of investigation appointed by parliament is not to be guided by the technicalities which govern the taking of evidence before a court of law. Let me give my hon. friend an illustration of what I mean. I had the honour of being one of a committee composed of the Hon. Edward Blake, Hon. Mr. Masson, Mr. Jones, of Halifax, and Sir Donald Smith, now Lord Strathcona, to investigate the causes of the rebellion in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. To my surprise, a question was put to a servant of Sir George Cartier as to what took place in his private bedroom between himself and a clergyman named Richot, who had been stationed at St. Norbert during the rebellion. I objected to that as being a sort of inquisitorial investigation. I thought it was carrying the investigation altogether too far. Mr. Blake rather sided with me at that time, but the next day he came to the committee, and, after investigating paraliamentary authority and practice, he told us distinctly that they had a right to pry into the secrets of every one connected with that rebellion in order to ascertain the facts, and the question was put to this servant who had stood at the door of Sir George Cartier's bedroom, and he answered by repeating the conversation he had heard between this reverend gentleman and the then Minister of Militia. I give that as an illustration of how far a parliamentary committee is justified in taking steps which they consider necessary to ascertain facts connected with the subject they are investigating. Whether the portion of the report which my hon. friend moves to strike out be relevant or irrelevant, I am not prepared to say, but by his admissison it is a part of the proceedings of the committee, and, consequently, should remain part of the record. The hon. gentleman has put his views on this question on record, and with that he ought to be satisfied. I give my own impressions as to the duty of the committee, and what may take place at an investigation, without passing any opinion whatever on the correctness of this evidence, or whether it should have been admitted or not.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have just one word to say in regard to the very serious charge made by the hon. member from de Salaberry. I do not care to criticize the way in which he has put this very serious matter before the House. I believe he is one of the brilliant lights of the bar of the province of Quebec, and if he would remember what transpired in the committee, he would scarcely ask the Senate to pass judgment on what I consider an incomplete, to say the least, statement of the facts. It only bears out what I said about an hour ago, that it is not fair on the part of the hon. senator, unless he has very great reason to do so, to ask this House to reverse the decision of the committee, especially in regard to things which, to be appreciated, must be heard and seen. Fortunately, it is not necessary for this House to be in that position to judge this question. The statement made by the hon. member for de Salaberry is this, that the committee admitted as evidence an article published in a New York paper called the 'Counselor,' the article having been written by one Paterson, who was then a witness before the committee, and that the committee wished to allow, and did as a matter of fact allow, that extremely libellous criminal article, one of the worst I have ever read, to form part of the record. The hon. gentleman says we wished that article to go in as evidence. I take issue very flatly with the hon. gentleman on that statement. If that had been our object we would certainly be beneath the contempt of parliament, and I would certainly voice his views with regard to that matter; but the hon. gentleman is well aware of this fact, that when that question was before the committee, it was not as to the value of the article or as to the truth of the charges in that article. We were all prepared to admit that the article was a criminal libel if the charges contained in it could not be disproved; but it was not our duty to prove or substantiate the charges against the administration of the company. The company had the man who wrote that article, and who was a witness before the committee, arrested on a charge of criminal libel, and dragged him from court to court, and they sued him for $50,000 damages. If the charges were not true, it was the duty of the company to send that man to Sing Sing, and the power of the law of New York to do so is as great in that respect or greater than the law of Canada. Either Mr. Paterson was guilty of criminal libel or the company was guilty of what was charged against them. They kept the matter dragging for two years in the courts of the state of New York, and then came to Mr. Paterson and said, 'You have actions against us, and we have actions against you; we will give you $5,000 if you will let the actions drop.' This offer was made to a man who had been a faithful employee of the company, an old Canadian in whom I had great confidence, a man who left the company because he believed his officers were guilty of maladministration, a man who makes his $150 a day as actuary, and in whom the community had confidence. That man made the charges against the company, and they went to him and said: 'Let us cry quits, and here is $5,000.' Mr. Paterson is a canny, solid Scotchman, and he told us: 'I did not have faith in the company, so I had the cheque by which I was paid photographed,' and the cheque and the photograph were produced before the committee. Mr. Paterson was asked why he had the cheque photographed, and he said: 'For the very simple reason that I could not trust the members of the board. They would probably say the day after that they had never paid me $5,000, and I wanted to be able to produce a photograph of it.' Now, what was the object of the committee? The witness Paterson gave a statement of the charges, which was unsatisfactory. We asked the witness what the company paid him $5,000 for. We wanted to see if the company had paid that amount for an article that was not libellous at all, that might have been a laudatory article. We wanted to find out the contents of the article, not to prove or substantiate what it contains. We would be sitting there until next year to do that; we would have to call officials of the state of New York and of the company to undertake such a task. What we wanted was to see what the article really was; what it contained that warranted the company in paying $5,000 to Mr. Paterson. If the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry cannot see that distinction and make that difference, I am glad that my judgment does not run in the same groove with his. It is on these grounds the committee accepted this evidence, not as proof of the charges contained in it, but as proof of the villany of the company that was prepared to pay $5,000 to a man who called them thieves.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Did Mr. Paterson put that in as part of his evidence?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No; but as evidence of what they paid $5,000 for.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Did Mr. Paterson put it in as part of his evidence?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Not until we forced him to put it in.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Did he swear it was his article?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Certainly he swore that it was his.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Did he swear to the contents of the article?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No, that he published the article, and that is the distinction which all hon. senators ought to make.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I hardly like the expression that dropped from the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry that this is black-mail. I do not think he should have allowed himself——

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman misunderstood me; I did not say anything of the kind. I asked, by way of argument, whether it would be open for members of a committee to put in a newspaper article which might be of that character. For the sake of illustration I specified the Sun Life, and said would it be open to any member of the committee to offer as evidence a document which might have been written merely for the purposes of black-mail?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—If I understood my hon. friend, he was putting up a man of straw to knock him down. When Captain Cuttle was asked where the ship 'Sally Smith' was, he said, if she be in the 49th latitude, she is there, and if she be not in the 49th latitude, she is not there. That is the sort of argument the hon. gentleman advances. I take exception to the hon. gentleman saying that this evidence would not be admissible in any court. I have taken the trouble to ask legal gentlemen of high standing for an opinion on that point. I am not prepared to accept the hon. gentleman's legal opinion as higher than any other legal opinion in Canada. I am willing to take it as far as it goes, but I am advised that this evidence would be received in any court of law in the world, and that before any jury the evidence that we took would be conclusive. The policy-holders have some rights. It would almost appear as if they had in this committee been persecuting the hon. member from de Salaberry, for he has been objecting all the time, he has been showing anxiety that this, that and the other be kept out of the record. Could there be any harm in the policy-holders reading what was offered in this investigation ? As the hon. leader of the opposition has said, the committee was not there to try people and convict them, but to find out what foundation there was for the complaints against this company, and to report just what they learned with the expectation that the Senate would pay them at least the courtesy of allowing them to submit all the evidence that was offered. I can readily understand that the course now taken might prevent the public from knowing the facts, and if hon. gentlemen succeed, what will the company say ? They will say the Senate of Canada would not receive this document. Read what the hon. gentleman says about it. Read what the Secretary of State said. Here is our justification. The policy-holders have suffered, and are suffering, from the mismanagement of this company, and yet they are not to be given an opportunity to know what is going on. They ask us for bread and we give them a stone. Was it a matter of courtesy to bring in a Bill dealing with this matter before the evidence was taken ? That Bill has not passed the House of Commons yet. If it happens, from circumstances which we cannot control, that the Bill passes as it stands, I shall offer an amendment which I thought was in the Bill, but which is not in the Bill as it stands to-day.

The hon. member from de Salaberry takes exception to a portion of the evidence contained in part No. 5, pages 29 to 37. If the document on the table, which has been ruled out by the decision of the Speaker, had been accepted it would have shown that the notice to produce which was served on the company was not complied with. Had the hon. member from de Salaberry been anxious to maintain the rights of the House and of the policy-holders, would he not have insisted on those papers being produced? Why should they not appear ? Mr. Burnham, the president of the company, was charged with all the offences contained in this indictment. Why did he not come here and answer for himself ? No, he went to England and allowed this evidence to remain uncontradicted by himself, and not disproved by any document that he might have produced, and which had been asked for. Nothing was produced in the way of rebuttal, nothing but long-winded speeches from Mr. Eldridge. Now, what is this article which contained libellous charges against the company ? The company instituted proceedings that will be seen by the following documents which are printed in part 5 of the evidence :

AFFIDAVIT FOR ORDER OF ARREST.

New York Supreme Court,
State of New York, County of New York.
The Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asociation, Against
John Thomson Paterson, whose first name to the Plaintiff is unknown and who is herein designated by the fictitious name of John.

Sworn to before me this day of March, 1900.

SUMMONS.

New York Supreme Court,
State of New York, County of New York.
The Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, Plaintiff.

Against

John Thomas Paterson, whose first name to Plaintiff is unknown and who is herein designated by the fictitious name of John, Defendant.

To the above named Defendant:

You are Hereby Summoned to answer the complaint in this action and to serve a copy of your answer on the plaintiff's attorneys within twenty days after the service of this summons, exclusive of the day of service, and in case of your failure to appear, or answer, judgment will be taken against you by default for the relief demanded in the complaint.

Dated, New York, March , 1900.

JAMES, SCHELL & ELKUS,
Attorneys for Plaintiff.

Office and post office address, 56 Pine Street, Borough of Manhattan, New York City.

Now, if these pages from 29 to 37 are to be cut out, I desire to read it clause by clause in order that the House may know the nature of it; but as I do not wish to trespass on the time of hon. gentlemen, if they will consider these pages as read, I shall not read them.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Go on, they will not give you that permission.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Then I must read them.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We must know what they want to strike out.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That is what I am about to show.

Fol. 1.

New York Supreme Court,
State of New York,
County of New York,
The Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association,

Against

John Thompson Paterson, whose first name to the plaintiff is unknown and who is herein designated by the fictitious name of John.

The plaintiff for its complaint, by James, Schell & Elkus, its attorneys, alleges:

1. That it is a domestic corporation, organized and doing business under the laws of the state of New York for the purpose of insuring the lives of persons and at the times hereinafter mentioned and for about twenty (20) years last past, has been and is now carrying on said business in said state and elsewhere.

Fol. 2.—11. That on or about the first day of January, 1900, the defendant maliciously composed and published concerning the plaintiff and the officers of the plaintiff, in a newspaper called 'The Counselor,' at the Borough of Manhattan, in the city of New York, the following false and defamatory statement, to wit:

A TERRIBLE ARRAIGNMENT.

Fol. 3.—Attention is called to our arraignment of the president and management of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, in this issue, our object in writing it being to impress upon the policy-holders of the association the pressing importance of a united effort to save it from bankruptcy by the removal of the present management. Policy-holders and others who are actuated by the same motive as we are, can have all the copies of this article in pamphlet form which they want, at actual cost, viz.: 100 copies, $1.25; 500, $6; 1,000 copies or over, one cent per copy or $10 per 1,000. Sample copy, 4 cents.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION.

Fol. 4.—Having devoted the best years of our life in advocating the advantages of the system of life insurance upon which the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association was originally conducted and being conscious of the duty which we owe to its policy-holders, it is with deep regret that we express the opinion that unless a change of management can, in the near future, be effected, a bankruptcy must inevitably result.

Fol. 5.—That no financial enterprise, however sound in principle, can long continue to prosper which is conducted by men who have little or no regard for truth and are honest only in so far as the law compels them to be so, is proved by the failure of scores of life insurance companies, building and loan associations, banks and other financial institutions, through which millions of dollars of the people's money have been lost, squandered or stolen by those who betrayed the confidence reposed in them by a confiding public.

Fol. 6.—That the president of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, and those who are immediately associated with him have not a high regard for truth and that integrity of purpose essential to the well-being and success of a large financial institution, is evident from the following facts:

First.—That president Burnham and his associates have made misleading statements to policy-holders and their committees, and have, by making false entries in the books of the company, concealed from policy-holders and the examiners of insurance departments the real purpose for which money has been expended.

Second.—President Burnham being sued for the payment of a debt, filed a demurrer to the complaint which demurrer was not allowed, the court practically holding that the discharge of debt had been obtained by fraud.

Fol. 7.—The following are the exact words used by Judge Scott, in special terms, Part III., June, 1899, in the case of Moton D. Moss vs. Frederick A. Burnham, in an action brought by the said Moss to recover the sum of $36,000:

Fol. 8.—Where a person effects a compromise of a debt admittedly due by him, by fraudulent representations and procures a discharge by paying another a part of the amount due, and an action is brought to recover the balance, and void the discharge by reason of fraud, it is necessary, as a preliminary to the right of recovery that the plaintiff repay the amount received, for, in such a case the plaintiff is entitled whether he succeed or not, to the amount he has paid. This precise case is presented here. The demurrer admits the orginal indebtedness of defendant to plaintiff for a much larger sum than he has paid.'

Fol. 9.—Third, a committee of policy-holders from Pittsburg, Pa., spent three days in the offices of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, and to this committee, we being present, president Burnham and vice-president Eldridge showed what they represented to be the original contract made with the late E. B. Harper, by which he was allowed renewal commission 20 cents on each $1,000 of insurance in force on the 31st of December of each year, and positively stated that the contract was binding upon the association, it having been made prior to Mr. Harper's election as a director and president. As an evidence that what we state is correct we herewith produce the following from the report of the committee :

Fol. 10.—President Burnham answered the queries of the committee with a fulness and alacrity that we scarcely expected. He seemed to be glad of the opportunity to give to the policy-holders a statement of facts relative to the business of the company, and showed to them a true account of his stewardship of their interests. He gave a copy of the Harper will and showed the committee a contract of commissions made with Mr. Harper by the company, whereby he and his heirs were to receive 20 cents per $1,000 for all insurance written from that date.

Fol. 12.—This contract was made with the company prior to his becoming president of the association, and continued during his life, and by the terms of contract to continue during the continuance of the association, on the margin of which was written by Mr. Harper, the limitation of the terms of commission to all business done during his lifetime. He also gave releases each year for one-third of the amount accruing from such commission. Whatever responsibility attaches to the contract made has not been incurred by any officer of the company. Whenever such policies expire the commission ceases, but so long as the policies or renewals of the same remain in force the commission accrues to his legatees.

Fol. 13.—The report of the Pittsburg committee was published in President Burnham's annual report, and was signed by 'Alexander Demster, chairman, Cadwallader, Evans and by Howard Morton, committee.' The report was mailed to policy-holders in February, 1896.

Shortly after the death of the late E. B. Harper, in an effort to obtain a settlement with his legatees, Mr. Burnham, according to announcements in the daily press, caused a 'friendly suit' to be brought by them in the Supreme Court of New York, the Mutual Reserve being the defendant, and in its answer, which is now a part of the court record, among other things, alleging as follows :—

Fol. 14.—Alleges on information and behalf that pursuant to said constitution as so amended the said Edward D. Harper was elected president for one year, and was thereafter annually elected such president until July, 1895, but at all of said times respectively the term of his office was one year only, and no longer, and his salary was each year duly fixed by the executive committee of the defendant association in accordance with its constitution and by-laws, and was duly paid him in full.

Fol. 15.—Alleges on information and belief that the said Edward D. Harper was a member of the defendant association and had no right to make the agreement alleged, or intended to be alleged, in the complaint, by the performance of which agreement a portion of the annual dues would be diverted from their proper use for his benefits. Denies upon information and belief that any board of directors, or any officers of the defendant association ever at any time had any right or authority to dispose of the future earnings or income of said association in the manner and for the purposes in said complaint alleged, or to make the agreement alleged, or intended to be alleged in the complaint herein.

Fol. 16.—Alleges on information and belief that said defendant has fully paid and discharged and performed and settled for every sum or sums of money due to the said E. B. Harper or his legal representatives, now or at any time or times any and every obligation now or at any time existing against it, which he or any of his legal representatives otherwise would or could have or had against it, and denies that it is indebted to the plaintiffs in any sum whatever.'

Fol. 17.—To all of these allegations, made only a short time after this statement to the Pittsburg committee, president Burnham caused the following affidavit to be made by Chas. W. Camp, secretary of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association :

Fol. 18.—Chas. W. Camp, being duly sworn, says : That he is the secretary of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, the defendant above named ; that he has read the foregoing answer and knows the contents thereof ; and that the same is true to his own knowledge except as to the matters therein stated to be alleged on information and belief, and as to those matters he believes it to be true.

Fol. 19.—The above allegations and affidavit seems to prove that when President Burnham stated to the committee of policy-holders that the Mutual Reserve was legally bound to pay 20 cents on each thousand dollars of insurance in force under the Harper contract he stated that which was not true, and what is still more serious, Mr. Burnham at the time, as shortly before the above allegations and affidavits were made, received, in addition to his salary, large sums of money claimed to be due under the contract, and used it without accounting for it, and still continues to pay out the funds of the association to others, which amounts so paid are charged as commissions, accruing under the contract, one payment alone being for $38,000. The total claims to have been paid to one person already exceeds $130,000.

Fol. 20.—Second Vice-President Wells, the treasurer, the Hon. John W. Vrooman and others, having protested against so large an amount being appropriated by the president in addition to his salary, Mr. Burnham caused the following resolution to be adopted by the board of directors :

'Resolved, That all payments heretofore made to the president from the contingent fund established by resolution of the board, dated February 19, 1896, and the expenditures and disposition thereof be and are hereby in all respects approved, confirmed and adopted.'

Fol. 21.—' As the above resolution was adopted August 10, 1898, it appears perfectly clear that President Burnham continued to draw moneys under the Harper contract. For at least fourteen months after he caused the allegations and affidavits to be made to the Supreme Court, which allegations and affidavits show that no moneys whatever could legally be paid under the Harper contract.

Fol. 22.—The fact that Mr. F. A. Burnham was the attorney who drew up the will of the late E. B. Harper, and which provided that in the event of his not being elected president, one-third of the renewal commission due annually under the Harper contract was to be paid him, should not be overlooked, and it seems to show that he must have known all the particulars relating to it. Those of us who still revere the name and memory of the late E. B. Harper remember with horror the unseemly haste in the election of his successor ; the facts being that in the afternoon of the same day Mr. Harper died, Mr. Burnham being chairman of the executive committee, called a special meeting of the directors and had himself elected president.

Fol. 23.—Realizing that the amount which under any pretext could be handed over to him under the contracts is rapidly growing smaller by reason of this discontinuance of the policies written prior to the death of the late E. B. Harper, and being anxious to have his income remain at as large a figure as possible, Mr. Burnham caused the following resolution to be passed by the board of directors :—

Fol. 24.—Resolved, that no further payments be made from the said contingent funds, and in lieu thereof the executive committee be and is hereby instructed to place upon the pay-roll of the association the sum of $200 weekly, to be drawn and receipted for by the president, in addition to the salaries from time to time fixed and established and paid to him, which weekly sum of $200 shall constitute a contingent fund to be used and expended by him without accounting therefor, and in his sole discretion, and to that end, that the sum, as well as the amount heretofore drawn, be regarded as an addition to his compensation.

We call the attention of the policy-holders of the Mutual Reserve to one or two facts indicated by the above resolutions, viz.:

Fol. 25.—(a.)That it clearly shows that the board of directors, being selected and elected by President Burnham, he holding the proxies, are directed by him and always do as he directs. This is the only explanation which can be given of a transaction so outrageously illegal and unjust to policy-holders.

(b.) That in passing the above resolution an attempt was made to legalize the sums illegally appropriated by Mr. Burnham under the so-called Harper contract.

Fol. 26.—Fourth, That President Burnham, finding it necessary to explain to policy-holders why ex-Postmaster General James, Treasurer Hon. John W. Vrooman, Vice-President and Chairman of the Executive Committee J. D. Wells, Assistant Secretary J. M. Stevenson, Auditor J. F. Hoffecker and John Maclay, editor of the ' Insurance Economist,' are not now connected with the association, has caused the statement to be circulated that they were dismissed from the services of the Mutual Reserve ; and this in the face of the fact that all of these officials severed their connection by resignation and refused to allow their names to be longer associated with the present management, which resignations have been published in the daily press.

Fol. 27.—Fifth, Under the direction of President Burnham or some other officers or employee, blank forms for a special call, numbered 106, and dated September 1, 1899, were printed and a large number of them filled up and entries made upon the assessment registers in red ink, marked ' Special Call 106,' the amount due on the assessments being filled in, and yet in the face of all this, President Burnham, in a letter addressed to us, made the following statement :

Fol. 28.—' I will thank you to furnish me with the source of your misinformation. The directors and board of executive committee of the association fix the times and amounts of the assessments, and neither body has directed that a special call be made on September 1, as you say you are informed, or even considered such action.'

Fol. 29.—The above was in answer to a letter which we addressed to President Burnham remonstrating against this special call being sent out, and also against the enormous sum of $179,392.91, having been expended in cost of adjusting death claims, cost incurred in collecting assessments, &c., in the six months previous to September, 1899.

If the statements made in the above quotation from President Burnham's letter are correct, it is easy to see that he, and not the board of directors or executive committee, is the management.

Fol. 30.—That a special call was intended to be made on the 1st of September is either true or the Mutual Reserve is managed by a set of lunatics ; otherwise how can we account for the blank forms having been printed, filled up, ready for mailing, and the entries made upon the assessment registers ?

Fol. 31.—In addition to having denied, in the letter referred to, that a special call was to be made on September 1, President Burnham has allowed the positive statement to be made in the ' Insurance Economist,' the official organ of the Mutual Reserve, and in other insurance journals, and by a member of the agency committee over his signature, that ' there never was any intention of making a special call.' In every paper and letter where it is denied that it was the intention of the management of the Mutual Reserve to make a special call, a false statement is made, and known to be so by President Burnham.

Fol. 32.—Sixth In the year 1896, several months after the first reapportionment of the rates was made, Mr. F. A. Burnham called us into his office and requested us to attend a meeting of dissatisfied policy-holders which was to be held in the Equitable Building, instructing us that if objection was made to our presence we should state that we had been dismissed from the service of the company, and if we succeeded in getting in, to make an effort to influence the meeting and, if possible, get it to endorse the increase of rates as being absolutely necessary. It is needless to say that, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Burnham argued that it was the duty of the officer or employee to lie, if the interests of the association required it, we refused to comply with his request, believing as we do that the man who deliberately lies is worse than a thief.

Fol. 33.—It is a matter of history that President Burnham succeeded in getting an agent of the association not only to lie himself into the meeting referred to, but also to have himself elected chairman of a committee of the same dissatisfied policy-holders, and a few days afterwards went through the farce of waiting on the president for an explanation of the increase in rates, &c. In the report made by this committee, as might have been expected, the management of the Mutual Reserve was not only endorsed, but highly commended for having increased the rates. The gentleman who so faithfully served President Burnham in this connection was Mr. E. Randolph Taylor, who in this particular case passed off as E. Randolph, and a representative of one of the daily papers.

Fol. 34.—No one endowed with even ordinary intelligence can read the report of the Superintendent and Examiner of the Insurance Department of the State of New York in the recent examination of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association without being convinced that it is in a most critical condition, and that the management has laid itself open to criminal prosecution.

Fol. 35.—Thousands of dollars of the funds of the Mutual Reserve have been expended in an effort to counteract the evil effects of this report. Two prominent lawyers, Colonel Jas. and Edward Lauterbach were each paid a retaining fee of $5,000, and both went to Albany to urge the superintendent to modify his report. In almost every insurance journal carrying the advertisement of the association there appeared editorials commending the management and abusing the Insurance Department, which have been paid for either in the way of ordering special copies or as extra advertising.

Fol. 36.—We are sorry to be forced to say that in our opinion the superintendent has compromised himself and to a greater or less extent detracted from the dignity of his department by failing to do his whole duty in this case.

Referring to the charges made against the management, he makes the following statements:—

Fol. 37.—The examiner was commissioned to make an examination of the association's affairs. He confined his report to matters relating to its condition and did not go into the matter of the charges referred to, but derived the information embraced in his report from the books and records of the association.'

The charges referred to in the above extract were made and sworn to at the request of the superintendent by two trustworthy and respectable men, whose reputation for veracity was established beyond question long before President Burnham was connected with the Mutual Reserve, viz.: by ex-President and Chairman of the Executive Committee J. D. Wells and ex-Assistant Secretary J. M. Stevenson.

Fol. 38.—If the charges are false, it follows that both Mr. Wells and Mr. Stevenson are guilty of perjury, and yet the Superintendent of Insurance, who is suposed to be the guardian of the policy-holders of life insurance companies doing business in the state of New York, says that he 'did not go into the matter of the charges referred to.'

Fol. 39.—In order that policy-holders may know to what extent the superintendent did his duty in this examination, we herewith enumerate the principal charges made and sworn to by Vice-President Wells and Assistant-Secretary J. M. Stevenson, and which are still standing and not proved to be untrue, they are as follows:—

That President Burnham has illegally diverted to his own personal use and benefit the funds of the association;

That he illegally and fraudulently paid large sums of money to Moton D. Moss;

Fol. 40.—That he illegally and fraudulently released the said Moton D. Moss of indebtedness amounting to $150,000;

That he illegally credited the said Moton D. Moss with over $93,000 under the false pretense that it was due him;

That he has fraudulently diverted hundreds of thousands of dollars from the mortuary fund of the association;

Fol. 41.—That he borrowed from officers and directors of the association sums aggregating from $20,000 to $40,000, a part of which he paid back illegally out of the funds of the association;

That he illegally paid large sums of money out of the funds of the association to numerous lawyers for rendering him personal services;

That he swore to annual reports which were false and untrue;

That he fraudulently altered or caused to be altered the terms of certain contracts between the association and Moton D. Moss, by which the association suffered serious financial loss;

Fol. 42.—That he fraudulently used the payrolls of the association for his own purposes and to cover questionable transactions and to misappropriate the funds of the association;

That he holds the proxies of the members of the association and uses them for his own personal ends to appoint all directors and officers, and in this way he makes himself the embodiment of the management of the association.

Fol. 43.—If the superintendent did not go into these charges in the examination which he made, for what purpose, we ask, did he make the examination? If the charges were false, why did he not say so? If they were true, why did he not say so, and place facts before the Attorney General and urge him to take action?

If the Insurance Department does not exist for the protection of policy-holders, what is the use of annually expending hundreds of thousands of dollars for its maintenance?

Fol. 45.—If an official examination was made and questionable transactions and the dishonesty of the management was concealed, the department, instead of protecting the policy-holders, is lending its influence for the encouragement of such dishonest management, and in this way places the company or association so managed in a much worse condition than was the poor man who, on his way from Jerusalem to Jericho, fell among thieves, because instead of, like the good Samaritan, caring for the wounded man, it practically protects those by whom he was despoiled. This, in the case of the Mutual Reserve, seems to be literally true, the Levite and the priest—the superintendent and the Attorney General have both passed by on the other side, and the vice-president, Wells, has been put to the expense of defending a suit for libel, Mr. Burnham having taken this means of making it appear that the charges are false.

We believe that every one of the allegations made in the charges with the Insurance Department at the request of the superintendent should have been investigated, and a statement of the facts given to the members of the association.

Fol. 46.—It must be admitted that President Burnham and those associated with him in the management, in taking advantage of every means possible to delay the trial of the so-called libel suit against Vice-President Wells, do not act like men who court investigation. Despite every effort which Mr. Wells and his counsel, ex-Governor Black, have been able to make, it has been found impossible to bring the case before the courts.

Fol. 47.—If policy-holders combine as they should do, not only to use their influence, but also to furnish the means necessary to remove the present management, the association can yet be saved ; otherwise they are sure to lose all that they have paid, as, in my opinion, failure is inevitable under the present management. It is our intention in the next issue to expose the dishonest tactics adopted by the Mutual Reserve to force the fifteen-year policy-holders either to give up their insurance altogether or accept the new policy ; suffice it to say that a policy-holder insuring contributes $11.82 to the mortuary fund on each $1,000 insurance, i.e., ten cents per the mortuary fund of the association than a person insured at the same age and for the same amount on the so-called five-year level premium plan, and yet the person insured on the fifteen-year plan has had his premium increased three different times, and is now paying the amount indicated by the table of rates at age attained, instead of at age of entry.

Fol. 49.—A person insured in 1889, on the fifteen-year plan, for $1,000, aged 35, commenced by paying $11.93 each year to the mortuary fund, and is now called upon to pay $14.94, being an increase of $3.01, being the amount indicated in the table of rates at age attained. A person insured at age 35 on the five-year plan only contributes $11.82 to the mortuary fund on each $1,000 insurance, i.e., ten cents per $1,000 less than a fifteen-year policy-holder at the same year the first year, and yet the actuary of the Mutual Reserve, Mr. George D. Eldridge, under the heading, 'Five Year Combination Option Plan,' page 86 of the 'Agents' Manual,' makes the following statement :—

Fol. 50.—This plan is offered to meet the needs of those who desire to purchase insurance at a rate, payable from the start, practically ample to provide for the increasing cost due to increasing age by accumulation, thus rendering payments uniform throughout the life of the policy. . . . . The central or principal point is, however, the sufficiency of the rates to secure the payment of every claim throughout life. Questions of dividends incidental in character may be regulated to the results of experience, provided only the policy-holder is satisfied of the ample provision made for death claim payment, that being the central object of a life insurance policy.'

Fol. 51.—Following this is a series of figures, it being assumed that a company starts with $10,000,000 of insurance in force at the rate charged for the 'Five-year Combination Option Policy,' and that no new business be written, the whole $10,000,000 being considered by itself. At the end of the first ten years Mr. Eldridge makes out that there would be a balance to the credit of the company of $490,304 ; that at the end of the second ten years there would be a balance of $850,413 ; that at the end of the third ten years there would be a balance of $955,897 ; that at the end of the fourth term of ten yers there would be a balance of $815,191; and he concludes the demonstration as follows :

Fol. 52.—Thus the association has in hand resources sufficient to meet every dollar of outstanding insurance as it shall mature, no further lapse or discontinuance, otherwise than by death, being taken into the calculation.'

Fol. 53.—Be it remembered that these calculations were made by Mr. Eldridge, actuary of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, after the reapportionment of experience of its whole history, and therefore he surely was in a position to know the rates had been made and when he had before him, or should have had, the mortality amount likely to be required for the payment of every death claim in full.

Fol. 54.—If this is true, how can the management justify its action in increasing the rate on the fifteen-year policy-holders and forcing them to pay all the way from twenty-five per cent to fifty per cent more than the amount called for by the experience table of mortality ?

We shall deal with this subject more at length in a future issue.

III. That the prosperity, usefulness, permanency and progress of the plaintiff, are dependent not only on the honesty and skill of the management, but also in the confidence of the members and the public therein, and in the officers who conduct the same ; that the money to pay death claims are voluntarily paid by the members when called for in assessments ; and the faith and credit due to said plaintiff in its said business, and the safety, stability and character of the said plaintiff, are and were at all times in the complaint mentioned known by the public and all said persons, to be dependent upon the honesty and skill in the conduct of the said business and in the management thereof.

Fol. 56.—IV. That the said article, matter and words aforesaid, in so far as they state or insinuate that the officers of this corporation have been or were guilty of any crime, offence or improper conduct in carrying on the plaintiff's business, were and are false, malicious and defamatory.

Fol. 57.—V. That the said article, matter and words aforesaid, in so far as they state or insinuate that the plaintiff is, or is about to become insolvent, bankrupt, or that it is unable to meet its just dues and obligations, or that the rights of its shareholders, members or creditors are about to be imperilled, were and are false, malicious and defamatory.

Fol. 58.—VI. That by reason of the printing and publishing of the said article, matters and words aforesaid, plaintiff has become injured in its business, its credit in the commercial and insurance world has been impaired, and its good name and reputation has been brought into public scandal, infamy and disgrace to its damage in the sum of fifty thousand dollars.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Is that what they paid Mr. Paterson, $5,000 for ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Yes, they paid him $5,000 for injuring the business, the good name, and reputation of the company. The document concludes as follows :—

Wherefore the plaintiff demands judgment against the defendant for the sum of fifty thousand dollars ($50,000), together with the cost of this action.

JAMES, SCHELL & ELKUS,
Attorneys for Plaintiff.

Office and post office address,
56 Pine Street, Borough of Manhattan,
New York City.

This is the document that the Senate is asked to cut out of the report. See what follows. I have read what it is proposed to cut out; now let us see what evidence would have to go with it, because if the report is to be emasculated by striking out this document, the evidence will have no meaning. We must discuss this report thoroughly, and I shall now read the evidence which has that document for its foundation :

By the Hon. Mr. Lougheed :

Q. You state that you received $5,000 for the purpose of allowing this case to drop ; is that it ?—A. That is as I understand it.

Q. Surely the plaintiffs could have discontinued a civil action against you if they chose ?—A. I would have had them arrested the next morning if they did.

Q. For discontinuing ?—A. Yes.

Q. Arresting a plaintiff for discontinuing a civil action ?—A. Yes, certainly.

Q. It is an extraordinary system of legal jurisprudence if that is so. This was a civil action, I understand ?—A. Yes.

Q. Am I to understand that you still labour under the impression that you received $5,000 for permitting the plaintiffs in this case to discontinue a civil action against you ?—A. Yes.

By the Hon. Mr. McSweeney :

Q. You got the money, anyhow ?—A. Yes.

How would they know what the money was for without the document which described it ? The document shows why the action was brought, and, that, without establishing either the truth or the falsity of the statements contained in the document, the company paid the man they charged with libelling them a sum of $5,000 to drop the action. Why exclude that from the report ? I cannot understand. It is what is called hair-splitting. The report continues :

By the Hon. Mr. Lougheed :

Q. That is your understanding ?—A. Yes.

Q. So that when it comes to cross-examination or an explanation afterwards there will be no misunderstanding ?—A. Oh, no.

By the Hon. Mr. Béique :

Q. Do you claim that under the law of New York that a party who takes a civil action for damages cannot discontinue the action by paying the costs ?—A. Had they discontinued the action they would not have paid the costs. The only way they could have discontinued the action was by abandoning.

Q. Do you claim that under the law of New York it is not open to the party suing for damages to abandon the suit and discontinue —do you claim it is not open to do that ?—A. I do not claim that.

Q. It is not open to every suitor, the plaintiff in the suit, to abandon it, and then the result is that the defendant recovers cost against him ?—A. Yes.

Q. And then it left your right to sue for false arrest open—your right in damages against them for false arrest—it left that right open to you ?—A. Yes.

Q. And therefore it would not have affected your own suit against them. You had taken a suit for false arrest ?—A. Yes.

Q. And you would have the right to continue that suit ?—A. I would.

Q. And the conditions of things being such, through your lawyers and theirs they arrived at a settlement whereby both suits were to be abandoned, and they were to pay you $5,000 ?—A. Yes.

By the Hon. Mr. Lougheed :

Q. Then there was a separate action or proceeding taken against you on the criminal side of the court ?—A. There was.

Q. But not this action ?—A. Not this action.

Q. We are dealing with the civil proceeding ?—A. Yes, that is right.

Q. And there was a criminal proceeding taken under which you were arrested ?—A. Yes.

Q. It would be in satisfaction of that you took the money ?—A. I was arrested under the civil suit and put under bail to the extent of about $10,000, and about a year afterwards I was arrested, I was charged with criminal libel and arrested, and I demanded a hearing before the magistrate and was discharged, and immediately on being discharged I entered suit against the association and President Burnham for $50,000.

By the Chairman :

Q. Tell the committee what was the nature of your libel against the company ? What did they arrest you for ?—A. The criminal libel.

Now it is necessary for the public to see the whole story and not judge by the views of the hon. member from de Salaberry or any one else. I do not hesitate to say that when the report goes into the hands of the public they will pass some very serious comments on it. The company bluffed this man in every way they could, and when they could trample on him no longer, in order to save their own skins, they paid him $5,000 to drop the suit. The report continues :

By the Hon. Mr. Béique :

Q. What was the date of the civil suit ?—A. January, 1900.

Q. At what date were you arrested on the criminal charge for libel ?—A. Sometime in the year 1901.

Q. Beginning of 1901 ?—A. Yes, about the beginning of 1901.

Q. Were you arrested on the criminal charge before the settlement took place ?—A. I was.

Q. So the settlement was the last thing ?—A. Yes.

Hon. Mr. Béique.—I object to this bill of complaint going on the record, and I move that this document be simply marked for identification.

The motion was declared lost.

Hon. Mr. Béique.—I ask that the names be taken—the yeas and nays.

The Chairman.—There is nothing before the chair, and I think the names cannot now be taken.

By Mr. Coster, K.C., Counsel for the Committee :

Q. I would ask you to read section 20 of the Dominion Insurance Act, chapter 20 of the Revised Statutes of Canada ?—A. Section 20 reads as follows :—

'Every company incorporated or legally formed elsewhere than in Canada, and at present licensed or hereafter licensed under this Act, and every company which is subject to the provisions of this Act, shall make annual statements of its conditions and affairs at the balancing day of the company in each year, and the form and manner of making such statements shall as to the Canadian business of such company be the same as far as applicable and as is required of Canadian companies, and as to its general business shall be in such form as such company is required by law to furnish to the government of the country in which its head office is situated.'

Q. Have you made a comparison between the sworn statements furnished by the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association to the Department of New York and also Canada ?—A. I have.

Q. Would you look at those papers now produced to you, and say if those are correct extracts from the report ?—A. They are.

Q. These are from the report submitted to the Insurance Department of the state of New York of this company, and also to the Insurance Department of the Dominion of Canada ?—A. Yes.

I probably had better go back to the beginning of this part to show what these documents are. The report begins in this way :

Ottawa, July 12, 1904.

The committee appointed to inquire into the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York, resumed at 10 a.m.

Mr. Geoffrion, counsel for the Mutual Reserve, made application to the committee for permission to reopen the cross-examination of Mr. Wells.

J. D. Wells recalled.

By Mr. Coster, counsel for the committee :

Q. I wish you to identify this letter, Exhibit No. 9. See if you know what that is ?—A. That is a copy of a letter written June 25, 1898, by the Hon. J. W. Vrooman, treasurer of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, to Mr. F. A. Burnham, president.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I rise to a point of order. What is being read now has nothing whatever to do with the point before the House, which is the admissibility of a certain document as evidence.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE.

The other evidence that the hon. gentleman has been reading for some time relates to alleged facts, but the question we are confining ourselves to on this amendment before the House is whether the document is or is not admissible. If it should be admitted, there can be no further discussion ; if it is not admissible, all this is aside from the question. It may be very pertinent to another question, and may all be entered into, but in the meantime the point of order is that all this discussion is entirely aside from the question of the admissibility of that document.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—To the point of order raised by the hon. gentleman from Toronto, I have to say that I fail to see the point. I think I am entitled to discuss the point of order raised by the hon. gentleman, and my eyesight is not too bad even at this late hour of the night. The hon. gentleman from Rothesay is now producing evidence before this House to show why the amendment of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry should not pass. He is producing the best evidence that has ever been given before a court, and he is producing stronger evidence than was ever given before the Senate. The hon. senator is reading from documents which tend to show that the decision of the committee—that is, the chairman of the committee backed up by the vote of the committee—is perfectly legal. He is proving from the evidence submitted to the committee, that the document is entitled to be entered, and is entered, on our records, and there is no power now that remains with this Senate to strike it out. We are like the giant fighting against the wind. The evidence is in the record, and there is no power in this body or outside of it that can strike the evidence out. It has been accepted and circulated by this honourable body. The evidence is printed to the extent of 750 copies. Now, the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry is forcing the members of the committee, who are in the majority, and who know more fully the merits of the case than he does——

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Will the hon. gentleman permit me to say that this has nothing to do with the point of order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am speaking to the hon. gentleman's point of order, and

I most respectfully submit to this House that the Senate is not in a position to judge that question the same as the committee was. I submit that point to the hon. senator from Toronto, and he will know, as an able exponent of the law, what that means. Now, as to the point of order raised, that what the hon. senator from Rothesay is laying before the Senate is not relevant to the amendment moved by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry: That is a matter of opinion. The hon. Speaker may decide with the hon. senator from Toronto in that regard, but before a decision of that kind can be rendered, it is within the privilege and right of hon. gentlemen of this House to put on record their protest, because my experience is that once the hon. Speaker of this House has rendered his decision, we have no right to discuss a matter, although it may be a matter of fact. I would understand, if the hon. Speaker of this House rendered a decision on a question of principle that there should be no discussion of that principle, but when a decision is rendered on a question of fact, then it is a question of who has seen best and who has heard best.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Will the hon. gentleman allow me——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has no right to interrupt.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Has this anything to do with the point of order?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The point of order is raised by the hon. gentleman from Toronto that what the hon. senator from Rothesay is laying before this Senate is not relevant to the question at issue, and has nothing to do with the amendment of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry. That is the hon. gentleman's contention, and I respect it. I admit the hon. senator has the right to put his view before this House, and ask the Speaker to pass upon that view, but I claim for myself, and I claim for the hon. members of this House, and especially of that committee, the right to put before this House and the country other views than those put by the hon. senator from de Salaberry, with which the hon. Speaker may agree or may not agree. So that on that point I am perfectly in order, and I hold that no matter what the hon. senator may say with regard to that, the evidence of Paterson vs. The Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York is completely in order, even if the hon. gentleman from Rothesay had to go through one thousand pages of the evidence, because it is an essential point of this investigation that the evidence which the committee tried to adduce before it for the enlightenment of the Senate and for the protection of the policy-holders should go upon the records, notwithstanding the desperate efforts that were made to block and hamper that committee in having that evidence adduced.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—And if those desperate efforts are continued now to prevent the country from knowing what the management of that company is, as chairman of that committee I take the responsibility of the words I utter——

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—As ex-chairman.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Not ex-chairman yet, as the hon. Speaker has decided that I am still alive, and I want the honourable House and especially the policy-holders of this company, to understand that this committee has been working in their best interests. That may be a point of order. I say that if the committee admitted that evidence illegally and against the honour of this House, as the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry has stated on two or three occasions before the committee and before the House, we would be degrading the highest institution of the country by admitting evidence which would not be allowed in any court of justice. The hon. gentleman has made that statement three or four times, and it shall not go on the records of our country that a committee composed of nineteen senators were guilty of an act that would throw discredit on this chamber. As chairman of the committee, I say to the hon. gentleman that all the actions taken and decisions arrived at by that committee were supported by a majority of that committee, and when he comes before the House and asks to have this evidence struck out, he is challenging the honour of the majority of that committee. He is asking this honourable House to chastise that committee; to say that the committeee did not know what they were doing; to say to that committee that they are dishonouring and disgracing the House, as he says——

The SPEAKER—I would ask the hon. gentleman to what is he now addressing himself? I think there are times when the Speaker must depart from the usual method. The hon. gentleman from Rothesay, making a speeech, was interrupted by a question of order. Now, I do not think the hon. gentleman from Victoria should take the floor from the hon. gentleman from Rothesay.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have not taken the floor from him.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from Victoria has not been speaking to the question.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have taken the floor on the question of order.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman is not discussing the point of order; if he were I should not object, but I think there should be some regard to the rules of order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Do I understand that the hon. Speaker is not aware of the fact that the hon. gentleman from Toronto has raised a question of order?

The SPEAKER—I am quite aware of it, and if the hon. gentleman will keep to that question he will be in order. I would not think of interrupting, but I do not think it is fair to the hon. gentleman from Rothesay or to the House, to discuss things which have no connection with the point of order.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman should speak to the point of order, and we should reach a decision on it.

The SPEAKER—I have no right to interfere, perhaps, but as a member of the House, I should object to the course taken.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—It does strike me that unless we can have better evidence than the hon. gentleman from Toronto offers us, that the hon. gentleman from Rothesay was perfectly in order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—He was showing definitely and reasonably, perhaps tediously to some hon. members of the House, the necessity of leaving that portion of the evidence taken before the committee in the record, and therefore he was justly within his right. He was justly within his rights in every respect, and should not have been interrupted by the hon. gentleman from Toronto.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The hour is getting late, and I move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The Speaker should give his decision on the point of order.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—There is no point of order.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes, there is.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It is not worth while considering.

The SPEAKER—Strictly speaking the hon. gentleman from Rothesay is not speaking altogether to the point, in some of the observations he made recently, but it has never been the practice in this House to hold hon. gentlemen very strictly to the rule, and perhaps it would not be fair to surprise the hon. gentleman from Rothesay by enforcing the rules against him. I think the better way will be to let the hon. gentleman proceed.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I think every member of this House has the right to read the whole of that evidence on the two questions before the House, if he desires to do so.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I have no desire to bore this House, and I ask that the evidence be taken as read?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—We like it.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman from Toronto says 'we.' Why does he not speak for himself. The hon. gentleman is weak.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman wanted to return to the facts that preceded or led up to the introduction of that document when he was interrupted.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That is just what I am trying to do now.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I thought the hon. gentleman intended returning to the beginning of the deposition or testimony of Paterson. If he will tell us that that deposition or testimony of Mr. Wells bears at all upon the incident that we are discussing I withdraw the point of order that I raised, and I should like the hon. gentleman to declare that, if he does not want me to raise the question.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend was absent from the committee a great deal, and perhaps was not able to go through the evidence, and we who have followed the evidence a little closer, will be able to see the point. The question is on the adoption of the seventh report, and my hon. friend from de Salaberry has moved that a certain part be struck out. I fancy I would have the right to speak to the whole report, as well as to take up the point that they have no right to cut out a certain part. The whole report is before the House.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—But does the hon. gentleman contend that the deposition of Mr. Wells, which he was reading from, does not bear upon the admissibility directly or indirectly of that document which the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry desires should be struck out?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Why should my hon. friend ask me to admit anything? He wanted me to admit a Bill before it was brought in, and now he wants me to admit something before I read it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman should know whether it bears on the question before he reads it?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I have half a dozen documents to read, and I cannot make a selection at once. This is a large question before the country, though not so much here, because it is prejudicated and therefore it is necessary with considerable difficulty to myself and the House, that this question, before it finally leaves the Senate, should go before the forty-eight millions of the fifty-six millions of the policy-holders who have been put out of the association. The other eight millions are left, watching the course of the hon. member from de Lorimier, and the course taken by other hon. gentlemen, and I would not have it said that I have been brow-beaten, nor should I like to have them think there had been any attempt to brow-beat that committee, and that there were only two or three members on that committee whose knowledge of law, or whose knowledge of proceedings was limited, or who had their whole interest at heart. I should like them to think that the other sixteen also had some intimate knowledge of what was going on, and that they would like to place before the people of this country the facts in their entirety. It is not as if this had come up on a snap-shot question. It is not as if it had gone through a day or a couple of days, or a half an hour or had been passed by in silence; it has occupied the Senate for a long while. There has been a struggle before that committee, such a struggle I do not hesitate to say as I have never before seen, from my first experience of public life. I did not come here yesterday. I did not drop into the Senate by the will of God or the Queen's enemies. I have been in the strife of politics for thirty-two years. I was not dropped in here in a hurry. I have always been a fighting man in an election, not as a senator, because as a senator I would not interfere. An hon. senator who can take up his record of thirty-two years, and stand before the people who have some influence is of some use in the country. An hon. member of the House of Peers in England—I won't say here—but an hon. member pitchforked into the House of Peers in England—of what value is he? None, except he brings some influence, not by the right of birth, not by the right of heredity, but by his own strong hand, or the influence he has in the country families in England, or his influence, in trade, commerce or shipping. I venture to say that the public knowing me all over Canada, in my course of thirty-two years, will give me credit from the Atlantic to the Pacific for being consistent, not endeavouring to annoy this House or to bring up extraneous matter but standing in my place, wrestling against all adversaries, in the interests of those policy-holders who have suffered, and who will suffer hereafter. I have no ill-will in this matter, but when we meet next session, hon. members will admit that my course has the endorsement of the public. and will say that my point was well taken, notwithstanding all the influences that I have had to fight against, with the help of hon. gentlemen in this House, not confined to the Conservative or the Liberal side—no politics in it whatever—hon. members have done their utmost and they have to be thanked for writing the history of this company on the records of Canada, which history will stand there, and cannot be expunged by any clipping of the report, so asked for by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry. Cut it out of the committee report, but it will be on the debates for ever. I will read its history there, and there it will remain as long as grass grows and water flows. It cannot be hustled into the archives or thrown into the basket where old paper goes, but these charges shall remain on the debates of this House, and will remain unanswered and uncontradicted. The representatives of the company came here, but they failed to put the president of the company on the stand, the man against whom all these charges were made. Had he held that position with honour ; had he regard for the policy-holders of Canada, would he not have come up and said, 'I am here with clean hands ; ask me what you want ; demand from me what you require. Here are my books ; examine them.' But what did he do ?. I have seen lobbying all around this chamber, big lawyers and little lawyers, the big shad running up the stream and the little shad following them. We have had all that to contend against, and I think the company is not entitled to any great respect from this House, even although they receive it. I read in a New York paper the other day an article with reference to this matter. It was a leading article headed, 'Eldridge on top.' What was he on top of ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—On top of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—On top of the Senate, my hon. friend says. On top of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry ; on top of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona ; on top of everybody.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And on top of the government.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I would not say the government, because that would be uncomplimentary. I now move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, no.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Then we will commence. I was just stating that Eldridge was on top of the Senate. A proud day for him to be able to go into committee and draw a Bill, get his name on the back of a public Bill, be able to get a public Bill passed, a brand new Bill—a proud day for him when he reads the debate here, where it was arranged that certain provisions were to be included in the Bill, and when the Bill is reprinted the provisions do not appear. We have no more chance at that Bill. The only way is to follow that Bill in the Commons, where it will be looked after.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to make the statement that amendments made to the Bill in this House were not embodied in the Bill when it was sent to the Commons ? It is a serious charge.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—It is a serious charge. I do not make it as a charge. I make it as a statement. An hon. gentleman asked me a question and I must answer it. I state it was a proud day when the hon. member from Wellington said that if his amendment was adopted it was all right. I said I was satisfied if mine was. The Debates show that the hon. member from de Salaberry said so, and I hold the Bill in my hand and the amendment is not in it. I am only stating a fact that the resolution is not embodied in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Is that germane to the point of order

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Question, question. We are dealing with one subject and the hon. gentleman is dealing with another.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—We will take it up another time. If it is more convenient to my hon. friend or to the House we can take it up after we have had a vote on this. I think I got down to that part of the evidence where Mr. Wells was asked, on July 22 :—

Q. You know that to be a copy of the letter ?—A. I do.

By Mr. Geoffrion, Counsel for the Mutual Reserve :

Q. Please look at these two cablegrams marked for identification, and tell me whether these are copies of cablegrams sent by you to Mr. Burnham, the president, as they purport to be ?—A. I do not remember the sending of these cablegrams.

By the Chairman :

Q. What is the date of them ?—A. 1896.

By Mr. Coster, Counsel for the Committee :

Q. July 22, 1896, one of them appears to be ?—A. Yes, I think this is July. It looks like July 20, 1896.

By the Chairman :

Q. Where was that sent from ?—A. I think it is from New York to Paris.

By the Hon. Mr. Wilson :

Q. You do not remember sending them ?—A. No, I do not remember the sending of them.

By Mr. Geoffrion, Counsel for the Mutual Reserve :

Q. You do not remember it ?—A. No.

Q. Do you deny having sent them ?—A. I do not.

Q. These documents have been referred to, and I should like to put them in. Please look at these four letters which purport to bear your signature, one July 20, 1896, addressed to Mr. Burnham, one July 31, 1896, addressed to Mr. Burnham, and one of July 6, addressed to Mr. Burnham, and one of September 8, 1896, addressed to Mr. Burnham ?—A. Yes, these bear my signature.

Q. I wish simply to identify them. They bear your signature ?—A. Yes. They all bear my signature.

(Four letters marked for identification).

Q. Please look at two letters purporting to be written by Mr. Burnham to you on June 20, and on July 6, 1896, and please tell me whether those letters are not written by Mr. Burnham ? They are corresponding with those other letters. Tell us whether those letters were not written to you by Mr. Burnham and received by you ?—A. I cannot remember them.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Bearing on this question?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—They are all. The question is the charge made against the Mutual Reserve Association, and which, on their being published, certain things took place. If the hon. gentleman does not understand I shall go back and read it again. This is a portion of part 5 of the evidence reported by the Select Committee, and my hon. friend will see that I am leading up to where the document was produced which the hon. gentleman desires to cut out of the report. He proposes to cut away the centre and leave the head at one end and the tail at the other. I am pointing out that you cannot divide the animal into three pieces, that they are all parts of a whole and pertinent to one another. The report continues :—

By Mr. Coster, Counsel for the Committee :

Q. Perhaps you have the original letter ?—A. Possibly I have. I cannot remember whether those are actually the original letters. I acknowledge one of July 6, but I certainly cannot remember the purport.

Q. Look over them and see if you had notice of all the facts contained in them ?—A. I had considerable correspondence with Mr. Burnham.

By Mr. Geoffrion, Counsel for the Mutual Reserve :

Q. Have you any doubt those are the letters ?—A. I do not know, but I have no objection to them going in as letters having been received by me at all. I have a number of letters from Mr. Burnham.

