoured to figure out how much he was getting for his work, and he came to the conclusion it meant about five hundred pulls for a cent. Farm prices have dropped so low that in many cases there is no possibility of the farm paying its way and had it not been for the protective legislation put on the statute books by some of our provincial governments, thousands of farmers would before this have been in the cities and the provincial governments and municipalities would have been taking care of them under the unemployment relief act. That is the only result there could have been.

In the United States where they did not have protective legislation there were farmers' strikes in some places and in one case the agent of a loan company who came down to a sale to bid in the farm had a rope put around his neck and was threatened with hanging. That kind of thing might have happened in some provinces had there not been protective legislation. Conditions got so bad that legislation of that kind was unavoidable. The men in charge of some of these big companies that have so many millions of dollars at stake in farm mortgages never showed any intelligent interest in this question; I never heard any of them make any suggestion to the farmer except that he reduce his production costs, tighten his belt and work a little harder. I never heard of them tightening their own belts. As for some of those heads of insurance companies drawing $50,000 a year in salaries, I never heard of them offering to reduce their own salaries. We in parliament could have done something for the farmer and we did not do it. Over four years ago I urged upon the house the necessity for doing something, abandoning the gold standard and stopping this deflation that was going on in Canada. I have been urging this every year since; I know I have made myself a nuisance to some hon. members. A couple of years ago one of them said to me: "Why are you always yapping so much about Australia"? If it is not out of place at this time I would like to take five or ten minutes to tell the house what conditions might have been like if we had gone even as far as Australia has done.

Before I do that may I point out that in 1929 the net revenue of the farms of Canada was $1,034,000,000, but in 1932 it was only $425,000,000 or 40 per cent, while the volume of production in 1932 was 14 per cent greater than in 1929. From 1929 to 1932 the average farm income was reduced from approximately $1,500 to approximately $600. The farmer, however, was still required to make the same payments on his overhead and his debts in 1932 that he had in 1928, and the money was not there. Therefore I do not wonder that credit facilities dried up. No man will give credit to the farmer if he cannot see any possibility of getting his money back.

Australia adopted an entirely different policy from that adopted in Canada. Not only did they reduce the rate of interest by legislation, which we did not do, but they allowed their currency to depreciate in outside countries. This was part of a national plan, a deliberate depreciation of their currency. They abandoned the gold standard in 1930, five years ago. During most of the last four years the British pound has been at a premium of twenty-five or thirty per cent over that of Australia, while during a large part of that time the British pound was at a discount here. That has made all the difference in the world to the Canadian farmer. For a long time the Australian farmer had a sixty per cent exchange advantage over us. I have tried to work out in dollars and cents what it would have meant to the Canadian farmer to be under the same monetary policy as Australia. I wrote to the Commonwealth of Australia and have before me a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury there, who gives me the fluctuations in the exchange rate between Australia and London for the last five years. I shall not quote them all, but the depreciation in Australian exchange in London commenced on January 1, 1930; at least it was depreciated at that date. By January 29, 1931, the exchange rate stood at 130 Australian pounds equalling 100 British pounds. On December 3, 1931, it dropped back to 125 Australian pounds to 100 British pounds, and has remained at that rate until the present. Hon. members can see from that that for over four years the Australian farmer had at all times an advantage of 25 per cent and part of the time an advantage of 60 per cent over the Canadian farmer. I secured from the Australian treasury a book of statistics which shows the gross value of agricultural production in Australia as follows:—

1929	£256,000,000
1931	182,000,000
1932	177,000,000
1933	179,000,000

That works out at this percentage of agricultural production of 1929:

Year	Percentage
1931	71
1933	70

Or an average of seventy per cent for those three years. I want hon. members to note the comparison between that and the situation in Canada. The gross value of agricultural production in Canada for the same years was as follows:

Year	Gross value
1929	$1,631,000,000
1931	845,000,000
1932	775,000,000
1933	762,000,000

That works out at the following percentage of agricultural production of 1929:

Year	Percentage
1931	51
1932	48

[Mr. Coote.]

Or a little under 50 per cent of gross value of 1929 while in Australia their gross value was practically seventy per cent of that of 1929. Applying the same percentage of reduction in Canada as they had in Australia, this is what we should have had if the volume of production had been the same:

Year	Gross value
1931	$1,158,000,000
1932	1,125,000,000
1933	1,141,000,000
Total	$3,424,000,000

Mr. YOUNG: Was the volume of production the same?

Mr. COOTE: I am not able to get any figures for the volume of production in Australia but I will give the volume in Canada just in a moment. The total actual gross value of production in Canada for the three years 1931, 1932 and 1933 was $2,382,000,000, if the percentage drop had been the same as it was in Australia our total gross production would have been $3,424,000,000. The actual figure being $2,382,000,000, it shows a loss in our gross production of $1,042,000,000. I estimate the loss for 1934 at $300,000,000. I have no figures to verify it, because the figures for Australia are not available at the moment, but assuming that sum, for the sake of the argument, it gives a total of $1,342,000,000. That is what I would consider the drop in gross value of agricultural production because of the fact that we have not been on a comparative exchange basis with Australia.

There is a difference in the figures given by our bureau of statistics between gross value and net value in agricultural production, because in the gross value there is much duplication. For instance field products are valued separately from live stock, but a large percentage of field products are fed to live stock. The bureau give net figures as well as gross; and for 1931, 1932 and 1933 their figures of net production are 63 per cent of gross production. Taking therefore 63 per cent of the estimated loss of $1,342,000,000 would give an estimated loss in net revenue to Canadian farmers in these four years, due to the difference in exchange between Canada and Australia, of $845,000,000. Let me say at once that these are not positive figures; they are based on estimates which have been prepared in both countries by the bureau of statistics.

Coming now to the question raised by the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) as to the volume of production: no statistics are available as to volume in either country so far as I could ascertain, but I have the figures for agricultural marketings in Canada, also secured from the bureau of statistics. Taking 1926 as equal to 100, the agricultural markets in Canada were:

1929	101
1931	99

This would indicate that the average production for 1931, 1932 and 1933 was somewhat greater than in 1929, so we can say that the drop in the value of production in Canada was not due to a decrease in volume. I have only taken into account the difference in the money income to the Canadian farmer because of this exchange situation, but that is the important point when dealing with the question of debts and interest. In Australia in the fall of 1932, due to the difference in exchange and the resulting difference in the price of wheat, and due also to the legislation in Australia reducing interest rates by 22½ per cent, of the existing rate 100 bushels of wheat would pay the interest for one year on a mortgage drawn for $1,000 at 8 per cent interest, whereas in Canada it would take 200 bushels to pay the interest on a similar mortgage. That is the reason the Canadian farmers could not pay their interest; it took too much of their product, for of course the only way a farmer can pay any interest is from the product of his farm. If in order to pay his interest he has to drive three times as many steers or hogs to market or deliver twice as many bushels of wheat, he is not going to have as much for himself. Under the conditions of the last few years a farmer could not pay the interest or reduce the principal, and in many cases he could not even pay his taxes.

I want to go a little further. In addition to the increased ability of the Australian farmer to pay debts or fixed charges, he also had a large advantage in purchasing power or real income. The statistics are not quite up to date, but in March, 1932, using the March, 1930, figures in both countries as equalling 100—these figures were worked out for me by the bureau of statistics here—the purchasing power of farm products in Australia gave an index figure of 96·1, whereas in Canada the figure was 68·6. In other words the purchasing power of farm products in Australia was 40 per cent greater than in Canada.

In June, 1934, on the basis of 1913 prices equalling 100 in both countries, the purchasing power of farm products in Australia and Canada was as indicated by the following figures:

Index figures for farm products

Australia	116·1
Canada	93·5

Cost of living

Australia	118·0

These figures indicate that the purchasing power of farm products in Australia was 25 per cent greater than it was in Canada. There you have a pretty good indication of the cause of the present farm debt situation and the reason why reasonable credit facilities are not available to farmers in Canada to-day.

Until the present deflation I do not think there was any field of investment in Canada that showed a better record, outside of government bonds, as far as losses to the investor are concerned, than farm mortgages. But during the last five years we have gone through conditions that in many cases made payment absolutely impossible. Even yet I do not think the default in farm mortgages is as great as it has been in connection with corporation bonds. I have a statement here which shows that corporation bond defaults in Canada during the last four years total over $500,000,000, which I believe is twenty-five per cent of all the corporation bonded debt in Canada. Then I have a statement of the default in municipal bonds, which shows a total for 1934 of over $118,000,000, made up as follows:

British Columbia	$11,000,000
Alberta	427,000
Saskatchewan	4,000,000
Manitoba	14,000,000
Ontario	77,000,000
Quebec	11,500,000
Maritimes	Nil

There is another question that I wish now to bring to the attention of the Minister of Finance and the committee, namely, what has been done in other countries in regard to this matter of credit for farmers. I feel safe in stating that farm mortgages in Canada are carrying at the present time a higher rate of interest than in almost any other country, certainly any of our competitors. A great many people in my constituency are still paying eight per cent, some nine per cent. If the minister has any fuller information in regard to rates in other countries to-day I hope he will give it to the committee. In New Zealand in 1932 they had a National Expenditure Adjustment Act, under which there was a reduction of interest rates on mortgages, as well as of rents and other fixed charges, to five per cent on real estate mortgages and six and one-half per cent on chattel mortgages. The court was also given power to postpone payments and to reduce interest rates and principal and to remit arrears of principal in whole or in part.

They have also in New Zealand a state system of farm mortgages, as I reported last year. The institution had £50,000,000 of state capital represented in real estate mortgages, and they were empowered to lend up to seventy per cent of the value of the property. In Argentina, with a view to assisting the farmer, a reduction of two per cent in interest rates has been agreed to by the banks. On promissory notes with acceptable endorsement or guarantee, there is a rate of five per cent, and on loans not guaranteed, six per cent. Then in connection with the National Mortgage bank I believe the interest on their bonds has been reduced from six to five per cent, and a corresponding reduction has been made in the interest rates on mortgages. In connection with the Argentina may I say that their currency is depreciated to such a point that they now have an exchange advantage of sixty per cent over their Canadian competitors. They have a board of control for cereals which has set prices for wheat, corn and linseed. This amounts to 5·75 paper pesos for wheat, 4·40 paper pesos for corn and 11·50 paper pesos for linseed of average quality. These prices are f.o.b. cars, Buenos Aires, and are based on 80 kilograms per hectolitre. I must confess that I could not translate that into bushels.

Then I want to draw the attention of the minister and of the committee to the action that has been taken in South Africa. In 1933 the government made provision in their budget for enough money to pay a subsidy of one and a half per cent on the capital of mortgages of bona fide farmers, and the government expect from mortgagees that while this support lasts they will be satisfied to limit the interest they receive on their money to five per cent per annum in full compensation of interest charges. The farmers are expected to pay three and a half per cent, and by making the government subsidy contingent upon the farmers paying their share, the government in effect will be safeguarding five per cent on the money invested by the holders of farm mortgages. To deal with those creditors who are not willing to limit their interest rate to five per cent the government proposes to levy a tax which will be equal to the amount by which the interest actually collected exceeds the rate of 5 per cent per annum. The proceeds of this tax will be distributed as a further subsidy to the farmers who have actually paid it, and I should like to recommend this to the Minister of Finance. If he does not like to incorporate in the law at present a provision limiting the rate of interest which may be collected on farm mortgages he might adopt this policy which has been put into force in South Africa, and place a tax on all interest collected in excess of five per cent. Then the excess over five per cent would go to the government, and the government could use it to take care of the people who had to pay this higher rate of interest.

I did not intend to take up so much of the time of the committee, Mr. Chairman, but before I sit down let me say that I hope the minister will see his way clear to fix the rate of interest in some way so that it will not exceed four per cent. I think we could say it is in the national interest that this should be done. It was in the national interest that our money was kept at such a high level in the markets of the world. We were told that we owed so much money in the United States—though I do not think the farmers owed it—through our municipal, provincial and federal governments as well as through our corporations that we had to keep our exchange rate as close as possible to par in New York. Keeping our dollar up in New York meant keeping prices down here, and if our dollar was kept up in New York for the reasons I have stated it seems to me it is a correct statement to make that this was done in the national interest. If in the national interest farm prices suffered to even one-half or one-third the degree I have suggested this afternoon, I think now, in the national interest we might see that credit is made available to the farmers at a rate not exceeding four per cent. I hope this will have the favourable consideration of the government and the minister.

Mr. RHODES: I have refused to be drawn into a discussion of the tariff. Much more will I refuse to be drawn into a discussion of inflation, because with all deference to my hon. friend from Macleod I submit that his argument in that respect had no more to do with this bill than would a discussion of the Einstein theory. We are discussing, or should be discussing, a farm loan bill. We lend dollars and dollars are paid back, and it does not matter whether they are ten cent, fifty cent or gold dollars. What the hon. member says with respect to inflation may have its bearing on another question, but certainly it has no bearing upon this bill. I am sure he would be the last to accuse me of any discourtesy if I refuse to pursue his line of argument in that respect. I have only this general observation to make, that my hon. friend certainly reminds me of the old saw that distant pastures look green.

I marvel that my hon. friend should content himself with living in this benighted land when there are so many countries much more favourably situated than we are.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): This is the unemployment insurance bill.

Mr. RHODES: What is the Olympus giving utterance to now?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, not Olympus; I could find a name for it, but I will not now.

Mr. RHODES: Then perhaps my hon. friend will allow me to conclude my remarks and then make his.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): My hon. friend asked me a question. However, we will answer later.

Mr. RHODES: And any time I have a remark to make may I say that I will rise and address the chair. Now, my hon. friend from Macleod—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Morand): Order.

Mr. RHODES: I hope my hon. friend from Southeast Grey does not think she is entitled to a particular disregard of the rules of the house. Personally I have always endeavoured to treat her with all deference, not only because she is a member; in addition I have pleasure in treating her with the courtesy which is due her sex. But at the same time I do not think she should trade upon that and feel that she can disregard the rules.

Miss MACPHAIL: How did I disregard the rules, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend did disregard the rules by speaking from her seat, without even addressing the chair, while another hon. member had the floor.

Miss MACPHAIL: Is that an unusual occurrence in this house?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Morand): It is not according to the rules.

Miss MACPHAIL: Then hon. members had better observe that rule.

Mr. RHODES: I am just making that suggestion, Mr. Chairman. Now, coming back to the reference of my hon. friend from Macleod, I cannot add anything to what I have said already with respect to the question of interest. I am in the judgment of the committee upon that question to a very large extent, but I do feel that we are going as far as we can when we provide money to the farmer at cost, which is practically what we are doing. My hon. friend from Macleod has spoken about other countries. I have pointed out that at the present time in the United States, through the farm loan banks, they are charging the farmers five per cent under contracts which call for the payment of five and a half per cent after 1938, and I have stated already that I think we can have at least five per cent money in Canada.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, I am tempted to believe that for the Minister of Finance this must indeed be a blue Monday. Rarely have I seen him so, shall I say, prickly or crusty. It is quite opposed to his usual rather genial good humour. I wonder if it is not true that it was the excellence of the argument of the hon. member for Macleod that really got under his hide a bit. There is no doubt that the policies of this administration, in their mad, insane desire to maintain what they called sound money in the face of the inevitable financial trend of all nations at that time, resulted in ghastly losses to agriculture and many of the other primary industries of this country, not excepting lumbering and fishing. If the government had been well advised, as they would have been had they followed our advice, in regard to the question of attempting to maintain some balance between the value of the Canadian dollar and the value of the British pound when Great Britain went off the gold standard, our cattle trade would have been saved $10 per head.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith, Cumberland): Would the hon. member please stick to the bill?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): We are sticking to the bill, and sticking strictly to the bill. What I have said has a very direct and definite relationship with the whole argument of the Minister of Finance on this bill. He has suggested that the hon. member for Macleod is to be rebuked because he used illustrations from other countries, notably New Zealand and Australia, to point the moral of his tale. I heard the Prime Minister himself for hours and for days pointing the moral of his tale by holding out the unemployment insurance measure of Great Britain. That is a distant pasture, almost as distant as Australia or New Zealand.

If it comes to a question of distant pastures this government should not rebuke anybody. It was the government's anxiety to guard the well being of New York and other foreign creditors which resulted in the deliberate action of maintaining currency at a fictitious value in relation to international exchange and which resulted in a ghastly loss to us, as I stated formerly. The hon. member for Macleod has put up an argument which the minister has not and cannot answer. I do hope however that in spite of that the government will consider the advisability of helping to carry the costs of the administration of this bill. I hope before the bill is given third reading the government will have become sufficiently well advised to introduce a clause such as has been introduced in connection with the unemployment insurance measure. Subsection (3) of section 8 of the unemployment insurance measure contains the following provision:

> The costs of administration of this act, including remuneration of commissioners, officers, clerks and employees, shall be paid out of moneys provided by parliament.

I submit the inclusion of a section exactly the same as the one I have read would enable the farm loan board to advance moneys to agriculture at a rate of interest which would be in some degree commensurate with the farmers' ability to pay.

Mr. RHODES: May I say to the hon. member for Bow River that if when he used the elegant phrase whereby he suggested something had got under my skin he had in mind anything I may have said to the hon. member for MacLeod, he is entirely mistaken. I hold the hon. member for Macleod in the highest esteem and would be one of the last persons in this chamber who would desire to give that hon. member the slightest offence. I do not think the hon. member for Macleod was offended in any way. What I did attempt to say was—and I may have said it clumsily or may have been unfortunate in my manner of speaking—that his argument had no bearing upon the bill. I still say that in my judgment it had no bearing. I do not decline to discuss the question of inflation and various matters cognate thereto which he did discuss. Were I competent I would proceed to do so upon another occasion. But I say that matter has no bearing upon the bill, nor by any stretch of the imagination can a discussion of that point be said to be a discussion of this measure. What I did take exception to was the hon. member for Bow River, who very frequently takes a superior attitude and rather sympathizes with or feels sorry for every other hon. member in the chamber—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No.

Mr. RHODES: —interjecting remarks from his seat. I have a sense of the fitness and proportion of things, and I like to see the business of parliament conducted in a proper manner. That cannot be done if we allow one hon. member to interject remarks from his seat when another hon. member has the floor.

Miss MACPHAIL: We will remember that.

Mr. RHODES: I wish the hon. member for Southeast Grey would remember that, because she has spoken out twice since she made her former observations. I will leave it to this committee—

Miss MACPHAIL: Do the rules of the house apply only to hon. members on this side, or do they apply on all sides?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Smith Cumberland): They apply on all sides of the house.

Mr. RHODES: I leave it to the judgment of the committee to decide as to whether or not I am one who is in the habit of interrupting either from my seat or after rising. I have always endeavoured to listen to what every hon. member has had to say, and I have endeavoured to conduct myself with a degree of courtesy. May I say to the hon. member for Bow River that my skin both inside and out is, so far as I know, perfectly normal, and that I have not the slightest feeling of rufflement. His suggestion is not going to deter me from asserting the position I have the right to assert either in matters of discussion or in the application of the rules of the house.

Having said so much I hope the hon. member will accept my observations, that he will feel that the hon. member for Macleod is quite capable of looking after his own interests and does not have to call upon the hon. member for Bow River to come to his rescue, especially on an occasion when such aid is entirely uncalled for and when he is in friendly hands.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Mr. Chairman, a little while ago, before the flare up the minister intimated that the field for borrowing was practically nil, and I believe he indicated that the reason for the limitation of the field in which the farmer might borrow was found in the moratoria of the different provinces.

Mr. RHODES: I hope the hon. member will permit me to state that I did not assign that as the sole reason. I said that was a very important, if not the most important reason.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I am pleased the minister has made the correction. One of the contributing factors of limitation of the farmers' borrowing powers has been the debt adjustment acts of the different provinces.

The debt adjustment act of the province of Manitoba, with which I am most familiar, does not go as far as the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. All the debt adjustment act of that province means is a postponement of the conditions; they have no power to write down. It is simply a postponement, and every person who comes under the act in the province of Manitoba must put his cards on the table and give a true statement of his affairs. If he does not do so the debt adjustment board will not protect him. We know however that the farmers in western Canada who are not and never have been operating under a debt adjustment act at certain periods of the year want to borrow small sums of money to buy twine or other articles connected with production, and they find it impossible to borrow the small sums necessary. They cannot borrow it from the banks—and may I say I do not blame the banks. The condition is that a farmer with one hundred or two hundred acres of grain ready for the binder cannot get $30 or $40 to buy twine. But when the resolution was before the house I took the stand that the amendment to the Farm Loan Act should be complementary to the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. I stated the impression had been created in western Canada that the Farm Loan Act of 1934 was complementary to the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, and many farmers were under the impression that if they went before a receiver and had their debts adjusted they could go to the farm loan board and borrow the amount due after the readjustment had been made. They were further of the opinion that if they had to go before a board of review, such board having power to make a compromise despite the views of the creditors or debtors, they could use the farm loan board for purposes of consolidating their debts. The minister rather doubted that that opinion could exist. The minister distinctly said that the Farm Loan Act was going to be run along business lines and he could see no reason why the farmers in any part of the country should get the opinion that these amendments to the Farm Loan Act would be complementary to the debt adjustment act. But I have the Prime Minister with me. It is not very often, but I have him with me this time, for here is what he said in 1934 when he proposed the resolution that it is expedient to amend the Canadian Farm Loan Act:

> I endeavoured to indicate to the house this afternoon in a broad and general way that this bill is complementary to the bill dealing with the adjustment of farm indebtedness.

Then further on he makes this statement:

> I also indicated that the measure founded upon the resolution contemplates that additional advances to those already provided for in the provisions of the Canadian Farm Loan Act may be made, to enable a scheme of composition or arrangement to be carried into effect.

I know the Minister of Finance is a fair-minded man, except when some hon. member gets under his skin, and I do not think he could get any other impression from the words of the Prime Minister than what the farmers in western Canada got, namely, that immediately the machinery created by this parliament to make a debt compromise was available, together with this other machinery, providing $70,000,000 or $90,000,000, the farmer could go and use this other piece of machinery and consolidate his debts. I am still of opinion—I have not changed my mind at all—that if the Farm Loan Act and the debt adjustment act are going to work the benefits for the farmer that the minister and the government expect, they must work in conjunction. If they do not I doubt very much the success of these two pieces of legislation.

May I say this to the minister before taking my seat? The echoes of the Farm Loan Act and the debt adjustment act were heard throughout the country last year. In fact, politicians were going around saying that the farmers could borrow from the farm loan board at no more than five per cent interest. Now in 1935, with an election on the horizon, the minister can readily imagine what the supporters of the present government will be spreading around in the country to the farmers. They will point out that the legislation that was brought down last year was amended this year, increasing the amount available, and the minister who is a fair-minded man generally, can imagine what will be broadcast to the farmer, giving the impression much more strongly even than last year that both acts are designed to work together.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is necessary for the hon. member for Provencher to quote the Prime Minister in support of his assertion that the amendment to the Farm Loan Act was intended to be complementary to the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I thought he was a good authority.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend apparently had the idea in his mind that he was controverting some position that I had taken. I have never for one moment suggested that the Farm Loan Act was not to be regarded as complementary to the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. Quite the contrary. What I did say was this. I am not sure whether the suggestion came from the hon. member for Macleod or some other hon. member, but it was suggested that we should make an amendment whereby it would be obligatory on the farm loan board ipso facto to loan money provided that the board of review under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act said they were to do so. I pointed out how illogical that would be, that you could not have one body issuing orders upon another responsible body. I said that each individual case would have to be dealt with by the farm loan board on its merits, and the farmer who has an adjustment made under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act can still get his loan from the farm loan board, but not as a matter of right. The discretion must rest with the farm loan board, as to the man, the character of his farm, the probabilities of his succeeding and other necessary factors. But if he is a good farmer, a worthy farmer, with reasonable security, he will have no difficulty in securing money under those circumstances from the farm loan board. But I wanted to dispel the idea that simply because a farmer comes and knocks at the door he must of necessity gain admittance. That would do away with all discretion on the part of the board, and we could not hold them responsible for the handling of public funds.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: I am very glad to have this statement from the minister because now I shall be in a position in the next campaign, if any of his supporters try to create the impression that they did last year, to quote the minister's own words in denial.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I usually find, even though I do not agree with all his premises, that I do agree with the logic of the Minister of Finance, but I am compelled to say that I could not quite follow the logic of his position when he replied to the hon. member for Macleod that any discussion of the monetary policies of this and other countries in their relation to farm prices had not a very close relation to the bill now under discussion.

After all, what was the suggestion of the hon. member for Macleod? The suggestion was that the government of the day might well insert a provision in this act that the administrative costs of the farm loan board and of the Farm Loan Act should be borne from public funds. In pointing out that this was a responsibility which the government might well assume, the hon. member for Macleod also pointed out that to a degree at least other policies of the government were responsible for the necessity of the provisions of this bill. He pointed out, as I understood him, that one of those policies which had made this bill essential, which had decreased the value of farm credit and had made it difficult for the farmer to borrow money through the ordinary channels, and made it difficult for the farmer to pay anything but the lowest interest rate, was the policy of deflation which had been followed by this country, followed in the opinion of the government in the direct interests of the nation itself. Certainly with my limited powers of logic, Mr. Chairman, I thought the argument was one which had an absolute relation to the matter in hand and one which might well have been answered, although I will admit at once that I would not expect the minister to go into any detailed discussion at this time of the policies of inflation or deflation.

But there is another point which has to be considered, and after all it is the foundation fact. What is the purpose of the legislation? As I see it, it is twofold: First, to provide for farmers a credit which they otherwise might not receive, to make available to them a source of credit which is made necessary by reason of the fact that private commercial credit is no longer available to them. Secondly, to establish some form of interest control, indirectly, by loaning that money at as low a rate as possible. Now the question arises at once, what is a reasonable rate? That, as has been stated again and again, and as I think the minister will accept, must depend on two factors; one is the cost of the money, and the other is the ability to pay. Many arguments have been advanced to show that the farmer's ability to pay has been greatly reduced. As a matter of fact I can go a little further. The reduction in price levels and farm values is accompanied by much more than a corresponding reduction in ability to meet interest charges, because after all while interest charges are paid out of prices they are paid only out of that proportion of the price received for production which is over and above the cost of operation and of living. The lower the price the less the proportion of production which is left available for meeting the payment of debts or taxation, and the greater the proportion of that production that must be absorbed in ordinary operation and living cost, so that the proportion available for debt is smaller, and the value of each item of that proportion is smaller. The debt paying ability of the farmer is therefore reduced by far more than the percentage of price reduction. I believe I am following closely logical reasoning in this.

Now we come to the point of the government's responsibility in the matter. I will not say, because I think it is unfair to say, that the government has a definite responsibility to perform any service for any part of the community at the cost of the state itself. But the government has set in many instances the precedent of having accepted that responsibility, and the precedent which has been cited again and again, the precedent most recently discussed in this house, that of unemployment insurance, is very much in point. That is a policy which in the national interest must be put into effect, but it is a policy which will directly benefit only a limited percentage of the population of the country. And yet it is a policy towards the support of which every part of the country must contribute, so far as state expenditure is concerned. I have no quarrel with that, because I believe that in a large way if anything is really good for any part of the community it must be good for the community as a whole.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, no.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: And I think the reverse is also true. But if in the long run it is really good, if it is sound, and raises one part of the community to a proper level, it will have a corresponding beneficial effect on all other parts of the country. Now if that is so, when we turn to agriculture I can see no logical reason why the same process should not be followed. It is just as much in the national interest that agriculture should be on a reasonable basis, that it should be able to meet its obligations and continue to operate, as it is that there should be unemployment insurance for those who in the future may be unfortunate enough to lose their job. To my mind it is even more important, because the maintenance of agriculture on a proper basis means the maintenance of increased wealth in the nation as a whole. The maintenance of the unemployed on a basis of reasonable insurance is much more individual in effect, except in so far as it will reduce the cost of unemployment relief and maintain the morale, the decent citizenship and the moral standards of those affected.

It is unnecessary for me to stress the fact that the lowest possible rate of interest is all, and sometimes indeed more than all that the farmers can pay. Of such paramount importance is this question of interest that it is worth the government's while to look upon it as a definite national policy to be supported to a degree, at least so far as administrative cost is concerned, by national expenditure, towards which the farmers themselves will contribute their mortgage, which is more than can be said for the unemployment insurance measure; because the larger part of the state's contribution under that measure will be paid by those who receive no benefit from the fund.

It is all very well for the minister to say that, taking a mortgage of $1,000, one per cent means only $10, which is not much. Well, in some instances $10 means a good deal, but apart from that it is not just $10. The average mortgage debt, at least in the west where farms are larger, is much more than $1,000; and if you multiply that $10 by two, three, four or five, as it is multiplied right through, then that $30, $40 or $50 may mean the difference between the ability of the farmer to meet his obligation and his inability. And if he can meet it it may spell the difference between a reasonable standard of comfort and a standard far below par. The next important point is this—and I am glad to see that the minister has it in contemplation, although of course no act is any stronger than its subsequent administration, and no minister can say definitely how an act will be administered; he can only indicate the lines along which it should be administered and, to the best of his ability, safeguard its administration through legislation. You can have a poor act and it may run fairly well if it is in the hands of first class men with first class policies; and on the other hand the best act may be unsatisfactory if it is administered by the wrong men with wrong ideas. To my mind it is imperative to meet one of the greatest abuses, one of the greatest weaknesses of the old act; and after all we are discussing the weaknesses of the old act. And this was one of the greatest of its weaknesses: that the factor the minister has laid down again and again as one of the important features in the lending of money, the moral factor, the question of the type of man himself, had never to my knowledge been taken into consideration under the old administration At least I can say this, that time and again, in scores of instances, hopeful borrowers have come to ask my advice as to the best way of presenting their case, and I have had a good many cases laid before me of intending borrowers who were refused a loan. And so far as I could discover, judging from the correspondence, the letters sent by the provincial boards—because, as the minister understands, there is no direct application to the federal board, and I am not discussing the board under the old act, for it was the provincial board that took that responsibility —never in a single instance have I read or heard of the slightest reference having been made to the personal character, the personal ability and the moral standard of the man himself. It was always a question of tangible security. I am glad therefore that the minister stressed the character of the borrower. That is the greatest criterion. The second is this, and it is a weakness which I hope the government will rectify. I refer to the habit that has persisted through the years of blanketing various areas within which no loan would be made on any terms. I represent one of the better areas in the west, an area which generally speaking has a reasonable rainfall and in which the type of farming carried on is as a rule looked upon as the best foundation for loans—the moderate sized farm in which there is mixed farming, plenty of stock, cattle, hogs, and all the various forms of agriculture, with a good record of production. And yet in that area, in district after district, no loans could be made, no matter what the value of the farm or the character of the man might be. The answer has always been: Generally speaking, your area is not one of which we approve. The man may be all right, but it is not worth while; it will cost too much to take his application and examine it on its own merits.

I believe the whole scheme should prove a success if the administration is carried on as is contemplated in the act and as is indicated by the minister's statement, that is that there shall be no blanketing of cases, but that each case shall be taken on its individual merits, as it should be; that the moral character, the spirit, the personality of the man himself will be one of the controlling factors and above all that a generous spirit shall be shown in the administration of the act. If you have that, coupled with what I believe is absolutely sound, the lowest possible rate of interest made available—and I think that is a sound stand to take—by the assumption on the part of the state of the administrative costs of this act just as the administrative costs of other acts have been taken over by the state, so that the farmers who do borrow will have the same rate as that at which the state can borrow, the effect of that low rate of interest will be so reflected in commercial rates as to carry the benefit far beyond the bounds of the act itself. After all—and this to my mind should never be lost sight of—I have heard lenders, mortgage companies and others state again and again that the high rates of interest on farm mortgages in western Canada were rendered necessary because of the insecurity of the loan; that is, they had to have a higher rate in order to cover possible losses. Yet it has been driven home again and again that the greatest single factor in making a loan insecure is a rate of interest beyond that which the money will earn in that particular business; that is what makes a loan insecure. I am taking it for granted that the loan in the first place is made to the proper type of person engaged in the proper type of industry and with reasonable security. I am not afraid the farm loan board or any other will go outside those factors in making loans, but taking for granted those factors, the biggest one that tends to insecurity of loan, of repayment, is charging a rate of interest beyond that which the man can earn in the business during the term of years the money is loaned. The government would be well advised, realizing this fact, to take over, for the time being at least and until prices reach a reasonable level, the cost of administration.

Mr. RHODES: I may be permitted a word in reply to the hon. member for Red Deer, who is always most fair and, if I might say so, extremely logical in his presentations. I do not think there is any very great difference except that he inadvertently, I am quite sure, took the wrong interpretation of something I said in reply to the hon. member for Macleod. I should be the last to take any exception to his using an illustration from another country which had a bearing on this bill, but I did not hear him suggest—and I was not dealing with a suggestion which I had not heard from him—that in other countries they had borne the administration costs. In proof of that I may say I stated earlier in the discussion, not only to-day but on previous occasions, that I felt that was a fair subject for discussion, indicating that I had an open mind on the question. I merely took exception to what the hon. member for Macleod said as to what had been done in Australia in respect of the question of inflation, which I most respectfully suggest has no reference to this bill or to any provision of the farm loan act. My hon. friend also quite unintentionally put into my mouth words which would be capable of an interpretation furthest from my thoughts. In fact he put into my mouth words which I am quite sure I did not utter when in reply to the hon. member for Southeast Grey I spoke of the difference between four and five per cent on one thousand dollars. I do not think I used the expression "only just ten dollars," and I doubt whether Hansard would bear out any statement that I did. What I did say was that I doubted whether a difference of ten dollars would spell the difference between success and failure, and I used it in that relation. I should be the last person not to realize that ten dollars is of value to anyone who is thrifty and frugal, and much more so to one who is hard put to meet his obligations. I am quite sure my hon. friend will be the first to accept my statement that if I did not say so, that was what I intended to say.

I will say just this one word more; I am told by the farm loan board here that the instructions were that the personal character of the borrowers was to be taken into consideration. One of the difficulties in connection with our old farm loan act was that we had to go through the medium of the different provincial boards with different personalities and difficulties which local conditions could create. I can assure my hon. friend and the committee that while I have to do with the administration of this act, the personal equation will be regarded more highly than will the land itself. If I were lending money I would put the personal equation first and foremost, over and above the value of the land itself. I do not think I can make that any stronger than I have. I hope those who may succeed me in the administration of the act will take the same view, because to my mind it is one of the cardinal principles of the successful operation of the farm loan or any other type of loan act.

Mr. VALLANCE: There is another matter I would like to draw to the attention of the minister. I notice in the Saskatoon Star of February 21, an article headed "Farmer can waive his exemptions." Might I be permitted to read to the minister just a little of the article? It reads:

In other words, the legislation put through its final stages—

This is through the Regina house.

In other words, the legislation put through its final stages Wednesday night, gives to a farmer the right to negotiate a loan through the federal farm loan board, offering as security for the loan certain chattels which under the terms of the exemptions act up to the present have been exempt from seizure.

In defining the clause in the legislation, Hon. T. C. Davis, attorney general, said the clause had been inserted at the request of federal farm loan board authorities, as the condition upon which the federal act would be made operative in Saskatchewan. He pointed out that while the legislation gave the right to the farmer to waive his right to exemptions for seizure as a means of obtaining a loan from the federal farm loan board, there was nothing to compel him to do so.

What were his exemptions?

The property for which exemptions from seizure are now provided, and for which farmers would be asked to waive exemption rights as a means of getting a loan would include:

Four oxen, horses, or mules, or any four of them, six cows, six sheep, four pigs and fifty domestic fowls besides the other animals kept for food purposes, together with food for such animals for the period from November 1, to April 31, or such portions of the months which follow the date of seizure.

The question I would like to ask the minister is this: Have the exemption laws in any or all of the provinces where they have such laws been waived in order to make the act operative in such provinces? Because if they have been, it seems to me that it is rather, shall I say, a drastic step to take. In Saskatchewan the movement from the dried out areas to the northern portion of the province would not have been possible had it not been for the exemption laws in operation in that province; that is to say, farmers who were down and out claimed under the exemption law enough chattels to permit them to move into some other portion of the province or of the country and start anew. If these exemptions have to be waived, I can foresee the time when simply because of the waiving of those rights in order to make it possible for the federal farm loan board to operate in the particular province, there will be a greater percentage of destitution among the farmers than there is now. I hope the minister will be able to explain the situation.

Mr. RHODES: That statement was drawn to my attention, but so far as I can ascertain it is purely gratuitous. No request was made by this government or any member of it, so far as I am aware, to the government of Saskatchewan or any other government that there should be a waiver of any statutory exemption. Furthermore the chairman of the farm loan board advises me that he made no such request. Where it came from I am at a loss to understand.

Mr. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): Propaganda.

Mr. RHODES: That is the only explanation that I can give. If the legislation were put through for the purpose of improving the position of the farmer I could understand it, but so far as I can ascertain there was no request from Ottawa.

Mr. VALLANCE: Section 12 reads:

In the event of legislation being passed by the legislature of any province after loans have been made available in that province which, in the opinion of the board, would prejudicially affect the security of existing or future loans, the board, by notice to be published in the Canada Gazette, may cease to make further loans in that province.

So that if the legislature of any province passes legislation that might not meet with the approval of a government then in power at Ottawa, the Ottawa government has the right to use the big stick and say: This act shall not be operative in that province.

Mr. RHODES: If in the picturesque language of my hon. friend from South Battleford that section means wielding the big stick, I can only say it was placed in the hands of the government by the government which he supported.

Mr. VALLANCE: I still object to it.

Mr. RHODES: But the hon. member asks how it arose, and I am telling him. Section 12 of the original Canadian Farm Loan Act, passed in 1927, reads:

> In the event of legislation being passed by the legislature of any province operating under this act after loans have been made available in that province which, in the opinion of the board, would prejudicially affect the security of existing or future loans, the board, by notice to be published in the Canada Gazette, may cease to make further loans in that province.

That I think is a sound provision; I do not find fault with it. I think the farm loan board would be remiss in its duty, dealing as it does with a large volume of public funds, if it were not in a position to avoid having confiscation effected by provincial statute. That is practically what it means.

Mr. VALLANCE: Was there not this difference, that in 1927 the federal legislation was enacted in view of the fact that you had provincial farm loan boards? Now you are demanding that in order to make this act operative the provinces must do away with the provincial farm loan boards. I think the situation to-day is entirely different from what it was then.

Mr. RHODES: No, the old act applied only to the provinces that passed enabling legislation, therefore it did not apply in Saskatchewan, Prince Edward Island and Ontario, but did in the other six provinces. This legislation had no reference to whether a province came in or not. It simply protected the board from legislation which would be inimical to the proper operation of the act.

Mr. VALLANCE: Will the minister give me the assurance that as far as the exemption law of Saskatchewan is concerned it is not necessary that it be wiped out in order to make this operative?

Mr. RHODES: The exemption law of Saskatchewan had never been brought particularly to my attention. The first inkling I had of it, I believe, was when the statement in question was brought to my attention. I asked the chairman of the farm loan board if he had asked for it, and he said no. I do not know where the request came from.

Mr. VALLANCE: Will the minister still give us the same consideration?

Mr. RHODES: I certainly would have to inquire as to the Saskatchewan law itself; I am not familiar with it. I could not give my hon. friend any answer now.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What was the cost of administration, say in the last year, which makes the difference between the rate at which the government lends money to the board and the rate the farmer pays?

Mr. RHODES: The percentage or the actual cost?

Mr. ELLIOTT: What we have been referring to as the cost of administration.

Mr. RHODES: The actual cost of administration I am advised is one per cent. The other one-half of one per cent was intended to be used for a reserve. That is why in Doctor MacLean's evidence before the committee of the house he has always stated that he regarded one and one-half per cent as the minimum.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Can the minister state it in dollars per year?

Mr. RHODES: The actual amount last year was $124,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think that must be substantially correct. I see here on page 10 an amount of $124,686; I take it that covers the whole cost of administration. The point I would like to make is that, for some time past we have been considering a measure which if I understood the Prime Minister correctly is to cost for administration about $7,000,000. I refer to the unemployment insurance bill.

Mr. HANBURY: I understood the total cost of that is estimated to be $14,000,000 to $15,000,000 including administration. The Prime Minister said $7,000,000 for administration.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I know the minister is sympathetic to the people affected by this act. If the government is bearing anything like $7,000,000 as the cost of administration of the unemployment insurance measure, then I am greatly surprised to find this hesitation about bearing an expense of $124,686 to administer an act that means something, I hope and believe, to the farming community. There is no body of employed people in Canada to-day that are suffering as are the people engaged in farming. They will receive nothing under the unemployment insurance measure, and I submit that at least the cost of administration of this act should be borne by the government. I think more than that should be borne, but I do think the man who comes to borrow money on land should be in a position to know what rate per cent he has to pay.

Mr. RHODES: He does.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Well, I think he should know that it would not be more than four per cent. I discussed that phase the other day, and I am not going to add anything to what I said then.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, in the course of the afternoon the hon. member for South Battleford read a statement appearing in the press which indicated that certain changes had been made in the laws of Saskatchewan with respect to exemptions under chattel mortgages, which would indicate that the request had come from Ottawa. In replying to the hon. member I made the statement that I knew nothing of the transaction and that I was informed by the commissioner of the farm loan board that such a request had not been made. I had a deputation meet me at six o'clock, but after I had finished with them I met the commissioner of the farm loan board who advised me that he had not heard the question put by the hon. member for South Battleford and that inadvertently he had given me wrong information. It now transpires, according to the correspondence which he has placed in my hand, that on the first of December of last year the commissioner did wire the attorney general of Saskatchewan as follows:

Re your letter of twenty-seventh—

I understand that refers to the passing of legislation by the province of Saskatchewan which had for its object the bringing into being of a provincial board under the farm loan act.

—in view of fact that Saskatchewan is only province which provides for exemptions from seizure under chattel mortgage and in view of fact that conditions of loan require additional security on chattels, believe board will require legislation in your province which will make security taken on chattels in province of equal value to similar security taken in other provinces. Suggest for your consideration as a means of achieving this result that your legislation be drafted so as to enable farmer to waive his exemptions from seizure in giving chattel mortgage to the board.

That was signed by J. D. MacLean, and was followed on December 5 by a letter from the commissioner in which he cites the telegram I have just read. I shall read two or three paragraphs from that letter, as follows:

While the aggregate of loans that may be granted to any farmer under the provisions of the Canadian Farm Loan Act and the Canadian Farm Loan Act Amendment Act, 1934, is fixed at a maximum of two-thirds of the appraised value of the land and buildings taken as security for loan the board is also required under the terms of the legislation to take additional security on the borrower's live stock and other personal property for the advance made under section 9 of the amendment act. It was evidently the intention of parliament in view of the aggregate advances sanctioned being in excess of the normal mortgage loan advance that the security on land should be strengthened by the additional security afforded by a charge on live stock and other available personal property.

In view of the rather broad exemptions from seizure provided under the terms of your provincial laws it is apparent that the additional security afforded by a mortgage on live stock and equipment in your province would be of little additional value as security to the board. Since under the existing legislation in other provinces no exemptions from seizure under chattel mortgage can be claimed by the mortgagor it is at once evidence that the relative value of such security in Saskatchewan would be considerably less than similar security taken in other provinces.

For the above reasons I am of opinion that the suggested changes in legislation are advisable in order that the security taken on personal property would be of the same relative value to the board in your province as in other provinces.

So far as my knowledge at that time was concerned the facts were precisely as I stated them this afternoon. I have seen this correspondence for the first time, and have learned of it for the first time, within the last few minutes, so the statement made this afternoon was made in absolutely good faith. I desire, however, to make this correction in order that the facts may be properly before the committee.

Mr. ELLIOTT: When the committee took recess at six o'clock, Mr. Chairman, I was just referring to what it would mean to the farmers who have loans from the farm loan board to have the cost of administration borne by the dominion government. As I understand it there is approximately $9,900,000 out in loans as of March 31 last. In round figures we will say the loans amount to $10,000,000, and one per cent of that sum would be $100,000. Surely that is a mere bagatelle for the government to pay in view of the fact that under the legislation we were considering during most of last week the farmers will bear a very substantial share of the cost of administration which, according to the Prime Minister at page 941 of Hansard, will amount to approximately $7,000,000 annually. I utterly fail to see why it is not possible for the government to go even much further than the cost of administration in this case. I submit the farmer should not have to pay over four per cent. I am not objecting to the other proposition at all, that the country should bear the administration cost of the unemployment insurance measure, which is expected to amount to about $7,000,000, but I do say that surely it is a very moderate and most reasonable request from those representing the people in the rural districts to ask the government to bear the cost of this measure as well. I may say to my hon. friend that the farmers are suffering much more than the people who have employment, who are the people that will be affected by the unemployment insurance measure. Of course the man on the farm always has employment; the difference between him and some of the other employees is that frequently he gets very little if anything for his work. That is the condition at the present time. I hardly think my hon. friend meant to suggest that in making our request we were asking charity for the farmer.

Mr. RHODES: If I might make a correction, with my hon. friend's permission, I did not make any such statement. I merely cited the statement made by an hon. member of the house who is himself a farmer.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That the farmers did not want charity?

Mr. RHODES: I was not uttering it as my own statement.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Really I cannot see that it makes very much difference whether or not my hon. friend was quoting someone else as to the farmer not wanting charity; evidently my hon. friend gave the quotation with approval.

Mr. RHODES: No.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I say this is not charity. It is bare justice. Before we reach the amendments to which my hon. friend has referred I should like him to take this question into consideration. If money can be borrowed at three and a half per cent on long term loans, as my hon. friend suggests, and the cost of administering the $10,000,000 already on loan is only $124,000, that means practically one and a quarter per cent. One and a half per cent would amount to $150,000. Surely that is a very small amount to ask the government to bear in connection with this great industry. I wonder if what has been said regarding the tremendous difficulties under which the agriculturist is labouring is fully appreciated by hon. members representing constituencies in which the people are engaged in other industries. The figures I placed upon Hansard a few days ago serve to show that in 1933 the price of farm products was just a little more than fifty per cent of the price in 1930. That fact, coupled with the extra overhead, makes the difficulties of the farmer just that much greater. I believe it is time the government came to the rescue in some substantial way. I appreciate what the minister has said about what he is doing to lighten the burdens of the farmers, and I thank him for placing before the committee a memorandum of the amendments he proposes to move, one of which will change the definition of the word "farmer," while another would fix all accrued interest at the same rate. I realize those changes would be beneficial. I must say however that as the province of Ontario has not had any loans under the act a reduction in accrued interest will be of no advantage. The other changes mentioned by the minister really amount to very little if anything so far as helping the farmers is concerned. If there is to a real attempt to stem the tide of migration from the farm to the city, an action which is sorely needed, we must have more than the assistance offered by the amendments the minister has mentioned.

I again urge that the farmer who is borrowing money cannot afford to pay more than four per cent interest. It is no greater charity to reduce the rate the farmer has to pay from five per cent to four per cent than it was to reduce the interest rate the banks had to pay on savings accounts from three to two per cent. I am not objecting to the change, but simply make that observation in passing. I believe the minister received sympathetically the suggestion for a change in the act whereby the farmer may at any time pay off any amount he may choose. Under the act as it now stands the board may make long term loans to farmers. If there were a clause making the provision I have suggested I believe the arrangement for long term loans could be overcome. At times money may come in from unexpected sources which may be worth to the farmer as much as he is paying to the farm loan board. I do believe some provision along that line should appear in all the mortgages, and would suggest an amendment along those lines.

I do not believe the minister has proposed any change in the scale of fees. I know that the truck or market gardener on the outskirts of a city working probably twenty-five acres of land is suffering a hardship if he has to pay the same fees on a small loan that the farmer on a much greater acreage has to pay for a larger loan. I do not wish to repeat any of the arguments I stressed a few days ago, but I believe the great question is that of deciding how much interest the farmer is going to have to pay. I hope that something may have enabled the minister to take a somewhat different view before he puts into effect the amendments he has suggested.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, I shall deal first with the last point, lest I forget it. The act already provides that the farmer may pay at any time he wishes, and the regulations of the board amplify the point. It is a practice the board has always followed.

When referring to the amendments I believe I did not mention the provision for shorter term mortgages. If hon. members will recall they will realize that the whole set-up of the original act provided for long term loans. In the amendment we are providing a discretionary power enabling the board to take shorter term loans. When I use the expression "shorter term" I mean a five year or six year mortgage, rather than a twenty-two year or thirty-five year mortgage for which provision is made in the present act.

The hon. member has laid stress upon the point that the state should bear the cost of administration. Earlier in the proceedings I admitted that the point was debatable, and I believe my stand will indicate my view, namely that it is a fair subject for discussion. I do not believe I need enlarge upon the point, but I must say the hon. member should not refer to $124,000 as a mere bagatelle; neither should he have that sum in mind when he considers mortgages running up to $90,000,000, because inevitably while the cost of administration may not rise in exact ratio to the volume of loans, nevertheless it will tend to rise, and for that reason the figure the committee must have in mind is something larger.

The hon. member seems to hold the view that the farmer is called upon to bear a proportion of the general taxation in connection with other measures. That may be true, but I would suggest that the hon. member must bear in mind, if he wishes to be logical, that there are tens of thousands of farmers who do not have mortgages on their property, and if we wish to pursue the argument what we are saying is that the farmer who pays his way and has no mortgage must be subjected to additional taxation in respect of the farmer who has a mortgage. For that reason I do not think it behooves us to pursue that line of argument too far. One hon. gentleman suggested that inasmuch as the state bears the cost of administration under the Old Age Pension Act the farmer should receive a similar benefit under the present measure. I would draw to the attention of the committee however the fact that the farmer participates in the Old Age Pensions Act precisely as does any other man. For that reason it seems to me the argument is not consistent.

Mr. DONNELLY: What about unemployment insurance?

Mr. RHODES: There may be a point there; I am not resisting the argument. It may be sound public policy, bearing always in mind the question how far we should go in the matter of interest rates. According to the press reports—I have nothing official with respect to it—the Ontario government has announced that the farmer in Ontario will pay only four per cent on mortgages. If so, my hon. friends need not worry about the farmers of Ontario because they are going to get four per cent money anyway.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Four per cent on gilt edged loans; that is up to fifty per cent of the value of the land, and I think twenty per cent of the extra value as a result of buildings. But those are the only loans to which it applies, as I understand it.

Mr. RHODES: If that is so the offer is not worth a great deal, because gilt edged loans can take care of themselves.

Mr. ELLIOTT: How could gilt edged loans take care of themselves during the last two or three years?

Mr. RHODES: The answer is obvious. If any loan will take care of itself, it is the gilt edged loan, even in these days of stress. Notwithstanding the statement which has been made so sweepingly here that the farmer is not in a position to pay his mortgage, let me say that even with the rates of interest as they were, at six and a half per cent under the Farm Loan Act, plus contributions towards the principal by way of amortization, the farmers have paid their interest with remarkable regularlity. We have provinces where even under existing conditions the farmers have made their payments promptly to the extent of at least seventy-five per cent. Even in western Canada, where conditions are even more acute owing to circumstances which I need not discuss here, the payments have been made to a remarkable extent. But in stating that—

Mr. McPHEE: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. RHODES: I may say to my hon. friend from Yorkton that I happen to have the facts before me.

Mr. McPHEE: That is not what I had in mind. I was going to say, do not make the same mistake your leader made two or three years ago.

Mr. RHODES: I am obliged to my hon. friend for warning me. I have made plenty of mistakes in the past and I have no doubt that I shall make more in the future, but if I am making a mistake in stating what I believe to be a fact, I can assure my hon. friend that I shall make many of them. I was simply proceeding to disclose the facts from the record. If my hon. friend had allowed me to finish my sentence I was going on to say that I did not regard that as indicating that the farmer is not having a difficult time. Far from it. I know that in many instances he is carrying a burden that is too heavy, and I am just as keen as my hon. friend from Yorkton and my hon. friend from West Middlesex to see the burden of taxation lightened. But we must keep a sense of proportion. It is true that we are passing through difficult times, but we must not predicate our legislation upon the assumption that present conditions will always exist. I think we might make the mistake of attempting to do too much for the farmer, with the inevitable result that I endeavoured to indicate in my remarks at an earlier stage.

Having said so much, let me say to my hon. friend again that I am prepared to hear further discussion as to whether it is the part of wisdom to determine as a matter of policy that the whole cost of administration shall be borne by the state. It must be borne in mind that we should not only be involved in the cost of administration, but inevitably there are bound to be losses, and if there is not some reserve within the administration of the act itself, those losses in addition must be borne by the state.

Mr. ELLIOTT: In answer to one statement of the minister, in referring to the $90,000,000, may I point out that this act has been in operation for eight years, and as I understand the statement, the total amount loaned in that period is under $10,000,000; in the last year, 1933-34, they have loaned very little over half a million dollars, and the year before that the amount loaned was $1,276,000. So that unless there is some change in the lending under this act it will be a long time before there would be needed any sum that would approximate $90,000,000.

Then as to what the minister said with regard to gilt edged loans taking care of themselves, the regrettable feature about farming conditions at the present time is that gilt edged loans will not take care of themselves. I do not care how good a loan may be, you could go round the best sections of Ontario in the last few years seeking a farm loan and practically everybody would simply say: We are not taking farm loans. It did not make any difference whether it was for fifty or twenty per cent of the value of the farm. Perhaps I should not say that it did not make any difference, but the answer invariably would be simply:

We are not lending on farms at the present time. I quite agree with the minister that there are great differences in the kinds of security you may get, both real estate and the personal security of the mortgagor. I agree that there are some to whom it is not safe to lend any money, and that there are others to whom you could with safety lend perhaps a little more than fifty per cent on account of their particular ability to pay interest and part of the principal. But when my hon. friend refers to gilt edged farm loans taking care of themselves, that is not the condition that obtains at the present time, except with the farm loan board of Ontario, so far as I know. I am glad to hear the minister say that he is at least considering having the government bear the cost of administration, and I hope the government will go at least that far.

Mr. SPENCER: During the life of the old bill we had somewhat of a dual responsibility, and without a great deal of satisfaction. We were governed here by a board of three trustees, and the finance minister was either chairman or ex officio a member of the board. Then in the provinces there was a farm board manager, plus three trustees, or whatever you like to call them. But under the new act we have a Canadian farm loan board made up of from three to five members, the finance minister not being one of them. We also have a chief executive officer for each province, or more than one, and he has three advisers. I would ask the minister to tell us whether the chief executive officer is to have anything to say at all in regard to the loans, or is he to be simply in the position of advising headquarters at Ottawa? Is Ottawa to have the final say or the whole say? The old act was very unsatisfactory because if the provincial board did not want to grant a loan they passed the buck to the Ottawa office, and then the Ottawa office passed it back to the province. The offices would seem to be about the same in both bills. I should like to know what the main difference is in the present bill and whether, in view of the fact that the Minister of Finance will not be connected with the board, he will be responsible as he is now to the House of Commons, to answer for the administration of the act.

Mr. RHODES: The Minister of Finance will be responsible and the government will be responsible to the same extent as they are responsible in connection with the administration of any board which functions under a minister. I did not emphasize the desirability of having the minister of finance removed from the board, but I thought I made it clear that it is quite impossible, in practice and experience, for the minister of finance to find time to attend the numerous sittings of the board and to deal with the various details that will come before it. He has about all he can do to deal with matters of administration without enlarging his activities and getting into actual details of administraton. It is not our desire in this bill to pass the buck, to use the common parlance which we all understand, whether or not we indulge in the game that gave rise to the expression. We want to get away from any such suggestion, and under the new set-up the provincial representative will be an officer of the board. The policy and final voice will rest with the central board at Ottawa, but in practice it will be found that the type of man chosen as provincial representative will be a person fully cognizant of the situation in each province and therefore in a position to advise the board with respect to the character of the intended borrower or the actual borrower as the case might be, and as to the nature of the security. It follows that if a man of the right type, one who carries the confidence of the board, is appointed, his judgment will go a very long way in determining whether an individual borrower shall or shall not secure a loan or, if he does secure it, as to the amount that will be secured. But I do not think it can be contended by any stretch of the imagination that under the circumstances the responsibility will not be that of the board; there can be no question of evading responsibility. The advisory board which it is intended to set up in the provinces is more an honorary board; it is not intended to be at all a salaried body, but a body of men who will carry, I think, the judgment of the people, outstanding men who have the opportunity and willingness to give something of their time to the public service. They are intended to be more largely a consultative body, to guide the provincial representative in dealing with matters affecting lending operations in the individual province.

Mr. McINTOSH: The chairman will be a paid official.

Mr. RHODES: Yes, and so will the provincial representative, who will be ex officio chairman.

Mr. McINTOSH: That is what I mean.

Mr. RHODES: That is what my hon. friend means.

Mr. SPENCER: But what difference will there be between the advisory board now in existence and those who will be called into consultation?

Mr. RHODES: If I did not make that point clear the fault is mine. The old provincial board was a body which was selected and appointed by the dominion government by order in council, but it was selected from the nominees of the province in question. In fact, one province, the name of which it is not necessary to mention, insisted that there should be no question of selection but that its nominees should be appointed, and they were; and as a result there has not been the same cooperation between the provincial boards and the federal board that ought to have obtained, giving rise to the suggestion of passing the buck, as my hon. friend from Battle River has said. That cannot arise under the new set-up because the provincial representative will be an officer of the federal board and there will be only one board. The advisory body may or may not be called in, but their services will be available should it be thought desirable to seek this advice for the purpose of assisting the provincial representative.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I want to correct the minister on the answer he gave with regard to subsection (h) of section 7, which provides that any borrower may at any time repay the whole or any part of the amount. My thought was that the money might come in shortly after an interest period; it might come from some source not anticipated, and the borrower should have the right, instead of waiting until the end of the year and leaving that money in the savings bank at two per cent while interest was accumulating against him at the rate of five per cent, to repay when he received the money. He cannot do it under this subsection; he can only repay at the interest date. My suggestion was that the money was worth one hundred cents in the dollar at any time to the government, and under these circumstances no loss could possibly occur by receiving it, without waiting for the expiration of the remaining period of the year. There is another question I want to ask the minister and it applies particularly to Ontario. The province, as the agent of this government, ceases to function under this act; that is to say, loans are not being handled by the province.

Mr. RHODES: The Canadian Farm Loan Act has never operated in Ontario.

Mr. ELLIOTT: But if it were brought into effect in Ontario the government would be operating through a board set up by the province. Is not that the practice in the various other provinces?

Mr. RHODES: Under the old act the provincial board was appointed by the dominion government from a list of nominees submitted by the province, but the whole spirit of the new measure is different. We appoint a provincial representative who will not have any contact with the provincial government.

Mr. ELLIOTT: But where it has been in operation, then the provincial board disappears. Now this government makes the loan. What about the responsibility for the collection of loans that have been put out by the province up to the coming into effect of this measure?

Mr. RHODES: There never has been any loan by the province qua Canadian Farm Loan Act. The new board will be responsible for dealing with the collections at present existing under mortgages under the old farm loan board.

Mr. YOUNG: The discussion this afternoon and evening has centred largely around the question whether loans under this bill shall be made at cost or less than cost. I am heartily in accord with one statement made by the hon. member for West Middlesex, to the effect that much of the legislation this session has been grossly discriminatory against the farmer. But when he says that in compensation for that discrimination bare justice can be done the farmer by lowering the interest on those loans to the extent of one per cent by the government paying the cost of administration, I must disagree with him.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Then I must be right.

Mr. YOUNG: The reduction of one per cent will not be accepted by the farmers, so far as I can speak for them, as compensation for the discrimination that has prevailed against them in the legislation passed in this house.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Partial compensation.

Mr. YOUNG: Not even partial compensation. It should be remembered that a very small percentage of the farmers of Canada will be able to borrow money under this act, and if that small percentage are given their loans at a lower cost, that in itself will constitute an unfair discrimination against the great bulk of the farmers who will not be able to secure loans under this act.

Before I take my seat there is one question I would like to ask the minister. This afternoon before six o'clock the hon. member for South Battleford spoke to him in regard to legislation that was requested of the Saskatchewan legislature with a view to farmers waiving their exemptions. The minister stated that that was not the case. To-night he corrected that by stating that the farm loan board at Ottawa had written a letter to the province to the other effect. Which of those statements is going to prevail?

Mr. RHODES: I thought I had made the matter abundantly clear. Just before the house rose at six o'clock the statement which I then made stood because it was made not only with my knowledge so far as I was personally concerned, but after I had inquired of the farm loan commissioner who told me that there had been no such communication. After six o'clock I had a deputation meet me and following the deputation I met the commissioner, who stated he had not understood the hon. member for South Battleford clearly and had given me wrong information. After eight o'clock I corrected it by reading a letter which the commissioner had written to the attorney general of Saskatchewan. Under the circumstances it is clear the last statement obtains, but the first statement was made in entire good faith and under the conditions I have outlined.

Sir EUGENE FISET: If I may judge by the correspondence I am receiving with regard to this act, the farmers of my district are exhibiting a certain amount of anxiety as to its ultimate application. If my information is correct, when the farm loan act was passed in 1927 the government of Quebec passed enabling legislation and under it a provincial board was formed. When the act was amended last year or two years ago, it was impossible for the province of Quebec to pass enabling legislation in view of the fact that in my province there is no such thing as mortgages on personal or chattel property. I understood the minister this afternoon to say that he was going to correct that situation and raise the amount of the loan from fifty to sixty per cent. I also understand that the five per cent capital subscribed by the province is to be returned. What the people who are writing me are anxious to know is this: if the provincial board is to be abolished, is the machinery provided under provincial agreement to disappear? Is the law as it exists at the present time in Quebec to become void? The minister is, I suppose, aware of the fact that over and above the one and one-half per cent that Quebec subscribes toward interest rate, the provincial government pays the entire cost of the legal work, that is the searching of titles as well as their establishment.

Mr. GOBEIL: No.

Sir EUGENE FISET: It is all very well to say no, but I looked up the act a little while ago, and I am right. Anyhow I am asking the minister if what I have stated is the fact, and if so will the coming into force of this act destroy the machinery that at present exists in Quebec for the purpose of helping the farmers not only to search their titles, but to establish their titles and their claims toward securing a loan of some kind? What other machinery will be substituted and to what extent will it replace the machinery that at present exists in Quebec?

Mr. RHODES: The provincial board will disappear. The question as to what portion, if any, of the personnel is to be continued is one rather for the farm loan board. They may or may not be; it depends entirely on the circumstances. So far as I am concerned there will be no decision on that question. The act will be available to the people of Quebec in its new form as fully as, we think more fully than it was in the old, because we are bringing in certain amendments which will widen its opportunity for use in that province. One of the cases in point was referred to by an hon. member. In communications I have had with the Premier of Quebec he has expressed every willingness to cooperate with us in our endeavour to make the act more widely operative in that province, and has met us very fairly in the matter of arranging machinery not so much under this act as under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, and I am very glad to certify to that in this public way.

My hon. friend is in error in saying that the province bears the cost of expenses. It does not. What it has done is to make for a lower scale of fees than obtains in ordinary circumstances, but the cost in Quebec as in all other provinces has been borne by the borrower himself.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Is it a fact that an officer was appointed, I think the hon member for Bellechasse, to study the titles, to help the farmers to prepare their cases and so forth? But I am not concerned so much with that; now that the minister has assured me that the facilities will exist in the future as they have done in the past, I am satisfied.

The minister did not answer one of my questions. I suppose there is in the act nothing that will prevent the province from advancing one and a half or two and a half or three and a half per cent in respect of interest if it wishes to do so.

Mr. RHODES: I did not hear that question, but there is in the act nothing that will prevent that; we will welcome it. There is no reason why the provinces should not do that if they so desire. Whatever the cost of administration will be, it is borne by the taxpayers of Canada and it does not matter very much whether they pay it provincially or through the dominion. The hon. member perhaps did not hear me the other day when we were in committee on the resolution. I then referred to the fact that the hon. member for Bellechasse had been appointed by the provincial government to assist the farmers in clearing their titles, and, as I said, we shall be very happy to avail ourselves of his services and to cooperate with him to the fullest possible extent.

Mr. COTNAM: I am sure the farmers of Ontario will welcome this legislation of the dominion government. Those of us who are from Ontario will remember what happened during the summer that is just gone. During the provincial election campaign the present Premier of Ontario came into my constituency and went on the platforms of constituencies throughout the length and breadth of this province—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. COTNAM: I know my hon. friends opposite do not like to hear this, but they are going to hear it. He promised faithfully that if he were returned to power in Ontario, farm loans would be made under the provincial act to our farmers at an interest rate of five per cent.

An hon. MEMBER: Who said that?

Mr. COTNAM: The Premier of Ontario said that. He said that Mr. Henry promised in that election campaign that if he were returned to power he would reduce the rate of interest on farm loans from five and a half to five per cent. The present premier of Ontario—

An hon. MEMBER: What has that to do with the matter?

Mr. COTNAM: What has that to do with it? Ask the farmers of Ontario what it has to do with it.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): They gave the answer.

Mr. COTNAM: The present premier of Ontario had said that if he were returned to power he would implement that promise and lend the farmers money at five per cent interest. My complaint is that from the time of the provincial election in Ontaio last July no loans of any kind have been made by the province to the farmers of Ontario.

Mr. HANBURY: There was no money left in the treasury.

Mr. COTNAM: There will not be by the time they are through with it. There was money in the treasury before they came into office.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. COTNAM: And the farmers of Ontario were receiving loans right up to the date of the election.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It was mostly in the shape of an overdraft.

Mr. COTNAM: Well, perhaps my hon. friend knows more about it than I do. I am willing to accept his statement. But what I am protesting against is that there was an absolute breach of faith on the part of the Premier of Ontario when he made that promise to the farmers.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I rise to a point of order. We are discussing the Canadian Farm Loan Act.

Mr. COTNAM: But I am speaking for the farmers of Ontario and of my constituency, men who, unable to get a loan from private sources, found themselves in the embarrassing position of being unable to get one under the Ontario farm loan act. I congratulate the Minister of Finance for bringing in this legislation, under which Ontario farmers will at least receive favourable consideration.

Mr. HANBURY: During the election.

Mr. CAMPBELL: On the motion for introduction of this bill I stated in the first speech I had the privilege of making in this house, that it was a matter of surprise to me that we should be discussing the dealings of the agricultural development board in Ontario and not the farm loan board as proposed under that motion. I am surprised that the hon. member for North Renfrew should again enter into a discussion of what has happened in Ontario. Unfortunately he was not in his place when I replied to the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe, who later said he was very good to me, in that he did not interrupt me in my maiden speech; but it is amusing to note that he was not in the house at that time. That is not one of the courtesies of the house, because the Minister of Finance interrupted me, which it was quite his right to do.

The hon. member for North Renfrew says that the present Premier of Ontario stated during the provincial election that the interest rate on farm loans would be cut to five per cent. Let me remind him that before that election and during its course the interest rate in Ontario was five and a half per cent. During the election the former attorney general of the province announced that the rate would be cut to five per cent, and several members of the legislature and other candidates at that time intimated that if they were elected the interest rate would be cut below five per cent. As to what the present premier of the province said I am not going to argue, but I remind the hon. member for North Renfrew that the Minister of Agriculture of Ontario, speaking for the provincial government, told the people of Ontario that they would lend money to the farmers at an interest rate of four per cent, and that the province would look after any difference between what they had to pay to the federal farm loan board and what they received from the farmers. In other words they were going to lend the money to the farmers at four per cent, borrowing it from this government at whatever rate was set. I am sorry I did not have a chance to ask the Minister of Finance what the position of the Ontario farm loan board is to be in view of the statement in the speeech from the throne in Ontario that they are going to lend money at four per cent. We are asking this government, as some hon. members have already intimated, to lend the farmers of Canada money at four per cent.

Mr. COTNAM: The hon. gentleman apparently did not get the idea.

Mr. McINTOSH: If you have one.

Mr. COTNAM: The difficulty is, he talks about four or four and a half or five or five and a half per cent, but that does not mean anything to the farmer if he cannot get the money. The fact is that the province of Ontario have broken faith; the farmers have not been able to borrow a dollar since last July, and cannot get a dollar to-day. Farmer after farmer come into my office when I am home over the week ends complaining as to this and in many cases beseeching me to find them a source from which they can borrow money to help liquidate some of their obligations; but I have to tell them that owing to the action of the Ontario government there is no money available for them at the present time.

Mr. CAMPBELL The hon. gentleman in his first utterance to-night intimated that the people of Ontario were not able to borrow money. I did not answer that, because I felt it was not relevant to the present discussion. But since he has brought it up again I need only reiterate what I said here a few days ago on the introduction of this bill, that during November and December last seventy-two loans were made by the Ontario agricultural development board, totalling a little less than $140,000. They were made to men who wanted to buy stock for their farms, to put up better buildings, or perhaps to start a son in business—purposes for which the board was originally started. I can assure my hon. friend that further loans have been made since then. The agricultural development board is still in business, but it does not wish at this time to operate in opposition to the federal loan board. At present we are dealing with something that relates to the whole dominion. No doubt the farmers of Ontario wish to have money loaned to them at as low an interest rate as possible. Will the minister explain just what the position of the Ontario agricultural development board will be if the Ontario legislature passes legislation enabling this act to become operative in Ontario?

Mr. RHODES: I shall be very happy to do so, but perhaps my hon. friend did not know that it had been decided not to sit in committee after nine o'clock.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I wish to correct a mistake I made this afternoon. I rose several times in an attempt to do so, for when I make a mistake I feel very sorry about it. I said the sum of $90,000,000, which is to be loaned by this government, represented one-half of one per cent of the decrease in the value of farm products during the last five years. My correction is that it may represent about five per cent of the losses sustained by the farmers in that period.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY—UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

AMENDMENT TO MOTION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, before your honour leaves the chair in order that this house may resolve itself into committee of supply, with the permission of the house I desire to bring to the attention of all hon. members, irrespective of party, some very grave problems which to my mind and in my judgment deserve the utmost attention and consideration at this time. I refer to the widespread and terrible unemployment situation prevailing at the present time in the Dominion of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I am very sorry indeed, sir, that my remarks in regard to a great human problem in the Dominion of Canada should provoke laughter from the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Macdougall).

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I am thinking of your record.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I trust that this is not indicative of his real spirit of helpfulness in connection with the solution of this great problem confronting the Canadian people.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that during the present session this house has been considering important measures of social reform, and I think it only fair and just to say that in the consideration of these reform measures there has been evinced a most commendable degree of cooperation by all sections of the house. At this time I am not permitted to discuss the measure of unemployment insurance which the house has been discussing both on second reading and in committee of the whole; neither am I permitted by the rules of the house to discuss in detail the legislation with regard to the eight hour day, that concerning minimum wages or the legislation concerning the general situation with regard to wages and hours. But I think I am permitted under the rules to say—and I think this was admitted by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) himself only the other day—that the measures of reform we have had before us so far, and the measures of reform which have been brought to our attention by means of resolutions placed on the order paper, do not touch this vital, challenging problem of unemployment relief as we have that problem in Canada at the present time.

I should like to quote some figures, which I am sure will startle every hon. member of this house. This afternoon in response to a question which I had the honour to ask the administration opposite, I received some statistics dealing with the unemployment relief situation as it exists, practically at the present moment, throughout Canada. I intend to give the figures to the house, though I am sure it is not necessary in order that the house may be seized of the tremendous importance of this problem. The reply of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs (Mr. Murphy) was that there were 23,187 on relief under the jurisdiction of that department. The reply from the Department of Pensions and National Health indicated that there were in receipt of relief administered by that department—which I may say is a great and merciful work, because it renders valuable assistance to pensioners and their dependents throughout the dominion, and at the present time I am only endeavouring to emphasize the magnitude of the problem which must be driven home with all possible force to every member of this house—some 8,912 pensioners, 6,684 wives of pensioners and 15,858 children. Then I come to the last department, the Department of Labour, and I find that at the present time there are on direct relief under the administration of that department 235,467 heads of families and 832,931 dependents of such heads of families, in addition to 38,927 individual relief cases covering one person only. That makes a total of 1,107,325 persons receiving direct relief under the Department of Labour, and if we add the number receiving other than direct relief the total is swelled to the appalling and astounding figure of 1,207,345. I think, sir, this reply to the question I asked is ample justification for bringing the matter to the attention of the ministry at the present time.

Now I wish to direct the attention of the house to a question I asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) on the evening of February 19. When the house was in committee of supply, discussing the labour vote, I asked the minister a question, and in reading it now I am not being critical; I am putting this on the record so that we may have the record clear and may know exactly what is the attitude of the administration with respect to this all important and transcendent national problem. I asked:

> Is the Minister of Labour prepared to give any information in regard to his policy this year with reference to the unemployment situation or does he intend to discuss the matter under some other item?
> Mr. Gordon: That will be taken up under another item later.
> Mr. Mackenzie (Vancouver): Under which item of the estimates? We are passing now the labour vote, No. 14.
> Mr. Gordon: Yes, civil government.
> Mr. Mackenzie (Vancouver): Under which item shall we have an opportunity of discussing the government policy with respect to unemployment relief?
> Mr. Gordon: With respect to unemployment relief, the whole problem is under consideration by the government and has been and is constantly under consideration, and is more likely to be brought before parliament in the form of specific legislation than by way of items in the supply of the labour department.

Then my hon. friend from West Middlesex (Mr. Elliott) asked this further question:

> When is the unemployment policy likely to come before the house? A good many hon. members are very anxious to know what it is and when we may expect it.

The Minister of Labour replied:

> The policy or plan of immediate relief will be largely determined by the position in which the provinces find themselves and by the representations that they may make to the dominion government for help. Upon their representations will largely depend the course of the government with respect to assistance to them. With regard to works that are purely federal, the plans are under consideration by the government and are not yet in such shape that they can be submitted to the house.

Again, in reply to a further question, the minister said:

When that is made apparent, then I assume, if the dominion has to come to the aid of the provinces again for the coming year, appropriate legislation will, if it is found necessary, be submitted to the house for discussion and approval.

I asked a further question:

Do I understand the minister to suggest that the policy of this government is to be based entirely on the nature of the requests received from the various provincial governments in regard to the next fiscal year?

The answer was:

Largely, yes.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think I am justified in stating to the house at this time that the policy of the administration in regard to this all important question of national unemployment relief is a policy of waiting until they receive certain indefinite requests from the various provinces. As a government charged with the tremendous, comprehensive responsibility of administering the affairs of this dominion, at the present moment they have no policy whatever in dealing with these 1,207,000 people throughout the dominion who are on relief. As I mentioned before they admit it, using as their mouthpiece the Minister of Labour who is charged with the responsibility of administering this department.

During the course of the debate on the unemployment insurance bill the Prime Minister said he had some plans and some policies with respect to unemployment relief. This was in the nature of an obiter dictum, an aside, with respect to the question of unemployment insurance. All parties are here, all members of this House of Commons, in a humble endeavour and desire to assist our constituents and to assist in the general interests of the Dominion of Canada. If the Prime Minister has a plan or policy for dealing with this tremendous problem of unemployment, why does he not frankly promulgate it so that hon. members may discuss it? My personal view is that this is a matter which compels and challenges our attention The advocacy of the Liberal party in connection with this problem is that we are prepared to shelve the consideration of all other matters already before parliament or to be brought before parliament, and to discuss immediately this tremendous and emergent problem of unemployment.

In the time at my disposal I desire to discuss the matter from two viewpoints, first from the viewpoint of the policies which have been pursued by the administration opposite since the year 1930, and in the second place, if I may be permitted, from a constructive viewpoint I shall endeavour to deal with the magnitude and severity of our most compelling national problem.

The most astounding fact I have ever noted during my experience in this chamber is that in the very actuarial report submitted by the government opposite and written by the man who was their technical expert in connection with the preparation of the unemployment insurance bill now before this House of Commons there is the most scathing condemnation I have ever read of this administration and its policy since 1930. First I should like to read from a book written by the same gentleman, Mr. Hugh H. Wolfenden, entitled The Real Meaning of Social Insurance. Under the heading Trade Restrictions at pages 109 and 110 I find the following:

Under this heading, as contributory if not primary causes of unemployment, particularly in exporting countries, may be listed tariffs, immigration restrictions and other impediments to the free interchange of goods and workers. Probably more than in the case of any other cause of unemployment are these factors possible of amelioration only through the actions of enlightened statesmen.

Then I read, from the actuarial report, tables, if you please, Mr. Speaker, presented by the Prime Minister himself only a few days ago, said to be the actuarial basis for the legislation he gave us and submitted for the approval of the house and the country. Here is what the same actuarial expert states, Mr. Hugh H. Wolfenden, at page 10, paragraph 24:

There can be little doubt that the unprecedented rate of unemployment recently experienced is attributable largely to international impediments to the free and natural interchange of goods, services and workers by means of tariffs, quotas, embargoes, special duties, nationalistic legislation, subsidies, manipulation of exchange rates, and migration obstacles, and that the situation is being aggravated by the increasing tendencies within each country to abandon the doctrine of caveat emptor to proscribe selling prices (and so create artificial rather than free markets), to proscribe natural correctives, and to regulate earnings, prices, hours, production and markets and so render them unnatural and inflexible. These innumerable artificial devices have resulted in the widespread obstruction of distribution and exchange; they have produced in many countries an appearance of overproduction and in others a state of want which is still unrelieved; and it is now frequently suggested that this situation should be dealt with by restricting production as well as distribution, rather than by freeing the channels of distribution and thus encouraging exchange and trade.

That is indeed a most complete history of Toryism in Canada since 1930. May I just for a few moments recapitulate under the proper headings this scathing and complete condemnation of the Tory policy from 1930 to 1935. What does he say?

An hon. MEMBER: Platform speech.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It is a House of Commons speech, giving a record of your maladministration. It would be advisable for all of us to maintain our good humour, because the record will go on in any case.

Mr. POULIOT: The old order has gone; the old man will go.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Who has offered the greatest impediment to the free and natural exchange of goods and services? Who has been one of the greatest sinners in world politics? The Conservative party of Canada, under the narrow self-centred nationalistic policy of "Canada first," have led the march of the world for higher tariffs. Let me just quote—

Mr. DURANLEAU: Pretty fair.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Not like the indifferent, nasal, inaudible remarks of the Minister of Marine. What has the Conservative party done by means of party legislation? They are a marvellous example of an administration which has set up the most artificial barricades in the history of the Dominion of Canada. They have raised ramparts of ruin all around our Canadian land. Yes, they have set the greatest example of tariff raising in our history. I have seen an article valued at $183 which was charged tariffs and excise taxes amounting to $141, or 77¼ per cent. I have seen invoices of cheaper suitings carrying tariff charges of 87 per cent. I have seen invoices of silk from Great Britain carrying tariff charges of 73 per cent. I have seen invoices for blankets with charges of 50 per cent; silks from France with charges of 66 per cent, and silks from Japan with charges of 244 per cent. All this has happened in the past four and a half years.

Now we come to quotas. One of the bad features about this administration has been the quota system. Under the empire agreements our exportations are to a great extent regulated by quotas existing on some products in the British Isles. Then what about embargoes? I wonder how many hon. members remember the holy days of 1930 and 1931 when the Prime Minister rose in righteous wrath and indignation and condemned that ungodly country known as Russia. In sympathy he placed embargoes on certain articles of importation from Russia. Now, in an excess of oleaginous hypocrisy, he allows certain goods to be imported from Russia and he even supports—this great enthusiast of 1931—he even supports the entry of unholy Russia to the league of nations. As a matter of fact, I believe she takes our seat on the international labour conference.

And subsidies, Mr. Speaker, the bonusing of wheat and other iniquitous policies of the kind, were promulgated and pursued by this administration. Subsidies on wheat were largely withdrawn. Then, there was the manipulation of exchange rates. Yes, we remember the dumping duty against the British pound. Then, after promoting a system of bonusing wheat production this government the next year, with its customary inconsistency, enforced not a bonus but a restriction on the acreage of wheat in Canada.

With regard to all these policies so strongly condemned by Mr. Wolfenden in his memorable pamphlet, the Prime Minister of Canada and the then Tory party—heaven only knows what it could be called now—sowed the wind and the Canadian nation is now reaping the whirlwind.

Let us lay the basis clearly and concisely by referring to the promises made. I hope I am not transgressing the rules of the house which forbid useless or vain reiteration in debate. Undoubtedly these promises have on many occasions been placed on Hansard. But they are so remarkable, Mr. Speaker, so all embracing, so comprehensive, they illustrate so splendidly what the Prime Minister promised to the Dominion of Canada, that I think I might be permitted to place upon the record once more just a meagre percentage of those promises so that the house can recall the fact that in 1930 the present Prime Minister made most definite and emphatic declarations with regard to his unemployment policy. Speaking in Calgary in June, 1930, he said:

> I will not permit this country with my voice or vote to ever become committed to the dole system. I will not permit those to share in any benefit unless they are willing to work and my duty is to provide work to do.

No doles in 1930, but in this year of our Lord, 1935, 1,207,000 on the dole! In the same campaign, later on the Prime Minister said:

> It must be remembered that promises with respect to policies are matters of profound importance to the Canadian pepole, and the policies we promised to put into effect we propose to put into effect immediately.

At Edmonton, another splendid city of the west, in June, 1930, he said this:

> I say again that I will call parliament together at the earliest possible moment to provide at once the remedy—employment for all who can and will work.

At Victoria, the beautiful capital of the most beautiful province of Canada, British Columbia, speaking on June 17, 1930, he said:

Is there any excuse for Canada to have hard times if the government is discharging its duties as it should?

If that statement was appropriate in 1930, with 100,000 unemployed in Canada at that time, I ask this house is it not equally true in 1935 when we have over 600,000 unemployed, with unemployment increased sixfold after an expenditure, including all government agencies of public operations, of over $400,000,000 to meet the terrible challenge of that situation? In Calgary, his own city, in June, 1930, the Prime Minister said:

But this is a new country and there is no excuse for unemployment in Canada if a government does its duty.

In Calgary again:

This problem has ceased to be local but has become national in its importance.

In Montreal during the same election:

Unemployment has become a national problem in Canada.

I want hon. members to remember that word "national," because in 1932 he went once again to Calgary and there we witnessed a most tremendous conversion, almost as remarkable as the conversion we witnessed in the Prime Minister's radio broadcasts last January. It has been said by a great Canadian that Saul was converted on the way to Damascus and Bennett was converted on the way to defeat.

Let me very briefly give the record of the Tory measures commencing with the special session which met here on September 8, 1930. Speaking on September 9, 1930, the Prime Minister said—and this was after we had met in this house, after he had been elected and after we were here in opposition:

It must be remembered that promises with respect to policies are matters of profound importance to the Canadian people, and the policies we promised to put into effect we propose to put into effect immediately.

Not in 1931, not in 1932, not in 1933 or 1934 or 1935, but "immediately," and that was the Prime Minister's promise made on the floor of this house on the second day after the house met in the special session of 1930. Again, at page 39 of Hansard of that special session, the Prime Minister said this:

I shall content myself with saying to the right hon. leader of the opposition and his friends that we will keep the promises we made.

Then again, introducing his resolution on unemployment in this house on September 10, he said:

We do believe that this resolution which I am now submitting ... combined with the measures which will be subsequently submitted—

And what were those measures? Raising the tariff on over two hundred articles, and mostly against the motherland, on the eve of the imperial economic conference of 1930.

We do believe that this resolution which I am now submitting ... combined with the measures which will be subsequently submitted to this house ... will go far to relieve the situation.

Again:

It will be observed that the present number—

He was speaking of the number of the unemployed:

—is something over 117,000, and it is believed that that number will approximate 177,000 during the winter.

It will be within the recollection of the house that at that special session a bill was introduced and passed voting $20,000,000 for works and undertakings of a supposedly useful nature under the supervision of the federal government. I want to lay down four observations made from this side of the house at that time so that I can prove that from session to session there has been a complete consistency in the attitude which we took on all the unemployment measures since 1930.

We asked in the first place for a national audit by the auditor general of the funds expended; second, for detailed estimates of the expenditures to be laid before the house; third, for the appropriate procedure by the committee of supply; fourth, for a national relief commission, representing all the great interests in the state, to administer the whole system of unemployment relief in the Dominion of Canada.

I come now to the regular session of 1931, and I look at the words contained in the speech from the throne in that year. The Prime Minister put these words into the mouth of His Excellency:

The operation of the Unemployment Relief Act of 1930 has proved equally beneficial.

Then, sir, during the session of 1931 we witnessed repeated and emphatic requests from all the opposition, from members to my far left and from ourselves, that the government deal with this question of unemployment, and I wish to place on Hansard once again what took place. Three days before the session prorogued, on July 29,

1931, the Prime Minister took up the last government order upon the order paper for 1931, and moved this resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to confer certain powers upon the governor in council in respect to unemployment and farm relief; and for the maintenance of peace, order and good government in all parts of Canada; and to authorize the governor in council to expend for the said purposes out of the consolidated revenue fund such sums as may from time to time be necessary.

May I recapitulate what took place during that session? On March 20 the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) asked the Minister of Labour if any special measures were contemplated to cope with the unemployment situation. The Prime Minister refused to answer that question. On March 23 the then member for Kenora-Rainy River, Hon. Peter Heenan, asked what the government intended to do with respect to the relief of unemployment. The Prime Minister said:

The question can stand.

On March 31 the hon. member for North Winnipeg moved the adjournment of the house to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely, the acute distress arising from unemployment.

I am just reminded, Mr. Speaker, that according to the rule I have only ten minutes left, and I shall therefore give notice of my amendment so that I shall be quite in order. I intend to move the following amendment:

That all the words after the word "That" in the motion be struck out, and the following substituted therefor:

This house regrets that, notwithstanding the specific promises made prior to the election of 1930, and many times since reiterated, and despite the fact that extraordinary powers to deal with unemployment have been repeatedly secured from parliament, the present administration, after nearly five years of office, has not yet submitted to parliament any definite or effective policy to deal with widespread actual unemployment or distress which continues to be Canada's most urgent national problem.

I proceed now with the record. The hon. member for North Winnipeg on March 31, as I say, moved the adjournment of the house to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, namely the acute distress arising from unemployment. After a lengthy discussion the motion was ruled out of order.

On April 17 the then member for Kenora-Rainy River, Hon. Peter Heenan, brought up the question again, and failing to get an answer moved the adjournment of the house. That motion was defeated by a vote 82 to 56. On April 24 the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) asked whether the government intended to call a dominion unemployment conference, and the Prime Minister answered:

The hon. member will be advised when the event happens, if it does happen.

On May 25 the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (M. Neill) brought to the attention of the Minister of Labour the desperate unemployment situation prevailing in the city of Nanaimo. The Minister of Labour said the question was purely provincial. On May 26, on a motion to go into supply, the house discussed the urgent necessity of holding a conference with the provinces. No member of the government took part in that debate. On June 16 the leader of the opposition, in the budget debate, urged a conference with the provinces to deal with unemployment. No attention whatever was paid by the government to that suggestion. On June 29 Hon. Peter Heenan asked for a statement of government policy on unemployment, and the Prime Minister replied:

At an appropriate time a statement will be made. The primary duty with respect to unemployment does not rest with the federal government.

On June 30 after three or four days' discussion, the hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) directed attention to the appalling conditions prevailing in rural Saskatchewan, and the Prime Minister said:

The primary responsibility rests with the municipalities and with the provinces.

On July 9 the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) asked when the government would introduce legislation on unemployment, and the Prime Minister said that legislation would be introduced when the business of the house had been practically disposed of. That resolution, moved by the Prime Minister on behalf of the government three days before parliament was prorogued in 1931, consisted of three parts: In the first place, that it was expedient to bring in a measure to confer certain powers on the governor in council in respect of unemployment relief; second, some measures with respect to farm relief; and third, a measure to confer certain powers on the governor in council for the maintenance of peace, order and good government throughout the dominion. Our position in regard to this matter was made abundantly clear. We proposed in the first place that he should ask the house to vote a certain sum for unemployment relief, a certain sum for farm relief, and to indicate what he thought necessary for the preservation of peace, order and good government in Canada. We refused at that time, as we have done every session since, to surrender the rights of parliament with respect to control over expenditures; we would not dispense at one fell swoop with the entire authority of this house and give to the government a blanket authority to deal with this trinity of measures which I have mentioned, namely, the unemployment situation, the farm relief situation and the preservation of peace, order and good government in the dominion.

That brings me to the first session of 1932, opened on February 4 of that year. The speech from the throne contained these words:

Conditions are gradually improving—

They were still improving in 1932.

This period of trial has shown the Canadian situation to be fundamentaly sound.

We moved an amendment on going into supply on February 23, 1932. It was moved by Mr. Heenan that the measures introduced by the government were inadequate and ineffective to deal with unemployment. By that time it had become quite manifest that the legislation of 1931 was a complete and dismal failure, and while debate was in progress the following resolution appeared on the order paper:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a bill to amend chapter 58 of the statutes of Canada, 1931, striking out the word "March" and substituting the word "May" therefor.

This was much worse than the legislation of 1931. I want to make it clear to the members of this house that whereas the peace, order and good government provisions were contained in the legislation of 1931, they were only suggested by the administration to come into effect after parliament had risen and the members had gone home. But when they introduced the legislation of 1932, when they attempted to revive the dead statute embodied in that resolution, they asked for complete authority and jurisdiction to deal with all questions involving peace, order and good government, while this parliament was sitting and while the members of this house were seated supinely here, not knowing what the cabinet council were doing with respect to peace, order and good government. That I characterize as the most audacious, the most amazing, the most barefaced piece of legislation introduced by the Prime Minister in a free parliament. It was a complete, a profound and a convincing demonstration of the impotence, the incompetence and the incapacity of the administration to deal with this great question of unemployment in the dominion.

And now we come to the legislation of March 8, 1932. We again stated our position in clear and unmistakable terms. We expressed our willingness to vote the sums necessary, and in committee we made our position once more abundantly clear. We objected to the powers of parliament and the resources of the treasury being handed over to the keeping of any cabinet in the dominion. It was a virtual dictatorship, despotism of the rankest kind set up in Canada. Let me now remind the house what was done under these despotic powers which this cabinet assumed under the authority of peace, order and good government.

First, the government prohibited the exportation of gold except under licence and by the chartered banks. That was October 19, 1931. In the second place, on new year's eve, December 31, the government in a great hurry put through another order in council enabling the life insurance companies in Canada to place a false valuation on their investments; they were enabled to take the valuation of June 30, 1931 instead of December 31, 1931. Thirdly, on October 27, 1931 there was passed an order in council, P.C. 2693, which virtually amended the Bank Act, authorizing the banks to make all government returns with regard to securities in a way other than that prescribed by the Bank Act. In other respects the procedure for amending the Bank Act is clearly laid down and any amendments are considered by a committee of this house every ten years; but this cabinet, this cabal, amended the Bank Act by this order in council, making a revaluation of banking securities. In the fourth place, on December 16 an order in council was passed, P.C. 3087, on the recommendation of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) increasing the strength of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police by 300 men, with an added expenditure of $274,135. The government increased the armed forces of the crown, even though they were a police force, without a single reference to the authority of parliament. Never had there been such a flouting of the supremacy of parliament as took place in that order in council increasing the numbers of the mounted police by 300 and imposing on the taxpayers of the country, without consulting parliament, an additional obligation of $274,000.

On September 12, 1931, the government passed order in council P.C. 2238, guaranteeing repayment to the chartered banks of amounts of money advanced the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited, and this house and the country do not yet know to what extent the taxpayers of Canada are obligated by this venture in gambling, which was authorized, subsidized and supported by the government. Again, there was another guarantee of $60,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway and, if you please, during the session of 1933, while this house was actually sitting, these secret negotiations went on between the banks of this dominion and the government. And we were never apprised of one single iota of the negotiations. Worse than that, three days before parliament prorogued, a letter was written by the Prime Minister guaranteeing $60,000,000 of the taxpayers' money to support a private corporation. In the committee on banking and commerce a year ago, as will be found in the sworn evidence which appears in the bluebooks, we asked the general manager of the Bank of Montreal whether that bank would have renewed a loan of $20,000,000 for another year, and the answer was in the affirmative. We asked the same gentlemen whether the other banks of Canada would have looked after the remaining $17,519,000 odd for the period of another year, the money which this corporation required to take care of its immediate obligations, and the answer was again in the affirmative. There was therefore no immediate financial necessity for the guarantee, and yet this government, without consulting parliament, without consulting a single member guaranteed $60,000,000 of the people's money to the Canadian Pacific Railway under the guise of unemployment relief, while hundreds of thousands of people were on the verge of starvation throughout the dominion and the municipalities and provinces were nearing bankruptcy.

I come now to the second session of 1932. We met on October 6 of that year and the speech from the throne contained the following:

> The problem of unemployment continues to receive the anxious attention of my ministers. Under the powers granted them at the last session of parliament, they have been able to develop further, in cooperation with the provinces and municipalities, a scheme of direct relief to be put into operation during the autumn and winter months to the extent required by prevailing conditions. Plans for the reestablishment of the unemployed in various parts of the country are in preparation and will become operative as soon as, in the opinion of my ministers, the public expenditure incident thereto will be productive of commensurate benefits.

This was a complete abandonment of the policies theretofore pursued, and an open avowal of the dole system by way of unemployment relief. "Plans for the reestablishment of the unemployed"—what did that mean? In the light of subsequent events, it meant absolutely nothing.

Then the Prime Minister went to Calgary, his own constituency, and he spoke there on September 6 of the same year. Let us recall the promises. He said repeatedly in 1930 that this was no longer a local or provincial question; that it was a national one. Listen to what he said in Calgary on September 6, 1932:

> So far as I am concerned the administration of relief does not lie with the dominion government. I am not prepared to scrap the constitution—> —and say the primary responsibility can be shifted to the dominion government.

What a remarkable change between 1932 and 1935!

> I have not yet reached the point where I think the dominion government is better equipped to deal with these matters than either the provinces or the municipalities.

The problem was national in 1930! It was provincial and local in 1932. The Canadian Pacific had received their guarantee of $60,000,000.

I now come to November 21, 1932, when the hon. member for North Winnipeg asked for a committee or commission to study this question, stating that at that time the number of unemployed was 750,000. The only encouragement he received was to be ruled out of order.

On the house meeting again after the Christmas recess on February 22, 1933, the Minister of Labour, whose legislation was expiring on March 31, introduced the following resolution:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to continue in force the provisions of the Relief Act, 1932, until the 31st of March, 1934.

In other words, the only policy of this administration was one of repeating and repeating the same old legislation from year to year. In the first place public works were mixed up with relief; then there was the straight dole, and now one year continuing the doleful legislation of another. On March 3, 1933, a further amendment was moved by one of the ministers after the resolution was in committee, as follows:

> Provided, however, that the amount to be paid for direct relief for the fiscal year ending the 31st of March, 1934, shall not exceed the sum of $20,000,000.

During the debate we discovered that the amount expended under the 1930 legislation was $17,987,000; on public works, around $14,000,000, and in direct relief, about $3,500,000. Under the legislation of 1931 and 1932 the dominion government had subscribed the sum of $41,000,000. Then the government, still wobbling, pursuing with faltering footsteps their erratic course, had to move even a second amendment to their own resolution in committee. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) on March 20, 1933, moved:

And that provision be made for accepting securities from the provinces for such loans, advances, guarantees, etc., as may be advanced by the government, and that provision also be made for the maintenance of peace, order and good government throughout Canada.

In other words, the clause with respect to peace, order and good government which, after the opposition by those on this side of the house, had been abandoned by the administration in the previous year, was reinserted in the legislation of 1933 on a resolution moved by the Minister of Railways on March 23 of that year.

May I be pardoned by the house for quoting some of the observations I made in that debate? Speaking on this resolution on March 20, 1933, I said:

Considering the emergent conditions that prevail in many of our Canadian cities, surely the time has arrived for the government of the day, in a large national and constructive way, to envision and comprehend their entire problem as a nation-wide problem, a Canadian problem, in its very essence, and as far as I personally am concerned, if the government deals with it as a national problem I shall be only too glad to render any assistance I can. It is a national problem, Mr. Chairman, because our municipalities are practically all bankrupt. They are out of resources, and I am afraid that the policies of the administration during the last few years have very largely been driving them to that condition because they have been compelled to live beyond their resources to face the present emergent situation. So I am appealing to the Minister of Labour, particularly in view of the very grave conditions that exist in the province of British Columbia and all through the Canadian west, both in the industrial centres and on many of the farms in western Canada, to deal with this question in a national way, not in any piecemeal fashion, providing one scale of relief here and another there, not with the present lack of coordination and uniformity throughout the dominion; but let us have a large national constructive scheme with federal control and direction of the unemployment situation, and then with cooperation between all parties in this house who want to see real remedies applied and real relief obtained, I believe that we shall be able to do something to meet the unemployment situation in this dominion.

The speech from the throne in 1934 contained only two paragraphs dealing with the situation, as follows:

Improved world conditions—

Improvement every year—improvement in 1930; improving still more in 1931; improving still further in 1933, and then in 1934:

Improved world conditions are reflected in Canada by expanding trade, improving revenues, and a more confident outlook upon the future. My government propose further to promote employment by expenditures on essential public works throughout the dominion.

I wish to mention nine specific points which were emphasized by us at the time in regard to the resolution moved by the Minister of Labour and in regard to the policy pursued by this administration:

1. A dominion-provincial conference to consider the financial relations of the provinces and the dominion.

2. That unemployment was Canada's most urgent national problem, and strongly advocated a representative national commission to coordinate all national effort and to cooperate with the provinces and municipalities in the administration of unemployment relief.

3. That there should be an audit by the federal government of all expenditure of public moneys.

4. That all moneys for relief purposes should be voted for specific purposes and voted by parliament.

5. We opposed voting public moneys in lump sums and we opposed the blank cheque —a government policy which subsequently resulted in a colossal wastage of public money.

6. We opposed giving to the executive the power of legislating by order in council with respect to peace, order and good government.

7. We advocated as the only real basis on which recovery could be hoped for, the introduction of policies which would serve to provide employment by reviving industry and trade and which would make for the liberation of trade both external and internal.

8. We advocated the development of the basic industries as a way of furnishing employment.

9. We advocated measures for the control of credits and the democratization of industry.

On February 5, 1934, the hon. member for North Winnipeg moved a further resolution emphasizing the importance of the question of purchasing power, the necessity of a reduction in the hours of labour and the necessity for the more equitable distribution of wealth. That resolution was carried by the house, but no concrete action was taken with respect thereto.

The Minister of Labour on March 22, 1934, moved the following:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure respecting relief measures generally similar in terms to the Relief Act, 1933, but which also makes provision for payment of federal proportion of delayed relief accounts, if any, which may be received subsequent to the date of the expiration of said act.

In other words the dole was continued On March 26, 1934, during the debate on the second reading of the bill, very grave irregularities were brought to light as the result of the first report of the auditor general respecting the administration of relief funds in the provinces. We moved an amendment on the third reading of the bill again protesting against taking away from parliament its complete control over public expenditures.

That brings me to the 1935 session. Since then we have had the Prime Minister's broadcasts, and what has happened so far during the present session. May I be permitted to refer in the meantime to just one sentence used by the Prime Minister in his broadcast, when he said, "The world is in tragic circumstances; the signs of recovery are few and doubtful." Yet when I go back and look at the expressions of opinion by hon. ministers since 1930, I find the following. Speaking on October 1, 1930, the Prime Minister said, "that the old order of things had passed.' In western Canada on new year's eve—December 31, 1930—at Regina, he said:

I am satisfied we will be able to look back on the year 1931 with satisfaction....

I want you to believe that we are on the highroad to success....

Our minister to Japan is at this hour on his way to China to discuss with the government of that great country the purchase of millions of bushels of our wheat.

Then he came back to Ottawa, and on April 28, 1931, he is reported as having said:

We can look forward to the future with confidence, convinced that the great pathway of peace and prosperity has never appeared so attractive ... so attractive that no words of mine can describe it.

Mr. HANBURY: Humbug!

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Two weeks later, on May 11, 1931, speaking in Montreal, he said:

I think there are some evidences that we have reached the dead level of depression and that the movement from now on will be upward.

Five months later, in Montreal, on October 15, 1931, he said:

The storm may not have spent itself, but the worst is over.

They are very fond of storms. At Ottawa on new year's day, January 1, 1932, he said:

In my belief the worst is over. Canada has survived the crisis.

In Ottawa, on dominion day, 1932:

We face the future with confidence.

[Mr. I. Mackenzie.]

In Toronto, in August, 1932:

I think there are signs of improvement on the horizon, evidences that we have reached the dead level of this depression.

Once again the dear old dead level. In London, England, on December 21, 1932:

Next year will be the beginning of a new era of prosperity.

Then at sea, on board the Empress of Britain, August 28, 1933:

I trust all may enjoy happiness, opportunity to work as we return to prosperity, and contentment under a kindly providence in this great land we call our home.

And again in Montreal, on September 1, 1933:

In the dominion, particularly, I note that conditions are becoming better.

And my hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion), on September 3, 1933, expressed his satisfaction in Canada's leadership. He said:

With our Prime Minister once more at the helm—

Once again the ship and the storm.

—after his strenuous efforts in London, we can go forward in confidence that all will soon be well again.

Then the Prime Minister, speaking before the Canadian Gas Association—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): —on September 19, 1933, said:

Some people look and wonder whither we are moving. I have never had the slightest doubt as to where we were going. I am one of those sturdy individualists who believe we are moving upward and onward.

Again in Winnipeg on October 10, 1933:

We may, I think, confidently look forward to better days. Slow, yes, but none the less sure.

And then in Manitoba on the same day:

Canada is standing on the threshold of recovery.

At Lethbridge on October 17, 1933:

Throughout the world there is sound reason for the belief the great depression is ended and the slow move back to normal conditions is a tangible fact, with Canada well in the forefront.

And then again in Ottawa on November 8, 1933:

In all the factors that go to make up prosperity there are distinct signs of upward improvement, that we have passed the worst of this great crisis and we are steadily climbing the hill to ultimate prosperity.

At Montreal on June 8, 1934, from the Canadian Press:

Expressing his belief that Canada was standing on the threshold of a prosperity greater than she had ever known, Prime Minister R. B. Bennett told an audience here that at least one out of every twelve Canadian men, women and children were on a payroll on May 1st.

Yet when the time came for the broadcast the right hon. gentleman said the world was in tragic circumstances, although year after year from 1930 until 1935 we had nothing but prosperity around the corner, even in the utterances of my good friend the Minister of Railways.

Now, sir, I come to one or two other paragraphs in these radio addresses which brought such wonderful confidence and satisfaction to my esteemed and venerable friend the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan):

I promised I would end unemployment. That was a definite undertaking. By it I stand.

This is five years afterwards:

Unemployment in Canada is one of the consequences of the awful and unprecedented depression.

Yet every year from 1930 prosperity was just around the corner. Again he said:

When the system is reformed and in full operation again there will be work for all.

That is much worse than the former promises. In 1930 he said he would end unemployment immediately or perish in the attempt. But now, five years later, he is going to end it—when? When the system is reformed. Something mythical and nebulous and uncertain and vague.

When the system is reformed and in full operation again there will be work for all.

Then again he said:

If a man is able and willing to work but can get no work, provision for his security must be made in a decent way.

I completely agree with that sentiment, but why then is no policy brought down by this administration? He said:

We are to put in a permanent system of sound and scientific insurance against unemployment.

I am in favour of that, but I venture this prediction, that not only will the unemployment insurance legislation do nothing for the unemployed in Canada, but it will be many weary months before it will do anything whatever even for the limited number of the employed who will come under its provisions. So that for the problem which I am discussing to-night this measure is entirely inadequate and useless.

Then the Prime Minister said, "the present Old Age Pensions Act is unscientific and obsolete." Was it so in 1930 when the Prime Minister went all across Canada saying he would nationalize the old age pensions scheme and pay one hundred per cent of the cost, as he said in New Brunswick and all through the maritime provinces? Now after five years of his own administration as a result of further broken promises he finds it unscientific and obsolete. I am proud to say that in regard to old age pensions the Liberal party led the way in England and in Canada. In England under Lloyd George in 1911 —I happened to be in the old land at that time—we pioneered in old age pensions legislation. Again in Canada the Liberal party pioneered in old age pensions, and I am proud to say that my province of British Columbia under the Liberal government of good old John Oliver was the first province of Canada to place government old age pensions in operation.

Then he said, "Health, accident and sickness insurance must be developed in the same way." Again I know that under the rules of order I cannot discuss it in detail, but I refer the house to part IV of the unemployment insurance bill of this year.

I come now to this session and the speech from the throne, in which we have these words:

I welcome you at a time when our country stands upon the threshold of a new era of prosperity.

It is the same story year after year. In every year from 1930 right up to 1935; "our country upon the threshold of a new era of prosperity"!—and 1,207,000 people on relief to-day out of a population of 10,500,000. Again:

Employment is increasing. Our trade is expanding. The national revenues are higher. These evidences of recovery attest the wisdom and efficacy of the measures you have taken.

My honoured leader, speaking in the debate on the address on January 21, said as reported at page 59 of Hansard:

Let us therefore, between now and that time, take as first measures those dealing with the problem of unemployment and social reform and give them our undivided attention from day to day so that, working together, we may, if at all possible produce something in the way of a solution. I suggest that to that end this debate be permitted to end very speedily after the Prime Minister and the leader of the third party have spoken, unless there is something controversial in what they say. At any rate, so far as the members of the Liberal opposition are concerned, we are prepared in order to deal with the question of unemployment to end this discussion at once.

And on January 28, as reported at page 253 of Hansard, the right hon. leader of the opposition moved the following amendment to the motion to go into supply:

That all the words in the motion after the word "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"This house is of the opinion that the immediate consideration of present conditions of unemployment and the introduction of measures of social and industrial reform should not be delayed or postponed by a consideration of supply in advance of the consideration of government policies with respect to unemployment and the introduction of measures with respect to social and industrial reform."

Again on February 5, on the motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) to go into supply, the leader of the opposition moved, as reported on page 495 of Hansard:

That all the words after the word "that" in the motion be struck out, and the following substituted therefor:

"That this house is of the opinion that when it is moved into committee of supply priority should be given consideration of the estimates of the Department of Labour in order that opportunity may be afforded for an immediate discussion and consideration of conditions of unemployment and distress at present existing in all parts of Canada, and of the measures required to cope therewith."

That amendment was ruled out of order by Your Honour. But I want to put on Hansard another quotation from the address of my right hon. leader on that occasion:

We feel very strongly that any program of social and industrial reform should not be permitted to sidetrack an immediate consideration of present problems in our country.

That is the attitude of the official opposition. It is in that spirit and in furtherance of the remarks contained in the address of my leader on that occasion that I offer the amendment which it is my intention to submit befor I resume my seat.

Then we come to the questions which we asked of the Minister of Labour the other evening in this house. With these questions I began my survey of what has taken place in this house during the last five years, when the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Elliott) asked questions and I asked questions myself as to what the policy of this administration is. When I asked him in regard to what was the policy of this administration with respect to these 1,207,000 people on relief in Canada to-night, the only reply I received was that the policy would have to await the requests received from the provinces with respect to this great national emergency.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to deal rather briefly with the world aspect of this question, and I should like to place on Hansard one or two figures with respect to the volume of industrial production in the world, which in 1933 was 12½ per cent greater than in 1932, while the production of foodstuffs remained the same. In the same period the production of raw materials increased by ten per cent, while the same rate prevailed in 1934. The importance of these figures lies in the fact that in 1933 there were three times as many unemployed as in 1929, but by the summer of 1934 there were only twice as many in all the world while in Canada we had six times as many in 1934 under the policies pursued by the administration opposite. Yet, according to Sir Arthur Salter, one of the world's greatest authorities on this question, in the last issue of the Yale Review, the world figures were only twice as great in 1934 as in 1929. International trade has increased only slightly since 1933, and while we may be coming slowly up the slope we are by no means half way up so far, and I think for many weary months to come we must continue to pursue the toilsome ascent from the depths.

Seen in the large the problem of relief transcends the care of our present relief load. It involves the question of whether to-day's relief cases are to become semi-permanent, and whether their numbers are to be augmented by new recruits who cannot find opportunity for self support. It involves something else, the absorption of our unemployed into the ranks of private industry. If our industrial organization cannot provide a living for these men by giving them jobs then it must support them, and ultimately that cost will come back on industry in taxes. The government may be able to stimulate absorption by an extensive construction program, but I am somewhat in doubt as to the value of construction programs when they are carried on entirely by governmental agencies. We have to develop a new type of public service for the unemployed; we may have to organize those whom industry cannot now absorb into production for use units. I am sure my hon. friends in the corner will welcome this suggestion. When ordinary industry cannot absorb labour for ordinary production for profit then the nation may have to step in and take up the gap between the efforts of private enterprise and direct relief for those unemployable, and subsidize industries where the wages would not be such as would compete with private enterprise, in order to do two things, first to afford a decent subsistence, and second to develop work of substantial use to the state which will employ these men.

There are four reasons in the main for this problem, because after all, even with this depression the problem may be a semi-permanent one, in spite of the fact that Canada is a new country. First there are the unemployable, who are not able to render effective service in our industrial order, through misfortunes of their own or misfortunes of the system. They present a special problem of their own. Then in our industrial order, with its rapidly changing adjustments, workers may find themselves attached to inefficient or decaying industries, and may have to look for other jobs. Seasonal unemployment adds to this total. Third, the codes of many organizations to-day in Canada, as in other nations, make it almost impossible to provide gainful occupations for many of our youth, and to my mind that is one of the greatest problems. Fourth, business cycles of unemployment are inevitable due to several causes, and plans should be laid in advance for periods of depression.

To combat these factors what can one advocate? In the first place there is unemployment and social insurance, with which we have been wrestling during the present session. Second, to meet unemployment and to look after those who cannot be absorbed by an insurance scheme, other measures must be devised combining useful results with continued subsistence. Third, there are the programs of public construction. To my mind, Mr. Speaker, the main thing is that new employment and new purchasing power can be created by encouraging business enterprise in an expanding production and distribution of goods and services. Business itself must be willing to outlaw those forms of competition which are socially destructive, and it must give due shares to labour, the consumer, to management and to capital. It must be content with business profits and must not search unduly after illusory and unsocial speculative gains. It must be willing to endure that minimum of government control which the general interest requires. In short, shall I say, there must be a new partnership between business and politics in Canada for the sake of the common man. Governments need the assistance of constructive and productive business, and I think business needs the guidance and cooperation of governments, not bludgeoning, not dragooning, not conscripting, but in a real alliance responsive to the promptings of the social conscience.

May I therefore, Mr. Speaker, summarize the situation in Canada as it exists at the present moment. First, after an expenditure of about $400,000,000 in five years we have some 600,000 unemployed and over 1,000,000 on relief. Second, we have over 20,000 single homeless men in the national defence camps scattered throughout the Dominion of Canada. Third, the amounts expended under the special public works appropriation of 1934 have not materially improved the situation. Fourth, very largely as a result of the burdens imposed upon them by relief legislation, many of our municipalities are actually bankrupt and some of our provincial governments are on the verge of bankruptcy, especially in western Canada. Fifth, with such a situation confronting us, one month before the close of the present fiscal year the government says through its Minister of Labour that it has no policy at present with which to meet the situation.

My hon. friends may ask what I advocate, and in the remainder of what I have to say I wish to make it very clear that I am giving my personal views only, and not necessarily the views of any party or group. First, in addition to a national relief commission representative of all interests to administer relief in Canada, which we have advocated for the last four or five years, I suggest that we should have immediately at our disposal a complete census and registration of those now unemployed, with a view to ascertaining the numbers permanently unemployable, and special measures for their care. Second, I want to advocate the handling of this entire problem as one of national emergency, even if only for a limited time, until this depression is over. Third, I advocate the undertaking by the government of public works on a limited scale in which the greater proportion of the appropriation shall go to labour rather than to supplies or equipment. Fourth, I advocate cooperation with the construction industry and other business for privately directed works and undertakings, their financing to be assisted by the government, which shall be completely reimbursed for any advances made. Fifth, I suggest adequate, immediate and effective measures to increase our domestic and foreign trade. Sixth, I suggest the reduction of rates of interest on all outstanding obligations in the Dominion of Canada. Seventh, I suggest a national conversion scheme reducing the interest on all internal debt to two and a half per cent. Eighth, I advocate immediate negotiations with outside nations where our external bonds are held, for a mutually satisfactory scheme for the reduction of interest on external bonds. Ninth, I suggest the increase of our currency by $430,000,000, which is scientifically justifiable by the appreciation of gold values, to be used for the reduction of our national debt; not to be used under any pretence in the financing of temporary schemes by the administration during the current year, but to be used for the reduction of our public debt so that thereafter we may finance at low rates of interest any public works or undertakings that we may desire to carry on. Tenth, I advocate that the national budget be strictly balanced. Eleventh, I suggest a financial conference with the provinces to consider the advisability of establishing a national loan board to coordinate, if possible, the investment activities of governments without commingling their financial responsibilities and to consider the exact and precise financial situation of all governmental agencies in Canada.

My last recommendation is in regard to ex-service men. For the permanently unemployable I suggest the extension of the principle of the War Veterans' Allowance Act, reducing the age to fifty-five. if only for a limited period. For the partially unemployable I suggest physical reestablishment for a limited period and land settlement on small holdings. For the employable I advocate the scientific placement of men in industry.

Such then, Mr. Speaker, is the problem and such are some of the suggested remedies. No matter what attention this house has given during this session to the so called reform measures; no matter what attention we have given unemployment insurance; no matter what attention we have given or may give hours of work legislation, I say that we shall be recreant to our trust if during this session we do not take steps to meet this urgent national situation. I say the eight hour day bill will do nothing to lessen unemployment in the Dominion of Canada. You must reduce the total hours of labour in one complete week before you can tackle what is essentially the problem of unemployment. So far as I am concerned I am in favour of reducing the hours of labour substantially below the forty-eight hour week. In certain industries, both from the national and the provincial viewpoint, there must be certain exemptions from the hours of labour brought about by mutual consent of the employers and employees. This provision exists in the legislation in British Columbia, and once again may I say that I believe the British Columbia legislation respecting hours of labour is the best in Canada.

I have reviewed the entire situation from 1930 to 1935. Once again I should like to impress upon the government the necessity for enunciating to this House of Commons without further delay its policy with respect to unemployment, distress and prevailing hardship. In that spirit, seconded by the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Gray) I beg to move the following amendment:

That all the words after the word "That" in the motion be struck out, and the following substituted therefor:

This house regrets that, notwithstanding the specific promises made prior to the election of 1930, and many times since reiterated, and despite the fact that extraordinary powers to deal with unemployment have been repeatedly secured from parliament, the present administration, after nearly five years of office, has not yet submitted to parliament any definite or effective policy to deal with widespread actual unemployment or distress which continues to be Canada's most urgent national problem.

I should like to conclude my observations by quoting the final words of a great book, Industry and Humanity—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Well, hon. members opposite may laugh. I wonder if they will laugh at the concluding words of that great book. This is not Andrew MacLean's book at all. The man who wrote this book does not announce his social insurance program over the radio or his public works program in the movies, between The Iron Duke and Mickey Mouse. I want to see if there is any man across the way, any Tory—I do not know what they are called now—any follower of the new deal who will not support the sentiments expressed in these concluding words in the book Industry and Humanity to which I have referred:

Is it too much to believe that—

And this is the spirit of those who are distressed and in poverty throughout Canada.

Is it too much to believe that having witnessed humanity pass through its Gethsemane, having seen its agony in its garden of fears, having beheld its crucifixion upon the cross of militarism, labour and capital will yet bring to a disconsolate and brokenhearted world the one hope that is theirs alone to bring, and that in the acceptance of the principles which hold deliverance from the scourges that beset mankind they will roll back the stone from the door of the world's sepulchre to-day and give to humanity the promise of its resurrection to a more abundant life.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, allow me to congratulate this Lochinvar from the west who comes here as the new leader of the Liberal party. I have listened with much interest to what the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) has had to say. He has made an omnibus speech in which he talked about everything; he has gone through the events of the last few years and given his views upon them. Then, finally, he puts forward the platform upon which he as the leader of the Liberal party will run in the next election. I am not finding any fault, but I would say to the hon. member that the amendment he has moved was placed in my hands only after he had half completed his speech. No notice was given, although undoubtedly if we are to judge from all the papers in front of him he has been incubating this speech for the last week or two. Evidently he thought it wiser not to give notice of his motion to hon. members on this side, hoping that we could not make any reply to his extraordinary observations.

The hon. gentleman has moved an amendment respecting unemployment measures, but he has offered no constructive suggestion. Although he has made certain statements, surely he will realize that the condition of unemployment is world wide and known to all. I take it that the amendment was moved in the present instance so that the hon. member would have the opportunity to speak more than forty minutes. Possibly we would have given him that opportunity anyway, even if he had not made the motion he did. In his observations he has indicated his views with regard to the record of the Conservative party for the last five years. The whole world has been going through very trying times. What have the party opposite done to try to help the government? Nothing whatever. They have criticized, found fault and blocked —well, I shall not use the term "blocked," because it may not be parliamentary. I will repeat, however, that they have criticized measures which afterwards they supported. Why can the Liberal party not be frank and support the measures brought before this chamber, if they believe such measures to be in the best interests of the country? Why do they not offer their wholehearted support of the measures instead of in the first instance finding fault and offering nothing but criticism, and in the end approving them?

In his amendment the hon. member has offered no constructive suggestions. All people in all parts of the world recognize that unemployment is a world wide condition, and if the hon. member has in his mind any method by which he believes it could be solved I should like him to make his motion accordingly. Let us have some concrete motion from the hon. member stating what he believes should be done. Instead of that he offers an amendment in which he states that—

> Despite the fact that extraordinary powers to deal with unemployment have been repeatedly secured from parliament the present administration after nearly five years of office has not yet submitted to parliament any definite or effective policy—

I submit that no country in the world has come through the depression better than Canada, and the truth of that statement has been recognized in other countries. The delegates to the great world gathering which met in London last year considered Canada one of the countries which had come through the depression better than any other, and they did not know how we had accomplished it. The hon. member should get information about the conditions in other countries before he begins to gloat over the number receiving relief in Canada.

I notice the hon. member has taken great pains to exaggerate the figures as to unemployment, having included people who may have received only an odd meal or two. The unemployment statistics include the unemployed, their families, and those who receive only a certain amount of relief, some of them only a very small amount. But no; that would not suit his purpose—he tries to make the numbers as great as possible. It may be all right for him to try to hammer the Conservative government without reason, but is it a good thing for Canada that he should put forward those figures in as exaggerated a manner as possible?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I was quoting the figures I received from the government this afternoon.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I have already explained that there are families of unemployed and there are those receiving partial relief, perhaps only a meal or two, and they are all included in the figures given by the hon. member.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I presented all the figures fairly.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Then he says his party has suggested that we should have had a national relief commission. Well, Mr. Speaker, I can hardly visualize how such a commission could have worked throughout the country except through the local authorities. I do not think a commission here in Ottawa or in any city in Canada could handle the relief problems in the various sections of the country as well as the people of the provinces and of the municipalities themselves. The hon. gentleman says they should be under federal control and direction. He knows, as everyone in the house knows, that this question of relief is in the first instance one for the provincial governments, and it has been so agreed by everyone.

I may tell you, Mr. Speaker, that this year the dominion government made a definite suggestion to the government of Saskatchewan that the drought area in southern Saskatchewan be taken over by the dominion government and administered without any expense to the province, but the Saskatchewan government did not see fit to accept the suggestion. I mention this to indicate to the hon. gentleman that he would have to get the provinces to change their minds before we could make any arrangement for a national relief commission, even if it were feasible to do so. My own opinion is that a national relief commission could not successfully administer relief all over this country, because the matter is, in any event, a local one which has to be dealt with by the provinces and the municipalities.

The hon. gentleman also says that we led the world in higher tariffs. Did he never hear of a country called the United States of America, I wonder? As I understand it, that is the country that has led in higher tariffs and has done so for the last forty or fifty years. All we did was to protect ourselves and our workmen against the competition of the United States with their high tariff, and I may say to my hon. friend that had we not done that we should have had a great many more unemployed in this country than we have had. Any action we have taken in that respect has all been to the good.

In the absence of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) who unfortunately has a cold today, I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, whether there is any member of the house who does not admire the courage of the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett? I do not care whether he be Liberal or Conservative, on which side of the house he may sit, whether he agrees with the Prime Minister's policies or not, hon. members must admire his courage and the fortitude with which he has carried on during these four or five years. I wonder whether during the time the Liberals were in power the Prime Minister of that day showed any courage in dealing with various problems, or whether he simply drifted with the tide, and in the years of plenty, with abounding revenues, and everything prosperous—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hurrah!

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I agree, but the Liberals had no more to do with it than anybody else. It was due to world conditions, and instead of taking advantage of those prosperous times and laying aside some of the abounding revenues and making preparations for a rainy day, they spent all the money they had and left us with a lot of obligations to fulfil which had been arranged for or before the election.

[Sir George Perley.]

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre has quoted some remarks of the Liberal leader and others to the effect that the government should go on with their reform legislation and their relief legislation without letting anything else interfere with it. I ask in all fairness whether there has ever been a session of this house when the business of the country has been as well prepared and gone on with as expeditiously as it has this session. We have been sitting here for only five or six weeks, and much of the legislation promised by the Prime Minister has already been put on the order paper. Some of these measures it is impossible to bring forward until a report has been made by the mass buying commission, which I understand is now in course of preparation and will be presented before long. So, Mr. Speaker, I say that any suggestion from the hon. gentleman or anyone else that this government has not been ready with its legislation or has not gone on as fast as possible with the program promised by the Prime Minister is making a statement which is not based upon fact. The Prime Minister promised measures of reform. Some of them are already before the house, and others will be brought down as soon as possible, but some of them, as I have just said, must await the report of the mass buying commission. I say to the hon. gentleman with all humility that as far as this government is concerned there has been no delay whatever, and I repeat that there has been no session when the business of the house was better prepared or was proceeded with more expeditiously than has been the case during the present session.

The amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman on a motion to go into supply was framed, I take it, largely for the purpose of giving him an opportunity to speak more than forty minutes. It is a motion that it is impossible for the government to accept, because it is not based on any facts that he has brought forward this evening, nor has the hon. gentleman submitted to the house any proposal or suggestion for a better solution of the unemployment problem than has been afforded by this government in its legislation of the last four years. The problem of unemployment has received and is receiving consideration every day from the government, and must do so as anyone can understand; and any measures which are to be submitted to parliament in connection with unemployment relief will be brought down in due course. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the house to reject the motion of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. R. W. GRAY (West Lambton): Mr Speaker, I appreciate the difficulty that faced the acting Prime Minister (Sir George Perley) when he attempted to reply to the very brilliant speech of my colleague from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie). In view of the fact that his leader, the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) has not announced any definite policy with respect to this important matter of unemployment, and that we have not been able to receive one from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon), it is not difficult to understand why the acting Prime Minister should simply fall back on what has been the policy of the present government since its inception and say, as the right hon. gentleman did in his closing remarks, that "the question is being considered." I say to you, sir, that it has been considered. I have no doubt that from the very first day this government took office until this hour in the fifth year of their life, and the last I hope, they have been and are still considering this problem. We have no quarrel with the acting Prime Minister when he states that his leader has courage; we agree that he has. But one is reminded of the story of the engineer who, seeing a buffalo bull charging his engine, said "I admire your courage but I cannot admire your judgment." The right hon. gentleman points out to-night the situation that various other countries are facing and points to the fact that Canada has led in this respect. But I would remind him and other hon. members of this house of the fact that in 1930 in reply to members on this side the Prime Minister said that the concern of his party and of the people of Canada was Canada and not the United States or any other country.

I offer no apologies for taking part in this debate. Here we are in 1935 waiting for some definite pronouncement on the part of the government as to how they propose to solve this problem. In 1931 and again in 1932 we were told, as we were told the other night by the Minister of Labour, that the government was waiting to see what the provinces would propose. That might have been all right in 1931 or even in the second session of 1932; but after five years, for the Minister of Labour to come into this house and say that he is waiting to see what the provinces will propose indicates a lack of judgment and of any particular program on the part of the government to solve the problem. In my opinion the time is opportune, indeed it is long overdue, to discuss this problem because during the years this government has been in office it has deliberately delayed the discussion of unemployment relief until the dying days of the session. This is true of every session. In 1930 they held over our heads the fact that the Prime Minister would not go to the imperial conference unless we rushed the legislation. In 1931 the house began its sittings on March 12 and it was not until July 29, or four days before prorogation, that legislation was introduced in connection with unemployment. In 1931 the act was to expire on March 1, but on March 8 it was extended for two months. In 1933 the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act was introduced on March 21, leaving seven days in which to discuss it. In 1934 the act expired on March 31 and the new act was introduced on March 22, and the house adjourned on March 28 until after Easter, leaving only about four days to discuss the measure, including the time necessary for the Senate to pass it.

I submit therefore that we have a right to bring this matter as forcibly as possibly to the attention of the government in the hope that they will appreciate the problem and take some definite action. I do not wish to weary the house by a repetition of what was promised in connection with unemployment, but it is necessary for one to go back to the election of 1930 in order to bring before the house and the country the steps or lack of steps taken by the government to solve the problem.

On July 10, 1930, speaking at Moncton, the present Prime Minister said:

> The Conservative party is going to find work for all who are willing to work, or perish in the attempt. It is going to call parliament at the earliest possible date after July 28 and take such steps as will end this tragic condition of unemployment and bring prosperity to the country as a whole. . . . Mr. King promises consideration of the problem of unemployment. I promise to end unemployment. Which plan do you like best?

At Victoria on June 17 he said:

> We cannot tolerate the dole. Men and women of this country want work, not charity. . . . Is there any excuse for Canada to have hard times if the government is discharging its duties as it should?

Then he spoke in Quebec as follows:

> There was no necessity for a conference on unemployment, he continued. The solution was too apparent. "What you want is work," he exclaimed, "not conferences, and you are going to get work." Unless his promises to the people of Canada were kept if elected to office, Mr. Bennett said he wanted Quebec and other members of his party to vote him out of office.

Let me give a brief review of the legislation that has been passed. In 1930, at the special session, some tariff changes were introduced, and the Prime Minister and other speakers on the other side declared that these changes would result in increased employment in Canada. Well, looking back over the years that have passed since that time, one cannot help thinking that the $20,000,000 then voted for relief at that particular session was but a smoke screen for the raising of the tariff to the height at which it was increased at that special session. Speaking at that time the Prime Minister told us that the numbers of unemployed in Canada were 117,000 as at that date and that it was possible that they might increase during the winter to 177,000. But he told us with all the force at his command that these tariff changes would bring about the employment of at least 25,000 men and thus reduce the number of unemployed. The ex-Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) at that time an earnest admirer of his leader, in whom he said, in 1930, he had the greatest confidence—he has changed his mind somewhat in the intervening years, as a great many other people in this dominion have done—made the statement that there would be an even greater number employed than the estimate of the Prime Minister would indicate. On page 319 of Hansard of September 17, 1930, he said:

> The right hon. gentleman says that the consumers will suffer. I will tell him and those around him what will happen. When these measures, which are now in existence, if they are not defeated—and they certainly will not be—are in full effect, they will provide work for some 30,000 to 50,000 industrialists in this country.

How far this estimate of the ex-Minister of Trade and Commerce was justified can be judged by the figures which I will subsequently submit. It is now common knowledge, I think, that the changes which were made in the tariff in 1930, again in 1931 and in subsequent years, aggravated if they did not create the sweatshop labour conditions which we have recently witnessed. We find in the speech from the throne in 1931 that these words are put into his excellency's mouth:

> My government has explored the origins of our difficulties and is firmly of the belief that many of our problems do not arise out of world wide depression, but are antecedent to it; and that domestic factors have also largely determined the degree of economic distress from which this country is suffering.

What were the antecedent conditions we find indicated by the next paragraph in which, true to Conservative policy, it is stated that what needed changing was the tariff; and we were assured that the changes brought about in 1930 and those that would be introduced in 1931 would be the cure-all for the evils from which the country was suffering. In the session of 1932, which opened on February 4, we find this statement:

> The provisions made at the last session of parliament for unemployment and farm relief are proving effective.

Proving effective? Why, just three months prior to that the late Senator Gideon Robertson, at that time Minister of Labour, had given out the statement that in September, 1931, there were 530,000 out of work in Canada. In fairness one should point out that it was also stated at that time that of the 530,000, some 150,000 were agriculturists in the west, but even at that we have to start the winter of 1931 with the startling figure of some 400,000 souls in Canada out of work. During the winter of 1931-32 there was put into operation a public works program in co-operation with the municipalities and the provinces. That this government recognized late in 1931 that this was a national problem is borne out by the fact that the order in council passed after the first unemployment relief act stated as follows:

> Whereas unemployment is primarily a municipal and provincial responsibility, it has been so general throughout Canada as to constitute a national concern.

I ask hon. members to note that, because as we trace the years down, we shall find a decided change on the part of the government. Encouraged by the dominion government, without guidance and without the relief commission suggested by my right hon. leader at the time and at subsequent sessions in order that there might be cooperation not only between the dominion and the provinces but among the dominion, the provinces and the municipalities, the municipalities, seeing what seemed to them at that time to be easy money, launched into an orgy of spending which in many cases has left them almost bankrupt. During the session of 1931-32, municipalities built everything from the town pump at $200 right up to one project on which the city of Toronto spent some $2,500,000. Some two hundred and thirty-six municipalities in Ontario alone took advantage of what appeared to them to be easy money. They were paying only fifty per cent of the cost, but they forgot that even if it was only fifty per cent, there would be a day of reckoning. In Ontario, under the encouragement of the government of the day and without any guidance, as I have said, we spent some $20,000,000 of which the municipalities paid fifty per cent. In spite of that, in spite of these public expenditures the total number taking direct relief in January, 1932, was 741,000, and in May of that year there were still 569,000 on direct relief. Too late the government recognized that this particular scheme of giving money to the provinces and through them to the municipalities was a mistake, and we find for the first and perhaps the only time that even the present Prime Minister, speaking in London immediately after the session of 1932, was just a little pessimistic, when one considers the character of the right hon. gentleman. Speaking in London on June 1, 1932, as reported in the press of the following day, the right hon. gentleman had this to say:

It has been said that during the election campaign I promised to cure unemployment Under normal conditions I think I would have done so.

Does this sound like the man who was prepared to blast his way through all our troubles and difficulties? There was a doubt in his mind. Were the Prime Minister and his government called upon to cure the unemployment situation in normal times? Yet we find him stating in June, 1932, that he thought he might have cured unemployment had normal times returned. Did the right hon. gentleman at that moment have any constructive suggestion to make with respect to the cure of unemployment? No; instead he delivered one of his famous lectures, of which he is so fond, to the Canadian people. He told us that the Canadian people stood in need of the discipline which the depression was bringing. These were his words:

The amazing prosperity of the years before 1930 cost the people of Canada much in the loss of discipline. Luxuries became necessities. Men and women yielded to the mad caprices of the moment. Every man had to have every luxury. People would buy nothing made in Canada if they could buy from some place else. To-day self-reliance and restraint are needed to meet the crisis in the nation's life.

I am sure the house will agree with me that the average farmer, workingman or citizen did not spend his money in riotous living and does not deserve the punishment he has been taking during these years from 1930 to 1935. What nonsense to say that the people of Canada would not buy in this country if they could buy somewhere else when we find that between 1923 and 1930 industrial production mounted more than double. Yet the Prime Minister continues to give these lectures to the people of Canada. Does it lighten the load, does it help the people to bear the burden under which they are suffering to-day to be told, as we were on Thursday last, that our children are healthier because of the food that the authorities buy for them? Does it help to lighten the load to know that the food for which people have to line up, taking not even cash but voucher tickets to some grocer or butcher, is going to make their children a little healthier, or that the lives of the wives who are wearing dresses that have been turned into the relief quarters will be lengthened a little by the clothes they are wearing? Those were the remarks the Prime Minister made as late as Thursday of last week.

The session of 1932-33 was opened on October 7, 1932, with a direct admission on the part of the Prime Minister that the scheme of public works in this country had been abandoned and we were to go upon this dole which he abhorred, which shocked the national conscience, and in fact an unorganized dole at that. Unemployment was mounting by leaps and bounds, those on direct relief at that particular time, February, 1933, numbering 1,395,961. Yet at the opening of the session of 1934, we find in the speech from the throne these words:

Since prorogation, my government, under the authority of the Relief Act, 1933, have continued to assist financially the provinces in the discharge of their constitutional obligations.

What those obligations are, we find when we read Hansard of April 10, 1934. On that day the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) was recalling to the Prime Minister his famous speech in Calgary on June 13, 1930, in which he stated—and I shall read not more than a line or two:

I will not permit this country with my voice or vote to ever become committed to the dole system

Then the hon. member completed the paragraph in which the Prime Minister stated that he would give work to all. The hon. member for West Edmonton continued:

I do not think I need to read any more, but I have here a great many statements of a similar character that were made by the right hon. gentleman. I say, as I have said on former occasions, that I assumed the right hon. gentleman meant what he said when he used those words.

Mr. Bennett: So he did. I said it was a national problem, and so it was.

Mr. Stewart (Edmonton): A national problem, and you were going to provide work.

Mr. Bennett: Certainly.

Mr. Stewart (Edmonton): And not doles.

Mr. Bennett: We did not provide the doles. The provinces provide the doles.

What an amazing answer! What an amazing admission by the Prime Minister of this country!

We are assisting the provinces to discharge their constitutional obligations. We do not provide the doles, the provinces provide the doles.

Let me tell you the situation as we have had it in Ontario during 1934. Immediately following the interprovincial conference in January of last year the then Premier of Ontario, returning to Toronto, announced the substitution of a big public works program for direct relief, to be put into effect as rapidly as possible. That is the report in the Mail and Empire of Saturday, January 20, 1934—

... We in Ontario will carry on as before with the assurance that the dominion government will cooperate to the fullest extent.

With the assurance that the dominion would cooperate with the Ontario government during 1934, an assurance which has not yet been denied by the Prime Minister or the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon), the Premier of Ontario launched into a tremendous road building program in May, 1934. New roads were opened, old roads were widened, ditches were filled, in a frantic effort to win the election in Ontario; and now after some $8,000,000 has been spent throughout the counties of Ontario the dominion government refuse to contribute its share and the province and the municipalities of Ontario are left holding the bag.

I say further in connection with Ontario, and I assume the situation is similar in other provinces, that they have been left in a state of uncertainty during these years in view of the fact that the Prime Minister and the government have frequently threatened to cut off relief at any moment. There has been no set program, nothing to enable the provinces to say: This is the program; this is the policy of the dominion government, and we are prepared to march forward in cooperation with it. Yet during all these years, as pointed out by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, enormous sums have been spent by this government; as of March 28, 1934, guarantees of some $96,000,000, loans to the provinces of some $52,000,000, and cash under relief measures amounting to $115,000,000. Having spent these enormous sums I claim that my right hon. leader was correct when he urged even at the very first session that there should be an audit of these various expenditures. One has only to look at the report of the auditor general, not only of last year but of this year, in which he complains that he has been understaffed, that the scope of his examinations has been limited because he has not been given the required assistance, and that large sums of money had been over-contributed by the dominion, as indicated on page 25 of his report. From the report of unemployment commissioner Hereford, we find that he has a staff of only some thirty-five to administer this huge matter, and when one considers that only a few days ago in the course of discussion on the unemployment insurance measure we heard that there might be a commission with a staff of three or four thousand people, one realizes exactly how little the government have really studied this situation. They are prepared now, and I am not finding any fault with it, to set up an economic council; yet when we urged them repeatedly to set up an unemployment commission they steadfastly refused.

In spite of all that has been said with respect to these figures—and I have shown how they have mounted—what has happened? As the hon. member for Vancouver Centre has shown, in spite of all these things the Prime Minister has been going up and down this country and from one end to the other telling the people of Canada that we are on the road to prosperity. I propose to give only one or two quotations. Speaking at Montreal on May 11, 1931, he said:

At Ottawa on January 31, 1932, in a new year's message, he said:

In my belief the worst is over. Canada has survived the crisis, and the same spirit and the same strength which have withstood the stress and strain of the past year will carry us over all intervening difficulties into an era of prosperity hitherto unknown.

In December, 1932, at London, he said:

Next year will see the beginning of an era of prosperity.

At Winnipeg on October 10, 1933, he said:

Canada is standing on the threshold of recovery.

On December 3, 1933, he told an audience at Sherbrooke, Quebec:

There are distinct evidences the catastrophe has ended. The dead rock bottom of the depression has been reached.

Then as late as the summer of 1934 we find him telling a Montreal audience:

I believe we have passed and left behind us the great depression we encountered in 1929 and 1930.... We are standing on the threshold of a greater progress and a greater prosperity than we have ever known.

All during these years we have been at the dead rock bottom, climbing the hill, turning the corner, weathering the storm, seeing the light, and in all that time the Prime Minister, to whom we looked for leadership in connection with this all important problem, was giving us this bright picture as he saw it. It culminated on January 2 of this year—that is an important date—with the new Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hanson) publishing a full page advertisement entitled Canadian Cavalcade. In the background we see boats lying at the piers, the smoke belching from the factories, the wheat fields being reaped with combines, and we read these lines, amazing in view of what took place that very evening:

As the year 1934 passes into history, Canada can look back upon a period of unimpaired progress so definitely sustained that it has brought us to the pathway that leads to a sound, sensible, and stable prosperity. The advance that we, as a country, have made during the past year has demonstrated anew the inherent strength and stability of the dominion. We have seen the faith to which we held so firmly in the darker days abundantly fulfilled—the confidence to which we clung in gloomier years triumphantly vindicated. With clearer skies above us, and firmer ground beneath our feet, we have advanced with unimpaired progress along the road of national reconstruction and economic recuperation.

How was the new Minister of Trade and Commerce to know that his leader, who had been recognized as—

At once the cook and the captain bold
And the mate of the Nancy brig.
And the bo'sun tight and the midshipmite,
And the crew of the Nancy brig—

—was that very evening to sail this ship, that has been referred to so often during the various addresses of the Prime Minister, into a sea uncharted and unknown; that he would within a few hours jettison the whole Tory policy in an attempt to save the ship; that he would nail to the masthead not the flag of progress but the flag of Tory despair?

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, February 26, 1935

The house met at three o'clock.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

Hon. J. D. CHAPLIN (Lincoln) moved:

That the standing committee on banking and commerce be empowered to sit while the house is sitting.

Motion agreed to.

EIGHT HOUR DAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, and purely as a matter of procedure, may I bring to the attention of the cabinet ministers page 109 of the votes and proceedings for February 8. They will see on that page something to which I shall direct their attention. Whereas the eight hour day convention appears to have lapsed since 1921 is it the intention of the government to proceed with the bill based on such convention? This is stupendous, but it lapsed fourteen years ago.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister): In answer to the hon. member for Témiscouata may I say this matter will be brought to the attention of the Prime Minister, and the question may be asked when the resolution standing in his name is before the house.

SALE OF BUTTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir). Yesterday the minister gave a complete answer with regard to charges to the effect that adulterated butter was being put on the Montreal market. Has the minister any further information he could give the house to-day?

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): Only this, that our chief inspector has been instructed to get in touch with the organization which made the statement to see if they can give any information which will enable the department to make any more thorough investigation than has already been made.

PUBLIC WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau). In the law passed last year concerning an expenditure of $40,000,000 for public works it is stated that tenders must be asked before works are proceeded with. I should like to ask the minister if tenders for the harbour works of Quebec are being asked publicly, by way of the newspapers, or are they asked only from private firms.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): Mr. Speaker, in connection with those public works of the Department of Marine, tenders have been asked from a certain number of private firms. In some cases, as many as ten firms were invited to tender.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Why not public tenders?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Because, as the house was told last session, these were relief works, and we thought it was better to have—

Mr. NEILL: Relief for whom?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The government and my department thought it was more advisable to have the work done by local contractors so as to relieve unemployment in the locality.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Is it not a fact that only the friends of my hon. friend's party have been asked to tender?

Mr. DURANLEAU: My hon. friend from Quebec East is entirely wrong.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister): Yesterday the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) asked a question about the withdrawal of Paraguay from the League of Nations. In reply I would say that the government has been informed that Paraguay has given formal notice to the secretary general of the League of Nations of her intention to withdraw from the league.

The hon. member for Témiscouata inquired what stand had been taken by the Canadian government in the matter. No stand in the matter has been taken by the government of Canada nor by the government of any other member of the league. Under article 1, section 3 of the covenant "any member of the league may, after two years' notice of its intention so to do, withdraw from the league, provided that all its international obligations and all its obligations under this covenant shall have been fulfilled at the time of its withdrawal."

It will be noted that withdrawal from the league cannot in any case take effect until two years after notice has been given.

Mr. POULIOT: Thank you very much.

NORTH BATTLEFORD ENUMERATORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the acting leader of the government. Under the Dominion Franchise Act assented to July 3, 1934, the government appointed a dominion franchise commissioner. The commissioner then appointed registrars for the 245 electoral districts in Canada. The registrars in turn appointed the necessary enumerators to record the electors for voting purposes throughout Canada. Correspondence received from the North Battleford constituency—

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. gentleman to put his question.

[Mr. Duranleau.]

Mr. McINTOSH: I am just coming to it, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. MEMBER: Make a speech some other day.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am not making any speech at all.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. McINTOSH: I was stating, Mr. Speaker, that correspondence received from the North Battleford constituency states that many enumerators have not yet beeen paid for services rendered. Now my question is this—

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask the hon. gentleman to make the foundation for his question as brief and as much to the point as possible, and then put his question.

Mr. McINTOSH: I am endeavouring to do that, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. MEMBER: Without any circumlocution.

Mr. McINTOSH: My question is this: Since money is scarce and debt-collecting legislation is the order of the day, will the minister investigate the matter and see that all enumerators not yet paid for work done months ago shall be paid forthwith?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I will have inquiries made.

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): As a matter of fact, on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I may say that the franchise commissioner is not appointed by the government, and the present commissioner was not appointed by the government. He was appointed by this House of Commons.

SUPPLY—UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

AMENDMENT TO MOTION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Monday, February 25, consideration of the motion of the Minister of Finance that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself again into committee of supply, and on the proposed amendment of Mr. Mackenzie (Vancouver).

Mr. R. W. GRAY (West Lambton): Mr. Speaker, when the house adjourned last night I was about to compare the Prime Minister's radio addresses with his previous speeches during the years from 1931 to 1934 in which he had pictured in glowing terms the steady return of prosperity to the Dominion of Canada. But those pictures glowing as they were, were as nothing compared with the full-page advertisement of the new Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hanson) published on the morning of January 2, entitled "Canadian Cavalcade." Hon. gentlemen will recall that it was on the evening of that same day that the Prime Minister commenced his radio broadcast. Reading that advertisement in the morning, and then tuning in the radio at night to listen to the Prime Minister's first address, is it any wonder that Canadians listened with amazement as they heard the Prime Minister of Canada in his opening remarks say: "This is a critical hour in the history of our country. The signs of recovery are few and doubtful. The signs of trouble are many, and they do not lessen." Someone listening to that broadcast and having read the previous speeches of the right hon. the Prime Minister was reminded of those words of Goldsmith:

> Words of learned length and thundering sound
> Amazed the gazing rustics ranged around;
> And still they gazed, and still the wonder grew.

And still the wonder grew, Mr. Speaker, as his listeners heard the Prime Minister in that radio address once more denounce the dole. "I am against the dole," he said, "it mocks our claim to progress."

We awaited subsequent addresses to see just what the Prime Minister had in mind to substitute for the dole. My hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) last night gave some figures showing the exact number of unemployed in Canada to-day. The Acting Prime Minister (Sir George Perley) said that we should not give those figures, that it would hurt the credit of Canada; but I say to him as I say to this house that it is time that the people of Canada knew the exact state of affairs; it is time that this national government gave some leadership to the dominion, and it is much better that we should know these facts and figures and have them on record in order that the people may realize the exact state of affairs if we are going to go on having municipalities default in interest payments and provinces struggling along on the verge of bankruptcy.

In November, 1934 we had on direct relief in this dominion something over 1,000,000 people. We had in December, 1934, 1,107,000 people on relief, and we had in January of this year 1935, 1,183,962 people on direct relief in this dominion.

His listeners were amazed to hear the Prime Minister once again declare that he would end unemployment. We listened, all of us, interested to see what the Prime Minister might bring forth to end this all-important problem. We have had some legislation brought down, which I have not the time to review here. We have had unemployment insurance, and it has been shown I think conclusively that it will not assist those who are unemployed to-day, and that even those who are employed will not share in its benefits until at least some two years have elapsed. We have had the question of the minimum wage and the hours of labour, but there is not anything radical in a forty-eight hour week. In my own city of Sarnia we have had for some two years, in a plant employing some 1,700 men, a forty hour week and an eight hour day, and yet I hold in my hand a dispatch in the press of that city to-day showing that the relief costs of that city for unemployment have been fairly steady. They show that the relief costs in 1934 were greater than in 1933. There is nothing radical therefore or anything that will greatly take up the slack of unemployment in a maximum forty-eight hour working week.

Then we have had the question of the revision of the Old Age Pensions Act. We recall, all of us, that the Prime Minister in 1930 stated that the national government would pay the full 100 per cent of the old age pension. I grant that as time goes on it is quite possible that the Old Age Pensions Act may need some revision, but that is not legislation that is new, and do not forget, as this country will not forget, that it was the Liberal government of my right hon. leader that placed that act upon the statute books.