Q. You stated that you knew the writing of Mr. Hoffecker ?—A. Yes.

Q. Please look at this letter dated New York, May 13th, 1898, signed by Mr. Hoffecker, and addressed to you, and tell us whether this is a letter of his written to you ?—A. That is the handwriting of Mr. Hoffecker, the auditor—yes, I recognize his handwriting.

Now, who was Hoffecker ? Hoffecker was the auditor, a man who, as the witness shows, would not stay with the company. The report continues :

Q. The letter was sent to you, no doubt ?—A. Addressed to me on May 15, 1898. I do not know whether I received this letter, or not. I recognize the handwriting.

Q. You admit having received it ?—A. I do not know whether I received it or not, on my return from Europe.

Q. You would not say you did not receive it, of course ?—A. I do not say I did not receive it.

Q. Look at this letter sent by the same Hoffecker, May 20, 1898, addressed to you, with a note in your handwriting, and initialled by you, 'Handed to me by Mr. Hoffecker about half an hour ago' and tell us whether that letter is in the handwriting of Mr. Hoffecker, and received by you ?—A. Yes, this is in his handwriting. This would indicate it was handed to me by Mr. Hoffecker, about half an hour before. This is May 20, 1898.

Q. Will you look at the third letter of May 24, 1898, signed by Mr. Hoffecker, addressed to you as chairman of the committee, and the note under your initials and in your handwriting 'Dear Mr. Burnham : This letter is the outcome of Mr. Hoffecker's suggestion that I should see him and get from him the lowest amount he would take.'—A. Yes, that is Hoffecker's also.

Q. This letter is dated New York, May 13, 1898, and is addressed to J. D. Wells, Esq., chairman of the executive committee, and is as follows,—

The hon. gentleman will see that I am not endeavouring to bring anything before this honourable body that would be a surprise to them.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I would suggest to the hon. gentleman, that as it is now after midnight it would be better to adjourn the debate.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I move that the debate be adjourned.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN moved that the House do not adjourn.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Before the adjournment of the House, I should like to know what action is to be taken with the ninth and final report of the committee ? I made a motion on Friday afternoon that the ninth and final report be taken into consideration on Tuesday. I find there is no mention of that motion on the Orders of the Day. What is to be done ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It will be on for to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Will it be on to-morrow ?

Hon. Mr. THIBAUDEAU (Rigaud)—Certainly.

The Senate adjourned until 3 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Tuesday, August 2, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

TRANSPORTATION COMMISSIONERS REPORT.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY rose to Ask the government if the transportation commissioners have made any report of their doings, and if so, will the report be distributed, and who have been benefited by it ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—From all the information I can gather, they have not sent in any report. I have inquired at the office of the Department of Trade and Commerce and at my own department, and I am not aware that any report has yet been received from them.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—There is not much use in the commission if they cannot make a report by this time. They have been nearly a year in operation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, appointed only a few months ago.

RAILWAY COMMISSION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY rose to Ask the government what cases have the railway commissioners adjusted, and who have benefited by their investigations ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answer I got from the Department of Railways and Canals is that it would be altogether too voluminous to give the answer, and if the hon. gentlemen will move for the papers they will be brought down.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—When ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know. Whenever the work can be done.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Too late in the session for it now.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—As chairman of the select committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York, I beg to say that the Clerk of this honourable House is in doubt as to his power to pay the accounts for clerical services, witnesses, experts and counsel who have been summoned and employed and in attendance on the meetings of the select committee.

The SPEAKER—I presume the hon. gentleman is giving notice of motion.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I will move it now if I am permitted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Notice must be given. It is too important a matter to be dealt with off hand.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have been advised by some of the oldest parliamentarians in the House to take the step I am taking. Of course if the hon. Secretary of State insists on having notice I must put this motion on the paper as a notice of motion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The House cannot accept this without notice. It is a matter of too much importance.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This is not a report of the committee.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understand, it is some account that is to be paid.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—As far as I personally am concerned, and from my knowledge of parliamentary law and legal responsibility, no motion of the kind is necessary; but the officer who has the authority to deal with these matters has some doubt as to his authority. To my mind there can be no doubt whatever, because when this committee was appointed it was instructed to employ clerical services, summon witnesses, &c., for the investigation. That carried with it to my mind, the right to compensation. There is no question as to that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Will the hon. gentleman state what he is going to do ? I understand there are accounts he wants some authority to pay ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The committee to my mind, has full power to pay them, but owing to representations made to me by very old parliamentarians and by the Clerk of the Senate, who is in doubt as to his authority to pay these accounts, I beg to give notice that I will move that the Senate give instructions and authority to the Clerk of the Senate to pay the accounts of the official reporters, clerical services, witnesses, experts and counsel who have been in attendance on the select committee appointed to investigate into the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman says it is not an account ; it is an account and I presume for a very considerable sum. What does it all total ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—All the accounts are not yet in. It was surmised that it would cost $15,000, but I doubt if it will be half that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Even half that is more than the Senate should have to pay. Let the motion stand as a notice.

REPRESENTATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (149) An Act to amend the Representation Act, 1903. He said : This Bill refers to a number of the provinces. The first clause of it is to change the western limit of West Algoma from eighty-five degrees west to eighty-five degrees and twenty minutes. It is a mere technical point to make it conform to the municipal boundaries. The next clause refers to the boundaries of certain electoral districts in the province of Quebec. It is to correct an error that crept into the statute last year, and to bring it into conformity with the divisions of the counties under the statute of the province. The next paragraph refers to New Brunswick. As the law now stands on the statutes, New Brunswick would have fourteen members, whereas parliament only intended the province to have thirteen. After naming a number of counties specially, for instance the city and county of St. John, it states without naming the rest that all the other counties shall each be entitled to one member. That would give Victoria a member and Madawaska a member, which was never intended. The two counties are now united, and have been united for many years. It was a clerical error. Then in reference to the Yukon Territory, I was surprised to find that it was dropped out altogether from the electoral districts in the Act of last session.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (160) An Act to amend the Bank Act. He said : As I explained on the introduction of this Bill, it is for the purpose of enabling at least one bank in the maritime provinces—I do not know of any other—to establish a branch in Trinidad, and to enable the bank to issue bills in conformity with the currency law of that particular island.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Do I understand the hon. Secretary of State to say that this applies only to one bank ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it applies to all banks; but I said that I understood that there was one particular bank. I think it was one of the maritime province banks, which has established or is about to establish an office in Trinidad.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The Bank of Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—And this is to enable any Canadian bank to establish offices in any of the British colonies, the West Indies particularly. And in doing so they are at liberty to depart from the rules laid down in the Bank Act in Canada and to issue bills in conformity with the law of that island. As hon. gentlemen will remember, in the West Indian Islands the British currency still prevails, the standard being the sovereign and the pound sterling. It is for the purpose of fixing the value. Instead of issuing bills for five dollars, as we do in Canada, they would issue a bill for the pound sterling which would be equal to $4.86\frac{2}{3}$.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Is that bill for circulation in the islands only?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, of course.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—It is redeemable there, but if the bank withdraws its office from the islands the liability would still continue to redeem it at the head office in Canada.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

On the first clause,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Subsection 2 of clause 1, I understand to confine the circulation of these new bills to the colony or possession in which they are issued?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, but if the bank withdraws from the colony, then their bills must be redeemed here, otherwise they are redeemed there.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would they be circulated in this country?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They would not be legal tender.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I suppose they could be refused as not being legal tender?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I should like to know on what condition any Canadian bank is allowed to establish a bank in any colony. Is it by a mere decision of the board, or is it sanctioned by the stockholders?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume that is a matter for the bank shareholders and the bank directors. I could not answer of course. I presume the application comes in the ordinary way with a formal report from those who represent the bank, and I can only suppose that the president and directors who make the application have behind them the shareholders. We could not go behind them.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My impression is that the Bank of Nova Scotia got its Act amended, enabling it to extend its business to the West Indies.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They got their authority from parliament.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read a third time and passed, under a suspension of the rules.

COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (N) an Act to amend the Companies Act, 1902. He said: Hon. gentlemen will recollect that last session this chamber gave a great deal of time and attention to some improvements in regard to the Companies Act that we had carried the year before. In one or two instances clauses have been accidently omitted from the consolidation after the Act in 1902, and it was quite desirable to have them reinstated. The Bill, after it was thoroughly discussed, went down to the House of Commons, and I never could get the Bill carried there. There was always pressure, and it was put off and dropped. This session a member of the House af Commons introduced a Bill which covered one or two clauses that were in the Bill of 1902 to which attention had been called, owing to decisions of the courts, and finding that with the pressure of government business it was quite impossible to get the Bill through there. Mr. Cowan had a motion carried to strike the order from the paper in the House of Commons and so I introduced the Bill here, adding two of the clauses that were in the Bill as we passed it in 1903. It has, therefore, been fully considered in this chamber, and I hope we will be able to pass it here in time to have it considered by the House, as I have been assured by members of the government that it would be taken up and dealt with. It is quite impossible, in one sense, owing to the decision of one of the judges in Ontario, who held that a company of contractors doing general contract work could not undertake to build any part of a railway or any part of a telephone or telegraph line, which was certainly not the intention of parliament or of this chamber when it passed the Bill. It was that the Department of State should not be authorized to charter telegraph or telephone companies, but the word 'constructing' happened to be in the Act, and the courts construed it in the strictest sense so the companies that were formed for the purpose of doing public work, found they were unable to take contracts. There was a formal amendment in the charters issued in French. The word 'Limited' which was required to be attached to all names of companies with limited liability was in French expressed by the words 'à responsabilité limitée', and it was thought to be unnecessarily long, and it was agreed last session that the word 'limited' should be added to the name of the company as expressing the powers of the company. Hon. gentlemen will remember we have had a good deal of discussion in reference to another proposal. The leader of the opposition took some interest in it. There are certain companies which were incorporated with shares for less sums than $100 per share, and they desired to have power to pass by-laws authorizing a consolidation of the smaller shares into shares of $100 each. Then there was another clause, the last one, which relieved the companies. It was part of the law that had been in force for very many years—which provided that chartered companies when issuing bills or notes or accepting commercial paper, were not bound to comply with the requirements of the law as affecting bonds and mortgages. It never was intended. Those are the clauses of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

On the first clause,

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I just came in as the hon. gentleman was finishing his remarks on the second reading of the Bill. I intended to complain of the fact that the principal work done last session in amending the Act had not passed the House of Commons. Perhaps it is rather late to bring the amendments up at this stage of the session, but some of them are of considerable importance, and I hope next session the hon. Secretary of State will reintroduce them. When I returned home after last session I expected to find them part of the law, and it was only when I had to examine a case that I found they had not passed the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In drawing this Bill I felt that so near the end of the session I would simply introduce those clauses to which I knew there was no objection. It was the only hope of getting it through the House of Commons. The clauses covered by this Bill should receive the sanction of parliament during the present session.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This clause has a retroactive effect.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are there any cases which it is intended to legalize ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If there are not any, why give it retroactive effect, because that kind of legislation he knows is very objectionable ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Of course in any case that has been decided, this Bill will not affect it, but as there are charters in existence that probably have been working and have not been challenged, it is just as well to let it go. I am not aware that it will do any harm.

The clause was adopted.

On the third clause,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I notice in this amendment the same difficulty that I pointed out last year—what is to become of the fractional parts of shares? This clause gives power to the company to declare by by-law that the shares shall be $100 instead of say $40 or $50. Suppose a shareholder owns five shares, and they are converted from $50 to $100, what is to become of the fractional—the fifth share of $50? There is no power in this clause to enable the company to buy it, and, under the Companies Act, no company can buy or deal in its own shares. If power were given the company to buy the fractional share it would become the property of the company, thereby reducing its capital to that extent; if, on the contrary, the owner of the fractional share should pay the extra amount required to bring it up to a full share, it would be all right; but he might not be inclined to do that, and, furthermore, the shares might be worth more than par, and he might not desire to sell the factional share. What is to become of it under the circumstances? How is that to be regulated? I called attention to this point last year, and it seems as strong a point now. Unless some provision is made, the difficulty which I pointed out must necessarily arise. The amendment of the Companies Act is the result of a Bill which was introduced and became law to enable the Bank of Montreal to regulate the value of its shares, but it gave the bank the power to buy the fractional parts of shares, and if that were done for all companies, the difficulty would be removed. I think that has suggested itself to the hon. Secretary of State. If he can tell me how he is going to meet the difficulty I should like to know.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My object was to get the Bill through this session. The point was dealt with in a satisfactory manner last year, but it did not satisfy some hon. gentlemen, and we had to take the Bill as it passed in the Commons. When I called attention to it, I was told that the directors would have to struggle with the difficulty when it arose. I could not get harmonious views about it. As I had it first, it was as the hon. gentleman suggested it should be, and in a shape which I thought was good and wise. When I found different views entertained of it, I said the House of Commons seemed to have approved of the clause as it now reads and it had better go through as it was for the present. The directors will have to struggle with the difficulty when it arises. It may not arise.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It must necessarily arise in cases where there are fractional shares. It would not be to any great extent. The law should either provide for the shareholders holding a fractional portion of the share and receiving dividends upon it, or the company should have power to purchase it. I will not oppose the clause as it stands, but I see the difficulties that will present themselves in the practical working of it, and it seems to me an exceedingly loose way of legislating upon a question of this kind.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In all the correspondence I had I found only one company that really wanted to make this change, and they did not mention this difficulty. It was a company with large capital, and each man held a large number of shares.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What was the denomination of the shares?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I could not tell you. It was a long time ago. It was a company I think existing at Toronto. They did not care about the small shares and wanted to have large shares.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman must see that of necessity cases must arise where there are smaller shares unless the shareholders all hold an even number of shares.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am afraid the clause will not accomplish the intended object, because the shareholders who will have fractional shares cannot be compelled to sell them. As the result of the passing of this Bill there will remain fractions of shares for the conversion of which no machinery is inserted in the Bill in its present shape. Since we are taking up the subject, it seems to me it would be better to try and make the Bill complete.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—When this clause was before the House two years ago I suggested that a limit should be put on the amount of the share which should be issued—that they should not be issued below a certain figure, for reasons which I then gave. I was reminded that in mining companies shares were issued as low as $1 and even less. I should like to know from the hon. Secretary of State if his department has adopted the rule to be established by this Bill that shares shall not be issued below a certain value ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Where the capital stock is over $100,000 the shares must in all cases be $100. Where the capital is over $50,000 and under $100,000, the parties may, if they chose, make the shares $50. In smaller companies, where the capital is under $50,000, they may make the shares $25. I have declined to issue charters, even to mining companies on the $1 basis. I prefer not to issue mining charters, but in one or two cases I have consented and the shares were $5. I think it is open to very grave objection, but we cannot now stop the practice, for the reason if a company is wound up there are no contributors to pay the creditors. I have discouraged such charters. I have said the object of the Companies Act was rather to incorporate industrial companies, not mining companies, and therefore, I have rather discouraged the incorporation of mining companies through letters patent from the Secretary of State Department. I have had but one exception, and in that case I made the shares $5.

The clause was adopted.

On clause four,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This clause has been fairly well interpreted over the country, but one or two banks have been strict and have said you must have a by-law if you wish to have your bills discounted. I do not think all the banks have insisted upon that, but some have done so. It has been recognized that the borrowing clauses did not relate to bills of exchange and promissory notes, because the law had been so long on the statutes regulating bills of exchange and promissory notes signed by incorporated companies, but it was by pure accident dropped out of the Companies Act in 1902. I did not know it was dropped out until long after.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know the practice now is that some banks will not discount a bill of exchange or note unless the company first pass a by-law, and all the directors become responsible for it. This is to relieve them of that difficulty, so as to enable them to borrow upon the security of the company.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It has been suggested by an hon. gentleman who took a great interest in this matter last session, that clause three should have a paragraph added authorizing the company to acquire any broken parts of a $100 share.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I move that the following paragraph be added to clause three :

For the purpose of such consolidation, the company shall have the power to purchase fractions of shares.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then it becomes the property of the company ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Yes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Last year we had not this condition that they should sell within so many months.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—We could add 'and the company shall be bound to sell the same within five years.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You will have to give the power to the Governor in Council to extend the time, if it be necessary, because it might be just possible that the company's shares would not be marketable. They might not be worth par, and it might be impossible to sell the shares within six months.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Make it a year.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Even a year. It would be better to accept the suggestion of the hon. member from de Salaberry. In the Companies Act, when loan companies acquire property they are obliged to dispose of that property within a certain time, but it was found in the practical working of the clause that that time might expire before it was possible to dispose of the property unless at a very great loss, and, consequently, power is given in that Act to the Governor in Council to extend the time, if necessary. There can be no possible harm in adding that provision to this clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Does my hon. friend really think the matter of sufficient importance to force the company to sell fractional parts of shares ? It will be an asset for all the shareholders.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—My first idea was to add this provision, but I thought, as has been suggested by the hon. Secretary of State, that it would be hardly worth while to insert such a provision because the amount involved would be very small. It is simply for the purpose of consolidation. Therefore there would be few fractions of shares. However, if it was deemed advisable, we would only have to add those words—and the company shall be bound to sell any shares held by them within a period of—years. So far as the suggestion is concerned that the share might not have value, in the Bank Act there is a provision of the same kind ; banks are empowered to purchase real estate for the purpose of protecting their claims, and they are bound within seven years to sell any real estate. The Governor in Council has no power to extend the delay.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They have in the case of loan companies.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am speaking of the Bank Act. The stock may not be listed on the stock exchange, but it has some value, and then it would be for the company to sell it ; but I agree with the hon. Secretary of State, it is hardly worth while.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I would say make it within two years.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I think it would be better not to mention the time within which the company would have to dispose of those fractions of shares. It will be for the company to do so for their best interest.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It is because it is diminishing the capital.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It would be to such an inappreciable extent that I do not think it would be worth while to hamper them.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Say within a delay of two years.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Could they not buy these shares without any authority of this kind ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Does this imply that the company will have power to expropriate these shares ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I do not think it does. That clause would have to be remodeled entirely to give that power, but I think this will meet the requirements.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is such a domestic matter that I think we are giving ourselves more trouble than the thing demands, and I am not quite sure that the company could not buy its own shares under the Companies Act. They might not do it with reference to banking and loan companies, but it is not worth while discussing the matter.

The clause as amended was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BAKER from the committee reported the Bill with amendments, which were adopted.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed under suspension of the rules.

REPRESENTATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before passing to the next Order of the Day, I would suggest to the hon. Secretary of State that if he desires to take up the Representation Act I have no objection to it proceeding.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am much obliged to my hon. friend, and I ask that item 1 be now proceeded with.

The House resolved itself into committee of the whole on Bill 149 ' An Act to amend the Representation Act 1903.'

(In the Committee.)

On clause 1,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The effect of section 2 is to modify the boundary line of west Algoma twenty minutes further west in order to bring it in conformity with the Ontario Act which made its dividing line between West Algoma and Thunder Bay and Rainy River districts. It is only a trifling change.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Are these divisions suggested or recommended by the member for the district or how are they arrived at ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no. The division we thought we were following last year in the Act was the division of the electoral districts in the provincial, and we defined a particular locality where the dividing line was, and described it as 85 degrees west longitude; it is really 85 and twenty minutes west longitude. It is simply moving the western line between West Algoma and the Thunder Bay districts. Our electoral divisions are based on the Ontario boundaries. As a rule we take the municipal divisions as they have been there in following out our electoral divisions and there happened to be this slight discrepancy. There is a very scant population in that district. I do not know that it affects any population. It is on the north shore of Lake Huron, before the Thunder Bay district is reached.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Those are well defined boundaries are they not ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 2.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—For what purpose are those words struck out in the revised statutes ? What is the result ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The result is that it applies the division to counties in lower Canada. The words ' section of ' should not be there, because the divisions are governed not by that particular section but by all the clauses in the Act.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is a pure error.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. Just now the statutes are being overhauled by a commission, and they go into it very much more carefully than the original draftsman, and they discover those errors in the revision so that it is quite important to have them corrected, because we have authorized that the division when complete shall be the law without coming again to parliament. In the former revision the revised Acts have been brought down and parliament has confirmed them, but they are so voluminous that it is quite impossible for parliament to give the time and attention necessary, and therefore it was thought just as well to confirm them in advance. The final revision by the commission will be the law of the country, and it is for that reason that they have to be exceedingly particular about even very slight defects.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 3,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This clause relates to a manifest error, the effect of which was to give to New Brunswick an additional member more than they were entitled to. It arose in that way that in setting forth the electoral districts in the province of New Brunswick, they did not set them all forth. They set forth that the city of St. John should be entitled to one member, and the city of St. John and county of St. John should be entitled to one member, and it went on and named electoral districts and it said all the other counties of New Brunswick shall be each entitled to one member. Madawaska and Victoria were practically separate counties, but they had been allied for representation purposes. The mode in which the statute was drawn would have given to each of them a member. It would have given to New Brunswick one more member than the province is entitled to.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto), from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read a third time, and passed under suspension of the rules.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (132) An Act to amend the Railway Act, 1903

On clause 1,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There was a good deal of criticism on the second reading of this Bill in reference to several clauses of it. I will take them up seriatum. The first clause authorizes the Governor in Council to hear appeals from the Railway Committee, that is, those appeals that arose after the Railway Committee had been abolished and before the Railway Commission had been formed. I see in a report of my observations that they rather confounded those two. They are different bodies. The Railway Commission is organized under the Railway Act, and the Railway Committee is under a former Railway Act. I was asked to state to what particular cases that clause would relate. I have made inquiry of the Railway Department, and I am informed by Mr. Schreiber that he only knows of one case that would arise, and that is the Young street bridge, which has been a much debated question, and which is now before us.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That was the case to which I called the attention of the hon. gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. There was an appeal taken to the Privy Council, but it could not be heard on account of the Railway Commission having been organized, and it is for the purpose of getting rid of that particular case, and that is the only case in which I understand the clause 1 will be invoked.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 2,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is of much wider and more important consequence. This clause arises from a decision given by the Privy Council in England, on an appeal case that went up to them between the Attorney General for Ontario and the Hamilton Street Railway Company. The Privy Council as usual—I say it advisedly as I have said it before—gave a very unsatisfactory judgment. Briefly, I may say that there were certain questions submitted to the Privy Council. Before confederation we had a Lord's Day Observance Act on the statute-book. After confederation, the province of Ontario added to that Act. Street railways, for instance, had not been in existence at the time of confederation, and, therefore, special provision was made in the Lord's Day Act that street railways, as in certain cases defined in the Ontario statutes, should not be permitted to operate on the Sabbath day. In the Ontario legislation there were a number of other provisions, and the whole act was submitted to the Privy Council. I will just mention particularly the clause on which the Privy Council gave their decision. The main point submitted to the Privy Council was this; had the province of Ontario jurisdiction to enact chapter 246 of the Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1897, entitled, 'An Act to prevent the profanation of the Lord's Day,' and particularly sections 1, 7, 8. Section one relates to the sale of property on the Sabbath, section 7 refers to steamboat excursions on the Sabbath day, and section 8 refers to the operating of street railways on the Sabbath day. Now, I may say that in regard to steamboat excursions on Sunday, that the penalty attached was $400, a specific sum which might be recovered from the proprietors or the captain of the boat; that it could only be recovered in a civil action before a court having jurisdiction. It therefore certainly could not partake of a criminal offence; it was an offence against an ordinance passed by the province, having, as I think, jurisdiction to enact it, inasmuch it was a money penalty that was attached to it, and was not in any sense created a crime. For the offences against other clauses of the Act——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But the Law Lords of the Privy Council decided that was ultra vires on the ground that they had no power to impose that penalty.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As I said in my opening observations, the judgments of the Privy Council are not always satisfactory. I shall read the judgment to my hon. friend. It was delivered by the Lord Chancellor. He said:

> Their lordships are of opinion that the Act in question, Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1897, chapter 246, intituled 'An Act to prevent the profanation of the Lord's Day,' treated as a whole, was beyond the competency of the Ontario legislature to enact, and they are accordingly of opinion that the first section which was referred to the Court of Appeal for Ontario by the Lieutenant Governor, pursuant to chapter 84 of the Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1897, ought to be answered in the negative : that is, the question had the legislature of Ontario power to enact section 246 of the Revised Statutes of Ontario, intituled, 'An Act to prevent the profanation of the Lord's Day.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They said the Ontario legislature had no power, but gave no reasons for it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They were asked to express an opinion on the other questions. There were no less than eight questions asked, and they simply declined to give an answer. They said : 'The answer to one covers everything, and we won't give an answer except the particular case arises.' I say to that extent it was very unsatisfactory, because the ground they took was this: that the criminal law was entirely under the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada, and it was an infraction of the powers of parliament for the province of Ontario to have enacted that Act. While reading the various clauses of the Act one certainly must come to the conclusion that the general answer was given by the Privy Council in a dogmatic way ; they said that it was contrary to the powers conferred upon the Ontario legislature, ergo that necessarily a breach of the Sabbath observance law had to be a crime. Well, a majority of the cases are certainly not crimes. For instance one of the clauses states that a person shall not be permitted to openly bathe on Sunday in a city or town if he is near a residence. It could not be called a crime if some person took a bath a couple of hundred yards east or west of a residence. In many other ways it is quite evident that the Act cannot be regarded as creating crimes. For instance if a person fishes on a Sunday he is liable to be prosecuted under the Act. Well, it may or may not be a crime to fish. Perhaps if a man was hungry and had not anything else to eat, it would not be a crime to fish. I mention these matters to show the very dogmatic way in which the Privy Council dealt with the whole subject, and on the one point at all events which created a good deal of feeling in Ontario, we must intervene, and, as far as we can, give authority to the legislation of that province in regard to the running of cars on Sunday. The province of Ontario, recognizing the rights of the individual localities, have reserved certain railways in towns and cities from the operation of their Act. The city of Ottawa has been reserved, and Toronto, so far as the powers they have at present under the votes of the people ; but it appears that between the towns of Brantford and Paris, in Ontario, there are cars that are running, legalized by the province of Ontario ; that is, they are incorporated by the province, and the people in both Paris and Brantford strongly object to the running of cars on Sunday, for the purpose of inducing people to pass the day at a park which lies midway between the two towns, where games which are certainly not elevating and edifying, and not befitting the Lord's Day, are carried on with impunity, where they have plays and dances, and they sell soft drinks as they are called, and in a variety of other ways shock the moral sense of the people of the locality, and there is a strong feeling that there should be some intervention to check desecration of the Lord's Day. That is the particular reason for the legislation, although of course it would cover other points. Our connection with it is this, that a railway which forms a part of a railway working under a federal charter was at some time or other before the parliament of Canada, and we inserted, wholly irrespective of the effect of the words, and giving them a meaning that their natural interpretation would not warrant, a declaration that local works of that kind were for the general advantage of Canada. In the British North America Act certain subjects are exclusively under the control of the parliament of Canada. They are defined, but there are general words added—any work declared by the parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada, can be brought under jurisdiction of the federal parliament of Canada. Now, that is a power we should rather hesitate to exercise in the free way we have in the past, and I am inclined to think that in the future, parliament will hesitate in adding those words to bring purely local works under the jurisdiction of this parliament.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I suppose the intention is to get subsidies.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—One clause or another. The second clause is marked '6a' and it reads as follows :—

6a. Notwithstanding anything in this Act or in any other Act, every railway, steam or electric street railway, and tramway, wholly situate within one province of Canada, but, in its entirety or in part, declared by the parliament of Canada to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, and every person employed thereon, in respect of such employment, and every person, company, corporation or municipality owning, controlling or operating it wholly or partly, in respect of such ownership, control or operation, shall, notwithstanding such declaration, be subject to any Act of the legislature of the province in which it is situate, prohibiting or regulating work, business or labour upon the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, which is in force at the time of the passing of this Act; and every such Act is hereby, in so far as it is in other respects within the powers of the legislature, confirmed and ratified, and made as valid and effectual for the purposes of this section as if it had been duly enacted by the parliament of Canada.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—From the explanation given by the hon. gentleman, I draw this conclusion: We are by this Bill legalizing Acts that have been passed by the provincial legislatures which the Law Lords of the Privy Council have declared they have no right to pass. That is practically what we are doing.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the object of it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Will this legalize the penalty for the infraction of the Act?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It will do this; so far as we have the power we do it. In the Ontario Act, passed at the recent session, they have followed lines which would make it quite impossible for the Privy Council to hold that it came within the purview of the criminal law. That was the justification for the decision to which I referred just now, that the criminal law was absolutely reserved for the parliament of Canada. The statute recently passed in Ontario first recites the prohibition against cars running on Sunday, then excepts certain places that already have the power—Toronto and Ottawa are named—and then it says that for every train or car run or operated in violation of the section, the company shall pay $400, the action to be brought before the court having jurisdiction in the place from which such train started. It provides that of the moneys collected, one-half shall go to the province and the other half to the municipality from which the train started. It could not be held that that is any infraction of the criminal law, because there is no imprisonment, no penalty that shall follow the commission of a crime, and, therefore, by no possible chance could it be argued with any show of success that a clause which expressed the object in the words I have mentioned could be an infraction of the criminal law. But in order that we may remove the jurisdiction we have at present in regard to a local railway that has come by its charter under the sovereignty of the Dominion parliament by the addition of those words for the general advantage of Canada, this clause strikes them out.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is there any intention this year on the part of the government to meet the views of the Lord's Day Alliance which called on the premier early in the year?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are doing it now.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—This is the only instalment this year?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It will be a great disappointment to the Lord's Day Alliance. They had a distinct promise from the premier that something should be done, and they will feel that the promise has not been kept. However, there is one good thing, when this Bill becomes law the Ontario Act can be carried into affect. I was with a delegation that waited on the collector of customs in connection with steamboat excursions, and he gave orders then that excursions from the United States should be stopped, and Sunday excursion passengers should not be allowed to land. He took the power, and I am glad he did, but he has not stopped excursions leaving our own country, and that is one thing that ought to be remedied.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As far as we can, we have endeavoured to stop them, but in matters of that kind, which are clearly under the control of the provinces they must be left to carry out their own law.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I think the federal authorities could act where navigation comes in.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Take the Sunday excursion steamer; I do not think the Privy Council would hold that where there was a penalty similar to the penalty imposed here, $400, to be recovered by any person suing for it in a court of competent jurisdiction, that that would be characterized as crime. It would be preposterous; therefore the statute of Ontario in that particular regard would, I am quite sure, be sustained by the Privy Council. The Lord's Day Alliance has not thought proper to take proceedings. I noticed the other day that the usual Richelieu and Ontario steamer left Toronto on Sunday afternoon, and the authorities declined to take any action, showing the reasonable view they themselves take of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Was that an excursion trip ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it was the regular trip.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—One of the regular steamers going down to Montreal ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, so I think the Lord's Day Alliance are recognizing that in the provinces the power and control of many of those ordinances rests with the province and not with the Dominion. We give our concurrence as far as we can. We are most anxious to meet the views of the Lord's Day Alliance, but, as hon. gentleman know, the conditions are not the same in the different provinces, and in legislation of that kind you cannot put in the statutes of Canada cast iron rules that persons in all parts of the Dominion, a widely extended Dominion with different creeds and nationalities, would feel morally bound to observe, and any law of that kind put on the statutes ought to be enforced. It is absurd to enact laws which you do not propose to enforce, and, therefore, it is very much better that the different provinces should pass such laws as meet the approval of the large majority of the people. Those laws should and can be enforced. As far as the federal authorities are concerned, they wished to meet the desires of the Lord's Day Alliance, and they are doing so as far as they can under the circumstances which exist in Canada.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This is rather peculiar legislation. The British North America Act conferred certain powers on the federal government and parliament, and other powers on the provincial legislatures. We propose by this Bill to loan, as it were, some of the powers we possess to some of the provinces, for the purpose of enabling them to do what they could not do themselves under the British North America Act. I think the correct principle is for this parliament to carry out the powers given to it directly, by its own legislation, and leave the provinces to exercise the powers which they possess in their own way. This is simply a way of getting over a practical difficulty and it will lead to many anomalies. We make the law of the provinces effective where it would otherwise be ineffective, and that law will be, as I understand, to prevent the running of electric cars say at Ottawa, outside of the city on Sundays.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That may not be the case here, but in many parts of Ontario there will be just as sharp anomalies as that in the carrying of that Act into effect.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman entirely loses sight of the main point which I thought I had made clear. It is where we have taken from the provinces a jurisdiction which properly belongs to the provinces in reference to certain railways which I have mentioned. I gave the case of a railway between Brantford and Paris, a purely local railway. In order to absorb and take from the province of Ontario the powers which properly and legitimately belong to it under the British North America Act, we went beyond our rights. We now seek to correct that by saying that so far as this Sunday observance law is concerned, we remit to the province again the powers and jurisdiction that we have improperly taken from the province ; because nobody will maintain for a moment that it was a fair interpretation of the British North America Act to add those words ' for the general advantage of Canada,' except in a very few isolated cases. Where it became necessary for federal purposes it was justified, but surely not in a purely local enterprise, which did not connect one province with another, and which was entirely within the province, perhaps within one municipality. Surely it was unjustifiable for the federal parliament to insert in an Act those words in order to take any particular enterprise from out the local jurisdiction. We are not in this clause going beyond that. We are simply saying that so far as those provincial works that we have taken control of improperly are concerned, they shall be again remitted to the province so far as the laws relating to Sunday observance are applicable.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I cannot agree with my hon. friend that we have improperly taken those local works from the provinces. It may or may not be expedient to exercise the power, but we have the power under the British North Amercia Act to take over those works, and in the exercise of our judgment we did so, and when we took them over we took with them all the rights that passed in regard to legislation concerning them.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—There can be no doubt, parliament has the power, but as the hon. Secretary of State has explained, we are simply placing the provinces in the same position they were in before parliament saw fit to insert these words. It has been held by the Privy Council that inasmuch as these works were declared for the general advantage of Canada the province did not have the power to restrict the operation of those railways on Sunday. In a great many cases where such Bills have been before the Railway Committee, members from the different provinces have protested against the insertion of the words 'for the general advantage of Canada,' claiming that they were purely local enterprises and we should not by legislation take them out of the control of the provinces. In so far as Sabbath observance legislation is observed, it is restoring the powers the provinces had previous to inserting those words 'For the general advantage of Canada.' There is no doubt about the right of parliament to legislate, but whether they have been wise in doing so is questionable, and where there is a strong feeling in any province against running cars on local lines on Sunday, the federal parliament are asked to declare that no law of this parliament shall restrict the local authorities from carrying out the provincial legislation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the passage of this clause repeal the sections in all the Railway Acts declaring that local works are for the general advantage of Canada ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no, it is limited to the prohibiting or regulating of working on Sunday.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand that, but the argument of the hon. Secretary of State is this, that we improperly took from the different provinces the right they had under the constitution to regulate the running of cars on Sunday. Did the adding of the words 'This Act shall be for the general advantage of Canada' remove that power from the province ? I should judge it did.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the passage of this clause, purporting to give back to them certain powers, repeal the sections of the different Acts contained in that provision ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No ; it simply enables them to enforce the Act in regard to Sunday observance. It is limited to that entirely.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I take the text of subsection 6a as amounting to this : as if when the Railway Act was passed last session we had inserted in it a clause to the effect that the declaration made that a local work was to be considered a work for the general advantage of Canada would not deprive the legislature of the right of legislating as far as Sunday observance was concerned. That is the whole affect of the clause. In other words, the declaration made in those Acts of parliament, that they are works for the general advantage of Canada, have the effect of removing the railway property from the local to the federal jurisdiction without any restriction, so it is contended, and this Bill is drafted on that assumption. The object of the Bill is to limit that effect by protecting legislation, as far as Sabbath observance is concerned.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is another point to which I wish to draw attention. It seems to me that this clause involves a very serious constitutional question. We find ourselves in this position : a law is passed by the province of Ontario imposing a penalty of $400 for any infraction of a clause of a law on their statutes. The Lords of the Privy Council have declared that to be ultra vires. In the face of that decision of the highest court in the realm, we give authority, as far as we can, to legalize an Act which imposes that penalty enacted by the legislature. Now, supposing that penalty be imposed for a violation of the law and the case goes into court. The defence would be that the province had no power to legislate upon that subject under the decision of the Privy Council. Then the prosecutor would say: We are proceeding under a law of the province which the parliament of Canada has declared intra vires. Who is to decide that question? I wish it to be understood I am not opposing the concessions which are being made. Then it comes to this: Can we, as a parliament, delegate to an inferior body a power which the Confederation Act says is wholly and solely vested in this parliament? Under the circumstances, it seems to me there would be a good deal of work for the lawyers. My hon. friend gave me a very satisfactory explanation in reference to the other question which I put, and I should like to hear legal gentlemen upon this point, which, to me, appears not only an important, but an intricate question to decide as to the powers of the different legislative bodies.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I disagree entirely with the suggestion made that this Bill has the effect of over-riding the judgment of the Privy Council. There is nothing of the kind. The judgment of the Privy Council, as read by the hon. Secretary of State, dealt with a special act passed by the legislature of Ontario and dealing—I call attention to the words used by the Lord Chancellor in rendering the judgment—'with the Act as a whole.' The Privy Council held that the legislature of Ontario had assumed to deal with matters which form part of the criminal law of the Dominion, and that, therefore, it was beyond their jurisdiction, and declared the Act unconstitutional. The passing of this Bill will not enable the legislature of Ontario to pass a similar Act to the one which has been declared unconstitutional, because it would be interfering with the exclusive jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament, to which has been entrusted the criminal laws. There is a distinction which is to be made. The Act of the legislature was declared ultra vires, not because it was dealing with the observance of the Sunday, but because it was dealing with the criminal law, and to pass an Act in accordance with this Bill they will have to confine themselves to the observance of the Sunday without encroaching upon the criminal law. If they should enact a penal clause making certain offences a crime, then it would still be utra vires of the powers of the legislature. That, I think, should answer the objection raised by the hon. leader of the opposition.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I understand that this is a limited clause similar to the one which was originated in this chamber and passed last session, when we declared that the provincial railways crossing federal roads would not thereby become wholly works for the general advantage of Canada and subject to all federal laws, but would simply be under federal jurisdiction in so far as the crossing and through freight rates were concerned. We are again, by this Bill, limiting the jurisdiction of the federal power upon provincial railways that have been declared for the general advantage of Canada.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We are doing more than limiting the jurisdiction of the federal parliament; we are making valid, as far as an Act of this parliament can make valid, Acts passed by another legislature.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If it does not do that, it does not do anything at all. If the Lord's Day Alliance are depending on this Bill, and the honourable gentleman's contention is right, they will find they are getting legislation of no value at all for enforcing Sunday observance. But it is the intention of the Bill that provincial laws making the running of street cars or other public conveyances on Sunday a punishable offence shall be valid; that may be held to be illegal hereafter. That must be the meaning of the section, otherwise how does it meet the views of the Lord's Day Alliance? It is with a view to the better enforcement of the provincial Sabbath observance laws. These laws have been found to be faulty by the Law Lords, and the provinces have found they cannot enforce them. We are providing that these laws shall be as good and as effective as if they were passed by the parliament of Canada itself. I think that is what we are accomplishing. If we are not accomplishing that, and if we are not making legal in the province of Ontario what would not be otherwise legal, the Lord's Day Alliance are not receiving much of what they ask. Now, in connection with this subject, very serious anomalies will arise under the operation of this clause. Take the case of an electric railway or any other railway located within the province, which has been declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, and it is located entirely within the province. That railroad might be extended across a provincial boundary line, and the moment it did so extend, it would come out from within the provisions of this Act, and become a federal work, under another provision of the British North America Act, and a different law for Sunday observance would apply to that road the moment it crossed the provincial line. Take one railway that is entirely within the province of Ontario. and side by side is a competing road which crosses the boundary line, what will you have then ? We will have the law of Ontario applied to the railroad that is practically covering the same ground, with the exception that the one touches the provincial line and the other does not ; you will have the law of the province applied to the one, and you will have the federal law applied to the other, and the federal law with respect to the question of Sunday observance, we know has no provisions similar to the provisions in some of the provincial laws. Whatever may be the object or desire of the government in passing this Bill, the effect is somewhat as has been described by my hon. friend to my left. It is delegating the powers of this parliament to the province, for the purpose of accomplishing something which they could not do unless we passed this law giving them that power.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I desire to say in reply to my hon. friend, that the parliament of Canada is not virtually delegating the power to the province. We are merely restoring the power that the province formerly enjoyed. Prior to the time that we commenced legislation in the direction of bringing of lines of railway under the control of the Dominion government by declaring them to be works for the general advantage of Canada, the province exercised the powers that they will exercise after this Bill is passed. so that we are merely placing the province in the position, by legislation of its own, to regulate the operation of these local provincial lines, on the Lord's Day. My hon. friend has expressed the view that it would be better that a general Dominion law should be passed, with regard to the Lord's Day Observance, but we all know very well that there are differences of opinion in some of the provinces, with regard to that matter. The province of Ontario possibly may hold one view as a province, or at least a majority of the people may hold one view with regard to that, and the people of the province of Quebec may hold another. It is not desirable by an overpowering vote to say that the whole of the provinces should force one province to consent to a condition of things which the majority of the people in that province are opposed to. We do not want to do that. The province of Quebec may decide to take a certain course after this law is passed, and the province of Ontario may take another course. It will place the provinces in the position that they can legislate with regard to the Lord's Day within their own sphere, and bring those roads that were originally chartered as provincial lines which are entirely within the province, under the operation of that law. I entirely concur in the legislation. I compliment the government on the introduction of the Bill. I think it is an exceedingly good and prudent provision. I am sure the very best legal talent in this Dominion has been brought to bear on this subject, and while I respect the extended experience of my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, who has been long enough in parliament to be a good constitutional authority, after all I have not the slightest doubt that all the peculiar phases and features of this Bill have been carefully considered by the Department of Justice of the Dominion, and by other legal minds, and that they have come to the conclusion that legislation of this kind is the only method by which you can empower the provinces to deal with this great and important question on lines to suit themselves, and each province will be virtually a little kingdom within itself, regulating everything connected with the observance of the Lord's Day, and I think, therefore, it is proper legislation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think there is any difference of opinion upon the point which has been advanced by hon. gentleman from Wellington, but he seems to have lost sight of the real point at issue. As the hon. gentleman knows, many of us have been fighting in the Railway Committee, against placing that clause in Bills relating to exclusively local roads. That is not the point that struck me so forcibly, but we are in this Bill relegating the power to the legislatures that they would have enjoyed if those words had not been placed in those local Acts. The point that I raise, is whether this law, as it is claimed, would repeal the local law? I am not objecting to it, but that is one point. The principal matter is, that we are not only giving power to legalize the laws which they may pass, regulating Sabbath observance, but are we not at the same time giving them power to impose the penalties which the Law Lords of the Privy Council of England have declared that we have no right to give? That is the principal point. If my hon. friend will read the clauses carefully, I think he will find that the construction which I placed upon it is correct. The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry gave a very clear, and, to my mind, succinct explanation of this clause, but in his explanation he did not touch that point to which I have referred. At least I did not so understand him. The second subsection of section 2 reads as follows :

'2. The Governor in Council may at any time and from time to time by proclamation confirm, for the purposes of this section, any Act of the legislature of any province passed after the passing of this Act for the prohibition or regulation of work, business or labour upon the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday.'

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—That was not the clause which the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry was discussing, nor was it the clause referred to by myself. We simply limited our remarks to the first section of clause 2.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I said that the hon. gentleman's explanation was clear and succinct, so far as he discussed the question, but that he had not touched the point to which I have called the attention of the Senate, and that is the clause to which I now desire to call attention.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have not come to that clause yet.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We have been discussing the first section, as I understand. However, this discussion can be held now, so that we can pass that clause without further discussion. I shall read the remainder of the clauses, and I wish the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry to listen to it. It is, as follows :

And from and after the date of any such proclamation the Act thereby confirmed, in so far as it is in other respects within the powers of the legislature, shall for the purposes of this section be confirmed and ratified and made as valid and effectual as if it had been enacted by the parliament of Canada.

It goes further, and it says that it shall not only be confirmed in this particular respect but in other respects, whatever that may be or how much that may cover. The point to my mind is this : supposing they re-enact that clause which now stands upon the statute-book of the province of Ontario, and which the Law Lords of the Privy Council have declared to be ultra vires, would not the powers given to the Governor in Council, under this Act, declare that legal? My hon. friend shakes his head. That is just the view I have, but I think the intention is to make an Act of that kind legal, otherwise the passage of any law by the province regulating work of any kind, business and labour, on the first day of the week, would be ineffectual, and utterly valueless, unless you could impose a penalty for the non-observance of it. That is the point I desire to make. Perhaps it is not as clear as though I had studied law for ten years, and it does not seem to me, that, as the hon. gentleman from Marshfield has pointed out, power is given to the Governor in Council by proclamation to declare such a law valid and having the same effect and force as if it had been passed by the parliament of Canada, and if it has not that power, then the clauses does very little good.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There may be differences of opinion about the desirability of legislation by the Governor in Council, such as is provided by the second sub-clause of this clause ; but perhaps it would be better to devote ourselves just now to the sub-clause which is before us.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is what I have tried to do.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This question involved in the first sub-clause is a sufficiently important one. The strongest objection to the clause is the one indicated by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield. That is, if you have a through railway running parallel with, or in the neighbourhood of a local railway, the local railway being one which does not extend beyond the limits of the province, then the Sunday laws of the province apply to the local railway, and do not apply to the through railway which passes close to it. With respect to the first general objection, the position is this : the provincial legislature creates a person. It incorporates a certain number of gentlemen to build and own a railway. It makes them an artificial person. That artificial person, as long as it remains a provincial person, is subject to the Sunday laws of the province. Then the Dominion parliament gives to that provincial person a Dominion existence. That person is still the same person, although in the one case it has a Dominion existence, and in the other only a provincial existence, and the question is whether there is anything improper in declaring that the person created by the Dominion parliament shall be subject to such local laws as apply to the provincial person. I do not think that there is anything in itself objectionable or contrary to our ideas of law and common sense in that. There is no reason why this Dominion person should not be subject to the provincial laws, as well as the local person—that is the laws which affect him in common with the local person. The truth is, that already these Dominion corporations are to a certain extent subject to the local laws. Take the question of lands acquired by these corporations. A Dominion corporation acquires land under its Dominion charter, but when it comes to deal with that land, it falls under the local law with respect to the registration of deeds, and so on. All these things and other things in connection with the land, are governed by the local law ; and there is nothing absurd or unreasonable in contending that the provincial Sunday laws should apply to the Dominion corporation whose works do not extend beyond the limits of the province.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I was going to say that the point made by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield is, I believe, well taken, and I think it would be well to call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the matter. The point would be covered by adding after the word 'tramway' in the third line of sub-clauses 6—A, the words 'extending to more than one province, or wholly situated,' &c.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Provision is made for that very contingency.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman will see that is in direct contradiction to the third clause of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I do not rise to suggest any amendment, I merely rise to say that I agree with the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield that the Bill is open to this objection, and as has been stated by His Honour the Speaker, taking two railways, one exclusively situated within the province, and the other extending beyond the province, the Act of the local legislature will affect the one entirely situated within the province, but will not affect the other, and the law should be made to affect both railways as far as the Sunday observance is concerned, and I merely suggest that the attention of the Minister of Justice be called to the point, and ascertain whether he does not think it advisable to amend it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman think it is not covered by the third section ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No, it is not. As far as the other point is concerned, I only desire to call the attention of the hon, members, and especially the hon. leader of the opposition to those words which are to be found in this section which is now under consideration in line 34—'And every such Act is hereby in so far as it is in other respects within the powers of the legislature, confirmed and ratified.'

What is the effect of these words ? The effect is to compel the legislature not to interfere with the powers of the Dominion parliament, in dealing with subjects which are criminal law subjects, because this clause says that an Act of the legislature will have to be, in other respects, within its powers. What does it refer to? It refers to any matter other than the fact that the company have been declared a work for the general advantage of Canada, and it is only as far as these words might have interfered or might have limited the powers of the legislature, that such powers will not remain limited as they were heretofore ; but it will not be within the powers of the legislature to deal with criminal matters connected with a breach of the Sabbath observance laws after the passing of this Act.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have great respect for the opinion of the hon. member from de Salaberry with regard to the interpretation of statutes and such matters as that. As my hon. friend is generally clear and right, I hesitate about asserting an opinion contrary to that which he enunciates. My hon. friend just now seemed to draw the distinction in this Act, which I had not previously noticed in any remarks that had been made. Perhaps I have not sufficiently understood it, but I think my hon. friend's meaning is this : In all other matters it will leave the laws of the provinces with respect to penalties and the enforcement of them precisely as it is. Is that my hon. friend's meaning ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If that is the true interpretation of the clause the hon. gentleman from Wellington has very little to thank the government for with regard to carrying out the views of the Lord's Day Alliance, because it leaves the interpretation precisely as it is with regard to that subject, and has not given the provincial law the effect of enforcing penalties for violation of the Sunday observance laws with respect to these roads. The Lord's Day Alliance people are just where they were before, and it is only a delusion. My hon. friend from de Salaberry has no doubt looked into this already somewhat carefully. If he has not, no doubt he will look into it thoroughly from the fact there seems to be such a divergence of opinion as to the meaning to be attached to the clause. It will be well, therefore, to hold it over to give an opportunity to study it. We are passing something on which we place very different interpretations. The Speaker who, we know, is a very close critic of the law, seems to think, that what we are doing is simply making the law applicable to Dominion officials on Dominion railways, leaving the province to enact any law it may think proper with regard to this matter. To my mind we are doing a great deal more than that; we are declaring certain laws passed or to be passed hereafter by the provinces shall have the same effect as if passed by the parliament of Canada.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—On proclamation.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes, on proclamation. The contention is that we are really, by this Bill, providing that a provincial law which would otherwise be lame and defective with regard to Sunday observance, in the matter of enforcing penalties, shall be valid.

Hon Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—That is it, of course.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If that is the law, it will infringe on the point raised by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, who appears to think it leaves the provincial law with regard to the enforcement of penalties in the same position as it has been up to this time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is very extraordinary that there should be a second opinion on the meaning of that clause. It seems to be drawn as clearly as possible. In speaking of the judgment of the Privy Council, I said it was unsatisfactory. I drew attention to the fact that it was not possible for the Privy Council to decide that certain things were crimes; because there happened to be one or two clauses in the Act to which reference has been made attaching imprisonment to the penalty, they simply threw out the whole Act.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—What was the Act ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is in the consolidated statutes of Ontario, chapter 246, which reenacts the old Lord's Day Observance Act. I stated, as showing the absurdity of the decision of the Privy Council, that it was quite evident that many provisions of that Act which declared things improper on the Lord's Day could by no stretch of the imagination be called crimes, and the only justification the Privy Council had for deciding in the negative, was that it encroached on the criminal law which is under the jurisdiction of the federal parliament. They stretched it in a way not justifiable to men blessed with common sense. I gave another illustration; I said in that very Act there are sections prohibiting an excursion boat from carrying passengers out on a Sunday. That could not be a crime, but you could make it an offence, by statutory law. And moreover attached to the penalty in that case there was no imprisonment; therefore, it could not be considered a crime by the greatest stretch of the imagination. I said: therefore, the judgment was not a defensible judgment; that they simply grasped at a particular clause which attached imprisonment for the offence, and on that ground threw out the Act. Here are the exact words of the Lord Chancellor :—

Their Lordships are of opinion that the Act in question revised statutes of Ontario, 1897, c. 246, intituled: 'An Act to prevent the profanation of the Lord's Day," treated as a whole, was beyond the competency of the Ontario legislature to enact, and they are accordingly of opinion that the first question which was referred to the Court of Appeal for Ontario by the Lieutenant-Governor pursuant to c. 84 of the revised statutes of Ontario, 1897, ought to be answered in the negative.

And then it goes on to say that because it was an encroachment on the criminal law, which is under the control of the Dominion of Canada, the Act was ultra vires. I have quoted the various offences in the statute, to show that by no possibility could they be called crimes, and, therefore, I thought the judgment was indefensible. I have quoted a local electric railway running between Brantford and Paris, which unfortunately, at one time came to parliament for some concession, and in order to give us jurisdiction we had to insert those words: 'For the general advantage of Canada.' Now, because we did that, the Ontario statute, as far as that road is concerned—although they do not make it a crime, but only a penalty which can be collected by a civil suit before a court of competent jurisdiction—is absolutely nugatory. And that is why the clause is necessary. At the session which terminated only a couple of months ago they passed an Act in the terms I have referred to, but it cannot be enforced, because the Privy Council would say you have no control over that road. It is true it is a road between two towns within the province, but the parliament of Canada have taken control of that road, by inserting the words 'for the general advantage of Canada.' We are simply removing that barrier. Does any one say that is not proper legislation, which morally, in every sense of the term, we are bound to give to the province of Ontario? That is what the Lord's Day Alliance asked us to do, and we are doing it. The views and opinions of that section of the province of Ontario are entirely set aside unless we interfere, and the persons who are operating that road know it very well. They are running it on Sunday now, although the law is there, because they know the law cannot be enforced. If an action was taken against them, it would be carried to the Privy Council, and the provincial authorities would be told this is not the creature of the provincial legislature. The Dominion of Canada have taken control of it, and you have no right to pass an Act affecting that road. That is all that clause touches.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The discussion has gone somewhat beyond the scope of this first clause of the Bill. The remark of the hon. member from Marshfield led me to make this reflection, when he taunts the hon. member from Wellington over the claims that the Lord's Day Alliance are making in virtue of this Bill, that he is convinced that the province will not be able to enforce any penalty that may be imposed under it. I want to disabuse the hon. gentleman's mind on that score. When a province is legislating within its jurisdiction, it can impose a penalty and inflict imprisonment in default of payment. That right is uncontested as it is granted the province in express terms by clause 15 of section 92. Whenever a legislature is within its jurisdiction, acting intra vires, it can enact laws that empower municipalities to maintain order within their borders, giving them the right to pass by-laws. Not only does it make laws itself imposing a penalty, and in default of payment imprisonment, but it gives power to municipalities to make by-laws for the maintenance of peace within their borders. and to impose penalties, and in default of payment to imprison offenders.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is, the province, in exercising its own power, has the right to declare anything is a crime or an offence ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Certainly not, and that is how the judgment has come to be rendered by the Privy Council. The Privy Council has declared that the Ontario legislature invaded the federal powers by encroaching on the right to legislate in criminal matters; but the distinction is a very fine one. It has come to this point, that an interpretation of clauses 91 and 92 of the constitution of Canada shows that the provincial legislatures can make laws which will invade the federal power, and they will remain within their jurisdiction in so doing if the legislatures had in view a matter falling under the clauses of section 92 of the Act. I do not like to criticise the decision of the Law Lords of the Privy Council, when I have simply the judgment without the reasons on which it is based. The judgment itself is a very short and dry one, but the learned judges before delivering a judgment make a report to the Privy Council, giving very long explanations of the points discussed. I have not the reasons given by the judges for their decision, and I simply rose to state a fact which is well known and uncontroverted, that the legislatures have a right. when they are within their jurisdiction, to impose imprisonment in default of the payment of a fine.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But they cannot declare the offence. The nature of the offence must be fixed by this parliament.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Subsection 16 of clause 92, is a very wide one, and the legislatures have shown, by recent legislation, how wide they could make it, and succeed in getting the Privy Council to declare their legislation under that clause intra vires. The 92nd section provides that :

In each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to matters coming within the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated, that is to say:

Then subsection 16 is :

Generally all matters of a merely local or private nature in the province.

The legislature of Ontario, two or three sessions ago, prohibited a certain mode of doing a certain business which, unquestionably, under subsection two of section 91 the parliament of Canada had the right to legislate upon, but when the legislation was referred to the Court of Appeals of Ontario it was declared to be intra vires, inasmuch as the end which the legislature had in view was the maintenance of order. Besides the right to legislate upon property and civil rights is vested in the province under subsection 13, of section 92. I might live to be 100 years old and still be in the dark as to the extent the provinces may go to in the light of the numerous judgments of the Privy Council in the exercise of their jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have had some experience in the provincial legislature and we found when we declare anything an offence, we had a report from the Minister of Justice, and we had to amend our legislation. In looking over Holgins' volumes, reports on the provincial legislation, I think it is plain that that has been the practice of the Department of Justice, that if a provincial legislature declare any particular thing to be an offence. they will be tripped up for it, and required to amend the law or bring it in conformity with what is held to be a proper interpretation of it. I do not know what the interpretation of the higher courts have been. It has come back to this, if we are not by this Bill making a declaration of what is an offence or a crime—offence is the word no doubt required to be used—if we are not making that legal, we are not doing anything for the Lord's Day Alliance that is of any value.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If my hon. friend would examine chapter 246 of the Revised Statutes of the Ontario Legislature, which came before the Privy Council, he would find that under clause 8 of that Act it was declared that no tramway or electric railway company, except under certain circumstances, shall run trams or cars on the Lord's day. Then clause 10 provides that any person convicted before a justice of the peace of any act declared unlawful shall be fined a sum not exceeding $40. If the Act merely provided for imposing a penalty and levying a fine by civil by reason of clause 12 of the Act which provided for imprisonment, I do not think the Privy Council would have declared the Act ultra vires. But it was so declared no doubt, by reason of clause 10 of the Act which provides that where any person has been charged before a justice of the peace with any offence against the Act the said justice shall summon the person before him, and if he fails or neglects to appear, the justice may proceed to decide the case ex parte, or shall proceed to hear or determine the case, and may commit the person. I think that clause, by reason of this provision, especially providing for the commital of the person charged with the offence, is the ground on which the Privy Council came to the conclusion that chapter 246 of the Revised Statutes interfered with criminal matters. It made it an offence and provided for the prosecution of the offender in the way that persons charged with crime are usually prosecuted. Therefore, it was merely by reason of their infringing upon these exclusive powers of the Dominion parliament that the Act was declared ultra vires. But the Bill before us does not deal with that objection, and cannot have the affect of limiting the power of the Dominion parliament in that respect at all. It is because the Act, as I have stated, uses the words I have quoted, 'if in other respects it is within the powers of the local legislature.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the committee rise and report progress.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill and asked leave to sit again.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Wednesday, August 3, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE.

MUTUAL RESERVE LIFE ASSOCIATION.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I beg to give notice as follows :—

That he will move the following as being the proper conclusions to be drawn from the evidence reported to this House by the Select Committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York, namely :—

1. The company was licensed in Canada from 1885 to 1899 to carry on business on the assessment plan, and from 1899 to this date on the level premium plan.

2. That part of the business of the company which is under the level premium plan, is fully protected by the deposit made with the government, as required by the Insurance Act.

3. From 1885 to the 31st December, 1903, the total income of the company in Canada, from its business on the assessment plan, amounted to $5,032,518, out of which $3,060,029 were paid in death claims and $999,865 in expenses in Canada, and $218,938 deposited with the government, leaving a balance of $753,686 to cover expenses of collection of the premiums and the contribution of the Canadian business to the general and head office expenses and to the general mortality fund.

4. The company's troubles are mainly due to the fact that its rates or assessments were too low, especially until 1895. Even with the advance which was made in 1895, varying from 25 to 100 per cent, the rates remained at least 25 per cent less than the level premium system would have called for ; and, taking the whole period of nineteen years during which the company carried on business in Canada, the average rates or assessments paid by its policy-holders were only from about 50 to 66⅔ per cent of what the latter would have paid if they had been under the level premium plan.

5. The amounts paid to or advanced by the company to agents, as commission, seem to have been at times abnormally high, which was not satisfactorily explained. Nevertheless, taking as a whole the period extending from 1885 to December 31st, 1903, the gross average expenses amounted to only $5.96 per $1.000 of insurance per year, which compares favourably with other companies.

6. The total amount of death claims against the company in Canada, from 1895 to 1903, both inclusive, amounted to $2,278,207, on which the company paid $2,151,592, or 94·442 per cent.

7. The Superintendent of the Insurance Department of the state of New York caused an examination to be made of the company's affairs, both in 1897 and in 1898 ; on the occasion of the latter examination, most of the charges mentioned in the evidence reported and now on the table of this House were investigated and found groundless, as will appear from the reports of the chief examiner, of the assistant actuary and of the superintendent of said Insurance Department.

8. Another examination of the affairs of the company up to the 31st December, 1901, was made by order of said Insurance Department of the state of New York, on the occasion of the reincorporation of the company, which was found to be solvent.

9. Apart from the fact that the committee has not had the advantage of examining into the books and papers of the company, as was done on the occasion of the New York inquiries, the evidence taken before and reported by the Select Committee would not justify any conclusions contrary to those of the chief examiner, of the assistant actuary and of the superintendent of the Insurance Department of the state of New York.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is that a report of the committee ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is a notice of motion.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I do not know whether I am in order just now——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, an hon. member cannot discuss a notice of motion.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am not going to discuss a notice of motion. I am going to ask a question, probably the first time in the history of Canada on an occasion of this kind, where an hon. member wishes to put a notice of motion on the order paper. Does the hon. member present that notice as a member of the committee or a member of this House ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As a member of this House I think.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I want to know from the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The committee is dead.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I rise as a member of this House. My hon. friend knows that the committee is not sitting.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is dead.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am perfectly satisfied with the answer, because if he put it as a member of the committee he would be altogether in the wrong.

MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Inquired :—

1. Why the minutes of proceedings of the Senate of Canada, No. 57, dated 29th July, 1904, were put out of type on or before the morning of the second day of August instant ?
2. Is it the custom to destroy or put out of type such a public document between three or four days after having been printed ?
3. What steps are necessary to be taken to enable any member of the Senate to obtain one or more copies of No. 57, as above referred to ?
4. Whether the Printing Bureau is under the control and subject to the instructions and orders of the Honourable Secretary of State ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I telephoned down to Dr. Dawson for a reply to these questions, and I have just received it. The answer is as follows :—

1. Because after the requisite number of minutes is printed, everything is changed and there is no further occasion for holding the type.
2. Yes, the type of minutes and votes is distributed whenever the requisite number of copies for distribution is printed off.
3. Extra copies are always printed and members and senators can obtain one or more copies on application to the distribution office of parliament or at the Printing Bureau.
4. Yes, except to the parliamentary printing which is subject to the order of the Joint Committee on Printing of the Debates Committee.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I applied to the distribution office and could not get a copy. Then I telephoned to the Printing Bureau and they told me the type was destroyed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Unless application is made at the time for additional copies the type is not kept standing.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I thought it was stereotyped ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I do not think it is.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The type is set by machinery and every line is cast. When the printing from it is finished the type is thrown back into the pot to be remelted.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN moved :—

That the clerk of the Senate be directed to lay on the table all the accounts which have been or which may hereafter be presented to him for payment, in connection with the Select Committee appointed to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada, with a view of having the Senate approve of them and authorize the clerk to pay the same.

He said : This investigation has been carried on during a term of nine to twelve weeks. As far as I have been able to ascertain, the expenditure in connection with the investigation will compare very favourably with the expenses of other committees of parliament to investigate public affairs.

This honourable House was under the impression that the expenses of the committee would amount to a very large sum, in the neighbourhood of $15,000; and that was stated even on the floor of this House I believe; I am perfectly certain it was stated at the meeting of the committee. I am pleased, as chairman of that committee, to be able to inform this House that the cost of the work performed by the committee on behalf on this House and in the interests of the country is much less than half of that suggested amount. I do not think that when all the bills are in it will exceed $6,000 or $6,500, within the immediate neighbourhood of that amount, which is a very small sum compared with the expenses of other investigating committees. On that ground I ask that the clerk of the Senate be authorized by this honourable House to pay the expenses of that investigating committee. I understand that under rule 88 of the standing orders of the Senate, the clerk is authorized, without any further power from this honourable House, to pay travelling expenses and ordinary hotel expenses of the different witnesses who have been summoned before that committee. I am not yet in a position to say that it has been done, but I am in a position to say that the clerk of the Senate is prepared to do so, but he expressed a doubt as to whether he had the power to pay expenses of what is ordinarily known in cases of this kind as expert witnesses and counsel. Although I respect his doubt very much, I feel as an ordinary legal and business man, that when a body like the Senate authorizes one of its committees to engage counsel, to employ clerical services and to summon the witnesses necessary to elicit the truth, that there should be no question about it. The committee on this occasion represents the Senate. The Senate intrusted, delegated its powers to that committee, and the committee came to a certain decision, and that decision which was presented to the House asked for the power to employ counsel and all the assistance necessary to prosecute the investigation. At the last moment I find that the clerk of the Senate has a doubt, and as far as I can see that doubt is entertained by hon. members of this House, who contend that men who have rendered valuable services to this committee should not be paid anything but their railway fare and hotel expenses, a thing against which I would protest in the name of the Senate and the honour of the country. No hon. member will contend that a man who has rendered valuable services as an expert or counsel should be simply paid his railroad fare and hotel expenses. I hope such an idea of depriving these witnesses of their fees will not prevail in the House; in the meantime I leave the motion in the hands of the House and hon. gentlemen can deal with it as they please.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I wish to make an explanation connected with these accounts. A gentleman named Pringle, a very tall young man, came into my room yesterday and he had with him a blank form. It was not filled in, but he asked me to sign it. At first I demurred, and then as he was about going away I said 'If it is merely a formal matter to witness the presence of any one here I will sign it.' I think he mentioned Bradshaw. There was no other signature to it but my own, and I find to my surprise that it is a certificate recommending the payment of $30 to Mr. Eldridge and some other sum to some other gentleman. There was not a word in the blank about money or giving him anything, and I certainly had no conception of certifying to $30 a day for Mr. Eldridge.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Possibly the hon. gentleman's view of the certificate was equal to the value of some other certificate. The rule in the Senate is that the clerk pays the travelling expenses and the railway expenses. Beyond that the clerk has no authority to pay. While all the accounts that have been rendered may be regarded as fair and reasonable, covering a man's travelling expenses and his hotel expenses, and some reasonable amount for his loss of time may be considered proper, I think in the present case the Senate would not be justified in paying some of the accounts that I notice are in the hands of the clerk. The counsel charges the sum of $3,303.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—All the counsel?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, there was only one counsel. The other counsel is not recognized as entitled to anything. It is only the counsel that the committee selected who is entitled to any consideration, and if I am correctly advised it is only the witnesses the committee considered necessary that are entitled to any consideration, because I notice on the list there were a number of witnesses examined whose names are not given as being entitled to anything. It would appear therefore that only the counsel for the prosecution should be entitled to consideration. I think the counsel's fees are altogether too large, considering the conditions that existed.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—How many days ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Fifty-four days. What I consider would have been better for the Senate to direct would be the payment say of $500 or even $1,000, and let the account be referred to the Department of Justice. The usual way in matters of that kind, where the official is performing a duty for the government, and the compensation has not been decided upon in the Order in Council, it is always usual to refer them to the Justice Department to say what would be resonable and fair, where it is under the head of professional services. Then there is $1,290 for the witness Thos. Paterson. I do not think the Senate would be at all justified in paying any such sum. I would suggest that that account also should stand for further consideration, but in the meantime Mr. Paterson ought to be paid some reasonable sum. I think that is only right and proper. He returned his travelling expenses as $30, and his hotel expenses at $42, $210, making $240. If added to that there would be five dollars a day for the time he was here, making $210 which added to the $240 would give $452, then I should have no objection.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—For whom is it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Paterson. He is recommended to be paid $1,290. I think, pending a further inquiry, it would be an extremely liberal allowance to pay him $450, and I should advise, with the consent of the House, to approve of a proposition to pay him that amount. There is no object in keeping the witness here. He should not be detained while the matter is under consideration. I think the certificates of the chairman, and any additional evidence that they can show as to the value of Mr. Paterson's services, should be sent in and should be referred to the department to tax at such amount as they consider proper. Mr. Wells sends in a claim of $250 for fifty days and $30 travelling expenses. I presume there would be no objection to that. I do not know how Mr. Pendleton's account is made up, but it is placed at $90. Then the expenses of Mr. Bradshaw, a Canadian witness, is fixed at $43.75, copies of papers obtained from New York $8, right. Clerical services $187.52, right, and the stenographer's account would of course go in the ordinary way, and be confirmed by the Auditor General. I do not know what the feeling of the House may be. I have not seen the account, but I understand the accounts of Mr. Eldridge and other gentlemen who were called, and Mr. Aylesworth's have not been forwarded by the committee.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—There are only two accounts in my hands, and they are final accounts from Mr. Eldridge and Mr. Bradshaw. The latter has been withdrawn, owing to the explanation of Dr. Sullivan. Mr. Eldridge claims $30 a day, altogether $655.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Mr. Eldridge's and Mr. Paterson's accounts had better be balanced.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I would suggest that this matter be adjourned until tomorrow. How can senators know anything of the value of the services rendered until they see the accounts ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. Secretary of State has dealt with the matter as if it had come before the committee, but nothing of the kind ever came before the committee.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The committee is dead.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am very glad the hon. member from de Salaberry has raised the point. If he had been a member of the original committee he would have known all about it, but unfortunately he came in at the 11th hour and gave us a lot of trouble. A resolution was passed by the original committee of five, endorsed by this House, that the chairman be authorized to summon witnesses and employ counsel, &c., and pay them as should be decided upon, and I was in communication with the law department for two months before I could settle the matter. The counsel of the committee agreed to take $50 a day. I know if the gentleman from de Salaberry had acted as counsel for the committee, he would not have accepted less than $200 a day. Mr. Coster has consented, at my request, to take $50.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This cannot be argued now. I suggest the accounts be placed in the minutes for circulation.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I accept the suggestion of the hon. Secretary of State, and I am prepared to withdraw my motion.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I am not insured in this company, nor have I any interest in it whatever. But I am realizing what I expected long ago would happen. This investigation was inaugurated by the hon. member from Rothesay, who preferred charges against the company. A committee was appointed to investigate the charges, and I expected that committee would report to the House, and if we found the policyholders had grievances, that some measure of redress would be introduced. Not long afterwards great fault was found with the committee, and additional members were appointed to it. While they were investigating, a Bill was introduced by the hon. gentleman from Toronto to deal with the matter. I claim that the moment that was done the committee should have been dissolved there and then, and the Bill proceeded with; but the hon. leader of the House failed to appreciate the position. He allowed the Bill to go to the House and it was passed. That was a direct insult to the committee, and virtually rendered their work entirely useless and made the committee a laughing stock to the whole country. The investigation continued from day to day with the full knowledge of the hon. Secretary of State, and now we have these accounts presented. I have known counsel employed before committees of this House to receive $100 a day. I do not know much about lawyers fees, but I say those who have been employed should be paid and so should the witnesses who have been kept here. The fault is with the government in not taking a proper stand in time, when the Insurance Bill was introduced.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The House would not take my advice.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I understand that the Bill has been manipulated in the House of Commons so that it will be of no value, and the whole thing will be a farce.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I hope the House will accept the recommendation of the hon. gentleman from de Lorimier and let the motion stand until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The motion in itself is altogether unnecessary, because the clerk would lay these accounts on the table of the House. They are on the table now without a motion. If the motion is considered necessary, let us pass it now when the papers are here and we can deal with the accounts at any time. I do not think it is necessary to let it stand for further consideration.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—If the hon. gentleman from Marshfield will look at the motion he will see it ends with the following words: 'With a view of having the Senate approve of them and authorizing the clerk to pay the same.' I do not think the Senate is disposed to authorize the clerk to pay those bills, from the criticisms I have heard from the House. The members of the committee who were in constant attendance at its meetings, except the first few days, when the first committee was sitting, are as much in ignorance as to the expense incurred by the committee as members of the House who were not on the committee at all. That is not for want of inquiry, because on different occasions I tried to ascertain what expense had been incurred, and at no stage could I get information. The answer invariably was that the expenses in connection with this investigation were governed by rules of parliament, and that fees would be paid by rules of parliament. Evidently there is no rule governing those payments. More than that, the committee as a committee, have never had those figures before them, and never authorized or recommended payments of these amounts. There is one bill that an hon. gentleman has just mentioned, Mr. Eldridge's. I know that some members of the committee wished to discharge a witness named Paterson. The chairman claimed they should not discharge him, that some charge had been made against him which had not been proved.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order : the hon. gentleman has no right to refer to proceedings which took place in the committee.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think I am in order in making this explanation.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The committee is dead and there is no matter being discussed in the committee to-day, and we can discuss it here. I took the stand at that time that Mr. Paterson ought to be discharged. I had no objection to paying him for the time he was here as a witness or to paying Mr. Wells while he was here as a witness, or to paying counsel while giving us advice as a committee. The investigation has taken a long time ; it should have taken much less. If the counsel that was before that committee had been of the calibre he should have been, he would have been able to direct the committee and the witnesses in such a way that we would not have had to sit as many days as we did. I have listened to other investigations in the Senate, particularly the Cook investigation, where able counsel were employed where almost as much, if not quite as much evidence was elicited as in the present investigation. I think Mr. Ritchie of Toronto received $1,000 as counsel.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Just for one fact, and we had to inquire into twenty years of facts.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—As I have already stated, I tried to have some of those witnesses discharged. Mr. Paterson was here as an expert. I asked in open committee was Mr. Eldridge here as an expert, and I was told that he was. I inquired if he would be paid the same as Mr. Paterson, and they said certainly. I gave notice that I would oppose the payment of Mr. Paterson and Mr. Eldridge as experts. I could get no information as to the expenses that were being incurred, and I think the House should have an opportunity to examine the accounts. I agree with the hon. Secretary of State and the hon. member from Wellington that this matter ought to stand until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I think this discussion is out of order. It should have taken place in the committee, and then they would have come here prepared with some figures. It would be better, therefore, to let the matter stand until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When I spoke before, I did not notice the closing words of the motion. I thought it was simply that the papers should be laid on the table of the House, but I see it goes further. That is a matter for the Senate to settle, and I think it is better to defer it until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I object to the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie referring to Mr. Coster as he has done, and saying that if he had been an able counsel the investigation would have proceeded more rapidly. I undertake to tell my hon. friend that Mr. Coster bears a first class reputation in New Brunswick both as a lawyer and as a citizen. As regards his not having done the work quicker, it was impossible. They took it out of his hands all the time and interrupted him, and it is a feather in his hat to know that he was opposed by so many legal men that we know of, and so many that we do not know of.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I beg to emphasize, as chairman of that committee, the remarks made by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay.

The SPEAKER—The question has been raised that the hon. gentleman has spoken already.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Is it the Speaker's right to interrupt me ? The chair has no right to interrupt me, unless his attention is called to the fact that I have already spoken. When the charge is made against the counsel of the committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. Speaker was quite right. I called attention to the fact that the hon. member had spoken four times, and the Speaker rose and directed the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact.

The SPEAKER—I simply did so as a result of the act of the hon. leader of the opposition.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I move that the debate be adjourned until to-morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the suggestion made by the Secretary of State with reference to the lawyer's account is a very good one. If the Minister of Justice does not think it too large, the Senate will pay it, no matter what it is. In the Cook investigation, it is true, only one fact was investigated, but that would make no difference. It is a question of the time occupied by the lawyer as to the fee he should receive. Mr. Ritchie left it entirely in the hands of the committee, and when the committee suggested $1,000 it was acquiesced in readily, for the reason that Mr. Samuel Blake, who conducted the case on the part of the member accused received $1,500 for the same time, and this gentleman has been occupied two or three times as long as Mr. Blake or Mr. Ritchie in the Cook case. I know the way first class lawyers charge in Ontario it would be very difficult to get a man like Mr. Robinson to come here for less than $100 a day.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Exactly.

The motion was agreed to.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY ARBITRATION BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (152) An Act respecting an arbitration between His Majesty and the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read the second time to-morrow.

He said: This Bill provides for an arbitration arising out of differences between the government and the Grand Trunk Railway respecting the carrying out of contracts made.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is it the contract they entered into at the time of the purchase of the Rivière du Loup section of the Intercolonial Railway?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has a difficulty arisen out of the arrangement made at that time when the government purchased the road?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I read something about it in the newspapers and was at a loss to know what it could possibly be.

The motion was agreed to.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I beg to give notice of the following motion:

That in view of the notice of motion put on the notice paper to-day by the honourable gentleman from de Salaberry—I will move that the Clerk of this House be instructed to preserve copies of the several reports presented to the House relating to the investigation of the Mutual Reserve Fund Association, that the same may be read at the table of the House in consulting the resolution above referred to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I beg to rise to a question of order: we must have some respect for the dignity of the House. This is not an ordinary notice of motion. The hon. gentleman is reading a public document or some reference of the committee. I appeal to him not to degrade the House in the way it has been degraded by this committee.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I rise to a question of order. The hon. gentleman has no right to use the word 'degrade'. Nineteen members of this House as members of that committee are not degraded. I might use some severe strictures if I wished to. I am not bound to put it in my own handwriting. I am quite at liberty to place on the order paper what I desire to bring to the attention of the House as a notice of motion, if I can find it printed anywhere.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is that a notice of motion?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—It is.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I ask the hon. Speaker whether that comes fairly under our rules of notices of motion? Notices of motion are usually succinct documents, indicating the motion which the hon. gentleman proposes to move the following day, not a recital of incidents which occurred before the committee. The hon. gentleman has no right to read a number of papers.

The SPEAKER—There is one objection to the notice. I think I understood the hon. gentleman to read a preamble to his motion. I understood him to read, that in view of some notice which had been given by some hon. gentleman, he will move so and so?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That was one notice.

The SPEAKER—Preambles are forbidden. It is simply a question for the House. The hon. gentleman is within his technical right in doing what he has done. It is a question whether the House considers that the hon. gentleman is abusing his privilege as a member or not; it is not a question of order for the chair.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I understood the hon. gentleman to be reading a public document and stating some conclusions in his opinion. I think I heard my hon. friend using that word. That is not a resolution for the House, but a declaration of his own opinion. I do not think that is a form in which the notice can be put.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE— I shall alter the notice of motion, and make it read 'In the opinion of this honourable House'. It was only more humble before.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman is giving a notice of motion. It was decided last year or the year before that notices of motion should be read in order that members should be informed in advance of what was to come up next day. I understand the hon. gentleman is reading from a document which has been distributed, and which we all know about. I move that it be considered as read, so that we can proceed with other business.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—There may be some hon. members who have not heard this and my hon. friend has put me out a little by his interruptions. My motion will read in this way :—

That in the opinion of this House the following irregularities have been found in the management of the affairs in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York, at the pages indicated and referred to in the evidence taken before the Select Committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the New York Mutual Life Fund Association.

3. Fictitious payments of renewal and commuted commissions in sworn reports to Insurance Departments.

J. T. Paterson No. 5, pp. 62, 63, 64, 65. Exhibit No. 42, No. 5, p. 59.

The only conclusion which can be drawn from Exhibit No. 42 (No. 5, p. 59), which is nowhere explained or contradicted in the evidence, is that from 1897 to 1903, both inclusive, renewal commissions alleged to have been paid, amounting to over $200,000, were fictitious.

The company also claim to have paid during the same years $311,166.67 in commuted commissions. Payment of commuted commissions should reduce the renewal commissions ; here, notwithstanding the large payment of commuted commissions the renewal commissions were increased, with a much smaller amount of insurance in force.

4. Allowing one Moton D. Moss and other agents to misappropriate the funds of the company.

J. M. Stevenson, No. 2, pp. 13, 14.

J. D. Wells, No. 4, pp. 72, 73, 74. (Contracts pp. 75, 78). (No. 4, p. 80, Moss poor). (No. 5, pp. 80, 81, no vouchers). ($250,000 due by Moss, No. 4, p. 81, N.Y. Superintendent of Insurance report, 1899, p. 20, 'nominal value only'). (N. Y. report, pp. 18, 18, 20, is found in No. 8, pp. 25-27). (Moss rich, No. 4, p. 84). (Vrooman letter, No. 2, pp. 51, &c.) (Hoffecker letters, No. 4. pp. 87, 88, 89). ($82,000 more to Moss, No. 4 p. 101). ($4,600 to Joseph, No. 4, p. 101). $6,00. to Moss, No. 4, pp. 104, 105).

Brockway, hotel-keeper, on pay-roll for $300 per week for $6,000 loaned Burnham by him No. 4, pp. 99, 100.

No. 8, p. 26, (p. 20, Payn's Report, 1899). Chief examiner says : 'from 1881 to time when Moss contract was executed, in 16 years, total agents' balances created amounted to $529,459.93.'

In 18 months during Moss contract, from January, 1897 to July, 1898, agents' balances of nominal value only were created amounting to $244,954.07.

Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 3, pp. 30, 31, Merriam $211,000. ($482,421.50 agents' balances of no value, No. 3, pp. 31, 32, 33). (No. 4, pp. 41, 43, $50,000 profit on Moss). (No. 5, p. 134, assets decreased up to December 31st, 1901, $999,-422.70). No. 5, pp. 132-134, total written off in six years, $1,048,367.37. Brockway on pay-roll, No. 8, pp. 44, 45.

5. When serious charges were made against officers of company—making large payments out of company's funds rather than go into the charges.

(On General Tracy charges, $15,000 paid, No. 4, pp. 109, 110).

J. D. Wells arrested for libel by company, No. 4, pp. 115, 116, (all cost paid by company and suit discontinued).

J. T. Paterson, No. 5, p. 21. (Paterson arrested for libel by company and was paid $5,000, No. 5, p. 32). (Alleged libel, No. 5, p. 29, &c.) Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 3, p. 5.

6. Extravagance and overstating commissions paid agents.

'Inter alia' Geo. D. Eldridge, vice-president, reported that $500,000 per annum could be saved, but such savings were not made, No. 4, p. 97.

J. T. Paterson, No. 5, p. 51, increase in expenses with less business. (No. 5, pp. 52 to 58. Cost of new business in Mutual Reserve and comparative statements).

No. 5, p. 59. Exhibit 42. In 1899 and 1898, during Moss regime, $259,231 more paid in commissions, &c., than in the two previous years, while business written was $44,502,945 less, and insurance in force decreased $55,000,000. (Alleged payment of renewal commissions an impossibility, No. 5, pp. 62, 63, 64).

Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 3, p. 5. ($50,400 rent, No. 3, p. 9). No 3, p 25. (No. 3, p. 74, ex. by Hon. Mr. McMullen). Also No. 3, p. 80. ($60,-000 salary to Burnham not excessive. No. 4, p. 50).

7. Contradictory statements.

J. M. Stevenson, No. 20, p. 6 ; E. Pendleton, No. 5, p. 110 ; both contradict Geo. D. Eldridge, who says he did not ask Stevenson to remain with company, nor agree to continue his salary while away. No. 3, p. 61.

(Statement to Senate, p. 12. 'Absolutely untrue as charged that the late president willed any proxies to Burnham'). (No. 2, p. 49, 'Harper will' assigns all proxies to Burnham).

J. T. Paterson.—Differences in sworn reports filed in Canada and New York with Insurance Departments. (No. 5, pp. 39-42). By statute they should be alike, No. 5, p. 38. Scaled down claims all left out of Canadian report, 1901.

8. Overstatement of assets, &c., in sworn reports to Insurance Department and in circulars.

J. T. Paterson, No. 5, pp. 23-24, Exhibit 34. Invested assets overstated by $13,150,124.23; insurance in force overstated by $35,732,626; new business overstated by $11,570,171, in circulars, as compared with reports to Insurance Department. Deferred premiums, No. 5, p. 80; Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 3, p. 57, $506,000 excess of liabilities. Mutual Reserve Building $483,000 of this, No. 3, p. 20. Deferred premiums and liens called assets as well, and are also very doubtful.

9. Overstating insurance in force in sworn reports to Insurance Departments—improperly ignoring liens on policies.

J. M. Stevenson, No. 2, p. 5. No. 2, pp. 7, 8, 9, 10.

J. D. Wells, No. 4, p. 71.

J. T. Paterson, No. 5, pp. 23, 24, 25.

Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 2, p 60. No. 3, pp. 13, 14. (Case referred to by Geo. D. Eldridge affords no support whatever to his contention). (No. 3, p. 15. No. 3, p. 72, Dennis vs. Mass. Benefit, 120 N.Y. vide No. 4, p. 69, &c.) No. 4, pp. 11, 12, 13, 15. (No. 4, p. 19, telegram sent by Eldridge months before he knew of the transaction to which it relates).

10. Mortuary funds improperly used for expenses.

'The Insurance Act,' sec. 39, ss. 5, is as follows:—

5. No portion of any moneys received from assessments for death claims shall be used for any expense whatever.

J. M. Stevenson, No. 2, pp. 4, 5, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 33, 34.

J. D. Wells, No. 4, p. 104.

J. T. Paterson, No. 5, p. 52, exhibit No. 39, $4,658,555.62 of mortuary funds used for expenses.

Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 4, pp. 10, 11.

11. Liens placed on policies and called assets in sworn reports to Insurance Departments, when they were not assets.

J. T. Paterson, No. 5, pp. 44, 45. (If liens paid in cash, company insolvent). Liens only bookkeeping, No. 5, p. 49. Notes referred to not negotiable and not a liability of insured, No. 5, p. 48.

Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 2, pp. 60, 61, 62. ($2,500,000 without consent of assured, No. 2, p. 63). No. 5, pp. 126, 127.

12. Unfair treatment of fifteen-year class.

J. T. Paterson, No. 5, pp. 16, 17, separate classes made with increased cost to fifteen-year members. (No new business added to fifteen-year class after 1890, No. 5, p. 19). (And by selection against the company, No. 5, p. 69, cost of insurance to this class abnormally increased).

Edmund Pendleton, No. 5, pp. 107, 108, 109.

Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 5, p. 124. Not in separate class. By the table of rates of the Mutual Reserve now in force adopted 1889, the members of the fifteen-year class are now paying on an average 30 per cent more (Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 8, p. 39) than the rates provided for in Bill (H), sec. 3, ss. (c), which the company admit is sufficient to carry all classes.

(c.) The holder of any such assessment policy shall have the right to continue his said policy for the full amount thereof as a yearly renewable term policy upon which the premiums shall not exceed the net yearly natural premiums for the attained age of the insured calculated upon the basis of the mortality table and rate of interest aforesaid with a loading of 5 per cent for expenses.

13. Change in Moss contract by Burnham. Neither explained nor contradicted in evidence.

J. D. Wells, No. 4, pp. 81, 82, 83.

The contract in 1897, referred to, must, under the constitution and by-laws of the association, be executed by the executive committee, and could not be made by the president alone. Any secret material change or modification of that contract after its execution by the proper officers of the association, as made by the substitution of the middle sheet of that contract, would amount to the crime of forgery committed by all parties participating in the fraudulent substitution of such sheet.

14. Payments to President Burnham of commissions under Harper contract and contingent fund.

J. M. Stevenson, No. 2, p. 15.

Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 2, p. 45, &c. (No. 4, p. 50, $60,000 salary to Burnham). (No. 4, p. 52, $200 per week paid extra).

15. Refusal to state salaries and other remuneration of officers and office employees in detail and misstating same.

Gross salaries in sworn reports every year. (Refusal to show chairman of the executive committee pay-rolls. No. 4, p. 5. No. 4, p. 144. Although it was the executive committee's duty to fix salaries). (No. 5, p. 50, actuarial expenses increased from $14,227, in 1896, to $31,449, in 1903, and not included in salaries to officers or employees).

Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 2, p. 67; No. 3, p. 3; Geo. D. Eldridge examined by Hon. Mr. Landry, No 5, p. 60. (G. D. E., No. 4, p. 50, $60,000 per annum paid to Burnham not excessive). (No. 5, p. 129, actuarial expenses, No. 5, p. 130).

16. Transfers from class to class put in sworn report as new business, and full commissions paid twice.

J. M. Stevenson, No. 2, p. 5.

Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 4, p. 9.

17. Made a contract for purchase of Provincial Provident Institution, and after transfer made escaped payment of upwards of $100,000 by claiming that contract was illegal.

$12,000 paid on account. Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 8, p. 46; No. 3, pp. 50, 51, 52; No. 3, pp. 29, 30; No. 3, pp. 23, 24.

18. Rates amply sufficient with proper management.

J. T. Paterson, No. 5, p. 12. (Bankers' Life with less cost to insured had admitted assets in 1902 of $4,798,333.14. They were organized 1879, twenty-five years ago). (No. 5, p. 66, Mutual Reserve in 1901, only $2,611,790.19 admitted assets, with much higher cost). (No. liens in Bankers' Life, No. 5, p. 13). (Low expenses in Bankers' Life No. 5, pp. 12, 71. (Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 2, p. 58; No. 5, p. 141). Attempt to explain low expenses Bankers' Life).

Thos. Bradshaw, No. 8, p. 47, &c., Actuary Imperial Life; John Culbert, No. 8, p. 58, Manager Mutual Life of New York at Ottawa, both prove that the best old line companies furnish insurance at less cost than the Mutual Reserve charged in 1889.

19. Claims compromised or scaled down.
(J. T. Paterson, No. 5, pp. 72, 73, 1901. 324 policies about 50 per cent paid). Not included in Canadian report as by law required, No. 5, p. 73. (No. 5, p. 76. Reasons).
Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 4, p. 40 ; No. 5, pp. 136, 139. Canadian claims scaled down ; no names or numbers of policies given as promised, therefore exhibit is of no value.
20. Evidence uncontradicted of payments made to obtain the modification of a report of the insurance Department of the State of New York.
($40,000, borrowed, No. 4, p. 107). (Brockway on pay-roll for $300 per week, No. 4, pp. 99, 100).
J. D. Wells lent $5,570, No. 4, p. 107.
21. Resignations of officers, &c., and reasons for same.
J. T. Paterson, 1896, No. 5, p. 21. (Resignation).

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I observe that my hon. friend has corrected his notice ; that he has dropped the preamble which he read, and he has substituted another introduction ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I am only giving notice.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This House has a right to know whether the hon. gentleman is giving notice with the preamble he read first, or whether he has substituted another introduction ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—This is substantially the same.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend has read it in a different form from the way in which he put it at first. In which form is he submitting it ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—In the last one.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I would suggest to my hon. friend——

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman has no right to discuss my motion.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have a right to suggest the form in which this notice should be put. I followed my hon. friend carefully, and I find that substantially and I think literally that the notice of motion which he has made is the same as the document which is to be found on the votes and proceedings of this House.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I rise to a point of order. This matter that my hon. friend is bringing before the House should be brought up to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It could not be brought to-morrow. We are dealing with a a matter of giving notice, and it could not be brought up to-morrow because then the notice would have been given, but I observe this motion is word for word the same as the document which is already in the minutes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, no.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Commencing at page 622 I have followed the hon. gentleman, and I find that such is the case, and my suggestion is that the hon. gentleman, after making the introduction which he did, should move that this document which stands on the Journals of the House, pages 622 and 625 should be the motion he would move in amendment to the motion made by my hon. friend. This is the document, and it will save a great deal of time and expense in printing, and the hon. gentleman will have attained precisely the same object.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not think the hon. gentleman could move an amendment, because he cannot move an amendment before the question is put and the motion will be put to-morrow by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, so that he cannot move his notice of motion as an amendment.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Whether it will be moved as an amendment or not does not matter.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman moves to-morrow that in the opinion of this House such and such a thing is the case.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is carrying out his object precisely, and saving a lot of trouble.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That is right.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—While this matter is under discussion, I do not know whether the notice of motion is to be recast in the form the hon. gentleman gives it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He gives it as he likes, and it will go in that form.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I move that the portion of the notice of motion just read by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay, which has already been printed on the pages 622 and following pages of the minutes and proceedings of this House be not again printed.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman has no right to move such a motion. He has no right to prevent the motion, if it is in order, being printed in the Orders of the Day.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I make this motion, as I think I have a right to do. I venture to say that if there were no other or higher right to move it, it would be found in the fact that in giving the notice of motion which has just been given it does seem to be a matter of great disrespect to the Senate, to the action of the Senate and to the position in which this Senate stands with reference to this matter. If the hon. gentleman would not think I was speaking offensively when I make the observation I should say that it is not only a great disrespect to the Senate but a great breach of the privileges of a member to give such a notice, and place on the records and proceedings twice over, the same charges, something which has not been determined upon by the Senate at all. It seems to me therefore the motion is not in order, and I would beg to move——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has no right to move a motion striking out certain words in a motion not before this House.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—There is nothing before the House.

The SPEAKER. The House, I think, has a right to control the notices which are put upon the paper, having regard to the dignity of the House. The Senate must have some means of protecting its dignity, and I think the resolution is in order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The Senate may have some means, but the means taken by the hon. gentleman are out of order and are not common sense.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I move that the portion of the notice of motion read by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay, which has been already printed on pages 622 and following pages of the Minutes of Proceedings of this House, be not entered again. It is already on the minutes.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—There is nothing before the House, and how can that motion be passed ?

The SPEAKER. I have already decided the question.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman has not already decided the question.

The SPEAKER—Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to take his seat. I think I have a right to appeal to the House from the use of such language. I stated that I had already decided, and the hon. gentleman contradicted me flatly and said I had not decided.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Certainly. Because the hon. Speaker did not know what it was.

The SPEAKER—If the hon. gentleman had said that I was mistaken, I should not have said anything.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—This notice of motion is not before the House, and we are dealing with a matter which is not before the House.

The SPEAKER—The motion is before the House.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think it was last year, or perhaps two years ago, we had this matter of notices fully discussed in the House with regard to hon. gentlemen handing in their notices in writing, and it was held that an opportunity should be given when notices were presented to see whether they were in proper form. It was clearly understood that the House should have that right. I think there is no serious objection taken to the course the hon. gentleman is pursuing only he is proposing to reprint a long document at the expense of the country. He can attain his object by referring to that document in his notice of motion. The House has a right at this stage to deal with that—to see that this notice is a proper one.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—My point of order is this : there is no motion before the chair except the motion now in the hands of the Speaker, made by the hon. gentleman from Toronto. Of that motion, which is provoking a debate, he never gave notice. He should have given two days notice of it.

The SPEAKER—I have ruled that the motion is in order, and I stand by my ruling.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before that motion is put, I quite concur in the remarks made a few minutes ago by the hon. Secretary of State as to the manner in which we have been conducting this investigation, and I quite agree with the suggestion made by my hon. friend from Marshfield as to the impropriety of reprinting a long report which appears already in the journals, but if we pass this motion I am afraid we are setting a precedent which may be used to the disadvantage of many senators in the future. I admit this is a peculiar case, and there is very much force in the remarks made by the Speaker in reference to the right of the House to control notices placed on our order paper; but who is to be the judge in the future when an hon. member rises to give a notice of motion, whether it is a suitable one or not? If I understand the present case it is simply this: a report was made by the committee appointed to investigate the charges made against the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York. The Speaker decided, and his decision was confirmed by the House, that that report could not form a part of the proceedings, nor be placed on the Journals for the reason that the committee had become defunct when the report was made, so in fact it cannot appear on the Journals. The hon. member from de Salaberry has placed a notice on the paper asking the Senate to confirm a resolution which he has prepared, not as a member of the committee, but as a senator of the House, based on the reports of proceedings which have been laid before the Senate. The hon. gentleman from Rothesay rises and says, as I understand, I will move the following resolution. That is either an amendment or a substantive motion. My impression is, the notice in the clerk's hands is a substantive motion, that he will move when the matter is brought before the Senate again on the motion of the hon. member for de Salaberry, a resolution in line with the statement read to the House by the chairman of the committee. Now, it is a question whether he has not a right to do that. I am not approving of it at all; I think it is an unnecessary course to pursue, but as a matter of procedure and a matter of right, has he not the same right to ask the opinion of the Senate on that document which appears in the Minutes of Proceedings but is not to appear on the Journals, as the hon. member from de Salaberry has to ask the opinion of the House on certain resolutions which he proposes to move in connection with the same matter?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Unquestionably he has that right.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have become thoroughly disgusted with this whole subject, but as a matter of procedure and right, I think the hon. gentleman has the right, whether it is politic or proper to exercise it. It would be taking an extraordinary step if we interfered with any motion that comes before the House, which is couched in language that cannot be considered disrepectful. If it were improperly worded, any one could rise and object to it on that ground. The Speaker would be justified in ruling it out if it were disrespectful; but this is not disrespectful, and however unfortunate it is that we have got into this position, we should be very careful how we pass a resolution like the one now before us. I will not discuss the question of order. If I were to discuss that I should merely read rule 13, but it is out of the question now. I think the Secretary of State will see the force of the position we take, that we should be very careful how we set a precedent that may be detrimental to the freedom of the Senate in the future.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman loses sight of the point. What I think is contrary to the rights and privileges of the House is that a long document already in the proceedings of this year, should be brought up to be reprinted in the minutes. I am not taking any other exception.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That must be a matter of choice with the senator.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A long proposition was made last week. It appears on the minutes, and it is proposed to repeat it now. Will any one say that that document should be printed a second time? If it embraced three or four lines no one would object, but where it covers several pages it involves an expense which should not be incurred.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I entirely agree with the hon. leader of the opposition, when he says that the hon. member from Rothesay is perfectly in order to move any amendment to the motion of which I have given notice to-day—that what he has read be adopted by the Senate as the conclusions resulting from the inquiry. No one intends to question his right in that respect. The motion which is now before the House is not intended to question that right, or I would not have seconded it. The motion is merely designed to dispense with the necessity of reprinting a document which was printed a few days ago and which appears in the minutes covering five or six pages. It might cover fifteen or twenty pages, and if the hon. member is absolutely in his right he could insist on printing it again. The Senate would be helpless. I claim that this matter should be left entirely to the judgment of the House to decide whether the reprinting of the document is necessary or not. That is the whole purpose of the motion. As far as the question of order is concerned, I simply call attention to this—

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is settled.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Supposing this motion of the hon. member from Toronto is carried to-day, what will the hon. gentleman from Rothesay do to-morrow? When he rises to make a motion he will read the whole thing again.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Pardon me—

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Could any one prevent him to-morrow, when he makes his motion, from reading the whole thing over again? You will have the pleasure of hearing the whole thing over again.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is not a question whether the hon. gentleman shall read the document again a dozen times if he wishes, but whether there shall be a waste of the public money and a needless addition to the public records. As a body of sensible men, we are not called on to order that the document be reprinted when it is not necessary. I quite agree with the remark that any member has a right to put a respectful and proper motion on the minutes. There is no suggestion that such a motion would be objectionable, but when it is proposed to reprint a document already on the minutes, the House should have a choice in the matter. If the hon. member is allowed to pursue that course to the extent he proposes he may do the same thing again to a much greater extent, and the House should step in and prevent the waste of public money. The House should decide whether the document should be reprinted, or whether the hon. gentleman shall merely give notice that to-morrow he will move the adoption of the document published at page so-and-so of the minutes. There is no intention to interfere with the object the hon. gentleman has in view, but the House has a right to prevent unnecessary expense.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The House has no right to infringe a rule to save a few dollars. There is a grave question pending now, the question of the liberty and rights of a senator. The House has no right to limit the privileges of a senator. Bourinot says:

> Each House is bound by every consideration of self-interest and justice to observe strictly its rules and standing orders and to rebuke every attempt to evade or infringe them. The political party which controls the House at one time may be in a different position at another, and is equally interested with the minority in preserving the rules of the House in all their integrity. 'So far the maxim is certainly true, and found on good sense,' says Hatsell, 'that as it is always in the power of the majority by their numbers to stop any improper measures proposed on the part of their opponents, the only weapons by which the minority can defend themselves from similar attempts from those in power, are the forms and rules and proceedings which have been found necessary from time to time, and are become the standing orders of the House, by a strict adherence to which the weaker party can alone be protected from those irregularities and abuse which these forms were intended to check, which the wantonness of power is but too often apt to suggest to large and successful majorities.'

The rules of this House are the protection of the minority, and we are asked to-day to infringe rule 13, which says that no member can move a motion if he has not given a clear day's notice. By infringing that rule, we are trying to choke off the hon. gentleman from Rothesay.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I do not often rise on questions of order, but this time I think it is proper to say a few words. I cannot understand that this House has no right to control everything which may affect its dignity. When a notice of motion is given and accepted without objection, what does it mean ? As a question of common sense, is it not equivalent to deciding that the notice of motion will be printed in the Minutes of the Senate ? It is exactly the same as if an hon. member should move that the notice of motion which is mentioned shall be printed in the Minutes of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is not equivalent.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—If the Senate has not the right to control the printing of what may be published in the minutes, what would be the consequence ? It would be very disastrous. Suppose I should rise tomorrow and give notice of a motion that everything which has been printed concerning the New York Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association shall be reprinted, I might include in my motion everything that has been published on the subject in the Minutes of the Senate during the last month. Suppose I were to go further and include in my motion all kinds of insults against the members of the Senate—suppose the hon. leader of the opposition were to give notice and include in it every wrong which the government may have committed during the session,—I may make all kinds of suppositions of the same kind—can it be reasonably said, that when a member of this House rises and gives notice of a motion which is equivalent to asking that it be published in the Minutes of the House, that the House has not the right to control the printing of such a notice of motion ? Surely the Senate has a right to protect its honour and dignity in some way.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—How can the House discuss what the House is not possessed of ? The House has not possession of that motion—we do not know what it is. The hon. member from de Salaberry gave notice of a long motion to-day. We do not know what that motion is, and are not in a position to discuss it until it appears in the Minutes. That motion given to-day is not on the Minutes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, it is printed in the Minutes.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The notice given by the hon. member from de Salaberry may be an improper one, or the motion of the hon. member from Rothesay may be objectionable, but how are we to decide that until we know what they are, and how are we to know until they are printed ? I do not agree with the ruling of the Speaker. He has two or three times eliminated motions which were improper, but there is nothing before the House in this case.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I quite agree with the hon. gentleman who has just spoken and the leader of the opposition. The Speaker is quite right in saying that the House can control its own motions, but it is a power which ought to be exercised on only very rare occasions.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And not at all, if it is contrary to the rule.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I am not going into that point. What is to be gained by this ? We take a ground which affects the right of every hon. gentleman in the House on the objection of some other member, and we will constantly have discussions coming up as to whether a motion should appear on the Minutes or not. I was present on a former occasion when a discussion took place on a question of this kind, that when a motion was not couched in terms which were fair to members of the Senate the House would have control over it, and that the power should only be exercised in such cases. Now, what is the fact ? There are three and one-half pages of print included in this motion, and it will cost very little to reprint them. It seems a poor excuse to give for objection to the motion. The document does not stand on the Minutes as a motion of the hon. member ; it was matter submitted to the House in another way, and the hon. gentleman has a perfect right to put it forward in the way he proposes to put it. He has a perfect right to reprint the propositions which were submitted in another form, but which he proposes now to submit as his own. Should we take a position tyrannical in itself, and which may be used against any one of us on some future occasion ? I trust the hon. gentleman from Toronto will not consider it worth while to gain a trivial victory at the expense of the liberties of the House.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—These are exactly the views I have been trying to put forth from the time the hon. gentleman from Toronto moved his motion. That motion may be perfectly in order, but it is a direct attack on the liberty of every senator. If there is one channel through which a member can get his views before the Senate, it is by interpellation or notice of motion. The hon. gentleman from Toronto, by his motion, subverts that right of the individual senator. I, as an opponent of the government, wish to get information——

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—You are not that.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am trying to put the case as the hon. member from St. John has done. A member of the opposition might wish to give notice of motion, and a member of the government might try to suppress or change it. If this precedent is established, it is introducing into our parliamentary procedure a pernicious principle, and subverting the rights and liberties of senators. I have heard senators arguing that if any member of the House should do this or that, what might happen. We are not going to assume that a senator will put ridiculous questions and ridiculous notices of motion on the Orders of the Day.