Then we heard the Prime Minister say that he would appoint an economic council. That is good in itself, but what in the world will an economic council do to cure the unemployment situation? Why come forward now with the appointment of an economic council when for the last four or five years the Prime Minister has consistently refused the suggestion of my right hon. leader that a national council be set up to study the whole unemployment question in cooperation with the provinces and municipalities? Then we had fully one-half of a radio speech in which the Prime Minister said that he would abolish the no par value stock. That is rather strange coming from him at a time when, only a few months ago, a motion made by my hon. friend from Last Mountain (Mr. Butcher) was turned down by this very government. But does he think that the abolition of no par value stock will help the unemployment situation or touch the fringe of the dangers which he hopes to prevent in connection with speculations in company promotions? No; these things, good as they may be, do not begin to get at the fundamentals of the situation. My hon. friend from Vancouver Centre last night quoted from the actuarial report prepared by Mr. Wolfenden in which he set out the causes of unemployment. Mr. Wolfenden, in gathering the data necessary to prepare this report, went into all the facts surrounding the question of unemployment; and when one reads the reasons he gives as the basis for his report to the Prime Minister, the reasons for the causes of unemployment in Canada, one finds that it is one of the greatest indictments of the policies of this government since its inception, and that the Prime Minister stands indicted to-day before the bar of public opinion on the strength of that report.

I am supporting this resolution, which is purely and simply a motion of want of confidence in the government, because I believe that the people of this country have lost confidence in hon. gentlemen opposite. That is evidenced not only by the by-elections that have taken place since 1932 but by the fact that the leader of the government has even lost faith in himself.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GRAY: Hon. gentlemen may draw their own conclusions, but speaking in Toronto on Saturday last the Prime Minister said that the election will come like a thief in the night. This was an address given to the young Canadian Conservative Clubs of Canada. I doubt whether the illustration was a very apt one coming from the Prime Minister to these young Canadians, but I will let that pass. The Prime Minister has always told us that he means exactly what he says. Well then, if he means exactly what he says in this statement, he is afraid to face the people in the open and will come with his election like a thief in the night. Let me say this to the Prime Minister, that the people of Canada have learned to protect themselves since 1930 and that he will not steal this election.

My time is almost up and I will not go into questions which might easily be raised in reference to what can be done towards solving this all-important problem that faces us. The Prime Minister said as recently as a week ago last Saturday that he knows the answer to the question. Speaking in New York on February 16, in an address to the Canadian Society, he made this statement:

> I would find it impossible to conceive and develop a scheme of recovery and reform unless I first had definitely decided upon the answer to it.

[Mr. Gray.]

If the right hon. gentleman has the answer, if he knows what the solution is for the problem that we are faced with, it is not contained in these radio addresses, splendid as they were from the oratorical point of view. If the right hon. gentleman has the answer—and he says he has—then in the name of everything that is just and right let him give that answer to-day to the people of Canada.

Hon. RAYMOND D. MORAND (East Essex): Yesterday we witnessed a member of the guard on the other side trying to blow a bit of fire back into the dying embers of the Liberal party. He used the bellows to the best possible advantage, but unfortunately the embers were cold, and they fell rather on useless and burned out ashes. I was rather surprised that a new leader had come forward with a policy and ideas of his own—pious wishes it would be better to say—as to how this great problem can be solved. He was unsupported by the Napoleon of the party, who I see is in his seat to-day; nor was the Marshal Ney of the party, the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe), there to support him. I wonder if it is a plan projected, that he and those who are supporting him to-day shall parade from one end of Canada to the other appealing to those to whom his particular type of oratory and that particular type of call which he is making has an appeal, leaving free his leaders to remain with the laissez-faire class that will help them to put over the election. With that amount of fire and vim he always puts into his speeches, when he began yesterday I had hoped that he would bring some new fuel to the dying embers. I had hoped that possibly he had something to hand to the Canadian people, the unemployed of this country, something that would bring them some solace and help. But he just added another regret to that litany of regrets which we have heard from the opposition benches during the last five years.

It is interesting to read the amendment to the resolution as submitted by the hon. member. His amendment reads:

> That all the words after the word "That" in the motion be struck out, and the following substituted therefor:
> This house regrets that, notwithstanding the specific promises made prior to the election of 1930, and many times since reiterated, and despite the fact that extraordinary powers to deal with unemployment have been repeatedly secured from parliament, the present administration, after nearly five years of office, has not yet submitted to parliament any definite or effective policy to deal with widespread actual unemployment or distress which continues to be Canada's most urgent national problem.

I am sure that will be some comfort to the unemployed of Canada. For five years I have listened to members on the other side; for five years I have hoped that possibly, with plenty of time on their hands and with the experience they have had, they might suggest some constructive bit of advice to those on this side in working out the problems that face this country; for five years I have hoped that possibly they would hold out the hand of cooperation and of help to assist Canada in solving this great problem. But they have consistently, from the very beginning, found more solace in the difficulties of the government than in their desire to help. I heard repeated again yesterday that same line which they hope to get across to the public—the supposedly broken promises of the Prime Minister. Why, they laugh at it themselves. One could repeat it almost without notes; hon. gentlemen opposite have reiterated it so often. But it is sometimes necessary to see clearly before you can remove the beam from your own eyes. I wonder if any of the members opposite have read the platform of 1919. I wonder if any of them know what was in that platform. I wonder if any of them have read the resolution?

Mr. DUFF: Ask the Minister of Railways.

Mr. MORAND: I wonder if any of them have read the resolution on labour sponsored by the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King)—sponsored well in a good speech, because one must remember that at that time he was preaching for a call and he made a mighty good speech. It is interesting to read just a bit of that resolution.

Mr. JACOBS: Let us take it as read.

Mr. MORAND: I am quite sure that hon. members would like to take that resolution of 1919 as read; they would like to see it buried because it brings to the Canadian people a long line of inactivity, a long line of forgotten promises that make those of the Prime Minister pale into insignificance. I am going to read just a few of them:

> The committee recommends that the national Liberal convention accept in their entirety as a part of the Liberal platform, in the spirit they have been framed, and in so far as the special circumstances of the country will permit the terms of the Labour convention and general principles associated with the League of Nations and incorporated in the conditions of peace.

Anyone reading that would know who wrote it. It is circumscribed by so many doors that one can get out of that only one in this house could be the author. I am not going to read it all.

Mr. DUFF: Yes, read it all.

Mr. MORAND: I am sure it will make very pleasant reading for hon. gentlemen opposite who will read it all when they have more time. The third clause—and this is taken from the platform of 1919, the platform upon which hon. gentlemen opposite got into power—reads:

> 3. The payment to the employed of a wage adequate to maintain a reasonable standard of life as this is understood in their time and country.
> 4. The adoption of an eight hour day or a forty-eight hour week as the standard to be aimed at where it has not already been attained.
> 5. The adoption of a weekly rest of at least twenty-four hours, which should include Sunday wherever practicable.
> 6. The abolition of child labour and the imposition of such limitations on the labour of young persons as shall permit the continuation of their education and assure their proper physical development.
> 7. The principle that men and women should receive equal remuneration for work of equal value.

But this is the gem:

> That in so far as may be practicable, having regard for Canada's financial position, an adequate system of insurance against unemployment, sickness, dependence in old age, and other disability, which would include old age pensions, widows' pensions, and maternity benefits should be instituted by the federal government in conjunction with the governments of the several provinces; and on matters pertaining to the industrial and social legislation an effort should be made to overcome any question of jurisdiction between the dominion and the provinces by effective cooperation between the several governments.

That was in 1919. We have listened to hon. members opposite talk about the wonderful prosperity that prevailed under their regime. We have heard them talk about the wonderful financial conditions that existed during their term of office and about the wonderful cooperation they had with the provinces. Despite that, we find ourselves at this late stage with all of this program unfulfilled and no attempt made to fulfil it. Some attempt has been made to say that because the Senate was opposed, these schemes were not put into effect, but I can remember the welkin ringing with the phrase "Reform the Senate." The Liberal party was nine years in power, but the Senate remained unreformed. When we hear hon. gentlemen opposite day after day recalling the broken promises of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett); when we realize the condition of the country during his term of office and compare it with conditions that exist throughout the world, and when they are to-day confronted with a list of unfulfilled promises such as those I have cited, never again should we hear from the other side talk about broken promises on the part of the Prime Minister.

Yesterday I heard the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) finding fault with many of the works that had been accomplished by this government. For instance, I heard him find fault with the wheat control. I wonder whether those in the prairie provinces who were able with the help of the government to maintain the price of wheat at the point they did will welcome the criticism leveled at that piece of work. I wonder whether the railroad workers who were retained at work because of advances to the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian National will consider this was an improper spending of money in order to keep the railway shops open.

During yesterday's discussion we had a reiteration of the nine points that were submitted during the last five years, those nine points that are supposed now to be the new chart of the Liberal party.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Fourteen.

Mr. MORAND: Apparently there were some that the member thought he had better not name because Hansard records only nine. I think they are worth going over and bringing to the attention of the unemployed who find the time of the house being taken up in a discussion of this kind. These are the points:

1. A dominion-provincial conference to consider the financial relations of the provinces and the dominion.

I wonder just how much help that would be to the unemployed. We have had four such conferences already and in regard to two provinces we know only too well their financial situation.

2. That unemployment was Canada's most urgent national problem, and strongly advocated a representative national commission to coordinate all national effort and to cooperate with the provinces and municipalities in the administration of unemployment relief.

Do the unemployed of this country complain of the way in which the relief has been handled?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. MORAND: Some hon. members say yes, but that is not what my hon. friends are speaking about. They say: We want to stop unemployment; we want to give these people work. I am sure we on this side agree with that, but I am satisfied that the relief work that has been done for the unemployed has been done as well as it could have been by any central administration. Surely those in the municipalities who know the unemployed, who are close to them, are in a much better position to take care of them than any one commission such as suggested in this clause with central headquarters could have done.

3. That there should be an audit by the federal government of all expenditure of public moneys.

That, to my mind, would simply help the unemployed auditors. Surely we cannot tell the provinces that their auditors, their audits and their accounts are not correct.

Mr. VENIOT: You are doing that now.

Mr. MORAND: I am sure that again will be a great solace to the unemployed.

4. That all moneys for relief purposes should be voted for specific purposes and voted by parliament.

To me that is just threshing words.

5. We opposed—

I have heard that expression so much since I have been here.

5. We opposed voting public moneys in lump sums and we opposed the blank cheque—a government policy which subsequently resulted in a colossal wastage of public money.

6. We opposed giving to the executive the power of legislating by order in council with respect to peace, order and good government.

When I hear my hon. friend the member for West Lambton (Mr. Gray) joining in this cry of opposition to orders in council I am sure he must have in the back of his mind what is happening in Ontario, where the province has been governed by orders in council since last June, both as to matters that are ordinarily done by orders in council and even in matters of public policy.

Mr. GRAY: It has been well governed anyway.

An hon. MEMBER: And that is some change.

Mr. MORAND:

I am not going to spend much more time reading this, but apparently hon. gentlemen opposite hang their whole hope of restoring the prosperity upon a change in tariffs. We have heard time and time again that the tariffs are too high, that protection is ruining this country, and along that line ad infinitum. I wonder how those in my city, I wonder how those in the city of Sarnia and many other cities, would like to see the bars taken down and the ten or fifteen million unemployed of the United States put to work to supply the wants of the Canadian people, while they were put on unemployment relief. Nothing else could result. It is not a question of what we do with the tariff; the gates of trade were closed against us long before this government came into power, and other nations do not propose to open them. If there is one thing I am proud of about this government it is that they have shown that they propose at least to keep within this country the work which is available for us. I have heard some rather peculiar expressions since I came to this house. For instance it is such a common dictum that it has almost been assumed as an axiom that we must buy if we are to sell. Then in the same breath they tell you that the wealth of the country depends upon our external trade. But if you must buy every time you sell then the wealth of the country is not increased. I will go further; if you close one factory in my town that throws a thousand people out of work what is the consequence? You may ship wheat to the other side of the ocean to feed another thousand people, but you have a thousand on this side that you will have to keep on relief, and it takes no more wheat to feed that thousand on the other side than it does to feed the thousand on this side, and you have to pay the transportation charges besides to agencies from which we gain no profit whatsoever.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. GOTT: It is the truth that hurts.

Mr. MORAND: During the entire speech of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre yesterday and of the hon. member for West Lambton, did we hear a single word of commendation or praise for the work that has been done by this government? Did we hear them mention any good that came from the Ottawa agreements, any good that came from the public works undertaken throughout this whole dominion to give work to the unemployed? Did we hear them comment favourably upon the way relief was handled? Did we hear them say anything in commendation of the marketing bill, of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, of the Canadian farm loan board, of the eight-hour day, of the unemployment insurance measure and amendments to the Companies Act? Had they anything good to say of the work, started by this government and now in process, of the price spreads and mass buying commission whose report is expected soon, or of the treaties with foreign nations, of the support of the wheat market, aid to the railway workers, the abolition of dumping that would have thrown our men out of work? To-day the Prime Minister and his government are amplifying this work already so well begun and are providing in the legislation now before the house and to be brought down a plan that will go still further and continue to help those in this country who are in difficulty. And what do we find? The first thing is an attack upon its constitutionality. I have heard that word ever since I came here in 1925. It won an election, I believe, in 1926 but I doubt that the people will again fall for constitutional issues.

One thing I resent is the attitude of the other side that they and they alone have sympathy for those who are in difficulty, that they and they alone are anxious about the unemployed, that they and they alone are looking for a way out. I believe that those on this side who are carrying the burden, those upon whose shoulders the responsibility falls, those who so unfairly are held accountable for conditions, have the fullest realization of what they have to do and what they should try to do, and I am satisfied that they will do it. When the people of this country are called upon to pass judgment upon these reform measures, these measures of amelioration, these advances in legislation, this progress, I wonder to whom they will turn. Will they turn to those who believe that these measures are the illegitimate children of a violated constitution, or will they turn to those who believe them constitutional and will father them and finish their work and carry this program through so that the Canadian people may resume their way towards the prosperity that they have a right to enjoy.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, throughout the course of several speeches we have been listening to the kettle calling the pot black or the pot calling the kettle black, whichever way one would put it.

Mr. JACOBS: You call it red.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is not my purpose to enter into that aspect of the discussion. The amendment presented is I think one that we in this corner cannot avoid supporting, although I say frankly that I regret having to support an amendment bolstered up by such speeches as we had yesterday. The amendment states that:

The present administration, after nearly five years of office, has not yet submitted to parliament any definite or effective policy to deal with widespread or actual unemployment or distress which continues to be Canada's most urgent national problem.

I agree with that statement. I think we may all admit that we have not had brought forward in the last five years anything that effectively deals with this problem.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Has any other country?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: An hon. gentleman says. Has any other country? No. I frankly admit that no country has altogether solved the problem, but I do say that some other countries have been more successful than we have.

An hon. MEMBER: Name them.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Great Britain for one.

Mr. MANION: They have more unemployed in relation to population than we have.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, and further than that the point I wish to emphasize is that many of us do not believe that the problems are solvable under the existing capitalistic system. We say that frankly.

Mr. MacNICOL: Go to Russia.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: And we do not believe that we can justly hold either the Liberal party or the Conservative party wholly responsible for failing to solve these problems. They cannot do it under the system under which they are working. But we do say that as long as either of these parties clings to the existing system it is bound at least to take reasonable care of the citizens of this country. This the government so far has not done. It is quite true that we are considering a provision for unemployment insurance which will help a certain limited group of people in a very inadequate fashion, but the Prime Minister himself has declared that this is not a relief policy and will not assist any of those now unemployed. Nor has the Prime Minister seen fit so far in this session to bring down any program dealing with the unemployment question. We in this corner have been patiently awaiting that program through the weeks that have passed, but there is no indication that any such statement is forthcoming. The Prime Minister has stated that he does not like the dole. None of us do. There is more than a suspicion that the government is seeking more and more to throw the responsibility for unemployment relief upon the provinces and municipalities, and that at a time when a good many of the municipalities are practically bankrupt. As I said the other day, I do not think we should let this parliament prorogue without having had placed before us a well thought out scheme for dealing with the actual situation which confronts us.

Sometimes I feel very weary indeed when year after year we have to bring up this question of unemployment. I think it was in 1922, some thirteen years ago, that I first introduced a motion on going into supply that something should be done with regard to unemployment, and year after year we have had to call the attention of the house to this same question. We have tried to point out the actual conditions throughout the country. We have tried to show the cost of unemployment. From time to time we have tried to analyze the economic conditions that lead to unemployment. We have tried to advance certain schemes, such as the housing scheme and others, which would seem to be a practical way of beginning to deal with this question. We have gone into the more fundamental matters and urged that unemployment is bound to remain with us as long as we operate under this profit system. We have done all this. It is not my purpose to-day to go into the question of the constitutional responsibilities. Both sides of this house in turn have acknowledged that this is a national problem, and I think the government could not but receive support from all sides of the house if they were bold enough to initiate a thorough going national scheme for dealing with the present unemployment situation. I do not propose to go into the statistics of the matter; we have had statistics until our heads fairly swim with them. It is not statistics we want; it is action. I do not think even the supporters of the government will venture to say that there is anything before us yet or likely to come before us that will really solve this problem or affectively assist this large number of our unemployed fellow Canadian citizens.

I should like for a few minutes, if I might, to get away from the atmosphere of this house—

Mr. SPENCE: The door is not locked.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Oh, yes; someone says the door is not locked and that we may go. It is very easy to make a joke of these things, but I earnestly ask hon. members of this house to allow me for a few minutes to try to make them realize what is involved in this unemployment question. I think, surely, every hon. member must know of at least some cases, among his circle of friends, of those who have been affected or whose homes have been affected by unemployment. Surely there must have been individual cases in which hon. members have become interested, where they have seen how people who have been unemployed for years have become demoralized. I can quite understand that if this problem continues very much longer we may have an even greater degree of crime than has developed in the last few years. I can understand that we are going to have a very large measure of inefficiency among the young men who have never learned to work. I can understand that we are going to have restlessness among great sections of the population that will be very serious in character. But notwithstanding this we seem to drift on from year to year. In fact it was only the other day that someone in this house referred to the people in the unemployment relief camps as being almost useless to society, suggesting that they should not have the right even to participate in elections.

I submit that as yet we have not realized just what is involved. A few months ago in the west I picked up this item from the newspaper. A twenty-one year old boy from Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, seeking to board a train near Regina, fell between the moving cars and was seriously injured. This young chap apparently had a home down near Halifax. He had a sister but no mother. He had gone west in the hope of securing a job. He got as far as Moose Jaw and then tried to board a freight train. I suppose technically that is an offence against the law, yet it is the only way by which large numbers of our people can get from place to place. This young chap fell between the cars and was seriously injured. As the men came to lift him up and take him to the hospital he exclaimed, "Kill me. I am no good for anything now." The desperation of that young man is the desperation of a great many young fellows throughout the country to-day, and I want to say that if it were not for the fact that some of us had a little higher standard of living and some reserves the position of that boy would have been the position of some of our own boys to-day. I cannot look at my own boys without thinking what their future would be if they did not have a little extra help from home. There was this young man from the east, apparently, by his name, a French Canadian, trying to make his way, going to the west and now considered almost a useless part of our society. I suppose, according to the Prime Minister's philosophy, God was not just as good to him as he was to the Prime Minister. I say that in all seriousness. I believe the Prime Minister's philosophy is an absolutely rotten philosophy. I want to say in all seriousness that if we are really reverent in our hearts we will recognize that young chaps like that have just as much right in Canada and just as much right to a full life in Canada as have the very foremost citizens of Canada.

Mr. MOORE (Châteauguay-Huntingdon): What did you know about that boy before that?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Nothing.

Mr. COTNAM: Then you are talking about something you know nothing about.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, I submit that if there is a question to be asked the hon. member should address the chair.

Miss MACPHAIL: And ask the permission of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I give that incident, Mr. Speaker, because in a somewhat dramatic way it brings before the house the essence of the problem we are facing. For a few moments I shall take the time of the house to read an article which I have had in my files for a couple of years. This article appeared in the Western Producer of September 28, 1933, and is signed by William George Rundle. I believe it is worth while to have one of these unemployed men address the house and tell us something of the problems they have to face.

I am in a relief camp. Penniless and homeless and destitute, I am one who is clothed and fed and housed by the government, and I am wondering what the world is doing. I am one who vizualizes electrically lighted streets, glittering automobiles, theatre lights, bakery windows, softly lighted restaurants and hears the soothing hum of conversation and the silvery peal of a woman's laughter. I am one apart and I am one of many.

Then, a little later on:

Who am I? I am a university graduate; behind me I have four years of university life and after my name I can write a degree. One of my friends—a fellow labourer—is a pharmacist, another a military engineer, another a medical student, another a school teacher—a former principal; another an artist—come to his tent and he will show you pastels, pen and ink sketches, hand engraved greeting cards and water colours of still life.

On all sides of me are men from every walk of life—the creeds and beliefs and religions of all nations. All nationalities, all the professions, all the trades and all the labouring divisions are gathered here.

We are complete. In our tent city set off in the Saskatchewan prairie we are a community to ourselves; we can cook; we can tailor; we can teach; we can fashion our own tools; we can design our own power plant and we can build it; we can lay out our own buildings and, those of us who are carpenters, can build them; we can lay out water mains and sewers and our plumbers can construct them; we can fill our own prescriptions; we can keep our own accounts; we can type our own letters.

And then at a later point he states:

A train whistles in the distance. We see the smoke trailing off in the deep blue sky and we hear the rolling clink of metal upon metal as the wavering wisps of smoke trail northwards; cars hum on the highway and in our minds we hear the thud and crunching of rubber on gravel. They pass us by. We are beings who pause and listen whilst behind the whispering line of poplars the world goes rolling by. Beyond is the life we have known;

And still later:

Above on our bell shaped canvas roofs we see slow moving grasshoppers clinging to the sloping sides and advancing to the peak of our frail shelter. Is there a lesson to be taken from the slow footed advance? Inevitably the grasshopper moves onward and upwards. Is it a sign? Are we to be patient and wait as we have waited through the years; through the first relief camp in 1931 and on to this, our third, in 1933?

He might very well have added, "Our fifth, in 1935." Then skipping a few paragraphs I read:

We are khaki clad men in army fatigue uniforms—

An hon. MEMBER: Take it as read.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. gentleman says, "Take it as read." No, he is going to listen to this for the next ten minutes, if he stays in the chamber. I insist that this man be heard. He is the representative of tens of thousands of our fellow citizens:

We are khaki clad men in army fatigue uniforms and heavy steel-plated artillery boots, plodding to work through the shifting sand. Our blankets are provided, and palliasses of straw, and our trousers and shirts, and socks and underwear, our shaving equipment and our towels and tooth brushes. We are numbers on a relief project, we rise, and work, and eat, and receive hospital treatment and retire to the sound of the bugle. Our day is mapped out for us. We follow definite rules. And we are numbered for equipment and record purposes.

Then in several paragraphs is contained a description of the routine of camp life. Following that he describes what occurs towards evening:

Old men congregate together. They seem satisfied and placidly look back over twenty years farming, discuss the trivial events of the day or perhaps they bend earnestly over a game of rummy, or sevens up, or a cribbage board. They hope for better things; they look for better things but for the nonce they wag their heads wisely and remain silent.

Middle aged men gather and converse in low tones, vainly and desperately seeking "the way out," attempting to formulate new policies or find the weak link in our economic armour. There is no definite bitterness. We are beyond bitterness as the hopeless days pass—with a never-ending succession of hopeless days ahead. In place of bitterness there is a thoughtful consideration of reported world conditions, of the conditions of the crops and the movements of Mr. R. B. Bennett. There is no violence but a realization that something must be done.

Eyes stray to khaki trousers, army blankets, and army fatigue shirts. Is it to last forever? Are we to be "kept" all our lives?

There is impatience—yes! Perhaps lips move in a mental addition of the month's wages at twenty cents a day. And then a hopeless shrug.

Nerves are kept well under control or else there would be heard the wild, straining cry: "Oh God! what next?"

There comes a silence, each man thoughtfully smoking, chin upon hand and staring sightlessly ahead—lantern light, sharp shadows, bronzed cupped faces and the white outline of shimmering canvas. Another day is passing and another day will soon be dawning. "Oh God! what next?"

After describing the work of the frontier college instructors, he states:

The younger men are interested and some of them attend or form classes. The majority however are "stiffs." For years they have been on relief and bitterness, like a canker, has passed and left an ever present wound. Willing but unwanted! Desire has changed to apathy and apathy to brooding and now the days are merely units that stretch as far back as the eye can see and as far ahead as the imagination can reach.

Then, as they are summoned to bed:

Is it in irony that the last post is played instead of lights out? The notes rise into the air and the stately, solemn sound sinks into each soul. Lamps go out. Voices are stilled.

The last note floats high into the air and dies in the rolling hills. We have become but a faint line of white and the prairie has folded over us, but within man upon man lies awake, and stares stony-eyed into the darkness.

"Oh, God! what next?"

Some hon. members may have thought that I have no right to read this description in the House of Commons. I submit that there is as much sense in that article, and a great deal more insight than is shown on many occasions by what is said on the floor of this chamber. It represents a point of view that is too little heard here and which to-day I ask should be considered. At the risk of wearisome iteration may I be permitted to give another example which I believe fairly well illustrates the position in which thousands of people find themselves to-day. Some friends of mine whom I have known about fifteen years had come some years previously from Poland.

This man and his wife were exceptionally high types of settlers. Leaving their native village in Europe, because of the glowing pictures painted in those earlier days by our immigration representatives they were induced to come to this country. They came here hoping to make a home of their own, and were settled by the authorities at a point between the lakes, as we describe it, in northern Manitoba, on land which should never have been opened for settlement. They did not know the quality of the land and in all good faith they took a homestead. Year after year after year they worked on the homestead. They sold their butter and eggs at ridiculously low prices, really below the cost of production. They waded through almost impassable roads to get to the local village. They picked stones because the country was not unlike the country we sometimes see along the St. Lawrence where several generations ago the patient settlers picked stones off their lands. Unfortunately between the lakes, when they got the stone picked after unending toil, there was no soil that was worth anything much. For years they worked. They incurred debts, do as they would. The man went out to work, leaving his wife alone for long periods, and coming back with a little money to buy groceries. At last, having piled up debts and with no income coming in, with two young children to care for, they felt they could continue no longer, and they left their farm and came to live in the city.

Again let me say that this move is typical of that of hundreds of people whom we have in nearly all our cities in the west. The man was a skilled mechanic and found a place in the Canadian Pacific Railway shops. There he set to work with a will once more to try to make a home for his family. The wife was a very ambitious and capable woman. She went out working by the day in the hope that they might more quickly make a bit of money so that they might pay off their debts and give their children a chance. I used to know her in the days when she would go out to work hard all day and at night go to a public night school where the English language was taught. She wanted to be able to talk English fluently to her children as they grew up in this English country. They worked for some years before they were able to pay off the debts which they had contracted on the farm. It looked as if they were about to get into a position where they could be independent once more.

Then came the depression. I remember the man telling me that there were only a few ahead of him on the list to be let go. The company was gradually displacing more and more men, and for months he was afraid that his turn to be laid off would come next. Finally the time did come and he lost his job. His wife did not find it quite so easy now to get work in her line. The depression grew worse. In the meantime they had attempted to buy a house in the city. Possibly at this distance we may say that they were foolish to make such an attempt, but they had saved several hundred dollars, a sufficient amount to make the first payment, and they had that longing and earnest desire which almost every man and woman has, to have a little home of their own, and so they bought a house and began trying to make the payments on it.

Finally the man had to go on relief work, some work provided by the city, and while digging a ditch he was injured. There was no compensation for him because he was merely on relief work. He received a very bad blow in the head. He had to go to the hospital, which meant expense for himself and his wife.

By this time, the children had passed up through high school. The parents could not afford to send them on to university or to place them in any other school, so then they were taken out of school, with no work for either the boy or the girl.

Then came greater slackness of work, and bitterness of bitterness, they had actually to go on relief. These people who had been I suppose twenty-five years in Canada, who had worked long hours, who had tried to farm, who had tried industrial life, now were driven to accept relief from the city. They did it finally because they could do no other, and besides they hoped that in some way or other they might keep this home. he last effort they would ever make to have a home of their own.

Sickness added to their difficulties. The man had to go to the hospital. He returned not cured physically, but worse than that he was mentally so dejected that his mind could hardly be said to be normal. I had lost track of the family for several years, but I came across them again a few months ago when they were in this condition. It was only a few weeks after, that one morning at an early hour a trackman walking along the Canadian Pacific Railway tracks found the man dead beside the tracks. In some way he had been struck by the engine. Then came the great expense of the funeral, which is no small expense in a working man's family, especially when the people are on relief. The woman, one of the most efficient women that I have met, a woman who if brought up in another circle would be fit to occupy almost any position, was prematurely aged, broken in spirit. Her two children born in Canada and to-day about twenty years of age, bright, well-trained young people but with no work to do. The girl received a few weeks' work during the Christmas rush at one of the department stores, all she has had for months, although trained to do good work.

Now, Mr. Speaker, and if it were proper, I should like almost to say, Miss Macphail and gentlemen of the House of Commons, I have recited that case to show the situation that to-day faces hundreds of thousands of our fellow-Canadians. There are just one or two points that I would like to leave with this house. One is that these people are idle through no fault of their own. There are a few lazy people—

Mr. MULLINS: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Certainly.

Mr. MULLINS: Why did the United Farmers of Manitoba pass a resolution asking for the abolition of the unemployment camps. It was so that they could get men to work on the farms. The trouble is you have them crowding into the cities and you cannot get them out on the land.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. MULLINS: I ask the hon. member to please answer that question: Why did the organization which he knows very well, that belongs to Manitoba, pass a resolution asking for the abolition of the unemployment camps?

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. gentleman wants to ask a question, he will kindly do so without argument.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I cannot accept responsibility for any resolution passed by the United Farmers of Manitoba. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that it is clear that although there may be some lazy people and some shiftless people, some misfits, I think it must be conceded that the great majority of our unemployed to-day have become unemployed simply because no job was available for them. That is the outstanding fact we ought not to lose sight of.

Mr. MULLINS: There is plenty of work on the farms.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not intend to be diverted by the interjections of my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Mullins) except to say that there is not plenty of work on the farms to-day at anything like a living wage.

Mr. MULLINS: Oh, a good living.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, there is not, and there is no use talking about it. The farmer cannot pay his men. I tried to get young fellows placed on farms last summer, but I found that farmers would not pay them even their board.

Mr. LAFLECHE: What is the remedy?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Never mind the remedy for the moment; I am pointing out the situation that exists. I quite admit that a number of these people who have been for years unemployed will shortly become unemployable; there is no doubt about that, but that is not the question under discussion. It is true that we are manufacturing these people by our present policies. But the real question is what are we going to do about the entire unemployment situation?

There is another point I want to leave with the house, and it too is incontrovertible. It is this, that the people who are idle through no fault of their own have a claim for adequate maintenance. I do not suggest that they should be sent to a farm to work for nothing and pay their own board; I do not suggest that they should be sent to relief camps—bright young fellows such as the one that wrote that article in The Producer—to work for twenty cents a day. That method is a disgrace, and anyone with any spirit in him will protest against that kind of treatment.

If the governments of the provinces and the government of the dominion, with all the resources which they have for surveying the situation, with all the resources at their command, cannot find jobs for these people, then the least that they can do is to give them adequate maintenance, a good living. I do not mean five cent meals, or twenty cents a day; I mean, in the case of single men, enough to enable them to secure three meals a day, a good clean bed, and enough to provide themselves with decent clothing so that they can hold up their heads in the world; and in the case of men with families, that they be provided, not with a tumble down shelter where they can scrape up a sort of existence, dependent upon charity for clothes and medical assistance, but some sort of pension, if you want to call it that, whereby they can draw a certain amount regularly, weekly or monthly, from the government, a sum sufficient to maintain them and their children in decency and to educate their children and give them a chance in life. I think that is undoubtedly the duty of this parliament.

You may object that we cannot afford to do that; you say that it would spoil these people if they were given these things for nothing. I do not want to give a living to them for nothing, but I do urge that as decent Canadians they are entitled to a decent living. If we did give it to them I do not think it would take very long before we devised ways and means of finding something for them to do. That is quite proper. Every man has a right to contribute to society, but in the meantime these people ought to be kept. I do not expect that the present government is going to overturn the capitalistic system, notwithstanding all the Prime Minister has said. But if this system is one that is fundamentally sound, as the Prime Minister asserts, and only needs a little bit of reform, then the least we can do with the unemployed is to see that they are adequately supported.

Further I think we are right in throwing upon the government the responsibility of devising ways and means. This is in accordance with the very best constitutional practice. We have suggested from this corner certain things which we think would materially assist. We say for instance that there might be a very extensive housing program, which would help greatly. We say that instead of having this financed by borrowed money it should be financed through the credit of the country, without increasing interest or debt. And that is quite possible. Some one may denounce that as inflation but inflation of that sort would be a good thing for Canada at the present time. I do not mean uncontrolled inflation. If France can bring her franc down from twenty cents to four cents with advantage to most of her people, I cannot see why Canada cannot do the same with her dollar. We have pointed out further in this corner that there are certain fundamental financial changes that will have to be made. Perhaps the system will not stand the extra load that such a program as I have suggested would place upon it; but on the other hand I do not think that the system as it exists to-day will stand very much longer the strain that is being put upon it by the present government or would be put upon it by any other government that seeks to uphold the capitalist system. However, I do not want to get off into a discussion of these things. I think that if the government is right in saying that the people have entrusted them with responsibility—and the Prime Minister has insisted on this time time and again—then undoubtedly it is their responsibility to handle this situation. And we stand ready to do the very best we can to assist.

But I want to come back to the plea I am trying to make in this speech, if you can call it a speech. I ask that we for a little while get away from the political game that is played here day in and day out, week in and week out, year in and year out, and consider the seriousness of the situation that faces us in Canada. Do you think that these million of people on relief to-day can go on as they are going now very much longer? Is there any sign of a real letup in this depression? What shall we do in the next year or two or three years? How can we expect to have these people remain loyal and law abiding? I want to know what claim this government has upon the loyality of people who do not get even enough to enable them to live in decency? I would go this far: I should like to know what claim any system of democracy has upon its citizens when that democracy does not enable them to supply themselves even with the necessities of life. I warn this house, we cannot go on in this way very much longer, and I do urge that from this time on, in this session, we give the most serious consideration to this very pressing problem.

Hon. FERNAND RINFRET (St. James): I rise to support the amendment. I am glad to have heard the leader of the group in the corner say that he would support it. Although I do not agree with his views on capitalism and other matters, I fully agree with the picture he has given to-day of the unemployment situation in this country. I think he has given some very impressive examples of destitution amongst our people. I was sorry to see that occasionally what he said did not meet with that degree of sympathy which it should get from the house, but I am in agreement with him when he says that notwithstanding anything before the house now, unemployment remains essentially the problem that should engage our attention.

The amendment is quite concise and clear. It might be divided into three distinct parts. In the first place, it reminds the house of specific promises made prior to the election of 1930. Secondly, it reminds the house of the extraordinary powers to deal with unemployment that have been repeatedly secured from this parliament by the present government. And in the third place, comparing these promises with the full powers that were given the government to redeem them, it reminds the house that nothing specific has been done to meet the tremendous problem that exists. We are not to be surprised that the people are so disappointed to-day in view of the lack of policy of the government in this respect. When the Prime Minister delivered his now famous addresses over the radio at New Year's, the people regarded these addresses as an earnest effort to solve the deplorable conditions that exist at the present time, and it is not to be wondered at that, finding out that the whole program of reform on the part of the government is not for to-day but for to-morrow or next year or five years hence, the people who are unemployed feel that they have been completely overlooked in the new program.

We have on the order paper measures concerning social legislation, but what is social legislation to people who are not working? How can you interest them in a project which does not concern them and is dealing only with a condition that may arise not any sooner than a couple of years hence? There is on on the order paper a measure for limiting the hours of work, but what is that to people who do not work at all? Their hours of work are limited in the extreme and naturally a reform of this kind, even if good in itself, cannot bring any relief to them. On the order paper there is another measure to provide for a weekly day of rest, but again I ask: What does that mean to men who not only rest one day in the week but are forced to rest for the whole seven days? We are told that later on we shall have a measure to regulate wages. Again I ask: What is that to a man who, not having any wages at all, does not expect to benefit by this kind of legislation?

But if I have been impressed by the speech delivered by my good friend the leader of the Labour party (Mr. Woodsworth), I shall say in all frankness that I was less impressed by the speech delivered by the hon. member for East Essex (Mr. Morand). If he speaks for his party, may I for a moment dwell upon the great change in the tone of the speeches that we are having from the Conservative party to-day and those that we heard in 1930 and the first years of this parliament? In 1930 the Conservatives were claiming that the then Liberal government had done no good with regard to labour, but that if the Tories were returned to power, they alone, and sometimes the present Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) insinuated that he alone, would solve the problem of unemployment. I remember very well in one of the first sessions of this parliament when from this side of the house a motion similar to this was moved and the government was asked why they were not going on with the solution of that problem. Again the Prime Minister said: Give me health and a term of office and I will solve that problem. He was going to do it and his government was going to do it. But what do we hear now from the hon. member for East Essex? He says that if the government has not solved the unemployment problem, it is because the Liberals have failed to cooperate. In other words, after defeating us by contending that we could not solve the problem, this government are now trying to put the blame on us because they have not been able to achieve a solution themselves. I am not mentioning this from a strictly political standpoint as I might be accused of doing by certain hon. gentlemen, but I say that the government is at fault because not only did it disregard every project submitted by hon. members in the corner to my left and every resolution submitted by ourselves, but it did not seek cooperation. The government claimed unlimited powers for itself in the form of a blank cheque; it told the house and the country: We do not need the opposition; we do not wish to discuss the matter with parliament; we have no regard for the Progressive party; give us unlimited power, vote that blank cheque and we will do everything ourselves. That is what took place. But now we are on the eve of an election and the government says: We did not do it because the Liberals did not help us to do it. If this government wants our cooperation, I think the electorate is even much more anxious than is the government to have the cooperation of the Liberal party and it will prove that at the earliest possible opportunity

Another claim that is made is that when we raise the question of unemployment we are obstructing the work of the house. We shall certainly hear that before this debate is over. I do not recall in all my short experience as a member of parliament and in earlier years as a member of the press gallery an opposition making such generous and complete offers of cooperation to a government as we have done this year. We have waived completely our right to take part in the debate on the address; we have waived private members' motions for a number of sittings; we are even ready to give assurance to the government that if they will not press any motion for supply, we will make it easy for them later on to get all the supply they need. What we wanted to do—and I wish to say that again to the hon. member for East Essex—was to cooperate with the government if it would only bring down its famous reforms. We have had them and I am going to make a frank statement to the house and the country: we are supporting those reforms in principle; there are some details upon which we are not agreed. I will say further: If I were to listen to some opposition in the part of the country from which I come

I would sometimes hesitate to give my unlimited support to those measures; yet in a spirit of cooperation, of political abnegation to a certain extent, because we believe in the principles of those reforms and because we want to give the government the fullest cooperation in carrying out those measures, we will support unemployment insurance and other reform measures and I am ready to vote for them although quite a number of my electorate wants me to vote the other way. So far as cooperation is concerned, is that good faith on our part? I wish to emphasize that I think the comment the hon. member made to-day is altogether undeserved.

When we raise the question of unemployment that is not lack of cooperation; it is not obstruction. We believe it is the more pressing problem before the country and parliament. We believe in framing this program of reform the Prime Minister has overlooked the essential thing—how to remedy not future but present conditions. The diseased body is given a preventive against future sickness, but there is no remedy for the present one and the government is just like a doctor who would tell a patient: well, if you do not die from the present disease, I promise to cure you for the next one that you may contract. We are asking the government: Before you insure against unemployment of the year 1938 or 1939 and before you limit hours of work and set a wage scale for those who still enjoy the privilege of working, give a little more thought to those who are at present unemployed, to those who have no hours of work, no wages and who have to depend entirely on provincial and municipal aid. If we insist on that, it is because the government, far from indicating that it will at this session introduce legislation to cure unemployment, is now receding from the very limited degree of help that it has given to the provinces in the past. In June, 1934, at the end of the session the government through the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) announced that it might abandon its contribution to direct relief. Later on there took place in Ottawa a conference, a sham conference I would call it, which lasted exactly three days. One day was consecrated to welcoming the premiers from the different parts of the country and of course the last day was consecrated to wishing them goodbye when they were returning home; there was only one day of conference, and what took place? There was no discussion, no debate, no opportunity even for any of those premiers to present their case, but merely an ultimatum from the Prime Minister that they would be told later on what this government was willing to do.

And what took place as regards the province of Quebec? This government was paying, or at least was supposed to pay, one-third of the relief money and other unemployment money. That amounted to over a million dollars I am sure. The Minister of Labour notified Hon. Mr. Taschereau that in future it would be only $600,000, and since then it has fallen to $500,000 and I think it is now only $400,000, and it is my observation that even that small amount of money is very hard to get from the federal government; you must send in accounts, and other accounts, and have them checked north and checked south, and the government has always been six or eight months late in its payments. But I do not want to discuss that part of it, I see I am disturbing the minister already.

Mr. GORDON: May I ask the hon. member a question? I do not like to interrupt, and I rarely do, but there was no time that the federal government was ever six or eight months behind in payments to the province of Quebec.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is not a question.

Mr. GORDON: But the province of Quebec has been eighteen months behind in sending in their accounts for payment.

Mr. RINFRET: Well, here we have an admission of delay, whether it was due to my hon. friend or to the province. Whatever money the federal government pays to the municipalities is not only being reduced all the time but payment is subject to considerable delay. Let me point out that I read in the paper this morning that for the month of March the municipal administration of Montreal is asked to vote $1,443,771, nearly a million and a half dollars. If the federal government is going to contribute not one-third, but merely $400,000 to the whole province, you will see that it means a very paltry sum indeed as the city of Montreal's proportion. Yet there was a time when the government was willing to pay one-third, so I am quite right in saying that not only is the present government not coming forward with any help or policy in the matter of unemployment, but on the contrary is receding considerably.

The government was not very ready to discuss this problem with the provincial premiers in 1934, or to discuss it with the mayors. I remember that not a month ago we were told through the newspapers that this government had declined to receive in Ottawa a delegation of mayors, and I am surprised that it was not anxious to meet even the mayor of Montreal. I think it should have been pleased to meet him. It was not very anxious to meet me sometimes when I was mayor. But I am pointing out that we have only omissions to underline in the matter of a policy by this government in regard to unemployment. They did not accept the offer of the premier of Quebec. Correspondence was laid on the table on February 15 on the motion of the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) showing that a generous offer was received from Hon. Mr. Taschereau; at least it was something positive. He said the province was willing to pay 50 per cent if the federal government would pay 50 per cent. The statement of the Minister of Labour was that the offer was not made in good faith, that the premier of Quebec knew very well that this government would not accept it. Well, why not test the sincerity of the premier of Quebec, why not accept the offer if only to find out whether Mr. Taschereau would live up to his part? I think Mr. Taschereau was very sincere in making that offer, but that the Minister of Labour was much more sincere when he refused. That part of the transaction at least is very clear.

Besides that we have had a slackening in public works. Look at the city of Montreal for instance. Not a very large amount of money was voted for Montreal out of the famous $40,000,000 program, but there was something, mostly it is true for the western part, where the vote is more likely to be on the side of the Conservative party; yet we are interested in public works all over the city. But they have not been going on very rapidly. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I may tell you that the public works policy of this government in my city is a policy of excavations. We had the excavation of the Canadian National Railways terminal some years ago; there it is, gaping wide open to the view of the public. Later on we heard that my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) —not from himself, because he never wants to give any information on that matter, but through the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart)—was going to build a postal terminal in Montreal. Well, the land was excavated a couple of years ago, and there it gapes, a true companion to the Canadian National excavation.

Mr. HANBURY: With a fence around.

Mr. RINFRET: I was told a few days ago that contracts had been let and that at last this terminal would be built. I regret that inasmuch as this government decided to supplement what it was not doing in direct relief by public works, it has not been more expeditious as regards works in Montreal.

Another cause for grave apprehension is as to what is going to take place after the first of April. The other day the Minister of Labour in replying to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) said something that is most extraordinary, but if it indicates anything it indicates that the government itself does not know what it will do after the first of April. Here is what the Minister of Labour said:

> I do not know that I made the announcement that direct relief would terminate on March 31, but this government is keeping in close touch with the provinces and a decision will be arrived at as to what method may have to be employed with respect to assisting them. Up to the moment we have not had any information or request from the provinces as to what assistance they may need.

I do not wish to be unfair, I will admit that in that reply there is an indication of some intention on the part of the government to do something, but it is a cause of gravest concern to all interested parties to see that hesitancy and evident lack of decision in so essential a matter.

The unemployment question is a national problem. I may again refer to the quotation made by the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Gray) from an order in council passed by this government in 1931, P.C. 2043:

> Whereas unemployment is primarily a municipal and provincial responsibility, it has been so general throughout Canada as to constitute a national concern.

On that I think we are all agreed, and I hope one of the decisions of this government wil be not to abandon that attitude as regards unemployment. It is a problem for this government and this parliament primarily to solve. There is good ground for that attitude, because after all, while seasonal and local unemployment may be due to local conditions, when we have a general state of unemployment as we have in Canada now we can say it is due primarily to the condition of trade and industry in the country. I do not say that by changing one item in the tariff or modifying the budget of the country you could solve the problem in one day, although I think we have been most unwise, the majority of this parliament, in approving of budgets rising to such heights as we have had in the last five years. But I do say the condition of trade and industry is the cause for unemployment in this country, and therefore the responsibility is on the government which is responsible for trade and industry.

I say further that in Montreal, as in all large cities, the unemployed are not all from that city itself; they come from all over the province and even all over the country. I remember that when I was mayor of Montreal we had to deal with men who were sent to us by the mayor of Winnipeg. I merely mention that in passing as an illustration of the fact that when unemployment becomes general it is no longer a municipal or a provincial matter. There are certain centres in the country which are flooded with unemployed coming from all parts of the country, and it would be most unfair for the central government not to acknowledge its primary responsibility for dealing with that problem. I might point out also that with regard to a large city such as Montreal—and this would apply to Toronto or even to Sherbrooke—we do not receive the full benefit of all the money collected in the city. The harbour, the customs and the post office all collect money, in the main from activities taking place within the city limits, but that money belongs—and rightly so—to the central government. The central government has the power of taxation; it is able to call on many resources; it is able to exact money from those who should contribute it to the treasury of the country, but these opportunities are not open to the municipalities. Look at the difficulties with which the present administration in Montreal are faced. They have tried the income tax, the sales tax, this tax and that tax, but everywhere they are met with the condition which demonstrates that a problem such as this cannot be properly dealt with by only a small portion of the country. They want to tax a certain class of people in Montreal in order to meet the needs of the unemployed, but those people need only move to the next municipality in order to escape that tax, It is only the central power that can go to all the people of Canada and secure, through taxation or otherwise, the money needed for unemployment relief, and use it for that purpose.

Therefore I do say, Mr. Speaker, that if this responsibility has to be placed somewhere it should rest with the federal government. Yet, as I said at the beginning of my remarks, this government are not showing any signs of activity which would indicate that they are alive to their responsibility. On the contrary they seem to think that because they have provided a reform program which smacks very much of electoral disquiet, they have provided for the future, and that the present problems can be solved by leaving them alone or leaving them to be dealt with by local authorities. I remember that at the beginning of the session there was some discussion as to the number of unemployed in the country. Statistics are very deceiving; if you consider the heads of families, their dependents, this class or that class you may suit them to your purpose, but I have in my hand a return brought down by the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) which places the number of persons on direct relief at 1,182,123. Those are the figures supplied by the government, and I do not think they show any decrease in the number of unemployed such as the Prime Minister attempted to point out in a former debate. On the contrary I think it is amply proven that there are vast numbers of people still on direct relief, and I say that unless the government have some policy to substitute for it the time is very ill chosen for any minister to announce to the country that the government are not going to pay their share and accept their responsibility in connection with direct relief, but are going to leave it to the provinces and the municipalities, contenting themselves with the payment of a lump sum.

I know, as everyone knows, that direct relief is an evil, but it has been rendered necessary because of the conditions that have arisen in the country. I repeat, however, and I think this is a fair statement to make, that direct relief is inevitable unless you have something else. It is all right to say that direct relief is not moral or that it is anti-social or something else, but if you do not provide work or if you have not a policy to deal with the problem in some more effective way are you going to let the people starve in order to show them that they are living in an unmoral state or something like that? Inasmuch as we must have it then I say the federal government should pay even a larger share than one-third of the cost of direct relief. If this government should drop out direct relief in Montreal would be left either to the province or to the municipality, and if that happened a condition would arise upon which I do not wish to dwell. In Montreal there are 225,000 people who depend upon the municipal cheque for their living. Do you imagine for a moment that you can turn those people loose and say there will be no cheque this week or next week? That would be a terrible state of affairs. It would be a new order of things, but not the new order that was promised in the Prime Minister's radio speeches. When the government say they are not going to pay more than a certain amount they practically accept the possibility of such a situation arising, and it is only because the government of the province and the administration of the city are more alive to their responsibility that this condition does not come about. But that does not relieve this government of their responsibility through accepting, even in theory, a situation of that kind.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I say that this amendment is very opportune, because it places the situation squarely before the country. Even if we are willing to accept the principle of unemployment insurance for coming years, together with the other reforms that have been announced—which have been in the programs of all parties, in fact, and have reached their place in the program of the present government only after being supported by the other parties in this country—we insist that the first thing we should have is a clear enunciation of policy by this government as to what they intend to do in regard to unemployment, because I say the disease of to-day is of much graver moment than the possible disease of five years hence. The reforms may be good in principle and even in practice, but they fail to touch that essential point. On the contrary the amendment brings that forward and reminds the country of the primary fact that the first thing to which this parliament should devote its attention is the cure of our present evils and the certainty that these difficulties will receive consideration on the part of the government.

In conclusion may I say that I have no hope that the house will accept the amendment. It is only natural to expect that hon. gentlemen opposite will vote against it. Though the Prime Minister claimed some weeks ago that we were now the Conservatives and that hon. gentlemen opposite had become the Liberals, I am afraid they have not become Liberal enough to vote for the amendment. It is my impression, from the way this session has been conducted, that the government did not expect that we on this side of the house would agree with their reforms. It was rather expected that we would oppose them from the very first, and perhaps force an election. Evidently the Prime Minister has been surprised by our attitude; in fact at times I think he has been surprised at his own. He is now somewhat embarrassed as to what he is to do next. I am giving him this advice in all good faith: Let him look first to the problem of unemployment because it is the most urgent.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (East Toronto): Mr. Speaker, the motion now under discussion has to do with the most important problem which can come before parliament, and to-day the people of Canada are paying for forty years' neglect of it. This afternoon we heard from the representative of the constituency of St. James (Mr. Rinfret), Montreal, and a former mayor of that city. The constituency of St. James is the home of the so-called capitalist system of Canada, which more than any other agency is to blame for the present unemployment situation.

It would be just as unfair for me to blame the former mayor of Montreal for the condition of affairs prevailing in that city, for the unemployment, the untold privation and suffering as it was for the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie), assisted by the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Gray) to blame the government of Canada for the unemployment situation in the dominion.

May I observe in passing that the very same speech was made in Toronto by one of the hon. members who has spoken, and upon that occasion he complained that the Conservative government had not solved the unemployment condition in three days. Well, the hon. member for St. James was a part of the administration which held office from 1921 until 1930. That government was in office 5,697 days and did nothing but make a political football of the unemployment problem. The result was that when the present administration took office they found no organized plan either with the provinces or the municipalities which would have been sufficient to cope with the difficulty.

I am sorry to note the political trend of the discussion on this motion, because if there is one problem which should not be considered from a standpoint of party politics it is this particular problem which affects such large numbers of the men and women in the industrial centres in which such conditions have never before prevailed. I hope we will never again see the conditions under which many people who have been born in our cities and others who are new arrivals are living. They are enduring untold suffering, awful privations exceeding anything the human imagination can conceive, and this condition applies to skilled workers and other men and women who never knew what it was to lack a day's employment. These are most distressing conditions.

I am sorry to note the partisan stand taken by the Liberal party in connection with this problem. I admire the nature of the real liberalism which inspired the miners of Cornwall to march to London town to defend Bishop Trelawney against the tyranny of James II, as I do the freeholders of Buckinghamshire who defended John Hampden against the tyranny of Charles Stuart. I cannot, however, admire the economic liberalism of the Liberal party in Canada, because I believe that economic liberalism, the policy adopted by those of the Manchester school and by those who for many years have been crying out for free trade and semi-free trade must bear some of the burden of blame for the condition of unemployment we have.

In my view the present economic problems of Canada cannot be solved by majorities in parliament. They must be dealt with by the nation as a whole, and as a matter of life and death. Our problems demand national sacrifice, and not parliamentary repartee, such as was attempted last night by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie). A remedy must be found for this great disaster of unemployment because it is the greatest disaster this or any other nation has ever experienced. The remedy must be as far reaching and uncompromising as the application of conscription was found to be in war. We have a war in Canada to-day, a war between thousands of our citizens on one hand and poverty and starvation on the other. Do not run away with the idea that the economic war is not as bad as a military war, because unemployment is as dangerous as a foreign foe in war time. Against a foreign foe we are united to repel invasion, but against our internal foe of unemployment we are not united and up to 1930 did nothing to check the advance of this enemy. In a time of military contest our country's resources are mobilized, and we have control of the transportation services, the man power and capital resources of the country. Under those circumstances we would be prepared and united to meet a foe, but when we have to meet a foe just as bad, namely the foe of unemployment, we are divided into political parties. Instead of standing united to solve this problem we are not united.

I believe our Prime Minister and the present government deserve a great deal of credit. I do not know where a great many of the municipalities would have been had it not been for the service given by the government now in office, because the government which preceded us for nearly nine years did nothing but make a political football of the whole problem. I mentioned between 1921 to 1930 the matter of unemployment on many occasions. May I say in passing that I would advise the hon. member for West Lambton who seconded the motion and is a past-president of the Sarnia senior rugby team dominion champions, to sign the hon. member for St. James and the members of the cabinet of the former administration as members of his team next year on account of the football they made of unemployment from 1921 to 1930.

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre made reference to two paragraphs in the speech from the throne. I have looked through the speeches from the throne for many years, and as a result I am led to make these observations. In the year 1926 I complained about the unemployment situation. At page 91 of the debates for that year I am reported as follows:

> I very much regret that in the speech from the throne the government has given no indication that they are going to take any active steps to solve the economic ills of the country. There is the problem, for instance, of unemployment. Unemployment to-day in the larger centres of population is very acute. I might refer to the unemployment in the large manufacturing city from which I come. I know the conditions there, and I know that in the past three or four days very rapid preparations have been made by the social and charitable institutions and the public bodies of various kinds in the city to try and cope with the unemployment situation with which we shall be faced this coming winter.

We find nothing about unemployment in the speech from the throne of that year or for many years in which the previous government held office. The government which took office in 1921 had before it a report on unemployment ordered by the Union government in 1919 under Mr. Justice Mathers of Winnipeg. This report came as a result of a national industrial conference which sat under Mr. Justice Mathers of Winnipeg. They travelled across Canada hearing evidence from public, commercial and manufacturing bodies. Later they made a report to the government in the fall of 1921, stating:

> We recommended to your government—
> The Union government—
> —the question of making some provision by a system of state social insurance for those who through no fault of their own are unable to work, whether the inability arises from lack of opportunity, sickness, invalidity or old age. Such insurance would remove the spectre of fear which now haunts the wage earner and make him a more contented and better citizen.

Last night the hon. member for Vancouver Centre urged, as one of his nine points, the calling of another conference. By the time the Liberal party have another conference instead of being in the house of industry the unemployed will be dead and gone. By the time the Liberal party have another conference the unemployed will be dead and in the cemetery. My hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) proposed a dominion-provincial conference to consider the question of financial relations between the provinces and the dominion, and secondly to consider unemployment, Canada's most urgent problem. The late Liberal government were nine years in power and had a report before them recommending sickness and unemployment insurance, and yet they did nothing to give effect to it. I myself brought this matter to the attention of parliament on many occasions in the nine years the Liberals were in power, and motions were also moved by my hon. friend from North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps). I was a member of the committee on industrial and international relations for many years, and I supported this particular policy from the time that I entered the house till I left it in 1930, and I continually brought the matter to the attention of the late government. As late as February 25, 1929, I had this question on the order paper:

1. Has the government any plans for providing employment for the great body of the unemployed?
2. If so, what are they and what action will be taken, and when?

Mr. Heenan:

1. The question of unemployment is one for the provincial governments.
2. Answered by No. 1.

That was all they thought of it. That was the government of which my hon. friend from St. James (Mr. Rinfret) was a member. On March 5, 1930, I asked the government this question respecting unemployment relief:

1. Has the government any plans for providing useful employment for the great body of the unemployed?
2. If so, what relief will be afforded?
3. Will the government accept the offer of the province of Ontario to provide one-third of the cost of certain forms of relief in conjunction with the federal and municipal authority; if not, why not?

Instead of answering that question the Liberal government asked to have it ruled out of order. I asked another question on March 13, 1930, with reference to an advisory economic committee. This was my question:

Will the government consider the appointment of an advisory economic committee for Canada to deal with economic questions?

The reply of the then Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) was this:

This and kindred subjects are receiving the attention of the government.

In 1927 my hon. friend from Winnipeg moved a resolution in the house, and asked to have it referred to the industrial and international relations committee. That motion was talked out of the house. By whom? It was talked out of the house on two occasions, in 1927 and again in 1928, by members who were supporting the government of that day. They prevented the hon. gentleman from having his case considered by the industrial and international relations committee at that time. It was just about that time that I presented the following resolution, adopted in 1927 by the ministerial association of the country:

Your committee, after careful enquiry and conference, respectfully submits concrete proposals, designed to help in solving the problems of relief and unemployment.

Your committee is conscious that results will depend upon the birth and cultivation of a public conscience, which shall demand that standard of living in which no worthy citizen or his or her dependents shall suffer from hunger or cold by the operation of economic or other conditions beyond his or their control. To secure this conscience demands tact, tenacity and widespread use of the pulpit, the press, the platform, and every other form of advocacy.

Your committee believes that this association must employ its strength and zeal with determination to obtain the defined objectives.

Unemployment is an unsolved but solvable problem. It results generally from the operation of forces beyond the direct control of the wage-earner, and constitutes a menace and challenge to every citizen.

Your committee believes unemployment contributes to the moral, mental and physical deterioration of our citizens, and involves immense annual economic losses. It permits thousands of children to exist cold, neglected, under-nourished, and exposed to the most serious afflictions affecting the human race; it robs womanhood and manhood of character, their sense of self-respect, and shadows their life outlook with shame and despair; it demoralizes unfolding youth, begets beggars and vagrants; it is so far reaching in its effect upon society that generations unborn will reap the awful harvest which follows inevitably in its wake.

Your committee believes the burden of responsibility to be a joint one resting upon all citizens and in particular embracing the federal, provincial and civic administrations. It would appear that the federal government has not been impressed by the serious and accumulative consequences of unemployment upon the citizens of the dominion.

Right down to the day the Liberal government left office I cannot find that they did anything of a practical nature to solve the unemployment problem, or to give relief to the municipalities of Canada, or to pay the municipalities one-third of the cost of relief. The municipalities had to deal with the unemployment problem for several years before the present government came into office, and before they got the help of this government, which was the most worthy help that was ever given to them. I do not know where the constituents of my hon. friend from St. James would have been had it not been for the help that this government gave in the matter of unemployment relief and for the great work done by the Prime Minister and his cabinet to solve this unemployment problem.

This question also came up in the House of Commons in the session of 1923 in connection with the combines act. One of the main causes of the unemployment we have to-day has been the gigantic mergers and trusts and combines in restraint of trade which flourished unmolested from 1921 down to 1930, when the Liberals were in power. During that debate I proposed to write into the criminal code of this country the Sherman anti-trust law, and I proposed the appointment of a federal trade commissioner for Canada to regulate those abuses. I also proposed to add a section to the criminal code to give the grand jury at the assizes power to do the very work which a committee of this House of Commons has been doing for the past fifteen months, but that matter was not even considered by the government. I brought it up on many other occasions but it was rejected. So we can see, Mr. Speaker, all that was done by the Liberal government for the unemployed.

Another cause of unemployment has been the policy of economic liberalism in this country. Away back in the session of 1923, on the nineteenth of March, I moved a resolution in the house on Canada's coal supply, urging that we should have a national fuel policy for the people of this country so that we would not be left dependent on the United States. That resolution urged that the government immediately consider an all-British and Canadian coal supply for Canada, whether the coal came from Wales, the maritimes or Alberta. When I proposed in this house a system of bonuses and subventions and subsidies for coal and grain and steel and iron, what was the policy of the government of which the hon. member for St. James was a member? It was to oppose the policy which I advocated, and not once but three or four years. Where would the maritimes have been to-day if it had not been for the policy which the Conservative party adopted under the leadership of the present Prime Minister? He is leading a party of reform, a party of real liberalism as we had it in England a hundred years ago at the time of the industrial revolution. Where would the maritimes have been had it not been for the assistance which the leader of this government gave them following out the policy advocated in my resolution which on many occasions hon. gentlemen opposite voted down? As a result of that policy the coal and steel and iron industries, which were withering industries in the maritimes, are to-day progressive and on the road to recovery.

What about grain? Agriculture, coal, and steel and iron are the three great key industries in this country, and the Conservative party has always been a consistent protectionist party with respect to them. The Conservative party under the leadership of the Prime Minister believes in giving protection to our own industries and in eliminating the abuses in the capitalist system. The basis of our policy has always been protection for two great classes in this country, agriculture and the industrial workers. Our policy has been our own work for our own workmen, and our own markets for our own products. That is what made Canada a great industrial country, the country it is to-day. And where was the Liberal party in regard to this problem in the prairies? Where was the Hon. Mr. Crerar, who came down to my riding, a former Home bank director? Where were all these free traders? They were contending all along that the grain industry was a north and south industry, instead of an east and west industry, and they proposed free trade north and south. But we could not get any grain into the United States except our hard wheat. Afterwards there was an inquiry in the house and the then Prime Minister appointed Mr. Justice Turgeon of the Supreme Court of Saskatchewan to look into the question. Mr. Justice Turgeon found the very thing that I have pointed out; he said that there had been bootlegging of hard wheat in the elevators at Buffalo, Baltimore, New York and Boston. I was there and saw it myself. A great protectionist paper in Toronto, the Evening Telegram, spent thousands of dollars to prove its case, and it did prove it; and that is one of the reasons why the farmers of the prairies are in the condition in which they find themselves to-day. When the government of Sir William Hearst went out of power and the Drury government came in, Mr. Drury was not very long in office before he presented to the Prime Minister of this country in 1924 a resolution of the Canadian council of agriculture, and he denounced the manufacturers of Ontario and Quebec as thieves and robbers. The resolution complained that the farmers on the prairies had suffered from many unmitigated evils for many years, that the farmers had been exploited and plundered by those who enjoyed special privileges, and they requested to be relieved of the artificial barriers that stood in their way. Well, Ontario got rid of one of these obstacles in the form of the Drury government. Mr. Drury so denounced the manufacturers of Ontario that no manufacturer would invest any money in that province during the time that government was in office, with the result that industry got into a very bad state indeed. And where was Mr. Crerar all that time? I was never very enthusiastic about the Union government, but I will say this, that that goverment made a courageous effort in 1919 to rescue the farmers of the prairies, the people who were actually growing the grain, from these exploiters. As I said at that time, the greatest enemy of the man who grew grain in the prairies was not the manufacturer east of the great lakes but the big interests west of the great lakes, the grain combines and exchanges and elevator and transportation monopolies. Again I ask, where were these free traders when the grain industry was suffering in this way? We find that eventually they have had to come and ask this government to give them protection for this withering industry; they want a stabilization fund. But they were supporting free trade at that time. Mr. Crerar and his friends secured an injunction to prevent an investigation into the alleged system of robbery of the man who grows grain, but the Union government—and I give them credit for this—did try to do something practical for the farmers.

I have referred the house to two or three matters in connection with economic liberalisms, the economic liberalism of the Manchester school. I submit that the government of Canada might have done something practical regarding the St. Lawrence waterway. There was issued the other day a report to congress showing the magnificent success of the Panama canal. We know that they all laughed at Theodore Roosevelt when he put through that canal, but it is a magnificent success to-day, and no one knows how much it has contributed to employment the world over. If the government in 1921 had done something practical in connection with the St. Lawrence waterway, in conjunction with the United States, if they had pressed the matter year after year, we would have been prepared to meet the unemployment situation. Again, between 1921 and 1930 the question of a national hydro policy for this country came under consideration. What greater agency for the development of a country could there have been than that—a policy proposed right in this house. We have 42,000,000 horse power in this country and only 7,000,000 developed, just one-sixth of all the potential water power capacity at our disposal. What was the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite when this matter was up, when the province of Ontario came here asking for a lead and proposed a federal policy for this country so that all power development power would be generated at cost and distributed to the two central provinces? The government of that day did nothing to put that policy into effect.

I say that we should all emulate the King in the calm words he used a year ago. There should be calm words here instead of narrow partisanship. What did His Majesty say over the radio? His words were heard throughout the world on Christmas day a year ago, and I venture to say that if you canvassed the opinion of all reasonable men who heard him they would agree that we should reform our system. As the King said, we should have those qualities of unshakable sanity, invincible patience and tireless good will; those are the qualities we need to-day, which His Majesty so fittingly commended on that occasion. Hon. gentlemen opposite criticize the present government but I do not hesitate to say that this government did more in three months after coming into power, they did more for the unemployed in that time, than was done in the whole nine years the Liberal party was in office. This party has never been partial to the dole; the dole is only a temporary expedient, something which is intended to meet an emergency. As President Roosevelt said the other day, the lessons of history, confirmed by the evidence immediately before him, were conclusive on this point, that continued dependence upon relief tended towards moral disintegration and the fundamental destruction of moral fibre. As he said, the dole is a narcotic to the human spirit; it is inimical to the dictates of sound policy; it is a violation of the liberties of America. He urged work for every able bodied man and said that the federal government must quit the business of relief.

What did the Liberal party in this country do from 1921 to 1930? Owing to their complete failure to take any steps, the government which followed them in 1930 could do nothing but come to the aid of the struggling municipalities and assist them and the provinces, because many of the municipalities were facing bankruptcy. I do not know where the municipalities would have been had it not been for the aid that this government extended to them. It seems to me that the Liberal party in Canada failed to realize the inroads which science had been making during the past nine or ten years into human labour; the machine has been the cause of unemployment everywhere. The machine is doing the work of man and man is not employed. All wealth was once created by the working classes and the soil combined; now it is created by the machine. The inventors, the rationalizers, the mass production experts, the clever fellows who have developed control over inanimate nature are making it more and more difficult for men to get employment. Judged by the old standard, the Canadian workmen's capacity to produce goods and services, the ordinary citizen would not be worth his salt; the machine can do the work better and more cheaply. But surely that is an absurd position for an industrial society to find itself in. For man first, last and always is the most important thing in civilization and a machine can produce everything but ideas.

We are living in a jobless age. Just the other day reference was made in the house to those of our population who were around eighteen years of age as living in a jobless age. What is going to be done with them I do not know, but it is a problem regarding which I hope we shall get some constructive suggestions from hon. members opposite. I notice we did get one from the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) after hon. members on this side had made the very same proposals several years ago and again about a month ago in the house.

The question of unemployment insurance was brought up by the hon. member for North Winnipeg on March 16, 1927, and it was talked out at six o'clock by Liberal members. His motion was to refer the question to the committee on industrial and international relations. The question of unemployment insurance referred to by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre last night was part and parcel of the Liberal platform, if you please, away back in 1919. Clause number 7 of this platform reads as follows:

> That in so far as may be practicable, having regard to Canada's financial position, an adequate system of insurance against unemployment, sickness, dependence in old age, and other disability, which would include old age pensions, widows' pensions and maternity benefits, should be instituted by the federal government in conjunction with the governments of the several provinces; and that on matters pertaining to industrial and social legislation, an effort should be made to overcome any question of jurisdiction between the dominion and the provinces by effective cooperation between the several governments.

That was the platform of the Liberal party in 1919. They were elected to office on that in 1921, but although they remained in office for nine years they did nothing to put that platform into effect. Of course, as we know, a platform, as the late Hon. Israel J. Tarte said was made to get in on and not to stand on.

We have had visits from many hon. gentlemen opposite to my city, and in view of the partisan attitude taken by them in regard to this question I would like to refer to a brilliant book entitled The New Conservatism, written by Mr. W. S. Morrison, a British member of parliament, one of the most gifted of the younger Conservatives, and slated, as many British papers say, for very high office in Great Britain. He is criticizing the many-party system in his country. Speaking of Great Britain, he says:

> The two old parties are done unless they open their ranks to new men and their minds to new ideas. There should be a modification of the present system or we will make a socialist government possible. The two old parties must be a constructive force for the building of a healthy social order based on economic and spiritual freedom or give place to those who have got an alternative program as an alternative to socialism. It is these conservatives that are the hope of the country.

These are the words of a great political leader of England, a young member of the British House of Commons and a man, as the London papers say, destined to high office in that country.

The municipalities are bearing a very heavy burden at the present time and this new legislation will be gladly welcomed by all classes of people. The industrial workers of this country are suffering as never before. As I said in the house the other day we need in parliament a type of member to bring to the attention of the house the anitiquated conditions of labour and of our maritime laws on the great lakes and their effect on unemployment and shipping. It seems more profitable for owners to lose vessels than to salvage them; our ship owners are protected by insurance. On the other hand in the fall of the year insurance for loss of life is practically nil in the upper lakes and because of this we have acute unemployment and many are suffering.

The dole is a help, but not a final remedy; it is only temporary. The policy of the Conservative party, notwithstanding statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite last night to the contrary, is not to place any more burdens or artificial barriers on business or trade and commerce or industry in this country, for to do so would not be modern protection. As our leader has said, I believe the new Conservative doctrine will be a greater aid to business, trade and commerce and industry generally than ever before, with protection brought up to date to take care of the consumer and labourer, to eliminate the abuses of the trusts, combines and mergers in restraint of trade which have borne so heavy a part in the unemployment of our people.

In the by-election in East Toronto we had a visit from many members of parliament from all over the country. The mover of the resolution, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, and many others were there. The issue raised in that riding was "Beat Bennett and bad times." As I said on that occasion, the present Prime Minister, the leader of the opposition when he was Prime Minister and the leader of the Progressive party had nothing to do with the condition into which the country had fallen; this was caused by world economic conditions brought about by the war and the disturbance of the industrial equilibrium. In that riding I paid tribute along that line not only to the head of the present government but to the other two hon. gentlemen to whom I have referred. I would be most unfair if I were to say of the Liberal leader what the hon. member for Vancouver Centre has said of ours, that he was responsible for conditions at that time.

Mr. ROBERT McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I desire to discuss briefly the amendment now before the house. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie), in moving this resolution, brought forcibly before us the fact that the most urgent matter at present confronting the people of Canada is being sadly neglected by the present government. The resolution reads:

> This house regrets that, notwithstanding the specific promises made prior to the elections of 1930, and many times since reiterated, and despite the fact that extraordinary powers to deal with unemployment have been repeatedly secured from parliament, the present administration, after nearly five years of office, has not yet submitted to parliament any definite or effective policy to deal with widespread actual unemployment or distress which continues to be Canada's most urgent national problem.

We are faced to-day with the most serious problem of unemployment that has ever confronted this country; we are faced too with a government that during the election campaign of 1930 promised the electorate that they had a formula for the cure of unemployment and that if they were returned to power they would not only relieve the existing situation but absolutely cure it. The present Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) was most emphatic in his statements at that time; and some of the statements he made were put on Hansard last night by the hon. member who moved the resolution. He said he would cure unemployment or perish in the attempt. Now after a lapse of four and a half years we come back and are told by the right hon. gentleman who was leading the house last night (Sir George Perley) that we should not criticize the government, and we were told something the same this afternoon by the hon. member for East Essex (Mr. Morand). They say we should not criticize, that we should offer suggestions; but ever since the short session of 1930 we have been offering constructive suggestions to this government. If they look up the records of 1930 and every session since, they will see that not only my right hon. leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) but others of this party have offered very constructive suggestions, which the government did not see fit to accept. Now, after a lapse of four and a half years this government must be judged by the results of the policies that they have put in force, and not by the promises that they are making for the future. The promises they made in 1930 that have not been fulfilled are still vividly in the minds of the people of Canada, and the government is to be judged by them rather than by the new array of promises that the Prime Minister broadcast at the new year.

In 1930, according to the records given at the short session of that year, there were 117,000 unemployed in Canada. That was just a little over the normal proportion of unemployment of the country. To-day we have over a million on relief. Not only has unemployment increased under this government, but trade has very materially decreased. In 1930 the total foreign trade of Canada, export and import, was over $2,000,000,000. In the last fiscal year it was down to $1,150,000,000 or thereabouts. It is further noticeable that the trade with the United Kingdom in 1930 was something over $474,000,000. We have heard a great deal about the benefits that the people of Canada got from the empire trade agreements, but in the last fiscal year the total trade with the United Kingdom was only about $343,000,000, or less by $130,000,000 than it was in 1930. In 1930 the sales tax was one per cent; at present it is six per cent, and not only that but this government have added practically all the nuisance taxes that we ever had during and following the war.

An hon. MEMBER: And sugar.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Yes, sugar, as my hon. friend reminds me. Then we hear a great deal to-day about our railway problem. No doubt it is a tremendous problem, but we did not hear much about it in 1930. I believe the main trouble with our railways to-day is lack of tonnage, largely a result of the policies of the present government. Not only is that true, but there is the condition of the farmers. In the part of the country from which I come they are practically bankrupt. I believe it is safe to say that seventy-five per cent of them are absolutely bankrupt, and another ten or fifteen per cent nearly so. It will be impossible for Canada to recover from the depression until more of our people are gainfully employed in useful occupations, and the obligation rests upon this government, which won the election of 1930 by promises to solve the unemployment problem, to bring in measures that will bring about that employment.

Last night the right hon. leader of the house told us that Canada was recovering from the depression faster than other countries. Coming from western Canada I cannot see much to be elated over or to be optimistic about in regard to recovery. I believe that any improvement there is in Canada is largely reflected from the N.R.A. in the United States. Instead of finding fault with us for our criticism of the government's policies the people of the country are wondering why the opposition have been so silent regarding the policies introduced this session. It is true that some social legislation has been introduced, but it has been disappointing in comparison with what the people were led to expect after hearing the Prime Minister in his broadcast on January 2 and on three or four subsequent occasions. So far as I can learn the part of the country that I represent can receive no benefit whatsoever from the unemployment bill. The other day I asked the Prime Minister whether or not the coal miners in my part of the country could benefit under it. He rather evaded the question; he did not give a very definite answer, but from what I could gather there is no hope whatever of those men receiving any benefit from this legislation, and of course the farming community cannot benefit.

This country has been going from bad to worse for the last four or five years as far as employment is concerned. We began to take the toboggan immediately after the high tariff legislation introduced at the special session in 1930. It may be true that there has been a slight improvement during the past few months. This government introduced their "Canada first" policy in 1930 and tried to make Canada self sustained. Now if there is one country in the world that we look upon as largely capable of being self contained it is the United States, but even the United States has to import a considerable number of products, for instance nickel, and pulpwood, and other products which they must obtain in Canada. They also must import rubber. Great Britain must import at least two-thirds of her foodstuffs; France has to import oil. Every civilized country has to import some product; it is impossible for even the older nations of the world to be self contained. Therefore it was utter folly to think of Canada becoming a self contained nation. This government's policies have now been in operation for over four years, and it has been established beyond doubt that their theories and formulas for the improvement of the situation have failed and are of no avail. I have always been at a loss to understand why this government took the attitude they did, particularly following the short session of 1930. The Prime Minister seemed to think that all he had to do was to increase the tariff and the unemployment situation would be relieved and prosperity would return. But after he saw the effect of that policy I cannot understand why the government continued it. In 1930, when business collapsed and wages and salaries went down, the prices of commodities would have declined also had it not been for the high tariff policy of the government. I do not understand how the government ever thought it would be possible for the labouring men of this country, who received very moderate salaries and who, owing to the policies of this administration, had their wages reduced—because high tariffs and low wages go hand in hand—to continue to pay for what they had to buy, their clothing, their food and other requirements, at the old prices. Not only that, but if the labouring man was a taxpayer his taxes were greatly increased. The situation of the farmers was even worse; their incomes were reduced in many cases by as much as seventy-five per cent, but still they were expected to pay the same prices for everything they had to buy, as well as increased taxes.

I remember that in 1931 the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir), who was fresh from the province of Saskatchewan and who knew the feeling of the farmers of that province with regard to high tariffs, introduced a measure providing for a bonus on wheat, and said that it was a compensating adjustment to the farmers of western Canada in view of the high tariffs that had been raised. I have been waiting to hear what the minister is going to introduce now as a compensating adjustment to the farmers of the west not only because of the high tariffs but also because of the extra taxes they will have to pay for the administration of this unemployment insurance measure. The farmers cannot benefit from that measure any more than they can benefit from high tariffs; it is impossible for the farmers to benefit from either.

It seems to me the government are very lax in regard to measures to relieve the unemployment situation. There is nothing in the legislation that has been brought down, including the unemployment insurance bill, to relieve the present unemployment situation. In addition there are many other challenges presenting themselves to the government, with which the government are not grappling. In the first place there is the interest on our bonded indebtedness. Some few years ago, after the government had negotiated a loan of some $200,000,000 at five per cent interest, I said that I believed they could have borrowed that money for at least one per cent less, which would have meant a considerable saving in the annual interest. This interest on our bonded indebtedness makes a very considerable levy on our income each year, and the problem must be dealt with sooner or later. In addition we have another problem facing us; I refer to the pension indebtedness of the country. I have often asked myself why every person working for the government should be entitled to a pension. Sooner or later this pension business will have to be dealt with. I believe we are overdoing it. It is a good thing, but you can easily overdo a good thing, and I believe our pension schemes have been entirely overdone. There is also another matter which I believe must be dealt with; I refer to over-employment in our civil service. I have received quite a number of letters from people in my constituency complaining that there are too many people being employed by the government in the higher salaried classes. I think it is true; I believe there are altogether too many civil servants receiving exorbitant salaries.

The unemployment situation is the most serious problem confronting us, but there is another great problem which should be considered by the government and which has not been dealt with by any of the legislation that has been brought down. That question is how our farmers are to survive the present depression. They cannot survive unless something is done, by reducing interest and in other ways, in order to help them. It cannot be done by increasing their taxes through the introduction of such measures as the unemployment insurance bill, which the Prime Minister told us would mean the addition of four thousand employees to the civil service. The farmers are going to ask just what they will receive from this legislation, and I ask the government before this session is finished to endeavour to devise some scheme whereby the farmers can be kept on the land and helped through the present depression.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

FISHERIES ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed from Friday, February 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Reid for the second reading of Bill No. 17, to amend the Fisheries Act, 1932.

Mr. H. J. BARBER (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few observations on the second reading of Bill No. 17. First may I say I believe it would have been better had this matter been brought before the house by way of resolution. Probably that action would not have been quite so spectacular from a political standpoint, but I believe it would have been just as effective, perhaps more so, than the method which has been adopted of bringing it to the attention of hon. members. I do not believe it was ever intended that parliament should replace regulations by legislation in matters of administration under the control of the departments. If we are to undertake to adjust by legislation every grievance in every corner of this great country, then we must be prepared to sit here twelve months of the year not only to pass legislation but to amend it.

Let me point out the danger in the present instance. So far as I am concerned, if the bill receives second reading, well and good. In that event the principle would be adopted, and seining would be prohibited in district

No. 1, British Columbia. If the bill is defeated on second reading, then the matter is closed. I doubt very much whether all hon. members from British Columbia will support the bill, but even if they did a majority of the house may not see fit to interfere with the regulations as applied to certain fishing districts on the Pacific coast. That is a matter which in my view should rest entirely in the hands of the minister and the government. Under the act the parliament of Canada has given powers of regulation. Nevertheless I welcome this opportunity to discuss this matter and to bring directly to the attention of the minister and the government certain conditions pertaining to seine fishing at the mouth of the Fraser river.

The constituency I have the honour to represent is perhaps not so much concerned in this matter as the districts lying directly west. While in my constituency there are hundreds depending on the industry, other constituencies number their dependents by thousands. In the Fraser Valley constituency there are, however, a large number of good citizens located along the Friser river who for a number of years have followed the occupation of gill net fishing. Throughout those years they have been able to make a comfortable living for themselves and their families. In the last couple of years they have found their incomes greatly curtailed, in some instances to such an extent that municipalities have represented to me and to other hon. members that in the past year some of the families of these men have had to accept relief.

I have discussed the matter with representatives of the gill net fishermen, and they have protested strongly against the department permitting seine fishing in district No. 1. Their submission is that seine fishing is most destructive and will eventually destroy the established industry of gill net fishing on the Fraser river. I have discussed the matter not only with the representatives of the fishermen but with the Department of Fisheries, and I believe it would be only fair to the department to place on record the main reasons given for the introduction of seining in this particular district. I have before me a memorandum prepared by the department, and I shall quote that portion which presents their side of the case, following which I shall undertake to place on record the facts presented by the fishermen.

The first point presented by the department is as follows:

> The main runs of the different species of salmon to the Fraser make their way to Canadian waters through Juan de Fuca strait and the lower portion of the gulf of Georgia that is within United States waters, During that time by far the largest portion of the catches that are made on both sides of the line is effected in the United States waters with purse seines and trap nets.

The argument there is that we should get in and catch some of the fish now being taken by the Americans. The fishermen point out that apparently the Americans have seen the error of their ways in the using of traps, and have taken them out. There is also the possibility of the Americans prohibiting seining. Even the continued use of seines in American waters is not a good argument for the use of seines in Canadian waters. I am advised there is no comparison between seining at the mouth of the Fraser river and seining on the American side of the line. On the American side, the fish travelling more or less rapidly towards the mouth of the Fraser river, about two hundred seine boats are scattered over a distance approximately of two hundred miles whereas on the Canadian side of the line over one hundred seine boats are operating over a distance of less than ten miles. As the regulations stand there is nothing to prevent another hundred boats moving in, whenever they wish. It is a well known fact that as the sockeye cross the Canadian border the water becomes more brackish, and the fish on entering fresh water have a tendency to slow down, to play around and to gather in schools in preparation for entering the river. This is where the seines get in their deadly work and where the slaughter is wholesale. To show just how deadly seine fishing can be, my attention was drawn to a report of one week's seining allowed by the department in district No. 1 during the first week of September, 1934. The report showed that the last day's catch of the week was only ten per cent of the first day's catch, indicating that all the fish had been caught. That deals with the question so far as the competition with the American fishermen is concerned.

The main argument lodged by the department has to do with quality. I have before me the particular portion of the memorandum dealing with that point; it reads as follows:

> While the pink salmon are in first class condition all the time they are in United States waters, and while as a consequence vastly larger quantities of them have been packed there than has been the case on the Canadian side, unfortunately for us we are faced with the fact that by the time these fish reach the Fraser river waters they are so nearly approaching spawning condition that their quality has fallen off, and it continues to deteriorate so much that it is only the earlier fish that will make a creditable pack. Since inspection of canned salmon became a factor, there is much less readiness to pack poor quality goods than was previously the case. Consequently if fishing for pinks were restricted on our side to gill netting, gill net catches would be bound to be small owing to the lack of demand for the fish.

Then further, referring to the late run of sockeye:

Since 1926 there has been coming to the Fraser in quite large quantities what are commonly called late run sockeye. These have been occurring two years out of the four year cycle; that is, 1926 and 1927, again in 1930 and 1931, and again in 1934 and 1935. These fish, like the pinks, while of good quality when they are in the United States waters, are definitely off quality when they begin to ascend the Fraser, so if purse seining for them were not permitted and inspection maintained, as with the pinks, there would be little demand for them from the gill netters.

I should like to refer to the first paragraph I quoted in regard to quality. It says that the pink salmon are so nearly approaching spawning condition by the time they reach the Fraser river that their quality has fallen off. Those of us who live on the Fraser river know that the spawning grounds are from fifty to sixty or seventy-five miles, and perhaps further than that, from the mouth of the Fraser. We are also told by those who are in a position to judge that these fish feed while in salt water, and that they cease to feed as soon as they enter the fresh water, and that is the time that the fish is in a better condition.

As to quality, the gill net fishermen point out that the pink salmon, whether taken by seine or gill net, are caught in practically the same waters, the boats even operating side by side, and if there is any difference in the quality it should be in favour of the gill net caught fish as there is a vast difference in the handling of the catch en route to the canneries. The gill net fish are collected in small boats, the loads rarely exceeding three thousand fish, while the seine boats carry a load of from 20,000 to 30,000 fish, and these fish are dropped from the brail, a distance of from twelve to fifteen feet. Naturally, with a soft fish like the pink salmon, the weight of this load, approximately seventy-five tons, when packed into a wedge shaped hull leaves the bottom fish in a mess that has to be seen to be appreciated. Often five thousand or more of the fish at the bottom of the boat have to be thrown overboard, and there is no doubt that a certain percentage of the others are not in prime condition. Undoubtedly the fish caught and handled in this manner must account for a considerable proportion of the so-called inferior grade. But that is the system by which this country, apparently, through the ruling of the department, is endeavouring to obtain a higher grade product.

These men claim that the late run of sockeye and pink salmon might be caught while they are in better condition if there were a longer weekly closed season and the fish were permitted to enter the river while in prime condition. The high quality of the pack would then be maintained without the use of seines.

Hon. gentlemen may have noticed that reference was made in the first paragraph of the memorandum from which I have quoted to gill net fishermen being unable to supply the fish in quantity. The gill net fishermen have made application year after year to increase the length of their nets 150 to 200 fathoms in order that they might increase the size of their catch.

On the question of quality, we have as evidence, that the gill net fish are of a higher quality in the fact that last year the gill net fishermen received sixty cents for their fish while the seiners received fifty cents.

It has been represented by certain interests that the trouble in this district No. 1 is between two classes of fishermen. That is not the case. The trouble is between the interests that own practically all the seine boats and equipment, and the fishermen; and I wish to point out that the interests that own the seine boats and equipment require five-twelfths of the catch to be handed over to them in lieu of their investment. But these big interests are not the only ones that have a heavy investment in the fishing industry. The gill net fishermen also have a very large investment, and that brings me to the claim which these men make that many misleading figures have been published by the department regarding their income, their investment, and the number of boats engaged in the gill net fishing industry. Apparently this information has been secured from the canning and packing industry. The figures issued by the department show an investment by the gill net fishermen of some $800,000, while the fishermen themselves claim that their investment is closer to $2,000,000. The number of boats estimated by the department engaged in gill net fishing is 1,600, which the men claim is an error; they state that during the last sockeye season no less than 3,500 gill net boats were engaged in fishing in district No. 1.

It would appear to me that the question to be considered is this: Is it in the best interests of this country to continue to curtail the income of thousands of our citizens in order to satisfy the claim made by the department that a better grade of fish is being secured through seine fishing than through gill net fishing? I would say that no satisfactory evidence has been produced in support of that claim. My own opinion and it is based on information which I have secured from the men and from the department, is that it would be wise to prohibit seining for the next two years in order to check up on this question of quality. Oh, yes, the department tell us that they have no intention of permitting seining next year, the reason being that there will be no fish. But this is the year of the big run, and that is one reason why I think that the minister and the government in view of conditions should consider seriously throwing it open to the gill net fishermen and give them the advantage in this year of the big run.

I am quite willing to leave this matter to the judgment of the minister. I suggest to him that if he has not satisfactory evidence before him to justify making this change and cancelling the present regulation, he appoint someone perhaps outside the department, someone who is not interested in the canning or packing business, to go out into that district and go right out on the land or on the water and investigate and secure any information which the minister might require in order to deal with this matter.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): I wish to say a few words in support of Bill No. 17 introduced by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid). To me this is the age old question, as old at least as capitalism itself, of hand production versus machine production. Gill net fishing is a form of hand fishing and purse seine fishing is a form of large scale production. There are two questions which the government should keep in mind: first of all, the preservation of the fish in the fishing areas so that there may be supplies of fish so long as there are any human beings in need of them; and secondly, the welfare of all those engaged in the fishing industry. The fishing industry should be considered as a means of livelihood for the people in the surrounding country. If more people can secure a livelihood by the use of the seine, then that would be the proper method to follow. But it seems to me it has been proved that this is not so; it has been proved that seine fishing deprives a great number of fishermen of their livelihood while it gives a greater advantage to a small number of canners. That being so, I think the position of the minister is rather an easy one, regardless of what may have been done in the department before he came into office. He is now the minister and he is not bound by what took place before he took that office.

I do not know whether it would have been better to bring this matter before the house by way of a resolution rather than in the form of a bill, but I do not think it makes much difference. If the government would have accepted a resolution there is no reason why they cannot accept the bill. I was not here when the matter was discussed, but I understand that the hon. member introducing it asked that it be referred to the fisheries committee. I hope that the minister will see his way clear to refer it to that committee, and that when that is done an opportunity will be given some of the representatives of the gill net fishermen to appear before the committee. I attended a meeting in New Westminster early in the winter when the deputy minister, Doctor Found, was present, and I am sure that anyone who was at that meeting must have been struck with the intense feeling of the gill net fishermen. They had a feeling that they were being done out of their livelihood by the use of seines. I appeal to the minister to allow the bill to go to the committee on fisheries. I am pleased at the reasonable attitude adopted by the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Barber), and I add my word to his in an appeal to the minister to have the bill referred to the fisheries committee, where it may be discussed on its merits.

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Acting Minister of Fisheries): The hon. member who sponsors this bill (Mr. Reid) proposes to prohibit the catching of salmon by the use of purse seines. This is a controversial matter which has been before the house on previous occasions, but no one has ever attempted to deal with it by inserting in the Fisheries Act an amendment which would prohibit the use of purse seines. When I was out on the Pacific coast early in December I had the privilege of meeting delegations from the gill netters, from the purse seine men and from the canners. On the latter occasion only passing reference was made to this question. The hon. member who sponsors this bill was present when I met the gill netters. In his statement before the house on the second reading he, in my opinion, stated but one side of the question; and because he omitted several points which I think are salient, I propose to devote a few minutes to placing those points before the house.

Prior to 1916 the taking of salmon in these waters which we are discussing was prohibited after August 25, and the reason therefor was that the fish towards the end of the main run were not in prime condition for canning purposes after that date. They enter the straits of Juan de Fuca and hug the Washington coast, and are taken there by the United States fishermen in far greater quantities than they are on the Canadian side of the line running down the centre of those straits. As the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Barber) has said, until recently they have been taken in fish traps by United States fishermen, and by purse seiners as well. The fish traps have now been prohibited, and whether that prohibition will continue or not time only will tell. But intruded into this question of recent years has been the extensive runs of late sockeye. These fish come around on the Washington coast, and it is not until they enter the Canadian waters along the line running close to Boundary Bay, which is not so many miles south of the mouth of the Fraser river, that they can be taken by Canadian fishermen. The gill netters fish in the Fraser river and in the discoloured waters of the gulf of Georgia adjacent to the mouth of it, and they confine their attention principally to these discoloured waters, because in the clearer waters of the gulf the drifting gill net is visible to the fish and the fish at least endeavour to avoid it. The consequence is that the gill netters are found principally in the discoloured waters at the mouth of the Fraser river, and if they do move on into the adjacent clear water they find that they are not taking fish in the same quantities, and so they get back into the discoloured water.

Now, after 1916 there was a general desire for an increase of food, and the fishing season was therefore extended to last from July 1 to October 31. The hon. member who sponsors this bill left on the house, I think, the impression that when the seiners began by regulation to fish, they fished in the same waters and presumably for the same length of time as did the gill netters. In 1934 the purse seiners were permitted to fish from September 1, but the gill netters had begun at the beginning of the season on July 1; and on September 8 fishing was stopped by the supervisor of fisheries for conservation reasons. As two of the days between the first and the eighth of September were two weekly days of closing for conservation purposes, the seine fishers fished only for six days at the beginning of September. Conservation having been satisfied, fishing was again permitted on the first of October. So poor was the quality of the fish that the seiners fished for only two or two and a half days and then fishing ceased. Therefore the seiners were allowed by regulation to fish in the clear waters of the gulf, not infringing upon the discoloured waters in which the gill netters fish, for only a total of eight and a half days last fishing season, whereas the gill netters in the river and in the adjacent waters near the mouth were able to fish from July 1 until fishing was stopped except for the two days a week for conservation. I do not think the hon. member made that plain to the house.

With regard to the numbers that he claims are included in the rank of the gill netters, he states that 2,366 gill net fishermen are employed. I do not know the source of his figures, but they do not agree with those of the department and it must surely know the number of licences issued. The total number of fishermen was 1,705, of whom 1,266 were white; 39, Indians; 400, naturalized orientals, and 234, fishermen who had taken licences for other areas and had them later transferred to the Fraser. In addition to the above there were 335 assistants to the fishermen. Of these, 34 were whites, one was an Indian, and 300 were naturalized orientals, making a total of 2,040 instead of the 2,366 mentioned by my hon. friend. Those fishermen and their assistants are, I presume, residents on the banks of the Fraser river and naturally are particularly interested in the process of fishing known as gill net. The seiners on the other hand come from further afield. Last year there were 103 seine boats. As the crew varies in numbers from seven to eleven men, we may say that perhaps 900 would be an average of the crews of the boats. Besides that there were the carrying boats. We may say therefore that there were 1,000 seiners interested. Those seiners come from away up north, from Skeena, Comox-Alberni, the Vancouver district, and they are just as much interested in this question we are discussing as are the gill netters.

The position taken by the department in this controversy has been to endeavour to hold the balance even between these two methods of taking the fish. It became evident in 1930 and 1931 that consequent on the scramble for world markets, the Canadian canners were losing out in those markets owing to the extreme competition of United States and Japanese canneries in the matter of quality. They could not get a sufficiency of the quality desirable for their first grade canning. The fish, as I have pointed out already, come up and enter the clear waters to the south of the discoloured water at the Fraser river. They apparently cannot toward the end of the season be taken in sufficient quantities to supply the needs of the Canadian canner and consequently by regulation restricted seining was permitted for a certain time. My hon. friend the sponsor of the bill in his earlier statement expressed the opinion that it was not possible for the canners to keep the seine caught fish and the gill net caught fish separate. My information is to the contrary; it is that at least some of the canners are at particular pains to keep the gill net fish separate from the seine fish and so are able to say what proportion of the gill net fish and similarly, what proportion of the seine caught fish are prime, firm in flesh, suitable for a high quality of canning. Their opinion is that toward the end of the season they can get the desired quantity from fish taken in the cold clear waters of the gulf and they are not able to get them from fish taken in the discoloured waters in the Fraser river.

My hon. friend also referred to the fact that regulations were passed by the department and fired at the gill net fishermen without notice. I do not think that is quite a fair statement of the case. Every fall the chief supervisor of fisheries invites from the industry recommendations based on the past season's fishing. Those are received; perhaps they are added to in the form of recommendations by the chief supervisor himself; they are considered; they are tabulated and they are sent out to the fishermen's organizations. Those organizations have an opportunity to express their opinions thereof and then the department takes the necessary steps to arrange what the regulations for the coming season shall be. An order in council is then passed, and obviously it is not possible before the order in council is passed to pass on to those organizations the definite wording of the regulations. When it is passed the fishermen's organizations are so informed. I do not see in what other way it would be possible to keep in touch with those organizations.

It is quite obvious to me that the only role that the Department of Fisheries can take in this matter is to endeavour to hold the balance even. The fish are there to be caught, and surely no one type of fishermen can have a prescriptive right to state what method shall be adopted in order to take the fish. There was a great controversy before the regulations of 1932 were adopted. Every effort was made on the part of the department to try to draw those two sets of people together in order to arrive at a compromise which would satisfy both. When that was found to be impossible and the United States fishermen were taking fish by the millions while the Canadian fishermen were taking them in much smaller quantities, it was evident that something had to be done in order to enable this industry which we have been building up with such success to continue to fill the needs of the market.

My hon. friend suggests that the bill should be permitted to go to the fisheries committee. I cannot accept the principle of the bill, but with that proviso I have no reason to object to its going to the fisheries committee for further consideration and discussion. It must however not be taken that the government accepts the principle of this method of prohibiting the taking of salmon by seines in the waters referred to. My hon. friend has suggested that if the bill should go to the fisheries committee it would be desirable that these fishermen should come and give evidence before the committee. We must wait until the committee makes a recommendation with regard to that but it is quite obvious to me that both contesting parties must have the same opportunity and invitation to come and give their evidence. I very much question whether witnesses coming from that distance can add any new facts to those already collected on the subject, but as I say it is for the committee to state its wishes so far as witnesses are concerned. I do not object to the bill being submitted to the select standing committee on marine and fisheries so long as it is clearly understood that the government does not accept the principle laid down.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): As the acting Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Stirling) has stated that he is willing that this matter be considered by the committee on marine and fisheries, my remarks will be very brief. I am disappointed that the minister makes the reservation that the government will not accept the principle of the bill. To me that is a straight direction to the committee in advance that the principle of prohibiting seines in that area does not meet with the approval of his department or of the government. I thought when he was going to refer the bill to the committee he would do so without any such reservation, allowing the committee to decide the matter after hearing evidence, if they consider it necessary to call evidence.

In view of the fact that the acting minister has stated that in my address the first evening I presented only one side of the matter, let me point out that I have endeavoured to show both sides. I will state one fact to show how keen the cannery men are that only their side of the case shall be given to the minister, and nothing given to members of parliament or others who are interested. In 1931 I endeavoured to learn what the canners were doing, and, hearing that the Deputy Minister of Fisheries was to meet them in Vancouver I made it my business to go there and sit in at the meeting. It was held on a Saturday afternoon. The room was full of cannery men. I asked the deputy minister if he had any objection to my sitting in, and he said no. But when I walked in to the meeting you should have seen the look of consternation on the faces of those canners. Their hair almost stood on end. I said: "Gentlemen, I might just as well tell you who I am. I happen to be the member for New Westminster representing the fishermen of the Fraser river, and I am interested in this industry. I have heard the fishermen's side and now I want to hear the canners' side." One canner got up and said: "Mr. Deputy Minister, I thought this was a private meeting." It became so embarrassing that they did not know what to do. One member said: "I suggest that Mr. Reid go out of the room until we discuss this question." I went out and took my hat and coat and went off; as a member of parliament I was not going to stand waiting like a flunkey outside the door of a canners' meeting. That is the trouble: the deputy minister goes out there and meets the canners and gets an earful from them, and they come to Ottawa and give him another earful and then he holds a meeting with the fishermen. But until such time as a deputation of the fishermen and a deputation of the canners meet together with him on common ground this matter will never be satisfactorily settled. I would welcome the bringing from the Pacific coast of representatives of the canners' interests as well as those of the fishermen. I think now is the time that the whole matter should be gone into.

I was very sorry to hear the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Barber) say: "I am in favour of this but I do not like the way the hon. member introduced it." Next time perhaps I shall consult him first when I am going to introduce a bill. But, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that if I had introduced this by way of resolution he and a few of his friends might have talked it out and to-day we would find it at the foot of the order paper and so it would never be heard from again. I knew their tricks and their manners, and I introduced it as I did so that it would come squarely before the government. I speak as I feel in this matter because the livelihood of over 2,000 fishermen is at stake; they are threatened with being driven out by the vested interests who control and own most of the seines. I deprecate the acting minister giving the direction to the committee that the government is not going to accept the principle of the bill. I urge on the members of the committee that all interested parties be brought before them so that this whole matter, in which not only the livelihood of the men but the whole salmon industry itself is at stake, shall be fully heard. I am quite willing, however, to accept the suggestion of the minister and leave my further remarks for the committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the select standing committee on marine and fisheries.

SUPPLY—UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

AMENDMENT TO MOTION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Rhodes for committee of supply and the amendment thereto of Mr. Mackenzie (Vancouver Centre).

Mr. B. M. STITT (Nelson): After listening for something over a month to the declarations of anxiety on the part of hon. members opposite that we should bring down our legislation and go forward with our reforms and get on with the business of the country, the icy blast that inundated this chamber last night from Vancouver came to us with something of a shock.

Mr. DUFF: You are thinking of Hudson bay.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): To my mind all this is nothing short of a crude and organized attempt to divert public attention from the real issue that confronts this house and the people of this country to-day. The reform program of the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) is the issue now before the house. I can quite understand our Liberal friends being a little worried—

Mr. EULER: Very little.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): For a year or two they were basking in the sunshine of a few provincial victories, with the federal election already won, and they did not feel that they had to say or do very much. But the Prime Minister's program of reform gave them a great shock. I venture to say there will be a still greater shock coming to them when the smoke of the next election has cleared away. It is all right for them to damn the government and damn the Prime Minister and hon. members on this side for inactivity in regard to unemployment, but this was something that came to us as a legacy from the party opposite; it was left on our doorstep when we took over in 1930. It is true the leader of the government made certain promises then, and I believe he was sincere when he made them. But I do not think in 1930 any member of this house could have foreseen what was ahead of us. Most hon. members thought the depression was more or less a local affair that would blow over in a year or two, as other depressions had, and I think the right hon. leader of the government can be absolved from many of the promises he made at that time. I believe any fairminded man will admit that.

I think our friends opposite would be well advised to withhold their criticism until such time as the Prime Minister has brought down all his reforms. One or two measures have been brought down and proceeded with, but I want to tell hon. gentlemen that they have not heard half of it yet. They are ill advised to start throwing sand in the machinery at this time. I quite appreciate that hon. members may be carried away by some of the things they hear and see in these days of stress and strain, but let me say that they have no monopoly of sympathy for the unemployed, those poor unfortunates who through no fault of their own find themselves in a desperate condition. I think we on this side of the house have suffered as many sleepless nights as hon. members opposite, and we are just as sincere and just as much interested as they are in trying to find some remedy. We are looking for helpful suggestions, not for criticism. So far we have received mainly criticism from hon. gentlemen opposite, and destructive criticism at that. We have not been able to put through one piece of legislation in the last four years, no matter how helpful it may have been, without running up against almost a blockade from the other side of the house. Much of the legislation we said would be helpful, and it has turned out to be helpful. If hon. gentlemen are really sincere when they say they wish to assist this government to put through their program, why not climb on the construction train instead of throwing obstructions on the track? It might be well for some hon. gentlemen opposite to remember that a hammer can be used to build up as well as to tear down.

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) spoke with great gusto about world trade, and damned this government for high tariffs. He is not very consistent; it was not very long ago that he made a statement in this house which I should like to quote. Referring to page 4258 of Hansard for June 25, 1934, I find the hon. member quoted as follows:

> I am in favour of reduced tariffs all over the world, but I recognize that it may be very difficult for us alone to reduce tariffs when all other nations are maintaining theirs.
> Mr. Bennett: Good! At last!
> Mr. Mackenzie (Vancouver): We are discussing this in a very frank way.

The hon. member might be at least consistent when he speaks about tariffs. I should like to go a step further and quote another front bencher on the opposite side. This is an extract from a speech delivered on October 28, 1932, by the ex-Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Euler):

> I have always felt, and still feel, perhaps in a sense more than ever when all the other nations of the world, or practically all, have erected impenetrable barriers against our products, that it is only fair that we should have such a tariff as will enable our own producers to have a fair chance in their own market.

Mr. EULER: Where is there any inconsistency in what I have said since?

Mr. STITT (Nelson): I have not said there was any inconsistency on the hon. member's part. I am simply quoting the statements of some of the front benchers opposite in order to show the inconsistency of the party as a whole.

Now I should like to say a word in regard to trade. One would almost think Canada was the only country in the world that suffered any loss of trade, but what are the facts? We will all cheerfully agree that Canada experienced colossal trade during some of the years hon. gentlemen opposite were sitting on this side of the house, but in 1928 and 1929, especially after the adoption of the Hawley-Smoot tariff in the United States, trade started to fall off. It was only natural that Canada, together with all the other exporting countries of the world, should suffer some decline in trade. The chief statistician of the League of Nations issued a statement showing that in 1929 the world trade amounted to $68,000,000,000, in round figures. In 1930 it had dropped to $55,000,000,000. In 1931 it was only $39,000,000,000 and in 1932 only $26,000,000,000, or about one-third the trade of 1929. What happened in Canada; did our trade decline by two-thirds? Our trade is about fifty or sixty per cent of what it was in the banner years when the Liberal government was in power. One year we did drop back from fifth to sixth place among the trading nations of the world, but now we are back in fifth position, which is not a bad record in view of the statement made by the statistician of the League of Nations.

I am not going quite so far as some hon. members on this side of the house have gone; I do not say the Liberal party were responsible for the drop in trade or the loss of markets. I do not think they had any more to do with it than we did. The world became obsessed with mad, economic nationalism, and we were sliding down that slippery hill towards ruin and despair. The United States took the lead long before we fell in line; as a matter of fact that country set the pace for us, as was admitted by Mr. Cordell Hull, secretary of state for the United States. Not very long ago that gentleman said:

> Extreme nationalism, if persisted in, is destined soon to wreck our entire structure of western civilization.

He stated that the United States started it and most of the other countries fell in line, so we were driven to any action we took in this country. For one or two years after the depression set in United States industries were bonused by the government; under their codes they voted billions of dollars to stiffen up industry and keep it going. As a result practically all the available warehouses were filled with goods, and they were anxious to dump them on any market at any price. If the Canadian government had not taken the action they did take in 1930 practically every factory in this country would have been closed up within sixty days. It must have been disconcerting to some of the Liberals to see the figures contained in an article on the front page of the Ottawa Citizen this morning. The headline reads:

> Trade Figures Show Canada's Sharp Advance.
> During 12 months ended January 31, her exports to world exceeded imports by $131,830,000.
> 24·1 per cent growth in Empire business.
> Upturn of 20·9 per cent in commerce with foreign countries also revealed.

That does not sound very much like the stories some of our Liberal friends are telling, that we are strangling trade and losing what trade we have. We lost our trade for the same reason that every other country lost its trade; the world went crazy on economic nationalism and purchasing power was destroyed. I am ready to admit that on the surface it would appear the Liberals have the wind behind them. We must remember that in the last three or four years they have been doing most of the talking. The conservative party and its great leader, Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, have been too busy to answer the traducers of Canada; we have been trying to save this ship of state from destruction. But from now on we will go out on the hustings and tell the people our side of the story; we will give them the true picture of conditions which existed when we came into office; we will explain what has been done since and the courageous steps we have taken to meet those conditions.

I do not know why it is necessary for hon. members opposite to rise day after day and damn the leader of this party and his followers. In passing may I say to hon. members opposite that hon. members on this side of the house have yet to see our leader, in whom we have every confidence and for whom we have the greatest respect, rise in his place in this chamber and tell the people of Canada that he and his followers find themselves in the valley of humiliation. I believe I am fair when I state that it does not lie in the mouths of Liberals to hurl across the floor of this chamber the criticism which they direct against the greatest Canadian and the party supporting him.

I do not know how long this debate will continue. I shall not take up further time. I sincerely trust it may soon be completed so that we may defeat the amendment moved by the crown prince from British Columbia and get on with the business of the country. Let us see whether the Liberals will stand true to their promises and to the statement that they are here to support the government and to cooperate in having legislation passed at the earliest possible moment which may bring comfort to those who are suffering from one end of Canada to the other.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, since coming to this House of Commons about five years ago I have been anxious to cast my vote in support of the most constructive proposals introduced. I have adopted that attitude because in this corner of the house we have no strong party ties. Only on a very few occasions do we feel any need for voting together. Taken as a whole I believe the group in this corner of the house have been anxious to give the government an opportunity to put its program into effect as quickly as possible. I believe we indicated that in a similar stand when some time ago we voted against a motion like the present one.

On the present occasion however I feel I must support the amendment, because I believe in substance it states the facts, regardless of the reasons for bringing it forward. I must believe that the motive behind the amendment was the very best possible, and if it comes to a vote I shall vote in favour of it. The amendment states:

> This house regrets that notwithstanding the specific promises made prior to the election of 1930 and many times since reiterated, and despite the fact that extraordinary powers to deal with unemployment have been repeatedly secured from parliament, the present administration, after nearly five years of office, has not yet submitted to parliament any definite or effective policy to deal with widespread actual unemployment or distress which continues to be Canada's most urgent national problem.

I think every hon. member, regardless of whether or not he accepts the motion, must agree that the words contained therein are true. Hon. members opposite cannot get away from the fact that undoubtedly they were elected to put an end to unemployment. To-day I heard some of them say, "Well, we have done as well as other countries have done; show us some countries which have done better." They were not elected to do as well as other countries did; they were elected to end unemployment. If we were to accept that answer, then we would have to accept what the Liberals said in 1930,—"Why, conditions in Canada are no worse than they are in other countries." That statement would have been as true in 1930 as the statement made by hon. members on the other side to-day. Possibly conditions in other countries are no better than they are in Canada, but we must remember that in 1930 the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) contended that what was true of other countries so far as prevailing conditions were concerned should not and need not be true of this country. He said Canada was a young country. Well, to-day we are only a little more than four years older than we were in 1930, and in the life of a nation four years is a very short time. Speaking in Calgary on June 12, 1930, he said, "This is a new country, and there is no excuse for unemployment in Canada if a government does its duty." If that statement held in 1930 it is just as true to-day.

The hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Stitt) said, "Well, we did make promises in 1930 which we were not able to fulfil, but we did not know that this depression was not similar to former depressions. We thought it would pass away and that everything would be all right." They were depending on Providence to help them carry out their promises, because they have admitted that they did not know anything about the world economic situation.

I have never received the same publicity as the Prime Minister; possibly I have never been entitled to it. To-day however I was looking over the very small amount of publicity I received during the campaign of 1930, and found that at the first meeting I addressed I said, "The Liberal party is not responsible for the conditions prevailing in Canada to-day." Let me remind the Liberal party that if they blame this government for the economic conditions prevailing to-day they too are liable to the same accusation, namely that they know nothing about economics. At the same time I made the statement, "The Conservative party will not end unemployment"—and they have not. They could not end unemployment, because unemployment is part of and essential to the capitalistic system. Speaking in this chamber a short time ago the Prime Minister said, "There has always been a certain amount of unemployment in Canada; there has been during the best of times." I am surprised to note how easily he shifts his ground. Speaking in this house on the occasion referred to, he said that in normal times the average unemployment amounted to about 150,000. Speaking during the special session of 1930 he gave an estimate of 117,000 then unemployed, and stated that by the end of December of that year it was anticipated the figure would reach 177,000, if their program did not work out as they expected it would. But despite the fact that he realizes and maintains that the average number of unemployed for some years past was some 150,000—and during the election campaign in 1930 he admitted that the number of the unemployed was only 117,000—nevertheless he went out on the hustings and said that unemployment had got to the stage where it was a national problem and that the Liberals must be turned out because they had refused to accept it as such. Now you cannot blow hot and cold on these things and get away with it and have the people think you know what you are talking about.

Let me point out to my hon. friends another statement that was made by the Prime Minister. On July 16, speaking at Renfrew, Ontario, he said:

> There is no excuse for unemployment in our country. There is no excuse for poverty. We have the people and the resources. We have the capital—

But note what follows:

—but the capital will not allow itself to be used unless there is stability and certainty.

Stability and certainty of what? Stability and certainty of profits. Then that denies that we have the things that the Prime Minister said we had. We have the people, we have the resources, we have the capital. Now if we have the resources and the capital surely we can use them to meet the needs of the people of this country. But as a matter of fact the people of this country have not the resources and the capital. The capitalists of this country, the Flavelles, the Holts, the Gordons, the Blacks, and all that gang, those are the people that have the resources of this country, and those are the people that will not allow the resources of this country to be used unless they make a profit out of the process. That is why my friends to my right cannot put an end to unemployment any more than hon. gentlemen opposite without putting an end to the class that is furnishing the funds for the next campaign.

The impossibility of carrying out the promises made by political parties in this country should have become evident to those parties a long time ago. I have always felt that either one of two things must be true with regard to the promises made by the Conservative party during the last election, and particularly by the Prime Minister: either the Conservative party were quite reckless as to what promises they made, or they did not know or understand the conditions with which they were dealing. But whichever it was it does not make any great difference. I believe it was this impossibility of keeping promises made under present conditions that caused the mover of this motion to make the statement in Vancouver some little time ago that he was afraid the Liberals were going to have such a large majority in the next house that it would be difficult to keep them to their promises. I am afraid it will be difficult to keep them to their promises if they make any promises to restore capitalism, or to end unemployment, or to restore trade, or to do any of these things, because they are going to fail just as surely as this government failed to carry out their promises. But the hon. member for Vancouver Centre tried to safeguard at least the British Columbia contingent by saying that they at all events would live up to their promises. So the rest of you gentlemen from the other provinces must realize what they think of you in Vancouver, that you make promises and do not keep them, while the Vancouver contingent does keep its promises.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

The conditions in this country to-day have been developing and approaching their present stage for quite a long time. I have in my hand a little pamphlet which has been received I believe by all the members. The title of this little book is Five Years Under Bennett. The author is "Micawber," waiting I presume for something to turn up. Considering who the government is, I suppose that that was the inevitable thing to do. This little pamphlet has rather a Liberal flavour. I am going to quote just a paragraph or two from it to show that if things were not just as bad in 1930 as they are to-day they were bad enough to intimate to the government of that day that something should be done about it. The author of this pamphlet, after drawing attention to what the present government had failed to do, makes this statement:

To wage war against evil everywhere must always be a principal function of any administration. That is not a matter of party policy and Bennett greatly weakens his case when he claims political virtue for deciding to embark upon long overdue reform to clean up the evils of private capitalism which existed and cried aloud for action when he assumed office in 1930.

That is, when the present Prime Minister assumed office in 1930 after nine years of Liberal rule. Yet the evils of private capitalism at the end of that nine years were such that remedies were long overdue and the abuses cried aloud for action.

We have been told, not so much lately, although the statement was made again to-day, that the unemployed do not want work, or at least that some of them do not. That is something that we might have heard some years ago, but surely we should not hear it at this time. We all admit that there are among the unemployed men who do not wish to work, just as we also know that there are many other people in society who do not wish to work if they can get a living in any other way. But I have before me now a report that was prepared by the relief officer in Vancouver early in 1931, and referring to the men who were unemployed he says:

In the first place the act brought to light the hidden sores of unemployment. Men who were too proud to ask for charity promptly applied for the work they so grievously needed. When the registration of unemployed by the Vancouver city relief department commenced on October 1, crowds of applicants jammed the office, and by November 18, 4,513 married and 5,244 single men had registered. Even this did not represent the total number of unemployed as few clerical workers, union men, seamen and women were on the list.

He goes on to say, after referring to one or two people who tried to get something for nothing:

> Such cases, however, were far from common. Investigation resulted in thirty per cent of the married men registrations being placed in the category of "urgent," i.e., needing employment within three weeks to provide the necessities of life.

He continues:

> That there is nothing wrong with the unemployed except unemployment holds generally true. At the same time there are exploiters among the jobless equally with every other section of the community.

One of the difficulties that the unemployed are up against is that of getting unemployment relief. I was in a position to put a man who had been on relief some few months ago in Vancouver in touch with a little temporary work, and he refused to do the work. It would have taken only a week or two. He said he had found it so hard and had suffered so much before getting on relief that he did not wish to go through the ordeal again. As a matter of fact they are making it harder all the time for these men to be decent under the trying circumstances with which nearly all of us are confronted. I believe that some one during the debate to-day referred to the fact that the difficult conditions the unemployed were living under were driving them to commit crime. As a matter of fact, in some instances that is the only way in which they can get relief. Let me cite to the house two or three instances out of dozens that I came in contact with during this summer and fall.

A man and his wife called on me early one morning. The man was a returned soldier, a veteran of the great war; he was in ill health; he had been refused a pension, he had three children, which with his wife made a family of five. The affliction or disease from which this man suffered was such that he perspired profusely; yet such were the conditions in his home that they had not a second pair of sheets to change when the others became unsanitary. That is only one of the cases we come across; yet in that home there were three very nice children who were being brought up under such conditions. Again, a lady called on me. Her light had been cut off. They were allowed so much for light but it was not sufficient and the bill was increasing. At last the electric light company, expecting never to be paid their account, cut off the light and these people had to go without any light. They could not get fuel for heating purposes; they were given a small allowance for cooking by gas. And having no fue. for the furnace, when evening came, instead of putting on a fire as other people do, they had to put on their overcoats or go to bed. Take again the position of the young man under twenty-one in the city of Vancouver. Young people on relief—and there are very many whose parents are not working—are regarded as infants until they reach the age of twenty-one, and for infants the city provides $3.75 a month. Imagine an infant of twenty-one years of age living on $3.75 a month. But that is not the worst; after he has reached the age of twenty-one, there is one of three things he must do; he must either find a job, or go into one of the relief camps, or stay at home and be a burden on the family, who will be minus the $3.75 which he was paid before his twenty-first birthday.

These are circumstances which this government should concern itself with, if the government is concerned with the welfare of the people of Canada. I believe the conditions in Vancouver are generally speaking just as good as, if not better, than they are in most other cities in Canada. I have here a clipping from the Montreal Daily Herald of February 7 in which there appears an interview with E. J. Lincoln, executive head of the Golden Rule Association. The interview is to the effect that welfare groups, companies and individuals had promised sufficient support to repair certain quarters to provide a shelter for homeless men on relief, but they were not able to get permission from the city to open this shelter, the city officials taking the view that the shelter would prove an attraction to jobless people outside the municipalities, and that such a gathering place would become the centre of red propaganda. Mr. Lincoln goes on to say:

> Despite the statement of Albert Chevalier, director of the Meurling refuge, to the contrary, I guarantee that there are between 1,500 and 2,000 homeless men in the city at present, most of whom will do almost anything, the least of which is to seek nightly shelter in police stations to save them from lodging at the Meurling refuge where the rules are ridiculously severe. The inmates of the Meurling refuge are treated like unruly animals; they are not allowed to exchange one word from the time they enter at 6.30 p.m. until they are evicted at 7 a.m.

They are not allowed to stay in the refuge during the day; they must go into the streets in their flimsy rags and endure the cold. Surely any government that is sympathetic to the people must pay some attention to conditions such as these. My hon. friends on the government side declare that they are just as sympathetic as we are, but you have to have something more than sympathy; sympathy without action is of little value. I submit that there is a sufficiency of everything necessary in this country. The Prime Minister himself admitted this in the city of Kingston a few days ago, when he said that we had everything necessary to give a full life to everyone. If that is so I would ask this government, if it is a government, why it does not do something to bring this condition about. As I look at the various monuments standing on the grounds on parliament hill I often wonder whether the time will ever come when I shall see a monument to the Prime Minister and one to the Leader of the Opposition. I believe there is every reason why there should be monuments to both. We might put up a monument to the Leader of the Opposition for reforming the Senate and a monument to the Prime Minister for ending unemployment.

An hon. MEMBER: Why not one to the C.C.F.?

Mr. MacINNIS: Yes, we can do that too. I am supporting the motion moved by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre because I believe it deserves the support of this house. But I confess that, although the hon. gentleman is a member of a party which, in his own words, expects to be back as a government with strong support, I cannot see why he has not put forward something for the party as a whole. He has put forward certain views of his own, but I should like to know why, as one who is likely to be in the next cabinet, he cannot advance something that represents the views of his party. Why did he not confer with his leader and put forward something which we could definitely support? There were one or two things that struck me in the proposals he made. Take the second one:

> I want to advocate the handling of this entire problem as one of national emergency, even if only for a limited time, until this depression is over.

But does he think this depression will be over within a limited time? If so, on what ground does he base that opinion? Let me again remind him of the statement made by the hon. member for Nelson (Mr. Stitt) to-day that in 1930 they thought the depression would be over in a short while and that as soon as they got into office they would be able to handle it easily. Let me tell my hon. friend that there is no indication the depression will be over within a limited time. The depression is here to stay as long as we hold to the capitalistic system. Then he says:

> I suggest adequate, immediate and effective measures to increase our domestic and foreign trade.

What are the adequate, immediate and effective measures that are going to increase trade? I would like to know what they are. The only way in which trade can be increased in my opinion is by increasing the purchasing power of the great mass of the people, the farmer, the industrial worker; but if you increase the purchasing power of the farmer and the industrial worker, you decrease the profits of the employing class. You have here a certain amount of production; suppose it is divided equally now, so much going to each side; you cannot divide it in any other way without giving one party either more or less than the other. If you are going to give the workers and farmers more, you will have to give the employer class less, and just because you must do that, under the profit system you are going to have those who live by interest and profit against you all the time. Until you reach the stage where you are stronger, where you can do things without having regard to those people you are not going to improve trade, end unemployment or increase the living standard of the Canadian people.

In the program that has been brought down so far there is nothing that will improve the position of the working class or the farmer in any appreciable way within at least the next two years. Therefore, while I am supporting the motion and think it is justified in every respect, I wish the mover of it had gone somewhat further than he has and had explained to us how the Liberal party proposes to improve the position of those at present in need. How are they going to get the workers out of relief camps? How are they going to get the thousands of men who are on relief, the 1,200,000 or so that the hon. gentleman mentioned, placed in a position where they can provide for themselves? I claim that under the present system this cannot be done, and when we suggest that it can be done we are only fooling the people and ourselves.

Mr. F. W. TURNBULL (Regina): I too regret that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) did not tell us what in his opinion, his personal opinion, could be done to get these workingmen out of the relief camps. I further regret that the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. MacInnis) followed the bad example of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre and did not inform us how he would get the workers out of the relief camps, except to suggest that he would change the system; but he did not tell us how the system, when he got it changed, would do this.

Mr. MacINNIS: We are still waiting.

Mr. TURNBULL: The hon. member says: "We are still waiting." It is true hon. gentlemen opposite express a great deal of sympathy with the condition in which unfortunate people in this country find themselves. It is also true that there is sympathy extended toward those people by every person in Canada and out of it. I do not blame hon. members opposite for talking about the sympathy end of the matter because that is the only end they have to talk about. When they tell about their sympathies, they have exhausted themselves.

The motion before the house is as usual a negative one; it merely expresses regret that the government did not do something, but it does not express any views as to what the government ought to do, or as to what the opposition would do, or even as to the personal views of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre. That is quite in line with the tactics pursued by the Liberal party for the last four or five years. I would not like to go so far as to say that they are animated by political motives, but I might point out that they are following pretty closely the program set forth by the present Premier of Ontario in 1930 when he said, as reported at page 1886 of Hansard of that year:

> As I say, we are going to settle the unrest among the farmers, the unrest which has been created because of an economic disturbance which is world wide. I refer to the question of overproduction. When we have overproduction it is always followed by a period of low prices, and in a period of low prices it is very easy to stir up trouble, especially in the rural sections.

I suggest that the Liberal party are only running true to form; they are doing exactly what Mr. Hepburn in 1930 advised them to do, what they have been doing for the last five years and what they will do for the next five years whether they return to parliament on the opposition or the government side. Of course it is easy to find fault. According to Robert West, nothing is easier than fault finding. No talent, no self denial, no brains, no character are required to set up in the grumbling business.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) a few days ago read us a homily in the house because a resolution introduced on this side was according to him a political one. That served him as an excuse to vote Liberal, to exercise the innate liberalism which he has always possessed, coupled with a thin veneer of co-operative commonwealth federation. To-day a similar motion, just as political as the other, is introduced from the other side, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and his following have found an excuse for again voting Liberal, just as they did during the last five years of Liberal rule. If there is anything the Liberals did that they should not have done between 1926 and 1930, the blame rests as much at the door of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre as it does at the door of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King), because the former is the man above all men who, according to his own statement, with his confrère from North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps), maintained the former Liberal government in office from 1926 to 1930.

Mr. HEAPS: Will the hon. member state why he and the whole Conservative party voted with us for a similar motion in 1930?

Mr. TURNBULL: It is very easy to do that. In 1930 there was a motion that something be done about unemployment. At that time nothing was done, nothing was being done. The leader of the opposition was declaring that he would not distribute any unemployment relief except on a political basis; that he had not a five cent piece for any province that was not Liberal; that no Conservative province would get any money. But conditions are entirely different to-day. Something is being done for unemployment every day the house sits and every day of the week between the time the house prorogues and the opening of the next session. That is why hon. members on this side voted for a similar resolution in 1930 and are voting against the present one to-day.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But the hon. gentleman will concede that Labour members at that time voted against the Liberals, as to-day they are voting against the Conservatives.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): You are counting too much on Tim Buck. Don't count on Buck; he is a broken reed.

Mr. TURNBULL: This amendment, while it is accompanied by a great deal of language regarding the distressing condition of the unemployed, as to which we all agree, nevertheless if carried would have the effect of preventing this government from doing anything for the unemployed until after another election. Hon. members who profess to be in favour of social reform, to believe in all these things in principle, but who oppose them in practice when they have the chance, would if this resolution carried dismiss this government without anything being done along the lines of the legislation of which they profess to be so strongly in favour. Yet the hon. member for Vancouver Centre talks of "oleaginous hyprocrisy," and his leader goes back and forth through the country talking of the hypocrisy of Hon. H. H. Stevens in connection with the price spreads and mass buying investigation. I leave it to this house and to the country to say where the hypocrisy comes in.

I read with some amazement the speech of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre. It was amazing for some of the statements contained in it; it was amazing in view of the position he hoped to attain in the Liberal party. I thought for a moment it was the rising star of the white hope of the Vancouver Sun dawning on the horizon. But, evidently feeling the cold blast coming from the seat diagonally forward of him, he changed his tone and said he was not speaking for the Liberal party but expressing only his personal feelings. So the comet that flashed across the horizon vanished in gas and hot air as comets usually do. At one part of his speech the hon. member for Vancouver Centre made the statement that Canada had led the world in the march towards higher tariffs—an amazing statement. The hon. member must realize that there was not a year between 1926 and 1930 that tariffs were not going higher in every country except possibly Canada. And if Canada was leading the march towards higher tariffs it must have started five years before we came into office, because the march was well under way in 1926, and in 1930 the Liberal party joined in the march, because the Dunning budget increased the tariff on more articles than did the treaties with Great Britain.

I suggest to hon. members opposite that if they will allow the government to go into supply the probabilities are that in due course the government's legislation with regard to unemployment relief will come down. But that is what they are afraid of; they would rather discuss it on an abstract basis, with no measure before them, than on a concrete basis. They are still theorizers; they are prepared to discuss anything but facts. They will discuss principles from morning to night, but something concrete to put these principles into effect is beyond their horizon. All these things they say are objectives of the Liberal party. The other day the leader of the opposition told us free trade in automobiles was an objective of the Liberal party. I do not know how many years it has been their objective. If they were in office I do not know how many years it would continue to be their objective, but I suggest that objectives cease to be objectives when they have been reached, and the Liberal party never reach their objectives so long as they can use them to get votes.

Another amazing statement of the hon. member was that this government put a bonus on wheat restriction. He did not tell us where or when or how, in all probability because he did not know; for they did not do it.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): That seems fairly reasonable.

Mr. TURNBULL: A very prominent member on the other side of the house, a man who occupied a cabinet position in the former government, who was Minister of Agriculture, and who comes from western Canada and therefore should be acquainted with the wheat situation, was one of those who most prominently urged restriction of wheat production. If hon. gentlemen will turn to Hansard for the session of 1932-33 they will find these words credited to the ex-Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell) at page 991:

> Whether or not we like it, our wheat production must be reduced to near the world's capacity to consume. Otherwise the situation will continue to get worse and worse. Our carryover is becoming larger each year. I recognize the fact that no one country could afford to reduce its wheat acreage without similar action being taken by the others.

Then after condemning us because we had so treated Russia that we could not get an agreement with her, according to the hon. gentleman, he said:

> Are we going to go along blindly until we become so impoverished that many farmers will not have the equipment or strength with which to put in a crop? That will be the result of the ruthless law of the survival of the fittest.

I did not hear any dissenting voice from the hon. member for Vancouver Centre when his confrere in the former government declared that wheat production should be restricted, but to-day in opposition he raises a bogy that does not exist and says this government bonused wheat restriction.

Another amazing statement of the hon. member was that this government put the people of this country on the dole. This government never put people on the dole. The only reason why direct relief is in force in Canada is that the provinces came to the federal government and said they were no longer able to bear their share of indirect relief, and they asked this government—they whose duty it was to administer relief—to do it in the form of direct relief and not in the form of employment of labour. May I say in passing, that when the hon. member for Vancouver South, refers to the way in which the unemployed were treated in Montreal he should carry his complaints not to this government, which has nothing to do with the administration of unemployment relief, but either to the province of Quebec or to the city of Montreal, which have to do with these things in that vicinity. I do not know what purpose is served by cataloguing lists of people who have suffered hardship. I do not know of a time in the history of this country when some people did not suffer hardships. I could give case after case of people who have been run over by railway trains or have been hungry or who have not had all the clothing they needed for their beds. But to show a situation does not provide a remedy.

Another statement made by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre was that this government had raised the tariff in 1930 before going to the imperial conference for the purpose of negotiating treaties in the fall of that year. I heard the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) say the other day that when the motion to put these tariff increases in effect was put to this house he was the only man who opposed it, by saying, "On division." There might have been one or two others, but he apparently expressed the view that the rest of the members on the other side had concurred in the raising of these tariffs in 1930. Indeed there was no reason why they should not, because they themselves had raised them on many articles in the Dunning budget a few short months before.

I want to deal for a short time with at least some of the personal views of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre. I feel that the leader of the opposition must have breathed much more freely when he heard the hon. member for Vancouver Centre say he was not committing his nominal leader by the views he expressed in the house. Nothing could be said on this side that would have been a more masterly condemnation of the policy of inactivity and laissez-faire of the Liberal party than those views expressed by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre last night.

But let us examine some of his proposed remedies. The first was a national relief commission, and the second was that the problem of relief should be handled as a national emergency. I cannot see much difference between the two. He was following his leader in that regard, and this in spite of the fact that his leader and he both know perfectly well that the provinces will never consent to that method of handling relief. Consequently that can remain an objective of the Liberal party and perhaps serve some good purpose during the election campaign. In the campaign of 1926 the right hon. leader of the opposition addressed certain meetings in the province of Saskatchewan at which he preached the doctrine of a solid Saskatchewan and a solid Quebec, while some place else his friend the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) was preaching unity. A solid Saskatchewan and a solid Quebec was what the Liberals relied upon at that time to put them back in office, and it served the purpose very well, because then we did not have a national system of radio. If the Liberal party intend to get back into power in 1935, once more it will be through the solid Saskatchewan and the solid Quebec, so let us see the attitude of these two provinces in respect of this national relief commission. Mr. Taschereau is on record as declaring that he will not allow the dominion government to administer relief within the boundaries of his province. He is quite prepared to accept dominion money which he can spend, but so far as letting the dominion government spend it, that is quite beyond any idea Mr. Taschereau ever had.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Would the hon. member quote the statement of Mr. Taschereau containing those words?

Mr. TURNBULL: I have not the quotation with me at the moment, but it will be very easy to obtain and hand to the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain.)

Mr. CASGRAIN: I do not think he said that; I think he said his government would contribute fifty per cent, but he did not say what the hon. gentleman has suggested.

Mr. TURNBULL: I think the hon. gentleman misunderstood me. I stated that Mr. Taschereau said he would not allow the dominion government to administer relief in his province. He will accept the dominion government's contribution of fifty per cent of the cost, but he is to be the man who will handle the money. Then take the position of the province of Saskatchewan. On the 31st day of August, 1934, the government of the Dominion of Canada made an offer to the government of the province of Saskatchewan in these terms:

Your proposals for dealing with relief situation in drought areas do not commend themselves to this government. We are prepared to relieve you of the responsibilities in those areas for food, clothing and shelter for those who may require same.

In spite of the fact that if that offer had been accepted it would have relieved the taxpayers of Saskatchewan of the burden of relief in those areas, other than their share as taxpayers of the dominion, the premier of the province of Saskatchewan refused to allow the dominion government to pay for the food, clothing and shelter in the drought areas of that province. Yet hon. gentlemen opposite come here with this claptrap about a national commission to handle this as a national problem.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Would the hon. gentleman be good enough to read the remainder of that letter?

Mr. TURNBULL: I do not propose to read the remainder of the letter because it has nothing to do with the matter in question. The document is a telegram, not a letter.

The next proposition put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre was public works on a limited scale. That is exactly what the government have been doing. We have been building public works on a limited scale at the expense of the dominion government, so there is nothing particularly new about that. But the hon. gentleman broke new ground with his fourth proposition, which was government assistance for private undertakings, or in other words government bonuses for private institutions conducting business in this country. That opens a very wide field, but the government have carried out that plan in a limited way. We guaranteed the Beauharnois bonds to enable that institution to get back on its feet. We advanced money to the Canadian Pacific Railway in order to enable them to keep their shops open and provide work, and the government guaranteed the account of the Canadian Pacific Railway at the bank, so that the company could carry on. But every time this government did something to assist private undertakings so that men could be kept in employment hon. members opposite criticized us both inside and outside of the house from one end of the country to the other, and I do not think the hon. member for Vancouver Centre was much slower than anyone else to do so.

The fifth proposition is "adequate, immediate and effective steps to increase domestic and foreign trade". One adjective would have served the purpose; three take more space. Yet when this government undertook to make treaties for the purpose of increasing trade outside of Canada; when this government undertook to make treaties that did increase the trade of this country outside of Canada, no one opposed them more vigorously than did the hon. member for Vancouver Centre. He was not expressing his personal views at that time, because with one exception every Liberal on the other side of the house opposed the government, and if I remember correctly the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) joined in the condemnation. I stated that these treaties did increase our external trade. In order to establish that proposition I have before me an extract from the Winnipeg Tribune of February 18, 1935, which I imagine was a Canadian Press dispatch appearing in all newspapers. This dispatch states that in 1934 Canada purchased a greater sterling value of yarns and cloth than in 1930. This was under the textile schedule that has been so roundly condemned and that has formed the text for practically all the opposition to those treaties. The article continues:

> In 1934 Canada's purchases of manufactured textile fibres from Great Britain amounted to £6,116,010 as against £5,586,621 in 1930, and this in spite of the drop in unit prices of textiles in Canada. These comparative figures are obtained from an analysis of the latest accounts of Trade and Navigation of the United Kingdom.

Then some of the principal purchases follow. So while last night the hon. member for Vancouver Centre advocated that we should take steps to increase our outside trade, every time we take a step to increase that trade there is a chorus of disapproval from across the aisle. Since that time every Liberal member except one and every Liberal newspaper in the country has been condemning what was done by this government in the direction of increasing our external trade. Only the other day they boasted that they had won by-elections by condemning the treaties procured by the Conservative government, which the hon. member for Vancouver Centre now says were the objective of proper policies.

His next proposition was the reduction of interest rates on dominion obligations. The very last thing done by the government of the present leader of the opposition before they went out of office was to refund some bonds of the Canadian National Railways that had been bearing interest at four and a half per cent. Those bonds were refunded at five per cent. So the very last thing done by the Liberal government was to increase the interest on public obligations, but now, after four years in opposition, they are coming back and advocating a reduction in interest rates. That is in line with the policy of this government, because in the last four or five years, in the face of the greatest difficulties Canada has ever seen, we have converted over a billion dollars' worth of bonds with an interest saving of $14,600,000. So, as far as that is concerned the hon. member for Vancouver Centre might come over and join our side of the house and help us carry on that work.

His next proposition was a national conversion scheme at two and a half per cent. Well, I hope the hon. member never becomes minister of finance, because as sure as he does he will be faced with that proposition. It is all very well to say you are going out to borrow millions of dollars at two and a half per cent, but the other fellow has a right to say whether or not he will lend it to you. If we had the money at two and a half per cent, now that it is nearly time for an election the hon. member for Vancouver Centre would be telling us that we should convert our national obligations at one and a half per cent, and if we had it at one and a half per cent he would be right in the C.C.F. pew advocating that we should have it without any interest at all.

The hon. member's ninth proposition was that we should increase our currency by $430,000,000. I do not know what basis the hon. member used in arriving at that amount, why it was not $425,000,000 or $435,000,000 instead of $430,000,000. In any event that was the amount. May I point out to him that according to Sir George Paish the British people did ten billion dollars' worth of business with $150,000,000 worth of gold and currency, and Canada is not approaching anything like ten billion dollars' worth of business yet. There is plenty of currency in the country for the business we are doing. The problem is to get the currency moving, and it is not a question of printing more which will remain static.

The tenth proposition was to balance the budget. That is a hoary old phrase. However, there are only two ways of balancing a budget: one is to spend less and the other is to tax more—or perhaps a combination of the two. This government has spent less upon the administration of the country, and as a result of the operations of hon. gentlemen opposite they have had to spend considerably more upon the railways. During their term of office hon. gentlemen opposite added $922,000,000 to the capital obligations of the Canadian National Railways, and they left another $200,000,000 worth of contractual obligations to be paid by this government after it took office. Then they tell us to balance the budget. If we suggest greater taxation—

An hon. MEMBER: Lower the tariff.

Mr. TURNBULL: That is a bright idea. If we spend less money we are told to spend more. If we raise the taxes we are told to lower them again. In his speech the hon. member stated he wanted us to balance the budget, but in the same speech he advocated that the responsibility for relief should be shouldered by the dominion and taken from the provinces and municipalities. Will that help us balance the budget? Then he advocated public works. How can we spend money on public works and still balance our budget? Next he suggested that we should assist private companies. There is no limit to the amount of money which could be spent in assisting private companies. When private individuals get government money to spend, the government has not a very good guarantee of getting that money back. That has been the history of government assistance to private institutions as far back as I can remember.

Then he offered a suggestion which may have a good deal of merit in it, although certainly it would not help to balance the budget. His proposal was an "extension of the principle of the War Veterans' Allowance Act, by reducing the age to fifty-five years." In short, the proposition of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre is to spend money in new and additional ways, in huge amounts, so as to relieve unemployment, and at the same time to balance the budget. To be able to accomplish that end one would need to be as great an acrobat in financial matters as the hon. member for Vancouver Centre is in the use of language.

Then, proposition number eleven is a financial conference with the provinces "to consider the advisability of establishing a national loan board to coordinate, if possible, the investment activities of governments," and so on. This is to be a financial conference with the provinces to consider a national board to be set up to control provincial expenditures. How far would the hon. member get with Mr. Pattullo on that point? How quickly would Mr. Pattullo, who is opposed to any amendment to the British North America Act, agree to have his finances controlled by a national board? How about Mr. Taschereau, who states there will be no amendment to the British North America Act? Where would the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) stand, the man who declares that Quebec will fight to the last ditch any amendments to the British North America Act? How far would he agree to a national board to oversee expenditures of the province of Quebec? In the days when the provinces and the municipalities were doubling, trebling, quadrupling their expenditures, why did not the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, or the members of his party, institute a national board and lock the door before the horse was stolen? Why did he not have a national board set up to prevent the provinces and municipalities from going into debt and increasing their expenditures each year the Liberal government was in office? Why is he so keen to have some control effected after the damage is done? His proposition I submit is impracticable, because the provinces would not agree to it.

His twelfth proposition, the one respecting the War Veterans' Allowance Act, is the one with which I must have a great deal of sympathy. The burned out soldier loses his ability much earlier than seventy years of age; he is probably as old at sixty as the average man at seventy. The War Veterans' Allowance Act might very well be amended so as to apply to returned soldiers at an earlier age than seventy.

Then the hon. member wound up his speech with the unlucky thirteenth item. He did not put the number on it, because that might have looked bad. But as a thirteenth item in this great program of reconstruction, in which he has set forth his personal views and not the views of his party, he quoted a paragraph from the book—a paragraph from Industry and Humanity. It is full of language, full of expression and full also of inaction. It is a book which remained a book from 1918 to 1934, a book which was hidden up on the shelves; its author had forgotten where he put it. It was never brought out and used. There is a story which reveals why the 1919 Liberal platform was not put into effect. There is a reason why that was not done. That arose as a result of the election in 1921. If the right hon. leader of the opposition would tell the story of what took place in the few months after that election; if he would tell of the men from Montreal who interviewed him within a few months of the election; if he would tell the story of the thumb that was put upon his back and that kept him in a state of inaction for the next nine years, history would know that the Liberal party was the party of laissez-faire because it had to be.

[Mr. Turnbull.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What is this all about?

Mr. TURNBULL: If the right hon. gentleman wants to tell what happened I suggest to him that open confession is good for the soul.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have no idea what the hon. member is talking about.

Mr. TURNBULL: Let him tell us himself.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: All humbug.

Mr. TURNBULL: If he does not remember it, some of his friends in the Progressive party may be able to tell him some day.

May I close by stating that if hon. gentlemen opposite are as anxious to make progress during this session, as they say they are; if they are anxious to proceed with legislation in an orderly manner, as they say they are; if they are anxious to have social reforms placed upon the statute books of this country, as they say they are, then it is pretty hard to believe they are sincere in view of the fact that their conversion has been so recent. If they are so anxious to conclude the present session, then they will cease making amendments such as the one we are now discussing, amendments which have only the effect of preventing the house from doing business. If accepted, the amendment would prevent the house from doing any further business, because it is a motion of want of confidence, and at the same time and by the same token it is a vote of confidence in the Liberal party; because if the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Vancouver South vote for this motion they vote to defeat the government, a government which is doing something for the people of Canada, and to place in power in Ottawa a party which has done nothing for them. That is the alternative which hon. gentlemen must face. They cannot vote for this resolution and for the defeat of this government without at the same time voting for the policy of laissez-faire which they themselves have condemned in no uncertain terms. If they do vote for the Liberal party—or, to be more precise, for the personal views expressed by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre—then they vote in condemnation of all they have said in this chamber about the Liberal party either at this session or the last.

So far as I am concerned I should prefer to see the opposition abandon its blockading tactics and allow the government to proceed with the business of the country. I have not the slightest doubt that in the course of time the government will introduce legislation at the present session, as it has done in other sessions, to take care of the unemployed. Hon. gentlemen opposite know perfectly well that upon such occasion they will have ample opportunity to discuss anything they may wish to discuss concerning unemployment. But they would rather have the people believe that the Liberal party has been responsible for bringing forward the idea of taking care of the unemployed, and they do not wish to be placed in the position of having to discuss measures which in due course the government will introduce. In my judgment the resolution is purely political, and it passes my knowledge how hon. members of this house can vote against a resolution brought in by one party on the basis of its being political, and then vote for an equally political resolution just because it is brought in by the other party, unless there is something in their minds that they were not entirely able to eradicate when they joined the new movement.

Mr. MICHAEL LUCHKOVICH (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, nine long years ago I entered the house an innocent and guileless man, politically speaking, but after the lapse of that time I must unfortunately confess that I have lost a lot of that original innocence and that original guilelessness. Members of this group find themselves very much between the devil and the deep blue sea so far as this resolution is concerned. We find ourselves between the upper and nether millstones ready to be ground into dust by either one or the other of the two parties.

Mr. GOTT: Does the hon. member suggest that the blue sea is on this side?

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: Well, I do not know that the blue sea is over there, but I do know that on this question of the unemployed a good many of us are at sea. The hon. member who introduced this resolution (Mr. Mackenzie) is somewhat like the pied piper: he is trying to chase all the metaphorical rats in the Conservative program down into the Ottawa river. He says that he and his small group of British Columbia members are going to come down here somewhat like the band of Spartans that fought off the Persian hordes at Thermopylae. There is this difference, however, that the Spartan band was successful, but we do not know yet whether the British Columbia band of mountaineers will be equally successful.

The hon. member said that the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) had a deathbed conversion, that like Paul's conversion on the way to Damascus Mr. Bennett was converted before the next election. It does seem to me that the official opposition has not been converted to any reform at all yet, judging by the speeches that have been delivered on this resolution. They used to tell me as a little boy that unless you confessed your sins you were liable to go to the hot place, and it may be that unless there is that conversion on the part of the official opposition they also may be bound for that so-called nether region at the next election.

I have read this resolution carefully, and it is very similar to a resolution that was introduced into this house in 1930 by the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps). On that occasion when the division came there were 81 yeas and 100 nays, the Conservatives voting with this group for the resolution, but when the vote is taken on the amendment now before the house I imagine that the Liberals and this small group will vote for the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie).

After hearing so many speeches on unemployment I would like to ask this question: What is the difference between the Conservative party and the Liberal party, not only on the unemployment problem but so far as the tariff issue and all other issues are concerned? I frankly confess that both parties are going to use the issue of the tariff at the next election. On the one hand we shall hear the Conservatives say that they will make high tariffs fight for us, and on the other hand we shall hear the Liberals say that they will make low tariffs fight for us. It is true that the government of the day did raise the tariff, as they promised to do. I am not a believer in high tariffs, but I do not believe that the Liberals in the past have lowered the tariff as much as they have professed to do, not only during the past parliament but during other sessions when in power. That lack of difference between the two parties in regard to all these issues has brought a little ditty to my mind which runs as follows:

Says Tweedledum to Tweedledee,
Resign and give your place to me;
Says Tweedledee to Tweedledum,
If they want you they must be dumb;
For the moral in this little ditty,
Taught by men both wise and witty,
The Conservative Ins, the Liberal Outs,
They take the public for a bunch of louts;
They promise this and they promise that
But they all strike out when they come to bat;
The Liberal Outs, the Conservative Ins,
Are merely two Canadian Siamese twins.

I have already referred to a resolution in essence similar to the one now before the house, introduced on March 31, 1930, by the hon. member for North Winnipeg. On that occasion what did the Liberal opposition have to say? I have here the speech of the present leader of the opposition. He said:

Let me repeat that statement. I can see nothing arising out of a recognition of this problem as a national problem which obliges this federal government, having regard to our constitution and the division of powers under it, to collect taxes from the people generally in order to meet a situation which affects only a certain group of people in some municipalities in this country, but which does not adversely affect the country as a whole. I am not saying we could not do such a thing; I am not saying that this federal parliament cannot vote money for any purposes for which it may desire so to do, but I am trying to make it clear that under our constitution I do not think it was ever intended that this federal government should become the agency through which problems which are primarily municipal and provincial should be dealt with.

In 1930 it was stated by the leader of the Liberal opposition that this was a municipal and provincial matter, but here we have the hon. member for Vancouver Centre introducing a resolution condemning this government for not doing anything about unemployment, after his own leader had said that the problem of unemployment was a provincial and municipal matter. The leader of the opposition further said:

Employment is a matter of contract and civil rights.