We have no right to assume that. By assuming that we lower our own dignity and our own intelligence, so that the argument that this House should control the action of individual senators is not a proper one. Every hon. senator here is bound by his own honour, which is proportionate to that of this honourable House, and we must accept the statement that a senator may do this and that, and it will be the duty of the whole House to control the action of the Senate. When that will be done it will be time for a senator to withdraw from this honourable House, and I do not care to have such a principle admitted here in public debate. I quite agree with the hon. leader of the opposition in standing up for what might be called the popular rights of the representatives of the people. The hon. leader of the opposition has taken the view that I hold in regard to the matter, and I am proud to see that he stands up for the rights of the representatives of the people. I would make a joint appeal with my hon. friend from St. John to the hon. senator from Toronto to withdraw his motion as an indirect attack, and as a pernicious attack, on the rights and privileges of hon. members of this House. Altogether outside the consideration of the subject in hand, as an indirect attack, and as a most pernicious attack, on our rights and privileges, it should be withdrawn, and not be confirmed by a vote of this House or a ruling of the chair.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I have no idea of interfering in such a way in any proceeding I take here, as to in any way qualify or control the action of any hon. member of this House who is ready to give a notice of motion in respectful terms, and I take no exception whatever to the terms of this motion, but it seems to me the question is whether this is a case in which to apply the rule which I have invoked by the motion I have made here—I mean to say the rule of common sense. It appears to me that this Senate, having been informed by a document which was presented here and laid on the table, and so passed into our Minutes and Proceedings, as to the views of some people, and amongst others, the hon. gentleman who forms one of the members of a committee of inquiry here, the House having that information printed in black and white on our Minutes of Proceedings, it is a question whether the repetition of that in one form or another, once or more than once—because if it can be done once, I do not see why it cannot be done more than once—can be controlled by the action of the House itself. The hon. leader of the opposition misunderstood the motion which has been made. I do not propose by the motion to ask the Senate to change the notice of motion in the slightest degree. All I am asking is that the House declare that it is not necessary to print again that which appears in our Minutes a few pages back in detail. It is entirely a question of degree. It is entirely a question when to apply this rule. Let me illustrate what I mean. Suppose, for the sake of argument, any hon. member of this House chose to give another notice of motion by way of amendment, and asked this House to affirm the negative of the motion made by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, the affirmative of a contrary position, and to set forth in his notice of motion the whole of this evidence, which has been taken under oath before a committee of this House, and thus get on the Minutes 1,000 pages of evidence taken by a committee, on whom I am not going to cast any reflections, but upon whom other members have cast reflections. Any hon. gentleman who has been opposing this, who has taken objection to it, might say that such evidence having been already printed and in the hands of every hon. member of this House, it was not a breach of the privileges of this House to place in the Minutes a thousand pages of evidence, and therefore, if that could be done directly in that way, it appears to me that is practically being done by the notice of motion, because, while there are but three or four pages printed in the Minutes, and set out in this notice of motion, which has been handed in, that notice has reference to page after page, and probably hundreds of pages of the evidence which has been referred to, where then is this going to end ? That is the whole question. I am no more zealous of the rights of the members of this House that others who have occupied a seat here. I do not pretend to be ; but I do pretend not to be less zealous of them, and all I can say is that in this case I am acting on my own judgment, and that is what impelled me to draw attention to the fact that this was a breach of the privileges of a member of the Senate, unduly using privilege by repeating on the Minutes a number of charges said to have been proven, but which, on investigation, may not turn out to be proven at all ; and, in fact, if we turn to the pages where charges are said to have been proven, we will find that directly the opposite appears to be proven. I ask then, with reference to the whole question, in a large spirit and not in a narrow spirit, the House to say that such a notice is not within the rights of a member. He has given his notice of motion, but under the circumstances, all of us being sick of this subject, and not wanting to hear more about it, I ask is it reasonable to say that the House shall not repeat the notice of motion in the Minutes until the resolution is adopted ? If the resolution is adopted, it will have to appear. That is all the extent to which my motion is intended to go. I am not desirous of being over-zealous in upholding the dignity of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I would point out to my hon. friend that if he makes this motion to-morrow or the day following, it will appear on the Minutes.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It may or may not appear in full.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If the hon. gentleman moves it in full, it will be printed in full. That is another reason why it should not be printed now.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I do not wish to be over-zealous in upholding the dignity of the Senate, and I submit to the Speaker and the members of this House, whether they will allow this motion to be passed. I think it is in the interests of common sense, and in the interests of the privileges of this House that this motion should be adopted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has not given any authority for the position he takes, that this is a breach of the privileges of the House.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—This has been rather a fighting question from the start. There has been enmity exhibited beyond anything I ever saw in reference to any Bill that has hitherto come before the Senate. The last ten days' work is all the result of a little sharp practice, which should not have prevailed among hon. senators. The committee made a report, and an exception was taken to that report. Notwithstanding every one of these hon. gentlemen objected, and said they had been wrongly interpreted, that it had not been intended the committee should be dissolved, and that they expected to have another meeting, and every hon. member of the committee said the interpretation given to the adjournment was not intended to be a dissolution of the committee. That statement was treated with perfect contempt, and not in the manner in which senators should treat each other's statements. There was a resolution passed that put the report off the paper. I do not see how it got on the paper, because if the resolution declared that the committee was defunct, and had no existence, then the report of such a committee as that should not be printed, but it was printed. It was ruled out of order before it left this House, and how it got printed I do not know. I have every sympathy with the hon. gentleman from Rothesay and his friends, because they think sharp practice was indulged in against them, and I think so too, and the hon. gentleman is taking a method of getting the evidence before the country, which I would not tolerate if the committee had been treated properly. When an hon. senator says 'I made a mistake,' that statement ought to be accepted. Every senator knows that the adjournment was not intended to be a dissolution of the committee, if he has any principle of fairness in him When an hon. member says 'we did not intend that, it was not put down as intended,' any one who has any common sense at all must admit that it was not intended to be a dissolution of the committee, and, therefore, I say it is sharp practice which should not exist, and these hon. members are fighting to get this matter before the country as they did before.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is just it.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—It strikes me that a very unusual course is being taken by the hon. gentleman from Toronto. I have no doubt the rules of this House prior to a session or two ago, permitted an hon. member to give a notice quietly by handing it to the clerk, and it appeared upon the order paper the following day. Lest there might be some encroachment, some insult offered to the Senate, or some notice of motion that ought not to be placed on the paper, it was deemed proper to alter the manner of submitting notices, by providing that they be read by the senator giving the notice.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—As a sessional order, not a standing order.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Is this question brought by my hon. friend before the House? It is merely a primary notice of what he is going to ask the House to do at some future day. It is not before the House for discussion at all. It is not a question of which we are seized, and upon which we can act. It is merely something that we are going to be asked to do at some future date. My hon. friend from Toronto asks that my hon. friend's motion shall be strangled, before it is born. He says we shall not allow this measure to come before the House to-morrow, or whenever the report is to be received, but we shall destroy it at the present time by moving a resolution.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It does not need to appear as a notice of motion at all.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—My hon. friend knows full well that he might consult the records for years and years, and never find a resolution to strike a notice of motion from the order paper. I appeal to him to produce such a resolution. Is he possessed of information that this House has never had for years and years, and can he introduce a new order, contrary to the rules that have been followed year after year? I say it is unfair. It is not treating my hon. friend fairly. When the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry rose and read his resolution, which is to appear before the Senate to-morrow, was there a single objection raised? It was going to be placed upon the record, and that was treated fairly, properly and justly. Why did my hon. friend from Toronto not rise and say, 'We will not have any more of this discussion. I move that that report be all struck out, except so-and-so?' We have had this report printed. It is already on the journals of the House, says my hon. friend, and, therefore, ought not to be reprinted. Do hon. gentlemen think that is the reason they ask that this be not placed upon the record of the House? I think not. I must agree with my hon. friend the leader of the opposition that the course he took is a correct one. I cannot agree with some of the other remarks. The hon. gentleman from Marshfield made a remark in reference to it, 'Oh, it is not a proper motion to make. It is not one that should be moved in that form.' He tells my hon. friend that he does not know how to move the resolution. 'I, the member for Marshfield will tell you how to introduce the resolution so that it will be satisfactory to the House.'

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I did not do anything of the kind. My hon. friend entirely misunderstood me. I simply asked my hon. friend whether the notice he was reading was in the same form as when he first read it, or whether he had changed it. He started by giving his own opinion. I was helping the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—The hon. gentleman was desirous of helping the hon. senator from Rothesay by telling him how to introduce his resolution so as to make it satisfactory to the House. I tell him he was not treating the hon. gentleman fairly by the suggestions he made in reference to it, when he said, 'Oh, the expense.' What expense? Is it so great an expense that that should be reprinted? Is it not a proper resolution to place on the order paper after the one made by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry. One of the members of the committee gave notice of motion, and is it wrong that my hon. friend should place his ideas in reference to the matter following the notice of motion of my hon. friend. The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry says, 'Oh, the action of that committee was unfair; the evidence did not bear out the findings of the report.' Can he rise in his place and tell us that the evidence shows that the company were free from any suspicion of wrong-doing? I think not.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—We are not discussing the report. We should limit ourselves to the question of order.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I am discussing the notice of motion, and, therefore, I say it is perfectly proper that this resolution should not be withdrawn from the House. It is treating the House unfairly, and it is a thing which has never been done before. It would be an insult to the hon. gentleman from Rothesay. A great deal has been said about the dignity of the House. Some hon. gentlemen think they are clothed with the dignity of the House, and that they must carry it on their shoulders continually. I suppose that the majority of the hon. members of this House are just as anxious about the dignity of the Senate as my hon. friend from Toronto, and if he considers what is fair and proper to hon. members of this House, he will withdraw that motion and seek another opportunity to accomplish his object. Let him give it as a notice of motion, and it will come up in its regular order. Why does he seek to take advantage of his position and move a resolution out of order? It is a strange and unusual proceeding, and I feel that the resolution moved by the hon. gentleman from Toronto is not a just and proper resolution and ought not to carry.

The SPEAKER—Does the hon. gentleman from Toronto persist in his motion, or does he propose to withdraw?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I place myself in the hands of the hon. Speaker and the other members of the House in reference to the matter. If there is a serious objection to the motion I will withdraw it. I do not want to be taken as leading in this matter at all, and therefore with the permission of the House, I will withdraw the motion.

The motion was withdrawn.

The SPEAKER—I ruled that the motion made by the hon. gentleman from Toronto was in order, but did not express any opinion on it at all. I ruled also that the 13th rule did not apply. Now, on pages 424 and 425 of Bourinot I find, under the heading 'Questions of Privilege,' the following:

> Questions of privilege may always be considered in either House without the notice necessary in the case of motions generally.

And amongst the questions which are indicated as questions of privilege on page 425 we find enumerated: 'Questions affecting the internal economy or proceedings of the House.' So that the motion was quite in order.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—How can a motion be made that is not before the House?

The SPEAKER—I am not going to answer any further questions.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We have no right to debate that.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is only the Speaker has a right to put a question.

The SPEAKER—I did not put a question. The hon. gentleman very improperly reflected on my ruling after it had been made, and surely I have a right to indicate the authority for my ruling.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman has no right to discuss it as Speaker. If he wants to discuss it, let him come down from the chair.

FISHERIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (74) An Act to amend the Fisheries Act.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read the second time to-morrow. He said: The object of this Bill is to authorize the Department of Marine and Fisheries to license the taking of whales. Whaling is becoming an industry in some parts of the Dominion and is hereafter to be licensed, a fee of $800 to be charged the first year, $1,000 the second year and $1,200 the third year. Whale oil is of considerable value and in order to encourage parties to embark in the industry which is now carried on in a small way this Bill is introduced.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State whether there has been any correspondence between the United States government and the Canadian government as to rights in Hudson Bay? Canada claims the exclusive right to the fisheries in Hudson Bay, to which this Bill particularly applies. I know it goes further and deals with the whale fisheries, also, in British Columbia. The killing of whales by foreigners in Hudson Bay, which is claimed to be Canadian inland water, has been the cause of complaint for a great many years. A very profitable industry has been carried on there. Whalers from the United States have been fishing there for the last twenty years. I am very glad to see that the government have taken the position they have in connection with the fisheries in Hudson Bay, by sending vessels there to look after Canadian interests, and also by the Bill now before the House to impose licenses. If the right of issuing licenses is once conceded, it will establish conclusively Canada's right to control the fisheries of Hudson Bay. It should have been done long ago. It was neglected by the late government, but it is not too late to do it now, and I am glad the government are taking proper steps at last.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not aware that any correspondence has taken place on the subject, and perhaps it is very much better we should have this legislation before there is any correspondence.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think it was stated in the other House that there has been correspondence with Newfoundland on the subject.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It may be a question how far the rights of Newfoundland extend along the Labrador coast.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is a disputed point which will very shortly go before the Privy Council for decision—that is, the eastern coast of Quebec, part of which is claimed by Newfoundland; but as far as the neighbouring nation is concerned, I am not aware that there has been any correspondence.

The motion was agreed to.

INSPECTION OF GRAIN BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (113) An Act respecting the inspection of grain.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read the second time to-morrow. He said: This is a voluminous Bill. I understand, however, that it is a consolidation of the laws, and the changes are not many. It would be quite impossible to go through the Bill without knowing the actual changes, and I hope to have a report from the department to-morrow indicating what they are.

The motion was agreed to.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (124) An Act to amend the General Inspection Act.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read the second time to-morrow. He said: The object of this Bill is to compel the manufacturers of binder twine, under certain circumstances, to attach a label with the name, and to give particularly the number of feet of twine. The number of feet of twine is essential, and there are penalties for parties deceiving, because when a farmer buys a quantity of twine he has no opportunity to measure it.

The motion was agreed to.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (152) An Act to amend the Post Office Act.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read the second time to-morrow. He said: This Bill deals in several of its paragraphs with the positions of clerks in the department. The main and most important change is naming a person who will be designated as chief post office superintendent, in place of the chief inspector named in the Postal Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does it change the name, or is it the appointment of another officer?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it changes the name. This is to supersede the chief inspector in a number of given cases. The main feature of it is that in post offices where the receipts are over $500,000 there is to be a chief post office superintendent. I believe at present it is limited to two places, Montreal and Toronto, and the official is to have a direct supervision over those offices.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does that superintendent control the postmaster?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think so. He is over everything. His salary is to be $2,000 a year.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then you have a $3.000 superintendent ruling and controlling a $4,000 officer?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I may be wrong in saying he controls the postmaster. Postmasters are not in all cases the practical heads that one would like to see them. Sometimes, as a matter of fact, they have been gentlemen who have not worked their way up through the various grades. The chief superintendent under the Act is a person educated in the department. That is the essential difference, because we know very well that sometimes postmasters are named without having that particular knowledge of the management of the postal service that one would naturally expect to find in the occupant of a position such as a postmaster often fills in large cities.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And so have been the inspectors.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (157) An Act respecting the payment of certain railway subsidies.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read the second time to-morrow. He said: As hon. gentlemen know, the regular subsidy paid to railways for many years has been $3,200 per mile, except where the cost has been greater than $15,000 per mile. There is a graded increase up to $6,400 per mile. The rule in the past has been that only $3,200 per mile would be paid until the road was completely finished. The contractors have appealed from that, and used as an argument that they cannot get on credit the additional amount they require, some of them not having capital where the work is clearly a work that is going to cost above the $15,000 per mile.. This Bill provides that after an examination of the plans and specifications by the engineer, approved by the chief engineer of the department where it is shown the cost will be certainly over the $15,000, 60 per cent of the excess may be advanced from time to time as the work proceeds, the remaining 40 per cent of the excess over the subsidy of $3.200 being withheld until the road is completed and handed over.

The motion was agreed to.

MORNING SITTINGS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Before the Orders of the Day are called, in view of the probable early termination of the session—I believe there is an anxious desire on both sides of the House in the other chamber to terminate this week if possible—I will move with the leave of the House that we meet twice in the day, the morning sitting to begin at eleven o'clock and the afternoon sitting at three p.m., each to be a distinct session, and that government measures have precedence.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE — Does that include Saturdays ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We hope to prorogue on Saturday.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to ask whether—to use an expression we heard from the hon. gentleman from Toronto a short time ago—it is common sense to suppose that the members of this House can master the details of the Bills which have been read to-day for the first time, and the important Bills which have yet to come from the House of Commons, in the time allotted to them by this motion? Three or four Bills of a very important character have been introduced to-day, and it will take some time to become familiar with them if we are to act intelligently in discussing them. We are to meet to-morrow at eleven o'clock : will these Bills be printed in both languages ? We shall not be able to get a copy of any of those Bills until after the House meets, and yet we will be asked to deal with very important questions affecting the interests of this country at a moment's notice. Does the hon. gentleman consider his proposition reasonable under the circumstances ? I have complained of this a number of times. The most important Bills of the session—a five month session—outside of the one Act relating to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, are now to come before this House. I think the hon. gentleman is asking a little too much. Instead of coming here in the morning, if we would sit in the evenings until eleven o'clock we will get on better. I shall not oppose the motion, but I tell the hon. gentleman that these Bills must be ready and in our hands before they can be considered, and I shall take advantage of any rule of the House to obtain the length of time I consider necessary for due consideration of them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—So far as the printing of the Bills is concerned, I shall endeavour to see that they are in the hands of hon. gentlemen before the second reading. With the exception of the Grain Inspection Act, I think by simply reading over the other Bills it will give one a perfectly correct idea of them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not the Post Office Bill, certainly.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Grain Inspection Bill I do not understand myself. It is a consolidation, and I am advised that the changes are very few. My hon. friends from Manitoba and the Northwest are more particularly interested, because the question is really between the Board of Grain Inspectors at Winnipeg and the Board of Trade of Montreal. They both want to have the last examination of the grain. The Board at Winnipeg naturally do not want to have their grain touched after it leaves Fort William. It has a reputation which they want to maintain. They say the grain is mixed after it leaves Fort William. It is only within a day or two that a final conclusion has been reached. In reference to the larger question, I quite appreciate all that the hon. gentleman has urged. I urged it myself in very much stronger language for eighteen years, while I was on the other side. Every session since 1896, the Bills have come to the Senate more regularly than in former sessions and the senators have not been called upon to pass baskets of them just as the guns were firing for prorogation, and when we had not time to more than read the titles of them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman justify himself by that ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, and I would not justify it now, but I make this explanation and apology that the Bills which are behind are very few, the only important one being the Militia Bill. I have no doubt hon. gentlemen who take an interest in that subject have followed the debates in the other House. They know the points at issue, because from time to time amendments have been made and discussed, and reports of the discussions have appeared in the press, and so we all have had an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the details. I have endeavoured, as far as I could, to impress on my colleagues that it was not fair to the Senate not to pass many of those Bills weeks ago. I brought it up repeatedly, as my hon. colleague knows very well, but the House of Commons have the estimates before them, and there is such pressure on the part of those who have views to express that delays occur. Objections are taken, and Bills are delayed very much more than they need be. They go back into committee and after they reach the third reading, some one has views he wants to put on record, and thus delays occur. It is unfortunate, but it is part of the history of our legislation, and it cannot be overcome apparently. There is much less of it now than in former years, but I think my hon. friends will find before the time comes for prorogation that they will have ample opportunity to consider the balance of the legislation that is to come before us. It is their province to keep the House open if they wish.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the chair.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When the House rose at six o'clock, we were discussing the business of parliament, and I understood the hon. Secretary of State to say that he hoped that parliament would rise on Saturday next. I want to say very distinctly that I think it is quite impossible that any such thing as that would happen. The Militia Bill, one of the most important Bills of the session, a voluminous Bill, that has taken the House of Commons some three months, I think, altogether, to consider, this Bill which is still in the committee stage in the House of Commons, will have to be reported and read a third time, and then afterwards will have to be reprinted before being brought up to this House. I think it is preposterous to assume that this House can rise on Saturday, and give that consideration to the measures that are coming before us, which it is necessary for us to do.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—It is on its final reading in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I was told by members of parliament at six o'clock that it had not passed the committee, that it was held up for one or two amendments, and I think I am correct in my statement. It may pass to-night, and may not, but even if it does pass, it cannot be printed and reach us before Friday, and is it reasonable to expect that with all the business on the order paper which is to come before us, that arrangements can be made for prorogation on Saturday. I think we may speak plainly on the matter, in order that there may be no misunderstanding. Hon. members of the government may be restive by-and-by when we insist on our rights to examine the Bills which come before us, and feel that we are not doing right. Hon. gentlemen in the House possibly may take the same view, but I am one of those who think that we should not, on account of any pressure, forego our right in regard to measures of this kind. I think it will be very unreasonable to make arrangements to rise on Saturday.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No arrangements have been made. I stated that I heard the leader of the opposition and the leader of the government in the other House, express the desire that the House should rise on Saturday.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—They have very little respect for this House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It rests with this House. We have sat very little in the last ten days, and I should suggest that to-morrow and Friday we should have morning sittings, so that the business can be pushed through without any undue haste. I do not agree with my hon. friend in saying that the business which is still to come before us, will require very much time. The points of difference in the Militia Bill are points which are well defined, which have been discussed in the House, and have been before the House, at all the stages, and every hon. gentleman here, I have no doubt, has formed an opinion as to the view he will take as to the proposed changes. In reference to the other Bills which came up to-day, there is nothing to delay us half an hour, no material points involved, except the Grain Inspection Act. I was unable to give any explanation of that, for the reason that some changes were made at some of the recent stages. I should not go on with that Bill unless furnished with the necessary information, pointing out where the changes were made. It would not be fair that I should be asked to take charge of a Bill, where they had made changes up to the last moment, without giving me notice of it. I cannot follow these matters.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My reason for making these statements is, that I have noticed that the government have assumed quite an overbearing manner, with members in this House, when we want to discuss government Bills, and they take it for granted you are transgressing or doing something you should not do, because you want to obtain information, and to state your objections to Bills. I have a case in my mind, and I know it has occurred many times.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say there was no particular question involved in the amendments to the Militia Bill ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. I said the amendments were very well known, and no changes were made, of recent date. The amendments have been discussed. The change in the principle—that is the abolition of the office of the Commanding Officer in Chief, and the substitution of a Canadian Council of Officers. has been discussed for months. and there are changes referred to in the press. and I said I thought they were pretty well understood. There are not so many of them.

The motion was agreed to.

CANADIAN ASSESSMENT POLICY-HOLDERS BILL.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I have been requested to bring to the attention of this honourable House an alleged discrepancy—I am not positive of it—in the Bill (H) which was passed here July 21, 1904, 'An Act respecting the Canadian Assessment Policy-holders in the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company.' This Bill was adopted by this honourable House and passed on that date, notwithstanding a request made on the floor of this House that the Bill be not passed until reprinted and submitted to the inspection of hon. senators. Notwithstanding that objection, the Bill was ordered to be sent down to the House of Commons. My attention has been called to the fact that in clause 7—that is the last clause of the Bill—there is an addendum which was not discussed, which was not proposed, and which was not accepted by this honourable House. On my attention being drawn to that fact, I looked up the records of the debates on this question, and as far as I can see up to the present moment, the—I do not know what to call it—the charge or the statement appears to be well founded. In the original Bill, the paragraph relating to the rights of policy-holders as against the company on their claims reads as follows :—

Section 7. Nothing in this Act shall affect any suit, action or other proceeding now pending in respect of any assessment policy.

That is in Bill (H) as orginally drafted and presented to this House by the promoters of the Bill. On that clause there was a very lengthy discussion, in which several hon. members took part, among others, I think, hon. Senator McMillan, Senator Robertson, Senator Kerr, Senator Bcique and Senator Cloran. As I had a particular interest in that item, from a legal standpoint, and not particularly from a policy-holder's point of view, I suggested that that clause was misleading and would lead to dire results to the policy-holders, because I found in the reading of that clause, which was very craftily and very cunningly drawn, that although it allowed the right of policy-holders to exist with regard to their suits, actions or other proceedings, as long as they were pending, in asserting the rights of those who did not have actions pending it would be left, under this clause, to the interpretation of the court and of the lawyers, and the result would be that the policy-holders would be deprived of the rights of prosecuting the company for a violation of contract. The discussion took quite a time in the Senate. It covers five or six pages of the Debates, and I finally moved an amendment, which was accepted by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry and the hon. Senator Kerr, for the promoters of the Bill, as follows :—

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Before passing from that point and giving a legal interpretation of that clause, allow me to put a question : Would it not be safer for the policy-holders to make the clause read in this way :

Nothing in this section shall affect any suit, action or other proceeding which has been taken or may be taken.

When I put the question, the hon. senator from Toronto, jointly with the hon. senator from de Salaberry, stated that they did not want to deprive any of the policy-holders of their rights, and would accept the amendment. I find, as it has been called to my attention—I thought the Bill went through as presented by this honourable House to the Commons, but after it was called to my attention, I find the following has been added to it :—

Nor shall this Act apply to policies in respect of which any contract or agreement may have been made by the company with holders of certificates for commutation of their assessments, and the payment of uniform rates, without the consent of the holders of such certificates.

I venture to say to this honourable House, that during all the discussion that took place on the evening of the 21st July, there is absolutely no mention of the four lines added to that amendment which I proposed, and which was accepted by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry and the hon. gentleman from Toronto.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I submit humbly to this House——

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Would the hon. gentleman state the page of the Debates.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Starting at page 861, where the Hon. Mr. McMillan, I think, first raised the point on behalf of the policyholders, that by that clause they would be debarred from taking action against the company, and his language is as follows :—

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I raise to a question as to whether it is quite fair that this unfortunate case should be cropping up all the time, blocking the business of the House. There is no right to be considered ; none whatever. If the hon. gentleman has any notice to give, let him give it for to-morrow, so that we can have it before us. I think it is unfair and improper to interject this debate now.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—My hon. friend may suspend his notice of motion, as the Bill has been dropped by the other House. The 'Free Press' announces the dropping of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not accept that statement.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It is in the 'Free Press.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is not an authority.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The 'Free Press' announced six or seven Bills that were to be dropped.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not an authority.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman should give notice.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am not giving a notice. I am rising to a question of privilege.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not fair to the order paper. We came here to discuss the order paper, and we were blocked all afternoon.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I was blocked all afternoon. It was my intention to bring this before the House, because it is a very serious matter.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Give notice of it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That a Bill adopted by this House should go to the Commons, emasculated, is a breach of the privileges of this House. It is not a question whether this amendment is good or bad. What I want to know is, who authorized that amendment to be added, when it was not added in this House ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—What is the addition ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The last four lines in Bill (H) as presented to the House of Commons. This Bill as presented to the House of Commons is not the Bill that left this honourable House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—At page 898, the hon. gentleman will find that the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry made the motion. It is clearly set out there, and it is explained why it is made.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Word for word, precisely as it is in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The hon. gentleman from Victoria division is only commencing to wake up. He has been asleep.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman has been referring to the proceedings of Wednesday instead of Thursday.

THIRD READING.

Bill (137) An Act respecting certain patents of the Canadian Office and School Furniture Company, Limited.—(Hon. Mr. Merner.)

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill (132) An Act to amend the Railway Act, 1903.

In the committee, on sub-clause 2,

Hon Mr. FERGUSON—Before we pass this clause, I think it is due to the House that we should consider it carefully. This clause extends the principle of the clause that we discussed very fully a day or two ago very materially. In that section I think we arrived pretty fairly at the meaning of it. It provides that the laws of a province with respect to Sunday observance, having regard to these railways situated within the province, and declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, should be as valid as if they were passed by the parliament of Canada. But this section goes very much further.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No; the same principle exactly.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This clause provides as follows:

> 2. The Governor in Council may at any time and from time to time by proclamation confirm, for the purposes of this section, any Act of the legislature of any province passed after the passing of this Act for the prohibition or regulation of work, business or labour upon the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday; and from and after the date of any such proclamation the Act thereby confirmed, in so far as it is in other respects within the powers of the legislature, shall for the purposes of this section be confirmed and ratified and made as valid and effectual as if it had been enacted by the parliament of Canada.

I have read the very words of the clause. It provides that any Act passed by any province subsequent to this may, by proclamation of the Governor in Council be made valid as if it were passed by the parliament of Canada. My view is, that we are going as far as to amend the British North America Act in this section. Practically we are amending the British North America Act, and we are giving the legislature of a province the power to pass Acts which they would not be empowered to enact under the British North America Act, and we are giving the Governor in Council the power to issue proclamations which will make such laws as valid and binding as if they were passed by this parliament. We are not only delegating to the Governor General in Council power to make laws for any one of the provinces, but we are making laws in anticipation that may be passed at any time, through the action of the Governor in Council, to become the laws of Canada, as applied within the province. It is to my mind, delegating the power of this parliament, with regard to legislation, to the Governor in Council. We should hesitate a good while before we pass a clause which would give to the Governor in Council power, by a proclamation, to make valid any law that would be passed in the future by our own parliament. I do not know that we can find a precedent for anything of the kind. That is to provide that the Governor in Council should have power to issue proclamations to make laws to be passed by this parliament valid. It would not be necessary to have it, but we are providing that the Governor in Council will have power to make valid and binding laws that will be passed by any province with regard to Sunday observance. Then we go further in the remaining part of the clause, and we provide that:

> Notwithstanding anything in this Act or in any other Act, every railway, steam or electric street railway, and tramway, wholly situate within such province, but declared by the Parliament of Canada to be, in its entirety or in part, a work for the general advantage of Canada, and every person employed thereon, in respect of such employment, and every person, company, corporation or municipality owning, controlling or operating it wholly or partly, in respect of such ownership, control or operation, shall thereafter, notwithstanding such declaration, be subject to the Act so confirmed in so far as that Act is otherwise intra vires of the legislature.

I must say this is extraordinary legislation, and I do not think any parallel for it can be found on our statute-book of this parliament. We are actually, in anticipation, declaring to be valid—assuming the Governor in Council will pass this proclamation, laws that are not yet enacted by the province, and we are giving the Governor General power to make them valid, notwithstanding anything in the Railway Act or any other Act, and we are making that legislation paramount, and to supersede any law that we have already passed ourselves, or that we may pass.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman fails to recognize that subsection 2 is just carrying out the principle of the clause we have confirmed—exactly the same principle and no other.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is extending it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No extension whatever. We have agreed on 6a of clause 2. Under the same condition of things that exists when we adopt 6a, the Governor in Council is authorized to put in force the proposal contained in that clause, because it is to be supposed that hereafter there will be legislation on the subject. It is confined entirely to the Sunday law. It is confined entirely to the railways that we have improperly—I say it advisedly, and in cool judgment—taken from the jurisdiction of the provinces. My hon. friend shakes his head. Does he tell me that, for instance, the railway between Brantford and Paris was in any sense a federal railway ? It had no connection with other railways outside, not a railway between the provinces, or connecting Canada with a foreign country ; simply and purely a local railway, and when the parliament of Canada took control of that railway, they did it improperly, as they have done several other things improperly, under pressure before the Railway Committee, for purposes which we may justify in some cases, but not in all. I say no one who has given any study or thought to our constitution can for one moment maintain that it was proper for the parliament of Canada to take the control of local works with no excuse whatever. Had it been a line crossing another railway, had it been a line that even approached the frontier, had it been a line that approached the borders of another province, there might be some excuse, but it was purely a local road. Take the example of a road running from one town to another, can it be said that where we by the exercise of an improper authority, simply by foregoing the condition of things, put those words in, no matter how utterly absurd and contradictory it may be to the spirit of the law, that we have a right to do it, and by doing it take away the jurisdiction from the provinces ? Now we say that if a province has a strong feeling with regard to this Sunday observance, at least so far as that Sunday question is concerned, we should not allow this absorption of their rights and powers to interfere with the carrying out of the Sunday law. That is exactly the whole subject in a nut-shell. If you affirm and carry that clause, ergo, you must carry this. because it is exactly the same, and no stronger, only it gives the Governor in Council power to put the law in force. They can only put it into execution if the conditions are the same as in the preceding clause. There are strict limitations, and the conditions must be such as exist in the principles we have approved of in the preceding clause.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am entirely in accord with the principle to which the hon. Secretary of State has referred, because I think it is merely restoring to the provinces powers which have been encroached upon, but I must confess, though I have no desire at this stage of the session to occupy much time in criticising the clause which is now before us, that I fail to understand the clause. The first portion of the clause seems to me to be perfectly harmless, because I do not think that anything can be reached by it. The first portion of the clause has merely the effect of declaring that provided the Act of the legislature be within the powers of the legislature, it may be confirmed by proclamation of the Governor in Council. I fail to see the necessity of conforming by proclamation a valid Act of the legislature, and that seems to be the whole effect of the first part of the clause. Then with regard to the second portion of the clause, it is connected with the first portion, and the word 'Act,' in the 12th line of the same clause, and therefore it can have no effect again, but I leave entirely the responsibility with the party who drafted the Bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Of course, we expect this measure will pass. It is a government measure, and they have a majority, and it passed in the other House, and they have made up their minds it should become law, and I altogether despair of convincing hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House that any government measure is wrong in the slightest degree.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If they know it is wrong sometimes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Well, I mean to get them to admit it, and to criticise any government Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—We have amended some government Bills.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—With the entire consent and approbation of the government. My hon. friend the Secretary of State could not see any difference between this section and the one that we have passed. It was the same in principle, he said. But there is a new principle involved in this section, and that is the principle of confirming legislation yet to be passed by the province, by the Governor in Council, with regard to Sunday observance and with regard to railways situated entirely within one province. There is the most serious difference. It goes very much further, and introduces the extraordinary principle that we, by an Act of our parliament, could give the Governor General in Council power to confirm in advance an Act passed by a province. I want to make some further observations upon this, which will come up better under the next clause. They were touched upon in the previous debate on this Bill.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I think the hon. gentleman is hardly fair to this side of the House, when he suggests that we refrain from amending government Bills. I think the record will show that I do not hesitate to amend a government Bill. I would go a long way in the direction the non. gentleman from Marshfield has suggested were I not of opinion that this clause is entirely harmless.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Does my hon. friend think that it is a good principle to declare in advance that a law of a province shall be valid ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I say I am not in accord with that, but I take the clause as it stands, and I think it is harmless.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Harmless, but it contains a bad principle.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—We must admit that the principle of Sunday legislation is certainly vested either in the province or in the Dominion. At the present time there is a confusion as to where the power is vested. We know perfectly well that by the decision of the Privy Council it was declared that the provinces had not the right to pass Bills such as they had passed and tried to give effect to, but with regard to the running of railways and tramways and electric lines, it is supposed that the province, separated or relieved from the declaration that these roads are for the general advantage of Canada, has a right to control the Sunday operation of these roads, and that they are under the municipal jurisdiction of the province. That is generally conceded. Now, then, the question may arise after all : the province may pass laws with regard to Sunday observance that may possibly go beyond or clash in some way with the powers that are virtually vested in the Dominion. This legislation will give the Dominion power to declare that these laws shall be operative. The Governor in Council can put them in operation, notwithstanding the fact that he may perhaps overstep the boundary, they will have a right to put them in force. My hon. friend will admit that the power must exist somewhere. We know perfectly well that the Lord's Day Alliance has been pressing upon the Dominion parliament to pass a Dominion law. The answer of the government, as far as I know, is that they are not clear that they have the power to pass such a law, and I think an understanding has been come to that the question will be submitted for the opinion of the Supreme Court as to how far the Dominion has the right to legislate with regard to Sunday observance. When that opinion is secured, possibly a Bill may be brought in next session that may largely interfere with the application of this very Bill. In the meantime, the best legal minds I know in the province of Ontario have been brought to bear on this Bill, and they have all decided that a measure in the direction of the Bill now before the House is the only Bill that could possibly be passed, in the meantime, to enable the provinces to pass laws that they feel disposed to pass. For instance, in Ontario, there is a very strong feeling in all classes of our community with regard to Sunday observance. In the province of Quebec it may be different, but they have a right to legislate just as they please for themselves. All the provinces will have the same right, and they will all be subject to the same declaration on the part of the Dominion government with regard to putting into operation any Act that they may pass, because, as I said in the first place, the power must be somewhere. If it is not in the Dominion it must be in the province.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. Secretary of State seems to look upon this clause as very harmless—I think that is the word he used, because it only enables the Governor, by proclamation, to declare valid what otherwise might not be valid. Now, if a law be passed to regulate Sunday observance, would the passage of a clause in that law declaring what shall or shall not be done, which had been, under the decision of the law lords of the Privy Council, declared ultra vires, would a proclamation issued by the Governor General under this legislation bring it within the right of the local legislature to legislate on that subject ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—We give them the power.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend says the only result would be to declare that the law, as to the legality of which there might be some doubt, would be put in force.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Removing a doubt.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If our Ontario legislature has not the power to pass a law which might be declared ultra vires, how can a proclamation of the Governor in Council make it legal ? If a law be passed by the province of Ontario, and the Governor in Council, upon a report of the Minister of Justice, do not disallow that within a year, it is just as much in force as if the Governor in Council had issued their proclamation. There is just this difference between the two, that while the law would be in force, if it were not disallowed, and magistrates and others could act upon it, would the issue of the proclamation give it any more legal effect than if it were not issued ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I cannot for the life of me see that. Can we, by an Act of this parliament, grant a legislature powers which the constitution declares they do not possess, but are vested only in the Dominion parliament ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—That is not a fair way of putting it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Of course, I must submit to legal minds ; but I cannot understand how it is, that this parliament can set aside, as they would do by the proclamation that is to be issued under this Bill, the provisions of the British North America Act. I do not believe we can. I do not believe this Bill is worth a snap of your finger, if it is taken into the courts. You cannot go into the courts and justify the imposition of a fine, by saying we have the power under this law, as it has been declared valid by the Dominion parliament, though it is in contravention of the Confederation Act. While I am fully in accord with the object of this Bill, I protest against legislation of this character. I venture the assertion that in no section of the British empire, or any other country where they have legislative powers, will you find authority given to the Governor in Council to declare an Act legally in force, which is not yet passed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman does not recognize the point. By this clause, you authorize the Governor in Council to withdraw from the Act which we ourselves have passed, those words 'For the general advantage of Canada,' in so far as Sunday observance is concerned. The effect of doing that is to place the jurisdiction in the provinces. You say a year goes over and we do not disallow the Act, and the effect is the same ; but anybody objecting to the legislation of Ontario against Sunday cars might take it to the Privy Council, and the Privy Council would say the legislature would have no power to pass that Act, because of those words 'For the general advantage of Canada.' But the federal authority steps in and says, 'So far as Sunday legislation is concerned, we do not take the jurisdiction out of the hands of the province.' Ergo, the provinces have the jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am not without appreciating the argument made by the hon. gentleman for Belleville as to the legal effect of this legislation—the legalizing by proclamation of something which would not, perhaps, in its inception, be within the exclusive domain of the provinces. But we are under a written constitution. Countries blessed with unwritten constitutions have the advantage of an elasticity which we do not enjoy here, although in other respects, we have advantages which no one can deny. Here we are with distinct powers given to the federal parliament, in contradistinction to other powers given exclusively to the provinces. Here we are with provinces widely separated, having different views on certain questions from those held in other provinces. This is a very ticklish question which all governments have wrestled with, the solution of which has been sought in vain. Is this the millenium, a solution of one of those difficult questions? I am not ready to answer in the affirmative or the negative the question put by the hon. gentleman from Belleville.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has not received a retaining fee yet.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—But from what I know of the greater elasticity given under our constitution through a number of judgments of the Privy Council, it may be found by this tribunal that this Bill gives orthodox solution of one of the numerous difficulties we are encountering in the working out of our destinies.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand the position of the Secretary of State to be this, that so far as the words 'For the general advantage of Canada' are concerned they are repealed by this Act, in all the Acts in which they appear, so far as it affects Sunday observance. That is the interpretation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the intention.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The only point which suggests itself to my mind, which must be a question for the lawyers and judges to decide, is whether a mere declaration of this kind is a repeal of that section in all the Acts in which it appears, so far as Sunday observance is concerned. That is the point. I object entirely to the mode in which the Secretary of State treats the action of the committee, and of parliament, upon this and many other questions which he thinks are not right. He may be right in saying that it was improper to pass these laws, but a general condemnation of parliament because a majority thought proper to differ from his opinion, is carrying the opposition a little too far. And my hon. friend is just as plain and decided in reference to the law lords of the Privy Council. I can only express the hope that the law lords of the Privy Council will not read this debate, because if they do, and learn the deliberate opinion expressed by so high an official in the government of Canada as the Secretary of State, that their decisions are nonsense, and are not to be looked upon as containing even ordinary common sense, they might possibly resign, and that might be a serious matter. Under the circumstances, we have to deal with the facts as they are before us, and not with what our individual opinions may be of the judgments of the Privy Council. When that question comes up it will be fair to discuss it. We are now discussing the fact as it appears on the statutes, and we are dealing with the decision which has been given, right or wrong, and I do not think it is strictly in accord with the course that ought to be pursued by the Secretary of State in denouncing, as he has done, the judgments of the Privy Council. They may not meet our views. I have read some of their decisions which, if my opinion were asked as a layman of common-sense, I would not have given, but I should not presume to denounce them as men not knowing the laws of the country, or use the language my hon. friend has used towards jurists in that high position. I am only elaborating an opinion I expressed a few days ago, after the hon. gentleman had used similar language, in denouncing the judgment of the Privy Council.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think I used the word 'nonsensical.' I am not going to enter into a discussion of the question now, but on another occasion I brought before this Chamber instances in which the Privy Council gave judgments directly opposite to each other.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is like the decisions we get here.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Privy Council is not always the same. The men who sit in June may be different from the men who sit in December, and they are not governed by precedent as our judges are. I mentioned instances in which I felt amply justified in criticising the judgments of the Privy Council, and I say advisedly—I would say it to the judges themselves—their tendency is to give judgments on the principle of expediency, what they think is best for the people of Canada. They form conclusions of what they think is right and just. They overrule judges of the Supreme Court, who know the spirit in which parliament put the law on our statute-book, who had not a shadow of doubt as to what parliament meant. Those gentlemen of the Privy Council say 'You did not understand; it is true your judgment is unanimous but we reverse it,' and they simply sweep it aside and say that so and so is the best decision in the interest of the people of Canada—purely expediency.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Whether the judgment is right or wrong, we are not here to sit in judgment on the Privy Council. We have to accept their decisions as good citizens of the empire, and deal with things as we find them, and one of the things we have to deal with in this case is the judgment of the Privy Council. I am extremely anxious to be distinctly placed on record in regard to this subject, because I have a strong conviction that if any case should be brought before the courts with regard to this matter, the Secretary of State, if he is in the flesh, as I hope he will be, will have an opportunity to lecture the Privy Council again with regard to its judgment. My reason for saying so is this: the British North America Act provides certain classes of works shall be federal works, one of which is any work situated within any one province which shall be declared by the parliament of Canada to be a work for the general advantage of Canada. When the matter comes before the Privy Council, the question for them to consider is whether the work to which the case relates is a federal work or not, and when they find that the British North America Act provides a method by which it is to be made a federal work, and parliament supplies the method, I am very much inclined to believe it will be found to be under federal jurisdiction. It must be either a federal or provincial work. It cannot fall half way between the two, and if the decision is that it is a federal work, any legislation of this kind will be of no value.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I agree with the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry and the hon. gentleman from Marshfield in their objection to legislation by the Governor in Council. However, there is this to be said in the present case, the offence is not a very serious one. The clause which we have already passed provides that all Acts which have been heretofore passed by the provincial legislature regulating work on Sundays are confirmed. Now, there are seven provinces in this Dominion, each one of which has the right to pass legislation with respect to Sunday observance. These legislatures occasionally pass legislation on the subject, and if we do not pass some such measure as is embodied in this clause, every time that any legislature in any province in the Dominion passes an Act dealing with this matter, parliament will be called upon to pass a new Act to ratify the provision of that Act. That will be a very inconvenient position; and, further, the province of Ontario, for instance, might pass an Act just after the Dominion parliament had been prorogued, and that provincial Act might be in operation for six months, might alter the law which previously existed with respect to this subject, and there would be no way of getting the new law into operation unless there was some such law as we provide under this Bill. While I do not think the principle of legislation by Order in Council is a good one, the inconvenience this is intended to get over might be a serious one, and inasmuch as you are only ratifying an Act which the legislature may pass on this particular subject in connection with a work that ought to have remained within the jurisdiction of the province I do not think it is a very serious matter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would that keep it outside of the court in case an objection was made to the payment of a fine on the ground of the statute being ultra vires?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think it would.

The clause was agreed to.

On section 3,

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The last three lines of this clause would to some extent remove an objection, which I took when we were in committee before, to this legislation we are now dealing with, but I submit it will only do so to a very limited extent. It only serves to show how very ill-considered this legislation is, and how insufficient it is going to prove in meeting the views of the Lord's Day Alliance. Let me assume a case which would be familiar to every hon. gentleman, that there is an electric railway starting from the city of Ottawa, and running to Carleton Place, and another electric railway starting from the north end of the Interprovincial bridge and running to the same point almost side by side. What would be the result of this legislation? Supposing a proclamation were issued making the laws of Ontario apply to the road starting from the city of Ottawa while the law of the Dominion would apply to the railway which ran side by side with it, and competed with it to Carleton Place. It is intended, I presume, to get over a difficulty of that kind by giving the Governor in Council power to withdraw from the effects of the local law this local railway situated entirely within the province of Ontario. I understand that is the object of the last three lines of the subsection:

> Nor shall it apply to any railway or part of a railway which the Governor in Council, by proclamation, declares to be exempt from the provisions of this section.

Let us admit that the withdrawing of this road from Ottawa to Carleton Place from the local jurisdiction and putting it under the federal law would enable them to run Sunday excursions. Then what would be the position of things? It would be that the parliament of Canada, by proclamation, can pick out railways all over the country that they can withdraw from the operation of this law. Is that a reasonable thing to do? What would the advocates of the Lord's Day Alliance say, if, under the operation of this law, the Governor in Council had power to withdraw from the operation of the local Act the greatest violators of the law? If you did not withdraw the line from Ottawa to Carleton Place, from the operation of the law you would have two railways running side by side, one of which would be perfectly free to run Sunday excursions, while the other would be exposed to heavy penalties for running Sunday excursions. Read the whole of this subsection and you will find it provides for the exemption of railways very generally from the operation of the clause. It says:

> 3. This section shall not apply, so as to interfere with or affect through traffic thereon, to any railway or part of a railway which forms part of a continuous route or system operated between two or more provinces or between any province and a foreign country, or to any railway or part of a railway between any of the ports on the Great Lakes and such continuous route or system; nor shall it apply to any railway or part of a railway which the Governor in Council, by proclamation, declares to be exempt from the provisions of this section.

That is, the Governor in Council may declare any railway, notwithstanding it ought to be, as the hon. Secretary of State says, a local work, from the operation of this provincial legislation. You have only to look into this and you will find that the whole Bill is a mere attempt to throw dust in the eyes of the Lord's Day Alliance people. When it comes to be worked out practically it will be found to be of no value whatever. They have asked for bread and the government has given them a stone.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—My hon. friend will surely admit this, that half a loaf is better than no bread. The Lord's Day Alliance cannot get everything they wish to get under the present conditions. There is uncertainty with regard to where the power of legislating for Sunday observance lies. The provinces have certain powers, and would have continued to exercise those powers over all local railways, had it not been for the parliament of the Dominion declaring some of them to be for the general advantage of Canada. The hon. Secretary of State put that in a nutshell when he gave his explanation a moment ago. My hon. friend from Marshfield has mentioned a case. Such anomolies may exist, but, after all, is it not better to have the law in such a shape that you can meet a certain amount of evil if you cannot deal with the whole of it? Unless the question is settled where the power of legislating lies, legislation that will reach evils that still exist cannot be passed. In the meantime, this is considered to be the best measure that could be introduced and passed. My hon. friend insinuates that perhaps after all this is an attempt on the part of the government to throw dust in the eyes of the Lord's Day Alliance. I am glad to be able to testify that such is not the case, because the Lord's Day Alliance themselves prepared and submitted this very Bill, evading as far as possible any difficulty, and the government have so far conceded the different clauses of it, in the meantime, accepting them until the question with regard to Sunday legislation is absolutely decided.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am sure nobody will take exception to the first part of this clause. It recognizes a principle on which this honourable House came in conflict with the House of Commons last session in connection with the Railway Bill. It was then contended by the House of Commons that a railway had to be declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada in toto if at all—that it could not be done partially. We contended that it could be done partially, and this principle is recognized by the first portion of clause 3. The hon. gentleman from Marshfield takes exception to the last three lines of the first paragraph. I would call his attention to this fact, that this last portion of the clause is, I take it, in relation to the first subsection, 6a, which has the effect of validating all Acts passed by the legislature of any province before the passing of this Act. After the passing of this Bill, Acts of that kind passed by the province of Ontario will govern all local railways. It is legislation which may affect vested rights, and the power which is given by the last portion of paragraph 3. I take it to be, in order that the Governor in Council, if cause is shown that serious rights are affected, may remove such railway from the operation of clause 6a of this Bill. For my part, I entirely approve of that clause.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In section 59 of the Railway Act, passed last session, an important section was left out. The general rule in incorporating special companies, is to insert a provision that a general meeting shall be held on a particular day, and it is usual to name the day in a special Act, but they generally have this qualification: 'Or on such other day as the directors may determine.' We propose to add after the word 'Act' in this section the following:

Or on such other day as the directors may determine.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Some of the special Acts have that provision.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Most of them have. That will be section 3.

On clause 3.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This clause is in reference to ascertaining the earnings of the Grand Trunk Railway on its portion of the line, and the portion controlled by the government. It is a matter of the toils which will have to be levied on each section of the line, after it comes into operation. It will be a matter for the Railway Commission.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Part of the provision which is in that section accords with my own views, and last year the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry will remember very well, I made a very strenuous effort to give the Railway Commission some power to deal with through rates for the Intercolonial Railway so that they would have power to say that the Intercolonial Railway got its fair share of this apportionment. My hon. friend the Secretary of State will remember that after the general question was settled in this House, that the Act would not be made to apply to the Intercolonial Railway as a whole, I made a very strenuous effort that it should be made to apply to it in the matter of through rates. I am delighted to find the views I expressed so strongly, and which were accepted by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, are now accepted by the government, and are made a portion of the law.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS, from the committee, reported the Bill with an amendment, which was concurred in.

The Bill was then read a third time, and passed, under a suspension of the rules.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION COMMITTEE REPORT.

DEBATE RESUMED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Resuming the adjourned debate on the consideration of the Seventh Report of the Select Committee appointed to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York.—(Hon. Mr. Domville.)

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Before commencing the discussion on this report, I have a suggestion to make to the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry. Seeing that the papers to which he objects in the report, as not being evidence, or the purport of them, is to be incorporated in the debates, the object of his amendment is defeated, and I therefore think it would be as well to withdraw it and close up the discussion. If the hon. gentleman could have eliminated those words, or the reference to those papers that are not considered evidence, then there might be some force in the amendment, but the hon. gentleman from Rothesay has placed those papers on the debates of the House, and therefore the force of that amendment is entirely lost, and by withdrawing that amendment it will stop all the long discussion, and the House can proceed with the other business before it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have the misfortune of not agreeing with my hon. friend from British Columbia. For my part, I made the motion because I thought it incumbent upon me as a member of the committee, and as a member of this House, not to be a party to admitting as evidence what I consider to be merely a libel, altogether unsupported in any shape or form, and I have, therefore, no desire to withdraw the motion which I have made.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a question of order, and I will do my best possible to obtain a favourable decision. If I cannot succeed it will not be my fault. I will try to make my point as strong as possible.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It will be weak then, will it ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is not the hon. gentleman from de Lorimier who is making the motion. The amendment moved by my hon. friend from de Salaberry is not in order because the amendment is not relevant to the main motion.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I rise to another question of order. The hon. gentleman is speaking to a motion for concurrence in the report of the Committee on Printing.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman is not up-to-date.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—To what question is the hon. gentleman addressing himself ? There is nothing before the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The difficulty is increasing. I thought I would have enough difficulty in making myself understood by the hon. Speaker, and now there is another hon. member who wishes to understand me also, and with the disposition he is in, I fail to see how I could meet this double difficulty. I will repeat my remarks for the advantage of the hon. member. I raise the point that the amendment of my hon. friend which is now before the House—

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No, no.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What is before the House ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—There is nothing before the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Was the hon. member sleeping ? I think before he says there is nothing before the House, he should inform himself——

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—There is a motion to adopt the report, and an amendment by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It has not been called.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It has been called, and the Speaker asked to have it stand for a moment to permit the adoption of a report of the Joint Committee on Printing, and that motion having been passed, we fall back to the previous question.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I doubt very much that it has been put.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is no doubt whatever.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That difficulty having been removed, we will try to remove another difficulty. I claim that this amendment is not relevant to the motion. What is the motion? The main motion is the consideration, not of the evidence, but of that part of the proceedings of the committee which refers to a point of order taken by my hon. friend from de Salaberry in the committee, decided against him by the chairman, supported by the committee, whose decision has been challenged by the hon. member, and appealed to this House. That is, the consideration of the seventh report is not the consideration of the evidence. It is the consideration of that point of order. The amendment deals with a different subject altogether, and asks for the elimination of a part of the evidence.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—That is an amendment to the report.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I understood, when the chairman of that defunct committee made a motion for the consideration of the seventh report, that the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry moved in amendment the elimination of the document Exhibit 36. That is an amendment, and I say it is not relevant, because the amendment applies to the main motion, which is not the consideration of the evidence, but which is the decision of a point of order that was raised in the committee. That special seventh report deals with the point of order. It has nothing at all to do with the evidence. Bourinot, at page 444, lays down the following principle :—

> Sir Erskine May, in the edition of 1893, however, lays it down as an imperative rule that every amendment must be relevant to the question on which the amendment is proposed—except in cases of amendment moved to the question for the Speaker's leaving the chair for the Committee of Supply or Ways and Means.

We all know questions can come up at that stage, and there is no relation between the amendments and in ways and means. The extract continues :—

> A motion having been made to declare Michael Davitt incapable of being elected or returned, as a member, it was proposed to amend the same by substituting an address to the Crown for a free pardon ; but the Speaker promptly interposed. and pointed out that such an amendment was inadmissible as it had no relation to the question before the House, but should form the subject of a distinct motion after notice given in the usual manner. The law of the relevancy of amendments seems now to be that if they are on the same subject matter with the original motion, they are admissible, but not when foreign thereto. The exceptions to this rule are amendments on the question of going into supply or ways and means. Amendments to Bills also, like amendments to the Orders of the Day, must strictly relate to the Bill which the House, by its order, has resolved upon considering.

In the decision given by Dennison and Brand, in Blackmore's 'Speaker's Decisions,' we find the following :—

> Amendments are inadmissible which reopen a question already settled ; which are not germane to the question under consideration ; which go back to an earlier part of a question already determined.

Then on page 10 we find the following :

> An amendment must be relevant to the question.

And we will see in what particular case that decision was given. It is as follows :

> Army Regulation Bill.
> Bill considered in committee.
> Motion made and question proposed for the committee to sit again to-morrow.
> Mr. G. Bentinck moved—That the House at its rising do adjourn until a quarter before 4 o'clock to-morrow.
> Mr. Speaker—The question before the House is, that the committee do sit again to-morrow at 2 o'clock, and the hon. member's amendment is that the House do adjourn till a quarter to 4 to-morrow. That is not a suitable amendment. The amendment must be relevant to the question when the committee should again sit.

I think there is a great deal less difference between those two motions, the main motion put in that committee, and that amendment, than between the two that are now before the chair. The second reason for which that amendment should not be taken into consideration is because it is an interference with what took place in the committee, and I shall substantiate that argument by the followng example : It is in effect an appeal from the decision of the committee.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I think that point has been already settled.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am stating that as a second argument, and I shall make it good.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I raise the question that this was made the subject of a point of order by the hon. gentleman the other day, and decided against him.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Not a bit of it. Let me state it and the hon. gentleman will see if it is the same. It is a well-known doctrine that the committees are of, we will say, three kinds. It is laid down in Bourinot and May and different authors. There is the Committee of the Whole House. That is the committee where all the members of the House attend, the Speaker leaving the chair, and calling a member of the House to the chair. In those committees, as all the House are present, everyone takes notice of what is going on.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Mr. Speaker——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I have the floor and I raise a question of order.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER—If the hon. gentleman from Stadacona would be allowed to proceed and state his case, it would shorten the debate.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I was just saying that in Committee of the Whole all the House being present, take cognizance of what is going on in committee, and there is in the House of Commons a special rule which allows an appeal from a decision taken in Committee of the Whole to the Speaker or to the House. The chairman then rises and reports the question to the Speaker, and the Speaker puts the question to the House. That is one of the committees, the Committee of the Whole, but in a Select or Standing Committee, matters are not on the same footing at all. Take a Select Committee composed, as in this case, of nineteen members, sitting outside of the chamber, their proceedings are quite unknown to the majority of this House, and it is for that reason in England, and in the Senate also, you will not find a single rule which gives to this House the right to overrule what has been decided in a Select Committee. If we look at page 375 of May, we find the following :—

No appeal can be made to the Speaker regarding the decision and rulings of a chairman of a standing committee.

If we look at Blackmore, page 103, we find the following :—

Order in committee is settled by the chairman at once, and cannot be raised subsequently.
Questions of order in committee are settled by the chairman.
Mr. Speaker has no authority to interfere in a matter which has occurred in committee, and which the committee has settled for itself.

If we look at Peel's Decisions, we find at page 54 :—

The chairman of a committtee is the sole judge of what takes place in committee, and from his decisions there is no appeal to the Speaker.

The SPEAKER—That was a Committee of the Whole House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I beg pardon, there is an appeal from the Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER—Not to the Speaker. That is the decision the hon. gentleman has read. It was the case of an appeal from the Committee of the Whole House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That the chairman of a committee is the sole judge of what takes place in committee, and from his decision there is no appeal to the Speaker.

The SPEAKER—That is correct. I cited that four days ago.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I rise to a point of order. I do not see that the question whether there is an appeal to the Speaker comes up at all. There is no question of appeal to the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is not settled. I quote from the parliamentary debates of the British parliament, third series 332, page 1011 :

Mr. Speaker—I may as well answer this question at once, although I might properly refuse to answer it, as it is in the nature of an appeal from the chairman of a committee to the Speaker, which is quite unusual. There is no such thing as an appeal from the chairman of a committee to the Speaker ; but as a matter of courtesy of the hon. member I may say that the proper course was followed. These words are not a preamble.

This was in reply to a question as to whether it was not competent in committee to make such a motion.

The SPEAKER—Why did not the hon. gentleman go on and read the whole of it ? The Speaker ruled that the appeal was to the House and not to the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The remainder of the quotation is :

These words are not a preamble in the strict or even ordinary sense of the term, and the practice is that in money Bills and Bills of this nature the preamble is never put.

That is all. In the English 'Hansard,' fourth series, volume 9, page 427, we find this :

Mr. Speaker—It is clearly not a question for me to decide, it is a question for the chairman of the committee, from whose decision there is no appeal.

This was a decision on a point of order raised by Mr. Sexton, who asked whether a question put by another member did not involve a question of interpretation and other questions which must be decided by the chairman of Ways and Means. What I contend is, that in this House we are governed by the rules of the House of Lords when we have no rule of our own. That is provided for in rule 124, which says :

In all unprovided cases the rules, usages and forms of proceeding of the House of Lords are to be followed.

I have quoted from May that there is no appeal from the decision of the chairman of the committee to the House. I give a third reason why this amendment should not be accepted ; the first is, because it is not relevant, the second because it is an interference with what took place in committee, and third, because it is moved by a member who has lost his right to move an amendment, having already spoken on the motion.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. Speaker decided that point. The exception was taken, and it was passed upon, and it is too late to raise that now.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. member from de Salaberry rose on Monday, and we find him reported in the Debates as follows, speaking on the seventh report :—

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The seventh report, which is now before the House, has reference to a motion which was made by myself before the committee, that the resolution passed by this honourable Senate be carried out, to wit, that two witnesses, one Cameron and one Cannon be examined by the committee.

In the middle of the next page you will find another paragraph of the hon. gentleman's speech, and also in the second column in the second page, he makes a third and fourth speech, and at the bottom of the page he says :

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If I am in error, we would have to wait until the chairman of the committee formally reports, in accordance with the motion of the hon. member from Stadacona, to wit, that the evidence be reported to this honourable House ; but, anyway, in one case as in the other, it is premature to take this seventh report into consideration, because it was agreed unanimously by this House that it was to be taken into consideration only when the evidence is taken up.

Further on, on page 970, we find these remarks of the hon. gentleman :

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If it is the desire of the House to take up the question now, I am going to move an amendment to the motion of the hon. gentleman, but I thought it my duty to call the attention of the House to the understanding arrived at the other day, and I am in the hands of the House. I drew attention to the fact that it was understood the other day that this seventh report would be taken up when the evidence was taken up, but if it is the desire to dispose of this matter at once I am ready to move an amendment to the motion which has been offered by the hon. gentleman from Victoria division, so that we may proceed at once with the matter, and dispose of it.

Instead of making this motion, he took his seat ; he did not move his amendment. The hon. member from Marshfield rose and made a speech, and then further on the hon. member from de Salaberry proposed his motion in amendment. Against those pretentions I will quote from Bourinot, page 469. He says :

It is the practice in the Canadian House for the member who makes a motion to give the name of his seconder, who may, if necessary, lift his hat as evidence that he has intimated his consent, and under such circumstances he is allowed to speak at a subsequent stage of the debate on the question. But if a member who moves an Order of the Day or seconds a motion and rise and say only a word or two—that he moves the Order or seconds the motion—he is precluded from again addressing the House, according to a strict interpretation of the rules. In moving an amendment a member is obliged to rise, and though he may only propose his amendment, he is considered to have exhausted his right to speak on the question before the House. On the same principle when a member rises and simply reads a substantive motion to the House he is considered to have spoken to the question, but he may claim the right of reply at a later stage.

Now if we refer to Denison's and Brand's Decisions, page 173, we find this :

An hon. member having made a motion or spoken or moved an amendment, cannot rise again and speak or make a motion.

And on page 12 :

A member who has spoken without moving his amendment cannot move that amendment subsequently, but must place it in the hands of another hon. member.

An hon. member who has spoken to a question cannot, at a later stage move an amendment.

Then the following case is given :—

Mr. O'Donnell (for Mr. Sullivan) having moved an amendment which he subsequently withdrew, rose to move the amendment which appeared on the paper in his name, when Mr. Speaker decided that he could not move it, as he had already spoken to the question before the House.

I think with these decisions, apart from the fact that the amendment is not relevant —because if the amendment is carried it applies to evidence which is not before the House—that the hon. member is not in order. What is before the House actually is a motion on the question of an appeal from a decision given in a select committee. The motion is not relevant; it is an interference with what took place in the committee, and it is moved by a member who has lost the right to move his amendment, because having stood up to move his amendment he sat down, gave way and lost his right.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I shall answer briefly two of the grounds taken by the hon. member. As far as the second ground is concerned, I think it perfectly unnecessary to answer his argument, because the point was raised and decided. At the outset it was decided by the Speaker, and an appeal was made to the House, and the decision of the Speaker was sustained. Therefore, the hon. member cannot raise it again. He attempted to raise it again after the decision, and I took the point that it was attempting to raise the same question for other reasons which he had not given at the outset, and the hon. member did not persist. Now, taking the last ground, that I have spoken already, and am, therefore, not entitled to speak again. I did not speak to the motion. I spoke on three or four occasions merely for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to the fact that an understanding had been arrived at by hon. members unanimously, to this effect, that the seventh report should be taken into consideration only when the final report was taken up. I spoke on that question, and that alone. I wound up by saying, however, if it was the desire of the House that the question be taken up and disposed of I was prepared to take it up. Then the hon. member from Marshfield rose and expressed a desire to that effect, and in compliance with that desire I said, 'I have no objection to take up the question, and I am prepared to move an amendment.' I was asked by the hon. member from Victoria, B.C., to read the amendment, so that it might be better understood, which I did. The hon. member from Stadacona then rose to a point of order, and the report of the discussion that took place appears at page 971 of the debates:

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has already spoken once.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He did, and when I made the objection just now, he sat down, because he had already spoken once.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Let me explain. I got up merely to call the attention of the House to the fact that the matter was to be taken up when the evidence was being considered. I did not speak to the motion at all. I merely rose for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is speaking and I ask the ruling of the chair.

The SPEAKER—I do not think that should be considered as speaking.

There was a ruling on the very point which the hon. gentleman is raising again. The hon. gentleman should be satisfied with the innumerable points of order that he is raising without repeating them, giving us a second, a third and sometimes a fourth edition on the same points. As far as the first reason is concerned, that is easily answered. The seventh report, which gave rise to a motion made by the hon. member from Victoria, to wit, that the report be adopted, and to which the amendment I moved and which is now before this honourable House, was made, embodies the decision of the committee, that exhibit 36, the exhibit in question, be admitted as evidence for the purposes mentioned in the motion of the hon. member from Stadacona; that is the motion which forms part of the seventh report. That motion is brought up by the seventh report, and there is the objection also which I took to that exhibit forming part of the proceedings. The chairman overruled my point of order, and there is my intention of appealing to the House from the decision of the chairman. There is also in that report, and forming part of it, the evidence containing the document in question, 'and a copy of the said evidence as herewith submitted.' We have now to deal with the motion of the hon. gentleman from Victoria, that this report be adopted. If that motion was to pass unchallenged, what would be the consequence? This honourable House would adopt the evidence, would make it part of its proceedings, and would confirm the resolution of the committee admitting this document as evidence. Surely it was germane to the motion that the report be adopted, to wit, that this evidence be accepted by the House, and especially that this document be admitted as evidence—it was germane to that motion when I moved that it be not received, but that the motion be amended by declaring that that document, No. 36, be expunged from the proceedings of the committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is not the point of order ; that was decided in committee.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I had two recourses; I had the recourse which I intimated I would at first take, of asking that the decision of the chairman of the committee be overruled by the House. It would not have affected the document, but merely the motion of the hon. member that the document be received as evidence for a certain purpose; the document would have remained there all the same, and the committee would have had to take up the matter again. It would have left the matter entire before the committee. But the committee having ceased to exist, my appeal would have had no purpose, and by my amendment I go to the very root of the question, not to send the matter to the committee to be dealt with by the committee, but inviting the House, the supreme body, to decide whether that document should be received in evidence or not.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I find the explanation of the hon. member from de Salaberry very slim and of a very quibbling nature.

The SPEAKER—I must ask the hon. gentleman not to use language of that kind. Sharp and taxing language is calculated to lead to unpleasantness.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Such language has been used in the debate before now, and I do not see any difference between the use of the word quibbling yesterday and the use of it to-day. If it be objectionable it is a pity attention was not called to it before. I adhere to the expression 'slim arguments' used by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry. In the first place, he combats one of the reasons raised by the hon. member from Stadacona by saying that he did not speak while this motion to adopt the report was under consideration in this House. If anybody will take the trouble of going through the debates, he will find the hon. gentleman spoke once, twice, three times, four, five, six, seven——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Oh, that is enough.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We will get the exact number—eight. On the eighth occasion he says, 'If it is the desire of the House to take up the matter now I am going to move an amendment.' That was the time he moved the amendment.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is due to ourselves that this House should be protected. The Speaker decided that the hon. member from de Salaberry had not spoken in a sense which precluded him from speaking again. Why then does the hon. gentleman discuss it again? It is certainly out of order to challenge the decision of the chair.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I do not know that any decision of the chair was rendered to-night. I am not alluding to any past debate.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It was decided when the hon. gentleman raised the point of order the other day. The Speaker decided that the hon. member from de Salaberry was within his right, that he had not spoken in any way to preclude his making a motion. Now, if that is right, surely this House must protect itself against challenging the decision of the chair, and taking up so much time in going over a point that has been already settled. Surely we must protect ourselves.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Certainly that is what we are trying to do.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman is out of order, but he has the floor.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—A point was raised by the hon. member from Marshfield, and I should like to have a decision by the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry has given his answer to the point of order, and now the hon. member from Marshfield wants the House to protect itself against what ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Against challenging the decision of the Speaker. I asked for a ruling.

The SPEAKER—A ruling has been asked for. The hon. gentleman is undoubtedly out of order in undertaking to declare that a ruling which I gave two days ago was not correct. That is practically what it is. I ruled that the hon. member from de Salaberry had the right to make the motion which he did, and the hon. gentleman is simply reflecting on my decision.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I bow most respectfully to the decision of the chair, but I regret to find that both the hon. member from Marshfield and the Speaker are under a misapprehension as to the point I am taking. I am not calling in question the decision of the chair, which I respected the night before last and respect to-night.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman, I understood, rose to discuss the point of order raised by the hon. gentleman for Stadacona.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am giving information, but apparently I cannot give understanding. That was told to me here one evening, and I am glad to repeat it to the House. If I fail to make the hon. member for Marshfield understand the point I am making, it will only devolve on me to use a little more effort, that is all. The hon. member from Stadacona has made to my mind, a clear point of order. The hon. member from de Salaberry has a perfect right to answer that point of order and has made the best of his case. I consider the best of his case a very poor statement. The reason is this: he wants to convey to the House that he did not speak to the motion, when I find in the debates—and this is not attempting to reflect on the decision of the Speaker——

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I think hon. gentlemen will all see that this is really a series of running comments on the decision given by the Speaker. I appeal to the hon. gentleman from Victoria to respect the Senate.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I regret exceedingly that the attitude of the hon. member from de Salaberry and the hon. member from Marshfield is concurrent with the attitude of the Speaker. As I have distinctly stated, I respectfully bow to the decision of the Speaker, and do not want to challenge him in every respect, but when I find an hon. member whose attitude is challenged by a colleague who has given his answer, and an answer which I do not admit to be proper, am I to be held out of order because the remarks I have to make in answer to his statement, not on account of any wish on my part, reflect on previous rulings. When the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry stated that he had not spoken to the motion—as a matter of fact, the debates show that he spoke nine times. All the authorities quoted by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona bear him out in this, that once a senator has spoken one word—and it has happened to me,—but simply having risen, and when called to order, on again rising, is not allowed to move an amendment. The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry has spoken not only one word but has spoken eight times. His speeches are on record in the debates, and when the hon. gentleman from Stadacona puts these facts before this honourable House and before the Speaker backed by the authorities which he has quoted after close study for the last two weeks, he is asserting the rights of each individual senator, and it is not proper for any hon. senator to ask the Speaker to protect this House against what is their privilege and their right. That is the first point. Now, in regard to the relevancy of the motion, all hon. members have to do is to read the report. I shall not read it. It appears on page 642 of the Minutes. They will find the report of the Select Committee, the consideration of which I moved in this honourable House. That was under consideration for an hour or two, and finally the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry moved an amendment, which I, jointly with the hon. member from Stadacona, considered to be completely irrelevant, to the motion I made, and cannot be attached. It may be—well, I cannot use the word; I do not know the word to use, but I would not dare use the word which has been used—sharp practice, but I do not know why this thing is brought up in this way. I never use a word reflecting on the character of hon. senators.

The SPEAKER—If the hon. gentleman will confine himself to the question of order——

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am confining myself to the debate raised on the floor of this House. I am now on the question of the relevancy of the motion made by myself on behalf of the committee, that their seventh report be considered, and I hold, with the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, that the amendment of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry is not relevant. That can be ascertained by putting the two together, the amendment as written and drafted by the hon. senator, and the report of the committee. Although a young member of this House, I stand up for the rights of committees. The hon. member from Stadacona has quoted numerous authorities where the rights and privileges of a committee, and the chairman of a committee, should not be interfered with by the House or by the Speaker. He has quoted numerous authorities, the best that English parliamentary history can give us, and it is there laid down that the decisions of the chairman of a committee, especially where they are endorsed by the committee, should not be interfered with by the House or by the Speaker. That is parliamentary history. It is parliamentary procedure. That is the endorsation of centuries of parliamentary procedure, but for some hidden purpose these opinions, these decisions of the chairman, the work of the committee, are challenged openly before the Speaker and before this House, without any fair or full knowledge of what transpired before the committee. I hold that the hon. gentleman from Stadacona discharged a duty to this House, and to the parliamentary privileges of the Senate, when he quoted the authority of English procedure in this matter, and proved that neither this House nor the hon. Speaker has the right to interfere with the work of the committee, nor the decisions of the chairman, except on grave occasions. These are the opinions for which I now stand, and as I stood this afternoon, and for the opinions of the hon. leader of the opposition in a matter that would seriously affect the privileges of parliament.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Order. I am not prepared to tolerate any longer the lecture the hon. gentleman has been giving the hon. members of this House, as to their duty. I think they knew their duty before the hon. gentleman was born.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I do not propose to accept a lecture either. I am standing here backing the opinion of a large number of hon. gentlemen, and I do not want to be lectured.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The hon. gentleman is entirely out of order.

The SPEAKER—Better let the hon. gentleman proceed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He will never finish.

The SPEAKER—If the House is ready for my decision, I am ready to give it. The hon. gentleman has given three reasons—I had better be careful—three alleged reasons why this motion is not in order, as I understand.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I did not say alleged.

The SPEAKER—First, that the amendment is not relevant. I think the hon. gentleman is probably—I do not wish to use too strong a term—confounding the motion of which the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry has given notice, that he would appeal from the decision of the chairman of the Select Committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, not at all.

The SPEAKER—The first ground taken, is that the amendment is not relevant to the motion. The motion made by the hon. gentleman from Victoria, was that the seventh report of the committee to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York be concurred in. That report was one which covered, as the hon. gentleman told us, part 5 of the evidence.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, no.

The SPEAKER—I spoke from memory. I paid a good deal of attention to the speeches which the hon. gentleman from Victoria made——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is a special report, for that point of order.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It included the evidence.

The SPEAKER—The report reported the evidence. It brought the evidence before the House. This evidence was before the Senate, and the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry then moved in amendment 'that the report be not now adopted, but that all the words after the word 'that' be struck out and that the following be substituted therefor. The document exhibit No. 6 mentioned and referred to in the said seventh report, is not admissible as evidence of any statement therein contained, and should be expunged from the evidence reported to this House. The motion of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry is practically that this document should be expunged from the evidence. No hon. gentleman in this House will undertake to say that when a report comes before the Senate containing evidence, the Senate has not the right to expunge from that report anything which it pleases; so that the amendment is perfectly relevant. The report brings up the evidence, and asks the House to accept that evidence, as the evidence which should be before it, and the amendment proposes to strike out a certain portion of the evidence. I do not think an amendment could well be more relevant to a motion than that is. So that on the ground of irrelevancy the point of order is not well taken. Then the hon. gentleman took the ground that there is no appeal from the decision of the committee. That might be a good enough ground to take if the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry had moved by way of appeal against the decision of a committee or the chairman of a committee, but he did not. He has moved a substantive motion with respect to the evidence which is before the House, and which he has a perfect right to move, and there is no necessity to consider the other appeal. The authorities which the hon. gentleman cited were very good authorities, but they do not happen to be relevant to this question. Then as to the fact that the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry had spoken, he may have spoken twenty times, but as a matter of fact he moved this resolution. The question of order was raised when he moved the resolution, and it was held, rightly or wrongly, that he had the right to move the amendment, and that was the time to take the objection. But to take the objection two days afterwards that the hon. gentleman had spoken twice, and consequently could not move the amendment, must strike hon. gentlemen as being perfectly absurd on the face of it, particularly in a House like this, where we are not very strict about rules. Therefore, my decision is that the points of order of the hon. gentleman are not well taken.

The SPEAKER.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Of course the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry is responsible for this long debate, precipitated on the House by what has been considered an unusual course, although the hon. Speaker has ruled in his favour, and I am naturally bound to accept it; but the hon. Speaker has ruled that this motion is in order, because it is to expunge a part of this report, and I had started reading this report, and the cutting out of a portion of it was going to materially interfere with the whole context. If it is the wish of the House I shall move the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I beg to ask the hon. Secretary of State when I may expect to get the returns I moved for, for which the order of the House was given, relating to the 'Gauss' and the 'Neptune,' to Joseph Painchaud and a few others. I want to get them before the House prorogues.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have done all I could. I think the hon. gentleman is entitled to the returns. I have been very much annoyed about it, and I need not state the views I expressed to the department. They have promised to send these returns over to me, but I have not received them, and I cannot do anything more.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—For the information of the hon. minister I may state that last year before the House prorogued the return for the 'Neptune' was ready in the Marine Department. I asked for it early this session, and I know it is ready.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to call the attention of the Secretary of State also to a return for which I moved, in connection with the reports that were made by Col. Prince on the investigation of the charges made in reference to the 'Gauss,' and I should like if possible to get the return in connection with the ice-breakers., I also called the attention of the hon. gentleman the other day to the return which was moved for by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona with reference to the appointment of honorary colonels. That of course was a year or two ago.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That return was brought down.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Last session.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Could the hon. gentleman tell me where it could be found?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I have a memo. on my desk to give the hon. gentleman. I will produce it in the morning. It went to the Printing Committee, and they ordered it to be printed, and it is printed in the appendices. I had it looked up in order to give the hon. gentleman the information.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like the hon. gentleman to furnish the following information for the Senate when the question of the purchase of the Eastern Extension Railway is under consideration. A Bill has been introduced in the Lower House for the purchase of that line, running from Chatham to Fredericton, also the taking over of the St. John bridge. If the hon. gentleman could have the information furnished, with the information showing the original cost of the road, and the bounties and subsidies which the company had received, and the cost of operating the road per year for a number of years past, together with receipts, in order that we might be enabled to understand thoroughly the responsibilities that we are assuming in the purchase of that road.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall endeavour to get all that information.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman would also ascertain what is the weight of the rails that have been used in the construction of the road, together with the condition of the road at the present moment, because it may be in the same state as the Drummond County was in, which cost a million or two to put in repair. I think the Senate would like to have the information to which I have called attention, to enable them to deal intelligently with the question when it comes before them. I am not going to discuss the propriety of it now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will endeavour to get it. In regard to the bridge, hon. gentlemen will remember, we are the owners of the bridge. We had a mortgage on it, and the interest has not been paid, and we simply took it over. The rails were only sixty pounds to the yard, I think. Perhaps I am mistaken. I know they were not higher than that.

The Senate adjourned until eleven a.m. to-morrow.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, August 4, 1904,

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven a.m.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THE COPYRIGHT QUESTION.

MOTION ALLOWED TO STAND.

The notice of motion being called:

By the Hon. Mr. David:—
That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate copies of all correspondence, petitions and documents in the hands of the government, being connected with the copyright question, and the law on the subject; also, for a statement of the number of foreign books which have been reprinted in Canada in accordance with our laws on copyright.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I would like to have this motion stand.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understood the hon. gentleman had the report to which this motion refers handed to him yesterday?

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Yes, I have part of the return, but I am not in a position to draw conclusions from those documents. A good deal of time will be required for consideration, and I ask that the motion be allowed to stand once more for the last time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no objection to the motion standing, but I am calling the attention of the House to the irregular way in which these reports are laid on the table. I placed a notice on the paper a short time ago for a return, and before I could make the motion the hon. Secretary of State said he had the document ready for me. Not giving it proper reflection, I withdrew my motion, and that removed it altogether from the records of the House. In this case the hon. gentleman gave notice of the motion for papers on a very important subject. I am very glad he did, so, because it is a subject which has agitated this country, more particularly the publishers, for a number of years. Then when the motion is called, the hon. gentleman rises in his place and says 'I have that return.'

Hon. Mr. WILSON—It is hardly fair to raise this question in the absence of the hon. Secretary of State. Perhaps the leader of the opposition will wait until he comes in.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have said already all that I intended to say, but I do not know that the business of the House has to be stopped, particularly at this stage of the session, because the ministers of the Crown are not here. It is their duty to be here.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—There are times when a minister cannot be in his place.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not care——

Hon. Mr. WILSON—We ought to care. We ought to consider the rules of courtesy which one gentleman should show to another.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not propose to be read a lecture by the hon. gentleman as to what constitutes gentlemanly conduct. I appreciate what the hon. gentleman said. I felt the force of what he said before I rose—the absence of the hon. Secretary of State—but had I not called attention to the fact then, I would have had no opportunity to do so again unless I encroached on the time of the House. I had no right to do so. I know my duty here, and I do not think the hon. Secretary of State or any one else will accuse me of taking advantage of his absence, or treating him in what the hon. gentleman calls an 'ungentlemanly manner.'

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I do not think the leader of the opposition should imagine I was reading him a lecture. I was merely calling attention to the fact that the leader of the House was not in his place——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I said he ought to be here.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I called the attention of the hon. leader of the opposition to the fact that sometimes people cannot always be in their place. The Secretary of State is now in his place, and it is an easy matter for the leader of the opposition to refer to the matter and not imagine that I was trying to read him a lecture. He is about the last man to whom I would try to read a lecture.

The motion was allowed to stand.

THE LIEUTENANT GOVERNORSHIP OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON rose to :

Call the attention of the Senate to the delay which has occurred in filling the office of Lieutenant Governor of Prince Edward Island, and will inquire of the government when an appointment will be made to that position ?

He said : The vacancy, I think, stands since the 23rd of May. It is true, the late Lieutenant Governor continues to act until his successor is appointed, but three months have expired, and it is time that we should know whether Governor McIntyre is to have a second term, or a new appointment is to be made.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think there has been any improper delay in this matter. The history of the appointments of Lieutenant Governors, and their successors shows that neither government has been prompt to remove a Lieutenant Governor at the expiration of his term. Sir Leonard Tilley held his position after a second term for three years. John Beverly Robinson held his for two years. Mr. Howland was appointed on the 24th February, 1894, and this government did not think proper to remove him or appoint a successor until May, 1899. He retained the office over three months after the expiration of his term. In this case the period is not yet three months. I mention these cases to show the practice that has prevailed in the past. I need not go beyond the immediate predecessor of the present Lieutenant Governor, who held this position one month beyond the term and nobody objected. There has been a pressure of parliamentary business this session, and everything has been running at high speed. The subject has not been brought up or referred to. It has not been forgotten, and it will be attended to as soon as parliament rises.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not think my hon. friend is correct in saying that when similar cases occurred in the past no attention was paid to them. If my memory serves me, in the case to which the hon. gentleman refers, the Lieutenant Governorship of Ontario, the opposition made a dead set to have a successor appointed. It was claimed that the Lieutenant Governor's term having been extended, it gave the government improper control over him.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That was two years; there is a great difference between two years and three months.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The length of time does not at all settle the matter. It might be possible to do more harm in three months than in two years.

QUEBEC AND LEVIS FERRY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

1. Is there a contract between the government and the person who actually transfers baggage from the Quebec and Lévis ferry-boats to the trains of the Intercolonial Railway, or from the trains of the Intercolonial Railway to the said ferry-boats ?
2. If there is a contract, what is the amount of it, its duration, and who obtained it ?
3. If there is no contract, who at present makes this transfer, and on what conditions does he make it ?
4. In the latter case, why have tenders not been asked for ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The replies are as follows :—

1. There was a contract entered into in January, 1899, between Her Majesty and Napoleon Hallé and Narcisse Marceau for hauling baggage from the Quebec and Lévis ferry-boats to the trains of the Intercolonial Railway, and vice versa.

2. The contract price for hauling the baggage was eight cents per load. The contract was to terminate upon either of the parties thereto giving one month's notice.

3. In February, 1904, Messrs, Hallé & Marceau gave notice that they could not continue to do the work at the rate named in the contract, and at the end of a month thereafter the contract terminated. Tenders were then invited, but no offers were received. An arrangement was then made with Messrs. Hallé & Marceau to continue to do the work at fourteen cents a load, which was the lowest price they were willing to perform the service for.

4. Answered by number 3.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

1. Did a person named Rouleau, of Lévis, once have the contract for the transfer of baggage from the trains of the Intercolonial Railway to the ferry-boats between Quebec and Lévis, and vice versa ?
2. Did the government afterwards give this contract to Messrs. Hallé & Marceau ?
3. In what year, and for what reasons, was this contract taken away from Mr. Rouleau ?
4. Have Messrs Hallé & Marceau relinquished their contract to the government ?
5. Why ?
6. Was it on the expiration or before the expiration of the said contract ?
7. Who succeeded Messrs. Hallé & Marceau, and who is now doing the work for the execution of which they had the contract ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The reply to the first question is :—

In March, 1897, a contract was entered into with Messrs. Rouleau & Begin for the transfer of baggage to and from the Quebec and Lévis ferry-boats and the Intercolonial Railway.

2. Yes.

3. In December, 1898. Complaints were received by the minister that Messrs. Rouleau & Begin were not doing the work satisfactorily; therefore a form of surrender of the contract was sent them which they signed. Tenders were then invited and the contract was awarded to Messrs. Hallé & Marceau.

4. Yes.

5. Because they could not perform the work at the price named in the contract.

6. At the expiration by notice.

7. No one. Messrs, Hallé & Marceau continued to do the work at an increased price.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE inquired :

If the government is aware that the House of Lords in England in the case of Foster vs. the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York on appeal from the Court of Appeal there has given judgment against the company ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I heard of it as I came into the chamber a few minutes ago. I did not hear the facts and I do not know anything of the merits of the case.

FRENCH VERSION OF MILITIA RULES AND REGULATIONS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

When will the French officers of the French militia of Canada be put in possession of a French translation of the Rules and Regulations for the militia and of the last volume of Infantry Exercises ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I must confess I had not seen this notice before coming into the House, and I have had no opportunity of making inquiry about it. I presume the French translation should be made as rapidly as possible, contemporaneously with the English.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not want suppositions ; I want a reply to my question—is it to be done or not to be done ? I suppose the same answer will apply to all questions I have on the order paper, that the minister has had no time to look at them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is the first time I have seen them. I did not get the order paper until this moment. I telephoned to the Bureau to find out if it was published.

The motion was allowed to stand.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Before the Orders of the Day are called I wish to take advantage of the decision rendered by the Speaker yesterday, to make a motion without notice. I now propose to move with regard to the notice of motion given by the hon. member from de Salaberry yesterday. It appears in the Minutes, and is therefore a proper subject to come before the House on the ruling of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER—I ruled that a question of privilege could be taken up without notice.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is a question of privilege.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I do not agree with the ruling at all, but I take advantage of it to submit a motion without notice. My own belief is that notice should be given of every motion in this House, and notices of motion should not be discussed before they are moved by those who have given notice of them. My intention is to move :

That this House is not in a position to pronounce for or against the integrity of the transactions of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada, and therefore decline to accept the motion relative to such transaction placed on the Order paper by the honourable gentleman from de Salaberry.

The motion which appears on the paper asks this House to give a decision upon the management of the Mutual Reserve, and assumes that the company has not been guilty of wrong-doing. I am sure the House is not ready to come to a conclusion. The evidence has been placed before us, but who has analysed it to be able to form a conclusion ? We have our own ideas, but I for one could not possibly say that this company have been guilty of fraud and dishonesty or that they have been entirely innocent. The notice put on the paper by the hon. member from de Salaberry is :

That he will move the following as being the proper conclusions to be drawn from the evidence reported to this House by the Select Committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York, namely :

Then he goes on to recite facts brought out in the investigation, the intention being to whitewash the company. I think the hon. gentleman is trifling with the privileges of this House, and with his own acuteness of intellect, to ask the Senate to pronounce a verdict when they cannot possibly do so. The best thing the hon. gentleman can do is to withdraw this motion.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If the hon. gentleman will permit me, I am disposed to tender an apology for having assumed that he was expected to be prepared to form a judgment on the investigation made by the committee, and on the evidence before this House ; but I do expect that there are gentlemen in this honourable House, who are able to form their own judgment on the matter.

The SPEAKER—I could not put that motion, because it is quite out of order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Would the hon. Speaker state the rule ?

The SPEAKER—I have answered enough of the hon. gentleman's questions already. It is not fair to be continually asking those questions.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The rules of this House say that when a question is raised and the Speaker is asked to decide, he must decide and cite the rule. I ask him to do that.

The SPEAKER—It is a very simple rule; notice is required of every motion except certain ones which, yesterday, were referred to as set out in Bourinot; and this is not a motion which is exempt from the obligation of notice, that is all.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

The SPEAKER—It is not a motion which affects the privileges of the House. It is a matter with respect to the ordinary business which does not require two days' notice, but does require one day's notice.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. DeBOUCHERVILLE—The Speaker has no right to give a decision unless he is asked. He has not been asked to give a decision.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman is probably correct.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Hon. gentlemen will remember that the hon. member from Rothesay was quite in order in addressing the House on a motion the other day, and a motion was accepted against his motion, though no notice of it had been given. It could not be a question of privilege, because there was nothing offensive said by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay. It was a plain business resolution, according to the rules of this House, yet the Speaker rules that a motion could be made against that without notice being given. I am now ruled out of order for following the line laid down in that decision. Where is the common sens? I cannot see it.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Order, order.

The SPEAKER—Orders of the Day.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to direct attention as a matter of privilege to something which occurred this morning. We want copies of the Minutes of Proceedings and cannot get them. An order has been given not to distribute copies of the minutes to members of this House. I want to know who gave the order?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am quite sure that nobody in authority gave any such order. There probably were none there. I tried myself to get a copy, and even telephoned to the Printing Bureau and made some pretty sharp observations because the minutes were not up in the morning.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman was an innocent victim because at the time when I was given that reply, the minutes had been delivered here and had been distributed in the House.

The SPEAKER—I think I can explain what happened. I have just been informed by the Clerk that he instructed the postmaster that the hon. gentleman from Rothesay needed a certain number of copies of the minutes, and he was not to give away the copies of the minutes until the hon. gentleman had got what he required. The usual distribution had taken place amongst the members when this order was given to the postmaster.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Do I understand that a preference is given to the hon. member from Rothesay; that he is to get documents that are not accessible to other members?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I am an innocent victim also. I mentioned the trouble I had the other day to get copies. I sent a messenger down to the Bureau and asked to have them printed at my own expense, but I have not yet had an answer from the Bureau.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am in the same position as the hon. Secretary of State. When I went to the post office this morning to get the minutes, they were not to be found in the usual place. I asked the postmaster if he had received them. He said 'yes', and handed me one. I want to call attention to the fact that I have not yet received a copy of the very first Bill on the order paper; the next is not printed at all, and none of them are printed in French.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have copies of the Bills on the order paper here. Going to the post office is not a safe way. The postmaster should call attention to the fact when Bills are received.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Are those Bills printed in French?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Well, I shall object.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Printing Bureau is not to blame. The men are working there night and day—all the staff that can be put on. Last night I gave orders that Minutes of Proceedings and Bills for the Senate should have precedence as we were to sit this morning. They promised to have them here at ten o'clock this morning. Apparently they were delivered, but were not distributed, because, when I spoke just now, one of the pages came and placed on my table copies of all the Bills.

Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What the hon. gentleman says may be quite true, but we have not received copies. I find only a copy of Bill 152 on my file.

The Order of the Day being called for the second reading of Bill 152 'An Act respecting an arbitration between His Majesty and the Grand Trunk Company of Canada.'

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is that Bill printed in French?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not aware if it is.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Well, I object.

The SPEAKER—If objection is taken, that will have to go over. The shortest way would be to say that all the Bills on the order down to No. 6, shall stand, because they are not printed in French.

Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Some of them are not printed at all.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I find they are all printed. It has not been usual to insist on impossibilities at this stage of the session. It is impossible with the pressure of work on the translators branch and on the Printing Bureau, to keep up with the formal rules of the Senate. Of course if hon. members insist on that, this House may as well rise as remain here, because it is not possible, I care not what staff you have, to do everything in a moment. The Proceedings and the Bills are more promptly printed here than in any part of the world. I say it advisedly, because I have had occasion to inquire into it. At Washington and London they are generally twenty-four to thirty-six hours behind the regular time. Here it is perfectly marvellous the rapidity with which the proceedings of the House are printed. On one occasion the debate in the House of Commons, lasting until five o'clock in the morning, and embracing 100 pages of Hansard, was on the desks of members at eleven o'clock that same day, six hours after the House rose. That is a feat that is not performed anywhere but in Canada. Hon. gentlemen ought to be reasonable at this stage of the session. Of course we can avoid the difficulty by postponing prorogation. I do not question the right of hon. gentlemen to take all the exceptions they chose, but it has not been usual in past years, at this period to do so, except in matter of primary importance. The Bill under consideration is not a matter of primary importance. It is ratifying an arbitration that is to be carried on between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Dominion, a very old subject rising out of the transfer of the Rivière du Loup branch.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The remarks of the hon. Secretary of State are quite correct. To use his own language, it is impossible to have the volume of business sent to the Printing Bureau ready for distribution in so short a period. While that is impossible, it is just as impossible for any one to legislate upon those Bills without ever having seen them. There is only one solution of the difficulty, and that is the one I suggested last year, to accept the Bills without any consideration, which I for one do not propose to do.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—At this period of the session, I am quite sure that on both sides of the House there ought to be a general feeling to forbear from sticking on technicalities and preventing work being done. For my part I am willing to facilitate business in any way I can. I quite agree that it would be better if all the rules of the House could be complied with, and I believe the Secretary of State has made the best effort he could to have everything before the House and prepare for the closing. I will say frankly, and it is just as well I should be frank, unless all this discussion regarding the New York Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association is absolutely dropped, it is utterly hopeless to expect this House will rise for two weeks. I know the feeling, and I can tell the hon. member from de Salaberry, if he is going on with his resolution, this House is here to stay for two weeks. nothing short of it. I would recommend those who have charge of these questions to drop the controversy. The Bill has gone through the House ; if they pass it in the Commons let it go, but if we are to get out of this House inside of two weeks, we had better drop the whole thing. If not, the man who introduces new matter and lays the foundation for further discussion, as the hon. member from de Salaberry has done, will have to assume the responsibility of keeping this House in session for two weeks yet.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear. I maintain my objection.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am able to take care of my own responsibility if the hon. member will do the same thing for himself.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I have received a copy of Bill 152 in French.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I have not received it.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—The hon. member can have my copy if he wishes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But it has not been distributed.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (Windsor)—Yes, I have a copy of it here.

CLAIM OF L. P. TANTON.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. member from Marshfield has a notice on the Orders :

That he will inquire of the government what settlement, if any, has been effected regarding the claim of Louis P. Tanton, of Charlottetown, P.E.I., for loss sustained by him owing to detention of perishable goods while in transit over the Intercolonial Railway ?

While the House has no business before it I may say to the hon. gentleman that I have received an answer to this inquiry. It is as follows—no settlement of the claim has been effected—Mr. Tanton was offered sometime ago $120, without prejudice, in full settlement, which he declined.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am quite surprised that my hon. friend should have given that reply to-day. I have quite a correspondence with the minister on the subject, and finally it was understood between us that I would put a notice on the order paper. He explained to me that he was not able to get a moment of time to consider the case, but he expected to reach it soon and would give it his attention. It was understood that I should put a notice on the order paper, and it was to stand, in the hope that he would reach it before the end of the session. The answer now is not in keeping with our understanding. I ask therefore that the notice stand until the minister can carry out his assurance to me, that he will deal with it at the earliest possible moment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I thought I was complying with the hon. gentleman's wishes. I was not in the plot.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is all right.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY ARBITRATION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of :

Bill (152) An Act respecting an Arbitration between His Majesty and the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.

He said : This is a purely formal Bill. It is ratifying in advance any award that may be made by the arbitrators appointed or to be appointed—I do not really know whether they are appointed or not.

Hnn. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Did the hon. gentleman say ratifying in advance?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, ratifying whatever award they may make. That is the usual way, if we are going to make an honest arbitration of it. Although we validate it, still there is an appeal to the Supreme Court. It is valid only to that extent. If either party wishes to appeal to the Supreme Court, they can do so. Perhaps I am wrong in putting it quite as strongly as that. The clause reads :—

4. Notwithstanding anything in the said agreements, the said arbitrators, or a majority of them, may render their award at any time within three months after the final hearing of the evidence and argument ; but this period may be extended, either before or after its expiration, by any judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, on the application of either of the parties.

It is not an appeal. It is simply enabling the judge of the court to extend the period for making the award.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This arbitration is to take in a very much wider area than was explained to us by my hon. friend when the Bill was read the first time. I understood my hon. friend to say that it proposed to deal with the settlement of questions that had arisen in reference to the purchase of the Rivière du Loup branch of the Intercolonial Railway in 1879.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That was the main point. There was a subsidiary point.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Whether it is the main point or not, it is perhaps almost impossible for my hon. friend to know, unless he knows a great deal more than we do, for I notice it also proposes to deal with another agreement made in 1899, which is the Drummond County transaction and which we know is a very important matter, and under which it is very likely some serious questions have arisen. It also deals with the supplementary traffic agreement of which we heard so much when the Drummond County Railway Bill was finally passed by this House. Hon. gentlemen will refresh their memories as to the terms of that agreement, and a very serious amendment which was made in this House to that agreement, and which facilitated the acquiring of the Drummond County Railway. I am told on excellent authority that the Hon. Mr. Blair complained bitterly as to the manner in which the Grand Trunk carried out the supplementary agreement with the Intercolonial Railway; that, practically, the latter road got little business of any account in consequence of it; that the Grand Trunk did not give them the business they expected to get, and he complained very much of the result to the Intercolonial Railway from the traffic agreement. I suppose these complaints of Mr. Blair are some of the matters to be referred to this arbitration. If that is so, it would be interesting for us to know how the commission is to be constituted; who are to be members of it; if the government have advanced that far in the matter, so that we may know whether a proper tribunal is to be created. I think it is important we should know all this. Beyond what Mr. Blair stated publicly a year or so ago, with regard to the manner in which the Grand Trunk had carried out that supplementary traffic agreement in regard to delivering freight to the Intercolonial Railway at Montreal—with the exception of that complaint, I have not known that any questions existed between the government and the Grand Trunk Railway with regard to any of these transactions. However, I presume what formed the burden of Mr. Blair's complaint at that time is now going to be adjudicated upon. It would be useful for the House, and important for us to know, before we pass this Bill, somewhat about the tribunal, how it is to be constituted, and, if possible, that we should know a little more than we do with regard to what the matters in dispute really are, and especially with regard to that traffic agreement.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume the traffic agreement is that set out in the Act of 1899. It contains a great many clauses—I think about fifty separate clauses. It is a very long Act, and a great deal of it is technical matter connected with the traffic of a railway; but I should not like to describe it. I should not feel equal to it, and it is quite natural that difficulties would arise. It was foreshadowed at the time by those who were not favourable to that connection, that the Grand Trunk Railway impulse would naturally be to send as much traffic as possible to Portland. The subject-matter of the dispute will be based largely on the various clauses set forth in the agreement of 1899, and they arise, probably naturally, from the foreshadowing of many gentlemen who took an interest in the debate, and who pointed out with a great deal of truth and justice that the Grand Trunk would naturally favour the line to Portland for goods going abroad. I presume it arises out of that. I do not profess to know what the contents are. They are technical matters altogether within the knowledge of the traffic department of the company, and whatever they are, the safer and better way will be to refer them to arbitration. We must assume the arbitrators will be men of probity and honour. They have not been named, and I do not know whom they have in view. I do not know that they have been named without my knowing it, and therefore I am quite unable to foreshadow who may be appointed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The provisions in this Bill are not of the character that my hon. friend indicated when he first made the motion, his explanation being of a very formal character. What the hon. gentleman has said is quite correct that when the Bill was passed in 1899 for the purchase of the Drummond County Railway, many objections were taken to it, among them that it was not sufficiently explicit as to how the delivery of the western freight destined for the maritime provinces was to be carried out. It was then pointed out that the Grand Trunk having a line of its own from Montreal to Quebec, and also a line from Montreal to Portland, the probabilities were that unless the clauses were drawn so clearly that there could be no misunderstanding, that the Grand Trunk Railway would very naturally divert the trade to Quebec by their own road or to Portland by their own road. I am very glad to hear the hon. gentleman at this late day acknowledge the correctness of the position we took at that time, and had it not been for the position we took at that time, and had it not been for the very important amendments which we insisted upon at that time, that traffic would have been in a very much worse position than it is now. So much for the past. Can the hon. Secretary of State inform the House—it is information which I think we ought to have, as to what the character of the difficulties is that have arisen between the Grand Trunk and the Intercolonial Railway in the transference of western freight for the maritime provinces at Montreal? Difficulties must have arisen, or there would be no necessity for this Bill. I think we are entitled, before we proceed with the Bill and pass upon it, to have that information—what the disputes are, and under which clause of the Act to which my hon. friend has called attention these difficulties have arisen. Those are very important points, if we desire to deal intelligently with this measure. We ought to know before placing a law upon the statute-book, authorizing an arbitration upon certain disputes which have arisen, what those disputes are. Disputes having arisen, I do not know any better system that could be adopted than that which is proposed in this Bill to settle them. Because I have no doubt the Grand Trunk Railway has taken advantage of every defect or defects which there were in that Act in order to retain to themselves a trade and traffic that should otherwise, or was intended otherwise, under that Bill, to be handed over to the Intercolonial Railway. Results have just proved what we predicted they would prove; had it not been for the persistent efforts of this House in making the very important changes which we did make compelling the Grand Trunk to make certain concessions which we thought they ought to make in the interests of the country, we would have had a great deal more difficulty. Can the hon. gentleman make us this promise, that in case this goes through to-day, that when we go into committee, which will have to be at the next sitting of the House, he will obtain the information to which I have called attention—which are the causes which have led to the framing of this Bill, and the difficulties that have arisen in the carrying out of the old Act?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I would be very glad if I could get the information. I do not know that I can. I presume Mr. Schreiber is the only person who could give me the information. I shall telephone him.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I should like to know why it is that these difficulties with regard to the traffic should not be referred to the Railway Commission? We have a full equipped Railway Commission for the purpose of settling all such matters as that. Why should not these difficulties with regard to traffic be referred to that commission, instead of having an independent arbitration established?

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

ORDER OF THE DAY POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called:

Second reading (Bill 124) An Act to amend the General Inspection Act.—(Hon. Mr. Scott).

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I object. The Bill has not been distributed.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I have a copy of it. which I shall send to my hon. friend.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—It has not been distributed, and I object.

The SPEAKER—When a Bill has been distributed, it makes no difference whether it is marked on the order paper as distributed or not.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I think it is not sufficient that one member has a copy of it. It must be distributed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it is perfectly disgraceful the way Bills are distributed. The Postmaster gets copies of the Bills and keep them in the post office. It is disgraceful.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is thoroughly understood that the order paper is the document which is to guide us in the transaction of business, and it is not sufficient that the Bills should be distributed when asked for after the Order of the Day is called.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think that proposition would be absolutely unreasonable ; we must have the Orders of the Day printed in advance. You cannot leave them off. We have often had Bills put on the order paper when they were not distributed, and therefore it was thought better they should not put them on. Surely my hon. friend would not contend when they are on the order paper and are really in the hands of hon. gentleman that his objection should prevail ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Certainly I do object. How can any member know the contents of a Bill the moment it is laid on the table, unless he is a clairvoyant ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If there are only two or three hours between one meeting and another this difficulty must arise.

The SPEAKER—What is to be done with item four ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We are on item six. Item four stands.

The SPEAKER—What is proposed to be done about item four?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I thought the Clerk had read down to item six. I will call upon the Clerk at the table to say what is the last number he read ?

The CLERK OF THE HOUSE—No. 6.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Call item No. 7.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—The hon. gentleman does not object to No. 6, does he ?

INTERNAL ECONOMY AND CONTINGENT ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

FIFTH REPORT READ.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved concurrence in the fifth report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I move that this report be amended by adding the following :

That the salary of Mr. R. W. Stephen, deputy clerk, and second clerk assistant be increased four hundred dollars per year.

I will not talk much about it further than to say that this officer has been here a good many years without any increase of salary.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it would be better if it were taken by smaller stages. What is the salary now ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—$1,800. The gentleman referred to is one of the oldest officials in the House, and others who have had less responsibility had been raised to the maximum of the class. Whether he should receive an increase of four hundred at once I am not prepared to say, but I do think that in justice to the clerk referred to, he ought to have been considered. I am under the impression that it was not brought before the Contingent Committee or probably they would have considered it favourably. If the House thinks that four hundred dollars is too much, some recognition of his services ought to be made.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am quite in accord with the views the hon. gentlemen expressed, but on a former occasion a motion was brought forward to increase a clerk's salary by six hundred dollars. Those things create jealousy and ill-feeling. Nobody doubts the integrity of the hon. gentlemen in question but I think it is in the interest of the officials that no sudden jumps of that kind should be made. We might increase it by two hundred dollars, with the understanding that we will increase it two hundred dollars next year.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Hear, hear. I think if the hon. gentlemen would accept the suggestion of the hon. Secretary of State, there would be no difficulty in passing it—that the salary be increased two hundred dollars this year and two hundred dollars next year.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not object to the House taking any action they see fit, as they are all well informed as to the duties of the gentleman named, just as well informed as the committee. There were several applications at the last meeting of the committee for increases of salaries, and as it was the last meeting, and particularly as there was a meeting called to increase salaries some weeks ago, it was decided not to take any applications at the last meeting. I have no objection to the House taking whatever action they see fit, as every hon. gentleman is well aware of the duties performed by the clerk at the table.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If we amend the motion to increase the salary by two hundred dollars and two hundred dollars next year, and say that it be increased annually until it reached the maximum of the class at $2,400, which would take two years, I think the chairman of the committee would consent to that.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I do not object to the increase of salary to Mr. Stephen, but it seems to me there is another gentleman who ought to have something. I refer to Mr. Gibbs, the Accountant, who has much work to do, and a great deal of responsibility, and is not sufficiently paid.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I do not wish to enter into any discussion in the House; but that to which the hon. Secretary of State refers, when the salary of a third class clerk was largely increased, was an irregularity and now the second class clerk; the gentleman who holds the position of deputy clerk in this House, is practically inferior in salary to another gentleman of the same class. It does not seem to be fair, and I propose to remedy it. I move that before the report is adopted the following clause be added:—

That the salary of Mr. R. W. Stephen, deputy clerk and second clerk assistant, be increased two hundred dollars for the present year and that it be increased annually until it reaches the maximum of the chief clerk.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Be increased an equal sum annually ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It should say increased annually to an equal amount, the annual increase might not be two hundred dollars.