Further on he said:

... how little we have a national problem of unemployment in this country at the present time.

And at page 1227 he says this:

But I would not give a single cent to any Tory government.

And further on he said that if he called a conference of provincial premiers on unemployment, foreign countries would hesitate to make investments in Canada. In other words, he did not wish to inaugurate any system of getting out of this unemployment situation because he thought that by doing so foreign investments would be driven out of the country.

Listening to the speeches of some members on the other side one is led to believe that in view of the stand pat tendencies of the official opposition those hon. gentlemen, in asking for the resignation of the government at the present time, could base their argument only on the assumption that it had been proved that the present government lacks the confidence of the people, that it lacks a policy, and that the official opposition has a policy which is better than anything that the government in power has done.

[Mr. Luchkovich.]

Now, it is not for me to defend the policy of the government; let the government do that for themselves. I voted for the trade pacts in 1932 because I felt at the time that that was one of the only measures in sight to get us out of the present mess in which we find ourselves. I do not think that the trade pacts are as good as the party in power would have us believe, nor do I think they are as bad as the official opposition suggests. But I did think they were one way of getting out of the depression, and that is the reason I voted for them. As regards the hon. member who has moved this resolution, if he asks for the resignation of the government without offering an alternative policy of his own, he is placing himself not only in an untenable position but in a position that is ridiculous as well. He is very much in the position of the polar bear mentioned by Lloyd George in his speech—a bear perched on an iceberg which is rapidly melting away as it approaches the equator. Without a substitutive remedy his resolution loses much of its force. It may be good politics to rely on the prevalent discontent throughout the country, but it is folly to ask for the resignation of one government and the return of another without offering some remedy as a substitute. It is folly to put one party out and another in merely because we like the way the leader of the opposition combs his hair better than the manner in which the Prime Minister brushes his. Someone says that neither has any; that makes it still worse.

Mr. HANBURY: You are splitting hairs.

An hon. MEMBER: There aren't any to split.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: At any rate I hope hon. members will accept my address as one that is spoken with the utmost sincerity. I have been asked by many people in the west what difference there is between the two parties. Not long ago an article appeared in Canadian Business, written I think by Leslie Roberts, who says that ever since confederation there have been only three fundamental differences between the two parties; in 1911 reciprocity, in 1917 conscription and in 1926 the constitutional issue. At the present time it would appear that even the Prime Minister is just as anxious to have reciprocity with the United States as is the leader of the opposition; as regards conscription, that to-day, is a dead issue; and as regards the constitutional question of 1926, that also is a thing of the past in so far as it was used then for political purposes. That therefore reduces the fundamental differences to nil because there are no differences, no fundamental differences to-day. I feel in my heart—

An hon. MEMBER: No heart.

Mr. LUCHKOVITCH: No heart? Well, the hon. gentleman has monopolized the hearts of this house and possibly I have none. It was prophesied by the dean and the seer of the house that the Liberals would be the next government in Canada, but in my opinion unless the leader of the opposition comes out flat-footed and puts a definite policy before the Canadian people so that they can judge for themselves as to the differences between the two parties, then the same fate will befall the opposition that has been predicted for the present government. Unless that alternative policy is presented to the people I see no point in the substitution of one party for another; and if that alternative policy cannot be supplied, then why should the people be asked to jump from the frying pan into the fire? It may be good strategy to base one's politics on the expediency of the moment and to maintain a sphinx-like attitude in face of the depression and also to bank on the public dissatisfaction with the government in order to regain power, as well as on a lucky break in the economic tide to retain oneself therein. But I feel that the party seeking power in future will not get very far with any evasive strategy of that sort. Unless an alternative is placed squarely before the people, a definite N.R.A. policy, I have no doubt that the official opposition will meet with the fate that the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) has prophesied for the government. On more than one occasion I have heard it said throughout Canada that the present leader of the opposition does not need a policy to get into power because public dislike of the government will put him back. That may be so, but it most certainly will not keep him in power. Unless he evolves a more genuine and practical policy, more practical than anything enunciated in this house either during this session or in past sessions, I am afraid that his characteristic vacillation will strike the death blow to parliamentarism as we know it to-day. By seeking office without offering a substitutive remedy, he is virtually putting himself "on the spot," and in view of the recent pronouncements of the Prime Minister in regard to the new order and in regard to reform, I do not think the leader of the opposition can afford to play the old stereotyped battle of the Ins and the Outs and the Tweedledums and Tweedledees, or to wait for Providence to help him out in this miserable game of politics, because in the future I am not so sure that as Sir Wilfrid Laurier used to say Providence will be on the side of the Liberal party.

Mr. YOUNG: It always has been.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: Well, there is a new rule now to be enacted called "God helps those who help themselves," this does not mean easy campaign funds but plain hard honest application by the people and the government, and I am afraid the Liberals have not at least at the present time such a policy. In the past it seems to me—and I speak in all sincerity—that the Liberals have been sponging a little bit too much on the Almighty, but in the future it does not look as though they will be able to get away with it; for Providence has made that road much harder and the obstacles and hindrances placed thereon much more difficult to remove. I cannot conceive of the laissez-faires tackling a job that will require so much work, but if they do, then I expect their avoirdupois will greatly decrease within the next few years if in the meantime the reducing process does not actually kill them.

Much has been said about government intervention. I believe in a certain amount of it. The birth of a new order has made government intervention obligatory. I wonder how many members of the official opposition really realize what they are in for when they become the next government; for if they do not, then one must conclude with the words of the poet that "where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise."

Mr. HANBURY: The hon. member is a living illustration.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Hanbury) has given us a living illustration. He should be the last man to make a statement of that kind. I see him strutting in his seat over there. I have seen men strut while they stand up, strut while they walk, and strut while they dance, but he is the best example I know of any man being able to strut so ostensibly even while he is sitting down. As far as the official opposition are concerned they have done nothing nor said anything this session that would lead one to believe they were actually going to march forward toward their professed goal of reform. It is the same old story about tariffs, finding new markets and restoring old ones.

I was quite amused during the dying hours of last session to hear the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Sanderson) twitting the members on the government side and also this group about the next election, how our heads would roll into the trough of political oblivion, and how he tried to put fear into our followers throughout the country. Greatly encouraged by recent provincial victories, this grizzly old warrior started to decapitate all and sundry in the house. Even the leader of the opposition on that occasion was not free from this somewhat bloodthirsty attitude, and time and again he would emerge with club in hand to obliterate the big, bad Prime Minister over yonder and his retinue behind him.

So far as I am concerned I might take seriously the challenge in this resolution were it not for the lack of an alternative policy on the part of the hurlers. What does the resolution mean? Strange as this may seem, I intend to vote for the resolution. In view of the fact that we voted for a similar resolution in 1930, it logically follows that we must again vote for a similar one now. But I say that simply routing one form of conservatism and substituting another for it will get us nowhere. As for restoring old markets and finding new ones, I still remember the Fordney-McCumber and the Hawley-Smoot bills passed in the United States, which in 1929 killed our trade with that country in so far as agricultural products and lumber are concerned, as well as the various quota restrictions and impositions that have been placed against our exports to the European market.

The other day the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) waxed very indignant when I made certain metaphorical comments on the free trade speeches of certain Liberal lieutenants in and out of the house. References were made to the extravagant expectations aroused by this oratory, the purpose of which was to create throughout this country the impression that this fair dominion would blossom as the rose and be with milk and honey blessed, and that tyrants throughout the whole world would cringe in fear once it was learned that the present opposition was returned to power. Visions were conjured up of an irate populace threatened by five years of misrule attacking the bastile of special privilege, singing the deathknell of protection to the tune of the author, the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) and of a revengeful public enraged by loss of markets marching round the walls of Jericho not once but seven times—

Mr. POULIOT: With trumpets.

[Mr. Luchkovich.]

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: —yes, until the trumpets from Témiscouata, the promulgation of the 1935 Liberal free trade policy and the acid pulverizing negotiating power of the king of Prince Albert caused the mighty rocks to crumble like sandstone in an avalanche, with a grateful electorate proclaiming their timely deliverance and the king of Prince Albert adjuring them at the time, saying: "Cursed be he before the Lord who riseth and buildeth up the tariff walls of Jericho. He shall be put to the sword, just as we killed all the other Tories within the walls of the former Jericho. And the Lord was with the king of Prince Albert, and his fame was noised abroad throughout the length and breadth of the land." Such were the visions conjured up by certain hon. members not only in this house but also throughout the country.

Mr. POULIOT: This is a caveman's speech.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: I imagine the hon. member for Témiscouata thinks the Canadian people should now be of good cheer; for the litter will soon be refilled and our pockets will jingle again; the lowing kine and the bleating sheep and the grunting pigs will soon fill the empty freight cars and will proceed by the hundreds of thousands to the markets of the world as aforetime.

Mr. POULIOT: Don't forget the golden calf.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: I shall not forget the bellowing calf from Témiscouata.

Such is the dream, but what is the reality? I do not propose to set myself up, as the hon. member for Témiscouata seems to think, as a U.F.A. Mark Antony either to praise or to bury the right hon. gentleman who heads this government, for, as Shakespeare said, the evil that men do lives after them; the good is oft interred with their bones; so let it be with the Prime Minister. But I do ask the leader of the opposition what he would do if he were in the Prime Minister's place. I think the country has a right to know. They will not be satisfied with the present negative attitude of the Liberal party, nor are they in a humour for the old gag, "We shall not prescribe until we are called in." On many occasions I have heard the leader of the opposition say that the Prime Minister was an autocrat. If that were so it were a grievous fault, and grievously the Prime Minister will have to answer for it. But again I say that the people have a right to know what the leader of the opposition would do if he were in the Prime Minister's place. This rowing with muffled oars to his objective may be all right, but the people want to know what he is going to do when he gets there.

Mr. POULIOT: Something that you can't understand.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: Again there is the loud sound that speaks the vacant mind.

We want to know what they are going to do to put purchasing power in the pockets of the people, what they are going to do to raise the price of primary products, to cure unemployment and to control the country's finances and banking facilities. We heard them say throughout Canada: If we are returned to power we are going to nationalize the banks; yet when a resolution was brought up in this house to nationalize the banks some hon. members said: Yes, we want to nationalize the central bank, but not the other banks. It is like the lady who wrote to the paper saying a certain thing resembled a man trying to learn to swim with one foot in the water and the other on the land. It simply can't be done. If you are going to nationalize the central bank you have to nationalize the other banks as well; but when that resolution came up for a vote there was a mad dash on the part of the official opposition to the narrow aperture that leads to the lobby. Many of them were almost killed in the rush, and it was noticed that those who spoke so vociferously in favour of nationalizing the banks were conspicuous by their absence when the resotion came to a vote.

Now it has been said that the hon. member who introduced this banking resolution last year introduced a tripartite amendment of alphabetical stupidity to the central bank bill. He wanted a bill for a central bank that was (a) controlled and owned nationally, (b) government owned, or (c) government controlled. This resolution must have been offered with the feeling that it might be heaven, hell or purgatory his party might share so they thought it well to make friends everywhere. I noticed in the speech he made on the amendment to the motion to go into supply that he very cautiously left out the whole subject of finance and the banks, which of course is the pivotal point, the main thing. You have to reform your finances before you start reforming anything else, and once they are reformed all the other things will take care of themselves. The policy of this group is a program of useful social services financed out of the real credit of the country without incurring interest or debt. Sooner or later that will involve the nationalization not only of our central bank but of our whole banking system. That is the alternative policy of this group, and certainly it is a better alternative than the policy produced here by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre.

As I have already said I intend to vote for this amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre because it is very much like the resolution introduced by the hon. member for North Winnipeg in 1930. It is not a nice position to be, as I said, between the devil and the deep blue sea, but there is no other way out for us. So I for one intend to vote for the resolution, not because of what the hon. member for Vancouver Centre has said concerning their futile alternative policy, but because we voted for the same thing in 1930, and logically we must do it now.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. JOHN T. HACKETT (Stanstead): Why so much haste to put the question? Who started this discussion?

I have followed the progress of this debate and have been amazed, in reading the proposed amendment, to see that while the aim of the hon. gentleman who introduced it avowedly was to give the house the benefit of his wisdom in discovering and applying some means that would dispel unemployment, he quite forgot to say what they were. The members of a very learned body assembled the other day for the purpose of discovering some solution for the railway problem. They passed a resolution and sent it to various hon. members. In it they called upon the government to see that effective measures were taken to solve the railway problem. That is about as definite as the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) was in his speech. I noticed how warmly the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) acclaimed the suggestion of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre that all immigration barriers should be torn down and that we should welcome to this country all and sundry who might wish to come.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I never said so.

Mr. HACKETT: I would direct the hon. gentleman's attention to his opening remarks, when he read and characterized with many adjectives an extract from one Hugh Wolfenden, who stated that our problems to-day were attributable to a number of causes, and:

—particularly in exporting countries, may be listed tariffs, immigration restrictions and other impediments to the free interchange of goods and workers.

If the hon. gentleman takes time and has the interest to reread his speech he will see that on many occasions while speaking last evening he advocated unrestricted immigration and free trade.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Not once.

Mr. HACKETT: I am not astonished that he is a little appalled at what he said, but if he takes the trouble to read his remarks he will find that if they mean anything they mean just that.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): No. Just cite one sentence.

Mr. HACKETT: However it is not my purpose to endeavour to follow the hon. gentleman in the different statements he made last evening. He purported to be very much interested in unemployment, of course everyone in the house is interested in that problem. Unemployment is localized; it is to be found in the big cities of the dominion. Outside of the cities there is no unemployment that is extraordinary or need cause worry to any person. If by any chance the cities of Montreal, Toronto, Ottawa, Hamilton, Winnipeg, Vancouver and possibly Calgary were moved beyond our borders to-night we would have no unemployment problem in the dominion to-morrow morning. It is in the industrial life of the country that unemployment exists. It is because large and ever growing numbers have been taken from other vocations, particular from that of tilling the soil, that we now have this loss of equilibrium which expresses itself in large, apparently indissoluble lumps of humanity incapable, in their present situation, of providing for themselves and their families. In no province is this problem more pronounced than in the province of Quebec. In no province has the trek from the land to the city been as rapid or as continuous. In no province is the percentage of people on the land so small. To-day barely a third of the people of the province of Quebec is engaged in tilling the soil.

If we cannot devise some means of finding markets for the products of our industrial establishments we must admit that the possibility of gainful employment for people in the city is remote. The work which these people flocked to the cities to do was not work which resulted from prosperous or voluminous external trade. In large measure the work which they came to do was work which resulted from the policy of expansion and borrowing which characterized the last decade. To-day we find that cities, municipalities and provinces are heavily indebted, and it was during the period that they were spending the money they borrowed that great industrial activity occurred. I remember one day hearing the late Sir Henry Thornton say that he had built freight cars in numbers sufficient if placed end to end to reach from the city of Montreal to the city of Kitchener. It was while we were carrying on work of that kind, constructing machinery, constructing tools and implements for use in the building of roads, building telephone lines and storage dams and equipping ourselves to supply and serve a population of twenty million or twenty-five million people, when we were making these improvements many of which need never be renewed, that for a few years we found employment in the cities for people who hitherto had been engaged on the soil.

[Mr. Hackett.]

On motion of Mr. Hackett the debate was adjourned.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, February 27, 1935

The house met at three o'clock.

QUESTIONS

ONION IMPORTATIONS

Mr. GOTT:

What quantity of onions was imported into Canada during the year 1934 from Australia, New Zealand, Egypt, Bermuda, United States of America and all other countries respectively?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury):

Calendar Year 1934

Imports from	Pounds
Australia	3,183,370
New Zealand	3,807,016
Egypt	703,080
Bermuda	766,803
United States	2,414,391
Chile	314,115
Japan	40,000
Spain	1,681,130
United Kingdom	156,374
Yugoslavia	47,004
Total imports	13,113,283

CALAMITY POINT, B.C., FOG SIGNAL

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver):

1. Is the Department of Marine in receipt of any information with respect to a collision between the ss. Princess Alice and the West Vancouver ferry No. 5?

2. Have any complaints been received by the department with respect to the fog signals at Calamity point, Vancouver?

3. Will the department make the necessary investigations with the view to establishing a completely efficient fog signal at Calamity point?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1. Yes.

2 and 3. Complaints made last November were that the bell on Calamity point beacon does not now sound as loudly as it did when it was first installed. These complaints were investigated and found to be without foundation. The force and direction of the wind have a great effect on the carrying power of a bell signal.

L'ISLE VERTE QUE., WHARF WATCHMAN

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Was Mr. Antoine Grandmaison dismissed from the position of watchman of the wharf at l'Isle Verte?

2. If so, for what reason was he dismissed, when and at whose request?

3. Has the government appointed some one to succeed him?

4. If so, what is his name?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1. No, he did not hold that position. His appointment as keeper of the light on the wharf at l'Isle Verte was cancelled on January 22, 1935, on account of age (over 70).

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. His successor has been appointed to take charge of the light on the opening of navigation, 1935.

4. Emile Pelletier.

DOMINION ARSENAL, QUEBEC

Mr. POWER:

1. How many persons are now employed in the various branches of the section of the dominion arsenal at Quebec known as the cartridge factory and located on the glacis of the citadel?

2. What was the total amount of the payroll in connection with employees of the said cartridge factory during the fiscal year 1929-1930 and during the fiscal year 1933-1934?

Mr. STIRLING:

1. Sixty-two.

2. 1929-1930—$61,241.05.
1933-1934—$41,038.29.

JOHN SIMON MACLEOD

Mr. DUFF:

1. Is John Simon MacLeod an inspector in the postal service in Nova Scotia?
2. What is his age?
3. How long has he been in the service?
4. Has he applied for superannuation?
5. If so, when will he be superannuated?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.
2. Sixty-nine years.
3. Since the 14th November, 1890.
4. No.
5. See answer to No. 4.

FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT*

Mr. ILSLEY:

What is the name, residence and rate or basis of remuneration of each of the official receivers in Nova Scotia, appointed under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, 1934?

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Speaker, the information sought to be obtained by this question will be found in the answer to question No. 20, in the name of Mr. Duff, which I shall answer when we reach it. The latter question is wider in its scope.

Mr. SPEAKER: Answered by question No. 20.

Mr. ROBERGE:

1. How many farmers of the county of Megantic-Frontenac have effected a settlement under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act?

2. What are the names and addresses of such farmers?

3. How many settlements have been effected to date?

Mr. RHODES:

1. Records are kept on the basis of judicial districts. The county of Megantic-Frontenac is partly in the judicial district of Arthabaska, partly in the judicial district of St. Francis and partly in the judicial district of Beauce.

In the judicial district of Beauce 35 settlements were reported to the end of January.

In the judicial district of St. Francis 35 settlements were reported to the end of December, 1934.

In the judicial district of Arthabaska 3 settlements were reported to the end of December, 1934.

2. It is not public policy to give the names and addresses of farmers whose cases have been settled.

3. Complete returns are not available from every part of Canada but the settlements reported indicate that considerably more than 1,000 settlements have been effected to date.

Mr. DUFF:

1. What are the names of the official receivers for the province of Nova Scotia, appointed under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act?
2. In which district or county does the jurisdiction of each receiver reside?
3. What are the salaries of said receivers and do they receive travelling expenses or any other remuneration except salary?

Mr. RHODES:

1 and 2. F. W. Bissett, county of Halifax; R. C. Sterne, county of Lunenburg; G. Dwyer, county of King's; F. H. Patterson, K.C., county of Colchester; T. R. Hayden, K.C., county of Pictou; R. H. Butts, K.C., county of Cape Breton; J. W. Maddin, K.C., county of Cape Breton.

3. Salary of $150 a month and actual travelling expenses.

HOPEWELL, N.S., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. DUFF:

1. Has the postmistress at Hopewell, Nova Scotia, been dismissed?
2. How many years was she in the service?
3. On whose recommendation was she dismissed?
4. Were there any complaints respecting the office?
5. What was the nature of such complaint, if any?
6. Has a successor been appointed and on whose recommendation?
7. Is the new appointee a returned man?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Dismissal authorized, but not yet effected.
2. Forty years.
3. The department received reports to the effect she is no longer giving personal attention to the office on account of prolonged illness.
4. Yes.
5. Postmistress gives no personal attention to office.
6. (a) Yes. (b) Col. Thomas Cantley, M.P.
7. Yes.

HOPEWELL, N.S., RURAL MAIL SERVICE

Mr. DUFF:

1. Has contract for carrying mails on rural route No. 1, Hopewell, Nova Scotia, been recently renewed?
2. Who was former contractor?
3. Were tenders asked for?
4. If so, what were the names of tenderers and what were the prices submitted?
5. To whom was contract awarded?
6. Was he the lowest tenderer?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.
2. D. H. MacLean.
3 and 4. No.
5 and 6. D. H. MacLean by renewal.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

Mr. DUFF:

1. Has the contract for carrying the mails on rural route No. 2, Hopewell, Nova Scotia, been recently renewed?
2. Who was the former contractor?
3. Were tenders asked for?
4. If so, what are the names of tenderers and respective amounts of their tenders?
5. To whom was contract awarded?
6. Was he the lowest tenderer?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.
2. Wm. McLeod.
3. Yes.
4. Ashmer Perrin, $250; Alvin Archibald, $338; Neil Cameron, $348; Thompson Millen, $348; John J. Oliver, $350; Daniel MacKay, $360; Wm. McLeod, $365; Adam Murray Halliday, $2.50 per trip or $390 per annum; Charles Matheson, $460; Ellsworth R. Sinnis, $3 per trip or $460 per annum.
5. Ashmer Perrin.
6. Yes.

HASTINGS, ONT., RURAL MAIL SERVICE

Mr. MULOCK:

1. How long did Ernest Braithwaite hold the position of delivering mail on R.R. No. 3, Hastings?
2. What remuneration did he receive?
3. Was a petition signed for his retention by persons upon this route?
4. Did the government refuse to allow him to continue on the route because his was not the lowest tender?
5. Was he an ex-service man with dependents?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. From July 1, 1929, to June 30, 1933.
2. $700 per annum.
3. Yes.
4. Yes.
5. Yes, but no information as to dependents.

PROHIBITED BOOKS

Mr. WOODSWORTH:

What books, with titles, authors and publishers, are at present on the list of those not permitted to pass through the mails?

Mr. SAUVE: It has always been considered that to publish lists of publications, the transmission of which has been prohibited in the Canadian mails, gives them undue advertising, and to that extent defeats the purpose for which they are prohibited.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

Mr. BERTRAND:

1. Was there an order in council passed by the government on date of November 23, 1932, approving a certain portion of road in Ontario as trans-Canada highway?
2. If so, designate which road has been so approved?

Mr. GORDON:

1. No.

2. See reply to No. 1.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

ADULTERATION OF BUTTER

Mr. BOURASSA:

1. How many suits were taken, in the course of each of the last five years, against persons charged with falsification or adulteration of butter: (a) in the province of Quebec; (b) in the rest of the country?

2. How many convictions (with the total amount of fines): (a) in the province of Quebec; (b) in the rest of the country?

3. How many acquittals: (a) in the province of Quebec; (b) in the rest of the country?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Return tabled herewith.

6. What quantity of butter was shipped to England: (a) in 1930; (b) in 1934?

7. What quantity of cheese was shipped to England: (a) in 1930; (b) in 1934?

8. What quantity of lumber was shipped to England: (a) in 1930; (b) in 1934?

9. What quantity of wheat was shipped to England: (a) in 1930; (b) in 1934?

10. What quantity of tobacco was shipped to England: (a) in 1930; (b) in 1934?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Return tabled herewith.

ADULTERATED BUTTER TESTS

Mr. BELEC:

1. How many samples of butter were tested for adulteration by officers of the Department of Agriculture in Canada during each year since, and including, 1930, by provinces?

2. How many of each of these samples tested were found to be adulterated?

3. How many firms were convicted for the first time for violation of the Dairy Industry Act?

Mr. WEIR (Melofrt): Return tabled herewith.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

CHARLEVOIX-SAGUENAY PUBLIC WORKS

On the motion of Mr. Casgrain:

For a copy of all paylists and accounts for materials in connection with work done by the Department of Public Works in the county of Charlevoix-Saguenay during the years 1933 and 1934.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, with regard to this motion I have discussed the matter with the mover and we have arrived at a solution which for the present will not make it necessary to present this motion to the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: Motion withdrawn.

Motion withdrawn.

CARIBOU ISLETS-TRINITY BAY MAIL SERVICE

Mr. CASGRAIN:

For a copy of all documents, letters, correspondence, telegrams; also the list of tenders and the names of tenderers, in connection with the contract for the carrying of mail between Caribou Islets and Trinity Bay, on the north shore of the St. Lawrence river, in the province of Quebec, from the 1st of February, 1934, to date.

GRAND ETANG HARBOUR, N.S.—WEST PIER

Mr. DUFF (for Mr. Ralston):

For a copy of all advertisements, calls for tenders or requests for prices, contracts, correspondence, documents, and memoranda, including payrolls and accounts since July 1, 1934, in the possession of or under the control of the government respecting extension of West Pier at Grand Etang harbour, Inverness county.

POINTE-AU-PIC, QUE., WHARF

Mr. CASGRAIN:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, correspondence, and other documents, in connection with repairs and improvements made to the wharf at Pointe-au-Pic, Charlevoix county, and a copy of tenders submitted by various persons or companies in connection with the above works, since July 1, 1934.

ARCOLA, SASK., POST OFFICE

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia):

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, and other correspondence, passing between any member of government or any official and any other person or persons since January 1, 1934, in connection with the purchase of a building in Arcola, Saskatchewan, for post office purposes.

SUPPLY—UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

AMENDMENT TO MOTION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Tuesday, February 26, consideration of the motion of the Minister of Finance that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself again into committee of supply, and on the proposed amendment of Mr. Mackenzie (Vancouver).

Mr. JOHN T. HACKETT (Stanstead): At adjournment last evening I had told the house that unemployment exists only in the large cities of the dominion. I had suggested that there are in these cities half a million workers who are without work, and I was about to inquire how this surplus population had found its way into the cities. The answer is probably twofold. The first is to be found in our immigration policy. For many years we have welcomed to our shores people of varied vocations and of varied training. It is true that most of those who came here immediately before the depression were classified as farmers or farm labourers, but a careful scrutiny of those who arrived between 1925 and 1930 will show very clearly that a substantial percentage of them either remained in the cities or found their way there shortly after their arrival, attracted by the high wages and other incidentals of city existence. For the ten years which preceded 1930 about 150,000 people a year were received into the dominion, or about a million and a half. The second reason for the surplus population in the cities is to be found in the trend of population from rural sections to the cities. Fifty years ago only eighteen per cent of the population of Canada resided in urban centres; in 1931 about fifty-four per cent of the total population of Canada resided in the cities.

If in these centres there are half a million workers for whom there is no work, and we consider that these half million workers and their dependents constitute at least a tithe of our population, it would seem to me to be a very prudent thing to inquire whether there is any reason to anticipate that there will be employment for these workless people in a future which is not too remote. We have heard economic nationalism, national self-sufficiency, criticized in this house; and we have heard scathing references made to those who practise it. But whether we like it or not, it is a fact, and it is one which is well established in all countries of the world. It is one which we as well as others are practising. It is a doctrine which has its foundation in a very human and very natural sentiment. When there is not bread enough for the whole company we feed our own family first. I suggest therefore that unless we can see some hope of employing in gainful work those who are out of work in our cities, and of doing so in the immediate future, it behooves us to consider very carefully whether they may not have to be removed to other places where they can earn at least their own food and where they will cease to be dependent on the other nine-tenths of the population of the country.

We have heard a great deal of the woes of the unemployed. I do not think that the Conservative party or any member in this house is unaware of the embarrassment of the man who is without employment and without the means of sustaining his family. But after all there is another element in the community about whom we have not heard so much. We have heard a great deal about the man without a job, but it is about time something was said of the man with a job who is bearing the burden of the troubles that are weighing so heavily upon the country to-day. We find that the burden of maintaining the unemployed has become very heavy and it is making itself felt in the large centres to such an extent that our cities are on the verge of bankruptcy and are resorting to all manner of expedients to support those who are out of work. It seems to me that we should recognize the fact that a country cannot exist or persist if its cities cease to perform their allotted functions. The cities are the great pulsating organs of the national life and by them the blood of trade commerce and policy is put into circulation. If the cities become bankrupt and are unable to perform this function necessary to national existence, the nation as a whole is bound to suffer if not to perish.

I have noticed that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) has not given any credit to the government for enacting policies which I think admittedly have not only made our situation better but in any event have prevented it from becoming as difficult as the situation is in other countries. I believe the policy which raised tariffs and gave employment to our own people was a beneficent one and one which was helpful to the Canadian people as a whole. I believe the policy which closed our doors to immigration and negotiated trade treaties, was wise and useful, but I was amazed that the hon. members entirely overlooked the policy of land settlement which has been practised by the government and which has achieved very substantial success. It has not been heralded abroad as widely as have some of the other activities of the government. I have before me a statement of the work accomplished by the Department of Labour showing a situation which I think should arrest the attention of the house. I find that from October 1, 1930, to December 31, 1934, no less than 132,444 people have been taken from the cities and established on the soil or in work on the soil. Families settled on farms at no expense at all to the government number 15,589 and comprise 77,945 persons. Single men placed in farm work number 33,842, making a total of 111,787, all of this having been done without any expense to the country. As regards settlement with financial assistance under what is called the tripartite agreement the relief settlement from June 1, 1932, to December 31, 1934 plan, 3,948 families or 20,657 individuals were placed on the land. This, with the total which I gave a moment ago, makes a grand total of 132,444 persons, a notable achievement. The disequilibrium which is the cause of so much difficulty at the present time, manifested through unemployment and the ills that are incident to inactivity, the dissatisfaction and the festering discontent in the large cities, can be remedied to a great extent by a further prosecution of this back to the land program. I do not profess that everyone is suited to become a farmer on a large scale, but if a survey were made of the six or eight large centres of the dominion, many heads of families would be found who would be suited to take up land in the unorganized districts, and a large number would be suited to take up small holdings in organized districts. With a small amount of assistance great and permanent relief to this ill could I believe be found. If it be true that gainful industrial employment will not in the immediate future be available to the half million unemployed, any temporary expedient which gives them a dole or a certain amount of employment on public works which are more or less necessary, is a plan which does not commend itself to my judgment. Such a policy but "skins and films the ulcerous place" which it can neither probe nor heal; it does not cut out the sore; it does not make for cure, whereas if families are reestablished on the land where they can provide for themselves, they cease to be a burden to the state and a problem to the centre in which they live.

On several occasions I have spoken in similar terms in the house and have exposed myself to the jeers of some hon. members who sit opposite. One invited me to make an attempt at farming myself, and another made some scathing remarks as to the manner of life which people lead on the land. I do not take these jeers too seriously; debate in this, as in other deliberative assemblies is conducted in that way. But I do suggest that when people are unable to provide for themselves, when for months and years they have been sustained by others, they should not be too critical of the means and opportunities offered them to become again self sustaining. I thoroughly believe that the vast majority of those who are out of work are anxious to get back to work, but I think we should also recall that throughout the ages people have not been able to escape entirely from trial and tribulation, whether they lived in Canada or elsewhere. There are things which are essential to life; they are bread, clothing, and, in countries like this, fuel; and when people have been given the opportunity to secure these they have attained quite as much as the bulk of humanity have ever been able to enjoy as far back as the records of the human family run. So I am not too much disturbed by the criticism of those who say that all should be entitled to a livelihood on a very high plane. We have cherished a delusion of that kind for a few years back; we are now paying the penalty of having been deluded.

We are approaching the spring of the year; I suggest that it would be most beneficial if we could at the time further accelerate the land settlement undertakings of the Department of Labour. I believe that if a careful survey were made it would be found that a very substantial proportion of those who are out of work and who are suited to take up life on the land would be glad of that opportunity. I wish to make it quite clear that I do not advocate that all be sent off to the hinterland, merely to drown their cries of distress in an engulfing wilderness. But I do believe that with a measure of assistance a substantial number of unemployed could be placed where they would be able to make their own livelihood and regain that self respect which comes from independence.

We have heard a great deal about housing, We have heard a great deal about slums, and it has been suggested that we should devote large sums of money to tearing down buildings in the cities and replacing them with modern dwellings. I suggest that substantial sums be used to build modest homes for those who are suited to go on the land, to build those homes, or some of them at least, in districts already settled, where there are churches, schools, telephones and highways. By doing this we shall enable those who for so long have been dependent to become again self-sustaining. This would not be extremely expensive at the present time. There are few farmers in the east who are not overburdened with land, on which they find it difficult to pay the taxes, and large numbers of small farms of a few acres each could be purchased in almost any of the eastern townships, and people adapted to life on the land taken from the cities and established on them.

I hope that the hon. gentleman who introduced this amendment will realize that he has overlooked this very valuable piece of work which has been done during the past four or five years and in his reply will give the encouragement of his support to its acceleration and encourage it later by his voice and vote.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Wetaskiwin): I hope the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Hackett) will excuse me if I do not spend any time dealing with the matter which has engaged his attention, as I cannot imagine anything being further from the actual problems of Canada than the question which he has been discussing.

I think the matter of human suffering, which has become so widespread in Canada and in the civilized world, owing to our inability to use the goods which we are able to produce, is well worthy of the time which this house has so far spent in this discussion. I think we are indebted to the hon. member who by his amendment brought to the attention of the house and the country this major problem of our time. Of course the amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) is in effect one of want of confidence. He bases his no confidence motion on the fact that the government has failed to solve the problem of unemployment. If failure to solve the problem of unemployment merits a vote of no confidence I am surely going to vote for this amendment. I shall do so for the same reason that I voted no confidence in the government preceding this one, when the party to which my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre gives his allegiance was in power. We moved a similar resolution to this for a similar reason, that that government had failed to solve the problem of unemployment. In fact I imagine that such a motion would be applicable to any government in the world at present, with the possible exception of Russia. So I agree with the hon. member for Vancouver Centre in that respect. I agree with him also in another respect; he said the other day that the government had sown the wind and was reaping the whirlwind. As I looked at my hon. friend when he said that I could easily agree with him that they were certainly reaping the whirlwind, for there was no lack of either whirl or wind.

But of course unemployment is not a new problem; we have been discussing it ever since I came to this house. It is true that the problem is getting more acute, but the causes of unemployment during the nine years of Liberal rule were exactly the same as they are now. It is true that there were not so many unemployed, but it is also true that those who were unemployed had the same right to be employed as the greater number have to-day. Time and time again I, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and others of this group brought the unemployment question to the attention of that government, as we have done with this government, so I say the problem is not new but is only growing more acute. The efficiency of machine production determines the size of the unemployed army. Poverty keeps pace with our progress day by day. However much we may deplore the lack of action on the part of this and other governments in years gone by in dealing with the unemployment question, a neurotic haste in doing wrong things at the eleventh hour will not make matters very much better, and I would say that the proposals of the hon. member who moved this resolution, with which I will deal later, are proposals made in neurotic haste to do wrong things.

The debate so far has not dealt at all with the economic question which is the problem of the modern world to-day. I think I could sum up the entire debate, so far as the two major parties are concerned, by saying that the Liberal party has demonstrated beyond doubt that the Conservative party has failed to solve the problem of unemployment, and I think the Conservative party has demonstrated with equal thoroughness that the Liberal party did not solve it when it had the chance and do not know how to solve it now. I think I agree entirely with both sides; I think we can make it unanimous. Each has proved that the other could not meet the problem. So I am glad of this debate if for no other reason than that it affords most excellent propaganda for the C.C.F. That is what I have been trying to prove for a long time, and now these two parties have helped me out by proving it themselves, so that is something we will not have to do over again. Any person reading the debate on this, as on other motions, and seeing how effectively and completely the one party has proved the inability of the other, surely cannot have very much faith in either.

The hon. member who moved this motion apparently holds the view that if the Liberal party were in power it would be better for the unemployed, that the Liberals would be able to carry on in a better and more effective way than the present government have done. That may very well be, but I would ask on what grounds the hon. gentleman expects the members of this house or the people of Canada to believe him. First there is the ground of past experience and past history. It is an unfortunate thing that history should come up thus to meet us on the very threshold of a great ambition, but it does, and the history of the Liberal party—with which I need spend no time because, as I say that has been dealt with very well by the Conservative party—during the nine years it was in office here shows that it was just as helpless to meet the unemployment situation as the present government was or is. We moved similar motions time and time again. I recall that the last one we moved was in the last session during which the Liberal party held power. We did all we could to impress the Prime Minister of that day with the fact that there was unemployment in Canada, but I recall that he spent a good deal of time in trying to prove to us that there could not be unemployment in Canada because during that year Canada produced more goods than during any other year in all her history. Therefore he argued that there could not be unemployment in Canada. Everyone knows that the figures he gave were accurate, and that because they were true there was unemployment, for what makes unemployment but producing more goods than you ever did before? On that occasion, sir, I did my best to put the government out of power because they had no policy with regard to unemployment. I shall do the same with regard to the present motion and the present government and for the very same reason, that neither party has done anything at all to meet the economic condition from which unemployment comes.

So with regard to the past there is no good reason why we should believe that the party of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) would do any more with regard to unemployment than the present government have done. My second reason, however, is that even in his proposals he speaks only for himself; he is not speaking for his party, and he makes that very clear. I have very great respect for the personal opinions of my hon. friend. I am always glad to hear them; they are fresh from the anvil of his own hammering, they are sincere and they are vigorously expressed. But after all they are only his opinions and really they have no more value than my opinions, nor does it mean that the Liberal party will stand by his opinions any more than they will stand by mine. So from that point of view also there is no reason to suppose that his party would do any better than the other party.

The next reason for lack of faith in his proposals is the proposals themselves. The views expressed by him, however commendable they might be in themselves, have absolutely no bearing upon the main issue now before the people of Canada. I will refer briefly to some of his arguments, and first I should like to refer to what he regards as the causes. I want to state emphatically that in my opinion he is entirely wrong with respect to what he regards as causes; in fact not one of the causes that he mentions is a cause of anything at all. They are results and effects, not causes at all. First he says there are the unemployable. The unemployable are not a cause; they are the result of something else. Next he speaks of rapidly changing adjustments, and I suppose he means the necessity for rapidly changing adjustments, which we have failed to make. He says that is another cause of unemployment, or in other words he has very properly said that unemployment is a cause of unemployment, however that may sound. Then he says that the codes of many organizations in Canada to-day, as in other nations, make it almost impossible to provide gainful occupation for many of our youth. That, he says, is another cause. That is the problem itself; that is not a cause. Next he says that business cycles of unemployment are inevitable. Is that a cause of anything? Is it even good sense to make the statement? It may be very true; it is true that these cycles have been recurring over certain periods of history, but to say that they are inevitable, that they must keep on, is to say that we are incapable of dealing wtih the economic problem which produces those cycles.

So these are not causes at all, and since my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre has not found the cause it will not be surprising if he fails to find the remedy. Then he proceeds further to indicate that laissez-faire spirit in which he was born and bred, in which he has grown up and which he still serves most faithfully. I want to quote that section because I believe it bespeaks his political impotence:

> Business itself must be willing to outlaw those forms of competition which are socially destructive.

That is the abracadabra of politics so far as the hon. member is concerned. He says business ought to do that, "And so, please, Mr. Business, kindly please the hon. member for Vancouver Centre; get busy and do it." That is the spirit behind the statement I have read.

But notice further: He indicates he wants to get rid of the fruits of competition without getting rid of competition itself; he seeks to do something which is impossible. So far as the evils of competition are concerned the hon. member stands with hon. members in this corner of the chamber, but he parts with us when he says, "These evils we hope big business will smooth out, but we will keep competition." That is a most impossible position to take. And so he states that "business itself must be willing to outlaw those forms of competition which are socially destructive, and it must give due shares to labour, the consumer, to management and to capital." Again we must leave it to the moral sense of big business and soulless corporations to do the fair thing with labour and the community. Of course that is the spirit and soul of Industry and Humanity—a very excellent book, the only difficulty with it being that no person ever thought of attempting to follow the suggestions contained in it, and if he did make such an attempt I am afraid he would not go very far.

Then the hon. member continues:

> It must be content with business profits—

That is, big business.

[Mr. Irvine.]

> —and must not search unduly after illusory and unsocial speculative gains.

In other words the corporations must be good little fellows, go to Sunday school, do all the things we ask, and we will allow them to proceed. He states:

> It must be willing to endure that minimum of government control which the general interest requires. In short, shall I say, there must be a new partnership between business and politics in Canada for the sake of the common man.

What a glorious and pious wish that is! Then,

> Governments need the assistance of constructive and productive business, and I think business needs the guidance and cooperation of governments, not bludgeoning, not dragooning, not conscripting, but in a real alliance responsive to the promotings of the social conscience.

So that we are not to force anything; we are not to have any law which would compel these people to do the right thing. We are just to ask them nicely to do it; we are not to dragoon them, but must leave them to the social conscience. But a corporation neither has nor can be affected by a conscience.

That is the second hopeless feature of the proposals offered by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre. We turn next to his personal proposals. These are many in number; I believe he strained to reach fourteen, but scarcely made it. I imagine the effectiveness of these proposals must be judged in inverse ratio to their numerical strength. Let us go over some of them. First he states he is giving only his personal views. Then he said:

> I sugest that we should have immediately at our disposal a complete census and registration of those now unemployed.

Well, there is no cure for unemployment in a census, that I know of. For a long time we have been taking the census of the unemployed and yet we have made no progress. Indeed the hon. member quoted figures which I presume were fairly accurate, but the fact that he had those figures did not help the unemployed. However, he states that if we have those figures we will proceed to find how many are unemployable, and that when we have found the number we must find some special measures for their care. Precisely, Mr. Speaker; that is begging the question. What are the special measures for their care which the hon. member for Vancouver Centre had in mind? That is the point. We have to take his word that he will provide special measures, but we do not know what they are or how he will provide them.

Next he states:

I want to advocate the handling of this entire problem as one of national emergency.

Again that would not help unemployment. Every problem of a social nature is more or less of a national emergency. Then he states:

I advocate the undertaking by the government of public works on a limited scale in which the greater proportion of the appropriation shall go to labour rather than to supplies or equipment.

He does not indicate how the greater proportion is to go to these people who do the work. May I point out to the hon. member that the only way the government could carry out the works suggested under his proposal would be to go further into debt. When the hon. member had completed his public works the unemployment situation would not be improved, and he would not have touched the problem at all. Then he states:

I advocate cooperation with the construction industry and other business for privately directed works and undertakings, their financing to be assisted by the government, which shall be completely reimbursed for any advances made.

That is to say, he proposes that to give people work the government shall finance private institutions making private profits. Already we have more of the goods which those people would be engaged in producing than we know what to do with. Yet that is one of the cures he suggests for unemployment. Next:

I suggest adequate, immediate and effective measures to increase our domestic and foreign trade.

The proper answer to that is, "Oh, yeah?" But these "adequate, immediate and effective measures" have no existence, not even in the imagination of the hon. member—and he has lots of that. They have no existence; no person has proposed them, and in the second place there is no foreign trade to be got, no matter how much he may plan to get it. He goes on:

I suggest the reduction of rates of interest on all outstanding obligations in the Dominion of Canada.

That is a suggestion of which I approve, but certainly it has nothing to do with the unemployment situation. I would go farther than my hon. friend; I would not only reduce it, I would wipe it out entirely. It will have to be wiped out and it ought to be wiped out. There is no justification for its being maintained. Why should it be two per cent, why three per cent, why any per cent? If we can justify one we can justify the other.

But the suggestion of the hon. member has nothing to do with unemployment. Then:

I suggest a national conversion scheme reducing the interest on all internal debt to two and a half per cent.

Again I would have no objection to reducing the interest; I would prefer to wipe it out entirely, but that would not employ our people. Next:

I advocate immediate negotiations with outside nations where our external bonds are held, for a mutually satisfactory scheme for the reduction of interest on external bonds.

Again I have no objection to his going cap in hand to those outside of Canada to whom we owe money and pleading with them to reduce our interest rates. Although I have no objection to it, I do not think we would get very far by doing so. Then:

I suggest the increase of our currency by $430,000,000, which is scientifically justifiable by the appreciation of gold values.

Just notice that,—"scientifically," if you please. He uses the expression "scientifically justifiable." May I point out to my hon. friend that if we did that, then perhaps next year we should have to kill the $430,000,000 because of the depreciation of gold, and we would be just as unscientific in the one case as we were in the other. I would ask my hon. friend to please not charge up to science the superstition to which he adheres. There is no man who can talk of a scientific monetary system that deals with gold or the gold basis, and I hope my hon. friend will keep that in mind.

But here is the point, Mr. Speaker. What is he going to create this $430,000,000 for? He is going to create it to pay the bondholders of Canada for fear they might lose something. He is going to pay the debts of Canada with $430,000,000 of credit supplied on a scientific gold basis. I do not give a curse for the bondholders of Canada at the moment. I am not going to create $430,000,000 to pay them. I want $430,000,000, if that is enough, to go into the pockets of the people of Canada to buy goods, but as soon as you pay $430,000,000 of debt you have cancelled $430,000,000 of purchasing power. There is the economics of my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre. That is his proposal, and perhaps it is just as well that it was his personal viewpoint only, and that he was not speaking for the Liberal party.

Now I turn to some other proposals which he made. He wants to balance the budget. I am not interested in that. That is a bankers' policy. Next he says:

For the permanently unemployable I suggest the extension of the principle of the War Veterans' Allowance Act.

I have no objection to extending that to everybody in Canada, so far as I am concerned. He also said:

For the partially unemployable I suggest physical reestablishment for a limited period and land settlement on small holdings.

Now what does that mean—physical reestablishment for a limited period? And then, mind you, land settlement. I wonder why he did not get into cooperation with the hon. member who preceded me in this debate (Mr. Hackett). Anyone who starts out with a policy of land settlement at the present moment I think had better not be replied to at all. I think that is the best way to treat that argument. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre went on:

Such then, Mr. Speaker, is the problem and such are some of the suggested remedies.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to my hon. friend I desire to emphasize that he never even got in touch with the problem in his whole speech and he did not have a single solution in the whole twelve or fourteen or sixteen, or whatever it was, points that he put forward. I know that the government has not got a solution either, but I am centering my attention on the man who moved the motion because he thought he had something, and I want to find out whether he does have something or not.

I know that the government has not a solution for this problem so far. It may have one in its mind but it has not proposed it, and so I am centering my attention on the proposal that is before the house. And such are the proposals that the Liberal party spokesman, although he was not speaking for the Liberal party, asks us to consider in connection with the unemployment problem. I might put it all in a word and say that my hon. friend is trying to patch capitalism, and that, of course, is what the government is trying to do. My hon. friend proposes to patch it in a new place. He is proposing a patch of a different colour and of a different size, but apart from that there is no difference between his patch and the patch of the government except that perhaps, after all, the patches of the government would be more effective than the ones he is proposing to put on.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): On which part?

Mr. IRVINE: Modestly forbids me to tell you exactly where they would be. So far as I am concerned, and I think that in this I am speaking as well for my group here, we do not believe that the system can be patched effectively or in such a way that it can serve adequately. I do not hold that as a mere belief. I would be prepared, if I had the time, to bring the facts and the arguments also.

I want now, in order to keep within the time limit at my disposal, to summarize some of the reasons why we believe that capitalism cannot be made to work effectively no matter who is trying to do it. And I still wait, as I have waited many years here, for any man on either side of the house to say how it can be made to work. I still throw that challenge to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre. If he is going to patch this system to work successfully he will have to meet the debt situation, both private, national and international, and there is no proposal to-day from anybody that will adequately pay the debts either of the individual or of the nation or international debts. Even if they could pay them, if they carried on with the present system it would be only a few months before they would have the debts duplicated because there is no private undertaking, there is no corporation undertaking, there is no public service or public work that can be undertaken until there is first a debt created to make the undertaking possible, and if the debt-creating system is carried on, as the hon. member for Vancouver Centre presupposes in his patching, then even if he could pay the debts, they would be back on his shoulders again in a very short time. But he not only does not propose to do away with the debt-creating system; he does not even know how to pay the debts that are already there.

Next he deals or tries to deal with a method of putting more people to work. I do not want to put more people to work just for the sake of putting more people to work. The only way we can put more people to work in Canada to-day is by putting more debts on the backs of the people. Under the present system or under the proposals of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, and also under the proposals of the government, if you could put people to work it would simply mean more unpayable, impossible debts put upon the backs of all the rest of the people of this country. Now until my hon. friend from Vancouver Centre or some hon. gentleman representing the government can tell us how they can put the people to work without creating debts can we regard either party as fit to carry on government? They cannot make capitalism work because it has gone as far as it can under its debt-creating character.

Next capitalism cannot go on without markets. People will not keep on producing goods unless they can sell them at a profit. Will the hon. member for Vancouver Centre or anyone on the government benches tell the house how they propose to get more markets for Canada. I want the hon. gentlemen to tell me in what country—let them be specific for once—we can find a market, and for what shall we find a market in that country, and for how much of that will we find a market in that country, and for how long will we have that market, and finally what will that country take from us in exchange for that which we want to get from that country? These are matters of data. Where are these markets? It is all very well to talk of wider and freer markets, of adequate methods of extending our foreign trade and all that sort of rhetoric, but where are we going to extend it? What are the goods to be sold? How much will those other countries take from us? Those are the questions which the hon. gentleman failed to answer.

Let me say next that there is no unemployment problem at all. I know that that will sound to some just as foolish as it sounded fourteen years ago when I said from this same seat that we should not go back on the gold basis but that we should reorganize the financial structure of Canada, and that we should forthwith manage and control our currency and credit in relation to the economic demands of the state. I can hear yet the jeers of the cabinet of that day.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is no unemployment problem. Unemployment, which should be leisure, is the boon which has come to this age as a heritage from the past. It has been made safe to us by the combination of human intelligence and ingenuity and mechanical skill, combined with the use of solar power in the production of the necessities and comforts of human life. The more of these machines we use and the more solar energy we employ to drive them the more leisure the people have. And then we say that we have a problem of unemployment. What we have is a problem of vast social stupidity; That is our real problem.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. IRVINE: You can "oh, oh" just as much as you like, but I will let that statement stand on Hansard to speak for itself twenty-five years from now or fifty years if it takes you that long to discover that we have no unemployment problem. Unemployment should be a boon. Our real problem is to make the fullest use of all the means of wealth production at our disposal and to distribute the products to the people. Why not spend a couple of days discussing that question? Why not get to the heart of the real problem? I do not care who has failed to solve it; I do not care whether the mistakes of the Conservative party are more or less than the mistakes of the Liberal party; I am not even interested in talking about unemployment. What I want to discuss is the question of using the idle plant equipment of Canada and the great, the vast natural resources of the country so that we may produce more goods for the people and, finally, the distribution of those goods so that the people may use them. For who is insane enough to advocate production unless what is produced is consumed by the people? And surely that is the point where our system is breaking down.

Now what is the best way of distributing goods? By wages, as we have been doing in the past? Well, wages can distribute with some efficiency while there is a scarcity of goods, but never with complete efficiency. Shall we continue trying to distribute the production of machines and solar power, production in such abundance as we know is possible, by the wage system, or shall we turn from the wage system or augment that system by a meagre, begrudged national charity? That is the only other proposal that has so far been put into action. Or shall we rather seek to distribute this abundant production by means of social dividends based on the national capacity to produce the things of life? If people have the money goods will be distributed. The chief way which the working classes have of getting money is by working for wages, but at no time have they received sufficient wages to enable them to buy back the products of their labour; and as time went on and machines displaced men and produced in greater abundance it was found that men could be dispensed with, so that they no longer had any jobs at all and therefore no purchasing power, and consequently there were huge supplies of goods that had to be burned or otherwise destroyed from time to time by corporations or by government intervention.

Primarily our problem is one of distribution, and distribution is a question primarily of finance. How can this country get money into the pockets of the consuming public? I should like to hear that question discussed. Well, we must have the right to create money as required for the distribution of goods, and that means that we must take that power out of the hands of private individuals and utilize the social credit of the state in the interests of the people. My hon. friend from Vancouver Centre is willing to create $430,000,000. But why $430,000,000? He proposes that sum because he says he is scientific and wants to refer it to a gold basis. But why a gold basis? Let me invite the attention of the hon. gentleman to a far more sensible and far more scientific basis than that for the issuance of supplies of money. I would invite him to consider the fact that the assets of Canada are plant, equipment and natural resources, and that these assets are estimated at $30,000,000,000, whereas the annual output of wealth is about $6,000,000,000. Now that is a much better basis for the issuance of credit and currency than the antiquated, superstitious gold basis by which he is prepared to limit the issue of credit.

The first basis of such social dividends as I suggest is this. The great proportion of our increased production to-day is due to association and organization, so that much of the wealth produced is not traceable to any effort of any individual but rather to the social, communal efforts of all together. That is the first basis. The next basis of modern wealth production is really a heritage from all the past in mechanical ideas and in discovery and invention, as well as in organization. All these factors have made it possible for us to produce in greater abundance, but all these came to us from millions of people in the past; and these factors cannot be mastered or controlled by any one individual or corporation. We cannot allow that; they are not for sale and they must not be bought, no matter how much money any man has to buy them. These facilities of production, representing the genius of the race, are the heritage of this age; they are responsible for our increased wealth. And on that almost inexhaustible source we have a right to draw for the man who has been put out of a job by the machine, and to see to it that the goods which the machine that took his job produces shall be vouchsafed to him as a means of livelihood.

That is our problem, and there is no proposal, either from the government or from my hon. friend who moved this motion, that solves that problem. I do not suppose that any proposal of mine in this connection would be immediately and unanimously passed by this house. I will not now propose the complete financial reform which I think is necessary, but I do suggest that we make a beginning, and for once our beginning should be constructively at the point of finance. I suggest that we begin by putting our machinery and solar power to work to produce everything we need. If we do not need things we will not produce them, and if they are already produced we will use them. But with these machines we should build homes in the most modern fashion, and all our social institutions, hospitals, schools, colleges, universities, roads, bridges, crossings and highways. Let us enter upon a program of protection of our forests for future generations. Let us develop our vast coal fields for power and let us harness the water powers of the country so that we may bring every agency of modern civilization within the reach of the population living within the confines of Canada. That is a task which will put a good many people to work for a while, and after that is done they can lie back in leisure and enjoy watching the machine doing it for them. But that is our task, and the only means of accomplishing it is to employ the social credit of the nation and to utilize it, in its financial expression, to enable the people to buy back the goods they have already created and which are lying on the shelves of the warehouses or being destroyed because people are unable at present to use them. Put the money to that use and we shall soon find it necessary to produce more goods. Let us make that beginning by the proper use of the national credit and by giving social dividends to our people.

And through social dividends let our people have pensions starting, if you like, at the age of fifty-five, so that people of that age and over may vacate the production field and thus make room for the oncoming youth who will take their places in the workshops of Canada.

Mr. ONESIME GAGNON (Dorchester): The hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) will not, I hope, be offended if I do not immediately follow his arguments. I would like first to express my amazement at the caprioles and volte faces of hon. gentlemen opposite on the question of social legislation. The day before yesterday when we were about to move to go into committee of supply to vote moneys part of which would tend to relieve unemployment, the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) immediately rose and proposed a motion which might be summed up as follows: you want to vote money. We say no because we want to declare before you do so that you are not doing anything to relieve unemployment.

May I say at the outset that I have a great admiration for the talents and eloquence of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre. Comparisons are certainly almost always bad because they lack the element which makes for perfection, but I hope my hon. friend will not be offended if I compare him to a promising apple tree matured and flourishing under the benevolent rays of the Vancouver Sun. I am afraid that my hon. friend, even if he is later entrusted with the noble task of salvaging the Liberal party from the valley of humiliation will never succeed in providing the electors of Canada with the golden apples of the Hesperides, because at the present time I am sure the house will realize that no Liberal Hercules can kill the dragon whose hundred heads are the numerous broken pledges of the Liberal platform of 1919.

Although I very much admire the hon. member for Vancouver Centre, may I express wonderment that instead of criticizing the government and finding fault with our efforts toward bringing into effect social legislation, he does not come to the rescue of Mayor McGeer and Premier Pattullo in order to salvage the financial situation of his province. Last year we had very interesting debates before the banking and commerce committee and the hon. member for Vancouver Centre brought from the sunny coast of British Columbia a new financial prodigy who was supposed to give us a panacea which would cure all our social and financial evils. For two long days we heard Mayor McGeer indulge in the wildest theories of state currency inflation. Of course nobody but himself could go into the vast depths of financial science and understand his theories. The only compliment I might pay to Mayor McGeer is that his theories were less proposterous and more understandable than those of Major Douglas which may give much joy to the Ottawa Citizen but which nevertheless cannot be understood by any Canadian citizen who has ordinary common sense.

What has been the effect of the theories of Mayor McGeer? He has been elected mayor of the great city of Vancouver and he has attempted to solve the question of the interest due on the bonds of that city. The other day we found the London newspapers stating that due to his attitude, due to his wild theories, the values of all the bonds of the cities of western Canada were declining on the markets of the world. I wonder whether our friends the Liberals will provide some saner theories after they have come out of the great banquet the newspapers this morning have announced our friends are going to give to their leader some time in the month of March.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. GAGNON: I am pleased hon. gentlemen opposite are rejoicing beforehand at what they expect will take place at this celebration, but I hope for the electors of Canada the theories that will be then propounded will be more constructive and saner than the wild theories of Mayor McGeer and his protagonists in Canada and elsewhere.

May I now deal with the resolution which is tantamount to a motion of non-confidence whereby hon. gentlemen opposite are giving vent to their discontent because we Conservatives on this side, true to our doctrines and traditions, are going to bring about the necessary measures of reform to save Canada in these depressing times. To our bewilderment what do we see? And now I come to the speech of my good and genial friend from Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine). We see the hon. gentlemen in the extreme left corner who are pleased to call themselves Progressives, are going to vote with the Liberals and against us on this resolution. May I ask them why they call themselves Progressives and vote for the Liberals who since 1919 have done only one thing—broken the solemn pledges they made to the electorate in Canada in order to get into office. When we hear the eloquent speeches of some hon. gentlemen in the extreme left corner, we realize they vote with the Liberals with great regret; we even see sometimes almost tears in their eyes because they realize that conditions are very different from what they were in 1930 when they voted with the Conservatives on a motion of non-confidence against the then Liberal administration. As I said, at this time conditions are very different. Since 1919, no reforms were brought about by the Liberals. We heard the present leader of the opposition state in the house that he would not give a five cent piece to Tory provinces in order to relieve unemployment. Further, we heard him quote a telegram from Premier Taschereau of Quebec in which the Liberal leader of that province stated that there was no unemployment there. We know very well that the Liberal party did not enact any measures of social reform although at the Liberal convention of 1919, Liberals pledged themselves to do so. Conditions are now much different because since the Conservative party came into power they have voted millions to relieve unemployment. This month the federal contribution to relieve unemployment exceeds $1,500,000; more than $100,000 a day is spent throughout Canada to relieve unemployment. Further, how can these gentlemen from Alberta and Saskatchewan forget that since 1930 we of the so-called capitalist provinces of the east have saved from bankruptcy the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. And we have not received even a little word of thankfulness. How can hon. gentlemen of the extreme left, Mr. Speaker, whose sincerity I admit, vote with the Liberals when we are to-day taking the necessary steps to put on the statute books of Canada measures of social reform such as unemployment insurance, the eight hour day, the forty-eight hour week, the minimum wage and all the other measures of reform which are to come and which will tend to protect the consumer, to protect the workmen in the lumbering and logging industries, to protect the fishermen, to destroy monopolies and cartels, and to give relief to the poor shopkeepers whose efforts are being frustrated by the excesses of the chain stores all over Canada?

Now that I have expressed my bewilderment with respect to the attitude of our hon. friends to the extreme left, let us for a moment examine the situation created by our Liberal friends from Quebec. We had yesterday one of the greatest surprises of our life when we heard the new standard bearer who has been entrusted by the gods with the task of salvaging the Liberal party, this new standard bearer selected out of all the disgruntled warriors who had been deprived of the spoils of office—the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret). We were amazed to hear him complain of the attitude of the government. We were very much surprised that of all hon. gentlemen opposite he should have the audacity to blame the government, he who had been mayor of Canada's greatest city during two years of depression, the records of whose administration were full of slackness and incompetence and are shrieking with scandal. How can he have the audacity to speak of a so-called policy of excavations in the city of Montreal when the biggest gap that existed in that city, the biggest excavation which has been dug by the extravagances of the Liberal party, is the gap in the Montreal finances and the huge deficit which obliged Mayor Houde to work day and night to devise measures for restoring the prosperity of the city?

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, what did we hear? We heard our genial friend from Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich) whose sense of humour we admire very much. He said in his Tweedledum and Tweedledee criticism of both parties that conscription is a dead issue. I am very sorry to disagree with my hon. friend on that subject. If he had followed what has taken place in the province of Quebec since 1930 he would realize that conscription is not at all a dead issue. If my hon. friend from Vegreville would read La Presse of Montreal of August 7, 1931, he would read reports of speeches made in the constituency of Three Rivers by the former Secretary of State (Mr. Rinfret) and the former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). What did the former Secretary of State say in Three Rivers during that election campaign, in explaining what was meant by the words "peace, order and good government"? He stated to the crowd that these words meant that the Prime Minister wanted to impose that bill on parliament in order to revive conscription.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Shame!

Mr. RINFRET: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I do not know from what source the present speaker is quoting, but I deny having pronounced one single word that can be construed as meaning what he has just stated.

Mr. GAGNON: The hon. member said the same thing in other words. According to the rules of the house I am obliged to accept what the hon. gentleman says, but may I suggest to him that he read La Presse of August 7, 1931, and he will read what I have stated.

Mr. GOBEIL: He did not deny it then.

Mr. GAGNON: I gave the exact quotation in this chamber on March 15, 1932, before hon. gentlemen opposite. Those words have never been denied, and the hon. member for St. James has never stood up in his place and asked that Hansard be corrected.

Mr. GOBEIL: He does not deny it now.

Mr. GAGNON: We know very well what will take place at the next election. Not only will the conscription issue be revived but we shall hear a new revival of the constitutional issue. We shall hear again the cry of conscription, and we Conservative members will be slandered and attacked and represented to the people as the wreckers of the constitution, while the Liberal party will pose as the champions of the rights of the provinces and the protectors of the constitution. Let us study for a moment what took place just a fortnight ago when the government was bringing in the unemployment insurance measure. What did we hear? We heard the former Minister of Justice ridicule that measure, calling it a sop to the discontented. He closed his speech with a violent attack on the government, comparing the ministers to a lynching mob. These are the compliments we receive from hon. gentlemen opposite for enacting the very measures that they proposed in 1919 but had not the courage to put on the statute books when they assumed power. If it is true that such measures as those providing for social insurance, the eight hour day, the forty-eight hour week are ultra vires of the dominion parliament; if it is true that they are unconstitutional; if it is true that the enactment of such measures by the federal parliament would be destroying the rights of the provinces, why are hon. gentlemen opposite voting for them? If it is true that these measures are unconstitutional, why do my hon. friends disregard those so-called sacred rights? Why are they forsaking them? It is amazing to see hon. gentlemen opposite descending so low that in order to get power they will vote for measures which they believe to be unconstitutional and unworthy of statesmen and patriots.

Let me for the moment refer to what has taken place in our province since 1930. In that year Premier Taschereau in the legislative assembly passed an act, chapter 14 of 20 George V, revised statutes of Quebec, to create a commission to be called the Quebec social insurance commission. I hold in my hand a report of the Quebec social insurance commission which was composed of some of the most eminent and illustrious citizens of that province. Let me give their names. The chairman of the commission is Edouard Mortpetit, K.C., doctor of laws of Laval, who received the diploma of political science from the Sorbonne, Paris, and who is an officer of the Legion of Honour. The members of the commission are the Right Reverend Georges Courchesne, Bishop of Saint-Germain-de-Rimouski, emeritus professor in the Faculty of Arts of Laval university; the Venerable Frederick George Scott, Archdeacon of Quebec and rector of St. Matthew's Church, Quebec; John T. Foster, president of the trades and labour council of Montreal and member of the Labour Congress of Canada; Gérard Tremblay, deputy minister of labour for the province of Quebec, and late secretary-general of the National Catholic Labour Unions; Alphonse Lessard, M.D., provincial director of charities and of the bureau of health; and Georges-Arthur Savoy, president of the Dominion Blank Book Company, St. Johns, Quebec.

These gentlemen were entrusted by the Quebec legislature with the task of studying all problems pertaining to social insurance. I shall quote the terms of the order in council passed by the government at Quebec:

To make as complete a survey as possible of the following questions and of the manner in which the problems which they entail may be regulated in the province of Quebec: Old age insurance; unemployment insurance; sickness insurance; disability insurance; aid to needy mothers; family placements; manner of adoption and placement of adopted children; assistance to large families; sanitary conditions of factories and of the workers in these factories; occupational illnesses; medical inspection of workmen employed in dangerous tasks; medical attention in the work shops; sanitary education of the working men; and all other problems of social insurance.

These gentlemen visited all the provinces in Canada, and went abroad. They studied the social insurance schemes in England, France, Germany and almost all countries in Europe. They delivered various reports, and the sixth report dealing with unemployment insurance was filed with the Quebec government in the last days of December, 1932.

Now, what took place just ten days after that? In the beginning of January, 1933 a great banquet was held in the city of Quebec. This was a banquet tendered by the Liberals to the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) and to the former Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). There, Mr. Speaker, in order to revive the failing courage of the Liberals, and because at this very banquet my former opponent in Dorchester. the former Solicitor General, had the courage to blame the Liberals for their lack of policy, the former Minister of Justice stood in his place and praised the great report which had been produced by the Quebec social insurance commission. I have before me a quotation from Le Soleil of Quebec, the issue of January 15, 1933. My translation of the report contained therein concerning the observations of the hon. member for Quebec East is as follows:

Let me congratulate now the government of the province of Quebec for the work of the social insurance commission which they have instituted, and for the report which has just been made public. It is a Liberal document. Many suggestions are therein made which I have heard called socialistic theories. I am happy now to be in the company of Bishop Courchesne and Doctor Montpetit. That report does honour to our province, and Liberals ought to study it and work to bring about the application of the illuminating principles which it contains.

As I have said, that speech was made on January 15, 1933, by the former Minister of Justice and in the name of the Liberal party.

In his speech he proclaimed the report of the commission to be a Liberal document. Let us see the conclusions to which the commission came, respecting social insurance. Did the commission state that social insurance against unemployment ought to be instituted by the provinces? Did the commissioners make any observations against the so-called attempt of the dominion to wreck the rights of the provinces by setting afoot a scheme of insurance against unemployment? No. At page 203 of the report the commission said:

> Is it possible to establish unemployment insurance on a provincial basis in a federated state such as Canada? The answer is in the affirmative, for the example of Queensland, Australia, and of certain Swiss cantons prove the possibility. However ordinary prudence suggests that unemployment insurance should be federal in character. It is very advisable to spread the social responsibilities over the whole country, for otherwise, the provinces which participate find themselves in a condition of inferiority with respect to the non-participants. It must not be forgotten that the expenses involved in social legislation should be incorporated in the net cost of production. If certain provinces do not enjoy the benefits of tariff protection, the industrialists of those provinces must of necessity aim at an equality in social obligations if they do not desire to embark on a policy of rivalry which is not only impossible to maintain, but is unfair.

The commission quoted the opinion of the railway workers of Canada who stated that there was no other conclusion to come to but that of providing a federal scheme of unemployment insurance. Do we see the flagrancy of the contradictions of the former Minister of Justice when on January 15, 1933, he proclaimed as a Liberal document this report which recommended a federal scheme of unemployment insurance? Yet only a few days ago in this very chamber he blamed the government, and compared the ministers to a lynching mob because they have sought to effect the precise proposals and recommendations of the Quebec social insurance commission.

What did the Liberal party in Quebec do in order to set afoot the recommendations of the commission? The commission, whose report I have before me, recommended that the Quebec government should adopt a federal system of old age pensions. They recommended, further, that the provinces should cooperate with the federal government in order to bring about the necessary measures of reform to which the Liberal party had pledged itself at the convention of 1919. What was done by Liberals? Nothing,—nothing has been done.

When in the month of March 1933 we were fighting in this chamber to obtain from the House of Commons the power to take the necessary steps to relieve unemployment, what position was taken in the province of Quebec? What did the former Minister of Justice say in the city of Quebec on March 28, 1933? I have before me L'Evenement of Quebec, a publication sympathetic to the former Minister of Justice. It indicates that he at that time compared Mr. Bennett to Hitler, a man who in some countries has been called a gangster and a murderer. That will give some idea of the way hon. gentlemen opposite discuss political questions in Quebec.

Would hon. members like to have some idea of the way hon. gentlemen opposite are trying to bring about unity among the Canadian people? Let us see what he said on March 28, 1933, when he was speaking against the payment of moneys which this government has voted in order to help the provinces of Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta. Here is what he said:

> Shall we take the money of the province of Quebec to maintain Mr. Anderson in power? Is it not too much of a sardonic irony?

That is the way hon. gentlemen opposite are trying to effect unity among the Canadian people and bring about a closer understanding between the races in Canada. Speaking at Trois Pistoles on July 17, 1933, the former Minister of Justice reiterated the same principles. He condemned the government, and described as an international comedy the London conference which was being held at the time, and at which our Prime Minister was taking a worthy stand, one which received the general approval of statesmen throughout the world. The hon. gentleman proclaimed himself a champion of reforms and said "I am not going to the right. I am not going to the left. I am going forward."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. GAGNON: I am pleased to hear hon. gentlemen opposite applaud that statement, Mr. Speaker, but it is surprising that these gentlemen who claim to go forward should take every opportunity to block our legislation and denounce it as being unconstitutional and ultra vires and so on.

This is not all, Mr. Speaker; this little story has many chapters which are very interesting to the people of Quebec and the people of Canada at large. What has taken place in the province of Quebec? Not only have we seen the Conservative opposition in that province call for reforms which will tend to promote the welfare of all classes, but we have seen a secession in the Liberal ranks; we have a new wing of the Liberal party in Quebec headed by Mr. Paul Gouin, the son of the former Minister of Justice, and supported by a distinguished member of this house, the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Lacroix). This Liberal wing, which is growing stronger and stronger every day, is calling for reforms also, and is asking that the province of Quebec set its seal of approval on the reforms we are putting on the statute books. What is the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) doing, he who calls himself the man who goes forward? He does not do anything, as he did nothing when he was in power from 1921 to 1930. While the hon. member for Beauce, Mr. Paul Gouin and others are denouncing Mr. Taschereau and the terrible dictatorship which is enslaving the province of Quebec, through you, Mr. Speaker, I ask the hon. member for Quebec East to tell the people of Canada and particularly the people of Quebec whether he is for Taschereau and against Gouin and Lacroix or for Lacroix and Gouin and against Taschereau with regard to social legislation.

We Conservatives are not afraid to speak about our constitution, because we have preserved and maintained the confederation pact. It is strange, when the Conservative party is bringing about reforms which are demanded by public opinion throughout Canada, to find that the Liberal party stands up and says: "Stop; you are going to encroach on the rights of the provinces." Then we hear Senator Lemieux and Senator Dandurand say in the Senate. "We must respect the covenant; this is a sacred pact. You must not touch it: it is a wonderful work." In other circumstances, when a racial issue arises we hear the same gentlemen say that the fathers of confederation, because they were Conservatives, did not take the necessary steps to protect the minorities in Canada. These are the flagrant contradictions we find in the Liberal party. Even now we hear the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) attack the fathers of confederation in the maritime provinces, while on the other hand the leader of the Liberal party in the Senate and Senator Lemieux pose as champions of the constitution. I for one would be very much afraid to touch the sections of the confederation pact which deal with the rights of minorities, because those rights are sacred to my race. The Conservatives have always maintained the constitution, and we are going to preserve intact the rights of minorities in Canada.

I respectfully submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is very dangerous to make constitutional issues of purely economic problems. You cannot ignore the overwhelming trend of public opinion throughout Canada at the present time which calls for social reforms. Is there a financier, a statesman, an economist or an ordinary layman endowed with common sense who will pretend that if we enact a social insurance scheme we are endangering the constitution or encroaching on the rights of the provinces? Why, we are protecting the exchequer of the provinces, because we are assuming the whole of that social legislation cost which is denounced by hon. gentlemen opposite as being too great. Why should the provinces complain if we establish a social insurance policy which will not cost the provinces anything? Why should the provinces object if we assume the whole cost of old age pensions; why should the provinces object if we relieve unemployment by establishing the eight hour day and forty-eight hour week, establish minimum wages and take the necessary steps to curb and destroy the monopolies and mergers which took place during the Liberal regime from 1921 to 1930? Hon. gentlemen opposite ought to be afraid to invite these party quibbles and this political strife in this way, because the consumers of Canada have suffered too much since confederation through some useless and fruitless battles which have been waged between the provinces and the dominion. Take for instance the fisheries case which was discussed the other day in the committee on the British North America Act by the hon. member for Gloucester and myself. That litigation began in 1882 and did not come to an end until 1919 or thereabouts. The situation has been made worse, because the maritime fisheries of Quebec have been illegally and unconstitutionally transferred to the province of Quebec, though the maritime fisheries in great part belong to the crown in the right of the dominion. At the present time we have legislation which is going to save agriculture; I refer to the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. Do we see that legislation attacked in Ontario, in the maritimes or in western Canada? No; we see it attacked on constitutional grounds only in the province of Quebec, and the person attacking it there is encouraged by the Liberal party of that province. That is not all, Mr. Speaker. On the 23rd of March there will be a banquet at Quebec city to commemorate the great legal battles which have been waged between the provinces and the dominion since 1867. I hope the gentlemen who attend that banquet will not forget the loss of Labrador and the loss of that part of our national heritage.

I believe I have only one minute of my time remaining, Mr. Speaker, and in that minute I should like to recall the stirring appeal made to hon. members of this house last year by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) whom I should like to see returned by acclamation at the next election. The hon. gentleman urged political parties to forget party strife and to cooperate in order to bring about necessary measures of reform. I should like to urge hon. gentlemen opposite to read what he said, and may I express the hope that some George Brown will arise on the other side and help the government in order to cooperate in bringing about social justice and the dawn of a new era of happiness and prosperity.

Mr. A. M. CARMICHAEL (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the viewpoint of this corner of the house has been put forward often enough in this debate. I believe four members out of a possible fifteen have taken part in this discussion, and if it were not for the fact that the viewpoint put forward by all four is quite contrary to my opinion I should not have taken any part in this discussion. All of those who have preceded me from this corner have stated very definitely that they are going to support the amendment. I am forced to state just as definitely that I am going to oppose the amendment, and therefore I feel like giving in a few minutes a few reasons why I propose to do so.

The motion before the house has been moved by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) to the effect that the house go into committee of supply, and the matter which we are now debating is an amendment thereto proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie). I shall not read the amendment because all who are in the chamber are acquainted with its contents.

Since I came to this house a number of years ago I have felt non-partisan, and I still do. As an independent member I have felt obliged to decide which of the major parties I should support in this house, and I think that is true of all the independent members here. For some nine years we supported a Liberal government, and for the past five years we have been supporting the present government. At the present time it is incumbent upon us to decide whether we shall support this amendment or not.

I have been led to ask myself what would be the effect of this amendment if it were carried, and I credit the hon. member who moved it with sincerity enough to wish to see it carried. I think he put it forward in the hope that it would be accepted by the house. Now if it is carried by a majority vote and accepted by the house, what would be the effect of that? The effect of that would be the immediate resignation of the government. I think that goes without saying. The government would not dare to carry on any longer should this amendment be carried.

That opens up another avenue of thought. If the government should forthwith resign we have quite a pretentious legislative program before us which would also go by the board. We have, for instance, Bill No. 8, which is now in the committee stage. It has received its first and second readings, and by the way on second reading it was supported unanimously by a vote of 101 to nothing. All parties in all parts of the house supported the principle of unemployment insurance. But if the amendment now before the house should be carried, it would mean that the unemployment insurance measure would have to be dropped. It is in the committee stage now and it would stay there. It would become null and void, a dead issue. I doubt if the members in this corner of the house are prepared to go that far and say that they want that measure dispensed with entirely. It is true that some here are not in unanimous accord with some of the provisions of the bill, yet I think from the vote that was taken on the second reading we are all in favour of adopting an unemployment insurance measure in the hope that in the future it will be of some benefit to this country. Well, that measure would lapse if this amendment should carry.

We have also on the order paper Bill No. 15. It too is in the committee stage. It makes certain amendments to the Canadian Farm Loan Act. I am quite satisfied from having listened to the debate in this chamber on these amendments that there is perhaps not a member in this house who is opposed to them. They propose to increase the money available for agricultural purposes from $40,000,000 to $90,000,000, but should this amendment carry it means that these amendments to the farm loan act would be done away with, that that increased amount provided by the bill for taking care of farmers' debts would not be available. There is another point that I fear the members in this corner of the house are overlooking. We represent agricultural constituencies in this corner as well as other sections of the house, and I am sure we are quite anxious to see that $90,000,000 made available during this session for use under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act Here is one member who wants to see that money put where it will be available for the farmers who are trying to refund their debts at a lower rate of interest. But if we carry the amendment which is now before us there is no possibility of that money being made available during this session.

We have some other measures on the order paper. There is Bill No. 21 calling for the implementing of the eight hour day and the forty-eight hour week. Personally I would not shed any tears if that were to fall, because the voters I represent—and they are real labour people and I am a real labour representative—do not quibble at working eight hours a day or forty-eight hours a week. They are practically all farmers, and I think perhaps most of them sleep about eight hours and work the rest of the day. So as far as that measure goes it would not affect agriculturists very much, but I am surprised that the labour members have endorsed this amendment with the possible ultimate objective of defeating this eight hour day and forty-eight hour week.

There is also Bill No. 22 for a weekly day of rest in industrial undertakings. These latter two bills I have mentioned have just received their first reading. If the amendment before the house carries, these two bills are dispensed with and there is no possibility of their being carried this session.

There is one other point that is more important than any of those I have mentioned, and that is that the report of the price spreads and mass buying commission has not yet been presented to the house, and of course the legislation to be based on that report is not yet before the house. Now if there is any measure that the people of Canada are looking forward to hopefully it is the legislation that is to be based on the report of the price spreads and mass buying commission; but if we adopt this amendment it means that such a report cannot be made and that legislation based upon it will not be brought forward this session. That is thrown into the scrap heap so far as this session is concerned.

If that is what the amendment means, the dispensing of all these measures because of the resignation of the government, then what would be the result of the election that would immediately follow? That is another question that I have been led to ask myself—what would be the likely effect of an election? Well, it is possible that there might be a change of government; it is just barely possible. I would not state that as any prophecy. I know that some of our Liberal friends are quite optimistic and hopeful. Probably the wish is father to the thought that there will be a change of government, and there may be; I am not prepared to say. I have endeavoured in the past to prophesy in regard to political matters, and usually I have prophesied wrong, so I would not like to make any prophecy now as to whether or not there would be a change of government. But suppose there would be a change; what has been offered to us by the official opposition, which we are agreed would then be the government of the day? What is offered to us by this party known as the official opposition, the Liberal party of Canada? I was amused and surprised last night, listening to the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich) lining up the Liberal party and scoring them most unmercifully because they had nothing to offer, and yet he ended by saying that he was going to vote for the amendment which would have the effect of putting out the present government and putting in its place those who, he said, had nothing to offer. I could not just travel with him all the way along the road. It became rather tortuous and I could not follow him.

Of course, we have also had some beneficial legislation passed in this house in previous sessions. In the last session the Natural Products Marketing Act was passed. I wonder what attitude the Liberal party would take towards that measure if they should be endorsed by the electorate and returned to power. If the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) will just stand hearing a little quotation read I am sure it will throw some light on what at least his attitude is. The hon. member spoke at St. Johns, Quebec on October 14 last and is reported as follows:

> Added to its other planks, the Liberal party stood at present for abolition of the marketing board—"the greatest piece of high protectionist legislation yet executed in Canada"—Mr. Rinfret declared.

I presume that is correct; it is given by the Canadian Press and published by a good Liberal newspaper in the west. I do not know whether that represents the official attitude of the Liberal party, but that at least is the hon. gentleman's personal attitude. He who has been a member of a Liberal government says that one of its "other planks" is the abolition of the marketing board.

An hon. MEMBER: Who says that?

Mr. CARMICHAEL: One of your good front benchers made that statement and he does not deny it, so I presume it is correct. Well, that means that the facilities afforded the primary producers for organizing under that act are to be done away with. It means that the many thousands—

Mr. RINFRET: I was not aware that the hon. gentleman had mentioned my name. I may say that the report is not quite correct.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. RINFRET: What I have advocated is the deletion of certain sections of the marketing act, and amongst them that section concerning importations—the licensing of the right to import. But I never did advocate the complete repudiation of the marketing bill.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: It would be interesting to know how many effective sections would be left after the act had been culled to suit the hon. gentleman. But that is not all. We have had in this chamber a good deal of discussion relating to the British North America Act, which is perhaps the cornerstone of our Canadian constitution. Now, the same hon. member speaking at the same place and at the same time said:

> Proposed amendments to the British North America Act would be fought tooth and nail by the Liberals, Hon. Fernand Rinfret, former Secretary of State and ex-mayor of Montreal, told a political rally of Liberals here to-day.

We have now a committee dealing with that act to bring in possible ways and means of amending it so that we can, at times necessary, amend our own constitution. But if this is to represent the official attitude of the Liberals they are going to fight it tooth and nail.

Mr. RINFRET: This is evidently my afternoon. I made many speeches in regard to this question and one only recently, and the stand which I take, and which those in the province of Quebec take—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. RINFRET: I am making an explanation.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member will confine his explanation to the statement made by the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Carmichael).

Mr. RINFRET: I will make it a question of privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does the hon. gentleman rise to correct a statement made by the hon. member for Kindersley?

[Mr. Carmichael.]

Mr. RINFRET: Yes; that is my purpose. I say that the stand I take on this matter is that no amendment should be made except with the unanimous consent of the provinces, but not that we are against any amendments. That is different.

An hon. MEMBER: One story for Quebec and another for here.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I am not interested in what the hon. gentleman's stand is now; I am quoting what his stand was then.

Mr. RINFRET: I protest against that. The stand I take—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. RINFRET: —is as I have just stated.

Mr. SPEAKER: What does the hon. gentleman say? Does he wish to make a statement with regard to the quotation?

Mr. RINFRET: A moment ago I was not allowed to, and now I am asked whether I wish to make a statement. With all deference to the chair, I have made my statement and I will ask the hon. gentleman to accept it.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Of course I do.

Mr. RINFRET: I am not against amendments to the British North America Act but I say that we cannot have them except by unanimous consent of the provinces. That has been my statement right along

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I am glad that the hon. member is progressing and revising his views.

Mr. TOTZKE: That is not accepting his statement.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Yes, I am accepting it.

Mr. TOTZKE: But you qualify it.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: The natural result of the tearing up of the Natural Products Marketing Act—and I am forced to conclude, from the attitude of the Liberal party when the act was before us, that they are not friendly to it—would be that our marketing scheme, which was voted on last week in the three prairie provinces would go by the board, and all the facilities afforded the primary producers would be dispensed with. But there is another point I would touch upon. In 1932, I believe, we passed here what became known as the Ottawa trade agreements. I fear to come to the conclusion, but I am almost forced to it, that the Liberal party are in duty bound to scrap these Ottawa trade agreements. Oh, I know they mean to scrap certain parts of them; but if certain parts of the agreements are scrapped at this end it means that the agreements fall down, because there are two parties to them and no change can be made at this end unless the other party at the other end is agreeable to such change. It follows therefore that if certain changes are made here the agreements will fall by the way, and become obsolete. Now, we had a Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act passed last session, and I am not sure of the attitude of the Liberal party towards that. Like the hon. member for St. James, they may have a change of heart either now or before they come into power, and they may not scrap it because it is a very popular piece of legislation in the prairies. But you cannot guarantee that they would not do away with that either. Unfortunately, as has been pointed out from this corner, no definite pronouncement has been made by the leader of the Liberal party. He who, according to their ideas and ambitions and hopes, is not very far removed from being Prime Minister of Canada, has made no pronouncement as to what that party proposes to do. His nine years of experience as Prime Minister and the past five years as leader of the opposition have made him discreetly wise and he is not saying anything.

The hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) has moved an amendment and he has stated very definitely what "I" propose to do. He says: "What I advocate, and I am giving my personal views only, not necessarily the views of any party or group," and he proceeds to give us twelve points. Probably they have some virtue in them, but they are the individual views of one member and do not necessarily represent the opinions of the Liberal party. So that there we are faced with the alternative of putting into power a party that has told us nothing of what it is going to do—and we know a number of things they will do which will not be beneficial. A lot of legislation that has been passed, and a good deal more that is in the act of being passed, will be prejudiced considerably by a change of government; and yet we have before us from the Liberal party nothing official on which we can base our hopes if we support this amendment to put out the party now governing and put in the party now in opposition. The burden of the official opposition is just to put Bennett out; and the burden of the Liberal press across Canada is, "Just put the Conservatives out and let the Liberals in." That is not a very good reason for voting for the amendment now before the house.

There is considerable virtue in the amendment and I am not finding any fault for its being brought to the attention of the house. Its main thought is unemployment and its remedy. I doubt if I will take the time now to go into the question of unemployment to any extent except to say that I consider it worthy of being debated and I presume at some future time the house will be afforded an opportunity of discussing the question and suggesting remedies. But I do hold the view, contrary of course to that of some hon. gentlemen in this corner, that the only possible permanent solution for our unemployment problem is to get a more evenly balanced adjustment as between urban and rural populations. For the past two generations we have been educating our boys and girls away from the land which is, I was going to say their heaven-intended place to live, that is on the land, in touch with nature, working and getting their living to a large extent from the soil. For the past two generations we have been educating our people along a line that has induced them to move into the industrial centres, to enter into industrial, business and professional life and away from agricultural life. It seems to me that we must return to the basic principle of getting our population back where it belongs, namely on the land.

While many commissions have been appointed, many investigations held and even some books written, I believe the most sensible thing for us to do in connection with this unemployment question would be to appoint a dominion land settlement commission that would have authority to make a survey in conjunction with the provinces and the smaller municipalities with a view to getting the good land lined up that would be available without cost to our boys, young men and families who are agriculturally inclined. I know in my province there is plenty of land held in some instances by the provincial government; in every township sections 11 and 29 are school lands; many of these sections have not yet been sold and some that have been sold have reverted to the crown, also in our municipalities there are scores of quarter sections that have been taken over in recent years under tax sale proceedings. Such lands might be made available without charge to those who are agriculturally inclined and under a properly set up and efficiently working commission boys, young men and families who are agriculturally inclined might thus be placed on such lands and assisted for from three to five years as suggested here a few days ago by the hon. member for North Timiskaming (Mr. Bradette).

Not only might such lands be made available for such purposes, but in our country there are other young boys who would be glad to turn their attention to agricultural pursuits if they knew how to carry on. I remember last year the suggestion was made to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) that instead of bringing in British boys and giving them training in preparation for going on to the land, he should expend the same amount or more money to train our own Canadian boys, give them a year or two of training in agricultural pursuits and get them ready for going out and taking over land of their own. At that time I think the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) and in this corner the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) could scarcely find language severe enough to castigate such a proposal. I still believe the only possible permanent solution of the unemployment question is to get our boys and girls and our men and women back on the land, not with an overhead of debt; they should be placed there without any debt so far as capital is concerned and they should be assisted by the dominion and provincial governments so as to give them a start that they may become self sustaining.

I have heard from this corner severe criticism of the government for the small amounts they are providing for the support of life in our urban centres. I can cite to the house the actual figure of what it takes to keep one family I know of near my own home town. There are the father, the mother and four children who are living on a farm. They live well; they dress well; they have not a low standard of living. The mother is a university graduate, having obtained her B.A. degree at Toronto university. They say that for $4 a week they are able to live on the land; that is, they spend just $4 a week to supplement what they are able to grow on the land. That means $200 a year for a family of six. Is that not much better than the amount of money we are paying out in our urban centres where we have to provide the people on relief with all the necessities of life? Would it not be better if these people were out on the land gaining from it a large proportion of their own living and working for it? When this measure is before us so that we may have an opportunity of suggesting remedies for the relief of unemployment, I shall have something more to say. At the present time I reiterate what I said at first: my view is that the carrying of the amendment would not be helpful to the country; it would not be beneficial to the people I represent, and therefore I purpose voting against it.

Motion—(Mr. Rhodes)—agreed to and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. Gagnon in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

Salaries, $545,724.

Mr. POULIOT: I take this first opportunity to congratulate the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hanson). With reference to that hon. gentleman may I repeat what I said about his colleague the Minister of Finance, that I am sure he is abler than the Prime Minister, because he answers the questions that one puts to him. It is a great credit to him, and for that reason I congratulate him very heartily.

We have heard a great deal about unemployment in the last few days. The reason for unemployment is the decrease in trade, and we have a decrease in trade because tariffs have been increased. The minister is an able man; he has been sworn in as minister because of his ability. If he takes the trouble to go through the records of his department he will see that the number of unemployed has more than doubled and trebled since the tariff was increased by his leaders. Unemployment is the child of high tariffs. For this reason I urge on the hon. gentleman the same recommendation I made to his colleague the Minister of Finance. Let him steal a stick of dynamite from the office of the Prime Minister—the stick that was not used to blast our way into the markets of the world—and let him blast the high tariff walls. When we look over the statistics of the Department of Trade and Commerce we are sorry to see the great decrease in trade, even following the Ottawa imperial conference of 1932. The minister knows very well—and he may answer me if he desires to do so—that our trade with the British empire last year was $29,000,000 less than it was during the last twelve months the Mackenzie King government was in power. Our domestic exports to the United Kingdom in the twelve months ending August 31, 1934, were $35,000 more than they were for the same period in 1930. I admit that. I admit that these figures are correct if you consider only domestic exports, but if you consider at the same time Canadian exports of foreign products it will be seen that our exports to the United Kingdom each year this government have been in power were less than they were in the last year the Mackenzie King government were in power.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Would the hon. gentleman allow me to interrupt him? It is not the intention to proceed further with this item at this time, and I would ask if he would be good enough to interrupt his speech now and continue it at a later date so that I might ask the committee to defer consideration of this item, which will be gone into in the ordinary way, so that another department may be brought in.

Mr. POULIOT: I will agree to any request the hon. gentleman makes in his own behalf, because when I wrote him he was very polite and courteous to me, but I strongly object to any other department being brought in for a subsidy to-day. I object to the estimates of any other department being considered, but the hon. gentleman is a new minister, and I am ready with an open heart to do anything he asks for himself. I do not know what other minister he has in mind, however, and I have my fears. I hope the hon. gentleman will not say that I am discourteous to him. I am willing to cooperate to the fullest extent so long as I know with whom I am dealing. I am dealing with the Minister of Trade and Commerce now. He knows that all the propaganda that has been published in the press with regard to the benefits of the imperial agreements is bluff and humbug, which has been published in order to satisfy the advertisers. The truth is entirely different.

Now, sir, to sum up, when the estimates come up again it will be impossible for the hon. gentleman to deny what I am going to say, because I took the trouble to go through all the figures. Our imports from the United Kingdom are millions of dollars less than they were in 1930 and our exports to the United Kingdom—if we include the exports of foreign goods—are also less than they were in that year, though they are a little more than they were in 1932. May I say also to the hon. gentleman that the Canadian-British empire trade was $29,000,000 less. I will leave it to the minister to answer my statement. If he wishes time in which to answer me I will give it to him; there is one minute left in which he can say yes or no. The point is that it is now two and a half years since the imperial agreements were concluded. Our trade with the United Kingdom and the other countries of the empire is $29,000,000 less than it was during the twelve months ending August 31, 1930, the last year of the King administration. May I ask the minister whether or not that is true. He has time to answer yes or no.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Mr. Chairman, I move that further consideration of the item be deferred.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will the acting leader of the government kindly indicate the business for to-morrow?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: To-morrow we will take up the bills standing in the name of the Minister of Finance. If we go into supply we will take up agriculture or public works.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We will not take up any of the social measures to-morrow?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: No.

At six o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, February 28, 1935

The house met at three o'clock.

QUESTIONS

FRENCH TREATY

Mr. BROWN:

Are both contracting parties observing the terms of the treaty between Canada and France which requires that both parties to the agreement shall issue certificates of origin furnished by the government of the exporting country?

Mr. BROWN: When I put this question on the order paper I had not seen article 9 of the French treaty which deals with this matter, and on reading it I find that there is in the question an implication that is not warranted by that article. I understand that we are to have before us the question of ratifying certain amendments, and therefore this question might be dropped.

Mr. SPEAKER: Withdrawn.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Did Canada, by affixing her signature to the telegram of the 15th of September, 1934, inviting the U.S.S.R. to enter the League of Nations, officially recognize the U.S.S.R.?

2. If so, has the government repealed the order in council of the 27th of February, 1931, P.C. 463, prohibiting imports of coal, wood and its products, asbestos, etc., from the U.S.S.R.?

3. If so, at what date, and what is the number of the order in council?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY:

1. No. The U.S.S.R. was officially recognized by Canada in 1924.

2 and 3. Answered by No. 1.

CANADA-NEW ZEALAND TREATY

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia):

1. On what date did the Canada-New Zealand treaty come into effect?

2. What were the imports of butter to Canada from New Zealand each year under this treaty?

Mr. CAHAN:

1. May 24, 1932.

	Pounds
2. May 24, 1932 to March 31, 1933.	798,771
Fiscal year ended March, 1934.	737,601
April 1, 1934 to January 31, 1935.	323,364

SAINTE MONIQUE, QUE., WHARF

Mr. POULIOT:

What are the names of the persons from whom wood was purchased in connection with repairs to the wharf at Sainte Monique, Lake Saint-John county in 1934, and what amount was paid to each of them?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

Joseph Rossignol	$97 38
Pierre A. Lindsay	30 00
David Tremblay	20 70
Pitre Boudreault	10 00
Pierre Ferland	7 60

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Mr. CHEVRIER:

1. What is the total number of: (a) officers; (b) constables, in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

2. How many of each rank are Canadian-born?

3. How many of such officers were appointed in 1934?

4. What is the total number in the force of: (a) French-Canadian officers; (b) French-Canadian constables?
5. How many officers of the force were superannuated in 1934?
6. What number of French-Canadians, if any, were among those superannuated?
7. What is the number of French-Canadian officers in the force stationed in Ottawa?
8. What is the number of French-Canadian officers in the force stationed in Montreal?
9. Is there any vacancy or are there any vacancies in the officers ranks of the force?
10. If so, will French-Canadian officers be appointed to fill some of these vacancies?

PRICE SPREADS AND MASS BUYING COMMISSION

Mr. BOUCHARD:

1. What are the names of the stenographers engaged for the reporting of the proceedings of the Price Spreads and Mass Buying Committee or Commission during the recess of parliament?
2. What remuneration was paid to each of the above stenographers for such reporting?

IMPORTATION OF BARBED WIRE

Mr. ROBERGE:

1. How many pounds of barbed wire were imported into Canada during the years 1931, 1932, 1933 and 1934?
2. From what countries was such barbed wire impoirted?
3. What was the quantity imported from each country?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Return tabled herewith.

TEN PER CENT DEDUCTION

Mr. ROBERGE:

1. How many public servants whose normal salaries in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1932, ranged from $1,200 to $1,800, suffered a deduction of ten per cent in their annual rate of compensation in each of the following fiscal years: (a) year ending March 31, 1933; (b) year ending March 31, 1934; (c) year ending March 31, 1935?
2. What was the total sum appropriated by the state from such employees by way of salary deduction in each of the fiscal years indicated?
3. What are the names and positions of public servants whose minimum statutory salary range was in excess of $4,000 as at March 31, 1932, who received special increases in their rate of compensation in each of the following fiscal years: (a) year ending March 31, 1933; (b) year ending March 31, 1934; (c) year ending March 31, 1935?
4. What were the normal statutory salaries of such public servants at the time such special increases were granted and what is the amount of such increase in each instance?

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR EXPENDITURE, INDEBTEDNESS AND THE REFUNDING OF MATURING OBLIGATIONS

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure respecting the Canadian National Railways, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet expenditures made and indebtedness incurred during the calendar year, 1935, and to provide for the refunding of certain maturing financial obligations.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

REPORTED STATEMENT OF ITALIAN CONSUL GENERAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (East Hamilton): I wish to bring to the attention of the house a newspaper item that appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of Monday, February 25, reporting a dinner given in the Chateau Laurier in this city at which Commandatore Luigi Petrucci, the Italian consul general in Canada, delivered an address. In the body of that address he made these observations:

I can safely say to the Canadian citizens of Italian origin that to them is reserved the great task of explaining to their fellow citizens the real meaning of the Fascism of Mussolini so that it will be much easier for the Canadian people to adapt themselves gradually to the new economic and political system which is hardly unavoidable.

My question is this. Has the representative of another country, enjoying diplomatic privileges, the right to advocate in effect the substitution of a dictatorship for a democratic form of government and what action does the government contemplate to correct such interference in the domestic affairs of this dominion?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister): We shall have the matter considered and give the hon. gentleman an answer tomorrow.

MARKETING ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. A. FRASER (Northumberland): May I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture? Will he assure the house that he will see that each and every one of the producers who are asked to enter a scheme under the Natural Products Marketing Act will be furnished with a copy of the act, chapter 57 of the statutes of last year?

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): I fear that will be impossible. Every effort will be made in connection with any scheme brought forward to put the facts of the scheme before those who are interested in it. I will take the question into consideration and if anything further can be said, I shall be glad to get in touch with the hon. member with reference to it.

ELECTORAL LISTS—PRINTING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): May I ask the Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) how many of the 6,000,000 enumerated voters' names under the Dominion Franchise Act of 1934 have been printed and when the work will be concluded?

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): The work is proceeding very rapidly. I cannot tell the hon. member to-day how many names have been printed. I saw the acting King's Printer yesterday but my memory is not sufficiently good to recall the exact number. In the ordinary course the lists, as I stated, will be in type by April 1, and will then be distributed. A large number of them are already printed and requests have been made for copies, but it would not be fair for the Secretary of State to discriminate between applicants, and I thought a date might be set about April 1 when the lists so far as then printed would be distributed to all parties on both sides of the house. I think that is fair. I believe all the lists will be set in type on or about April 1.

Mr. McINTOSH: Could the minister not have the lists by March 21 or 25?

Mr. CAHAN: After a suggestion was made by the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Power) that the lists of the cities should be proceeded with first, a general instruction was given that that should be done and I think a large number of the city lists are already printed and delivered to the franchise commissioner. The others are largely in type, but all will be in type by April 1. If there is any special demand on the part of the house that we should have the lists in type by March 21, I shall endeavour to accede to that request. To do so might require a little more night work than we had contemplated.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DECORUM DURING READING OF MOTIONS, TAKING VOTES AND RECORDING DECLARATIONS OF PAIRS

Mr. SPEAKER: I would like to crave the indulgence of the house for a moment. At a meeting of the whips held in my office this morning, it was thought that I might make certain suggestions to the house.

It is suggested that during the reading of motions, putting the question and voting thereon, there will be so far as possible silence in the house.

With regard to pairs, hon. members who were in the house yesterday will have noticed that there was a certain amount of confusion, as there always is, in connection with the announcement of pairs. It has been suggested by the whips that in taking the pairs, we start at the right at this end of the chamber and proceed down to the far end, then come back, start on the left side and proceed to the other end, thus avoiding confusion.

Finally, it was also thought that I might, with due deference to all hon. members, make the suggestion that all necessary conversation between hon. members be conducted as quietly as possible.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN ACT

AMENDMENT TO FACILITATE AND INCREASE THE EXTENSION OF CREDIT TO FARMERS

The house resumed from Monday, February 25, consideration in committee of Bill No. 15, to amend the Canadian Farm Loan Act—Mr. Rhodes—Mr. Morand in the chair.

On the short title.

Mr. BROWN: Might I make a suggestion? We have spent a great deal of time in going over this measure in a general way and have had a pretty thorough discussion. I agree with the minister a good deal of it has been irrelevant, but I think now we would make better progress, since there is no particular exception to the principle of the bill, if we took it up clause by clause.

Mr. POULIOT: At page 1275 of Hansard of yesterday this question was put by my right hon. leader:

> Mr. Mackenzie King: Will the acting leader of the government kindly indicate the business for to-morrow?
> Sir George Perley: To-morrow we will take up the bills standing in the name of the Minister of Finance. If we go into supply we will take up agriculture or public works.
>
> Mr. Mackenzie King: We will not take up any of the social measures to-morrow?
> Sir George Perley: No.

Therefore I understand Bill No. 15 is not a social measure, according to the statement made in the house yesterday by the Acting Prime Minister. This is a most important matter to consider at the start. There is also another point I would like to mention.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I think it is only right that this should be straightened out a little. The leader of the opposition was told that the Minister of Finance was going on with his bills to-day. Then when he asked if we were going on with social measures, he referred to those in the name of the Prime Minister. The hon. gentleman's own leader knew that these bills of the Minister of Finance were to be taken up to-day. They are measures of reform; they are measures to improve the condition of the people just as the others are, but the measures about which the leader of the opposition asked me the question were those in the name of the Prime Minister. Unfortunately the Prime Minister has had a cold this week, but as soon as he returns those measures will be taken up.

Mr. POULIOT: In reply to the Acting Prime Minister, may I say this: It was said over the radio that the old order was gone—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: Just a minute. What I am going to say now is, I assure the committee, quite relevant. We were told that the old order was gone. Well, there is before us this legislation with regard to farm loans. This is very little different from the previous legislation; in fact this is largely an increase in the amount which is to be loaned, therefore in this respect at least the old order is not gone. But, sir, may I tell you something more? What I was about to tell you when the right hon. gentleman rose to answer me was this, that some time ago I spent a week end at home and met several farmers who spoke to me about this legislation and the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. They said that the latter has destroyed their credit with the banks, the merchants and the money-lenders, and made it impossible for any farmer to borrow money. That is due not to the new order but to the dawn of the new era as seen by the Prime Minister and his satellites last year in setting up a board with full powers to decrease by their own will the indebtedness of any farmer. By that means the credit of the farmers is completely ruined and their only recourse is to borrow money from the government. But is this amount of money sufficient to meet the whole indebtedness of the farmers? No sir, it is not. If the government is fair it will provide for the farmers enough money to meet their liabilities, because it is only from the government that they can borrow money now. This is not only my personal opinion but it is the opinion expressed by the interested people themselves, the very farmers who cannot meet their liabilities on account of the legislation passed by the government last year. And that legislation affects even those who have not yet borrowed money from the farm loan board, because it ruins their credit. Now the retail merchants and those who do business with the farmers not only do not give them credit but they force them to pay what is already owing. This situation shows that the Prime Minister did not see further than his nose when he passed that legislation. I am surprised that his attention was not drawn to that outcome by his colleagues. I regret it. I regret it on behalf of all the farmers who suffer from that immature legislation. Here again may I call the attention of the house and the country to the danger of having legislation prepared by people who do not know the first thing about the real condition of the farmers. They bring such legislation on ready to serve, but it is most indigestible. After having ruined the trade of the farmer by raising the tariff walls—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Morand): Surely the hon. gentleman is not going to discuss the tariff.

Mr. POULIOT: Just a moment, sir. I am coming to the cause—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Morand): We are discussing this bill.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, sir, and I did not think it necessary to spell every word to the house in order to be understood, but if it is necessary I shall do so.

Mr. SPOTTON: Oh, oh.

Mr. POULIOT: I hear my hon. friend from South Huron—not South, because South Huron is represented by a good Liberal, as North Huron will be after the general election.

Mr. GOTT: And Témiscouata will be represented by a Conservative.

Mr. POULIOT: My hon. friend said exactly the same thing about South Oxford, and he was mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Morand): I must insist that the discussion be confined to this bill.

Mr. POULIOT: I perfectly agree, sir, and if you had said to the hon. member for North Huron, who breathes so loudly, and to the other hon. gentleman not to exhale his own to this side of the chamber.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Morand): I must insist that the discussion relate to the bill before us.

Mr. POULIOT: If a farmer has to borrow money it is because he needs it. Will you agree with me on that, sir? And if he needs it there must be a reason, and the reason is—this is elementary—that he has not any money. Now why has he not any money, and why does he have to come to the government to get some? It is because he does not make any money. And why does he not make any money? It is because he has no market for what he produces. And why does he have no market? It is because there are high tariff walls.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. SPOTTON: Oh, oh.

Mr. POULIOT: Well, I would like to see every farmer of North Huron in this chamber now to see the exhibition made by the hon. member. I know that he alone is a brass band.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Morand): Order.

Mr. POULIOT: When I was at college and studying philosophy the first thing to learn was "to ultimum quia" the very reason of things.

An hon. MEMBER: Why didn't you learn it?

An hon. MEMBER: Did you pass your exams?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Morand): The principle of the bill has been discussed and we are now discussing section one.

Mr. POULIOT: No, sir, we are still on the short title. This is most important. Is this house to vote $90,000,000 without knowing why? It is an enormous sum, and there must be a reason for it. There is not one reason only for the need of it, there are several of them. I do not intend to indicate all of them now, but I shall continue with my argument and keep within the rules of the house and within the subject matter that is before us.

Now, sir, take a poor farmer who has a splendid crop of potatoes in his cellar, first class potatoes, Green Mountain or any kind you like, first class and well graded. If he has no market how can he sell them? So they stay in his cellar, he may be offered 40 cents a bag for them, but that does not help him. The same with onions, the same with every commodity; with lumber, because lumber interests the farmers very much. In the winter time the farmer is largely a lumberjack. He is interested in the sale of lumber and of other commodities. He is not so much interested in the Canadian Pacific Railway; I say that to my hon. friend who has just groaned. The farmer should be helped, we should come to his assistance. But the way, to come to his assistance is not only to make provision that he can borrow money, although sometimes it is necessary to do that I admit. Why is it necessary? It is necessary on account of the foolish and insane policies put in force by the brute majority of this government since 1930. That is the cause of the farmers' present distress. What I ask sir, is that the farmer should be given a chance, should be put on his feet. I make very plain and clear suggestions to this government, but they will not listen to anyone who offers sensible suggestions.

Mr. GOTT: They will listen to sensible people.

Mr. POULIOT: I am not going to argue with anyone who makes jokes about the distress of the farmers. Some people were short sighted enough to tell the farmers to buy land for the production of tobacco, that they would have an unlimited market in Great Britain, but what has happened? I need not go into that, but the electors of South Essex know the losses they have suffered in the tobacco business and the onion business in the last few years. I am here as a member representing not only my constituency but Canada at large, and it is my duty as it is the duty of every member to defend the interests of the farmers. The farmer is a man who is lectured by the Prime Minister but who is not assisted by the government. That is what has happened since 1930; that is why to-day the farmer is in distress. The government have no policy to help the farmers, as they have no policy in regard to any matter mentioned in the speech from the throne. This is the result of a brain trust. It is very dangerous, sir, to take one brain out of its skull and put it into the hands of a brain trust. As a result the farmers have suffered. I gave an example the other day; I will repeat it now, and I defy the Minister of Finance to contradict me. If to-day the hon. gentleman tells the house that the government are going to loan $90,000,000 to the farmers instead of $15,000,000 is it not because the farmers are six times worse off than they were when the Mackenzie King government was in power? This is an elementary proposition. The Minister of Finance may crack jokes about it; he may speak in a solemn tone or he may direct a jibe to me; I am quite indifferent. Hon. members may call me anything they wish, as the hon. member for Vegreville did the other day in connection with another matter; I am indifferent. They can say anything—phut!—I am indifferent to it; it is of no importance whatever. I am here to do my duty; I am here to tell the people, on behalf of those who suffer from the iniquitous policies of this government—

Mr. SPOTTON: Oh, oh.

Mr. POULIOT: There is another groan from the brass band.

Mr. GOTT: What is the sense; this is no speech.

Mr. POULIOT: That was the beating of a drum, and I attach no importance to it. I should like to see the farmers who may wish to take advantage of this act, in the constituencies of South Essex and North Huron, sitting in the galleries and listening to the performance of these two hon. members. Not one of those farmers would ever vote for these hon. gentlemen again. This is the time to tell of the distress of the farmers, but my hon. friend from North Huron went around the dear old province of Ontario telling the farmers what this government had done for them. The next time he goes around let him ask the farmers if their pockets have been filled by this government. The government will loan money to them; they will make their indebtedness greater, but they will not give the farmers a chance to get back on their feet and carry on in the hard times we now have because of the policies of the government.

Everything I have said has been strictly to the point, Mr. Chairman. I regret to have spoken at such length, but I did so in order to satisfy your curiosity, since you wanted to know why I was speaking about these matters. I have endeavoured to explain, in order that there may be no misunderstanding as to my position. To sum up, sir, after these short preliminaries, may I say to the Minister of Finance who is listening to me now—and who, as I said, as a rule is very courteous to hon. members—that it is not always a pleasure to stand up and speak in this House of Commons. But one has a duty to perform on behalf of the poor, the neglected and those who were prosperous some years ago, and have ceased to be. They did not realize it. They realize now that they are very poor because of the policies which have been brought in by this government. We have a duty to the public, and that duty will be fulfilled to the last, until this government is expelled by the will of the farmers, the workers and all the people of this great country.

Mr. ELLIOTT: There is just one matter to which I should like to direct the attention of the committee before this section is carried. There seeems to have been a misapprehension with regard to the operation of the loan act in Ontario, and some hon. members, particularly the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe and the hon. member for North Renfrew, stated that no loans were being made in this province. I assume, of course, that these gentlemen were unaware of the fact that their statements were not correct. I have made inquiries, and I am told that since November last 231 loans have been made in the province of Ontario, aggregating $438,490. That is within $145,000 of the amount loaned by the Canadian farm loan board for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1934, if I have the figures correctly. I just wanted to have that on the record, Mr. Chairman, as I have not the slightest doubt that my hon. friend from North Renfrew who I see in his seat to-day, was under a misapprehension when he said:

> My complaint is that from the time of the provincial election in Ontario last July no loans of any kind have been made by the province to the farmers of Ontario.

I just wanted to set my hon. friend right, because no doubt he will want to withdraw the statement he made.

Mr. COTNAM: With reference to the suggestion of the hon. member for West Middlesex I should like to say that in my section of the country no new loans have been made under the Ontario act since the election in this province last June. I have had farmer after farmer complain that loans had been approved by the provincial board but that after the election they were notified that they could not secure the loans and furthermore that the fee of $12 which they paid for inspection and examination of their property would not be returned to them, although the applications had been approved. Further, I should like to know just how many of those loans were made to Conservative farmers in the province of Ontario. It would be exceedingly interesting to find out if any of those loans were made to Conservative farmers. My information is that if loans were made they did not go to Conservatives in this province.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not believe the point the hon. member has raised properly comes under the discussion of this bill. Although I do not purpose prolonging the debate I feel I must not allow a statement of that kind to remain unchallenged. I accept the hon. member's statement as to what he understood, namely that no farm loans were being made in his district. I believe however the hon. member should look at what he said on February 25 of this year, and which is reported at page 1180 of Hansard as follows:

My complaint is that from the time of the provincial election in Ontario last July no loans of any kind have been made by the province to the farmers of Ontario.

With regard to the hon. member's remarks about what is now going on, and his references to the political class to whom loans are being made, may I say that I believe he may rely upon the government now in charge of affairs in Ontario to make loans irrespective of the political views of the applicants.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. COTNAM: If the loans are made on the same basis as political heads were cut off since the last election, then certainly no Conservatives will secure loans. When I made my former statement I made it in good faith—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Morand): Order.

Mr. COTNAM: —because I have seen letters from the chairman of the Ontario farm loan board in which the statement was made that no new loans were being made at the present time in Ontario.

Mr. HANBURY: I would suggest to the hon. member who has just taken his seat that judging from the last election returns if loans in Ontario are going to be made only to Conservative farmers there will not be many applications.

I am not favourably disposed to this type of legislation. May I stress what the Minister of Finance said only a day or two ago when he ascribed some of the troubles experienced by farmers who have sought to procure money to the existence of moratoria from one end of Canada to the other. I believe we would have been acting in the interests of the farmers if we had detailed and accurate information placed upon the record indicating the moratorium existing in each of the provinces of Canada, beginning at Quebec and running through to British Columbia. I do not intend to discuss that aspect of the question further than to point out that not only are there moratoria in the various provinces, but a condition exists whereby after someone who has security on property eventually succeeds in getting through the provincial courts—and that does happen on occasions—and perhaps securing a judgment he is faced with the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. To-day a man may procure his judgment from the court and to-morrow the farmer, or whoever it may be, finds that on account of this act the judgment he has procured is practically of no value.

Mr. HACKETT: No, that is only for sixty days.

Mr. HANBURY: I think the hon. member will find it is permanent.

Mr. HACKETT: Only sixty days; read the statute.

Mr. HANBURY: In my opinion the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act is to-day working to the disadvantage of ninety per cent of the best class of farmers in Canada. I suggest to the minister that when he is considering amendments to the act he will be acting in the interests of the people whom we are attempting to help if he will place on the statute books a definite date for conclusion. As it is at the present time I believe a period of six months, a year, a year and a half or two years may be provided. I do think however that in the interests of the farmers, those people who have their money invested in farm mortgages and things of that kind, there should be some definite date for conclusion. I make that suggestion to the minister so that he may consider it when bringing down his amendments.

In connection with the measure before us which provides for the assistance of the farmer only I have noticed that with the exception of the fishermen, whose case has been placed before the house by several hon. members, there are many other classes in our communities which have gone through the same troubles and tribulations and whose cases have not been presented. I am not going to enter into a detailed discussion of the difficulties with which the lumbermen have to contend, and about which I have some knowledge. It occurs to me however that after all this is class legislation. I know the government may answer that attempts have been made to help the lumbermen by means of trade agreements and other methods. The same efforts have been made on behalf of the farmers. I would remind the committee however that we have millions of dollars invested in the lumber industry of Canada, an industry which is receiving no benefit from any government measure along the lines of the one now before us. I cannot understand why we are proceeding to place all our eggs in one basket. I am making my plea possibly because I am opposed to socialism in any form, and I look upon legislation of this type as a form of socialism. I say to the minister that if he were to offer to the lumber industry of Canada $100,000,000 or $200,000,000, such sums to be advanced to them under a type of mortgage, to enable them to go ahead in the production of lumber, I would oppose the measure. I would suggest to the minister, as I do in the present instance, that by placing in the hands of the lumber producers or any other producers funds with which to increase production we are simply emphasizing the unfortunate condition now obtaining. We must interpret this measure through which we are enabled to loan the farmers $90,000,000 as one which would have the effect of encouraging increased production. The fact is that to-day in Canada we have over production in many lines of farm produce. We know or at least have some idea about the hundreds of millions of bushels of wheat that the government of Canada is carrying for the farmer. We know the difficulty in connection with farm products of all kinds, and yet by this legislation we not only make it possible but we encourage the farmer to go ahead and to produce more of which we already have too much.

I have a further suggestion to make to the minister. On all sides and from one end of the chamber to the other we have had a competition to find out how cheaply we could get money. Rates of five per cent, four and a half per cent, four per cent and three and a half per cent have been suggested so that the farmer may proceed to overproduce. I did not hear any suggestion, however, throughout the long discussion which would indicate that the time might come during this session of parliament, when the Minister of Finance was producing his budget—or in later sessions when other budgets will be produced—when he would have to show us how much had been lost to the people of Canada in money which could not be collected on farm loans, and how much money would have to be paid out of the pockets of the people of Canada because we had loaned money on an uneconomical basis. I suggest that that is a point which should be considered before the measure passes. The time has come when we in Canada must consider whether we will ever balance our budget, and I believe the Minister of Finance may agree with me in that respect. I must state that I have had very little patience with the contest which has been proceeding in this chamber whereby one has attempted to outbid the other in order that the farmer may be provided with money to produce more than he can sell.

Before taking my seat there are one or two questions that I would like to have answered by the minister. I would like to know what the losses are up to date under the present Farm Loan Act, and what action has been taken to recover some of those losses or to recover in any case. In how many cases has action been taken under the present Farm Loan Act?

Mr. THOMPSON (Lanark): When the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Elliott) was speaking a few minutes ago—

[Mr. Hanbury.]

Mr. BROWN: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. We have had this Ontario question threshed out backwards and forwards, and furthermore it is of no interest to the great majority of the members of this house.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Morand): The hon. gentleman is quite in order so far.

Mr. THOMPSON (Lanark): I take up very little of the time of this house, Mr. Chairman, and I only rise to my feet when I feel I have something to say. What I have to say now will not occupy me very long.

In the county of Lanark which I represent, no farm loans have been made since the last Ontario election.

Mr. BROWN: I am certainly in order now, Mr. Chairman, in pointing out that this matter has been threshed out backwards and forwards across the floor of the house thoroughly. This question of farm loans in Ontario is entirely irrelevant and this discussion is a waste of the time of the house and is of no interest to the great majority of the members. I ask for your ruling, Mr Chairman.

Mr. SPENCE: We have been listening to the troubles of Saskatchewan for a whole week.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Morand): There is no point of order. The hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Thompson) has only so far said that there have been no farm loans made in his county.

Mr. THOMPSON (Lanark): There have been dozens of applications for farm loans in the county of Lanark but they have not even been replied to. I know that in several cases $12 was sent in with the application and was accepted by the Henry government in Ontario and the loans were promised before the last election, but then there was a change of government and these farmers could neither get their loan nor get their money back. I was speaking the other day to a farm valuator and he told me that in the county of Lanark, where he values land, he had not been asked by the present Ontario government to value one farm since the last election. I had a man come into my house within the last ten days and tell me that he had bought a farm, had made application for a loan, but that he had to go out and borrow money privately. He wanted to know if he could get a loan under this act but I told him that the legislation had not yet been passed, and he went out and borrowed money privately at six per cent interest from another farmer, instead of being able to borrow the money from the Ontario government which had accepted his $12 with his application and had promised to give him a loan.

Furthermore, about the first of December I was in the city of Toronto and I called to see the Hon. Duncan Marshall. I spoke to him about these men in the county of Lanark who were wanting to get farm loans and he told me, "For the present at least we are not making loans. I do not know what our policy will be in the future." I came back and I found that not one loan has been made in the county of Lanark and the farmers there are borrowing what money they require privately. I also want to repeat that many of them who paid in their money with their application have not only not got a loan but they have not received back their $12.

Mr. RHODES: If I may be permitted to reply to a specific question put to me by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Hanbury), the total of loans to date is $10,321,306.21, and the losses as of March 31, 1934, which is the latest reported figure, amount to $83,681.17. The total number of foreclosures since the inception of the act has been nineteen.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Are those all losses on principal?

Mr. RHODES: That figure would include both principal and interest.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is rather confusing to get the answer in that way. I note from the report that there is a very considerable amount of overdue interest.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend will appreciate that the figure I gave was as of March 31, 1934. There are considerable sums of interest in arrear, and considerable sums of principal in arrear, but the total losses will not be determined until the individual transactions are closed up.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Thank you, that is the point I wanted to know.

Mr. SPOTTON: Mr. Chairman, I have been intensely interested in the dire need of the farmers of North Huron for securing farm loans. I wish to say this to the credit of the Drury government which was in office in the province of Ontario from 1919 to 1923, that they started the agriculture development board. They also started the province of Ontario savings banks and gathered up money from the people of the province of Ontario who had it to spare and loaned it to the farmers of my county who needed it. This policy was continued by the government of the Hon. Howard Ferguson and the government of the Hon. George Henry. Coming from an agricultural constituency, even before I was a member of this house I asked the Ontario government to appoint an inspector in my county who would serve my farmers and those of the surrounding counties. This they did, and I can say this, that to my knowledge there never was a political loan made in the county of Huron unless it was to a Liberal candidate whom I defeated in one election, and in that case I went to the mat to save a political opponent.

The inspector would make his rounds and sometimes I have gone in to plead that they would raise the loan by one or two hundred dollars. Sometimes my request was granted, and sometimes it was turned down. But at any rate my farmers in the county of Huron—

Mr. BROWN: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. SPOTTON: My farmers in the county of Huron who could not secure money elsewhere, from life insurance companies—

Mr. BROWN: This is out of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SPOTTON: When the pastoral member for Lisgar gets through I will continue, Mr. Chairman. I have always found that many half-baked clergymen are poor listeners.

Mr. BROWN: Withdraw that statement. I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I want that statement withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Morand): I think the hon. member had better withdraw.

Mr. SPOTTON: Mr. Chairman, I neither said that the hon. member for Lisgar was a clergyman nor that he was half-baked; but I did say that I have known half-baked clergymen who were good speakers but poor listeners.

Mr. BROWN: That is just a way of evading the Chairman's ruling.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Morand): It is not permissible by inference to do what you cannot do under the rules. I would ask the hon. member to withdraw.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. SPOTTON: If the hon. member for Lisgar is a minister or clergyman, and if he comes in the category of being half-baked, I retract.

Mr. BROWN: Mr. Chairman, an hon. member of this house cannot make a statement of that kind.

Mr. SPOTTON: Then I will say he is well done, well baked.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Morand): I must insist that the hon. member withdraw that statement.

Mr. SPOTTON: Mr. Chairman, if you will tell me what the statement is I shall be glad to withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Morand): The inference was that the hon. gentleman was a half-baked clergyman.

Mr. SPOTTON: I apologize to the clergymen of this country for any such inference.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Morand): I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his statement.

Mr. SPOTTON: If you think I made such a statement, Mr. Chairman, I shall withdraw it, but I made no such accusation against the clergy.

I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that in the province of Ontario we are not egotistical, but we have listened for a long time to members from the western provinces getting up and I think slandering and libelling their own provinces when they say that their municipalities are broke, and their provinces are broke, and everything is in dire straits, and that they cannot secure loans in the money markets of the world but have to come down to get this government's O.K. I say that there are only four or five old provinces—Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island—that must therefore have that financial status which can help them out; and I do say that these western provinces do not show much gratitude. To these western members let me say that we have long remained silent in Ontario; but I appeal to them now—I am not trying to stir up anything of a sectional spirit—that the time has almost come when we shall have to have an Ontario consciousness. I appeal to the hon. member for West Middlesex, who I know is interested in agriculture; he represents an agricultural constituency, and I know from experience that he is sincerely interested in agriculture and in the advancement of that industry in his county. But I tell him that if he has not been sleeping with the Premier and Minister of Agriculture of Ontario he has been sleeping in an adjacent room. I am speaking figuratively, not literally.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would be in excellent company either way.

[Mr. Spotton.]

Mr. SPOTTON: The Ontario government suggested that if they were granting loans in Ontario they would grant them at four per cent; but that reminded me of a friend of mine who said that if he had some ham he would have ham and eggs—if he had eggs. They would grant new loans—if they were granting loans—at four per cent. But they were not granting loans. A gentleman whom I revere and to whom the Hepburn administration has not been kind, Mr. Charles Robertson, the whip of the Liberal party in the last house, wrote—I have his letter in my office—to a farmer stating, "This government is not granting new loans to any farmers; but in the case of those farmers whose farms have been inspected, where they pay $12, and where the necessary legal work has been done and a loan has been agreed to, they are going to consider it." But in some cases, and I will give the names, the concession and the lot if necessary, they have reduced the loan by anything from $500 to $1,500. What is peculiar to me is that the resolution of the hon. member for West Middlesex and the announcement of the Ontario government synchronized. It looks as if they are playing a political game.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It shows the good judgment of both parties.

Mr. SPOTTON: Good politics, yes.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No, good judgment.

Mr. SPOTTON: But hard on the people. Now this is a fact. I went to the agricultural development board, after they had dismissed Mr. Roadhouse, and I was in communication with Mr. Fairbairn and Mr. Page, and they informed me that there were no new loans. The president of the United Farmers' organization in Ontario, Mr. Robert J. Scott, together with the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe and myself, lamented the fact that since last June the Hepburn administration has been very cruel to the farmers of Ontario. In our opinion they were striving to make it so severe that the farmers should lose the old homestead—they would make it hard for the farmers of Ontario so that it would have its effect on the next dominion election, because it can be nothing else than that. We have positive proof. Mr. Nixon, replying to Mr. Scott, is reported to have said that he was not listening much to Mr. Scott, the president of the United Farmers of Ontario organization, because he voted for George Spotton at the last election, and Mr. Scott replied that he had not voted for me. Sometimes I get discontented with my own party; but when I think of the puerile, the infantile and the senile remarks of the opposition, I think I am better off staying where I am. When Mr. Nixon said that the president of the United Farmers' organization of Ontario had voted for me, that gentleman, as I say, replied that he had not. But I care not whether he did vote for me or not; if he did not many others did. The fact of the matter is however that Mr. Nixon said that scores of new loans were being granted daily in Ontario, whereas I make bold to say that this was not the case; and that will be laid upon the records in Queens park in the very near future. Some members of this house get up and tell how many loans there were. Well, if there were any, they were granted, believe me, in their constituencies during a byelection.

Many Liberal farmers have come to me and told me their farms had not been inspected. They were kidded along until the snow was on the ground. My hon. friend from West Middlesex knows this; he is fair and he will agree with me when I say that they kidded the farmers along while that beautiful white blanket covered the farms, telling them that they could not inspect the farms until the spring, and then they hoped to pass the buck to the federal parliament. But these little wise-cracking, peanut, potato politicians in Queens park, Toronto, will not, so long as I am in the flesh, kid or fool the farmers of Ontario. We have just recently seen Mr. Marshall come out with a change of heart.

An hon. MEMBER: Who is he?

Mr. SPOTTON: Duncan Marshall, whom Alberta made a great mistake in allowing to leave. I wish to congratulate this government, Mr. Chairman, on increasing the sum to $90,000,000 the amount of money available for the farmers of Ontario when they could get it nowhere else, and I plead with this government that they make the rate of interest as low as possible. The overhead, as indicated by this government, may be large, but I am glad that this government does not belong to the cannibalistic tribe we have in the province of Ontario. We have at the head of this farm loan board, they tell me, a former Liberal premier of British Columbia, and many of his assistants are from the ranks of Liberal politicians. I am glad of that, because I have never been a party to taking the bread from any home in my county or elsewhere. I have striven, and I have been successful in the endeavour, to extend the time of Liberal officeholders in my riding until even after the election when the opposition thinks their party is going to attain office.

I congratulate this government on the fact that they are making it possible, after the Hepburn government has turned down the farmers, and scores and hundreds of farmers in Ontario have been driven off the old homestead, for me to say what I have been able to say, to my farmers: Hold steady; it is only a few short months until you can drive up from the gate between those ancestral trees which your grandfather planted and you will rest secure on the old homestead. I am leaving to-night to lend a little assistance to a Liberal whose Liberal grandfather planted such trees and through the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act I feel we shall be able to send him home happy. On behalf of the electors of my constituency, Liberals and Conservatives alike, I wish to congratulate the Minister of Finance that when the Hepburn administration turned the farmers down, he stepped into the breach and said: I am ready, aye ready.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. SPOTTON: Well, where were the farmers to turn? No other organization was loaning money and to scores of my farmers who are in danger of being driven off their farms, I am going to say to them, as I wire them weekly: Take advantage of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act; that will hold you secure until the federal farm loan act is in operation and you will be able to hang on to the old homestead. The Hepburn administration has not been granting any new loans in the county of Huron. They may have done so in Frontenac, where they did some very cruel things, but they have not done it in the constituency I represent.

Mr. ARTHURS: In the first place I am quite satisfied that the great majority of the farming community in Canada is entirely in favour of this act and I am satisfied that there are not many hon. gentlemen opposite who dare oppose it. During this afternoon we have heard one or two hon. members opposing it. The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard made the plea that this was class legislation and he strongly pleaded in favour not of the mortgagor but of the mortgagee; he was inclined to protect the interests of the investor rather than those of the farmer. The hon. member for Témiscouata took a very peculiar attitude particularly in view of the fact that hon. gentlemen opposite have been pleading on behalf of the farmer. He said that this act would ruin the credit of the farmers with the banks. I have understood from almost all hon. gentlemen opposite who have been speaking on behalf of the farmers, that they have no credit with the banks at all.

I rise principally for the purpose of answering some remarks made the other day by the hon. member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Campbell). In my riding as in many others, including those of some hon. members who have spoken to-day, no farm loans have been made to my knowledge since June last. At that time there were many loans completed in so far as everything was concerned except the passing of the cheque. There is one case in particular of which I have personal knowledge where a man transferred his farm to the then mortgagee. He had sold the farm to another and taken property in Toronto as an equity. He had transferred the property to the farmer who was about to mortgage it to the farm loan board. The title had been searched; the mortgage was made out and registered as required by the Ontario board. Everything was completed except the passing of the cheque, but the loan has not up to the present date been granted.

Mr. BRADETTE: What is the name?

Mr. ARTHURS: I am not giving names here any more than is the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BRADETTE: I would like to get the names of all those cases. The hon. member cannot give them.

Mr. ARTHURS: I want to point out also that as far as Ontario and I believe the whole dominion are concerned, the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act depends in a large measure upon the successful passing of this measure. Many farmers are quite able to secure a compromise with their creditors providing they can produce ready money which could be acquired under this act. The difficulty in regard to providing ready money is what has caused the delay in many cases of adjustments under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act.

As I have said before, I have no desire to delay this legislation; in fact I am most anxious that it should be passed. I am bringing up these incidents merely to help the act along rather than to do anything to hinder its passing.

Mr. BRADETTE: It is very easy to see from the discussion this afternoon that hon. members opposite are not in love with Mr. Hepburn, but the criticisms that have been made of him in this chamber are not going to do him any harm. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to believe that we should not have any central government; that we should all go to the provincial field. When I first came into the house I tried to establish the status of the settlers and I was glad to hear on Monday of this week that the Minister of Labour was placing some classes of settlers under the scheme. He stated that settlers operating farms under contract with the director of soldiers' settlement could apply for the benefits of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. I believe the minister tried to answer my question last week in regard to giving the exact status of the settlers, but no final decision was reached. There is only one standard, that of colonization settlers, because you cannot build up classes within classes and you must necessarily permit all settlers, even if they are not or have not been soldiers, to come under the scheme.

I would like the committee to be fully seized of the exact situation so far as nothern Ontario in its relation to this act is concerned and I believe the same thing applies also to northern Quebec and the newer sections of colonization of the prairie provinces and British Columbia. In the two provincial ridings of Cochrane, Ontario, there are over 3,600 families who have settled on the land and who are actual farmers in the full sense of the word although they do not own their farms outright. Their farms still belong to the crown in the right of the province. These people would not come under the scheme. Surely if it is possible for soldier settlers to come under the scheme these people who are actual settlers, living on their holdings and getting their living out of farming, ought to be able to come under the act. The minister was not definite in his answer the other day and there was no possibility of arriving at a conclusion or giving a full definition of the status of people in actual occupation. As I say, if it is possible for soldier settlers to come under this act, it should be possible also for an actual settler, one who has occupied his land for a number of years and to whom the land belongs to some extent, to come under the act. I am sincere in my pleading on behalf of that rural population. When we talk of agriculturists, we must include not only farmers who own their land but also the man whose actual occupation is farming. This should be possible within certain limits.

I fully appreciate the statement made by the Minister of Finance the other day that this was a colonization scheme. I do not want it to be taken as a colonization scheme; but the last stage of colonization, when a man is almost ready to get his deed, having sufficient land cleared but being unable under provincial regulations to get it, is the time that the central government should come to his help. It should be possible to bring within the provisions of this measure the real settlers in the newer sections, as well as the soldier settler. There should be no distinction. If you are going to make classes within classes it will bring trouble. Again I make this urgent plea, and I am going to keep on making it, because it is very important. It applies just as forcibly to the riding of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) as to that I have the honour to represent. In such ridings there are thousands of families who are not able to benefit under this scheme as it stands at present. That is also true in Pontiac and several ridings on the Quebec side. If the government is really desirous of finding a solution for the problem of the farmers they should make it possible for all who deserve the name of farmer to benefit.

Now I want the Minister of Finance to give me a concrete answer on that very important point. I do not want to be unreasonable, I do not want a settler who has just settled to come within these benefits, but the man I refer to is the farmer who by actual work for the last five or ten years has shown himself to be such. It is possible for the government to be fully protected, there are inspectors on the ground in the different provinces and they can distinguish between the settler and the real farmer. I ask the minister to give a ruling on that point. In my section we are absolutely in favour of anything that will improve the lot of the farmer as well as of the working man, but under this legislation we see no salvation and no help for one of the finest rural sections there is in Canada to-day.

Mr. RHODES: I take no exception to the hon. member for North Timiskaming (Mr. Bradette) making a plea for the settlers in his area, but may I point out that I am not competent to give a ruling, as he puts it. He cited a reply given to him on a question submitted to the Minister of Labour. That had reference to the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, and had we been discussing that act I would have given the same reply. To-day we are discussing the Canadian Farm Loan Act. I propose to move an amendment to the present bill which will define a farmer in precisely the same terms as the definition in the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. That is as specific an answer as I can give. My hon. friend will realize that the board must be the judge whether or not a man comes within the definition laid down by the act.

Mr. VALLANCE: On Monday last I drew to the attention of the minister a condition that exists in Saskatchewan in connection with the exemption law of that province. The minister answered me at that time that he was not aware that any representations had been made to the government. After recess the minister was kind enough to refer to a telegram, I believe, sent by the chairman of the board. I did not happen to be in my seat at the time.

Mr. RHODES: Sent by the commissioner.

Mr. VALLANCE:

In view of fact that Saskatchewan is only province which provides for exemptions from seizure under chattel mortgage and in view of fact that conditions of loan require additional security on chattels, believe board will require legislation in your province which will make security taken on chattels in province of equal value to similar security taken in other provinces.

That suggests to me that the other eight provinces have no such exemption legislation. Saskatchewan did have an exemption law unless legislation passed recently cancelled it. The very fact that we have an exemption law indicates that the farmers in that province probably were in greater need of financial assistance than those in any other province. In spite of what the hon. member for North Huron has said about the western provinces I still claim that we in the west, through no fault of our own, find ourselves in a more difficult position than farmers in the eastern provinces. If this Canadian Farm Loan Act is to be operative in Saskatchewan only on condition that the exemption law now in existence be done away with this act will be of very little advantage to the farmers there. All loans that have been advanced up to the present to farmers in Saskatchewan have been advanced with these exemptions in existence.

What are the exemptions? I put them on record in Hansard last Monday; they are:

Four oxen, horses, or mules, or any four of them, six cows, six sheep, four pigs and fifty domestic fowls besides the other animals kept for food purposes, together with food for such animals for the period from November 1, to April 31, or such portions of the months which follow the date of seizure.

Now I am in hearty accord with the act and the spirit of the act and what it proposes to do, but if as a preliminary to its becoming operative in Saskatchewan we are to be compelled to forego that right we had under the exemption law, to me it seems too great a price. The migration of farmers from the drought areas to the northern part of the province was possible only because they had these exemptions. If they had not had them you would have had, not hundreds but tens of thousands of destitute farmers in Saskatchewan alone. So I am apprehensive about what the final result will be if we should be faced with climatic conditions in the next few years similar to those we have had for the past five or six. So I urge the minister that the exemption laws be left in effect; loans have been advanced by private companies with these exemption laws in existence, and if private capital is willing to invest in farm mortgages notwithstanding the exemption law, surely the Dominion of Canada can do the same. I think section 9 deals with this whole matter. It reads:

> In the event of legislation being passed by the legislature of any province operating under this act after loans have been made available in that province which, in the opinion of the board, would prejudicially affect the security of existing or future loans, the board, by notice to be published in the Canada Gazette, may cease to make further loans in that province.

It would seem that this farm loan board is going to be clothed with authority to sit in judgment on the legislatures of the provinces, and if legislation passed by a province does not meet with the approval of the farm loan board that board will have the right to cease lending money in that province. That power to supersede the legislature is too great to give to any board. I urge that before this bill is passed the minister give consideration to those provinces that have exemption laws.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend cited section 9 of the act. We are only inserting that in the present amendment for the purpose of renumbering. That section was in the old act, and has been there since 1927. It has no reference to the point my hon. friend has just made. But I am advised by the solicitor of the farm loan board that these exemptions from chattel mortgages have been peculiar to the province of Saskatchewan, that they have not obtained in any other province, and that the list of exemptions in Saskatchewan was very widely enlarged during the session of 1934. The object that the commissioner of the farm loan board had in mind in bringing the matter to the attention of the government of Saskatchewan was not to prejudice the farmers of that province.

Mr. VALANCE: I am not suggesting that.

[Mr. Vallance.]

Mr. RHODES: The object was to assist the farmer by making available to him additional security which, as my hon. friend and the committee will realize, only has application to second mortgages. Otherwise there would have been no necessity for dealing with the question of chattels at all because under part I of the act we deal only with first mortgages covering real estate and buildings. The solicitor further advises me that the amendment which has been passed by the Saskatchewan legislature only has reference to mortgages made to the Canadian farm loan board, and that the law with respect to those exemptions remains as it was with respect to other mortgagors.

Mr. VALLANCE: That is what I object to.

Mr. RHODES: So my hon. friend will realize that it has a limited application. My hon. friend says he objects. He will appreciate, of course, that in that case the question is one wholly for the legislature of Saskatchewan, because in the natural course I would asume that the commissioner would make his recommendations only with respect to loans which might be made by the farm loan board.

Mr. DONNELLY: I have been very much interested in this act because I know the condition of the farmers of western Canada and I realize that they need money at a lower rate of interest. I am in sympathy with the act providing money is loaned out fairly freely to western Canadians. For years in western Canada we thought we could pay interest rates of eight per cent, nine per cent, ten per cent and even twelve per cent, but in recent years we have found that absolutely impossible. Our land mortgages in western Canada draw interest at eight per cent and nine per cent. Our interest to the bank as a rule has been about eight per cent. Our interest to machine companies, lumber companies and other firms has been as high as ten per cent and twelve per cent, and we realize that under present conditions it is absolutely impossible to pay such interest rates. By loaning money on farm mortgages to western Canadians at rates low enough, whether four per cent, four and a half per cent or even five per cent, it will be something for the other companies to shoot at, and we will be able to get the other companies to come down to a reasonable rate of interest, which will reduce the farmers' overhead.

It is my contention, Mr. Chairman, that to-day the farmers of western Canada are worse off than any other farmers in the country. More than that I claim that the farmers of Canada are worse off than any other farmers in the world. I do not care at what country you look; in no other community or country are the farmers as badly off as the farmers of Canada. I ask any member of this house to tell me in what country the farmers are as hard up as they are in this country, or in what country they are getting lower prices for their goods than the farmers receive in Canada. Look at the country to our south and see what they are getting for their products. We hear a great deal about the United States farmer; in the west we hear a great deal about the terrible condition of agriculture in the United States. Let me show some of the prices those farmers are receiving as compared with the prices received by Canadian farmers. Perhaps then hon. gentlemen will realize that if the United States farmers are hard up our farmers must be much worse off. I have before me quotations from the Winnipeg Free Press, indicating the prices paid in Canada, and quotations from the Chicago Tribune showing prices paid in the United States. We have heard a great deal about hogs; last year we were told that the price in this country was so much higher than it was in the United States. What about the price now? We find Canadian farmers receiving $7.75 a hundred for bacon hogs, as of February 26, while in Chicago for the same hogs they were receiving $11.20 to $11.45.

Mr. SHAVER: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. DONNELLY: Just a moment; just sit down until I am through. Possess your soul in patience for a moment. That sum of $11.20 also includes the processing tax of $2.25 per hundred while to the price of $7.75 in Canada there should be added $1 per hog if it is a select bacon hog. That must be taken into consideration, but that is all. I can say also that the United States hog is not to be compared with the Canadian hog. It is not a bacon hog; it is a lard hog, produced for the fat. It is like our heavy hog, not like our Yorkshire hog at all. When we make a comparison of these hogs we should take into consideration only our fat hog, rather than the bacon hog. Then we come to cattle, and what do we find? Cattle up to 1,050 pounds actually sold in Winnipeg for $6.50 per hundred, whereas across the line cattle up to 1,500 pounds were selling for $13 to $13.75. For good cattle from 700 pounds to 1,000 pounds they were receiving $11 to $13.60 while we were receiving $5.25. The fact of the matter is that to-day farmers in the west are paying the duty and shipping cattle across to Chicago. In Winnipeg lambs sold for $6, while in Chicago lambs sold for $8 to $8.75. Butter sold in Winnipeg for 24 cents; in Chicago it sold for 31¼ cents. Eggs sold for 21 cents in Canada and for 23.75 cents in Chicago. Let me give the figures with regard to grains:

	Winnipeg	Minneapolis
Wheat, May.. .. .	.83½	1.04
Oats..	.40⅝	.51⅛
Rye..	.54	.64
Barley..	.49¾	.70⅛
Flax..	1.45⅝	1.83½

These figures give some idea of the prices we obtain for our products, but on the other hand what about the cost of production? Last year I was at a meeting just near the United States line when there was some discussion in regard to the cost of production. I referred to the fact that a man could cross the line and buy a pair of overalls for 80 cents that he would have to pay $1.75 for in Canada. Someone said that was not so. A man sitting in the audience got up and showed me a pair of overalls for which he had paid 80 cents, and said, "Now bring on your $1.75 overalls." We compared them and ours were not as good as theirs. Work shirts sell on the other side for $1 to $1.25; in Canada the same shirts sell for $2.25 and $2.50. I do not need to compare the prices of gasoline. On the Canadian side it costs three and four cents a gallon more than it costs in the United States, and the same is true with regard to harness. So far as implements are concerned, on the average they cost 25 per cent more on the Canadian side than on the American side. So our western farmers are at a great disadvantage as compared with the United States farmers. What about the other farmers? What about the farmers in Australia? The farmers in Australia are in a far better position than we are because of their inflated currency. Even with our wheat held up ten cents or eleven cents above the market price the Australians are to-day getting as much as we are. Yet they have no peg in their wheat prices; they are letting the price of their wheat go where it will, but on account of inflated currency they are getting as much as we are. They are also receiving extra dividends on their butter, their mutton, their wool and everything they grow on the farm. Those are the countries with which we have to compete—the Argentine and Australia. The farmers in the Argentine are in the same position. They are receiving more than we are for their produce, because of their small freight haul due to being close to the seashore and also because of their inflated currency. I know of no country in the world where the farmer is in such a bad condition, unless it be India. Unless some relief is given to the western farmers the same will be said of western Canada as was said of India, namely, "Unless something is done for the Indian farmer we will have one vast rural slum." That will be true of western Canada unless something is done for our farmers.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): You are not helping it with that kind of stuff.

Mr. MULLINS: I have been sitting here for some days listening attentively for some constructive suggestion from the opposite side of the house and I have not yet heard it. I have heard nothing but criticism. There are hon. members sitting on the other side of the house who want to scuttle the ship so as to drown the captain of this party. I have waited patiently for something constructive. I have listened to the hon. member for Macleod talk about a nineteen cent cow; I heard the hon. member for Sherbrooke talk about five cattle for four dollars. I heard an hon. member making the statement that Canada is in the worst position of any country in the world. He does not know what he is talking about. All I ask is that he go where I have just come from; let him travel through Kansas. I have just come from Kansas and Colorado and I saw them gathering tumble weed, a weed which is gathered on the prairies for feed to save their live stock. They are in a far worse condition than we are.

An hon. MEMBER: We are doing that out west.

Mr. MULLINS: They are in a far worse condition than we are in the northern part of the province of Manitoba. As I stand in my place I can see a gentleman in the gallery who is a real farmer, not one of your class farmers.

Mr. DONNELLY: Just a cattle buyer, like the hon. member.

Mr. MULLINS: He is not one of those cowless, sowless, chickenless farmers. No, he is not a farmer who has exploited the top six inches of the soil. I can see from my place in this house a farmer who sold his crop last year for $72,000. Why does he not say something about that. Why do we not have a little cheer added to the discussion, and not continually damn the country I have lived in longer than a good many of those third-rate professional men. I am not going to sit here any longer and listen to them.

Then the hon. member for Macleod made a statement about the old canning cow. Why did he not tell us that cattle sold yesterday in Toronto for seven cents a pound? Why did he not tell that hogs have gone up to eight and a half cents a pound? Why did he not tell that and spread a little cheer? How much money do hon. members expect the Minister of Finance will loan to the farmers when they are doing their cause so much harm? Hon. members opposite are not putting this matter in the proper light. Spread a little sunshine, and do not talk all the time about these extreme cases. Let us talk about other things. Yesterday in Toronto three loads of cattle sold at six and a half cents a pound, and others sold at seven cents a pound. But hon. members opposite seem to prefer to talk about an old canner cow. Why, in the old days after the old canner cow had served her purpose on the range we turned her loose and pensioned her. We did not try to get nineteen cents for her; we were not so small as that.

I want to say that in the constituency of Marquette we are not in the condition hon. members opposite are trying to make out. True, we have suffered through low prices, but our trouble is that we cannot get our products to the market. I have not yet heard one hon. member opposite make the logical statement that what we want in western Canada is lower rates of interest. The Minister of Finance is now offering us that lower rate of interest. That is all we are asking for. We do not want to continue to be exploited by interest rates of eight per cent or nine percent, but we would be content with interest near five per cent.

Then, further, we are asking for lower freight rates. We want to get to the markets of the world. I have lived in the west a long time, and I defy any person to carry on farming in western Canada and pay the present freight rates to get to the markets of the world. It is not possible; it cannot be done. I would like to see lower freight rates; I would like to see our farmers placed in a position where they may make homes instead of boarding houses. A good many of our farmers have become discouraged. Why? A lot of travelling salesmen came along and took their money by inducing them to invest in watered stock. They were sold the inflated stocks of various corporations. I believe I see in this chamber a few men who have suffered from watered stock. That is one of our difficulties in the west. We have had to face watered stocks, gambling and wheat speculation. We have come to the conclusion that there is only one panacea, namely, to go back to work and do our farming the way the Almighty intended us to do it. We have to do away with the one-crop rotation and make homes of our farms. We must not drive our young men away to the cities.