The SPEAKER—I read the resolution as it was placed in my hands. 'Increased annually' would imply that it was to be increased at the same rate. It might read 'By an equal yearly increase'.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I beg to move that the salary of Mr. Gibbs be increased annually two hundred dollars from the first of July last.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I second that motion with great pleasure.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Would it not be better if those matters were left to the committee. I quite understand the work of Mr. Gibbs, and I will undertake to recommend next session to give him an increase of salary. We know that members have their favourites, but if we do what is right we would like to even up all round. If we even up in one direction we should even up in another. If my hon. friend will permit the matter of stand untill next session I would favour it myself.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman would have no objection to date it from the same day ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no objection to do that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If not, I hope my hon. friend will be here to express my views. We found the same difficulty in the civil service, and we were obliged, when the recent estimates came before use, to cut down the recommendations made by individual ministers in order that there might be some universal system of advancement. Where individual increases are made, it creates jealousy all round and a feeling of partialty. We all hear of it. Every advance is taken up by four or five others who say 'You are not dealing fairly by me, and we have no end of trouble about it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is not a doubt of the correctness of what the hon. gentleman has said. Those who have been in his position know well what the troubles and difficulties are, but, unfortunataely, we have this precedent in one case in which we put an officer in a position to receive his annual increments until his salary reaches the maximum of a chief clerk. No one objects to that; but there are just as strong reasons why the same principle should be applied to the officer to whom the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface has called attention. I think one reason why that gentleman's salary has not been increased in the past has been from his excessive diffidence. The chairman of the committee will concur in what I am about saying, that he is not a man who is continually pushing himself forward, although he occupies a very important position, and I think we might stretch a point to the extent of accepting the motion made by my hon. friend. But it would have to be limited. The way the motion has been worded, his salary would go on increasing two hundred a year to all eternity, if he lived that length of time. I hope the principle suggested by the hon. Secretary of State will be rigidly carried out, and then nobody will be taken by surprise. But let us go a step further in this case and treat these two officers as they should be treated with the limitation that the increment shall stop when it reaches the maximum of his class, a first class clerk.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The very precedent that is laid down here is one that is going to bother us in the committee. One special meeting was called to consider salaries, and the whole matter was discussed. Every member had a right to express an opinion, and several suggestions were made to increase salaries. The whole matter was considered, and we agreed on certain things and the House moves an amendment to increase the salary. If the House sees fit to do so, we cannot help it, but this will lead to other gentlemen saying 'We have been in the employ of the Senate a long time; you increased one man's salary two hundred dollars and another four hundred dollars, and we are entitled to the same.' And instead of having the log rolling in the committee, we shall have it in the House. Mr. Stephen is a very efficient officer, with responsible work, and as to whether eighteen hundred dollars was sufficient remuneration that was a matter for the House. The committee considered it sufficient, but if the House thinks differently very well. I have no objection to Mr. Stephen's increase. He is a hard-working officer. I am not going to raise any objection if the House increases Mr. Gibbs' salary. We are simply leading to trouble next session, and instead of having the members of that committee asked by different officers for increase of salary those requests will be transferred to the House.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I think every member in the House can form as good an opinion as any member in the committee. If the chairman has any special reason or information that would throw more light on the subject to influence them in these matters, I should be very happy to hear it. These two cases are exceptional entirely. Mr. Stephen has been treated badly, I won't say unjustly, but he has been passed over. In my opinion he has not been treated as he should have been. With reference to Mr. Gibbs, as the hon. leader of the opposition has said, he is too proud and feels his position so keenly, that he would not even ask. I never knew him to suggest to gentlemen with whom he was brought in close relationship or to hint at one cent increase in his salary. These are exceptional cases. Justice should be done to them. It is not a question of favour; it is only giving what has been given before.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Probably the strongest recommendation made to me as chairman of that committee for an increase of salary, was in reference to the Law Clerk. Perhaps some one will rise now and move that the salary of the Law Clerk be increased?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—He is not an exception. That is a different case.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I entirely agree with the statement that has been made by the chairman of the Internal Economy Committee. If you are going to have a committee at all, and we are going to refer all the questions that properly come before them to that committee, then some little respect should be paid to the report which they present. I do not wish to deprive any member of his right where any grievous wrong has been done to call attention to it, but I can assure the House that full consideration was given to these applications when they came before the committee, and from my short experience I find that we have applications every year. It seems to be a standing rule to make application for increases. There may be cases where some of the officials are not paid as well as they ought to be, but I can assure the House that as far as I know, the committee are desirous of giving full and careful consideration to all such applications. This year it was considered that it would be better to allow matters to stand as they are, and if anything at all is done in the way of increasing salaries it should be taken up earlier next year and careful consideration given to the whole question. In view of the promise of the hon. Secretary of State that in the interim the government itself will give careful consideration to those questions and be prepared to make certain recommendations to the committee, if we should live to meet again, in that way general satisfaction will probably result. If we are going to adopt the course suggested what will happen? Every year when we have a meeting of the Internal Economy Committee, each gentleman who has not received an increase will approach some member and say 'I wish you would move for an increase of salary.' If we established this practice, I do not know where it will end. In the face of the pledge the hon. Secretary of State has given, the House should be satisfied. If it is done in that way, no offence will be given to any one and justice will be done to all.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—There is some force in what the hon. gentleman has said, and also in what has been stated by the hon. Secretary of State, that such recommendations should come from the committee rather than from an individual member; but it will be noticed that already an exception has been made to that rule in the increase of the salary to Mr. Stephen, to which we did not object. Mr. Gibbs is in the same position, and he should get his increase. As to the work of the committee, I might say to the hon. gentleman that at the beginning of the session, when the question of raising salaries came before the committee it was understood that the question would be taken up after some time, and there was a kind of understanding that the adjustment of the salaries would be made; but it turns out that the committee has taken the matter into consideration and there is no increase at all. That is the reason why we think that some clerks who are in an exceptional position should have their salaries increased by the House.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I think the proposition is that two hundred dollars is to be added to the salary of Mr. Gibbs, and to stop at that.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—It strikes me that with the positive assurance of the leader of this House as to what he will do at the ensuing session, and the difficulty in which these resolutions will place us, Mr. Gibbs should be satisfied, and no doubt the promise will be carried out. If we adopt the method suggested, as the chairman of the committee says, there will be no end of trouble; applications will be forthcoming continuously and what is our committee for? Is it to look into those matters and come to a decision? I suppose likely that is the object.

I would even go further, that if this matter be left over till another session, and the committee admit that they might make a recommendation that the increase in Mr. Gibbs' salary should be retroactive, and that he should be given the $200, we should not be called upon to vote on a matter of this kind now.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It is much easier discussing matters of salaries in committee where every man feels free to express himself. I quite understand that there is a delicacy about discussing those salaries and placing views on the Debates in the chamber. These matters were carefully considered; a special committee meeting was called for the purpose of considering them, and the report came in with nothing done, practically, so far as increases were concerned. Last year some increases were made, and some the year before. If we adopt the plan of proposing in the House increases of salaries, we are going to have trouble.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Before the motion is put, I should like to state my personal feelings on the question that has cropped up. I am not a member of that committee. I think this a vicious way of proceeding in imposing upon the House the decision of such questions. We have appointed a committee. We have a sense of responsibility. Although we are not dealing with our own money, we should go into those applications and deal with them as any employer of labour would deal with his own staff. If any member can, when a report like this is made, rise in his seat and move that the salary of so-and-so be increased, where shall we be? It will be a grab game pure and simple. It seem to me we should proceed with more method. I never looked personally into those questons, but I feel that there should be some fixed rule about increases of salaries ; that this committee should lay down rules so that when an employee is given a position he will know the increases to which he is entitled and the outside limit. The committee has not done that to this hour. It is their bounden duty to start early and fix the salary at which an employee comes in and the amount of increase which he can expect, so that when this rule is there it will apply to the present staff as well as to the staff of the future, and employees will know what they can expect. It will be a kind of fixed contract. They will know what is the goal that they can reach. If we have any sense of responsibility, we should proceed that way. We have already been accused by the House of Commons of being most lax in our way of proceeding on this question. I have not examined into the complaint. I do not know how our salaries compare with the salaries of the officials of the House of Commons, but surely any legislative body of the importance of the Senate of Canada should direct its committee to lay down fixed rules by which we shall be invariably governed in the future.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I think the hon. gentleman is right, everything being equal, that this matter should be dealt with by the committee ; but this gentleman has done his duty well ; he has been passed over for the past five years, and why should he not be placed in the same position as other officials, whose salaries have been raised ? I hope the House will see the justice of voting this increase.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND.

The House divided on the amendment which was lost on the following division :

Contents, 13.

Non-contents, 15.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (Windsor)—I forgot when I voted that I was paired with the hon. member for DeLanaudière.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I am paired.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I am paired if this is a government question.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It all depends on the character of the pairs. If it were government pairs and this is considered a government matter, the hon. gentleman's name should be struck off. If members are left to vote as they please on questions which are not government questions, they have a right to vote. The members must be the best judges themselves.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I have a general pair with the Hon. Mr. Baird.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—A week or two ago, I paired with the Hon. Mr. McKay of Truro. Since that I have been home, and have not seen him, and he is away now.

The SPEAKER—Does the hon. leader of the government regard this as a government question ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, except the government are responsible for the providing of the money. I fancy this Senate is independent as far as its officials are concerned. They can do as they please.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think that is right.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I ask to have the names read.

The Clerk then read the names as follows :

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. Secretary of State informed me yesterday that a certain return to which I had called attention had been printed in the Journals or Sessional Papers No. 99. I find by looking at the Journals for 1893 that that was one of the returns ordered not to be printed—page 277 of the Journals.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You can get it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I shall give a notice of motion, but will not read it now.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It must be read.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No.

The SPEAKER—It is the practice to read it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It reads as follows :

That this House is not in a position to pronounce for or against the integrity of the transactions of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada, and therefore decline to accept the motion relative to such transaction placed on the Order paper by the honourable gentleman from de Salaberry.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (5) An Act respecting the Militia and Defence of Canada.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

PRINTING OF BILLS IN ENGLISH AND FRENCH.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I desire to call attention to a matter which I think is worthy of the attention of the House, particularly at this stage. A point of order was raised by an hon. member this morning, that certain Bills could not be proceeded with because they were not printed in the French language. That tempted me to see what the authority was on which that objection was taken, and I have looked into the British North America Act, which is the authority on the subject, and it does not apply to the case of printing of Bills at all. In order that there may be no misapprehension about it, I call attention to the 133rd clause of the British North America Act which is the foundation for the proposition that the Bills should be printed in French. It is as follows:—

Either the English or French language may be used by any person in the debate of the Houses of Parliament of Canada and of the House of the legislature of Quebec; and both those languages shall be used in the respective records and journals of those houses; and either of those languages may be used by any person or in any pleading or process in or issuing from any court of Canada established under this Act, and in or from all or any of the courts of Quebec.

The Acts of the parliament of Canada and of the legislature of Quebec shall be printed and published in both languages.

I do not find any authority in the British North America Act for saying that Bills should be printed in both languages. I find no rule of the Senate to that effect. Bourinot, at page 313, says :

All Bills shall be printed in two languages.

Therefore, it seems to me the matter stands in this way : that while it is the invariable practice to print them, when it comes down to dealing with the procedure in the House, I submit there is not a rule here which enables any hon. member to obstruct the House or delay the proceedings because a Bill is not printed in both languages. It is a very good custom, and it is a good thing to adopt such a rule.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a question of order.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The hon. gentleman can speak as often as he likes, and take all the technical objections he wishes, and the hon. gentleman beside him reproves every other hon. gentleman but himself. I want to say that the proposition which I make is that while I do not wish to infringe on a practice which has prevailed, when an hon. member rises to obstruct the whole business of the House——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a question of order.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not proper to accuse any hon. member of obstructing.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I do not wish to use the word 'obstruct' in an offensive sense.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Then do not use it.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—But when an hon. member interposes to prevent proceedings going on, he can only do so under a rule of the House, and, while custom may prevail, it can always be dispensed with.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The hon. gentleman again interrupts. I want to point out that there is that distinction between a rule and custom ; and, therefore, while it is desirable to have these Bills in both languages, yet, when an hon. member seeks to delay the proceedings of the House on that account, simply on a question of custom, the House can deal with the matter as it pleases, and it is not open to a technical objection. I thought perhaps I was doing a service to the House by calling attention to the only ground that I could see for it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I regret very much indeed that a discussion should arise on a question of this kind. Since the union of the two provinces, in 1841, an invariable rule has prevailed that we certainly could not depart from. I was a member of the old parliament of Canada. This rule was strictly observed there. Subsequently, in 1867, it did not seem necessary to put the rule in any of our books, because it was, by common consent, recognized and could not be departed from, and I would be quite unwilling that it should be departed from at this stage.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend did not read far enough. Page 310 of the last edition of Bourinot, section 5, reads as follows :

> The use of the French language in the proceedings of the legislature has, from the earliest days of parliamentary history of Canada, received the sanction of custom and law. At the first session of the legislative assembly of Lower Canada, it was resolved that no motion should be debated or put to the House, unless is was first read in English and French. As the Speaker of that day, Mr. Panet, was not well conversant with English, it was subsequently resolved that in all cases when the Speaker cannot speak both English and French, he should read it in either of the two languages most familiar to him, while the reading in the other language should be by the clerk or his deputy at the table.

That was the practice followed in the House of Commons, that when the Speaker was not conversant with the French language it was read by the clerk at the table. Bourinot proceeds :

> Every member has a right to introduce a Bill in his own language.

There is no question what the practice has been since confederation ; it has always been recognized as I understood the hon. Secretary of State to say, and I think it is singularly unfortunate to raise such questions in this chamber, composed as we are of two nationalities.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Page 308 of Bourinot reads as follows :

> The proceedings of the two Houses of Parliament are regulated by statute, by rules and orders adopted by themselves, and by those usages which have grown up in the course of time, and consequently become a part of their own practice, or are derived from the common law of parliament by which * * * they have consented to the guided in all matters of doubt.

The SPEAKER—As I understand it, the hon. gentleman from Toronto did not raise the question of order—he simply called attention to the matter.

The Senate adjourned until 3 p.m. this afternoon.

SECOND SITTING.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION.

MOTION.

The Order of the Day being called :

By Hon. Mr. Béique :

That he will move the following as being the proper conclusions to be drawn from the evidence reported to this House by the Select Committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York, namely :

1. The company was licensed in Canada from 1885 to 1899 to carry on business on the assessment plan, and from 1899 to this date on the level premium plan.

2. That part of the business of the company which is under the level premium plan, is fully protected by the deposit made with the government, as required by the Insurance Act.

3. From 1885 to the 31st December, 1903, the total income of the company in Canada, from its business on the assessment plan, amounted to $5,032,518, out of which $3,060,029 were paid in death claims and $999,865 in expenses in Canada, and $218,938 deposited with the government, leaving a balance of $753,686 to cover expenses of collection of the premiums and the contribution of the Canadian business to the general and head office expenses and to the general mortality fund.

4. The company's troubles are mainly due to the fact that its rates or assessments were too low, especially until 1895. Even with the advance which was made in 1895, varying from twenty-five to one hundred per cent, the rates remained at least twenty-five per cent less than the level premium system would have called for ; and, taking the whole period of nineteen years during which the company carried on business in Canada, the average rates or assessments paid by its policy-holders were only from about fifty to sixty-six and two-thirds per cent of what the latter would have paid if they had been under the level premium plan.

5. The amount paid to or advanced by the company to agents, as commission, seem to have been at times abnormally high, which was not satisfactorily explained. Nevertheless, taking as a whole the period extending from 1885 to December 31st, 1903, the gross average expenses amounted to only $5.96 per $1,000 of insurance, per year, which compares favourably with other companies.

6. The total amount of death claims against the company in Canada, from 1895 to 1903, both inclusive, amounted to $2,278,207, on which the company paid $2,151,592, or 94·442 per cent.

7. The superintendent of the Insurance Department of the state of New York caused an examination to be made of the company's affairs, both in 1897 and in 1898 ; on the occasion of the latter examination, most of the charges mentioned in the evidence reported and now on the table of this House were investigated and found groundless, as will appear from the reports of the chief examiner, of the assistant actuary and of the superintendent of said Insurance Department.

8. Another examination of the affairs of the company up to the 31st December, 1901, was made by order of said Insurance Department of the state of New York, on the occasion of the reincorporation of the company, which was found to be solvent.

9. Apart from the fact that the committee has not had the advantage of examining into the books and papers of the company. as was done on the occasion of the New York inquiries, the evidence taken before and reported by the Select Committee would not justify any conclusions contrary to those of the chief examiner, of the assistant actuary and of the superintendent of the Insurance Department of the state of New York.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE said, in rising to take up this motion : I desire to say that I realize to what an extent hon. gentlemen are tired ot this question.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If I were to consult only my own wishes, I would not have asked the House to give any more time to this question. but. rightly or wrongly. I believe we have a duty to discharge in this matter, and that we will fail in the discharge of that duty if we do not place on the minutes of this House the conclusions which should be drawn from the inquiry that has been made. Hon. gentlemen will bear in mind that insurance in this country, as in every other country, is a question of the greatest importance. I have only to refer to the last report of the Superintendent of Insurance, where it will be found that the amount of life insurance now in force in Canada exceeds $548,000,000, and that the amount of premiums levied annually exceeds $19,000,000. Hon. gentlemen will see that any question coming before this House affecting insurance, or which may have a tendency to discredit the management of insurance companies, is a question of considerable importance. When charges were made by a member of this House against the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, it became the duty of this House to inquire into those charges, because, rightly or wrongly, there were thousands of persons interested in that company who were under the impression that they had been victimized, that their money had been squandered, that they had not been properly treated, and it was in the interest of those policy-holders, as well as in the public interest that the truth be ascertained. We have only to consult insurance managers to ascertain that anything which reflects upon the management or reputation of any one insurance company is damaging to all insurance companies in the country. If the charges have been established, it is the duty of the Senate to say so. If, on the other hand, the charges have been disproved, it is incumbent upon us to declare our opinion to that effect, and prevent the damage which otherwise would result from this investigation, and the repeated attacks which have been made upon the company. There is another consideration in support of the motion I am going to make. It lies in the fact that these accusations have been preferred by an hon. member of this House, who happened to be in litigation with that company, and the fact that that hon. gentleman has deemed it advisable to sit in judgment throughout the investigation. It is for him to say whether his course was proper or not. I have no reflection to make upon him, but I say that the public is entitled to know, being aware of that fact, what the opinion of this House is, as to whether these charges have been substantiated or not. When I consented to act on the committee, I did it against my will, but one of the reasons why I consented to act, was because of the facts to which I have just called the attention of this honourable House. I did it as a matter of duty, and neither on this occasion nor any other occasion shall I be found to shirk fulfilling my duty to its fullest extent. I have followed regularly the meetings of the committee. I have tried to follow these proceedings without allowing my mind to be biased on one side or the other. I have no reason to be biased ; I have not a cent of interest in the company. I did not even know of the existence of the company before the charges were made in this honourable House, but I found from the outset that members who had been policy-holders in the company—and I might be allowed to refer to my hon. friend the hon. gentleman from Mille Iles—were of opinion that there was a great deal of truth in the charges that were made. Their minds were biased against the company and hardly open to the answers which could be offered in defence. These facts rendered it the more necessary for those who were perfectly free, who have had no relations whatever with the company, to be careful and be the proper guardians of the interests of the policy-holders and of the public, because, I repeat, it is not only the interest of the policy-holders that is involved in this question, but it is the interest of all insurance companies in this Dominion. Having followed, as I did, the proceedings of the Senate with a determination of arriving at what I thought were the proper conclusions resulting from the evidence, I thought it was my duty to place those conclusions before this honourable House and invite every member of this House to examine such conclusions calmly with the references to the evidence which I shall be prepared to give, and not only to invite senators, but to invite the public and the managers of insurance companies with the evidence in their hands, to see whether my conclusions are proper or not. That is what I expect will be done, and it is with a sense of my responsibility that I now rise to submit these conclusions.

The first conclusion is contained in the first paragraph, which is as follows :

1. The company was licensed in Canada from 1885 to 1899 to carry on business on the assessment plan, and from 1899 to this date on the level premium plan.

This conclusion is indisputable ; it can be ascertained by the licenses which were issued by the Superintendent of Insurance. From 1899 to this day the company has not been doing any business on the assessment plan.

The second conclusion is :

2. That part of the business of the company which is under the level premium plan, is fully protected by the deposit made with the government, as required by the Insurance Act.

This conclusion also is indisputable, because it is the result of the Insurance Act, and one has only to refer to the Insurance Act to ascertain that it is the duty of the Superintendent of Insurance to see that at all times there is a deposit in the hands of the government sufficient to enable the government to fully reinsure all the risks in a given company carrying on business on the level premium plan, if that company was to come to grief.

The third paragraph is :

3. From 1885 to the 31st December, 1903, the total income of the company in Canada, from its business on the assessment plan, amounted to $5,032,518, out of which $3,060,029 were paid in death claims and $999,865 in expenses in Canada, and $218,938 deposited with the government, leaving a balance of $753,686 to cover expenses of collection of the premiums and the contribution of the Canadian business to the general and head office expenses and to the general mortality fund.

As to this paragraph, I desire to give in a very summary way the references to which I call the attention of every hon. member. The figures will be found in part 8, pages 20 to 24. At my request, the company was called upon to furnish a statement from year to year showing the total amount of income in Canada and in the United States separately, showing also the total amount paid in Canada on death claims each year, and the total amount paid in the United States, also each year ; likewise showing from year to year for the nineteen years they have carried on business in Canada, the amount of expenses in Canada and the amount of expenses in the United States ; also the amount of expenses at the head office and the salaries of officers and employees separately for each year, and the figures which are mentioned in paragraph 3 are to be found at the pages to which I have just referred, in exhibit No. 12 ; but the figures will also be found on pages 39 and following of part 3 of the evidence.

I now come to the fourth paragraph :

4. The company's troubles are mainly due to the fact that its rates or assessments were too low, especially until 1895. Even with the advance which was made in 1895, varying from twenty-five to one hundred per cent, the rates remained at least twenty-five per cent less than the level premium system would have called for; and, taking the whole period of nineteen years during which the company carried on business in Canada, the average rates or assessments paid by its policy-holders were only from about fifty to sixty-six and two-thirds per cent of what the latter would have paid if they had been under the level premium plan.

I claim that these figures cannot be disputed for a moment. That this company was organized under a false system, is acknowledged by everybody except Mr. Paterson, who was heard as a witness. I had the advantage of being present at the meeting of the Committee on Banking and Commerce, where I heard the representatives of, I believe, all the Canadian companies, some eleven or twelve in number, and they were all agreed on that fact, and they were all agreed that it was imperative for the Senate to try to come to the rescue of the policy-holders and remedy, as far as could be done by legislation, that wrong state of things. The fact is supported also by Mr. Stevenson, who was called as a witness against the company, by Mr. Wells, also a witness against the company, by Mr. Eldridge and Mr. Bradshaw, and the figures have been given by them. They will be found in the evidence of Mr. Stevenson, part 2, page 31; Mr. Eldridge, part 3, pages 66-67. I have not the reference to Mr. Wells' evidence at the moment, but will give it later on, Mr. Eldridge, part 8, page 19. As far as Mr. Paterson is concerned, I refer to his evidence in part 5, page 10, where I find this, speaking of the advance in rates in 1895:

By the Hon. Mr. McSweeney:

Q. How much was the advance?—A. The advance was, in some ages, about one hundred per cent. At the higher ages, it would be about a hundred per cent, and at the lower ages, ranging from twenty-five to fifty per cent.

By the Hon. Mr. Béique:

Q. Did it reach a higher premium than they would be charged under the level premium system?—A. It did not.

Q. About how much below did it remain in a rough way?—A. I should think it would be at least twenty-five per cent less, in most cases.

Therefore I have adopted, in this fourth paragraph, the very figures given by the witness Paterson. Then, as far as the figures from fifty to sixty-six and two-thirds per cent are concerned, they are taken from the evidence of Mr. Eldridge, part 3, page 38. Now let us take paragraph 5:

5. The amount paid to, or advanced by the company to agents, as commission, seems to have been at times abnormally high, which was not satisfactorily explained. Nevertheless, taking as a whole the period extending from 1885 to December 31st, 1903, the gross average expenses amounted to only $5.96 per $1,000 of insurance, per year, which compares favourably with other companies.

In this paragraph there are two different statements. Let me deal with the first statement, that the amount paid to or advanced by the company to agents as commission, seems to have been at times abnormally high, which was not satisfactorily explained. I think it is my duty in connection with this paragraph, to call attention to exhibit 42, which was filed by the witness Paterson, and which is the most serious piece of evidence to be found in the record. This exhibit shows the amount advanced or paid to agents as commission, and as far as I am concerned, I think it is very high, and I feel justified in saying that it appears from the evidence and from the reports of the Superintendent of Insurance in the state of New York that the company have suffered a considerable loss through such advances. When I say considerable loss, it may be five or six hundred thousand dollars, which is a considerable sum. The company, through its second vice-president, Mr. Eldridge, was called upon to answer that exhibit 42, but to my mind his answer is not satisfactory. It will be found in part 8, page 34 of the evidence:

Q. A statement has been filed by Mr. Paterson giving the proportion of commissions to insurance in force; have you any remarks to make concerning that exhibit 42?—A. Exhibit 42 purports to show the new business written and the commissions paid agents to each thousand of new business from 1890 to 1903, both inclusive. The criticism I wish to make of that is, that in computing new business for the years 1890 and 1891, being included new business paid for, new business not taken, and revived business. For the years 1892 to 1898, both inclusive, he included in new business, new business paid for and business not taken. In 1899 he included new business paid for, new business not taken, change and increase: in 1900 and 1901 he included new business paid for, new business not taken, change and increase, and revived business; and in 1902 and 1903 he simply included new business paid for, so that the basis of comparison is not the same throughout. He has taken from the sworn reports and sometimes he has taken some figures, and sometimes left out those figures for other years.

At the most this criticism attacks only very partially exhibit 42, and to my mind it is not a sufficient answer to meet the charge that an abnormal amount has been paid by the company to its agents, especially when we have it in the report of the Superintendent of Insurance of the state of New York that the company lost or is exposed to lose a few hundred thousand dollars through these advances. As far as the other statement contained in paragraph 5 is concerned, I claim that it is also based entirely on the evidence and on the statements which have been filed. I desire first of all to call attention to a paragraph in a document which was filed and put on record, and distributed amongst the hon. members of this House. It is entitled, 'General statement' of the company. On page 29 I find the following :

No companies have established a better reputation for good management and solidity than the Canadian life insurance companies. During the years that the Mutual Reserve has been doing business in Canada, excluding the year 1903, for which the full figures were not available at the time that this computation was made, the Canadian companies that were doing business at the time that the Mutual Reserve entered, or that were organized a very short time afterwards, thus excluding the recently organized companies, whose expenditures would be proportionately greater, have carried for an average term of one year $3,099,311,000 of insurance. They have collected as premiums on this $105,586.228, or an average of $34.07 per thousand. They have increased their assets in addition to the amount of interest they have received, from the premiums $28,056,337, or $9.05 for each $1,000 of insurance. They have paid to policy-holders $49,253,435, or $15.89 per $1,000, making the payments to policy-holders and the premiums devoted to increase of assets total $24.94 per $1,000, showing that for each $1,000 of insurance carried for one year, the amount used for expenses has been $9.13.

During the same period, the Mutual Reserve has carried on the assessment plan Canadian insurance for an average of one year to the amount of $305,125.875. It has collected thereon premiums to the amount of $4,937,223, being for each $1,000 of insurance carried $16.18. It has paid to its policy-holders in Canada $3,061,530, or $10.03 per each $1,000. Over and above interest receipts it has added to its assets $0.54 per $1,000 carried, making the total devoted to the payments to policy-holders and increase of assets, other than interest, $10.57, leaving $5.61 per $1,000 of insurance carried as the expense of doing the business.

The comparison which is made there between this company and all Canadian companies shows that the expense in the case of this company was $5.61 against $9.13, being the average of the Canadian companies.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Were any statements presented to substantiate those figures?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I was just coming to that. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I think he will find that I shall answer the objections in advance. I myself confronted Mr. Paterson with a portion of the document which I have just read, and invited him to criticise it. It was part of the functions of the counsel of the committee, and of this witness, and Mr. Wells, the other witness who assisted him, to criticise this very document. They criticised it in several other respects. I called his attention to that part of the document, and invited him to make his criticism. His answer was that he had seen that, but that he had not verified the figures.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Where is that answer? Is it in the evidence ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am unable to give the evidence at this moment. I have it in my notes, and I will undertake to give it to the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Next session ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—During this sitting. I was going to say that I believe we are entitled to infer from this answer that he did not offer any criticism, because no criticism could be made. But I find more than that; I find that those figures have been in print for years past before the Superintendent of Insurance of the state of New York, and therefore that all parties concerned have had ample time to criticise them. But we have more. Mr. Eldridge was called upon to produce the figures, and he did so under oath. Surely, unless those figures are contradicted we are bound to accept them. They are to be found in part eight of the evidence, pages 10, 11 and 12. In the statements produced will be found not only the average amount of expenses, $5.96 on the whole business of the company, but also the share of expenses that the Canadian policy-holders had to bear, from 1885 to 1895, $5.45, and from 1895 to 1903 inclusive, $5.60, which made it considerably below the average of the expense which the company generally had to bear, taking the whole business together, to wit $5.96. Now I take paragraph six:

6. The total amount of death claims against the company in Canada, from 1895 to 1903, both inclusive, amounted to $2,278,207, on which the company paid $2,151,592, or 94·442 per cent.

These figures are to be found in part 5, pages 136 to 139. We have them year by year. We have a corroboration of these figures in the report of the Superintendent of Insurance of the state of New York, where we find it stated in a general way, that the company had paid all legitimate claims.

The paragraph is very short. It is at the end of the report of 1898, from which I read the following:

The result of the examination shows that the association is solvent and pays in full every death claim that is a proper charge upon the mortuary funds contributed by the members, and that in every case of settlement of compromise the character of the claim has been such as to make it the duty of the management to protect the members against an unjust demand.

I could pause here and ask whether this does not cover all the conclusions which should be properly taken on the inquiry in question. The committee was entrusted with finding the position of the company in Canada, and I think that this was properly ascertained by finding the amount of money collected from Canadian policy-holders, the amount paid to Canadian policy-holders, the amount paid in expenses in Canada, the balance which remained, the deposit in the hands of the government as belonging to the assessment plan, as well as the deposit belonging to the level premium plan. I think that we have in that the full answer to the mission which was given to the committee, and for my part, I doubt the propriety of the committee inquiring into the business of the company outside of Canada. It being a question between nations, I doubt the propriety of this honourable House inquiring, as this committee has done, and revising, or sitting in judgment, so to speak, on the repeated inquiries which have been made by the proper authorities in the state of New York, as well as in other states of the Union, especially as we have in our own statute-book a provision which enables the Superintendent of Insurance of the Dominion of Canada to go at all times to the head office of the company and cause any inquiry he chooses to be made from the books and papers of the company; I say that I doubt the propriety of calling upon that company or any other company to come here and attend the sittings of the committee for six or seven weeks at a very large expense, for the purpose of finding out what? Finding as to whether the investigations which were made by the Insurance Department of the state of New York were investigations which had been made in good faith, and whether the reports were correct or not.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Will my hon. friend allow me to ask one question on that point. Did Mr. Eldridge not state in his evidence that every dollar of the assets of the comapny, whether in Canada or the United States, was liable and belonged to the policy-holders in every country?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Mr. Eldridge stated that, but we do not require Mr. Eldridge to answer that question. We know that when any company does business, whether in England, in the States or in Canada, that it is liable for all its debts. It is rather a strange question to put. It does not follow that the Department of Insurance of the state of New York is not entitled to have its reports taken as being prima facie correct, and it does not follow that if these reports, or if the results of the investigations which have been made down there are to be questioned; that they are to be questioned through a committee of the Senate, instead of through the Superintendent of Insurance of the Dominion of Canada, who is the proper officer to make the inquiry in a proper manner, with the books and papers, and which would have avoided the abuse to which we have been witnesses during the six or seven weeks that this inquiry has lasted. Now, hon. gentlemen, I call your attention to this point. To-day it is a United States insurance company which is being investigated; to-morrow it might be a Canadian insurance company which would be treated in the same way in the United States, and I say that we have been creating a bad precedent in allowing a committee of the Senate to thus go into this matter in the way it was done, questioning the reports made in the regular way, of the department of the state of New York. And I repeat that the proper course, especially between nations, would have been to have instructed the Superintendent of Insurance to cause the proper examination to be made of the books of the company at the head office. But the committee has made inquiry, the committee has reported the evidence, and I think that it is incumbent on us now to go further and take what we consider proper conclusions on the evidence. To my mind, the evidence has the effect of corroborating entirely the bona fide character of the reports which have been made as well by the Superintendent of Insurance of New York, as well as by the chief examiner, and when I say that, I do not want any hon. gentleman to infer that the company have been whitewashed by these reports. On the contrary, when reference is made to those reports, it will be found that the company's management has been criticised, and severely criticised, in several instances, and I may say that I put the question to Mr. Wells, and I will be able to give the references if desired, I invited him to say as to whether he had any criticism to make of the report of the Superintendent of Insurance and of that of the chief examiner, and his answer was that they were fair reports. (See part 4, page 143.) We have it in evidence that the company themselves were dissatisfied with the reports, and attempted to answer the criticisms which were made against their management. But what I submit is that the investigations were made repeatedly ; one investigation was made in 1895, another in 1897, and another in 1898, and another in 1901. On one occasion, we have it in evidence, that it was an investigation made by the chief examiner, which lasted some three months, with no less than twelve assistants, and that they examined all the books and papers of the company. I say that in the face of an examination of that kind, especially when we have not had an opportunity of examining into the books and papers of the company, that unless we have very strong evidence, which we have not at all, we are bound to accept the reports. And I say that the accuracy of those reports has not been attacked in any shape or form ; that there was no evidence brought against any portion of those reports. I therefore take up the seventh paragraph, which reads as follows :

7. The superintendent of the Insurance Department of the state of New York caused an examination to be made of the company's affairs, both in 1897 and in 1898 ; on the occasion of the latter examination, most of the charges mentioned in the evidence reported and now on the table of the House were investigated and found groundless, as will appear from the reports of the chief examiner, of the assistant actuary and of the superintendent of said insurance department.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—May I ask the hon. gentleman a question ? Does he allege that that statement is based on the evidence adduced before the committee, or is it simply a fabrication of his own ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If the hon. gentleman wants an answer from me, he will have to make use of parliamentary language.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—'Fabricate' is not a parliamentary word.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I decline to answer any hon. gentleman who uses any such words as the hon. gentleman has used.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I will use the words the hon. gentleman desires if I can get the information.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The word 'fabricate' involves a lie.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If it is not based on the evidence, he must make or fabricate the statements. It means one and the same thing. Anybody who knows the dictionary will know that.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—You have the evidence, and my statement will not be challenged, that the charges were made by these witnesses Wells and Paterson under oath in 1899, that they were made both to the superintendent of the insurance department of the state of New York and to the Attorney General, on two different occasions. We have the evidence that after those charges had been made an examination was made of the books and papers of the company in 1899, and that everything was found correct, and we have the evidence of the chief examiner of the state of New York, his affidavit which was put in evidence, taken by the referee in the case against Paterson, to the effect, as mentioned in paragraph 7, and which I shall read at once :

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman had better do so because the evidence will not bear out that statement.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE. I am reading from the deposition of the Chief Examiner of the state of New York, sworn to on the second day of April, 1900, in a suit in the New York Supreme Court, city and county of New York. It is as follows :

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION

against

J. THOMSON PATERSON.

Proceedings before Stephen H. Keating, Esq., a referee duly appointed by order of Mr. Justice Lawrence to take deposition of Isaac Vanderpoel, held the 2nd day of April, 1900, at one thirty p.m., at the office of the referee, No, 32 Nassau street, New York city.

The referee takes the oath and files the same.

Isaac Vanderpoel, Esq., being first duly sworn by the referee, testifies as follows :

Examined by Mr. Elkus :

I am the chief examiner of the Insurance Department of the state of New York and have my office at No 11 Broadway, in the city of New York, which is the office of the Insurance Department of the state of New York in the city of New York. I am attending here because I have been served with the order of Mr. Justice Lawrence, dated March 31st, 1900, requiring me so to do. I have been connected with the said Insurance Department for the past thirty years.

In the year 1899 I received instructions from the Insurance Department to examine the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association. I began such examination about May 15th, 1899, and continued the same until about August 15th, 1899. This examination was conducted by me assisted by about twelve assistants. I examined or caused to be examined all the books, papers and records of the association, including the minute books of the board of directors, and also generally examined various contracts. After such examination I made a written report to the Superintendent of Insurance. I was familiar at that time, with the charges filed by James D. Wells and John M. Stevenson with the Insurance Department against the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, and its officers. In such examination I investigated the said charges against the said association and its management, so filed, in so far as the books and records of the association were concerned, and in so doing found nothing which impaired the integrity or honesty either of Frederick A. Burnham, the president of the association, or of any one else associated with him in the management of the association at the time of such examination.

I found in my examination that the acts of the officers of the said association were always within their powers and prerogatives as defined by the association's by-laws or constitution, or as said acts may have been authorized by the directors of the association as evidence by the minutes of their proceedings.

At the time of such examination I was requested by Mr. Frederick A. Burnham, the president of the said association, to make my examination of the said charges and of the said association thorough and complete, and to the best of my ability I made a thorough and complete examination thereof. I was afforded every facility by the association and its officers to make such examination.

(Signed) ISAAC VANDERPOEL.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 2nd day of April, 1900.

(Sgd.) STEPHEN H. KEATING, Referee.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The investigation was made, as far as the books were concerned, and the men who made the change were never brought up.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman is evidently unwilling to apply the same rule to all cases. In one matter he was satisfied to receive as evidence an article, a libel produced by a witness under oath, who never attempted to prove that he knew that any one item in that libel was true.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Have I a right to challenge a statement ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—And he accepted that as evidence of charges, and in this case he is not satisfied with the examination made by the proper officer with twelve assistants, with an examination which is stated to have been made when the written charges were in his hands, when he swears that the examination which was made was thorough and complete and when he says that he inquired into all the books of the company——

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If I have no right to ask a question I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER—No right to interrupt.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I rise to a point of order.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The point is not well taken.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Wait a minute. Has the hon. gentleman a right to put in my mouth a statement that I never made ?

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman who has the floor has not put any statement in the hon. gentleman's mouth.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then it is my right to place before the House my statement.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman should not interrupt.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I was raising that point of order.

The SPEAKER—That was not a point of order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then I respectfully take my seat.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman says the examination of the books and papers is not satisfactory. Let us take the principal charge on which so much time has been spent, and to which the hon. gentleman seemed to have attached much importance. What was the charge against Moss? It was in that case, as in all other charges, that the company had paid large amounts without any warrants, that they had misapplied the funds of the company. How are charges of that kind to be investigated if not by an examination of the books, if not by ascertaining from the cash-book what has been the income of the company, and by finding out how the cash has been applied from day to day, from month to month and year to year, and whether proper vouchers existed justifying all payments which have been made; and if the hon. gentleman will refer to the special report made by the chief examiner, it will be found that he specially mentioned that he has verified all the vouchers and examined all the books. Now, he might be suspected of having been biased, or of having been disposed to cover up certain items, but when we have the fact that he was assisted by twelve different persons, it would be very extraordinary, if the money of that company had been squandered, as had been suggested, that not one of these twelve persons who would be found to give the lie to this chief examiner. I would ask in what manner the hon. gentleman would indicate that the investigation should have been held, if not from the books and the papers of the company? I will not take up the time reading long extracts from the reports, but will confine myself to very few. Taking the one dated 16th May, 1898, from the chief examiner, I find the following:—

As per your appointment No. 1,104, I beg to report that I have completed the examination of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York. The examination gives the condition of the association on December 31st last. This date was taken for the reason that there could be no material change in the association's total figures as between the close of the year 1897 and the 3rd of March last, at which date the examination was commenced. I have deemed it unnecessary to repeat here the various items going to make up the association's annual statement to December 31st, 1897,, as those figures are now on file, in all the states in which the association does business, and have been or will be published by these states in their annual report. The examination shows that the company's last annual statement was substantially correct. The variations in certain of the figures, as between those contained in the report and those shown by the examination are so trivial as not to warrant a reference to these differences in this report. The assets and liabilities are set forth in Exhibit 'F.' The association having been examined by this department in 1885, and again in 1895, it is unnecessary for me to go over any ground covered in the reports made upon the examination in question.

The report further says:

As the examiners of this department in connection with their previous examination of this association have found it necessary to criticise certain of its methods, as to the keeping of some of its books of account, I believe it is now due the association to say that in my opinion, the method now in vogue in the recording of its transactions from day to day, may be said to be concise, explicit and thoroughly intelligent system of bookkeeping. The condition of the books materially expedited the work of checking book entries with original vouchers, and lessened the time which would otherwise have been necessary to make the examination as thorough as I believe it has been.

I shall read again from the report of the chief examiner, and it will be found that he did not show any disposition to cover up the transactions of this company, that the report was very critical. I call attention to the following two pages, to which I attach importance, and to which I have given due consideration. It is as follows:

From the commencement of the business by the association in 1881 down to the execution of the contract of January 7th, 1897, or for some sixteen years, the total amount of agents' balance created was $529.459.93. For the eighteen months during which the contract I speak of ran, the agents' debit balances amounted to $244,954.07. The value of these balances owing the association is extremely uncertain. Of a total of $774,414, of these items accruing since its organization, it had marked off to the end of 1897, $419,235.24, or over fifty per cent of the total.

A reference to 'Account No. 4' indicates that the contract of January 7th, 1897, contemplated the payment of the general manager of a commission to him on new business in addition to the commissions provided for in the contract to be paid by him to sub-agents and the account shows this commission to have been so allowed him to the extent of $93,810.78 notwithstanding the fact that at the same time his sub-agents were becoming indebted to the association for moneys belonging to it and which they ultimately failed to remit.

These unpaid balances of 1897 form the larger portion of the $244,954.07 of agents' debit balance to which attention has been called. The value of these accounts could not be reliably ascertained at the date of the last examination, they having been then so recently created, but an examination of them at this late day must lead to the conclusion already given in presenting this matter to you, viz., that they are of nominal value only.

This, to my mind, strongly corroborates the charge which was made before the committee, that losses, and pretty heavy losses, had been made by the company through advancing money to agents. It was strenuously contended that the money had been misapplied in paying Moss commissions to which he was not entitled. I say this is disproved. I say we have clearly in evidence that Moss has not been paid a cent to which he was not entitled. The losses incurred were through advances to agents, but not to Moss. We have a statement, which has been verified by Mr. Eldridge, and which has been verified under oath by the chief accountant of the company.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Would the hon. gentleman answer with regard to the fifteen hundred pounds which was drawn when Moss was in England ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I will answer any question of the hon. gentleman, but I cannot allow myself to be drawn away from my argument. I will be able to show that there is nothing at all in that, that it is a mere fancy of his imagination. I invite, and I say it here upon my responsibilty, any serious man to examine the evidence, and say if my statement is not correct. I repeat, it is a fancy in the mind of the hon. gentleman, as I shall be able to prove to the satisfaction of every member of this House, when he thinks that money has been misapplied in paying $7,200 odd to this man Moss in England.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—What a miserable lot of nincompoops we must have been that we did not understand that.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry is the only member of the committee who understands it, apparently.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The accounts covering Moss's whole transactions with the company are to be found in part six, pages 8 and following. It will be found, by reference to those accounts, that Moss was charged with an amount of $246,846 for advances made to him for agents. Therefore, he has been charged with the full amount of the money which he subsequently paid to agents. He was charged with cash paid to agents during 1897 on 1897 business, $207,376 ; cash paid him during 1898 on 1897 business, $64,671 ; cash paid him during 1897 on account of commissions on 1897 business, $74,151 ; cash paid him January 15, 1898, on account of commissions on 1897 business, $2,392, and several other items which need not be enumerated, but which, added up, form a total sum of $628,141.35. Then the credits are gross premiums on 1897 business $475,225 ; gross premiums on 1897 business received and credited in 1898 $203,085, forming a total of $678,311. The amount of renewal commissions on five years plan which he was entitled to during five years, amounting to $64,804, and there is another item which brings this amount up to $66,142. Therefore, we have the total cash expended by the company through payments made to Moss or payments made to all the agents through Moss, and against that we have the total premium on which he was entitled to, about 85 per cent. It would be 85 per cent if that rate of commission had covered all contracts, but it is in evidence that there was a small part of the business on which it was less ; however in round figures he would have been entitled to 85 per cent. Instead of that it is shown that he received a fraction over 83 per cent. It follows from this, and it is the most conclusive evidence taken from the books of the company, which are proved to be kept regularly, that as far as Moss is concerned he has not received a cent to which he was not entitled. The amount to which the hon. member from Wellington has called my attention is charged in that account, and this amount I may dispose of immediately. The history of it is very simple. Moss went to England by special request, and by special request of whom? Of this man Wells, who is now setting out this transaction as being an irregular transaction on the part of the company. We have the letters of Wells on record. Those letters I hope my hon. friend has read. They are written to the president pressing upon him to send Moss to England for a special purpose, to take hold of the organization in England for a time, to set the company on its feet and help its proper organization. When he was there he got into trouble. Apparently he was arrested for debt, and had either to remain in England or pay. The company had to be deprived of his services, or they had to advance him $7,200. This the company did, and it was good policy; it was proper management, and the amount appears in the account as having been advanced to Moss. We have it in evidence also that it was part of the bargain, that he was to be entitled to a commission on the business that was done by reason of his visit to England, and that the commission to which he was entitled fully covered the advance made to him. But, hon. gentlemen, is it serious, when a company is dealing with millions as this company was at that time, to take an item of this kind, and question the advisability of spending $7,000, for the purpose of sending that man to England or allowing him to return to continue the management of all agencies in the United States? There is no evidence that there was any error of management, but it would have been in the natural course of things if the witnesses who have been heard had been able to prove errors of judgment and losses for a much larger amount than that. I now come to the eighth paragraph;

8. Another examination of the affairs of the company up to the 31st December, 1901, was made by order of said Insurance Department of the state of New York, on the occasion of the reincorporation of the company, which was found to be solvent.

I need not read the evidence in that respect. It is uncontradicted. We have had the report of the chief examiner, and the report of the department. They are on record, and it was only as the result of his finding that the company was allowed to be reincorporated on the regular system in the state of New York in 1902. Then the last paragraph is as follows:—

9. Apart from the fact that the committee has not had the advantage of examining into the books and papers of the company, as was done on the occasion of the New York inquiries, the evidence taken before and reported by the Select Committee would not justify any conclusions contrary to those of the chief examiner, of the assistant actuary and of the superintendent of the Insurance Department of the state of New York.

I claim that this paragraph is also a proper conclusion to take, as being entirely supported by evidence, and as being also, for the reasons which I have mentioned, the proper position to take towards the Department of Insurance of the state of New York. I could take up the charges which have been placed on the order paper, and show the falsity of them, but I feel, at this time especially, it would be wasting the time especially, it would be wasting the time of this Honourable House, and I shall for the present confine myself to drawing attention to one of them only. It has been stated as evidence of extravagance in the management, that Mr. Eldridge had made a report to the effect that $500,000 could be saved in expenses, and that after he so reported no saving was made. His report has been put in evidence, and we have it stated in print, that not a cent has been saved, although in his own judgment $500,000 could be saved. I refer hon. gentlemen to part eight, page 22, to see the value of assertions of that kind. The recommendation as made by Mr. Eldridge is to be found at page 97 of part 4.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Will the hon. gentleman tell us where that is referred to in the report made by the majority of the committee?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It is referred to in No. 6.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—That is not before the House yet, the report of the majority.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The hon. gentleman is reading from the evidence.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Yes, I am reading from the evidence and the recommendation made by Mr. Eldridge is to be found in part 4, page 97. Then on page 99 I find the folowing evidence:—

Q. Was there any material reduction in the expenses of management after that?—A. In some items there was—not out of that, I do not think they were, but take the yearly report, it shows a reduction in some items. Take officers' salaries, I think the annual report shows a reduction, in that. In commissions to agents there was a large reduction. That showed the largest reduction, because the amount of business was very much reduced. Therefore the principal reduction in expenses came from that source.

Now, if hon. gentlemen will refer to the document filed and printed in part 8 at page 22, it will be seen that taking the expenses in 1898 they were $1,591,343, and in 1899 they were reduced to $1,185,729, a reduction of $405,614. There was a saving of over $400,000, yet we have here the assertion in print that although Mr. Eldridge claims that a reduction could be made, no reduction whatever had been made. I could take the charges one after another, and if necessary shall do so, and show that they are about equally unfounded. These are the only remarks which I felt it incumbent on me to offer in support of the conclusions which I have placed before the House. I feel I have discharged my duty, and that I would not have discharged it if I had failed to do what I have done. It would be most unfair to let a mass of evidence of that kind go before the public, and let everybody form his judgment on one individual assertion or on one portion of the evidence. It would be unfair to the company, and when I speak of the company I mean the policy-holders who have twenty odd millions of insurance in Canada—not policies actually in force, but policies which will be revived if the Bill which passed this House becomes law. I say it would be most damaging to those policy-holders, and liable to induce them to sacrifice their best interest, and it would be most damaging to all the insurance companies doing business in Canada. It is our duty, when we have taken the responsibility of appointing a committee, and allowing that committee to make a protracted inquiry, instead of throwing this mass of evidence before the public without comment, to declare what are the proper conclusions to take from the evidence, subject to the public or the parties interested, to say whether our conclusions are in accordance with the facts or not. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. senator from Marshfield, the motion which appears on the Minutes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. I find in Bourinot, page 548, speaking of the reports of committees, says :

> It must, however, always be remembered that the report submitted to the House is that of the majority of the committee. No signatures should be affixed to a report for the purpose of showing any division of opinion in the committee, nor can it be accompanied by any counter statement or protest from the minority as such a report is as unknown to Canadian as to English practice.

I claim that this motion, made to-day by the hon. member for de Salaberry is a disguised minority report. He takes up the evidence and draws conclusions from it which he asks this House to support, showing that those conclusions come from the evidence taken by the committee. That is equivalent to a minority report. If the hon. gentleman has no right to come here and ask this House to adopt a minority report, he cannot do so indirectly. Consequently his motion is not in order.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Did not the hon. member give notice of the motion ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman surely is not serious in denying the right of any member to invite the House to pass judgment upon the evidence ? The authority to which he has referred is not in point at all. I do not give this notice of motion as a member of the committee. It is not a committee report. It is as a member of this House, after having examined the evidence which is before the House, that I invite the Senate to pass judgment upon it. Suppose a majority report had been made—suppose that a report embodying conclusions had been made—let us take the one that was attempted to be made by the committee—would it not have been open to any hon. member of this House to move an amendment that other conclusions be arrived at ? Is it not equally elementary that it is open to any of us to move, in the absence of conclusions offered by the committee——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is not the same thing at all.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Is it not a fact that the motion which my hon. friend has made was not suggested in committee ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is just the point I have been raising. He has no right to do indirectly what he is forbidden to do directly.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I was not a member of that committee, but am I correct in stating that the hon. gentleman never moved what he has moved in the House as a minority report. If so, I fail to see the connection which my hon. friend is trying to establish.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Is it or is it not a report of the evidence ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The evidence has been reported to this House and is under the control of the House. Any hon. gentleman has a right to bring up, based upon that evidence, any motion upon giving notice, under the rules of the House, that he desires. Therefore there is no connection with any minority report of the committee. I cannot see any analogy at all, because the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry gave the usual notice, the evidence being before us. He has drawn certain deductions from the evidence, and submitted them as a motion, and supported them by able argument, for the House to accept or reject, and I think other hon. gentlemen have taken the view that they have the right to do the very same thing. On the order paper can be found a document which did appear at an alleged meeting of the committee, so that while the House may accept or reject the hon. gentleman's view, yet the hon. gentleman has a perfect right, or any other gentleman upon giving notice, has a right to bring up the matter.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman knows well what I said, that the hon. gentleman has no right to make a special report, and to ask the judgment of the House on this special report. He has no more right to do indirectly what he is forbidden to do directly, and that is an attempt to do in one way that which he had not the right to do in another way.