These new political parties come along with new panaceas, and make the statement from public platforms that the Canadian government could not take a bromo seltzer without referring to London. That statement was made by the member for Southeast Grey.

Miss MACPHAIL: I never mentioned bromo seltzer.

Mr. MULLINS: That Canada cannot take a bromo seltzer without referring to London.

Miss MACPHAIL: No.

Mr. MULLINS: She referred to London.

Miss MACPHAIL: I am very sorry; I would like to claim it, but it is not mine.

Mr. COTNAM: It would be good for a morning headache.

Miss MACPHAIL: I never referred to a bromo seltzer.

Mr. MULLINS: She is quoted as stating that Canada could not take a bromo seltzer without referring it to London.

Miss MACPHAIL: Probably crazy water crystals.

Mr. MULLINS: Also in Saskatchewan the hon. member referred to a Bennett stomach. She said a child was X-rayed and it turned out that he had a Bennett stomach.

Mr. COOTE: Nothing in it.

Mr. MULLINS: Under matured, I think she said.

Miss MACPHAIL: I was quoting a medical authority.

Mr. MULLINS: You made the statement from the platform. You cannot deny it.

Miss MACPHAIL: I don't deny it.

Mr. MULLINS: Then the hon. member for Battle River talks about perishing Dick. Think of any such statement as that!

Mr. SPENCER: May I ask the hon. member if he is referring to me? Because if he is he is misquoting me.

Mr. MULLINS: I had not intended to speak this afternoon and have not the clipping with me. But fortunately I have here for the benefit of the hon. member for Southeast Grey a quotation from the Star which is her favourite paper. In its issue of June 5 the Star says:

> Hamilton, June 5.—"We cannot take a bromo-seltzer for the headache from which we are suffering until it is decided at an economic conference that it is the thing to do." Miss Agnes Macphail, M.P. for Southeast Grey, charged at a public meeting under C.C.F. auspices here Saturday night.

So I did not misquote you.

Mr. DONNELLY: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is not addressing the chair.

Miss MACPHAIL: I regret it was not I. I do not remember saying anything so clever.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Morand): Will the hon. member please address the chair?

Mr. MULLINS: Yes, I intend to do that, Mr. Chairman, but the hon. member interrupted me and I had to answer her.

Mr. COTNAM: You cannot get the last word with her.

Mr. MULLINS: I would like to see a little cheer spread in here. I do not want the Minister of Finance to be discouraged by all this calamity howling from the other side of the house, making extreme statements about conditions in western Canada. I will venture to say that nearly every municipality in my constituency has a credit balance.

Mr. SPOTTON: Hear, hear.

Mr. MULLINS: I am not going to have the statement made that the municipalities are all bankrupt. The municipalities north of the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway are not in that position. I say that the little towns in my constituency are most of them in a very good financial position, and I am proud that my constituency is purely agricultural. I cannot sit silent in my seat any longer when I hear these extreme statements made about western Canada. I must take issue with them. Let me tell you that eighty-five per cent of the prairie farmers own their farms, and only forty-five per cent of them are mortgaged.

Mr. VALLANCE: What is the hon. member reading from? What is his authority for that statement?

Mr. MULLINS: I fortunately have that clipping with me. I am reading from the Country Guide. Does the hon. member take it?

Mr. VALLANCE: No.

Mr. MULLINS: The Country Guide should be good enough authority for the statement I am making, and it says that 85 per cent of the prairie farmers own their farms and only 45 per cent are mortgaged. If I were the Minister of Finance I would not make a loan at all to some of these people in the 45 per cent class. No doubt they are some of those that my hon. friend was referring to who want a loan all the time. You cannot satisfy them with loans, Mr. Chairman. I had only one mortgage left, Mr. Chairman; I had cleaned up all the rest, and I went to the last man who owed me $3,200, the balance on a farm, and I said to him, "I want you to pay me. You have owed me this money for seven years. What are you going to do about it?" "Well," he said, "I can't pay." I said, "I think you can. I hear you made good profits last year, that you had a pretty good crop on this farm. Now I think you had better pay." "Well," he said, "take $1,000 and I will pay it." Now if the Minister of Finance is going to make loans to that type of man that only wants to settle with you for so much, then God help the people who are standing behind this country and buying its securities for their old age. I would be most particular in making a loan to farmers. First I would want to know the man. He would be 50 per cent to start with. I would look him over, and his ability to farm. Then I would want to look at the farm. You may have good fertile land, but if you have a shiftless, useless individual on that land, your loan is no good.

I have said that 85 per cent of the prairie farmers own their farms. In Ontario 88 per cent of the farmers own their farms, and only 42 per cent of them are mortgaged. So we out west are in just about as good a position as the farmers in the county of my hon. friend from North Huron (Mr. Spotton). I just wanted to make that reference to show that the Ontario farmer is not in a very much better position than we are in western Canada.

The government is paying thousands of dollars to keep up unemployment camps. There is a camp in my constituency with from 1,200 to 1,500 men in it, and they are having the best time of their lives. They have their hockey matches and their boxing bouts and concerts two or three days a week, and the menu card is as good as you could get at the Chateau Laurier cafeteria. Why keep these young men there? In the pioneer days—yes, in my day—we got no such pap handed out to us. We went out to fight the battles on the open prairie, and I am glad of the experiences I went through as a pioneer.

This is not my last contribution on the floor of this house; I am going to notify the house of that now. I have heard members around me stating that this is their last contribution in this house, and others expect it to be theirs. Well, this is not my last. Marquette tells me that I have a mission in this house, and that I have got to serve them. I have had letters sent to me and they have encouraged me greatly. There is a new era coming for we have a government that is doing something. For goodness sake, gentlemen opposite, wake up and help solve this country's problems to bring Canada back on its feet. Stop your calamity howling over there, and spread a little sunshine. I look into the faces of hon. gentlemen opposite who are members of the United Farmers. I am a member of the United Farmers of Manitoba, and just as good a one as any that sits on the other side of the house. I have financed and helped them all down through. I believe in them and stand back of them to-day. They have sent a resolution here asking for the abolition of these unemployment camps. They are going back to horses; they are going to farm as the Almighty intended them to farm, but the difficulty is that they cannot hire the labour. The labour is not available. The men are all in the camps enjoying themselves. Let us get back to the right conditions. We have a country that is the best in the world, and I defy anyone, and this includes my hon. friend from Willow Bunch, to challenge that statement. I know the district he comes from; I was in it in the early days. I have a great many friends in Willow Bunch. I have travelled all over the United States and have seen the conditions there. I know the conditions under which the farmers borrow from the government of the United States under their Fraser-Lemcke act. I have seen the actual conditions of the farmers themselves, and I make this statement, Mr. Chairman, that there is no country in the world that offers the same inducements as Canada to the young man who wants to go out and work. So I say to you young professional men who are struggling for an existence in some country town: Go and get one of those western farms; this is the best time you ever had to buy one of them; take off your coat and go to work and farm it the way the Almighty intended you to farm it.

Mr. PORTEOUS: There has been a good deal of criticism, both in this house and outside, and there have been many rash and untrue reports not only from private citizens but from the Premier of Ontario with respect to the Ontario development board. The statement which has been reported that 11,000 applications which were made to the Ontario development board prior to the last provincial election were political applications is entirely untrue. As a matter of fact I had a good deal to do with the Ontario development board in my district, and I never knew who the inspector in that district was until he was fired by the Hepburn administration.

An hon. MEMBER: Never mind about that.

Mr. BRADETTE: Leave Ontario alone for a while; are you a provincial or a federal member.

Mr. PORTEOUS: My experience is that more loans have been made in Ontario to Liberal farmers than to Conservatives. And I make that statement—

Mr. BRADETTE: Without knowing anything about it.

Mr. PORTEOUS: —after having made a survey in my district in connection with the board. The Ontario development board was started under the Drury regime, and it was started because it had been found to be necessary to have long term, low interest loans to farmers; and that principle has been carried out all through. The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard has said that it is not necessary to go into the loaning business, that it should be left with private interests. I want to take issue with that statement. It is necessary. Until the Ontario development board started we never had in Ontario sufficient long term, low interest credit to farmers, and that is why they entered the field. That is why this bill has been introduced. It has been introduced to supply that need, and I congratulate the Minister of Finance on its introduction. Perhaps, as the hon. member for West Middlesex has said, a few applications have been granted under the Ontario development board in the last few months. But no applications would have been granted under the Ontario development board had it not been for the action of the Minister of Finance in introducing this bill. The Ontario development board has been negligent in that it has not supplied the need of credit, and it has been negligent also in its failure to send a representative to meet the creditors, under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, so that an adjustment could be made. I find that in no instance have any official receivers under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act had representations from the Ontario development board. We have heard hon. members get up and claim that mortgages should be reduced, that there should be a debt reduction, that doctors and lawyers should reduce their fees and storekeepers and mortgage companies should reduce their accounts; yet they are supporting a government that does not recognize the necessity of sending a representative under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act to make a suitable adjustment so that the farmers may be able to pay their debts. In my opinion this act should be worked in conjunction with the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, because I believe that is necessary. I believe there are many private persons who have mortgages on farms and are in need of money, and who would make a settlement of sixty or seventy per cent of their claim if they could get the money, because they are in need of funds at the present time, and this act could be worked in conjunction with that legislation. No loans had been made by the Ontario development board until after the meeting which was referred to by the hon. member for North Huron, the meeting of the United Farmers in convention in Toronto, when they criticized the action of the Ontario government and the fact that they were not making any more loans. And I say that they would not have made any loans had it not been for the fact that they knew that the Minister of Finance was about to introduce legislation to cover the field, and by reason also of the criticism which was directed at them by the farmers in convention at that time.

Mr. SPENCER: With regard to the remarks made by the hon. member for Marquette, may I say that he has possibly the most lively imagination of any member, old or young, in this house. I agree that it is a mistake to point out the most pessimistic side of the struggle which we are going through, but it is probably more wrong to be unnecessarily optimistic. In statements that have been made with regard to western Canada in particular, we may have heard some pessimistic things; but I have not heard a single instance cited in this house which has not been true. Some extreme cases may have been mentioned, but I have not known of a single set of figures quoted that have not been accurate. As regards the statement of the hon. member for Marquette, all I have to say is that if the picture he has drawn this afternoon is true, then in honesty he ought to oppose both the bill which is before us at the present time and the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, because there is no need for such legislation so far as Manitoba is concerned.

I was interested in his statement about someone in the house who had taken off a crop worth $72,000. As one interested in agriculture, I might say to the committee that the largest crop I ever took off in western Canada brought me my greatest loss. The hon. member did not give the other side of the picture: he did not say what it cost to take off that $72,000 crop.

Mr. MULLINS: May I be permitted to explain? The hon. gentleman I was referring to sold 100,000 bushels of wheat at 72 cents and two cars of barley at 92 cents, and that gentleman was sitting in the gallery a minute ago. He cleared up all his debts.

Mr. SPENCER: If that is so, and if that condition is general throughout Manitoba, I am glad to hear it; but I am rather of the opinion that Manitoba is not in a much better position than any of the three prairie provinces, or even British Columbia. The figure given by the hon. member showing that eighty-five per cent of the farmers owned their farms is entirely fallacious; and the figure showing that only forty-two per cent of the farms have mortgages is, I claim, also wrong. We were told by the Prime Minister in his radio addresses—and surely he was pretty careful about what he told the public over the radio—that the farm debt of this country was no less than $1,000,000,000. If the farm debt is as large as that, surely Manitoba has not been the one province that is exempt.

May I for a moment refer to a statement made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard who said that the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act was against the best interests of 90 per cent of the farmers of this country. As one who comes from the prairie provinces I have to take exception to that statement. I believe the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act is a very good piece of legislation and one very badly needed in Canada. From recent information I understand that not only is it being used to a considerable extent in the prairie provinces, but in the old province of Quebec it is probably being used more than in any other and I am quite sure it will be used in Manitoba. I also take exception to the statement made by the hon. member that this is class legislation that we have before us. In my opinion the legislation was put forward entirely as a matter of self preservation on the part of the dominion. The farmers who represent the greatest calling in this country are a certain asset that we cannot afford to let go into bankruptcy wholesale and we cannot have them leave their farms. It is because of that situation and the fear that that might take place, such legislation as this has been proposed by the government, namely the extension of the farm loan act and the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act.

The hon. member said also that this financing is being carried out to encourage the farmers in greater production. I do not believe that. I think the Minister of Finance told the house only the other day that this was being done to help out the debt situation throughout the dominion and I believe that statement is correct. We have to-day, as some hon. members have pointed out, an extremely serious debt situation in Canada, particularly with regard to agriculture and it is to help to reduce the terrible debt that the farmers are trying to carry that this act is being passed, so that they may be able to refund their debts through the application of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act and the use of the Canadian Farm Loan Act, thus not only bringing about a smaller liability but having it carried at a much lower rate of interest.

We must remember that during war time the farmers were encouraged to increase their holdings tremendously in support of the interests of Canada as a whole. After the war when we had a seven months' winter so far as the west was concerned, we had a famine in feed which caused enormous debts to be developed amongst the farm communities. We found the price of cattle dropping so rapidly the following year that huge debts were incurred wherever cattle were being carried. The farmers have never got over those times and the legislation before us to-day would help them considerably toward at least seeing daylight.

So far as agriculture is concerned the problem in Canada both east and west is on the one hand one of prices which have been extremely low, and the fact that agriculture has not been in a position to regulate in any way its prices as has been done with regard to prices for the products of industry. Second, the problem before Canada east and west is one of debt.

Before I sit down may I refer to a statement made by the hon. member for North Huron whose words I think I caught correctly. He used these words, that when western members spoke about western Canada they slandered and libelled their own province in referring to the debts of their municipalities and provinces. I think this statement was entirely uncalled for. I am in pretty steady attendance in this house and so far I have not heard a statement with regard to the debts of western Canada made by any western member on either side that was not correct. I think it ill becomes the hon. member to make such a charge. He went on to say that he was glad that by this legislation there was going to be $90,000,000 put at the service of the farm loan board and he intimated that this was for Ontario. Even if only part of it was for Ontario, it appears that conditions in that province are not so rosy after all if the farmers there require the assistance that is being proposed by this legislation. The situation in Ontario is the same as it is in western Canada so far as agriculture is concerned; it is one of low prices over which the farmer has no control and this has brought about the huge amount of debt that agriculture is carrying.

Mr. REID: I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance and I think this is an appropriate time to ask it. But before asking it, might I point out that while many complaints have been made regarding loans, I think the complaint generally at least in the lower Fraser valley has been that not enough loans have been made in my province. I am not, however, going into that matter at the present time nor into the other matter that the men themselves will be bankrupt before loans are made. I think the minister said that the integrity and ability of the man would carry more weight than would the property itself. I have in mind the government increasing the loan to $90,000,000 and I understand they intend to loan more money so as to enable the farmer to get out from under or lighten his existing load. I am pleading now on behalf of a class of farmer out there who is carrying quite a load, who is just as desirous of getting out from under as the farmer who owns his farm and who should receive consideration. Will those who are on five acre farms, shall I say, with an investment of perhaps of $40,000 or $50,000 and who are struggling along at the present time with low prices, come under the regulations to be based on the amendments which are going through the committee? Regulations, although they were not in the act, were made by the board debarring these men and they were told in most instances: The board has made a ruling that the class to which you belong will not be taken in under the former farm loan act.

Mr. RHODES: The best answer I could give to my hon. friend is to say that this is a farm loan act. We define "farmer" in the act and when we come to the appropriate clause, I purpose moving an amendment placing on the word "farmer" the same interpretation as is used in the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. The regulations to which he referred, passed by the farm loan board—and now I am dealing with the old board if I may so term it—were not restricted in any sense; they were if anything rather widening the interpretation of the word "farmer" as defined in the original act. It may be that the regulations, or even the definition itself, were not sufficiently wide to include certain classes of people engaged in farming. But the size of the farm is not an issue, as I understand it. It is purely a question of whether or not a man is a farmer within the meaning of the act. I hope when I move the amendment my hon. friend will appreciate that, while we are confining these loans to farmers, the interpretation of farmer is as broad as it can reasonably be made.

Mr. REID: As far as British Columbia is concerned the board in making these regulations did not take in poultrymen or small ranchers. Although it was not specifically provided in the act that they did not come under it, the board itself defined a farmer as excluding that class. That is why I asked whether the regulations would be changed.

Mr. RHODES: I cannot say offhand whether the regulations will be changed, but I do not believe we can widen our definition of farmer beyond that used in the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act.

Mr. SHAVER: It was reported in the public press on Tuesday that the Minister of Agriculture of Ontario issued a statement on Monday to the effect that the agricultural development board of Ontario will still make loans to farmers, and no legislation will be passed by the Ontario government to enable the Canadian farm loan board to come into operation there. Will that prevent the Canadian Farm Loan Act from coming into operation in Ontario, or if it does come into operation will it be in competition with the Ontario agricultural development board? Will they both be in operation in Ontario at the same time?

Mr. RHODES: When this bill is passed it becomes operative in all the provinces. Whether it comes in competition with the Ontario board in making loans would be a question of fact; it may or it may not in an individual case. If their agricultural development board continues making loans it follows that both the dominion and the province will be making loans in Ontario.

Mr. ILSLEY: In Nova Scotia there is an impression that it is impossible to get a loan of more than a certain amount. I was under that impression myself. I have not been able to attend the discussions here, and perhaps that point has been dealt with. I thought the minister said a moment ago in answer to the hon. member for New Westminster that there was no limit as to the size of the farm, or that the amount of the loan did not come into question. Is that correct?

Mr. RHODES: No. We have yet not had a chance to come to the individual sections of the bill, but I have no objection to dealing with the question now. What I had reference to was that the acreage of the farm had no bearing on the point, but there is a limit beyond which they may not go in making an individual loan, namely, $7,500. I have an amendment—I mentioned it the other day—which will increase the percentage on valuation that can be loaned.

Mr. ILSLEY: I am of course interested in conditions in the Annapolis valley in Nova Scotia, where values perhaps are large compared with farms in some sections of Canada. Unfortunately there is a large amount of mortgage indebtedness in the Annapolis valley. On the other hand there are not many foreclosures, and conditions in many respects might be worse. For instance in the county in which I live no dominion or provincial relief money has been expended. The people are self-reliant and want to pay their debts and discharge their mortgages. I suggest as a matter of policy that the government should decide whether they have faith in the future of the apple growing industry in Nova Scotia. I suggest that they decide that they have faith in the future of that industry. If they do, they will take over a number of the present mortgages in the Annapolis valley and be prepared to lend money on apple orchards. Loans have been made there, but I think from the minister's knowledge of conditions in Nova Scotia he will agree that comparatively speaking not very much has been lent there. It may be due to the policy of the provincial board. I know the chairman of the board, Mr. Paterson, very well, and I have no particular criticism to make of his policy except that it is characterized by great caution; he does not intend to take any chance of losing a dollar of the government's money. While that is good for the government it is pretty hard on these orchard owners who have run into bad times and are unable in most instances to get money from the Canadian farm loan board when they apply for it. I think there should be a more liberal policy of lending on apple orchards. It depends on whether those in charge of the fund are going to take some chance on apple growing coming back to the position it was in a few years ago. I think in times like this the government had better decide to have some faith in the future of that industry.

Mr. RHODES: As my hon. friend knows, I have intimate knowledge of local conditions in the area to which he refers. I know personally hundreds of farmers in the constituency of my hon. friend. I do not believe any finer moral risks could be found in any part of the dominion. Loans have been made there. If he looks up the records I think he will find that while there is no doubt that Mr. Paterson is very cautious—possibly errs on the side of being too cautious—nevertheless the proportion of farm loans made in Nova Scotia bears a fair relation to the total amount of applications and loans in other provinces. There is a possibility that there has been a restriction on loans there due to the fact that hitherto not more than fifty per cent of the value of the land could be loaned, but under amendments which I propose to move that percentage will be increased so that in the case of second mortgages we shall be able to lend up to 66⅔ per cent.

Mr. REID: In all provinces?

Mr. RHODES: Yes, and after this amendment, where hitherto on first mortgage, they have been limited to fifty per cent on the land and twenty per cent on buildings, they will be able to lend up to fifty per cent of value of land and buildings.

Mr. ILSLEY: Does the minister propose to enlarge the amount that may be lent on an individual farm, or is the $7,500 limit to be adhered to?

Mr. RHODES: It is intended to adhere to the limit of $7,500.

Mr. ILSLEY: Enlarging the limit would perhaps help my constituents more than some other things. It is not unusual to have farms worth quite a lot of money, $20,000 or $30,000, and some are heavily indebted. There are instances where that limit stops them from going to the government.

Mr. COTNAM: The Ontario development board has lent over $50,000,000 to farmers in Ontario. Applications are being made under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act for readjustment of these loans. I should like to know if the official receiver in a community has authority under the act to recommend an adjustment of those loans or that they should be written down, where they have been made by the province.

Mr. RHODES: Of course, Mr. Chairman, we will have this discussion all over again when we come to the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, but we have covered quite a wide field so I have no objection to answering the question of my hon. friend. The official receiver has no authority to do anything except to attempt to bring the parties together in a mutual arrangement. But the board of review, the case having been referred to it, has authority to order a compromise which would involve a reduction in the amount of the mortgage held by the provincial board.

Mr. MacLEAN: This act has just been introduced in the province of Prince Edward Island, and naturally we are receiving many questions and a great deal of correspondence in regard to it. The difficulty seems to be that the man who needs assistance most will not be able to get it under this act. I refer to the man who is mortgaged pretty heavily, perhaps beyond the point at which the farm loan board would give him assistance if they adhere to the limit of sixty-six per cent of the value of the property. The man who has a gilt edged risk does not have so much difficulty in obtaining a loan as the man who is loaded up a little beyond that point, but the second man is the one who needs assistance at the present time. We are led to understand, by the minister's statement, that the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act and this act are distinctly separate, and that they cannot be termed even companionable acts.

Mr. RHODES: No.

Mr. MacLEAN: Then perhaps they may be termed companionable acts, but even if a man has an arrangement made under the other act so far as I can see there is no way by which he can get new money under this act with which to carry on. On previous occasions the minister has explained that it is not wise to put in the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act any provision which would compel the farm loan board to lend money to anyone who might be suggested or recommended under the other measure. I quite agree that there is room for argument there, but still there is a great difficulty. If a man makes an arrangement with his creditors under the other act he is unable to get any new money from the man who holds the mortgage, or from any other man or from any lawyer who has money to loan, and in Prince Edward Island we do not have loan companies. So it is impossible for a farmer to get a loan under any condition. That is the difficulty; even if the farmer makes an arrangement with his creditors he cannot get money with which to carry on. If something could be worked out under which the man who is hard up and cannot meet his interest or principal payments could be tided over and given a new start it would be a good thing, and, I think, in keeping with the intention of these two pieces of legislation.

I am glad the minister gave us the explanation he did give this afternoon; we will be able to send copies of Hansard to those who are interested. I do hope that in handling these loans through the representatives in the different provinces the government will be as lenient as possible. Do I understand from the minister that this sixty-six per cent is on the real estate alone, or does it include movables and personal property?

Mr. RHODES: That is on the real estate, and that has reference to the first and second mortgage. But I pointed out to my hon. friend from Hants-Kings a few moments ago that whereas hitherto a first mortgage has been limited to fifty per cent of the value of the land and twenty per cent of the value of the buildings, under an amendment which I propose to move when I have an opportunity to do so that percentage will be increased enabling us to loan up to fifty per cent of the value of the land and buildings. So in that respect I may point out to my hon. friend, who may not have been here the other day, that we are going even further than they have gone in the United States, where at the moment they are confining themselves to our old limit of fifty per cent of the value of the land and twenty per cent of the value of the buildings.

Mr. DAVIES: There is one matter I should like to draw to the attention of the minister, arising out of the definition of the word "farmer." This afternoon the minister was kind enough to restate what he told the house on Monday, namely that it was his intention to bring in an amendment to the present definition of the word "farmer" which will provide that under the farm loan act the definition will be the same as under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. Members of the committee will, I think, recall that the object of having that definition standardized was that there are certain farmers who live in small towns or village, some of whom have retired, who still have to live on the earnings of their farms, and it seems that they were not in a position to obtain loans under the act. This morning I received a wire which I think will prove of interest to the minister, which reads as follows:

Board of review holds opinion that present definition of farmer would not cover case where party does not actually till the soil.

This is from Alberta. If it is so that the board of review in that province holds that the definition under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act requires that a man should actually till the soil, then that definition is not going to be very acceptable since it does not cover the cases which the committee intended should be covered when it was suggested that the definition should be changed. I quite recognize that it does not necessarily follow that the farm loan board in its operations will interpret the word "farmer" as it has been interpreted under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, but I think we should keep in mind that it is highly desirable that the definition should be interpreted in practically the same way. I can quite conceive that later on, if this definition is interpreted by the farm loan board as it has been by the board of review in Alberta, applicants who reside in a village and are not actually tilling the soil will not be eligible for loans under this act.

I commend to the minister's consideration this interpretation by the board of review of Alberta before he actually brings in his amendment with respect to the definition of the word "farmer" because I think it essential that this definition should be so couched as definitely to provide that a farmer, so long as he is a farmer, does not actually have to reside on the land proposed as security; nor should it be necessary for him personally to be tilling it.

Mr. RHODES: Of course the logical thing would be to discuss the definition of farmer when we come to that section, but as I say we have travelled so far afield over a number of days that we might as well keep at it until we have answered every possible query that may arise, so I do not take exception to my hon. friend having raised the point. The definition of "farmer" as given in the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act is I think as broad and comprehensive a definition as it would be possible to provide. I give that view to the committee in all humility and with due deference to hon. members learned in the law who have had a wider experience than I have had. My experience has been that the simpler a definition is made the more comprehensive it becomes, and that the more one attempts to include exceptional cases the more it is restricted. There will always be border-line cases. By using the definition of "farmer" as it appears in the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act there will be no restriction calling for actual occupation of the soil on the part of the individual, so long as he is a bona fide farmer. I believe the hon. member raised the question whether or not a person could be said to be tilling the soil. My answer would be that if he is not tilling the soil he is not a farmer. I would add however that in defining a term border-line cases will always be found, and I believe we will have to leave to the discretion of the farm loan board the matter of dealing with individual cases. They will have to decide, on the merits of each case, whether or not a man is a bona fide farmer and entitled to a loan on his farm.

Mr. DAVIES: What about the man who is a poultry farmer or a bee keeper? Certainly he would not be tilling the soil, but he is none the less a farmer engaged in a certain class of farming.

Mr. RHODES: May I answer the hon. member as I did another hon. member? I do not believe I am called upon to state whether or not a certain individual shall come within the definition of the word "farmer." Parliament will say what in its judgment is a farmer, and following that the board in its discretion must determine whether or not an individual case comes within the law as laid down by parliament. I believe upon reflection the hon. member will realize that the condition I have described must obtain. If I wanted to find the definition of the term "farmer" after parliament had expressed itself I would refer to the Department of Justice. I would most respectfully decline however to place myself in the position of interpreting the law applicable to individual cases.

Section 1 agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): Section 2.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, before coming to section 2 I should like to move an amendment which, in effect, would be a new section 2. However I do not believe we need concern ourselves about the renumbering of the sections at this time because as I understand it that will be done automatically at a later time by the law clerk. My amendment is:

That Bill No. 15 be amended by inserting the following section after section 1 thereof:

2. Section 2 of the Canadian Farm Loan Act, chapter 66 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, is amended by striking out paragraph (d) thereof and substituting therefor the following,—

(d) "Farmer" means a person whose principal occupation consists in farming or the tillage of the soil.

That simply means we are amending the interpretation act and changing the definition of the word "farmer" as it now appears in the act so that it will conform in exact verbiage with the definition of "farmer" in the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act.

Mr. BURY: May I call the minister's attention to the fact that the new definition he proposes to insert should end with the words "consists in farming." If he leaves it in its present form it will clash with the definition of "farming" appearing in the same section of the act, because the definition of "farming" in section 2 (e) is:

"Farming" includes stock raising, dairying and the tillage of the soil.

Inasmuch as "farming" is already defined in section 2 (e) I suggest the new definition need go no further than this:

(d) "Farmer" means a person whose principal occupation consists in farming.

Mr. RHODES: I have no objection to allowing the amendment to stand to afford an opportunity for a further investigation. May I add however that it was prepared by the legal representatives of the farm loan board and was approved by the Department of Justice. However I am not questioning the contention of the hon. member; he may be quite right. I do not pretend to be able to give an offhand judgment as to whether or not an amendment ought to be changed.

Mr. BURY: Farming is already defined in section 2 (e) in the terms I have indicated. I would submit the addition of the term "or tillage of the soil" immediately after defining "farming" rather suggests a curtailment of the meaning of the term farming. Why not leave the definition of farming to be supplied by the act itself?

Mr. REID: Only a few moments ago the minister defined a farmer as one who tills the soil, because he stated to the committee that if a man was not tilling the soil he would not in his opinion be a farmer. The hon. member for East Edmonton has indicated that the word "farming" includes stock raising, dairying and the tillage of the soil. If that definition is followed, and if the matter is not considered carefully, it will mean that a man who is taking care of an orchard may find himself in difficulties. He would not be tilling the soil. A bee keeper is not tilling the soil; a poultryman is not tilling the soil, nor does he come under the definition of "farming." The amendment should be allowed to stand until the definition is clear, otherwise it would be impossible for a poultry farmer to obtain a loan. That is one of the reasons I asked the minister if the regulations would be changed, because if a proper definition is not given not one poultryman could obtain a loan. I ask that the section stand.

Mr. RHODES: I have already asked that it stand.

Section 2 agreed to.

On section 3—Capital stock.

Mr. RHODES: My amendment, Mr. Chairman, which I will ask the chairman to read, has a twofold purpose. Under the act as it exists an initial advance of $5,000,000 was made to the board by the government, upon which the board under the statute as it exists is obliged to pay interest to the government at the rate of five per cent. This amendment is designed to make it within the power of the governor in council to fix the rate of interest, the object being to reduce that rate of interest to the general level of the rate of interest which will be charged on all loans.

There is a further amendment by adding a subsection 4 to section 3, reading as follows:

The board may retire the outstanding capital stock subscribed by borrowers under the act, by crediting the amount of the par value of the stock subscribed by the borrower as a payment upon the borrower's indebtedness under his loan from the board, and when so credited, the borrower shall thereupon cease to be a stockholder of the board.

As I understand it, in layman's language that simply means this, that whereas hitherto the farmer who has received a loan from the board had to subscribe to the stock to the value of five per cent and had to pay interest upon that sum until such time as the mortgage was finally liquidated, this amendment will have the effect of immediately crediting that five per cent to his loan from the board and he will have the benefit of the interest on that between now and the time when the mortgage is finally paid.

Mr. REID: And his debt will be reduced accordingly?

The CHAIRMAN: Sir George Perley moves:

That Bill No. 15 be amended by striking out section three thereof and substituting the following:

3. Section five of the said act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

"5. The capital requirements of the board shall be provided as follows:

(1) The government of Canada may subscribe to an initial capital to an amount not exceeding five million dollars and may pay the amount of any such subscription at such times and in such amounts as in the judgment of the board are necessary for the purposes of the board; and the amounts provided from time to time under this subsection shall be free from interest charges for a period of three years, after which time interest shall be paid at such rate as the governor in council shall direct, repayment of the amounts so provided shall be made from time to time out of the earnings of the board: Provided that before any such proposed repayment is made, the reserve fund of the board provided for by section nine of this act, shall be at least equal to the total repayments, including the repayment then proposed to be made.

(2) In addition to the initial capital provided for in the next preceding subsection, the board shall issue capital stock in shares of one dollar each, which shares shall be subscribed for by the government of Canada from time to time as loans are made under this act to an amount equal to five per cent of the said loans, so that the total amount subscribed under this subsection shall equal at any time as nearly as may be, five per cent of the total amount of principal outstanding on loans theretofore made, the same to be called for by the board as required.

(3) The minister may purchase at a price not exceeding the par value thereof, the capital stock issued by the board to any province and for the purpose of such purchase, the minister may make the necessary expenditure out of any unappropriated moneys in the consolidated revenue fund.

(4) The board may retire the outstanding capital stock subscribed by borrowers under the act, by crediting the amount of the par value of the stock subscribed by the borrower as a payment upon the borrower's indebtedness under his loan from the board, and when so credited, the borrower shall thereupon cease to be a stockholder of the board."

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 4 agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: I have an amendment here, Mr. Chairman, that a new section be inserted after section 4. The motion reads as follows:

That Bill No. 15 be amended by inserting the following section after section four thereof:

5. Section seven of the said act is amended by striking out paragraph (a) thereof and substituting the following therefor:

"(a) Loans shall be made only on the security of first mortgages on farm lands up to fifty per cent of the board's appraised value of such lands and the buildings thereon: Provided that no one person and no two or more persons having joint or several ownership of the land to be mortgaged shall have by way of loan in the aggregate at any one time more than seven thousand five hundred dollars."

[The Chairman.]

(2) The said section seven is further amended by striking out paragraph (f) thereof and substituting the following therefor:

"(f) Every loan made under this section shall be repayable upon such terms and within such periods not in excess of twenty-five years as the board may prescribe: Provided, however, that all loans repayable over a period in excess of five years shall be repayable in equal annual or semi-annual instalments of principal and interest."

Mr. RHODES: The only change in section 5, paragraph (a) is to enlarge the valuation of a farm from the figure of fifty per cent of the land and twenty per cent of the buildings to fifty per cent of the land and buildings.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I move accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

Amendment agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): That will now be the new section 5.

Section 5 (new) agreed to.

On section 5 (as printed)—When loans available.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: Mr. Chairman, it is very difficult to tell just what section we are on. We have in heavy type the figures 3, 4, 6, 5, 8—

Mr. RHODES: As I understand it, we have just carried the new section 5.

The CHAIRMAN: That is correct.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I suggest that the chairman read the marginal note to the sections so that we can tell which section is before the committee. I wish to say a few words on section 5 as printed, with the marginal note "When loans available." I happen to live in a province where loans have not been available for the past seven or eight years, since the farm loan act came into operation. This section says:

Loans under the provisions of this act shall not be made in any province of Canada until notice of intention to commence the making of loans in that province has been given by the board in the Canada Gazette.

Are all the nine provinces now going to be on the same basis? That is, will the notice in the Gazette take in all nine provinces, and will lending operations be carried on in all nine provinces at the same time?

Mr. RHODES: Yes, it is the intention when this bill becomes law that it shall become operative as well in provinces where hitherto it has not been in operation, namely, Prince Edward Island, Ontario and Saskatchewan.

Section 5 agreed to.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): We are now considering section 6.

Mr. RHODES: I have an amendment to this section. The effect is that if there is a realization on the security held by the board and the title to the property, which is the subject of such security, is transferred to the board, then in that event the government's subscription of five per cent shall be cancelled and a contribution in that sum shall go to the reserve fund of the board. It is merely for the purpose of improving the security position of the board. The amendment reads:

That Bill No. 15 be amended by striking out section 6 thereof and substituting the following:

6. Section 9 of the said act, as amended by section 7 of chapter 46 of the statutes of 1934, is amended by striking out subsections 3, 4 and 5 thereof and by substituting the following as subsection 3:

"3. If, as a result of proceedings to realize upon any security held by the board, the title to the property which is the subject of such security is transferred to the board or if an amount insufficient to discharge the debt secured is realized, the stock in the board subscribed by the Dominion government in respect of such loan shall be cancelled and the amount paid thereon shall be transferred to reserve account."

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 7—Chief executive officer in provinces.

Mr. BARBER: It is provided that the officer shall, upon appointment, exercise all the powers and duties conferred upon him by the board. Does that mean that applications for loans shall go through this officer or direct to the board?

Mr. RHODES: In the ordinary course they would go direct to the officer, but I assume there would be nothing to preclude an application going direct to the board itself, though I have no doubt that in that event the board would refer it back to the chief executive officer of the province.

Section agreed to.

On section 8—Local loan advisory board.

Mr. BARBER: Would this board advise in regard to valuations?

Mr. RHODES: Yes, or contribute any other local knowledge which the chief executive officer might feel like consulting them about. It is an advisory body purely and may or may not be called into consultation by the chief executive officer. It would depend upon the circumstances.

Section agreed to.

On section 9—Legislation prejudicially affecting security.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That will not affect provinces in which there is a moratorium law?

Mr. RHODES: This is the old clause; it is a renumbering. It was designed in the first instance to guard the board against any laws which might be passed by any province prejudicial to the operation of the act, but there is no change in the provisions.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What does the minister mean when he says "prejudicial to the operation of the act"?

Mr. RHODES: If any province should pass a law which would affect the taking of proper security on the part of the farm loan board, in that event the board might for the time being withdraw from lending operations in that province.

Mr. BLAIR: Will the local advisory board work in cooperation with the provincial advisory boards?

Mr. RHODES: I should hope so, but it will not of necessity. This is purely a dominion act and their duties are solely in respect of this dominion legislation.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If I may be allowed to refer to the old section 7, is there any amendment to clause (e) of that section with regard to the rate of interest?

Mr. RHODES: No, there is no amendment.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That remains as it is?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Section agreed to.

Sections 10 to 13 inclusive agreed to.

Mr. REID: Will the minister allow me to ask a question with regard to section 11 which we have already passed?

Mr. RHODES: Certainly.

Mr. REID: I notice it is provided that:

The board shall for all purposes be deemed to be the agent of the crown and any security taken by the board shall be so taken on behalf of the crown.

Does that mean that they would be really acting on behalf of the crown and that a municipality could not sell the property for unpaid taxes? Suppose a mortgage were issued on behalf of the farm loan board and there were unpaid taxes on the property. Does this section mean that the municipality would have no right against that property inasmuch as the board would then be acting as an agent of the crown? That is a very important point.

Mr. RHODES: Under the act as it exists at the moment we were working in cooperation with the province because there had to be enabling legislation by them. Now we are setting up a new position and as we enter a province, this is to clarify our position and make it clear that the action of the board is on behalf of the crown in right of the dominion.

Mr. REID: I think we should hesitate right at this point, because last year when we were putting through amendments to the Soldier Settlement Act, I do not recall the wording but the provision inserted in the act was to the effect that the soldier settlers would come out from under the jurisdiction of the crown. In that act the municipalities were then given the right to sell property belonging to soldier settlers. Now under this farm loan act we are taking that power away from the municipalities and giving it to the crown. Personally I am against this clause.

Mr. RHODES: Of course the extent to which my hon. friend is against it will, I am afraid, militate against the successful operation of the act in any province. I might point out to him that he need have no concern in respect of the payment of taxes, because in the amendment last year we provided specifically as will be found in paragraph (c) of section 4 of the amended act of last year:

Pay yearly to local taxing authorities amounts to the extent of the taxes that would have been owing on such real estate had the same been assessed and a levy made thereon in that year.

Mr. REID: Last year, according to the exact wording in the act, the soldier settlement board was made a "corporation sole," so as to give municipalities the right to sell lands belonging to settlers under the soldier settlement board, when the taxes of those settlers were in arrears. We are not going to give that right to municipalities in regard to land belonging to ordinary farmers, but we did in respect of land belonging to soldier settlers.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I should like to join in the protest of the hon. member for New Westminster, if it is intended that lands reverting to the crown through the agency of the board are to become non-taxable. This has caused a great deal of discontent.

Mr. RHODES: It is not.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If that is clear, there is no objection.

Mr. RHODES: It is quite clear and there is no question. That is why we included in the act of last year the amendment which I just read. I think it clarifies our position.

Sections 14 to 16 inclusive agreed to.

On section 17—Supplementary advances.

Mr. RHODES: I have an amendment to move to this section:

That Bill No. 15 be amended by striking out section seventeen thereof and substituting the following:

17. Subsections one and two of section nine of The Canadian Farm Loan Act Amendment Act, 1934, renumbered as section nineteen of the Canadian Farm Loan Act, are repealed and the following are substituted therefor:

"(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in Part I of this act, the board may in any case where it lends on the security of a first mortgage, make a further loan for a period of not more than six years, repayable on such terms as the board may determine, on the security of a second mortgage on the farm lands and in those provinces of Canada where chattel security may be taken by the board, of a charge on live stock and other personal property.

(2) The aggregate of loans made to any one borrower under the provisions of parts I and II of this act shall not exceed, in those provinces of Canada where chattel security may be taken by the board, two-thirds of the appraised value of the land and buildings in respect of which security is taken and in any province where chattel security may not be taken sixty per cent of the said value and shall not exceed at any one time the sum of seven thousand five hundred dollars. The amount advanced under this section shall not exceed one-half of the amount advanced on the security of the first mortgage."

The principal effect of this amendment is to provide that in Quebec where we may not take a chattel mortgage, the position shall not be prejudiced on that account, and therefore we make an arbitrary figure of sixty per cent as against sixty-six and two-thirds per cent where we can take chattel mortgages.

Mr. REID: Why is it advisable to put chattel mortgages on farmers' stocks?

Mr. RHODES: It is merely for the purpose that in those cases where a second mortgage is advisable and the security might not be deemed sufficient, the farmer, if he so desires, could give a chattel mortgage which would bring the security up to a sufficient amount to enable the board to make the loan.

Mr. SPENCER: Will a chattel mortgage on stock be the only security on the second mortgage?

Mr. RHODES: No; it would be in addition to the mortgage on the realty itself, but without the chattel mortgage there might not be sufficient margin in the real estate to enable the borrower to borrow that amount of money which he might desire to secure.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I must confess that last year when permission was received by the board to consider chattel mortgages as security, I could not understand the particular urge for taking this particular class of security in conjunction with mortgages. It is rather an unusual and, it seems to me, strange proceeding. A chattel mortgage will now be taken for a period of six years if it is included in the mortgage on the real estate. Was it the hope that by the inclusion of the chattel mortgage, this would increase the loan, or what was the purpose of including chattel mortgages?

Mr. RHODES: The purpose as I understand it was merely to enable a farmer who desired a second loan and who had not sufficient margin of security left in his real estate to furnish an additional security by way of chattel mortgage; that is all.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My candid opinion is that it would be better if chattel mortgages were abolished completely; I think they are a great source of evil. People get into financial difficulties and sometimes have to chattel their securities to satisfy their creditors, but I have always detested this method. I do not believe it is good business and personally I doubt whether the inclusion of the chattel mortgage will not get a man into a position where there is no hope of his paying off the loan.

Mr. RHODES: I do not quarrel with the attitude taken by my hon. friend, but may I point out to him that while we have chattel mortgages, it seems to me it is far better that the farmer should be in a position to consolidate his security with the farm loan board than that there should be chattels left that might be open to be preyed upon by somebody else. The idea of including them was not that we desire to take them, but merely to enable a needy farmer to utilize them for the purpose of bringing the maximum loan up to the figure he desires.

Mr. REID: But the information given to me is that there have been instances where in the opinion of the board the value of the land having gone down they asked the man to put up further security without his receiving any more money. Say he had a $4,000 loan, made when land was valued at $100 an acre; the information given to me at a meeting I attended was that the board said the value of the land had gone down so they asked these farmers to put up further security. If that is correct I think this chattel mortgage question should be looked into still further.

Mr. RHODES: I do not know that we need stress this matter of chattel mortgages. Personally I do not attach great importance to it, but so far as the provision goes I understand it is to the advantage of the farmer. I cannot conceive of a case in which the board would wish to make a loan on the security afforded by the chattel mortgage, but the purpose of this is to help a farmer to bring his total loan up to the figure he desires.

Mr. REID: I do not think the minister has grasped my point. I am speaking of a case in which the value of the farm had gone down and they told the farmer he would have to put up more security. If that is being done it is an iniquitous practice which should be stopped.

Mr. RHODES: I am advised that practically the only instances in which the farm loan board have asked a farmer for security by way of chattel mortgage, where they held a mortgage on his farm which was in arrears, were not with the object of further involving the farmer in debt to the board but to protect him against attempts on the part of other creditors to cripple him by securing a mortgage on his chattels. The farm loan board took it for the purpose of consolidating his indebtedness to the board itself. I give that statement to the committee precisely as it has been given to me by the commissioner of the farm loan board. Personally I know no case where the board has attempted to get additional security to the prejudice of the farmer, but only in the circumstances I have referred to.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If chattel mortgages are to be taken I prefer to see the board have the right to take them; I am quite in accord with that idea. But I object to the system itself, and if I were back in a provincial legislature I would do my best to abolish the taking of chattel mortgages. Once a man gets in the position where he has to give a chattel mortgage he is pretty near bankruptcy. He is apt to get into the hands of what we designate as loan sharks, at excessive rates of interest, and very few in such a position, from my observation, are able to pay them off.

Mr. RHODES: I quite concur in the view of my hon. friend. But he will realize that the question whether or not there shall be chattel mortgages is one for the provinces and therefore is something we need not concern ourselves about.

Mr. BLAIR: Is any provision made for examination in order that a farmer who is sold out may have an opportunity later to go back to the land and start again?

Mr. RHODES: Any such provision that exists in the provinces will still obtain. That is the only answer that I can give.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): I am very much in accord with the amendment the minister has proposed, as to lending up to two-thirds of the value; I think that is sufficient. But in my province and in the particular part I represent there are many farmers operating a section or a section and a half or two sections. Assume that the appraised value is $20 an acre; two-thirds of that would figure out at $8,500 on a section. So that if the aggregate is limited to $7,500, there will be many farmers whose needs that would not meet. Within the last ten or fifteen years loans have been made in that part of the country based on valuations of $30 to $40 an acre, and in many cases loans of fifty per cent of that value have been made. I think two-thirds of the appraised value is sufficiently high, but many farmers will be unable to take advantage of the act because $7,500 would not be enough on the larger farms. Many farmers have loans of $10,000 on a section of land, and the moral risk in many of those cases is just as good as it would be for $7,500 on a smaller area. Many farmers out there who are farming a section or more are better farmers than those working on three-quarters of a section. Does the minister not think that that limit might be increased if the security is there?

Mr. RHODES: It is a question of policy. The idea we had was that a greater service would be done by helping a larger number of small farmers rather than by using up the amount available in a smaller number of large mortgages. While no doubt there will be cases where worthy farmers will suffer by not being able to secure a larger loan, on balance I have no doubt that a greater public service will be rendered by spreading the money over a larger number of small loans. After all, while there are conditions peculiar to the prairies, we must remember that this legislation is applicable to all Canada, and in the great majority of provinces when you get beyond $7,500 you are dealing not with a farmer but with an enterprise. So on balance it was felt that we could not go beyond a maximum of $7,500.

Mr. GOTT: I represent probably the most diversified agricultural section of Canada. There are some farmers in the riding I have the honour to represent who would be delighted with the opportunity of getting a loan of $10,000. I ask the minister if he could not make the maximum $10,000 rather than $7,500.

Mr. RHODES: When you set a figure there will always be border line cases. I do not see that I can usefully add anything to what I said a moment ago in reply to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 18—When title transferred to board.

Mr. BARBER: In our province I think the trouble was very largely with the administration. The man in charge in several cases that have been brought to my attention would go to someone who had a loan and was unable to meet his payments, and say to him: "You had better give me a quit claim, and perhaps next year or the year following you will be in a position to redeem it." I received a letter to-day from a man who bought land at about $125 an acre when times were good; he cleared sixty-five acres of bush land, built his fences and buildings, and borrowed money from the board. Apparently last fall the man in charge secured from him a quit claim deed. I quote from the letter:

> I asked the farm loan man "how about going before the receiver appointed by the government?" and he asked me what I owed besides the farm loan board? I told him the feed and grocery bill for the month. He said it can't be done, because you have already given a quit claim to the board.

Apparently there is no hope for that man, although when he gave the quit claim deed he understood that he would have a chance to redeem it in some way.

Mr. RHODES: I am advised by the farm loan commissioner that in a number of cases farmers have voluntarily come to the board and said, "I cannot pay" and have offered quit claim deeds which the board has accepted. In some cases the board has turned around and leased the farm to the farmer in question, and I have not the slightest doubt in the world that, apart altogether from documentation, the board would be only too happy to place the farmer in his old position in the event of his being able to redeem his security. In this connection it must be borne in mind that during the whole period the farm loan board has been in operation there have been only nineteen foreclosures.

Section agreed to.

Section 19 agreed to.

Mr. RHODES: I have an amendment that will be section 2 (a). That is the definition of a farmer, and my hon. friend from East Edmonton thought the definition I moved, which was the definition contained in the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, was restrictive if anything in the latter part. That amendment read:

> Farmer means a person whose principal occupation consists in farming or the tillage of the soil.

I am quite content that the words "or the tillage of the soil" be dropped. The definition then would read:

> Farmer means a person whose principal occupation consists in farming.

If that is agreeable to the committee I am quite content that the amendment should be in that form. I give my view with some diffidence because it is more or less a layman's view and the legal members of the committee may think otherwise, but my impression is that the simple definition will give the broadest possible scope in interpretation of the word farmer. I therefore move that the amendment read:

> Farmer means a person whose principal occupation consists in farming.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I wonder if the minister has considered how widely that may be interpreted by the board, and what a great deal of difficulty may be entailed. I never was more struck with the wisdom of the provision of the old act than when discussing the matter with the chairman of the board some years ago. If I remember correctly the provision was that a man had to be a farmer living on his farm and cultivating it himself. Under this new definition I can see that a man may not have any other occupation than that of a dealer in farm land. He might be in the position in which I happen to be. I have a few farms and no other occupation, unless you call this an occupation. I do not know what you would call it.

Mr. HACKETT: It is a job.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): But as long as I have no other occupation I can go on purchasing land and renting it and securing mortgages from the farm loan board; at least if that is not so I misunderstood the statement of the minister. I do not think that is the intention at all, with all due respect to my colleague from East Edmonton. I can foresee a good deal of difficulty for the board in dealing with this matter. The maximum loan is $7,500, and I agree with the minister that that is quite enough; in fact I think it is a little too much, but if you confine the loans to the men actually operating farms and living on them I think you will be on much safer ground.

Mr. RHODES: There would be much to be said in favour of the view just expressed by my hon. friend from West Edmonton if it were not for the fact that there is another safeguard in the act we are now amending. I will read subsection (c) of section 7 of the act:

> Loans under this act shall be made only to farmers actually engaged in or shortly to become engaged in the cultivation of the farm mortgaged and whose experience, ability and character are such as to warrant the belief that the farm to be mortgaged will be successfully cultivated—

So the definition must be read in conjunction with that subsection. In the last analysis, however, I submit to the committee with all deference that the object of this bill is to provide loans to farmers who are farming. You may put in the act whatever verbiage you choose but we must depend upon the good judgment of the board itself in interpreting not only the actual definitions but in selecting the class of men to whom mortgages should be granted. In the circumstances I do feel that we have sufficient protection, and in saying that I was quite willing to accede to the suggestion of the hon. member for East Edmonton, which was also subscribed to by my hon. friend for New Westminster—

Mr. REID: It is not wide enough yet.

Mr. RHODES: I must say to my hon. friend that I could not conceive of a wider definition.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Neither could I.

Mr. REID: With all deference to the minister's opinion it is all right as long as the board interpret it as the minister has suggested, but the trouble is that when the act goes through the house and is passed on to the board they look up what it says and they say, "Yes, we can lend to farmers or those farming," and then they say, "Let us see what farming is," and they look up another act and they say that farming means stock raising or growing grain, so where does the poultry man come in? He is not a farmer, according to the board. I tell you this is serious. I think the viewpoint of the minister is the viewpoint of the committee; the act is intended to make loans as freely as possible consistent with safety, but the trouble is that this class of farmer will not come under the act with this present definition. As long as that definition remains the great class of poultrymen, who are carrying heavy burdens and who are just as anxious to be assisted as are the men raising cattle or tilling the soil, cannot secure relief. Does the minister believe the poultry farmer with large assets could come under the present act?

Mr. RHODES: I must give the same answer to my hon. friend that I have given on three or four other occasions; that is not only that I am not competent but that it is not incumbent upon me to attempt to define what may constitute a farmer in an individual case. Parliament says this is intended to be an act to provide for loans to farmers. The question who is a farmer must depend upon the interpretation placed upon the act by the board. While in practice and in its application my hon. friend from New Westminster may not be satisfied with that interpretation I do say to him with deference that it would be impossible to get any definition of a farmer wider than is contained in the amendment I have proposed.

Mr. REID: I would not protest so strenuously but I know in the past the board have set their faces against that class of farmer. They say he does not come under the act. I hold the view that if no other change is made the class I have in mind will be excluded.

Mr. NEILL: Would the chairman read the definition?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): It is as follows:

That Bill No. 15 be amended by inserting the following section after section 1 thereof:

2. Section 2 of the Canadian Farm Loan Act, chapter 66 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, is amended by striking out paragraph (d) thereof and substituting therefor the following,

[Mr. C. Stewart.]

(d) "Farmer" means a person whose principal occupation consists in farming.

Mr. COOTE: In my view it would be a gross mistake to have a restrictive definition. I should like to see the matter left in the hands of the board. I have in mind a man who has a section of land lying very close to town, land which in ordinary times would be valuable. I believe there is about $14,000 standing against it, and the man who holds the claim against it has said to the owner, "If you can get me the cash I will take fifty per cent of what you owe me, because I need the money." The man who owns the property is about seventy years of age, is living in town, and has a tenant on the farm. I should like to see the definition of the word "farmer" left in such a way that it would be within the option of the board to make a loan. In the case to which I have made reference the man is too old to take over the operation of the farm, and it is much better for him to have it in the hands of a tenant. The tenant could not possibly buy it and obtain a loan. I believe it would be wise to leave the definition as wide open as possible, so that these matters may be left to the decision of the board. If we have the right kind of board I believe justice would be done, and they would be in a better position to deal with the needs of each farming community.

Mr. RHODES: I believe the amendment in its present form is as wide as it can be made; certainly it is in the least restrictive form. It provides for the very privilege which the hon. member has in mind, namely that it leaves the widest possible discretion in the board to decide whether or not a person making application for a loan is or is not a farmer within the spirit of the act.

Section agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gobeil): Shall I report the bill?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Before the bill is reported may I ask the minister if he would consider the advisability of having prepared an office consolidation of last year's amendments, this year's amendments and the original bill for the convenience of the layman. The numbers, sections, subsections, clauses, and so on, are most confusing to all of us. The numbering of the sections in the two amendments and in the original bill of 1927 are very difficult to follow, and one finds it almost necessary to call in the aid of a lawyer to disentangle them, something which in these days one cannot well afford to do.

Further than that, I believe a good public purpose would be served if the regulations were attached to this office consolidation. I make the suggestion because I believe what I have suggested is done frequently in connection with bills affecting the Department of Agriculture; I am not sure whether or not it has been the practice in the Department of Finance.

Mr. RHODES: The suggestion of the hon. member is most excellent. It was my intention to have the office consolidation prepared at the earliest possible moment, and that will be done. I cannot be sure however as to whether or not the new regulations will be attached, because my purpose is to have the office consolidation prepared as soon as possible. However if the regulations are not ready in time they will be sent out as speedily as possible thereafter.

Bill reported.

SUPPLY

PUBLIC WORKS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Gagnon in the chair.

Public buildings—Nova Scotia—
Bridgetown—public building, $30,000.
Halifax — maintenance of immigration quarters, $25,000.
New Waterford—public building, $44,000.
Oxford — public building, $30,000 — Total, $129,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I should like the item of $30,000 for a public building at Bridgetown to stand. One of the hon. members from Nova Scotia is interested in this list of items, and as he is not here I should like to have it stand.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): That is quite satisfactory.

Item stands.

Maritime provinces generally — Dominion public buildings—improvements and repairs, $50,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is an item I wish to refer to because it represents a set of items of which this one is typical. It is a vote for improvements and repairs to dominion public buildings, and the vote is increased from $40,000 last year to $50,000 this year. In view of the money that is being expended under the Public Works Construction Act I submit we should not be increasing year by year the amount that can be spent under a special vote of this kind. It places upon the officials of the department and the minister the obligation to meet demands that would not be made upon them if there were not these amounts placed in the estimates which they can allocate anywhere. In speaking of that I refer generally to items of this kind. Public works estimates should be kept down as far as possible to what are actually known as public works estimates which are passed on by this committee of the House of Commons, instead of their being passed on by the officials of the department without the members of this committee knowing the places to which those amounts are going.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The objection, if I may so term it, raised by my hon. friend is met I think by the practice of the department in years gone by. The procedure is that the chief architect obtains from the district architects from time to time estimates of the amounts likely to be required for repairs to the buildings in the different districts; he assembles those amounts and in the light of experience over a period of years determines what is a fair and reasonable amount to ask for this work. My hon. friend will agree that it is impossible to foresee everything that may happen. A roof may be found to be leaking, a heating system may fail, or any other part of a building may require attention. As my hon. friend knows, during the last three or four years the necessity for economy has curtailed the amounts of these votes. In 1930-31, for instance, the appropriation was $55,500 for the corresponding item, and our experience has been that in the past few years we have not had quite as much at our command as the circumstances required. For that reason this vote has been slightly increased.

Mr. ELLIOTT: We shall perhaps be able to facilitate the work of the committee if we get as much information as we can beforehand in connection with the works that are being carried on under the Public Works Construction Act. I understand that under that act a large amount of money is given in a lump sum just as this is, without being allotted to any particular work, and that out of that lump sum large scale improvements have been made this year in order to get the buildings in as good a shape as possible. A much larger amount has been at the discretion of the minister under that act during the last year than ever before, and for that reason there is much less necessity for any increase in these lump sums in the estimates this year.

There are certain things that I think this committee should perhaps reserve until we discuss the Public Works Construction Act. I do not know when the minister expects to bring down further estimates, but it is pretty difficult to know exactly how these work into one another. I think about $27,000,000 is allotted to the Department of Public Works out of the $40,000,000. I believe that is approximately correct. Perhaps the minister could tell us how much of that has been expended up to the present time, and the amount that is committed at the present time.

The Minister of Finance tabled a statement showing all the commitments in the various departments under the Public Works Construction Act up until January 31 last. But of course this is the time of year during which many commitments are being made. I should be glad if the minister could furnish the committee as soon as convenient with the commitments that have been made under that act up to the present, and the amount actually expended up to the present. He has given a statement of items that were specified under the Public Works Construction Act, but these do not deal with the two items of $2,000,000 and $2,500,000 under which certain commitments have been made. I want in that connection again to stress the objection I make with regard to these lump sums generally. Hon. members will remember that in the closing days of last session an amendment was made to the Public Works Construction Act providing for the expenditure of $2,500,000 for constructing other buildings. I should like the minister to let us have details of what other buildings were constructed under that, the extent to which tenders were obtained by public advertisement, and the extent to which tenders were obtained merely by inviting them.

I have had the opportunity of looking over a number of the orders in council that have been tabled. I want here to say to the minister that for his own protection and for the protection of the treasury the clause that was put into the Public Works Construction Act against the most strenuous objections that could be made from this side of the house, doing away with the necessity for advertising tenders publicly in cases over $5,000, has worked a hardship, as I think he will agree, not only upon him and his officials but upon the public treasury. I do not think it is a good thing to have tenders let in that way for buildings and harbours and rivers, involving quite considerable sums. Will the minister be good enough to furnish us at as early a day as he can with the particulars to which I have referred? I do not intend at the moment to take up the time of the committee with any further protest except in regard to each of these lump sum items. I think the increases in them are all wrong. The principle is wrong. I am told, and it is quite apparent from some of the orders in council that have been passed under the Public Works Construction Act, that buildings are being erected and sites purchased for buildings without this house passing upon the advisability of placing those buildings there or of purchasing those sites. I do not think it can be defended, and it is contrary to all the principles of public works construction. Take any building, I do not care in what province it may be; this house has a right to pass upon it. It should not be passed upon by the officials of this department nor by the minister nor by council without that item having been passed upon in committee of the whole house, as has been the practice since confederation until within the last year or two.

Mr. ROSS: I assume that this amount is here for the general maintenance and upkeep of public buildings. In the last four or five years it has been annually decreasing until there was no money to maintain these buildings. Now I imagine that anything that was in order under the regime of the ex-Minister of Public Works may be commended to the present minister, and when we look up the same item in the years when he was minister what do we find? I would commend to the minister the amount that was then voted under my hon. friend opposite. These buildings are old and they need a little more money than they naturally did during his tenure of office, and if you look at the item in 1928, 1929 and 1930 you will see that it was at one time $102,000 as compared with $75,000, and in the last year under my hon. friend it was $110,000, which was an increase. I suggest that the minister make it equal to the amount that was voted under my hon. friend opposite; for surely the ex-minister cannot be wrong. He could not make a mistake, and I would commend to the minister the increasing of the vote to $110,000 as it was under the hon. gentleman.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That would be very satisfactory, I am sure.

Item agreed to.

Quebec—
Amqui—public building, $19,000.
Asbestos—public building, $8,000.
Bagotville—public building, $25,500.
Dolbeau—public building, $22,000.
Dominion public buildings — improvements and repairs, $100,000.

Grosse Isle quarantine station — improvements, alterations and repairs, $7,800.
Montreal — instalment on purchase of armoury, $15,200.
Montreal—addition to 4th Division Engineer's armoury, $7,000.
Quebec citadel—improvements and maintenance, $15,000.
Quebec examining warehouse—repairs and renewals, $1,200.
Ste. Anne de Beaupré—public building, $25,000.
Westmount — instalment on purchase of armoury, $12,700.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Under this item will the minister allow us to ask a few questions regarding public buildings that are being constructed in Montreal? I have reference to construction work that is going on there in connection with a public building. I understand that the contractors had a contract for putting up the building, but recently some other contract was given in connection with part of the foundation. Why was another contract given?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have no objection to giving the information though it does not relate to this item. I did hope that we might be able to arrange some time to have a discussion of the Public Works Construction Act and everything appertaining to it in relation to some one item. However, as my hon. friend has asked this question I have no objection to giving the information. A contract was let after public tenders had been called for for the construction of this building, and the contract was awarded to the parties submitting the lowest tender. The contractors undertook the work and encountered some unforeseen difficulties in connection with a very heavy flow of water. I believe they were pumping out of that foundation between 300,000 and 400,000 gallons of water daily. On account of this very heavy flow they experienced difficulty in getting their foundations in and they contended that this was not contemplated nor within the provisions of that contract. They therefore held that they should have an extra for this unexpected development. Some delay ensued, the department taking the position that it was not clear whether this was provided for by the contract or not. Notice of default was served on the contractors and some delay occurred. Then they proposed that the work should be undertaken by them through a subcontractor on a cost plus basis. The department did not accept that suggestion. Finally the department took over and out of the contractors' hands the sinking of the caissons and the putting in of the foundations and certain work that goes with it, and called for tenders for that work from those who had tendered for the construction of the building. An agreement was arrived at with the contractors as to the amount to be charged against them for the work which they would have had to do under the method they intended to carry out, and for the work that was being done incidentally in connection with parts of work that had to be done at the same time, and this was deducted from the amount of the tender for this work, the caissons and the foundations. The contract was awarded to Anglin & Norcross for that part of the work.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What is the amount?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think the figures are about $257,000 less $89,000. That is my recollection.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Before tenders were called for by the department, had borings been made to find out the condition of the soil, and did the contractors tender—the main contractors—on the basis of a report made by the department?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Certain borings were made and the information procured was made available to the contractors.

Mr. CASGRAIN: And they based their main tender on the borings as made by the department?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): On the information available at that time, which they say did not disclose the true condition.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Because they found out afterwards that the borings did not indicate what the soil was like in various places.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The borings indicated what was found there, but when they opened up the foundation there was this unexpected heavy flow of water.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I see under this vote 102 an item of $25,000 for a public building at Ste. Anne de Beaupré. Was this public building requested by the municipality or by the people in the village?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am informed that a petition was received as far back as 1914 from the residents of the town, and then a request was received in 1924 from my hon. friend—

Mr. CASGRAIN: Thank you.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): —urging the construction of the building. Again in 1926 a similar request came from my hon. friend, and there have been requests since then.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I thank the minister for the information he has been kind enough to give. I am glad to see that the government in that regard is following in the footsteps of its predecessor and also continuing the good work that we had started to do at that time. Could the minister inform the commitee as to the site on which this post office is to be built and when the first preliminary works were started for its erection? A certain amount, I think $4,000 or $5,000, was voted to purchase a site for this public building, but on account of difficulty in securing a suitable site in the central part of the village, the project had to be abandoned. Has a site been bought and, if so, from whom?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): A site has not been acquired, neither has one been selected.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Has the department now in its possession any offer for sale of a site for this public building?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): We have not on record anything indicating any suggestion as to the site.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Nobody has made an offer to the department for the sale of any building or lot or houses of any kind?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): We have not yet invited any offers and I am not aware of any voluntary offers of sites.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I was just asking the minister whether he had received any suggestions by persons that they were willing to dispose of their property in favour of the government, of course for a consideration, as a proper site for the erection of this public building.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): As my hon. friend knows, he has now spoken of a matter that often presents great difficulty. Sometimes it is one side of the creek as against the other; sometimes it is main street as against some other street and—

Mr. CASGRAIN: There is only one main street there.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): —when we go to select a site, we often find conflicting claims or advantages. Possibly my hon. friend might make a suggestion as to a site. If he has any information, he might let us have it.

[Mr. Casgrain.]

Mr. CASGRAIN: I shall be pleased to see the minister and discuss the matter with him if he would like me to do so.

Mr. CARDIN: Why not discuss the matter in the open?

Mr. CASGRAIN: I would do it in the open, but I would rather take it up with the minister in the same way as the other negotiations were carried on, because I think they were very fruitful.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): On which side of the street is my hon. friend?

Mr. CASGRAIN: There is only one main street. As to which side of the street, that depends. I believe there are in the records certain recommendations that were made at that time and places suggested as suitable and appropriate sites. I do not know whether the side of the street may not now have been changed and that is why I asked the minister whether he had received any of those requests. If he is not in a position to disclose all the facts to the committee now, I might be able, if he has any trouble, to help him at a later date.

Mr. JEAN (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I do not want to let this item pass without calling the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart) to the fact that the estimates this year do not contain any amount for the Maisonneuve post office. Five or six years ago, the government had made arrangements for the purchase of a building in Maisonneuve and the intention was to establish a post office in that building. However the builidng is still occupied by the city of Montreal. Two years ago, I asked for the production of all letters relating to this affair; the city of Montreal was prepared to leave the building if the Dominion had been willing to take it over and pay the purchase price. I understand the contract was signed by both parties. All there is to do now is to make the necessary alterations to the building in order to convert it into a post office.

Two years ago, if I remember correctly, the Minister of Public Works said in reply to my remarks that the necessary alterations would be made as soon as the city of Montreal would be ready to hand over the building. I think the city is prepared to hand over the building at any time so that a post office may be opened provided the government pay the purchase price.

Consequently, I would ask the minister to tell me if the government has the intention to put in the estimates at the present session the necessary amount to carry out the agreement of six years ago.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I shall endeavour to give my hon. friend all the information as I understand he has requested it. An appropriation was made for the purchase in Maisonneuve of a building which was the city hall of that municipality. It is now in the occupation of the Quebec government—

Mr. JEAN: It was acquired by the city of Montreal.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): —as a cancer clinic. For some time the department has been ready to take over the building for the purpose for which it was to be acquired, but the provincial government or the city of Montreal have decided to retain its use until the university buildings are completed when the clinic will be moved into them. My hon. friend is naturally curious to know why there is not in the estimates anything in respect of this building. The reason is that a cheque was issued for the purchase amount; the cheque is being held and is available as soon as the building can be turned over and we can obtain possession of it. Therefore it is not necessary to have an item in the estimates. We have not had anything definite as to when we shall be able to obtain possession of the building. I believe the construction program on the university has been halted and pending the completion of it, I presume matters will go on as they are. When they are in a position to give us the building, we shall be in a position to give them the cheque.

Mr. JEAN: If the minister will look in his correspondence, he will find that the city of Montreal is ready to hand over the building and to take the hospital out of it if the government is ready to pay for the building and to make the necessary repairs to convert it into a post office.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I think there is some overriding control on the part of the province of Quebec in the use of the building.

Mr. JEAN: I do not think so.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Well, whenever they are ready to give us the building we are ready to hand them our cheque.

Mr. JEAN: All right.

Item agreed to.

Public buildings—Ontario—
Belleville public building—addition to site, $17,500.
Belleville—new gun shed, $9,600.
Burlington—public building, $35,000.
Campbellford—public building, $35,000.
Dominion public buildings — improvements and repairs, $125,000.
Dunnville—public building, $60,000.
Fenelon Falls—public building, $25,000.
Gananoque — gun shed and caretaker's quarters, $11,700.
Hamilton—addition to armoury, $75,000.
Kingston—machine shop, $35,000.
Kingston—addition to armoury, $12,000.
Kingston — R.S.A. and brigade building, $52,000.
London—Royal school building, $25,000.
Meaford—public building, $40,000.
Perth—purchase of property for armoury purposes, $6,500.
Toronto—instalment on purchase of armoury, $29,400.
Toronto postal station "A"—improvements, etc., $5,500.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Would the minister tell me what the amount of $35,000 for Campbellford public building is for?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This is to provide for the erection of a public building for postal purposes on a site purchased in 1912 at the corner of Mill and Front streets in the town of Campbellford; $30,000 for the building; $3,000 for fittings; $1,000 for inspection and $1,000 for grading and sidewalk.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Is it the intention to have public tenders called for in connection with this building?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): As this comes under the regular estimates of the department, it is subject to the provisions of the Public Works Act, and public tenders will be invited.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I see in the Ontario list a new gun shed at Belleville, $9,600; gun shed and caretaker's quarters at Gananoque, $11,700; an addition to the armoury in Hamilton, $75,000; Kingston machine shop, $35,000. Is the last item I have mentioned in connection wih the military college?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): These buildings are all requested by the Department of National Defence, the one for Kingston being for the erection of a machine shop. It is necessary to enable major repairs and overhauling of guns and equipment to be undertaken. There is quite a military establishment there.

Mr. ELLIOTT: What about the royal school building at London?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This item is to provide for the erection of a school building for the military district of London. At present there are no proper lecture rooms for schools of instruction. Spare barrack rooms and so on have been utilized. The arrangement is most inconvenient and unsatisfactory in view of the large number attending these courses.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Then we have Perth, purchase of property for armoury purposes, $6,500; instalment on purchase of armoury at Toronto, $29,400. This looks like an enormous proportion of expenditure devoted to armouries and matters of that kind. How is it that in the statement we have received from the Minister of Finance showing expenditures up to December 31 under the Public Works Construction Act, we find that $2,530,000 of the $40,000,000 was allotted to national defence, and of that the commitments outstanding on December 31 were $535,824? Why is it that the Department of National Defence are building the structures represented by that $2,530,000 while the Department of Public Works are constructing all these other buildings?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The buildings undertaken by the Department of National Defence, as my hon. friend remembers, are comparatively few, and the expenditures were comparatively large under that act. These are minor ones that they have requested from time to time since that work was undertaken.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I think the minister has not quite got my point. Are public works and national defence both functioning in the construction of buildings for military purposes?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That takes us back to the provisions of the Public Works Construction Act. My hon. friend will recall that there is a provision in that act that the works undertaken were not to be under the control of any particular department, but should be assigned from time to time to such department as the governor in council might decide. A construction program of $39,000,000 is fairly large, and it was thought well that the work should be apportioned. Certain undertakings were allotted to national defence and certain to public works. The public works department have had allotted to them construction to the amount of $25,969,600. Certain undertakings were allotted to the Department of Marine, certain others to the Department of National Defence, certain others to the Department of the Interior, the Department of Indian Affairs, and one or two to the Department of Railways and Canals. The orders in council providing for that distribution have been laid on the table, as my hon. friend knows. I should be pleased to procure and submit to the committee a list of the undertakings so assigned. I think my hon. friend, with his experience in that department, will agree that a program of $39,000,000 added to the regular program of public works would be pretty heavy. It was thought that in view of the special conditions and circumstances it might well be apportioned as has been done.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Of the $26,000,000 allotted to the public works department, up to December 31 only $3,633,000 has been expended, and $8,349,000 committed. That would not be any great strain on as efficient a department as that over which the minister presides. And my question is still unanswered; why it is that a large amount of construction is being undertaken by the Department of National Defence? I take that as an example, because I see it is largely national defence appearing in public works. Why is it that what is in this list is allotted to public works, while $2,530,000 is allotted to national defence? Has it been found that the $2,530,000 was not sufficient to do what is required for national defence? They expended only $535,000 up to the end of the year.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The expenditure shown in the statement filed by the Minister of Finance was up to the end of the year. As the hon. member well knows, the actual expenditures up to any date do not represent the full amount that has been earned up to that time. For example the estimates are back perhaps a month, and after the estimates are in and approved by the architects and engineers they have to go through all the routine of this department and of the Department of Finance before being paid. There is involved the preparation of plans and specifications, the publication of advertisements and so on, and the larger undertakings are just getting nicely under way. The expenditures made in the early months were in respect of repairs to buildings and the smaller undertakings with which we could proceed at once. As to the commitments, I can give my hon. friend some of the information for which he asked some time ago.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If I may interrupt the minister, I think he has misunderstood me, for he is answering everything except what I asked. I was asking if he could give any explanation as to why this large collection of works relating to military buildings should come under the public works department while apparently we have a national defence public works department functioning at the same time. Why this division?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): These have not been assigned to the national defence department. The items that were assigned to them are some of those that appear in the schedule of the Public Works Construction Act. These items now in the estimates of course are not in that schedule, and they are coming in under the regular public works estimates where they would have been last year under ordinary conditions. They are just getting back home, that is all.

Mr. ELLIOTT: But is there not sufficient of the $2,530,000 left to meet them?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I presume not. I do not know exactly what expenditures the Department of National Defence has made out of its allotment.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It amounted to only $535,000 at the end of the year.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The actual expenditure is one thing but the commitments are another.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am giving the commitment to the minister; at the end of the year it amounted to $535,000, which leaves them $2,000,000 not committed.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I do not know anything about how far their commitments extend or what they have in mind, but the specific expenditures we have here could not possibly be made out of that item.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Would the minister tell us why? What is the principle, if there is any principle, that decides which should come under national defence, under the Public Works Construction Act, and which should come under the Department of Public Works? Is there a principle that decides?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There is no underlying principle, but I think if my hon. friend will look at the items that we assigned to the national defence department he will find that they are principally military buildings.

Mr. POWER: The same thing applies to those assigned to the Department of Public Works, as my hon. friend from West Middlesex has just said. In the public works estimates this year for Ontario out of about fifteen items there are nine or ten which provide for the construction of military buildings. I have not added up the amounts, but I figure that more than fifty per cent of the amount voted for public buildings in Ontario in the public works estimates is for military buildings. I take it, therefore, that the Department of Public Works has some experience in the construction of military buildings. Now we come along to the Public Works Construction Act. For some reason which has not been made known to members of this house there seems to have been an arbitrary division, and it was decided that $2,530,000 of the $40,000,000 appropriated should come under the jurisdiction of the Department of National Defence in connection with military buildings. What I should like to know first is whether there is any principle, why a certain building is allotted to the Department of Public Works and another similar building is allotted to the Department of National Defence. When we asked the minister a moment ago why certain of these appropriations under the Public Works Construction Act were under the jurisdiction of the Department of National Defence he said presumably it was because they were for military buildings. Our reply is that in the estimates a large proportion of the buildings provided for are military buildings, but they come under his department. The minister must have some explanation, and I am sure he will be only too glad to give it to the committee.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I suppose my hon. friend will agree when I say perhaps it is well that they are coming back under the Department of Public Works, where they were before the Public Works Construction Act was passed.

Mr. POWER: Yes, where they always were.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The Public Works Construction Act of 1934 was special in its character. Included in the schedule attached to that act were certain military buildings, and it was thought that with the engineering staff the Department of National Defence has available they could well undertake the construction of those buildings, and we proceeded on that basis.

Mr. POWER: Does the minister think that is a good system?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Now we are coming back to the regular program of public works, which heretofore has been carried on by the Department of Public Works. With respect to the estimates this year we are just adopting the course that was followed in other years except with regard to the Public Works Construction Act which, as I have said, was a very large program and which was parcelled out as I have indicated.

Mr. POWER: Does the minister think it was a good system that was followed under the Public Works Construction Act?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I should say that we would have to await results and check up in order to see what has happened.

Mr. POWER: Has the minister any doubt about it? Apparently he must have.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have no opinion to express.

Mr. POWER: Apparently the minister has some doubt, because he pointed with pride to the fact that we are improving the system by going back to the old method. Is that what I am to understand?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I did not say we were improving the system, but from my hon. friends' arguments I thought they would believe we were making an improvement, and that they would approve of the course we are adopting.

Mr. POWER: I am not arguing about that point at all. I am asking the minister, who after all has the job of telling the committee the why and wherefore of the different items in the estimates and of the policy laid down by the government, what is the policy. He tells me very frankly that the policy is that when the government feel like it they say the Department of National Defence shall carry on and when they do not feel like it they say the Department of Public Works shall carry on. There must be some reason for that. If my hon. friend from Temiscouata were here he would say even the government must have some method. They must have done that for some reason, and I think the minister owes it to the committee to tell us if there is any specific reason why the Department of National Defence now is undertaking works which for many years were undertaken by the Department of Public Works. Surely the Department of Public Works has efficient engineers.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I must return to the broad, general argument which I outlined at first, namely that this $40,000,000 program was a very heavy one and it was thought that the best results could be accomplished by distributing it among the different departments rather than by imposing all the burden on one department, which would have involved a heavy increase in staff. It was thought that in the national defence department they had adequate engineering services and staff; they felt competent to undertake the work, and that was done.

Mr. POWER: The minister should not talk about an increase in staff; he knows very well that in every order in council passed providing for the construction of a building, he also provided for an architect or inspector or some other official to look after the work, so they practically created a new staff in every constituency where they expected to win an election.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): All I can say to my hon. friend is that if we had undertaken the whole of the program we would have required a very much larger staff.

Mr. ELLIOTT: The minister is usually reasonable, but may I call his attention to the argument he is now making. He is stating that an expenditure of $40,000,000 for public works construction is too much for the Department of Public Works to handle in one year. He has suggested that it was better to divide it up by giving $500,000 to the Department of Indian Affairs, $2,145,500 to the Department of Interior, $7,150,080 to the Department of Marine, $2,550,000 to the Department of National Defence, $26,378,589 to the Department of Public Works and $264,500 to the Department of Railway and Canals. He has stated further that it was wiser as the orders in council under the Public Works Construction Act indicate, to get outside architects to work on the construction of these buildings. He states that in order to help out at a time when there is an extensive building program, instead of increasing the staff of the Department of Public Works this government sets up small staffs in every other department to which any of the works are allotted. I submit that is a wasteful and unwise procedure and will prove most unsatisfactory. That argument was advanced by hon. members on this side of the house when the Public Works Construction Act was under discussion. If by placing all these expenditures back in the Department of Public Works, where they should be, the minister means that in this as in other matters they are seeing the light, then I should like to congratulate him upon the change.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): So far as the Department of Public Works is aware there has not been any increase in the staffs of the other departments which have undertaken the construction of buildings. If there has been any increase it has been very slight indeed. There has been an increase in the staff of the Department of Public Works, and in some cases outside architects have been employed to prepare plans. That has been done because it has been felt that architects have been greatly affected by the depression and need employment as much as any other class of employees. I believe that is not an uncommon practice because in my hon. friend's time outside architects were employed, and I believe in that connection no mistake has been made. I am not admitting any mistakes. The hon. member may think that all these works should have been done by the Department of Public Works. As I have said, however, we were not in a position to undertake all of them; we had not sufficient staff to do so and the arrangement I have described was made.

Mr. POWER: It seems to me that not very long ago very important and prominent members of this chamber were urging that departments should be consolidated so that the same kind of work could be done by the one department. We were told that it was an absurd condition to have the Department of Public Works doing dredging work, the Department of Marine doing dredging and the Department of Railways and Canals doing the same work. If I am not very much mistaken, in his radio sermons the Prime Minister stated he was going to reform the civil service, as well as the rest of us, and I believe he stated one of the items of reform was the consolidation of certain departments. At any rate I know he spoke about a new department of communications. I gathered he had some intention of consolidating the work of different departments so that it might be more efficiently carried out under one head. I have not the speeches of the Prime Minister before me, although I have given them considerable thought and contemplation.

An hon. MEMBER: They will be useful.

Mr. POWER: Yes; we will keep them, and if they are not expurgated by the careful hand of some of his friends they will be very useful. It seems to me he gave the impression that there was some proposal to consolidate departments in order to make the civil service more efficient. I suggest if there is any place where the efficiency could be improved it is in the present instance.

We are carrying on what are known as public works construction. For generations we have had a department of public works which in the main has functioned efficiently and is staffed by men who have had wide experience in construction. They have constructed harbours, breakwaters, marine works, works of the Department of National Defence telephone construction—

Mr. POULIOT: And this building.

Mr. POWER: And, as the hon. member for Témiscouata states, this very building, which is a credit to that department as well as to the people of Canada. But we are now told by the minister that the Department of Public Works could not expend $40,000,000. I hesitate to believe that the minister is serious when he makes the statement that he and his staff could not expend that much money.

Mr. ELLIOTT: He did not tell that to council, either.

Mr. POWER: The hon. member who was the former minister states he never told that to council. He has a staff composed of experienced men; he has had four or five years of personal experience. They have constructed every type of building from one end of the country to the other; they are in touch with contractors and people who supply material, and yet for some reason which has not been disclosed we find the Department of Marine is to expend $7,150,080, and other departments are to spend other amounts. If my information is accurate the amount to be spent by the Department of Marine will be spent on the construction of public buildings, works which are essentially those of the Department of Public Works. I suggest that if the minister does not consider he owes it to the committee, he at least owes it to himself and the officials of the department over which he presides with so much dignity to explain why his department has been slighted to the extent of not being entrusted with carrying out these all-important works. I suggest the explanation which has been given hitherto will not satisfy members of the committee.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The suggestion for the consolidation of departments is not a new one.

Mr. POWER: No, it is not.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It has been made from time to time and generally has proceeded from those in opposition. The departments in question have been carrying on activities which to a certain extent have overlapped. That was a difficulty which existed when this government took office, and except in the present instance having to do with this special program it has not been exaggerated or extended. The hon. member has been complimentary to the Department of Public Works, for which I thank him.

Mr. POWER: I expect to need them soon.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In general I agree with his statements, but I must repeat that $40,000,000 added to our regular program made a very heavy expenditure to undertake, and it was thought advisable to distribute it. That was the reason it was distributed.

Mr. COOTE: Could the minister tell the committee how much was spent each year for the last six or seven years for public works? It does seem to me we would not have to go back very far to find a time when the government had a program equalling almost $40,000,000.

Mr. POWER: It was $38,000,000 in 1929-30.

Mr. COOTE: I think the government has made one of the greatest mistakes of its life in not having a program of forty or fifty million dollars for the construction of public works every year during the last five years. We have been going through a depression with much unemployment, particularly in the construction industry, and it would have been an appropriate time to construct more public buildings. I do not know whether the minister has the figures available, but if he has I wish he would give them to the committee—the approximate amount which has been voted for public works each year during the last six or seven years.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have not the figures here as to the estimates and expenditures for the last four or five years, but they have been severely curtailed. I think they have run from twelve to fifteen and sixteen million dollars, and possibly as low as ten million. On other occasions they have exceeded, I think, thirty millions.

Mr. COOTE: Could the minister tell us, if not now perhaps at some other time this session, what is the total value of the armouries and other military buildings under construction at the present time both by his department and by the national defence department?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): That would involve the obtaining of the information from the Department of National Defence. It is not available to-night; however, I shall endeavour to get it for my hon. friend.

[Mr. H. A. Stewart.]

Mr. ELLIOTT: There were some further particulars I asked the minister for, and I assume that with his usual courtesy he will provide them.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I suggest an item should stand under which we could discuss fully the Public Works Construction Act. Perhaps the minister would consent to item No. 108 which is a vote for public works generally, standing for that purpose. In speaking to him I realize that I am speaking only to the minister of one of the six building departments now functioning under this government, but as his is the main building department I wonder if it would be asking too much to ask him to obtain the same information from the other departments in connection with construction work under the Public Works Construction Act.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I would prefer that the minister responsible for the expenditure should give those details and explanations. It would be more regular and I think would be productive of better results.

Mr. ELLIOTT: That is not unreasonable, and will be satisfactory on the understanding that item No. 108 be allowed to stand.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes.

Item stands.

Public buildings—Manitoba—
Dominion public buildings — improvements and repairs, $25,000.
Elkhorn—public building, $22,000.
Rivers—public building, $12,000.
Russell—public building, $22,500.

Mr. HOWDEN: Would the minister give the details of these improvements and repairs to dominion public buildings in Manitoba?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The sum of $25,000 is required for renewals, improvements and repairs during the fiscal year 1935-36 in connection with the dominion public buildings in Manitoba. An increase of $10,000 in the appropriation was asked for by the chief architect after a report had been received from the district architect.

Mr. HOWDEN: That amount is for improvements and repairs to buildings that have already been provided?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, repairs, alterations and improvements.

Mr. WEIR (Macdonald): What is to be built at Elkhorn?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The appropriation is for the erection of a public building on a site situated on the north side of Richill avenue for post office and militia purposes.

Mr. POULIOT: In what constituency?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In the constituency of Brandon.

Mr. WEIR (Macdonald): What are the details of the public building at Rivers?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is to purchase a site and construct a building for postal purposes. It will be a one storey and basement brick structure.

Mr. WEIR (Macdonald): What is to be built at Russell?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This is for the purpose of a site and erection of a building for postal purposes. It will be a one storey brick structure.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Did the minister find any necessity for any public building in Manitoba represented by any member sitting on this side of the house?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am not sure that I have had requests from any hon. gentleman on that side, but I have found the necessity for a building down in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Well, we are discussing Manitoba. Apparently the minister is much better at answering questions he is not asked than in answering those he is asked.

Item agreed to.

Public buildings—Saskatchewan—
Broadview—public building, $15,000.
Dominion public buildings — improvements and repairs, $25,000.
Regina—instalment on purchase of armoury, $31,000.
Whitewood—public building, $12,000.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Perhaps the minister would tell us the nature and purpose of these two public buildings at Broadview and Whitewood, which by accident happen to be in the one riding. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) is a fortunate man.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My hon. friend from Melville was fortunate in getting a clock for his constituency not so very long ago.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Just a contract fulfilled.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The sum of $15,000 is to provide for the erection of a public building for postal purposes on a site situated at the corner of Edmonton and Sixth avenue in the town of Broadview. It will be a one storey brick structure.

Mr. POULIOT: In what constituency?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Qu'Appelle.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What is the nature of the public building at Whitewood? I suppose that the item of $25,000 for improvements and repairs to dominion public buildings can be spent anywhere throughout Saskatchewan.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Even in Melville.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, Melville gets some of that.

Mr. ELLIOTT: This is another province evidently where there was no necessity of any buildings in ridings represented by members of the opposition.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Well, the chances are that my hon. friend looked after the buildings in those ridings pretty well when he was minister.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Yes, and in ridings represented by members on both sides of the house.

Mr. DONNELLY: Where are these repairs and improvements to public buildings to be made?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This is similar to other items we have passed for improvements and repairs to public buildings in Saskatchewan. It is an increase of $2,500 over last year.

Mr. DONNELLY: When does the minister expect to have the building in Regina completed? I am referring to the vote of $750,000. And when the building is completed, what do you expect to do with it.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Plans are being prepared and we expect to invite tenders in the next two or three weeks. The building will be on a site owned by the dominion.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is the minister going to invite tenders for a building of $750,000?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes, public tenders.

Mr. DONNELLY: Is it intended to tear down the present building? And when you have the new building completed what will be done with it? For a long time the people of Regina have been wondering what will be done with it.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The present building is a very old structure; that is our report.

Item agreed to.

Public buildings—Alberta—
Calgary—instalment on purchase of property for ordnance stores, $9,000.
Dominion public buildings — improvements and repairs, $17,000.
Peace River—public building, $31,500.
Red Deer—addition to armoury, $7,000.
Vermilion—purchase of building for postal purposes, $8,000.

Mr. GERSHAW: Can the minister give us the particulars of the largest item there in connection with a public building at Peace River?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This is for the purchase of a site and towards the erection of a public building for postal purposes at Peace River. It will be a two storey brick structure: building, $26,000; fittings, $3,000; grading and sidewalks, $1,000; contingencies, $1,500.

Mr. POULIOT: Is it a new station for the Peace River railway?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is for postal purposes.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Can the minister point out which of the buildings in that Alberta list have been found necessary in ridings represented by gentlemen of the opposition here?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This one is represented by a gentleman who does not sit on this side of the house.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Perhaps the minister would answer my question rather than one propounded by himself.

Mr. LAPOINTE: A member of the allied army.

Mr. COOTE: Can the minister give us some particulars regarding the first item, instalment on purchase of property for ordnance stores? Where is this property located and what is it for?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This is to provide for the second instalment on the purchase of the property of the Calgary Paint and Glass Company, located at Tenth avenue west, corner of Seventh street west, for accommodation of ordnance stores, under the Department of National Defence, as authorized by order in council, March 31, 1934.

Mr. COOTE: What was the amount of the purchase price?

[Mr. Donnelly.]

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This is on a rental purchase agreement. The property was under lease for three years and the rental was $8,880.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The hon. member for Red Deer is such a man of peace, I should like to know why there is an addition to the armoury there.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: In time of peace prepare for war.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is a bad principle.

Mr. COOTE: Do I understand that the property to which I have referred is being paid for in three annual instalments of $8,000 or $9,000 each?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is on a rental basis over a period of ten years, when the ownership will be completed and the building will be acquired by the government.

Mr. COOTE: What was the full purchase price of the property?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The rental will be $750 a month for ten years, and that completes the purchase of the property.

Mr. COOTE: From whom was it purchased?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The Calgary Paint and Glass Company.

Mr. POULIOT: In what constituency is Vermilion?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): In Battle River.

Mr. GERSHAW: There is a large barracks being built at Calgary, at a cost of $2,000,000 or $3,000,000. What department is that under?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): National Defence.

Mr. COOTE: Has the minister not received some requests—two years old or more, I believe—from the town of Claresholm, for the erection of a post office there? If so, what progress has been made?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I do not recall such a request from that locality. I shall be glad to look the matter up, and if the circumstances warrant it, it will be given consideration in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. POULIOT: In the absence of the member for West Calgary, and on his behalf, I beg to thank the Minister of Public Works for having put that item in the estimates.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): From whom was the building at Vermilion purchased?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The Royal Bank of Canada.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): It seems to me that the policy of the government in purchasing all these bank buildings is not helping the unemployment situation. In my constituency an old bank building was purchased against the wishes of the people of that district. I wonder who was responsible for this building being purchased at Vermilion? Was it the people of Vermilion that wanted it, or was it purchased, like the building at Arcola, against the wishes of the people of the town? When the building in Arcola was purchased it was against the people's wishes; they wanted a new building.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There is no suggestion on the part of the bank that we should purchase the building. The closing of branch banks in the smaller places has presented an opportunity to acquire buildings that are suitable for postal purposes at a cost very much under that which would be incurred in constructing buildings.

Mr. CASGRAIN: But it does not give work to the unemployed.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): It is suitable for the purposes, and in these days when economy is being urged, and the curtailment of expenditures, the government thought it well wherever possible, and where buildings were available, to acquire them. Where public buildings have been necessary, if such buildings were available an effort was made to purchase them, and they are purchased at very moderate figures, very much below cost. The building in Vermilion is a good one, recently constructed, and will afford ample accommodation for postal purposes.

Mr. POULIOT: Speaking again about West Calgary, I asked the minister what progress had been made with regard to the building of or repairs to the armouries. If my memory serves me well, there was some discussion about the matter. What progress has been made since then?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I hope substantial progress has been made on account of the importance of the constituency, but really the building is not under the control of the Public Works department. It was assigned to the Department of National Defence and the minister of that department will be able to inform my hon. friend as to what progress has been made.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank the hon. gentleman for his courteous answer, but we are at just the same point as we were when the hon. member for West Middlesex and the hon. member for Quebec South complained so much about the duplication of management. This is too bad. I do not know whether I shall be here when the Minister of National Defence submits his estimates to the house. I am very anxious to hear about the matter and I am sorry the Minister of Public Works cannot inform us.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The Minister of National Defence is in his seat.

Mr. POULIOT: Yes, but this is not the time for him to speak.

Mr. CASGRAIN: He might, if the hon. member asked him.

Mr. POULIOT: I know, but one at a time.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Ask him.

Mr. POULIOT: No, I shall wait. I have a great respect for parliamentary traditions. At the same time I hope substantial progress has been made in the construction of that monument to the memory of the very distinguished member for that constituency. I trust, when the Minister of National Defence comes before us with his estimates, he will give us complete details about the building. Perhaps on account of the excellent work which is being done by this country at the League of Nations, the seat of the league will some day be transferred from Geneva to Calgary, and those barracks will become the palace of peace on this continent.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Perhaps now we have the explanation why some items go into public works and others have to go under the Public Works Construction Act. I presume the reason why the purchase of the bank building at Vancouver had to come under public works was because it could hardly be put under the Public Works Construction Act which is for the purpose of relieving unemployment. The minister will perhaps now say if that is the fact.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): If my hon. friend will read again the Public Works Construction Act, he will notice in the schedule that moneys are appropriated for certain purposes. There are two general votes and under the wording of those general votes money could not be appropriated for the purchase of this building, so it had to come in in this way. It is the only way in which this could be done.

Item agreed to.

Public buildings—British Columbia—
Armstrong—purchase of building for postal purposes, etc., $7,000.
Chemainus—public building, $37,000.
Creston—public building, $30,000.
Dominion public buildings—improvements and repairs, $35,000.
Hollyburn—public building, $50,700.
Kelowna—public building, $65,300.
Mission City—public building, $30,000.
Penticton—public building, $61,000.
Vancouver—instalment on purchase of armoury, $17,100.
Vancouver public building—to meet one year's interest at 5 per cent on mortgage of $400,000, $20,000.

Mr. REID: Before asking some particular questions regarding these items, I wonder whether the minister would be good enough to answer some questions regarding the public works program.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes.

Mr. REID: Is there a general vote from which moneys can be taken under the $40,000,000 program?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): There are two general votes in the schedule to the act, one for public buildings and one for harbours and rivers.

Mr. REID: So that the government could make from those funds appropriations for works that were not under the schedule?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Yes.

Mr. REID: I ask that because I notice in the statement brought down to the house, considerable expenditures had been made which had not been included specifically in the items as brought down. That is what prompted the question. Under the present item I notice six or seven buildings are mentioned. Would the minister explain for what purpose they are being constructed?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The first item, Armstrong, is for the purchase of the building formerly occupied by the Canadian Bank of Commerce in the town of Armstrong, to provide for post office accommodation.

Mr. REID: There are six more. The Armstrong item is specifically mentioned as being a postal building, but the other six are just called public buildings.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The Chemainus item is for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building for postal purposes. The Creston one is a post office building. The Hollyburn one, Vancouver North, is for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building for postal purposes.

[Mr. H. A. Stewart.]

Mr. REID: There are two others: Mission City and Penticton.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): These are all for post office purposes.

Mr. REID: While I am particularly pleased to see the large expenditure for public buildings in British Columbia, because since coming to Ottawa I have always been gratified to see expenditures made in connection with works in that province, I am going to place before the minister a building project that I think should receive consideration. I believe I would be remiss in my duty did I not lay the matter before him. For at least the past three years I have appealed for a post office building in the city of New Westminster. In 1928 plans were made for alterations to the present building and those plans were approved by the postal authorities. The present building was erected in 1900, quite a few years ago, when there was a population of some 10,000 people. It is safe to say that the postal facilities provided in those days are not adequate for present day requirements. The population of the city has grown to about 18,000. They are taking care of the greater part of the municipality of Burnaby, besides all the mail of the Fraser valley. It is a positive disgrace to see the condition under which the men who sort the letters and the letter carriers have to work. They go through an underground tunnel into a small building at the back and there they are crowded. If they want to turn around, they have to go outside. They are working back to back. There is no room at all to work and the sanitary conditions and the ventilation of the building are terrible. If it had belonged to some corporation, I believe the city authorities would have condemned it. Last year under the relief act for public works an appropriation was made for a $30,000 customs building on the Pacific highway. I was glad to see money spent there, but I would like to know who proposed the building on the Pacific highway because I know the district fairly well, having been reeve there for some nine years. The post office building was required far more than the customs building. Not that I was objecting to the customs building—go ahead and put up more buildings; but here is a plea with respect to a building already belonging to the government and in which the conditions are terrible. We find six or seven buildings being constructed for postal purposes in other cities, and I am not objecting; I am not jealous of the other districts which are being looked after, but it seems that we in New Westminster are being entirely overlooked. I ask the minister for some consideration.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The building constructed on the highway was for immigration and customs purposes at the border, where I believe there is very heavy traffic.

Mr. REID: Who proposed it?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The Department of National Revenue said they required the accommodation. It was not started on the initiative of the Department of Public Works; we were simply meeting the requirements of the other departments in order that they might be able to give the services they have to give at that point. In regard to New Westminster, I believe my hon. friend has suggested the construction of a building there—

Mr. REID: The alteration.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): He has suggested it on more than one occasion. But if we had acceded to all the suggestions and requests for alterations and improvements and additions and new buildings, the public works program would have reached perhaps $75,000,000 or $80,000,000 instead of $40,000,000. We are doing the best we can. I know my hon. friend feels that his claim is as good as some others; perhaps it is, but we cannot meet them all.

Mr. REID: I did not object to the expenditure of the $30,000, but half of that building is comparatively new. It was altered in 1928 or 1929, and it may well be that it will be done away with if they construct the building on the Pacific highway. That is why I made the statement that the post office was far more in need of alteration and addition than the customs building on the Pacific highway. I was surprised when I saw the estimate last year—not that I object to it, but if we are to go ahead and encourage a works program something should be provided for my constituency with its large industrial population lying between New Westminster and Vancouver. This post office building, I am sure, is required more than many of the other projects.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I have no announcement to make as to any program of public works. There are those who think that a public works program does not relieve the unemployment situation very much after all.

Mr. REID: I am not one of them.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am glad to hear that. Undoubtedly a large measure of at least temporary relief is afforded by the construction of useful and necessary public works. That was the object the government had in view in launching this program, which will be well under way during the coming summer, and I am sure the result will be beneficial. We have many communications expressing satisfaction with the results and the measure of employment that has been afforded. The situation at New Westminster will have to be reviewed in connection with any program that may be brought down similar to the one launched last year.

Mr. REID: I see that in the instalment on purchase of armoury, Vancouver, there is an increase of $3,000 over last year. Would the minister say what that is due to?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The $17,100 is made up of the third instalment on the purchase, amounting to $13,942.63, and a fire insurance premium for three years from March 10, 1936, making a total of $17,062.63, say $17,100.

Mr. REID: Did I understand the minister to say he is still giving consideration to the matter of the New Westminster post office in the event of a public works program being brought down?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I said it would be considered in that connection.

Mr. REID: Seriously, I hope.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Is it possible to have this item stand over, or can an item under it be discussed on some other item?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): If there is any particular item my hon. friend wishes to bring up I would prefer that he do it now.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): The minister knows that for the last five years we have urged the necessity of a public building in Prince Rupert. It is not necessary to put all the particulars on Hansard again. The government has already acquired a site and excavated it. Has the minister given consideration to the application made by public bodies such as the city council and the board of trade of Prince Rupert concerning that project?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This matter has been presented to the department on more than one occasion by the hon. gentleman himself, both personally and by letter. The expenditure involved is large. We have the site, but to construct a building there such as is suggested would involve a very large expenditure, and up to this time it has not been thought possible to provide for it. It again is a matter that is under consideration in connection with any program that may be undertaken.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): I notice that under this item there are six new public buildings for British Columbia. I hope Prince Rupert has not been forgotten just because I happen to be on the opposition side. I am sorry even to mention that view, but other new buildings listed in this item are all in places smaller than Prince Rupert, and the strategic position that Prince Rupert holds and the revenues obtained there in the different departmental offices I think merit consideration. If this matter cannot be discussed on any other item I would ask to have the item stand over, because I am expecting some information from Prince Rupert in connection with it.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I propose to leave one item standing, as we usually do, and I have no objection to my hon. friend discussing the matter to which he refers under that item, even if this is passed. As to his remark that he hoped that opposition members had not been overlooked, I call attention to the fact that two of these buildings, the one at Hollyburn and that at Vancouver, are both in opposition ridings.

Mr. REID: Having crititized the department I wish also to offer a word of thanks to the minister on behalf of the dyking commission on Lulu island for coming to their assistance last year by providing rock to save the dyke from breaking. I think it is only proper that I should do so.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Thank you.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Is there a possibility of consideration being given the Prince Rupert building in the supplementary estimates?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I do not know whether there will be any supplementaries.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Would there be any chance under the $40,000,000 building scheme of 1934? Does the minister mean to say it is practically out of the question to give any consideration to a public building in Prince Rupert for 1935?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Under the general vote in the act of 1934, as my hon. friend knows, most of the items are specifically set out and any construction such as that proposed in his constituency would be entirely outside the provisions of that act and would have to be provided for by a separate item, either in another bill or in the estimates.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): I have the proposed expenditure under the act of 1934 and I find that approximately half of it has not been ear-marked for anything. So I would ask the minister to give consideration to that building, which has been before the department for many years. I would remind him that a site has been acquired and the excavation has been completed, so that some consideration must have been given the strategic point occupied by Prince Rupert in connection with central and northern British Columbia. I would ask the minister to give further consideration to it, and I reserve the right to discuss this question further on the item that is to be left open for that purpose.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Quite so.

Item agreed to.

Public buildings—Rents, Repairs, Furniture, Heating, etc.—
Ottawa Public Buildings and Grounds—
Elevator attendants, $108,000.
Departments generally—char service, including $150 for firing the noon gun, $449,400.
Heating, including salaries of engineers, firemen and watchmen, $395,000.
Light and power, including roads and bridges, $178,000.
Repairs, improvements, additions and maintenance, $343,000.
Rideau Hall—allowance for fuel and light, $19,000.
Rideau Hall—improvements, furniture and maintenance, $40,700.
Telephone service, $85,500.
Water, $67,000.

Mr. COOTE: Might I ask the minister if it is proposed to erect any new buildings in Ottawa this year?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The only buildings that it is proposed to erect in Ottawa this year are those provided under the Public Works Construction Act, which include an office building on Wellington street, an addition to the mint, a postal terminal and an administration building at the central experimental farm.

Mr. COOTE: I should like to urge on the minister the desirability of commencing this year the erection of a building on Wellington street, or somewhere close to the other government buildings, for the bureau of statistics. That is one of the departments used very much by members of this house, and they would make even greater use of it if it were located somewhere close to this building. It is a shame to house the bureau of statistics in that old saw mill down on Sussex street. It was too bad the former government ever bought that property and put the bureau down there. I hope the Minister of Public Works will see fit to provide a building in this part of the city as soon as possible. Certainly it would be sound economics for the government to do that, and I hope the minister will give it his very careful consideration.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Similar suggestions have been made from time to time, and they are very worthy of attention. The quarters now occupied by the bureau of statistics are looked upon as temporary and not by any means satisfactory. I hope that some day the bureau will be suitably housed in a building of its own, adapted to its peculiar needs.

Mr. COOTE: I was over at the bureau a few days ago, and the quarters are most unsatisfactory. I do not see how the staff can possibly do anything like their best work, and in addition they should be closer to these buildings and more available to members of this house. There is a wealth of information to be obtained there of which we might make very good use if we could obtain it. As the minister says, these suggestions have been made from time to time; I am sure I have heard them for the last five years at least, but we do not get any action. I hope next year it will not be necessary to make the suggestion again; I hope the building will be under way long before that. I trust that when the minister brings down his supplementary estimates he will make provision for commencing this work. We have plenty of building material here in Canada with which to put up two or three good administration buildings to house all the government departments. We have owned this property on Wellington street for years; why not make use of it? We have the material and the men, and now that the Department of Public Works is being relieved of so much work surely it can easily provide the necessary oversight and architectural services. I do want to urge the construction of a building for the bureau of statistics, because their present quarters are a disgrace. Every time I go down there I am ashamed of this parliament because we do not provide a better building for such an important department.

Mr. POULIOT: I entirely agree with what has been said by the hon. member for Macleod with regard to the bureau of statistics, but I have other constructive suggestions to offer to the minister as well. The other day I mentioned the supreme court building. It is a shame to have the Supreme Court of Canada housed in its present quarters, and it is ridiculous to construct a new mounted police building before providing for the supreme court. My hon. friend knows that it is nonsensical, and he knows the importance of the Supreme Court of Canada. The people who are in the mounted police will have a palace before the supreme court is given the attention it deserves, which is most unreasonable.

I have another suggestion as well. We need a new fireproof library to house the treasures we have there. There are also treasures in the library of the Supreme Court of Canada. There are some very precious and rare books which are not in the parliamentary library but which may be found in the supreme court library, and very often members of this house who belong to the bar have to send for those books. The supreme court building is not fireproof, and if that library should be destroyed it could not be replaced. The other day the chairman ruled me out of order when I referred to those books, but I think this is perfectly relevant now, and I should like to take this opportunity to say a word about them. In 1848 the legislative buildings in Quebec were destroyed by fire, together with the library, which was a great loss to the country. New buildings and a new library were erected, but in 1878 there was another fire which destroyed the buildings and many very valuable books. What would happen if there should be a fire in the parliamentary library or the supreme court building? All those books would be destroyed, and no amount of money could replace them. If the minister is not going to spend a great deal of money he might do something at least. He might put rubber tile flooring in the parliamentary library as well as in the supreme court library; that would be something. It is almost impossible to work in the library here because of the noise. The floor creaks; there are typewriters going; people are talking, and there is no suitable place to work. No man from outside can take advantage of the books in our library. Members of this house can take them to their rooms and work there, but that privilege is not open to students and scholars from outside. This is a situation which should be looked after. I do not say this for the benefit of the contractors; I say it in the general interest. There are valuable books in our libraries. I have found statutes with the leaves uncut going back a hundred years. They have not been consulted, but they are here and they may be consulted again a hundred years hence. They are useful, just the same, and it would be hard to replace them. Therefore I suggest that the minister accept these suggestions in good part; they are offered in the broadest spirit and in the public interest. I draw the attention of the minister to these facts because he is a man of learning, a man who has a first class personal library, who knows the value of books and knows how much the country would suffer if there were a fire which destroyed either the library or the books. The same observations would apply to the supreme court.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): With much the hon. member has said I agree. I do not suppose there has been any time in the past fifteen years when the same conditions have not prevailed, and when mention has not been made in this chamber about the necessity for providing better accommodation for the supreme court. That accommodation has not been provided, however; for one reason or another successive governments have not felt they could undertake the task.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): The judges were opposed to it.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Differences of opinion exist as to where the building should be located, the type of building, and whether or not it should be devoted exclusively to the dominion courts or should be a building embracing accommodation for all the courts. There has been considerable discussion as to the site and type of the building. There is the further fact that the city of Ottawa has been allotted a large sum of money for expenditures under the building program. It is felt that the money should be distributed rather than concentrated in one place. I agree when the hon. member states the accommodation for the supreme court is inadequate and out of date and that steps should be taken to remedy those conditions.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank the minister for his observations, and I am pleased to note he agrees with the suggestions which have been offered. It is absurd, however, to make such large expenditures for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police when we do not make an expenditure for the judges of the supreme court. May I ask the minister if he would consider seriously the suggestion of having a rubber tile floor placed in the library of parliament?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The accommodation for which provision has been made and which the hon. member describes as a building for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is in fact an office building. At present we rent quarters on Rideau street in the Larocque building and we find those quarters altogether inadequate. The policing of the provinces has been taken over by the federal department. The provinces are paying for these services which have involved an increase in staff and the necessity for increased accommodation. The new building will provide for office accommodation.

Mr. POULIOT: Would a rubber tile floor in the parliamentary library be considered by the hon. member?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I do not know about that; prior to the fire the floor was considered a work of art, and was said to be in keeping with the architecture of the remainder of that beautiful room. The floor is not fireproof and has undoubtedly been injured by the water which came in and loosened the boards. But to put linoleum or rubber tiles over it would to a certain extent I fear destroy the character and architectural design of the room.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank the hon. member for his courteous answer, but I must say I disagree with him entirely in his artistic appreciation of the interior of the library. From the outside it is a jewel, but from the inside it is ugly. All the woodwork in the interior is in my view very ugly and out of fashion; the French call it style baroque. The floor is now out of order, a condition which I believe was caused by the flow of water, and does not look at all attractive. The only redeeming feature about the interior of the building is its height. I must say however that one finds great difficulty in finding books, because there is not proper accommodation for them. The most useful books are in the basement, and because of the terrific heat from the pipes in winter and the fact that it is like a cave in the summer one does not care to go there. I wonder if the minister has ever gone down there to look at some of the old books. I believe the situation is as bad as the one described as existing in the New Westminster post office. The interior of the library is the ugliest piece of architecture in Ottawa. Outside it is beautiful. I should like to have it made fireproof and have it beautified by being made simpler.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I agree with the hon. member when he states that the arrangement and construction of the library are not modern, and that it is not fireproof, but I do not agree with him when he states it is not beautiful or is not a work of art.

Mr. POULIOT: We will leave it to the chairman to decide.

St. Juste du Lac—wharf extension, $8,500.
Harbours and rivers generally—for maintenance of services, no new works to be undertaken, $400,000.

Mr. POULIOT: May I thank the Minister of Public Works for the item of $139,000 for the enlargement of the wharf at Riviere du Loup. I deeply appreciate the consideration the minister has given to that beautiful place on the south shore of the river St. Lawrence known as Riviere du Loup. The amount voted for the enlargement of the wharf is substantial. What amount will be spent for steel, what amount for lumber, and what amount for labour?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): This is an important wharf over which there is a heavy volume of traffic. I cannot state definitely how much steel or timber will be required; that is a matter to be determined after the plans have been prepared. The figure appearing in the vote is a rough estimate of the amount which will be required to do the work.

Mr. POULIOT: I understand betweer $85,000 and $90,000 will be spent for steel.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): My information shows that sheet steel piling will cost about $79,000.

Mr. POULIOT: That is satisfactory, and I thank the hon. gentleman. I highly appreciate the way the minister has dealt with the member for Témiscouata since he has been minister. May I tell him that I know he put that amount in the estimates in appreciation of the savings that I helped him to make in his own department when I told him what was going on in the sale of materials, and which resulted in substantial sums of money being refunded to the department. I told him also of what was going on in other constituencies where some people were selling rotten timber for wharves, and he was kind enough to send the chief engineer there and to have all the rock fill taken out from the wharf in order that the lumber might be tested to the bottom. That meant a great saving to the department, and it is because of that the minister has put this amount in the estimates. There is something else. The government has lent a big amount of money to Newfoundland. That was denounced here and the government did not lend any more after I denounced it; they were so thankful to me for telling them the right thing to do that they said, "Well, Témiscouata, you have saved us millions of dollars through our not lending any more money to Newfoundland, and we will give you something for your wharf at Rivière du Loup." I thank the minister and the government for what they have done in appreciation of the work the Liberals are doing.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I am not sure my hon. friend's deductions are altogether warranted. There were other elements that contributed to the construction of the wharf at Rivière du Loup in addition to those he has just mentioned, although they, of course, had their place. I would not say, however, that they were the determining factor.

Mr. POULIOT: May I say to the minister that what I have told him was just a repetition of what I had heard from the voice of my conscience.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Can the minister give me any information regarding the enlargement of the wharf at Pointe au Pic, the contract for which was let last fall? I am told that the firm of Hill & Sibbald, of St. Catharines, Ontario, got the contract, but did not go on with the construction of the work, and that afterwards some other firm was to have been given the contract because the first contractors would not undertake the work for certain reasons; I do not know what they were. I should like to know who really has the contract for the construction of that wharf, and if the work is to go on, and if so when it is to be done?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): The firm to whom the contract was awarded is the one mentioned by my hon. friend, Hill & Sibbald. The department has nothing to indicate that they will not go on with the work. Recent correspondence indicates that they have ordered their sheet piling, and so far as we know they propose going on with the work.

Mr. CASGRAIN: When will it be proceeded with—next spring?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): At the opening of navigation.

Mr. CASGRAIN: When my hon. friend speaks of sheet piling, may I ask if this is not the first time that sheet piling has been used for that purpose in that district? I do not think it has ever been used for work such as that down below Quebec.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I do not know of any instance in which sheet piling has been used in that locality, but it is not an experiment at all.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What I want to know from the minister is whether sheet piling has been tested in construction of this nature below Quebec. I have never heard of its being used in that district, although it may have been used elsewhere. Are there any other wharves below Quebec in which sheet piling has been used?

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I can only say that in the opinion of the engineers of the department it is a sound and safe and suitable type of work for that locality.

Mr. POULIOT: I also wish to thank the minister for the amount provided in the estimates for the wharf extension at St. Juste du Lac.

Mr. COOTE: I should have asked this question under item 110, Mr. Chairman. It is in regard to the heating in this building. There are some rooms up on the sixth floor which it is almost impossible to keep warm enough to sit in during the cold weather.

Mr. SPENCE: On every floor.

Mr. COOTE: I have taken the matter up with the minister, and it is perhaps necessary to make this public protest. I was in one room on the sixth floor and I noticed that the member had an electric heater during the very cold weather to keep himself warm. All that would be necessary would be to put in a little bigger radiator with a larger radiating surface in the rooms. As it is now, in very cold weather you cannot have the windows open for ventilation for more than two or three minutes because it gets too cold. I hope before another cold winter comes the minister will see that better provision is made for heating some of these rooms.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): We will attend to that.

Mr. GOLDING: I should like to take advantage of this opportunity to bring to the attention of the minister the situation at Bayfield. I have had some correspondence with him and I am glad to note that there is indication of some intention to do some dredging there and also to make further repairs to the pier. I have talked with the fishermen and they are firmly of the opinion that until the breakwater that was destroyed some years ago is restored, conditions will not be good. When I was in London last year the engineer gave me an estimate of $12,000 as the cost of restoring the ninety feet of breakwater that was washed away some years ago. If that work were done it would be money well spent and would result in a saving of money in the future. I should like on behalf of the fishermen at Bayfield to ask the minister to give consideration to their request.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): A report is being secured at the present time in view of verbal representations made recently by my hon. friend, and it will be followed up.

Mr. GOLDING: Thank you.

Mr. BURY: Notwithstanding the outcry against titles in some quarters, there is a clamour for the creation of a pier at Seba on lake Wabamun, and I would ask if anything is being provided in this vote for that purpose.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): No.

Mr. BURY: Is there any intention to provide for it?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I will have to investigate and see.

Mr. BURY: The application was put in some time ago, and I understood that it had been favourably reported on.

Mr. MOORE (Ontario): Before the committee rises may I ask the minister what he proposes to do about Whitby harbour and the requests that have been made for Whitby.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): We propose to look into it.

Mr. MOORE: To look into the harbour? When does the minister propose to look into the harbour? I should like to be with him when he does it.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): I should be delighted to go up and look at it, and even swim in it.

Mr. MOORE (Ontario): May I say that I will extend the hospitality of the riding when the minister goes into it.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Accepted at once.

MARINE AND FISHERIES

First report of the select standing committee on marine and fisheries.—Mr. McLure (for Mr. Ernst).

MEAT AND CANNED FOODS ACT

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Acting Minister of Fisheries) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Meat and Canned Foods Act to provide that the governor in council may from time to time prescribe a tariff of fees that shall be charged for the inspection of canned fish and shellfish.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

FISHERIES ACT, 1932

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Acting Minister of Fisheries) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Fisheries Act, 1932, to provide that except where licence fees are prescribed in the act, the governor in council may from time to time prescribe the fees that shall be charged for fishery licences.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

NORTH BATTLEFORD ENUMERATORS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister): On February 26 the hon. member for North Battleford (Mr. McIntosh) explained to the house at some length that he had received a communication from his constituency stating that some of the enumerators had not been paid for the work they did in preparing the voters' lists. I have made inquiries on the subject and have received the following letter signed by Watson Sellar, comptroller of the treasury:

> Section 48 of the Franchise Act requires the auditor general to tax all accounts submitted by the enumerators. On February 14, and again on the 15th, this office received applications for cheques from the auditor general to pay the accounts for North Battleford. Cheques were drawn on each day, and delivered to the auditor general, for they are mailed from his offices.
> I believe these payments cleaned up all accounts for that constituency, with one exception. In this case, it is believed a claim could be made, but the person concerned has not sent in an account.
> This office has no arrears to catch up with respect to payments to enumerators. Cheques are drawn the same day as the application is made by the auditor general. To date, approximately 39,000 cheques have been issued, and by the time a further 1,000 will have been received, the work should be completed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I call your attention to the fact that when the hon. member raised this question on February 26 all the cheques in payment of these accounts had gone out ten or twelve days before. I submit to the hon. gentleman that although he might not have got as much publicity as in that way, he could have obtained this information more easily, and without taking up the time of the house, if he had telephoned to either the auditor general or the comptroller of the treasury.

Mr. McINTOSH: I did not think the right hon. gentleman would be able to give as complete an answer as he has; therefore I am quite satisfied.

BRITISH SETTLERS

REPORTED DISTRESS OF IMMIGRANTS UNDER THREE THOUSAND BRITISH FAMILIES SCHEME IN NORTHERN SASKATCHEWAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): It has been drawn to my attention that there are in northern Saskatchewan some British settlers who were brought in under the Three Thousand British Families Scheme, and who now find themselves destitute. These people, because of the fact that they have been in Canada over five years, have no further claim on the scheme under which they came, and the municipalities have refused to accept any responsibility for them. Therefore I would ask the acting Minister of Immigration (Mr. Gordon) if he has any knowledge concerning them, or if he will have the matter looked into.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Acting Minister of Immigration and Colonization): I know something of the situation to which the hon. member has referred. I have been in correspondence with the settlers. In view of the question asked I shall look into the matter again and make a more extended reply on Monday or Tuesday.

HORNBY SETTLEMENT PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. VINCENT DUPUIS (Laprairie-Napierville): I received to-day a communication concerning a policy of immigration by a gentleman named General Hornby. The first paragraph reads as follows:

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. DUPUIS: I am in order, Mr. Speaker; in order to put my question it is necessary that I put the house in possession of this:

> One of the reasons why many of us are in favour of an early resumption of British immigration into Canada is that it would result in immediate productive employment for our own people.

My question to the acting Minister of Immigration (Mr. Gordon) is this. Is the Conservative party still in favour of a policy of immigration on a large scale as enunciated by General McRae, and if so, has it given its approval and support to the scheme of General Hornby?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Acting Minister of Immigration and Colonization): Mr. Speaker, I can set the hon. member's mind at rest with respect to part, at least, of his interrogation. The Conservative party or this government will not subscribe to the kind of immigration that prevailed under the late government. We have not set up any barriers against British immigration into Canada since we came into power. I am not acquainted with General McRae's scheme; it has been referred to in the house on a number of occasions—

Some hon. MEMBERS: General Hornby's.

Mr. GORDON: I think it is General McRae. As far as I am aware, while the scheme that was proposed by General McRae was rather an extensive one, he at no time advocated a great movement of immigrants into Canada without regard to their desirability. As my colleague reminds me, the provinces have been consulted by this government from time to time in the last four and a half years with respect to the admission of immigrants who have come into Canada. The question is a very large one, and I have no doubt that during the passage of the estimates of the department ample opportunity will be given to discuss it from all angles.

Mr. DUPUIS: Would the minister be kind enough to produce all correspondence, telegrams and communications between the government and General Hornby or any other party interested in this scheme of immigration, if any?

Mr. GORDON: This question arose in the house some weeks ago. The Department of Immigration was not in possession of complete details of what has been referred to in the press as the Hornby scheme, I therefore went to the trouble, because of the inquiry that was made, to procure from General Hornby complete details of his activities. About ten days ago all that information was tabled by me and is available to the hon. member.

Mr. GOBEIL: He is not up to date.

WESTERN POULTRY MARKETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. WEIR (Macdonald): I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) if he is in a position to report on the vote taken recently in connection with the poultry pool scheme in western Canada. If so, can he give details of the result.

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): A report in reference to the vote will be available at the beginning of next week. The officials in charge are expected to return on Monday.

CITY OF OTTAWA AGREEMENT

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works) moved the second reading of Bill No. 23, to authorize an agreement between His Majesty the King and the corporation of the city of Ottawa.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

FARMERS' CREDITORS ACT

AMENDMENTS TO FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT, 1934

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 10, to amend the Farmer's Creditors Arrangement Act, 1934.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to delay the house for more than a few minutes on the second reading of this very important bill, but because I believe there is a misunderstanding in the minds of some members of this house as well as many members of the general public in regard to the question of farmers' debts, I do want to bring to their attention a few facts to demonstrate the need for the legislation known as the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act.

Figures which I secured from one of the chartered banks, accompanying a chart published in its recent monthly bulletin in regard to the farm cash income of Canada, show that for the years 1926, 1927, 1928 and 1929, the four pre-depression years the total farm cash income in Canada was $4,012,000,000. In the years 1931, 1932, 1933 and 1934, the last four years, the farm cash income was only $1,744,000,000, so in those four years there was a drop of $2,268,000,000, or 57 per cent. That is the cause of the present terrific burden of farm debts which really makes this legislation necessary. The average drop in cash revenue per farm in Canada for the four years amounts to $3,136; that is the loss in revenue to the average farmer during that period. That total amount of $2,268,000,000 would have been sufficient to pay every farm debt in Canada, to wipe the slate clean and leave over an amount equal to $1,000 per farmer. That drop in revenue of $3,136 per farm resulted from a drop in the price level of farm products. It has not been due, as some people seem to think, to crop failures through drought or otherwise. It is true there have been crop failures in some areas, but on the whole production during the last four years has equalled the production of pre-depression years. I think the fact should be emphasized, that the decreased revenue is due to a drop in price levels.

The article to which I have referred indicates that the farm cash income, converted into dollars having the same purchasing power as in 1926—and I quote these figures to show that the drop in farm purchasing power, while not quite as great as the drop in money income, has been very severe indeed—for the four years from 1926 to 1929, would be $3,994,000,000, while the farm cash income, computed on the same basis, for the four years 1931 to 1934, would amount to $2,384,000,000. As a result there has been a loss of purchasing power to the farmers in the last four years amounting to $1,610,000,000. When you consider that the net cash income of the farmers in Canada is the greatest source of purchasing power in the country it is no wonder that a business man in western Canada should have said a year ago, "If it is true, as some modernists say, that there is no hell, where has business gone, anyway?"

On Monday last I gave the house figures showing the loss of farm purchasing power in Canada for the past four years as compared with Australia, and I need not go into the matter again. I estimated that the drop in farm revenue in Canada was $852,000,000 more than it would have been if we had had the same money policy as Australia. There is an impression in this country, and I think the statement has been made in this house, that farmers in Canada are better off than are the farmers in most other countries in the world. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that this impression is absolutely wrong. The hon. member for Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) gave us very good proof just a couple of days ago that the farmers of the United States are not as badly off as we are in Canada and I should like to direct the attention of the house to the situation of the farmers in the Argentine, who have a sixty per cent exchange advantage over us. In the old days the Argentine peso, under the old parity, was worth forty-two cents in Canada. It is now worth twenty-five cents. If a shipment of corned beef or any other commodity from the Argentine to Canada brought the Argentine exporter $1,000 in Canadian currency, under the old parity, when the peso was worth forty-two cents, he would have converted his $1,000 into 2,380 pesos. At the present rate of exchange, however, he would receive 4,000 pesos, which gives him an advantage of sixty per cent as compared with the position he occupied previously.

Mr. SENN: Is the hon. gentleman arguing in favour of the dumping regulations?

Mr. COOTE: No, I am not; I am just trying to show the causes of the farmers' debts. I say one great cause has been a wrong monetary policy, and I want to show the present situation of the Canadian farmer when he exports his goods to other countries of the world, where he has to meet the competition of the Argentine, Denmark, Australia and New Zealand, which are the four countries I have particularly in mind. I am pointing out that with the proceeds of a shipment of goods to Canada or any outside country the Argentine farmer is able to pay sixty per cent more interest or sixty per cent more debt than the Canadian farmer would be able to pay with the same shipment, and that is one of the causes of farm debts today. As a matter of fact the principal cause of the farm debt situation is an out of date and altogether obsolete monetary policy which has been pursued in Canada for a long period of years.

Whether we export bacon in competition with Denmark, dairy products in competition with New Zealand or wheat in competition with the Argentine or Australia, we are up against the fact that we are labouring under an exchange disadvantage. I know that some hon. members will pooh pooh the idea that this is any burden to us, but they need think back only two or three years to the time when the present government placed an exchange dumping duty on goods coming from Great Britain because they said Canadian manufacturers could not compete with British manufacturers although they were labouring under an exchange disadvantage of only twenty-five per cent. How in the name of heaven can the farmers continue indefinitely to compete with the rest of the world under this exchange handicap? They have done so for four years, but they cannot go on much longer.

Then I want to bring to the attention of the government and of the house another matter which places us at a considerable disadvantage, and again I want to quote the example of Australia. In that country the federal government has distributed in bonuses to wheat growers the sum of £8,429,000, or in round figures something over $40,000,000. That takes in the four years 1931 to 1934, and it includes £4,000,000 that was voted by the Australian government last year, part of which has been distributed and the rest of which will be distributed during the current crop year. In addition to that, as has often been stated in this house, the government of Australia reduced the rate of interest on all debts by twenty-two and a half per cent of the existing rate. That was done three years ago, I believe. I have also been told within the last two days that the Australian government at the last session set aside the sum of over $50,000,000 to be loaned to the farmers, without interest, in cases where farm creditors had made satisfactory arrangements of their debts with the farmers. I have not been able to verify that statement by anything I can find in the library but it was told to me by a responsible citizen and I give it to the house for what it is worth.

Most other countries have taken some action to deal with the debt situation of the farmers. May I remind hon. members of the legislation passed in Brazil whereby the debts of all agriculturists were reduced by 50 per cent; that was a straight horizontal cut of all debts. The creditors who took the losses went to a certain court, proved their claims and were given bonds of the state of Brazil for the amount which had been written off. In other words the national credit of Brazil was used to reduce by 50 per cent the debts of the farmers of that country. The reasons given in the preamble to the Brazilian act might very well apply here, namely that the farmers had suffered under a policy which was presumed to be in the national interest, and that therefore it was the duty of the nation to assume 50 per cent of the burden of debt resting upon the farmers.

In Great Britain millions of pounds have been paid out in the form of bounties to their farmers. In New Zealand there has been legislation reducing the rate of interest and making provision for a reduction of debt in certain cases before the courts. The legislation is somewhat similar to that we are now considering. I should like to point out however that as I remember it there was in New Zealand legislation reducing to five per cent the rate of interest on all mortgages.

In South Africa there was legislation reducing the rate of interest payable by the farmer to three and a half per cent. That is all the farmer is required to pay. The government pays one and a half per cent, making a total of five per cent. The creditors are expected to accept this amount in full settlement of their interest claims. If they do not accept those terms a special tax is levied upon them which in effect taxes back to the state all the interest they collect in excess of five per cent.

In the Argentine not only have they the advantage of sixty per cent in the exchange rate, but action has been taken to reduce the rate of interest on approved bank loans to five per cent, and there has been a reduction in the rate of interest on mortgages. For two or three moments I shoud like to deal with the actual working out of the act now under consideration. Our legislation falls down at this point, namely, that there is no relief for the farmer who does not come under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. In most cases farm mortgages are still carrying eight per cent, in some cases nine per cent and so far as I know in the majority of cases the creditors are insisting upon the payment of those rates. I do not know of any way in which that practice can be stopped, unless it be by legislation. This parliament having jurisdiction over interest rates I feel it is our duty to legislate under this federal power towards limiting the rate of interest which can be collected on any farm mortgage. So far as I am concerned personally I should like to go farther than that and say that it should be limited on any mortgage. However at the moment we are dealing only with farm mortgages.

The figures I have quoted showing farmers' incomes should surely convince any fair-minded persons that farmers cannot pay eight per cent or nine per cent. A rate of four per cent to-day is just as burdensome to the farmers as eight per cent or nine per cent ten years ago or even six years ago. As a matter of fact it is more burdensome. I do not suppose more than 10,000 or 15,000 of our farmers will take advantage of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act to secure a reduction of their debt or a reduction in the rate of interest. Surely it is unfair to leave the rest of the farming population in the position of having to pay eight per cent or nine per cent interest on mortgages. Many of these people are denying themselves the real necessities of life. They have drawn on their savings, they have gone without many things they should have had and have reduced their standard of living down to a minimum in an endeavour to meet their monetary obligations in full. In other words they have done all this to maintain the sanctity of contract upon which our present system is built. I believe this house should do something to make it possible for that sanctity of contract to be maintained. Some people would say that we should not interfere, but I cannot agree with them. The extra purchasing power of money to-day and the increased purchasing power investors have had on their incomes for the past four years is I believe a complete justification or at least all the justification necessary for us to reduce the rate of interest, as I have suggested. We owe some action to that class of farmers who up to date have met their liabilities and who are not yet in a position where they will go to the administrators of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act and ask for relief.

So far as I have been able to find out the general policy of those administering the act is that in most cases—and I am speaking about the average case, not the worst cases—they are reducing the rate of interest to seven per cent. That is much too high a rate for any farmer to carry, and particularly for a man who has had his affairs rearranged under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. It is clear to all of us that if the board of review would write down his debts he must be in difficulties. In many cases however in connection with which action has been taken the farmer has been left with a rate of seven per cent on his remaining liabilities. In a great many cases—and I believe this might almost be said to be the rule adopted by one of the boards—they reduce the arrears of interest by one-third. The farmer with two-thirds of his arrears added to his principal and paying a rate of seven per cent is in most cases in a far worse position than if he had no arrears and was still paying eight per cent. I believe it is safe to say that only in extreme cases have boards of review set a rate lower than seven per cent,—and I am talking now about my own province, because I do not know how the boards function in the other provinces.

My reason for speaking of this is that loan companies seem to be exercised over the action of the board,—or pretend to be. I am informed that some of their eastern officials have travelled out to our province to interview the board and the provincial government, and to tell them that if this policy is adhered to there will be fatal reactions or repercussions. So far as I am concerned I wish to emphasize that seven per cent is too high a rate of interest for farmers to pay. I believe the act should be amended so as to fix a maximum rate of four per cent or five per cent. If that reduction will endanger the position of any of the loan companies then the legislation should be made wide enough so that the reduction may be carried right through to the persons who originally invested in the debentures or bonds of the mortgage company.

Finally I should like to bring to the attention of the house the actual position of the farmers who have been paying this rate of eight per cent for the last twenty or twenty-five years. I have before me a letter which was clipped from a western paper, and was sent to me. It arrived in my mail this morning. This is part of a letter written by a farmer in Saskatchewan to his creditor in Waterloo, Ontario, stating:

> Received your notice calling for payment of $6,238.92. Some figures. This amount has grown from $4,000 in 1928, our last crop, to $6,238.92 this year. This is certainly some racket. I wish I could make money as fast. Your offer of giving $2 for every dollar paid on interest arrears is a step in the right direction but of no avail, as we have had no crop this year to pay anything, so you can put a few more figures on for next year, they look nice anyway.
> You will soon have it up to $10,000 on paper, and on paper it will remain unless you make a real adjustment of balance and give me a definite amount to pay.
> I will now list a few figures. As you know, the original loan when assumed by me was $6,000.

[Mr. Coote.]

He proceeded to show by figures what payments had been made, the amount totalling $8,355.96, and then he says:

> I have paid $8,355.96, and according to notice, I still owe you more than I originally did.

That is the case with so many farmers. Here is a farmer in my own constituency, living only a few miles from my own farm, who has paid eight per cent on a loan of $500 for twenty years. That is, he has paid $800 interest, but he still owes the $500, and the mortgage company is still collecting eight per cent. Now if this man had had a loan at 5½ per cent, which I think would have been a fair rate of interest, I think his loan would now be paid off and his farm be free of debt, but as it is he is still carrying that load of $500. When he applied to the farm loan board this year he was told that they were afraid they could not give him a loan large enough to meet all his liabilities. He wanted a loan of $2,000 on 240 acres. The matter is still under consideration by the board. I am not referring to the board's action at the moment. I just want to use this case for the sake of illustration. If there had been a reduction in the rate of interest of even one per cent, if this man had had to pay seven per cent instead of the eight per cent, and that one per cent had been used towards amortizing his loan, I think by this time he would have had it cut in two. I do want to see the rate of interest low enough so that these farmers can look forward with some reasonable expectation of having their farms cleared before they pass out from this world.

In conclusion, I want to urge upon the minister that before this bill is finally taken out of committee he should make the necessary amendment to the last section of the bill to provide a maximum rate of interest on farm mortgages for at least a term of years. I think that maximum should not be more than five per cent at the outside, and I would hope that it could be done at four per cent, and if necessary make it so that it will carry through to the original investor in the mortgage company's bonds. I do not want to bring the mortgage companies into the bankrupt class; there are so many farmers there now, and it would not give me any pleasure to see any more people or corporations put into that position, but I think that is the best thing to do under the circumstances. I believe it is far better for these people to have a mortgage under which they will receive their money at five per cent than one at eight per cent when they are not going to get their money, and it is better for an investor to have a bond at three or four per cent when he is going to be paid than one at five per cent which he is afraid is not going to be made good.

Mr. J. T. HACKETT (Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, the amendments which are before the house are aimed at remedying some of the inadequacies of the act. I think it is imperative that those inadequacies be remedied, and remedied at once, because if the traditional delays of the law are going to overtake the administration of this act it will fail, and fail miserably, in its purpose. It is failing in part now because the delay of sixty days granted to the farmer who makes a proposal under the act, having expired in many cases before they have been disposed of by the board of review, the seizing creditor has been able to go on with his action or his execution.

I furthermore note that in Quebec at least that the act is inadequate in that no reference is made to a very common type of transaction by which a property is acquired, and there does not appear to be in the amendments any proposal to meet this inadequacy.

I would draw to the minister's attention that an accumulation of appeals and the delay which must elapse before they can be disposed of endangers the working of the act itself.

Mr. C. E. BOTHWELL (Swift Current): Complaint has been made that this act in its operation has the effect of penalizing the local creditor possibly for the benefit of the mortgage companies and the secured creditor.

The complaint is also made that in the case of a first mortgage on land no reductions are ordinarily made excepting a reduction in the arrears of interest, and possibly a very small cut in the rate of interest. When a farmer finds it necessary to make application to the official under this act, and that official finds that a farmer is in such circumstances that he needs the benefit of the act, then it does seem to me that an adjustment should be made whereby that debtor should not be required to pay more than the legal rate of interest from that time on until he is able to get on his feet, that legal rate of interest being five per cent at the moment. The reduction that was referred to by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) from eight per cent to seven per cent is of no special value to that farmer at all because he is in such circumstances that he needs a greater reduction than that.

Then I believe, too, that all of these officials who have charge of administering the act should be instructed that they are not to approve of a scheme that only has the effect of penalizing the local merchants and the local people in the community in which the debtor lives and allows the mortgage company to get away with what is practically an increase in its security. That is actually what is happening at the present time.

I had a reply the other day from the minister in connection with the operation of this act in Swift Current. That reply stated that some thirteen applications, I think it was, had been dealt with and in one a formal order was made. Compromises were secured to the extent of some $52,000. I do not know how it worked out in all cases but I do know this, that one case that will be included within that $52,000, and in which there was a very substantial reduction amounting to several thousands of dollars, would have come about whether we had an official receiver there or not. The creditor who had to suffer the adjustment—we will call it that—stated that had the debtor approached him in the first place he would have made an adjustment himself, and possibly an even better adjustment than was made, without the intervention of the official referee.

Mr. GOBEIL: Why didn't he do it then?

Mr. BOTHWELL: He never was approached by the debtor. The debtor, immediately he knew something of the operation of the act, went to the official referee and made his proposition and the papers were sent out calling him into the official referee's office.

But the point I specially want to make is this, that in the operation of this act, while it should be beneficial to many farmers, and there are many farmers particularly in the west who need any benefits this act can afford, there is another class of person in the west who is also entitled to some consideration and whom I think this act should be extended to include. As the matter now stands the farmer is able to get an adjustment, as I said, at the expense of the local merchant and local business man, the local professional man, and so on. But the merchants in these country places are not able to collect their debts, and they are getting no reduction from the wholesaler. They need the benefit of an act such as this just as much as the farmer does. They are giving the farmer a reduction on his debt, not being paid in a great many instances, although they expect to get it over a period of years. But so far as the merchant is concerned he is getting no reduction, and consequently the merchant, the business man of every description and professional men are gradually going broke. I trust that the minister will give attention to that class of case and consider the advisability of extending the operation of this act to include some of the other classes who are being penalized at the present time just as much as the farmer is.

Mr. W. J. LOUCKS (Rosetown): I have no criticism to make of the remarks we have heard from the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell). He has pretty well stated the case in this house to-day, and I can endorse what he has said. The unfortunate thing is that throughout the little towns in western Canada the merchant has given security to the wholesaler, either by way of note or in some collateral form, and when he is asked to write down the debts due to him it is not very encouraging for him to find that he cannot get any money. But the wholesaler holds the local merchant to his indebtedness, one hundred cents on the dollar. In my opinion, so far as the local debts in our province are concerned, they could be cut in half if some money were available to take care of the local merchants after they have written down debts. If this were done it would stimulate trade right across the country and give the farmers and others a fresh start.

I may have big ideas, something perhaps beyond the power of this government to put into effect, but I do say that the situation is very serious indeed. I am still convinced that agriculture is the basic industry of the country, and if it were possible either to consolidate the debts of the farmers, not only in western Canada but throughout the dominion, and to write them down fifty per cent, it would have a very beneficial effect indeed. From one receiver I have received a letter informing me that the debts in his locality could be written down from $700,000 to $300,000 if only ready money were available, and there would be no need to go to the court of review. This morning I received a letter from a farmer who sold his farm in my district. On this farm he put up a house at a cost of $5,000. On moving to British Columbia he sold the farm and the purchaser owes a balance of $9,000 for it, and the purchaser is now applying to the receiver for a fifty per cent writing down. I have a copy of a letter from the man in British Columbia—the man who sold the farm in question—and he now offers to take $4,500 in settlement of his claim for $9,000. But he wants ready money.

You will say, but what about $90,000,000 we have already voted for that very purpose. Well, I realize that that is a real move in the right direction, but I cannot help feeling that it will be only a drop in the bucket over the dominion when it comes to satisfying the applications that will flood in to the farm loan board. I have not the figures before me, and I can only speak from memory, but I believe that in 1933 the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), either in the committee on agriculture or in the banking and commerce committee, stated that the debts of the farmers throughout Canada amounted to $1,500,000,000—I am not sure of the amount. If that could be reduced by half, I can think of nothing that would so stimulate business. It would help matters very greatly if the government could issue enough money to wipe out this debt. I would be willing to tackle it. You may say, "But you are not a financier." Well, I know that I am not a financier, but I ask this question: What can the farmers do under present circumstances? If this debt could be written down to fifty cents on the dollar you would really have twice the security that you have now, because the farmers, with things as they are at present, will never be able to meet their obligations. They certainly cannot do so in the west.

I am not a pessimist who thinks that there is no hope for the country, but at the same time it is rather discouraging to the farmer to feel that he cannot get out of debt. The hon. member for Macleod suggests the reduction of interests. I have another alternative. I believe that if it were possible to have a moratorium at this time and to cut out interest it would give the farmers a chance, so that interest would not accumulate for the next five or ten years. If you could do that there would be more hope for the farmer. But when he looks at his mortgage to-day, when he compares his present liabilities with his indebtedness five or eight years ago, he sees that it has about doubled, and he sees no hope ahead; interest will continue around seven per cent. This is not very encouraging to the farmer. We have to face these things whether we are on this side of the house or sitting opposite, and I hope we shall all be big enough to get together on this question, because if agriculture is not once more placed on a prosperous basis there is no hope for the rest of the country. I think we are all agreed on that.

My hon. friend from Willow Bunch (Mr. Donnelly) has painted a very black picture of conditions in western Canada. I do not believe he did it intentionally, but I think he was exploiting the situation yesterday. In January I happened to be in Montana visiting my daughter, and I certainly did not find things there as rosy as he painted them. There was a processing tax of thirty cents a bushel on wheat and there was also a processing tax, which the hon. gentleman did admit, of three cents a pound on hogs; and my daughter told me that there was a personal tax on household effects. The assessor goes right into her house and assesses her silverware and other things, and even her watch is assessed. My son-in-law told me he had to get a licence for his car, and he had to pay a tax on his car on the first of January. And what about the condition of the people there? They are living in shacks, not such buildings as we have in this country. The housing situation is bad, and if you went there you would endorse what I say. But what is their answer when you point this out to them? They say that if they put up a house they are assessed for it. They are taxed on everything conceivable, from a woman's jewellery, silverware and household effects right down. Down there the farmers feel that in Canada, at any rate, the Prime Minister has tried to do something.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I would ask him to confine himself to the subject.

Mr. LOUCKS: I will try to do so, Mr. Speaker. Hon. gentlemen opposite say that the tariff is the source of the trouble. But I compared conditions in Canada with conditions in Montana when I was there last January and I did not find so much difference in the price of machinery. But even supposing any difficulty in that connection could be got over, that would not save the situation to-day.

While I agree that this amendment to the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act will be a help so far as the farmers are concerned, I believe we must go further. Even with good crops in western Canada—and I am speaking about the west particularly because I am more familiar with it—the farmers, with the prevailing prices cannot recover. There are other aspects of the question. I know farmers in my constituency bought land at $70 or $75 an acre and I know it is impossible for them ever to meet their obligations because there is no such earning capacity in any farm in western Canada. With wheat at $2 a bushel, there might be hope of writing off their debts but we cannot expect such prices for some time to come.

When I suggested, as I did recently that a moratorium be introduced and an assurance given to farmers that for five years interest would be wiped out, I was told that to do so would be ridiculous. The question was asked: What about the poor fellow who depends on that interest for his livelihood? Well, according to the figures given by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), these people have been pretty well paid and in many cases the debt has been doubled. If I were holding a mortgage on a farm for $10,000 at seven per cent interest, knowing conditions as I do, as the mortgage companies and as individual lenders do, I would be very happy if any government were to come to my rescue and say: If you will consider giving the mortgagor a chance and will wipe out the interest, probably we can assure you that at some time in the future you will get the principal. I think most people or companies who hold mortgages on farms to-day would be very glad should some such assurance be given. If that were done, it would be a great help to the farmers of western Canada.

I want to stress the point again that I cannot see how the farmer is to ask merchants and professional men to write off 50 per cent of his debt and yet we cannot come to their rescue and give them a dollar to help them back on their feet. I know I am on this side of the house and I am speaking plainly. These are matters that we must consider and I do not care from which side the suggestion comes. Surely we are big enough when we are sent here by the people to represent them as a whole. The hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell) made that very plain. He has given the situation as he knows it in his particular constituency and the same is true of me. We are hoping for a scheme which will prevent similar conditions from again arising in western Canada. The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil) beside me suggests: What about gambling? The farmers in the west say that the whole thing to-day is a gamble, but if we can get some of the streams dammed up under the scheme put forward by the Department of Agriculture, we shall forget that it is a gamble and I believe such a scheme is a move in the right direction.

So far as gambling is concerned we have all had a lesson, but I will not speak further about that because I shall be called to order by the chair and rightly so. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) has done much for the farmers and I want to give him every credit for it. He is thinking seriously of the condition in which the farmers generally find themselves, and I believe there is some hope for them if something like this is brought about. I realize that $90,000,000 is a great deal of money, a splendid sum, but it will never save the situation and I can see where trouble may arise. When the minister said yesterday that $7,500 was the maximum, he is right, because I know we shall have many applications for the maximum amount and I can see how quickly $90,000,000 will disappear.

I am strongly of opinion that if we cannot wipe out the interest altogether, it should be reduced to four per cent. There is a justification for doing so at this time and such action would be of still further assistance. When we consider the arrears of taxes, the other debts piling up, the deterioration of machinery and the necessity for immediate and drastic action, we must devise some way of taking care of the situation. Let us start at the foot of the ladder, the basic industry of this country.

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): Before this bill receives its second reading I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) to a point raised in New Brunswick and perhaps elsewhere by parties interested in this measure. It is said that in the compromise effected by the farmer there is no protection to the farm labourer for his wages due. I understand he has to come in as an ordinary creditor and take his cut. In all other acts where a compromise is effected, I believe the labourer is always protected as a preferred creditor. The question arises in that province: Should the labourer not be a preferred creditor under this act?

Mr. EUSEBE ROBERGE (Mégantic) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, introduced in this house last year by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) with the approval of the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), is now back before us for amendment.

This act may suit some of the provinces, but it is not in the interest of the province of Quebec, for it is doing more harm to the credit of the farming class of Quebec than any other bill ever introduced in this house, except the conscription bill of 1917. When the prime minister moved the adoption of this bill, last year, he thought he had found the remedy for all our evils. I think he was greatly mistaken, as this bill means the conscription of the capital of the retired farmer and the ruination of the credit of the farming class.

Throughout the beautiful countryside of the province of Quebec you will find, Mr. Chairman, in nearly every village, fifteen or twenty retired farmers who, after having worked their farms during twenty, thirty or forty years and, in most cases, raised a large family, are ending their days in the shadow of the village church. Through the practice of economy, they have succeeded in setting aside for their old days from $4,000 to $10,000, and sometimes more. These worthy farmers, who have spent their lives on the land, have, in many cases, invested their all in first and second mortgages on farms. In our province, as you know, very little investment money comes to rural regions from outside; most of the mortgages are held by retired farmers in the villages and the surrounding country.