The SPEAKER—The evidence is before the House, and any member of the Senate can move a resolution, couched in parliamentary language, with respect to the effect of that evidence, and no hon. gentleman can point to any rule which says that an hon. gentleman who happens to have been a member of that committee, does not possess the same rights as if he had not been a member of the committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The consideration of the evidence is not before the House.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I have heard the learned dissertation of my hon. friend from de Salaberry. I followed it carefully, winding through the maze, if I may use that word—I do not know whether it is parliamentary—through the contortions of debate and argument—if that is not parliamentary I withdraw it, but as a layman it strikes me as a contortion, and it made me wonder where we were at, where we started, and where we propose to end. I quote now, from the debates at page 85, when I rose to move for the appointment of a select committee of five to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada, with power to send for papers, persons, telegrams and records, and to employ clerical services and with leave to report from time to time. That was my motion. I might call the attention of hon. gentlemen to the fact that when I moved for this committee, I asked for three from this side of the House, and they were almost strangers to me here, as regards any idea as to what steps they would take or how they were impressed. I canvassed none of them. I asked for two from the other side; my long parliamentary experience having taught me that the minority of the House should have a representation, and I was informed that two would act on the committee and their names were given. That made five, three supporting the government, and two on the other side, giving the government a majority of one. If hon. gentlemen will turn up the debate, they will find that I was willing to accept any hon. gentleman. There was no choice on my part, no desire to canvass any hon. gentlemen as to whether they would support me and make a personal question either for or against the company, to support my charges or their defence. I placed myself in the hands of this honourable body—not myself but the policy-holders in Canada—in the hands of the Senate, to ascertain if they were entitled to redress. If they were not, then no harm was done. Later on, some very disparaging remarks were made concerning those five gentlemen, and they were characterized in language I will not quote now, because it is on the debates. Seven more members were added. Did I object? No, I had confidence in them, and accepted them, but as those seven were added to the committee, some hon. gentlemen suggested that another seven be appointed to the committee, and remove the impression before the country, and before the world, that that was a small committee, and with nineteen hon. members of this House on that committee, the members would have some minds of their own, and would be able to form a conclusion of their own on the merits of the case. Was that an unfair position to take? Last year I said that I would endeavour to get on with this matter, but it was so late I had to withdraw it; I had given notice of a Bill, unfortunately, this year. Whether it was a correct thing to do or not, I shall not enter into the merits of that question, but a Bill was placed ahead of us, and passed this House, and we could not get it into committee, and on a tie vote in this House, where the Speaker voted as one, we had a division of 21 to 21, showing that irrespective of the committee, irrespective of those gentlemen that were characterized in such severe terms, this honourable body of independent men from the Atlantic to the Pacific, friendly and unfriendly in politics, they were there and in their independent position, not being under any obligation to their party, one side or the other, but viewing this matter as judges in the chamber, they divided, 21 against 21, in favour of and against the report. Does this show that it was entirely one-sided, as my hon. friend from de Salaberry has tried to point out from time to time? Does this show that this House was prejudiced? Has any one advanced the proposition here that I ever canvassed any member of this House to vote with me? If I did, let him rise now and say that I instructed him how to vote. I held no caucus in the lobbies, or in the upstairs rooms. I did not go out and talk at the bar on one side or the other as the case progressed, congratulating one side, or taking exception to the other side. I stand with clean hands in this House on this occasion. When we were before the committee I took no hand in the investigation at all, because there were stories drifting around the corridors—they were all brought to us; they were all retailed. There are so many people in the world who like to tell what they know. Sometimes it is true, and sometimes it is not. I did not telephone all over for members to come and vote. I did not wire that it was necessary to have everybody here. I sat on the committee as an impartial judge. I never interfered, except on one or two occasions. I thought I saw, and I am speaking now with great precaution—I thought I saw an intention, or it conveyed the impression that there was an intention, not to let us go on with the evidence which should have been adduced, to lay it before this honourable House. I think hon. gentlemen who served with me on that committee will substantiate what I say. The committee had a great many difficulties to work against. Our counsel was a K.C., a man of the highest ability, who has been to England, who has appeared before the Supreme Court, and there is not a lawyer in Canada who would pooh-pooh him. There are very few lawyers who will run down one another. They will stand by the profession generally. They will support one another because they never know when they may be together. To-day they may be fighting one another, and six months hence they may be together, dividing the costs, what they can get out of it. Therefore we will withdraw insinuations, and we will show statements made here, or impressions conveyed, and those impressions must be all conveyed with some idea or purpose, either to prejudice or to gain a sympathy. Sympathy is needed in this House. Who need any sympathy here? All the sympathy that is required is for the poor unfortunate people outside who have been defrauded. Perhaps my hon. friend from de Salaberry has taken his parliamentary right in proposing this motion, but it was after the other motion had been crowded out, when the committee reported there were 73, and where are the rest of them? They must evidently have been satisfied. They must have felt the business was going on in the proper way, and everything was done in accordance with the investigation, no undue influence brought to bear upon any of them. Therefore they felt that the committee was doing its duty and they supported the committee by not protesting. Hon. members may say what they like, but, as I said before, there was no intention of dissolving that committee, because they contended they must bring in the report, and there was the question of witness fees to deal with. They should have the opportunity of saying what should be paid or not paid. I think the stenographer's notes will show that the motion was that the committee rise and report—not that they report the evidence. There is not an hon. gentleman in the House who will not substantiate what I say now, that that was never moved, and I think it will be found that it does not appear on the stenographer's notes in that form, however it did appear in the report, but it makes very little difference. The whole thing for the country and the whole thing for this House is, what that committee went there for. Did it go charged with a duty ; did it go charged not to condemn this company but to investigate, and if this company could clear the way and show they were right, was there an hon. gentleman on that committee who would have falsified his position by reporting something that was not true ? Look at the report. How marvellously guarded, nothing but an index to the evidence so that hon. gentlemen here, instead of having to read through the voluminous report of eight volumes, can turn quickly to the evidence that has been taken, and when that report was accepted here, this hon. House could have taken in two or three days, from that index, all the important evidence required to form a proper and right conclusion. Was that so ? No, it was not so. That report was crowded out. Day by day we had motions to do something, and they have never been moved yet, and we are in the dying hours of this session. Was that taking this House into their confidence ? Was that carrying out before the country an independent line of conduct ? What will the country say of this debate ? I suppose my hon. friend takes consolation in the fact that the country never knows what the Senate is doing and never bothers with their proceedings. That is a consolation, that with all these pleadings and speeches, they amount to nothing, because nobody in the country will read them, and nobody has access to them ; but they can be used for diabolical purposes outside. My hon. friend who claims a high position, or whose friends claim for him in Quebec, a high position as a professional man, has made his speech, and can that report of the debate not be used for diabolical purposes, as an argument to catch more victims in that spider-web. Then we come to where we started in this House, that this House and the country have to be the judges as to whether I was correct or not. I am not afraid of the country. I am not afraid even if the vote were against us here. I am not afraid of being—I was going to use the word stifled,, but it is not a proper word to use ; but if from some unforeseen circumstances that one can not foresee we are—my hon. friend suggests the word 'strangulated'—if it is not parliamentary I withdraw it—controlled is a better word, then what will the public say outside, so many hon. gentlemen in this House having fought their case ? Assuming hon. gentlemen vote against them—and it is a most peculiar thing, and we have heard that birds of a feather flock together—a most peculiar thing that every lawyer in this House, except the chairman of the committee, is arraigned against the policy-holders, and, whether they intended or not, their speeches and arguments here have been in defence of the company. Who asked them to defend the company ? Who asked anybody to come to that conclusion ? The hon. House was asked to investigate the charges which I made. I charge that the returns of the company have not been in accordance with the facts. This is a grave charge, which I have put on record, and I know the responsibility which I take in making it. I shall presently prove the suppression of papers before this House. The speech that was suppressed I shall prove—that is as I made it. I knew I placed myself in a position to be attacked by the whole press of Canada, but I have such unbounded confidence in the members of the House, that I felt I could depend upon them to investigate the matter, and if I could make out my case, that they would do justice not only to myself but to the widows and orphans. I am afraid my dependence upon them is weakened, because I never could have supposed that we would meet the opposition we had to contend with. We have nothing to do with the question whether this is a Canadian or foreign company. It is doing business in Canada, and the law affords it protection and it should also protect those who are in the hands of the company. In England, the Privy Council has decided that the company must pay back to the assured, principal and interest at four per cent, and also pay all charges in the lower court and in the Court of Appeal. I did not fabricate that, and while speaking of the word 'fabrication' which I used a while ago, I do not want to use an improper word. I refer to Worcester's dictionary :—Fabricate—fabricator, fabricatus, faber, a workman, the act of fabricating construction, the fabrication of a new government.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is for next fall.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Then Worcester says 'Fabricator, one who fabricates, the almighty fabricator of the universe.' Surely my hon. friend should not have taken offence at that. Fabricator of the Senate would not be an unworthy word to use. I cannot see why there should be any feeling in reference to the use of that word. In the case of Angers against the Mutual Reserve which came before the Supreme Court here, all resting on this case, the decision was reserved as I have heard, not knowing from their lordships of the Supreme Court, with whom I would never attempt to discuss any points of this case. or ask them whether they were waiting to see the decision of the House of Lords, because if the House of Lords decided this case of Foster vs. the Mutual Reserve, which is analogous to this case, then the court must follow the decision in the Foster case, in the Privy Council, because under the legal reasoning they could not go to England on an appeal when the Privy Council had already decided it. When the House of Lords had rendered their decision and it was final then there would be no appeal from here to England, and the case must rest on their decision. I quoted from the case, and I need not go into it again. I endeavoured to place on the order paper yesterday a notice that I desire to ask the government whether they were aware that the decision of the Privy Council was against the company. That was the last appeal of the company. The decision in England was that there was no use going into the question of fraud or anything of that kind, as it had not been specially alleged, but that the whole case had been one of the most terrible fraud from top to bottom, and they ordered the company to pay back all the money that this man Foster had paid, with four per cent interest and costs to date. My hon. friend the Secretary of State—and I accept his word—says that he has only heard in the lobbies that judgment has been rendered. I have taken a great deal of trouble in this case, but I have not had sixteen lawyers behind me. I had one that was a match for them all. The Lord Chancellor called the company's policy tricky and intentionally ambiguous, and orders premiums returned. That is a telegram which I received.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER—Where did the hon. gentleman get that?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I got it half an hour ago.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—What is it called by Lord Salisbury?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The Lord Chancellor describes it as the telegram indicates, and that would destroy all the arguments of my hon. friend, if we might characterize it as special pleading. In that spirit of fair-play which my hon. friend states he is lined with all through, cut here and cut there, and take things pieces to pieces, I say that the thread of his argument is destroyed by the Lord Chancellor's designation of this company in England. And is it a fair position to place this House in? I knew this three or four days ago, and I had to trace it up bit by bit. Therefore, I think that to this House it has been a surprise. Hon. gentlemen here have not had a chance of knowing all this. But my hon. friend takes the responsibility of that, as I take the responsibility of the charges I made. The question has been disposed of in England, and the decision there will have a very great bearing all over this country, because the decision of the Privy Council must be followed here. Then where will that company be? It must be insolvent. Why? Because every policy-holder will demand his money back; if it can be recovered in England it can be recovered here. From whom will those unfortunate creatures recover? They cannot get it from the managers. They have gone through the funds and have left nothing. It has been proved in evidence that several of those gentlemen have gone through other companies, all of which have gone to pieces in the same way this seems to be going. Who is going to be responsible to the country? Will the hon. member from de Salaberry or the government be responsible for all the opposition we have had. If the company goes into liquidation, who will the liquidators be? They will be the policy-holders. For three years I have been writing about this matter, and it has become a matter of common report. It was published in the papers, because my hon. friend refers to a suit in New York where they arrested Mr. Wells, Mr. Paterson and Mr. Stevenson. But my hon. friend says that was improper evidence, and asked to have it ruled out. He did not want the people to know what came out in that committee. He wanted them to see only the sliver side of the shield. With all his ingenuity, however, he has not gone as far as he expected to go or as far as it was hoped by somebody he would go. To show how widespread this matter has become, I may mention the fact that I have received to-day a letter from a gentleman in Rotterdam, Holland, which is as follows :—

Rotterdam, July 24, 1904.

To the Right Hon. Sir Domville,
Member of the Senate of Toronto.

Dear Sir,—For some days the post brought me a copy of the debates in the Canadian Senate about the Mutual Reserve Fund. I thank you very much and I cannot let to congratulate you with your victory. You have won the battle and in honourable manner. Afterwards widows and orphans will bless you and pray for a long and happy life.

I should like to read what the company has furnished. If one of the members of the Senate will yield his copy and give it to me, I shall be glad to study it. I think audi alteram partem, but I think too not much good about that bad managed company.

Recommending myself for your report, I thank you once more for your goodness in respect to me.

I am, dear sir,
Yours truly,
J. ADAMS, Jr.
Kortckade 97
Rotterdam, Holland.

That letter is a reward for anything I have done. That is an independant expression of opinion.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD—Was he a policyholder ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Probably he was. I do not know anything about him, but it shows that the world is watching this investigation, and will draw a distinction between the gratuitous and honourable advocacy of the company by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, one of the three who objected to everything that might hurt the company, and all the other members of the committee who were unanimous in making the report. I am told that the hon. member from de Salaberry said the company was suing me. I will ask him if he made that statement ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I said the hon. gentleman was in litigation with the company. I did not say that the company sued him.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That is a very polished answer.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If the hon. gentleman will allow me, what was told me a few days ago was to this effect, that the hon. gentleman had instituted an action against the company for $10,000, and that a day or two afterwards he made his charges against the company in the Senate, that he had had other suits with the company—that he had been agent for the company in the province of New Brunswick, and had been discharged by the company, and that the counsel of the committee was his solicitor in those suits.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend went a little further than I asked him. I can tell him more than that. I was with the directors in New York with Judge Jones, of St. Louis, and other prominent men. Were they discharged ? No, they were not. Here is the evidence ; they could not hold them, but my hon. friend says some one told him I was discharged. I suppose he was told that by Mutual Reserve Fund agents, that are all through the lobbies. If anybody else told him then it was a slander. Why should my hon. friend wish to listen to slanders ? If he got it from the company then he is justified in using it for what it is worth.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. member had better correct the statement if it is not true, because it is common talk here.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It has nothing to do with the case.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am willing, for my part, to accept the hon. gentleman's statement if he says it is not true.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend says it has been common talk. I have not been among the common talk. Will my hon. friend say who told him ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—He will not say who told him.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Does the hon. gentleman deny that he had suits with the company ?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Do not say yes or no.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The statement was that Mr. Coster, the counsel for the committee, was the hon. gentleman's solicitor in these suits, and especially the one that is now pending.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Is my hon. friend placing me on trial now? Because, if so, I shall have to get some lawyer on the other side of the House to defend me. He has asked a question which I shall answer. I did sue them. I sued them for my premiums, to make them pay me back what they got out of me, and what they should not have got out of me. It was a breach of contract. My case is now pending and will be tried in September. My counsel in the case is Mr. Coster, and I am pleased to lean on him, and would rather lean on him than on some hon. members that I have heard in the course of my life, and who think they know more than Mr. Coster does. The company has not brought suit against me, and that is the whole amount of the litigation that exists to-day.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The hon. gentleman is no worse than Mr. Foster in England.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—And no worse than the Hon. Mr. Angers in Canada. If they have done wrong, I have done wrong. If I am wrong the suit going on in Kentucky and New York and other parts of the United States are wrong, and nobody can be right but the managers of this company and the hon. member for de Salaberry who is here trying, if possible, to make as good a case—I will hardly say that, to steer a way out for them. I propose to give notice of motion here directly, and some other notices of motion also. I stated while charging them with all these things that I would show what their duties were under the Insurance Act. I refer to page 17 of the Insurance Act, the 36th clause which governs their position in Canada. I have shown that they could not use the money as they have used it. because section 5 says :

No portion of any money received from assessments for death claims shall be used for any expense whatever, and every notice of any assessment shall truly specify the cause and purpose thereof.

I was trying to point out that this was a copartnership or a mutual society and that they could not raise money for one purpose and spend it for another, that if they did so they were liable under the laws of Canada to whatever penalty might be incurred therefor. That I thought was sound, because it was the law of the land. It could not be controverted by any opinion as to what we pass here or elsewhere, or what effect the Bill which passed this House might have. We might differ. One hon. gentleman might say that it had one effect, and I might think it had another. Neither might be right, or one might be, but I pin my faith to the Insurance Act, chapter 124 of the Revised Statutes of Canada as amended by 51 Victoria, chapter 28, and other amending Acts. That was good authority ; that was unpurchased authority. There was nothing to influence me one way or the other but the facts. I showed also that death claims shall be a first charge on all moneys realized by assessments, and no deductions shall be made from such death claims on any account whatever. My hon. friend admits that the managers of this company did make deductions. I did not follow his figures, but they scalped 5 per cent off the policy-holders in Canada.

What possible right had they to take one iota off these policy-holders ? The governing committee were not in a position to do it. They had their doctor and their directors, and when their doctor and agent accepted a risk and the company carried the policy five or ten years, what right had they to say we find in your statement so and so, and we will only pay you so much. They have taken off 5 per cent on the whole amount of the death claims paid in Canada. It is not only the percentage taken off those policies but they scaled them down. Let us suppose in the policies that they settled they paid 50 or 60 per cent of the claim; spread that over the whole of the policies paid, and it shows a small percentage, and it could be argued that on all the business they did with the people of Canada they deducted only a very small percentage. But they did not take it off the whole of them. We had before us the case of a poor man, here in Ottawa, that I wanted to put on the stand, but I did not succeed. I can get people all over the country whose claims were scalped 40 or 50 per cent. But we are told that these people could go to the law courts. What can poor people do fighting such an organization ? Look at the expense involved in this great fight that has just ended before the Privy Council in England ? What poor widow of an artisan or labourer could face the expense of such a contest ? The most honest and generous lawyer in the country must charge for his services, and poor claimants could not pay. I know of a case where a widow who was insured for $1,000 was offered only $500. When she consulted a lawyer she was told if she had not money enough to fight it, she had better accept the offer. Wherever they had a chance to scale down the claims of people who were helpless to help themselves, they compelled them to take just what they chose to give. I was in Montreal only two or three weeks ago, and an hon. member of this House was present with me, and we met a man with a policy that was due. There was no contention, no complaint of fraud or anything of the kind, but he could not get paid. They kept promising to pay him, but never settled. If the evidence before the Senate is correct, then the company are all the time two million dollars behind. Even if they were a million behind they assessed under the principle of assessment, to meet death claims. If every month $500,000 death claims took place, then they have a right to assess the whole of us for $500,000 to pay those claims. But if we believe that they ever paid out that $500,000 to wipe off the claims against them, they would not be behind. But they do not pay these people and still they are in arrears. No policy-holder has a chance of knowing the position of the company. My hon. friend laid considerable stress on the evidence, and dwelt on the character of Mr. Paterson. Supposing Mr. John Thomson Paterson were to make strictures on one of my colleagues here, I would not accept them from him. But some of my colleagues are striving to show that Mr. John Thomson Paterson is not an actuary, notwithstanding his evidence given under oath, and uncontradicted. Let me read what is said of Mr. Paterson by those who know him :

Mr. J. Thomson Paterson is one of the ablest actuaries in the country, and his writings on insurance matters are considerd as authority.—'Western Economist,' Des Moines, Ia.

Mr. J. Thomson Paterson is a gentleman of large experience and has an intimate knowledge of the theory of life insurance.—'The Underwriter,' Philadelphia, Pa.

Mr. Paterson is a well-known statistician in insurance as well as an able writer.—'The National Underwriters,' Baltimore, Md.

We have a high respect for Mr. Paterson's masterly grasp of insurance and actuarial questions.—'The Insurance Observer,' New York.

Mr. J. Thomson Paterson is an accepted authority on life insurance. He is the author of several interesting books on that subject, which have found admiring readers in nearly every civilized nation on the globe.—'The Ledger,' Dubuque, Ia.

The author, Mr. J. Thomson Paterson, has made life insurance a study, and is master of the subject, if any one can be.—Montreal 'Herald,' Montreal, Que.

Mr. J. Thomson Paterson, a recognized authority on life insurance, is one of New York's men of figures, being a born mathematician.—'The Evening Telegram,' New York.

The author, Mr. J. Thomson Paterson, is well up in life insurance topics and has contributed not a little to its literature and done it well.—Toronto 'Bulletin,' Toronto, Ont.

Mr. Paterson is conceded well versed on life insurance.—'Daily States,' New Orleans, La.

Mr. J. Thomson Paterson is a recognized authority on life insurance. He is the author of several valuable books on the subject which have been read extensively not only by insurance men, but by the public generally.—Albany (N.Y.) 'Evening Journal.'

Mr. J. Thomson Paterson, widely known in insurance circles as the compiler of several valuable works on life insurance, has had an extensive experience in actuarial and field work.—'Thrift,' New York.

Mr. Paterson has a clear and vigorous style and a very effective way of presenting facts and figures.—'Insurance Advocate,' New York.

It is not necessary to quote any more to show that the committee was not dealing with a man of straw or a man who had no knowledge of insurance, but with a man who is well known and acknowledged by everybody as a most astute and able man. The committee are charged with bringing a man here who did not know his business. What is the position of that committee in this country ? Why, the further we travel from these buildings the more convinced the people are that we have been trying to do our duty, notwithstanding all the difficulties thrown in our way, as I have tried to illustrate to you. I have read a letter received from Rotterdam to-day. I have also a letter from a woman in Toronto, which I shall not read, and I have letters from other places, all showing that we are dealing with this question in a legitimate way, and in the public interest. It ill becomes anybody in this House or elsewhere to throw slurs at the nineteen hon. gentlemen on that committee. I took down the word used by an hon. member in speaking of them; he said they were degraded.

That was the word used against this committee.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I think the hon. gentleman does not know the full meaning of that word.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have a thorough understanding of the word. That is the opinion outside, and the opinion of a good many inside.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I find the following definition of degraded :

Deprived of dignity or rank, debased or low. A degenerate and degraded state.—Milton.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A good authority.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—A good authority for those who like him. I never cared for 'Paradise Lost' or 'Paradise Regained.' However, if my hon. friend is satisfied with it, I have no objection, but I should like to know whether the remark applied to the whole nineteen members of the committee or only to the chairman ? Some say it was intended to apply to the chairman.

At six o'clock, the Speaker left the chair.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Before the hon. gentleman resumes his speech, I want to give notice of an amendment.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from Rothesay has the floor.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—If the House consent, I am willilng to let the hon. gentleman give notice of his amendment before I resume the debate.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman would forfeit his right to speak again.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I had prefaced what I was about to say with a few remarks. I only touched on the matter slightly, but I am in hopes before I am done with this subject that I shall be able perhaps to convince some hon. gentlemen who have not given this subject full consideration that there is more in this question than appears on the surface. We are dealing now with the motion of the hon. member from de Salaberry, offering what he represents as the proper conclusions on the evidence taken in the investigation. His motion covers nine sections, and in those nine sections it would appear that the rattler is in the ninth, which reads as follows :—

Taking that as a basis, the hon. gentleman evidently is of opinion that his motion takes the place of a minority report. He might fairly claim that as the committee was brought to an end against the wish of the majority, the committee being powerless to prevent it, therefore he could make this minority report now, but at the same time getting at the report of the committee as sent in to this honourable House and which is now on the table. I have a notice on the paper here which calls for all the papers to be produced and to be read by the Clerk of the House. That will take some little time, but it is the only constitutional way we had to get them before the House if there is any doubt that they were before the House. I have none in my own mind that the House was properly seized of them. Now what is the object of this motion ? Why has the hon. member from de Salaberry clothed himself with the power of alone reporting ? Why should he arrogate to himself the power of instructing this House or instructing the committee, or assuming the championship, if I may use the word, of the rights of anybody ? Whose rights is he protecting ? Not the committee's, because the committee has been unceremoniously turned down. Of course, it is beyond our power to prevent it. The ruling was against us. Mr. Speaker has the power to rule against us. There will be another Speaker here next session, I presume, and he will rule for or against us, and we must abide by his decision. I am not prepared to say that the power of ruling is the same in the Senate as in the House of Commons, because I understand the Speaker here holds a dual position. While custodian of the rights of the House, as Speaker, he has also the right to come down on the floor and take part in a debate, and consequently, has acted strictly within his rights ; but why the hon. member from de Salaberry should have brought in this minority report, I cannot say. Would it not have been better to have conferred with the other seven gentlemen of the committee, and tried to come to an agreement? It was not like trying a case in a court of law. It was open to the widest investigation, and we could have come to some conclusion unanimously. But no, I have had the greatest difficulty to get the evidence before the House—have had to use every possible constitutional method of getting it submitted. The seventh report of the committee was presented long ago, and it has not yet been received. It has been staved off from time to time, because it is proposed to eliminate from it certain evidence which was unfavourable to the Mutual Reserve Association. Would it not have been better to let it come in in the ordinary way, to have said this investigation has been made, and here are the results. The hon. gentleman might have said I do not agree with my colleagues, but why does he try to eliminate important evidence? He has signally failed, because it is on the Journals of the House, and cannot be very well got rid of. No doubt he has been acting strictly within his rights, but when he was appointed to the committee to act in a judicial capacity—we have heard a good deal about acting in a judicial capacity, and what one should do and should not do—he should have allowed the House to have possession of everything brought before the committee, without trying to exclude it, and prevent it coming before the country. This discussion has been kept going day by day at the public expense; time has been wasted and all for what? Simply to prevent that report being brought in, and having succeeded, by parliamentary tactics, in keeping it back, my hon. friend brings in a motion, which, if adopted, would wind up the matter as he says, and his conclusion is that 'the committee has not had the advantage of examining into the books and papers of the company as was done on the occasion of the New York inquiries.'

Now, let us take the evidence that is already before the House, sworn testimony that has never been disputed, that Mr. Burnham said he required from the directors a hundred thousand dollars to obtain that report from the inspector, and that they got together, and finally he reported that he had obtained the report for $65,000, and he called his friends to his assistance, and said, 'Here is utter ruin; the inspector says he will not give us the certificate to go on, and we cannot go on with the business; we must throw up our hands unless we can get this report.' Have we not in the evidence that Mr. Wells himself loaned him $5,750? Is it not in the evidence that the others loaned him money to pay for that report, and that they had to sue him afterwards to get the money back? And did they not show by documents produced before the committee, that they worked that out of the company in some indirect way? Now, what is the value of the report, on which the hon. gentleman relies? My hon. friend said the other day that that evidence should not be admitted, that it was not legal. Any lawyer who knows elementary law would understand that that report would not be taken in any court. A man who declined to give a certificate to the company, and who had to be paid to make a special report, can hardly be depended on. What value is there in such a report to justify my hon. friend in the conclusion he puts forward in paragraph 9? What did Mr. Payne, who made the report, say? He said that the company were wrong in every respect. He was the man sent down, as I remember by the evidence, to look into the affairs of the company, and he reported dead against them, and yet my hon. friend pins his judgment on the report, when the evidence shows that it was purchased. Why should it be purchased? Why all this dreadful struggle here like the struggles of a drowning man? Why the struggle with the inspector and the examiner, and the high price paid for a favourable report if the company was properly managed? Yet my hon. friend is willing to take that report as good evidence why the company should be whitewashed. The hon. gentleman says in paragraph 9: 'The committee has not had the advantage of examining into the books and papers of the company.' Now, that implies that somebody did have that advantage. A report was presented to the committee, showing that Mr. Payne did not go into the charges made by the policy-holders, but merely examined the books placed before him. If this association had been in earnest and felt that they could answer those charges and clear themselves, would they not have brought the books here ? They were asked to produce papers, and did they produce anything ? Mr. Burnham, the president, went to England. He would not come here. Perhaps he was right in not coming here.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—He was safer.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—He would have a pleasanter experience in going to England. The reasoning of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry is tortuous—that because they bought this report and paid for it, and had litigation amongst themselves to get the money back, and Mr. Payne said he had never gone into the charges, but only examined the books placed before him, that therefore we are to say that this is perfectly satisfactory to the policy-holders in Canada, and we should whitewash the company. I do not know the law of Quebec or the parliamentary practice in that province, but I should think, outside of the coûtume de Paris, if it is there, it would not pass in any other part of the world. I am not prepared to say, from my want of knowledge, whether it is in the province of Quebec or not, but it is a matter of special pleading on behalf of the company. When I say special pleading, I say it because these paragraphs in the motion of the hon. gentleman are so extravagant in the face of the evidence now on the table. He takes up paragraph No. 1, and says it is undisputed :

1. The company was licensed in Canada from 1885 to 1899 to carry on business on the assessment plan, and from 1899 to this date on the level premium plan.

No doubt of that, it cannot be disputed. Then No. 2,

2. That part of the business of the company which is under the level premium plan, is fully protected by the deposit made with the government, as required by the Insurance Act.

Now this House is asked to declare to the policy-holders and to the country that they are fully protected by the deposit made with the government. That is tortuous again, because it refers to 'the level premium plan.' We are not talking about the level premium plan. We do not care anything about it. They altered the name of the company, and changed their mode of doing business ; that is, they dropped the assessment plan, and took up the level premium plan, and when they came to the Canadian policy-holders and asked them to move from one to the other, they got very few to do it.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—They got only 25 per cent.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—They got 25 per cent of the policy-holders to leave the assessment system and go into the level premium system. Why did not the hon. gentleman discuss that in paragraph 2 ? Caution came in, extreme caution. He does not say anything about them at all. He says that the part of the business under the level premium plan is fully protected. That has nothing to do with the contract they made with the Canadian policy-holders under the assessment system. My hon. friend, intentionally or unintentionally, has drawn a herring across the trail. He says they are fully protected. How does he know that ? We did not have that before us. If the company should cease to do business tomorrow their policy-holders might be fully protected or not. That depends on whether they are able to be reinsured or not, and that depends, of course, on many contingencies. If the hon. gentleman, when he drafted his resolutions, omitted mentioning the assessment policy-holders through an oversight, we ought to give him the benefit of the doubt, but I do not believe that, under the Bill now before the House of Commons, the policy-holders are protected. I have been looking into this matter, and have discussed it with men who ought to know their business, and I cannot see what is to prevent this assessment company ceasing to do business in Canada and taking all their deposit out of the hands of the government, save and except $40,000. Of course that is a matter of opinion, and it is not worth my while dwelling upon it. I can only regret extremely that when that Bill was allowed to go through it did not contain the clause that I suggested, that the money deposited with the government could not be withdrawn. If it is contended that it cannot be withdrawn, what harm could there be in saying so in the Bill, so that those who run may read ? It would have settled doubts in everybody's mind, and the government would not have been in a false position about that money in holding it. Any day there might be a petition of right, and then we would have another crop of lawyers around fighting that out, and win or lose somebody has to suffer. Then we come to the third paragraph.

3. From 1885 to the 31st December, 1903, the total income of the company in Canada, from its business on the assessment plan, amounted to $5,032,518, out of which $3,060,029 were paid in death claims and $999,865 in expenses in Canada, and $218,938 deposited with the government, leaving a balance of $753,686 to cover expenses of collection of the premiums and the contribution of the Canadian business to the general and head office expenses and to the general mortality fund.

We are supposed to get here the income that they received. Any schoolboy would know that there is nothing in that statement to show what they received. Here is what we complained of; it is put in a way that looks very nice, and we are told that out of the five millons they collected in Canada, two millions should not have gone away. My hon. friend has argued that they charged too little for insurance; that had they charged more they would have been in a better position, but they must have charged us quite enough in Canada if they were able to take two millions, that is to say some 60 per cent, barring the deposit in Canada, to run the business. I have heard it argued that 60 per cent is not too much, but it was so arranged that the officials were able to take salaries ranging from $45,000 to $185,000 a year out of it. Had that money remained in the company's treasury, the business would not have been in the position it occupies to-day. There is nothing there to show that they did not collect enough. They did not collect enough to enable them to take more than they did take. The whole case is given away by my hon. friend. If we take the information laid before us in regard to the Bankers' Association of Des Moines, we see that that company was able to go right along and pay everything, and yet have a rest of something over four millions on hand, and were not compelled to compromise claims in every direction and make heavy assessments on the policy-holders. By properly administering the affairs of the company they were able to make a success of the business. They started two years before the Mutual Reserve and are in existence to-day, and in a first-class position, doing a business of $300,000,000 while the poor unfortunate Mutual Reserve policy-holders find the business of their association running down, the expenses increasing, and that they have to compromise their claims. Now the management have come to parliament for a charter which will enable them to handicap the policy-holders either by loading down their policies according to such tables as they may have, or adding premiums so excessive that nobody will exercise the option. It is claimed that they will get their policies for two dollars per thousand less than the level premium plan. What sane man would take a policy in this company if he is able to get one in a company of repute and standing in Canada or some other country? The whole point is to endeavour—and I believe the right exists—to withdraw all the money they can get in Canada. They want to compel policy-holders to move from one class into another. The policy-holders have no show. If it was a joint stock company in Canada that was amenable to parliament you could get at them, but as the evidence before the committee shows, this association is managed by, I was going to say vampires, but I will not—they have got the company by the throat and you cannot dispossess them. But we are asked, why do not the policy-holders vote them out? Why, we cannot, in this House, get a majority, whether our case is good or bad, to enable us to bring in a report, though a minority report is brought in now in the shape of a notice, from the source that prevented the majority of the committee submitting a report to the consideration of the House. This motion is very well drawn for the company—I must apologize for using that term—I should say it is very well drawn in the interest of Mr. Burnham and Mr. Eldridge.

I have nothing to say about the other officers of the company. I never had anything against them. I presume they are doing the best they can under the circumstances, and under the dictation of their masters. Why should not my hon. friend from de Salaberry, putting aside what his views are, have lent his aid and help to the policy-holders, and try and put them in a position that they could control the company? If these gentlemen whom I have just named, had been retired years ago the company might have been in a good position to-day, and they might have been doing as well as the Bankers' Life of Des Moines, Iowa, if they had been prudently managed. But no, with every determined effort to get them out, there they stand, and like the old man of the sea in 'Sinbad the Sailor,' you cannot get them off. They have succeeded in getting into this committee. They have not got very far, but they will come out injured and bruised. Why should they be able to walk around these lobbies, and have a chance to influence hon. members? I cannot for the life of me see why they should have any endorsation or backing in any shape. I think if the scales had been evenly balanced, my hon. friend from de Salaberry and others should have turned the scales in favour of the policy-holders, those that were afflicted and those that were injured rather than the scales on the other side in favour of Mr. Burnham and Mr. Eldridge. That is what I would have considered even-handed justice. If we have erred at all we should have erred on the side of those who have been injured, and should not have erred for those who were under control so to speak, or accused of certain misdemeanours. We should have leaned to the side of mercy for those who have been so scandalously treated. My hon. friend had a perfect right to do as he thought fit, and he had to justify his course. I will justify what I have done with my own conscience. Other hon. members must justify the course they pursue with their own conscience. Paragraph 4 reads as follows:—

4. The company's troubles are mainly due to the fact that its rates or assessments were too low, especially until 1895. Even with the advance which was made in 1895, varying from 25 to 100 per cent, the rates remained at least 25 per cent less than the level premium system would have called for; and, taking the whole period of nineteen years during which the company carried on business in Canada, the average rates or assessments paid by its policy-holders were only from about 50 to 66⅔ per cent of what the latter would have paid if they had been under the level premium plan.

I will show by table here, when I come to read this evidence, that not only did they get enough, but if they had prudently managed the business, they would have had more than enough to carry it on successfully and not be in the position they are to-day; still there is always one bright spot in the sky, and they will go home and will be able to say 'We have succeeded in preventing the company from being put into liquidation.' That is what should have been done. The company should have been put into liquidation and the deposit here divided among the policy-holders. I for one would have allowed my share of it to go, and others would have done the same, because they do not value their interests in the company as worth anything. They would have said: 'That money is there, let it go in some way to reinsure those who cannot be reinsured for whatever they can get under the forced circumstances of being uninsurable, as can be done in some companies.' We would have been willing to permit that to be done, because we can get nothing out of the readjustment scheme. I stated the other night, and I state again, that all they can get per thousand, either added to their policy or as one premium, is twenty dollars. What is twenty dollars? Mark you, they do not get the twenty dollars now, but it is to be added to their policy, that is to say, if a man has a policy of a thousand dollars, it stands as one thousand and twenty dollars, less what they are going to lose, and take it under the Act. If you remember the 'Sea Dreams,' by Tennyson, when the injured man was seeking to get relief, an individual came along and said to him 'My dear friend, when the great books of Daniel are opened at chapters seven and ten, you will find you are well' and he passed along smiling, but the poor man was ruined.

There is twenty dollars taken off, and we add one hundred on. Taking twenty off and adding a hundred means eighty dollars. That was an ingenious Bill. That Bill paralyzed the Banking and Commerce Committee, who threw it up and allowed the company to bring in three expert insurance gentlemen to look into it, two of them from Canada, and they said plainly to you, this disgraceful company said, 'If you alter the Insurance Act, so as to interfere at all with us, as we are coupled with it, it will do injury to Canada.' They allowed Mr. Eldridge to frame a Bill. They cared nothing about the Bill. The Canadian actuary and the Canadian companies care nothing so long as you shield them, and they can point to the Bill we have passed and say, 'That was an Act for the relief of the Mutual Reserve Company, not for us, and whatever you do with them, we do not care one iota, as long as you do not hive them with us.' That was the result of the Bill. We could not get a chance at the Bill. We could not get it in Committee of the House. The Bill was altered and the name changed. I asked to have that Bill reprinted. Had it been reprinted, and had I seen it as it appears to-day, I never would have consented to it going through the House. It went through in a week. I have great hopes that the Commons of Canada will amend it by putting in such a safeguard as will enable us to say what we mean and what we feel. I do not think paragraph 4 of this amendment is a fair argument. Supposing the gentleman who wrote me from Holland was to get hold of this amendment, he would say, 'The troubles of the company are due to the fact that the rates are too low, and that taking the whole period, the insured have paid less than they should have paid.' That is the conclusion we are asked to arrive at, after an investigation made of the accusations as to their honesty and integrity. There is not one word about that in this amendment. It is simply saying that if they had charged higher rates they would have had more money, they would have larger incomes, and have paid more salaries than they did. What is the trial going to cost? We see in one year the company paid $75,000 in legal expenses. What will their legal expenses in this case be? I should like to place a notice on the paper, inquiring what they paid and whom they paid. The committee tried to ascertain what salaries the officials of the company were paid, but it was held we were not justified in asking it. It was said that it was an improper question for us to ask, and we could not find out what they were paying, and not being able to find out what they paid and who received it, we were told it was an impartial investigation, and that we were going too far. It was degrading, it was not a law court. It was everything under the sun. We could not get what we wanted, and the association were enabled to withhold from us what they had a right to give us under the mandate of the Senate. They were sworn to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. They say, 'We won't answer.' What was the use of taking the Holy Writ in their hand and swearing they would tell the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, when they did not do so? Why were they not compelled to do it? Some of them said it was a court of prosecution. In a court of justice before twelve jurymen and a judge—and I believe our judges stand very well before the country—what would have been said? The court would have said, 'Answer those questions, sir.' If the witness said, 'I won't answer them,' then he took the consequences. I say it is a farce to put a man on the witness stand, and allow him to refuse to answer. It is better to keep him off the stand. Then the company had an opportunity of producing papers, and disproving anything that could be disproved. Will my hon. friend show me anything that was disproved by those papers? Not one thing. There is the testimony on oath against them, and not a thing disproved, and yet we are asked to pass a resolution like this. What for? If it was passed by this Senate it would be misleading to the public, and it would be most unfair to the hon. gentlemen in this House who have not paid as much attention to this long, dreary investigation, though it was spear against spear and thrust and parry, lay low for cavalry, and so on. Then it was beautiful on the defence in every stage. Among the nineteen members of this committee, there were two or three who were very assiduous in their duties: they were always there, and they felt that the management was badly conducted, but the association was in our hands looking to us to defend them, and put them right. Paragraph No. 5 reads as follows:—

5. The amount paid to or advanced by the company to agents, as commission, seem to have been at times abnormally high, which was not satisfactorily explained. Nevertheless, taking as a whole the period extending from 1885 to December 31st, 1903, the gross average expenses amounted to only $5.96 per $1,000 of insurance, per year, which compares favourably with other companies.

That is very ingenious. I am going to read it presently to show that it amounted in some years to $32 a thousand. When the business went down, the expenses went up in inverse ratio, and yet that does not appear there. How much better it would have been to have placed the matter in its proper shape, and to have said in these reports : 'Well, we have left undone those things which we ought to have done, and we have done those things which we ought not to have done. and there is no health in us,' and asked for absolution. Then parliament might have said : 'We are fighting for the poor policy-holders.'

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I rather like my hon. friend from de Lorimier, and I won't mind his interruptions. I observe his ability creeping out of him. He saw where it was going to lead, and I congratulate my hon. friend on his cleverness in steering clear of the rocks, for in the future when this concern assumes another phase, between now and next session, the hon. gentleman from de Lorimier will say 'I at first thought there was something in this. I thought the hon. gentleman from Rothesay was not well posted. and perhaps he had hardly realized what he was doing ; but now after I have gone a little further, I see that I must ease off, and get out of it, for my own credit's sake and be done with it,' because by and by when things turn out, as they evidently must, he will say, 'Gentlemen you went too far.' It is like the fellow who had two wives. and before he died he asked to be buried between them. He was asked why he made this request, and he said 'I loved them both. bury me between them, but as I loved Biddy the best, give me a little cant towards Biddy.' And by and by the hon. gentleman will say that Biddy was his girl—that this was wrong and he saw it. I congratulate him. He is an able lawyer, and must know the danger and difficulty of the situation, and he would not allow himself to be involved in this matter to a very great extent. I think paragraph 5 is very misleading. Then paragraph 4 says that the assessments made by the company were too low. If the hon. gentleman were to take the House and the public into his confidence he would tell them that for certain years it was $5.96 a thousand, but in other years it was $32 a thousand. and he would explain to the public that. the company had been compelled to do so-and-so. Paragraphs 4 and 5 should be made one clause, and they should be explanatory of each other. They are misleading at present. No. 6 is a rehash of No. 3 and reads as follows :

6. The total amount of death claims against the company in Canada from 1895 to 1903, both inclusive, amounted to $2,278,207, on which the company paid $2,151,592, or 94·442 per cent.

That looks like a reasonable statement to make, that they only docked the policyholders five per cent, but whom did they dock ? They docked so many. It was not over the whole country that they took five per cent, but where they could bully a man or hound him down, or where he was not in a position to do anything, perhaps the widow with the wolf at the door, glad to take anything which would help. They scalped them to the extent of forty and fifty per cent, and although my hon. friend says we have no right to discuss the question as regards the United States, I say we have every right to discuss their position there. They were part and parcel of the company ; the ruling is that the company here is the company there, and the company there is the company here, and we have every right to know what they are doing in the United States. It is a very feeble argument to say that we are only entitled to examine them in Canada. The resolution reads 'To examine into the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association.' How could you eliminate one from the other ? How could you divide Canada from the United States ? My hon. friend has said that they were all one company. If they were one company. then by parallel reasoning we were justified,as partners here, to know what our partners there were doing. Why should we go to New York ? They are licensed under the Insurance Act here. and make statements, and can be examined here through their agent. They must have a representative in Canada who will give a certificate every year as to the business, and if he does that, and they send from the United States the report as it is presented to the various states, it should be produced here and laid on the table. I moved for it, and the House is now seized of that report, as presented at Albany. We have a right to examine that report, and compare it with our own report, to see how far they agree or disagree. We have a right to go into the whole matter.

Following that up we have a right to see what reports they made to the various other states, and see how they agree. I am now only giving a glossary, because I am going to read all this evidence before I conclude. I am simply making some introductory remarks, and I can bring evidence to substantiate the argument I am making on general principles, on the motion of my hon. friend from de Salaberry. I do not think his position is tenable at all, because we cannot go to New York to look into their books, and if we license them here and they have the protection of Canada, we have a right to see what they are doing. My hon. friend might argue—and I think he would argue with reason—that this House should not have been forced to take up this matter to obtain this information; that it should have been taken up by the department whose business it is to inspect or superintend and examine into these matters. Why should the eyes of these men have been blind, if they were blinded? How is it they could not tell that there were judgments against this company anywhere? How was it they did not know of the decision of Mr. Justice Lord Romley in England? How is it I have to inform the House that the decision in England was against the company? My hon. friend would perhaps be right in saying that they knew it. Well, if they knew of these things, why have they been allowed to go on? I am not blaming anybody. I am not making any charges. I am pointing to the cold, hard facts that exist, that this association has been allowed to do wrong, and has never been compelled to pay what they should have paid. They were more lucky here than they were in Albany. They did not have to pay $65,000 for a certificate to do business. They could not get it there until they paid for it, but they got it here without paying for it. All those facts exist, a matter of public history in the public newspapers, suits against them everywhere almost, and the evidence before the courts everywhere. The sworn testimony from the files of the court in New York was produced here, and yet none of us here knew anything about it. Had I been a lawyer in the province of Quebec, I should have had the files and journals of the courts in New York. I hunted up the English cases here. I am not a lawyer, but with the help of a friend, I went to the library and looked at these cases. We are charitable and well-intentioned in this matter, and it is well that we should not do anything to injure the managers of that company. I say with premeditation that the whole of this business is not in the interest of the policy-holders. I say it is in the interests of the managers. How could we be so blind. They were not blind down in Albany about the report. I might refer to the story of the man in one of the lower provinces, Nova Scotia, I think, who smuggled gin into the province. It was in the old days of the demijohns of gin. The customs officer used to lie down on the sofa and he would put a doubloon—a twenty dollar gold piece on each of his eyes—and the officer saw nothing.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (Windsor)—That was New Brunswick?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Well, they are all together. They are blue-noses.

Hon. Mr. BLACK—I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken. We have the Scott Act in Nova Scotia. It must have been in New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—It makes very little difference. I think the story came from Yarmouth, if we go to the bottom of it; but it points to a great deal. It shows that the customs officer could not see the demijohns of gin going ashore, and when they had all been landed he rose and wiped his eyes, and went out perfectly satisfied that there was nothing wrong. So the company have floated along here step by step, till they have got, I think, to the end of their tether, in regard to their way of doing business. They have asked the endorsation of this honourable body, and we are divided, 21 to 21, and the Bill consequently goes through that they are endorsed here before everybody, notwithstanding the sworn evidence that was adduced, uncontroverted, that they bribed the superintendent at Albany to give them a report. Mr. Payne gave them a report to assist them. They were in a terrible shape, and the superintendent at Albany held them up for a hundred thousand dollars, according to the sworn testimoney, and they paid him $65,000. We have the sworn testimony in regard to that, but without waiting until that evidence was in the possession of the House, the Bill was put through to rehabilitate the company.

Now, we have before us a resolution which says that there is nothing wrong about that —it is tantamount to saying that, and the company leave court with clean skirts. Is that a report which this House should be allowed to accept? My hon. friends here perhaps have not waded through the mass of testimony taken before the committee, but they are asked to sanction this resolution without having strictly analysed the evidence. Two or three days ago it was sought to cut out of those reports certain evidence—that No. 7 should not be received, and so on, and I do not know whether it is on the Journals to-day or not. Paragraph No. 7 reads as follows :—

7. The Superintendent of the Insurance Department of the state of New York caused an examination to be made of the company's affairs, both in 1897 and in 1898 ; on the occasion of the latter examination, most of the charges mentioned in the evidence reported and now on the table of this House were invstigated and found groundless, as will appear from the reports of the chief examiner, of the assistant actuary and of the superintendent of said insurance department.

Well, he did cause an examination, and he held them up and compelled them to pay $65,000 before they could get a certificate. This is all I have to say concerning this resolution, because I shall have another opportunity of presenting to this House, section by section, and clause by clause, all that I am referring to now, and the House and the public will have an opportunity of judging from the debates of this House, which I suppose they can obtain, whether the Senate was justified in passing such a report. My hon. friend from de Salaberry, talking about the charges, said: 'There is no doubt the policy-holders were victimized and their money was squandered.' He said that by his examination before the committee the truth had been reached about a certain thing. He admits the policy-holders had been victimized and money squandered. If I have correctly reported what my hon. friend has said, how can he reconcile paragraph No. 4, where he says the company's troubles are due to the fact that they had not been assessed enough? On the one hand he says they have been victimized and the money squandered, but in his resolution, which he asks us to adopt, he says the troubles are due to the fact that the rates of assessment were too low. I do not understand how my hon. friend came to make that statement here. Truth will out sometimes, and I presume he made it as he felt in his heart. He felt that they had been victimized, that the money had been squandered, and the truth had been ascertained, as he stated. He further stated that it would reflect on all Canadian companies. How can it reflect on all Canadian companies? There are good companies in Ontario, in Quebec and in the North-west, and how will it reflect on them? After this case is closed, they can obtain copies of these proceedings. They can reprint them easily enough, and they can go through Ontario and through the west, and say, 'There is the state of that company; we have nothing to do with it. Here is the whole story told before the committee. Here is everything in connection with it, and it is not going to affect Canadian companies.' If my hon. friend could induce me to believe that this Bill would reflect on Canadian companies, I would be the last man to carry on any investigation that might injure the innocent. That is a very far-fetched argument, to my mind. My hon. friend from deSalaberry said he talked about the personnel of the Senate. He talked about the exaggerated attack made. What exaggeration? Take the debates and hon. gentlemen will see there is not a single exaggeration on my part. There is not a single thing in what I put on the debates here that is not intensified by the evidence. I was very careful in selecting what I did, that it should not be charged afterwards that I had in any way exaggerated or gone beyond the limits of prudence. My hon. friend talks about minds being biased. Whose mind was biased? Let us take the committee. We start out with, 'Who struck Billy Patterson.' Before we go further, what was wrong with the committee? They found fault because I moved it. They objected to me being chairman, though I did not want to be chairman, and they appointed somebody else. They added seven members to the committee, and I did not object.

Let us take the members of the committee. Take Hon. Senator Cox, of Toronto. Was he biased? Hon. Mr. Wood (Sackville), was he biased at all? You might go through the whole list, and whom would you say was biased? Whom did they want to strike at? I was biased, but as far as I could see, all the others were biased to do their duties. Some of them could not agree with me, but I would not say were biased on the other side. I would be more charitable and say they were mistaken. Members of the committee sit in judgment. What judgment? I see no judgment in it. It was to report evidence, not to find a judgment there. These may be legal technicalities in the province of Quebec—I do not know, possibly they are, but it puts me very much in mind of when I was running an election and two women were quarrelling, and the daughter of one woman came running up and said, 'mother, mother come quick and call her an ugly name before she calls you one.' This line of attack is worse than the skirmish of the Japs. We have lines of skirmish everywhere. I am not going to go to any trouble to explain about my own suit against the company. I have not been favoured, and I propose to pass that matter by. 'Minds biased, interests guarded.' What interests are guarded, and if interests are guarded, who started to guard the interests? Did the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry start to guard the interests of the company? I started last year to guard the interests of the policy-holders. It was late in the session, and I could not go any further and had to withdraw. I gave notice the moment I got here, that I was going to do it this session. But there were gentlemen over-zealous in their desire to guard somebody. And whom have they guarded to-day when they will not let the public get the report of the committee? They cannot be guarding the policy-holders. I do not attach very much importance to these remarks, but only took them down to show that in case my hon. friend should bring up any further argument, I might have them here. My hon. friend from de Salaberry also said, 'pays all debts in full that are a proper charge.' Is that not fine? What word shall I use to describe it—I will not say quibbling—but it is a fine argument, arguing in a very fine way—'all debts paid in full that are a proper charge.' How did my hon. friend come to the conclusion that they were all paid? The committee gives evidence to show they were not all paid, and where did my hon. friend get the evidence to show that all proper charges were paid? I have not had the advantages he has had, of being able to get hold of these cases on which he bases his argument to-night. How he could allow his mind to reason in that way I cannot tell. I cannot reason from these papers, and I do not think any hon. gentleman in that committee who paid attention can reason that way from those papers. There is nothing to show that they paid all just claims, but on the contrary, the evidence showed that they scalped them wherever they got the chance. There are cases in this city where they scalped them, and yet my hon. friend in his desire to act fairly as between all parties, takes the ground that the company paid all proper charges. I say that that is an unfair way to put it, because if I was reading that coming from this honourable body, where they are supposed to do no wrong—and I hope there is nothing to influence anybody—they would say, 'herewith before us, the company have done right and acted fairly, and paragraph 4 shows the trouble to be, that they have come to grief by not charging enough, whereas the evidence which will be read to this House by and by, shows that they were throwing the money away by hundreds of thousands. Reckless extravagance, as my hon. friend from de Salaberry says. The policy-holders were victimized, and the money squandered.

Now, there has been a general attack all round, and the counsel was attacked. He is able to take care of himself. It is said that he has charged too much, and has been too long over this inquiry. He could not do any better. They interfered with him on the committee. The counsel should have been allowed to go right along and investigate, and not have members breaking in upon him time after time, asking questions which allowed Mr. Eldridge to make speeches. The evidence, in fact, is made up of his speeches. When you ask him if that is a door, he would say no, it is a pump-handle. That is about the size of it, and they say yes, you are quite right. Now, the expenses of legal gentlemen in this country—fifty dollars a day I am told—is a small amount. I am told the company had been paying quite a large amount as fees and retainers. Fifty dollars would be nothing in comparison with what they are paying. Not being very well versed in the matter of these charges, I had hopes that I would have got an answer to my question, what had been paid in the Behring Sea investigation, then I would have had an opportunity of reasoning between tweedledum and tweedledee, which was worth $500 a day, and which was worth $50 a day, and without advocating any great ability as to one or the other, I should have formed a conclusion as to what was the right sum to charge. Then Mr. Wells has been attacked. We have the highest encomium passed upon him. He was attacked and Mr. Paterson was attacked. He was an actuary—did not know anything. I read to-night endorsations of Mr. Paterson and Mr. Wells, from the leading papers, not only in the States but in Canada. Who gave the power for this unfair criticism of those gentlemen connected with the investigation? The committee, witnesses, counsel, experts, every one of them, have been, so to speak, humiliated, or they might have been humiliated, by the adverse remarks and criticisms that have been made about them. But I do think that it bears the lesson that people in a hard place go to great distances to get out of a bad hole, and sophistry, if you call it so, or argument sometimes, will weigh against the better judgment of the people. Therefore, we should not be too severe in our criticism of our friends and neighbours, but rather be charitable, and say that we are afraid that although we may have very great ability—and I am putting it now in a very strong parliamentary way—that they have not been cute enough, presuming and believing that they were acting for the best interests of the policy-holders, they having unwittingly allowed themselves to be led astray, some of them by the sophistry of Mr. Eldridge, of New York.