This infamous act, in force since last year, has given the worst possible results. It provides that if a farmer goes to the representative appointed by the government in each county to effect compromises between creditors and debtors and hands him the list of his debts, the receiver will immediately call upon the creditors to appear before him and, in many cases, the amount due by the farmer is reduced from forty to fifty per cent. Can it be considered reasonable to take away nearly half the savings of a worthy farmer who has toiled during forty or fifty years to provide himself with a small nest egg? I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that it is a crying injustice. A prime minister who proposes the adoption of such a law proves by the very fact that he knows nothing of the distress of the farming population of the province of Quebec.

Our farmers are quite willing to pay their debts, but, in order that they may do so, we must assist them instead of acting as the government does. Since this government came to power, they have done everything possible to penalize the farmer. First, they have not kept their pledges of 1930. The Prime Minister had promised everyone better prices for their products; he was to open new markets abroad, and thus relieve the situation. But, on the contrary, since he came to power, year after year he levied new taxes on farmers and, by this great bill, he takes away from them what was their most valuable assest, and that is credit. In the rural centres, nobody will now lend money to farmers because of bill No. 10. Why has the government such a grudge against the farming community, seeing that they ruin their credit; and why have they such a grudge against the small investor, the rentier, seeing that they are conscripting the capital which it took so many years for that man to gather? Why is the government always going after the small investor instead of the big capitalist?

The right hon. the Prime Minister, who, on more than one occasion, has paraded as a dictator after the fashion of Mussolini and Hitler, ought to read in the papers how Hitler is acting to get the money he needs. He does not go after the poor fellow only; he begins with those who have wealth. Our Prime Minister would do well to follow that example; he would do well to assist those who have no money and to get the money from those who possess it.

Mr. GOBEIL: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The other day the Liberal whip objected to an hon. member on this side of the house reading his speech. He was at the time making a very careful statement that he wanted to be accurate. I object to the hon. member reading every word of his speech.

Mr. FAFARD: He is just consulting his notes.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member will kindly not follow his notes too closely.

Mr. ROBERGE (Translation): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister was following Hitler's example, our farming community would be better off.

Here is what we read in the newspapers concerning Hitler:

Conscription of money by Hitler: Large powers have been given Von Krosigk, finance leader in Berlin. Money levies are made from banks and individuals who will be forced to deplete their reserves.

Mr. GAGNON: Still reading.

Mr. ROBERGE (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I am against conscription not only of money but against all sort of conscription. But that is the principle on which is based every legislation brought down by this government since they came to power and which has been so injurious to our farming population and our working class.

I have put questions on the order paper in respect of this farmer's creditors arrangement act. I suppose the hon. member for Compton will not challenge the accuracy of answers which were given by the Minister of Finance. Here is my question:

How many farmers of the county of Mégantic-Frontenac have effected a settlement under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act?

Mr. Rhodes:

Records are kept on the basis of judicial districts. The county of Mégantic-Frontenac is partly in the judicial district of Arthabaska, partly in the judicial district of St. Francis and partly in the judicial district of Beauce.

In the judicial district of Beauce 35 settlements were reported to the end of January.

In the judicial district of St. Francis 35 settlements were reported to the end of December, 1934.

In the judicial district of Arthabaska 3 settlements were reported to the end of December, 1934.

On February 25, the Minister of Finance gave an interview to the press and here is what I find in the papers:

Hon. E. N. Rhodes, Minister of Finance, announced that, at the end of January, 9,290 farmers of the province of Quebec had asked for information from official receivers regarding the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. 1,703 proposals had been submitted and there had been voluntary settlements in 226 cases.

Mr. Chairman, I represent a county with a population of more than 5,000 farmers. According to the minister's answers and his interview in the papers, only three farmers in my constituency have taken advantage of that act and that same act has been injurious to the 5,000 farmers in my county. I say, Mr. Chairman, that this act is the most unfair ever passed by this house, that it is ruining the farmers' credit and is creating conscription of the money owned by the village rentier in our beautiful province of Quebec.

Mr. ONESIME GAGNON (Dorchester): I shall not attempt to follow the arguments of the hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Roberge). Everyone knows that every year the old gentleman repeats arguments along that line, and he has not even the courage to learn them by heart. For the benefit of those who do not understand French I shall translate briefly what he has said. According to him this law is unjust, arbitrary, and one that will destroy the credit of the farmers. Mr. Speaker, when you hear such expressions of opinion you wonder what is the opinion of the leaders of all parties in this house; because you remember, Mr. Speaker, last year, when this legislation was brought before the house, not one member of the chamber voted against it. We must suppose that the leaders of all parties did not vote on such an important legislation without having studied it attentively. I give credit to the leaders of the Liberal party for at least knowing what they are speaking about, but it is amazing to hear an old man like the hon. member for Mégantic who has been a merchant all his life, who has lived with farmers, saying as a member of the Liberal party that this law is bad, unjust, and one that will destroy the credit of the farmer, when he and all his friends on that side of the house voted for this legislation. And now what do we see? Do we see the leaders of the Liberal party move an amendment in order to correct the so-called bad character of this law? You will not see any hon. gentleman from the other side move an amendment, because they realize, and understand that this legislation, although new in its character, is nevertheless a great instrument of social justice and social peace. This legislation has received the approval in Quebec of the bishops and the general approval of the unions of Catholic farmers all over the province. Now, Mr. Speaker, is it just that one with the experience of the hon. member for Mégantic should attempt to make the people believe that this law is devised in order to destroy the credit of the farmers?

What is the purpose of this legislation? It is merely to provide an instrument whereby creditor and debtor will meet at a common table and discuss ways and means whereby the creditor will give the debtor a chance and try to prevent the debtor from being crushed by his creditors. What has taken place in the province of Quebec? I have news from my district, where the farmers have suffered perhaps more than the farmers of the county of Mégantic. I have a letter here from one official receiver who tells me that at the present time fifty per cent of the farmers are unable to meet their debts. With this new legislation will the creditors lose their equities? Not at all; they are only invited to meet their debtors before the official receiver and discuss ways and means by which the debtors may try to meet their obligations and redeem their property. If the creditor is not satisfied he may appeal to a board of review composed of three eminent gentlemen, a judge, a representative of the farmers and a representative of the creditors. In almost every case an equitable arrangement has been effectuated before the receiver. In other cases the creditor or the debtor has been called before the board of review, and I dare say that ninety cases out of a hundred have been amicably and equitably settled.

It is useless to discuss the arguments raised by the hon. member for Mégantic. I think the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) said yesterday, and the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) said the other day, that this legislation is unjust, arbitrary and ultra vires. I do not intend to discuss this legislation along political lines. For God's sake let us forget political quibbles when dealing with such an important problem.

[Mr. Gagnon.]

I believe hon. gentlemen opposite are good citizens; I give them credit for that. They love their constituents and try to help them just as we do on this side, but why should any member seriously state that legislation so just and so equitable in its character is unjust, arbitrary, ultra vires, when hon. gentlemen opposite dare not move a single amendment in order to remedy its so-called obnoxious effects. This is only the second reading of the bill. We will take up the matter in committee, where we may discuss it for hours and days. I respectfully invite the Liberal leaders from Quebec to come to the front, show their hand and state whether this is good or bad, just or unjust, and whether or not it is an instrument of justice and goodwill which will help prevent the debtors from being crushed by unjust creditors.

I am a lawyer, Mr. Speaker; I cannot forget that, and I say that before the law the creditor has just as much right to be protected as has the farmer. It would not be wise or prudent for a lawyer or even an ordinary layman to try to pose as the champion of the debtors as against the legitimate rights of the creditors, but I should like to offer some special observations which affect only the province of Quebec. In that province we have a deed of sale which is not common to all the provinces of Canada; it is commonly called vente à réméré, or in English, a deed of sale containing a clause of redemption. For the benefit of those from other provinces who are not familiar with this form of deed let me state as clearly as possible the essence of this instrument. Let us suppose that A, a debtor, meets B, a creditor, and that A borrows from B the sum of $500. A and B may sign a deed of obligation under which the creditor will take a mortgage on the property of the debtor, but from time immemorial in the province of Quebec creditors and farmers have used another instrument called vènte a réméré, or a deed of sale with a clause of redemption. Let us see how it is operated in our province. Let us suppose that A the debtor borrows $500 from B, the creditor. Instead of taking a mortgage on the farm of the debtor, B agrees that the debtor shall sell his farm to the creditor, though in many cases the value of the farm may far exceed the amount of the obligation. For instance, a debtor who borrows $500 may sell to the creditor a farm worth $3,000 or $5,000, and for the last twenty-five years the creditors in my district have signed such deeds of sale.

During the war farms were worth much more than they are worth now. Some farms worth from $3,000 to $5,000 at that time could not be sold now for $2,000. What is the present situation of the debtor who has borrowed $500 and transferred to the creditor his farm worth perhaps $3,000? When the debtor has not reimbursed the creditor to the amount borrowed, on the expiration of the period provided for in the deed of sale the creditor has the option of keeping the farm, so if the creditor has no sense of justice or if he abuses his rights he may retain a farm worth $3,000 for which he has given only $500. It is all very well for a lawyer to recognize the sacred, legitimate rights of the creditor, but I humbly submit that in law and in equity the creditor ought not to require the debtor to pay more than the amount borrowed plus a legitimate rate of interest. I do not attempt to pose as a demagogue; because I represent a rural constituency I do not attempt to deprive the creditors of their legitimate rights, but I say that when a farmer has borrowed $500 from a rentier or creditor, giving as security a farm worth $3,000, the creditor ought to receive his $500 and a good rate of interest, perhaps even with a bonus, but that it is unjust and against the most elementary principles of fairness that the creditor should retain the farm.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, in the province of Quebec there are creditors who do not possess even an elementary sense of justice, and who have thus acquired many farms in my district. I know of one man who is the proprietor of half of the farms of the parish. He was a rich merchant, and he advanced merchandise and money to the farmers, who sometimes were invited by way of security, to sign a deed of sale, with a clause of redemption. And when times were so bad that the farmer could not repay the money the creditor said: "Hold on; I shall exercise my option, and keep the farm." The farmer would be obliged to leave his farm, and in some instances farms have been vacated which have been in families for more than two hundred years. Those are the creditors who go to consult lawyers and urge them to go before the courts and argue that this legislation is unconstitutional and ultra vires. Those are the creditors who go to see hon. members such as the hon. member for Mégantic and urge them to come to this house and say that the legislation is bad, that it is unjust, and deprives the people of their legitimate rights.

I humbly submit to the Minister of Finance that steps ought to be taken whereby creditors will not be permitted so arbitrarily and inhumanly to exercise their rights. I know very well that if we attempted to move an amendment which would in any way affect the civil code of the province of Quebec such amendment might be attacked on the ground that it was ultra vires. I humbly submit however, and do not fear opposition when I state, that the creditor ought not to receive more than is due him, plus a legitimate rate of interest and even a bonus. Of course I agree the creditor is not obliged to loan money for nothing, but I understand too that in times of stress legislators have a duty to prevent creditors from being too harsh with debtors. That is the purpose behind this legislation, namely to permit the farmer to breathe in peace and hope for better times.

What do we hear? We hear some people argue that this law is unjust. Let them take it before the courts and I do believe the judges will recognize the humanitarian character of the legislation and will sanction its validity. I have been in close touch with judges on the board of review and even with officers of the department in the province of Quebec, because, as I stated previously, my constituency is one which has suffered greatly from the effects of the depression. In my constituency the farmers are in very bad circumstances. I know that at the present time the attorney general of the province of Quebec is studying the law in order to find a way to help the farmers. Hon. members from that province will realize that although I have a strong partisan spirit I am discussing this matter in an equitable way. I shall not attempt to accuse Mr. Taschereau of being unfair. I know he is studying this problem, a very difficult one, because it has always been a very difficult task to deal with acquired rights. In the province of Quebec a great many of the creditors are proprietors of farms, and it is very difficult for the legislature to pass legislation whereby the legitimate rights of creditors might not be infringed.

Nevertheless I urge the Minister of Finance to continue his negotiations with the attorney general of Quebec in order to find ways to help the farmers. As I stated previously it is only just and equitable that creditors be paid, but nevertheless they ought not to exact more than the legitimate pound of flesh. They ought to let the farmers breathe and permit them to stay where their families have lived in some cases more than two hundred years. When the Minister of Finance speaks on the bill I should like him to give us some of the details of the correspondence he has exchanged with the attorney general of Quebec, and I should like him to let us know whether or not we may hope that this complicated and difficult problem may be adjudicated upon here and in that province.

Mr. MARCIL: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. GAGNON: Yes.

Mr. MARCIL: I ask the question only for information, because the hon. member is apparently well posted in the matter. Would he tell us what has been done by the legislature of Quebec in connection with a moratorium, or something of that kind? Was not some legislation passed, either last year or the year before?

Mr. GAGNON: Yes.

Mr. MARCIL: Is the question now pending before the legislature?

Mr. GAGNON: Yes. The point raised by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) is well taken. It is true that in the province of Quebec there is a moratorium whereby a creditor who has a claim guaranteed by a mortgage on a farm cannot sue the debtor if that debtor has paid his interest and his taxes. Of course that legislation is only of a temporary character, and if I were too much of a partisan I might take the view, a view which has been taken in some quarters, that the moratorium may have helped to destroy the credit of the farmers. I will not make that statement, however, because I want to approach the problem from a non-partisan standpoint. We must realize, however, that the moratorium legislation is only of a temporary character.

This new legislation, however, will have the effect of settling once and for all the difficulty existing between farmers and their creditors. When a farmer and his creditor appear before an official receiver they have the opportunity to agree upon a settlement which will give a satisfactory arrangement to both. According to information apparently in the possession of many hon. members it would appear that in many cases in the province of Quebec the amount of the claim registered against the farm has not been changed, and that only the rate of interest has been affected. In some cases money has been loaned at rates of five per cent, six per cent or seven per cent, and now we hear that creditors and debtors have gone before a board of review and in some instances have agreed to reduce the rate to two per cent or three per cent. I believe we cannot too greatly congratulate creditors who have such a commendable sense of justice as to reduce interest rates to such an extent. A creditor who would do that ought to receive the congratulations of every hon. member because he shows he is endowed with humanitarian principles. In some cases the amount of the claim has not been changed, but the creditor and farmer have agreed to postpone the date of settlement.

All these details go to show that this legislation will not deprive the creditor of his legitimate rights, but will serve to indicate that it is a law of compromise and one which will tend to make for peace between the debtor and creditor. Once a debtor has made an amicable and equitable settlement with his creditor his credit is restored. It may be advisable to pass an amendment to the law whereby it would be enacted that the legislation we are now passing would not affect future deeds. I realize that in the future some people may have difficulty getting money from rentiers. An amendment might be suggested whereby it would be enacted that in the future this legislation would affect only past transactions. However, I leave that matter to the judgment of the house and for the attention of the Minister of Finance.

There is another aspect of the legislation which I desire to bring to the attention of the minister. If hon. members will read sections 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 of chapter 53 of the statutes for 1934, namely: The Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, they would find that that legislation is complementary to the Bankruptcy Act, because the official receivers are given powers which belong to receivers under the Bankruptcy Act. I would respectfully draw the attention of the minister to the fact that in 1932 we amended the Bankruptcy Act and the effect of that amendment was that the Bankruptcy Act does not now apply to the farmers of the province of Quebec. In other words, whilst the farmers of other provinces may go into bankruptcy and make an arrangement with their creditors under the Bankruptcy Act, the farmers in the province of Quebec have no such rights, and that might be dangerous because of section 6 of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, 1934, which reads as follows:

(1) A farmer who is unable to meet his liabilities as they become due may make a proposal for a composition, extension of time or scheme or arrangement either before or after an assignment has been made.

(2) Such proposal shall be filed with the official receiver who shall forthwith convene a meeting of the creditors and perform the duties and functions required by the Bankruptcy Act to be performed by a trustee in the case of a proposal for a composition, extension of time or scheme of arrangement.

Now if the official receiver gives a notice of discontinuance of proceedings, for instance, his rights might be impeached because a creditor might argue before the courts of the province of Quebec that the powers which the receiver has are very limited in nature because he gets his powers from under the Bankruptcy Act, and the Bankruptcy Act does not apply to the province of Quebec. I wonder if it would not be worth while to refer that point to the Department of Justice to find out whether it would be necessary to amend the Bankruptcy Act. But I may be too presumptuous; the minister may have an answer. Nevertheless we read in the newspapers of the city of Quebec that a creditor is serving notice upon the attorney general and the Minister of Justice that this bill which we are discussing is unconstitutional. I do not see myself why it would be ultra vires; I cannot see why the creditor would allege its so-called unconstitutionality. Since the matter is pending before the courts it might be wiser not to discuss it further, but in view of the litigation which is going on perhaps it would be wise to study the question anew from all angles so as to prevent any abuse of the rights of creditors before the courts.

May I finish my humble remarks with the wish that the negotiations which are now pending before the hon. Minister of Finance and the attorney general of Quebec may be successful. I do hope that a way will be found whereby the rights of a creditor whose rights are guaranteed by a deed of sale under a clause of redemption might be recognized. On the other hand, the debtor will be able to redeem his property and make an equitable settlement with his creditors and hope for better times.

Mr. SAMUEL GOBEIL (Compton): Mr. Speaker, if I rise to make a few remarks on this bill it is only to endorse the remarks which have just been made by the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon) who stressed particularly one or two points.

He commenced by referring to the speech which was made by the hon. member who preceded him, the hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Roberge). When I rose to a point of order while the hon. member for Mégantic was speaking, some hon. members may have thought I should have allowed him to proceed, but I did it for the reason that has just been given by my hon. friend from Dorchester. If you, Mr. Speaker, or the house, understood, the remarks sometimes made by the hon. member from Mégantic I do not think he would be allowed to make them because I regard them as unworthy of this house.

The hon. member for Dorchester translated a few of the remarks made by the hon. member for Mégantic, but he did not translate them all. I shall not translate his whole speech but I should like to translate one other remark which the hon. member for Mégantic made. He said that there never was a law passed by this parliament so infamous as this one except the law of conscription in 1917. The other day I heard an hon. member opposite say that conscription was a dead issue. My hon. friend from Dorchester said yesterday or the day before that it was not a dead issue, and you can see very well, Mr. Speaker, what is likely to happen in the few months that are ahead of us. That is why I objected to the remarks of the hon. member for Mégantic. In a most inoffensive way he proceeds to read his speech, every word of it—

Mr. DUPRE: And in a low voice.

Mr. GOBEIL: —and in such a low voice that even those who understand French could hardly hear him, but he gets his remarks in Hansard, remarks that I do not think any other member of the house would dare to make. I have almost come to the conclusion, and I suggest, that it looks very much as if the hon. member for Mégantic was not speaking for the house when he speaks in this chamber but rather for the purpose of having his words put on Hansard so that he can send his speech out to his electors. Just now I know that the hon. member is using his frank to mail out thousands of copies of the remarks he made last week, some of which were just as bad as what we have heard to-day. That is all I have to say on that matter, Mr. Speaker, except to repeat and endorse what was said by my hon. friend from Dorchester that some of the leaders of the members from Quebec should take a stand and state whether or not they endorse the remarks and opinions expressed by my hon. friend from Mégantic.

Mr. DUPRE: Hear, hear.

Mr. GOBEIL: The hon. member for Mégantic says that this law is infamous, unjust, unfair, and that it is causing a lot of damage. Certainly not to the farmers, Mr. Speaker. This house has unanimously expressed the opinion from all sides that our farmers are a class of citizens that have been the hardest hit by the depression. If that is so, it may be a reason for this law which is perhaps in a certain way a law of exception, giving to the farmers of Canada perhaps a little advantage over other classes of the population. If that argument is true, if the farming class has been the hardest hit by the depression, I do not see any objection to their having this little advantage, and if they are not harder hit than any other class, then the opinion expressed by the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell) and by the hon. member sitting on this side of the house might pass, and there might be a general reduction of debts between individuals and of all internal debts in this country. But it seems to be unanimously agreed that it is the duty of the government to protect the poor man, and that is why in my opinion this law is being passed. I understand that in certain cases in the small rural villages the people are being led to believe, and I am very much tempted to say that some hon. gentlemen opposite are responsible for this opinion that has been spread around the country, that this law was doing damage to the creditors. In my opinion that is altogether wrong. This does protect the creditors, just as much as it does the debtor, and I know personally of cases where it has been clearly shown that the act has operated beneficially to the creditor. I have a letter from a trustee—it is dated February 25 and I received it yesterday—with reference to a farmer who offered his creditors fifty cents on the dollar. They did not see fit to accept.

Mr. DUPUIS: The secured creditors also?

Mr. GOBEIL: Secured creditors. They did not see their way to accept the offer. They had the statement before them and they examined it thoroughly, and finally they realized there was nothing for them; their claim was lost. Now this law does not put anyone in the position of losing his money. If I have loaned $1,000 and am unfortunate to lose that loan this law does not make my situation any worse; it is intended to help it. In this particular instance the creditors realized that the act was helping them, because after refusing fifty cents in the dollar they came back later and offered to accept it. The man replied, "I thought at the time I made the offer that I could get the money, but on inquiry since I have found that I cannot, and unfortunately you will have to take over the property." Finally, the trustee informs me, a settlement was made on the basis of fifty cents in the dollar for secured creditors and tewnty-five cents for ordinary creditors, and the matter did not go to the board of review. It was settled mutually, and the trustee writes me that the debtor and the creditors went home happy. The creditors were not as happy as they would have been if they had got one hundred per cent of their claim, but considering the circumstances of this man they felt that they had reason to be satisfied. I know of another farmer whose debt was reduced; the amount involved was $3,342. There again the debtor and creditors came to a mutual understanding and they parted shaking hands. There are two or three more cases of this kind which I will not bother to refer to just now.

[Mr. Gobeil.]

I contend that this act does protect the creditors, if not to the same extent, at any rate in principle, as it does the debtor. In this very instance to which I have just referred, every hon. member knows what it would cost if the property of this man had been sold by process of law at a sheriff's sale. They know very well that quite often the cost is as high as $500, $600, $700 or $800. But by this act the property is disposed of in such a way that the creditors get every cent that it brings. For that reason, therefore, it seems to me that the hon. member for Mégantic should make himself better acquainted with the law. I certainly do not suggest that he speaks in bad faith, but either he does not understand the law or his good faith can be very much doubted. I was going to refer to another question but this is all I will say for the present.

Mr. ERRICK F. WILLIS (Souris): While thousands of cases have been settled under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, I would point out that there are many that have been settled outside the act itself; but the fact remains that these settlements have been brought about because of the existence on the statute books of that act. I will cite only one case, which is a good example. A farmer owed the bank in my territory the sum of $9,500. He went to the manager of the bank and informed him that he would make application under the Farmer's Creditors Arrangement Act, and the banker suggested that he wait for two weeks until he could consult head office. The farmer agreed not to make application, and in ten days' time the bank manager called him in and said that the bank was willing to reduce the indebtedness from $9,500 to $2,500, and give him four years in which to pay. That arrangement was made possible by the existence on the statute books of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. It was the Royal Bank of Canada.

Mr. DUPUIS: Where was that farm—in the dried out area?

Mr. WILLIS: It is in the dried out area, and it is also on the edge of the Turtle Mountain forest reserve, one of the best farming countries in Canada. There were no other reasons in connection with the settlement than the fact that the bank realized that by their action they would place this man back on his feet. If the bank had been unwilling to make that arrangement the man would have left his farm and the bank would have had to start foreclosure action. The bank did not want to go into the farming business and so they did a very wise thing. The result is that this man, having now to pay only $2,500 owing to the bank, finds that his other creditors are willing to extend him credit, which they would not do while he owed the bank $9,500. Through the existence of this act, and without making any application, this man is back on his feet. I could tell of other instances where individual debtors went to their creditors and suggested the wisdom of applying under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, and forthwith the creditors have got together themselves, not under the act, and made a settlement which was satisfactory to the farmer.

In my area, which includes all the dried out area of Manitoba, the official receiver is exceedingly busy. I have seen him on different occasions at the close of the day and he has said to me, "I have made two, three, five settlements to the satisfaction of creditor and debtor alike." The big advantage of this act as compared with the other acts in the provinces, and both have their value, is that this is a debt adjustment act; it is not a debt postponement act as the others are. The acts in the provinces are debt postponement acts and they have their value, even as this act has its value. It depends on what the farmer desires, whether he desires to have his debt postponed or to have it definitely adjusted, as to which he ought to embrace. But while evidence may be adduced as to thousands who have been benefited by the act, there are also I should say, hundreds and maybe thousands who have been benefited due to the mere existence of the act, owing to the fact that the creditors realize they must make a settlement lest they come before the official receiver and finally the board of review.

Mr. V. C. PORTEOUS (North Grey): Lest the impression go abroad that the majority of the farmers of the dominion are taking advantage of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, I would like to say that only a very small percentage of the farmers need to make application under it. The act provides a wedge as it were between nothing at all and the Bankruptcy Act, and I too should like to support the statement of the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Willis) inasmuch as a great many settlements have been made as a result of this legislation being on the statute books.

We have in my constituency a very fine official receiver. When I was talking to Mr. MacPherson the other day, he told me that he thought our official receiver was the best man to promote settlements of any one he had in the dominion. Our receiver told me he made almost two hundred settlements which he never made officially but which he negotiated between the creditors and the debtors. I think he has done fine work and in fact all the official receivers are doing fine work in that connection.

I believe this legislation is only temporary; at least I hope it is. It is serving a temporary purpose. Farmers as a result of the depression and of climatic conditions find themselves embarrassed financially and they must have more freedom in connection with meeting their indebtedness. I want to cite one instance because the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell) stated that the mortgagees were not as willing to reduce their mortgages as the unsecured creditors were to reduce their accounts. In my constituency we had a case where a mortgage had reached the sum of $4,500 on a one-hundred acre farm. When a meeting of creditors was called, the mortgagee reduced that mortgage to $2,500 and in that case he reduced it more on a percentage basis than was the case with the unsecured creditors. There are a good many instances of that character.

I had the privilege of sitting in at the meeting of the tribunal held at Ottawa a short time ago and I saw exhibited by a farmer the finest spirit. This was a case where a young farmer had taken over all the indebtedness of his father. In 1920 the farm had been bought by the father for $9,000 in addition to $4,500 worth of stock and equipment. The total purchase price was $13,500 and the farmer had paid $7,500 in cash. Prior to 1930 the indebtedness had been reduced to $4,000, but during the last three or four years this man had found himself with little or no crop and his indebtedness was increased to about $4,900. Together with that he had borrowed $500 in order to meet his obligations. The decision of the tribunal was very fair. They decided to reduce the secured debt to $4,400 and they also reduced the rate of interest from seven to five per cent for the first three years. But that was not all. They decided that they would ask the unsecured creditors to take 75 per cent of their claims and this young farmer said he would not be satisfied to do that. He said: "I want to pay these people who loaned me that money every cent I borrowed from them." That is the spirit of many farmers who have to make application under this act. They want if at all possible to pay their debts. They want reduced interest rates, but they are willing to pay so far as possible every dollar of the principal. I believe that young farmer will pay every cent of that indebtedness and in a few years will be again on the road to success. That is the spirit which we should endeavour to encourage and which this bill is lending itself to encourage among the farmers of this dominion.

Mr. VINCENT DUPUIS (Laprairie-Napierville): I have just a few words to say about this legislation. I shall not follow the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon) in regard to the provincial field. I have not the advantage of being under the illusion of being a chief of a great party because I never went to the Sherbrooke convention. But I will discuss this matter simply as we have it before us. The hon. gentleman says that he is doubtful about this act having the force of law in Quebec because in 1932 there had been an amendment to the Bankruptcy Act, excluding farmers from its provisions. I would direct his attention to this Compromise and Arrangement between Farmers and Creditors Act, article 2, subsection 2, which reads:

> This act shall be read and construed as one with the Bankruptcy Act, but shall have full force and effect notwithstanding anything contained in the Bankruptcy Act, and the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act and bankruptcy rules shall, except as in this act otherwise provided, apply mutatis mutandis in the case of proceedings hereunder including meetings of creditors.

I do not know if I am giving a wrong interpretation of this section, but in my opinion it means that this legislation will apply to the whole country notwithstanding anything contained in the Bankruptcy Act. Hon. members on the other side have discussed special cases, as examples to show that this legislation is of advantage to both farmers and creditors. I do not think we should discuss this question on that basis. We should consider whether the present legislation and the proposed amendment are so drafted as to give power to the board of review and the officers to force a creditor to reduce his claim even if it is secured as provided in section 7 of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, which reads:

> A proposal may provide for a compromise or an extension of time or a scheme of arrangement in relation to a debt owing to a secured creditor, or in relation to a debt owing to a person who has acquired movable or immovable property subject to a right of redemption, but in that event the concurrence of the secured creditor or such person, shall be required, except in the case of a proposal formulated and confirmed by the board of review as hereinafter provided.

My interpretation of this section is that even if the creditor refuses the proposal of the debtor-farmer the case may go to the board of review, which in the province of Quebec is composed of a judge of the superior court, a representative of the creditor and a representative of the farmer. If that board of review decides from any consideration whatever that the creditor, whether secured or not, shall reduce his claim, its judgment is final, there is no appeal. That is the law as it stands to-day, and this section 7 is not to be amended by the present bill. That legislation is I submit unconstitutional, because it infringes on the provincial jurisdiction over property and civil rights. If it has not been applied in the province of Quebec, as stated by an hon. member on the other side, I am under the impression it is because the judges are reluctant to apply it anticipating that such judgment would be appealed and reversed. Nevertheless the law is there, and I submit that as it stands now the board of review can reduce the claim of a secured creditor; as we say in our civil code he may reduce hypothecatory claims just as well as ordinary claims. Consequently I believe that is unconstitutional.

If you permit me I shall discuss this legislation from another angle. We have the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. A few days ago we passed the second reading of the Canadian Farm Loan Act. By that act a farmer will be allowed under certain conditions to borrow money from this country. Let me take a definite case: suppose a farmer from the county of my friend the hon. member for Dorchester makes application to borrow money from this government to cover indebtedness already incurred due to the crisis or to lack of a market or any other cause. Suppose this farmer owns a farm valued at $10,000 in normal times, and that his stock and implements and buildings have a value of $3,000; that leaves him a total equity of $8,000. He owes to secured or unsecured creditors the sum of $5,000, and applies for a loan for that amount. Let us suppose that the farm loan board is not so severe regarding valuation as they used to be. As it is getting nearer and nearer to the day of the election, which will come like a thief in the night, this commission will be more ready to lend money to these poor farmers. So this farmer is able to borrow that $5,000. As the years pass he finds he cannot repay his obligation to the government. Is it not possible that this farmer will take the weapon that has been given him by this present government, that is the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, and make application to have his obligation reduced by 50 per cent, and to defer the payment of interest for three or four years? Under these two acts the farmer will first be able to borrow money from the government through the farm loan board; then years afterwards, he will be able to ask from the same authority a 50 per cent reduction of his debt under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. That is the situation as I see it. Therefore is it not true to say that economically speaking, due to lack of prudence on the part of this government, this Canadian Farm Loan Act will result in a deficit of many millions of dollars out of this $90,000,000 that the government is presently ready to place at the disposal of the farmers?

I do not believe that the farmers are so anxious to avail themselves of the facilities of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. Hon. members know perfectly well that generally speaking the farmers are honest and industrious and hate to be obliged to take advantage of such legislation. They would rather meet their obligations. They are sorry to be required to humiliate themselves, as they must do to take advantage of this legislation. The only thing they want is sufficient income to enable them to meet their obligations. I may tell this government that if they are putting forward this legislation in order to please an important class of our community before the election I am afraid this legislation will not help them very much. As I have already said, the farmer is more anxious to sell his goods than to borrow money and have to beg his creditors to reduce their claims. The farmers know very well that if they take advantage of this legislation they destroy their credit forever. In the province of Quebec farmers generally loan money to each other, and they know very well that if they go before a board of review and have their indebtedness reduced, in the future they will not be able to borrow a single dollar either from other farmers, from loan companies or from banks. If this is put forward as a social measure I believe it is a kind of socialism that will lead this country to destruction. Many times in this house hon. members have quoted the statement of the Prime Minister that he would succeed or perish in the attempt. I think in bringing forward this legislation he is tempting fate; I believe he will perish.

Hon. CHARLES STEWART (West Edmonton): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to delay the second reading of the bill, because I believe a good deal of the discussion we have had should have come during the committee stage. I just want to say that we supported the bill last year because we believed a very serious situation existed throughout Canada with regard to agriculturists. There is no compulsion on the part of the agriculturist to take advantage of this legislation; if he does so it is of his own free will. Last year the hope was that to some extent this legislation would relieve the very serious situation of agriculture, and after all I think we are agreed that if the farmer is not successful in his calling every other business is going to suffer in consequence. While this legislation is fairly drastic and may cause some distress—we are bound to admit that—we believe that if we can relieve many of those who constitute the wealth producing classes of the country, even though it may entail some temporary sacrifice on the part of others, in the long run it will be for the ultimate benefit of the whole.

I believe that is still the feeling on this side of the house. I am not familiar with how the act has worked out, though I have had two or three instances come under my observation. To me the appeal of this legislation lies in the fact that if a man does not want to take advantage of it he need not do so; if he can compromise with his creditors without it that is his privilege, and undoubtedly, as has been pointed out by some hon. members this afternoon, if that alternative is followed the farmer is in a much better position than he would be in by taking advantage of this legislation. In that case it is a compromise between the parties who are affected and the farmer is not placed in the position of having to declare himself more or less a bankrupt. As I understand the act that is the position he is in when he takes advantage of it. I do feel that if this legislation will help even a moderate number of people by allowing them to remain on their farms, then a good purpose will be served. Any further observations I have to make I will reserve until we are in committee.

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): I do not wish to delay second reading of the bill, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to say I believe this is extremely necessary legislation, and I am glad these amendments are being put forward to improve the act we passed last year. I think we have had evidence from all sides of the house, from members representing agricultural districts, clearly showing the need for such legislation. If I were to offer any criticism at all it would be that in western Canada the judicial districts are somewhat large, and in some cases we find that men who want to take advantage of the act must travel 150 or 200 miles in order to interview the official receiver. That is one drawback, but I think there are great possibilities in this legislation; up to the present I do not think we have appreciated the good it may do. We have seen something of the possibilities, but I hope that within the next twelve months a great many agreements will be made between debtors and creditors with the aid of the two measures that have been before this house for amendment, the farm loan act and this measure.

I do believe, however, that some provision should be put in the act if possible to limit the rate of interest that may be charged, because up to the present the rates of interest have been altogether too high.

Mr. A. U. G. BURY (East Edmonton): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe I spoke last year when the original bill was under consideration, but I should like to say a few words on the second reading of this amending bill. The measure passed last year, together with the present bill, did not arise out of any local difficulty affecting the farming community of western Canada or that of eastern Canada; they arose out of conditions which really constitute a national problem. It is a mistake for us to consider that this is a question concerning farmers only. So far as we in the west are concerned I think we recognize the fact that it is absolutely essential for the well being and advancement of the west that agriculture should be assisted and developed to the greatest extent possible. One of the most pressing problems in Canada to-day is that arising out of the terrible burden placed on the people of the country through the financial position of our railways, particularly of the Canadian National Railways. I think we are all agreed that the only possible solution of our railway problem is to increase our population. Certainly it would be disastrous to have the population of the agricultural sections of the west depleted, and if there were no other reason than our railway problem it seems to me that the need for helping, supporting and developing agriculture in the west would be one of major importance.

In passing, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I do not think the population of the west can be increased in any way other than through the development of agriculture. I cannot conceive of the development of industry in the west to any great extent unless it is developed by reason of the growth of the agricultural community which may furnish a home market for local industry. Apart from that there is another aspect of the matter which to me is extremely important, namely that unless the burden pressing down so many of the farmers in the west is mitigated or relieved, and unless farmers who are on the verge of deciding to give up farming because it has ceased to pay are encouraged to remain on their farms, the result will be that in western Canada we shall have large numbers of derelict farms. That of itself would be a calamity. I know that there are parts of western Canada in which the farms have been vacated and have become the seed beds for weeds, with the result that weeds have spread to surrounding lands. Every derelict farm is a menace to all the farms in the immediate neighbourhood. The mortagees or the municipal officials who have taken possession of such farms, due to default in payments of mortgage indebtedness or of taxes are immediately burdened with the additional expense of keeping down the weeds. If they do not keep them down, the provincial weed inspector comes down on them, and they find themselves in difficulties. I cannot conceive of any greater calamity to western Canada or any greater blow to agriculture than that which would result in any considerable abandonment of farms. I view this not as a problem affecting only the farmer and not as a matter concerning only the industry of agriculture, but as a national problem which must be solved if the west is to be developed. If the west is not developed the railway problem becomes aggravated, and the financial burden involved in that great problem magnified to a considerable extent. For these reasons I support the second reading of the bill.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: How many of these cases are settled in the offices of the official receivers, and what proportion are sent to the board of review? Further, how many assignments have been made?

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act was passed last year there was not a dissenting voice. In this chamber the principle was adopted unanimously, and so far as I am aware no objection was taken to the passing of the bill. The principle of the bill having thus been accepted, and in view of the fact that the present measure does not disturb that principle but is designed merely for the purpose of eliminating one or two minor defects which have been discovered in the operation of the act, and to improve the machinery for its operation, and inasmuch as there was no question of the principle of the bill being disturbed, I offered no observations in moving the second reading. That I was right in my assumption is with two exceptions evidenced by the remarks of different hon. members who have spoken. It has remained for the hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Roberge) to exhibit absolute hostility to the bill, and for the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) to call in question its constitutionality and in other respects perhaps to indicate that he is not altogether in agreement with its principle.

The hon. member for Mégantic may represent the opinion of the farmers in his constituency who, he states, number 5,000. May I observe however that in recent months I have received not dozens but hundreds of letters not only from farmers but from other individuals. Many other people whom in the very nature of things I would not see at all have come to the department, and I have as yet to receive the first letter from a farmer or an individual complaining about the principle of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. To me that seems a remarkable circumstance, if in fact the hon. member for Mégantic is speaking for the citizens in his constituency.

I could not help contrasting his remarks with those of the hon. member for Rosetown (Mr. Loucks) who agreed with the principle of the bill but thought it did not go far enough. On the other hand the hon. member for Mégantic was bitterly opposed to the principle and said it went altogether too far. The hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville left the impression that the effect of this bill was to humiliate the farmer. As was quite properly pointed out by the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) no farmer need be humiliated. He need not call into operation the provisions of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. I do not believe any farmer who does take advantage of the act need feel humiliated. What would be the object of his availing himself of its provisions? He would do so to place himself in a position to meet his obligations according to his ability. If a farmer is able to meet his obligations without referring to the act there is no necessity for his doing so.

I have not taken extensive notes, for the obvious reason that the queries which have been put to me are those which could best be answered when we are in committee of the whole, when a better opportunity for questions and answers is afforded. At that time I shall be pleased to give information in detail and to answer the questions of the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich). Apparently the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville is confused between the meanings of the word "social" and "socialism." This is social legislation, but it is as far removed from even the pink type of socialism as are the poles. What is the object of the legislation? The object is to keep the farmer on the farm, and surely if there is a capitalist on earth it is the farmer.

What I have said with respect to the questions of the hon. member for Vegreville applies also to references made by the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon). It is true that I have had some correspondence with Hon. L. A. Taschereau, Premier of Quebec, and I should be very glad to produce it. I appreciate the difficulties in dealing with an old established law and, as may be necessary, in interfering with the civil code. While as yet there has been no legislation passed in the province of Quebec, my letter received a most cordial response from the premier, and I feel sure if he can arrange an amendment to the law which will make for a more harmonious operation of this act, he will do so. We must remember that to the extent that the law of the province of Quebec militates against the successful operation of on one hand the farm loan act and on the other the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, just to that extent it militates against the citizens of that province. I have every reason to believe that the government representative of the people of the province of Quebec will take such steps as may be open to it to make the privileges possible under this act available to the citizens of that province, in the same manner as they have been made available to the citizens in other provinces. It must be borne in mind that this act has been in operation only a few short months, and yet notwithstanding that circumstance there have to our knowledge been many hundreds of settlements made outside the scope of the act altogether, but arrived at in virtue of the fact that the parties knew that if resort was had to the act a setlement would be effected. In addition to that, we actually have to-day proposals before the official receivers in the various parts of Canada exceeding seven thousand in number. When it is borne in mind that only a fraction, although it may be a large fraction, of the farms in Canada bear a mortgage at all, and that from that number we have upwards of seven thousand proposals already before the official receivers, no more striking illustration could be had I think of the merits of this act than that one circumstance alone.

My hon. friend from Mégantic (Mr. Roberge) says that this act is designed to injure the farmer. May I point out to him that I have never known any legislation that was designed for a specific purpose, namely, to assist the farmer, to receive such unanimity of support as has the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act.

Having said so much I have no doubt it will be found from experience with this act, as with respect to any other, that amendments may be made to advantage as, for example, the amendments which are now submitted, and which I believe will improve its operation. When it is borne in mind that we are dealing with an entirely new set of principles and that the entire personnel having to do with the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act consists of men who have never heretofore had any experience in the operation of an act of this kind and have had to learn anew, to my mind it is simply amazing how successful on the whole has been the operation of the act.

The tenor of the discussion on the whole on both sides of the house to-day I think has been admirable. Very little politics was injected into it, and that was all to the good. I must however take exception to the references that were made by my hon. friend from Laprairie-Napierville, which I submit with all respect to him were entirely gratuitous, when he suggested that this is an election measure. As a matter of fact this act was passed over a year ago when there was no prospect of an election, and these amendments, as anybody will know who reads the bill, are designed merely to make a better act of one that has been on the statute book for a year.

There is much more that I might say, Mr. Speaker, but I believe it can be said to far greater advantage in committee of the whole where the various details can be discussed, where the questions that have been submitted can be answered, and where we can have question and answer.

Motion (Mr. Rhodes) agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. RHODES moved that the house go into committee on the bill.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

PRIVILEGE—MR. VENIOT

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege which I wish to have laid before the house immediately.

It appears, sir, that in consequence of a speech made by myself in this house with reference to the mounted police a move was made in the court in the city of Montreal this morning asking for a writ against me for contempt of court, and that I be produced in court.

As a member of parliament I claim my privilege. I do not fear anything for anything I said on that occasion, Mr. Speaker, and if it were not taking up the time of the house I would repeat it. I stand by what I said. It is not on account of any fear that I take exception now. It is on account of the protection that as a privilege belongs to every member of this house.

I see the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré) in his place. I would ask him if the Department of Justice has any knowledge of this matter. It was brought up in the court by a gentleman representing those who made the charge in the case, the mounted police, I think.

So far as I am concerned, in the exercise of my privileges as a member of this house, and even in the exercise of my privileges as a citizen of Canada, I am prepared to take my medicine, but I am not prepared as a member of this house to allow any lawyer representing the crown to bring my name up before the courts in a matter of contempt for what I stated on my honour as a member from my place in this house.

Hon. MAURICE DUPRE (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am taken by surprise. I did not know anything at all about what my hon. friend from Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) has just stated. This is a matter to be dealt with by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) who unfortunately is confined to his house through illness. All I am doing at the present time is to help the Minister of Justice with his work as best I can during his absence. I shall make inquiries about what my hon. friend has said. That is all I can say at the moment.

Mr. VENIOT: Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me again, so that I may put the Solicitor General in a position to look into the matter, may I say that the press dispatch that has come out reads as follows:

Crankshaw, assistant prosecutor in the Bronfmann case, charges Veniot in contempt of court for charging R.C.M.P. with third degree methods while case proceeding.

That is the news that appears in some of the press today. Let me repeat that I am prepared to take my medicine before any of the courts. I am prepared to stand by what I said here, but I do deprecate the idea that anyone representing the crown should introduce the name of a member of parliament before the courts for contempt when he has absolutely no right to do it. We are sitting here in the highest court of this land, Mr. Speaker, and the gentleman who has brought my name before that court can be summoned before the bar of this house. We are the highest court and we have the right to do it. When I spoke in this house I spoke in the interests of the public. I spoke in order to draw the attention of the Justice department of this dominion to the way things were being carried on. I spoke on behalf of obtaining justice for those who were being ill treated, I felt, by the mounted police, and I will continue to do that so long as I have breath left in my body.

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should make just one observation. I am sure the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) will receive the protection which is his right, and until such time as it is to be found that instructions have been issued by the Department of Justice that action be taken against my hon. friend, I think judgment should be withheld. I should be very much surprised to find that such instructions were given.

Mr. VENIOT: I did not say that.

Mr. RHODES: I was afraid that that implication might rest.

Mr. VENIOT: No, no.

Mr. RHODES: Then we can get no farther with respect to the matter. Perhaps on Monday, if there is any question arising as to my hon. friend's rights as a member of parliament, we can deal with it then.

Mr. VENIOT: I did not imply at all that the instructions came from the department.

Mr. RHODES: I was afraid that was the implication.

Mr. VENIOT: I was not blaming the Department of Justice at all. I wanted to know whether they had heard anything of it, because it has been done. Suppose between now and Monday an attempt were made to arrest Your Honour: I want to say to you and this house that I would not stand for your arrest; I would use force.

Mr. DUPRE: I wish to emphasize the fact that this is the first intimation we have had about it.

Mr. VENIOT: I admit it.

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no use in my making any statement in connection with the matter of privilege raised by the hon. member. He has his privilege. What I might say would neither add to nor detract from it. Is the house ready for the question?

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Gobeil in the chair.

Mr. RHODES: It is obvious that as we have only five minutes left before six o'clock we cannot make progress. I therefore move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF MINES

The house in committee of supply.

For administration of the Explosives Act (chap. 62, R.S. 1927), $8,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is this vote for?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Mines): The Explosives Act is a piece of legislation that has to do with the supervision of authorized explosives used in mines and generally where explosives are required. The act contemplates that only authorized explosives shall be used. Explosives are recognized under the act as authorized only after the most careful investigation by the technical officers of the department. The department is required to supervise the storage of explosives and their transportation, in certain instances the board of railway commissioners having authority where they are transported on railways; and the technical officers and inspectors of the department see to the storage wherever explosives are stored, in hardware stores and places of that sort. The services of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are resorted to largely to carry on inspectional work, and that is the reason for this vote.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Am I correct in gathering that the greater part of the expenditure is for the purpose of paying the inspectors, or is any part of it expended on research work in connection with explosives?

Mr. GORDON: The greater part of the expenditures is for the purposes of inspection. I do not think that at the moment any research work as such is carried on. I think I am safe in saying that in all instances where an explosive is authorized it has first been approved of by the British government or by the government of the United States or both, because extreme care must be taken to see that no explosive that is likely to be dangerous is allowed as an authorized explosive under the act. About a year or two ago a formula for an explosive was presented to the department and great pressure was brought to bear to have it recognized as an authorized explosive under the act. This is an instance that came directly before me. The technical officers were not in agreement with those who advanced the argument that this was a desirable explosive to use in mines. We made investigations into the experience of Great Britain and the United States with respect to this particular explosive and their reports were adverse.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock, Mr. Ross in the chair.

Mr. GORDON: When the committee rose at six o'clock I was answering a question asked by the hon. member for Bow River and was endeavouring to explain what an authorized explosive was and the method pursued to admit it. I was recalling one instance where the right to manufacture an explosive was being pressed. The technical officers of the department refused to admit it and the inventor of the process, being quite clear that his explosive was safe and a proper one to be admitted, was in the development of it unfortunately by a premature explosion gathered to his fathers. The committee can see how very necessary it is for the technical officers of the department in admitting an authorized explosive to use extreme caution.

Mr. REID: How many officers are there in British Columbia to look after the examination of explosives, and who are they? I would like to have their names.

Mr. GORDON: There is one chief officer, Mr. Leach, and under him of course there are a great many sub-inspectors, one might call them, members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, who are all over Canada, and take care of examinations and investigations with respect to explosives.

[Mr. Gordon.]

Mr. REID: Does Mr. Leach go out himself and personally examine powder magazines and so forth?

Mr. GORDON: Yes, he looks after examinations personally and at times of course he instructs his officers, where occasion arises, to make inspections.

Mr. REID: But there are no officers other than he with the exception of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

Mr. GORDON: No.

Item agreed to.

Mines branch—

For investigations of mineral resources and deposits; of the mining and metallurgical industries, and of mineral technology; wages, and expenses of testing and research laboratories; for publications, English and French; for purchase of books and instruments; for miscellaneous assistance and contingencies; and for investigations by the dominion fuel board including salaries and all other expenses, $220,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Would the minister explain the purposes of the increase in this item?

Mr. GORDON: The increase asked for is $5,000 and the explanation is as follows: Of the increase the sum of $1,500 is for the installation of a tailing disposal plant at the Booth street ore dressing laboratory. That was necessitated by a large increase in the last two years in the treatment of ores that had been sent in in order that the proper metallurgical practice may be developed with respect to many new mines, and also by the fact that the low lying ground back of the laboratory is not sufficient to take care of the slimes and tailings. This amount is necessary to take care of the increased accommodation for tailings. The sum of $900 is for field and laboratory equipment that I believe to be quite necessary. Then the sum of $2,600 is asked for increased field examinations. I believe that is very necessary; in fact if more money were available I would like to ask for more, but we have to keep these grants down as low as we can.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): In what particular area will the investigations be carried on this summer?

Mr. GORDON: These are investigations all over Canada. As occasion arises where it seems necessary or desirable to make an investigation, the officers, as my hon. friend knows, go to those places and make investigations; they are not confined to any one place in Canada.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister mentioned the sum of $2,600 for increased field examinations. Is this for the purpose of covering the salary of a new appointee or is it for travelling expenses of one of the travelling officials??

Mr. GORDON: There is no new appointee.

Mr. REID: Are any of the investigations under this item made with the view of furthering the use of coal as fuel? I notice this includes investigations by the dominion fuel board.

Mr. GORDON: No, that would come under a different item.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Would the minister kindly give some explanation as to the expenditures made by the fuel board during the year and the investigations carried out by it?

Mr. NEILL: And the value, if any.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. member for Comox-Alberni says: "and the value, if any." There has been considerable criticism of the fuel board and the minister should show that it is worth while continuing its activities.

Mr. GORDON: The amount under this item for the dominion fuel board is only for salaries but I shall be glad to give an explanation when the other appropriation for this board is under consideration.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): How much of this is for the dominion fuel board?

Mr. GORDON: It is approximately $14,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): All for salaries?

Mr. GORDON: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Who constitute the personnel of the dominion fuel board and what are the salaries?

Mr. GORDON: The dominion fuel board's employees now are:

	Salaries
F. G. Neate, secretary	$3,840
E. A. R. Pelletier	1,500
J. F. Gray	1,380
E. A. Reardon	1,140

In addition to these there are other employees who are taken from the mines branch. The total salaries are $13,014.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The estimate reads "for investigations by the dominion fuel board." If that is incorrect, if no portion of this is for investigations, would it not be well to amend that wording so that it will not be misleading? Perhaps the best way to get at it would be for the minister to analyze the vote of $220,000 and let us know just how it is expended.

Mr. GORDON: Perhaps it will shorten the discussion if the suggestion of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) is followed. The vote is divided under the following divisions:

Mineral resources, $12,400.
Ore dressing and metallurgy, $54,000.
Fuel and fuel testing, $37,200.
Ceramics and road material, $16,000.
Chemistry, $4,000.
Mechanical section, $40,650.
Dominion fuel board, $16,000.
General administration, $9,750.
Publications, English and French, purchases of books and instruments, miscellaneous assistance and contingencies, $30,000.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Do I understand that there is no expenditure for investigation by the dominion fuel board under this vote?

Mr. GORDON: Yes, the hon. member is quite right.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Then I suggest that the words "for investigations" be struck out. The minister mentioned $37,200 for fuel testing. Why is it necessary to continue such an enormous amount for testing fuel? What new fuels are being tested? This vote has been in the estimates ever since I have been in the house; the federal government has been testing fuels for twelve years.

Mr. GORDON: The division of fuels and fuel testing is engaged in scientific investigations of solid, liquid and gaseous fuels, undertaken with a view to substitution of Canadian fuels for imported fuels, and the more efficient utilization of Canadian fuels. The continuation of large scale by-product coking and domestic furnace tests of Canadian coal is contemplated, in addition to research work with a view to better utilization of solid, liquid and gaseous fuels. The department does carry on at its laboratories on Booth street tests of fuels from all parts of Canada, and also of foreign fuels that come into competition with them, with respect to their efficiency as such, and sometimes in order to assist in the administration of the subventions granted, and as to the kind of comparable competitive fuels that our home produced fuels have to meet. These investigations are going on constantly at the laboratories.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is just the point, they are going on constantly.

I am anxious to know if during the last year any new types of fuel have been investigated and analyzed and what difference it has made. I should like also to know whether the work of this fuel testing laboratory has had any real effect on government policy or has succeeded in closing out competitive fuels.

Mr. GORDON: I think I can confidently state that the work of the branch has been useful and beneficial. For instance I remember very well that there was a decided opinion in Winnipeg that Canadian coals were not good coking fuel, that we did not have such in western Canada. Tests were carried on both at Ottawa and under the supervision of the officers of the department at Winnipeg, and the result was that the Winnipeg Electric Company now largely use —in fact I believe the proportion is one hundred per cent—coal from Michel in the Crowsnest pass. The same thing occurred in connection with the Montreal coke plant; those engaged in that activity believed that the Nova Scotia coals could not compete with coke and coal from the United States. The department carried on extensive tests there, and as a result large orders were received from the Montreal coke plant for Nova Scotia coal, and I believe that now sixty to seventy per cent of their total purchases are Nova Scotia coal. This is a direct result of the tests and examinations made and research carried out by the officers of the fuel board.

Mr. REID: Is it not a fact that the national research council also conduct experiments on fuels?

Mr. GORDON: My information is that they have never conducted research work on fuels. If they have we have no record of it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Are not the provincial governments carrying on in their mines branches research or analytical work in coal?

Mr. GORDON: I believe Alberta is doing some work, but I do not think any work is being done by any other province. If the hon. member has in mind overlapping and duplication I may say that in connection with the mines department it has been my desire to eliminate that as far as possible, because it is a pure waste of money. There is no overlapping in this department, so far as I am aware.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I wonder if, following the minister's statement as to the advantages to the coal industry and the country, he could give the committee the total imports of coal and coke for the last two years, together with the total consumption in this country, for comparative purposes?

Mr. GORDON: I am afraid I cannot give as complete a picture as I would like. I did not anticipate having to answer such a question, but I hope the information I have may be helpful. The importation of anthracite was as follows:

	1933 Tons	1934 Tons
United States	1,429,831	1,804,133
Increase		374,302
Great Britain	1,605,776	1,643,516
Increase		37,740
Other sources	150	89,660
Increase		89,510

Mr. NEILL: What countries would be involved in those last figures?

Mr. GORDON: Largely Germany. The importation of bituminous coal was as follows:

	1933 Tons	1934 Tons
United States	8,092,158	9,945,953
Increase		1,853,795
Great Britain	338,061	330,459
Decrease		7,602

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Now could the minister give us the production and consumpton of Canadian coal during the same periods?

Mr. GORDON: In 1933 the production of Canadian coal amounted to 11,903,344 tons, and in 1934, the production was 13,891,138 tons.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I also asked the minister to give us the consumption in Canada, if he has that figure.

Mr. GORDON: I have not the figure here, but I assume the total production was consumed.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Not in Canada.

Mr. GORDON: There may have been, and doubtless were, some exports, but they would not amount to very much.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The point I want to raise at this stage is that the minister should give the committee at a later date, when he is prepared for it, some further statement as to the usefulness of continuing the activities of the fuel board. The figures he has just given the committee would indicate that the imports from other countries have steadily increased. It is true that there also has been a slight increase in the production of Canadian coal, but there is a feeling throughout the country, and particularly in the mining sections, that neither this government nor the previous government have done all that might be done for the coal industry and to encourage the consumption of Canadian coal in Canada. The minister is as well aware as any member of the committee of the vast and valuable resource we have in our Canadian coal, and I am very sorry to see that there has not been a greater increase in the consumption of that coal in the central provinces, notably Ontario. Before this session ends I hope the minister and the government will take the necessary steps—I may have to suggest one or two of them later—to see that no stone is left unturned to increase the consumption of Alberta coal, which is of the finest quality for domestic purposes, in Ontario. I anticipate with some hope the statement of the minister on the fuel board and the investigations carried on by the mines branch.

Mr. NEILL: The minister did not state the importations of lignite coal into Canada. Could he give those figures, and could he also give the production of anthracite in Canada?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): While that information is being looked up, Mr. Chairman, may I through you ask another question? Have there been any importations of coal into Canada from Russia during the last three or four years, and if so to what extent?

Mr. GORDON: These are questions which probably should be directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but I am not entirely unacquainted with the situation. I think I can safely say there have been no importations of Russian coal into Canada since 1931. I believe that was the year. I have no figures with respect to the importation of lignite coal. I am afraid I would have to resort to the Department of Trade and Commerce for the figures with which to answer the hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

Mr. NEILL: What about the production of Canadian anthracite?

Mr. GORDON: That, I know, is a subject that is very dear to the heart of the hon. member, who knows perhaps better than any other hon. member the history of the production of Canadian anthracite coal. I have to rely entirely on my recollection, which is not too clear, as to the history of the development of anthracite coal mining in Canada.

Mr. NEILL: I was not asking that; I was just asking what was the production for the last year.

Mr. GORDON: I have no figures, but I believe the one anthracite mine is located near Bow River. It is operated by the Wheatley family. At one time they did produce a very considerable quantity of anthracite coal, although I have not the exact amount in my mind. I believe it is still being operated by the family with an annual production of between 800 and 900 tons. That is the only anthracite coal I know of that is being mined in Canada.

Mr. NEILL: The hon. member for Bow River asked the minister about the production of coal in Canada and the importation of coal into this country. The minister gave figures presumably from his record, and it seems curious that he does not have under his hand figures showing the importations of lignite. I understand some few thousands of tons come in along the Pacific coast to Vancouver, but there seems to be no record of it. It should not be necessary to go to the Department of Trade and Commerce for that information.

Mr. GORDON: So far as the records of the Department of Mines are concerned I would say that if lignite is being imported at Vancouver it would be listed under bituminous coal. At any rate I would have to refer to the Department of Trade and Commerce to get the figures.

Mr. NEILL: I tried for years to have it, as it should be, under bituminous coal, but I could not get the minister or his deputy to make the necessary simple changes to bring it under the proper heading. The definition of lignite was arbitrarily and more or less carelessly made in years gone by when the amount of moisture content did not matter. Only a slight change in the definition would have placed it under bituminous coal, and subject to duty. Lignite came in free. I failed utterly to get the department interested in the matter, and therefore I suggest it is not coming in as bituminous coal but as lignite, and it is most extraordinary that there is no record. If the minister is prepared to say no lignite is coming in, that would be a different matter, but he does not appear to have any records on the point. What is the fuel board doing, if it does not know about that?

Mr. GORDON: Perhaps the fuel board should not be criticized for this. I have looked through the records of the Department of Trade and Commerce, the department charged with the responsibility, and I see their records for 1933 indicate an importation of 2,707 tons of lignite from the United States

Mr. NEILL: What is the importation for 1934?

Mr. GORDON: I have not the figures for 1934. I am told that this is the last report, and that the figures for 1934 are not available.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I should like to revert to the matter of Russian coal. The hon. member for Comox-Alberni has said that certain fuel was coming into Canada as lignite when it should have been described as bituminous coal. I have heard it stated that Russian anthracite coal is coming into Canada disguised as Welsh coal, or that it is being described in that way, and that certain big importers in Montreal were trafficking in it. Has the minister any information about the matter?

Mr. GORDON: No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is he prepared to say it is not true?

Mr. GORDON: I usually try to be careful about statements as to truth or falsity, and I should not care to hazard an opinion.

Mr. GERSHAW: I understand a substance known as peat is found in many places in Ontario, and that only lately a process has been perfected for converting it into a combustible material to be used for heating purposes. Could the minister give information on that point?

Mr. GORDON: Yes, there are peat bogs in Ontario, and I presume in many countries of the world. In conjunction with the provinces Canada did at one time make an effort to investigate the possibility of converting these peat bogs into sources of useful fuels. A long series of investigations ensued under what I believe was known as the peat fuel committee. As a result a plant was set up at Alfred, a point between here and Montreal, and an expenditure of about $350,000 was made. The experiments did not prove successful. Other efforts were made in Saskatchewan with regard to lignite, and large sums of money were spent.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Was that not a briquetting experiment?

Mr. GORDON: Yes, that was briquetting. But it was another effort to set up a new type of fuel.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): They got out of one bog into another.

Mr. GORDON: Yes, I think so. I believe at the present time claims are being made that by a new process peat may be converted into fuel comparable with the domestic fuel used in the central provinces. I have heard considerable talk about it, particularly in the last two or three weeks. It may be that a process has been developed which will provide an additional source of domestic fuel.

Mr. NEILL: In a limited area. Freight charges would keep it within a limited area, would they not?

Mr. GORDON: Yes, I would think so; it is probable that freight charges would militate against its use over a wide area. However the matter has been brought to my attention and I have given it consideration. I propose to study the matter further because if the process is perfected to the point where it will produce from these peat bogs what the proponents of the process say it will produce, then it is something which any government, provincial or federal, should investigate so that such a fuel could be placed on the market. In the meantime I purpose continuing my investigations of the possibilities of this new process which the sponsors say will develop fuel from peat bogs. I have an open mind on the subject; I do not know whether the process is good, bad or indifferent, but I shall continue my investigations and find out the amount of success there was in Denmark, where I believe a plant has been recently set up, and the success in Ireland where similar operations are being projected.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the name of the firm in Canada carrying on the experiments?

Mr. GORDON: I do not know.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does the minister know the name of the company interested?

Mr. GORDON: No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): With whom is the minister carrying on his investigations?

Mr. GORDON: Purely on representations which have been made by a man who purports to represent the English firm holding the patents.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is his name?

Mr. GORDON: I think his name is Brown.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is he resident in Canada?

Mr. GORDON: I do not know.

Mr. DUPUIS: Is there any report available concerning the experiments made with peat?

Mr. GORDON: No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): This Alfred peat bog is an old story. I see the former Minister of the Interior (Mr. Stewart) smiling a sardonic smile when he remembers his experience in connection with this same expenditure. I wonder if the minister could now give the committee the total expenditures made on the Alfred peat bog and other bog projects in Canada, in other words, the total expenditure and the efforts made to make peat commercially feasible for fuel. Will he tell the committee whether any of this stuff ever went on the market on a commercial scale, and whether all the money expended was ever worth one cent to the country.

Mr. GORDON: The only dominion expenditure devoted towards peat or bog fuel totalled $358,678.26, and there was a revenue derived from the product of $31,847.89, showing a net expenditure of $326,830.37. Some of the fuel went on the market and was represented largely by that sum of $31,000 odd. So as far as that effort was concerned we must confess that it was not a success. But all this was before my time.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): And even the sales that were made were they not made at the instigation of this department to other departments of the government in this city, and was not the peat used chiefly in ministers' fireplaces and places like that? In other words, it really was not on the open market.

Mr. GORDON: The hon. member is going back before my time. I can assure him that my fireplace was never fueled with peat from the Alfred bog. If he has reference to ministers of the gospel, and not to ministers of the government, I am further at sea than ever.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Ministers of the gospel would not use peat for fuel, because they have another preferred type. Would the minister ask his advisers whether any of this peat fuel was ever put on the open market commercially?

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Perhaps the minister would pardon me if I assured the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) that a very considerable number of carloads were used in the city of Montreal. As the hon. member will understand it takes a lot of peat fuel to make up that $31,000 figure which the minister gave. It is a cheap fuel, and while the expenditure was perhaps excessive, there is no doubt at all about the utility of peat as a fuel as it is manufactured at Alfred, as against the use of hardwood; but it was not in any way a competitor with coal. I am told, and now I am speaking of something of which I have no personal knowledge, that as a result of experiments and investigations in England and Denmark they can now briquette the fuel, and they claim that it is a competitor with low grade coals. We were never able to succeed in inventing a process for briquetting peat, although we tried for a number of years to do so.

Item agreed to.

Geological Survey—
For explorations, surveys, and investigations; for publication of English and French editions of reports, maps, illustrations, etc., relating thereto; and for salaries and wages of explorers, topographers and others, $190,000.
For maintenance of offices and museum; for purchase of instruments, chemicals, books of reference, museum equipment and specimens, and related supplies; for expenses of the Geographic Board of Canada; and for miscellaneous assistance and contingencies, $75,502.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Would the minister tell the committee what proportion of this vote is to be expended on work in British Columbia and the places where work is going to be done in that province?

Mr. GORDON: Each year a plan of geological survey work is mapped out by the departmental officials, and it is largely determined by the assignment of a part of the vote to carry on geological work that has been already started and is under way where it is sought to have a regular progression of the work take place, and by turning towards those areas where information would seem to indicate that geological work would determine favourable occurrences for the deposition of minerals which like gold can easily be disposed of. Those are the factors that underlie the mapping out of the year's geological work. The plan of the work for this year is now under consideration. Perhaps I could not do better than to read a short memorandum that has been prepared in the department, after consultation with myself on a great many occasions, as to the general plan for this year:

Geological and topographical work to aid prospecting for and development of gold placers and other mineral deposits in the Yukon.
Geological and topographical work in the Bridge river area of British Columbia, an active gold producing camp.
The investigation of gold bearing deposits on Vancouver island.
Geological exploration of regions bordering the lower Fraser river on the west.

That area, as the members from British Columbia know, is almost an unknown area in the province, but an area in which mineral deposits have beeen discovered.

Investigation of gold bearing deposits in the Barkerville and adjacent areas in British Columbia.

Investigation of various gold bearing and other mineral discoveries in southern British Columbia.

That, broadly speaking, is the plan that is now under consideration by the branch of the geological service with respect to the work for this year in British Columbia. Their work will be devoted, as I have indicated, to those sections where it is known that the progress of the work is likely to disclose that kind of geological occurrence that is most favourable for the deposition of ores that are more easily sold than others, gold in particular.

Mr. REID: After the explorers have been in the districts mentioned and made their discoveries, is the information they have gathered disseminated to the public, or is it kept within the department itself?

Mr. GORDON: Just as soon as the year's work is mapped out and determined, the program is made known by the department through the technical publications. Then when the field parties return to Ottawa from their year's geological work, their field notes and other information with respect to the areas in which they have operated are with all reasonable dispatch converted into a formal report which is printed as one of the publications of the department and made available as soon as possible to those interested, prospectors, the mineral industry, and to anyone who cares to inquire.

Mr. NEILL: I think the work done by this branch is money well spent and that the work is well carried out under a competent head. Would the minister give us more details of the work that is proposed to be done on Vancouver island, and where it is to be done?

Mr. GORDON: What is the name of the island?

Mr. NEILL: No, but where. Is it around Nympkish?

Mr. GORDON: I am not acquainted with the names of the places; the best I can say is, it is the northern end of Vancouver island. I have never prospected there myself, politically or otherwise.

Mr. NEILL: I am sure the minister would be well repaid and welcomed if he prospected it politically.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): I know that representations have been made to the department from the territory called Unik river area, between southeastern Alaska, Yukon and Peace river, as well as from Buckley and Nohaco area, extending from the coast as far as Smithers on the Skeena, linking up with the survey made from the Alberta boundary and from the Bella Coola area, extending into the Cariboo district.

Mr. GORDON: I cannot say whether the department has received any direct specific request for investigations in the first named field, but negotiations are at present going on between the officers of the government of British Columbia and our own department, with a view to having geological work carried on where, in the best judgment of those who are perhaps most familiar with the locality, it will be of greatest use. I am in thorough accord with what has been said by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, and I am sure it commends itself to all other hon. members, that no more useful work can be carried on in what is generally called the northern part of Canada than geological research work, particularly for precious metals. That work has been going on, as hon. members know, since 1842, as a department of some government, though not then of course the dominion government. But the first director of geological survey was Sir William Logan, and the work has been carried on continuously down to the present time. Personally I should like to see it greatly extended. Of course, none of us will ever see the time when even fairly well known mining areas will have been completely explored geologically. I well remember that at a meeting of the institute of mining and metallurgy not many years ago a person who should have known better suggested that, this work having been carried on in Canada since 1842, it was strange that they did not know all about the geological occurrences of the country by now. Well, if anyone will review the history of Britain he will find that for hundreds of years geological records have been kept of the work done there, a very small country compared with Canada; and last year they had a larger vote than ever devoted to geological work in Britain. At least therefore we can get some comfort from the reflection that there will be activities in geological work in Canada for hundreds of years to come, and then we shall know very little about the riches that may be hidden, not sticking out for people to go and dig them up easily, but hidden where they will challenge the curiosity and the courage of the people of to-day and of those who will come after us.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Are any other departments of government carrying on geological survey work, or is this the only geological survey provided?

Mr. GORDON: This is the only one that the dominion government is carrying on. Some provincial governments in later years have started geological work, principally in Ontario and latterly in Quebec. I doubt whether there is any in the other provinces. Where Ontario and Quebec carry on geological survey work, it was the practice of the late government, a very proper practice too, as it is of the present government, to have a meeting perhaps once or twice a year to see that the provincial work did not overlap the work that was being done by the dominion. That is essential, because it is only throwing money away to have a second set of geologists going over the same field that is being pursued by this government.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): I am glad that there is an increase in this vote, and I am pleased to have heard the minister's explanation, because in my opinion any assistance given to the exploration of our natural resources must be taken seriously. I notice that the dapartment is working in conjunction with the mines department of British Columbia. The Department of Mines in that province, especially in the northern portion, is making investigations and sending suggestions to this department, and I am glad to know that recommendations are coming from the province for further explorations. I am sure from what the minister has said that the matter will be given the consideration it deserves.

Mr. DUPUIS: Has any survey investigation been made in Quebec and, if so, how much was expended out of the $190,000 last year?

Mr. GORDON: Yes; there is geological survey work being done in the province of Quebec, but I have not before me the amount actually expended. However, from the chart I have before me, I should say that there was more money spent in geological survey work in the province of Quebec last year than in any other province. That of course, as the hon. member knows, arises from the fact—

Mr. DUPUIS: The discovery of a new field.

Mr. GORDON: Yes, the very valuable discoveries that were made at Noranda and to the northeast through Chibougamau. There is also keen interest being taken in the development not only of gold mining but copper mining and the mining of other metals in the northern part of the province. This may give my hon. friend some information. I see that more parties were sent into Quebec last year than into any other province. Quebec is now doing some geological work itself. Ontario of course has for many years been expanding its geological work, and in order that overlapping may not take place the amount of work that the dominion government has been doing in Ontario is gradually becoming less. At the moment more work is being done in Quebec than elsewhere, although they are now developing a geological survey branch of their own, which I think is a very desirable effort.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): How much of this appropriation is devoted to the purposes of the geographic board of Canada? Is it all of the $75,502 or only part of it?

Mr. GORDON: I must confess that I am not very well acquainted with the geographic board or its operations, but I understand it is the board that among its other duties passes upon the names to lakes and rivers. Under this appropriation we devote the services of the secretary, one man, to the geographic board, and his salary is, I believe, about $2,500 a year.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): This item reads:

For expenses of the geographic board of Canada.

What are the expenses of the geographic board of Canada under this item?

Mr. GORDON: I am not able to give the total expenses of the geographic board of Canada. I can only say that so far as the Department of Mines is concerned, our contribution is the services of one official whose salary is about $2,500 a year.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Is that all then that comes out of this item?

Mr. GORDON: Yes, for the geographic board.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Under what other item is the geographic board provided for?

Mr. NEILL: Is it not more or less an honorary board?

Mr. GORDON: I confess that I have not been brought into close touch with the geographic board, but I see before me a memorandum which seems to indicate that the board is made up of a number of officials drawn from various departments of government. The mines department supplies to the board the secretary whose salary is $2,160 a year. Then there is a small amount of $600 for printing and office supplies, making a total of $2,760. That is the total that the mines department is charged with respect to the geographic board.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Just before this item carries and we conclude the estimates of the mines department, I would like to ask the minister to revert for a moment to Mr. Brown. I understand now that the government is going to undertake rather extensive experimental work at the instigation of Mr. Brown.

Mr. GORDON: No, not at all.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Well, just what is this new experimental work that is being undertaken that he speaks of so highly as having originated in Denmark and having in some degree been carried on in Ireland in connection with peat fuel?

Mr. GORDON: I have before me no plan by Mr. Brown. He has seen me and talked to me about the promotion of a company for the manufacture and sale of peat fuel. He has told me that there is in Denmark a plant now operating. He has also told me that the great firm of Babcock and Wilcox, well known throughout the world, have approved the mechanical operations of a plant that was built to take advantage, I believe, of certain patent processes which the companies or individuals that he says he represents, hold with respect to the development of peat fuel. But let me not be misunderstood. There is at the present time so far as I am concerned no intention whatever with the information before me to advise the government to embark upon anything in the way of a project that Mr. Brown has of actually manufacturing peat or, as he suggests, to grant dominion government subsidies in connection with peat fuel until it is made abundantly apparent to me that the plant now in operation in Denmark or Ireland, or wherever it may be, is being conducted and operated on a sound business basis, producing a fuel which is a comparable, competitive fuel in the areas where it might be marketed in Ontario and Quebec. Even then a great deal of investigation work would have to be undertaken by somebody —and I think that somebody certainly comprises those who are advocating the adventure into peat fuel—before any government, whether provincial or dominion, would be justified in subsidizing peat fuel.

Let the committee remember, as I said before, that I have an absolutely open mind in the matter. If there is any fuel that can be provided at lower cost to the people in what we call the acute fuel area, that is the central portion of Canada, and that will better the situation to the consumer of fuel, then we or any other government would be derelict in our duty if we did not at least see that no barrier was thrown in the way of the development of that fuel. But it is quite a different matter as to the desirability of a government subsidizing a private activity of this character, and if the government could be persuaded to do this, it would in my judgment be only after the closest scrutiny as to the soundness not only of the process but of the economics that are involved in the distribution of the fuel. I do not think I can say more than that, but I would be extremely careful to see that when any steps were being taken, the closest scrutiny would be made of any plan that is projected for peat fuel. At the same time I have an open mind. There will undoubtedly come a time —it may be long delayed; it may not be so far away—when peat fuel may have to be resorted to, but at the same time I can only repeat what I said before; there would have to be a very complete disclosure of the soundness of a plan before I could be induced to recommend it to this or any other government for subsidy, because if these peat fuels are able to perform as some of their advocates say, they do not need any government assistance. However, I have the matter under consideration in the hope that more information will be available in order that I may make up my mind whether or not from a national standpoint it is of sufficient value to warrant further investigation.

Mr. REID: Have any investigations been made into the possibilities of extracting oil and gasoline from coal? The minister no doubt knows that Great Britain was one of the greatest coal producing countries of the world until she lost the market when oil was introduced. Now many of her own battleships are using fuel oil. But Great Britain has seen the seriousness of the situation in the coal mining industry and I understand is making extensive experiments and has now discovered how to extract fuel oil and gasoline from coal. In vew of the fact that we have in Canada large coal fields, and are feeling the competition of fuel oil from abroad, I was wondering if the department had made any investigation into that matter.

Mr. GORDON: It is pretty well known that Germany and Great Britain for a number of years have spent through state agencies and private activity huge sums in endeavouring to develop some process to extract fuel oil and gasoline from coal on a commercial basis. Some advance has been made. Great Britain has done a great deal, and some fuel oil and gasoline have been produced commercially, but under a very heavy protective tariff, I think they call it. In Germany the protection is twenty-two cents a gallon, and in England apparently 8 pence. Some work has been done in investigation of the possibilites of extraction of oil and gasoline from our fuels. The advances made in research work by Great Britain are I believe available to us. I do not believe it would be a justifiable expense at present for Canada to set up a large and costly research staff to carry on this work when Great Britain is doing it. It is true that such investigation is also being carried on by private concerns in Great Britain and their results might not be as readily available to us as those from the work being done by the state. But I seriously question the wisdom of our doing more than we are at the moment, which I confess is not very much.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Referring again to the question of further experimental work on peat fuel, I think the minister is well advised to be cautious in touching any project that may be brought to him by a person whom he does not know and as to whose nationality even he seems to be in doubt, though his name is Brown. He will doubtless take into consideration also the fact that the situation in Denmark and Ireland is not the same as in this country. In one of them peat has been the traditional fuel used ever since the country was an inhabited part of the globe; the peat there of course is entirely different from that in this country where it has a high liquid content. In Denmark the population is extremely dense, and in both those countries there are no wooded areas from which to draw fuel supplies, which are carefully preserved for other purposes than fuel. But in this country we still have abundant fuel resources, both underground in the form of coal and on the surface in the form of trees. Therefore I do not think there is any necessity at this time for further experimental work in connection with peat fuel, and I am glad the minister is giving the matter careful consideration before he goes into it again.

Mr. NEILL: In reference to the remark made by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid). I did not intend to deal with that matter—it seemed so hopeless—but as he has brought it up I join with him in pressing on the department the need for consideration being given to the subject of making our large coal resources available in some form other than in the raw state. Their location makes it often difficult to market the product just as coal. I notice, and I am sorry to notice, the remark of the minister that they are not doing very much. I entirely agree with that; I do not think the Department of Mines are paying anything like the attention they ought to that branch of a very important subject. I will go further and say that I think the officials are wholly unsympathetic.

Mr. GORDON: Oh no, not at all.

Mr. NEILL: Well, that is my opinion, as a result of ten years' experience.

Mr. GORDON: The Department of Mines to-day is one of the busiest departments.

Mr. NEILL: I do not know what they are busy at.

Mr. GORDON: Of course you don't.

Mr. NEILL: In the annual report, the subject of hydrogenation of coal, which is vital to the matter in question, is disposed of in seven lines. I have before me a letter from the department answering one in which I asked what knowledge they have of certain of these improved methods being developed in England—in actual practice I think it involved an expenditure of £2,000,000—and part of the answer I got is that the only knowledge they have is through newspaper accounts. Then I was given some nice pamphlets supposed to satisfy me, much in the same way as the clown in the circus says, "I want a horse," and his partner says, "Here is a clothes horse." I was given a pamphlet entitled Experiments on the Hydrogenation of Alberta Bitumen and on the effect of Pressure on the Pyrolysis of Methane, and another entitled, Report of Experimental Work on the Hydrogenation of Canadian Coal, Coal Tar, and Bitumen for the Production of Motor Fuel. One is dated 1930-31, and the other 1932. Have we not got any further in our progress than that? As far as I can judge they are going along the line of the man who said he was going to be an astronomer. He would not take any notice of the alleged discoveries made by people in the past; he was going to start on his own, and he died before he discovered that the world is round. I quite agree with the minister that it would be useless to spend large sums developing plant in Canada to investigate the more elementary facts, but as far as I can learn what they are doing is along those lines. Rather I believe that the minister should take advantage of the knowledge and experience secured by other nations, for example England, and Germany. I rather think Australia has made a bargain with some oil company with English capital to make a start there. But I do not know, and I certainly shall not get my information from the department, because when I write them they say; "We have no information beyond newspaper accounts." I am not an official paid to give these subjects intensive study, but I get the information as soon as they do. I do think the department should make a special effort to develop investigations, not along the line of elemental scientific discoveries but by taking advantage of the acquired knowledge of other peoples. In Great Britain, certainly where governmental aid is introduced, we could get that information readily enough; unless it is in connection with a distinctly private patent—which I do not think is the case here—I believe the British people are not unwilling to afford assistance to one of the dominions in this way.

I am not finding fault with the minister. I know the multitudinous duties he has to perform, and I know he has to rely on his various deputies. I do claim, however, that the officials of the mines department are not paying enough attention to this subject. One of the crying needs of Canada to-day is to get our coal mines working to capacity; we so much need work for coal miners. People are coming here every day asking the government to increase the subventions in order that coal may be shipped from one place in the country, where providence or nature has placed it, to the centres of population. It may be difficult to transport coal as such, but it is easy to transport it in the shape of gasoline, fuel oil or the like. I am not saying this with any suggestion of political antagonism to the minister; rather I am asking that he use his influence to stir up that branch of his department and get some action.

Mr. GORDON: The department would have to be greatly enlarged to undertake work like that.

Mr. MYERS: I just wish to direct the attention of the hon. member for Bow River to the fact that there need be no doubt in the world as to the nationality of Mr. Brown. He is a native of Prince Edward Island, and therefore he is a citizen of no mean country.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): My point was that the minister was not able to tell me, and he was the person concerned. I am glad to have the information from the hon. member.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Neill.]

Mines—

Salaries, $485,910; contingencies, $20,000.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I think the hon. member for South Perth requested that one item be allowed to stand in order that there might be some discussion by some of the members who are absent this evening. I do not think it makes much difference which item stands, if the minister will just leave one item open.

Mr. GORDON: That is quite right; I remember that the hon. member for South Perth asked that an item stand, and I shall be glad to let this item stand.

Item stands.

To provide for payments in connection with the movements of coal under conditions prescribed by the governor in council and for the cost of administration thereof, $2,450,000.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): What proportion of this amount is used for the movement of coal from Alberta eastward?

Mr. GORDON: Perhaps I can give both east and west at the same time; it might shorten the discussion. The total of eastern coal moved under subvention in 1934 was 1,824,656 tons, at a cost of $1,729,552.81. The total of western coal moved under subvention was 544,147 tons at a total cost of $531,610.86. The total moved was 2,368,803 tons at a total cost of $2,261,163.67.

Mr. REID: I wonder if the minister can tell us if any of that money went to coal moving from Alberta to British Columbia or vice versa?

Mr. GORDON: No, none of this money was devoted to coal moving from Alberta to British Columbia.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Do those figures include the movement of coal from the Estevan coal fields in Saskatchewan?

Mr. GORDON: Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): Has there been any change in the subvention rate in connection with the Estevan coal? A year or two ago the rate from the Saskatchewan coal fields was very much reduced, and I wondered if there had been any change in that rate during the last year or so.

Mr. GORDON: In May of last year the coal operators of Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia came to Ottawa with the idea of trying to adjust the coal subventions in order as nearly as possible to bring the assistance into a horizontal shape, if I may put it in that way, so that one would not be preferred over another. At that time there was a general scaling down of the subventions, it being found that mainly by reason of subventions which had been granted for quite a number of years, and which were increased in the last three and a half years, the Manitoba market is largely and almost entirely supplied by the coal mines of Alberta, the Crowsnest and Saskatchewan. I may say that the meeting of the coal operators was not acrimonious at all. They recognized that the subventions they had been getting had secured practically the entire Manitoba market, and that the rates then effective were no longer necessary. Therefore there was a gradation downward of the subventions with respect to the coal of all three provinces coming into Manitoba, and it applied with equal force, as nearly as we could determine it, to each of the coal fields. So far as I know there has been no great complaint made by the operators since. I am very glad to tell the house that with the least possible expense to the state the coal mines both east and west have been able to reach further into the great consuming part of Canada. I need not tell hon. members how extremely difficult this whole matter has been and will continue to be, because we cannot change our geographical situation or our political boundaries. Mistakes will be made. I know that my administration of this most complex question has not been without error, and I am happy in the thought that perhaps all my errors have not yet been found out. At any rate we are endeavouring as best we can to apply these subventions throughout Canada, both east and west, in order that the maximum amount of Canadian coal may be consumed in Canada and the greatest number of Canadian coal miners may get work.

Mr. McKENZIE (Assiniboia): The minister mentioned a meeting last year. I wondered if there was any change with regard to the basis on which this subvention is paid. Is it still on a mileage basis or is it just a flat rate of so much per ton?

While the minister is looking up that point I might say that when the subvention first operated, I believe about 1930, the rate from the Estevan coal mine was 25 cents a ton to Winnipeg. I believe the rate from Alberta was set at about one dollar a ton. Then two or three years ago it was changed and put on a mileage basis of one-seventh of a cent per mile. The Estevan coal mines being about 280 miles from Winnipeg the subvention was reduced from 25 cents down to about 15 cents, or approximately that amount I wonder if any change has been made since.

Mr. GORDON: The prevailing rate is one-seventh of a cent per ton mile from Saskatchewan with a maximum of 15 cents to Manitoba. That was the change made to which the hon. member has referred.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Do these subventions now permit western coal to come east so as to meet Nova Scotia coal?

Mr. GORDON: No. There is a gap in the central part of Canada which has never been closed.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is where we could put the peat.

Mr. GORDON: Yes, I think that is where the peat would come in.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The minister was going to tell me the total amount last year under subvention from Alberta as compared with the amount for this year. I believe he said that for 1934 the amount was about 544,000 tons.

Mr. GORDON: That is the total western movement.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): For 1934?

Mr. GORDON: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is it for 1933?

Mr. GORDON: It is 451,073 tons.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Rhodes the house adjourned at 9.35 p.m.

Monday, March 4, 1935

The house met at three o'clock.

MARINE AND FISHERIES

Mr. W. C. S. McLURE (Queens) moved concurrence in the first report of the select standing committee on marine and fisheries.

Motion agreed to.

MARITIME PROVINCES

Report of the royal commission on financial arrangements between the dominion and the maritime provinces—Sir George Perley.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

APPOINTMENT OF SELECT STANDING COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER ACCOUNTS AND ESTIMATES

Sir GEORGE PERLEY (For the Prime Minister) moved:

That standing order 63 of the House of Commons relating to the appointment of standing committees of the house be amended by adding to the standing committees of the house for the present session a standing committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government, to which will be referred the accounts and estimates of the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Government Merchant Marine for the present session, for consideration and report to the house; provided, however, that nothing in the resolution shall be construed to curtail in any way the full right of discussion in committee of supply; and that said committee consist of: Messrs. Beaubien, Beaubier, Bell (St. Antoine), Bothwell, Cantley, Chaplin, Duff, Euler, Fiset (Sir Eugène), Fraser (Cariboo), Geary, Gray, Gobeil, Hanbury, Heaps, MacMillan (Saskatoon), Manion, Power, Price, Speakman, Stewart (Lethbridge) and Tummon.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask my right hon. friend if that resolution is the same in all essential particulars as the resolutions that have been passed in previous years?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Yes, I think it is; I am informed that it is.

Mr. JEAN FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Before the motion is adopted, Mr. Speaker, I regret to have to complain about an answer I received from the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) not long ago, with regard to Mr. Laforce, an employee of the Canadian National Railways. I asked in what capacity this man was employed, his salary and so on, and I was told that it was not in the public interest that this information should be made public. I cannot blame the minister for that answer but I do blame the management of the Canadian National for answering my question in that way. When members of the House of Commons ask questions this is the answer they get, but when they come to us to borrow money—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must tell my hon. friend that this discussion is not in order on this motion, which is to appoint a committee.

Mr. POULIOT: But this is my point. That committee will investigate the business of the Canadian National Railways and the merchant marine, but only a privileged number of members of this house are entitled to secure information from the officials of the system. When a member, from his seat or through a question on the order paper, asks for some information such as this, he is denied the information he requires.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member must realize that he has the privilege of going before the committee and asking any questions he may desire to ask. This discussion does not come up on this motion.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank you.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): May I add, Mr. Speaker, that the evidence taken before the committee is printed in any case, and the hon. member can have some member of the committee ask any questions he wishes asked about Mr. Laforce. He will be able to get the evidence printed, if he wishes to do so.

Mr. POULIOT: If the house will allow me—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not think the hon. member should carry the matter any further.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

TRENT CANAL—STAFF

Mr. MULOCK:

1. Who are the members of the Trent canal staff?
2. What are their respective positions and salaries?
3. When were they appointed?
4. How many of the staff are engineers?
5. What members of the staff are furnished with: (a) rent-free house; (b) rent-free telephone; (c) fuel and light without charge?

Mr. MANION: This information was brought down last session, votes and proceeding No. 22, page 113, February 23, 1934. The information relates to the entire engineering and operating staff of the canal, their duties and their salaries, and is far too bulky to place on Hansard. However, as stated, it is already available to the hon. gentleman in the records of the house.

TRENT CANAL—INCOME

Mr. MULOCK:

1. What income has the federal government received from the Trent canal during the years 1930 to 1934 inclusive, from the following sources respectively: (a) rentals of property; (b) rentals or dues from power users; (c) tolls?
2. What was the expenditure upon the Trent canal during the years 1932 to 1934 for (a) salaries and wages; (b) construction and repairs; (c) all other expenditures?

Mr. MANION:

1. Amount of revenue received on the Trent canal, fiscal years 1929-30 to 1933-34 inclusive, for rentals of property, rentals or dues from power users and tolls:

Fiscal year	Rental of property (land)	Rentals or dues from power users (hydraulic)	Tolls	Total
1929-30	$1,407 88	$ 91,186 00	....	$ 92,593 88
1930-31	3,048 25	91,094 18	....	94,142 43
1931-32	2,039 06	91,096 00	....	93,135 06
1932-33	1,402 45	91,086 00	....	92,488 45
1933-34	1,394 04	1,206 00	....	2,600 04
Total	$9,291 68	$365,668 18	....	$374,959 86

2. Amount paid on Trent canal, fiscal years 1932-33 and 1933-34 for salaries and wages, work under contract and other expenditures:

Fiscal year	Amount paid for salaries and wages	Amount paid for work under contract	Other expenditures	Total
1932-33	$206,375 89	....	$ 58,467 73	$264,843 62
1933-34	182,488 52	$44,070 00	57,139 42	283,697 94
	$388,864 41	$44,070 00	$115,607 15	$548,541 56

TRENT CANAL—TONNAGE

Mr. MULOCK:

1. What tonnage carrying freight passed through the Trent canal from lake Ontario to Georgian bay during each of the years 1930 to 1934, inclusive?

2. What tonnage of other craft passed over this route during each of the same years?

3. What has been the total cost of the Trent canal detailed as follows: (a) construction costs, repairs and improvements; (b) salaries of staff; (c) settlement of drowned land claims, and costs of lands expropriated or purchased?

Mr. MANION:

1. No vessels carrying freight passed through the whole canal from lake Ontario to Georgian bay.

2. 1930—23,785 tons of freight through portions of canal. Number of pleasure craft lockages—6,658.

1931—23,172 tons of freight through portions of canal. Number of pleasure craft lockages—6,561.

1932—5,189 tons of freight through portions of canal. Number of pleasure craft lockages—5,661.

1933—6,341 tons of freight through portions of canal. Number of pleasure craft lockages—5,887.

1934—4,624 tons of freight through portions of canal. Number of pleasure craft lockages—11,064.

3. (a) Total cost of Trent canal as at March 31, 1934:

Capital expenditure	$19,953,583 99
Income improvement expenditure	3,766,618 66
Operation and maintenance expenditure	4,700,928 94
	$28,421,131 59

(b) Amount paid in salaries and wages, 1880-81 to 1933-34, inclusive, $16,137,869.84.

(c) Amount paid for settlement of drowned land claims and costs of lands expropriated or purchased, 1880-81 to 1933-34, inclusive, $889,842.78.

It will be noted that the amounts paid in salaries and wages, etc., are shown as from 1880-81 to 1933-34, inclusive. A detailed distribution is not available prior to 1880-81.

SUPERANNUATION FUND

Mr. CHEVRIER:

1. How many members of the public service of Canada contributed a total sum of $1,985,563 to superannuation fund No. 5 for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1934?

2. Does any federal act, or any regulations of the Department of Insurance require insurance companies to inform their policyholders and shareholders from time to time both as to the financial and actuarial condition of such companies?

3. If so, when will the Department of Finance advise the contributors to superannuation fund No. 5 as to the actuarial status of such fund?

Mr. RHODES:

1. $2,237,188 was the net amount of contributions by 23,532 civil servants in the year ended March 31, 1934.

2. There are no regulations and no provision of general application. Under the insurance acts of the dominion, fraternal benefit societies are required to send financial statements to their policyholders. The special acts of incorporation of some insurance companies require financial statements to be laid before the members at the annual meeting.

3. Benefits to contributors are specifically authorized by statute and there is no provision requiring that they be advised with respect to the matter referred to.

MR. ALBERT RIOUX

Mr. POULIOT:

How many days did Mr. Albert Rioux act or sit on the board of review for the province of Quebec, as a representative of debtors, in virtue of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act?

Mr. RHODES: From the date of his appointment, December 8, 1934, to date, thirty-two days.

ST. FABIEN, QUE., STATION—MAIL CONTRACT

Sir EUGENE FISET:

1. Have tenders been called for the transport of the mail from St. Fabien station, county of Rimouski to the post office?

2. If so, has the contract been awarded, and what were the names of the tenderers and the amount of each tender?

3. Was the contract awarded to the lowest tenderer?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.

2. Yes.

	Per annum
Georges Dubé	$148 50
Robert Rioux	149 00
Angelbert Rioux	175 00
Cyrice Rioux	200 00
Alphonse Jenn	224 00
Séraphin Côté	240 00
Achille Caron	250 00
Ernest Rioux	275 00
Febien Bernier	600 00

3. The two lowest tenders were considered to be equal and the contract awarded to Robert Rioux at $148.50 per annum.

FAIRBRIDGE FARM SCHOOL

Mr. MUNN:

1. Has the Department of Immigration, or any other department of the government, made any arrangement with the Fairbridge Farm School, or Major M. F. Trew, or the Child Immigration Society of Great Britain for the purpose of training English boys and girls to enter farm life in Canada?

2. Has the Department of Immigration, or any other department of the government, given any assistance, financially or otherwise, to the Fairbridge Farm School, Major M. F. Trew or the Child Immigration Society of Great Britain for the purpose of buying one thousand acres of land on Vancouver island for the purpose of erecting buildings thereon, and for the purpose of organizing agricultural training of English boys and girls?

3. If so, from which English institutions will be taken English boys and girls who will be sent for training to Vancouver island?

4. What persons or society will choose the English boys and girls to be sent for such training?

5. Will the said English boys and girls be examined by the Department of Immigration, or the Department of National Health, as to their physical, mental and moral fitness to be admitted into Canada?

6. What will be done with the pupils after they have finished their training, and will they receive assistance therefor and to what amount from the Canadian government?

Mr. GORDON:

1. The Department of Immigration and Colonization, acting on an application from the British Columbia government, entered into an arrangement in March, 1934, with the Child Emigration Society of Great Britain, for the establishment in the province of British Columbia of a branch of the Fairbridge Farm Schools, to be used for the purpose of training British boys and girls in Canada.

2. No.

3. It is not yet known to the department from what sources the boys and girls will come.

4. The society will put forward the children for examination by oversea officers of the Department of Immigration and Colonization and the Department of Pensions and National Health.

5. Yes, by officials of both departments.

6. The children will be brought out at or about ten years of age. They will be kept in the Fairbridge training centre until they reach the full age of sixteen years. The society then becomes responsible for finding suitable placement for boys as farm workers and for girls as houseworkers. They have not been promised and will not receive any financial assistance from the dominion government.

HAZELTON, B.C., POST OFFICE

Mr. HANSON (Skeena):

1. What was the total gross revenue in the Hazelton post office, British Columbia, for the years 1930 to 1934 inclusive, giving each year separately?

2. What salary and other remuneration did the postmaster receive, at that place, during the said years, giving each year separately?

Mr. SAUVE:

1 and 2.

Fiscal year—	Gross revenue	Salary	Other remuneration (allowances)
1929-30	$2,300 66	$1,122 00	$240 25
1930-31	2,104 57	1,169 80	220 28
1931-32	2,110 19	1,131 34	233 54

POST OFFICE PHILATELIC AGENCY

Mr. MULOCK:

1. What revenue was derived by the philatelic agency of the Post Office Department from the sale of used postage stamps during each of the fiscal years 1931, 1932, 1933, and 1934?
2. By what authority did the philatelic agency procure the right to sell used Canadian postage stamps?
3. What was the source of supply of these used postage stamps?
4. On what date did the said philatelic agency begin to operate?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. 1930-31, nil.
   1931-32, nil.
   1932-33, $19.97.
   1933-34, $135.91.
2. There is nothing in the statutes which prevents the Postmaster General from disposing of any marketable asset from which revenue for the department can be derived in the ordinary course of Post office business.
3. Post Office Department forms 7, 8 and 9 P. (Labels to which are affixed postage stamps used to prepay postage on printed matter mailed in bulk).
4. September 13, 1932.

THEFT OF WOOD—BISHOPTON, QUE.

Mr. LAFLECHE:

What is the name and place of residence of the solicitor to whom the Department of National Defence has assigned the handling of charges which said department preferred against Placide Doyon and Jos. Nadeau, of Marbleton, Wolfe county, for the theft of wood on government property at Bishopton, Quebec?

Mr. STIRLING: No solicitor was employed by the Department of National Defence in this case.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

RELIEF LEGISLATION—GUARANTEES

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre):

1. What was the total amount guaranteed by the government under unemployment and farm relief legislation since August 7, 1930?
2. To whom were such guarantees given and on whose behalf?

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Speaker, the information which the hon. member for Vancouver Centre seeks to secure by this question will be given fully in a return now in course of preparation as the result of an order of the house moved by my hon. friend. In the circumstances I would suggest that the question be dropped.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I asked for a return and this information was deliberately omitted by one of the officials of my hon. friend's department. Other information was given, but the amount of the guarantees was deliberately omitted and a very facetious reply was given by some official of that department. I object to that, and that is why I asked this question.

Mr. RHODES: The information I just gave my hon. friend is in conformity with the advice given me, that the return is in course of preparation and has not been brought down. My hon. friend must be referring to some other return. In those circumstances I would ask that the question be passed as an order for return.

BOVINE TUBERCULOSIS—QUEBEC

Mr. FERLAND:

1. In what counties, in the province of Quebec, have restricted areas for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis been established, pursuant to the Animal Contagious Diseases Act?
2. When were such areas established?
3. What is the total indemnity paid by the government in each county thus organized in restricted areas for the above purpose?
4. Has the government or the Minister of Agriculture received any petition, in due form, requesting the establishment and maintenance of a restricted area for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis in the county of Joliette?
5. If so, when was such a request made?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): Return tabled herewith.

COLTER SIDING, N.B., RELIEF CAMP

Mr. MICHAUD:

1. What supplies for the unemployment relief camp at Colter Siding, New Brunswick, were purchased from March 1, 1934, to February 1, 1935?
2. From whom were they purchased?
3. Were tenders called or invited for such supplies?
4. If so, who tendered, and what was the amount of each tender?

PUBLIC WORKS EXPENDITURES

Mr. MICHAUD:

What amounts were expended by the dominion government for public works in: (a) the county of Bonaventure, Quebec; (b) the county of Restigouche, New Brunswick; (c) the county of Gloucester, New Brunswick, during each of the years 1932, 1933, and 1934?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

INSTRUCTIONS TO HEALTH OFFICERS

Mr. MITCHELL:

For a copy of all instructions issued by the Minister of Pensions and National Health to unit officers, medical examiners or headquarters' staff between March, 1933, and July 1, 1934.

CANADIAN WHEAT QUOTA

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of the announcement made by the Prime Minister just before he sailed from England in December, 1931, in regard to a quota for Canadian wheat.

CACOUNA, QUE. WHARF FOREMAN

Mr. POULIOT:

For a copy of all correspondence, petitions and other documents, respecting the appointment of a superintendent or foreman in connection with works at the Cacouna wharf, since the month of August, 1930.

CANADIAN GRAIN BOARD

PURCHASE, STORAGE AND MARKETING OF WHEAT AND OTHER GRAINS

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (for the Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to establish a board to be known as the Canadian grain board with power to purchase, receive and take delivery of wheat, oats, barley, rye and flax-seed, or any one or more of such grains for marketing and to sell, store, transport and market such grains, and to provide for the appointment of such clerks, employees and assistants as may be necessary, and to provide for their remuneration and for the expenses of, and arising out of, the operations of the board.

[Mr. R. Weir.]

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

IMPORTS FROM U.S.S.R.

On the orders of the day.

Mr. JEAN FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government when I may expect to receive an answer to the question put to the government on February 22, Hansard, page 1179, concerning imports from U.S.S.R.?

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I beg the hon. member's pardon for not having answered the question sooner. I shall have the matter looked into and answer to-morrow.

Mr. POULIOT: Thank you.

DESTRUCTION OF FOOD

On the orders of the day.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw to the attention of the government an article appearing in the Ottawa Citizen of Saturday, March 2. This is a statement made by the Bishop of London, Doctor Winnington-Ingram before the assembly of the Anglican church, that among some of the anomalies existing in the economic world were wheat burned in Canada, coffee destroyed in Brazil and barrels of herring thrown into the sea. I believe such a statement, one affecting this country, should be corrected. We may be doing many foolish things in Canada but I hope we never do anything so foolish as to burn our wheat.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Would the hon. member submit his question?

Mr. REID: I am just drawing the attention of the government to the statement.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has no right to make a statement.

Mr. REID: I shall now ask the question.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must ask the hon. member to ask his question.

Mr. REID: Well, if other hon. members would leave me alone I would ask my question. Will the government take steps to see that such a report is corrected and contradicted?

REPORTED STATEMENT OF ITALIAN CONSUL GENERAL

On the orders of the day.

Mr. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (East Hamilton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the government whether or not they are prepared to reply to the question I asked on February 28?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Is the hon. member referring to the question he asked about the Italian Consul General?

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I have risen twice in attempts to answer the question but on both occasions other hon. members have spoken ahead of me.

The hon. member for East Hamilton inquired on Thursday regarding a report in the Ottawa Citizen of February 25 of an address given at a dinner in Ottawa on February 23, by the Consul General of Italy. I had the matter brought to Mr. Petrucci's attention. The following letter has been received from him, dated March 2, 1935:

Consolato Generale Di S.M.IL Re D'Italia
Al Canada
Ottawa, March 2, 1935.

Dear Sir:

I note the inquiry in the House of Commons to which you have called my attention.

I regret that the report of my address has given rise to misunderstanding of the purpose and meaning of my remarks. Nothing was further from my mind than to suggest that Italian citizens of Canada should urge "The abandonment of Canada's democratic form of government." I explicitly declared that I did not favour any propaganda. My address gave an analysis of the corporate state, and was mainly concerned with the new economic policies which were being worked out in Italy. I added that I found that much misunderstanding prevailed on these points, and suggested to my hearers that they might well endeavour to explain the real meaning of the new and interesting experiments that are being made, and which may have something of interest to any people in the present unsettled state of social organization. This suggestion was prompted by a friendly desire to make my country and its recent progress better known to Canadians, and to contribute in this way to still closer understanding between our countries. I added that the Italian men and women around me were indebted to Canada for their prosperity and expressed the hope that they would always do honour alike to Italy, the country of their origin, and to Canada, the country of their adoption.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,
L. Petrucci,
Italian Consul General.

This letter is addressed to O. D. Skelton, Ph.D., M.A., Under Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am satisfied upon inquiry that the Consul General had no intention of interfering in Canadian affairs. It is only fair that allowance should be made for the difficulty which besets new comers in dealing with the finer points of English speech. I can assure the member for East Hamilton that the government of Canada would not countenance any intervention by a representative of a foreign government in Canadian affairs, or any support from outside to movements for social or economic change in this country. We have our own problems to solve and are entirely capable of solving them by the tried and tested democratic methods which are our heritage.

WESTERN POULTRY MARKETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. WEIR (Macdonald): I directed a question to the Minister of Agriculture on Friday last, and I understood him to say he was prepared to answer it to-day.

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I regret to say the returns are not yet completed. As soon as they are completed and a decision made, I shall reply.

SHIPPING ACT AMENDMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) if it is his intention soon to introduce amendments to the Shipping Act? He knows some amendments are rather badly needed.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): Mr. Speaker, the matter is under consideration. We are expecting further developments in the other dominions, and they will have to take place before amendments are brought down to the Shipping Act as uniformity is sought in such legislation.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Mr. Speaker, I understand some requests have come from all sides of the house for an opportunity to see the film called "Lest we Forget," which is to be shown on Thursday evening next in the Capitol theatre, under the auspices of the Canadian Legion. We have considered the matter, and it is the intention at six o'clock on Thursday to move that the house do adjourn until the following afternoon at three o'clock.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR EXPENDITURE, INDEBTEDNESS AND THE REFUNDING OF MATURING OBLIGATIONS

Hon. EDGAR N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure respecting the Canadian National Railways, to authorize the provision of moneys to meet expenditures made and indebtedness incurred during the calendar year, 1935, and to provide for the refunding of certain maturing financial obligations.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have only one observation to make, namely that the language of the resolution makes abundantly clear the purpose we have in mind. It is proposed to follow the usual practice of introducing a bill founded upon the resolution, which bill after second reading will be referred to the committee on railways and shipping.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Stanley (Calgary East) in the chair.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Rhodes thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 24, respecting the Canadian National Railways and to authorize the provision of moneys to meet expenditures made and indebtedness incurred during the calendar year 1935.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

On motion of Mr. Rhodes the bill was read the second time and referred to the committee on railways and shipping.

FARMERS' CREDITORS ACT

AMENDMENTS TO FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT, 1935

The house resumed from Friday, March 1, consideration in committee of Bill No. 10, to amend the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, 1934—Mr. Rhodes—Mr. Gagnon in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. EUSEBE ROBERGE (Mégantic) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, two members of the house having done me the honour of replying to the observations I delivered on Friday last, I consider it my duty now to reply to them. The first one is a brilliant lawyer who poses as the champion of the French Canadians. This is how he commenced his speech:

I shall not attempt to follow the arguments of the hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. [Sir George Perley.]

Roberge). Everyone knows that every year the old gentleman repeats arguments along that line.

Is the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon) aware that this country has only two official languages, English and French? According to my information, ad hoc means that I present measures of no value. It is possible that they mean nothing to the hon. member for Dorcester, for I know how little interest he takes in the farming class.

My first speech of the present session was delivered on the 12th of February and related to the change of the interest rate. The bill had been introduced by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote), and I asked the government to have a measure adopted fixing the rate of interest at 4 per cent, in order that, after deducting the 1½ or 2 per cent contributed by the provincial government, the farmers of the province of Quebec would have to pay only about 2 per cent interest. I wonder if the hon. member for Dorchester and the hon. member for Compton will be pleased to inform their constituents that the farmers cannot obtain money at 4 per cent!

On the second occasion on which I spoke during this session, I asked the hon. Minister of Colonization (Mr. Gordon) to grant to farmers' sons an amount equal to that granted to them by the province of Quebec. That proposal also, according to these hon. members, is worthless. Well, I ask them to go to their respective counties and say that the federal government is doing nothing for the sons of farmers and is opposed to all federal aid. I continue, following word for word the speech of my genial colleague:

Everyone knows that the old gentleman ...

It is true, Mr. Chairman, that I am old in political life. I have been actively engaged in politics in Mégantic County since 1896, which is nearly thirty-nine years ago. Allow me to state, Mr. Chairman, that never in all that time has a Conservative been elected in that beautiful county. The hon. member for Dorchester is still rather young and is incapable of distinguishing between the provincial and the federal government, for three quarters of the speeches he delivers in this house are devoted to provincial matters. That is probably one of the reasons why he was not chosen as provincial leader of the Conservative party at the great convention held at Sherbrooke.

Further on, Mr. Chairman, at the foot of the page, appear these words:

This legislation has received the approval in Quebec of the bishops and the general approval of the unions of Catholic farmers all over the province.

No one has more respect than I have for the opinion of the bishops and no one is more anxious than I am to help the farmers. To mention a well known fact, Mr. Chairman, and to show you what has been accomplished in the county of Mégantic to help the farmers, I shall mention what has been done in my parish since 1922. We established the Pure Bred Cattle Young Breeders' Union and the Potato Growers' Association which have an organization beyond comparison in this country. We established the Fowl Breeders' Association which ships 15,000 to 20,000 chicks per year. We have the Farmers' Association which has bought a clover and timothy threshing machine. We have the Farmers' Wives' Club, the Farmers' Club and a demonstration farm which I secured from the dominion government since I represent the county of Mégantic.

Mr. Chairman, it is on behalf of all those associations that I asked that the rate of interest be set at 4 per cent, in order that the farmers and the small investors may be protected; that I also asked the government to present a measure providing for a 5 or 10 year moratorium which would allow our small investors to live without fear, and also our farmers to remain on their land in the meantime, without being disturbed if they paid their taxes and interests.

A little further on, at the foot of the page, I read the following:

I have news from my district, where the farmers have suffered perhaps more than the farmers of the county of Mégantic. I have a letter here from one official receiver who tells me that at the present time fifty per cent of the farmers are unable to meet their debts.

Now here is a county represented by a lawyer, where fifty per cent of the constituents are on the verge of bankruptcy. I live in a farming district, such as that represented by the honourable member for Dorchester, and in eight parishes of the beautiful county of Mégantic, out of a total population of more than 2,000 farmers, only one took advantage of this legislation. Moreover, let me tell you how the farmers of my district meet their obligations. The names of those who owe tax arrears for three or four years are sent to the county council, in order to make up the list of sales for taxes. On December 1st, I asked the secretary how many sales were to be held in my parish. He told me that the names of twenty farmers were to be sent to the county council. On January 15, I made further inquiries and he told me that there remained only two; last Monday, there remained one. As the sale is to be held on March 6, I hope that last case will be settled and there will be none left. That is how an old country merchant can protect the farmers in his county.

At the foot of the page here is what the member for Dorchester says:

I am a lawyer, Mr. Speaker; I cannot forget that, and I say that the creditor has just as much right to be protected as has the farmer.

I also say that the creditor has just as much right to be protected as has the debtor.

In order to protect the debtor, one must come to his aid and this assistance cannot be rendered to him through opposing a 4 per cent rate of interest, as was done by the hon. members for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon) and for Compton (Mr. Gobeil).

Again, on page 1339:

Nevertheless I urge the Minister of Finance to continue his negotiations with the attorney general of Quebec in order to find ways to help the farmers.

The proper way to help the farming community is easily found: Let the dominion government fix the rate of interest at 4 per cent—the provincial government is prepared to pay half of that rate—and let them give our farmers, through the moratorium act, the assurance that they will not be disturbed for five or ten years; you will see at once an improvement in conditions.

And again, on page 1340:

I realize that in the future some people may have difficulty getting money from rentiers.

Mr. Chairman, we have there a confession on the part of the hon. member who states that he realizes that in the future it will be extremely difficult for a farmer to borrow any money from the smaller rentiers.

Let us see now how the hon. member for Dorchester looks after his electors and how he deals with them in this house. On page 1339, he said:

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, in the province of Quebec there are creditors who do not possess even an elementary sense of justice, and who have thus acquired many farms in my district.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that a man who claims to be as much of a patriot as the hon. member for Dorchester should not speak disparagingly of his province in this house. But the hon. member went further than that: during the last electoral campaign, in the province of Ontario, he went in the constituency of Cochrane-North and spoke against a French-Canadian, Mr. Abel. The French-Canadians experience great difficulties in obtaining representation in the Ontario Legislative Assembly, but this courageous man who poses as a champion of the French-Canadian race went there and helped Mr. Abel's opponents.

May I now briefly refer to my hon friend from Compton (Mr. Gobeil). On page 1341, he made the following statement:

> Just now I know that the hon. member is using his frank to mail out thousands of copies of the remarks he made last week, some of which were just as bad as what we have heard to-day.

So, according to this statement, the hon. member of Compton claims that I made a worthless suggestion in this House when I was urging a subsidy of $300 for the sons of farmers; he claims that, when I insist on obtaining money at the rate of 4 per cent interest for the farmers, my suggestion is of no value. I would ask of him that he repeat the same statement to his own electors.

He said: "Just now I know that the hon. member is using his frank to mail out thousands of copies. . ." It is not usual with me, Mr. Chairman to make personal remarks; and this is the first time that I make any in this house. But, is the hon. member for Compton now in a position to give the house such information owing to the fact that one of his daughters is now employed as a stenographer in the House of Commons? I would ask the hon. Speaker of this house and the clerk to investigate the matter in order to find out who keeps the hon. member for Compton so well informed, and I insist on the guilty party being punished accordingly.

Mr. RHODES: On March 1, when the second reading of the bill was about concluded, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Luchkovich) put some questions which I told him then I would answer in committee of the whole house. The first question was: How many of these cases are settled in the office of the official receiver? We can only give such information as is of record in the head office at the moment, and the figures which were given are on the whole much less than they would actually be if the returns were all in and up to date. An instance that arose in the office this morning would indicate that the statement I have made is accurate. One of the official receivers was in this morning and in the aggregate, in the list of settlements recorded at head office, he is shown as having had seventeen in his district whereas as a matter of fact there were over forty, the balance above seventeen not having come into the office and not being yet a matter of record.

The actual reported settlements made by official receivers as shown by figures at head office to-day are: British Columbia, 3; Alberta, 228; Saskatchewan, 143, Manitoba, 112; Ontario, 288; Quebec, 316; New Brunswick, 1; Nova Scotia, 1, making a total of 1,092.

The second question submitted by my hon. friend was: What proportion are sent to the board of review? The number referred to the board of review in Quebec as at date March 1, according to figures as disclosed at head office, was 763, of which 97 have been heard. In Ontario there have been 228, of which 106 have been heard. In Manitoba there have been 141, of which 51 have been heard. In Saskatchewan there have been 222, of which 90 have been heard. In Alberta there have been 276, and of these 102 have been heard. In other words, a total of 1,630 cases have been referred to the board and there have been 446 hearings.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Hearings before the board?

Mr. RHODES: Yes. The rest of the information which the hon. member sought is as to the number of proposals that have been received. I must point out that the records in the head office must of necessity be behind the actual figures, because distance sometimes means many delays. The official receivers have in many instances been so busy in dealing with actual settlements and meeting with debtors and creditors that they have not had sufficient time to fill in the necessary forms imparting to the Central office the information sought. But as of March 2, the following is the number of proposals in hand:

Province—	Number of proposals
Prince Edward Island	57
Nova Scotia	3
New Brunswick	8
Quebec	1,167
Ontario	446
Manitoba	492
Saskatchewan	752
Alberta	640
British Columbia	20
Total	3,585

It will be recalled that in the course of my remarks at the conclusion of the debate on the second reading, I announced that the estimate in the head office at Ottawa is that at the moment there is actually a total of upwards of 7,000 proposals in process of consideration before the several official receivers.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Before the minister passes that point, I should like to ask him a question. I think he said that there was a total of 1,092—was it decisions?

Mr. RHODES: No; those were actual settlements before the official receivers.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Cases that are already dealt with?

Mr. RHODES: Settlements that are all closed and that were arrived at, as my hon. friend will realize, by mutual agreement between debtors and creditors.

Mr. GARLAND: Is this number included in the second number that the hon. gentleman gave us of 1,630 now before the boards of review?

Mr. RHODES: No; I think it follows that inasmuch as these are actual settlements arrived at between debtors and creditors before the official receivers, they would not go on appeal before the board of review, so that the number as given, namely 1,630, would be included in the 7,000 odd but not in the 1,092.

Mr. HANBURY: Will the minister say whether all the 1,630 are included in the 3,585, the total number of proposals?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. HANBURY: Could he tell us how many farmers altogether there are in Canada? He has given us an estimate of 7,000 proposals.

Mr. RHODES: The figure I have in mind is 728,000, but I would have to have that verified. I have no statistics concerning this before me.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That is the number of farms of ten acres and over.

Mr. RHODES: I think the hon. member for Bow River is correct, but I would like to verify the figure from the records.

Mr. HANBURY: The information is, I presume, approximately correct, because I have a great deal of confidence in what the hon. member for Bow River has to say in this connection. The point I wish to make is that under this legislation which has now been in effect for a year—

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. HANBURY: —we have a total number of proposals of 7,000. The total number of farmers is approximately 780,000. In other words, under this measure we are legislating for less than one per cent of our farm population. I think the legislation is desirable, but I wish again to point out to the minister that I believe the time will arrive very shortly when the fact that we are keeping on our statute books legislation for the benefit of a very small proportion of the population will work to the disadvantage of those we are attempting to help. Has the minister given any consideration to the suggestion which I made to him that in the form of an amendment to this legislation some definite date should be set at which the legislation would be concluded?

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend was, I know quite inadvertently, in error when he said that this legislation had been in effect for a year. As a matter of fact it was first proclaimed in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba on September 1 of last year. That is the date of the proclamation. It went into effect in those three provinces first. But my hon. friend will bear in mind that following that there had to be machinery set up of an entirely new character and obviously that could not be done in a day. Then the act was proclaimed in Quebec on October 1 and in Ontario on October 1. Only on November 1 was it proclaimed in British Columbia, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island and the same statement I made a moment ago with respect to the establishment of the necessary personnel to bring the act into operation obtains with respect to the latter provinces. This is a very different matter from an act having been in force for a year. I can express my view only for what it may be worth and that is to say that the number of those who have availed themselves of this act has far exceeded anything that I had anticipated, certainly in such a limited period of time.

Mr. HANBURY: I asked the minister whether the government had given any consideration as to setting a date for the conclusion of this legislation. I am not saying how soon that date should be.

Mr. RHODES: The government has reached no decision in that matter for the very obvious reason that the act has been in operation for only a comparatively short time and the question when it will be concluded must be determined by experience in the operation of the act and by judgment from the circumstances as to how much longer it may be required to be in operation.

Mr. COOTE: I think the first meeting of any board of review in western Canada was not until some time after the new year, so that really very little advantage has as yet been taken of the act. Quite obviously it has not been in operation for a long period of time.

I was going to ask the minister whether he had any idea how long it would take the boards of review to hear the cases that are now before them. This question might perhaps better come under clause 2, but I have some doubt whether the change that is being made in that clause, changing the sixty-day period to ninety days, will give a really long enough period. In many cases more than ninety days are certain to elapse between the time the farmer makes application to the official receiver and the date on which the board of review can give a decision in his case. The board has before it now sufficient cases to keep it going for months.

Mr. RHODES: If my hon. friend does not object, I would prefer to discuss the question of the ninety-day period when we reach that clause. I know there will be some other questions with respect to it, and I should like to deal with them all at once. My hon. friend is right in indicating that it was only in December that the board of review started to function in the western provinces, and while there were some cases heard in December there were no decisions rendered until after the turn of the New Year. The hon. member asks how long it will take the board to dispose of the cases now before them. That is a very difficult question to answer, because some cases may take much longer than others. I am advised that the largest number dealt with in any one day by the board has been ten. But I must pay this tribute to the assiduity and fidelity with which the members of the board of review have addressed themselves to their task. I am informed that in Alberta the board are sitting from nine o'clock in the morning until midnight. Under those conditions they should quickly clean up the cases now before them. But it must be borne in mind that a new lot is coming along all the time, and under those circumstances, until the act has accomplished its purpose there will of necessity always be some accumulation of arrears.

Mr. SANDERSON: I have no desire to delay the passage of this bill through the committee, but I would like to make one or two observations. At the outset I say that I approve of this amendment, as I approved of the act last year. The minister said the act came into force in Ontario on October 1, last. Of my own personal knowledge of the part of the province I come from I am glad to be able to tell the minister and the government that a great many farmers have availed themselves of the help afforded by the act. In my own home town two weeks ago the official receiver addressed a large gathering of farmers from the surrounding country explaining the act, and I am glad to pay my tribute for once at least to the government—

Mr. COTNAM: For the first time.

Mr. SANDERSON: —for this act has alleviated the difficulties of many farmers who found themselves in debt. I do not say that it cures all their ills, but it does afford a measure of relief not only to those directly taking advantage of the provisions of the act, but I am advised and on inquiry find the information is correct that many farmers who find themselves in difficulty, invoke the official receiver to act as arbitrator between creditor and debtor, without formally seeking relief under the act. A conference takes place and an agreement results whereby the debtor is relieved to some extent, temporarily or otherwise, of his worries. Another feature is that many farmers who are in difficulty do not like to publish it to the world. People in such circumstances are often very sensitive about it. Many people, farmers especially, find themselves in difficulty for the first time, and they do not want even their neighbours to know about it. Often they get some relief through this act by merely putting their case before the official receiver who perhaps takes it up and arranges a settlement, though it may be only temporary. So I am glad to commend the government for this act and for this amendment. I have no criticism of it to offer at all; I am in favour of the amendment and shall vote for it.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Hanbury) seemed to make a point of the small number of proposals that have come forward under this legislation. To me it seems a remarkable response to have something over seven thousand cases brought to the attention either of the official receiver or the board of review since this act has been in effect, a matter of some three months. I do not think it is incumbent upon the minister or the government to set any definite time for which the legislation shall last. Its usefulness is not confined to those particular cases which come before the official receiver or the board of review for consideration; to my mind many cases have been disposed of satisfactorily to the parties concerned without even coming before the official receiver. I have in mind a particular case. As executors of an estate in the west three of us approached the official receiver in our judicial district to have the interest rate on a mortgage reduced. The mortgage was for $1,300 on a quarter section, at 8 per cent interest. We found on approaching the official receiver that it would be necessary to take out letters of administration before he could proceed with the case. Rather than go to that expense we decided to write directly to the mortgage company and ask them if they would voluntarily reduce the rate. They replied that they would, and it was reduced from 8 to 6 per cent, and we did not go any further in connection with the official receiver. I think perhaps there may be scores of such cases settled satisfactorily to all parties without coming formally before the official receiver or the board of review.

Mr. RHODES: To give the committee a little more of the picture, I might indicate that the number of upwards of seven thousand which I mentioned includes only those proposals which have been actually formulated and documented; it does not include the many cases which have been settled, in some instances through the intervention of the official receiver, in others merely through the existence of the act. But settlements effected outside of the act have been just as efficacious as if they had been the subject of proposals formally recorded under the act; the case in point mentioned by the hon. member for Kindersley (Mr. Carmichael) illustrates that. Then in addition there are hundreds and thousands of cases in which preliminary interviews are being had with the official receiver which in the large majority will ultimately result in proposals being actually formulated. Of course there are other cases in which official receivers, either because of the hopelessness of the situation or the unfairness of a given proposal, have refused to proceed with a proposal which in the nature of things they knew would not be acceptable. I give that additional information to make clear what the figures I mentioned actually mean.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): This is interesting, but I do not want to be in any confusion. I understood the minister to say that as of March 2 the number of proposals under the scheme totalled 3,585. Is that correct?

Mr. RHODES: That is the number they have received at head office, but I am advised by head office that owing to the circumstance that there is an inevitable delay in receiving reports by mail, as many take some days in transit, and further that many of the official receivers are so busy holding meetings between debtors and creditors that they have not time to fill in the necessary reports to keep the information up to date, it is the opinion of the central office, having in mind the usual arrearage, that the number of actual proposals now before the official receivers is upwards of seven thousand.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Then the seven thousand is purely an estimate at the present time?

Mr. RHODES: Yes, based on experience of the lag between the actual formulation of proposals before the official receivers and the entering of the records in the central office.

Mr. DUPRE: I find the attitude of some Liberal members from the province of Quebec very strange, and since I represent a district in that province I think I should say a few words in answer to what was said last week, particularly by the hon. member for Mégantic (Mr. Roberge) and the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis).

The purpose of this law is to help the farmer who is in financial difficulties. Is there anything wrong in that? The purpose of this law is to help the farmer who cannot meet his obligations. We have created a system by which the farmer who is in debt goes to his creditors in order to discuss a settlement, to find a remedy to enable him to meet his debts, to adjust his situation, to turn over a new leaf, to start life anew, to keep his farm which is the patrimony of his family, and everything that is dear to him. I think some illustrations of what has taken place in the province of Quebec under this legislation will be of greater benefit than any theoretical analysis of the measure itself. I have before me a report in regard to the working of this legislation in the province of Quebec, which states that up to the end of January 9,290 farmers had interviewed receivers. 1,703 proposals had been filed and 226 settlements had been reported as having been voluntarily arrived at before the receivers as between the farmer debtors and their creditors. Over 600 cases had been brought to the attention of the board of review, and up to Saturday, February 16, the board had dealt with 65 cases. It had been successful in most cases in so conciliating the farmers and their creditors that arrangements have been made which were satisfactory to both parties. Further information is to the effect that to the first of this month the board have dealt with 100 cases, instead of 65. The net result in respect of the 65 cases I have mentioned has been a reduction in capital debt of about $100,000 and there also has been a substantial reduction in the carrying charges, which means that the cost of production will be decreased to that extent.

In order to answer the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville and the hon. member for Mégantic, who spoke of the plight of the farmers of Quebec, and in order to indicate the cooperation that is being developed as between debtors and creditors I should like to refer to one case that was heard by the board of review in Hull, Quebec. The farmer had requested a reduction in his interest rate from six per cent to five per cent, as well as an extension of his mortgage indebtedness. When the creditor who held the hypotheque came before the board of review he consented to the extension and at the same time went further than the farmer had requested by reducing, on his own initiative, the interest rate from six per cent to three per cent.

The board of review is definitely proceeding on the assumption that the principles of conciliation should be applied and that while every reasonable consideration must be given the claims of creditors, at the same time it is absolutely essential to restore the credit of the farmers. Consequently it is in the interests of all concerned that the indebtedness be so rearranged as to insure that the farmer again will be a good credit risk. This legislation, however, is not functioning only to reduce and so arrange liabilities that the farmer may be able to meet them; it is re-establishing—

Sir EUGENE FISET: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The other day when the hon. member for Mégantic was reading from his notes he was called to order, and I should like to direct your attention to the fact that the Solicitor General is doing exactly the same thing to-day.

Mr. DUPRE: I must direct the attention of the hon. member to the fact that I took the trouble to state that I had before me a report concerning the activities of the board of review. It is this report on which I am commenting and from which I am giving some extracts. Perhaps the hon. member was not here when I made that statement.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): I must say that in my opinion the point is not well taken.

Mr. McPHEE: Is my hon. friend quoting from a government return?

Mr. DUPRE: This is a report which is at the disposal of all hon. members; it has been issued by the Minister of Finance. Any member can read it, but hon. gentlemen opposite do not seem to have done so, because everything they have said is contrary to what we have heard from the board of review.

Mr. McPHEE: Would my hon. friend state where he obtained this report, because I have no such report.

[Mr. Dupré.]

Mr. DUPRE: I cannot answer everyone at the same time, so first I will answer my hon. friend from Rimouski. I have before me a report in connection with a few cases dealt with in the province of Quebec.

Mr. McPHEE: My hon. friend has no right to quote unless it is from a public document. If it is a return which was tabled in this house he has a right to quote from it.

Sir EUGENE FISET: My point of order was that the Solicitor General was not only reading from what he called an official report but that he was also reading his own comments from his notes. That is exactly what the hon. member for Mégantic was doing the other day; that is the point to which the hon. member for Compton objected and the point to which you, Mr. Chairman, also took exception.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): For the benefit of members of the opposition I may say that it has been decided time and time again in this house that a member has the right to consult notes in making his speech.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Not read from them.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): Therefore, I do not understand why the Solicitor General should not do what any other hon. member is allowed to do, namely to consult his notes.

Mr. VENIOT: I rise to a point of order. A similar reason was given when only a few days ago the hon. member for Mégantic was speaking from this side of the house, and at that time the chair drew the attention of the hon. member to the fact that he should not read too copiously from his notes.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Where do you draw the line?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, where shall we draw the line? If the chair objected to the hon. member for Mégantic reading copiously from his notes, I do not see why we have not the right to object to the Solicitor General reading copiously from his notes.

Mr. GIROUARD: I am surprised to note the stand taken by the chair to the objection raised by the hon. member for Rimouski. Last Friday when the hon. member for Mégantic consulted his notes he was told that he was reading his speech. I would observe however that he was doing only what the Solicitor General is now doing, merely consulting his notes. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I dispute your authority to decide that the objection taken by the hon. member for Rimouski is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): I thank the hon. member for his courtesy, and to close the discussion I shall ask the Solicitor General to make his speech without consulting his notes. It will be the first time in the House of Commons an hon. member has not been allowed to consult notes, but the decision may please the opposition.

Sir EUGENE FISET: He was reading from them.

Mr. DUPRE: Continuing to read from the report, which I have in my hand—

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. McPHEE: No, the chair has made a ruling on that point. The Solicitor General is quoting authoritatively certain statements from a report which has not been tabled and is not properly before the house. We have no means of knowing whether or not the statement is authoritative. I submit he must desist from reading, or show that it is a public document tabled in the house.

Mr. RHODES: Surely the hon. member does not go the length of saying that a minister of the crown is debarred from quoting any document which does not happen to be an official document. If that is his statement he will find no precedent for such a decision. I am not stressing the point of order, but I do not think the statement made by the hon. member should go unchallenged. He will find no authority for the position he has taken. The rules say only that if a minister does quote from a document he must upon request lay it upon the table,—that is, an official document.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): We do not know what this report is.

Mr. RHODES: It may not be a report; I do not think it is, in fact.

Mr. McPHEE: The Solicitor General said it was.

Mr. HANBURY: And gave the Minister of Finance credit for it.

Mr. RHODES: I think the Minister is under a misapprehension. I did not follow him closely, but what I understood him to say was that he was referring to a statement handed to the press and having to do with the operations of the act. Naturally from time to time the press asks for such statements for the purpose of informing those who are interested in the operations of the act, and so that those people may be informed as to the progress being made. I have risen only because I do not wish the hon. member for Yorkton to labour under the misapprehension that what he has stated is a correct interpretation of the rule.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The rule is explicit, indeed, to the effect that an hon. member cannot quote from any outside authority commenting on any subject matter in the present debate. If the hon. member is quoting from an official document of the house he should inform the committee as to what the document is, such document having been tabled previously. Otherwise he is out of order.

Mr. RHODES: The hon. member is citing a well known rule which has reference to comment upon legislation. In the present instance, however, the minister is not referring to this legislation at all. What he is reading refers to the operation of the act, and does not deal with this bill.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The same point prevails. It is a comment referring to the operation of this particular act, and therefore referring to the present debate. For these reasons I say it should not be quoted.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): May I draw the attention of the hon. member to the observations contained at page 104 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms:

> It has been admitted that a document which has been cited ought to be laid upon the table of the house, if it can be done without injury to the public interests. The same rule, however, cannot be held to apply to private letters or memoranda.

Therefore, if the Solicitor General is quoting from a memorandum he is not obliged to deposit it on the table of the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The minister is not telling the committee what he is quoting from.

Mr. RHODES: I direct the attention of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre to the rule which he had in mind, as it appears at page 101 of the aforementioned rules and forms:

> It is not in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or communications emanating from persons outside the house and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the house.

The Solicitor General certainly was not reflecting upon any proceedings before the house, nor was he denying a statement made by any member.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): He was referring to it.

Mr. RHODES: Merely citing from a newspaper report—

Mr. VENIOT: Was he not commenting?

Mr. RHODES: Not certainly in the sense of the rule. The comment had no reference to the operation of the bill before us. As a matter of fact I have no doubt it had reference to the subject matter of the bill, but not to the bill itself—which is a vastly different thing. He was dealing with the question of the operation of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act.

Mr. VENIOT: Was he not out of order in dealing with that matter?

Mr. RHODES: I have risen simply to indicate that the hon. member for Vancouver Centre is going a little beyond the rule.

Sir EUGENE FISET: May I direct the attention of the chair to the fact that the discussion is out of order. To begin with the point raised is not that the Solicitor General is reading from a report but that he is reading from a document which he has in his hand—not only the report he has mentioned, but also his own comments. Therefore I say he was reading his speech from written or printed notes. That was the point of order I raised. He has no right to read a written speech. That was the point raised a few days ago in connection with the observations of the hon. member for Mégantic. I believe the rule which applied to one should apply to the other.

Mr. GOBEIL: It started with the Liberal whip.

Mr. McPHEE: With all due deference—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): Just a moment. I have already stated to the hon. member for Rimouski that the general rule is that a member has the privilege to consult his notes. Therefore if the Solicitor General is simply consulting notes my ruling would be that he is in order.

Sir EUGENE FISET: But, Mr. Chairman, will you decide this further point: Outside of consulting his notes has the Solicitor General the right to read his personal comments on those notes? Has he the right to read a printed statement? That is the point which was raised by the hon. member for Compton only a few days ago respecting the remarks of the hon. member for Mégantic.

Mr. DUPRE: I might satisfy the hon. member for Rimouski by stating that I was reading from a report but I have not my own comments written down. I have only a few notes I had intended to use at the end of my speech.

Mr. McPHEE: I believe the Solicitor General said that possibly the report from the Department of Finance which he held in his hand would prove better than any words of his how the act had operated in the province of Quebec. Then he proceeded to read what I understood to be a report of the Department of Finance. If my understanding is correct I say such report ought to be public property before any hon. member should have the right to quote it as an authority.

Mr. RHODES: It has been published by the press. I believe it appeared in the press some weeks ago.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Comment on press reports is out of order. I think the minister should inform the committee where he got the document, where it came from, and who published it.

Mr. DUPRE: This is a compilation of a few cases which have been dealt with by the board of review in the province of Quebec.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): By whom?

Mr. DUPRE: What I want to tell the house is how these cases have been dealt with in the province of Quebec. This information comes from the people who were appointed by the board of review. I want to show the house that the comments that were made last Friday by the hon. member for Mégantic and the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville were absolutely unfounded. The first case is one coming from the judicial district of Beauce.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. The minister is reading from a report, and I submit that in all fairness the committee is entitled to know the nature of the report, who prepared it, and whether it is an official, ministerial document or otherwise.

Mr. MANION: Speaking to the point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I quote rule 315 which you have already quoted, and which seems clear enough?

> A minister of the crown is not at liberty to read or quote from a dispatch or other state paper not before the house, unless he be prepared to lay it upon the table.

The Minister of Finance has stated, and the Solicitor General has stated, that this is a general report on the workings of the act which was given to the press by the Department of Finance.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): By whom?

Mr. MANION: The Minister of Finance has already stated that; I heard him.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Oh, no.

Mr. MANION: He stated it a few moments ago, and if the Solicitor General is willing to lay the report on the table of the house, which he is—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): He has not said so. You are saying it for him.

Mr. MANION: He can say so, and then he can go on quoting from it.

Mr. DUPRE: I have no objection to laying it on the table. It is simply a report that has been issued to the press and maybe some of the members have already read it. The first case I want to mention was in the judicial district of Beauce.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): May I ask you, Mr. Chairman, if the minister is going to lay this on the table under rule 315?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): I submit that the hon. member ought first to ask the Solicitor General from what he is quoting.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I did, and I never got an answer. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) answered for him.

The CHAIRMAN: It was stated that the hon. gentleman was reading from a report which was given to the press, and therefor I submit that he is in order and can proceed with his speech.

Mr. DUPRE: For the third time I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that the first case is from the judicial district of Beauce. A farmer had a mortgage on his land, and the creditor intended to have the land sold by the sheriff, which would have meant that the farmer would have been left entirely destitute. A meeting of creditors was called, and the creditor compromised the amount of the mortgage, reducing his claim by $500 and reducing the interest rate as well. To indicate how good feeling had been restored between the two, may I say that the creditor, whose original intention had been to have the land sold through the sheriff, had come to the meeting by rail while the farmer had come in his rig, but after the meeting was over, the two returned home in the farmer's rig the very best of friends and with the best of understandings between them.

Case No. 2 comes from the judicial district of Bedford. A farmer had a mortgage debt of $6,500 and ordinary debts amounting to $2,475. In addition to his ordinary debts he had endorsed notes for his son to the amount of $2,600. The farmer asked for a reduction in the mortgage, and in the interest rate, and also asked for a reduction in the ordinary claims. A meeting was held and the creditors could not agree, but later realizing that if the farmer was not assisted he would not be able to pay the ordinary creditors and that they would lose everything, a second meeting was called and the mortgages were extended, the interest rate was reduced from six to four per cent, and the ordinary creditors agreed to accept 25 per cent of their total claims, $5,075, payable in five yearly payments without interest. All were satisfied with the arrangement.

Case No. 3 came from the judicial district of St. Hyacinthe. A farmer had taken over his father's obligations as the latter was growing old. He faced liabilities of $7,000 besides a very heavy mortgage. He applied to the official receiver and made a proposal to his creditors. The creditors, numbering about twelve, who did not know one another, met and were at first very ill disposed, but the true situation of the farmer was put before them, and after discussing it fully, an arrangement was made with which everybody appeared pleased. The arrangement was ratified by the court. The debtor obtained a reduction of $5,000 in his total liabilities. If he had been sold out by the sheriff the creditors would have received very little, if anything. The official receiver stresses the tolerance of the creditors towards the debtors which is developing as a result of this legislation.

Mr. BOTHWELL: May I ask how much of a reduction was made in the first mortgage in case No. 3 which the minister has just given?

Mr. DUPRE: I have not got that information. The farmer faced liabilities of $7,000 besides a very heavy mortgage, and he obtained a reduction of $5,000 in his total liabilities.

Mr. BOTHWELL: The minister cannot give any information as to what the reduction was on the secured claim?

Mr. DUPRE: I have not got that information.

Case No. 4 comes from the judicial district of Hull. The debtor owned some land free from any encumbrance. A few years ago he purchased another piece of land.

Mr. McPHEE: Surely this was never given to the press. It must be a public document, and should be tabled.

Mr. MANION: The minister has said that he would table it.

Mr. HANBURY: Is he going to table his whole speech?

Mr. MANION: This is not his speech. He is quoting from the report, which he is going to table.

Mr. DUPRE: A few years ago this debtor, desirous of enlarging his estate, purchased another piece of land of the same size as the first. Then unfortunately the depression came and he could not make his payments, and he found himself with both pieces of land mortgaged for more than their value. He had a meeting of his creditors. The creditor who had sold him the second piece of land took this land back and released the piece of land which the farmer originally had. The farmer now has this first piece of land free of any charge and has regained confidence, while a few weeks ago he thought he would have to lose both pieces of land. The creditor is also perfectly satisfied.

Case No. 5 is in the Richelieu judicial district. Last fall a farmer came to the official receiver and informed him that his liabilities totalled $6,100, plus two years' interest, and that he had offered his sole creditor to pay four per cent per annum, but the creditor insisted upon five per cent or otherwise the farmer would have to leave the farm. The farmer made a proposal and a meeting of his creditors was called. After mutual explanations the mortgage creditor agreed to reduce his claim by $800, and to leave the balance of the principal for five years at three per cent. The other creditors accepted two per cent per annum, and they all parted the very best of friends.

Mr. McPHEE: Is that in the report?

Mr. DUPRE: Case No. 6 was in the Abitibi judicial district. The official receiver of the district reports that it is a very interesting case. The creditor accepted a mortgage for a period of five years, reducing the interest rate to three per cent during the five years. The mortgage had been in default. The official receiver says:

[Mr. Bothwell.]

I thought it would be practically impossible for me to bring about any kind of arrangement between this farmer and his creditors. But after the arrangement was made I had the pleasure of seeing them shake hands and express mutual satisfaction at the arrangement. I could not help congratulating both of them.

We have heard members on both sides of the house asking for a reduction in interest. This legislation will enable the farmer to apply to the receiver or to the board of review and secure reduction in his interest charges.

On Friday we heard the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville say that the farmers were sorry that they were required to humiliate themselves, as they must do, to take advantage of this legislation. Well, the point I want to make is this, that there is absolutely nothing compulsory in this legislation. This is a mechanism created for the benefit of the farmer. If he wishes to use it in order to reduce his liability he is at liberty to do so, and if he does not wish to avail himself of it, he is equally the master of his own actions.

Then I heard, also on Friday last, the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville qualify this legislation as socialism. As was pointed out by the Minister of Finance, the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville seems to confuse socialism and social legislation. This is the kind of social legislation that we have inaugurated in order to relieve distress and to take care of the farmer and of the working man, and the appellation or qualification of socialism does not disturb us. This is good legislation based on what has been called by high authority social justice—based on the principle of a more just and equitable distribution of wealth. What has been said of the working man is that he must have sufficient wages to supply his family with their ordinary needs: he must have an ample sufficiency for his living. The same must apply to the farmer; he must be enabled to bear the family's burden with greater ease and security, being freed from that hand to mouth uncertainty which is the lot of some of the farmers and working men.

In his remarks the hon. member for Mégantic made certain statements which I have translated almost word for word. He said that there was never a law passed by this parliament so harmful to the rural class as this one, except the law of conscription. He intimated a few lines further on that this legislation imposes on the farmer the conscription of capital. Then later on he says: "This legislation is the most unjust that has ever been adopted in this house. It destroys the credit of the farmer; it establishes the conscription of the money that the small village rentier did possess in the beautiful province of Quebec that we inhabit." A few minutes before that, at page 1337 of Hansard, he said: "Mr. Speaker, I am opposed not only to the conscription of money but also to every kind of conscription, and it is the principle which is at the basis of all laws that this government has caused to be adopted since it has been in power and by which it has done so much harm to the rural class and to the working man."

Now my point is this. Here is a law that was qualified last week by the hon. member for Mégantic and by the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville as infamous, arbitrary, vicious; and still this is the law which was voted unanimously last year when it came before the house. Moreover, a few minutes after the hon. member for Mégantic made these utterances about the vices of this law, how infamous it was and so forth, this bill was adopted unanimously by the house. This is indeed a very strange action. If the utterances of the member for Mégantic indicate the sort of electoral arguments that our friends opposite are going to use in the next campaign, I say to them, very well, we accept the challenge.

Mr. POULIOT: It was accepted before.

Mr. DUPRE: But I say this, that the province of Quebec and the electors of Canada at large must know of this attitude of the Liberal members from that province. If our opponents are to call our legislation infamous, vicious, arbitrary, as bad as conscription, and vote for it afterwards, then the province of Quebec must know. What our friends opposite seem to forget is that the grip of the Liberal party in the province of Quebec, in both the federal and the provincial fields, no longer exists. It was easy for them to have recourse to such tactics in the past because conditions were quite different from what they are today.

Mr. BOUCHARD: Why is the hon. gentleman referring to the members on this side? He mentioned one name, the hon. member for Mégantic. I hope my hon. friend is not very anxious to fall into such a sophism.

Mr. POULIOT: The member for Mégantic is a good member.

Mr. DUPRE: I suppose the inference I am to draw from the observation of my hon. friend from Kamouraska is that he does not approve of the declarations of the hon. member for Mégantic—

Mr. BOUCHARD: No, it does not mean anything of the kind.

Mr. DUPRE: —nor of the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville. But if he does not approve, and if hon. members opposite do not approve of those utterances they are at liberty to say so and I invite them to say so.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is the hon. member looking for trouble? If he is, he will get it.

Mr. DUPRE: We should know the truth.

Mr. REID: You are putting that view as the view of all here.

Mr. DUPRE: What the hon. member for Vancouver Centre seems to show is that he is not thoroughly au courant with what takes place in Quebec. While he on the one hand might in his own province be speaking in favour of the legislation, saying it is good, in our province on the other hand some members sitting on the same side of the house as he does will come and repeat the utterances delivered in this house by the hon. member for Mégantic and the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville.

Mr. REID: That is their privilege.

Mr. DUPRE: In closing, I might say this to the hon. member for Vancouver Centre: Recourse to such tactics was very easy in years gone by when there were no French Conservative members, but now conditions are changed, and tactics of that sort will not have any chance in the years to come.

Mr. McPHEE: The hon. member has concluded his remarks and he has not yet tabled the document from which he read. I would ask now that he kindly table it.

Mr. REID: He said that it was available to all members.

Mr. VALLANCE: It should be tabled forthwith.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I think the point of order is well taken.

Mr. RHODES: If my colleague the Solicitor General desires to table the document, there can be no objection, but I submit he is not called upon to do so.

Mr. VENIOT: He agreed to do so.

Mr. RHODES: That is another matter. I simply wish to establish the precedent that a minister is not called upon to table other than an official document; that is all he is called upon to table if he cites it, but he is not called upon to table other than an official document.

Mr. McPHEE: For the peace, order and good government of this house the Solicitor General had better carry out what he said he would do.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The Solicitor General distinctly stated that this was an official document—

Mr. RHODES: No.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): —available to the members and issued from the department of his colleague the Minister of Finance. But the Solicitor General said that it was an official document and the Minister of Railways said that it would be tabled.

Mr. RHODES: Did my hon. friend not hear my colleague state that it was a report and not an official document?

Mr. REID: And available to the members.

Mr. RHODES: Yes, available.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It was a report from the Department of Finance and available to all members. The Minister of Railways said three or four times in the course of the debate that the document would be tabled. I think under standing order 41, paragraph 315, when this purports to be a public document the minister is constrained in all decency to table it, and the hon. member for Yorkton is in order in asking the minister to table a public document from which he has quoted.

Mr. RHODES: The hon. member for Vancouver Centre, quite inadvertently I am sure, made two mistakes. He said that my colleague the Solicitor General had said first that this was an official document; second that it was a public document.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): He said that it was published in the press.

Mr. RHODES: That is not a public document. According to my hon. friend's contention, every newspaper would be a public document.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): He said that it came from the Department of Finance.

Mr. RHODES: We will deal with the first two statements first. My colleague the Solicitor General did not say that it was an official document or a public document; he said that it was a report and issued by the Department of Finance. It is quite true he said that. I rose at once to correct that, because my colleague I was sure was inadvertently in error. What happens is that from time to time in all departments of government the press come asking for information as a matter of public interest with respect to the operation of different acts. That is how this statement to the press emanated in the first instance. It is in no sense an official document; it is in no sense a public document.

Mr. VENIOT: Then it cannot be depended upon as a correct report.

Mr. RHODES: That is another matter entirely. We are dealing now with the question of procedure. It is neither a public nor an official document and I think the hon. member for Vancouver Centre will bear me out that when he rose I said that I had no objection to my colleague laying the document on the table. I merely wish to guard against the establishment of a new rule which has not hitherto obtained and should not now obtain, that because a minister of the crown reads from a paper it must ipso facto be laid on the table.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): No one said so.

Mr. RHODES: The rule only requires that a public or official document which is quoted by a minister shall be laid on the table; it goes no further than that. I submit without any doubt in my mind that this is neither an official nor a public document. If my colleague desires to lay it on the table, I am quite content.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): This is the most extraordinary situation that has arisen during the time I have been a member of this house. We have had three statements. The first was from the Solicitor General who proceeded to read to the committee a document. When hon. members on this side asked the Solicitor General what document he was reading from, he said that it was a document from the Department of Finance. I accept absolutely the statement of the Minister of Finance. He corrected his colleague and said that it was not from the Department of Finance or issued under its authority. When we on this side asked, as we were entitled under the rule, that the document be tabled, the Minister of Railways took charge and three times stated that the document would be tabled immediately the Solicitor General had finished. As soon as the Solicitor General had finished, the hon. member for Yorkton asked that the document be tabled. We are now having excuses from the Minister of Finance why the document should not be tabled. The Solicitor General in courtesy to the committee should table the document and then we shall be able to say whether it is a public document or not.

Mr. VENIOT: The Minister of Finance says that only an official document must be tabled. This may not be an official document in the sense that it does not have the signature or authority or prestige of any head of a department or a minister of the crown, but it is an official document if the statements we have heard here this afternoon are correct, that it was issued with the consent and authority of the Department of Finance, going to the newspapers with authority to issue it as correct. In that sense it becomes an official document. It was authorized by the department, otherwise the newspapers would not issue it. Having been authorized by the department and issued in a newspaper with the consent of the department, it becomes ipso facto an official document.

Mr. RHODES: While I have the greatest respect for my hon. friend especially after he has celebrated the fiftieth anniversay of a happy wedded life, I cannot allow him to make a statement of such a nature without rising to protest. In the first place I have stated that this was not a document issued by the Department of Finance.

Mr. VENIOT: Authorized.

Mr. RHODES: I took pains to say that a long time ago, so that the hon. member by no stretch of the imagination can say that it is an official document. I do not know that any good purpose will be served by the document being laid on the table, but if my colleague the Solicitor General desires to table it, I have not the slightest objection.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The Minister of Railways promised that it would be tabled.

Mr. RHODES: I wish it however to be clearly understood that it is not an official document and not a public document.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Is the Solicitor General prepared to table the document now?

Mr. DUPRE: Certainly. I have no objection whatsoever.

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask the Solicitor General to table the document now in order that we may have an opportunity of seeing it? When I heard the Minister of Finance say that the document had no importance whatever I understood that he knew of it, and that he gave judgment on that paper after having seen it. Though it may have no importance in the eyes of the Minister of Finance it might have importance in the eyes of opposition members and other hon. members of the house. When the Solicitor General said, "I make it available to members of the house and to my colleagues," and when the Minister of Finance first rose what he said was not very clear. I thought he had resigned in the meantime and that was why he was not a colleague of the Solicitor General. But now that the sky is clear may I ask the Solicitor General kindly to table this paper?

Mr. DUPRE: Certainly.

Mr. REID: Coming back to the bill, I would like to ask a question.

Mr. POULIOT: Pardon me, Improbus labor omnia vincit. I shall not speak at great length but I have a word to say in regard to my hon. friend the Solicitor General. When he speaks of the people of the province of Quebec he and some of his colleagues on the other side of the house speak of them as if they were ignorant people, not familiar with current politics. The fact is that the people of the province of Quebec have never taken such interest in politics as in the last four years. They are familiar with every measure presented before this house, and the matters they discuss are exactly the matters discussed in this house. With regard to the conscription issue may I tell him that a long time ago, the first year after I was elected, I asked the then Minister of Justice, the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) to give me full information about "Ti-noir Desjardins," the man who had been paid by the Department of Justice to cause a revolution in the province of Quebec by shooting at the sons of the farmers there just as he would have shot at game. It happened after the war, and I thought the House of Commons should learn what has been done by the Tories in the province of Quebec, after the war was over, after the Germans and the English and the French had ceased fighting in the field, that there were spotters, paid by the Department of Justice, shooting at the sons of farmers in the province of Quebec. And what was the answer of the then Minister of Justice? He told me, "Let the past be past, and not bring this issue up again." That was said by the hon. gentleman whom the Tories are always accusing both in the house and outside of resurrecting conscription. That is the whole story. I want to get that information, I will get it some day, even if it takes years to bring to light this thing that the Department of Justice, then the department of injustice, did to the farmers' sons of Quebec.

But we will not speak about it any more now. For my part I mention outside of the house, only the questions I put to the government and the Prime Minister and the kind of answers I received. The witness for that is the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon), whom I met at the last by-election in Restigouche-Madawaska when I went to speak on behalf of my hon. friend beside me who was elected there by a majority of 6,500. All I had to do was to take several issues of Hansard and read the questions I had put to the government about many matters and the refusal of the Prime Minister to answer. The answer of the people of that county was that I should have had answer, and they confirmed that by a majority of 6,500 for my hon. friend here. We have enough to say about this government without going back to the wrongs of past Tory governments. They are to be judged according to their policies, they will have to defend them. But the statements of the Solicitor General and the hon. member for Dorchester about the people of my province were most unjust. Let them come to a joint open meeting anywhere and discuss these matters before the people of Quebec and defend their policies. I invited the Solicitor General and the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil) to come to St. Johns after they had invited us to meet them in Quebec, but when I went there I was alone with my hon. friend from St. Johns-Iberville (Mr. Rhéaume), neither the Solicitor General nor the hon. member for Compton came to face the people there.

Mr. SANDERSON: A few minutes ago I understood that the Solicitor General tabled the document which was read. Was it tabled; if not, where is it?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Cotnam): I understand that the paper is in the possession of the clerk of sessional papers.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It should be in the custody of members of the committee.

Mr. SANDERSON: It was tabled, where has it gone to?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Cotnam): It has gone to the clerk of sessional papers.

Mr. SANDERSON: When will it be back in the committee?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Cotnam): It is open for inspection and examination by any hon. member.

Mr. VENIOT: It has no right to go to the clerk of sessional papers until this committee is done with it. It should remain on that table during this discussion and until this committee rises. I protest, and demand that the paper be produced to the committee now.

Mr. POULIOT: Perhaps it is under the table.

Mr. VENIOT: I say to the members of the government and the minister having this bill in charge that unless the document is produced the bill will not pass as readily as he might expect.

Mr. RHODES: Of course my hon. friends realize that the officers of the house have no doubt followed the usual procedure.

Mr. VENIOT: It is not the rule.

Mr. RHODES: If not, it is a question that should go to the committee on privileges and elections and be very carefully scrutinized. The constitution itself is in danger; if members of the committee miss the enlightenment to be afforded by the contents of this document! My hon. friend the member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) whom I hold in such great esteem, was becoming choleric to such an extent that I felt prepared even to wreck the constitution to satisfy entirely his desire that all the proper procedure should be complied with. I understand the document has now been brought back and laid upon the table, and I hope it will not be spirited away. After my hon. friend has read it with that great care which I know he will bestow upon it I hope there will accrue to him an even greater measure of wisdom to add to that which he now possesses in such great abundance.

Mr. VENIOT: The Minister of Finance may be able to add to the wisdom of his humble servant, but I am sure it will not be from this document. But I insist that I am right in saying that when during a debate it is asked that a document be tabled, that document should remain on the table until the committee rises. It is then it goes to the custody of the clerk of sessional papers, but until then there is no right to take it from this committee until we dispose of it. That is the point I make, and the Minister of Finance will not deny that right and privilege. My experience in parliamentary procedure has been about as long as that of my hon. friend and I do not have to have any lessons on that from any member on the government side.

Mr. RHODES: May I assure my hon. friend that he has taken a wrong interpretation from my remarks. In my innocence I was trying to indicate that I thought perhaps the matter was not of such great moment as circumstances would suggest, but that if it were the wishes of my hon. friend from Gloucester and all the conventions with respect to what should be done in regard to documents should be respected in every degree. May I say to my hon. friend that it was in no spirit of levity that I paid him the tribute of saying he was possessed of a very great amount of wisdom. I made that statement in all sincerity, and I am quite prepared to agree with my hon. friend that he knows very much more than I do—

Mr. VENIOT: I did not say that.

Mr. RHODES: —but I do not know that that has very much bearing on the matter under discussion. I hope that we may be able to make some progress from now on.

Mr. McPHEE: Mr. Chairman, we now have the document which we obtained after a process as hard as extracting a tooth, and we find that it is not the document it purports to be. The Solicitor General said that instead of asking us to take his word for what happened he would read from the official report of the Department of Finance the record of what has happened in the province of Quebec. I think on reference to Hansard that will be found to be exactly what he said. This may be a report, but by the subterfuge of reading a public document the Solicitor General has read his whole speech into Hansard by quoting this document verbatim. He might as well have tabled a copy of Hansard. I submit that my hon. friend, who is Solicitor General of this dominion, should have regard to the peace, order and good government of the country and should be very careful not to state what is not the fact so far as this report is concerned.

Mr. DUPRE: In reply to my hon. friend I may say that this is the document from which I read a moment ago.

Mr. STEWART (Lethbridge): Mr. Chairman, the board of review for the province of Alberta had several sittings in the city of Lethbridge before we left to come to Ottawa, and we had the opportunity of attending and listening to the proceedings. I fancy one would be struck first of all by the informal nature of the hearings. There we found an atmosphere of cooperation and conciliation. The atmosphere of the court was lacking, neither was there any feeling of opposition or antagonism. The members of the board listened very attentively and gave precedence to the representative of the farmers. This gentleman, Mr. McLeod, made it his business, wherever possible, to secure from the farmer whose case was before the board, just what amount of machinery he had at his disposal, and also tried to form an estimate of his ability to carry on his farming operations. I think the gentleman representing the creditors, Mr. McQuaig, and the representative of the farmers, Mr. McLeod, are sitting on the board of review of our province not as the representatives of one class or another but as men imbued with the one aim, which is to help the farmer get out from under his heavy load of debt and see daylight ahead.

It has been suggested by several members that we should have a lawyer to present the claims of the farmers to the board. To that suggestion I am opposed. It would bring into that informal hearing the atmosphere of a court, which is not objectionable in any way but which is not the atmosphere in which this act will work to the best advantage. It would mean also a great deal of delay, for the lawyer would endeavour to put forward the best possible case on behalf of his client, and cases which now may be settled in one hour would take at least one day. So I do not think it would be in the interests of the legislation to agree to this suggestion. There appears, however, to be a lack of cooperation between the farm loan board and those in charge of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. We find that several farmers in our neighbourhood have the opportunity of compromising with their creditors, but they are unable to secure any advances, because in our part of the country the banks are not lending money. Both these acts come under the Department of Finance, and I am almost persuaded that it might be in the interests of the farmers of western Canada if we had one head administering both acts. I might say also that in Alberta we have had several farmers who have made unjust claims. Some of these men have not been playing the game, and they have been very effectively told by the chairman of the board that their cases were rejected. It has been said by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard that this is not desirable legislation—

Mr. HANBURY: I do not like to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I did not make that statement in connection with this legislation. I was referring to the farm loan bill.

Mr. STEWART (Lethbridge): I understood the hon. gentleman to say that this act was undesirable also, but I accept his correction. So far as the people of my riding are concerned, and I think I can speak for the people of southern Alberta, I believe this is most necessary legislation. When I was speaking in connection with the farm loan bill I directed attention to four cases in my riding which had come to my attention, concerning very deserving farmers who could not possibly get out from under their load of debt. If we could secure cooperation in the administration of these two acts, whether through unification of administration or otherwise, no doubt it would be of benefit to those coming before the boards of review.

The other evening while speaking on this bill the hon. member for Willow Bunch attempted to capitalize—I think for the benefit of himself and his party—the unfortunate situation in which the farmer now finds himself because of the depression. Well, I might tell the hon. gentleman of a few instances which have come to my knowledge in the constituency which I have the honour to represent. I might also say to him that many reasons can be given because of which this unfortunate depression situation has developed, and one is the lack of policy on the part of the Liberal government from 1921 to 1930. If ever a government lost the market for our agricultural products it was the government of hon. members opposite which held office from 1921 to 1930. To the extent of at least 60,000,000 bushels of wheat per year we lost the European wheat market. Between 1921 and 1930 there was an increase of 39,000,000 acres in the acreage of wheat sown in Europe. The policy of the government supported by the hon. member for Willow Bunch was to pay no attention to the trend of agricultural development in Europe, but rather to increase the wheat acreage in Canada from 22,000,000 to 27,000,000. Consequently when this government took office there was a surplus of wheat. The wheat carry-over began in 1925 and extended to 1930. This government took hold of the wheat situation and every year since 1930 has sold more wheat than was sold by the Liberal government during the last year it was in office. The last year the government supported by the hon. member for Willow Bunch held office, it sold 157,000,000 bushels of wheat. In every year this government has held office we have sold more than that. I believe a great deal of the distressed conditions in which the farmers find themselves to-day can be laid at the door of the Liberal party.

Further, the hon. member for Willow Bunch supported the Liberal government which between 1921 and 1930 lost our markets in the United States, a market in which we sold in 1921, $190,000,000 of agricultural products, and in the year the Liberals went out of office only $93,000,000. In short, in their ten years of office we lost $100,000,000 per year of our agricultural market in the United States.

The hon. member for Macleod seems to support the idea that the farmers of Canada are in a worse position than the farmers of other countries. He told about an old cow being sold for nineteen cents. It is a wonder he does not tell some of the things he reads in the Lethbridge Herald, because I assume he reads that publication. Those articles tell another story. I wonder if he read the story about the German who had been taken prisoner by the French and who some years after the close of the war, in 1923, came to Canada. In 1934 he produced 39,000 bushels of grain, although he had come to Canada with no possessions in the world. I wonder if the hon. member has heard about the gentleman living in New Dayton, in the southern part of my constituency who sold his grain in 1933 for $4,500 without even hauling it to the station. So able was he as a farmer that this year he was fortunate in selling his half section at a large increase over the amount he had paid for it in 1929. Around the town of Warner we are selling land at a considerable increase in value, despite the fact that the farmers have been operating under these unfortunate circumstances.

I do know that many of the farmers in Alberta are satisfied with the actions of this government. To bear out this point may I quote from a publication which I believe would have the support of the hon. member for Macleod. This paper, the United Farmer, contains a report of the proceedings of the legislative assembly at Edmonton, and I find the following credited to one Donald Cameron, the U.F.A. member for Innisfail:

> Donald Cameron said he held no brief for the Bennett government, but it had at the last session put more advanced legislation on the statute books than had been put there in one session by any government since confederation.

Mr. SANDERSON: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. Is the hon. member speaking to the bill?

Mr. REID: It is a budget speech.

Mr. SANDERSON: Has he not been out of order for ten minutes?

Mr. McINTOSH: A hundred miles out of order.

Mr. STEWART (Lethbridge): I am simply meeting the points brought up by other hon. members.

Mr. SANDERSON: Mr. Chairman, I insist upon a ruling.

Mr. STEWART (Lethbridge): I shall now pay attention to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Cotnam): I believe the hon. member is following the custom which has been observed throughout the discussion of this bill. The hon. member for Témiscouata, sitting on the opposition benches, spoke on a variety of matters, including conscription in the province of Quebec. In fact, none of his speech was relevant to the bill before us. In view of the fact that much latitude has been given I do not believe any great objection could be taken to the remarks being made by the hon. member for Lethbridge.

Mr. SANDERSON: You rule, then, that the speech is quite in order?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Cotnam): In order, in comparison with the speeches which have been made on the bill.

Mr. SANDERSON: In comparison?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Cotnam): I do not say it is in order, but I do say there has been very wide latitude allowed during the discussion.

Mr. SANDERSON: It must be either in or out of order.

Mr. STEWART (Lethbridge): No doubt Mr. Cameron of Innisfail was referring to the action this government has taken in bringing forward farm loan legislation and the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. No doubt he had in mind the policy the government has followed in the past four years through which the farmers of western Canada have received at least $200,000,000 which they would not have received if the wheat market had not been stabilized. Australia may have given a direct bonus of £40,000,000 to the farmers of that country, but I can state with authority that this government has provided a market wherein a farmer may sell his grain every day of the year. So far as they could they saw to it that the domestic price was one which would give the farmer a fair return for his labour. No wonder Mr. Cameron, the U.F.A. member in the Alberta legislature, speaking in the debate in reply to the speech from the throne made the observations which I have quoted about the Bennett government.

So far as the present legislation is concerned may I say I believe that as it affects my constituency there is something lacking. Hon. members are aware that within the Lethbridge constituency there are large irrigation districts constructed by two different organizations. One district was erected and controlled by a private corporation, and in the other the bonds were recommended and guaranteed by the provincial government. That government had to take over the operation of the district in question, and as a result of the investigation which was held about three years ago the capitalization against the acreage was reduced from $54 an acre to $26. This action has enabled some of the farmers to meet their obligations and to carry the load under which they are operating, but in the other area we find some difficulties. In 1924 the Alberta legislature passed an amendment to the Irrigation District Act whereby provision was made to extend the operation of the canals to other districts, and under that provision we had four new districts formed. There was the Taber irrigation district, the Raymond irrigation district, the Magrath irrigation district, and one other the name of which I have forgotten for the moment. In 1926 and 1927 the farmers living in those areas induced the Canadian Pacific Railway to extend their irrigation works so that they would have the benefit of irrigation, and we find the canal being extended ten miles in the Taber area and the irrigation works extended some six or seven miles in the Raymond and Magrath areas. That work was done when construction costs were very high, and what has been the result? To-day I find that in one of those districts where we have some sixty-seven farmers and 20,000 odd acres, which includes not only irrigable but dry land, the capital overhead per acre is $60. Under present circumstances no farmer, no matter how well supplied he may be with power, machinery and live stock, could possbily succeed with a capitalization that high; it simply cannot be done. In one of these districts the farmers have made up their minds that it cannot be done, and consequently they have decided that they will let the contracts run on until at last the private corporation will be forced to seek a compromise. There is no provision in this act under which the farmers living in those new irrigation districts can succeed in getting a compromise of their debts. There is no one to whom they may go, for the whole district is bonded. The private corporations took the joint notes of all the farmers, and in order that these farmers may have the right to have a compromise of their debts the same as other farmers, provision should be made in this bill whereby the farmer who belongs to an irrigation district shall have the right through the instrumentality of the official receiver to ask that the private corporation arrive at a fair compromise in order that the farmer may see daylight ahead. I hope the minister will accept this suggestion in the spirit in which it is offered, being an endeavour to help those who are unable to help themselves at the present time and to whom the right of effecting a settlement under this act is denied.

Mr. McINTOSH: May I ask the minister how many proposals have been made under the act, province by province?

Mr. RHODES: That is the break-up of the 3,585?

Mr. McINTOSH: Yes.

Mr. RHODES: This is as of March 2, and represents only the actual proposals which are of record here: Prince Edward Island, 57; Nova Scotia, 3; New Brunswick, 8; Quebec, 1,167; Ontario, 446; Manitoba, 492; Saskatchewan, 752; Alberta, 640; British Columbia, 20.

Mr. McINTOSH: May I ask how many cases that came before the official receivers were settled, province by province?

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend was probably not in the house when I put all these figures on the record earlier, but I am quite content to do so again. The total number of actual settlements effected between debtor and creditor before the official receivers as recorded at head office here is 1,092, although that does not by any means represent all the settlements, as I pointed out at an earlier stage; British Columbia, 3; Alberta, 228; Saskatchewan, 143; Manitoba, 112; Ontario, 288; Quebec, 316; New Brunswick, 1; Nova Scotia, 1.

Mr. McINTOSH: What about the settlements that were made before the boards of review?

Mr. RHODES: My information is that practically eighty per cent of the cases which come before the boards of review are settled amicably without resort to a decision which is not acceptable to one or other of the parties. I also gave the number of cases which have been referred. Does my hon. friend wish me to give that again?

Mr. McINTOSH: No, not if it is on the record.

Mr. RHODES: Yes, it is on the record.

Mr. McINTOSH: When the resolution was before the house, the minister will remember that I inquired from him on the orders of the day with regard to counsel for the farmers before the boards of review. I said that the loan companies and corporations would be represented by eminent counsel and I intimated that it was my own opinion that if the farmers could also be represented by counsel it would be better. The minister said that he would be quite willing to take up that matter when we were in committee on the bill, and also suggested that if it could be demonstrated that the farmers actually needed counsel before the boards of review he would not be opposed to it. That is the meaning I took from his remarks. Would the minister be good enough now to amplify his statement of a few days ago in that regard.

Mr. RHODES: I shall be very happy to do so. When representations were made to me by one or perhaps two farmers' organizations—I have particularly in mind the representations that were made to me by the Saskatchewan branch of the United Farmers—I felt it was very doubtful whether those who were speaking for the farmers were making a request which was really in the interests of the farmer. I will speak to the committee just as frankly as it appears to my own mind. I had this feeling. In the board of review you have a judge of a superior court as chairman; then you have a prominent barrister who as a matter of fact in every province, so far as I am a ware, commands the respect not only of the bar but of the public as well. So in a board of three you have two men who are trained in the law. In addition to that the registrar, with possibly one or two exceptions, is a man trained in the law. It is true that numbers of the loan companies have been represented by counsel, but this is what happens in practice, and what I rather felt at the time would happen. You find the farmer before the board of review, and you find a lawyer representing the creditor. The chairman, the creditor's representative, and also the registrar, are men trained in the law, and instinctively all of them prepared to advise and to protect the farmer. But more particularly I had this in mind, that if you have a lawyer on one side and engage a lawyer on the other you are going to revert more or less to the atmosphere of a court of law, and the spirit of this act would be lost sight of, namely, conciliation and compromise, added to the circumstance that instead of settling cases as they have been, in an hour, under existing conditions, you would have them prolonged for a day. I was struck with a remark made by an eminent member of the bar who is a member of this house in connection with this very bill on second reading, when he referred to the traditional delays of the law. If you had a lawyer engaged for the farmer I doubt whether, on balance, as good results would be reached, because the measure would be law and not equity. But there would be the further damage to the interest of the farmer, that instead of having cases disposed of as expeditiously as possible they would be prolonged for days and weeks and months, not individual cases but hundreds of cases which are now before the boards of review. That was my feeling and I thought that experience had justified that point of view, for this reason, that the tendency has been less and less on the part of those interested, particularly in farmers' organizations, to demand counsel. As a matter of fact, no representations have been made to me in recent weeks to that end. Furthermore, as indicating the character of this body, may I point out to my hon. friend that the loan companies are finding out that they are not being advantaged to any great extent by spending large sums of money in legal fees, and the tendency on their part is less and less to engage counsel, with the result that ninety per cent of the cases which actually come before the board of review are settled as a matter of agreement between debtor and creditor. Under these circumstances I believe—and I am only expressing my own view—that we should do the farmer a disservice if we engaged counsel for him at the present time to appear before the boards of review. But when I made the reply to my hon. friend—it was the reply which I made to the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan branch—I did it in good faith. If experience should indicate that it would be to the advantage of the farmers that counsel should be engaged, they would be, and I may say now that they will be. But I have every reason to believe that the feeling is now more or less prevalent, even among the farmers themselves, that they are better served and protected under this method than they would be if counsel were engaged.

Mr. McINTOSH: I want to thank the minister for his very courteous and complete reply. I am sure it is a privilege to ask questions in committee of the house when the minister is directing the work of the house. Now, the question I passed on to the minister actually grew out of a request from a municipal council, every member of which was a farmer, and the minute I got it I passed it to the minister. I thank him for the reply he has given. There was another question growing out of that. The minister will remember, I am sure, that on Monday, February 25, on the orders of the day, I inquired with regard to the liquidation of mercantile debts. I stated that the farmers are having their debts adjusted but the retailers and business men of the nation are not, under this bill, and my question was whether more adequate debt adjusting machinery would be introduced by the government. The minister on that occasion said that the question involved major policy but that he would consider it and when the bill was before the house in committe, or at some other stage, he would give an answer or make a statement.

Mr. RHODES: I think my statement on that occasion had reference to the hon. member's query with respect to counsel, because I did not—

Mr. McINTOSH: At page 1151 of Hansard the minister will find his brief answer to my question.

Mr. RHODES: I am right in my recollection, because at page 1151 I find that I gave this answer:

> That is a rather comprehensive question to be submitted without notice. It will require an answer involving major policy. The question will be considered and an announcement made as and when a decision is arrived at.

So that it was not that I was to make an announcement with respect to that question while we were considering this legislation. The answer I gave is the answer which would usually be given in those cases where the consideration of policy at the time might be in hand. Certainly, in any event, it is not an answer that would be required in connection with this bill because this bill by its very title indicates that the act is a farmers' creditors arrangement act. If it were determined that the principle applicable here should be given wider application, that would have to be by a separate act, or the title of this act would have to be changed. That is the only answer I can give on that score at the moment.

Mr. McINTOSH: Can the minister state whether or not there is a possibility of legislation in that direction?

Mr. RHODES: On reflection my hon. friend will realize that I could not answer that question. I really cannot.

Mr. McINTOSH: The reason I bring up that question is briefly this. Since the amendment to this act has been before parliament and the country I have received quite a number of communications from business men, mainly from retailers, asking whether there is any possibility of the government introducing legislation to help them; and of course, not knowing the mind of the government, all that any hon. member can do is to try to get from some member of the government his point of view on the matter. That was why I put the question before the house. I have information to the effect that in Saskatchewan the retailers think that sixty per cent of them will go out of business if something is not done. The interest rates are seven and eight per cent. These are the rates they are being charged and they cannot collect their debts from the farmers. Consequently they are confronted with insolvency and we can understand why they are wondering whether anything will be done or not. We can easily see that their difficulty arises out of the very adjustment of the farmers' difficulties for which we have made provision under this legislation, and therefore I thought it wise to ask the minister what was his thought on the question at issue. I might go into the question of real estate to show the enormous losses which very many men are taking. It is just another angle of the financial worries of the retail trade. For instance, I have here information with regard to one man who bought a property for $125,000, and $70,000 is the amount he will lose on it. He is going to lose the property. He paid $30,000 on it and then he spent $25,000 plus $15,000 on it, so in all he will lose that $70,000. Another man bought a property on which he paid $12,000 and he spent another $15,000 on it. He will lose $27,000. Another man bought a property for $75,000. What he spent on it and put into amounts to $30,000, and that $30,000 will be gone. I might continue, but I do not want to delay the committee.

The debt difficulties in which retailers and business men find themselves must be quite plain to all hon. members. They are legion. Unless something is done for them, their present condition will lead to bankruptcy. Many of these merchants and other business men feel strongly that since the debts of the farmers are being adjusted, the government should take into consideration their dilemma in such cases as cited and others, and bring down legislation to help them. These representations having been presented to the committee, my duty is done. I understand the minister's point of view and I thank him for the answers given.

Mr. GERSHAW: May I ask the minister something about the position of the preferred creditor. That is, would the board of review have power to cut down the first mortgage?

[Mr. McIntosh.]

Mr. RHODES: The board of review would have and has power to cut down an amount due a preferred creditor.

Mr. SPENCER: A few days ago when we were discussing this bill, someone on the government side—I thought it was the Minister of Finance, but I may be wrong—stated that more than 7,000 applications had been made under this act. I took a note of the figure at the time; I thought that the act was getting under way nicely. The figure of 3,585 the minister has given us, of course, goes back only a few weeks. Has it increased to 7,000 now or is this a more recent figure?

Mr. RHODES: I am sure my hon. friend must have been out of the chamber when in reply to a question raised by the hon. member for Bow River I indicated that those figures emanated from the central office here. While the number I have given to the committee of the proposals received, aggregating 3,585, represents only the recorded number in the central office, the estimate given to me was that the actual number of proposals which have been formulated and are now in the hands of official receivers or on their way here, is upwards of 7,000. The hon. member for Bow River asked whether that was more or less a guess. I told him it was based upon experience due to the usual lag in the estimate of numbers, but I find out now from inquiry that I could have gone much further. The estimate is based upon this: a comparison between the letters coming from the official receivers indicating the number of proposals they have formulated and the actual number of proposals which are in hand and credited to the same official receivers. The discrepancy in some cases is very marked due solely to the fact that while they have reported so many proposals as having been formulated, they have not had time to do the clerical work and send their reports back to the central office, so that the figure can be safely relied upon of upwards of 7,000 proposals actually formulated and now in the central office or in the hands of the official receivers.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the exact date of the figures?

Mr. RHODES: The figures are as of March 2.

Mr. SANDERSON: What will be the cost of administration of this act?

Mr. RHODES: The salary cost last month was $27,000.

Mr. SANDERSON: What would be an average amount month by month?

Mr. RHODES: That would be a fair estimate of the month by month cost of administering the act for salaries.

Mr. SANDERSON: That would be about $300,000 a year?

Mr. RHODES: It will be at least that.

Mr. SANDERSON: What remuneration do the official receivers get? How are they paid?

Mr. RHODES: They receive $150 a month.

Mr. SANDERSON: Is that a straight salary going on yearly?

Mr. RHODES: No, they are appointed and paid only by the month. Their appointments are not yearly; they can be determined at any time.

Mr. McINTOSH: When did the board of review officially get under way in Saskatchewan? What is the exact date?

Mr. RHODES: I am told that the first meeting was on December 22 of last year.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask the minister what salaries are paid to members of the board of review?

Mr. RHODES: The chairman is not paid any salary; he is paid expenses. The other two members receive $25 per sitting day.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): All I can say is that in my opinion both the official receivers, whose position is an extremely important one, and the members of the board of review are certainly not overpaid. I hope the government can secure properly qualified men at that rate of pay.

There is just another point I want to raise. The statement made by the hon. member for Lethbridge impressed me as raising a matter of considerable importance. I know something of the situation in that locality and I am wondering whether the minister can give any assurance to the committee that it would be possible under this act to take care of collective obligations such as have been incurred by individual settlers on uncleared land in the Lethbridge northern district. Many of them are undoubtedly heavily encumbered and if they are not permitted to take collective action, then their position is such as will not enable them to come under the operation of this act. Is there any way in which the procedure could be changed so as to facilitate collective action of that kind? I am sorry the hon. member for Lethbridge has left his seat; I listened with interest to what he had to say. I noted a quotation he gave from an alleged statement by Mr. Cameron in the local house and I think he gave it as of some date in February of this year, stating that it appeared in the United Farmer. I have not had time to go carefully over every column, so perhaps I should not arrive at any conclusion, but I have glanced through the various copies for the month of February and I do not find the statement. I wonder whether the hon. member referred to 1934 or 1935. It surely must be 1935. Perhaps we could get that information. Could we have a reply in regard to the Lethbridge northern district question?

Mr. RHODES: The case referred to by the hon. member for Bow River as well as by the hon. member for Lethbridge presents some difficulties, but I may say to my hon. friend that for some little time now a conference has been going on between the official receivers in that area and representatives of the irrigation companies in the hope that something may be worked out, and if so, representations will be made to the Alberta government enabling, if not all, at least a portion of those cases to be taken care of. My hon. friend will be the first to realize that this is a difficult matter to deal with. If it is possible to deal with it, we shall do so.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock, Mr. Stanley in the chair.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask the Minister of Finance whether representations have been made by the government of Alberta that provincial lands subject to agreement of sale, should be permitted to come under the operations of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act?

Mr. RHODES: As far as I am aware there has been no communication from the province of Alberta on that subject.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I may not have put my question correctly, or the minister may have misunderstood me. On the front page of the United Farmer of February 15 last I find a report of a session of the legislature of Alberta in which the following appears:

Replying to charges made by D. M. Duggan, Conservative leader, that the government (of Alberta) had never, so far as official records at Ottawa show, made any attempt to persuade the federal government to include the farmers who hold land from the Department of Lands and Mines, under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, premier Reid stated before the house adjourned on Tuesday that on three separate occasions the government had taken steps to make such representations to the federal government.

Has the minister any record of that?

Mr. RHODES: I have no knowledge of any communication coming from the government of Alberta. It may be that they have communicated with the Prime Minister; as to that I cannot be sure, but I shall make inquiry and before the bill passes the house I will give a specific answer to my hon. friend. Of course my hon. friend will appreciate that there is nothing in the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act to prevent a board of review from making a finding with respect to these lands.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I thank the minister for his statement. I asked in order to clear up the charges made by Mr. Duggan in the provincial house. I notice that the despatch says also:

At the dominion provincial conference in January, 1933, ... the then premier had taken the matter up and he had again urged it and taken steps to present the matter before Ottawa at the provincial conference later, when the Hon. M. A. McPherson, attorney general of Saskatchewan at the time, was appointed to go to Ottawa and take the matter up with the government on behalf of all three prairie provinces.

However, I rest the matter there until the minister has an opportunity to look into it.

Mr. COOTE: Could the minister tell the committee whether any communications have been had with the provincial governments in western Canada in regard to including the arrears on school lands in the class of debts which may be dealt with by the board of review? Many farmers in western Canada purchased school lands under agreement of sale from the Department of the Interior at Ottawa, while these lands were under administration by the dominion. I have been informed that the board of review have no power to deal with arrears owing to the government under school lands agreements, and the attitude of the provincial government I think is that they cannot do anything about the matter without legislation at Ottawa. I wondered whether the matter had been discussed at any conference between the western governments and the dominion.

Mr. RHODES: I think the question of school lands may have been discussed. The Department of Justice is at present dealing with the question whether it would be competent for the provinces to pass legislation to consent to a reduction in the amounts due on school lands. I will have a more succinct answer before the bill leaves this house, but may I point out, notwithstanding that, that it still is competent for the board of review to make findings in reference to and dealing with school lands, as with respect to all other crown lands. As I understand it is only that one point that is being dealt with, whether it is competent for the provinces to consent to a reduction as far as school lands are concerned.

Mr. COOTE: I understood from a member of one of the western boards of review that they understand they have no power to deal with arrears owing on school lands. In discussing that with some of the ministers of western provinces they seemed to think it would be necessary for the dominion government to pass certain legislation, because under the agreement by which the natural resources were turned over to the western provinces they were bound to carry out certain trusts and felt that as long as they were bound by that legislation it would be necessary for the dominion government to pass amending legislation to give them power to allow any compromise to be made.

Mr. RHODES: That may be so as far as the point concerning the competency of the provinces is concerned, but it has no bearing on the general statement that the crown is bound by a decision of the board of review, and that its findings would cover school lands as well as others.

Mr. REID: Would the same statement apply to dyked lands? I know in British Columbia those who went before the official referee in an endeavour to get a compromise felt there was a difficulty there. There will probably be in the neighbourhood of from $400 to $600 dyking taxes as part of the settler's debts. It was thought that the dyking commission had no right to reduce the taxes, and if they were reduced on one it might affect all the other taxes owing.

Mr. RHODES: As far as I am aware no limitation is imposed upon the authority of the board of review to make findings affecting lands, whether of the crown or of companies or private individuals. That holds whether the lands are held by the crown in the right of the province, or in the right of the dominion; and I think without question it includes the lands mentioned by the hon. member for New Westminster.

Mr. COOTE: There has been considerable difference of opinion in western Canada as to whether the board of review has power to cancel taxes. In some cases the taxes in question have been assigned by a municipality to a bank, and while I do not know as to the correctness of this I am told the banks have challenged the right of the board of review to cancel any taxes that have been assigned to them. I wondered whether the minister is in a position to express an opinion on that point.

Mr. RHODES: Our view is that the board of review has full right to deal with the question of arrears of taxes.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Stay of proceedings.

Mr. COOTE: I think the minister was going to say something on this section in regard to the reason for the change from sixty to ninety days. I think he was also going to give the committee some idea as to whether ninety days is sufficient for a stay of proceedings in the case of a man making a proposal. It seems to me there have been cases already where the proposals were made for more than ninety days, in which decisions have not yet been given by the board of review. If that is so is ninety days long enough for a stay of proceedings?

Mr. RHODES: As the committee is aware the old provision fixed the stay at sixty days, and by experience that time was found to be too short. As a matter of fact in many cases, owing to the congestion of work, it will be found that ninety days is not sufficient time, but my hon. friend will bear in mind that it is competent for the court to renew the stay for a further period. On the one hand we have to consider the question of protecting the rights of the debtor in the matter of the stay of proceedings and on the other hand we must consider the right of the creditor not to be prejudiced by what has happened in some cases in which the proceedings, if not frivolous in character, at all events were not bona fide proposals which could be entertained. In one instance the court voided a stay of proceedings. In a genuine case, however, if ninety days does not prove to be a sufficiently long period there is nothing to prevent the court from extending the period for a further time, the situation being that a genuine case would not be prejudiced by reason of that circumstance.

Mr. COOTE: Would the minister say what the procedure would be? It seems to me there might easily be a conflict of opinion between the court and the board of review.

Mr. RHODES: The practice is for the official receiver to make the application.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: There would be no expense to the farmer in regard to the application for an extension of the stay?

Mr. RHODES: No expense to the farmer.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: At what point in the proceedings does a debtor making a proposal come within the provisions of the bankruptcy law and void his protection under any provincial legislation? As I understand it the bankruptcy law itself applies only after the proposal has been confirmed and filed with the court. Up to that time, and even after the proposal has been made but while it is still under consideration, any provincial legislation still would be available to the debtor, would it not? In Alberta they have legislation which prevents court proceedings unless and until the creditor has received power from the board to proceed in the courts. I assume that legislation still would be available up to the time the proposal was accepted and confirmed, so that the man making the proposal would not have voided his protection under the provincial law until his proposal under this act was confirmed and filed in the courts.

Mr. RHODES: The creditor would have to—

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Quite apart from any periods stated in this act.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend is dealing more particularly with the question of bankruptcy?

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I was dealing with this question. Until the proposal has been accepted and filed in the courts the applicant, the man making the proposal, does not come specifically under this law, or does he? He has not voided the protection he already has under the provincial law until the proposal has been confirmed by the court?

Mr. RHODES: As I understand it, the moment a proposal is filed with an official receiver under the act, from that moment the stay of proceedings becomes effective.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Yes, but I was referring to the other point, that apart from anything in this act providing for a stay of proceedings in some provinces the debtors are now under the protection of provincial legislation under which proceedings can take place only by permission of certain courts or tribunals. As I understand it the protection of that provincial legislation is not voided by the debtor until the proposal has been agreed to, confirmed and filed in the courts as a completed proposal. Is that a fact?

Mr. RHODES: If the board of review should decline to formulate a proposal, to sanction a proposal or to make a proposal of their own, in that event it is competent for the debtor to apply to the provincial debt adjustment board. But if the board of review takes action then, as I understand it, it is not necessary to invoke the provincial statute.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: In my province, for example, the creditor himself must make application to the provincial debt adjustment officials for the right to proceed in court. In other words all farm debtors are protected against proceedings except under special permission granted to the creditors. My question was whether this provincial protection remained until such time as the proposal was not only made but was accepted and filed in the courts.

Mr. RHODES: I may not entirely apprehend the position taken by my hon. friend from Red Deer, but as I understand it if a proposal has been filed before an official receiver; if there is not a settlement made and the matter goes before the board of review, then until the board has taken action the matter under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act is one for the board of review to deal with. Provincial legislation cannot intervene, and the debtor will come under the operations of the provincial debt adjustment board only after such time as the board of review refuses to bring down a finding approving of the proposal or submitting a proposal of its own.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Then there is a really an interim. Until the debtor makes a proposal and files it with the district official he is of course, as at present, in those provinces where there is provincial legislation, under such provincial legislation up to that point.

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Then after the proposal has been filed he is protected, except in breach of the provisions of the proposal then filed under certain conditions, that is, if the breach has been due to something within his own control—

Mr. RHODES: That is right.

[Mr. Speakman.]

Mr. SPEAKMAN: But after the proposal has been filed with the official receiver and prior to the time it is confirmed and filed with the courts, when it is binding, that is the interim of which I was speaking. During that interim, as I understand it, he is not under the protection of the provincial legislation but is protected solely by the stay of proceedings which was sixty days and now is to be ninety days. Is that the position?

Mr. RHODES: The provincial law would remain in abeyance from the time the proposal was filed. Of course, in the event of the ninety days herein provided expiring, and no new period arising, then he would come under the operation of the provincial debt adjustment act.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: That was my point, namely that in provinces where there is provincial protection a man is not protected either under the provision for sixty days or ninety days on the one hand or by the provincial legislation on the other until such time as the proposal has not only been filed but finally confirmed and filed in the courts.

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes, but as the minister is aware one cannot compel a farmer to go through bankruptcy. However, if he takes protection under this act, if the board of review as the ultimate court under the act decides that a certain compromise is just to all parties concerned, and if the farmer does not consider that it is just or that he can comply with its terms and refuses so to comply, he may then under this legislation be put through bankruptcy. In that way he loses the protection of the present bankruptcy law and the debt adjustment acts of the respective provinces. It would be well to have that point clear.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I have a good deal of interest in this point. Rightly or wrongly I have gained the impression that once a farmer places himself under the control of the board he is there for weal or woe. He either ends in bankruptcy or has an adjustment. If I am not correct in my understanding I should like to be given the proper information, but that was the impression I gained from the information given the committee last year when the bill was presented to the house. In one sense the legislation afforded a cheap way for the farmer to go through a bankruptcy court, an opportunity which had not been afforded him until the bill was introduced. It was intimated that at little or no cost to himself he could become a bankrupt and avoid the difficult situation of having his creditors pursue him all his life. If I am wrong about it I should like to have my impression corrected. If a farmer can refuse to accept an adjustment made by the board, then it is news to me.

Mr. RHODES: The impression held by the hon. member for West Edmonton is quite correct up to this point, that if the farmer fails to live up to the terms of the finding, then he does go into bankruptcy. That is quite true.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Irrespective of whether he accepted it or not?

Mr. RHODES: Yes, quite so. The finding of the board must be binding upon both parties. The provision in this respect is to be found at subsection 3 of section 3 of the original act passed last year:

In any case where the affairs of a farmer have been arranged by a proposal approved by the court or confirmed by the board as hereinafter provided, part I of the Bankruptcy Act shall notwithstanding section 7 thereof thereafter apply to such farmer but only failure on the part of such farmer to carry out any of the terms of the proposal shall be deemed to be an act of bankruptcy.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Yes.

Mr. RHODES: It continues:

Provided that such failure shall not be deemed an act of bankruptcy if, in the opinion of the court, such act was due to causes beyond the control of such farmer.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But we have to go back a stage farther than that to find out just how the matter works out. We will suppose Tom Jones goes to a receiver at Calgary and makes a written proposal offering to compromise on his obligations. In such event the secured and probably the unsecured creditors would be consulted. They may disagree with the proposal offered by the farmer and say that they will not accept it. Thereupon the farmer may say, "well, that is my rock bottom proposition; I cannot do any better than that because it represents the limit of my capacity to pay, and I certainly will not enter into any other agreement." Under this act, once a farmer has made a written proposal any secured creditor may pursue the matter through to the board of review and secure a finding by that board which would have the effect of forcing the farmer into bankruptcy, in the event of his not accepting the finding. Let us have the matter clear.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): That is my understanding of it.

Mr. RHODES: The hon. member is quite right; he stated the situation accurately.

Mr. COOTE: The difficulty is that there may be so many cases waiting for a hearing by a board of review that a case to be heard by it may have to wait ninety days before a decision could be rendered. If the official receiver neglected to ask the court for a stay of proceedings, although a man had done everything he could legally do to have his case heard, and although it may be held up only because of a long list of cases awaiting the action of the board of review, he would be helpless to protect himself against any creditor who might desire to take action against him. I mean by that that he is left in the hands of the receiver, absolutely. I was told by one of the members of the board of review in Alberta that on some days they can hear only three cases, although they put in long hours. Some cases have required that much consideration, if the board wished to be fair to both debtor and creditor. No good purpose would be served in going ahead with this legislation unless the board of review had plenty of time to see that decisions were carefully made. If they are going to give the same consideration to these cases that an ordinary court would give, in many instances they will not be in a position to deal with more than three or four in a day. This afternoon I asked the minister if he could tell how many cases were awainting the decisions of the board of review, and I dare say he may not be in a position to give accurate information on that point. It does seem to me however that according to the figures he gave this afternoon there must be a good many cases in Alberta and Saskatchewan. I doubt whether in some of the western provinces the board of review would be able to hear in less than ninety days some of the cases which have lately come before them. Therefore I raise the point whether or not ninety days is a long enough period for a stay of proceedings.

Mr. RHODES: On March 1, 276 cases had been referred to the board of review in Alberta, and on that date 102 had been heard. While in the earlier stages it is true that only three cases could be heard by the board of review in one day, they have more recently been able to speed up their work. That has been brought about through the experience they have gained and because they are sitting longer hours. They have heard as many as ten cases in a day, so that the hon. member will readily appreciate that the arrearages could very easily be overtaken in a period of time shorter than three months. He speaks about the possible negligence of a registrar in arranging for an extension of a stay of proceedings. I think we must assume that the registrar will not be negligent in his duties. While in some cases renewals may be necessary, on the other hand I have had a great many objections from creditors who say they believe the period of three months for a stay of proceedings is too long. On balance therefore, I am inclined to think we have perhaps gone as far as we should, bearing in mind always that the bona fide debtor will not be prejudiced by reason of the fact that this period can be renewed. On the other hand we must be fair to the creditors and not put them to the unnecessary expense of having to go to court where proceedings are taken under this act only for the purpose of delaying the creditor in the application of his remedy where the proposals are such as could not ultimately be entertained by the board. It seems to me that on balance, three months is a reasonable period.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: That was my reason for asking the question. Where a proposal is made and the ninety days expires before further action is taken, and for some reason the application for extension of time is not properly registered and has lapsed, at the expiration of that time would the provincial legislation have full force and afford such protection as would have been afforded had the proposal been before the board? I think it should. The man in such a case is not under the protection of the federal law, and I should imagine he ought to remain under the protection of the provincial law until such time as the full process has been completed.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend is quite correct. But even assuming he did not have the right to resort for his protection to the provincial debt adjustment act, in the case instanced by my hon. friend from Macleod it would still be quite competent for him to go before the court and ask for a stay of proceedings, notwithstanding the fact that the steps to do so had not been taken prior to the expiry of the three months period.

Mr. COOTE: It does seem to me that only in a very few cases would a decision be given by the board of review within ninety days after the farmer had made his proposal. It takes some time after the proposal is first made for the official receiver to notify the creditors and get them to a meeting and get the debtor there, and sometimes they adjourn for a second meeting. The board of review have so many cases on their waiting list that I doubt whether many of them are disposed of within ninety days. If the minister assures us that there is protection through the official receiver applying to the court for an extension, or through provincial legislation, I certainly do not want to labour the point. But I do submit that not many cases passed on by the board of review will be wound up within ninety days of the first proposal.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend need have no anxiety, certainly so far as Alberta is concerned, because we will assume that the three months has elapsed and that no proceeding has been taken. The creditor before he can sue has to go before the provincial debt adjustment board for a permit before he can proceed at all.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: That was my question. Must he? And I understood the minister to say he must.

Mr. RHODES: Furthermore they have a list of all the proposals filed before the official receivers under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I do not understand that last statement of the minister. Do I understand that in the event of a decision from the board of review pending and not yet delivered, and the ninety days granted for stay of proceedings having elapsed, the operation of the provincial debt adjustment board will act on behalf of that man? I do not think so.

Mr. RHODES: If the ninety days period has expired, then before the creditor can sue in the province of Alberta he must go before the provincial debt adjustment board to get leave to bring action, notwithstanding the fact that there may be a proceeding then pending before the board of review under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act.

Mr. IRVINE: But would he not be under the federal act the day after the ninety days had expired? Would not that be the time the federal act would come into force so far as his creditors were concerned?

Mr. RHODES: Yes, so far as his application is concerned, but not so far as a stay of proceedings is concerned, and that is the point we are discussing at the moment. The stay of proceedings operates for only ninety days

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): My understanding is that the moment the farmer places himself under the operation of this act he at once ceases to be a ward—shall we call it?—under the debt adjustment board of the province, or has exhausted his right to be a ward until the procedure under this act has been pursued to its ultimate conclusion.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: That was not my understanding as I followed the legislation in this house and in the province. My understanding was that part I of the Bankruptcy Act came into force in the case of an individual farmer only after the proposal had been confirmed and filed with the courts. Up to that time he could commit no breach of conditions until the proposal had been filed with the court. Until the proposal had been filed with the court and the operation was complete he would still be exempt under part I of the Bankruptcy Act and therefore would be subject to the court procedure of the province in respect to proceedings by creditors. That was my understanding, and I am glad that in large measure it has been confirmed by the minister.

Mr. DAVIES: Mr. Chairman, as one who in the course of the practice of his profession has had considerable experience with this act in Alberta, may I take this opportunity to confirm the views expressed by the Minister of Finance? He has put it correctly. When the ninety days stay of proceedings under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act has lapsed, the debt adjustment board in Alberta still has to issue a permit for proceedings under the provincial act. To my knowledge the representatives of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act in Alberta are closely cooperating with the debt adjustment board officials of the province. I know personally of instances where the space of time having elapsed the debt adjustment board officials first got in touch with the official receiver's office, and upon learning that proceedings had not yet been concluded or that a stay of proceedings had not been extended, refused a permit to issue for proceedings against the debtor.

Mr. BOURASSA: Before this clause carries I should like to say a few words as I did not have the opportunity to speak on the previous clause.

I wish to shed a different light on this measure as well as on the act which is amended by it. I have just found in my letter box a letter from a good farmer in the province of Ontario, in the part adjoining Quebec, who happens to be the creditor of another farmer. He protests strongly against the enlargement of this legislation. As he points out, he has saved a little money by living a frugal life year after year, and he lent a few dollars to some of his neighbours. One of them has spent his money in luxury. He is the proprietor of two automobiles; he has a piano in his house. He refuses to pay his debt, and now he is putting himself under the protection of this legislation. As my correspondent says, "I have three boys whom I have to keep, while that man who is spending his money foolishly has only one boy. If he secures accommodation under this law he will be able to get along with his boy but I will be ruined and my three boys will be on the dole list. Why? Because I have saved for twenty years and because I have raised my family with economy and honesty."

I draw the attention of the house to the trend of all this legislation. I do not know the conditions in the western provinces. I presume that a large number of farmers there are indebted to lending companies. But with us in Quebec and in the part of Ontario adjoining Quebec, a very large number of creditors who will be ruined by this law are farmers, small retired farmers living in villages, who have put by a few hundred or a few thousand dollars—a few thousand, very rarely —which they have lent to their fellow citizens living in the same parish, in the same village, relying upon the old traditions of honesty. I well remember the time when money was lent not only without mortgage but without note; money was lent from hand to hand and was always paid back, because the law of honesty was there, much stronger and more effective than any law that can be passed here or in any legislature. What is happening with this law?—and the tendency is increasing. The honest farmer who finds himself in difficult circumstances can hardly obtain credit. Money lenders, whether private citizens or lending companies, tell him that they have no more confidence in the farming community. They say, "If we lend you our money what will happen next year or two years hence? You will go bankrupt. We therefore refuse to give you credit." On the other hand the dishonest farmer takes advantage of this situation. I am afraid that at the rate we are going, making this tendency so much easier, we are fostering dishonesty among the farmers. We are ruining the credit of honest farmers; and at the same time we bring ruin to a large number of individuals, and a very useful class in our community, people who have worked steadily for twenty or thirty years, educated their families in the old traditions of thrift and honesty, and who have helped in their little sphere of action some of their neighbours, some of their fellow farmers, by lending them money. We are ruining one class financially and the other morally.

I do not want to add any more at this time. I suppose my protest is perfectly useless, as it was against another piece of legislation; because on the eve of an election the temptation, I am afraid, is to look for votes, and to look for votes especially among those people who give their votes according to their interest or their dishonesty. But I protest in the name of the old class of honest, thrifty farmers in my province. I admit that a good deal of extravagance has been going on in the last ten or twenty years, even in Quebec; yet Quebec has preserved more of the old domestic virtues of thrift, honesty, and sparing for old age; and now we are helping to destroy that spirit, we are helping to ruin a class of people who are preserving that spirit. I believe it is wrong economically and socially and for my humble part, although my voice may remain unsupported, I protest against this kind of legislation and against enlarging it all the time, making it easier for the dishonest debtor to cheat his honest creditor.

Mr. RHODES: With the general tenor of what my hon. friend from Labelle has said I find no quarrel, but let me point out to him that he has proceeded to draw a general deduction from one isolated specific case.

Mr. BOURASSA: Not isolated.

Mr. RHODES: It is a truism that no law nor any lack of law will make an honest man out of a dishonest man.

Mr. BOURASSA: I admit that.

Mr. RHODES: This law is designed to take care of the honest farmer who is in difficulties. Now, in the instance referred to by my hon. friend, it will be time enough for the farmer of whom he speaks and with whom I have every sympathy—it is a worthy case—to cry after he is hurt, to use an old and homely phrase. I venture to believe that farmer has not had a hearing or a decision handed down by the board of reviews. If the circumstances are as related by my hon. friend, and I have no reason to question that they are properly related, I venture to say that if a proposal is formulated by the creditor and he eventually goes before the board of review, the good sense of the board of review will refuse to penalize that creditor for the benefit of the thriftless debtor of whom the hon. gentleman has spoken. His case would be strong enough if he would come into this house and say that the man had been injured because of a finding of the board of review. No doubt there have been instances, I know of instances, where dishonest farmers have attempted to defraud their creditors by using the machinery of this act which was intended to be applied only to the honest, needy, deserving farmer who could benefit by its provisions. But notwithstanding that fact we have to look at the picture in the large and see what the act is designed to do, and my hon. friend will be the first to admit that it is designed to deal with a class of farmers of whom I have spoken; and when my hon. friend speaks of our amendments enlarging the act, it does so to the extent of extending the stay of proceedings to ninety as against sixty days. It is a difference in degree and not in kind. So far as I am concerned, my hon. friend must remember that I have been resisting the appeals of my hon. friend from Macleod to have the period extended. I told him I thought we had gone as far as we could in limiting it to ninety days. However, let me say this to my hon. friend from Labelle. If in the operation of this act he should find that it does become subject to abuse in practice in keeping with the fears expressed by the farmer of whom he has spoken, it will be his duty to bring the matter to public attention with a view to having a remedy provided.

Mr. BOURASSA: I thank the minister for his explanation, which I will bring to the attention of my correspondent. I hope it will be effective all through. My hon. friend said that we cannot by law make dishonest people honest. That I quite admit. But we can by law induce honest people to become dishonest, and I am afraid we have done it in many respects. I could point to what has been done in connection with many of our so called social laws adopted since the war. There is no doubt about it in connection with many circumstances arising out of the war, with regard to the adjustment of soldier's claims, the enlargement of the soldiers' pensions legislation and the reversal of the most elementary principle of law in regard to evidence, when we have allowed soldiers to make claims on account of illness which, occurring fifteen years after the war, they attribute to the war itself, forcing the government to prove that it did not originate in the war. I remember, in the previous parliament, giving an instance of horrible frauds committed in that way by some returned soldiers. My remarks are general and go beyond the scope of that clause, as I explained, because I was not here when the first clause was discussed. But I thank the minister again for his explanation and I hope the press at least of Quebec will make it quite clear that in such cases as this the attention of the board of review should be directed to the necessity of protecting the honest people, whether they are creditors or debtors, and not helping the dishonest at the expense of the honest.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I would like to get back for a moment to the question of the relationship of the debt adjustment board of the province to the creditor coming under this act. As I followed the statements of the Minister of Finance and the hon. member for Athabaska regarding a farmer whose case is being reviewed, and indeed upon whose case a decision is pending but has not yet been filed with the court, and where the ninety days' stay of proceedings has elapsed, I am now informed by both these hon. gentlemen that the debt adjustment board of the province would necessitate the creditor going to that board to apply for an order to take court action. Does that imply that the debt adjustment board under the debt adjustment act of the province would then have power irrespective of the decision of the court to prevent the operation of this act in the case of that man? Or if such power does exist at all, is it not simply the fact that the creditor would be taking temporary advantage of some anomaly in the relationship between the two acts; that his action at that time could be merely a perfunctory one and not at all binding; that this law must be binding to its conclusion upon the creditor who goes under it and that the debt adjustment act of the province cannot apply to such a man once he has gone under the operation of the act? Is that correct?

Mr. RHODES: I have only this to add to my original statement in answer to the hon. member for Bow River: Once this act is invoked it continues in operation to its ultimate conclusion when a finding is brought down by the board of review. But let us assume that prior to the finding of the board of review the ninety days' period has elapsed and the stay of proceedings has therefore ceased in favour of the debtor; in that event, if there is no move on the part of the registrar of the board of review on behalf of the debtor to have the stay of proceedings renewed, it would be competent for the creditor to go before the debt adjustment board of Alberta and apply for leave to bring action. But in practice what would happen would be this, that if for no other reason, that would serve to notify the officials under this act that such a proceeding had been taken, and I have no doubt the result would be that the registrar would apply to the court for a renewal of stay of proceedings and would be granted it. I hope that answers my hon. friend's question.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Almost. There is just one point. Is it correct to say that the provincial debt adjustment act could not override the operation of this act once a farmer had placed himself under it?

Mr. RHODES: Quite so. This act takes precedence and overrides entirely the provincial debt adjustment act up to the end of the period excepting only in the instance that I cited.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: In that case the federal act for the time being is in suspense.

Mr. RHODES: Only so far as the stay of proceedings is concerned.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: That is what I mean.

Section 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Board may confirm proposal.

Mr. BUTCHER: With regard to the proposed amendment in section 4, I would like to suggest this to the minister: Would it not be necessary or advisable to make the same change in section 2, subsection 3, and sections 8 and 10 of the original act? The words are "approved by" in each case. Section 2, subsection 3 reads:

> In any case where the affairs of a farmer have been arranged by a proposal approved by the court or confirmed by the board as hereinafter provided—

And so forth. Section 10 reads:

> Whenever a proposal has been approved by the court.

Is it not necessary to change the words "approved by" to "filed in" in those sections also?

Mr. RHODES: Would my hon. friend state that point again? I have not got the full force of it.

Mr. BUTCHER: By the proposed amendment in section 4 of the present bill, the words "filed in" are to be substituted for the words "approved by" in subsection 6 of section 12 of the original act. But in section 2, subsection 3 of the original act, the opening words are:

> In any case where the affairs of a farmer have been arranged by a proposal approved by the court or confirmed by the board as hereinafter provided, part I of the Bankruptcy Act shall notwithstanding section 7 thereof apply to such farmer—

And so on. Should not the words "approved by" in that subsection also be changed to read "filed in"?

Mr. RHODES: I think I have my hon. friend's point. Subsection 3 of section 2 is quite right in its wording in calling for the proposal to be approved by the court. But the section which we are amending has reference to the decision of the board of review, which is a different matter, and in using the words "filed in" we want to make it clear that there is no question of appeal; that the action of the board is final and that the board's decision once it is filed in the court is final.

Mr. BUTCHER: Then with reference to section 10 I would suggest that the minister take the matter into consideration because it seems to me that the words "filed in" should be substituted for the words "approved by" in each case, that is to say in subsection 3 of section 2 and sections 10 and 8 of the original act.

Mr. RHODES: If we had the words "approved by" inserted in clause 4 of the bill, we would open the door for a county court judge to sit in appeal on the decision of a board of review which is presided over by a supreme court judge. That would be an anomaly of itself. But we wish to make it clear that there is no question of appeal from the decision of the board of review. That is final; the matter is closed by filing the decision in the office of the clerk of the county court.

Mr. BUTCHER: But that is exactly what I think will happen under subsection 3 of section 2. I think the words "filed in" should be substituted for the words "approved by" in section 2, subsection 3, of the original act. Perhaps the minister will consider that at his leisure.

Mr. RHODES: I would not for one moment attempt to pit my knowledge of the law, which is meagre, against that of my hon. friend, because as I stated in the house the other day, I have not practised law for twenty-five years and have almost forgoten that at one time I was titularly at least a lawyer. But I have had the Department of Justice go over this bill very carefully. It was intended that the settlements of the official receiver should be approved by the county court, but it was not intended that a decision of the board of review should be subject to approval of the county court. The mere filing of the decision in the office of the clerk of the court was a finality to the proceeding. The two cases are entirely distinct.

Section 5 agreed to.

[Mr. Butcher.]

Mr. COOTE: Before the bill is reported let me say that I have repeatedly urged upon the house the necessity for providing some general act to limit the rate of interest on farm mortgages. I think hon. members will recall that when this act was being passed a year ago I with many other members urged very strongly on the Prime Minister that it was necessary to give to all farmers some protection in regard to interest rates. This legislation I am sure will not benefit more than ten per cent of the farmers. In other words at least ninety per cent will not take advantage of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. Many farmers are still paying interest at the rate of eight and even nine per cent per annum. I still feel very strongly that we should include in this act some provision for reducing rates of interest on all farm mortgages. What I am anxious to do is to prevent a great many farmers who are included in the ninety per cent of which I spoke from being forced into a state of bankruptcy through the payment of too high interest rates. Almost every agricultural country in the world except Canada has passed legislation of this nature, reducing rates of interest on farm debts. Canada should not lag behind in this respect. Anyone who has collected interest at the rate of eight or nine per cent during the last five years has had in almost every case purchasing power greatly in excess of the purchasing power of money at the time the loan was made, so that a reduction in the rate of interest during these latter years would not have been a reduction in the purchasing power of these people.

For the purpose of bringing this matter before the committee I wish to move an amendment to the bill. Before doing so I would draw attention to section 17 of the present act which reads:

> Notwithstanding the provisions of any other statute or law, whenever any rate of interest exceeding seven per centum is stipulated for in any mortgage of farm real estate, if any person liable to pay the mortgage tenders or pays to the person entitled to receive the money, the amount owing on such mortgage and interest to the time of payment, together with three months' further interest in lieu of notice, no interest shall after the expiry of three months' period aforesaid, be chargeable, payable or recoverable in respect of the said mortgage at any rate in excess of five per centum per annum.

The purpose of that, I think, is clear; that if any mortgagor can get the money and tender it in payment to the mortgagee, the mortgagee must accept payment of his principal, or thereafter be content with interest at five per cent per annum. It seems to me that there was very good reason for placing the rate at five per cent per annum; the government felt that five per cent was a fair rate under the circumstances. Of course few farmers have been able to secure the full amount of their mortgage to tender payment of the principal sum so as to get the rate of interest reduced to five per cent. I do not think we should be working much hardship on any person; on the other hand it would be in the interest of the great majority, and we should be following much the same line as has been followed in almost every other country in dealing with farm debts, if we passed legislation effecting a reduction in the rate of interest on farm mortgages. In order to bring the matter properly before the committee I move:

That Bill No. 10, an act to amend The Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, 1934, be amended by adding the following section thereto:—

6. Section seventeen of the said act is amended by adding the following subsections thereto:—

(3) No interest at a rate exceeding five per centum per annum shall be charged, payable or recoverable on any existing mortgage of farm real estate, or agreement covering the sale of farm real estate.

And because I believe that this should be retroactive and should cover the past four years of very low prices I have added another subsection:

(4) Where interest at a rate in excess of five per centum per annum has been paid from and after the first day of January, 1931, on any mortgage or agreement covering the sale of farm real estate, the difference between the rate of five per centum and the amount paid or collected shall be credited on any arrears of interest outstanding, and if there are no arrears, then the difference shall be credited on the principal of the mortgage or agreement.

In support of my amendment asking for a reduction in the rate of interest during the years 1931, 1932 and 1933, may I point out again that the average farm income in Canada, which was approximately $1,600 in 1928 and $1,500 in 1929, fell to $740 in 1931, to $660 in 1932, and in 1933 to $640. Anyone reading these figures will realize that it was much easier for a farmer to pay even ten or twelve per cent in 1928 and 1929 than five per cent in these later years. Because of the very difficult situation in which the farmers have found themselves in the last five years due to the very low prices received for their products, prices over which they had no control, I ask favourable consideration of this amendment by the committee.

Mr. RHODES: I was not in the house last year when section 17 was added to the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, but it will be apparent to any draftsman that it is a section which has no relation whatsoever to that act. I have no doubt that the reason it was placed there was that it was not thought advisable at that stage of the session to introduce a fresh amendment to the Interest Act. But that is where a section of this kind ought to go. However, section 17 is there.

Now, may I point out that the proposed amendment—of which the hon. member for Macleod was good enough to give a copy in advance, for which I thank him—makes a provision which calls for an expenditure of public money. It is no less public money by reason of the fact that it comes from the farm loan board, for the principal comes out of the public exchequer. Therefore his amendment calling as it does for the expenditure of public money, is out of order, and it would be necessary to raise that point. But may I point out to my hon. friend that at the present moment he has a bill before the banking and commerce committee dealing with the rate of interest, and there is no reason why the whole subject should not be comprehensively dealt with there, so that any action taken by the committee on banking and commerce would be uniform. That would deal with the matter as one of interest and not as one affecting this bill, because I submit that it has no bearing whatever on this bill. The compromise of the debts of a farmer has no relation whatsoever to the question of interest, because it is a matter of compromise. Whether the interest is one per cent or twenty-five per cent would make no difference in the adjustment of the debts. Under the circumstances I hope that my hon. friend will not press his amendment but will take the course I have suggested; otherwise I shall have to raise the point of order which I have mentioned.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Whether rightly or wrongly I am not going to say now, of course, but last year by section 17 of this very act the government itself did bring this question of interest within the scope of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. Unfortunately they placed in the act a weapon that was most unworthily used in some cases by unscrupulous persons who alleged, of course, that the government had reduced the interest rate to five per cent. Those who studied the clause realized, of course, that in itself it was practically useless, and I doubt if a single case has been adjudicated under it. The clause provided, as the hon. member for Macleod has pointed out, that where a debtor farmer tendered the payment of all the principal due, all the arrears due and all the interest due plus three months' interest in advance, after the three months had elapsed no rate of interest higher than five per cent could be collected. When you make a statement of that kind to an average farmer audience in western Canada it is greeted with scornful laughter, and quite properly so. The clause is worthless. I congratulate the hon. member for Macleod on endeavouring to introduce into this act the very principle that the government protested it had in mind last year, the general reduction of interest rates of five per cent, in keeping with the action taken in other countries. It is not my purpose to-night to stress the necessity for that; it has been shown again and again in other years as well as this year.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Would the hon. gentleman read section 17?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): It will be read in a moment. I could tell hon. members of men who came to Canada from other countries; I have one in mind at the moment, who came here with some $35,000. He entered into the purchase of land under an agreement of sale; he operated as a scientific farmer, sparing himself neither in physical toil nor in mental effort. He worked twenty-five years without leaving his farm, but at the end of that time it was found that he owed $63,000, half to the Canadian Pacific Railway and half to the Bank of Montreal. Two years ago his life insurance policy, his last realizable asset, was sold, and the proceeds were divided equally between the bank and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. That result, of course, was due in large part to climatic conditions over which neither the debtor nor the creditor had control, but at the same time the ruthlessness of collection by the creditors and the extortionate rate of interest charged in relation to the productivity of the farm had no small bearing on the man's ultimate collapse.

I hold in my hand a statement which I gave the house last year, but which possibly has been forgotten. It is the result of research work carried on by Doctor Win Allen and Doctor Hope of the university of Saskatchewan. After two years of study they found that if the farmers of Saskatchewan had wanted to pay the interest on the farm debt—the interest only—according to their investigation it would have required four-fifths of the entire wheat crop raised and sold in that province. If they had wanted to pay their taxes—with which we are not concerned at the moment—it would have required two-fifths of the total wheat crop raised and sold. So if the farmers of that province had endeavoured to pay interest and taxes alone it would have required one-fifth more wheat than they raised and sold. Exactly similar conditions prevail, varying only slightly in degree, in the three western provinces where grain is the principal source of revenue.

A few days ago the hon. member for Macleod again drew vividly to the attention of the house the collapsed financial condition of agriculture. He must have made it apparent to every hon. member who listened to him that it is impossible for agriculture to continue to pay even five per cent, or certainly more than five per cent. I think he is exceedingly conservative in placing the figure at five per cent; if I had my way I would eliminate all interest from the time this depression commenced, and I would not restore it until we had price levels analogous in some degree with those of 1926. The figures quoted by the hon. member for Macleod are worth putting on Hansard once more. He stated that the total farm income in Canada for the four pre-depression years amounted in round figures to $4,012,000,000. In the four years of the depression that total income was only $1,740,000,000, so there was a decline in income of $2,268,000,000 during that four year period. These figures are significant; they tell a story, more vividly than words, of conditions that must be dealt with by this parliament and that must be recognized by this government. The proposal made by the hon. member for Macleod, even if it were out of order—and I contend it is not—ought to be accepted by the government and introduced as their own measure. If they are not willing to accept it as an amendment from this section of the house let them accept the principle and bring in the amendment themselves.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend from Bow River is too shrewd to have misunderstood my position. I am not dealing with the merits of the interest question at all. I have stated time and again that I should like to see interest rates as low as they can be reasonably made, but the question of interest does not arise in connection with this bill at all; it has no reference to it. The hon. member says section 17 was placed in the bill last year by the government. That is quite true. The only explanation I can offer is that at that stage of the session it was thought perhaps unwise to attempt to amend the Interest Act, but the bill was altogether silent on the question of interest. That would have no bearing upon the operation of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. The settlement is made in the first place by compromise between debtor and creditor, and it does not make any difference whether the rate is ten per cent, seven per cent or two per cent; it is a question of settlement. Then you come to the board of review, who make their own terms with respect to interest. So the question of interest has no bearing on the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act whatever. The government has taken a stand so far as its general policy with respect to interest rates is concerned; we have come to the point where we have received many complaints from savings bank depositors that the rates of interest are too low. That is just an aside. I have told the hon. member for Macleod and I now tell the committee that the question of interest is one that should be dealt with in connection with the Interest Act, and my hon. friend from Macleod now has a bill dealing with the question of interest which is being considered in the banking and commerce committee. I am not trying to evade responsibility, so far as the government are concerned, in dealing with the question of interest on its merits. But having regard to the question of propriety, so far as the committee is concerned there is no question about this amendment being out of order. It is one of the cardinal rules of the house that only at the instance of the crown, by way of message, can a measure be submitted involving the expenditure of public money.

Mr. HANBURY: In what way would that involve an expenditure of public money?

Mr. RHODES: Because the amendment provides not only that there should be a certain fixed rate of interest, but that where more than five per cent has been paid an amount shall be returned to the borrower.

Mr. HANBURY: To the one who holds the mortgage. It may be a private individual it does not necessarily have to be the government.

Mr. RHODES: This will affect mortgages made under the farm loan board.

Mr. HANBURY: But is it not a general provision affecting all mortgages, and not necessarily only farm loan mortgages?

Mr. RHODES: Even so, it will affect the farm loan board.

Mr. HEAPS: Could the minister explain how government money is involved in this transaction?

Mr. RHODES: I have done so often, and I do not know whether I can do it any clearer. All the money which is lent under the farm loan act comes out of the public exchequer, and if the farm loan board has to hand back four years' interest, that money would have to come out of the public treasury.

Mr. IRVINE: I am not quite clear whether we are now discussing the amendment or the point of order. I shall assume however for a moment that we are discussing the amendment. I understand—and if I have the wrong impression I hope the minister will correct me at once—that the legislation of last year called the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, now being amended, had as its objective not only the protection of farmers against what might be described as unfair foreclosures, but also the possible reduction of farmers' debts. If that was the intention of the act then I believe the minister will have great difficulty in excluding a discussion of interest rates, because the debts of a great many farmers consist almost entirely of interest. More than fifty per cent of most debts of long standing is composed of interest which those farmers have been unable to pay. Therefore if we are effectively to enable the farmers to reduce their debts, the most direct way to do it would be reduce the interest rate, the chief cause of a growing debt which cannot be paid. That fact in itself disposes of the minister's objection to the effect that the proper place for the amendment would be as an amendment to the Interest Act. Since the amendment has for its objective the reductions of farmers' debts I suggest it quite properly comes up for consideration at this time.

Under the act which was passed last year of farmer may offer a mortgage company the complete amount of his mortgage, even though it may not be due, and if the mortgage company does not feel inclined to accept the payment the farmer must from that time forward obtain his loan at the rate of five per cent. That is all very well, but the principle involved is that a man able to pay on his mortgage can get it at five per cent, whereas the poor devil who can pay nothing must continue to pay seven or eight per cent or, in some cases, ten per cent. Surely there is no common sense in an arrangement like that. Certainly when passing legislation such as that now before us we ought to be fair enough to arrange it so that the man who has very little will receive favours equal to those received by the man who has more.

Mr. COOTE: The hon. member for Bow River thinks that when I placed the rate of interest at five per cent I set it too high. I believe I should plead guilty to that charge. I know such a rate would prove to be a heavy burden upon the farmer, but the rate of five per cent is mentioned in section 17 of the act passed last year.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Read the section.

Mr. COOTE: I read it before, but I shall do so again:

Notwithstanding the provisions of any other statute or law whenever any rate of interest exceeding seven per centum is stipulated for in any mortgage of farm real estate, if any person liable to pay the mortgage tenders or pays to the person entitled to receive the money the amount owing on such mortgage and interest to the time of payment, together with three months' further interest in lieu of notice, no interest shall after the expiry of three months' period aforesaid be chargeable, payable or recoverable in respect of the said mortgage at any rate in excess of five per centum per annum.

2. The provisions of this section shall apply in the case of any mortgage heretofore or hereafter made and whether or not the principal sum is due and owing at the time such tender or payment is made.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Who moved that last year?

Mr. COOTE: This is a section of the bill introduced by the government at the last session. When the matter was under discussion last year I believe hon. members will recall that we spent the greater part of a day trying to persuade the Prime Minister to change this section so that the rate of interest on any mortgage should not be more than five per cent per annum from and after the passing of the act. I still feel strongly that that should have been done. I believe, further, that the preamble to the act introduced last year would justify our including some provision for a general cut in the rate of interest on farm mortgages. The act passed last year was to deal with one thing only, namely farm debts. The first half of the preamble reads as follows:

Whereas in view of the depressed state of agriculture the present indebtedness of many farmers is beyond their capacity to pay; and whereas it is essential in the interest of the dominion to retain the farmers on the land as efficient producers....

It seems to me one of the things we need to-day is a general reduction in interest rates, so that those farmers may be kept on the land as efficient producers. Interest rates of eight and nine per cent will in the course of the next four or five years, if we continue to receive low prices, drive into bankruptcy a number of farmers who are still solvent. Present rates of interest are too high and are more burdensome to the farmers than the amount of the debt. We could reduce the amount of the debts by one-quarter, without touching the rate of interest, and not give the farmer as much relief as we could give by reducing the rate of interest. I do not believe we would be working a great hardship on anybody. We would not be cancelling any savings; we would simply be reducing to five per cent the rate of interest to be collected, and in most cases the five per cent would have as great purchasing power as the eight per cent charged in 1929.

Then the minister raised the further point, namely that in effect the amendment would call for the payment of moneys out of the public funds. Perhaps I am not learned in the law—I will admit that—but it does seem to me that the minister's observations could not apply to the amendment. It simply states:

Where interest at a rate in excess of five per centum per annum has been paid from and after the first day of January, 1931,—

And since that time we have had these extremely low prices—

—on any mortgage or agreement covering the sale of farm real estate, the difference between the rate of five per centum and the amount paid or collected shall be credited on any arrears of interest outstanding, and if there are no arrears then the difference shall be credited on the principal of the mortgage or agreement.

Therefore it would not be necessary to return any money to the mortgagor. The amendment simply means that money which has been paid and credited to interest would in some cases have to be credited as payment on principal. It seems to me that in that case there is no provision calling for an expenditure of public money. I may be wrong, but at any rate that is my present view, and I hope the chairman of the committee will hold a similar one.

Then, in regard to the other point, I admit quite frankly that the matter of interest rates is now before the banking committee in the form of a bill which I introduced, but that deals with interest rates in general. In none of its provisions does it relate specifically to the rate of interest on farm mortgages. It seems to me therefore that this committee would be in order to deal with the rate of interest on farm mortgages, and that we may properly do so when we are considering the bill having for its purpose the amending of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. I trust that upon reflection the minister will see the reasonableness of my suggestions.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend from Macleod seems to think there is a distinction between giving up several hundreds of thousands of dollars of money on the one hand, and paying it on the other. Well, there may be, but I do not see it myself. Here is the effect of this amendment of my hon. friend, in its actual concrete results. I am not stressing the point of order which I think is very clear. The farm loan board of Ontario has out to-day something like $55,000,000, the Saskatchewan board has out $18,000,000; the Alberta board has out some $12,000,000, and at the present moment the Saskatchewan board is lending money to farmers at six and a half per cent. If my hon. friend's amendment were carried it would mean that the farm loan board of Saskatchewan would have to hand back one and a half per cent of all their mortgage money covering the last five years, and in the last three years alone it would run into many hundreds of thousands of dollars. So it is idle for my hon. friend to say that this would not work a hardship. It certainly would, but I make that observation in reply to the statement of my hon. friend who seems to think that in a matter of dealing with a few hundreds of thousands of dollars or a few millions it would not do any harm at all, that they do not pay it—they just credit it. Yet the fact remains that you are out just that much money, whether you pay it or credit it. I hope the committee in its judgment will be disposed to reject this amendment, if only on the ground of equity and justice. But I submit, Mr. Chairman, that under the rules of the house it is not competent for my hon. friend to move it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): Does the hon. member press his amendment?

Mr. COOTE: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I would like to have your ruling whether it is in order or not.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I just want to say one word, Mr. Chairman. I am in absolute sympathy with the amendment moved by the hon. member for Macleod, and ordinarily speaking I would support it if it were moved by the government. On the other hand, I must agree with the Minister of Finance that the amendment is out of order as it either inferentially or directly affects the revenues of the crown.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If it is ruled out of order, the fact that it is out of order does not permit the government to escape responsibility.

Mr. RHODES: We are not trying to.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The matter is now on its doorstep, and I am hoping that before this session is closed the government will have accepted the idea proposed to-day by my hon. friend from Macleod.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Gagnon): My ruling is that for the reasons given by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) and the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) the amendment is out of order as being moved upon the initiative of a private member instead of a minister of the crown, according to May, page 511, as quoted in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms at page 165, paragraph 555.

Mr. COOTE: Mr. Chairman, I regret that the amendment has been found to be out of order, but if I have your permission, sir, I wonder if I might move the first part of it now as an amendment to the bill. It occurs to me that if the second part of the amendment is out of order perhaps the first part is in order. Therefore I would move that section 17 of the act be amended by adding the following subsection thereto:

> No interest at a rate exceeding five per centum per annum shall be charged, payable or recoverable on any existing mortgage of farm real estate or agreement covering the sale of farm real estate.

The committee will see that I have left off that section to which objection has been taken on the ground that it would necessitate the expenditure of public money. I still feel that this is a matter which we might very well deal with; as a matter of fact I think we should deal with it now that we are considering the question of farm debts. I therefore move this amendment, Mr. Chairman, and hope that it will be accepted.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I should like to say a word in support of this amendment. I frankly confess that in spite of having full sympathy with the amendment previously proposed by the hon. member for Macleod I kept quiet because even before the Minister of Finance had spoken I was convinced that it was out of order because of its application to loans made by public bodies. But I do not think that objection applies to the amendment that has just been proposed. It might be considered under two aspects, and I shall not dwell upon either.

First there is the question of the merits of the case itself; that is, the relation of that reduced interest rate to farm prices and farm income and farm purchasing power. That has been so well argued that I shall not deal with it at all. But may I point out this one fact. Such action would perhaps do more to safeguard the creditors and make many doubtful debts sound and payable than any other action that could be taken. It has been pointed out before that one of the chief factors in increasing the risk in lending money, the risk of non payment, is the fact that in many if not in most cases the rate of interest is higher than can be earned by the money. To reduce that rate to a more reasonable point would go further than almost anything else could go in safeguarding the ultimate rights of the creditor and making possible his ultimate repayment.

The point has been raised, however—the minister has not discussed the merits of the question—as to the relation of this question to the present bill now under discussion. It has been suggested by the minister that this is not the proper place to deal with such a subject, but that it should be dealt with under the general Interest Act. Well, we are ruled largely by precedent in this house, and action taken at one time unchallenged and passing into law becomes a precedent which governs the application of that principle for the future. To my mind when the government last year introduced the principle of interest regulation in relation to this act, it was not done by accident; it was not done haphazard; it was not merely attached without any possible correlation; it formed a very definite part of the whole plan. It seems to me that such an amendment could find no better place than in an act the purpose of which is to reduce debt and to reduce interest and to bring debt and interest within the payable range of the farmer. I shall not stress that point, which is appreciated I am sure by every hon. member. I only hope the government will look favourably upon this amendment. Lacking the assurances that general and drastic action will be taken in respect of the Interest Act itself, I do hope that the government and this committee will consider favourably the application of this principle to the particular type of debt with which we are dealing under this act, mortgage debts owed by farmers.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Again on a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I understand that the Chair ruled that the entire amendment moved by the hon. member for Macleod was out of order. As such, both subsections 3 and 4 fall by the same ruling of the Chair. Do I understand that any hon. member has moved a new amendment? If no new amendment has been moved, I submit, Mr. Chairman, that your ruling places out of order all the subsections of the previous amendment. On the other hand, if a new amendment has been submitted to the Chair I would with respect submit that subsection 3 by itself is in order, reading:

> No interest at a rate exceeding five per centum per annum shall be charged, payable or recoverable on any existing mortgage of farm real estate or agreement covering the sale of farm real estate.

I do not think that that does directly, although it might inferentially, affect the revenues of the crown in the years to come. But I submit that unless some other member has moved a new amendment, the entire amendment that was originally moved by the hon. member for Macleod has fallen by the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. RHODES: If I may be permitted, it was intended that the committee should rise at nine thirty. Before moving that the committee rise I might say this. I think my hon. friend has in mind the well established rule that if an amendment is partly bad it is all bad. Otherwise what would happen is that if hon. gentlemen moved an amendment and it were ruled out of order they might keep picking at it until they found something that was in order. However, I am not now dealing with the merits of the question. The government assumes full responsibility; we have to take a good deal of responsibility and a little more will not help us or hurt us one particle. I move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Gagnon in the chair.

Miscellaneous services relating to navigation and shipping $43,572.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What is the reason for the reduction?

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): During the last fiscal year we incurred a special expenditure for the removal of some derelicts. That expense will not have to be incurred this year.

Mr. REID: What are the miscellaneous services here mentioned?

Mr. DURANLEAU: This includes necessary provision for examination of masters and mates, in the sum of $14,612; navigation schools, $5,960; temporary relief to distressed seamen, $2,500; investigation into wrecks, $5,000; registration of shipping, $2,000; removal of obstructions in navigable waters, $9,500; inspection of live stock shipments, $4,000.

Mr. REID: Has the minister given further consideration to the proposal to inaugurate schools for seamen in other parts of the country? Last year he gave us a list of schools and they were mostly in the eastern provinces. We appealed to him then to give consideration to other ports, especially on the Pacific coast.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not think we have increased the number of schools.

Mr. REID: How many are there?

Mr. DURANLEAU: We have schools at Halifax, Yarmouth, St. John, New Brunswick, Quebec and Prince Rupert. We also give a grant to the navigation school in Queens university, amounting to $500. These are the same schools we had previously.

Mr. REID: Has the minister received any appeals from Vancouver and New Westminster for schools?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I suppose there were, but during the depression we did not think we ought to increase expenses. It may be that in the future we shall do so.

Item agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

Salaries, $402,692; contingencies, $45,948.

Mr. REID: I wish to bring to the attention of the minister certain things that are happening in connection with the unemployment camps under the jurisdiction of the Department of National Defence. Last year when this subject was under discussion I called the attention of the then minister to certain matters in connection with supplies to the camps in British Columbia, and to-night I want to refer particularly to the two in my constituency at White Rock. Last year I made an appeal with regard to the purchasing of supplies for these camps, pointing out that when the camps were under the jurisdiction of the provincial government that government had a policy of purchasing supplies from farmers round about. They would purchase fresh milk, fresh vegetables, potatoes, beef, pork, and so forth, paying the prevailing wholesale prices. After the camps came under the jurisdiction of the dominion government that policy was changed and the supplies were purchaser by tender or contract from wholesale firms in Vancouver. I pointed out last year that an injustice was being done the farmers in that the government was paying three or four prices for the goods they were purchasing from the wholesalers, and the then minister informed me that if the farmers would club together or if an organization of them would submit prices to the government they would be taken into consideration, but that under the circumstances it was deemed in the best interests to purchase supplies for the camps from wholesalers. I pointed out, however, that it was difficult to carry this out. This year I made it my business to pay a visit to those camps. Last year I had paid one or two visits to them, but just prior to leaving for Ottawa I paid another to see what was being done in the matter of supplies. One of the first things I examined there was potatoes and other vegetables. I have brought along with me to show the committee a sample of the potatoes they had in those camps, and am sorry the Minister of Agriculture is not in his seat because I think the exhibit of potatoes I have on my desk is well worthy of his investigation. The farmers in the fall of last year were unable to sell their potatoes in any quantity. First-class grade 1 potatoes, were being sold for $5 a ton landed in the city of Vancouver. As for second grade potatoes, there was practically no sale for them, but if any were sold, the most any farmer received was $3.75 a ton. I was very much surprised when I visited the camp to find out that the government was purchasing potatoes from a firm by the name of F. R. Stewart. I may say to the committee that is one firm which should be investigated, because it is part and parcel, I believe, of a United States combine that is operating on the Pacific coast and squeezing out the life-blood of the farmer. I was greatly surprised to find that the government was paying $24 a ton for potatoes a sample of which I now hold in my hand and which I am going to send across to the minister, because such stuff at the price is a positive disgrace. I took from the camp a sample, namely, these three potatoes which I am now passing across the floor; I took them into Vancouver and placed them before one of the dominion government inspectors. He, believing that I had a few tons to sell, said, "Mr. Reid, those potatoes are not worth much; you could not sell them at this time." I replied, "Supposing I were selling them and someone wanted to buy them; what would they pay me?" He said, "You would probably get $3.50 or $3.75 a ton landed in Vancouver." I said that I was much obliged for the information. The potatoes were grade 2, or perhaps grade 3, and that is what the dominion government is paying $24 a ton for. One farmer who lived in the vicinity, on hearing that the camp was out of potatoes, went to the camp foreman and asked if he could deliver a few tons. The foreman said, "Well I am very sorry, but you will have to take the matter up with the purchasing agent." The purchasing agent in turn said, "Well, F. R. Stewart is supplying the camp with potatoes." So this farmer telephoned Mr. F. R. Stewart, who said to him, "Well, do not send the potatoes to the camp; bring them in here and if we can take them we will take them from you." Mr. Stewart took a few tons for which I believe he paid the farmer $5 a ton landed in Vancouver, and this firm in turn took the potatoes out to the same district and charged the government $24 a ton for them. I think I am right in drawing this matter to the attention of the committee. Last year also I drew to the attention of the committee and the former minister what was happening in regard to the purchase of supplies.

A similar situation prevails with regard to milk. They are purchasing tinned milk when they are right in a district where fresh milk is easily procurable. I understand they are paying about $12 a ton for vegetables when all the farmer was getting was about $4 a ton for carrots, $6 a ton for turnips and about $9 a ton for cabbage, which is the highest priced vegetable there. But these vegetables are all taken out of the district where the camp is, trucked eighteen to twenty miles into Vancouver, and then taken right out again to the camp. I would not feel so strongly about this were it not for the fact that I had already appealed to the government in regard to this sort of thing. It is high time that we had a number of hanging posts throughout the country, because any man who takes advantage of the people when such suffering is going on should be drastically dealt with. I can now understand the feeling that prevailed in days gone by when they hanged the sheep stealers.

I also complained last year, not publicly in the house but otherwise, regarding a firm that got a contract for supplying tobacco to the camp. The men there by the way are receiving between $5 and $6 a month and all their clothing, and I think I am correct in saying that they are allowed one and one-quarter cents a day for tobacco. The firm that got the contract for tobacco last year got it I believe at a price of forty-five cents a pound, and the local firm in my city complained to me that the Imperial Tobacco Company had undercut everyone else and obtained the contract at a price away below cost of production. The men in the camp receive one and one-quarter cents, so they got one and one-quarter cents worth of tobacco a day, and the price then was forty-five cents a pound. But I was greatly surprised when I visited the camp to find out that by some juggling the price had been jacked up quite a bit without any of the other firms being given a chance to bid again. The result was that the men in the camp were of course getting less tobacco than before. It is high time that a thorough investigation was made into the matter of purchasing supplies in those camps.

It was stated in the provincial house—I have not the exact facts before me, but I have the information on the authority of engineers who have looked into the matter—that the purchase of all clothing and the total overhead expenditure coupled with the 5 to 6 dollars a month given to the men is costing the government in the neighbourhood of from $30 to $40 a month to maintain each single man in those camps. That statement was made in all seriousness in the provincial house by those who have investigated the matter, although the figure they gave was a little higher than the one I am now submitting. I got this figure independently before I came to Ottawa. When one looks over the long list of stuff which is supplied to these men and realizes the nature of the firms that are supplying it, if they are supplying it along the same line as that firm is doing with regard to potatoes, I can well understand that the cost to the country would be high to maintain those single men in the unemployment camps. Those matters are very serious and, as I say, this is not the first time I have drawn them to the attention of the Minister of National Defence.

I am not at all sure whether the single unemployed transient comes under the minister's department or under the Minister of Labour, but I might as well complete the story that I have, because this is affecting all the municipalities and cities in British Columbia; and the situation is becoming very much worse due to the actions of and a ruling that was made under the Department of National Defence. Rules were made regarding transient men, but a new rule was issued last fall I understand whereby men must be physically one hundred per cent perfect before they are taken into the camps. I have the case of two brothers who came I believe from Alberta; they were transients of course coming from one province to the other and were looking for work. When they arrived in Vancouver they were told that the first thing they would have to do would be to go before a doctor to be tested before they went to those camps. The two of them went before a doctor. One of them was pronounced one hundred per cent perfect, but the doctor said that the other had certain imperfections in his teeth and he was denied access to the unemployment camp. The relief officers who have been handling the affairs for the cities and municipalities complain very bitterly about the number of men who are coming from other provinces and who must first undergo a medical examination before being accepted in the camp. It seems strange the men must be one hundred per cent or thereabouts before being accepted in these camps, and that those who are not are simply thrown on the street. Were it not for social organizations and the charity of the cities and of the provincial government, it is hard to say just what might happen to those single transients who are moving from one province to another. This movement has been the cause of a great burden on the various cities and the government of British Columbia. They have come into that province by the thousands. I was at the boundary last fall when a Ford car with a family of eleven in it was on its way to British Columbia, and these people were not there long until they were on relief. The youngest of that family was aged nine. I have seen many schoolboys piled into a car but I never knew of as many in a Ford as on that occasion. Then we have people having their fares paid to British Columbia; I think that practice should be brought to the attention of the government. Many of these people have come into the province and some have been placed in the camps. I have under my hand an affidavit as to the fares of two being paid by the city of Winnipeg to British Columbia. That is one of the most despicable practices that is going on at this time; they are just trafficking in human life. If they find that people have a notion of going somewhere they say, "We will gladly pay your fare." I do not know how many have been sent east, but my guess is that the majority have gone west on account of our more equable climate. We knew this practice was being carried on by many cities, but this was the first person we had who would make an affidavit. The others were rather scared, but this one in Surrey made affidavit that the city of Winnipeg gave them their fare to British Columbia. They soon become a charge on the municipality. I think these matters should be brought to the attention of the government. But I want to stress particularly these matters which come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of National Defence, with regard to supplies and tobacco and the inspection of the men before they are taken into the camps. I brought this up last year but was told: "Oh well, we would rather deal with a firm that can supply us for two or three months than with individual farmers." It is no wonder the men in those camps are discontented and have lost heart, because every man there knew that the government was paying $24 a ton for potatoes when farmers in the district could not sell them. They knew that the government was paying a high price to the wholesaler for vegetables and other supplies, and I suppose they must have said to themselves: What is the use of our doing anything when the government allows this graft to go on? I appeal to the minister to have this practice stopped, and go back to the former method of purchasing fresh milk and other supplies from the farmers and give them some benefit. I did not hear many complaints when the provincial government was purchasing supplies direct from the farmers. It seems idiotic to have them trucked in to the wholesaler at Vancouver and then for that wholesaler to truck them back at a price that I say should not be allowed him.

Mr. MUNN: I also have a little story to tell in regard to the relief camps in my riding. I have wondered many times how long the present system will be carried on. I have made the statement in British Columbia and this house, and I am going to make it again, that the way those camps are conducted is a disgrace to the people of Canada and an insult to the majority of the boys housed in them. They would not be there if they could get a job; it is not that they are looking for something easy. After last session I made investigations—not by sitting in my office in an arm chair; I visited the camps and talked to the boys. Plenty of them are ablebodied fellows; all they needed was a square deal to get some results. On July 25 last I wrote to the then Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland). I would like to place on Hansard my letter and the minister's reply:

Dear Mr. Sutherland:

In my federal riding of Vancouver North you have three relief camps under your department. One is located at Squamish, one located at Halfmoon bay and the other at Pender harbour.

These camps are favourably located for having some really worth while work done on the roads, but under the present system of 20 cents per day, they will never finish the job they are working at.

The road from Squamish to Britannia, about seven miles, would be wonderful value to the Squamish valley, where there are a lot of settlers and they have no market except by railway or steamship. If this piece of road from Squamish to Britannia was finished, it would give the farmers and settlers in the Squamish valley access to the mine at Britannia, where they have a mine in operation employing on the average 1,000 men, and all their supplies shipped in by water. So I think you can see at a glance it would be a job worth while if this road could be finished. May say that Britannia mines have ore in sight for many years. This alone would justify the building of the road.

There is a highway from Gibsons landing, to Pender harbour all completed except about two miles, which is located between the Pender harbour camp and the Halfmoon bay camp. If this were completed it would be of wonderful service to the travelling public.

The present system to me is an insult to humanity. I visited the camps and there are plenty of able-bodied men who would be able to build these two connecting links and open up these roads in a short time, provided they were given a reasonable deal.

My suggestion would be that you make an exception of these three camps and pay the minimum wage, which would be 40 cents per hour, work them say five hours a day, and five days per week, charge them 60 cents per day for board and let them pay for their own clothing.

I can assure you if this were put into effect there would be a different atmosphere, everybody would be satisfied, and you would create some work which would be of lasting benefit.

Might say they have accommodation at Squamish for about 130 men. The other two camps can handle fifty or sixty men, which would be enough for their smaller job.

I have been in the construction business all my life and I know whereof I speak, and if you could adopt the suggestion as outlined, you would get results and there would be three relief camps in British Columbia being paid a reasonable wage and I will guarantee you will get good results.

I hope you will give this your prompt and careful attention.

The minister replied on July 31, saying:

Dear Mr. Munn,—

I thank you for your letter of July 25 regarding the camps which our department is maintaining in your riding.

It would be impossible to have one system of organization in connection with certain camps and not in others. I realize fully the difficulties existing at the present time. Please be assured that your letter will be given every consideration.

[Mr. Munn.]

I have had no further word, and the camps are still there. In those three camps to-day I think there are between three and four hundred men. They have caused a good deal of trouble, and it is not surprising that there should be dissatisfaction; they get twenty cents a day and indifferent board. and the hon. member for New Westminster has told about the tobacco and other luxuries that they have to buy with that twenty cents a day. I protest very emphatically against that system. The government should change it and there should be a clean-up in those relief camps without any further delay. It is a disgrace to the people of British Columbia and of Canada and an insult to the boys housed in them.

Mr. MacINNIS: I wish to add a little to what has been said by the two hon. members who have preceded me. Living as I do in the city of Vancouver I have been in touch with men from the unemployment camps during the last two or three years. Instead of conditions in the camps improving, as they should if the department administering them would benefit by experience, they are getting worse and worse. About the Christmas season of last year some seven or eight hundred of the men left the camps and came to Vancouver. In one instance at least their transportation from the camp to the city was paid; the men from the other camps came on their own. This became quite a problem in the city of Vancouver; they had their own relief troubles and could not offer to look after this additional burden. However, they could not very well turn down the men because to do so without having some agency to provide for them would be rather a serious thing for the city. Some members of the council of social agencies took up the case on behalf of the men and arranged for meals and beds for a few days, until such time as they could get in touch with the provincial government and have them approach the federal government in the matter. I was advised of the situation very early in the proceedings, and with several others I interested myself on behalf of the men. We found it very difficult to get anything done. However, after coming here to Ottawa we found why that was so: the reason was that the attorney general of British Columbia had been advised by the Prime Minister of Canada that no provision whatever should be made for the men but that they should be forced through starvation to go back to the camps, regardless of what the conditions in the camps were.

One of the things for which the men were asking was an investigation into camp conditions. It seems to me that even though these men are on relief they should not lose all their rights of citizenship. They are on reilef through no fault of their own; it is the fault of society, and that being the case I believe when they make repeated complaints those complaints should be investigated. We took the matter up with the city council of Vancouver; we took with us a delegation of the men to state their own case to the civic authorities. The men did not say conditions were bad in all camps; at least they said some camps were worse than others. I was going to say some were better than others, but I think I should put it the other way about. I am not saying whether or not this is true, but true or not I think it is sufficient basis for an investigation. One of the men told us that in his camp conditions were fairly good. They had a good cook, who was feeding them fairly well. But after some little time the superintendent came around and told the cook that he was exceeding the per capita allowance, and that the food would have to be cut down. Evidently the cook was a fairly decent individual; he refused to cut down the food. He said, "I cannot feed the men on less than I am using now. I am careful, but I turn back cheap food, poor or tainted meat and poor vegetables that come to the camp. I cannot do better than I am doing." Well the superintendent, or whoever it was, said, "You will have to do better." The cook replied, "I cannot do it," and he threw off his apron and said, "Get somebody else." Somebody else took over the job, but evidently whatever this man was he was not a cook. After he had been there a few days the men found that there was less sugar on the table than had been usual. After a few more days the sugar disappeared altogether. Then a little later the dried fruits disappeared also, and the men were wondering what was wrong. For a time the flunkies who cleaned up the camp at night were given tea and toast after they had cleaned out the buildings, but this also was discontinued; they were turned out as soon as their work was finished and the doors of the cookhouse were locked. The men knew there was something wrong and they began to make investigations of their own. One of the men came into the camp one morning and said, "I have found it, boys. They have a still here; they are making home brew. That is where our prunes, our figs and our sugar have been going." The home brew was being made in the fire buckets.

Mr. TOTZKE: Did the men get their share of it?

Mr. MacINNIS: No, it was all saved for the higher ups. The men went to the foreman of the camp; they showed him the mash and said, "What are you going to do about it?" "Well," he said, "we will have to call in the provincial police." They called in the provincial police and showed them this mash; the police took the pails and dumped it out. The men said, "What are you going to do? Are you not going to prosecute somebody?" The police replied, "Well, there is no evidence." This may or may not be true, but that statement was made before the council and mayor of the city of Vancouver; in my opinion it should have been investigated but there has been no investigation. After considerable negotiation better counsel prevailed; the authorities did not accept the dictum of the Prime Minister that nothing should be done. On the promise that an effort would be made to get an investigation into their complaints, the men went back to camp quietly.

On Friday of last week I was in the city of Kingston, where I addressed a meeting which was attended by quite a number of men from one of the relief camps, and as usual these men had a number of complaints. The hon. member for New Westminster referred to the potatoes in one of the British Columbia camps. If my information is correct British Columbia camps are not the only ones where they have poor potatoes. The man who spoke to me said you could take the potatoes that were put on the table at that camp and if you squeezed them they would squirt water like a syringe. He also said that you could scrape the mould off the meat with a knife. In my opinion these are statements that the government cannot afford to have broadcast without investigation. A young fellow from a camp near Toronto told me they were fed sour potatoes in that camp. He complained to the person in charge, and that person told him he was an agitator and that if there was any more of it he would have to get out. As soon as a man makes a complaint in a camp he is an agitator. In my opinion the people of this country ought to thank God that these men have enough manhood to complain, and I think we ought to take some notice of their complaints. The men themselves admit, of course, that there are agitators in the camps, but they say that every man who makes a complaint is not an agitator. They say that the camps are not the place for the men who are habitual agitators. Possibly the men are sick, either mentally or physically, and should not be in the camps. I suppose those camps cannot be abolished immediately, but surely we are not going to have them from now on. Young men reaching the age of twenty-one years are entering the camps, and old men are dropping out. Any government which does not clean up this situation has failed, I do not care what else it has done, and I would say that the sooner the government gets busy and tries to do something the better it will be for the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. MITCHELL: I have another point in mind, and it has to do with men who suffer accidents while in relief camps. In Ontario there is a workmen's compensation board, but men in camps who suffer accidents do not come within the jurisdiction of that board. Injuries suffered by civilians in the employ of the federal government are dealt with under legislation for government employees' compensation, and the government should consider action which would protect men who are injured in unemployment camps. I have in mind a young man who lost four fingers while operating a circular saw. I need not tell the government about the serious disability under which that young man will have to labour for the rest of his life. Under present regulations the person in question cannot be compensated, because he is working in the camp at Kingston which has in hand a project in connection with a college. Could the minister tell us whether this matter of compensation is being investigated? The family of the boy have seen me, because naturally they have had some cause for worry. Undoubtedly in after life due to the loss of his fingers he will be working under a disadvantage, and because of that handicap I believe the government should make some provision for him. Certainly something should be done in the province in which they have the best workmen's compensation legislation in the world. Could the minister give hon. members some assurance that machinery will be set in motion whereby these young men who have suffered accidents and are unable to follow their normal work will receive compensation equal to what they would have received had they been in private industry?

Mr. STIRLING: Let me hasten to assure the hon. member for East Hamilton that the matter to which he has referred is being considered, and an arrangement has been arrived at between the departments of justice, labour and national defence with regard to the adjudication which shall be given in cases of accidents within camps. Probably the settlement will be along the lines of compensation offered under workmen's compensation legislation in the provinces. I need hardly say that the statements made by the hon. members for New Westminster, Vancouver North and Vancouver South will be most carefully investigated. Some of the representations the department has already heard; some have already been investigated, and no evidence has been found to justify them.

The committee will recall that the Department of National Defence comes into the picture because it has certain officials scattered throughout the dominion capable of taking over the work of overseeing camps. The provincial government approached the federal government requesting assistance in the handling of the relief problem, and as a result of agreements with each of the provinces the dominion government made it its business to look after the single homeless unemployed men. These men were placed in existing camps taken over from the provinces or in new camps built by the Department of National Defence. The men were given sustenance, fuel, shelter, and an allowance of tobacco in weight but not in price, as the hon. member has said. Work was provided for them under conditions which were considered reasonable. I have had many opportunities to visit the camps in southern British Columbia. I visited them during the last summer and fall, and the summer and fall prior to that. I have taken meals in them and have talked with the men; I have observed the work they were doing and have come to the conclusion that the camps—every one of them—bore a favourable relation to the camps in which I myself had worked in earlier years. The food was excellent, the conditions for sleeping were excellent, recreation facilities were good, and for men who unfortunately for the time were unable to find gainful occupation I would say they lived under reasonably happy surroundings. We must remember the dominion government comes into the matter simply to assist the provinces. Our work is one of assistance, not one of substitution of the task devolving upon the provincial governments.

The hon. member for New Westminster has raised the difficult problem of supplying the camps with the various kinds of foods. Obviously from the point of view of the taxpayer it is desirable and necessary that costs of camps be kept down to a reasonable minimum. When the average for all camps throughout Canada is struck it will be found that they are being run at an extremely low figure, and yet the balanced ration offered in each camp from the Atlantic to the Pacific is such that I personally could not complain. In my visits to the camps of which no notice had been given, I was handed meals which were most satisfactory in quantity and excellent in quality. I believe that from the point of view of food the men in the camps have very little to grumble about. The question of supplies by contract is one which offers some difficulty. There is no doubt whatever that the farmers in my constituency would like to be in a position to supply more beef, vegetables and other requirements than so far they have been allowed to supply, due to the system of contracting. Speaking more particularly about beef may I say that hon. members will undoubtedly realize the difficulty with which superintendents are faced when they attempt to arrange the supply of beef, especially in hot weather. Suppose we have a camp of one hundred men which requires a certain quantity of beef so many times a week. Farmers in the neighbourhood may have beasts to kill, but it does not follow that they are in a position definitely to guarantee that on a certain Wednesday they will be able to supply the camp with so many pounds of fresh beef. On the other hand, where you have firms who buy from the farmers, they have their own refrigerator arrangements and can definitely undertake to supply on such and such a day of the week so many pounds of beef for that camp. That is a means of getting over the difficulty which exists in endeavouring to buy comparatively small quantites of beef on certain days of the week.

The hon. member for Vancouver South has raised the question of the difficulties which occurred in the British Columbia camps in December. I think perhaps that situation has been adequately ventilated. The main point he makes is that investigation by a committee has so far been refused. The reason for that refusal is this: At any camp in Canada it is possible for a man having an objection to lay that objection before the foreman. If he is not satisfied with the reception he gets from the foreman he can take it to the superintendent of that group of camps.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The evidence is very much the other way.

Mr. STIRLING: If he is not satisfied with the reception he receives from the superintendent he can take it to the officer of that district. In the case of British Columbia, however, remembering that the dominion government is in this picture to help the province by agreement on terms laid down, the provincial government has been requested to send its representative into any or all of the camps and make up its own mind whether there is room for an investigation or not. So far as my knowledge goes, that investigation has not so far taken place. But the view taken by the department undoubtedly is that while we welcome visits of individuals, responsible men or ordinary citizens, we are not prepared to receive committees which will go in and investigate conditions and make their reports to we don't know whom.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The mere existence of these camps indicates a collapse in the system of which the members of this house should take cognizance. To say that in a system of society in which the potential productivity is almost beyond computation we have to shove men away in this sort of regimentation certainly does not imply any praise of the mentality of those who are the governing force in the country. It may be it is the only course they are able to follow at the present time and under the present system, but the time has surely come when in the light of conditions they must reconsider the whole position of camps of this kind and determine definitely whether or not they must accept as permanent a condition of unemployment involving the continuance of this sort of thing if the present system continues.

But I rose not to make any generalized statement on this question, as that can await a more appropriate moment, but rather to draw the minister's attention to some complaints that have come to me. While I cannot vouch for their accuracy I feel it incumbent on me to pass them on to the minister and to his department.

It is alleged that men are drifting into the cities from these camps as they are being ejected, devoid of means, poorly clad, and with no prospect of even obtaining a meal, refused by the dominion, provincial and civic authorities; and that at the moment of the writing of this document to me, namely, January 25 last, twenty-eight men are being fed in the city of Calgary from contributions gathered from relief recipients in the city itself.

Mr. STIRLING: Would my hon. friend say what camps they came from?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I can tell the minister one in any case before we get through. This is regarded as a callous attitude on the part of the authorities. Again I say the action may be justified. I leave it to the minister to investigate the facts.

With regard to camp No. 3, project 155, Seebe, it is alleged that one tent is supplied for ablutions in which 128 men take turns at two tubs for all purposes, washing, bathing and washing of clothes. I took this matter up with the department in the form of a question. I find that this is their reply to that charge, and I would ask hon. members to note it carefully:

Accommodation is temporarily being provided by using two contractors' tents, one for ablution and the other for laundry purposes, containing ablution basins, twelve wash tubs, one hand washing machine and two vacuum washers. Regular ablution hut now erected and fittings being installed.

I have no doubt at all that that is being done now, but I would ask the minister to find out whether the complaint registered was accurate at any time. Evidently the conditions are being improved in that regard.

The second complaint is that the water supply at that point is a hole in the ground; that the water seeps through into this hole, apparently a dug well, and that the same water used for washing purposes is also used for culinary purposes. Perhaps that is put the wrong way round, and that what is meant is that the culinary water is used for washing purposes. The reply to that complaint which I received from the department was this:

At present water hauled from spring by team in forty-five gallon drums. Gravity system from spring one thousand feet away under construction.

I would like to know whether it is a spring that the water was being taken from, or is the complaint well founded that the water was taken from a hole in the ground?

The next complaint is that these men have been called out to work when the temperature has been as low as twenty below zero. I think the department admits when it replies that the men are sent out in such temperatures to cut firewood.

The fourth complaint is that in the bunkhouses, if the men hang up their clothes at night, they will sometimes be found frozen to the walls in the morning. The department admits that the inside walls of all huts were very cold during cold spells.

The next complaint is that men making complaints either for themselves or on behalf of others are immediately ejected from camp, and that their lives are placed in jeopardy by reason of the fact that certain of their camp clothes are taken from them and that they are transported in open trucks in subzero weather and dumped into the cities and summarily disposed of. They are placed on a blacklist and denied entrance to any other camp should they desire to go there. They are cut off entirely from relief and told to fend for themselves. Obviously, if this is true it must undoubtedly be one of the causes of crime. The official statement of these men is that this has come to be an alarming situation and is growing to such proportions that we cannot cope with it. I received this communication from the United Workers' Council of Delegates, Calgary. They go on to request that I take the matter up with the department in the hope that some action will be taken in connection with these complaints. I hope the minister will look into that too.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I desire to substantiate from personal knowledge all the remarks that have been made by my friends from British Columbia, the hon. members for New Westminster, Vancouver North, and Vancouver South. During the Christmas season we spent three whole days in the city of Vancouver and met a delegation from these men in the camps. Twelve hundred in round numbers came to the city of Vancouver, and I was greatly impressed by the exceeding fairness of the three spokesmen of these men who appeared before us. There was a complete lack of extremism, a complete absence of exaggeration in their statements, and a reasonable plea for fair play from the authorities.

The minister was exceedingly fair in his presentation of the case this evening, and I assure him at once that I am not going to impute the slightest blame to him because he has not been very long in charge of the department. But I suggest to him that he can do a tremendous amount to humanize the national defence camps in Canada. I am speaking with particular reference to British Columbia. What the hon. member for New Westminster said in regard to supplies is abundantly true, especially in the Kamloops area, where supplies have been bought from favoured contractors at prices higher than are charged by local farmers, and that in numerous instances. That is wrong, as I think the minister will agree. He mentioned the question of an investigation. Now, we promised these men in Vancouver that there would be an investigation, and after all, when three men are speaking for a number of men as in this instance, and when they ask for an impartial investigation, there is nothing unfair about such a request. The minister said that the provincial government had been asked to investigate; he is correct. And he is also right in saying that they refused to investigate and, I think, correctly so, because the provincial government has no jurisdiction whatever in regard to this method of handling relief. This is completely a national method, the only one that is completely national. We promised these men in all sincerity that there would be an impartial investigation. A committee from the council of social agencies in Vaucouver approached us, and I would ask the minister to appoint his own commission, one single commissioner in his own department, to investigate the complaints. I am satisfied, after listening to the representations that have been made, that he would find the complaints fully justified. I am sure that the minister, who is an exceedingly fair minded and humanitarian gentleman, will be the first to see that these practices which the men complain of will be remedied. He said that those men who were blacklisted and fired could go to the foreman, the superintendent or the local officer. Well, they were fired inside of five seconds without seeing the foreman; they were fired by the straw bosses in the camps without a moment's notice, without packing their clothing or having an item of food, and they were sent away to live or die. That was done, not by my hon. friend but under the jurisdiction and control of the department over which he now presides, and every word said by the hon. member for Vancouver South is abundantly justified by the evidence we heard. I appeal to the minister to appoint his own commissioner and send him to British Columbia, and I am sure that he would find justification for these boys' grievances.

Mr. REID: May I point out to the minister, in connection with the purchase of supplies, that when the provincial government handled these camps the cost of meals—and I saw the figures before I left—ran from twenty-four to twenty-six cents per day for three meals for a man, averaging roughly eight cents per meal. Now the meals provided for the men in the camps under the jurisdiction of the provincial government were as good as if not more ample than the meals now provided by the dominion government. Before this item goes through I think we should have a statement from the minister as to the total cost of the men in the camps, segregating meals from clothing and other supplies as well as tobacco. I say this because I take a great deal of pride in the accuracy of any statements I make to this house, and the statements I have made this evening are not hearsay; they are based on first hand information from the records of the camp itself—not what someone in the camp told me. I have seen the men supplied with meals both under the dominion and under the provincial jurisdiction, and I know that the province had no difficulty in getting meat. In regard to keeping meat fresh, so far as the camps in White Rock are concerned, there is no difficulty because they have a freezing plant of their own, and the animals can be killed and the meat hung up and kept indefinitely. So that the question of keeping supplies fresh does not enter into the matter at all. When the provincial government was buying supplies locally there might be individual complaints, but apart from that the farmers supplied the rations such as fresh milk, vegetables, potatoes, pork, meat and other necessities, at reasonable rates, and I maintain that the price was a little less than the dominion government is now paying for the men in the camps. I submit that we should have a detailed statement of the whole cost, segregating clothing from the food supplied the men; and we might have the figures for the various provinces so that we might make a comparison.

Mr. STIRLING: Certainly the matter to which the hon. member for Bow River drew attention will be investigated. It was the subject matter of a question which he placed on the order paper some weeks ago and which was answered. It will be gone into more fully, he having drawn it to the attention of the committee. He mentioned one point with regard to water being obtained from a hole in the ground. Water frequently is obtained from a hole in the ground, and when we are discussing the relief camps it should not be forgotten that there is a medical officer, one of whose duties is to keep his eye on the purity of the water required in the camp. I remember one of the camps not very far from where I live—fifty miles north of where I live—on the borders of a lake. It did not draw its water from that lake, and of course there was local gossip immediately to the effect, "Here is the dominion government laying two thousand feet of pipe down the hillside when it could have taken water from the lake." The reason the water was not taken from the lake was that there was a medical officer attached to the camp. My hon. friend from Vancouver Centre raises the point once more of an investigation, and he states, as his reason for emphasizing the request for an investigation from Ottawa, that the responsibility is that of the dominion government. Now that is precisely where I differ from my hon. friend; the responsibility is that of the provincial government; the dominion government comes into the picture, let me repeat, in aid of but not in substitution for the work done by the provincial government. My hon. friend from New Westminster has raised the question of costs, and I think he said, if I understood him rightly, that the ration cost to the government was 24 cents a day.

Mr. REID: From 24 to 26.

Mr. STIRLING: Perhaps I might read to the committee, in order to put it on the record, the expenditure per man day on relief to September 30 last. This totals $1.30 per man day and includes, so far as I am aware, everything that can properly be charged to the relief camp.

Mr. REID: That is roughly $31 per man; $1.30 per day would be roughly $31.

Mr. STANLEY: Figure it out for yourself.

Mr. REID: I can figure it out as well as anybody over there.

Mr. STANLEY: I would not think so from the looks of you.

Mr. REID: If anyone looked at you they would have another opinion of you. I don't like those remarks and I won't take them either.

Mr. STANLEY: I have listened to remarks the most exaggerated and unfair and what I consider—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. STANLEY: From my own personal knowledge I can say that I have never listened to a more exaggerated statement made in this house than the hon. gentleman has made to-night, nor than another statement the hon. member made in regard to the empire agreements, altogether erroneous statements. Again to-night he is repeating the same thing.

While I am on my feet may I have this opportunity of saying something in regard to the statements made by the hon. member for Bow River. The statements were made in the press before the city council of Calgary, and the medical health officer of that city accompanied by two other representative citizens, one the president of the unemployed associations of that city and the other an alderman, went out to investigate the charges which were made. Not the statements which the hon. member has made to-night, but those which appeared in the press, the reported gist of which the hon. member has repeated to-night, were investigated, and the medical health officer reported to the city council that the statements were altogether exaggerated; that the camps after a most thorough and careful examination were found to be healthy, the food was found to be splendid; the sanitary conditions were found to be excellent and the camps were quite desirable. He pointed out several drawbacks because of the transition period through which they were passing in establishing the new camps, but otherwise the camps were quite desirable.

[Mr. Stirling.]

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. member for East Calgary will do me the justice of remembering that I made no statements. I quoted, as I carefully pointed out to the minister, remarks for which I did not accept responsibility and merely asked that they be investigated.

Mr. STANLEY: I endeavoured to make it appear in that way in my remarks. The gist of the inquiries which the hon. member made was taken from reports in the press and investigated by this special committee of which I have spoken.

Mr. REID: I take the strongest exception to the remarks of the hon. member for East Calgary. I can tell him that many members may make statements in the house, but the statements I have made this evening I can challenge any hon. member, even the minister, to dispute. They were given to me right from the camp. It may well be the remarks I made regarding the medical profession are pinching my hon. friend a little hard. The statement with regard to the Ottawa agreements I will deal with at some other time, but so far they have not been controverted. It is true one member attempted to controvert them and said that I had made a mistake in regard to the question of butter, but it did not affect my argument at all. But the statements I made regarding the economic conference agreements were made from the government record, and as to the statements I made with regard to the camps, I will put my seat in jeopardy along with his if he cares to dispute them. I got my facts directly from the camp. I was told by the man in charge that the price paid for potatoes was $24 a ton, while as I have stated the farmer was getting $5 a ton for grade number one and $3.75 for grade number two. Will he undertake now to say that my statements are wrong?

When I mentioned the price of tobacco the minister took me to task and said that tobacco was provided. Perhaps 1.3 cents is all that is allowed each man, and it may not be allowed in cash, but those statements were taken down by me just a few days before I left for Ottawa and I repeat that they were given to me by the man in charge of the camp, an appointee of the government.

Mr. STIRLING: Perhaps I may be permitted to finish the statement I was endeavouring to make. It is $1.30 per man day.

Mr. REID: I merely asked if that took in everything including clothing.

Mr. STIRLING: Yes, I have said that in this we have included everything that we think can properly be included in the relief camp cost.

Mr. REID: My statement would be correct that I thought it was about $30 a month.

Mr. STIRLING: I do not understand my hon. friend's arithmetic, but if he will allow me to continue, perhaps he can clear it up himself. This amount of $1.30 is made up as follows:

Item	Expenditure per man day on relief
Land	0.6 cents
Project materials	12.1 cents
Transportation	3.1 cents
Accommodation:
(a) Skilled tradesmen	0.8 cents
(b) Materials	9.2 cents
Subsistence	27.3 cents
Medical care	4.8 cents
Allowances to supervisory staff	11.7 cents
Allowances to labourers	16.3 cents
Clothing	16.0 cents
Tobacco	1.3 cents
Equipment and tools	7.1 cents
Maintenance of equipment and tools	1.4 cents
Ordnance equipment such as beds, mattresses, diningroom and kitchen equipment	8.2 cents
Other charges:
(a) Hire of skilled tradesmen	2.6 cents
(b) Miscellaneous	5.8 cents
Stationery	0.7 cents
Expenditures chargeable to projects as a whole	1.0 cents
Total	$1.30

Mr. HANBURY: Does that also include Sundays or is it just working days?

Mr. STIRLING: The whole man-days right through.

Mr. HANBURY: Sundays as well?

Mr. STIRLING: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The minister stated a few minutes ago that the care of the single homeless men was very largely a provincial and not a federal responsibility; that therefore any investigation into conditions prevailing in those camps in British Columbia and in other provinces could very well be conducted by the provincial authorities and that the assistance rendered by the minister's department was not in substitution but in aid of provincial relief. I wish to take the most strenuous objection to that statement, because I saw that stated in several telegrams which passed between the Prime Minister and some of us in Vancouver during the negotiations to which I referred previously. Rightly or wrongly the Department of National Defence and the federal government have assumed in those camps the sole and entire responsibility for the care of those single homeless men. When accusations are made, rightly or wrongly, in regard to malpractices in those camps I suggest to the minister that his immediate duty is not to ask any provincial government to investigate them but to send his own commissioners out to those camps in British Columbia and other provinces and to assume the complete burden of investigation. I am certain, if the minister does that, it will assist him in the future administration of this very difficult problem. The minister and the government are wrong in trying to shelve their obvious responsibilty in regard to those camps. Rightly or wrongly the Department of National Defence assumed complete control over those men and to-day they are charged with entire responsibility for their care. To try to shift the responsibility to the provincial government is an evasion of the responsibility this government must assume and maintain in days to come. I am asking the minister in his own interest to investigate conditions in those camps and I am certain this will help him and his department in the administration of the whole system in future days.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, March 5, 1935

The house met at three o'clock.

DEATH OF ARMAND LAVERGNE

TRIBUTES TO THE MEMORY OF THE LATE DEPUTY SPEAKER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty to inform this house that another of our members has passed away, the hon. member for the constituency of Montmagny, who has been the Deputy Speaker of our house. Mr. LaVergne had a varied and colourful career. He was born at Arthabaska; he went to school there and in Montreal and, I think, in Ottawa also. He was very successful at school and at the university, where he studied law and graduated with honours. He was first elected to this House of Commons in 1904, when only twenty-four years of age. Even then he was known throughout his native province as a brilliant speaker, and continued to be so known until the end. In 1908 he resigned his seat in this house to enter the provincial field. He was elected a member of the Quebec legislature, where he remained for some years, later practising his profession in the city of Quebec. At the last general election in 1930 he was returned to this house as the member for the constituency of Montmagny and was elected as our Deputy Speaker.

Unfortunately Mr. LaVergne's health has not been good during the past two or three years; he has been unable to attend this house and take part in our deliberations to the extent that he would have liked, for I know he was always desirous of making his contribution to the debates of this chamber. If his health had been good I am sure he would have been a regular attendant here, and would have given us the benefit of his knowledge and experience.

This, Mr. Speaker, makes another gap in the ranks of this house. It is always difficult to speak of these unfortunate happenings, and as has been frequently said, they seem to occur in the membership of this House of Commons to a greater degree than in the ordinary walks of life. So, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the members in all parts of this house, I would ask you to convey to Madame LaVergne and the other members of his family our very sincere sympathy in their great bereavement.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, again on behalf of the official opposition I have to express to members of the government and hon. gentlemen opposite our sympathy in the loss of one of the members of their party. Again at this session we share their deep regret at the passing of one more of our number, particularly one who held the prominent position of Deputy Speaker in this chamber.

I believe it had long been apparent to all of us that Mr. Armand LaVergne, the late hon. member for Montmagny, was bearing with great fortitude very severe impairment to his health. It would be unfair and indeed impossible, therefore, to attempt any estimate of his services to the public life of Canada by referring to the part with which we are most familiar and what we have known of him in this parliament. Personally, I like to go back in my remembrance of him to the days, to which reference has been made by my right hon. friend opposite, when as a young man, almost, I should say, the youngest member, he entered parliament in the year 1904, and sat as a Liberal member of the Commons for the four following years. As the right hon. gentleman has truly said, the late hon. member was believed by all at that time to have before him a very promising career. He was an able debater and brilliant speaker. Even at that time he was an ardent advocate of more or less independent views. In 1908, as my right hon. friend has said, he resigned his seat in this house in order to enter the Quebec legislature, in which legislative body he served also for a period of four years.

In 1911 he was one of the organizers of the Nationalist party in the province of Quebec and, thereafter, a foremost member of that party; and in 1927 he was one of the Quebec organizers of the Conservative convention at Winnipeg. I believe the fact that in his day he was by turn a member of different political parties and, I fear, not very happy in his relations with any of them, accounts in part for the fact that although he was a candidate for parliament in all the political contests between 1911 and 1930, despite his attainments, it was not until 1930 that he was again returned as a member of this house.

It is very difficult to estimate the services to the public life of a country of those who too frequently alter their party allegiance, or of one who by his very nature is critical and independent in his views to the extent of finding it difficult to work with other men. I believe it is one of the laws of politics that we have all to learn to seek to accommodate our views to the views of those who belong to groups entertaining ideas similar to our own, if anything effective is to be accomplished. While undoubtedly it may be a mark of strength for one at all times to be wholly independent and outspoken in the expression of one's views, it is also at times an evidence of equal strength for one to be able, while holding and cherishing independent opinions, to cooperate with others differing somewhat in opinion but who are seeking to serve like national ends.

The late member for Montmagny achieved an enviable position in his profession of law, and also an important place in journalism. As a journalist, he was much given to expressing independent and, at times, extreme views. It is my opinion that the country will remember him for the zealous manner in which he upheld minority rights, particularly as they had to do with matters with which he was deeply concerned. At all times Mr. LaVergne was courageous and fearless, even to the extent of welcoming opposition and, upon occasions, of courting unpopularity. He will also be remembered for this, and, to those who knew him best, for qualities of heart and mind and for talents which, had he been less critical and more constructive and in some matters less eager perhaps to plough his solitary furrow, would have afforded him even wider spheres of public usefulness and national service.

I join with the acting leader of the government on behalf of hon. members on this side, in the expression of sympathy which it is the desire of all should be conveyed by Your Honour to Madame LaVergne in her great bereavement.

Mr. ROBERT GARDINER (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret the house has learned of the death of our former colleague from Montmagny. All hon. members will realize that as we have not had the pleasure of his company during the present session he must have been seriously ill. May I be permitted to join with the acting leader of the government (Sir George Perley) and the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) in expressing from this corner of the chamber our deep regret of his passing, and our desire to convey through you, Mr. Speaker, to his widow and relatives our sincere respects.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, may I add my personal tribute to the homage paid by the parliamentary leaders to the memory of our departed colleague. Armand LaVergne and I commenced our parliamentary career on the same day, in February, 1904. We have battled ever since, sometimes side by side, sometimes under different banners, and I cannot help feeling painfully shocked at the thought that Armand LaVergne is dead.

A true son of Quebec, he reflected throughout his entire life love of country, fidelity to traditions, the nobleness of our history and the joy of fighting in defence of what he loved. He always manifested an active devotion towards our land and towards our race, which he ever sought to keep conscious of its originality. Possessor of a caustic, original and supple mind, he never sought to conceal his thoughts. Quite properly was he known in days gone by as "l'enfant terrible" of Canadian politics.

Mr. Speaker, Armand LaVergne had reached the stage when one's thoughts turn no longer to the past, but to the future. His straightforward and lucid mind was too fond of clarity in matters pertaining to this world not to seek the higher verities. He died as a true Christian, in the bosom of eternal truth. And our supreme farewell to him is the sad but confident one of those who believe, who hope and who love.

Hon. MAURICE DUPRE (Solicitor General) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, may I add a word to what has just been said on the tomb of our departed friend. We were united, the member for Montmagny and I, by bonds of friendship dating from the time I left college, in 1908. Since then, we have followed sometimes the same path, sometimes different ones, but always have I held him, even when he was fighting us, in high respect and admiration. As a lawyer, Armand LaVergne was distinguished. In political life, he made a great name for himself. He was known in every province of the Dominion. An ardent patriot and a brave man, he was ever ready to defend the cause of minorities and to take up the cudgels for the oppressed. He conducted, for the rights of the French language, battles that will ever remain memorable. I think it can rightly be said that henceforth his name belongs to our history, to Canadian history and to the history of the French Canadian race. Likewise can we say of him what has been said of a man he greatly admired and of whom he frequently spoke: He was a knight without fear and without reproach.

To Mrs. LaVergne and to all his relatives and friends we extend our deep and sincere sympathy.

OTTAWA AGREEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. BRADETTE (North Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, basing my question on an article signed by F. J. Savage and entitled "Britain likely to revise Ottawa agreements" which appeared on Saturday night of the 2nd instant, I beg to ask the government if it has been notified by the government of Great Britain of her intentions in the matter?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister): So far as I know there has been no such notification, but I will make inquiries regarding the hon. gentleman's question.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

BILL TO PROVIDE FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF AUDITORS

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved the third reading of Bill No. 20, respecting the appointment of auditors to the Canadian National Railways.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Hanbury) and some others I think mentioned when this bill was in committee the taking care of Touche and Company in regard to the work which they have done this year, and I agreed that on the third reading some provision would be made in the bill to take care of them in regard to the year 1935. However, upon making inquiries I find that their work has been entirely the auditing of the books for 1934; in other words, they have not yet begun upon the work of 1935, and until they have completed their report and presented it to parliament and until they appear before the committee, their work will not in any way affect 1935, and so with their consent there is no necessity for any arrangement for 1935.

Mr. JEAN FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked for information from the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) about Mr. Laforce, one of the employees of the Canadian National Railways. In what I have to say I will be brief.

My intention is that not only the members of the railway and shipping committee are entitled to receive information from the Canadian National Railways, but also every member of this house who is called upon to vote moneys for the Canadian National Railways. I understand, of course, that some information may be confidential, but when I ask a question about the salary of a man and the kind of work he is doing for the railways, I am perfectly justified in doing so, and such a question calls for a reply, and a straight reply. We are ready to vote money for the Canadian National Railways when it is required, and we are entitled to receive all the information which is available. I have been most reasonable in asking for information in regard to the railways. In fact, this is the first question I have put this year with regard to them.

There is something I wish to tell the house about Mr. Laforce. Here is a man employed by the railways for colonization purposes, and he is writing articles which are just like the exercises of a school boy, expatiating on the beauty of the country and all that. Furthermore, I am told that the publication of his articles in the press is paid for by other governments. Here is a man who is supposedly working for colonization. His salary is paid by the Canadian National Railways, and his articles are paid for by the provincial governments. If the minister wants to practise economy in the Canadian National Railways the first thing he should do is discharge that man. Whenever I spoke in this house about distress in the different centres in the north the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) would come along with a telegram from that man saying that all was well, and the telegram was signed J. E. Laforce. I have mentioned that not only in this house, but I said the same thing in the parliament buildings of Quebec when the last congress on colonization was held there last fall.

I have received no answer to my question about this man. Here is an opportunity for the minister to practise real economy. Let him see to it that the men who have been discharged from the railways, men who were doing good and useful work, are restored to their positions, and let him also see to it that all those who are doing nothing for the railways, and whose salaries are paid by the railway for doing nothing, are discharged at once.

I remember two years ago when I first brought up this matter it was at a morning sitting and the minister was right where he is sitting now. I advocated the same thing then, and the minister seemed to sympathize very much with my attitude.

With regard to the employees of the railway, Mr. Speaker, all the men who are doing useful work should be kept in their positions, but if you can dispense with a man who draws a big salary without doing useful work, and who draws that salary at the expense of three men who have the responsibilities of a family, that man should be laid off and the three men who could do useful work should be restored to their former positions. That is my humble view, and I submit it to the minister. I hope he will realize the stupidity of keeping on Mr. Laforce on the Canadian National Railways when no member of the house can get any information about his doings. I say that it is most unfair. The minister is fair enough to appreciate that. He probably will not admit it at once, but when he goes back to his office and thinks over what has just been said he will probably admit that the member for Témiscouata is following the right course in asking the minister to see to it that the greatest possible number of men are employed by the Canadian National Railways, and that all those who are drawing salaries for doing nothing shall be dispensed with at once.

There is another thing. What is the use of keeping as assistant superintendent at Campbellton a man who can neither read nor write properly? It is just a fat job. What is he doing? The only thing he does is to try to put the greatest possible number of men out of their positions in order to justify his own salary. Is that economy? It is fattening one at the expense of many, and I ask most emphatically that his head be cut off. I do not say physically, but the house understands what I mean. There are many things like that, the purchase of materials for the railways, jam, lumber, construction materials of various kinds.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am sorry to have to interrupt the hon. member, but after all I have allowed him considerable latitude to-day. This bill calls for the appointment of auditors for the Canadian National Railways, and I must confess that the subject matter of the hon. member's remarks has not yet come within the scope of the bill. If he intends to continue, I must ask him to confine his remarks to the bill.

Mr. POULIOT: With due regard to you, Mr. Speaker, may I explain how my remarks come within the scope of the bill? This bill relates to the auditors of the railways. Well, the auditors have to audit every expenditure, and what I am mentioning is itself a saving for the railways. The greater the saving the less the expenditure for auditing, and therefore I am within the bill, I am within the subject matter before the house in asking for the curtailment of useless expenditures so that fewer such expenditures will have to be audited by these men.

Mr. SPEAKER: While I appreciate the remarks by which the hon. member seeks to bring himself within the scope of the bill, I do not think that what he has said is relevant. The bill covers the appointment of auditors and what the hon. member is arguing is a matter of management, not of auditing.

Mr. POULIOT: Then, sir, I will speak strictly—

Mr. SPEAKER: I must rule the hon. member out of order as regards the present trend of his remarks. If he has anything further to say with respect to the auditors I would ask him to confine his remarks thereto.

Mr. POULIOT: I will conclude my remarks with one sentence. Touche & Company have been auditors for some time. They have had a great deal of experience and they have not been criticized by the government for their work, which seems to me to have been well done. On this we are all in perfect accord. But, sir, with regard to auditing, and strictly auditing, without getting into any questions of management, would it not be fair to see to it that Touche & Company do not join the ranks of the unemployed, but that they be given the most important duty of auditing the accounts of the Canadian Pacific Railway so that we may know what has been done with the $60,000,000 which has been lent by this government by order in council? That is my humble suggestion. I suggest that the government avail themselves of the experience of this firm in having the finances of the Canadian Pacific Railway thoroughly audited by Touche & Company.

Mr. A. L. BEAUBIEN (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, since you have allowed the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) to ramble out of order, may I be permitted for a minute or two to say a word in defence of Mr. Laforce. I have known Mr. Laforce for many years, have followed his work, and can say without hesitation that he is a competent official in his department. It seems to me that when we have competent officials we should retain them. But if the attitude advocated by my hon. friend from Témiscouata is to be adopted, and Mr. Laforce is to be dismissed, notwithstanding that everyone who has come in contact with him knows how well he is doing his work, it is simply following the method of the present government. The minister said the other day that the auditors of Touche & Company were very competent and that the work was well done, and yet we are dismissing them. I think it is a wrong attitude. If the officials of any railway company over which we have control are doing their work properly—and I know that Mr. Laforce has rendered valuable service from the colonization standpoint—then I think it ill becomes the government to dismiss any official, or any group of officials who have given such services as those rendered by Touche & Company as auditors for the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. member will admit that opinions are free.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN ACT

AMENDMENT TO FACILITATE AND INCREASE THE EXTENSION OF CREDIT TO FARMERS

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No. 15, to amend the Canadian Farm Loan Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

FARMERS' CREDITORS ACT

AMENDMENTS TO FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT, 1934

The house resumed from Monday, March 4, consideration in committee of Bill No. 10, to amend the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, 1934—Mr. Rhodes—Mr. Bury in the chair.

Mr. RHODES: We finished the clauses of the bill when last in committee, but the hon. member for Macleod had submitted an amendment which had been ruled out of order, and then he proposed submitting a portion of the original amendment as an amendment. I am prepared to speak on that if my hon. friend desires to proceed.

Mr. COOTE: If I remember rightly, Hansard will show that I formally moved a second amendment last night, and I do not think it is necessary to say anything further in support of it. As I have said in this committee so many times, the present level of farm prices makes it impossible for farmers to pay a rate of interest higher than five per cent. Perhaps I am setting the rate very high when I place it at five per cent, but I might direct the attention of the committee to section 17 of the act of last year, which I think includes the principle covered in the amendment. Section 17 of the act as introduced by the Prime Minister last year reads:

(1) Notwithstanding the provisions of any other statute or law, whenever any rate of interest exceeding seven per centum is stipulated for in any mortgage of farm real estate, if any person liable to pay the mortgage tenders or pays to the person entitled to receive the money, the amount owing on such mortgage and interest to the time of payment, together with three months' further interest in lieu of notice, no interest shall after the expiry of three months' period aforesaid be chargeable, payable or recoverable in respect of the said mortgage at any rate in excess of five per centum per annum.

2. The provisions of this section shall apply in the case of any mortgage heretofore or hereafter made and whether or not the principal sum is due and owing at the time such tender or payment is made.

The principle of reducing the rate of interest on existing mortgages to five per cent is included in that section. It is true that this is applied only in the case of any mortgagor who is able to tender payment of the full principal sum as well as any interest which may be owing, but after all it seems to me that that does not alter the principle that the rate of interest on farm mortgages should not exceed five per cent per annum.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

Might I point out to the committee that although this act did not come into force in any province until proclaimed by the governor in council to be in force in such province, section 17 which I have just quoted came into force when the act was assented to. That was the one section of the act which came into force immediately the act was given royal assent; all the other sections did not apply in any province until a proclamation to that effect was issued. I think that point should not be overlooked in considering the amendment which is now before the committee and which asks that:

No interest at a rate exceeding five per centum per annum shall be charged, payable or recoverable on any existing mortgage of farm real estate or agreement covering the sale of farm real estate.

I would not press this amendment again on the committee were it not for the fact that I realize how badly it is needed. I believe the government, the House of Commons and the committee would pass this amendment if they appreciated, as some of us do, the need for it and how agriculturists as a whole cannot stand the present rate of interest.

Mr. ARTHURS: Why should this be confined to mortgages in connection with purchase of property? Why should it not apply to all farm mortgages?

Mr. COOTE: It applies to all farm mortgages. It reads:

No interest at a rate exceeding five per centum per annum shall be charged, payable or recoverable on any existing mortgage of farm real estate or agreement covering the sale of farm real estate.

The amendment covers both.

I would also like to remind the committee that, as I said yesterday, almost every agricultural country I know of has passed legislation of this nature effecting a general reduction in the interest rate on farm mortgages. At the moment I do not know of any other country, although there may be such, where it is permissible to collect a rate of interest of more than five per cent on farm mortgages. I do not think we can afford any longer to delay taking action to reduce the interest rate on farm mortgages. As I said last night only a small percentage of the farmers will take advantage of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, and as this act deals with the particular question of farm debts, it is very important and necessary and there is a responsibility on this committee to see that some provision of this nature is included in the act or that legislation is passed at some time during this session respecting reduction of interest rates charged on farm mortgages generally. I hope the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. RHODES: We will all concede at once to the hon. member for Macleod that he is animated by sincerity of purpose and that it is his desire to accomplish something by way of reduction of interest. It may rather surprise him to know I have a sympathetic feeling for the object he has in mind, but if I were discussing the merits I would say that we must be practical about these matters. It would be very easy, if it were competent for the committee, under the amendment of my hon. friend to say that the interest shall be only so much. Last year I used the illustration and I might use it now, that it is an old maxim that you may lead a horse to water but you cannot make him drink. If you get the rate of interest below the point where lenders are prepared to lend, then there will be no money available, and if a farmer is in dire need of money he will be the sufferer in the long run.

But I do not propose to enter into the merits of the discussion for reasons which I shall disclose in a moment, because there will be another opportunity during this session. My hon. friend's amendment reads:

No interest at a rate exceeding five per centum per annum shall be charged, payable or recoverable on any existing mortgage of farm real estate or agreement covering the sale of farm real estate.

May I point out at once that at this moment we are under the farm loan board loaning money at five and a half per cent. I have stated before and have no hesitation in stating again that I hope to see that rate reduced to five per cent and possibly lower. But the point is that not only are we at the moment making new loans at that rate, but we have many millions loaned under the old Farm Loan Act paying six and a half per cent, which under the legislation that is now before the committee we shall have an opportunity of reducing to a lower rate after the bill is passed. In the meantime however those mortgages are out at six and a half per cent. The effect of my hon. friend's amendment is to make a direct charge upon the public revenue, because the deficiency will have to be made up out of the exchequer, and I submit as a point of order that upon that ground it is not competent for my hon. friend to move this amendment.

I submit that the amendment is out of order for another reason. My hon. friend introduced into the house at this very session a bill which passed its second reading and which is now before the banking and commerce committee. Paragraph 5a of clause 4 of that bill, to amend the interest rate, reads:

In no case shall interest exceeding the rate or percentage of four per centum per annum be stipulated for, charged, taken, payable or recoverable on the whole or any part of the principal money advanced on or secured by mortgage of real estate, or on moneys payable under agreements for sale of real estate.

That very subject is now before a committee of this house. May I further point out that the amendment which my hon. friend now moves is much less in scope than is the clause of the bill which I have just read, because the clause of the bill refers to all mortgages whereas the amendment which my hon. friend now moves refers only to farm mortgages. Inasmuch as the lesser is included in the whole, this very subject will be determined when the bill is dealt with by the banking and commerce committee and comes back to this house for final action. But I do not stress the point of order although I feel it my duty to raise it on that point as well. I submit this however as a practical proposal: Is it wise to attempt to deal with legislation piecemeal? Is it wise to attempt to deal with a limited scope of farm mortgages when at this very session we are dealing with a bill which has reference to the interest rate upon all mortgages? Under these circumstances, in view of the fact that this subject will be decided upon, I hope my hon. friend will not press his motion.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I must confess that I have a great deal of sympathy with the proposed amendment for more than one reason. Did I understand that my hon. friend is pressing his point of order?

Mr. RHODES: I must, unless the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Then my remarks must be very brief; perhaps I shall be able to conclude them on another occasion. The whole purpose of this bill is to relieve a desperate situation; I think that is not putting it in too strong language. I cannot conceive that any arrangement will get a farmer—who after all has the choice between a compromise and becoming a bankrupt—out of his difficulty if he has to pay a rate higher than five per cent. I agree that our direction to the boards and to the registrar in dealing with the matter should be as wide as possible; for circumstances will vary. But at the same time if I were a member of a board and were adjudicating upon a claim in which the interest rate for a period of two or three years was going to be more than five per cent, no matter how much the reduction in principal, it seems to me that there would be very little likelihood of the debtor being able to meet his obligation. That is my opinion. I appreciate that the matter should be left entirely to the discretion of the board, it must of necessity be so, but at the same time my hon. friend knows the conditions existing not only in western Canada but all over Canada to-day and that probably will exist for the next three or four years. The hope is that the adjustment granted will put the debtor in a position to meet his obligation, but it is my candid opinion that he cannot pay more than five per cent interest.

Mr. RHODES: May I say at once to my hon. friend that I do not quarrel with the general tenor of his remarks, but I point out that if this bill were silent altogether upon the question of interest the effect would be precisely the same as if this clause or any other were placed in the bill; because in the first place it would not interfere with the debtor and creditor getting together and agreeing to a compromise, nor would it prevent the board of review from fixing a rate of interest. So that I feel that it is not incumbent upon us at the moment to deal with the question of interest at all. The whole spirit of this act, as my hon. friend properly points out, is that of conciliation and compromise. Let us preserve that spirit.

The hon. member for Macleod referred to section 17 of the present act. Last night I was at pains to read the remarks of the Prime Minister who piloted that act through the house, and I found that the object of section 17 was not interest, but to compel mortgagees who held mortgages carrying rates as high as eight and nine per cent and who refused to take payment of the mortgage in times when the farmers were prosperous and could have paid them, to accept repayment of the principal. That three months clause was placed there to compel the mortgagee to take his money if tendered. It was not so much the matter of interest that was in mind in inserting that clause.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is the minister referring to an overdue payment of principal?

Mr. RHODES: No, I am referring to section 17 of the farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, which was placed in the act, I say, for the purpose of compelling mortgagees to accept payment of the principal of a mortgage carrying a high rate of interest. If my hon. friend is interested I refer him to the remarks of the Prime Minister to be found at page 3640 of Hansard of last year, in which he outlined the reasons for putting that provision in the bill. As I said, there is no object in discussing the merits of the proposed amendment now, and this is not evasion on my part. Of course I want to see the procedure properly observed and our business conducted in an orderly fashion. But this whole question of interest is being dealt with by a bill which is now before the house, and if it passes it will have precisely the same effect as if we inserted a clause in the present bill dealing with the subject of interest, but will apply to the wider sphere of mortgages in general.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not wish to delay the passing of the bill, but I do not view the matter in the same light as the minister. This is a special piece of legislation. The bill introduced by the hon. member for Macleod is general in its application. I think that is where he went astray yesterday in his proposed amendment. The bill we are going to consider deals with all mortgages; this is a special piece of legislation for a special purpose, hence my interest in seeing a reasonable rate of interest specified in it. I quite admit that much must be left to the discretion of the board, but I point out that this is special legislation and does not touch the general situation at all, while the other bill is very wide in its effect, for it relates to all mortgages.

Mr. RHODES: Including this. My hon. friend overlooks the fact that inasmuch as Bill No. 11 is wider in its application it includes what is dealt with in this bill. Surely we are not going to have two laws on the one subject.

Mr. IRVINE: Might it not happen that the house would pass the present bill but reject the wider one? If we miss the chance of giving them half in the hope of giving them all and in the result give them nothing, it would not be wise.

Mr. RHODES: If my hon. friend means by giving the whole that there will be a decision with respect to Bill No. 11 and that it will come back before this house, I will say yes, we will get the whole. What my hon. friend is overlooking is that the question of interest has nothing to do with the settlement of debts provided for under this bill. I have seen settlements in which interest at as low as three per cent was agreed to between debtor and creditor, where the original obligation was for a rate as high as six per cent.

Mr. HACKETT: Interest has been waived entirely in some.

Mr. RHODES: Yes. I say we should be in no better position by putting this provision in this bill.

Mr. COOTE: In my opinion the purpose for which the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act was passed will be better served by the amendment which I have offered to section 17 than perhaps by any other thing that may be done under that act. May I again remind the committee of the thousands of farmers who have heavy mortgage indebtedness but who do not intend to take advantage of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act as it now stands. They are not going to ask a reduction of the principal, but they feel that they are equitably entitled to a lower rate of interest. It takes twice as much of their product to pay the interest as when they made the mortgage; the creditor is getting more purchasing power, more real value than he expected when he took the mortgage. The preamble of that act begins:

> Whereas in view of the depressed state of agriculture the present indebtedness of many farmers is beyond their capacity to pay;

Why is their indebtedness beyond their capacity to pay? Largely because they cannot pay the high rate of interest provided. But there are many who could pay if given a proper rate of interest, who otherwise will not get any advantage from the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. Farmers of that class outnumber those who are going to take advantage of the provisions of this act. Are we going to take the attitude that the great majority of farmers who have mortgages eventually must be forced to come under this act simply to get a lower rate of interest? I do not believe that is in the interests of either the creditors or the debtors. I have been told that there are companies that would be glad to see a maximum rate of interest established that could be collected by any mortgagee. They would be glad to come down to that rate, but they are competing with other companies in the same line of business; they want to make equally good earnings for their shareholders, and if they accept a lower rate of interest while their competitors charge the higher rate they are at once put at a disadvantage in so far as earning power is concerned. So from that point of view alone I believe the house must deal with this subject, and if we do not deal with it I think we will not be doing our duty.

It is true, as the minister says, that I introduced a bill dealing with the general question of rates of interest, but that is a general bill while the measure with which we are now dealing has to do with farmers' debts only. The most pressing factor in the farm debt situation in Canada is the high rate of interest payable on farm mortgages, in many cases eight per cent. That is an impossible rate; I say it is usury. It is a rate that cannot be paid, and when debts reach the point where they cannot be paid the interest on them becomes usurious. That was the view in olden days, and I think it is the proper view now. Since the rate has become usurious I think the house ought to reduce that rate of interest by law. It seems to me this is the proper place to do it, when we are dealing with the question of farm debts. I am asking that the rate be reduced to five per cent, which I think is reasonable. As I said the other day, it may be that this will affect the solvency of certain mortgage companies. If that should happen this house could easily deal with the situation by making provision that the reduction in the rate of interest should carry through to the persons who invested in the bonds or debentures of the mortgage companies.

I need not labour the point further; perhaps I should apologize to the house for my persistence in this matter. I say again that I would not have persisted at all if I did not know the need for such action, but I know of families that are doing without sheets on their beds in order that they may keep their interest paid up and remain on their farms. One woman said to my wife this year, "We have been hailed out. We are going to take the threshing outfit out to earn some money. I have only five dish towels to put on the cook car, and then I will have none left in the house." That is typical of hundreds and I think perhaps thousands of cases, and one reason for that situation is the exorbitant rates of interest. A former member of this house said to me last December, "I had a mortgage of $30,000 on two sections of land. I can show you that I have paid $50,000 on that mortgage, and the company had me in court last week making me show cause why I should not allow them to proceed to foreclose." For the last three years they have been getting one-third of his crop delivered at the elevator. That man still owes $20,000; he has paid $50,000 on the original mortgage of $30,000. Eight per cent will double itself in eight years when it is compounded; it is an impossible rate of interest. We should have dealt with this matter long ago; we are the last great agricultural country in the world to deal with it, and it seems to me this is the time to deal with it, in connection with this act.

It may be that I am wrong in this. The minister may be perfectly sincere; let us grant that we are both sincere. I feel this is the proper place to deal with this matter, because this act deals with the specific question of farm debts. Again I urge the committee, and the minister, that we should be allowed to decide this question now, whether five per cent is a proper rate; I think this is a very good place to decide it.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend in his sincerity of purpose and with all proper motives, which I accord to him—although I regret to say that he showed some hesitancy in conceding that I might be animated by equally worthy motives—will insist on discussing the merits of the question. I have stated before that I am not doing that now, inasmuch as we will do so before this parliament concludes. My hon. friend speaks for the farmer who is not going to come under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. That farmer will get such protection as this house may decide to accord him when it deals with Bill No. 11, which covers all mortgages.

Apart from the question of procedure, on which I am going to ask the chair to rule, I submit that at this moment my hon. friend is asking the committee to pass an amendment saying that the interest on farm mortgages should be limited to five per cent while at the same time he has a bill before the committee on banking and commerce, which has had second reading, which provides that all mortgages including farm mortgages shall bear a rate of interest not exceeding four per cent. Look at the logic of that position, and its consistency. My hon. friend is going to ask the farmers in one bill to pay one per cent more than they would pay under another bill. He is going to limit the rate on all mortgages to four per cent with the exception of farm mortgages which, under another bill, are to pay five per cent. Inasmuch as we are going to deal with this question in connection with Bill No. 11 which will cover all mortgages including those on farms, from a practical point of view I submit that we should confine our efforts in that direction to Bill No. 11.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): Does the hon. member press for a ruling?

Mr. COOTE: No, I do not press for a ruling. I do hope the committee will accept my amendment, though.

[Mr. Coote.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): If the hon. member presses I must rule, and my ruling will be that the amendment is out of order for two reasons, first, that it involves the revenues of the crown and second that it is part of an amendment which itself, as a whole, was ruled out of order.

Mr. HANBURY: Mr. Chairman, before the bill is reported I should like once more to bring to the attention of members of the committee and of the government the suggestion that there should be a definite date of conclusion for this legislation. Yesterday we learned that only a very small percentage of our farmers have as yet taken advantage of the opportunity afforded them under this legislation. For purposes of argument let us assume that ten times as many farmers in Canada will take advantage of this measure. Surely it is not the intention that this legislation should be continued indefinitely; surely the intention was that it should be for the protection of the farmers who at present are unable to discharge their obligations; surely it was not the intention that it should take care of farmers during the next three, four or five years. I submit to the members of the committee that to-day farmers throughout Canada are having difficulty in securing credit for the small amounts of money they require in order to conduct their business, by virtue of this legislation in conjunction with the moratoria existing in the various provinces of Canada.

I suggest to the minister again that he seriously consider at this time bringing in an amendment setting some definite limit. I think any farmer who is not in a position to discharge his obligations to-day, or six months or nine months from now, should be able to take advantage of this legislation, but we will injure the standing of the farmer in the community and we will harm his credit unless something is done to terminate this legislation at the end of some definite period. I believe in the interests of the farmers themselves and in the interests of those we are trying to help by this legislation the minister, before this measure is given third reading, should bring in an amendment to terminate it at some definite date.

Mr. HACKETT: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. RHODES: I would deprecate any suggestion that this legislation should be regarded as a continuing, all-time measure.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): The Minister of Finance has the floor.

Mr. RHODES: I did not know that my hon. friend had risen and wished to speak, but I should be quite content to allow him to do so. I was only going to reply to my hon. friend from Vancouver-Burrard, not because I have any keen and eager desire to be continuously upon my feet but because I wish to do each hon. member who makes a specific proposal the courtesy of giving him an answer. I was going to say that I would deprecate any suggestion that this should be regarded as continuing and all-time legislation. It is designed, admittedly, to meet a set of circumstances which we hope will never recur —certainly not within the lifetime of the youngest member of this house. But at the moment it would be a mistake to attempt to put on a time limit. If we were to put on a time limit which was too short we would be shutting out a number of worthy farmers who perhaps would not have the opportunity to have their cases considered. If we made it too long we would serve to aggravate the idea the hon. member has quite properly expressed, namely that it would serve to disturb conditions, and would result in affecting the credit of the farmer.

May I point out that in all probability the next session would give ample time to deal with this matter. But even assuming that the act has served its full purpose prior to the next session the remedy lies in the hands of the government, because all it has to do is to dismantle the machinery and the act cannot function. We know that unless there be official receivers, a registrar and a board of review it cannot function. For these reasons I respectfully submit the matter is one which ought to remain over at least until another session of parliament.

Mr. HANBURY: In response to the minister I should like to submit a suggestion that any farmers who are in a position where they may wish at this time or in the near future to take advantage of this legislation, could very well do so, and they will do so if there is a definite date for conclusion. But if the hope is held out to them that in a year, two years or two years and a half they may still come under this legislation they will not act at the present time. I think it would be advisable to learn now just where we stand. How many of our farmers require this relief? Instead of leaving the matter over till the next session of parliament, or leaving it with the government to take a responsibility which we feel they would never take, namely that of dismantling the machinery, I believe we might very well move an amendment to the bill so that one year from now it may be terminated, and if at the end of that time we find it necessary to renew the legislation, then I think we might do so. I believe the method I have suggested would be better than the one suggested by the minister.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): I would remind the committee that there is nothing before the chair.

Mr. HACKETT: I believe there is some misapprehension in the mind of the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard. A few days ago he referred to the legislation before us as class legislation. He will discover that it is equalizing legislation. The Bankruptcy Act applies to every person in Canada, with the exception of the farmer. In no province in the dominion may a farmer be put into bankruptcy. In the province of Quebec a farmer may not put himself into bankruptcy. This legislation merely places the farmer in the position occupied by the trader and the manufacturer. It gives the farmer the privilege of shedding his debts, if he cannot pay them, and places him on an equality or on an equal footing with other classes in the community. I submit it does nothing more.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): This discussion is entirely out of order; there is nothing before the chair. Hon. members may speak on third reading, and at that time make any further observations they may choose to make. But they are out of order now.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the minister a question.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: My desire is to ask the minister one question before the bill leaves the committee. To what extent does the farmer debtor require to default in the payment of either principal or interest before he is eligible to appear before the various tribunals for redress? Must it be to the extent of defaulted interest, prinicipal, or both or either—or is there any extent?

Mr. RHODES: There is no extent.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Well, if a debtor is behind say one year's interest he is eligible to appear?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): Shall I report the bill?

Mr. FERLAND: Mr. Chairman before you report the bill. . . .

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): This is out of order.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I do not think it is out of order.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Before the chairman reports the bill the hon. member may make his observations.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): Once the last clause has passed there is nothing more to discuss. Hon. members may speak on third reading.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Not at all.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): Mr. Chairman, before you report this bill, I simply want to move an amendment, without adding any observations on the different sections that have been adopted. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) that the following clause be added to the bill:

6. Section 18 of the said act is amended by adding to section 18 the following clause:
"The present act shall not apply to future debts which farmers contract after the day on which the act as amended comes into force."

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): I have to rule that the amendment is out of order. No new clause may be offered at this time. The short title has been passed.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I rise to a point of order. Surely while we are in committee on the bill an hon. member may move to insert a new section. I understand the hon. member has moved in that way, and I submit he is in order to do so, before the bill is reported. I believe the minister would agree with me.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): My understanding of the rule is that no amendment proposing a new clause can be made after the last clause of the bill and the short title have been agreed to. At that time there is nothing left in the bill upon which discussion could take place.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What is your basis for such a decision?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I never heard of it

Mr. CASGRAIN: Neither did I.

Mr. POWER: When was the short title carried?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): The short title was carried and signed at the last meeting of the committee.

[Mr. Ferland.]

Mr. POWER: Well then, what has the chairman been allowing us to discuss for the last hour?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury? It should not have been allowed.

Mr. POWER: If the chairman has been so magnanimous to others I can see no reason why he should not extend the same generosity and courtesy to the hon. member moving the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): The chairman was magnanimous because the discussion began towards the close of the last sitting of the committee.

Mr. POWER: With all due respect to the chairman—and I should not like to be disrespectful—I submit that is hardly a justification for having allowed the discussion to carry on all afternoon. If the hon. member for Joliette wishes at this time to move an additional clause to the bill I can see no reason why he should be precluded from doing so.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I understand that by unanimous consent the house is sitting in committee to consider part of Bill No. 10. So, if we are authorized by unanimous consent to consider the bill, I fail to see why I should not be permitted to move an amendment thereto.

Mr. RHODES: I have been relying upon the ruling of the chair, because without consulting authorities I do not feel competent to express an opinion as to whether or not the ruling is correct. I have no doubt, however, that it must be because he has the authority before him. Whether or not a correct ruling has been made I submit to the hon. member moving the amendment that I ought at least to have had extended to me the courtesy of being supplied with a copy. I do not know what the amendment contains.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): If it is the will of the committee the amendment may be moved. Is it the will of the committee that the hon. member have leave to move the amendment?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, he does not require the leave of the committee to introduce his amendment. That is an absurdity because at any stage of the proceedings on any bill any hon. member has the right to move any amendment to it. It is really reducing the rules to utter ridiculousness if we are going to submit to this sort of ruling. It will simply mean that the amendment will be moved on the third reading. So neither the house nor the committee nor the chairman is going to get anywhere by making rulings of this sort.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): Apparently it is the will of the committee that the hon. gentleman should proceed.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): Mr. Chairman, the main reason for which I have decided to bring forth this amendment is that it was shown in this house that the bill presently under discussion amending the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, while liable to do a great deal of good to many farmers who will be able to avail themselves of this measure, will also greatly prejudice the farming class, which, on account of this legislation, will lose a considerable part of their credit. The object of my amendment is to prevent this measure from being applied to debts incurred by the farmers after its adoption. I do not see why future debts should be included in this bill.

The farmer's credit is practically gone; it has been eliminated by various circumstances. First, it has been cut down since a few years, because of the lack of a market for farm products. It was also considerably imperilled by this Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, passed by the dominion parliament at its last session. I understand that under the bill that we are now discussing a board of review can compel the creditors to accept a reduction of debts, as regards principal, and interest as well. Farmers owe presently considerable amounts and, in my estimation, we should make this legislation applicable only to present debts and not to future obligations. Undoubtedly the farmers, on account of this federal legislation, will be unable to get further credit. I cannot blame a rentier or a small money lender for refusing a loan to farmers under such conditions, because a board of review may always interfere and make him lose part of his loan or force upon him some very prejudicial arrangement.

The debts with which farms are now burdened are of enormous proportions. According to a report laid before this house there are in Canada 728,623 farm owners or tenants, 583,706 of whom own their land. There are 126,120 in the province of Quebec, 156,678 in Ontario, 37,769 in Manitoba, 90,250 in Saskatchewan, 70,751 in Alberta and 21,211 in British Columbia.

Now if we consider the total debt on farm lands, we see that these farms are mortgaged for an amount of $726,026,500. Farm lands in the province of Quebec are mortgaged for an amount of $98,121,500, and those of Ontario for an amount of $210,315,900.

The farmers of Saskatchewan have incurred debts to the amount of $196,558,300 while those of Alberta have reached a total of $120,061,100, and the farm mortgages in Manitoba, a total of $67,157,500.

Now if we examine the municipal assessment on farms in this country, we find that a total of $8,791,349,010 is reached. In Quebec, the total assessment is $2,269,148,711 and in Ontario, $3,207,396,156. We find, that the number of agriculturists is comparatively low in relation to the total population of this dominion. It is easy to realize that our country, which should be mostly agricultural, has perhaps become over-industrialized. It is apparent that the population of this country has left the farm for the great industrial centres. Probably this lack of proportion between our rural and our industrial or commercial population is the cause of most of our difficulties.

Mr. Chairman, to help the farmer, the government has seen fit to adopt this Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. Whoever thinks that this legislation is going to cost the government a great deal is wrong; in fact, the government will have nothing to pay. The cost of this aid to a restricted number of farmers will fall back on the small rentiers, the small money lenders or on the farmers who have sold their farms. As has been stated in this house very few farmers will profit by the act.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Is the hon. member for or against the act?

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Ask the hon. minister's opinion.

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I do not want an answer from the hon. member for Laprairie-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) but from the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Ferland).

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): I do not want the Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) to question me; if he would be kind enough to listen to me, he will know whether I am for or against this law.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Could the Postmaster General state his opinion?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): Do not go beyond your wit.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): I am in favour of extending to the farmers all the aid possible, but before approving a bill of this importance we should study it and, if necessary, amend or modify it.

Both the act under discussion and the Canadian Farm Loan Act which has also been amended during the present session are twins, if I may say so.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): They are children of the same family who are bound to devour each other.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): The Canadian Farm Loan Act puts about 90 millions of dollars at the disposal of our farming community. Don't let the farmers believe for one moment that all of them will benefit by that act, because, considering the enormous amount of farmers' debts or mortgages, as I have been showing, a relatively small number of farmers will be in a position to avail themselves of the Canadian Farm Loan Act.

The last named measure cannot be injurious to anybody, and it is a good point for it. It will be of assistance to those who will have the chance to avail themselves of its provisions, but I am quite sure it will not harm anybody. The same thing might be said of the Moratorium Act passed in the province of Quebec by the Taschereau government. One thing is sure, and that is that nobody has suffered any harm from it so far and that it has helped a great number of debtors. However, may I add, the Quebec moratorium measure has not gone far enough. Under that act, when a mortgagor is in a position to prove that he has paid his interest, whatever the interest may be, and also his taxes, except for the current year, he may avail himself of that act, but for only one year. To my mind, the act ought to go much farther and apply also to persons who are indebted in the ordinary way. There would be no inconvenience if the moratorium measure, in the province of Quebec, did not make any distinction between a mortgage and an ordinary debt, because experience had shown to me that, very often, a mortgagee will grant a delay to his debtor, whereas the ordinary creditor will have the mortgaged property sold. If I may offer a suggestion, I would say that the Moratorium Act, which I think has been wrongly criticized, might go much further and enact that a debtor who had been paying even a smaller rate of interest than was specified in his contract, say 3 or 4 per cent, could avail himself of that act.

As for the Canadian Farm Loan Act, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) is painting it in very rosy colours. I am glad to say that the act will give relief to a number of farmers, but it will not save the farming community in general.

The Farm Loan Act is, so to speak, a beautiful golden chest containing a fortune of ninety million dollars. The bad side of the act—I do not know whether it can be corrected in that respect—is that the government keeps the key of this chest filled with gold. Under this act, the commission will be able to frame regulations, approved by order in council, and to fix the basis of valuation of the land and the farm buildings. That is the key of the Farm Loan Act. The act does not rest, therefore, on fixed and definite principles destined to guide the farmer belonging to one class or another, but opens the door to arbitrary action and to the essentially variable judgments of the members and representatives of the Canadian farm loan board, who, of course, will be appointees of the dominion government. It is therefore the key—

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): It is the control key.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): The control key! Were the act to be administered in the proper spirit, with breadth of view and generosity, taking into account not only the actual value of the farms at to-day's prices, but rather their intrinsic value based on the moral character of their owners, I would say that it is capable of giving satisfactory results. Of course, the future will tell us in what spirit it will have been administered, but it is far from certain that it will not be administered, as many acts of the present government have been, in a spirit of political partisanship.

The Farm Loan Act has been in force prior to this session's amendments. We find that, since this government assumed office, 3,330 farmers from all parts of the country have taken advantage of its provisions and have borrowed a total of $7,347,600. I see that farmers of the province of Quebec have borrowed $2,977,300 under the act, although the farm mortgages in force in that province total $98,121,500. This means that, in Quebec, as in the other provinces, the Canadian Farm Loan Act has been of practically no advantage to the community.

Will the new Farm Loan Act operate to better advantage? All we know is that a larger sum has been placed at the disposal of the farmers. However, when I consider that the amount made available under the old act has not been fully used, since, out of $15,000,000, $7,347,600 only have been loaned over a period of four or five years, I doubt very much whether, even with this chest of 90 million dollars, the farmers will be greatly aided if the delays of the past are to recur.

Through my amendment the act would not apply to the future liabilities of the farmers. I wonder if any man familiar with the farmers' problems may logically and reasonably oppose the suggestion I make to the house. Why on account of this act should the farmer be unable in the future to borrow a few thousand dollars or a smaller amount? Why leave the lender open to the risks resulting from the act such as it appears in the statutes?

It is absolutely true and undeniable, I submit, that the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act deals a fatal blow to agricultural credit. If it is necessary to-day on account of the extraordinary situation of the farmers, it is because they are completely ruined, because their credit is destroyed, because the farming class is in a general state of distress and because the government does not deem proper to leave them at the mercy of their creditors and, in a large number of cases open to eviction from their farms. But I submit that if this measure be necessary, it is on account of the bad policies of the government, of the high tariffs, which protected industry alone and in aiming to protect industry brought trade, industry and agriculture to the threshold of bankruptcy. At least let us not legislate in such a way as to completely destroy whatever credit the farmer may still enjoy in the future. Let us confine ourselves to the present, for before long the people may regain their former confidence and more easily recover the credit they enjoyed in the past and thereby solve their own problems under more favourable conditions. But we will not succeed, if by means of this measure we empower a board of review to reduce the amount of future debts. To my mind, the government should confine themselves to the present situation and to the winding up of their general failure in the country.

What will happen, if my amendment does not carry?

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): It will be carried.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): The time will come when it will be impossible for any farmer to borrow money again. May I quote a few cases? In my own constituency of Joliette there are quite a number of farmers, industrious and hard workers, who have been successful in preserving the property inherited from their ancestors and who have managed to improve the same and also raised large and fine families. During the last few weeks, I noticed—for I visit my constituency every week—that the wealthier farmers, even those who have no visible debts or mortgages on their farms, are not even able to borrow any amount ranging from a thousand to two thousand dollars should they wish to help a relative or an intimate friend.

Only yesterday, one of the wealthiest farmers in the parish of St. Thomas de Joliette, called on me at my office in Joliette with the sum of seven hundred dollars as payment on account on a principal of a thousand dollars, after having requested an extension of time. I was compelled to agree to a further delay of a few days in which to raise the amount he required for the payment of a debt.

Another farmer from the parish of Ste-Elisabeth, who is free from any debts, vainly seeks to borrow a sum of a thousand dollars for a pressing need. It is unnecessary for me to mention any more such cases. Is it not a recognized fact that the farmer's credit is destroyed and completely gone? Everyone merely guesses and surmises at the causes which have ruined the farmers' credit. Honourable members sitting on the right side of Mr. Speaker are taking to task the Hon. Mr. Taschereau for having caused a moratorium act to be passed; he is accused of having destroyed the farmers' credit. However, the moratorium act in the province of Quebec does not deal at all with the capital nor the interest. On the contrary, it serves to protect those who lend money and compels the borrowers to pay their taxes, their interest and their insurance premiums, in order to secure any time extension.

On the other hand, some say that the legislation now before us is responsible for the farmers having lost their credit. In my judgment, the two main causes of this state of affairs are the selling at a loss of farm products, and in the second place, the legislation now before us. As I stated at the outset of my remarks, this legislation will prove beneficial, in particular cases, to a number of the farming community, but, as far as the farmers' credit is concerned, it will be harmful to the farmers generally. Then, would it not be wise, for the hon. members, to consider that no valid reason exists for doing anything likely to affect the farmers' credit in the future? If the farmers are so near ruination that it has become necessary to pass legislation of this kind, which directly affects the citizens' rights and the creditors' privileges, I submit, on the other hand, there is no reason why it should apply to future debts. Should at any time circumstances show that such legislation has become a necessity, there would always be ample time to consider the opportunity of passing it, inasmuch as parliament meets at least once a year. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay, that my amendment be adopted.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend from Joliette has submitted his amendment in French and I regret that I have not a sufficient knowledge of that language to give a literal translation of his remarks, much less to enable me to reply to him in the same tongue. As I understand it, in layman's language, he seeks by this amendment to make it clear that the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act is not applicable to those obligations incurred by the farmer after the present bill is assented to. With respect to the principle that he has in mind, I am inclined to agree with him; at all events it is a fair subject of discussion, although I raise this question as to whether that amendment is designed to be of advantage to the farmer. It is an arguable question whether that is so or not. But it does seems to me that the main point is covered by the circumstance that this act will in the nature of things not be a continuing act; next session or the session following it may be repealed. It will apply only for such length of time as its usefulness is apparent. But I could hardly conceive of a case, even if this amendment were not passed, where a fresh borrowing could be the subject of adjudication under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. And when I say a fresh borrowing, I cannot conceive of an instance where a farmer, within two or three years after entering into contractual obligations, could present a set of altered circumstances that would enable him to go either before the official receiver or before the board of review.

Mr. DUPUIS: Why not?

Mr. RHODES: Well, to do so would be prima facie evidence of bad faith; I should say that would be a fair inference, because the obligation would be incurred under conditions which we have every reason to assume will not be worse. The probabilities are that they will be better, and if the farmer finds himself in two or three years' time in the position suggested, assuming that the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act were in operation for that length of time, then I should say the inference was that he had not disclosed circumstances which he ought to have made known in incurring the obligation in the first instance. That however is a matter that need not be laboured. If it is the sense of the committee that an amendment of this kind should be inserted, so far as I am concerned I have no objection.

Mr. HANBURY: Will the chairman please read the amendment in English.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): Mr. Ferland moves that the following clause be added:

6. Section 18 of the said act is amended by adding to section 18 the following clause:
"The present act shall not apply to future debts which farmers contract after the day on which the act as amended comes into force."

Mr. HANBURY: With reference to the remarks made by the Minister of Finance, I might point out to him that this amendment covers future debts. One of the points of this legislation that is worrying me is that if a farmer acting in the best of faith goes to his merchant desirous of buying $50 or $75 worth of goods, there is to-day no basis whereby the merchant can give him credit, because if he does, to-morrow or six months hence the farmer can go under the debt adjustment act and there is therefore no basis at all for credit. I suggest to the minister that this is an amendment that should receive the concurrence of the committee. I believe it is designed to help out those whom we are trying to help by the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, and I really think it should be given very serious consideration before the government refuses it.

Mr. HACKETT: The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard refers to the act as if anybody can invoke its protection to suit his whim. I do not think the act was designed for that purpose or has been administered to that end. It is merely a bankruptcy act for the farmer without the cost or the delay which characterize bankruptcy proceedings. When the hon. gentleman speaks of a farmer who might go to his grocer and might not receive credit because he could have recourse to this act, my hon. friend is entirely overlooking the fact that every hon. member is in exactly the same position. Every citizen of Canada, the farmers excepted, has access to the Bankruptcy Act. I do not think the hon. gentleman wishes to insinuate that the farming class is dishonest or any more dishonest than any other class and would attempt to evade its responsibilities by appealing to the protection of this act. After all the act is applied by people who are honest, competent and able, and a person may not merely go to the official receiver and say: I want the protection of this act. No; he has to go with a statement of his assets and liabilities. After they have been examined and scrutinized most carefully, then the official receiver calls in all the creditors, and after a lengthy debate in which all parties are heard, it is decided whether there is any reason to apply the act. I can assure the hon. gentleman that so far the fears which he expresses have not found their way into the experience of anybody who has had to do with the act.

The hon. member for Joliette went rather far afield. He told the committee that the farmer was in a difficult situation because of the activities of this government.

Mr. DUPUIS: Lack of activity.

Mr. HACKETT: He went on to say how hard was the position of the farmer because he had lost his market. I do not wish to traverse ground which has been gone over so often. I do not think anybody who has graduated from the kindergarten of politics will tarry very long with that statement. Everybody knows not a single trade barrier has been raised against this country since the present government came into office. I am not attempting for a moment to insinuate or suggest—and even if I so wished, this is not the time to do it—that the attitude of the late government may have had something to do with the attitude of other countries toward us, but we must all admit that no market in which agricultural products have been sold has been closed to this country during this government's tenure of office. In fact our markets for agricultural products have been enlarged and vastly enlarged since the government came into office, and hon. gentlemen know that as well as I do.

Mr. BRADETTE: Forty cents for butter.

Mr. HACKETT: That is about as near as my hon. friend can come to understanding what a market means. I can tell the hon. gentleman, since he refers to butter, that the last year his party was in office 40,000,000 pounds of foreign butter were brought into this country, whereas now the Canadian farmer supplies our market.

Let us take up for a moment the second suggestion of the hon. member for Joliette. He has suggested that the farmer has lost his credit and told us that he lost it some time ago. Then he attributes this loss of credit to the passing of this act a few months ago. Then he asks that this act for which he voted should be amended in order to prevent loss of credit by the farmer. I fail to follow his logic. The farmer may not have as much credit as he wishes, but this act is devised to rehabilitate the farmer; I think the farmer will be the first to acknowledge that the act has not caused loss of credit as the hon. member for Joliette has suggested. I do not think anybody is under the delusion that this act has brought loss to anybody. It was designed to do away with the confusion which has resulted from losses already made and to clear away the debris and give the farmer a chance to begin over again, to give him the opportunity that every other class of our population has by recourse to the Bankruptcy Act.

I have no particular objection to the amendment, but I think it is unfair to the farming class. Why should the farmer who has met with some great disaster, some great calamity, be shackled to the ball and chain of debt for the rest of his life while others are able to shake themselves free? I grant that my hon. friend is desirous of helping the agriculturist; I think everybody in this house is desirous of doing that. The fable tells of a bear that loved his master greatly. One day the master fell asleep and a fly perched on his nose. The bear to kill the fly dropped a stone of great weight on his master's face. I fear that my hon. friend, in his misplaced ardour, is about to render that kind of doubtful service to the farmers. I ask him to reconsider the amendment he has brought forward. If I thought that by any possibility it could be of assistance to the farmer I would support it heartily, regardless of the corner of the chamber from which it comes, because I think that we are all desirous of helping the farmer in this most critical period of his economic life. But I cannot understand how legislation that would deny the farmer privileges that every other class enjoys would be of help to him. Has the Bankruptcy Act injured the credit of the honest trader, of the honest financier, of the honest merchant, of the honest professional man? I do not think it has. Why should this act, which is the Bankruptcy Act modified only to the extent that the cost does not fall upon the estate of those who have recourse to it, be a hardship to those whose lot it seeks to alleviate? I suggest that this is a beneficent act and cannot hurt the farmer in any way. The suggestion which the hon. gentleman made that the farmer is dishonest and is going to seek refuge from payment of his debt—

Mr. DUPUIS: Who said that?

Mr. HACKETT: My hon. friend suggested that everyone was going to seek refuge under this act, whether entitled to it or not.

Mr. FERLAND: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order and privilege—

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of privilege. I have never said nor suggested that all the farmers would have recourse to this act, nor that they were all dishonest. I ask the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) to withdraw the words he has just uttered to that effect.

Mr. HACKETT (Translation): If the hon. member had followed the discussion, he would know that his friend, at his side, said exactly what he has just denied himself, and that the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Hanbury) stated that no farmer would be able to obtain credit from a merchant—

Some Hon. MEMBERS (Translation): That is not true!

Mr. HACKETT (Translation): —because the day after or six months later he might take advantage of this act.

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): That is not true! That is not true!

Mr. HACKETT: This act, Mr. Chairman, is far too serious to be trifled with. The underlying principle of it was carefully examined by this house as a whole only a few months ago, when every hon. gentleman opposite gave it unqualified and unanimous support. Unless it has been found unfair and prejudicial in its workings, unless hon. gentlemen can point out some abuses to justify the amendment, I fail to understand why the farmer should be denied the full benefit of this act, why the act should be truncated and mutilated at this stage just as it begins to function.

Mr. DUPUIS: I have a few words to say again on this matter. I should not, had not my hon. friend from Quebec West, the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré) done me the honour to mention my name.

Mr. POWER: In praise.

Mr. DUPUIS: May I fancy that it was in praise? I suspect it was not.

I shall answer the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett) first. He said in answer to the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Ferland) that it was not true that this country, and especially the farmers, were in a state of starvation and therefore had to seek the advantage of this legislation. He suggested that the farmers were happy and prosperous and their purses filled with money. That was the trend of his remarks. Further he said that since this government have been in power nothing has been done to injure the prosperity of the farmer. No tariff was raised, he said. I dislike to contradict so distinguished a member, but for the sake of truth I must do so. What about potatoes? They are important in the eastern townships as well as in Laprairie-Napierville.

Mr. HANBURY: And lumber.

Mr. DUPUIS: I might paraphrase the Scriptures and say that man does not live by potatoes alone, yet they are important. The tariff on potatoes has been raised to 75 cents per 80 pound bag by the Bennett government since 1930. If the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Gagnon) or the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil) who is now laughing while his electors are starving—

Mr. GAGNON: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

Mr. DUPUIS: Laughing and spending their time—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): Order. The hon. gentleman raises a point of order.

Mr. GAGNON: The hon. member stated that I was laughing.

Mr. DUPUIS: No, I do not believe the hon. gentleman is capable of laughing.

Mr. GAGNON: And he drew the conclusion that I was laughing at the plight of the farmers. I assert most emphatically that at no time since the hon. gentleman began to speak have I laughed.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): That is true.

Mr. POULIOT: He should cry about the sins of the government.

Mr. DUPUIS: Mr. Chairman, I accept the assertion of my good friend from Dorchester. I do not believe he is able to laugh anyhow. But I did not mention him, I was speaking about the hon. member for Compton.

Mr. GOBEIL: He laughs once in a while at you.

Mr. DUPUIS: And it is very proper that he should do so now, because it is his last chance.

Mr. GOBEIL: Wait and see.

Mr. DUPUIS: So if we can leave Compton and come back to our potatoes, which are more important.

Mr. GOBEIL: More to the point.

Mr. DUPUIS: Yes, a very important point, and the point on which the hon. member will trip and fall.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Stick to the potatoes.

Mr. DUPUIS: A single potato will be enough for him to fall over. The tariff on potatoes was raised by this present government.

Mr. GOBEIL: And on something else too.

An hon. MEMBER: When?

Mr. DUPUIS: From 1930 to date. I have not the date in my mind but I defy anyone to your right, Mr. Chairman, to say it is not true. Before 1930 the tariff was 50 cents a bag and it is now 75 cents.

Mr. HACKETT: Who raised the tariff?

Mr. DUPUIS: The Prime Minister, because the hon. gentleman had nothing to do with it nor had any other minister of the crown. With all the respect I have for them, they are not responsible; it is only the Prime Minister who has done it.

Mr. STANLEY: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): There is no privilege on potatoes.

Mr. STANLEY: The hon. member has stated that since the present government came into power the tariff on potatoes was raised from 50 to 75 cents a bag. That statement is entirely and absolutely incorrect, and I want to correct the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DUPUIS: Is that a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman? The hon. member will have his turn later, if he is still in the house.

Mr. GOBEIL: Answer the question.

Mr. DUPUIS: I reaffirm my statement, and I defy any hon. member opposite to contradict it. The tariff was increased from 50 to 70 cents on an eighty-pound bag, after 1930.

Mr. MACDONALD (Kings): In 1929.

Mr. MYERS: By the Dunning budget.

Mr. DUPUIS: If potatoes hurt hon. gentlemen opposite so much I will give them barbed wire. What about barbed wire?

Mr. SPENCE: If you know as little about it as you do about potatoes you had better quit.

Mr. DUPUIS: Mr. Chairman, I have to admit that I am a little disturbed by hon. members to your right, but nevertheless I will proceed to answer my good friend from Stanstead. There was a tariff increase of 25 per cent on barbed wire.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): I would ask the hon. member to confine his remarks to the proposed amendment.

Mr. DUPUIS: If you were in my place, Mr. Chairman, and an opponent told you the tariff was not raised and that this government did not bring about the situation of the farmers, I suppose you would try to answer such arguments if, in your own mind, you believed they were not correct. That is what I am doing.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): The hon. gentleman knows that has nothing to do with this amendment.

Mr. IRVINE: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. We in this corner have been ruled out of order a number of times to-day, I presume quite properly. Certainly the discussion that is going on now is further away from this bill than anything that came from this corner of the house.

Mr. RHODES: May I respectfully suggest to the committee that we have covered a very wide field. Personally I do not object, but I do submit to hon. gentlemen that it would be ill advised to precipitate a prolonged budget debate on an amendment moved at the conclusion of the consideration of a bill which has been before the house for several days, especially in view of the circumstance that we will have a budget debate when ample opportunity will be given hon. gentlemen to thresh out these and other questions affecting the tariff to their hearts' content. I hope hon. gentlemen will not for one moment suggest that I am lecturing the committee, but in these circumstances I think we might confine our remarks to this bill and leave the budget debate to a subsequent date.

If I may be permitted to say another word, so far as this amendment is concerned I have a completely open mind. If it is the wish of the committee that an amendment in this sense should be added I have no objection; I am quite content that it should be left to the judgment of the committee. As I indicated a while ago I do not believe it would matter very much one way or the other, because the whole question of the time for which this act will operate will have to be determined. But if in the judgment of the committee it is thought desirable to add an amendment in this sense, I shall be quite content. I have only one observation to make in that respect, that if it is decided to amend the bill in this way I think the wording of the amendment would have to be altered, because it is not phrased in the best possible way. If in the judgment of the committee the amendment should not be accepted well and good; if it is then I would ask that it be reworded.

Mr. HANBURY: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few remarks in regard to the observations of the hon. member for Stanstead, who I may say has a very convincing argument in connection with this legislation. I wish to point out to him, however, that a farmer's credit is not always something the farmer can regulate. At the present time of necessity the farmers must go to the merchants in the towns throughout Canada in order to get the necessities of life to carry them over until such time as they have something to sell. The farmers buy from retail merchants who in turn must buy from wholesale merchants, and the banks come into the picture through the credit they extend to wholesale and retail merchants. Rightly or wrongly in Canada to-day there is the feeling that as a result of legislation, both provincial and federal, the farmer has not the credit which he should have, and I am referring to the good farmer as well as the bad. I think it would be in the interests of the farmer himself if this amendment were passed, because it would be an indication that the good farmer was able to give the protection which his credit justified. I can see no harm in the amendment; on the contrary I can see much good in it.

The hon. member for Stanstead, inadvertently I am sure, stated that I had said this was class legislation. I never made that statement. I did say so in connection with the farm loan bill but not in connection with this measure. I just make that correction so that the hon. member for Stanstead need not take the trouble to go through his Hansard to check me up.

I wish to make only one further remark in reply to the hon. member for Stanstead, with all due respect to the ruling of the chair. The hon. member for Stanstead stated that no tariffs were raised during the life of this government against the farmers of Canada. I would refer him particularly to the duty on lumber going into the United States.

Mr. HACKETT: Is that a farm product?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): All those in favour of the amendment will please say aye.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Aye.

[Mr. Rhodes.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Nay.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): Does the committee wish to vote?

Mr. SPENCER: Mr. Chairman, we cannot hear your ruling.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): I understood that the amendment was accepted.

Mr. RHODES: I said that so far as I was concerned it was in the hands of the committee as to whether it would or would not accept the amendment, and that if the amendment should be accepted it would have to be reworded. If it is rejected we need not consider the wording.

Mr. FERLAND: What is the personal view of the Minister of Finance?

Mr. RHODES: I have already expressed my view, I may say to my hon. friend. I do not believe it really matters. I would not say this amendment was surplusage, but I do not think it would have any effect in connection with the obligations hereafter incurred because the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act will have passed out of existence, I have every right to assume, before any obligations would be considered which have been incurred recently.

Mr. IRVINE: I understand that you have taken the vote Mr. Chairman, but hon. members are going to discuss the question.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. ANDERSON (Halton): What is the amendment?

Amendment negatived: yeas, 15; nays, 45.

Mr. POWER: I was paired with the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. McGibbon). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): I was paired with the hon. member for South Toronto (Mr. Geary). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I was paired with the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Weese). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. RINFRET: I understood the minister left the matter to the decision of the committee. I believe I am paired with the Secretary of State, but I voted, because I thought I was allowed to. I should like to make an explanation. I hope I did not display to the Secretary of State any lack of courtesy.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): No pairs.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

MEAT AND CANNED FOODS ACT

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Acting Minister of Fisheries) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Meat and Canned Foods Act to provide that the governor in council may from time to time prescribe a tariff of fees that shall be charged for the inspection of canned fish and shell fish.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton) in the chair.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Explain.

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Acting Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Chairman, the sole purpose of the amendment is to regularize what has been done in recent years with regard to fees. Perhaps I should read the explanatory note in the bill.

Section 4 of the Meat and Canned Foods Act authorizes the governor in council to make such orders and regulations not inconsistent with the provisions of the act as seem necessary for carrying out its provisions. Section 18 of the act authorizes regulations for the inspection of canned fish and shell fish. By order in council of April 4, 1932, regulations for the inspection of all canned salmon packed in British Columbia were adopted. Section 20 of these regulations provides for a fee for inspection at the rate of one per cent per case. The fee is a reasonable one, and at present covers only the cost of inspection. No difficulty has arisen in the collection of the fee, but there is room for doubt as to whether, in the absence of a specific statutory provision, it can be legally required. As fees paid in the past are not recoverable, the amendment does not need to be retroactive.

There is no question but that the act gives the minister power to grant licences, but the question has been raised as to whether or not the governor in council by regulation may prescribe a tariff of fees. It is to insert such provision in the act that the amendment is suggested.

Mr. NEILL: I believe the last remarks of the minister apply to the next resolution on the order paper. We are not dealing with the resolution concerning the tariff on licences.

Mr. STIRLING: We are dealing with the amendment to the Meat and Canned Foods Act.

Mr. NEILL: Yes. I believe in some measure I am subject to blame, or to credit, for this resolution being brought forward, and for the legislation which may be based upon it. In 1932, when the government introduced a most elaborate system of inspection of canned salmon, a system far different from that which had previously existed, I protested not against the principle of the inspection of fish, which was very necessary, but against the method by which the inspectors were selected, and also the way in which the charges were made.

That my objections had some weight is borne out by the fact that only a few months later it was necessary substantially to amend the regulations, and the same procedure was followed in the next year. One of my objections was that I thought it was not fair or just, and hardly legal, that the canners should be picked out and compelled by regulation to pay what really amounts to a very large sum for the inspection of their product. I shall deal with that point later on. At the end of the session I took up the question of the legality of the measure, and stressed the argument that the government had no authority to impose substantial taxation—because that is what it amounts to—on any one industry, by means of regulations made in pursuance of a modest and obscure section in an act giving the government power to make regulations for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act. Certainly the government has power to make regulations for carrying out the provisions of the act, but they have no power by regulation to make a totally different law. They might as well put something about customs duties in it—in fact in one instance I believe they did—or make a regulation compelling people to be cremated.

That my views have prevailed is evidenced by the fact that the present legislation is before us. I wish to take advantage of the opportunity now afforded to deal with the matter of charges levied against the canners. The Meat and Canned Foods Act is general, and the provisions are such that they apply to the inspection of any product. The act provides that commodities shall not be sold unless they are inspected, and that they must be sound, wholesome, and so on. These are sections of a general character. Then regulations are made dealing with products such as vegetables and preserved fruits, and there are further regulations dealing with fish.

I notice that in the canned foods act the section dealing with the inspection of preserved fruits and vegetables lays down that the inspector shall be appointed by the government and, inferentially at least, be paid by the government, and we do know that he is paid by the government. The act calls attention to various things. The inspector has to visit the cannery, notice the sanitary arrangements and so on, see that the fruit shall be wholesome, but his inspection is devoted largely to this point: He has to go there and see the operations of the cannery, see that the conditions are cleanly and that the fruit is wholesome, that any dyes that are used are sound and wholesome, and then he gives a certificate. Any stuff that is exported carries this certificate by the inspector:

I have examined ... containers or packages—

I ask the house to notice that; he can examine as many or as few packages as he likes.

I have examined .... containers or packages taken from various parts of the shipment, and judging by the markings thereon I would consider said packages and containers were marked to meet the requirements of the "Meat and Canned Foods Act," and the regulations made thereunder.

That is quite all right, but is that the principle embodied in this resolution? Not at all. In the case of meat and butter and vegetables and so on, the inspector is paid by the government. He goes and inspects a carcass of beef. He does not have to cut off a chunk of the beef to inspect it. He can see its condition. But in the inspection of canned goods it is quite different. But there is no provision in the act where it deals with fruit saying how many cans the inspector must open. The whole purpose of the regulations and of the act is that the inspection shall be of the stuff while it is being manufactured. The inspector does not sit down and wait until the stuff is all put in cans and then come around, as they do with fish, and confiscate a comparatively large proportion of the product. The inspector simply bases his decision in the case of fruit on what he sees in his inspection of the cannery, and if necessary he has the power to take one or two cans and open them, but there is no compulsion on him at all to open any particular number of cans, nor is there in the case of meats packed in the packing houses.

But let us look at the picture that is now proposed, and that has been in force three years in connection with the unhappy salmon canners. First of all the canner has to pay for everything, and he has to pay for the inspection of his product in two ways. He pays through the nose. He begins by paying one cent a case. Now the ordinary large canning company will pack 100,000 cases of salmon, and at one cent a case that means a charge of $1,000. They call it an inspection fee. That sounds very nice, just an inspection fee. It sounds like something you carry around in your pocket, but it is $1,000. Does the beef man and the fruit man have to pay $1,000 for his inspection? Not a bit. Then why should the cannery man?

There is a further tax, and a quite substantial one. The last order in council—they have been varied a good many times—prescribes, I don't know why—it is not the case with fruit and other stuff—exactly how many cases are to be drawn out of a given number, and one tin has to be taken out of each one of those cases and opened, and of course it is lost. Who pays for that? Again it is the canner. But the man with a side of beef does not have to lose anything on his beef if it passes muster. But the poor canner loses every tin that is opened. In the case of other produce the inspector might open certain tins and then be inclined to say, "This shipment was all put up on the same day or the same two or three days, and I assume the rest is of the same quality." But he cannot do that when he inspects canned fish. It is fixed by the regulations that he must open so many cases and take out of each case one tin, and of course each tin opened is lost, and that is all done at the expense of the canner. One would suppose that it would be enough to make him lose that without making him pay in addition $1,000 for the privilege of that inspection.

Then there are different classes, and you do not have to draw so many cases in the higher classes. You have to take eighteen cases out of every hundred cases and draw one tin out of each of those eighteen. That will carry you up to 500 cases. I notice that as usual the greater expense is put on the small man. The small man would probably not draw out more than 100 cases of salmon at a time but eighteen cases have to be drawn out of the 100 cases, and as I say every one of those cases has to be opened and a tin taken out. Now, in the case of a pack of 100,000 cases, eighteen cases out of 100 would mean taking out 18,000 cases, out of each of which a tin has to be taken. That means that another tin has to be put in and the case nailed up again. That costs something. If you take the other extreme of the class, which runs from 101 to 500, if you get 500 cases inspected at one time they have to take only the same number, eighteen out of 500. That would be 3,600 cases which would have to be opened and a tin taken out of each. Now as to costs —I am speaking of the more valuable grade of sockeye salmon. The loss on these tins would amount to 375 cases or something like $5,600 through the loss of the tins opened, in the case of the lower regulation, and the inspector has no discretion at all. He has got to open a case and take out that tin and throw the contents away, one tin out of each case. On the other hand, under the higher regulation, he would not have to take out so many and the loss would amount to only $1,125. But that is in addition to the $1,000, at the rate of one cent a case, that the canner has already paid for the inspection fee.

The whole thing is wrong. This is not the time for me to make some comments on the system of appointing these inspectors. Perhaps I will have an opportunity later. But the whole system is wrong and my strictures upon it three years ago have been wholly justified. But that is not the point at the moment.

The inspectors are appointed, by the way, on the recommendation of the people who have to pay them and whose stuff they are going to inspect, men who are in the same business as the canners themselves and competing with them. They are appointed by the government, we will suppose, and they are paid by the canner. It involves a heavy expense, unparalleled in the inspection of any other article. Does the cheese man have to pay the equivalent of one cent a case for every cheese that is inspected? Not at all. The government carries the expense of that as a contribution towards the advantages accruing from a higher grade product. Why should the salmon canner, who is running in very hard luck these days on account of competition and so on, be penalized because the government have seen fit, quite properly, to have his stuff inspected. If we make the cannery man pay for the inspection of his stuff, I hope the others will be made to pay for the inspection of their stuff.

As I say, there is a double charge to the canner. First of all he has to pay one cent a case, and that is quite a substantial tax; it is not a fee at all. Then he has to lose every tin that is opened, and the inspector is compelled to open these tins and throw them away It is a heavy expense for the canner. Surely that should be a sufficient imposition upon him without having to pay one cent a case as well. I submit to the minister that before he brings down the bill he might take that feature into consideration.

I do not think there is anything further that I can add. There is the case, and as far as I know it cannot be combatted. It is not fair for the industry, and I do not think it has a parallel in any other industry in Canada to-day.

Mr. STIRLING: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has taken the opportunity of levelling some pretty considerable criticism in detail at the resolution stage. It would appear to me that it would be more desirable to proceed with the details at a later stage. If we could get the bill on the order paper, later on in the committee stage it would be more proper, I think, to take up these very detailed criticisms of the suggestion contained in the amending measure. Would that be suitable to the committee?

Mr. NEILL: I suppose I shall have to accept that if the minister cannot see his way to make a pronouncement. But what is the object in going into committee on any resolution? Is it not to discuss in a general way the principle of the proposed legislation? The minister says, wait until the bill is brought down. But in that event the bill will have been printed without attention having been drawn to the point I have raised. I think I was justified at this stage in bringing the matter up so that the minister might be made aware of it, and before introducing the bill he might consider the point and in his judgment, possibly, accede in some degree to the representations I have made. That was my only idea in bringing it on at this stage. However, if he wishes to report the resolution I have no objection.

Mr. STIRLING: As I have already explained, this is an extremely simple amendment empowering the governor in council from time to time to prescribe a tariff of fees. My hon. friend goes into the whole matter of inspection, in some considerable detail, and I suggest that that can be discussed at far greater length and more properly in the committee stage of the bill, whether it be in the committee of the whole house or before the fisheries committee, however the house might decide to deal with the bill.

Mr. NEILL: Does the minister indicate his willingness to send it to the fisheries committee?

Mr. STIRLING: I have no objection to its going to that committee.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I cannot understand what object there is in sending it to the fisheries committee. It is a bill to permit the charging of fees, and has nothing to do with the general provisions of the act. We should like to oblige the hon. gentleman, if there were any object in sending it to the fisheries committee, but when the bill is brought down he will perhaps again raise his point.

Mr. NEILL: As the minister has said, the bill is a very simple one on the face of it; it only says that the minister shall have power to prescribe these fees for inspection. But my point is that they should not charge any fees. If it is not illegal it is highly unfair to charge them at all, and that is why I suggested that it would be better to have it discussed in the fisheries committee.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Stirling thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 25, to amend the Meat and Canned Foods Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FISHERIES ACT, 1932

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Acting Minister of Fisheries) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Fisheries Act, 1932, to provide that except where licence fees are prescribed in the act, the governor in council may from time to time prescribe the fees that shall be charged for fishery licences.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. MacDonald (South Cape Breton) in the chair.

Mr. STIRLING: Perhaps I might read the explanatory note of this bill:

Section 34 of the Fisheries Act gives the governor in council authority, amongst other things, "to forbid fishing except under authority of leases or licences." There was similar authority in previous Fisheries Acts since confederation. Under it, regulations have all along been adopted by order in council requiring, for administrative purposes, that licences must be obtained before engaging in certain kinds of fishing, and specifying fees for such licences. While no difficulty has arisen in the collection of the fees, there is room for doubt as to whether in the absence of specific statutory provision, fees can legally be required. As fees paid in the past are not recoverable, the amendment does not need to be retroactive.

The exception referred to is section 9, subsection 4, of the act, which provides a fee of fifty dollars for hunting whales in Hudson bay.

As a lease implies a rental the charge would not come within the category of a fee.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Are there any regulations in this proposed bill that would have application in the province of Quebec?

[Sir George Perley.]

Mr. STIRLING: Not particularly so, in the province of Quebec. The Fisheries Act was consolidated in May, 1932, and this omission, if it may be called an omission, was not then discovered; but it has been directed to the attention of the department since, that whereas permission under regulation to grant licences is unquestionably there, the permission to charge fees for those licences is not. It is intended to correct that situation.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Stirling thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 26, to amend the Fisheries Act, 1932.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

SUPPLY

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

The house in committee of supply, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton) in the chair.

Salaries, including amounts required to pay allowances to office appliance operators, grade 2, operating mechanical audit card punching machines in accordance with the terms of order in council P.C. 280/383, dated February 17, 1930, and to pay allowances to typists, grade 1, employed cutting stencils in accordance with regulations approved by order in council; and to provide for continuance in office of G. C. Anderson, as superintendent of mail contracts from April 1, 1935 to March 31, 1936, $1,130,102; contingencies, $172,720.

Mr. LAPOINTE: May I ask whether a deputy minister has been appointed? If not, why the delay?

Hon. ARTHUR SAUVE (Postmaster General): The question is now under consideration.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I am pleased to hear that the question is under consideration. Will my hon. friend say how long it has been under consideration?

Mr. SAUVE: I cannot say now.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): May I ask the honourable Postmaster general whether the deputy minister will be appointed by the present minister?

Mr. SAUVE (Translation): I do not hold sufficient power over divine Providence to give a reply now.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Do you submit that this is a desperate case?

Mr. VENIOT (Translation): It is a reserved case.

I wish to ask the minister one question. I understand he does not intend to go on with any more of these estimates to-night?

Mr. SAUVE: No.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

Salaries and contingencies, $135,655.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Would the minister kindly give us the reasons for the increase, which appears to be $2,774?

Hon. T. G. MURPHY (Superintendent General of Indian Affairs): The small increase is to provide for the salaries of three employees who last year were paid from the departmental vote and this year are being paid from the civil government vote.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Could the minister tell us who they are?

Mr. MURPHY: A stenographer, Miss Cherry; a typist, Miss Murphy, although she is in no relation of mine, and a stenographer Miss Walker.

Sir EUGENE FISET: Were these clerks who are now being absorbed into the civil service only temporary before?

Mr. MURPHY: No.

Sir EUGENE FISET: If so, was this done with the consent of the civil service commission?

Mr. MURPHY: Miss Cherry and Miss Murphy are permanent employees who were transferred last year from the immigration department to the Department of Indian Affairs and were paid from the departmental vote. This year they are being paid from the civil government vote.

Mr. BOUCHARD: In the last year has any change been made in the minister's department in regard to translators?

Mr. MURPHY: We had one translator in the Department of Indian Affairs. That translator is now I believe transferred to the bureau for translations, but he is still connected with the Department of Indian Affairs and doing the translation work there.

Mr. JACOBS: Is that an Indian translator?

Mr. MURPHY: He translates from French into English and from English into French. He is, I believe a French Canadian by birth.

Item agreed to.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

To provide for expenses connected with the administration of Indian Affairs, including salaries, supplies, relief, medical attendance, hospitalization, dwellings, agricultural activities, surveys, roads, bridges, irrigation, dyking, education, et cetera, and a grant of $100,000 approved by parliament in session of 1926-27, $4,260,000.

Mr. GERSHAW: Could the minister give us some explanation of how supplies are purchased for the requirements of the Indians on the various reserves, such as hardware, lumber, groceries and general supplies of that kind?

Mr. MURPHY: Supplies are purchased in two ways. First, we contract at the beginning of the season for certain general supplies for the use of Indians throughout Canada. In other words the experience of years has taught us how we may anticipate the demands. There are always a certain number of destitute and aged Indians and we are also under treaty obligation with certain bands to provide them with certain supplies. We anticipate these requirements and contract for them early in the season, obtaining prices on tender forms. These supplies are then purchased and shipped at the most advantageous time to different reserves. To certain reserves it is necessary to ship goods early in the season, as they have to go in by dog train, or at other times by boat. If by dog train we endeavour to ship them early in the season in order to make use of the ice and thereby secure a more advantageous route. Needless to say we are not able to anticipate all our requirements, so it is necessary to supplement those contract supplies by purchases later in the year. These purchases are made by the various agents in charge of the reserves, or other officers whose services we utilize. These supplies are bought to the best advantage either locally or from wholesale merchants, in whatever manner seems best to the agent or the department.

Mr. GERSHAW: That is just the point I wanted to bring out. When extra supplies are required during the year I understand they are purchased by the Indian agent, as the minister says, to the best advantage. Does he call for tenders or competitive bids from all those dealing in the particular lines of goods required, or has he the privilege of going to a particular store and ordering the supplies without giving others a chance to bid?

Mr. MURPHY: It depends to a certain extent on the amount of the purchase. If it is an appreciable amount, tenders are requested and the order placed with the lowest tenderer. Certain supplies of small amount the agent purchases to the best advantage without calling for tenders.

Mr. GERSHAW: Suppose a dozen cook stoves are required, would that be an order of sufficient size to make it necessary for the agent to advertise for tenders and accept the lowest satisfactory tender?

Mr. MURPHY: I could hardly give a definite answer to that question. If a specific case were before me I might be able to answer definitely, but speaking generally the purchasing is done in the manner I have indicated. No specific instance of the kind the hon. gentleman has mentioned has been brought to my attention during the last five years. The usual procedure I think would be, although I speak subject to correction, the obtaining of prices by tender, and the order going to the lowest tenderer.

Mr. GERSHAW: Could the minister state any sum at which it would be necessary to call for tenders? Suppose the value of the order was $100, would the agent be obliged to ask for tenders?

Mr. MURPHY: There is no sum set at which tenders are required. It depends upon the circumstances of each case.

Mr. McPHEE: Does this item include anything for the construction of an electric transmission line from Kamsack to St. Phillip's mission?

Mr. MURPHY: Yes, that is provided for in our estimate as submitted.

Mr. McPHEE: What is the amount provided, and the nature of the work to be done?

Mr. MURPHY: The sum of $5,500 is indicated for that item.

Mr. McPHEE: Will tenders be called for for the construction of that line, or will an arrangement be made with the town of Kamsack which supplies the electric power?

Mr. MURPHY: Until our estimates are finally passed we could not of course make any arrangement for the building of the line. If I understood the hon. member correctly he stated that the town of Kamsack own their power plant?

[Mr. Gershaw.]

Mr. McPHEE: Yes.

Mr. MURPHY: Under those circumstances it is possible—although I am not committing myself to a future course of action—that the town of Kamsack would be consulted or asked to give a price. However, I am not committing the department to that course of action. Until the estimates are passed we are in no position to call for tenders or consider how it should be done.

Mr. McPHEE: Surely in providing for an appropriation of $5,500, the minister must have had something in mind as to how the money was to be spent.

Mr. MURPHY: The money is to be spent for the building of the line, and we will build it to the best advantage, applying ordinary business principles.

Mr. BROWN: I do not suppose the question I wish to ask properly comes under this item, but I do not know where else or when else to ask it. How many Indians have been enfranchised under the legislation of two years ago?

Mr. MURPHY: None.

Mr. SANDERSON: There is an increase of $320,500. That is a very substantial increase, and I should like the minister to explain it.

Mr. MURPHY: For administration services there is an increase of $26,000; for Indian education an increase of $190,000; for medical services an increase of $55,000; for aids to Indians an increase of $39,000, and for irrigation, roads and so on an increase of $10,500.

Mr. SANDERSON: Would the minister explain the increase of $26,000 in administration?

Mr. MURPHY: That is divided into three parts, one for urgent repairs to Indian agency buildings, two for the purchase and operation of equipment such as motor cars, boats and so on, and three to provide for the 1934 amendments to the Salary Deduction Act. Last session we passed an amendment to the Salary Deduction Act by which salaries of $1,000 or less were exempted from the deduction. This is the increased amount it is necessary to pay to those receiving $1,000 or less. The deduction does not apply now, and we have to make provision for that extra amount. It was not a charge on the funds of last year, when the money was paid from another vote.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I wonder if the minister would be kind enough to inform me what classes of Indians are entitled to these supplies. I should like to know also if the Indian agents furnish only actual supplies or if they provide money as well. Further I should like to know if the half-breeds are entitled to this help as well as other Indians.

Mr. MURPHY: Some Indians receive supplies under the various treaties which have been entered into between the Indians in question and the crown. Others are supplied because they are destitute or ill. Others are looked after because, like other people, through no fault of their own they have been unable to provide a livelihood for themselves. The only Indians who receive money are those who receive it under treaty or from the interest funds of the band to which they belong, provided they have a capital sum to their credit with the dominion government.

Sir EUGENE FISET: I had in mind some special cases in the province of Quebec. I wrote the minister a few days ago asking if half-breeds who are living in the county of Rimouski at the present time and who are absolutely destitute would be entitled to receive any supplies from the Indian agent at Cacouna. I understand this agent buys supplies and distributes them to the different Indians in the counties of Rimouski and Matane. I am anxious to find out from the minister particularly whether half-breeds would be entitled to receive such supplies from the department.

Mr. MURPHY: No, supplies are not furnished to half-breeds. Only the Indians who come within the definition of the Indian Act are supplied.

Mr. GERSHAW: I wonder if the minister would be good enough to explain to me a little further about those supplies, particularly in regard to drugs and medical supplies. How are the Indians on the reserves looked after in this regard?

Mr. MURPHY: The drug supplies are furnished to the medical officers on the reserves, or in some cases to missionaries or others where we have no medical men. The department obtains these supplies from the Department of Pensions and National Health in Ottawa, and they are forwarded to the various agencies throughout Canada. In addition to that, of course, medical men who are called upon to provide medical attention to these Indians may write prescriptions for sick Indians and have them filled at local drug stores, or if necessary they may purchase supplies locally if those furnished by the department are not sufficient or are not of the kind required in any particular case.

Mr. REID: I wonder if the minister would mind telling the committee if it is intended to construct any Indian schools in British Columbia during the coming year, also if any were constructed last year and if so where.

Mr. MURPHY: In British Columbia we propose to spend the sum of $200 to complete a building for day school purposes at Fort Macleod; $100 to complete a building for day school purposes at Fort Grahame, and $1,500 to erect a new school building at Campbell River.

Mr. McPHEE: Reverting to the matter of constructing a transmission line from Kamsack to St. Phillip's mission, I wanted to ask the minister another question but another member came in ahead of me. Naturally in the construction of this line the superintendent of utilities of the town of Kamsack would be in charge, because they have to supply the power. The request I want to make is that the minister have the work done by day labour, which would enable many of the unemployed men of Kamsack to find work, and of course the construction would have to be carried out to the satisfaction of the superintendent of utilities, who is in charge of the power plant.

Mr. MURPHY: In carrying on works of this nature it is our general policy when work is done by day labour to utilize the services of the Indians to as great an extent as possible, and we would probably follow that policy in the construction of this line.

Mr. SMOKE: A year ago I took a few moments of the time of the committee to present the case of the Six Nations Indians on the reserve at Tuscarora, in the county of Brant. I pointed out that, these Indians always having been wards of the government, like other Indians of the dominion, funds belonging to the Six Nations Indians and in possession of the government of the day were improperly diverted, in breach of trust, for the purpose of building or helping to build a canal known as the Grand River navigation canal. The moneys then misappropriated, as I say, together with interest and other moneys advanced from time to time by the government of the day, amount in the aggregate to over $1,000,000. I am told that the contention of the Department of Justice is that this matter is outlawed or that the present government of Canada is not responsible for what was done by a previous government of this part of Canada. I cannot see it in that way. I do not wish to repeat the arguments I advanced last year, but I shall call to the attention of the committee the concluding words of the reply the minister was good enough to make following my observations. He said, as reported at page 2416 of Hansard for 1934:

I wish to assure him—

And the minister was referring to me.

—that so far as I am concerned, within the limits imposed upon me I shall endeavour to see that justice is done.

I find nothing in the estimates to cover the expenditure I have suggested. I have not asked for an appropriation of a million dollars. I recognize that there is some merit—not very much—but some merit in the contention that the present government is not responsible for this expropriation of funds. I wish again to suggest to the minister that a substantial sum be placed in the supplementary estimates for the purpose I have suggested. Such an expenditure would go a long way towards wiping out the dissatisfaction which exists among the Indians who were wrongfully deprived of money. I would not expect the amount to be charged this year against income; it is really a capital expenditure which should be charged against capital. The expenditure should not interfere with the financial position of the government, so far as the revenues for the year are concerned. Again I ask the minister to consider the matter and if possible to place a substantial sum in the supplementary estimates for the purpose I have indicated.

Mr. MURPHY: The hon. member drew this matter to my attention last year when the estimates for the Department of Indian Affairs were under discussion. He has correctly quoted my remarks upon that occasion. I believe at this time I have nothing to add to my former observations, but I assure the hon. member that I shall be pleased to take the matter into the fullest consideration when supplementary estimates are being considered.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Mr. Chairman, there are some circumstances I should like to bring to the attention of the minister. Last year I communicated with him in connection with a man named Edouard Moreau who lived at Ste. Agnès de Charlevoix, a village behind Murray Bay. In a letter addressed to me under date of March 16, 1934, the minister said the man in question should present himself to the nearest Indian agency and apply for relief, in which case he would receive the necessary attention. In this instance the nearest Indian reserve is at Bersimis, and the next two are at Seven Islands and Mingan. At those points are located the three large Indian reserves in my constituency, and all are at great distances from this man's home. Would the minister indicate what could be done in circumstances such as these? Then, at a place called Les Escoumains in the county of Saguenay, there is a small settlement of Indians. They have their quarters near the village. Apparently they do not belong to any of the reserves, but live on their own lands and are educating their children. I believe the children of these Indians go to the village school. It would seem however that they do not receive any grant. The next reserve is at Bersimis, a point about sixty or seventy miles away, and these people would not be in a position to travel that far. In such circumstances what may they expect from the department?

Mr. MURPHY: In the event of the Indians in question being located at points distant from Indian reserves they would be required to write to the department at Ottawa or, if they were unable to do so, have someone write for them bringing their condition to the attention of the department. In such circumstances proper arrangements would be made for their relief, in the event of their being in need. As I said a few moments ago, in some of the remoter areas where we find difficulty in having agents operate we have utilized the services of the missionaries. In other cases where there are only a few Indians at one point, so few in fact that it would not be proper to have an agent to look after them, the Indians or some persons on their behalf would write to the department, and in the event of its being shown that they were in need of food, fuel, clothing, or medical services, proper steps would be taken by the department.

Mr. HANBURY: What amount is provided under the vote for the education of the Indians? Further, how long have we been educating Indians, and are those educational facilities supplied as a result of treaty arrangements? Is there any compulsion in matters of education?

Mr. MURPHY: Yes, the total amount allotted for education in the year 1935-36 is $1,846,000. Where school facilities are furnished the Indian children are supposed to attend school. In other words compulsory attendance applies.

Mr. HANBURY: Possibly the minister did not hear all my question. I asked how long we had been educating Indians, and to what extent the education had been given.

Mr. MURPHY: In the first instance education began through the efforts of various missionary societies in Canada, that is to say through the efforts of the Roman Catholic church and the Anglican church, which were followed in the work by the Methodist church —now part of the United church—and the Presbyterian church. These religious bodies sent missionaries among the Indians, and in order better to explain their doctrines they attempted the education of Indian children. Many schools were organized throughout the dominion which, in the first instance, were carried on as the sole charge of the various churches. Then later—I cannot give the exact date—these churches made appeals to the dominion government for grants to assist them in the education of the Indian children. As a result the dominion government has for a number of years provided per capita grants to the various schools conducted by different church denominations. Again at a later point day schools were built on the reserves where the Idians had more or less settled habits. In that way the Indian child of to-day is obtaining or should obtain a public school education.

Mr. HANBURY: Could the minister give any information to indicate whether or not the education given to the Indian children has been of any real benefit, and in what way the results ars shown?

Mr. MURPHY: That is a question to which one could scarcely be expected to give a dogmatic or explicit answer, nor could one prove his answer were he called upon to do so. I have discussed the point with those in authority, and with people who are deeply interested in the education of the Indians in Canada, and they are unanimously of the opinion that the education has been beneficial to the Indians, and particularly to those who are living in what might be described as the more civilized sections of Canada. Where children living in the more remote districts are taken to points hundreds of miles distant and placed in residential schools, going back after their school term to the wilder parts of Canada to make their living by the chase, the results are not so satisfactory as in the case of those living in the more settled parts of the dominion. I am told by the church authorities particularly that on the part of children of former pupils of the residential schools there is a noticeable difference in the ability to absorb education; that is to say, the second generation attending school show more evidence of benefit than the first.

Mr. MacINNIS: May I ask the minister if there is any government inspection of assisted schools?

Mr. MURPHY: Yes, the Indian schools are inspected by the various public school inspectors throught Canada with the exception of British Columbia and New Brunswick in which provinces the department employ its own inspectors.

Mr. MacINNIS: In regard to relief assistance for needy Indians on the reserves, is there any definite schedule of relief?

Mr. MURPHY: No, there is no definite schedule, because as the hon. member will realize the conditions on all the reserves are not the same, and the supplies that it may be necessary to furnish to the Indians in Ontario might vary considerably from the supplies necessary in British Columbia. The agents of course use their judgment in furnishing those supplies to the Indians who are in need, whether it be food, fuel, clothing or medical services.

Mr. MacINNIS: May I put my question in another form? Suppose an individual or a family on a reservation applies for assistance, is there in British Columbia a definite schedule that applies in all cases?

Mr. MURPHY: There is no definite schedule of supplies, but the agent is under certain limitations as to the supplies he may purchase for those in need.

Mr. VALLANCE: There is a matter that I wish to take up with the minister, and I am wondering which of these four items he would wish me to bring it up on, item 184 dealing with Indians, or the item dealing with the government of the Northwest Territories, item 187, or item 189, government of the Yukon Territory, or item 190 dealing with dominion lands and parks. These are the only four items that I can find in the estimates, apart from the Department of the Interior, which the minister will be bringing before the committee. I have already drawn to the attention of the minister the fact that I wish to discuss on the floor of the house the matter of the old R.N.W.M.P. property in the old town of Battleford, and I should like to know on which item I should bring up this question.

Mr. MURPHY: That item would be properly discussed when the estimates of the Department of the Interior are before the committee. We are dealing now with the Department of Indian Affairs, which is a separate department from the Department of the Interior, although the same minister is in charge of both departments. I suggest to the hon. member that the matter might be properly discussed under the item dealing with dominion lands and parks.

Mr. VALLANCE: There is no other item in the interior department that it would come under?

Mr. MURPHY: It can be discussed when the interior department estimates are before the committee.

Mr. VALLANCE: Under the item for dominion lands and parks?

Mr. MURPHY: Yes, dominion lands and parks being one branch of that department.

Mr. VALLANCE: Very well.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I see in the annual report of the Department of Indian Affairs for 1934, at page 22, this paragraph:

> The north shore.—Along the north shore of the gulf of St. Lawrence, the Indians have been taking a marked interest in the fishing industry. At Mingan, Natashkwan, Romaine, St. Augustin and Moisie, the fishing is under departmental supervision. Salmon and cod are the principal marketable fish, and are a source of considerable income to the Indians.

I would like to know what comes under the heading of departmental supervision of the fishing that is done by the Indians? What kind of supervision does the department exercise, how many Indians are interested in this fishing, and what is the considerable income that they derive from it?

Mr. MURPHY: The supervision that is given in this case would be given by the Indian agents. I am sorry I am unable to give any figures to the hon. member as to the results of the catch or as to the amount earned by the Indians by this fishing, but I shall be pleased to obtain any figures that are available and give them to the hon. member. I am sorry I do not have them here.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Would the minister let me know if those timber limits in the Bersimis reserve have been leased recently? I mean those timber limits which were under the control of the Brown corporation some years ago and were giving some revenue to the Indian fund.

Mr. MURPHY: I am unable to give an answer at the moment.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I know that the leases were operated by that company some years ago, but now nobody is operating them. Another question I would like to ask the minister is whether any roads were built last year or are intended to be built this year at Bersimis, Mingan or at Seven Islands, within the limits of those reserves?

[Mr. Murphy.]

Mr. MURPHY: An item of $1,000 has been provided for the completion of the main road in the Bersimis agency. It was started this year, and $200 is provided for repairs to three bridges.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Are there any other roads to be built in the reserves in the county of Charlevoix-Saguenay, in the Mingan reserve, at Bersimis or Seven Islands?

Mr. MURPHY: No.

Mr. CASGRAIN: May I ask if the agent at Mingan has been replaced by a permanent appointee? Last year there was an advertisement of the civil service commission calling for the appointment of an agent there.

Mr. MURPHY: The present agent at Mingan is M. G. Hamilton.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Has he been definitely appointed?

Mr. MURPHY: I am informed that no permanent appointment has yet been made.

Mr. CASGRAIN: When will it be made?

Mr. MURPHY: It is in the hands of the civil service commission at the moment.

Mr. REID: Have any leases been granted in the Semiahmoo reserve?

Mr. MURPHY: I have not that information before me but to the best of my recollection no lands have been disposed of there, though I speak subject to correction.

Mr. REID: I wish the minister would look it up. Two years ago I urged that no further leases should be granted from that reserve. It is the intention ultimately to use part of the reserve for a park in conjunction with the park on the American side of the line. Individuals have been trying to obtain leases for building lots and I have urged that no further leases be granted there. I should like the minister to obtain the information, because I have been informed that there have been at least two more leases granted.

Mr. MURPHY: I have no recollection of any leases of land granted in that district but I shall be pleased to get the information.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Did the minister last year receive a letter from the Indian chief at Seven Islands and from other persons regarding certain complaints about the treatment he had received in hospital in Quebec? Last year I submitted a letter to the department and there was to be an investigation, but I have not heard anything further since that time.

Mr. MURPHY: Was the letter addressed to myself or to the department?

Mr. CASGRAIN: To the department.

Mr. MURPHY: I am informed that the matter was investigated by the department through the agent.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Has there been any report regarding the accusations made at that time? There were some serious complaints against the agent and the request was made for an investigation.

Mr. MURPHY: I am informed that an investigation was carried out and the report is in the hands of the department.

Mr. CASGRAIN: May I have a copy of the report?

Mr. MURPHY: Certainly.

Mr. VALLANCE: On page 77 of the estimates, giving the details of civil government, I notice towards the bottom of the column provision for one packer and helper, $1,300. What function does this packer and helper perform in the Department of Indian Affairs? What does he pack and whom does he help?

Mr. MURPHY: He is engaged in the packing of supplies for the various agencies—such supplies as stationery, school requirements and so on.

Mr. VALLANCE: Is he a resident of Ottawa?

Mr. MURPHY: Yes.

Mr. VALLANCE: There is another item —confidential messenger. To what Indian is he confidential messenger?

Mr. HANBURY: And who is the Indian?

Mr. MURPHY: He is confidential messenger to the department at Ottawa.

Mr. VALLANCE: To the minister?

Mr. MURPHY: To the department, not to the minister.

Mr. VALLANCE: I see provision for a director of medical services, $5,100. How many medical men are under the supervision of this officer?

Mr. MURPHY: The director of medical services has a very important duty to perform. The health of the Indians in Canada is under his direction and responsibility, under the minister. As regards the number of medical men throughout the country, I cannot give any information offhand, but it would be considerable. There are 112,000 or 115,000 Indians in Canada, scattered from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and some having habitation in the northwest territories. In the circumstances the hon. member will understand that it is necessary for us to avail ourselves of the services of a great many medical men. It would be easy to ascertain the number.

Mr. VALLANCE: How many men have been added to the staff in the last three years? Does this medical supervisor report to the department, and, if so, is his report available to the house to show his findings in regard to the general health of the Indians throughout the country?

Mr. MURPHY: I cannot give the exact number of medical men who may have been added to the department in the last three years, and I am not clear in my mind as to what the hon. gentleman meant.

Mr. VALLANCE: It is obvious what I mean.

Mr. MURPHY: Just a moment. As to whether the number have been augmented in the last three years, I do not think we have any more now than we had three or four years ago, with the exception of one or two. We did appoint a man for a very special duty, namely, to make a survey of the trachoma situation in Canada, but the numbers in general have not been increased. I doubt whether we have any more now than we had three or four years ago; the number would be approximately the same. As to the reports of the director of medical services, the hon. member will find them in the annual report. They are available to him at any time as a member of the house.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Has the minister given an explanation of the increase of $320,000?

Mr. MURPHY: Yes, I have, but I shall be glad to give it again.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I shall see it to-morrow in Hansard. With regard to supplies of coal at the Blackfoot reserve, Alberta, what was the total cost in the seasons of 1933, 1934 and 1935?

Mr. MURPHY: The total supplies of coal for that agency for all purposes are obtained from a mine on the reserve, and the coal is mined by Indians.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I want to find out how much it cost in 1933, 1934 and 1935.

Mr. MURPHY: I have not that information before me but I shall be glad to get it.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Are all the Indian agents in the Northwest territories medical men?

Mr. MURPHY: They are all medical men, although I should supplement my answer by saying that at the present time Doctor Bourget, who is situated near Great Slave lake, has found it necessary on account of illness to come out for a time, and it may be necessary to replace his services.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What is the total amount of grant to the Indian school at the Blackfoot reserve? There are two schools there, one at Cluny and the other at Gleichen. Is it the same grant for each school or does it differ?

Mr. MURPHY: In this reserve there are two residential schools, the Crowfoot, with seventy-five pupils and a per capita grant of $149, and the Old Sun's, with a pupilage of one hundred and a per capita grant of $149.

Mr. PARENT: I note that in the estimate for Indian Affairs $320,000 is asked in excess of last year's amount, and I also note that the estimate covers bridges, roads and other necessary works. May I ask the minister whether there is any appropriation for the upkeep and repairs of bridges on the road across the Indian reserve in the township of Doncaster, county of Terrebonne, province of Quebec? During the last two years correspondence has been exchanged with the department and the reply has been that there was no appropriation. As there is $320,000 more for next year, will the Department of Indian Affairs during the winter take care of the road crossing that Indian reserve and have the bridges repaired so that there will be no further accidents?—because some took place last year.

Mr. MURPHY: There is in the estimates no appropriation for work on the road in question.

Mr. PARENT: This is a public road about fourteen miles in length. It was built more than twenty years ago, and seven or eight years ago an agreement was made between the provincial government and the Department of Indian Affairs whereby each was to spend about $9,000, so that $18,000 was spent between the two governments. That was to repair and build bridges on the road from the parish of Ste. Lucie through the parish of La Merci in the county of Montcalm. The road has been in fairly good condition for six or seven years. Since this government has been in power, it has been very difficult to have the road kept in good repair and accidents have taken place. I think some action has been taken against the government. It was claimed by the department that the road was not a public one, but it is a question whether a road that has been built and maintained and on which bridges have been constructed in conjunction with the provincial government, is a public one or not.

There was also a reply given by the department stating that the road into the parish of La Merci in the county of Montcalm had not been repaired. That was used as an argument by the department for not spending any more money on that road. But last year the provincial government spent the necessary amount of money to put its part of the road right through for about sixteen miles into perfect condition. The last reply we had from the Department of Indian Affairs was that the road was to be closed and signs were to be put at each end of it stating that it was not a public road and that the public using it did so on their own responsibility. I think that is a very bad step to take. The road to my personal knowledge has been open to the public for the past twenty years, and I think the necessary appropriation should be made and the road given proper attention. It is divided into three sections; one into the county of Montcalm in the parish of La Merci; a section of ten miles into the Indian reserve, and then about four or five miles into the parish of Ste. Lucie in the county of Terrebonne. Therefore each of the three parties is bound to keep its own sections in order that the public may not suffer from having a very bad road, especially in the winter when the road is blocked by snow. I am asking the minister to give his attention to the matter.

Mr. MURPHY: As the hon. member has stated, there has been certain correspondence about the road in question. I am informed by officers of the department that there is only one Indian family living on the reserve. While I believe it is true, as the hon member has stated, that this road is a public one, that is, it serves the people surrounding the reserve, allowing them to travel from one place to another, I can only repeat what I said a moment ago: no appropriation has been made in the estimates for the road in question, I shall be pleased, however, as requested by the hon. member, to give the matter my attention.

Mr. PARENT: I thank the minister.

Mr. JACOBS: The minister a few minutes ago said that the Indian population of this country was from 112,000 to 115,000. Does that comprise those who are wards of the government unemancipated, or all the Indians in the country, those emancipated and otherwise?

Mr. MURPHY: Those who are classed as Indians as defined by the act; that is to say, those who have become enfranchised are not classified as Indians after that action has been taken.

Mr. JACOBS: Indians who are wards of the government live on reserves in different parts of the country. Do I understand that missionary supervision is provided for all those reserves?

Mr. MURPHY: That depends on the missionary zeal of the various churches. I may say though that in practically every part of Canada the Indians are receiving religious instruction from various denominations. It may be that in some of the remoter parts of Canada they are not receiving religious instruction. If there are such I am not aware of it, because the department is continually receiving letters from the various denominations from every part of Canada. From my personal knowledge of the last four or five years I think it can be generally stated that the Indians throughout Canada are receiving religious instruction.

Mr. JACOBS: That is they are attached to various Christian denominations, as I understand. Has the government anything to do with the allocation of those Indians to the various denominations? Do they settle which are to be Roman Catholics and which are to be continuing Presbyterians or United Church and so on?

Mr. MURPHY: The Indian exercises freedom of choice the same as the white man. He may select his own church.

Mr. JACOBS: But he has not the freedom of exercising the franchise while he is a ward of the government.

Mr. MURPHY: Only when he becomes enfranchised.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): A little while ago the minister informed the committee that the expenditures in respect to schools on the Blackfoot reserve in eastern Alberta were $149 per head. Are there any other expenses in connection with those two schools? If so, what are they?

Mr. MURPHY: I find that the sum of $200 is allocated for a windmill at the Old Sun's school and $1,400 to be used for the erection of a henhouse, pig pen, silo, and for paint for the buildings and barns.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): These expenditures are in respect to the Old Sun's school?

Mr. MURPHY: Those I have just mentioned, yes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Are there any for the Cluny school?

Mr. MURPHY: There is no specific item in the estimates for the school in question, although we have a general item on which we draw for the purposes of general repairs and such things.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Have any requests been received during the year for additional expenditures in respect of the Cluny school?

Mr. MURPHY: Yes, I am informed that there have been.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What were they?

Mr. MURPHY: I am informed that last year there was a fire in the school, and that some $1,500 was spent during the fiscal year 1934-35 on repairs, and that certain other repairs have been requested, which are being taken care of out of the general item that I mentioned a moment ago.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I be assured by the minister that they will be taken care of?

Mr. MURPHY: All necessary repairs will be attended to.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): We shall see next year.

Mr. CASGRAIN: How many Indians were enfranchised, if any, in the district of Charlevoix-Saguenay?

Mr. MURPHY: None.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Could the minister tell us if the Indian fund, which belongs to the Indians and out of which they are supposed to receive grants, has been depleted or increased within the last year?

Mr. MURPHY: At the beginning of the fiscal year the total to the credit of the Indian trust fund was $13,580,007.18. At the end of the fiscal year it stood at $13,602,564.74—a slight increase.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Where did the increase come from—interest earned, or new sources of revenue?

Mr. MURPHY: It would come from general sources such as sales of timber, possibly sales of land; and in addition it might be augmented by the interest credited by the dominion government at the rate of five per cent per annum, which may not all be used or distributed among the Indians.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Were there any sales of land or timber on the north shore of the St. Lawrence river?

Mr. MURPHY: I can assure the hon. member that there was no sale of land. I would have to ascertain if there were sales of timber or any other resources.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Has the department received any requests for leases of timber limits of which I spoke a few minutes ago in the Bersimis district?

Mr. MURPHY: The officials have made a note of that request. I have not the information now but I shall be glad to get it.

Mr. EULER: May these Indians leave the reserves and become regular citizens of Canada with voting privileges?

Mr. MURPHY: They are free agents, that is to say there is no law which compels an Indian to remain on the reserve. He may leave the reserve and still be classed as an Indian, or he may apply to the department to become enfranchised, which action is taken if after investigation it is thought proper to do so. If he becomes enfranchised then he has the privilege of voting.

Mr. EULER: Are the Indians showing a tendency to leave the reserves and become assimilated with the rest of the population, and if so to what extent?

Mr. MURPHY: In the eleven months of the present fiscal year thirty-one have been enfranchised. Adding the twenty-seven dependents makes a total of fifty-eight enfranchised during those eleven months.

Mr. EULER: Is the Indian population on the reserves increasing or decreasing, or does it remain stationary?

Mr. MURPHY: Generally the number of Indians is increasing, with possibly very few exceptions in certain reserves. The Indian population is increasing at about the rate of one thousand a year.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: As the minister is aware, the Indian department have been putting up certain parcels of Indian lands for sale by auction from time to time and by arrangement with the Indians their wards. During the abounding years of 1926, 1927, 1928, when land prices were very buoyant a quantity of such land between File Hills Indian agency and the town of Hubbard on the Black Bear reserve was sold to white settlers, who now find great difficulty in paying either the interest or the principal. It has occurred to me that possibly these settlers might have the benefit of the legislation that is available to those who purchased land from other vendors such as the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Hudson's Bay Company and many private vendors, and even from the Indian department themselves. These lands now are priced very much lower than they were in those earlier years, and I was wondering if anything could be done with respect to the principal owing on these lands and also in regard to the interest, which I think is six per cent. These payments are being defaulted. As my hon. friend knows, crops have not been too good and prices for all farm products have been simply terrible. Has any particular policy been adopted by the department that would give these settlers the opportunity of rearrangement that other settlers may enjoy who bought from vendors other than the Department of Indian Affairs?

Mr. MURPHY: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has raised a question which has given the department and myself a great deal of concern. As he has stated these lands were sold to white settlers, but in the first instance they could be sold only after a proper surrender had been given by the Indian owners. In consenting to the surrender the Indians themselves laid down the terms and conditions under which they were prepared to surrender their rights in the lands; consequently the crown acts as a trustee for the Indians in those sales. I take it that of itself the department has no power to vary the terms laid down by the Indians in regard to the surrender, but last session parliament in its wisdom passed a measure known as the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, of which the farmers are availing themselves to a great extent. Settlers who purchased Indian land, I have been informed, are in the same position as other settlers who purchased land from white people or from companies. Therefore the purchaser of Indian land has the same recourse open to him that is open to other settlers throughout Canada.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That would seem to be quite satisfactory, provided that the same machinery is available in each case. I suppose the same courts will deal with both cases, that the same facilities will be available and that the possibility of reducing the rate of interest will be the same in every case. I realize that the government is acting as the guardian of the Indians and that these sales have been made under agreement as to price, but there is no reason why the Indian would not be as reasonable as any other person. At the present time he is agreeing to sell similar land at a much lower price, and I think if the matter were presented to him as a creditor, like other creditors, he would possibly agree to a lower price which would correspond with the prices being received under the sales taking place at the present time, as well as a lower rate oof interest. I can see no di..culty in that. The Indian may say a bargain is a bargain, and of course that is so, but in the years from 1927 to 1929 many bargains were made that it is simply impossible to carry out. Many of these settlers have put their all into the improvement of these lands. They have erected houses. A good many of them of course are log houses, nevertheless it has taken a good deal of labour to put them up, together with the necessary outbuildings. This is largely wooded land, and a great deal of clearing has taken place. These settlers have every dollar they own invested in their land, and they simply cannot pay those high prices. My hon. friend is a reasonable man; he understands the conditions which exist among both the white settlers and the Indians. I do not think he would find very much difficulty in making such rearrangements as I have mentioned. But if these settlers can take advantage of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act and possibly secure a reduction of their debt if the circumstances warrant it, all would seem to be well. Can the minister see anything that would make it difficult or impossible to achieve this result? I think the difficulty largely disappears if these settlers are put in the same category as other purchasers of land from vendors other than the government.

Mr. MURPHY: To answer the first question of my hon. friend I would say that I do see some difficulty in asking the Indians voluntarily to make settlements with those who purchased the lands in question. I think the hon. member will realize that each case must be dealt with on its merits, just the same as though the settler had purchased the land from a white person or a company. All cases are not the same. Some purchasers may have almost paid for their land in full; they may have kept up their interest payments, while others may have allowed their interest to accumulate. There will not be two cases exactly alike; each case would have to be considered by the Indians on its merits. If it were merely a question of reducing the price of the land or of reducing the interest, a matter on which a general judgment could be given, that might be accomplished, but certainly these cases will not be all alike. Each case will be like a matter coming before a judge and jury; it will have to be decided on its merits. That is why I think the second alternative would be much better, namely that the purchasers of Indian land avail themselves of the provisions of the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, just as is done by the purchasers of land from others than Indians.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I think that is reasonable. If there is a good settler on a piece of good easily cleared land, a man who has been making his payments, of course the assumption is that he will be able to make the rest of the payments. On the other hand another settler, due to different causes, may have gone behind; he may have made no payments, or very few. I do not know which of these men would get the better treatment. I could imagine that the official receiver might consider the man who was pretty well paid up should receive the better adjustment, because he would have the best chance of eventually paying whatever figure is arrived at. On the other hand sometimes a man gets away behind through no fault of his own, and there may be a disposition to be a little hard on him. I recognize that the merits or demerits of each case must in the main be the basis of the arrangement. I do not know that I can take any exception to that, but I would urge the minister to facilitate these arrangements in every possible way. I have seen some of the correspondence between the department and some of these purchasers of land. Sometimes, you know, when you read an official letter in black and white it sounds very harsh and exacting. The settlers are supposed to come through with their payments, but they have nothing to come through with. I hope that at least some nicer official letters will be sent to them holding out some hope of adjustment downwards, because they are now hanging on by their eyelashes and toe-nails just wondering what is going to happen next. Here is a government exercising supervision over this matter, and teaching ethics in business to other people, although it would seem they are not practising very nice ethics themselves. That is the way they reason. Of course, we will have to wait until we see how this matter turns out in practice, but if the same privileges were freely given these settlers as are given to others I believe the difficulty would be removed. I do not believe the Indians themselves will throw anything in the way of a rearranged valuation of such lands. I have found that if Indians believe other people are playing on the up and up they also will play on the up and up. The Indian boys who are farming on the same reserve also have difficulty in making ends meet, and have no doubt little trouble would be experienced in bringing about any compromise which may be necessary to meet the exigencies of the situation in general and each case in particular. I thank the minister for his interpretation of the position, and we will now have to await events. I hope the minister, as Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, will make public his interpretation, and the interpretation of the Minister of Finance on the same subject.

Mr. JACOBS: Is there any particular disease from which the Indians on reservations suffer? I understand that in olden days many Indians suffered from tuberculosis. Could the minister tell us about their health in these days, when new treatments are being adopted.

Mr. MURPHY: When the Indian first came in contact with the white man and contracted the white man's diseases he was found to be extremely susceptible to them. and once having contracted them the mortality rate was very high. Through the years, however, the Indian has developed resistance to the diseases common to the white man, and that while tuberculosis and certain other ailments are prevalent among them, we are assured by our officials who have charge of the health of Indians that there is a marked improvement in their general health.

Mr. DUPUIS: I should like to learn from the minister how much of the $4,260,000 is spent in the province of Quebec, in Ontario and in the other provinces. Following that I should like him to tell me how much is being spent at the Caughnawaga reserve in the county of Laprairie?

Mr. MURPHY: The amount is divided among the various provinces as follows:

Prince Edward Island	$ 10,110
Nova Scotia	143,234
New Brunswick	110,464
Quebec	379,931
Ontario	774,969
Manitoba	417,930
Saskatchewan	599,843
Alberta	564,791
British Columbia	920,888
Northwest Territories	128,521
Yukon	41,160

Mr. DUPUIS: Could the minister tell what amount is to be spent at the reservation at Caughnawaga, and what proportions will be spent for irrigation, dwellings, agricultural activities, dyking and education?

Mr. MURPHY: For the Caughnawaga reservation we have estimated expenditures as follows:

Administration	$ 3,465
Medical services	11,650
Relief	40,000
Roads, drainage, bridges and so on	1,800

Mr. DUPUIS: Nothing for bridges.

Mr. MURPHY: Yes, the last item is for drainage, roads, bridges and other expenditures.

Mr. DUPUIS: But there is nothing for bridges.

Mr. MURPHY: Yes, it is included in the $1,800.

Mr. DUPUIS: May I tell the minister that at that point there is no bridge to be built or maintained and that for that reason I conclude no money will be spent for bridges.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): They burned their bridges.

Mr. DUPUIS: Yes, as the hon. member for Bow River has said, I suppose they have burned their bridges. In previous sessions I asked the minister to place in his estimates an amount sufficient to cover the installation of a water system in the reservation. A high percentage of the mortality in the reservation has been due to lack of hygienic conditions, the inhabitants having to get their water from the river. I have asked him further, to provide an amount for the rebuilding or the repairing of the hospital, which in fact is only an old stone building. At no place do I see any evidence of anything being done to implement the requests I have made.

Prior to last year the agent in the reservation was a gentleman named Lorenzo Letourneau. I do not know any man better qualified than he was to perform the duties he had to perform there. He is a highly educated gentleman with a large experience in municipal affairs, and moreover Mr. Letourneau not only fulfilled the functions of agent but the additional functions of distributing the relief in the whole reserve. For some unknown reason he was put out and there was appointed in his stead, without any public advertising of the position in my riding of Laprairie-Napierville, which should have been done in the normal course, a gentleman from the county of Two Mountains, the constituency of my hon. friend the Postmaster General. I have nothing to say against the gentleman who was appointed, but I can certainly say this, that Mr. Letourneau had nobody superior to him to fill that position. It is true that when Mr. Letourneau was retired and this gentleman from Two Mountains was appointed, the Department of Indian Affairs also gave him a deputy or assistant agent, if I may call him such, who performed the functions of distributing relief in the Indian reserve of Caughnawaga. So to replace Mr. Letourneau they were obliged to appoint two men. Moreover, if I am well informed, they increased the salary of the Indian agent and gave a very high salary to the assistant agent. In view of the need for economy I am sure the hon. minister will agree with me when I say, without any undue reflection on the present administration, that certainly the government have no money to throw in the river, even in the St. Lawrence; but instead of keeping Mr. Letourneau, who carried out the functions of Indian agent and relief agent, the government appointed in his place two men, one head agent at a higher salary and an assistant agent at a very big salary.

I would like to know from the minister what the reason was for retiring Mr. Letourneau on pension and replacing him with these other two gentlemen. What is incomprehensible is this, that whereas it was the usual thing whenever there was a change of administration in Ottawa and a vacancy occurred in this position, for the government to appoint as agent a citizen of the riding in which the reserve was situated in this case they appointed a gentleman from the riding of Two Mountains, in the county of my hon. friend the Postmaster General. I assume that the minister will reply that this position was filled by promotion. He may say that the agent being unable to perform his duty was retired on pension and replaced by a superior officer from another part of the country. But in answer to that let me say that to justify themselves the administration will have to prove that Mr. Letourneau was unable to carry out his duties. Although he had asked for help from the Department of Indian Affairs they gave him only a subagent or assistant agent, and then when the department finally retired Mr. Letourneau they concluded that the work he was doing required the services of two officers, so they appointed another gentleman with an assistant from another part of the country. The Department of Indian Affairs never offered any additional help to Mr. Letourneau, although he was strenuously overworked, and finally he was compelled by the department to retire on pension.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that in the circumstances an injustice has been done to that agent, unless the minister can explain satisfactorily why he was let out and another gentleman from Two Mountains appointed in his stead, with an assistant agent.

Before I resume my seat I would remind the minister of a petition that he must have received from his own supporters in the riding of Laprairie-Napierville, or if he did not receive it, at all events the petition was sent to the Prime Minister from the Conservatives in the riding of Laprairie-Napierville protesting very strongly against the appointment of a gentleman from outside the riding to the position of Indian agent. They claim that it was contrary to the custom, and insist that if the department was justified in relieving Mr. Letourneau he should have been replaced by a citizen of the county of Laprairie-Napierville.

To summarize I would like to know from the minister if anything has been done to improve the relief system in the Caughnawaga reserve; has anything been done to improve the hospital situation; is there any amount in the estimates for repairing the hospital, and finally what was the reason for retiring Mr. Letourneau and taking on in his place a gentleman from the county of Two Mountains?

Mr. MURPHY: I find that there is an item of $200 in the estimates for the reconstruction of a bridge over the river Suzanne at St. Isidore which is in the Caughnawaga Indian agency. In regard to the hospital about which the hon. gentleman has asked a question, it is not a departmental but a private institution. Over the years the department has assisted those in charge of the hospital in many ways, by cash grants and also by providing repairs and assisting in different directions in order that the hospital might fulfil its function. In fact, a very large sum has been spent by the department on this hospital.

Mr. DUPUIS: What is the amount this year?

Mr. MURPHY: There is nothing in the estimates for it this year. As regards the administration of the reserve, I stated a short while ago the amount of money we have placed in the estimates fort it: $3 465 for administration; $11,650 for medical services; $40,000 for relief; $1,800 for drainage, bridges and so on. I visisted the Caughnawaga reserve and met the former agent Mr. Letourneau, who lived at Ste. Constant, a village some twelve miles distant, where he carried on his private business as well as acting as Indian agent for the reserve. I agree with the hon. member's remarks regarding Mr. Letourneau; I found him a very estimable gentleman. But that is not the point. The point is the proper administration of the reserve—and I did not say that it was improperly administered under Mr. Letourneau. But when the department is spending the amounts of money which are spent annually on that reserve, I think the hon. member will agree that it is a full time job; and Mr. Letourneau, having his private business to attend to, did not give his full time to the reserve, spending only two days a week there.

Mr. DUPUIS: Was he ever required to give his full time to that work? If so, did he refuse?

Mr. MURPHY: Not to my knowledge. But I consider that the administration of this reserve requires the services of a full time agent, and I may say that this is not the only reserve in Canada which demands the services of a full time man and which is not receiving it at the present time. Mr. Letourneau was retired, not because of any fault found with his services but in order that a better administration might be brought about. He had reached the retiring age, being sixty-seven or sixty-eight, and he was not in good health.

Mr. DUPUIS: Did he ever complain?

Mr. MURPHY: Not to my knowledge. The civil service commission were requested by the department to reclassify the agency, and on recommendation this was done and a promotional competition was held, which under the circumstances was, I think, the correct procedure. As a matter of fact that is what the civil servants of Canada state as one of the cardinal points of their policy, namely, that promotions should be held within the service wherever possible in order that those in the service may be encouraged in their work. The promotional competition was held by the commission and the present agent was appointed by the commission, not by the department, as stated by the hon. member. He has been provided with the services of a clerk, not an assistant agent, who is receiving $1,080 per annum; and under the present arrangement, with which I entirely agree, we expect to have a better administration of that reserve.

Mr. DUPUIS: What was the salary of Mr. Letourneau when he was pensioned, and what is the salary of the gentleman who is now agent in his stead?

[Mr. Murphy.]

Mr. MURPHY: The former agent received $1,380 plus $300 allowance, making a total of $1,680. The present agent receives $2,100 per annum.

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE

To provide subsidies for wrecking plants, Quebec and British Columbia, $40,000.

Mr. DUPUIS: How much of this is for Quebec and how much for British Columbia?

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): This appropriation is for subsidizing wrecking plants, one at Quebec and one at Victoria. The division between the two companies has not yet been made. I might say to my hon. friend that the department has had a ten year contract with the Pacific Salvage Company, Limited, for a subsidy of $10,000 a year. This contract will expire in July next. We have had a yearly contract with the Quebec Salvage Company Limited for a subsidy of $30,000. This contract will expire next April. These subsidies are given in order to assure a perfect salvage service on the St. Lawrence and below the gulf by the Quebec Salvage Company and a similar service on the Pacific coast by the Pacific Salvage Company.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Would the minister tell the committee whether the Pacific Salvage Company at Victoria have made application for a renewal of the contract?

Mr. DURANLEAU: They have made application not only to renew the contract but to get a larger grant for years to come. We are now asking the committee to vote only $40,000, because we do not think we should increase these subsidies for this year. I cannot at present tell what will be the division between the two companies. The Quebec Salvage Company Limited is insisting on getting at least the $30,000 voted and paid to it every year so far and is asking for more. On the other hand the Pacific Salvage Company Limited is also asking for more. I might tell my hon. friend that the Foundation Salvage Company, which has a plant at Halifax during the winter and also a small plant at Father Point during the summer, is asking for a subsidy. No decision has yet been reached as to what will be granted to the different companies out of the $40,000.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): The reason I asked the question was that the Pacific Salvage Company prior to two years ago had a sub-station at Prince Rupert which is six hundred miles further north, and with the increase in shipping this is more needed now than it ever was before. At that time the subsidy was not big enough so that they had to take away the substation they had at Prince Rupert. As a consequence when anything happened to any boat on the northern coast around Prince Rupert they had to wait for the salvage boat to go the six hundred miles to the wreck. Therefore I would sincerely urge upon the minister that when the renewal is made, consideration be given to the distances on the Pacific coast, the increase in shipping and the necessity of having more than one boat. At the present time the boat is stationed at Victoria, and if anything happens up north they have to send for the boat and depend on Providence to remain afloat until the boat arrives. The subsidy should be increased for that service.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The Department of Marine realizes the importance of having on all our shores sufficient salvage plants to satisfy the needs of navigation, but on the other hand those private companies are doing a fairly good business, especially on the Pacific coast where the salvage company operates the whole year round. I must say that the Pacific Salvage Company claim a deficit in its operations last year. The Quebec Salvage Company claims a larger deficit. As the latter company is operating only seven or eight months of the year, it does less business than the other firm and thereby suffers greater loss. That is the reason why the Quebec Salvage Company was getting a larger subsidy for some years past. I think my hon. friend is mistaken when he says that the Pacific Salvage Company does not maintain a plant at Prince Rupert. I understand from the company that they are maintaining a plant there.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): It is a private concern that has a boat there, but there is no subsidy for it.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I understand that at Vancouver they have two tugs, the Helac 1 and the Helac 2. They have in addition three powerful floating derricks. I understand that they have at Prince Rupert a salvage station, with derricks, diving gear and general salvage equipment.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): It is a private company that has done salvage work and it used to do it under the direction of the Pacific Salvage Company, but I understand now that that company is not giving it any of the subsidy, so it is having quite a struggle to keep going.

Item agreed to.

Ocean and river service—

Miscellaneous and unforeseen expenses, $8,000.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): The session before last I put a question to the minister as to what was being done about deepening the harbour of Montreal. At that time the minister gave me a very satisfactory answer when he said that a board of engineers and experts from the department had been formed to study the deepening of the harbour of Montreal between that city and lake St. Peter. Since then I understand work has been carried on by this board of experts, but the situation in the port of Montreal towards the end of the summer season when the water level is very low is important. Can the minister give any information to the committee, the citizens of Montreal and the shipping interests as to what progress is being made in this work of deepening the channel in the harbour of Montreal?

Mr. DURANLEAU: As I told my hon. friend at that time, a board of engineers composed of experts of the marine, public works, railways and canals and interior departments was formed with the object of ascertaining the cause of the lowering of the level of the St. Lawrence and the means of remedying that situation. This board has held many sittings since last year. Field operations have been carried on during the whole season of navigation, and now for nearly a month they have been working on an interim report. That report on the water levels of the St. Lawrence and Montreal harbour, which will be a very important one, will be ready, I understand, probably within a week. I agree with my hon. friend when he says that work should be done to deepen Montreal harbour. I do not think that the harbour at Montreal has kept pace with the work done in the channel of the St. Lawrence. Within a few months, probably by June next, we shall have in the channel of the St. Lawrence a depth of at least 32½ feet clear at lowest water in the fall. They have not that depth in Montreal harbour. My intention is to try to carry out deepening works in Montreal harbour if the interim report of the board of engineers warrants it.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): Would that work be done by the department or by the Montreal harbour commission?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I hope the government will sponsor those works. I do not think the harbour commission of Montreal can carry them.

Item agreed to.

Radio service, to provide for the maintenance and construction of radio direction finding stations, radio beacons and radiotelegraph stations and the general administration of the provisions of the Radio Act and regulations throughout the dominion, $590,550.

Radio service, to provide for the suppression of local electrical interferences and for the issue of radio receiving licences, $263,038.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Stand. These go with radio.

Items stand.

To provide for the maintenance and repair of retaining dams in the St. Lawrence river, $100,000.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): What are these retaining dams?

Mr. DURANLEAU: This is for the maintenance and repair of the underwater dams which were built in 1928 and 1929 at the islands at Sorel. We have to maintain them at the proper level.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): Has the construction of these dams produced satisfactory results?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not want to anticipate the report of the board of engineers, but I think it has.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): They have been in existence for some time, have they not?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The Gibb report stated that there was five inches more water in the harbour of Montreal, and I think that the report of the board of engineers will perhaps go further. These dams were built during the years 1928, 1929 and 1930.

Mr. DUPUIS: Does the retaining wall at Beloeil and St. Hilaire come under this item, or under public works?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am pleased to tell my hon. friend that in front of Beloeil and St. Hilaire there is no retaining wall.

Mr. DUPUIS: For retaining electors.

Mr. DURANLEAU: These places are fine summer resorts where you can go canoeing or yachting or anything you like. There are no retaining walls.

Mr. DUPUIS: There was work done at Beloeil and St. Hilaire; what does the minister call that?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Well, where it was found necessary some protection walls were built, as in other places where the public road was falling into the river on account of the wash from navigation.

[Mr. Duranleau.]

Mr. DUPUIS: What amount has been spent at Beloeil and what amount at St. Hilaire?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Very small amounts, around $12,000 to $13,000 for Beloeil and $6,000 for St. Hilaire. I hope my hon. friend will not find any fault with those works, because they are very useful.

Mr. DUPUIS: No, not if they are useful.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): Would the hon. minister tell me if it is the intention of his department to pay for the damages caused by the construction of a dam at Ile aux Ours?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Mr. Chairman, if any claims are sent to the Department of Marine, they will be looked into and submitted to the Department of Justice and I can assure my hon. friend that justice will be done to the people who live in these islands.

Mr. DUPUIS (Translation): Are there any bears in these islands?

Item agreed to.

To provide for the investigation of water levels in the St. Lawrence river, $40,000.

Mr. DUPUIS: I understand that the level in the neighbourhood of Montreal and Laprairie is now so low that the people are rather afraid of what may come. Has the minister any information as to the cause of the low water level in the river, and is he able to assure the committee that the level will be raised? At Laprairie the water is so low that we can walk on the bed of the river for miles.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Members of the committee know that the water level in the rivers and the great lakes has gone down considerably in recent years.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Since 1930 when the Tories came into power. But now is their valedictory.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not know if there was a valedictory during the regime of my hon. friends, but this lowering started long before the election of 1930.

Mr. CASGRAIN: You were on the crest of the wave then.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I observe that the level of lake Ontario in certain years was lowered over four feet. This has happened all over the country. The board of engineers has been studying that problem and I understand that their interim report will deal with it, so I would not venture to say anything before their report is laid before the house.

Mr. DUPUIS: I want to call the attention of the minister to the danger of this situation, and to endeavour to induce him to hasten the matter. The town of Laprairie is suffering considerable damage through lack of water for fire protection and with respect to the water supply generally. I am sure the minister will admit that the situation must by the same in St. Lambert, Longueuil, Boucherville and all those towns and villages on the shore of the St. Lawrence. It is highly important that this matter should be dealt with without delay, and I would ask the minister to see that the officers who are investigating this situation submit their report at the earliest date possible. What would be the situation in Laprairie if a great fire should take place there? They have to go miles from the shore in order to get water. This is not a political question, and I ask that it be dealt with as soon as possible, because at any time we might have a conflagration in any of the towns on the shore of the river. I may add that the water supply of these communities is affected as well.

The minister said that the level of the river is becoming lower year after year, but he did not give the cause of that condition; he said he was awaiting the result of the investigation. I have been told that it is partly due to the fact that the Chicago drainage canal uses more water than that city is entitled to obtain under the international agreement. I should like to obtain the minister's opinion on that point, because the people living on the shore of the St. Lawrence river are very anxious to have this question settled.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The Department of Marine and the minister in charge are fully alive to the situation. We realize the importance of having sufficient water in the St. Lawrence for navigation and the other purposes mentioned by my hon. friend, but the situation cannot be remedied in a day or a month. I think what I have done by setting up a board of outstanding engineers from the different departments is commendable. This board has been working very hard for over a year.

Mr. DUPUIS: It takes a long time.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes. They have had to do field work; they have gathered data and information during the whole season of navigation, and they will continue their investigations next season. This information is of the utmost importance in preparing a report on which we will have to rely in making large expenditures to ameliorate the condition. I do not think it fair that I should be asked to give an opinion on the situation; I think I should await the report of the board before doing so.

Mr. DUPUIS: I just want to tell the minister that if he does not press this matter to a conclusion in the near future the people on the south shore will be able to cross the river on foot, and the bridges will not bring in any revenue. Then the minister's promise to make the bridges free will bring no result in the next election.

Mr. SULLIVAN: If they are Conservatives they will be welcome in Verdun and St. Ann.

Item agreed to.

Meteorological service, including magnetic observatory, grants of $450 each to Kingston and Montreal observatories and allowance of $360 to L. F. Gorman, observer at Ottawa, $360,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What is the reason for the increase?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The increase results from the extension of our operations in the western provinces.

Item agreed to.

Steamboat inspection, $133,072.

Mr. REID: I wonder if we could get a little explanation with regard to what the steamboat inspection consists of, what boats are inspected and who are the inspectors.

Mr. DURANLEAU: This appropriation is to provide for the inspection of steamboats in accordance with the provisions of part VII of the Canada Shipping Act. Under the provisions of that act the governor in council makes regulations for the testing of boilers, particularly as to their construction and working. It provides for the inspection of hulls, machinery and the equipment of steamboats, and also for the examination and certification of steamboat engineers. Further, it provides for the inspection of tackle used in loading and unloading ships, and the carrying out of the provisions of the convention for the safety of life at sea and the load lines convention.

Mr. REID: How many inspectors are there on the Pacific coast?

Mr. DURANLEAU: There are 45 employees in the branch.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What is the reason for the increase?

Mr. REID: The minister mentioned the inspection of tackle. I wonder if any such inspection is now taking place. Last year when the Canada Shipping Act was under discussion I appealed to the minister to have its provisions put into effect so that the inspection of tackle could be carried on at the port of New Westminster. The minister informed me that until the act was proclaimed an inspector could not be named for that port.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The act has not been put into force.

Mr. REID: A moment ago the minister told the committee that under this vote the inspection of tackle is carried on by the inspectors. I wonder if they really are inspecting tackle at this time. Where are the inspectors? At what ports are they located?

Mr. DURANLEAU: So far as tackle inspection is concerned the provisions will not be put into operation until the proclamation of the new act. There are seven inspectors on the west coast, namely: Mr. Robinson, Mr. Matthews, Mrs. Farrow, Mr. Stephen, Mr. Bryden, Mr. Sleigh and Mr. Edmonds. The six gentlemen first named are in Vancouver, and Mr. Edmonds is at Victoria.

Mr. REID: May I have the assurance of the minister that after the act has been proclaimed by the governor in council tackle inspectors will be appointed at the various ports? I am referring to those ports which have not been subject to the operations of a tackle inspector, and I have in mind particularly the port of New Westminster. Last Year 456 ocean going vessels reached that port. Those were vessels of between 7,000 and 9,000 tons, and no inspection of tackle took place. The minister now informs me no inspectors can be appointed until the shipping act has been proclaimed. Will an inspector be appointed for the port of New Westminster as soon as the act has been proclaimed by the governor in council?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am not in a position to tell the hon. member that a special inspector will be appointed for the port of New Westminster alone, but I can tell him that reasonable inspection will be made at that port, as is done at the ports of Victoria, Vancouver and Prince Rupert. It may be that the same inspectors would do the job at two places. When we apply the law we will see whether or not it is necessary to appoint a special inspector for the port of New Westminster, and if necessary such appointment will be made. At all events, reasonable inspection will be granted.

Mr. REID: I do not wish to hold up the proceedings of the committee, but I am anxious to get the information for which I am asking. At the ports of Vancouver and Victoria are there at the present moment any government inspectors inspecting the tackle on ships?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No, there are no special tackle inspectors, but there are steamboat inspectors.

Mr. SANDERSON: I should like the minister to explain the increase of $5,964.

Mr. DURANLEAU: This increase is for travelling expenses and a small increase of staff.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Because of the approaching election?

Mr. DURANLEAU: In order to give better service.

Mr. MacINNIS: Over a year ago regulations were drawn up providing for the inspection of tackle. Have those regulations not been put into effect?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No, they have not.

Mr. MacINNIS: What is the reason? When the estimates were under consideration last year the minister gave us to understand that it would be only a matter of a short time before the regulations would be put into effect. Why was that not done?

Mr. DURANLEAU: We are awaiting the proclamation of the act.

Mr. MacINNIS: Is it necessary that the act be proclaimed before an inspector is appointed for the port of Vancouver to inspect the tackle used in loading and unloading ships? Surely that is something which could be done, even if the shipping act were not in effect. Action could be taken under the old act.

Mr. DURANLEAU: My information is that effective action could not be taken under the old act.

Mr. MacINNIS: Were not the regulations approved by the department?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The department has drafted regulations which have been circulated among the shipping interests, the stevedores and ship workers, and we are awaiting the return of their suggestions.

Mr. MacINNIS: I think that is the answer I got last year, namely that the government were awaiting the approval of or suggestions from the shipping interests and the stevedores. How long must we wait before the regulations become effective?

Mr. DURANLEAU: As I stated previously, when the new act is proclaimed the regulations will be submitted to the governor in council for approval, and will then be put into effect.

Mr. NEILL: Is there not a provision in the shipping act amendment bill passed last year to the effect that certain sections alone could if necessary be made effective? I believe it is not necessary that the whole act be proclaimed. The governor in council could proclaim those sections which could not have much to do with international matters. As the hon. member for Vancouver South has said, we received the same answer last year. Apparently the minister has done with the regulations what we urged him to do with the bill to amend the shipping act. Hon. members suggested that before the bill was finally passed it should be circulated for the information of the interests concerned, so that we might receive the benefit of their suggestions. He did not accept our advice, preferring first to have the bill passed. We are now left in the air, without any act, or at least without any improvements.

Mr. DURANLEAU: It is the intention of the department to have certain parts of the act proclaimed before the spring.

Mr. NEILL: Before when?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Before the opening of navigation.

Item agreed to.

To appoint David Ballantyne Carswell as superintendent of the government shipyard at Sorel and superintendent of the dredging fleet at a salary of $8,000 per annum less such deduction as may be provided, $8,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Would the minister explain this item?

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): Could the minister tell me why Mr. Carswell's salary has been raised?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Mr. Chairman, in reply to my hon. friend from Berthier-Maskinongé, as I have already told him personally, the reason why Mr. Carswell will be appointed not only superintendent of the shipyard at Sorel but also superintendent of the dredging fleet is in order to reduce the cost of repairs. I am pleased to be able to state to this committee that since Mr. Carswell has been appointed acting superintendent of the shipyard at Sorel, we have reduced the cost of our repairs by over $100,000. He is an outstanding marine engineer and a first class superintendent.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Then give him ten per cent. Give him $10,000; he is worth it.

Mr. DURANLEAU: We felt that it would be in the best interests of the service if he was given power to survey the fleet during the whole season of navigation to see what repairs were necessary, to supervise the personnel and see that repairs were made to the fleet at the lowest possible cost.

Mr. SANDERSON: Following out that argument, the minister may say that if he had appointed two or three men he would have reduced the expenses just that much more.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Might I ask the minister one last question? Has the department considered the advisability of appointing a deputy minister to the department? This question has been hanging fire for about three years now, and the country is interested in knowing if a deputy minister will be appointed shortly.

Mr. DURANLEAU: If I remember well, last session in answer to the very same question of my hon. friend, I stated that the appointment of the heads of the department was the prerogative of the Prime Minister. So I think my hon. friend should direct his question to the Prime Minister. I am pleased to add that the public service has not suffered through there being no deputy minister in my department.

Mr. VENIOT: Then why appoint one?

Mr. CASGRAIN: We might as well save the money.

Mr. DURANLEAU: We have had the services of an assistant deputy minister and the minister has also done his share.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I know it.

Mr. DURANLEAU: And all the officials of my department have been very attentive to their duties, as I think my hon. friend will agree.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I pay tribute to them myself.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The department has been well administered without a deputy minister.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I am pleased to join with the minister in paying tribute to the officials of his department and himself, and my hon. friend knows that I mean it. But the minister has explained to-night that the administration of his department has not suffered at all from the fact that there has been no deputy minister in the past three years. In that case you might as well increase the salary of the acting deputy minister and of his first assistant, and why not do the same thing in the other departments? Here is one of the largest departments in the government, spending hundreds of thousands of dollars daily, and for three years it has got along without a deputy minister and things have been running smoothly, the minister says. We ought to know whether the time has not arrived when we should dismiss the idea of appointing a new deputy minister at all and get along with the services of the gentlemen who are now acting as deputy and assistant deputy. If they are giving good service their salaries might be increased and the position of deputy minister of the department abolished. If that is not the idea of the government, they should not delay any longer in deciding when the appointment is to be made. The Prime Minister has a program of reform, and he said that these reforms must start immediately. Well, this question has been hanging fire for the last three years, and each time I have asked the minister about it he has kindly and honestly said that it was the privilege of the Prime Minister to fill that office. But no doubt the advice of the minister also helps. The minister must give his opinion. The country is interested in knowing when this appointment is to be made. I am told that there are a good many candidates for the office and good officials, and the question is whether things are going to stay as they are, or if not, when is the vacancy to be filled?

Mr. SULLIVAN: It is very seldom, Mr. Chairman, that I take part in the discussions concerning the Department of Marine, but as the harbour at Montreal is in the riding which I have the honour to represent very humbly in this house, may I suggest to this country, because when a member speaks in this house he is speaking to the country at large, that it return at the next election the same Prime Minister, who will choose the same Minister of Marine who is now acting both as minister and deputy minister of his department with such great efficiency and such a saving to the country. He knows his department and is evidently a great administrator.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It is all very well to joke about this matter, but either the department needs a deputy minister or it does not. The present situation is almost a public scandal, not only with respect to this position but the other vacancies which are awaiting appointments. No one regrets the Prime Minister's illness more than I do and that he is not able to be present in the house, but if he were in his place I would say the same as I am saying now, and that is that the government are taking very grave chances, because, if one is any judge of what is about to happen, they will not be in power very long, and it means that they are going to place a group of eighteen or twenty individuals in jeopardy, and that is most unfair to the men they appoint. It is unfair also to the officials of the Department of Marine who have been waiting for three years for a deputy minister. It is in fact a flaunting of authority, as this government has been doing in every direction since it has taken control of public affairs in this country. It is a public disgrace the way these matters are being treated, and the Minister of Marine cannot explain it away by saying it is the business of the Prime Minister to make the appointment. True it is the business of the Prime Minister. As I say, no one regrets his illness more than I do, but now that the matter is up we might as well say what we think about it. If it is the intention to retain this position of deputy minister of the Department of Marine for some member whose riding the government does not want to take the chance of opening—we might as well talk plainly—then I say all the more disgrace. But that is the situation as it appears not only to this side of the house but to this country generally. Moreover, there are officials surely in the department who are quite efficient to take charge of the department, and if the present assistant deputy minister has been able to carry on as stated by the minister, then surely he has some claim on the position. It is all very well to joke about it, but it is really no joke. Either you need a deputy minister or you do not. If it is a case of keeping the position open for some member on the other side and the government is afraid to let him resign and open his constituency and have a by-election, then all the more reason I say why this government should appeal to this country at once

Mr. NEILL: The trouble extends beyond an individual deputy minister; the whole civil service is honeycombed with the same thing. Positions have been abolished, possibly with the idea of economy; but somebody has to take the place left vacant and we find that men are put on temporarily. But you cannot get good work out of a temporary man who is likely to be fired on a change of government or for some other reason. And another point to consider is that he is not contributing to the superannuation fund, so that by and by there will be a third of the service not contributing to it. It is not only one deputy minister here and there; it is the same thing right through the service down to some of the smaller officials. Every now and then the government says that all positions vacant at the moment will be abolished; but you are not abolishing a position if you have to fill it the next day. Some man is put on temporarily, receiving the regular salary, but he is not allowed to contribute to the superannuation fund. We find this everywhere—a man doing one man's job, a telegrapher, a doctor, and people of that kind. You must fill the job, and yet under the system that has been inaugurated these positions are left vacant. There must be scores of positions like that, and the morale and efficiency of the service are being destroyed. I am not talking about one man; I am speaking of the whole principle of leaving positions vacant, and I venture to say that if the various ministers asked their deputies frankly they would agree with me that it is demoralizing.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I consider that this raise of salary to $8,000 is unjustified. In 1911, a senior clerk was in charge of the yard and his salary amounted to $2,800, I think. Mr. Lacouture succeeded him and received the same remuneration. Mr. Jackson succeeded Mr. Lacouture with a salary of $3,000. I want to call your attention to the fact that at that time 800 men were employed. From 1921 to 1930, the average number of men at work in the shipyard of Sorel was 800. The position was filled by Mr. Baril and then by Mr. Bridges. The latter received a salary of $3,500, I believe, and it was afterwards raised to $4,000 and even to $4,500. And I must say to the house that at that time the yard was busy, all repairs to the ships of the government being done there, and up to 1,760 men were employed. Now only 400 are employed and the superintendent gets a raise of salary from $5,000 to $8,000, because the number of workers has dwindled from 1,760 to 400.

Besides, a bilingual man has always been in charge of the shipyard at Sorel. There, in the centre of the province of Quebec, they are putting in charge a certain Mr. Carswell who does not understand a word of French. I say it is ridiculous, it is an insult to the province of Quebec. I have protested and I protest most emphatically from my seat in this house, and I am against the salary increase given Mr. Carswell.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): How many men are employed in the yard, nowadays?

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): 407.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): How many ships are there?

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): There are no more.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Has the minister any answer to give us?

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): I may point out that there is at Sorel a government-owned fleet comprising several dredges and boats. These dredges and boats have not been repaired for several years. It is a matter for wonder that these boats have remained tied to the wharves, without anything being done to maintain or repair them, that they are not used, that they are not placed in commission throughout the year. None of the dredges have been placed in commission in 1933 or 1934. This year, the sum of $1,140,000 is to be expended and the same number of boats will be used as last year. If Mr. Carswell's salary is to be increased, he should be given more work to do. On the contrary, I hear that work that could be performed at that yard is given to private companies, such as the Joliette Steel Company and others.

I wonder why the interests of the department are not better looked after and why the French Canadians of the district of Sorel are not treated more justly. I have received protests from all parts of Richelieu, Berthier-Maskinongé and adjoining counties. People are asking why such a state of affairs is allowed to continue at Sorel. I have received numerous letters, even from colleagues, asking me to protest. I will read one:

Ottawa, March 5, 1935.

Mr. J. A. Barrette, M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

Re: Carswell, Superintendent of the Sorel Ship-yard

My Dear Colleague,—

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 28 regarding Mr. Carswell, superintendent of the Sorel ship-yard.

Your letter raises several points.

First, the question of salary, which, I presume, appertains to the minister, subject, of course, to the approval of the house, all grants being voted by the Commons.

Secondly, you say that Mr. Carswell is not bilingual. The minister must be unaware of this, for mindful as he is of the interests of his race and of his party, he would not tolerate such a thing. A large number of letters of protest apparently coming from members of the house would suffice to put an end to such a state of affairs.

Thirdly, you say he is a find of the minister's. My answer to that is that, under our democratic system, the ministers are chosen from among the members—a minister has to be a member either of the Commons or of the Senate—and the support of a majority of the house is necessary to form a cabinet. A minister may have his own opinion and ideas, but he must yield to the wish of the majority of the house expressed either verbally or by letter.

In France, as in England, a minister who refuses to accept the wish of the majority of the members of his district would be forced to withdraw. For my part, I have no hesitation in stating that I would abandon a party that departed from the principle of democratic representation as expressed to the minister by the members.

Believe me, my dear colleague,
Yours very truly,
(Signed) John A. Sullivan,
Member for Verdun-St. Ann.

I could read several more letters received from colleagues.

Mr. SULLIVAN (Translation): Do read them.

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): Read them.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): Name them.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): Here is, among others, one from Sir George Perley.

Ottawa, March 3, 1935.

Dear Mr. Barrette,—
I duly received yours of February 28th, in connection with the position of superintendent at the Sorel ship-yard.
The appointment to that position being a matter for the Marine department, I mentioned the matter to the Hon. Mr. Duranleau and forwarded your letter to him with the request that he communicate with you personally.
I beg to remain, dear Mr. Barrette,
Sincerely yours,
(Signed) George H. Perley.

I also received a letter of protest from the hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Laflèche).

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): A good Canadian!

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): A real patriot! Mr. Laflèche's letter reads as follows:

My Dear Colleague,—
Re Mr. Carswell
I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 28th, and I wish to state that I entirely agree with you in connection with this matter.

[Mr. Barrette.]

Furthermore, I shall be pleased to support any objections that you might raise concerning the appointment of this gentleman to the position mentioned by you.

Sincerely yours,
(Signed) F. J. Laflèche, M.P.,
Richmond-Wolfe, P.Q.

I also received a letter of protest from Mr. Onésime Gagnon, member for Dorchester.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): Read it.

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation):

My Dear Colleague,—
I am in receipt of your letter.
I am quite prepared to help you in so far as it is in my power.
Yours truly,
(Signed) O. Gagnon,
Member for Dorchester.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): It is not a very long letter.

Mr. RHEAUME (Translation): Let us have the opinion of the member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil).

Mr. BARRETTE (Translation): The member for Compton has not as yet had time to reply to my letter. I am waiting for his answer and I shall read it when I have another opportunity.

I feel that after all the protests on the part of members from the province of Quebec, the resolution confirming that increase of salary to $8,000 should not be passed and I strongly oppose such an action.

Mr. SULLIVAN: I do not know whether I should talk French or English, but I believe it is better for me to speak the language of the majority of the committee, although it might be easier for me to speak French which is the language I know best. The letter I sent to my hon. friend was not marked confidential. I did not expect it to be confidential nor that it would be read in the house. It proves once more that I have always been a champion of minorities in my province and in the whole of Canada.

Mr. BOUCHARD: Come with us..

Mr. SULLIVAN: My hon. friend says "Come with us." Of course I have belonged to the Conservative party for many years, and so far as I can remember and from reading history, from the days of 1774, from the constitutional acts of 1791, 1840, 1867, and right along, and if you like, from what has happened in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, I believe the Conservative party has always been the champion of minorities. But I am going a little far afield and I beg to be excused.

As a member of parliament I am getting $4,000 a year less ten per cent, and it costs me about $5,000 a year to live in Ottawa. The governor of the Bank of Canada gets $25,000 or $30,000 a year. I suppose he is a better man than I am and I presume a man should be paid what he is worth. My good friend the hon. member for St. Henri said to the minister "If this man saves $100,000 a year, give him $10,000; if he saves $200,000, give him $20,000; pay a man what he is worth." I believe in that principle.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Pay him what he is worth.

Mr. SULLIVAN: The hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé is a man who has always been faithful to his race. He has always upheld the principle of bilingualism. If this gentleman in question does not understand French, and in charge of men knowing and speaking only the French language, he should be removed. In Quebec, a man is not allowed to go on the bench if he does not understand French and English, and a man should not hold any position of government responsibility in Quebec if he does not speak and understand both languages. That is a principle I believe in. But to come back to my letter, what I said in it I believe in. It was not confidential, but was not intended to be made public; it was sent to my good friend the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé and I stand by what I said in it. I see across the aisle my good friend and ex-partner, the hon. member for Laurier-Outremont, one of the finest of men. He represents a great name and I know at the next election he is likely to be returned; with his name he cannot avoid it. But he is bilingual. When he came to this country he could speak only English. He has the advantage of having a great name; he belongs to a great family and now he can talk both languages. I hope this official in the Department of Marine, if he is going to get $8,000 a year, will learn French. That is my principle and will explain my letter.

Mr. VENIOT: When the question arose of this new appointment, because I believe it is actually a new one, at a salary of $8,000 a year, the minister was asked why this man was appointed. He stated that this man was appointed because they were making him permanent now on account of the saving he had made in the maintenance of the Sorel shipyard and matters connected with it. The minister ought to give us a further explanation. The hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé, speaking in French, has stated that not so much work is being done there; that fewer men are being employed than there were in past years, and that therefore there is not the same necessity for having such an expensive person in charge. Would the minister tell us what the expenditure has been since this man has been in charge? When did he take charge? Was it last year?

Mr. DURANLEAU: This man was appointed acting superintendent in October, 1933.

Mr. VENIOT: So that he has been in charge for over a year now?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes.

Mr. VENIOT: Would the minister inform the committee what number of vessels, dredges and other boats have been repaired in 1932, 1933, and 1934, and the cost of each?

Mr. DURANLEAU: It is now almost eleven o'clock. At the next sitting I shall be pleased to answer any question put to me about these matters, and I shall also answer the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé on the questions he has raised.

Item stands.

Mr. GORDON: I would like to call item number 9 on page 8.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Eleven o'clock.

Mr. GORDON: Might I explain to the committee that I would like to open the department of Immigration and Colonization if I can to-night.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): All right.

IMMIGRATION AND COLONIZATION

Salaries and contingencies, $194,150.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, March 6, 1935

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier) moved:

That the petition of Austin Eugene Stansfield, presented on the 5th instant, praying for a bill of divorce from Laura Lougheed Stansfield, together with the report of the clerk of petitions thereon, be referred to the standing committee on standing orders for the purpose of considering the suspension of standing orders 92 and 93 (3) (a) and (c) in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

TOBACCO EXPORTS

Mr. SEGUIN:

What quantity of tobacco was exported to the United Kingdom in 1930 and in 1934 respectively: (a) from the province of Quebec; (b) from the province of Ontario; (c) from all parts of Canada?

Mr. MATTHEWS:

Canadian Exports to United Kingdom of Unmanufactured Tobacco in the Fiscal years ended March 1930 and 1934

	Fiscal year 1930 pounds	Fiscal year 1934 pounds
(a) Through ports in the province of Ontario..	1,458,678	582,716
(b) Through ports in the province of Quebec..	707,282	3,938,091
(c) Through all Canadian ports..	5,293,167	8,288,753

(a) and (b). The figures represent exports through ports of exit in these provinces. No information is available from departmental returns, showing separate amounts of goods exported originating in each province.

HIGH COMMISSIONER FOR CANADA

Mr. POULIOT:

1. Were any increased powers entrusted by the dominion government to the High Commissioner of Canada in London since 1930?

2. If so, what are they and when and why did it occur?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: No change has been made in the powers of the High Commissioner as set forth by (43 Vic., cap. 11) the statute creating his office, and by order in council P.C. 330 of the February 10, 1922, which provided that "all the official activities of the various agencies of the Canadian government in the United Kingdom should be placed under the supervision of the High Commissioner." Administrative steps were taken in 1931 to ensure more effective execution of order in council P.C. 330.

IMPERIAL ECONOMIC CONFERENCE (1932) AGENDA

Mr. POULIOT:

1. On what date was the complete agenda of the Imperial Economic Conference (1932) forwarded for the first time by the Canadian government to the Right Hon. J. H. Thomas, Secretary of State for the Dominions?

2. Was it by mail or by cable?

3. In the latter case, why?

4. On what precise date was it completed?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY:

1 and 2. On May 23, 1932, a draft provisional agenda for the imperial economic conference was telegraphed simultaneously to the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs, London, and to the governments of Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and the Irish Free State, together with a request for the views of the governments on the proposed agenda. The agenda was communicated by mail to the government of Newfoundland.

3. To secure simultaneous receipt of the proposals by all countries to be represented at the conference.

4. Following an interchange of views by telegraph between all the governments represented at the conference the final provisional agenda was completed on July 2, 1932, and published by unanimous consent on July 12, 1932.

CANADIAN FARM LOAN ACT—QUEBEC APPLICATIONS

Mr. ROBERGE:

1. How many persons in the province of Quebec applied to the federal government for a loan in 1934, under the terms of the Farm Loan Act?

2. What was the total amount involved in such loan applications?

3. How many persons secured a loan?

4. What was the total amount loaned to such persons?

Mr. RHODES: Statistics are kept by fiscal years only. In the year ended March 31, 1934, there were 779 applications for loans aggregating $1,541,711. The number of loans granted was 140 and the amount $222,900.

L'ISLET COUNTY, QUE., POSTMASTERS

Mr. FAFARD:

1. What are the names of the postmasters of Sainte-Perpétue, Saint-Pamphile and Saint-Adalbert, in the county of L'Islet, province of Quebec?

2. What salary is paid to each such postmaster?

Mr. SAUVE:

1 and 2.

Post office—Name of postmaster—Salary—

Sainte Perpétue, Mrs. Victoria M. Legacé, $612.86; Saint Pamphile, Joseph Pierre Chouinard, $1,135; Saint Adalbert, Michel Duval, $195.87.

REVENUE FROM GOLD TAX

Mr. MacLEAN:

1. What was the total amount of money received from the gold tax up to January 31, 1935?

2. What are the names and addresses of the different companies paying this tax, and the amount paid by each up to January 31, 1935?

Mr. RHODES:

1. $5,883,711, subject to adjustment in respect of income tax.

2. The companies included in the category of those liable for the tax are as follows:

Consolidated Mining and Smelting Co. of Canada, Ltd., Trail, B.C.

Dome Mines, Ltd., South Porcupine, Ont.

Hollinger Consolidated Gold Mines, Ltd., Timmins, Ont.

International Nickel Co. of Canada, Ltd., Copper Cliff, Ont.

Lake Shore Mines, Ltd., Kirkland Lake, Ont.

McIntyre Porcupine Mines, Ltd., Schumacher, Ont.

Noranda Mines, Ltd., Noranda, Que.

Pioneer Gold Mines of B.C. Ltd., Pioneer Mines, B.C.

Premier Gold Mining Co. Ltd., Premier, B.C.

Siscoe Gold Mines, Ltd., Siscoe, Que.

Sylvanite Gold Mines, Ltd., Kirkland Lake, Ont.

The Teck-Hughes Gold Mines, Ltd., Kirkland, Ont.

Wright-Hargreaves Mines, Ltd., Kirkland Lake, Ont.

It has long been the practice not to disclose the business of individual companies by making public the amounts of taxes paid by each.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

TREATY OF VERSAILLES—CONTRACTING PARTIES

Mr. POULIOT:

1. What countries (a) were and (b) were not contracting parties to the treaty of Versailles?

2. What was the number in each case?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Return tabled herewith.

CLARKSON, GORDON, DILWORTH AND COMPANY

Mr. POWER:

What amounts have been paid by the government of Canada or any department thereof to the firm of Clarkson, Gordon, Dilworth & Company, or to any member of the said firm during the fiscal years 1929-1930, 1930-1931, 1931-1932, 1932-1933, 1933-1934, and from the end of the fiscal year 1933-1934 to date?

[Mr. Sauvé.]

PRICE SPREADS AND MASS BUYING COMMISSION —NORMAN SOMMERVILLE K.C.

Mr. GOLDING:

1. How many days did Norman Sommerville, K.C., act as counsel for the committee and royal commission on price spreads and mass buying?

2. What was his remuneration per day?

3. What was his expense allowance per day?

4. How many days did the committee sit?

5. How many days did the royal commission sit with Mr. Sommerville acting as counsel?

6. What was the total amount paid him for services and expenses?

MOOSE JAW SASK. POST OFFICE

Mr. VALLANCE:

1. On or about the 10th of September, 1931, was one C. T. Karsgaard given a contract to make certain alterations to the post office at Moose Jaw?

2. If so, what was the contract price?

3. Was the work proceeded with?

4. Was a contract let for the same or similar alterations during the year 1934?

5. If so, what was the work to be done and what was the contract price?

6. Who was the contractor?

7. How much has he been paid?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): Return tabled herewith.

REMOVAL OF CIVIL SERVANTS

Mr. McPHEE:

1. How many civil servants have been removed from their positions since the present government came into office by: (a) dismissal; (b) superannuation; (c) death; (d) other causes?

2. What are the names of the deputy ministers removed from their positions since the present government came into office by: (a) dismissal; (b) superannuation; (c) death; (d) other causes, showing the department of which each was deputy?

Mr. CAHAN: May I ask that this question stand as an order for return. I should also like to have some information regarding it. The question refers to civil servants, and in the Civil Service Superannuation Act I find the term "civil servant" defined as follows:

(b) "Civil servant" means and includes any permanent officer, clerk, or employee in the civil service as herein defined,

(i) who is in receipt of a stated annual salary of at least six hundred dollars, and

(ii) who is required, during the hours or period of his active employment, to devote his constant attention to the performance of the duties of his position and the conditions of whose employment for the period or periods of the year over which such employment extends preclude his engaging in any other substantially gainful service or occupation.

In ordinary parlance the term "civil servant" is sometimes used as applying also to temporary employees doing only part time service, or to those who are employed at certain daily or hourly rates. I should like to know whether the hon. member wishes to have the information to cover the civil servants as defined in the act, or whether he wishes included the information regarding the temporary employees or others excluded by the terms of the act.

Mr. McPHEE: Civil servants according to the statute.

Mr. CAHAN: Thank you.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

BOARD OF RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS—RATES AND TOLLS

Mr. NEILL:

(1) For a copy of a letter, order, or circular, alleged to have been issued by the board of railway commissioners on or about February 15, 1911, to the effect that section 358 of the Railway Act was to be put into effect. (2) Copy of a circular issued by the same body on March 28, 1911, instructing the railways not to bother filing their records as stated by the Minister of Railways on pages 1211 and 1212 of Hansard of date February 22, 1935. (3) Copy of the regulations made by the Department of Trade and Commerce governing rates, tolls, schedules, etc., of steamers subsidized by the government.

EIGHT HOUR DAY

Mr. LAURIN:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams, and other documents, passed between the federal government and the provinces, between 1919 and 1935, respecting: (a) the application of the eight-hour day; (b) the forty-eight-hour week; (c) minimum wages; (d) unemployment insurance.

HAMILTON ONT., PUBLIC BUILDING

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River):

For a copy of all letters, correspondence, telegrams and other documents, exchanged between the dominion government, or any member thereof or other persons, relating to the proposed construction of the $1,700,000 federal building at Hamilton, Ontario.

CLEMENT POST OFFICE, WRIGHT COUNTY

Mr. CHEVRIER (for Mr. Perras):

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, correspondence and other documents, in the possession of the Post Office Department, and dated from 1st of December, 1934, to date, in connection with the change of postmaster at Clement post office, county of Wright.

MILITIA UNITS—YARMOUTH, N.S.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Shelburne-Yarmouth) moved:

For a copy of all reports, memoranda, letters, telegrams and other correspondence, in the possession of or under the control of the Department of National Defence, dated since June 30, 1913, respecting accommodation for militia units at Yarmouth, Nova Scotia.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I have no objection to this motion passing, but of course, according to the usual practice, confidential letters and memoranda cannot be included in the return.

Motion agreed to.

ALGERNON LIGHTHOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, on the 25th of February last, the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Fafard) asked me if I had been informed that the pillar at St. Roch crossing had recently been carried away by the ice and if the Department of Marine intended rebuilding it for the opening of navigation. Officials of the Department of Marine have ascertained that it has been carried away by ice. I wish to inform my hon. friend that pending the decision of the department regarding the rebuilding of this lighthouse, should such rebuilding be deemed necessary, a lightship will be placed at that point to ensure the absolute safety of navigation.

ALASKAN HIGHWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): I would direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. According to press dispatches a bill has recently passed the United States Senate foreign relations committee authorizing the expenditure of $100,000 for a survey and $2,000,000 on the construction of the proposed Alaskan highway, also authorizing the president of the United States to negotiate with the dominion government for the passage of a road through British Columbia. My question is this: Are any negotiations in progress at the present time with the president of the United States, and if so would the minister kindly inform the house of the government's attitude towards the proposed highway.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY (Acting Prime Minister): As far as I know there have been no such negotiations, but I shall make inquiries.

BRITISH SETTLERS

REPORTED DISTRESS OF IMMIGRANTS UNDER THREE THOUSAND BRITISH FAMILIES SCHEME IN NORTHERN SASKATCHEWAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last I directed a question to the Minister of Immigration. I notice that he is not in his place to-day, and I am therefore directing my question to the acting leader of the house because it is very imperative that this question be answered in the near future, if not to-day. My question of Friday was this:

It has been drawn to my attention that there are in northern Saskatchewan some British settlers who were brought in under the Three Thousand British Families scheme, and who now find themselves destitute. These people, because of the fact that they have been in Canada over five years, have no further claim on the scheme under which they came, and the municipalities have refused to accept any responsibility for them. Therefore I would ask the Acting Minister of Immigration (Mr. Gordon) if he has any knowledge concerning them, or if he will have the matter looked into. The answer of the minister was this:

I know something of the situation to which the hon. member has referred. I have been in correspondence with the settlers. In view of the question asked I shall look into the matter again and make a more extended reply on Monday or Tuesday.

I waited till Monday and Tuesday, and it is now Wednesday, and I have received no further answer. These people are asking for some assistance or for deportation, and I direct my question now to the attention of the acting leader of the house.

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I personally know nothing about the matter but I will see that the hon. gentleman's further inquiry is brought to the attention of the minister.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CONSTRUCTION OF BRANCH LINES BETWEEN EDMONTON AND NORTH BATTLEFORD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the Minister of Railways and Canals. The question concerns the construction of railways in northern Canada. My question is this: May I ask the Minister of Railways if he has given any consideration to the construction of Canadian National Railway facilities in north western Canada, particularly in the great, developing and fertile belt of territory lying between Edmonton and North Battleford where a good deal of grading was done years ago and where the business men and farmers to a man are in special need of more adequate railroad accommodation?

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): It is needless to say, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. gentleman has already drawn this matter to my attention a number of times. The matter is of course engaging the attention of the management rather than of the government, though the government is just as much interested in it as my hon. friend. This project is in exactly the same position as other extensions to the railways which are needed, or which are thought to be needed in various parts of the country. The railway management up to the present has not recommended further expenditure on the branch lines suggested by the hon. gentleman any more than they have on other branch lines which have been projected but construction of which has been held up due to the depression. However, the estimates of the Canadian National Railways will be before the select committee of the House of Commons in a very short time, and the whole matter can be gone into there. I frankly cannot tell the hon. gentleman whether there is anything in the estimates for that railway. There may be a small amount but I certainly cannot promise a very large amount due to the very heavy drain on the Canadian National Railways because of world conditions generally and the business depression.

ANYOX SMELTER AND MINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. OLOF HANSON (Skeena): I have a question to direct to the government. Has any information been received from British Columbia concerning the possibility of the closing down of the Anyox smelter and mine, which would throw over a thousand men out of employment?

Right Hon. Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I have seen a copy of the telegram that was sent on that subject to the hon. Minister of Labour. It seems to me that the obvious answer at the present time is that the provincial government should immediately look into that question themselves.

ELECTORAL LISTS—PRINTING

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State how he is getting along with the printing of the voters' lists.

Mr. RHODES: Why bring that up!

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): Up until March 4 there were 4,201,639 names in type, and lists comprising 3,029,690 of that number have been printed, bound and delivered to the franchise commissioner. While I have not the exact figure, I understand that the total number of names on all the lists will be about 5,800,000. As a matter of fact I believe that four or five lists have not yet been delivered to the printer owing to some irregularity, and of course we can only print them when we receive them from the franchise commissioner. If the total number is 5,800,000, that will leave 1,600,000 names to be put in type, and we can put those names in type at the rate of 90,000 or 100,000 a day, so if we are pushed to the limit we can put them through in from sixteen to twenty days. But if it is not necessary to work so many hours a day, including night work, we probably will not have the lists completed before April 1.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: How did my hon. friend know that I was going to ask that question?

Mr. CAHAN: I did not know that the right hon. gentleman was going to ask the question, but I receive daily a little slip like that to which I am referring. It so happens that this slip was delivered to me late last evening and I put it in my vest pocket.

WESTERN POULTRY MARKETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. WEIR (Macdonald): May I ask the Minister of Agriculture how he is getting along with the plebiscite in the western provinces?

Hon. ROBERT WEIR (Minister of Agriculture): If the hon. member will look up Hansard, my last answer still stands.

Mr. WEIR (Macdonald): May I be permitted to ask the Minister of Agriculture another question with respect to this plebiscite in the western provinces. I believe that some time ago he stated that the responsibility for declaring whether or not this scheme would be made operative rested with him. Is he going to be able to announce the result of the vote before declaring whether or not the scheme will be put into operation?

Mr. WEIR (Melfort): That will be taken into consideration. At the present time I do not think I can add anything to what I have already said. We shall have to wait until the returns are completed. The answer I gave the hon. member was to the effect that as soon as the returns were completed an announcement would be made.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. GARLAND (Bow River): Can the Secretary of State inform the house whether the government has under contemplation at the present time any further amendments this year to the election act?

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): It may be under consideration, but I have not known of any material alterations to the election act which are likely to be proposed.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Or to the franchise act?

Mr. CAHAN: I do not think that any amendments to the franchise act or to the election act have been drawn up in the form of a bill. I have heard discussions among members on both sides of the house as to whether, in relation to the preparation of new electoral lists, the lists as now being prepared and printed should not be deemed to be the official lists for the present year. As to whether the franchise act might not be amended so that the preparation of the new lists would begin at a later date than April 1 of this year, that is merely a matter which I have heard discussed, but I do not think that any decision has been reached with regard to it, and I do not know that it has become a question of discussion by the members of the government.

CANADIAN RADIO COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): I noticed in the press the other day a statement to the effect that the radio commission proposed to expend $1,000,000 on public broadcasting stations. Will the Minister of Marine tell the house whether that statement is founded on fact.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): There is nothing definite yet. I know that the commission has some scheme of construction in order to give better service to the country at large.

Mr. EULER: Any construction?

Mr. DURANLEAU: There is nothing definite yet.

SUPPLY

RAILWAYS AND CANALS

The house in committee of supply, Mr. MacDonald (Cape Breton) in the chair.

To assist in promoting tourist business in Canada, $200,000.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways): I intend to make a brief statement to the house in regard to this item inasmuch as it is a new branch of government activity which is of the utmost importance, I think, to the whole dominion. In a sense, the tourist traffic has become an industry on a very large scale. For example, it is stated by our department of statistics that in 1929 the tourist industry was worth to Canada $309,000,000; that is to say, $309,000,000 was spent by tourists coming to this country.

Mr. JACOBS: That was before the repeal of the Volstead Act.

Mr. MANION: Yes, but even with the repeal of that act tourists have come regularly; and to be fair to those who have been coming into the country I may make this statement. I well remember looking into the question on one occasion, and it was found that a very small proportion of them, even in the days of the Volstead Act, bought liquor permits in Ontario; I should think the proportion was about fifteen per cent I make that statement in justice to the tourists. In other words, they came to see this great country rather than to indulge in anything but the pleasure of travelling.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Can the minister give us some basis on which these estimates are formed? I have heard estimates, but I have not heard any reasonable basis for them.

Mr. MANION: I understand that the method followed by the department of statistics is something of this sort. They make inquiries of a large number of tourists coming to Canada from the various sections of the United States, and by averaging these returns they get a general estimate; and naturally it must be general. I do not suppose there is any possible way of obtaining exact figures in this regard, but I have no reason to doubt that in a general way the figures given by the department are reasonably correct.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): There are also the various provincial organizations.

Mr. MANION: Yes, they get information from various provincial organizations in all sections of the country, and they approach the matter as accurately as they possibly can. I will repeat the figure. For 1929 it was over $309,000,000, but owing to the depression, from which the tourist business as well as other industries has suffered, the returns estimated for 1933, four years after the crash, amounted to $117,000,000, on the same basis of computation. It is estimated however that in 1934, this past year, the tourist traffic had gone up twenty-five per cent as compared with 1933, and it is hoped, and I think with good reason expected, that the tourist traffic in the coming year will be very much higher than it was in the past year.

I made it my business this morning to get some figures from the department of statistics in regard to exports from Canada of various products, just in order to enable hon. members to compare our tourist traffic with our exports of certain lines of commodities. I have already given the tourist figure for 1933, and in 1934 it was supposed to have increased by about twenty-five per cent over the previous year, so that the figure for 1934 should be in the neighbourhood of $140,000,000 or more. I have not the actual estimate of the department of statistics, but on the basis on which they have made their calculations it should be $140,000,000. Our exports of wheat in the past year amounted to $131,000,000; newsprint, $82,000,000; nickel, $29,000,000; planks and boards, $26,000,000; wood pulp, $25,000,000—all round figures. We also exported bacon and hams to the value of $23,000,000; fish, $21,000,000 or $22,000,000, and whiskey, $20,000,000. I notice that if the items comprising forest products —newsprint, planks and boards and wood pulp—were added together, it is probable that the figure would be in excess of that given for the tourist traffic. But the figures that I have given I think demonstrate to the committee quite easily the great importance to the dominion of this invisible export, the tourist traffic.

I may at this moment pay my respects and compliments to the committee in the other house led by Senator Dennis, which inspired the government toward this new line of endeavour. I may say quite frankly that for many years I have felt the dominion under all governments has been neglectful in regard to the encouragement of tourists coming into Canada. This traffic has always appeared to me to be something to which we should have given vastly more attention than we have. But Senator Dennis called together a committee largely made up of newspaper men, if I remember rightly, which met for the first time in May of last year. Before the Senate adjourned, the committee made to that body a report which was passed on to the House of Commons, and by August 1 we had on their recommendation organized the tourist branch of the Department of Railways and Canals. I want to offer great praise to Senator Dennis and his committee and indeed to the other house for the splendid work they did in this regard, because they urged upon the attention of the Canadian people the importance of this industry, and by their unanimous support they convinced the government that it was an industry upon which we should spend a good deal of money and which we should encourage in every possible way.

May I say in that regard—and I may as well say this here as elsewhere—that the daily press of Canada also deserves a great deal of praise for the splendid cooperation which they have given not only to the Senate committee but to the tourist branch of my department and to the government in general to encourage this work. They have, without return on their part or at least without return in anything like a proper proportion to the services they have rendered, done splendid work in that regard to spread the tourist psychology, if you will, throughout this country. I think the newspapers of all political colours, of all religious sects if you like, and newspapers, financial and otherwise deserve a great deal of credit from the dominion for the splendid work they have done in this respect.

Having organized the tourist branch of my department by August 1, we appointed, again on the unanimous recommendation of Senator Dennis and his committee, Mr. Leo Dolan as director of tourist traffic. Mr. Dolan had been for some years in charge of the tourist industry in New Brunswick where he had done splendid work, and it was the opinion of the Senate committee, comprised as it was of all political colours, that Mr. Dolan would be a most suitable appointee. While I did not know him at all, I was glad, after discussing the matter with the Senate committee and others, to have Mr. Dolan appointed, and he was appointed. He has done wonderful work. Incidentally he has travelled throughout the country. On a number of occasions since Mr. Dolan was appointed and made his trip to Vancouver and Victoria, incidentally dropping off at various points and addressing service clubs of many kinds, various hon. members opposite as well as a number on this side have written to me complimenting the government upon the fact that one with so much enthusiasm, so much knowledge of the subject, had been appointed to deal with this question. Due to his visit, due to the Senate committee's report and due to the splendid cooperation of the daily and weekly press of Canada, we have I think given to the country a leadership which cannot help but be useful to Canada as a whole in the returns which we shall get.

I may make it quite clear at this point that it is not the intention of the dominion government in any way to replace the work of the many tourist organizations throughout the dominion. We have for example provincial organizations in all the provinces; we have also many municipal organizations; the railway and steamship companies in addition have branches which assist in bringing tourists to our country, and there are many other organizations of one kind or another which must in the aggregate spend many millions of dollars in encouraging tourist traffic to Canada. Therefore it is obvious, since last year at least we were given $100,000 to utilize for this purpose, it could not be and was not the intention of the government in any way to replace these organizations or to take upon ourselves any of the work done by these individual associations for their own sections of the country. It is merely the desire of the government and the tourist branch of my department to coordinate so far as we can the work of these different bodies.

We have had on many occasions complaints from certain sections of the country that in the advertising we did we were not doing sufficient to call attention to their splendid tourist opportunities. But we have made it clear that in all our advertising we must be national; it cannot relate to any particular section of the country, because if it did so we would be taking on the work of the tourist organizations in those sections. Therefore, so far as we can and without fear or favour to any section, our advertising has been of a national character, and it has been and continues to be our desire as far as possible to make our advertising national.

It is obvious to all the members of the committee that no government would dare to do more than that. I make this statement here so as to clear the air so far as any individual section of the country is concerned in regard to the illustrations which we have sent out and the advertising which we have done in the past and are doing to-day. The first advertising copy in one of the United States magazines came back to me this morning, and I am sure my hon. friends who see it will be pleased with it. We have given illustrations of various sections of the country; we have endeavoured to touch in a national way the maritimes, Quebec, Ontario, the prairie provinces and British Columbia, all of which have their claim upon this expenditure. But we have not specified, even in the advertising, where these scenes lay in our country. It is our endeavour to avoid if possible anything in the shape of unfair preference of one section to another or to do anything that may make one section feel it is being neglected by our boosting some other.

To illustrate again the importance of the industry, may I say to the committee that the oil interests of the United States last year distributed 50,000,000 road maps to people purchasing gas at their stations. This illustrates the immensity of this industry. California estimates that the tourist industry is worth $250,000,000 a year to that state even at the present time. Maine, a little state which in a sense projects up into Canada, estimates that the tourist industry at the present time is worth well over $100,000,000 to it, and anyone who has visited that delightful state knows its people have many reasons to be encouraged by the splendid work they have accomplished. But I give those figures to illustrate to the committee the vast proportions to which this industry can be built in our dominion; in fact it has been estimated that provided business comes back as we all feel it is doing and a recovery takes place as it seems to be doing at the present time, within the next few years, say five or six, the tourist industry ought to be worth to Canada something in the neighbourhood of $500,000,000 per annum. That will illustrate perhaps better than any other idea that I can give, the importance of the matter.

It is estimated that 30,000,000 to 40,000,000 people of the United States travel during the vacation period from one section of that country to another or from their country to others including of course Canada. It is worth while remembering that for years our people in a sense have not recognized the value of this industry to Canada, and to-day due to the activities of the Senate committee, the government department, and the daily and weekly press, the people generally throughout the country are becoming tourist minded.

May I say at this moment that I should like to emphasize three items that appear to me to be of the utmost importance to the dominion if we are to do all we can to encourage this industry. In the first place we must have courtesy on the part of all our officials, I mean customs and immigration officials, and I say at once that this is not said with any idea of reflecting on any of them, because the reports we are receiving from all parts of Canada are to the effect that those officials from coast to coast are endeavouring at all times to be so pleasing to the people who pass through that they are winning the hearts of the tourists who come here. But every now and then some individual, overly officious, does some little thing which is not entirely of service to the dominion. Another matter which I think is of the utmost importance—and incidentally I have run across the odd exception to it—is that we must have honesty and fair dealing among our merchants, hotel keepers, hot dog stands if you will, and so forth. In other words, we must endeavour to see that our people, in the interests of Canada as a whole and of their own section in particular, treat the stranger coming here fairly and squarely as they would treat their own nationals. They must not endeavour to take all the traffic will bear. An incident which occurred when I was motoring in a certain section last summer will serve to illustrate the point. My wife and I stopped at a little hotel for lunch. The price seemed rather extravagant for the kind of lunch we had, and out of curiosity when I stopped up the street to get gas I asked the gas station attendant how much the hotel charged for lunch, and he named a price one-third less than I had paid. It does not help the tourist traffic if any of our people do that sort of thing; it leaves a bad taste in the mouth of a visitor and does not lead to favourable publicity. Another feature which I think is of the utmost importance is the general courtesy of the people. May I say to the people of our sister province of Quebec that on a number of occasions when I have visited Quebec by motor car, nowhere in the world have I been shown greater courtesy, have I found a more charming politeness or a greater desire to please. In other words, due no doubt to the immense tourist traffic that they have, probably the largest in Canada with the exception of the Niagara frontier; to the magnificent highway around the Gaspé peninsula; to the fact that they have been reaching out for tourist traffic and that they border on the great rich state of New York, the people of Quebec have become tourist minded. I think it is only fair that the rest of our people should know of the courtesy which the people of Quebec show to everyone driving through there, the anxiety of everyone of whom you ask a question to help and to oblige in every possible way, in order that the rest of the country may profit by that example and practise the same.

That our people generally are endeavouring to be pleasant to those who come within our borders is well illustrated in a letter which I shall take the liberty of reading to the committee without giving the name of the gentleman who wrote it. I hope I shall be forgiven and not called to order for reading this. It is dated January 26 last addressed to Mr. Leo Dolan, the director of our Canadian travel bureau:

My short visit to Canada in 1934 and my slightly longer visit in 1932 were marked by nothing but the greatest courtesy on the part of everyone with whom I came in contact. The graciousness with which your office complied with my request for automobile road maps was the first step; thereafter my contacts with Canadian officials of all kinds, immigration officers, policemen, traffic officers, customs officials, etc. were uniformly pleasant. It is perhaps a little out of place for me, a native born citizen of the United States, to say that I only wish that our officials were as courteous as the corresponding Canadian functionaries. Having travelled extensively in Europe I find that the Canadians have the happy faculty of combining old world politeness with new world progressiveness. In the United States we are so busy doing heaven knows what, that we do not seem to have the time enough to be courteous. Maybe we will some day acquire a little Canadian courtesy. I hope so.

I look forward to visiting your wonderful country again and hope some day to see Banff and Lake Louise, the great beauty of which I have heard from many of my friends. When that time arrives, I will again avail myself of your kind offer.

I read that not to make comparisons, which are odious at any time, but such a pleasing letter from an American to a Canadian official certainly is cause for gratification and satisfaction. If that spirit towards incoming visitors is generally shown it cannot but help this great and important industry.

Canada with its great stretches of woodland, its hunting and fishing areas, and its splendid lakes and rivers, is a magnificent vacation land.

Mr. DUPUIS: And its handicrafts.

Mr. REID: And do not leave out the mountains.

Mr. MANION: Yes. Not long ago, in our boastful Canadian way, I said at a club luncheon that I had been about Europe a great deal—I have visited it several times, and have seen most of its beauty spots—that I thought a counterpart of any of them could be found in Canada. A European who was present spoke of it afterwards with a rather pitying laugh; yet I think that anyone who has travelled from coast to coast in our country and visited the mountains or the lake regions—I do not wish to specify particular sections, but in various parts of our country, or that beautiful valley in Nova Scotia of which we all know—

Mr. LAPOINTE: And the rock of Quebec.

Mr. MANION: I do not wish to start mentioning provinces, but those who have visited any of our delightful tourist sections will I think agree that generally speaking we have scenery equal to that of any other part of the world. After all, when you think of the immensity of our country and the splendid work done by nature during the ice age, I take it, in shaping the lakes and the courses of the rivers and making huge waterfalls and pushing up the Rockies, there is no reason why we should not have just as fine scenery as any other country of the world.

Mr. GOTT: And the greatest bird sanctuary in the world, and the world's greatest naturalist.

Mr. MANION: However, without dealing with individual sections I feel we have a splendid opportunity to develop in Canada a great vacation land.

Ninety per cent or more of our tourist traffic comes from the United States. That is natural, and that being so we should and we are seeking particularly to attract tourists from the country to the south. After all we have common tastes and to a large extent a common language and common business interests and instincts. Our frontier restrictions are few. And in reaching ever larger numbers of tourists from the United States not only do we stimulate the tourist business but it is a very useful advertising medium; when we encourage Americans to come here for their vacations in the summer, they may return later for business and make investments.

Indicating the importance of the tourist traffic to the agriculturist, an estimate was given to the tourist committee in the Senate by one economist that in one year tourists visiting Canada consumed 4,000,000 pounds of butter, 18,000,000 pounds of meat and 4,000,000 dozen eggs. Those are large figures, but they show that even the farmer, who may not seem to get direct benefit from the tourists, does actually benefit to a large extent.

In regard to the advertising campaign that has been and will be carried on, I may say that we endeavour to advertise in such a way that all sections of the country are served. Last year we got organized too late to bring anybody here for the summer, but there was still the hunting and perhaps the late fishing season and we put advertising in newspapers from coast to coast. We advertised in forty American papers in twenty-three different cities and seventeen states, and according to the circulation figures of the papers in which this advertising was carried we reached over 10,000,000 readers. We are confining our advertising largely to the northern half of the United States, because with rare exceptions the people who visit Canada come from that section. That is proven by the inquiries which we received as a result of that advertising. We received just under a thousand inquiries as a result of one series of advertisements just before the hunting season last year. In the number of visitors the state of New York naturally leads; next comes Illinois, then Ohio, Wisconsin, Indiana, Iowa, Maryland and Minnesota. This shows the states from which we are going to get our heaviest tourist traffic.

Mr. EULER: Is it not possible that the reason the majority of inquiries came from the northern states is that the advertising was confined to those states? My suggestion would be that if you advertised in the southern states as well you might get a proportionate number from there.

Mr. MANION: I think there is reason in what my hon. friend says, but at the same time it seems apparent that we shall naturally get a large number from the states more or less adjoining our own borders. Therefore with the limited amount of cash available last year we felt we should limit the advertising to the northern states. Just this morning a telegram came from Vancouver urging that we extend our advertising further south adjacent to British Columbia, and as far as we can we shall gladly do that. But as long as the funds available are limited, as they naturally are at the present time, they will be spent chiefly in the northern part of the United States. That however does not mean that we do not reach the southern section, because, especially at the present time, we are advertising in magazines, which of course circulate in the south as well as in the north.

Mr. EULER: What magazines are you using?

Mr. MANION: I can give the list if my hon. friend will ask me a little later.

Mr. SPENCER: I understand that the parks branch of the Department of the Interior had been doing a certain amount of advertising prior to this organization being formed. To what extent has the advertising been increased?

Mr. MANION: The parks branch was doing a certain amount of advertising, but so far as I know they did not have any distinct vote for that purpose. Certainly the parks branch did a splendid work in encouraging tourist traffic, and particularly the traffic directed towards the national parks of Canada. At the present time however we are endeavouring to bring about a coordination of the different branches which in the past took part in tourist work, and since the setting up of the tourist branch of my department we have taken under our service a number of employees from the parks branch. In the first place, we availed ourselves of the services of Mr. Dolan.

Although I had no intention to discuss the matter from this angle at the moment, probably this would be the proper point to state that after a discussion with departmental officials it was decided that we should take over certain of the officers of the parks branch. We have therefore taken over four or five officials of that branch, with the result that to-day we have an organization of eight people, two of whom are new and the remaining six formerly officers in different departments. One man came from the Department of Railways and Canals, and the balance from the parks branch. I believe the result is a very compact and efficient organization set up for the purpose of advertising not only tourist advantages in general but the national parks of Canada. I believe in a general way I have answered the hon. member's question.

Mr. SPENCER: I take it the parks branch will not do any overlapping? The whole of the advertising will be taken care of by the organization about which the minister has spoken?

Mr. MANION: Yes. Of course we are assisted even yet by the parks branch, because there will be certain inquiries coming in from different parts of the neighbouring republic which could best be dealt with by the parks branch itself. Generally speaking however, so far as possible we shall endeavour to do the greater part of the work, and to do all of the advertising in the United States.

May I say to the hon. member for North Waterloo that in a few moments I shall give him a list of the magazines. It seems to me that in addition to advertising in the United States we could, without offending the people of that country, encourage a certain amout of interprovincial traffic. Hon. members will realize that if we advocated among our own people that they should limit their movements to interprovincial travel there would be a possibility of retaliation by the other country. However, I believe we can encourage a certain amount of interprovincial travel without in any way interfering with a fair amount of traffic to the United States, and so far as I know without fear of retaliation from that country, so far as people from the United States coming to Canada is concerned.

Mr. SPENCER: The minister mentioned retaliation; is he afraid of retaliation from the United States?

Mr. MANION: Oh well, I think any person with a little sense in his head must realize there is always the possibility of retaliation. One does not need to carry out his idea to the point where there would be any possibility of retaliation on the part of the United States. Of course, I understand the hon. member's reference, but I do not suppose I am any more frightened of the United States than other people are. At the same time I say common sense must be used in all these matters.

So far as interprovincial traffic is concerned may I say that the decision was made, and carried out, to give to our Canadian papers a certain amount of advertising. I believe most of our daily papers in Canada did some advertising for us, for which they did not receive heavy remuneration. I believe also that some of the weeklies did some advertising. Generally speaking however I would say that 85 per cent or 90 per cent of the money for advertising will be spent in the United States. In addition to that however the amount of advertising we have done in Canada has focused Canadian attention on the importance of this matter, and as the result we find throughout Canada to-day that boards of trade, service clubs, chambers of commerce and other organizations of that type are asking for literature, asking for Mr. Dolan to address them, or for some other member of the department to appear before them and outline the latest information concerning the tourist business. Never before so far as I know has that happened in Canada.

The hon. member for North Waterloo asked about the magazines being utilized. I believe I have the complete list under my hand, but I do not intend to name all of them. I believe without reading the complete list I can give him a clear idea as to the type of magazine used. The magazine with the greatest circulation in the United States is the Saturday Evening Post, and in it we do some advertising. Also, our advertisements appear in Colliers, which I believe has the second greatest circulation, in the National Geographic, in Cosmopolitan, Time, Fortune, The Sportsmen's Magazine, Good Housekeeping, and so on. That list will I believe give a general idea of the type of magazine used. I believe we have picked the best type of magazine—and of course when I use the expression "the best type" I am referring only to circulation. I am not advertising the Saturday Evening Post, but when we consider that magazine we must take note of the fact that it has a weekly circulation of nearly 4,000,000 copies, and the others I have named are in proportion. Of course advertising rates of those publications are in proportion to their circulation. Then, in addition to the advertising we give them, for which we pay the usual rates, we get a good deal of reading matter. For instance, only recently in some of the magazines of the United States I have seen some first class articles written by Canadian writers or by American writers who have visited this country. Of course that is the best kind of advertising we could possibly get. It is not prepared by us, nor is it put out for advertising purposes, but it has the good effect of stimulating interest.

For example, only recently hon. members may have read accounts in the daily press regarding the achievements of that splendid force, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, upon its recent visit to New York city. These articles emphasized the fine achievements of these troopers in the city of New York, and as a result of their work many articles appeared in United States magazines. As a matter of fact I have noticed a series of articles running in Cosmopolitan.

Mr. RALSTON: Hearst's International.

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Mr. RALSTON: That is the Cosmopolitan magazine.

Mr. MANION: I did not know that. These articles to which I have referred are first class and must stimulate interest in the United States concerning this country.

Although my observations have been longer than I had intended them to be there is another matter which comes to my mind and which I believe should be mentioned. We have had an interprovincial conference on tourist matters, and may I say that it was not paid for by the dominion government. Those delegates who came from Victoria and Vancouver on the west and Halifax on the east came at their own expense. The holding of the conference cost the federal government nothing. The enthusiasm at the conference was high, and all delegates went back to their respective provinces with the determination to encourage in every way tourist traffic to their own section. While here however they worked together and offered suggestions which were of the utmost value to the federal officials.

The suggestion has been made to me that in addition to the utilization of the daily press and weekly publications we should utilize the services of the radio. So far we have not done so, because the charge for time on an American radio program is very high, and up to the present time we have been of the opinion that we are getting better publicity from the daily press and magazine publications than we could get over the radio. We have decided to publish a booklet costing about $20,000, because from all points in the United States and Canada we receive requests for compact information. The booklet now being prepared will be issued upon completion.

I may observe at this point, as well as any other, that some complaints came from one or two sections of the province of Quebec to the effect that the literature issued did not appear in the two languages. In reply may I say that it must be obvious to all hon. members that as our tourist traffic comes chiefly from the United States there would be no value in having the information prepared in both languages. A very heavy expense would be incurred and no good purpose would be served. The traffic for which we are reaching and which we hope to get—and I am sure will get—is from the American republic.

Then, in addition, we have a number of minor endeavours being carried on. For instance, the Keystone Automobile Club of Philadelphia have put up a proposition whereby we may reach all the hotel directories, such directories having a circulation of 250,000 copies throughout the United States. Some of the publications contain travel stories. Then, there is the counter distribution of travel literature concerning the Dominion of Canada. For only a small expenditure the American Automobile Association has agreed to distribute maps of Canada to people who may desire them. I do not believe I shall take up further time of the committee, but I thought hon. members would be interested in obtaining the information I have endeavoured to give in a compact form. I believe members of this chamber and members of the Senate could do much towards giving assistance to organizations which are connected with this very important industry in the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Of course, Mr. Chairman, I am deeply interested in the statements of the minister. I am somewhat surprised however to note that he seems to have awakened to the fact that tourist traffic is of great importance to Canada. The minister seems to be of the opinion that this is an innovation on the part of the present government. The strange fact is that according to figures he supplied, and which were received from the department of statistics, the tourist traffic in Canada in the year 1929 was valued at $300,000,000. I have no complaint to offer in connection with anything the minister has said. I believe the government are taking a step in the right direction, and I hold the further belief that they were recreant in their duty when they did not continue the policy which was in operation when they took office in 1930. Had they done so I do not believe there would have been a drop in the tourist traffic. To be quite fair to the minister and the government, may I say that I recognize conditions which prevailed in Canada as well as in the United States were bound to have a depressing effect on tourist traffic. But I do just want to point out that there is not one single thing which the minister has announced this afternoon which was not being undertaken in 1923, 1924 and onwards.

Mr. MANION: There was none of it undertaken.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I beg my hon. friend's pardon.

Mr. MANION: I shall deal with that when my hon. friend sits down.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I shall be very happy to have my hon. friend do so. I want to point out to the minister that through the coordinated efforts of the boards of trade in the various cities of Canada this organization, while not set up under the control of one individual as my hon. friend states will now be the case, was working in conjunction with the railways which spent very large sums of money; and this country was widely advertised through the immigration agencies of the United States and through the lecture tours conducted by Major Rogers, who went into every state of the union where his services were required. The happy condition that prevailed in 1929 would have been impossible without the efforts that were made in that direction. Next I want to say to my hon. friend that there was an organization in the Department of the Interior, an organization that this government scattered throughout the various departments and whose work ceased from the time this government took office because no effort was made by this government to continue that work.

Mr. MANION: It continued just exactly as my hon. friend and his department had carried it on.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I beg my hon. friend's pardon, because I happen to know something about the Department of the Interior and the parks branch. The parks branch continued, yes, but not the work of the officials of the Department of the Interior who were particularly engaged in tourist work. Not only that, but the efforts put forward to bring industries to Canada were not continued because these gentlemen were moved to other departments and their efforts in that direction ceased.

I am behind every effort that will be put forth by this government to secure tourist traffic, but I must take exception to some of my hon. friend's statements. The committee of the Senate met long ago, I think it was in 1933, and did practically the same work that was done recently, as mentioned by my hon. friend, and it is not correct for my hon. friend to say that no coordinated effort was ever undertaken by the government of Canada. True, we did not have $100,000 to spend, we did not have $30,000—

Mr. CASGRAIN: You did more work with less money.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I do not make that statement at all because naturally more work can be done with more money, and I am behind this vote to the fullest degree. I am simply saying that the statement of the minister was unfair. I am glad to hear him say that men who were formerly in the Department of the Interior and who were removed from their positions are going to be taken back into this organization. As for the man who is in charge, I happened to know him in the old days. He was a very efficient officer in his sphere of activity in the maritime provinces, and we could not afford to leave out any province in our endeavour to encourage tourist traffic.

The only complaint I have to offer is with respect to my hon. friend's statement to-day that this is something new, that it is another new deal, as we hear so often these days when the government is speaking of old things dressed up in new clothing, I will admit, but carrying on in exactly the same way as they did before this government ever took office.

I hope that under the management of the minister now placed in charge a more earnest effort will be put forward. Indeed, I am sure it will, because the minister is energetic; he is connected directly with the railways, which is important, and he can work acceptably I am sure with the parks organization; so I think we can look for splendid success in this endeavour. But what I am complaining about is that men who have really put a lot of effort into this thing, men who brought about the happy condition when, according to the minister's own words, we had very substantial return from the endeavour, much more substantial than to-day—although I am not critical on that score—these men are left altogether outside the sphere of the minister's statement, except that he did say, when it was drawn to his attention, that the parks had done something in this connection. There was very much more activity than that outside of the parks altogether, and even at this late date I, myself am getting requests as a result of the maps that we distributed, which the minister mentioned as one part of the activities, and a splendid activity it is to send maps into every part of the United States—I am getting letters to-day as a result of the maps we sent out, which I simply turn over to the Department of the Interior. Now that the government has decided to change the minister in charge—and I am not complaining about that because that is their business—I hope he will embody in his organization these men who have received such splendid training and give them a chance to put into use their knowledge and experience in this connection. I hope that he will cooperate most closely with the railways, because the railways and railway advertising are very helpful in encouraging tourist traffic. But the minister has really announced nothing new except that he is armed with more money, with which undoubtedly he can carry on a much wider and more effective scheme of advertising.

REVISED EDITION

Mr. MANION: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to get into a political discussion in any shape or form in connection with this matter, and furthest from my mind was the thought of reflecting on the hon. gentleman opposite in anything I said. I studiously tried to avoid that very thing, not that I had anything to reflect on him about, but the last thought in my head was to make a comparison between the old government and the present. I must, however, take exception to the hon. gentleman dragging in some of the statements he did. I hope we shall not allow this to degenerate into a political discussion because it is one subject upon which I think that all members of this house from all sections of the country and representing all parties are agreed. The tourist traffic is for the good of the country generally, and I hope that we shall not allow this to degenerate in any shape or form into a political discussion. I did not rise this afternoon with any thought of making political capital out of it. I did mention the parks branch and say that they had done good work, so my hon. friend was not fair in his reference, and he is all wrong in saying that the work was not being carried on under this government as it was under the old government. That work has always gone on. We did not do away with it at all.

My hon. friend also said that there is nothing new in this and that we have just awakened to the importance of the tourist traffic. Personally I have felt that this government as well as the late government neglected doing just what we are now doing. I am not saying that for political reasons at all. The figures I have given show the importance of this industry to Canada, and we should do all we can to encourage it.

The hon. gentleman brings up, unwisely I think, the fact which I pointed out myself, that our tourist traffic decreased greatly between 1929 and 1933. I gave the figures showing that it had, and I admitted it, but that had nothing to do with this government or with the late government. It was due to the crash that came in the latter part of 1929 and to the world depression when people simply did not have the money to travel. People who were struck by the stock market crash, people who lost their business, naturally were not in a position to travel into Canada or from Canada to the United States.

The hon. gentleman also referred to the splendid work that the Department of the Interior under the late government were doing in regard to endeavouring to bring industries to this country. May I say to him that I know some work that they did that was very costly and just as useful as a boil on the neck. I remember when the hon. gentleman was in charge that his department, for example, made an industrial survey of the city of Fort William, which cost thousands of dollars.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, it did not.

Mr. MANION: I know differently.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I correct my hon. friend? That survey was made by a paid official of the Department of the Interior in conjunction with the board of trade of Fort William, and the cost was divided. No money was expended by the government of Canada except the salary and expenses of the individual.

Mr. MANION: The salary and expenses of the individual? Well, he spent almost a year doing it and he brought out two volumes which nobody on earth would ever read, and which were just as useful to Fort William or to this government or to anybody as a boil on the neck. But I do not want to get into a political discussion.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, no.

Mr. MANION: I do not think my hon. friends across there will accuse me of being unfair if, the hon. gentleman having criticized me unfairly, as I think he did, I retaliate to the extent of showing that there were useless things being done under his government that we are not carrying on. But I want to keep this discussion on the plane on which I started. My hon. friend dragged politics into it, but I have certainly no desire to do so. We might, of course, if we wanted to do so, get a little political advantage out of it, but for the sake of this country I do not want politics to enter this discussion at all. I shall not deal any further with my hon. friend's statement except to point out that when he says I neglected the railways—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I never said that you neglected the railways. I merely said that as Minister of Railways the hon. gentleman was in a splendid position to coordinate the work.

Mr. MANION: He mentioned the railways and steamships and implied that I had neglected them.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, I did not.

Mr. MANION: Then I will accept the hon. gentleman's word and withdraw, because

I do not wish to get into any dispute about it. I simply wish to say that we have been cooperating with the railways and the steamship companies. In fact, in all the literature we send out we ask the people in the United States to call at the nearest railway or steamship office—because the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Canadian National Railways, the Canada Steamship Lines, the Clark Steamships and some other lines have offices in various sections of the United States, catering particularly to the tourist traffic, and that saves us a great deal of effort. People can go to whatever tourist or ticket office may be in their neighbourhood and obtain such information as they may desire. I do not wish to turn this subject into politics. Earlier in my remarks I made certain complimentary references to the efforts of the Senate committee, and I stated that the government had endeavoured to carry out their report. Indeed, I gave all the credit to Senator Dennis' committee for the splendid work they had done, and I hope my hon. friends will endeavour, as I will, to keep this subject on a plane other than the political, endeavouring to assist this great industry as far as we possibly can.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I want to refute one argument which the hon. gentleman has made, and that is with reference to the man who was employed by the Department of the Interior to assist the boards of trade in an economic survey of their localities. He never went except at the request of the boards of trade, and the statement that he was months making his survey cannot possibly be true. To my certain knowledge, he was never more than two or three weeks in any city. Of course, he had the active cooperation of the officers of the boards of trade, and if my hon. friend will look up the files of the Interior department he will find there many complimentary letters with reference to the services which this gentleman rendered. I have no desire to make this a political controversy. My hon. friend rather misunderstood me. What I wanted to direct his attention to was the suggestion that this was the first attempt on the part of the government of Canada to encourage tourist traffic into Canada, and in reply to that I merely refer him to the fact that there would not have been $300,000,000 worth of tourist traffic in Canada at the time his government took office if there had been no coordinated effort.

Mr. MANION: I did not say that, but I did say that we had a committee appointed now for the first time.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I must take exception to that statement. I want to be absolutely fair, and I think my hon. friend wants to be fair too—

Mr. MANION: And he is.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): —and that is not true.

Mr. STINSON: I am very much interested in this vote, as there is in my riding one of the finest tourist districts in the dominion, namely, the Kawartha lakes and the highlands of Haliburton. That whole section is dotted with lakes and rivers and has all the natural beauties which appeal to the tourist. The county of Haliburton has 550 named lakes and just as many unnamed, waiting for the tourist to christen them. This is a vote that should commend itself to all members of this house by reason of the annual crop to be harvested from it and its possibilities for increase. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics shows that in the peak year 1929 Canada's tourist trade had a value of $309,379,000. By 1933 this had shrunk to $117,124,000. The evidence before the Senate committee last year set $500,000,000 as the objective of a progressive, permanent program of Canadian tourist trade promotion. We should set up a tourist bureau to "sell Canada" to the world, as no other country has more to sell by way of scenery or a greater variety than we have. Ontario has been getting between seventy and seventy-five per cent of the tourist trade coming into Canada. In 1929 we had in Ontario 11,685,000 persons, which figure in 1933 dropped to 7,796,000. Now therefore is the time to make a strong effort for this trade. In 1929 the American tourists spent outside their own country $869,000,000. Ontario has many ports of entry easy of access. Within twelve hours we have 20,000,000 persons adjacent to the province of Ontario—tourists who may come from the states of Michigan, Illinois, Ohio New York and Pennsylvania. These states all have paved roads right through to Ontario. Ontario has 6,000 miles of paved roads to take care of them when they arrive. The tourist crop is an annual crop which does not impoverish the land. It is not a wasting asset like a gold mine or an oil well. You can sell the scenery year after year and your only expense is advertising and developing ways and means of attracting the tourists. The road wear and tear they pay for in the gasoline tax. Everybody benefits from the tourist traffic—the transportation companies, hotels, oil and gasoline refineries, bus lines, department stores—and it is said by some that the tourist trade helps every man, woman and child in Canada, whether they make sewer pipes or grow onions. When you consider the possibilities of increasing that trade up to $500,000,000, it is something worth going after in a big way, as it represents the sale of 700,000,000 bushels of wheat at 70 cents a bushel, which is a two year wheat crop for Canada. We have the lakes and rivers and the fish, which delight the American tourist. Let us build a national business out of it. At Bobcaygeon, which is a very progressive village on Sturgeon and Pigeon lakes, where the fishing is good, a wonderful tourist business has been built up over a number of years. An American from southern Pennsylvania, who has been going there for years to fish, got into an argument with an American from New York city as to the merits of the latter city. The man from Pennsylvania, who cares more for good fishing than for anything else in the world, said that New York could never be an important place to him because it was too far away from Bobcaygeon. Any hon. members who doubt the beauty of the Kawartha lakes and the highlands of Haliburton I invite to spend their next vacation there. I am sure they would say with the Pennsylvanian that New York can never be great in the summer time when it is so far away from Bobcaygeon Let me say once more that this item should commend itself to every member of the house by reason of the return it will give in dividends to the citizens of Canada. I think we should all support it and endeavour to increase our tourist trade to at least $500,000,00C per annum, which would bring a dividend in some form to every citizen of the dominion.

Mr. GOTT: I suggest to the hon. member that the onion grounds to which he has referred would be well worth the attention of any American. They are six feet below the level of the lake, something which the Americans do not realize, and they are beautiful to look at.

Mr. ARTHURS: I agree with the Minister of Railways that this item is of vast imporance to the people of Canada. We have a large tourist trade, and the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario, who is unavoidably absent to-day, and I, represent one of the oldest playgrounds in Ontario. People have been coming there for years, and we are in the satisfactory position at the present time of having lost only a very small percentage if any of our ordinary tourist traffic. But there are immense possibilities not only along the Muskoka lakes and Georgian bay and the famous French river country, but possibilities in vast territories not yet open to tourist traffic. This vote is therefore a move in the right direction. In the past, so far as I am aware, the efforts to secure tourists have been confined largely to the individual resort proprietor and to the railways, with possibly some slight assistance from the provincial governments and from the parks branch of the Interior department. I would suggest to the minister that as far as possible these various efforts should be coordinated. Copies of advertisements issued by his department should be sent to these various agencies I have mentioned, the railways, the resort proprietors and the provincial governments, and they in return should and, I believe, would supply this department with copies of any advertisements they issue. Thus we might coordinate our efforts, saving money and probably covering a good deal more ground. There is another point I would press on the committee and that is the advisability of advertising our own provinces in Canada. Many of us have no doubt been in the province of Quebec and have seen the great scenic beauties there, and I am sure we feel better and have a higher appreciation of that province by having visited it.

The same is true of the west, even the great mountain ranges and the beautiful resources they have there. In like manner many of our people in the west have never visited Ontario and Quebec, and I think there is at present being spent outside Canada a great deal of money that could profitably and wisely be spent by our tourists by staying at home and seeing their own country first. I do not think this will raise any controversy in the republic to the south. For many years advertisements have been published in the United States magazines under the caption: See the United States first, the same thing has been true of various other countries, and there is no reason why we should not encourage that sentiment among our own people and show them the advantage of visiting those parts of Canada which they have not already seen. By this plan there would be kept in Canada money which would be just as useful to this country as money brought here from any foreign land.

I would also point out that in my section in particular we find that a very considerable proportion of those visiting it become property owners. They acquire a small piece of property in that district and build thereon summer residences, some perhaps small, others costing many thousands of dollars. In this way they become almost regular citizens of our country, and they give employment to many others such as the caretaker of the cottage, the man who puts in the ice, the man who cuts the wood, the farmer who supplies the vegetables and probably meat during the summer months. This has become a regular traffic in many places giving regular employment during the summer season.

I do not propose to detain the committee further. I would only say that I am entirely in favour of this appropriation, and in doing so I think I am voicing the opinion of ninety per cent of the people of Canada.

Mr. HANBURY: Coming as I do from the one spot in the whole of America that needs no praising as it is recognized by people all over this continent as the one chief mecca of the tourists of this country, I wish to offer my congratulations to the government on having established this tourist bureau. I wish to congratulate the minister upon the presentation of his report to the committee and also on having chosen Mr. Leo Dolan as director of this tourist bureau. I had the pleasure of listening to Mr. Dolan when he was addressing the tourist bureau in British Columbia, and when this department is extended to the degree to which I think it should be, I would suggest that Mr. Dolan will require assistance. I believe in the Minister of Railways we have an equally enthusiastic tourist booster, so I would suggest to him that even after the change of government at the next election we may well have some place for him.

Mr. JACOBS: It all depends on his politics.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): He might change again.

Mr. HANBURY: I believe the report that has been placed on the records to-day by the Minister of Railways will appeal to all of us as a matter of the utmost importance. The tourist traffic is an industry that is more capable of development than any other line of endeavour we have in Canada to-day. We know the world is filled with what we have to sell and we have difficulty in selling it, but as the minister has stated, we have in this industry something that is capable of development to the point where we can all benefit to a greater extent than we have done in the past. We have the illustration of other countries. The minister mentioned the state of Maine, and we all know of Switzerland in Europe. We have our Switzerlands and Maines in Canada, and all we have to do is by advertising to show to the peoples of the world what we have to offer them. But in doing that we have certain duties, and one of the most important—and I believe it ought to be a federal duty—is to provide the proper roads for motorists who come to Canada, so that they will see our country to advantage and return. Unquestionably tourists going from the eastern to the western part of America in too many cases use roads on the United States side. They have the very finest highways it is possible to have, and I do not think in portions of this country we can lay claim to similar roads. I believe the importance of the tourist traffic to the dominion will make it necessary for the federal government in the very near future to take over certain trunk roads, to construct certain trunk roads and to maintain them and see that they are properly operated.

The minister has referred also to the necessity for the Canadian people extending the greatest courtesy to all our tourist friends. He has referred to our officers in the customs and immigration departments and the extent to which they are cooperating with all of us in encouraging our United States and other friends to visit Canada. One other point I would like to make in that particular connection—and the minister has touched upon it—is that in tourist traffic as in trade of all kinds you cannot buy without selling, nor can you sell without buying. In other words there must be reciprocity. Reciprocity means that we must not discourage our own people from visiting the United States, and if we are to encourage our people to visit that country and to reciprocate with our cousins there, this means also that our customs and immigration officials must be equally courteous to returning Canadians, something that is not always a fact. Therefore I suggest to the director of the tourist bureau and to the minister that steps should be taken to see that returning Canadians are extended the same courtesy as that shown to our visiting friends.

There is one feature I would like to point out in connection with advertising for tourist traffic and it has not been touched upon particularly here to-day. It is a fact that throughout Canada our railroads are suffering for want of traffic and our hotels for want of trade. I believe every dollar spent in advertising for tourists will bring a return not only tenfold but a thousandfold and will have a tendency to fill our hotels and to make our railroads more profitable than they have been in the past. In that regard I wish to congratulate the minister again on having received authority from the government to increase this item by one hundred per cent, but I suggest to him and to the members of the committee that we should give this appropriation very serious consideration. I believe not only should we double the present appropriation, but we should even add to that; instead of $200,000, this item might very well be $500,000. Such a sum could be spent to the best advantage and would probably be the best investment we could make during the present session. I would ask other members of the committee to support me in my suggestion that the minister submit to the government the possibility of a larger appropriation being made, and I believe if proper emphasis is given to the importance of the matter, the government will accede to the request which I know the Minister of Railways will make, so that we may have a proper contribution in order to induce tourists to come to Canada.

I wish to close with just one or two words about British Columbia. Many hon. members have not as yet visited my province; many have. To those who have been there, it is unnecessary for me to make any remarks. In British Columbia we have another Switzerland; we have everything they have in any other part of the world. Leaving the very centre of Vancouver on any day in May and sometimes in June, by taking a motor drive of thirty minutes to Grouse mountain, the tourist or the citizen or the member of parliament, may be in a winter resort where there is skiing, sleighing and the most beautiful view that the eye can see. We have to the United States boundary and through the interior of British Columbia some very fine highways, but roads that are not to my mind sufficient for the industry which we hope to develop in the tourist traffic. We have the historic old Cariboo road; we have Vancouver island which is a beauty spot in itself, and as a matter of fact any person familiar with British Columbia and with the beauties of so many parts of that province, could talk for hours and still touch only the fringe of the subject.

The reason for my remarks in that connection is that I believe it is incumbent upon this government or any other government, this year and every year, to do more to encourage members of parliament and public men in Canada to visit the various parts of the country until we learn what we have. In that connection I wish to make a further suggestion. We are very anxious to cooperate in every way with our friends in the United States. Not only do we want them as tourists, we want them also as business partners, we want to trade with them. The people of the United States in many cases know little of Canada. To many of them Canada signifies nothing but an expanse of ice and snow; they think there are only Eskimos and Indians up here. I suggest that some way be found whereby the members of the Senate and the Congress of the United States could be given the courtesy of the Canadian railroads so that they may become familiar with the people and conditions in Canada.

I congratulate the government and the minister on this vote, and hope they will go much further than they have already; they will have my hearty support in doing everything possible to develop tourist traffic, and I trust the item we have under consideration at the present time will be increased.

Mr. CHURCH: I should not have taken part in this debate were it not for the absence of the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. McGibbon) who has taken a great deal of interest in this vote. In the development of the tourist industry is to be found a solution of one of the economic difficulties of this country, namely that of seasonal unemployment. I am glad to see the reception that this vote has got from hon. members representing many parts of Canada. I agree with the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Hanbury) that his province is rich in its attractions for tourists, as are also the maritimes and in fact all the provinces. There has been an unfortunate failure on the part of various governments, both dominion, provincial and municipal, to make the best of this great resource. After all the wealth of this country does not consist only in its material resources of sea and soil, forest and mine, its harbours or its internal trade; one of the greatest is the character and vigor of our people. But a large number of our working people, owing to the peculiar economic conditions in large cities, receive no benefit from our salubrious climate and the great outdoors. I am glad to see the minister giving this matter his consideration. After all it is not a new topic. When I first came to the house in 1922, I urged that commutation tickets should be sold on the steam railways to give to every city of the dominion what they have on the island of Montreal and I introduced a bill to that end. The great industrial population of that city have under the Railway Act something which no other city has, a system of commutation tickets covering the district all along the river, enabling the working people to get out and enjoy the attractions to be found there for four or five months of the year. I wish to commend the present minister who gave his support to that bill which I introduced. The people of the United States, England and France after the war were given cheap fares on the railways for week-ends and holidays and if the same thing had been done in Canada it would have been of the greatest value to the railways, giving them a considerable income. But what happened? The railways ignored the opportunity, with the result that a system of good roads was established, and now motor buses and trucks are robbing the steam roads of a great volume of traffic, especially in the summer. Take the sporting events, such as the hockey and football games between Toronto and Hamilton, Montreal and Quebec, or Montreal and Ottawa; do those teams use the railways? No, they can take a bus right from the clubhouse door to the scene of the game and come quickly back in less than half the time necessary by railway.

Coming from the province of Ontario, I believe in the principle of confederation; each for all and all for each. What is good for tourist trade on the Pacific coast is good on lake Winnipeg and the great lakes and the maritimes. There is no country in the world with greater attractions for tourists and sportsmen than Canada, both winter and summer. But we are far behind England and continental countries and even the United States in the development of tourist trade. We have spent billions on railways and canals and ships, but we are not making full use of them. We have the great lakes with their possibilities. In earlier days on lake Ontario there were many large passenger boats; on the line between Toronto and Niagara millions of people were carried by three or four large boats, but to-day that trade is taken care of by one large boat and one smaller one. The city of Toronto has pioneered in this work, it has established the great Canadian National exhibition, which has been the backbone of tourist trade as far as that province is concerned. Toronto has spent nearly $20,000,000 for extensive grounds and magnificent permanent buildings and exhibits without any help from this parliament and little from the provincial government. These grounds and buildings are owned by the taxpayers of Toronto. We have also established a great winter fair which attracts tourists in the winter. Critics say there is nothing like it except in Chicago and New York. I do not see my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) here or his predecessor (Mr. Motherwell) but I say the only help that the winter fair got from this parliament was a contribution towards one of the smaller buildings. Toronto has also a fine harbour and has established a beautiful island which is a priceless asset to the city. I am referring to Toronto as an illustration of what can be done by a municipality, because this vote should be supplemented by the provincial and municipal authorities from the Atlantic to the Pacific. We have got to take a leaf out of the book of the United States. The great Theodore Roosevelt was the first to realize what the tourist trade could mean to the United States in connection with the Panama canal, which is paying its way to-day owing in some considerable degree to the tourist trade. They have been pioneers. The people of the United States, like the British-born, take a great deal of pleasure in attending sporting events and going to the country for week-ends. This vote is but a little one, it will be used mainly in advertising. In the session of 1922 a return was brought down in the house, moved by the hon. member for Sherbrooke, showing the proportion of cash taxes paid by the central provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and that proportion was 79¾ per cent. As I say I believe in the principle of each for all and all for each. Here are two provinces that have been overlooked as far as tourist trade goes. Ontario has the great lakes, the Muskoka district and the lake Simcoe and Georgian bay district. Up to a few years ago there was not a good road in the whole region but it has now a magnificent system of roads. Just last week after a meeting with my hon. friend the member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. McGibbon) at Bracebridge, I moved for an order of the house for a return relating to a national park in the Muskoka-Georgian bay area. There should be a large park for tourists there in connection with the national railways. To my surprise I found that in that great province little or nothing has been spent. The only park that they have in older Ontario is a small island in Georgian bay, the Thousand islands and Point Pelee in lake Erie. Now that is a very small contribution. The main revenues of the national railways are from Ontario, yet we have little or nothing along this line.

This vote will help to solve a great economic problem, namely the need for an inrcease of markets for the farmers. I refer hon. members to page 55 of a work written by a great Conservative in England, W. S. Morrison, of whom I spoke the other day. He refers to Oliver Goldsmith and what he said in the seventeenth century. In supporting this vote we are seeking to be real conservatives, because in doing so we are attempting to save our natural resources for the people, and to develop them to the point where they will be valuable both in summer and in winter. We are trying to encourage the people to use our great public services, our natural resources which are to be found in rivers and streams, and around the summer resorts of our country. As Mr. Morrison states in his text book, one of the greatest results of the tourist trade in England has been the benefit it has given to the English farmer. The way money has been spent on the tourist trade, on good roads and good hotel accommodation has, indirectly, been beneficial to the farmer.

In the city from which I come only about five per cent of the people ever see lake Ontario, despite the fact that the city of Toronto is situated on the shore of that lake. We spent $26,000,000 on our harbour, fifty per cent of which was spent in industrial development and the other fifty per cent for the development of sports facilities, and so on. Toronto was the home of Ned Hanlan, whose name lingers in the minds of our people, and after whom a part of our Toronto island was named. About a million passengers are carried across the bay to the island in the summer time, but because they have to avail themselves of a ferry service and because there is no bridge accommodation only a small proportion of the people of the city visit the island. The people who work in our industries, the men and women in factories, and the white-collar workers have no place to go for recreation. That condition is brought about by a lack of transportation facilities.

A few years ago, the national railways could to a great degree take care of the tourist business. Years ago, along the north shore of lake Ontario, from the city of Toronto to the city of Brockville there was a boat service carrying the tourist trade. Those boats carried excursions, Sunday school picnics and the like. To-day however that service does not exist. The same would apply to the boat service which used to operate between Toronto and Hamilton, Toronto and Grimsby, and Toronto and Port Dalhousie. To-day on the Toronto to Port Dalhousie service there is an old boat being used, the Northumberland. That service is used for transportation to the Canadian Henley. But it is as much as your life is worth to get on that boat. We need good, fast boat service along the great lakes. At the present time sixty-four boats of Canada Steamships are tied up. Those boats could be utilized on the lakes to solve a great deal of the seasonal unemployment.

Only a few days ago the hon. member for West Edmonton (Mr. Stewart) was speaking of student labour. The operation of these boats, I suggest, would do more towards a solution of the student labour problem than many other suggestions which have been made. These boats run in the summer time and would offer seasonal employment to a greater extent than any other vote now before parliament. I know, as a matter of fact, that some of the best doctors in our country worked during the summer months on the boats running on the great lakes. Many of those boys were our best students. Only a few days ago I saw a man right here in the city of Ottawa who had worked on the boats. In conclusion I should like to read three or four sentences from the observations of Mr. W. S. Morrison concerning the development of the tourist traffic in the old land. He deals, too, with railway traffic and railway earnings, and the solution of casual unemployment by the proper development of summer resorts and institutions of that kind. Some of his observations are directed to student labour. In part he states:

> A sign which used to flourish over some of the inns of Merrie England was called "The five alls." There were depicted the king who ruled all, the priest who prayed for all, the lawyer who pled for all, the soldier who fought for all and the farmer who fed all.

Note the expression "the farmer who fed all." A development of summer resorts would mean an increased revenue for the farmer. He continues:

> The thirsty wayfarer as he entered was by these rude symbols bidden to meditate on a profound economic truth. The provision of an adequate supply of food is the basis of all culture and civilization. The king, the priest, the lawyer, the soldier faint and grow weary when there is no food. But we are a large people in a small island and at present we can feed our people for about one month out of twelve. It seems a hopeless task to attempt to raise supplies adequate to so many mouths. But if the peculiar virtues of this island are considered the problem takes on a new light. It is a most fertile place, where food grows despite all efforts to discourage it. Even now, in spite of the industrial revolution, in spite of square miles of asphalt and cobble imprisoning the kindly soil, agriculture employs more people than does any other industry. The value of the product of island agriculture is higher than the value of the agriculture of any other part of the empire consumed in this country year by year. The capacity for food raising in these islands is immensely beyond anything contemplated. It is a powerful spring depressed by a century of economic anarchy and its rebound has already proved startling, with the first hints of a more ordered and simpler mode of national existence.

That extract from the observations of this economist goes to show the great economic truth, namely that the development of tourist trade would be greatly to the advantage of the farmer. That would be true of the farmers in the Muskoka district, the district around lake Simcoe, around the summer resort section of which Bigwin Inn is the centre, and in the Niagara district. Where do the tourists obtain their dairy products, their butter, their eggs—even the land upon which they may erect their tents? All these things they must obtain from the farmers who live around lake Simcoe, Georgian bay and in the Muskoka district, and even up into the Lake of Bays district.

I am sorry to note that the vote is so small. It is altogether too small, but possibly it represents only a beginning. At this point possibly I should refer to the open season which has obtained since the opening of the session when all three parties have been calling for social reforms. All hon. members seem to be taking part in this race. We must not forget, however, that social reform, like all other economic questions, is subject to the law of diminishing return. The more all parties combine to exploit it, the more quickly will it be worked out and die a natural death. At that point it becomes aimless, unworkable and unprincipled.

This economic truth might apply with equal force to the failure of the steam railways in Canada adequately to develop our natural resources, and to demonstrate the possibilities of summer and winter resorts. The tourist trade which would use the hotels, the cottages and other facilities would give a great amount of seasonal and casual employment during the months of May, June, July, August and September, and in some of the resorts the employment would continue during the winter.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard spoke about the opportunities offered in Victoria and Vancouver. In those observations he was quite correct. As a house of commons, as a senate and as a parliament we must grasp the true significance of the great assets we have within our borders, and the possibilities they offer towards the solution of seasonal and casual unemployment. I say that this problem could be solved during at least five or six months of the year.

At an earlier point in my observations I mentioned the boat service and the fact that boats are tied up. In that connection I referred to only one city, the city of Toronto, but I have no doubt the same condition applies at other points. I note the vote has been increased from $100,000 to $200,000, but I would say that if we spent $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 we might go some considerable distance towards solving the problem of casual and seasonal unemployment. Especially would that be true of the student class, the young man attending the universities and high schools. Boys and girls leave these schools in the middle of June and do not return until about the middle of September. As a house of commons I suggest we might do a great deal towards helping to place them in some sort of employment. The interest of industry should be directed towards the youth of eighteen years. In England that condition now exists, and has been brought about through the efforts of the Conservative government in that country —while the government may have a Labour leader, yet I say that it is the Conservative party in England which has solved the problem. How have they done it? They have created throughout the country an interest in the youth of eighteen years. However, I shall not elaborate upon this point, as I wish to conclude my observations. May I state briefly, however, I believe as a house of commons we might do something towards solving the problem of obtaining work for the high school pupils who have no employment in the summer months. Despite the millions of dollars spent in technical education, they have difficulty in finding work.

I have touched on only two or three of the principal topics which arise under this important vote, but I hope at the next session we will see in the estimates provision for an expenditure of $5,000,000, $10,000,000 or $15,000,000.

Mr. GOTT: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. CAMPBELL: Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, Cape Breton): The hon. member for Frontenac-Addington has the floor.

Mr. GOTT: If you had eyes in the back of your head you could see me any time.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I do not wish to take up much of the time of the committee in joining in this provincial scenery selling publicity, or in the discussion now taking place, but I do feel as much could be said about my constituency as may be said about many others. The hon. member for Leeds knows what the Rideau lakes district is like. I believe my section of the country will receive a large share of the tourist traffic coming to Canada, and can advertise itself. My reason for rising at this time is to point out to the minister that in each province at the present time there are what might be described as publicity or tourist bureaux, each of which carries on a similar work to that which it is proposed the federal bureau will perform.

I was wondering if it would not be advisable to have some sort of cooperation between the provincial bureaux and the one under federal supervision, so that there would not be too much duplication.

Mr. MANION: That is being considered at the present time. To a large extent that is the object of the federal bureau.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I should like to endorse the observations of the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard; I feel the vote should be increased. As the hon. member pointed out, it may be possible to build up an advertising agency which would be more central. This afternoon nothing has been done or said to indicate that radio has been used as a medium for advertising. It may be that radio advertising would be expensive, but if some of this vote were judiciously spent for radio advertising, by means of which a first class word picture of certain points in Canada might be given, it would have the effect of drawing large numbers of tourists from other points on the American continent, thus resulting in better returns for the money spent.

Mr. SHAVER: Mr. Chairman, it is a pleasant interlude in the political controversy which has been raging in this house most of the time since the beginning of the session to see the unanimity with which members of all shades of political opinion are agreed as to the necessity of a large vote for promoting tourist traffic in the Dominion of Canada.

Many members have dwelt upon the scenic beauty of the districts from which they come, and I am sure we are all agreed that no country of the world has such a variety of scenery to delight the tourist as has Canada. But there is one point that has perhaps not been mentioned to any extent and that is the fact that no country on the American continent has so many historic places as Canada has. I well recall the thrill which I received when I visited the old historic city of Quebec and thought of how it was linked up with the very birth of civilization on the north American continent. These historic places impress our friends from across the line, though perhaps not to the same extent as they do Canadians, but still to a very great extent indeed. Go to any of these historic places and you will find American tourists by the score, visiting them, taking notes and taking snapshots of places of interest.

The county which I have the honour to represent is a very historic part of the province of Ontario. It was settled first by the United Empire Loyalists, and there are many places there to attract the attention of the tourist and to which tourists frequently come. One of them is the old historic church of St. Andrews, a Roman Catholic church about six miles north of Cornwall. The old church, which is now used as a parish hall, was built in the year 1789, and it is a fine old building. In the beautiful cemetery adjoining it the first premier of Ontario lies buried, also Simon Fraser, that great explorer with whose name I am sure our friends from British Columbia are familiar because he gave his name to the great Fraser river which flows through their province. There is also the Cornwall grammar school, founded by Bishop Strachan over a century and a quarter ago.

But I am particularly interested in this vote because in my constituency is located the only bridge across the St. Lawrence river in the international section, the bridge at Cornwall which was opened last summer by His Excellency the Governor General. Many members of the House of Commons were present at the official opening. The bridge is connected with all the main trunk highways in northern New York and fronts upon No. 2 highway in Ontario, running along by the St. Lawrence river on the Ontario side and connecting up with the city of Montreal. It is the most natural route for any American tourist to take who is coming to Canada from all the central and eastern sections of the United States. Crossing that bridge to get to highway No. 2, and turning to the right, you go to the town of Cornwall, and then straight for about eighty miles into the city of Montreal. If on leaving the bridge you turn to the left you can follow No. 2 highway to Toronto, or going to Morrisburg you can then turn straight north to the city of Ottawa. Taking another road slightly different you can go to the Seigniory club or to other scenic spots in Quebec north of the Ottawa river.

The minister mentioned that most of the advertising which the department has done in the United States has been confined to the northern states. I think it is a very good idea that part of the advertising at least should be extended to the southern states as well. One living on No. 2 highway, as I do, has many opportunities of forming an estimate of from what sections of the United States the tourists come, and it is a very common thing to see cars from California, Carolina, Texas, Georgia and other southern states. They are attracted by our northern climate and are likely to come in increasing numbers if the beauty of our country is held out to them.

There are two bridges on either side of Cornwall island, and connecting these bridges there is a fine paved highway across the island, the whole making a driveway of great scenic beauty. Many compliments have been paid by tourists to the courtesy of the officials on the Canadian end of the bridge, both customs and immigration officers. The minister has spoken of the fact that a great deal of advertising has been done by booklet, the distribution of maps, advertising in magazines, and in other ways. I would strongly urge upon him, if he has not already done so, the advisability of marking upon the map particularly the Cornwall bridge, because, as I said, it is the only bridge in the international section of the St. Lawrence river and the attention of tourists should be drawn to it because it provides a very safe and convenient method of getting into Canada.

I would also mention that eighteen miles west of Cornwall at the village of Aultsville, where I live, a convenient ferry crosses a placid and very pleasant portion of the St. Lawrence river. Any tourist who prefers to cross by ferry might choose that method of crossing and perhaps find a little bit of romance in it if he has not crossed on a ferry before. I would like if it would be possible for this point on the river also to be marked on the maps.

I agree with what other hon. members have said as to the necessity of encouraging as much as we can tourist traffic to this country. It means a lot particularly to the people situated along these highways. It means considerable additional revenue for them during the summer months, and there is an educational value to it as well because many of these Americans stop for a time and in conversation with our Canadian people we learn something of that great land to the south of us.

It was suggested by an interjection in the debate that perhaps the tourist trade from the United States to Canada had fallen off since the repeal of the Volstead Act. I would not agree with that at all, because it seems to me that the proportion of our American friends who came to Canada in order that they might escape the effects of the Volstead Act in their own country was very small indeed. I think that at least ninety-nine per cent of our American friends come to Canada because of its scenic beauty and historic spots, and that they may become better acquainted with their neighbours north of them and help in establishing that bond of international good will which I am sure we all wish to develop between these two great nations.

Mr. McDADE: Mr. Chairman, may I congratulate the minister upon the clear-cut and comprehensive review which he has presented to this house of the activities of the Canadian travel bureau. I recall that last year when the special committee of the Senate was set up under the chairmanship of Hon. W. H. Dennis to study this question, various witnesses from all parts of this country came before that committee to give testimony. The initial meeting of the special committee was on the second day of May, 1934. The report was submitted to the Senate on the twenty-second day of May and was approved by parliament on the third of July, and a director, Mr. Dolan, was appointed on the twenty-fourth day of July. I mention these facts, Mr. Chairman, to point out that when a man of the capacity and energy of Mr. Dennis sees fit to tackle an important project he discharges his duties in an eminently satisfactory manner. I agree with the remark of the minister that Mr. Dennis is one of our public spirited citizens. He is a man of large business interests, running, as he does, the Halifax Herald, one of the most important of the daily press of the east and indeed of the dominion.

Coming from the province of New Brunswick I naturally take special pleasure in congratulating the Minister of Railways upon his selection of Mr. D. Leo Dolan as director of the Canadian travel bureau. Mr. Dolan is a native of the celestial city of Fredericton, the capital city of the fair province of New Brunswick, and in addition to other qualifications he is a convincing platform speaker. He is an outstanding organizer, a former newspaper man in the east, known in other parts of Canada, and withal he is an energetic worker. It is therefore with pardonable pride that as a former newspaper associate of Mr. Dolan in Fredericton and elsewhere, and a former official reporter of the legislative assembly of New Brunswick, I take this opportunity to make these few observations and to express my thanks to hon. gentlemen opposite for their flattering remarks with regard to the director. Of course, I appreciate the fact that the appointment is in no sense a political one, nor is this question in any way a political issue. I submit however that this is the first time in the history of this country that the various tourist activities carried on by boards of trade, railway tourist departments and other agencies have been coordinated under one head. It is true that in the past some work has been done by various organizations, town councils, boards of trade and chambers of commerce, but it was only last year, under the chairmanship of the committee in the other house, that a concerted effort was made to coordinate these various interests, and I think it can be said that the results already achieved indicate the wisdom of the step then taken.

It would be perhaps unfair if, in view of the remarks we have heard this afternoon regarding the beauties of particular sections of Canada, someone from the east did not rise to stress the advantages which we enjoy in that part of the country from the tourist point of view. We have in New Brunswick some of the greatest big game hunting grounds in the world; that is admitted. We have, particularly in the Miramichi and Restigouche sections of New Brunswick, probably the best rivers for salmon in eastern Canada, ideal from the angler's point of view. And in Miramichi and Tabusintac bay we enjoy the best duck, brant and goose hunting. There are also first class hotels and splendid boarding houses. I can assure my hon. friends that a characteristic Miramichi welcome awaits the visitor, and at any time that hon. gentlemen on either side of the house wish to spend a pleasant holiday we shall be quite pleased to welcome them. I can promise them a cordial reception.

I should not like to take my seat without making some further reference to the facilities for goose and brant shooting at Tabusintac bay. This is one of the ideal spots in the world for goose and brant shooting, and some of the wealthiest sportsmen in the United States make annual trips to that area for this form of recreation. The outfitters are well equipped to provide them with everything they require, and one of the best camps to be found anywhere is included in the ample accommodation.

I hope that funds will be available to the Canadian travel bureau to extend its work to the continent of Europe, because I believe that there are possibilities there for tourist traffic to Canada. I am happy to associate myself with the previous speakers in endorsing this vote, and I am glad to have had this opportunity to say a few words regarding our striking scenic beauties, our big game hunting grounds, and the facilities for shooting and fishing in New Brunswick.

Mr. GOTT: I wish to apologize to you, Mr. Chairman, for the rude remark I made to you a moment ago. Having risen eleven different times, and in my opinion having been first on my feet each time, naturally like many other hon. members I lost my equilibrium and directed to you the remark, "If you had eyes in the back of your head you could see me." I beg to offer you my humble apologies.

With such unanimity of sentiment in this house on this question it would be a pity that there should be any note of discord, but the hon. member for Témiscouata having just come in, he may oppose the vote. Let me say that I represent a part of this country that advertises itself without any vote for tourist purposes. I have the honour to represent a constituency in which there is the greatest bird naturalist in the whole world, because in my riding there is the sanctuary of Jack Miner, which attracts thousands and thousands of tourists every year. We do not need a vote in the House of Commons to draw people to the Miner sanctuary. I am not going to oppose the vote, whether the hon. member for Témiscouata opposes it or not, except to say that it is too small. In Essex county we have some beautiful parks. Point Pelee national park and those at Kingsville, Leamington and Amherstburg, and we have delightful swimming beaches, bathing beauties and large mosquitoes.

An hon. MEMBER: And onions.

Mr. GOTT: Well, we have probably the largest and finest onion fields in the whole Dominion of Canada. While I am on that point, I want to correct my hon. friend from Toronto East (Mr. Church); Point Pelee is not an island. The hon. gentleman should study geography a little closer; if he does he will find that Point Pelee is part of the mainland, though there is an island known as Pelee island. They also grow onions at Pelee island, but the onion fields at Point Pelee are worth a visit. I would commend it to anyone crossing the border. I would also suggest that hon. members of this house who have not done so should see our huge tobacco fields and the corn belt in Essex and Kent counties as well as our beautiful orchards, not to mention the different grains we produce in Essex and Kent. A visit to these counties would be well worth their while. As regards the Peace bridge and the Rocky mountains, and their scenic beauty, I venture to say that they have none of the exquisite pastoral beauty of the onion blossom. We have the only alkali plant in the whole dominion at Amherstburg.

An hon. MEMBER: Alcohol?

Mr. GOTT: I did not say alcohol, but we have one of those too. There is in the riding I represent the largest tomato plant in the world, purchasing every year over a million bushels of tomatoes from the farmers in that section. Altogether, the beauties that are to be found in the county of Essex, not only the Miner bird sanctuary, but our beautiful river and lake drives, are well worth the while of any tourist who comes across the border. We have several direct routes of communication. There is a vehicular tunnel between Dertoit and Windsor, the ferry service, the railway tunnel and the international bridge, all ideal means of communication between the United States and Canada. On behalf of the people of Essex county, I extend to hon. members of this house and to visitors from the United States a cordial invitation to visit us. I congratulate the minister on bringing down this vote and on the fact that he has secured the services of one who is so thorough in his work to take charge of this department, in the person of Mr. Dolan.

Mr. EULER: It is perhaps unnecessary for me to enlarge upon the tourist industry since all hon. members who have already spoken are entirely in favour of this vote. I might suggest here to the minister, or perhaps to Mr. Dolan, who has been so highly spoken of, and properly so I suppose, that he might very well avail himself of the propagandist activities of some of the members of this house, using them next year throughout the United States to advertise the beauties of their own particular districts. I do not propose to do that myself, because the advantages of the community from which I come are so well known as to make that quite unnecessary. I rise to make merely one or two observations which I think are of some importance.

There are to my mind three or four essentials in the promotion of the tourist industry as it is called. The first is perhaps to enhance as much as possible the natural attractions which we have in this country; second, to make them accessible by the construction and maintenance of good roads. It seems to me that that is absolutely necessary. The third is to make those attractions thoroughly well known, especially in the United States, by means of advertisements and otherwise. While I am speaking of that I would say this—and this is what I rose to say perhaps more than anything else—the very best advertisement we can get for Canada as a place for tourists to visit is to satisfy those tourists when we once get them. There are several ways in which that may be done. In the first place, when they enter the country, the way in which we treat them is of the utmost importance. I can remember very well some years ago in the Department of National Revenue, when a tourist entered Canada with a motor car he could get a permit for only thirty days, a period which in many cases was not long enough. We increased that to sixty days and later to three months. Then again we made the tourists bond their sporting equipment, rifles, cameras and things of that kind. Those regulations have all been wiped out, and I have no doubt that the practice then adopted is now being continued by the Department of National Revenue. The same principle should be adopted by the Immigration department; that is, put as few obstacles as possible in the way of the tourists at the border and once you have them in the country, let them be given accommodation that will make them go away thoroughly satisfied. It might be quite possible for the minister by means of some of the appropriation now being voted, by a species of propaganda right in this country to impress upon those who are serving the tourists, to give them a fair deal and not to try to extract extravagant prices by way of rates for hotels or meals along the highway. That is very important. Any tourist who leaves Canada feeling that he has been imposed upon, although this may be some very little matter, goes home and talks to his neighbours. If he can say a good word about his trip, that will do more good to the country generally than anything that can be done by way of advertising.

That is all I had intended to say except this in conclusion. If this industry can be brought to such large proportions as some have suggested to-day, such as $300,000,000, or $400,000,000, or perhaps half a billion dollars, it is worth while to spend a little more money than we are being asked to vote now to bring about that result. Last year the appropriation was $100,000; this year it is being increased by another $100,000, but $200,000 is a mere bagatelle when one considers the proportions which the industry may reach by means of more advertising and other ways of promoting it. I would like to say to the minister, if this is any satisfaction to him, that I and I think all hon. members on this side are quite in accord with what he desires to do. I think nearly all of us would be quite willing to vote a larger sum, believing it would be money thoroughly well spent if it were properly spent in the promotion of tourist traffic, and in order to obtain for this country such a large income as from $300,000,000 to $500,000,000.

Mr. MYERS: I have listened this afternoon with more than the usual amount of interest to this discussion of the tourist traffic in Canada. In the first place let me extend my congratulations to the minister in charge of this work upon the effort that is being put forth, very wisely in my opinion, to advertise our country to the tourist world. It is really hard to estimate the value of the tourist traffic to the dominion or to any province. For instance, let us consider the matter from the farmer's viewpoint. If for even three months of the year we could double the population in a community, one can see what that means in the way of consumption of farm products.

However, what I rose chiefly to say is that I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to the different members who have spoken on this question this afternoon, advertising I presume their different constituencies. I even noticed, as I rose to speak, that the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mullins) intends to follow me in this discussion. I was just wondering what on earth he could have to say that would attract tourists to a section like his. I was equally surprised at the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Gott) setting forth as an attraction for tourists from the United States, from Britain, from the whole world, a patch of onions. If there is any one vegetable that is mean to look at, unattractive to my way of thinking, it is an onion, and I have grown everything from rhubarb to potatoes. The idea of holding up onions as an attraction to tourists!

Let me tell the committee the truth about this whole matter. When you bring your tourists into Canada, if you want them to see the very best that you have in the whole dominion in the way of natural scenery and from the standpoint of their own health, because that is one of the things that bring tourists or visitors here and there in their holidays in the summer time; if you want to give them wise direction, by all means advise them not to leave this country before seeing Prince Edward Island. The province from which I come has a name of its own. It is situated on the border of the Atlantic ocean, an island crescent in shape. The former name of the island was Abegweit, the Indian name, which I believe means "cradled on the sea." But we have a better name for it, "the garden of the gulf," and to anyone who sees it for instance from the air with its nice, square fields, attractive farmhouses and buildings, all painted or whitewashed, nice fences, green fields and the best and purest of running water that is to be found in any part of the whole world, it certainly has the look of a well kept and well cultivated garden.

Before I proceed to elaborate on the beauties and attractiveness of Prince Edward Island, let me give this advice to people from western Canada who want to take a trip to the east during their holidays in the summer time: If you go to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, they are all right in their way so far as they go, but do not come back saying that you have seen the maritime provinces if you have not seen Prince Edward Island, because that would be a fallacy. Everyone who lives in that island and many who do not live there know very well that Prince Edward Island is from many standpoints the banner province of the three.

I would like to say just a word about our sea beaches. They are red sand, hard sea beaches. We have there what is unknown to people in central Canada—the rise and fall of the tide twice in every twenty-four hours. The tide recedes, going out possibly a mile from the shore and leaving bare those beautiful, level sand beaches. When the tide is out the hot sun warms those beaches, and when you go out in your bare feet, the sand is quite hot. Then when the water flows back slowly with the rise of the tide, the hot sand warms the water which gives you beautifully warm water to bath in. Let me say this also to the people of central Canada: This is salt water; it is the salt sea waves, and no man's education is quite complete unless he has seen, tasted and had a swim in the salt water.

So far as hotels are concerned, we have a splendid Canadian National hotel in the city of Charlottetown, one of the best little railway hotels in the dominion, and I believe from the standpoint of revenue it is doing much better than any of the rest of the system. In addition to that we have many hotels, especially round the north shore where the best bathing is to be found. In addition many of our enterprising people in Prince Edward Island have provided cabins in which tourists can stay overnight. These cabins are rented at very reasonable rates, and tourists coming in their cars often remain in one cabin for two or three days and then move on to another part of the island. Our people realize that these tourists are not always wealthy people, and the charges both in the cabins and the hotels are very moderate. From the standpoint of health, which has an intimate relation to this matter, Prince Edward Island is in a unique position. As regards dairy products, every milch cow on Prince Edward Island has a clean bill of health; our province is absolutely free from bovine tuberculosis. Back in 1925 we had our cattle tested for the first time, and in that first test less than half of one per cent showed reaction. On a subsequent test some three years later only one-tenth of one per cent reacted. A further test is to be made during the coming summer. So that freedom from animal tuberculosis is one of the attractions of our province. When you take a drink of milk or eat our butter or cheese you have the guarantee that it is absolutely free from that dread disease. Then we have the very best fish that Canada can supply. I told you on a former occasion about our magnificent codfish, mackerel, lobsters and oysters, of which we are so proud. I take this opportunity of inviting the people of Canada to pay a visit to Prince Edward Island and partake of the good things we have in the way of fish. Then in potatoes it is our boast that we grow the mealiest, the driest and the best flavoured potatoes to be found anywhere in Canada. And what is true of potatoes is true also of turnips. I think it is well known that with reference to turnips Prince Edward Island occupies a unique position; there is no other place I have ever seen where you can grow turnips of the quality that we can in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Tourists are not interested in turnips.

Mr. MYERS: I might go on; we are proud of having the best mutton and lamb to be found anywhere in Canada. Then one of the attractions is the passage from Cape Tormentine, New Brunswick, in that palatial car ferry the Charlottetown, run by the Department of Railways. It is a real treat to cross in that magnificent ship. On one deck there are three railway tracks which can accommodate sixteen standard railway cars; you drive your automobile right on the upper deck under its own power, and that deck carries from fifty to sixty automobiles. So you have no trouble in getting across. The only weak link is the railway between Sackville and Tormentine, which is not up to the standard. On another occasion, possibly when the estimates of the Minister of Railways are up, I may have an apportunity to register a protest with reference to the service we are receiving on that line.

In conclusion, in order to make way for my hon. friend from Marquette, let me just say that one's education as a citizen of Canada is incomplete until he has visited Prince Edward Island.

Mr. MULLINS: We have listened to a description of the beauties of Prince Edward Island, Ontario, and the lower parts of Canada, but I say to hon. members that until they have visited Manitoba and the great west they have not seen Canada. Although hewn out of the forests only a comparatively few years ago, one of the most beautiful spots in all Canada is the Riding Mountain national park, situated in the constituency I have the honour to represent. We have also an international park in the southern part of the province. We cannot go back to the days of Jacques Cartier and Cabot or those historic events in the early history of Canada, but we can show you wild life in its natural state. We show you the buffalo, the elk, the moose, all within a few miles in that park. And we can show you one of the most beautiful lakes in all Canada, called Clear lake—not salt water. We have also in that park—and it was taken care of by the Minister of the Interior—a well the waters of which will cure a wooden leg. Go and drink of that water and I care not what is wrong with you, it will cure you of anything in the way of inward troubles.

Mr. DUPUIS: Would it cure even the government?

Mr. MULLINS: I hope the minister will include in his estimates a sum to help us in Manitoba. We have tourists coming into the park from the Dakotas and from Minnesota and all that western country, and once they come they always want to come back. I can guarantee that if those of you who live in the east and who think so much of your country down here will come to Manitoba and take one look at that beautiful lake and Riding Mountain national park, you will enjoy it as we do.

Mr. SPENCER: May I remind the committee that the largest and finest buffalo park in the world is in the centre of Alberta, in my constituency.

Mr. MANION: Apparently it is the desire of the committee to go on a little longer with this, but before six o'clock I would like to say a word or two in reply. May I first express my deep and sincere appreciation of the kindly cooperation shown by hon. members from all parts of the house, and their interest in this great industry. I do not think by any means that this discussion has been a waste of time; the opinions expressed by hon. members on both sides have been helpful. It has been suggested that the amount of money appropriated for this purpose should be increased. I hope the time will come to do that, but I doubt if there is much chance this year. I have received many suggestions that would be useful, and I thank hon. members for their advice and cooperation. I do not want to talk out my own estimates, so I shall sit down.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): This seems to be a free for all, and as so many have risen to compliment the minister on this vote I should like to say a few words on behalf of British Columbia. If it is too late now I would like to reserve the right to speak next time.

Mr. MANION: Then call it six o'clock and we shall go on another day.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, March 7, 1935

The house met at three o'clock.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

MONTREAL HARBOUR

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. How many employees were employed at the Montreal harbour during the navigation season of 1923 and that of 1934?

2. What salaries were paid to these employees during the above years?

3. What was the tonnage of the vessels that entered the Montreal harbour in 1923 and 1934?

4. How many vessels came to Montreal in 1923 and 1934?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

The following information has been furnished by the Harbour commissioners of Montreal:

1. Employees

	Maximum	Average
1923	2,167	1,552
1934	2,056	1,487

(Note.—The 1934 figures include 179 average and 276 maximum employed on Public Works Construction Act works).

2. Salaries and wages paid in 1923. $1,871,770 03
Salaries and wages paid in 1934. 1,674,843 15

3.

	1923	1934
Trans-Atlantic vessels	3,221,781	3,741,063
Coasting vessels	461,939	1,266,460
Inland vessels	4,070,283	3,305,503
Total net regd. tonnage	7,754,003	8,313,026

4.

	1923	1934
Trans-Atlantic vessels	892	1,036
Coasting vessels	190	819
Inland vessels	5,609	3,702
Total	6,691	5,557

(Items 1 and 2 for 1934 include employees on Jacques Cartier bridge which did not exist in 1923).

IMMIGRATION

Mr. COTNAM:

1. How many immigrants were admitted to Canada from: (a) British empire countries; (b) United States of America; (c) foreign countries, each year from 1920 to 1934 inclusive?

2. How many immigrants left Canada for the United States of America each year from 1920 to 1934 inclusive?

3. How many Canadians returned to Canada from the United States of America each year from 1920 to 1934 inclusive?

Mr. GORDON:

1. Fiscal year	British empire countries	From U.S.A.	All other countries	Totals
1919-20	60,659	40,728	7,021	108,408

Note.—In addition to administering the Soldier Settlement Act the staff are engaged in General Land Settlement; investigations for War Veterans' Allowance Committee; Board of Pension Commissioners and Department of Pensions and National Health; appraisals for the Board of Review under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act; Relief Land Settlement; Relief investigations.

LOAN TO ROUMANIA

Mr. McPHEE:

1. What is the total amount owing at this date on the loan made by the government of Canada to Roumania, under order in council P.C. 690, April 2, 1919?

2. Has anything been paid on said loan since it was made?

Mr. RHODES:

1. Principal amount, as consolidated in 1922 into $23,969,720 4 per cent Roumanian bonds due 1968, is outstanding in full.

2. No principal amount has been payable. Interest was paid in full to April 1, 1933. Coupons due October 1, 1933, and April 1 and October 1, 1934, were paid to the extent of twenty-five per cent.

Interest payments from October 1, 1933, to 1936, are being made on a reduced scale under a plan proposed by Roumania and recommended to private investors by the council of foreign bondholders and accepted by the government of Canada.

BRITISH SETTLERS

REPORTED DISTRESS OF IMMIGRANTS UNDER THREE THOUSAND BRITISH FAMILIES SCHEME IN NORTHERN SASKATCHEWAN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Immigration): I wish to answer an inquiry that was made yesterday by the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance) with respect to certain newspaper reports having to do with a number of settlers under what is known as the three thousand British families scheme.

Mr. VALLANCE: May I correct the minister? These are not newspaper reports; they were reports made to me direct.

Mr. GORDON: Whether they were newspaper reports or not, I will try to answer the question. I have had inquiries made and it would appear that these settlers came to Canada under an empire agreement with the British government about ten years ago. A great number of the settlers have done very well, and some of them not so well.

On January 28 last a delegation of these settlers called at the office of the chief field supervisor at Prince Albert. There were nine families represented. I do not think it would be fair to name the families, but the spokesman for the delegation stated that the families had been induced to emigrate on promises which were not fulfilled and that the settlers required relief in food and clothing. Then they submitted what was almost an ultimatum, as follows:

(a) The group of settlers must be repatriated to the United Kingdom.

(b) Allowances must be provided by the dominion government to keep the families in reasonable comfort until repatriation was carried out.

(c) The settlers would not operate their farms this spring.

(d) If allowances made by the dominion government were considered insufficient, application would be made to the British government for authority to dispose of stock and equipment purchased out of British funds; and

(e) A reply must be made within a period of two weeks.

A report was immediately submitted by the district superintendent at Saskatoon and on the 9th ultimo the district superintendent was advised that on checking over the records here it was found that these families had come to Canada between 1926 and 1929 and had already acquired Canadian domicile by five years' residence. Therefore we have no machinery that can be put in motion to return these families to Britain.

The attention of the district superintendent was also directed to the fact that the distribution of relief is not in the hands of this department and that these families would be entitled to the same treatment as other residents whether born in Canada or abroad, and further that the settlers would have the same rights as other farmers under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act for a readjustment of indebtedness. One of the settlers, Mr. Fraser, acted as spokesman. He wired to the director on the thirteenth ultimo refusing to accept the department's reply to the delegation's demands and said that they would remain in occupancy of the Prince Albert office until the director would interview them personally.

On Thursday the fourteenth ultimo, the district superintendent at Saskatoon was instructed by long distance telephone to offer to transport the settlers back to their farms and to advise them that if any difficulty was met with in obtaining relief, he, the district superintendent, would take the matter up with the proper authorities. As is well known, the dominion government, acting in conjunction with the government of the province, is making provision for necessitous cases throughout the whole province. The district superintendent was told to advise the delegation that the office was to be closed at the usual closing hour in the evening and they would be removed unless they left the premises.

Reports to hand show that the land settlement officer offered to provide transportation for any who wanted it. Two of the families who lived fourteen and nine miles respectively from Prince Albert had driven to the city in their own automobiles bringing some of the others with them. None of the delegates accepted the offer of transportation. They left the office shortly after three o'clock in the afternoon of the fourteenth without any force or persuasion beyond the advice of the land settlement officer. A press report of the fifteenth ultimo stated that the remnant of the delegation started to walk home distances of from ten to fifteen miles and that there were some women in the group. As there was only one woman who appeared at the land settlement office after the first day and as she and her husband drove their own automobile, the press report is evidently incorrect.

Then the director wrote to the spokesman for the group setting out the position of the department in the matter. It is quite obvious that these people, having resided in Canada as long as they have, while they may have met with difficulties, have assumed an attitude which in my judgment is at least not well considered, and if they find themselves at the moment in need of assistance, there is a proper source, namely the provincial authorities, who undoubtedly can take care of their situation.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH AN UNEMPLOYMENT AND SOCIAL INSURANCE COMMISSION

The house resumed from Thursday, February 21, consideration in committee of Bill No. 8, to establish an unemployment and social insurance commission, to provide for a national employment service, for insurance against unemployment, for aid to unemployed persons, and for other forms of social insurance and security, and for purposes related thereto—Mr. Bennett—Mr. Morand in the chair.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The Prime Minister thought it best to stay at home a few days longer, and he asked me whether I might find it possible to take up this bill in committee and deal with the few remaining clauses that were left the other day. With the consent of the committee I am going to try my best to do so. I would suggest that the chairman tell us which is the first clause that was not passed.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I would suggest to my right hon. friend that he do not confine his good offices to this one bill. Let him take all this social legislation and see if we cannot get it through this week.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I am obliged to the right hon. gentleman, but I think he had better wait and see how I get along.

On section 7—Commission to undertake investigation.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The other day there was some discussion with regard to the possibility of there being a vacancy in the commission for a very long time without its being filled. I would therefore move that we revert to clause 5 for the purpose of moving an amendment, because some of the representatives of labour claimed that as the clause read, it might be possible to leave a vacancy in the commission for a very long time and this might be very awkward.

Motion agreed to.

On section 5—Duration of office.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I move that section 5 be amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

4. Any vacancy arising in the commission shall be filled within a period of six months.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. MITCHELL: Why six months? That seems like too long a period in which to make the choice of a commissioner. I see no reason why the government of the day could not choose a man within twenty-eight days. The amendment means in effect that two commissioners can sit for six months and adjudicate on problems coming before the commission without the advice, it may be of the labour representative, who is in ill health or dead, or it may be of the representative of the manufacturers, or it may be of a man of judicial qualification who is the chairman. I see no reason why six months should be necessary, and I would like the government to take into consideration shortening that period to at least twenty-eight days. That is ample time for making a decision in regard to an appointment.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The hon. gentleman must not imagine that any government would have the intention of taking the full six months, but there are times of the year when for various reasons it is difficult to make these arrangements. In some parts of the year it is easy, but at other times there is a good deal of difficulty because of the holiday season and one thing or another. I think my hon. friend may rely on any government, even if it be one of his own way of thinking, to make a decision without taking the full six months.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I feel quite sympathetic toward the position taken just now by the acting Prime Minister, but I still think six months is too long a period. I agree with him that twenty-eight days might be hardly enough, and I would suggest that three months, as the period during which the appointment would be expected to take place, would be ample, taking into consideration almost all factors that could be anticipated. I think three months would be fair under the circumstances.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I am within the good sense of the committee on this subject. To my mind it does not make a great deal of difference, because such an officer would be very necessary and I think any government would make this appointment as soon as possible. But I want to submit to my hon. friends that there is a time of the year when for two months or more in the holiday season very few people and sometimes very few members of the government are here. I will compromise on four months. I have had a good deal of experience of holidays in that connection. When ministers are away attending to their duties in various parts of the country, it is sometimes difficult to decide on a first class man to fill one of these important positions.

Mr. MITCHELL: Might I make this suggestion, which I think is practical? Reducing the time would at least shorten the agony for the government. I am not unmindful of the large numbers who would probably offer themselves for a position of this description, and I think from a purely practical point of view a decision made quickly would probably be just as sound as if the government waited a full six months, or four, as the case might be. The number of men in the dominion who in my judgment could ably fill this position is not large, and in the interest of smooth administration I suggest that the shortest period of time should be stipulated in which a vacancy occurring in the commission should be filled. We have heard recently in the house of the office of a deputy minister being vacant for four or five years; and such a thing might occur in connection with this commission. We of the labour movement are anxious that when these vacancies occur, particularly if it is a labour vacancy, it should be filled at the earliest possible moment.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: This is being put in entirely to please the labour element, and we have no intention of holding these offices up at all. But I have explained to the hon. gentleman the reason why at certain times it is very difficult to select the proper man for these positions. I cannot go further than four months.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 7—Commission to undertake investigations.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Have hon. gentlemen any remarks to make about clause 7? This is the clause which provides that the commission may take into consideration any classes or parts of classes which are not covered by the act, and make recommendations to the governor in council regarding them The governor in council has no power to alter the act, but if the proposals from the commission were considered satisfactory no doubt they would be passed on to parliament.

Mr. BRADETTE: When I spoke previously on this matter I believe I was misunderstood by the Prime Minister. I spoke of people being put under the scheme who after paying all their life would never receive a cent of compensation for the very good reason that they had permanent employment. We see in this bill the excepted employments, which include civil servants, people working in financial institutions and so on. These excepted employments are listed on pages 31 and 32. I suppose those people in sheltered employments are not to come under the scheme for the reason that they are unlikely to get any benefit from it. But we have the very same situation in industry to-day. When I spoke of gold-mining the other day I had in mind to include all mining in Canada. I was also thinking of people who work all their lives in other permanent industries. I mentioned that in our section we have mines whose lives the geological report indicates have been extended to sixty or seventy-five years, and past experience indicates that those mines will be working every day of that life; yet the miners and mine owners will be paying for unemployment insurance during all that time, the miners never having a chance to receive any benefit. I was always in favour of contributory unemployment insurance, but when I see such an anomaly as that I am inclined to believe that I was absolutely wrong. I must make the statement very clearly that you are going to have thousands of miners and workers in permanent industries who will never receive a cent of compensation but will be paying under this scheme every day of their life. The committee should be fully seized of that situation. I mentioned the Hollinger mine which has been working consecutively and steadily for the last twenty-two years and no doubt the same thing will apply for the next twenty-two. Those mine owners and miners will be contributing for the full extent of those working years without a chance of ever receiving any return. Anyone who knows anything about insurance is aware that if for instance I have a life insurance policy, some day my beneficiaries if not myself will get some benefit from it. If I have an accident insurance policy and after so many years I have had no accident the premium is graded down. The same principle should apply to these working men, absolutely working men, not in sheltered employment such as the civil service. Could the committee visualize civil servants coming under this scheme? No, for the simple reason that they are expected to work every working day. I must repeat, we have the same situation in some industries, and outstandingly in the mining industry; people who will be working every day and will receive no benefit from unemployment insurance. Is that fair? I think it is not. I brought this matter up the other day, I think that my proposal is fair, namely, that at the end of five years if miners or industrial workers have been working steadily, there should be a grading down of premium by twenty per cent a year to a minimum of five cents a week, both for miners and also the mine and industry owners. That should appeal to this committee, because the scheme as it is at present does an injustice to people who may be paying every day of their lives and never receive a cent of compensation. The Prime Minister said the other day that he had no sympathy with the wealthy people. Everyone knows that my sympathy is with that point of view. But this is going to hit the working man particularly. Surely it should be possible to have a graded scale in this respect. I am making this appeal very sincerely. I hold no brief for the gold mining industry, except that it happens that most of the mines are in my riding, and everyone realizes the stabilizing effect that the gold mining industry has had during the present time of depression. The Prime Minister said the other day that he had great sympathy for the coal miners in Alberta, in the riding represented by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland). But the committee should be seized of this fact; you may have some highly seasonal mining industries and other industries that pay higher dividends than industries working steadily all the year. I want this committee to realize the injustice that would be done under this scheme, which in general is good for the working people but in its present form is going to hurt some by taxing them although they have no chance whatever of receiving any benefit under it. There are hundreds of thousands coming within the excepted employments, for the simple reason that they are sheltered employments; these people are assured of work as long as they live. This applies to civil servants and men in banking and financial institutions and other occupations. On the other hand highly seasonal employments are excepted and farmers do not come under the scheme. Surely every hon. member grasps the point I have brought before the committee, but I must repeat it to make it very clear, that a large number of men will be working all their life and contributing to this fund although having no chance whatsoever of deriving any benefit from it. It would be different if there were an old age pension and accident benefits, but there is no benefit whatsoever to men who will be paying twenty-five cents per week all the time, which is a large amount to take from their wages. I think the amendment is desirable, and that the acting Prime Minister is fully seized of the situation, as he was closely in touch with industry and must be very familiar with the point I have brought before the committee.

Mr. MITCHELL: I profoundly disagree with the argument of the last speaker. For fifteen years I have carried life insurance, as soon as I got married I took out a policy. Under that one has to die to win. I have insured my house, and the only way I can derive benefit from it is by the house burning down, but I do not want that to happen. As a working man I want insurance against unemployment, not with the end in view of getting out of work. You see the point. I have had some experience amongst working men of this country, and I have seen profound changes in industrial conditions. There is no guarantee that men working in the gold mines will continue to have steady employment for the rest of their lives. I remember before the coming of the motor car the men on the old radial railways thought they had a job for life, but now most of them have gone into new vocations or are on relief. I could quote many other industries. There are the stone cutters who, with the development of machinery, have experienced a drop in employment amounting to seventy-five per cent. They have had to look for other work, and I am sure that if legislation of this description had been in operation the effects of unemployment would have been softened. That same argument applies to the miners. I want to say very frankly that I have not changed the opinion I expressed in the second speech I made in this house, that we should have carried the cost of this depression out of income; we should have paid for relief by a tax on the incomes of the people of this country. We should have been good Scotsmen and paid as we went. I believe that if many of the municipalities that find themselves in difficulty at the moment had adopted a similar policy, with the provincial governments adjusting the avenues of taxation to permit them to meet the situation as it has existed for the last four or five years, they would have been in a better financial position than the dominion The question raised by the last hon. member who spoke was dealt with by the British government in 1924, I think, and this is what they say about it:

> In the hope that unemployment insurance might serve as an incentive towards greater stability of employment, the act granted an employer a refund of one-third of his contributions for each worker that he had kept in steady employment throughout the year. Similarly, a person who contributed not less than 500 weeks was entitled, upon reaching the age of 60, to a refund of the excess of his total contributions over his total benefits together with compound interest at 2½ per cent. Since these features did little to stabilize employment and were cumbersome to administer, they were repealed in 1920 and 1924, respectively.

That policy was set in motion by the British government. I think we can safely say they have the best unemployment insurance act in the world to-day, and they found that policy impractical.

As one who may be working at a trade within the next twelve months I want to say that I would raise no objection to chipping in twenty-five cents a week to help the poor chap who has no job. I should be thankful that I was working and able to do so; that is the attitude I have always adopted. These men in the gold mines, who are sitting on top of the world at the moment—

Mr. BRADETTE: I did not speak of the gold mines in particular; I mentioned industry in general.

Mr. MITCHELL: I am not being critical; I am just discussing the matter from the practical aspect. Since these chaps in the gold mines are sitting on top of the world at the moment I think they should be willing and anxious to make their contribution. I quite agree with the hon. member that there should be no exemptions; I think the employees of banks, insurance companies and other financial institutions should come under the provisions of this act, so that they might make their contribution towards its cost. I believe that in this country, with its enormous seasonal unemployment, we will find it necessary to take that action before the act has been in operation for very long. I think we should take the long view in regard to these men and women who think they have jobs for life; I believe they should come under the scheme so that if they should get out of work they will be able to take advantage of it.

Mr. BRADETTE: I could not have made myself very clear or the hon. member for East Hamilton would not have spoken in this way. He made a comparison with life insurance. If he pays for life insurance all his days he may not get the benefit himself, but his family will get the benefit of it, so I think his comparison is very weak.

Mr. MITCHELL: They will get the benefit of this.

Mr. BRADETTE: No. If a man works and contributes all his life or for ten, twenty or forty years he will not get a cent of benefit. Now I will ask the hon. member for East Hamilton if he is in favour of these excepted employees, these civil servants or employees of financial institutions, and others.

Mr. MITCHELL: I said I was not in favour of exempting anybody.

Mr. BRADETTE: But it is in the act. If we are going to exempt all these permanent employees we are going to penalize the ordinary workingmen. I did not mention workers in gold mines in particular; I was referring to industry in general. That includes gold mining, of course, but the hon. member cannot get away from the fact that people will get no benefit from this measure if they work and contribute to it over a long period of years. If there were no exempted employments I would say all right. The gold miners, the owners and workingmen of northern Ontario are willing to pay into this scheme, but they believe everyone should pay into it. If a man works for forty years and longer, and makes his contributions to this fund, he will pay in all his life without obtaining any benefit at all. I think if the contribution were gradually lessened until it became five cents per week we would be following the principle of insurance on which this bill is said to be founded. I mentioned the people who are permanently employed; I believe they should make their contributions. Otherwise civil servants and men working in banks will not pay a cent towards the cost of this scheme. Is that fair?

I know something of the labour situation; I know something of the lives of the workingmen. I know that they are just as loyal as any other class of society; I think they are willing to pay their share of the cost of this scheme, but why should some people in selected employments not pay a dollar while the man who works in the mud and the dust must pay for the rest of his life without getting a cent of benefit unless he loses his job? Under the present system we will have the people in the excepted employments, those working for municipal, provincial and federal governments, those in financial institutions and others, who will never pay a dollar towards this scheme. On the other hand the people engaged in industry, who are willing and ready to pay something towards this insurance, may be required to keep on paying for many years without receiving any benefit at all. I am not speaking for any particular section of the country; I am speaking for the workingmen as a whole, the men who, under certain circumstances, will have no chance whatever of benefiting under this scheme. One of the principles of direct taxation is that those who are taxed should obtain some benefit from such taxation, but under this scheme there will be thousands and tens of thousands of people who will contribute for twenty, thirty or forty years but who will never get a single dollar of benefit, and I say that is not fair. I again urge that the bill be amended as I have suggested.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have a good deal of sympathy with the views expressed by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. We have been told that this bill is based upon the insurance principle. Obviously the smiling and good natured acting Prime Minister realizes that all insurance is sold on the basis of risk. Uniformity is not accepted as a principle of insurance at all. This whole bill is based upon the assumption that unemployment will be uniform throughout the respective industries that come within its scope. That of course is not and will not be the case.

In support of that contention may I submit to the acting Prime Minister a case which came to my attention recently, of an industry in the city of Toronto. At the present time it is probably down to the bedrock level of employment, that is, in keeping with the continued activity of the industry. It employs thirty men. I am informed by the proprietor that the probability is that not more than two of these men at the most will become unemployed; if it is necessary to let go more than two men it will mean closing down the plant entirely, but with the continued stability of conditions for which the proprietor hopes he does not think more than two of these men will lose their employment. It is pointed out that before those two would be able to take advantage of the privileges of this bill the employer, the employees and the government will have contributed for forty weeks, a total of $24 per employee. Multiply that by thirty and you have the sum of $720. If two of these men become unemployed they draw the maximum benefit for seventy-eight days or thirteen weeks, a total of $156. That is what they will draw out as their share of the fund and, so far as that industry is concerned, that will leave in the fund a balance of $564 for which no adequate return is made to that particular industry. But that $564 is not all, because during the period of thirteen weeks, while these two unemployed men draw their benefits, the other twenty-eight employees, the owner and the government continue to contribute, so that when these men who are out of work have exhausted their benefits under the scheme and gone back on relief, the total in the fund in respect of this industry will amount to $782. Obviously that is going to become quite a common case in those industries that are not so subject to unemployment as some other industries may be.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: May I ask the hon. gentleman how many men were employed in that industry in prosperous times?

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have not that exact figure before me.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The hon. gentleman would have to get that information in order to know how many men not now working would have been under the scheme if it had been in force.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): But the difficulty is that you are starting now and you have to consider this bill from the present time on, not from what has taken place in the past. The whole picture is altered now, and you could not draw any conclusions even if you secured the information suggested by my right hon. friend. I suggest to the committee that this point is made very clear by Paul Douglas and Aaron Director in their book The Problem of Unemployment, published by Macmillan, at page 418. They say that provided the contributory principle is accepted—but I do not accept it. I think in view of the present low average wage level in Canada this measure, so far as the employee is concerned, is unjust. The position of those who advocate a contributory system for the employee is untenable. They point out that if the measure is accepted there should be no quarrel with the fact that under an insurance system the regularly employed workers and their employers must pay for the irregularly employed workers, provided the risk of unemployment is uniform. Yes, provided it is uniform, but it is a well known fact that this latter condition is not fulfilled.

An investigation made in 1926 in Great Britain revealed that over a period of five years only fifty-two per cent of the insured who had paid contributions had at any time drawn benefits. This would argue for a differentiation of the contribution rates among workers, which in practice is difficult to work out. A state subsidy makes up in part the disadvantages to the steadily employed workers, and the fact that the forty-eight per cent of the workers had to pay for the extended benefit as well lends support to the argument that the state's share should have been increased during these years.

I submit that if there is to be a measure of justice done to industry, such as has been mentioned by the hon. member for North Timiskaming and other hon. members, the government's share in the scheme should be steeply increased. I further submit that if the contributory principle is to be insisted upon that there should be a sliding scale of contributions to keep step with the incidence or likelihood of incidence of unemployment in the industry. This point is dealt with by Paul H. Douglas and Aaron Director in the same work at page 492, when they point out that the premium rate as between industries and firms should, as we have urged, be varied according to the relative amount of unemployment characterizing them. In the event of the government refusing to accept the suggestion of the hon. member for North Timiskaming, and refusing to accept my suggestion for non-contributory insurance so far as the employees are concerned, then I say the least they can do is to see to it that they step up their grants, and bring under the operation of the act all employed persons in the country. Let the cost be spread out over the whole lot of them, so as to make the burden less. But to press the burden down upon those industries which are most likely to suffer from unemployment is an obvious injustice not only to the industry itself but to those engaged in it, and also an obvious injury to the whole principle supposed to be underlying the bill.

For these reasons I submit the points raised by the hon. member for North Timiskaming are well taken, and if the insurance principle is to apply then of course a pro rata contributory—as they call it—sliding scale, or graduated payments, would be the only fair basis for the definite insurance principle as adhered to. In the earlier part of his remarks the hon. member for North Timiskaming indicated something which pleased me, namely that he was in favour of the contributory principle, but having examined the bill more closely, and having considered its effect upon certain industries in the country, he felt that in the first instance he had not been well advised. I was glad to hear him say that. After examining the bill I have definitely come to that conclusion. Until I had read the bill I was much in the same position as he was. I now feel however that this bill will work an injustice, and that it will be of little benefit to anybody.

Mr. MARCIL: May I repeat what I said on the second reading of the bill? I observed at that time that the measure while excellent in some respects does not go far enough. In it there is no consideration for certain classes. I have had the honour for many years to represent the same constituency, and for the last month I have been endeavouring to find one person in my constituency who would benefit by this bill. I find they all belong to the exempted classes. The hon. member for North Timiskaming complains that the men who are going to work for thirty or forty years will make the greatest payments. I know some men who will not work at all but will have to pay just the same. Those men must pay part of the taxation of the country, and as the measure is to be maintained by the government, jointly with employers and employees, they must pay their share. In my constituency and no doubt in many others there are agriculturists, horticulturists, men engaged in forestry, fishermen, lumbermen, loggers, hunters, trappers and people engaged in transportation by water and by air, who will have to make contributions but will not reap the benefits. In a maritime constituency the people either fish, carry on lumbering or are connected with navigation. Yet these people are debarred. Why should not unemployment insurance be extended to all classes, and more especially to those who are unemployable?

Apparently the intention of the Prime Minister, if I understood correctly his messages over the radio, was to give relief to the unemployed. That promise was a very worthy one, but was long overdue. The measure before us gives no relief whatever to the unemployed. Its provisions are for those who are employed continually for a certain length of time. If at the end of that time they have no work, or if no work can be found for them by the commission, then they will be allowed a certain amount per week. That is all right so far as the employed are concerned, but what about those who are not employed? Why should the taxpayers —and this includes the farmers, the lumbermen, and the fishermen—be completely debarred, although they are called upon to pay their share of the taxes for the maintenance of the scheme? That is the unfortunate and weak part of the whole system, so far as I can see.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: This bill has not for its purpose the relief of the unemployed. It has for its purpose the establishment of a fund which will be effective when a future period of unemployment comes upon us. To leave politics out of the matter, if we can, may I say that this is legislation which should have been passed in the days of plenty. Had that been done we would by this time have had a large fund available, and when hard times came along we would have had money which could have been used for the purpose of relieving the situation. I repeat that this bill is not designed to relieve unemployment.

The hon. member for Bonaventure talks about the farmers and fishermen. I would remind him that the measure refers only to those who are employed by others. Either fortunately or unfortunately for themselves, the farmers are their own masters and so are most of the fishermen. What the hon. member has said may be true, but undoubtedly at some later point there will be a measure to deal with the unemployed. May I say to the hon. member for North Timiskaming that my experience tells me there is no class of workers which can be sure of employment all the time. There is no such thing; it does not exist. He has spoken about gold mines which have been operating for years, but I would remind him that there are other gold mines which are not operating at all. Why should not the men who work without interruption in the gold mines be called upon to provide something for those who are connected with the gold mines which are not now operating? All the mines are not Lake Shores or Nipissings. However, the hon. member for East Hamilton covered the ground so thoroughly that I do not feel called upon to say anything further.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): I find myself very much in agreement with the hon. member for East Hamilton. The hon. member for North Timiskaming states that gold miners—

Mr. BRADETTE: I wish to make a correction. I did not speak about gold miners particularly; I mentioned permanent industries in general.

Mr. STITT (Nelson): Well, I shall talk about the mining industry for a little while, anyway. In my constituency there are many large mines; in fact one of the largest in Canada, operated by the Hudson Bay Mining and Smelting Company, is situated there. As soon as this bill was introduced I secured several copies and sent them not only to the miners' welfare commission, which represents the men, but also to the companies, the general managers and the superintendents of the mines. In the first place I felt it was my duty to do so, and in the second place I thought by so doing I would get their slant on the bill. Several weeks have elapsed and I have not yet received one objection to the bill. The mining companies and the miners in Manitoba are willing to accept it, and if they are willing I can see no reason why there should be objections from Ontario, the province of Quebec or in fact any other province. In Manitoba we have a two per cent wage tax which all the miners are now paying, and if they are willing to pay towards this insurance scheme in addition to the two per cent they are now paying I should think the other provinces have very little kick coming. After all, Mr. Chairman, we are our brother's keeper; if we get away from that principle humanity will not survive very long. If I were going down the mines, or working in them as miners do for seven days in the week, even if I were sheltered by continued employment I should be very happy to make this contribution. But outside of that, what miner going down a mine knows the minute he may be carried out? In such event he would be cared for under the compensation legislation for a certain period of time, but that would not go on forever. That is where this legislation would step in. Then, he may lose his job. On top of that we know there is a peaceful but continuous penetration of industry by science. It has affected mining as much as any other industry with which I am familiar. I went down in mines myself and worked in them for several years. For that reason I believe I may say I am familiar with the methods employed. When I go underground now, however, and notice the way they do things, I marvel. One man produces as much ore a day and does as much work as ten or twelve men used to do. I cannot see that the hon. member's argument carries much weight so far as the mining industry is concerned, and that is the only industry I am referring to at the present time. As I stated before, I have received no objections to the bill—nothing but commendation, and I congratulate the government upon having brought it in.

Mr. MITCHELL: Do I understand that the board has power to include within the provisions of the act those excepted in part III?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: They have power to investigate and make proposals to the governor in council. In fact, they are authorized and practically asked to do so under this act. If these proposals are approved, naturally it is expected that the government will be prepared to make suggestions to parliament to amend the act accordingly.

Section 7 agreed to.

On section 11—Regional divisions: central offices.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: When section 11 was under consideration certain questions were asked regarding the probable cost, and the Prime Minister at that time promised to have an inquiry made. I have here a memorandum, which I will read, prepared by the Civil Service Commission in cooperation with the Department of Labour:

Memorandum on the costs of the existing employment service of Canada and the estimated expenditures for national employment service and unemployment insurance during the fiscal year 1935-36.

Number of existing public employment offices now operated by provincial governments	75
Staff employed in foregoing	297
Federal government staff of employment service of Canada	27
Total dominion and provincial staffs	324

Cost of employment offices borne by provincial governments	$ 325,000
Cost of employment offices borne by dominion government	150,000
Cost of dominion administration	58,000
Total cost of present system	$ 533,000

Estimated number of employment offices required under the Employment and Social Insurance Act:—
Permanent offices	90
Part-time offices	200
Total number of offices	290
Estimated number of staff required for:
90 Permanent offices	2,500
200 Part-time offices	400
6 Regional offices	500
Headquarters office	400
Total staff	3,800
Estimated cost of staff	$5,700,000
Estimated cost of other charges involved (including premises, office equipment, supplies, etc.)	1,000,000
Total cost of staff	$6,700,000
Amount probably required for the portion of the present fiscal year during which the act will be in operation	$5,000,000

That was the information asked for when this section was under consideration before, and I have brought it down in response to the request then made.

Mr. NEILL: An amendment was proposed by myself, and the Prime Minister promised to consider it and give his opinion on it. I proposed a new subsection 5 dealing with blacklists. It will be found at page 947 of Hansard.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I am sorry I was not here the day it was discussed in committee, but the answer which the Prime Minister gave on that occasion appears to me to be absolutely conclusive. I regret that I cannot accept the amendment suggested by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. NEILL: At page 950, in the second column, in the second last paragraph, the Prime Minister said that there was no reason why this section should not stand in order that the amendment I proposed should be considered. That at least I am entitled to have done. It seems that no one knows anything about the matter.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: According to the notes and papers connected with this matter, which have been handed to me, the question was considered and it was decided that the amendment could not be accepted.

Mr. NEILL: The responsibility is the government's.

Section agreed to.

[Sir George Perley.]

New section 13 agreed to.

On section 16—Persons entitled to certificates of exemption.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: It has been explained to the Prime Minister and those of us who have been considering this matter that in some parts of the country, in the prairies for instance, the seasonal periods are pretty short, and we have been asked to increase the number of weeks in order that when the man is working it will not be so difficult for him to come within the exemption of this section. I move that 16 be amended by deleting from paragraph (b) of subsection 1 thereof the expression "twenty-two" in line eighteen and substituting therefor the expression 'twenty-four."

Mr. NEILL: If I understand it, you are extending the period by two weeks.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Yes.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 20—Statutory conditions for receipt of unemployment benefit.

Mr. NEILL: Has the Acting Prime Minister no statement to make in regard to this section? This is a very important provision. The language which the Prime Minister used was that it would have to be dealt with very carefully inasmuch as it involves the question of mining, to which the attention of the committee had been directed. Upon the interpretation of this section will depend the question whether a large body of men, coal miners, for instance, and possibly others in the same situation will or will not come within the act. I asked the Prime Minister whether coal miners such as I described, and under the conditions I indicated, would be eligible to pay and he said yes. Later on, when we came to dig into it, I asked whether under the same conditions they would be eligible to get money out and he said no. Therefore they would seem to be eligible to pay but not to receive, and this is certainly an unthinkable situation. It works out like this: the coal miners in the district which I represent are not working for one month or two or six months and then laid off. They are, so to speak, employed permanently, but they are paid just when there is a demand for coal. Three hundred men may work to-day and they may not work to-morrow. The result is that they are continuously employed in the sense that they are there, but they do not average more than three days a week. They may work two days one week and four days the next, but by and large one might figure that they work three days a week. Apparently under this legislation they are liable to come under its provisions and pay, but when the question arises of their getting anything out, they are not eligible because the act requires a man to be nine days idle before he can apply. They are never nine days continuously idle, yet they work perhaps less than twenty-six weeks a year. When I mentioned the situation to the Prime Minister, my attention was called to subsection 4 of section 20 which reads:

> Any three days of unemployment, whether consecutive or not, within a period of six consecutive days shall be treated as a continuous period of unemployment, and any two such continuous periods separated by a period of not more than six weeks shall be treated as one continuous period of unemployment.

That means to say that I can take the three days that I am idle this week and add it on to the three days I am idle next week or some other week within six weeks. But what is the result then? I have achieved only six days' continuous idleness and that will not entitle me to unemployment benefit. What is needed is an extension of that clause so that a man could keep on adding those three days of idleness until he reached a period of two or three months when he could legitimately apply for unemployment benefit. The responsibility belongs to the government; if they want to pass the subclause as it reads, certainly they will have to explain it here and I shall have to explain the matter when I get home. Are the miners under this or are they not, because I received those two distinct answers from the Prime Minister? At one stage he said: Yes, they are liable to come under it. Later he said: No, they will not get any money under it if they are not eligible under the act. But they are not eligible because they cannot show nine days' continuous idleness. On the other hand, under the first part of the legislation they are certainly eligible to pay.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: As I understand the matter, if a man is idle three days within a week, and then three days some other week within six weeks, that makes six days of unemployment and entitles him to the benefit of the legislation.

Mr. NEILL: No; he needs to have nine continuous days of idleness before he can collect.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: What clause is that?

Mr. NEILL: That is the regular clause. This is what the Prime Minister said as reported on page 979 of Hansard:

> Under those circumstances I should like to look into that subsection a little farther, because if there is a period as long as a year in which men are employed only half a week, obviously there should be some readjustment of the provisions of the subsection.

I cannot quote the section at the moment, but I am in the judgment of the committee that it says that a man must have nine continuous days of unemployment.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Where is that?

Mr. NEILL: I think it is under the schedules. I am quite certain that it says nine continuous days.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): This subclause does not say that.

Mr. NEILL: No. An hon. member suggests that I look at page 36 of the bill. On page 36, part II of the third schedule reads:

> No person shall receive benefit for any fraction of a day, nor for the first nine days of any period of continuous unemployment.

How can a man who works three days a week every week become entitled to unemployment benefit? I do not know. I again quote the Prime Minister when he said:

> Obviously there should be some readjustment of the provisions of the subsection.

I do not think we should pass this subclause until that promise of readjustment has been fulfilled.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I find myself in complete agreement with the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. There is no doubt whatever that section I of part II of the third schedule reads:

> No person shall receive benefit for any fraction of a day, nor for the first nine days of any period of continuous unemployment.

That is obviously not in conformity with subclause 4 of clause 20 on page 11 which reads:

> Any three days of unemployment, whether consecutive or not, within a period of six consecutive days shall be treated as a continuous period of unemployment, and any two such continuous periods separated by a period of not more than six weeks shall be treated as one continuous period of unemployment, and the expressions "continuously unemployed" and "continuous period of unemployment" shall be construed accordingly.

There seems to be an anomaly in the clauses; at least I cannot understand them as they are written.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: So far as I understand the matter, it is this: Three days a week is taken as continuous unemployment.

Surely in six weeks a man may accumulate nine days and then he becomes entitled under this bill.

Mr. NEILL: But under subclause 4 he can take only two continuous periods within six weeks: one week to begin with of three days idleness and then another similar period within the six weeks, but the total is only six days.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Suppose in the six weeks he works only four days a week; could he not accumulate twelve days?

Mr. NEILL: No; only eight days. He can add only the days of unemployment in one week on to those in another week within six weeks.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I do not read the subclause in that way at all. This is practically the same as the British act except that they require a period of ten instead of six weeks. But the way we have it is better. By the second statutory condition the receipt of benefits depends on continuous unemployment. Literally construed this would be a severe condition and would tend to discourage an unemployed person from seeking work for short periods or for the odd day. This tendency would not be for the benefit of the insurance fund or of insured persons. The rule in this subsection is that any three days of unemployment within a period of six days shall be treated as continuous and that any two such periods separated by not more than six weeks shall be treated as one. In the British acts, "continuously unemployed" has always been subject to statutory definition, and since 1923, the definition has been as above except that the "bridge" between two periods has been changed. They changed this "bridge" several times in England. Prior to 1923 the "bridge" was six weeks. In that year it was made three weeks; in 1924, six weeks, and in 1927, against the recommendation of the Blanesburgh committee that no change should be made, the "bridge" was increased to ten weeks. The process of change and extension in the British scheme may have been to some extent associated with the exigencies of the circumstances leading to the increasing departure of that scheme from an insurance basis. The fact that the "bridge" was six weeks prior to 1923; that it was restored to six weeks in 1924, and that the Blanesburgh committee recommended in 1927 that it should remain at six weeks, is of more than passing significance. For that reason the six weeks' period has been adopted in our case.

[Sir George Perley.]

Mr. NEILL: What is the right hon. member quoting from?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: This is a memorandum which I have had prepared. I am not quoting from anything; I had it put in this way so that I might be able to inform the committee more accurately than I could from memory. The fact is that a great many short periods of unemployment may be linked up for benefit purposes; as I understand the matter, according to this clause, eight periods of three days each, six weeks apart might be linked up to cover practically the whole year. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken when he considers this clause to be at variance with the other part of the bill. As I understand the matter, any period of three days within six weeks would count as part of the continuous period.

Mr. NEILL: I would be only too pleased if it were proved that I was wrong, but unfortunately I have a great respect for the legal acumen of the Prime Minister and I can see from reading Hansard how very definite he was. Let me quote three statements by him, all dealing with this subject, as reported on page 979 of Hansard I have already quoted one sentence. He said:

> I thought we should deal with it very carefully, because it deals also with the question of mining, to which the attention of the committee was directed by another hon. member.

Then the hon. member for Swift Current raised the exact question that I have been raising and the Prime Minister said:

> The paragraph reads: "any three days of unemployment, whether consecutive or not, within a period of six consecutive days shall be treated as a continuous period of unemployment."

Then the Prime Minister goes on to say:

> That is, after six days of the week have passed and a man has been three days unemployed, whether those days have been consecutive or not they shall be regarded as three unemployed days. That is one period.

Then the paragraph states:

> And any two such continuous periods separated by a period of not more than six weeks shall be treated as one continuous period of unemployment.

And the Prime Minister says:

> That means that if within six weeks we have this event happening twice, you have six continuous days of unemployment which go to make up the nine. That is the position.

The nine I have been talking about which he must have as a sine qua non for having benefit. Then the hon. member for Swift Current (Mr. Bothwell) asked "He has credit for the six days?" and Mr. Bennett replied, "Yes."

Then again Mr. Bennett's attention was called to men in the railway shops, and he said:

> Under those circumstances I should like to look into that subsection a little further, because if there is a period as long as a year in which men are employed only half a week, obviously there should be some readjustment of the provisions of the subsection.

Then other members took up the point again, the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Coote) brought up identically the same question about men in coal mines, and the Prime Minister said:

> I would suggest that subsection 4 be allowed to stand.

Mr. Coote made a suggestion that it be redrafted, and Mr. Bennett said:

> I have noted on my bill the hon. member's suggestion, and we shall deal with it.

There is a very definite statement by a man whose opinion we must all respect. Now the acting leader of the government has produced a statement which, as far as I could catch it —and it is my disability that I did not catch it entirely—was presumably prepared by some of his officials. I earnestly suggest that he allow this subsection to stand until we can read the argument in Hansard, and then we shall be able to consider it more fully. I am not satisfied to let it pass without a more definite statement as to whether these men are required to pay, and if they are, whether they are eligible to be paid.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Do I understand that what is bothering the hon. gentleman is that if they have a third period of three days perhaps it would not count?

Mr. NEILL: Yes, that is it. And that is exactly what the Prime Minister said.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: In order to make that plain, although I do not think there is any difficulty about it, would it do to make the fourth line read "and any two 'or more' such continuous periods"? I see no difficulty about that if the hon. gentleman wishes it. If that will satisfy his criticism I shall make inquiry.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): May I ask the acting Prime Minister if he has a copy of the British act before him?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I think I heard him state that subsection 4 of section 20 was taken from the British act.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I said it was practically what is in the British act.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That may have given rise to the difficulty because the British act provides for only six days of waiting before benefits become payable, whereas ours calls for nine. They may have copied exactly the provisions of the British bill without reference to the difference in the number of waiting days.

Mr. COOTE: I wish to draw attention to the case of the miners in my own constituency. Speaking in a general way I think they are the only class who will be affected to any exent by this bill. I asked the Prime Minister, when this section was being discussed before, whether these coal miners would come under the provisions, because of the very uncertain conditions of their employment, and it was after that that he said again he would like the subsection to stand. I should like to place on Hansard for the benefit of the committee and the minister in charge of the bill figures which I secured just yesterday showing the days that some of the mines in my constituency worked last year. I notice one mine seems to have worked practically 183 days, that is the average number worked by the employees. For another mine the number is 180, another 170 and in one case as low as 140.

For my own part I would like it to be made very clear that if the miners are to contribute to the unemployment insurance fund they will be able under these circumstances to get insurance; that is that this particular subsection will not in any way prevent them. I wish to be assured that the act is drafted in such a way that they can get their benefits under it.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I am quite ready to let this section stand for further consideration. Would the addition of the words "or more" answer the purpose of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill)?

Mr. NEILL: No, I do not think that would help, because then you would be up against the words later on as to the period of six weeks. You want this principle to apply running over months. In the next line or two it says "separated by a period of not more than six weeks." The section needs to be redrafted to cover a period extending into months.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Does the hon. gentleman argue that even if a man did not work six days out of the six weeks he ought to come under this bill?

Mr. NEILL: No, what I am suggesting is that if he comes under the bill and only works on an average say three days a week for week after week, under the present wording he is not eligible to get any unemployment benefit. But if he only works twenty-six weeks in the year he should get unemployment benefit. I seek to have the section drawn so that the periods of unemployment should be cumulative beyond that six weeks, cumulative for such period as would render him eligible for unemployment benefit eventually. Let it stand.

Mr. COOTE: I think if the section is allowed to stand and the officials in the department have this placed before them they could probably draft the section in a way to meet the necessities of the situation existing in those mining areas.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I think the hon. gentleman is unduly concerned about this matter; conditions in the coal mining industry are somewhat similar and the miners there come under this act. As I understand it all that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni wants is to make sure that the third and other periods of three days shall be included. He says that he does not think this section covers more than two of the three-day periods within six weeks. I think he is mistaken about that. It seems to me that the wording "any two or more such continuous periods" would cover all he wants.

Section stands.

On section 22—Period of disallowance of benefit in certain cases.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY The last part of subsection (a) of this section says:

Where a claim for benefit by an insured contributor is disallowed by the court of referees or the umpire, on the ground—

(a) that the third statutory condition is not fulfilled in his case by reason of his failure to prove that he is unable to obtain suitable employment;

The other day it was argued, and it is considered by the Prime Minister that perhaps this is an unreasonable burden to put upon a man, and that if he is capable of work and willing to work and unable to find suitable employment he should not be compelled to prove such inability. Therefore the proposal is that this subsection shall be so changed that the third condition will not be imposed. So I move:

[Sir George Perley.]

That section 22 be amended by deleting from paragraph (a) thereof all the words following the words "his case" in line 19.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 20—Statutory conditions for receipt of unemployment benefit.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Now that subsection (a) of section 22 is amended by striking out the provision that it be incumbent upon an applicant to prove that he was unable to obtain suitable employment, would it not be well to amend subsection 3 of section 20 in that regard also. It reads:

If an insured contributor proves in the prescribed manner that he was during any period, falling within the two years specified in the first statutory condition, incapacitated for work....

In other words, the element of proof is incumbent upon him there as it was previously in the other case. I think that is a burden that we should eliminate in this and other sections also, especially under present conditions.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: If the hon. gentleman reads them he will find that they are two very different things, one easy to determine, the other very difficult.

Section agreed to.

On section 27—Determination of questions by commission.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The purpose of the amendment that is to be proposed is to prevent any party from appealing from a decision of the commission—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I direct attention to the fact that we cannot hear what the acting Prime Minister is saying, because of the conversations that are going on in the chamber. I am anxious to hear these amendments, and I would like hon. members to be a little quieter.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, Cape Breton): The committee will kindly be a little more orderly.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: As I remember it this clause was discussed with the Prime Minister and an amendment was suggested which would prevent any party appealing from the decision of the commission but would leave the commission the right to refer to the exchequer court any decision or any matter which they might think sufficiently important, instead of deciding it themselves. It was argued here the other day that it would be very difficult for the workman to finance the appeal which is provided for in this section, and it was proposed to alter the section so that the commission itself might appeal to the exchequer court on any point with regard to which they thought there was any reasonable doubt.

Mr. NEILL: "Apply" not "appeal."

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I move in amendment, seconded by the Minister of the Interior, that section 27 be amended by deleting from paragraph (e) of subsection 1 the proviso contained in lines 28, 29 and 30. Those lines read:

Any person aggrieved by the decision of the commission on any such question may appeal from that decision to the exchequer court, and—

Also deleting from subsection 3 all that part thereof contained in the last three lines. Subsection 3 would then read:

The commission may, on new facts being brought to their notice, revise any decision given under this section.

Further by deleting the words "an appeal or" and substituting the word "a", so that this subsection would read:

The governor in council may make regulations prescribing the procedure governing appeals under this section and those regulations shall provide for limiting the time within which a reference may be brought—

In other words the purpose of this amendment is to meet the suggestion advanced the other day it would be of very little value to the workers to have the right of appeal to the exchequer court, because of the expense involved. It was thought better to leave it to the commission, if there was thought to be any reasonable doubt, to have the matter brought before the exchequer court.

Mr. NEIL: How will subsection 4 now read?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Subsection 4 will be exactly as it is now except that line 48 will read, "time within which a reference may be brought."

Mr. NEILL: But in line 47 it says:

—prescribing the procedure governing appeals under this section—

It should read "governing references" if you are going to cut out the appeals.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I think that is correct.

Mr. DUPUIS: May I suggest to the acting Prime Minister that subsection 4 should read:

The governor in council may make regulations prescribing the procedure under this section, and these regulations shall provide for limiting the time within which a reference may be brought.

Mr. IRVINE: There are two more "appeals" to be cut out on the following page.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I just noticed those. If the committee is agreeable to this change I will have the section redrafted so there will be no misunderstanding.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Would the acting Prime Minister please read to the committee paragraph (ii) of subsection (e)?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Paragraph (ii) remains as it is; it is not altered.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): In that case I wish to review or refer to the discussion that took place when this section was last before the committee. The question arose as to whether the commission would have the right to appeal to the exchequer court on any question. It was held by several members in this corner, notably the hon. member for East Hamilton and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that the commission should have the right to appeal only on a question of law. That was to receive the consideration of the Prime Minister, I think, and I should like to know the result.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: According to this wording they could appeal on any question. Does the hon. gentleman object to that?

Mr. MITCHELL: The position we take was fully explained when we discussed the bill previously. When you go before the courts the workingman is always at a disadvantage, because you have all the power of industry and perhaps the power of the state pitted against him. In the practical application of this sort of legislation—you can take the workmen's compensation laws as an example—we felt that when a commission has been given the power to decide a question, according to the law of averages the workingman is infinitely better off than if he has the right to go to the courts under the common law. What we want to make very clear is that in the ordinary application of the act the decision of the commission shall be final. I might give a practical example in connection with workmen's compensation legislation. I think about ninety-nine per cent of the cases in Ontario are satisfactory to the workmen, while one per cent are problem cases. If you permit an appeal, in eighty per cent of the cases that are satisfactory to the workmen—the employer will appeal as a matter of course, because if you give the employee the right to appeal you must give that right to the employer as well. We would rather take a chance on the fairness of a commission than take the risk, if I may call it that, of going to the courts, where we would be at a decided disadvantage. That is as clear as I can put it.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: What we are proposing is that there should be no right of appeal to either side, but that the commission itself may appeal. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman objects to that.

Mr. MITCHELL: On a question of law.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The commission may make a reference to the exchequer court.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): There is no appeal whatever left now; there is only a reference, which is entirely discretionary and which is not mandatory at all. There is no appeal left in the bill at all.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: There is merely a reference; that is right. I used the wrong word. There is merely a reference to the exchequer court if the commission thinks fit.

Mr. NEILL: It is rather more than a reference, because the section provides:

—the commission may, if they think fit, instead of themselves deciding such question, refer the question for decision to the exchequer court.

I think that provision should be eliminated if you are going on the theory that they can put only a sort of abstract problem to the court.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I do not suppose the labour representatives object to the commission taking such steps as they think best to decide any questions that may come before them. Surely there can be no objection to that.

Mr. COOTE: It does seem to me the working of paragraph (ii) could be improved upon, now that you are striking out paragraph (i). I think it should read something like this: "The commission may, if they think fit, refer any question which they may feel it necessary to refer to the exchequer court."

Some hon. MEMBERS: That is what it provides now.

Mr. COOTE: It says "instead of deciding such question" and "such question" refers to subsections (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e), and surely it is not those questions that are to be referred; it would be other questions regarding the interpretation of the act. Those are surely the only questions the commission would wish to refer to the exchequer court.

[Mr. Mitchell.]

Mr. MITCHELL: As a layman reading the law, I would understand that they may continually pass the buck until the commission is black in the face. We wish to obviate that. In our view the commission should take the responsibility, and if the government can assure us that the contention put forward by an hon. member from one of the Vancouver ridings is sound, then I am satisfied.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That does not mean anything.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Does the hon. member wish to have the whole idea of reference to the exchequer court left out?

Mr. MITCHELL: No.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): No, but once more may I point out to the acting Prime Minister, a man who is a very capable lawyer, that he must be fully aware that it is usually the letter of the law which applies in a court, not the spirit. It does not matter what interpretation may be placed upon the law by hon. members, the court will undoubtedly decide in keeping with the actual written document.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Quite so.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): This document clearly states that the commission has power to refer any case—any case, not just questions of law or questions of interpretation—for decision to the exchequer court. That is the point raised by the hon. member for East Hamilton, and other hon. members. Quite properly in my opinion they take objection to this point. When one gets into the claws of the law—or, shall I say, the arms of the law—decisions are subject rather to cold-blooded legal interpretation than to humanitarian or other principles.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Order, order.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I submit—and no person knows it better than the hon. member who has just interjected his sardonic and ironic "order, order"—that if this point is to be adequately met there should be included in the subparagraph (ii) the words "any question of law" or "any question of interpretation arising out of this act," and nothing else. The right of reference should be limited to those two points.

Mr. COOTE: In other words, we should not have a clause in the bill which would allow the commission, as we have said so often lately, to pass the buck to the exchequer court. Let them decide the ordinary questions arising under the administration of the act.

Mr. IRVINE: If we alter subparagraph (ii) we will have to alter subparagraph (i), too.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): No, it was altered.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Stand.

Section stands.

On section 28, subsection 3—Umpires and deputy umpires.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The question was as to the classification of the term "deputy umpire." I believe the point was raised by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Yes, I think that is true. As a matter of fact, in England they have an umpire and, I believe, seven deputy umpires. In Canada the number would depend upon the number of sections into which we divide the country. I can see no objection to this subsection.

Mr. NEILL: The point is this: There is no differentiation of duties assigned to the umpire and the deputy umpires respectively. The deputy umpire is clothed with the same authority as the umpire. Why should we appoint an umpire who would ostensibly have authority or jurisdiction above a deputy umpire? Why not simply state that a number of umpires is deemed necessary?

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I cannot follow the argument of the hon. member. I suppose the umpire would be located at Ottawa, and the different deputy umpires would be in different sections of the country. All of them will be clothed with authority in accordance with the act.

Mr. NEILL: If they are all going to be clothed in the same authority why should one be put in a little pedestal above the others, but apparently without any added authority? When a deputy umpire makes a decision it is not referred to the umpire; they all act under the same basis of jurisdiction. Why have two distinct classes? Why not call them umpires? This is not an important point, but I should like to have it made clearer.

Mr. DUPUIS: Mr. Chairman, so that we may more intelligently study section 27 I would ask that the committee revert to that section.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Very well.

Mr. DUPUIS: On February 21, as indicated at page 1038 of Hansard, there was some discussion about paragraph (e) and subparagraphs (i) and (ii), and a decision was made by the Prime Minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): By the house.

Mr. DUPUIS: Hansard reports the discussion as follows:

> A few days ago I listened with great interest to the statement made by the trades and labour council with respect to this matter, and I gathered that they were of the opinion that if the question of appeal were taken away under subsection (i) of the proviso, then the commission itself might refer to the court any question which was of sufficient importance to warrant a reference being made. I am rather inclined to think that that would meet the difficulty the hon. member has raised, and it seems to me it would be fair to all parties. If that suggestion meets with his views we would accept an amendment to delete subparagraph (i) leaving it so that:
> The commission may, if they think fit, instead of themselves deciding such question, refer the question for decision to the exchequer court.
>
> Mr. Mitchell: I would move, in amendment, that subparagraph (i) be deleted.
>
> Amendment agreed to.
>
> Mr. Bennett: Then the letters (ii) will be deleted, also.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I believe the Prime Minister may have referred to the double "i," itself, and not to the section.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Yes, that is obvious.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Yes, he referred only to the lettering.

Mr. HANBURY: Just take out one of the i's.

Mr. CASGRAIN: We do not see "i" to "i".

Mr. DUPUIS: I think I may prove that the whole committee does not see eye to eye. According to the statement of the Prime Minister subparagraphs (i) and (ii) of paragraph (e), subsection 1, section 27, are deleted.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): No.

Mr. DUPUIS: Yes, they are.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The understanding of the committee was very clear and distinct. Last week the Prime Minister referred only to the marginal lettering of subparagraph (ii). On the amendment of the hon. member for East Hamilton subparagraph (i) was deleted, and then automatically subparagraph (ii) became subparagraph (i).

Mr. CASGRAIN: It is a merger.

Mr. COOTE: The ayes have it.

Mr. DUPUIS: I will admit it was a replacement, but I do say the question was decided at that time. Why should we revert to the same question to-day?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I understand that the bill is left open for redrafting in any case.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I think there was some misunderstanding, namely as to whether the change had reference to the whole section, or just the two letters "ii."

On section 28, subsection 3—Umpires and deputy umpires.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MacDonald, Cape Breton): Shall the subsection carry?

Mr. NEILL: No. Of course if the leader of the government insists on leaving the subsection in its present form he may do so, but I would point out that it is a duplication indicating that there are two officials when there is jurisdiction for only one. Why not appoint umpires, instead of appointing one umpire and in addition a number of deputy umpires who would do exactly the same work?

Mr. CASGRAIN: And we would save money, too.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The practice suggested here is in accordance with that indicated in the English act. They have an umpire and also deputy umpires, but they do not seem to have had any trouble. The clause has been drafted so that the umpire shall not be a barrister. It states:

> The governor in council may, from amongst the judges of the exchequer court of Canada and of the superior courts of the provinces of Canada, designate an umpire and such number of deputy umpires ...

This is in accordance with the procedure in Great Britain, and they do not seem to have any trouble about it. I do not see why one man should not be called an umpire and another a deputy umpire.

Subsection agreed to.

On section 33, subsection 1—Civil proceedings by employee against employer for neglect to comply with act.

Mr. MITCHELL: As I understand the subsection, if the employer does not compy with the act and pay the necessary contributions the employee must sue. In my judgment that responsibility should rest with the government.

Mr. NEILL: Yes, and by that time the employer will have disappeared. I brought that question up before the committee and pointed out that almost invariably, in cases where an employer had practically embezzled money which he had withheld from the employee, the company in question would be on the verge of bankruptcy. Probably by the time the employee discovered he had a claim against the employer, the employer would have run away—disappeared. It is not fair. I gave the example of an innocent purchaser who is protected under certain forms of law, and I suggest that in this instance the employee who has legally paid the sum due from him should receive the benefit to which he is entitled and that the fund should stand the loss, or that the commission should sue the delinquent employer, who by this time has no doubt absconded.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: The commission will have inspectors all over the country to see that these amounts are paid by the employer, it will be their duty to see to that. The commission itself must see that these amounts are paid promptly and they will have inspectors throughout Canada looking after that part of the work.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): This subsection really confers a benefit on the employee because it gives him the right by statute to recover; it is specific in the statute; otherwise the employee might not have the right to recover.

Mr. NEILL: I am not suggesting that any of the rights of the employee should be taken away from him, but as a matter of fact you are giving him a right which is not worth anything. The employer embezzles the amount which he has collected from the employee. The employee has received his wages minus, and properly minus, the amount of this contribution, and when he has made that contribution he has discharged his full obligation to the government; his obligation then ceases. He has done his part when he has accepted his wages with the reduction representing his contribution to the fund. Then, because of some relationship between the employer and the government, the employer having embezzled the money which he has received, as agent I suppose of the crown, or of the fund, the employee is asked to suffer the loss. I consider that you are not entitled to place upon him the onus of collecting the money which he has paid in. Having paid, as required by law, the money due from him to the fund, having paid it in the sense that he has agreed to accept his wages less that sum, you cannot go back a month afterwards and tell him to sue Tom Jones, the employer who is by this time perhaps in the United States. The acting Prime Minister says that there will be inspectors all over the country watching to see that these sums will be paid. But the Prime Minister, when he was asked about this matter, indicated that the payments would be made by the employer to the central fund here; they would be remitted here. Some man sitting in his office here will get round to that particular file perhaps ten days after its arrival, and he will then discover that the employer has not paid in the money. He will assume that it is just an ordinary piece of business neglect, something in the ordinary course of business, and he will notify the employer, that he is delinquent to the extent of two or three weeks' payment, and will ask him to make it up. I submit that it will take months in remote places before it can be discovered that an employer has disappeared, and the employee's unemployment relief may be wholly forfeited. The hon. member for Vancouver Centre says that I propose to take away the right of the employee to recover. But I submit that as this provision stands now it is a right that will be of no value to the employee in most instances. And, more than that, it is a right that does not devolve upon him, because it is not his business to go around collecting from employers who have not paid in the amounts they have received. The employer who embezzles amounts paid into him should be proceeded against by the government or by the commission, and the responsibility should not rest with the employee.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I am at a loss to know how this unfortunate individual will ascertain that the amounts he has contributed have not been paid in, until a report is made to him by the commission. I find myself in complete agreement with the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, and according to subsection 1 of section 33, it is only in the event of the unfortunate employee having lost in whole or in part the unemployment benefit to which he would have been entitled under this part of the act, that he shall then be entitled to start a civil suit to recover a civil debt, for an obligation which in my humble opinion is not his. The money has been handed over in trust to a trust fund under the commission and the commission must take full responsibility in the matter. It should not be incumbent on the employee to take proceedings.

Mr. MITCHELL: This is a compulsory unemployment insurance scheme. The employer breaks the law and it is left for the employee to do the work of the government. That is what it comes down to, and I think it is absolutely unfair and ridiculous. The employee complies with the law; he pays in his contribution, and then through circumstances over which he has no control the employer defaults; he does not pay over the money. But instead of the government stepping in and seeing that the employee gets what he has paid in, it is left to the employee to enforce the law, and he loses his benefit. It is an untenable position.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I submit that this is a matter of administration for the commission to see that these amounts are properly collected, and I am sure they will carry out that duty.

Mr. MITCHELL: But that is taking the employee up a blind alley and sand-bagging him. You cannot by regulation change the law as it stands here. I submit that the responsibility should rest on the government in view of the fact that this is a compulsory unemployment scheme. If the employee pays into the fund in good faith under this compulsory plan he is entitled to his payments, as stipulated in the bill.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): This section, I submit, should provide that where an employer has failed or neglected to pay contributions which under this part of the act he is liable to pay in respect of any employee or person in his employment, or has failed or neglected to comply, in relation to any such person, with the requirements of any regulations relating to the payment and collection of contributions, this shall not be taken as any reason for the loss of benefit, and it shall be incumbent upon the commission to proceed by civil suit for debt against the employer who so acts.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): My hon. friend from Comox-Alberni did not understand the point I raised when I said that this provision benefited the employee. It is a benefit to the employee in that it gives him the right by statute to recover, though I agree with the hon. gentleman that that right is valueless as it stands here; it should be extended, and the duty placed on the commission itself to recover for the employee the benefits to which he is entitled under the act.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): And there should be no loss of benefit.

Mr. MITCHELL: If this provision is left as it is now, we shall have the common law racket of a man having to pay $75 to collect $30. The responsibility of suing the employer should rest with the government, with all its wealth and power to take action.

Mr. COOTE: Under this bill, undoubtedly the employee is bound to make certain contributions, and the bill also provides that the employer shall deduct the contribution from the wages of the employee and remit it to the insurance commission. The employee has certainly complied with the law when his contribution is deducted from his wages. He has made contribution in the manner laid down under the law, and that having been done his rights to all benefits under the law should be unquestioned, notwithstanding anything that the employer may do. I certainly think that this section should stand for redrafting so as to make it perfectly clear that it is the duty of the commission to see that the employer remits the money.

Mr. POWER: There is a penalty provided in the event of the employer having failed or neglected to pay in contributions. That is well and good. The penalty is a fine of $50 or imprisonment for a period not exceeding three months, or both fine and imprisonment. But there does not seem to be any provision that the insured employee shall receive the benefits; and if some large concern, having got itself into financial embarrassment, as pointed out by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, has neglected to pay in the contributions for a certain period, then hundreds of men will be deprived of their right to benefit under the act. Now, it will not be very much satisfaction to them to know that the head of the firm will be obliged to pay a fine of $50 or to serve a term of three months in gaol, and that every one of them will have to sue for the $6 a week benefit to which he is entitled. I suggest that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Bow River, namely, that the commission, having been entrusted by this parliament with the duty of collecting the contributions, with the duty of administering this act, should pay to the employee the amount to which he is entitled under the provisions of the statute and proceed to collect as well as it can from the person who is obliged under the act to remit the contributions. Under the workmen's compensation acts in various provinces I have no doubt this system exists. If a man is hurt even in provinces where there are contributory systems of workmen's insurance, the provincial board sees to it that the compensation is paid whether the company has gone into bankruptcy or liquidation or has ceased its operations, and the injured employee receives that to which he is entitled under the provincial statute. I think the same situation should apply in this case; it seems to me there should be some provision.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I think the British act reads exactly the way this does. I am willing that the clause stand and I shall give the matter further consideration.

Section stands.

On section 38, paragraph (i)—Penalties.

Mr. NEILL: This is the paragraph giving the commission power to make regulations constituting violations of the act and prescribing fines and imprisonment. I took exception to the idea of giving them such wide powers as to allow them to define their own offences and then prescribe a term of imprisonment. I said that this at least should be limited to giving them power to prescribe an ordinary fine, limited to $50, and in default, possibly imprisonment, but not to give these men, who may not be lawyers, the power, I think I used the expression "to start off and make a little criminal code of their own."

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I heard this discussed the other day and I really do not see any argument against it. The powers of the commission are extremely limited. The amount of fine and imprisonment they can impose is very much restricted and I cannot see any reason for a change.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I wish to protest very strongly against this clause remaining as it is. It is another instance of alienating the authority of parliament in defining what offences are to be regarded as crimes and turning over to a commission this function of parliament. We have done that under the marketing act with respect to a number of local boards, in different parts of the country, giving to these bodies, in no way representative of all classes, power to create offences in the nature of crimes. It is proposed in this legislation to give this new commission authority to define new crimes for being guilty of which persons are to be liable to imprisonment. What is parliament for if in such matters we are going to turn these powers over to local bodies? I certainly think the acting leader of the government ought to agree to strike out from the section the words:

And terms of imprisonment not exceeding three months.

It is possibly reasonable that power should be given to the commission to impose some penalty in the nature of a fine for violations of regulations that have to be carried out, but the commission should not be given authority to imprison men; the criminal code is there for the purpose of setting forth what are crimes, and it is for parliament to say what is to go into the code.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: May I suggest to the leader of the opposition that in his day a good many bills were passed that had similar clauses in them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No; I would ask my right hon. friend to cite one of them.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: I cannot cite them at the moment, but if I remember rightly, there were bills passed with regard to agriculture and other matters of that kind that had similar provisions in them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not with regard to imprisonment; my right hon. friend will, I think, find he is mistaken there. It is going too far to give to a body other than parliament the right to deprive any citizen of his liberty to the extent of subjecting him to imprisonment. I submit particularly with regard to legislation which is intended to be in the nature of social reform, the government is taking a wrong step in seeking reform in that direction.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The difficulty might in some degree be obviated if an agreement could be arrived at that any such prescribed fines and terms of imprisonment as might be set up by the commission under its regulations should be subject to confirmation by the governor in council.

Some hon. MEMBERS: By parliament.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): That would be the least that would be tenable under the circumstances.

Mr. POWER: All the regulations are subject to the approval of the governor in council. My hon. friend's suggestion does not help any.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Under this legislation the commission cannot make any regulations without submitting them to the governor in council for approval.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I hope the acting leader of the government is not going to insist on this section being carried as it stands, because it certainly goes much further than it ought to go. To give to any commission, especially one of this character, power to create offences punishable by imprisonment, is extending powers entirely too far to a delegated body. This is an unknown commission; none of its members will be representative of or responsible to any appreciable body of citizens; they will simply be appointees of the government. To enact what are crimes ought to be left to the people's representatives in parliament and not given to any other body.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Does the right hon. gentleman suggest that this should be put into the criminal code? Supposing one of these employers makes a false statement or refuses to give particulars regarding his business and so forth, how does the right hon. gentleman propose to deal with that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think my right hon. friend will find that there is already in the criminal code a provision to cover that kind of offence. It certainly should be for parliament to determine what is to be in the nature of a crime punishable by imprisonment. Everybody is entitled to know what the law is in these matters. How are individuals to know for what they are liable to go to gaol if it is left to boards in all parts of the country, and commissions here, and commissions there, from time to time to create new crimes which are punishable by fine and imprisonment? This section goes entirely too far and should be stricken out.

Mr. BURY: I did not understand the bill gave the commission power to create new crimes. I understood the bill itself created the crime. Further, I did not understand the commission was given power to imprison. I understand the commission is given power, as are many other statutory bodies throughout the land, to lay a charge of a breach of a statutory duty created by parliament, and a criminal court first finds on the facts that there has been a breach of that statutory duty and then imposes the particular penalty which the parliament of Canada has attached to that breach. That is a common situation. There are all over this country and all over every other civilized country bodies that have exactly the same powers. This parliament or it may be a provincial parliament passes an act declaring a certain action to be a breach of a statutory duty and attaching a sanction to that duty, so that if it is broken, any body to whom is entrusted by parliament the administration of the act, can apply in a criminal court of justice established by parliament, to try the facts of the case, ascertain whether there has been a breach and then give the sentence of the proper penalty that is attached by this parliament and not by the commission. The commission neither attaches the penalty nor tries the case nor imposes the penalty; that is done by parliament and a court of criminal jurisdiction established by parliament. What the right hon. gentleman has said in his statement this afternoon, just as what he said on a previous occasion in connection with the marketing act, is in my opinion utterly fallacious.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am afraid my hon. friend has not read the bill. The clause reads:

> In addition to the authority otherwise conferred upon the commission to make regulations under this act, the commission may also make regulations:—
> (i) for prescribing punishment for the violation of any regulation including maximum and minimum fines but not exceeding fifty dollars, and terms of imprisonment not exceeding three months.

That is quite different from what my hon. friend has said. This gives to an unknown body, a group of men at the moment unknown to this parliament, power after this parliament ceases to be in session or, for that matter, to exist, to define or create new offences in the nature of crimes which shall be punishable by fine and imprisonment. That is to say the least going altogether too far in a matter of social legislation.

Sir GEORGE PERLEY: Would it meet the right hon. gentleman's objections if it were made imprisonment in case of default?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, I do not think that any body of this character should have the right to create an offence punishable by imprisonment. If the commission believes that certain offences are liable to arise under this bill which should be punishable by imprisonment let it so report to the governor in council and let the responsible minister of the crown bring in an amendment to the criminal code to cover the offence. That is the proper way to proceed. Then we shall all know to what extent the judgment of the commission is wise in a matter of the kind. But this opens the way for the commission to make an offence of anything it pleases, and that offence punishable by imprisonment.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): I am greatly surprised by the remark of the hon. member for East Edmonton (Mr. Bury). One does not need to be a member of the legal profession to understand the full significance and implications of section 38. I regret very much that the hon. member should submit such an interpretation. In the first place look at the beginning of the section, it confers upon this commission the power to make regulations:

> In addition to the authority otherwise conferred upon the commission to make regulations under this act, the commission may also make regulations;—

And then follow subsections (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h), (i) and (j), and in subsection (i) they are given the specific power to prescribe punishment, and the only limitation is as to the maximum fine and the maximum term of imprisonment. Within these limitations they have complete power to do what the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) said the other day, to invent for themselves in regard to local administration a miniature criminal code for Canada. To my mind that is an absolute flouting of all fundamental principles of jurisprudence. These matters should be in the control of this parliament and this parliament alone.

Mr. BURY: All I can say is that there are other statutory bodies that have power to make regulations, and to the breach of these regulations penalties are attached.

Mr. MITCHELL: If I understand rightly, the commission can send a man to gaol, without recourse to the courts—

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. MITCHELL: Then I am wrong.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): It seems to me that the language of the opposition is the language of exaggeration. By this section parliament now prescribes the limits of penalties. That is what we are doing, prescribing the punishment for violation of any regulation—

Mr. CASGRAIN: What regulation?

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): Any regulation the commission may make within the ambit of the act. There is no provision here whereby the commission can imprison anyone, but there is a limitation upon the penalties which the commission can impose, a very real limitation, namely a maximum fine of $50 and a maximum term of imprisonment of three months.

Mr. JACOBS: A mere bagatelle!

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): A mere bagatelle in this way, that before any man could be imprisoned they would have to charge him with the offence before the courts and prove it and convict him by due process of law.

Mr. NEILL: And the offence might be that the man said he thought the commissioners were dumb.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend says, for the offence. I ask him to tell us what the offence is.

Mr. TURNBULL: Breach of regulations.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What regulations?

Mr. TURNBULL: Any regulation they make.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: In other words hon. gentlemen opposite are proposing that citizens of this country shall be liable to three months imprisonment for breach of any regulation, they do not know what, which a group of unknown commissioners may see fit to make.

Mr. STITT (Selkirk): These regulations will have to be duly passed, prosecution will have to be duly instituted—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): For what?