I think that is a very gentlemanly and kind way to put it, that a man might believe and think that he is doing his duty by all, but there may be a mascot. People get mascotted sometmes; they cannot tell why. Mesmerism and mascotism appear, and there is no way of explaining it. I think that is very charitable. I have simply answered my hon. friend, and I have not gone into the facts and figures which I will go into by and by, but I have tried to show the House why they should not adopt the resolution. It is misleading to my mind, to the House and country. It is not based on the evidence as I see the evidence, and therefore my hon. friend should either withdraw that resolution or that notice of motion or he should add to the notice of motion all these reports, and also the report of the chairman of the committee, and then it would be somewhat of an apology to the committee for all the humiliation that has been caused them, for all the work they have had to do, appealed to from all over the country to do their duty, trying to do it, not offensive to anybody, humiliation thrown on them inside and outside of the House and everywhere. It is something one should not expect in this high court of parliament, known as the Senate.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I desire to be allowed to say a few words in answer to the speech of the hon. gentleman from Rothesay, which has covered considerable ground and re-covered it a considerable number of times. The hon. gentleman is surprised that someone has dared to rise in this chamber to express an opinion upon the work carried on by that committee of investigation. In fact from the inception of this whole discussion which has been raised by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay, it looked as if no one had a right to discuss his statements or contradict him in any way. The Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York seemed to be his exclusive preserve. We had no right to encroach upon that field, which was his own.

Now, at the outset some hon. gentlemen—and I was one of them—discussed with the hon. gentleman from Rothesay the propriety of sending this question of the work done in Canada by the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York to a special committee. I for one thought that the Committee on Banking and Commerce, having in charge the remedial Bill proposed by the hon. gentleman from Toronto, could be charged with the duty of calling for persons and papers and investigating the standing of that company in Canada to a sufficient extent to enable them to prepare a Bill which would be founded upon the facts that would be established before them. We all know how the hon. gentleman succeeded, in a very thin House, one evening, in getting the appointment of his committee. A certain number of us thought no good would come out of that investigation. A still larger number of us think so to-night. I am not speaking only of the hon. gentlemen who are present now, but of the members of the Senate at large who think no good has resulted from this investigation. We could get all the information we need for the discussion, and in fact we did get sufficient information to come to the relief of the policy-holders, who felt that under the assessment plan they were carrying too heavy a load. The hon. gentleman thought there was no use talking this session of a remedial Bill, that he should be allowed to denounce and pursue with his wrath that insurance company and investigate its management to the bottom. We thought, on the other hand, and amongst those who think so are policy-holders quite able to speak for themselves, within the walls of this very chamber, that there was something else to be done than looking at the way money had been expended in that company fifteen or twenty years ago in paying large salaries. We could see no special good that could arise from a prolonged and costly investigation sought for by the hon. member from Rothesay, and we succeeded in devising a means of coming to the rescue, as far as was in our power, of the policy-holders, and succeeded in getting the Bill introduced by the hon. member from Toronto, accepted by a large majority of this House. When I say a large majority, I should practically say by the unanimous vote of this chamber. In fact, there was no vote when we went into committee on the Bill. Some useful work was done by the Senate of Canada, but I do not lay it to the credit nor at the door of the hon. gentleman from Rothesay or his committee. They had nothing whatever to do with it. They opposed any work being done. They challenged a vote. They would not have this work, which had come from the Banking and Commerce Committee, proceed further before the select committee had sat in judgment over the conduct of the officers of that association. They nearly succeeded, through I do not know what exceptional arguments, in getting quite a number of members of this body to vote in favour of adjourning the consideration of the relief Bill, but, when that obstacle was out of the way, what did we see? Nearly all those gentlemen falling into line, examining that Bill, declaring it satisfactory, and passing it without objection, and we have even heard some of those hon. gentlemen who waged war from the beginning against that Bill, boasting that it was practically their own offspring, that they had put their superior intellectual attainments to perfecting a Bill which would be of some use to the policy-holders. The hon. gentleman from Rothesay has spoken of the humiliation to which the committee he succeeded in getting appointed was subjected. I do not think any member of the Senate had any idea of humiliating any one but this gives me an opportunity to answer the remarks made by the hon. gentleman from Wolseley (Hon. Mr. Perley), who spoke yesterday or the day before. He thought the committee had been slighted, and that a majority of this House should have given them a chance to make a final report on the evidence. If they met with any humiliation it was humiliation very well deserved, and sought for by the committee itself. How did the committee come to grief? It came to grief through disobeying the letter and the spirit of an order of this chamber. This House had voted, by a large majority, in favour of requiring this committee to examine two witnesses. The wording of the motion presented by the hon. gentleman from Beamsville (Hon. Mr. Gibson) was that the witnesses should be subpœnaed. They were subpœnaed by the hon. ex-chairman of that committee.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am still chairman.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman took the letter of that order, though it meant that those two witnesses should be examined, and against the opinion of the counsel of the committee himself, who had re-examined Mr. Wells on the question relating to the expenditure of money in getting legislation here in 1885 with a view to opening the door to the examination of those two witnesses, the majority of that impartial committee decided that when they had subpœnaed those witnesses and brought them here, they had faithfully executed the order of the Senate of Canada, and refused to examine them.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is not true.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman took the letter of that order which had been explained as meaning that those two witnesses should be examined, and simply subpœnaed and brought them here. I entered that committee room once or twice to speak to a senator who happened to be in the room. I did not follow the sittings of the committee, but if the behaviour of that committee is to be judged by a specimen of their impartiality that I witnessed, I am not surprised, nor do I regret that they felt humiliated by the Senate's action.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We do not feel humiliated. That is where the hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. member from Rothesay has declared upon his responsibility, and with that moderation which characterizes him, that the inspector of insurance, the superintendent of insurance of New York state had been bribed to the extent of $65,000 to make a favourable report to the country. It appears that all this hangs purely and simply upon a declaration of the witness Wells.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Uncontradicted.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Mr. Wells declares that he had been asked by president Burnham for a few thousand dollars because he had to pay a certain amount in that direction, and added, that although he loaned the money, did not believe for the moment that such a transaction had taken place. This I understand is the evidence on which the tale hangs. But here comes again the occasion to question the wisdom of that committee, when such an important statement was made by the witness Wells; they refused to examine two witnesses who had been subpœnaed on the very question of the varacity of the witness Wells, and the hon. member from Stadacona in his precipitation and astuteness moved that the committee rise and report the evidence. This was closing the door to the examination of those two witnesses, and to any final report of the committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Not at all.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Why that precipitation on the part of the chairman of the committee and his majority? To prevent the possibility of the Senate giving them positive orders to examine the witnesses who had been brought here from New York at the expense of the Dominion treasury. These hon. gentlemen hurriedly closed their proceedings in order to prevent their witness Wells being discredited. The judgment of one member of the committee at least was formed in advance. He accused me of having an open mind; he had himself, before the election of the chairman, a closed mind. He was one of those who decided that Mr. Wells, who made that affirmation, should be protected from any imputation of having said things that could be contradicted by other witnesses. It would have been very important for this Senate to know what value to attach to the statements of Mr. Wells. In what position does he stand to-day? He stands under the imputation of perjury, because a majority of the committee refused to examine witnesses who had been brought here to contradict the statements.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman has a great deal of nerve to make such a statement before this honourable House in view of the evidence.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I care very little for the opinion of the ex-chairman of that committee. Now, what has come from this committee? What has been the result of all their work? What did they want? What was the prosecution after? I have been asking the hon. gentleman from Rothesay the last three months what he was after, what remedy he had in his mind for the relief of those poor widows and orphans? For the first time to-night we have heard the remedy. He opposed the passing of a remedial Bill, and to-night we have, in the dying days of the session, his magnificent plan of relief for the widows and orphans. It is to put the company in liquidation and divide the few thousand dollars on deposit in the treasury amongst the policy-holders. That would represent a very poor compensation for the moneys paid by the thousands of policy-holders in this country into the coffers of that company. The hon. gentleman proposes the liquidation of that company. I had occasion to protest against the language used by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay in moving for the appointment of a committee when by insinuations and innuendoes he besmirched the character of some of his colleagues in the Senate. He always spoke, and he even did to-night again, of all the lawyers in this chamber being arrayed against him, as though he represented all the policy-holders, and was their only representative in this chamber and had a sole right to speak in their name. The hon. gentleman remarked that I had ceased to concern myself about this question of the Mutual Reserve. One reason why I did so was that I preferred to avoid the aspersions and assaults of the hon. gentleman from Rothesay upon all those who did not see eye to eye with him on this question; and yet to-night when I hear the hon. gentleman ask what mandate the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry has to speak on this question or to give his opinion upon the evidence, I ask myself if the hon. gentleman from Rothesay represents all the policy-holders, and has the exclusive mandate to speak for them? To my surprise, I find that the hon. gentleman is the only one in this chamber who has no right to raise this question of the Mutual Reserve management. I find that two days before he did so, he had a writ issued against the association for $10,000, and was in conflict with them on a question of money. And yet he asks by what right did that company come to the lobby of this chamber. They could not come into this chamber to meet their accuser, for the hon. gentleman was their only accuser in the Senate. If the hon. gentleman had been content to settle his difficulties with the Mutual Reserve in the courts of Canada, perhaps once they had been adjudicated upon by the courts, we would not have expended so much money and would not have had the irregularities which have arisen in connection with the investigation of the question which had been investigated already in the state of New York. I have heard on all sides most profound regrets expressed by my colleagues in this chamber and by outsiders at the loss of dignity and decorum in this chamber during the present session. I attribute it to the fact of the passion which has entered into this question because personal interests are concerned. There was personal interest between the hon. gentleman and that company. Had the investigation been confined to absolutely disinterested and independent men, we would not have witnessed the unbecoming scenes which we have seen in this chamber.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The hon. gentleman is setting a good example now.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Perhaps I speak with some heat. I was not born very near the North Pole. I am perhaps the son of a Southern climate, but I try to keep within the limit of propriety and speak my mind with absolute independence and disinterestedness. The hon. gentleman from Rothesay has said that he would take another occasion to read all the evidence that has been adduced here, at another stage of the proceedings. Had he said he would take occasion to comment on the evidence, nobody could object, but he declares his intention to read the evidence again. He has given notice of a motion in which he has put his own views, but they are as well the ideas of a majority of his committee. I have no doubt he will then have occasion to explain and discuss that evidence, but it seems to me, with the motion we have before this House, and the hon. gentleman's notice of motion, there will be enough discussion, and that is the reason why I will move the previous question. I now close my remarks by moving that the question be now put.

The SPEAKER—It is moved by the Hon. Mr. Dandurand, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Fiset, that the question be now put. There can be no discussion on that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It shuts out any other amendment, but does not prevent discussion.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—Any one can discuss that motion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And any length of time.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—There is no cloture.

The SPEAKER—I have always understood that there could be no debate on a previous question; but I do not find anything in Bourinot to that effect.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The Speaker will find a reference to it at page 449.

The SPEAKER—Bourinot says:

The rule just quoted (that is the rule of the House of Commons) permits neither amendment nor debate in case the House decide in the affirmative, for the Speaker will immediately put the question. But if the previous question be resolved in the negative, then the Speaker cannot put any question on the main motion which is consequently superseded.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is it in order to intervene with a motion of this kind in a discussion?

The SPEAKER—That is what it is for. I have always been under the impression that there could be no discussion on the previous question. There is nothing in Bourinot to show that there can be.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The previous question has been put more than once in the House of Commons. It was put on the Riel question and the Canadian Pacific Railway question, and did not prevent discussion until the question was put from the chair.

The SPEAKER—I have not given any positive ruling.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It precludes any amendment. When the votes are taken, if it is declared in the affirmative, then it precludes amendments, but if decided in the negative, amendments may be substituted

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Cushing on law and practice of legislative assemblies, which I had occasion to read some time ago, lays down the principle that the previous question puts an end to discussion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The rule here is perfectly plain. The rule that has guided parliament admits neither amendment nor debate in case the House decides in the affirmative.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—When the House has decided it, but we are going on to discuss the question.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—When the previous question was moved in the Riel debate, the debate lasted probably two weeks; if I am not mistaken it lasted three weeks, when Sir Hector Langevin moved the previous question.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I can hardly believe an attempt would be made to shut off debate at this stage. I hope an opportunity will be given to everybody to address this House on this exceedingly important question.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I rise to inquire what question is before the House?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—No more important question has come before the Senate in years, and I contend that it is the duty of the House to give it every consideration, and I am determined to have an opportunity of expressing my views to this House on this subject. I think I am entitled to that opportunity.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I have raised a point of order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I call the Speaker's attention to May, page 268:

> The object of the previous question is to withhold from the decision of the House a motion that has been proposed from the chair by a motion which compels the House to decide, in the first instance whether the original motion shall or shall not be submitted to the vote of the House.

That is the object of the previous question. The motion must be put without any amendment whatsoever. It cannot be coupled with an amendment. In the Lords the Speaker puts the question 'whether the original question be now put'; in the House of Commons the motion is 'shall the question be now put,' and if it be resolved in the affirmative, the Speaker is prevented from putting the main motion first to the House as this refuses to allow it to be put, but that does not prevent a discussion going on on a motion that the question be put, and on the main motion except that it prevents any further amendment. I refer the hon. Speaker to the cases in the House of Commons in 1885. I myself moved the motion on the Riel question, condemning the government for having permitted the law to take its course. Sir Hector Langevin rose immediately after I had spoken, and moved the previous question and the debate went on for two or three days.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Two or three weeks.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—For many days. And afterwards the question was put by the chair that the question be put, and the House gave its opinion and the question was put without amendment. We are discussing the point here that when the question is put no discussion is allowed after that. I say the debate is allowed to continue.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In the cases referred to by the hon. gentleman the debate was allowed to proceed, but it was limited to the question, 'Shall the question be now put?'

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No; it was on the whole question.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think that is the rule. It precludes amendments but does not shut out discussion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—More than that, that question may be superseded.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER—There is no closing a debate.

The SPEAKER—In the United States a motion of this kind prevents any further discussion, but it does not seem clear to me from Bourinot whether that is the effect in Canada or not. I am not giving a decision now. This is a very important question, and I have not looked it up. I am giving the House the information I have before me. In the note on page 449 of Bourinot it is stated:

> The form is now fixed as it prevails in Canada, though the effect is different, being used to suppress immediately all further discussion of the main question and to come to a vote upon it immediately.

That seems to indicate that the practice in Canada is the same as in the United States.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—At the top of the same page, 449, the rule of the Commons is stated, and it says the original question is to be put forthwith without amendment or debate, that is, if a motion be passed in the affirmative. The words of the rule of the Commons are:

> The previous question, until it is decided, shall preclude all amendments of the main question, and shall be in the following words, that this question be now put.

You will find it does not cut off debate.

> If the previous question be resolved in the affirmative, the original question is to be put forthwith, without any amendment or debate.

Hon Mr. SCOTT—Read on.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It continues:

> The rule just quoted permits neither amendment nor debate in case the House decide in the affirmative, for the Speaker will immediately put the question.

Then there is the note which has been read by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield:

> But if the previous question be resolved in the negative, then the Speaker cannot put any question on the main motion which is subsequently superseded, though it may be revived on a future day, as the negation of the previous question merely binds the Speaker not to put the main question at that time.

I have always understood that when a member moved the previous question that he voted against it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the practice in England, but ours is reversed here. You vote 'nay' if you vote the previous question.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. Secretary of State says the rule is reversed here. This is the authority upon which we have acted. In my long experience—I do not know whether the hon. gentleman remembers a case or not—I have no recollection at present of this motion ever having been made but twice in the House, and the result was just what I have indicated, that the main motion is not put if the motion for the previous question is negatived, then it is not put in accordance with that rule.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I call attention to May, page 269:

> In the Lords the Speaker puts the question whether the original motion be now put, &c.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are following the practice of the Lords.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—When we make a motion that the House do now adjourn, we discuss that motion as long as we like, but when the motion is put by the Speaker and it is carried, then the House adjourns. When the motion is made that the question be put, the only object is to prevent any amendment. We may discuss the motion as long as we like, but when it is put by the chair, if it is resolved in the affirmative we can move no amendment whatever. No debate is allowed between that moment and the moment the question is put. In 1885 I moved the main motion myself in the Riel matter. Sir Hector Langevin answered me, and wound up his speech by moving the previous question, and the debate went on for several days.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That was to cut off amendments.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes, it cuts off every amendment until the question is decided. If the question is decided in the negative, then the amendments are allowed, but not if it be decided in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER—I am prepared to hear any authorities on that point before I decide.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to call attention to another case which I remember now. It was in 1878. I think it was the present Judge Ouimet who moved the previous question for the express purpose of cutting off amendments.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That was in 1879.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Probably it would be better for the hon. gentleman from deLanaudière to withdraw his motion. The Senate should not be put in the position of suppressing debate.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have been consulting three or four books of decisions of Speakers, and I fail to find anything on the point. They merely speak of the previous question preventing any amendments. I was reading Bourinot and on first glance was under the impression it had only that effect, but on reading it more carefully, it is difficult to find any light one way or the other on the subject. I understand the hon. leader of the opposition and the hon. member from Marshfield have referred to the debates in the House of Commons on the Riel question. If the debate was allowed to be continued there after the previous question was put, it might be taken as a precedent.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I was a member of the House at the time, and I distinctly remember the facts as stated by my hon. friend here, and the reason why the previous question was put. There was a general suspicion that Mr. Blake intended to move an amendment, and the previous question was moved to shut him out, and it did.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I find in Brand a confirmation of what I have stated as to the effect of putting the previous question.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. Speaker has any doubt about it, we might get over the difficulty by adjourning the debate and he can study the question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the better way, adjourning the debate and go on with the business.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand the point of order is the one raised by the hon. gentleman from Toronto?

The SPEAKER—I think the hon. gentleman is in error. I did not hear what the hon. gentleman from Toronto said, but I know that, after he spoke, the hon. gentleman from Wellington said something in reply, and the hon. gentleman from Victoria moved that the words of the hon. gentleman from Toronto be taken down. It is too late to do that after some one else has spoken, so that that question does not come up. With respect to this matter I had just put the previous question, the motion that the question be now put; and, if the debate is adjourned, it will leave the matter in that position, and when we meet again I shall give my decision on that point.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to call the attention of the Speaker to the fact that when the motion for the previous question is made, no amendment can be moved.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We can adjourn the debate.

The SPEAKER—The opinion that the debate cannot be adjourned is quite inconsistent with the position taken by the hon. gentleman when he said that the matter has been discussed for weeks. The debate can be adjourned.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It seems to me to be illogical.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a question of order, not as to what the effect of this motion would be.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I want to call attention to the fact that if a motion to adjourn the debate is put and carried, it settles the question.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—No.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—No.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I say it has the effect of deciding that the debate can be continued.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Sure.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—And, therefore. it would be deciding the question that is now troubling the minds of hon. gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No. What I propose is this : in the meantime the Speaker might study the question and he can decide at the next sitting of the House if the hon. member has a right to proceed with the debate, or if the question must be put immediately.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has that question been raised ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I have moved the adjournment of the debate. and in reply to the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat, I can say——

The SPEAKER—I do not think the hon. gentleman can make a speech.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Certainly a question arises here. They are asking to have the debate adjourned, so that it may be taken up to-morrow. That is the object of the adjournment of the debate. It is not what many members of this House expect. If the hon. gentleman who moved the previous question desires to withdraw that motion, and then give a motion for the adjournment of the debate, it will be in order, otherwise, we are not in position to know what the decision may or may not be.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY--I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. The main motion is the motion proposed by my hon. friend from de Salaberry. Since my hon. friend from Rothesay finished his speech, my hon. friend from de Lorimier moved, after making his own speeech, that the question be now put. The motion of my hon. friend was proposed to the House by the chair, but the question is not put yet. It is only put when the discussion is over. In the meantime a debate took place on the propriety of shutting off the discussion immediately or allowing it to go on. The hon. Speaker is not prepared now to give his decision. My hon. friend moved the adjournment of the debate. Well, that was done in 1885.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN. Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Every day when the motion was discussed a member rose and moved the adjournment of the debate, and the next day the question was put by the chair in this way ; the main motion is this, and the amendment or the other motion, the previous question, is put. So that if the hon. Speaker decides to-morrow that no debate can take place, no debate will take place; but if he decides debate will take place, my hon. friend will proceed with the debate, and if the discussion is not concluded to-morrow, another hon. gentleman will move the adjournment.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I am inclined to think my hon. friend is mistaken. I was in the House on that occasion. On that occasion the Speaker decided then and there. It was not leaving it an open question for the Speaker to decide later on, and there is where the difference is. We are now in a position that if the Speaker says tomorrow that he is looking up the authorities or has arrived at a conclusion that no speech or debate can take place, we are excluded. If he would give us his decision now that we would not be permitted to make any remarks it would be a different thing; on the occasion referred to the Speaker declared that debate was permissible, and it went on from day to day. Therefore, it would be a proper motion that my hon. friend from Wellington should move the adjournment of the debate, but pending the decision of the Speaker I do not see how we can arrive at a conclusion in any shape or form unless my hon. friend will, with the sanction of the seconder, withdraw his motion and bring it up to-morrow, when the Speaker will be in a position to express an opinion. Does he desire to place the Speaker in a position that he will leave this matter an open question for twenty-four hours, so as to get an opinion and leave the House in that position ? I say it is unfair to the House and unfair to the Speaker, and to all those who desire to address the House on this question.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman has occupied a seat in parliament for some time, and he must know that adjournments are moved to allow the Speaker to decide.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. senator from de Lorimier wants to establish a precedent in this House which should not be tolerated, gagging the voice of the people and their representatives here, on a question which is not of governmental or ministerial importance, or of national importance.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—That is not the question before the House.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is his motion, and I am entitled to speak on it, and I on behalf of many senators here to-night, protest against the action of the hon. gentleman from de Lorimier.

Some hon. MEMBERS—Question, question.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is the question, and here on behalf of the party to which I belong, I repudiate the principle he wants to introduce into our parliamentary procedure. We are not here, the Liberal party, as a party of gaggers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am in order, if you please, and I want to put on record this fact, that I am not a party to a previous question to gag the voice of the people. I want to put on record as a man right here, that I repudiate it in the name of the party to which I belong, and I repudiate it as a young senator.

The SPEAKER—Will the hon. gentleman—

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. Speaker is not called upon to interrupt me.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman is out of order, and is not discussing the question of order. I am surprised at the hon. gentleman having no regard for the decencies of debate.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The young senator is continually getting up and dictating to older members.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I do not want it to be said thirty years from now that I am degrading—

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman has found his level, and he is dictating to members who have been here before he was born.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I do not know why—

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Order, order, sit down. The hon. gentleman has no right to be standing there when the Speaker is on his feet.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman has no right to stand when I am speaking to a question of order.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman does not know enough for that.

The SPEAKER—The question is, whether the motion of the hon. gentleman from Wellington to adjourn the debate, is in order. Bourinot at page 51 says :

It is also perfectly in order to move the adjournment of the debate on a previous question.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is done every day.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—On page 270 of May, the procedure is laid down as follows :

The motion for the previous question may be superseded by a motion for adjournment, and debate thereon may be adjourned.

It is a question whether it will not supersede.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The question is whether the debate can be adjourned on the previous question, and the authorities clearly bear that out.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I beg to give notice that I will ask the government if they are aware that the House of Lords in their decision in the case of appeal, Foster vs. The Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, the Lord Chancellor designated the company's policy as 'tricky,' and 'intentionally ambiguous.'

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I draw attention to this notice of motion, and I think it is one which should not go on the order paper, because it is an abuse of the privileges of this House in assailing a company acting under the laws of Canada upon a telegram to the hon. gentleman which the House knows nothing about.

SATURDAY SITTING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I beg to give notice that I will move :

That when the House adjourns to-morrow evening, it do stand adjourned until Saturday, and that there be two distinct sittings of the Senate on that day, the first from eleven o'clock to one o'clock, and the second from three o'clock on, and that the government measures have precedence at such sittings.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (148) An Act to amend the Dominion Elections Act of 1900.

The Bill was read a first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT— I move that the Bill be read a second time to-morrow. This Bill restricts the number of constituencies in which permission is given to a returning officer to name the nomination day. As hon. gentlemen will probably remember, the elections in Canada took place all on one day, except certain constituencies in the province of Quebec. There were two in the province of Ontario, but they were abolished, but in the province of British Columbia three still remain. That is the whole spirit and language of the Act. It is limiting the number. It takes the two Algomas and Nipissing out of the exceptions, and they are now to be held on the same day, so that in the province of Ontario all the elections would take place on the one day, and in Quebec all the elections will take place on one day except Gaspé and Chicoutimi. In British Columbia the elections will take place on one day except Comox-Atlin, Kootenay and Yale-Cariboo.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Does it limit the number of these constituencies ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. Previously all the elections took place on one day. Then there was a provisiou in the Act excepting certain constituencies in the province of Quebec (Gaspé and Chicoutimi), and in the province of Ontario (Algoma and Nipissing). Under this Bill Algoma and Nipissing elections have to be held on the same day as the others. The Bill was introduced in the House of Commons with the old exceptions, but on representation of the members, it was decided that there was no reason for holding them on a different day. The Algomas and Nipissing are easily reached by a railway now.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is limiting the exceptions.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does it leave the power in the hands of the returning officer to decide at what period the elections shall be held?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In those particular ones, but he is bound to do it at the earliest possible time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is not the time fixed in the writ for holding the elections ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not in the exceptions I have named.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The return is fixed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But not the day for nomination or polling day.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My impression is that the election has been required to be held on the same day, but the returning officer made laws for himself and deferred it, and I hope there is some clear provision in the Act that will not allow returning officers to do that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is absolutely peremptory. He must hold it on the day named by the Governor General in the writ of election, except in the five constituencies I have referred to.

The motion was agreed to.

BOUNTIES ON STEEL AND IRON ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (165) An Act to amend Chap. 68 of the Statutes of 1903 respecting the bounties on steel and iron.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that the Bill be read the second time, to-morrow. This Bill consists of only a couple of lines, and it is widening the provisions of the Act to which it refers, simply by the addition of three words 'or when used.' The Act of 1868 is an Act to amend chapter 8 of the statutes of 1899, respecting bounties on steel and iron. Instead of saying 'for use' alone it says 'For use or when used.' I do not know whether that has been done to get over the Auditor General or what is the reason, but it is just using the three words after the word 'used,' in that paragraph, and after the word 'consumption' in another paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

Hon.Mr. LANDRY—I would call attention to the fact that when we have two sittings each day, we should have two Orders of the Day printed, because there are notices of motion and different proceedings going on, and we will lose sight of the order of business if we have not two Orders of the Day. I think in the last years we had a second order.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We have no orders for the afternoon sitting, and it is just as distinct a sitting as if it took place to-morrow morning, but the House was not opened in the usual manner. We commenced this afternoon as if it were an adjournment of the morning session until this afternoon, and in fact the motion made by the hon. gentleman, if I understand the effect of it, is to have two separate and distinct sittings on the one day and it is just the same as if we had two sittings, one on the Monday and one on the Tuesday, and we ought to have the order paper before us. I am informed by the clerk that he gave positive instructions to have it ready, and the printer paid no attention to it. If the printing office is so busy that they cannot print a short document like that, I suggest that some one be given authority to go to some other printing office and have it done.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I should like to suggest, for the convenience of the House at this late stage of the session, that it might be well that each sitting should be a separate sitting. We provide now for two sittings, one at eleven and one at three. I think it is just as well that each sitting of the House should be a separate sitting for the purpose of passing the Bills.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh no, thank you. It would be easier to pass a motion declaring all these Bills carried.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It would not be taken advantage of unless it was necessary in order to pass some Bills. If we want to get away in a few days——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We do not want to get away.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have always found the House courteous enough to allow two stages be taken at one sitting.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We have never had more than two sittings on one day.

The Senate adjourned until 11 a.m. to-morrow.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Friday, August 5, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the chair at Eleven o'clock a.m.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

SPEAKER'S DECISION.

The SPEAKER—The House was good enough last evening to allow me a little time to consider my decision in connection with the previous question which came up yesterday. I have come to the conclusion that there is nothing in our practice which prevents a discussion on the previous question itself. On carefully reading Bourinot, pages 448, 449, 450, and the 6th edition of May, which is more applicable to our circumstances, because it was published before the new rules for stopping debate had been introduced in England, I find at page 264, and also in a very clear and satisfactory way in a work to which my attention was called by my hon. friend from Mille Iles, Bourinot's Procedure at Public Meetings, pages 13 and following, that the practice in England, and in Canada, is that the previous question itself can be discussed. Of course, when the previous question has once been put, there is no discussion on the main motion. I have looked at the cases referred to by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona last evening, cases in our own parliament. I find that on the 11th March, 1879, Mr. Mousseau moved, and Mr. McCarthy seconded, a motion with respect to the removal of Lieutenant Governor Letellier, and then, immediately on the moving of that motion, Mr. Ouimet moved the previous question. That motion was made on the 11th March and the discussion of the Letellier question went on until after midnight on the 13th. The same practice was followed in 1886 is connection with the Riel matter. A motion was made by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, who was then a member of the House of Commons, and seconded by Mr. Labrosse, and immediately afterwards the previous question was moved by Sir Hector Langevin, seconded by Sir Adolphe Caron. That was on the 11th March, and the vote was not taken until the 24th March. I have already mentioned what my decision is. I think it only fair to say that I have found two precedents in the House of Lords. There is no rule given, but I notice that the previous question was put immediately after it was moved, which does not, however, prove anything, I presume the Lords had got through with the business of the day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I might add if the hon. gentleman had gone back to 1864, he would have found that Sir John Macdonald moved, seconded by Sir George Etienne Cartier, the previous question when the Confederation Act was considered, and parliament was sitting in the city of Quebec. A discussion then followed, and a debate followed which filled a volume of 600 or 800 pages. The previous question was moved, simply to cut off amendments.

THE ORDER OF BUSINESS.

MOTION.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would suggest to the hon. Secretary of State, if the hon. members interested in those motions do not object, that in order to facilitate the actual and bona fide business of this House at this stage of the session, he should move that we pass to the Orders of the Day. It will enable us to deal with all the business and the actual business of the session, and after that is disposed of we can go back to the notices of motion. We have a good deal of very important business before the House and I am anxious that that should be got rid of.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think I am only echoing the sentiments of every member of the House at this period of the session. If we go now into a discussion on the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association and the various amendments which have been put upon the notice paper, particularly the one which has been given to-day by the hon. senator from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Cloran) we shall not get through for a month yet.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That suggestion only applies to the Bills, not to the adjourned debate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It applies to the Orders of the Day.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In the Orders of the Day there are two classes of business, one comprising the Bills, the first nine items, and the other an adjourned debate.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am very glad to accept the suggestion and I assume that it will be approved of by the House. I move that the Orders of the Day be taken up first to the end of the session, limited to Bills on the order paper.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I object to that most decidedly. There are two gentlemen here with motions that have been standing a good many days. I have not taken up the time of the House for an hour altogether this session, and I object, after waiting several days, to be put back again and denied an opportunity of ventilating the matter. The time taken up in the discussion of the matter will be very brief. Who brought on the delay? We who have motions standing on the order paper had nothing to do with it, yet the revenge is to be taken on us for the time wasted in discussing other matters. I do not think the sense of the House will justify this change in the order of business. It is an outrage on the rights of members.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—With that protest I hope my hon. friend will be satisfied. The proposition he submits for our approval I cordially endorse, but at this stage of the session it is absolutely impossible for the government to undertake to consider it.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—It will not take a quarter of an hour.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I can assure the hon. gentleman that he can have a quarter of an hour sometime before the House rises, to place his views before the Senate. It will have second place after the Bills are considered. My hon. friend is always reasonable, and has made a very fair proposition, and therefore, with the concurrence of the House we may all agree that after the Bills are considered. when a hiatus occurs before the terrible incubus we have suffered from so long is taken up again his motion will be considered.

The motion was agreed to.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY ARBITRATION BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (152) An Act respecting an Arbitration between His Majesty and the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The leader of the opposition wanted some particulars as to the points that are to arise in this arbitration. Generally, as he knows they are on the acquisition of the Rivière du Loup branch by the government of Canada and minor matters that arise in connection with the portion of the Grand Trunk Railway used by the Intercolonial Railway. Perhaps the better way to get a succinct view of it is for me to read the précis that was before the court :

The following claims are advanced by the Crown under the contract of 1879 :—

1. The first relates to the short piece of line between Hadlow and Point Lévis station. The Grand Trunk has insisted upon its right to collect $2.50 on every car in Intercolonial trains containing freight ex Quebec Central Railway, and deliverable on this section. This has been paid at times by the Intercolonial, at other times by the consignees of the said cars, and a considerable sum remains outstanding. The Crown denies all liability for such charges and claims a refund from the Grand Trunk of all such sums collected, whether from the Crown or from the consignees, and a discharge from all claims which the Grand Trunk could have against it under this head.

2. Under the agreement it was provided that as regards the cartage done in and about the stations, wharfs and premises of the Grand Trunk Company at Pointe Lévis 'a fair share of the actual cost' should be paid for the Intercolonial in the proportion which its tonnage bore to the total tonnage so handled. The Crown claims that in place of charging such proportion upon the actual amount paid out by thte Grand Trunk a fixed charge was for many years made which was unfair and excessive and in violation of the agreement and which charge was paid in error. A refund of the excessive amount so paid by the Intercolonial to the Grand Trunk is now claimed,

3. On the 17th October, 1894, a pontoon belonging to the Grand Trunk Company at Quebec sank, upon which there was a considerable quantity of Intercolonial freight. The value of the freight was paid by the Intercolonial to the owners. The Crown contends that this accident occurred through the fault and neglect of the Grand Trunk Company and a claim for the amount so paid to the owners of the freight is now made.

4. Under this contract the division of through rates was to be on the principle of mileage 'except where such division would act unfairly by reason of one line of railway having a largely preponderating mileage,' in which case an equitable agreement was to be arrived at or the question referred to arbitration. The Crown refers this question to arbitration and claims a refund for the excessive proportion of through rates paid to the Grand Trunk or retained by it prior to 1898.

UNDER THE CONTRACT OF 1898 AND SUPPLEMENTAL AGREEMENT.

1. The Crown claims damages in respect of several breaches of these agreements by the Grand Trunk.

(a) For the diversion by the Grand Trunk of traffic destined for the maritime provinces via Lennoxville and the Canadian Pacific Railway, which under the agreement should have been routed via Montreal and the Intercolonial.

(b) For the diversion by the Grand Trunk of traffic destined for the maritime provinces and Newfoundland which has been sent via United States ports instead of via Montreal and the Intercolonial.

(c) For the diversion of traffic destined for the maritime provinces and Newfoundland by the Grand Trunk via water route from Montreal instead of via the Intercolonial; and the Crown claims a declaration ordering the withdrawal by the Grand Trunk of tariffs providing for the application of European export rates in this connection and ordering the Grand Trunk to deliver all such traffic as it may accept for transportation to the Intercolonial at Montreal.

2. The Crown claims damages in respect to certain arrangements as to switching on terminal properties covered by the agreement, entered into by the Grand Trunk with the Canadian Pacific Railway; and a declaration enjoining the Grand Trunk against switching or permitting to be switched, cars or freight to or from sidings or tracks on the Island of Montreal, included in the main agreement, for the Canadian Pacific Railway or other railways, or routes, when such freight is destined to or from points reached by or via the Intercolonial;

3. The Crown claims that in several respects the Grand Trunk Company has not afforded to the Intercolonial the accommodation in the Bonaventure station at Montreal required by the contracts and claims damages therefor.

4. The Crown has paid under protest half the costs of a subway and station at St. Hyacinthe. It claims a refund of the sum so paid and a declaration that these charges and all similar charges are, under the contracts, to be borne by the Grand Trunk Company alone.

5. Under the agreements in question differences of opinion have arisen as to the adjustment of accounts in respect to various matters such as sidings, new buildings, joint section expenses, etc., the whole as disclosed in correspondence. The Crown claims a rectification of accounts and a refund of a large outstanding balance.

6. A difference of opinion exists under these agreements as to the responsibility for accidents occurring upon the Montreal and Chaudière joint sections, and the arbitrators will be asked to determine the respective responsibility of the contracting parties in this connection and especially in respect to such accidents as have already occurred.

The foregoing claims are stated without prejudice and subject to such additions or modifications on the part of the Crown as may hereafter be found necessary.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am very glad the hon. Secretary of State has given us that information, because it places the House in a position to deal intelligently with those clauses. No one can find fault with, or object to the course which has been pursued. It is a very favourite expression with some people to say 'I told you so.' It may be a gratification to the opposition who took very strong grounds on this question when the arrangement was being entered into by the government for the use of that portion of the Grand Trunk Railway line, and also its entrance into the city of Montreal. I very much fear that no matter what the decision of the arbitrators may be, or the decision of any court, difficulties will continue to arise in the future upon that very question. I presume that the course taken by the government is based upon the fact that the traffic which was diverted from the Intercolonial Railway to Portland or some other United States port, was freight routed via the maritime provinces. If my recollection serves me, the condition was that all freight which was ordered to be sent over the Intercolonial Railway to the maritime provinces, must, under the provisions of that agreement, be sent that way. I take it for granted that the government have evidence sufficient to establish the fact that notwithstanding the freight being routed in that direction they have diverted it in another direction. I fear that will continue for all time to come, until some other arrangements are made, and I do not know what other arrangements can be made effectively, the bargain entered into by the government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company having been for 90 years.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The document which my hon. friend the Secretary of State has just read to the House throws light upon the declaration of the Hon. Mr. Blair, made in the committee of the House of Commons more than a year ago, that the Grand Trunk Railway had not lived up to its obligations with the government, and that he was unable, speaking then as Minister of Railways, to get business handed over by the Grand Trunk Railway to the Intercolonial Railway—that the Intercolonial Railway had not got the business guaranteed to it by the Grand Trunk Railway under the agreement of 1898. I did not know what the grounds of complaint were, nor the particulars, until my hon. friend read his statement to the House and I now find that it strikes at the very pith of that agreement. I am referring now to the supplemental traffic agreement of 1898, which was ratified by the Bill of 1899, taking over the Drummond County Railway and by which the Intercolonial Railway got access to the port of Montreal. I may say further, that this trouble which it appears has been going on for years, is a very valuable comment upon another agreement we have made, a very much larger agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. The conclusion is, that if the Grand Trunk Railway has not lived up to its obligations, where it entered into a solemn agreement in 1898 directly with the government, how are we to expect to get this traffic for Canadian ports when the Grand Trunk Railway has made no direct contract whatever ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—At this stage we will not discuss that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We cannot help thinking about it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The conditions are entirely different. The temptation of the Grand Trunk Railway once it got traffic at Chicago, and had it on its cars, was to send it to Portland rather than transfer it at Montreal. Mr. Blair was the chief factor in making the agreement, and he thought he was binding the Grand Trunk Railway sufficiently to force them to carry out faithfully and honourably the propositions then adopted. There is 'no use crying over spilt milk.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman think the temptation to violate the agreement made when the Drummond County Railway was purchased is any greater than it will be when the Grand Trunk Railway has constructed its road from Port Arthur to connect with the government line that is to be built from Winnipeg eastward ? Or what is a still stronger point, when it passes over that portion of the government railway and reaches the side line, I may call it, which would enable them to bring all the traffic over that line down to North Bay, and thence by their own line to Toronto, Montreal and so on to Portland ? We all know what inducements they have to do that. The Ontario government are building the road from North Bay northwesterly, to connect with the main line to be built by the Grand Trunk Pacific Company. Then the road is to be built by the Grand Trunk Railway itself with a subsidy of $2,500 per mile and 6,000 acres of land from Port Arthur, or the harbour just below it, in order to tap the same line. Then the inducement is for the Grand Trunk Railway to carry freight over their line through the whole of Ontario and Quebec until you reach Richmond, and thence on to their terminus at Portland. I think you will find, if you live long enough to see those roads in operation, the same difficulties will arise to a much greater extent than those that exist at present.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman forgets that before the Grand Trunk Railway reached that branch line from Port Arthur to somewhere on the government line, the interchange of traffic would have taken place at Winnipeg. The government road has the key up to Winnipeg and it is at that point, the government will be able to check and control the freight coming from the west.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—For my part I fail to see the force of the criticism that is offered. It is of daily occurrence between railways to make traffic agreements, and the only question is whether the agreement is properly made. The moment there is government ownership of a railway—and hon. gentlemen opposite have adopted that policy—they have, of necessity, to make traffic arrangements with the other railways, and then it remains for the government to enforce the bargain it has entered into.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Just as they are doing now.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—As in this case, if the agreement is not lived up to by the other party, then to have it enforced by arbitration or otherwise.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—As the hon. Secretary of State has stated just now, we cannot go into a general discussion on this subject, but we cannot help thinking a good deal about it. We will discuss this Bill which is before us all the same.

The CHAIRMAN—I would suggest that the discussion be confined to the clause.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The arbitration is to deal with difficulties that have arisen between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the government with regard to the carrying out of this supplemental traffic agreement—that is a part of it. Now, hon. gentlemen will remember very well that some years ago we made strenuous efforts on this side of the House to procure a statement showing the expenditures and earnings of the acquired road between Quebec and Montreal under what is known as the Drummond County contract. We waited for it and pressed our motions for returns and were formally and finally told by the government that separate accounts were not kept, and it was impossible to bring it down. We know that that statement was not correct—it could not be correct. No road would be in such a muddle that it could not produce a statement of that kind, and that refusal was made to the House simply because there was a state of things occurring which they did not want to have disclosed. The traffic, that the country was assured the Intercolonial was to get under that traffic agreement, they were not getting, and the other side of the account was being piled up to the last dollar while the country was not getting the business and traffic promised. The general result of the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway from that time forward proves that our conclusion was right, because it shows the earnings have not been proportionately increased. If we wanted any further proof of it, we have it in the indictment contained in the Bill before us against the Grand Trunk Railway Company. It accounts for all of it. I must say, in view of the dealing of the government, against the Grand Trunk Railway Company, I despair of seeing any satisfactory conclusion resulting from this arbitration. It is a case of the railway owning the government of this country, and I know thoroughly well that this indictment that my hon. friend has read has been the work of Mr. Blair, the late Minister of Railways. It was he who took this matter up. It was in that state when he spoke in the bitter language he used a little over a year ago in regard to the lack of faith of the Grand Trunk Railway Company in carrying out the agreements of 1898 and 1899. In view of the fact, which is patent to everybody, that the Grand Trunk Railway dominates this government to-day and controls them, I have no faith whatever in any favourable result arising out of this arbitration.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—My hon. friend complains that the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway, particularly that portion of it from Point Lévis to Montreal, are not kept right.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am sure it is kept separate.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Under Mr. Haggart, who was Minister of Railways for many years, there was a consolidation of all the branches and accounts of the Intercolonial Railway. For years, when I sat in the other House, I kept hammering away at the government to get separate accounts of the cost of running the Oxford and New Glasgow and Pictou and other branches of the Intercolonial Railway. We never could get them, and the reason Mr. Haggart gave was that they could not be given, that under the Act that had been passed for the consolidation of the system, in the bookkeeping they were all thrown into one account, and there was no separate account kept of the earnings of any of the branches, and from that time down that system has continued.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Surely my hon. friend is not serious in what he says? The consolidation of the accounts does not prevent the books showing the earnings of the different portions of the line. Surely the fact that they are consolidated in the bookkeeping, would not prevent separate accounts of the earnings and expenses of each particular part of that road, not information being given to parliament as was promised by Sir Oliver Mowat in 1897.

The CHAIRMAN—I hope hon. gentlemen will confine themselves to the discussion of this clause.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—We pressed just as strongly as we possibly could press on the old government the very points the hon. gentleman is making now—that there were separate accounts, but we were continuously answered in the language he uses now, that the accounts were kept together and not separately.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. WILSON, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

FISHERIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (74) An Act to amend the Fisheries Act. He said: The special object of this Bill is to authorize the issue of licenses and exercise a jurisdiction over a new industry in Canada—that is an industry the government has heretofore not taken cognizance of, the taking of whales. The regulations are taken entirely from the provisions existing on the statute-book of Newfoundland. as they have had the industry established there for some years and it has been somewhat successful. The licenses are issued for a term of years, and the charges are for the first year, $800. second year. $1,000. and the third year, $1,200, and the same for subsequent years. It prescribes the character of bait to be used and the mode of bringing whales ashore and also that the stations for which the licenses are issued shall be fifty miles apart.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Do I understand my hon. friend to say that similar rules and regulations are in operation in Newfoundland ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are copied from their rules.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—How long since they have had this Act in operation in Newfoundland ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot say.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It has been in force for a number of years ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No difficulties or complications have arisen ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not that I have heard.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Could the hon. gentleman tell us where the law has been made operative so far as it effects the Newfoundland fisheries ? Has it been on the Labrador coast ar that portion of it which belongs to Newfoundland or have these rules been applied by the Newfoundland government to the whale fishing in Hudson bay ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, the whale fisheries on their own coast of Newfoundland.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is no whale fishing of any consequence there.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The stations would be in Newfoundland, but parties may go far beyond Newfoundland waters to waters that are open to all nations.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We know in the past that Newfoundland assumed the right, whether it has continued to do so or not I do not know, of collecting custom duties at points on the shores of the Labrador coast some years ago, and the attention of the late government was called to it before they went out, and had an interview with Sir Robert Bond in Halifax when the question was fully discussed. I am not in a position to say whether the rights of Canada or the demands which were made at that time for the refunding of the duties which we contended had been improperly collected at some ports towards the Hudson bay and on the Labrador coast, were ever pursued any further.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is still in the same condition.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Nothing has ever been done since ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is time the government did something.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—From time to time it has been discussed that we should come to some conclusion. The Newfoundland government are claiming more than they are entitled to. They have been exercising proprietary rights and granting timber limits at a great distance from the shore. It will have to be settled soon now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is the government protesting against and taking action to prevent it ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Canada has very little to thank Newfoundland officials and the government for. Their whole object has been for years past to divert all the trade possible to the United States rather than to Canada. I do not hesitate to say that from my past intercourse with the premier of that colony, and the course he has pursued, his whole policy has been that which I have indicated. I have never seen anything emanating from that gentleman or from the government he controls that was as favourable to Canada as to the United States, and the sooner Canada asserts the rights which she possesses against that colony the better it will be for us, and it will teach them a lesson that they should not continue a policy of collecting customs duties in ports that legitimately belong to Canada with impunity.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think, from recent events, that Premier Bond will be a suppliant at Washington very much longer. He has received several snubs from the Senate of the United States. The fishermen of Massachusetts have opposed his application. I do not think it is dignified to further cultivate friendship at Washington as the premier of Newfoundland has done in the past, and I am inclined to think that they will assume an entirely different attitude in the future.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I expressed the hope that they may act upon the suggestion of the hon. Secretary of State.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The House resolved into Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

On subclause (a) of clause 1,

Hon. Mr. POWER—I may be allowed to say a word or two in connection with this matter. I think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should hesitate before issuing these licenses in any numbers. I do not know just when the legislation was adopted which they now have in Newfoundland. I happened to read within the last few days a letter from an official of the Newfoundland legislature which appeared in a Halifax newspaper; and the writer points out that during the last few years the supply of bait fish on the Newfoundland coast has fallen off a great deal to the serious injury of the Newfoundland fishermen. One would wonder perhaps what the slaughter of whales had to do with that. The writer points out that owing to the operations of those factories, the number of whales has very much decreased. He does not pretend to give his own opinion; but he says the Newfoundland fishermen are firmly convinced that the killing of the whales is responsible for the non-appearance of the bait fish on the coast, and the reason is that while the whales are numerous they feed on these fish, and the little fish in order to escape the whales go into the shallow water close to the shore. When the whales do not come around in numbers the bait fishes go out from the shore, and the consequence is that the bait fishery, which is an important industry, has been seriously injured during the last few years. I am not opposing the Bill at all, but I think it is a matter that deserves consideration, and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who has the matter in his discretion, should be careful about granting these licenses. With respect to the Newfoundland rights on the Labrador coast, there is no doubt that Newfoundland has exercised rights all the way from Cape Charles at the Strait of Belle Isle to Cape Chidley at the mouth of Hudson Strait; but I never thought they would undertake to go through Hudson straits into Ungava bay.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I said, up in that direction.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is there a license given for whaling?

Hon. Mr. POWER—This Act provides for that. There was no restriction before, except that fishermen were not to kill them in a certain way.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall call attention to the matter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We all know that in the bays the small fish frequent the shallow water near the shore and you always see them there in swarms. They go there to get food, because the water is a little warmer near the shore than outside and consequently a greater supply of animalcule.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The depth of water where the bait fishes are found is quite sufficient to carry whales as well as small fish.

The clause was adopted.

On sub-clause 4,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Could the hon. gentleman give any reason why a ship-owner should have only one whaling vessel?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume it is for the purpose of exercising greater supervision over them. They would have to be watched, of course, and you could not keep as close a watch over them otherwise.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This sub-clause makes provision that you can only have one steamer to carry on the business for any one factory. How would it be with a steamer that obtained a license for carrying on business where the party had no factory, or is the licenses to be confined exclusively to those who have factories ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—All parties who sail from Canadian ports to kill whales and who are in the industry must take out license hereafter, and they must establish factories.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think there should be some provision in this Bill to enable the Governor in Council, if it is found that this whale fishing is having an injurious effect on the general fisheries, to cancel the right of fishing for whales within nine years.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is no such power given in the Bill as that suggested by the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The general effect will be to restrict whaling. It must necessarily have that effect.

The sub-clause was adopted.

On sub-clause 11,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Can the hon. Secretary of State tell us why the clause is put in the Bill that no one shall fish unless with a harpoon ? Why is it compulsory ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it is against the law to use explosives.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know it is. but I am asking why ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot tell the reason.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The marginal note is 'Prohibited contrivances'. I have no technical knowledge about the matter, but it seemed to me that it would legalize any contrivance that would include a harpoon and these explosives and everything else might be used as long as the harpoon was a part of the arrangement.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the reason is that when explosives are used, a whale may be wounded some distance from the ship and not be captured and it is not desirable to have them dying about the coast.

Hon Mr. FERGUSON—Explosives are not prohibited by this section.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No, but if the whale is to be harpooned with a harpoon attached by a line to the ship then the danger of its getting away and dying somewhere is not really so great.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That does not seem to me to be a sufficient reason. I have not had the time to go over our general fishery laws but I suppose we have laws against the use of explosives, for the purpose of protecting the whale and other fish. There is nothing here, but I presume we have in our fishery laws provisions to protect the fisheries ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.), from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

GRAIN INSPECTION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (113) An Act respecting the Inspection of Grain. He said : This Bill is a consolidation of Acts that have been passed at various times in the last six or eight years. We have had the subject up frequently and have had very great differences of opinion about it. The Bill is a very long one, and we would understand it very much better by a discussion of the various clauses. I will, therefore, give a very short resume of the Bill and perhaps in committee we can discuss the points. It will shorten it very much if I read a memo. which I have been furnished with :

The main object of the proposed Grain Inspection Act is to consolidate the Acts respecting grain which have heretofore been under the General Inspection Act and have been so considerably amended from time to time that it has been thought advisable, owing to the increased importance of the grain business of Canada, to have a separate Act drawn to meet the requirements up to date.

The conditions that obtain in the Eastern Grain Inspection Division and the Manitoba Grain Inspection Division are so different that it is impossible to govern both divisions under the same clauses in the Act ; it has therefore been found expedient to make general provisions and also separate provisions for each division.

The boundaries of the various districts and divisions are found obsolete and provision is made for a proper delimitation.

Certain powers vested in survey boards which have heretofore been appointed by the boards of trade in the Eastern Division have been considerably modified and the government, through its inspectors, assume greater responsibilities than heretofore.

The proposed Act seeks to make the regular grades permanent, or nearly so, as is in force in Manitoba.

The climatic conditions of Manitoba necessitate commercial grades more than in the Eastern Division. In the past the selection by standard boards of standards from year to year for regular grades was found unsatisfactory, causing much annoyance to European buyers unacquainted with the provisions of the various Acts and consequent frequent changes of grade.

The standard samples of United States grain are now to be established by the Grain Survey Board appointed by the Governor in Council. The old Act provided for having them established by a board appointed by the Board of Trade.

In the Manitoba Inspection Division there are few changes of any moment. Those incorporated in the proposed Bill have already met with the approval of the various interests concerned in the west.

Both the Eastern and the Manitoba Grain Inspection Divisions have no wish or desire to interfere in any way with each other. Both interests are therefore respected in the proposed measure.

Probably it will be better, in going into committee, that I shall point out to the House the changes in a Bill embracing nearly a hundred paragraphs. The rules and regulations that govern one section, are wholly inapplicable to the western division, and, therefore, it would be necessary to repeat practically over again the rules of the different divisions. I beg to move the second reading of the Bill and when going into committee I shall be glad to point out to the House the changes that are being made. I wish to draw the attention of the House to changes which have taken place in the matter of oats. The oatmeal millers complain very loudly that they have been completely overlooked in the arrangement of the clauses regarding oats. Now, it is set down that white oats shall be sound, clean and free from other grain, and shall weigh not less than thirty-four pounds to the bushel. You will not get one bushel of oats out of every ten, I venture to say, in Ontario, that will be clean and free from all other grains. There will be some little mixture. The result will be that they have to go into No. 2 grade. I will refer to the paragraph on the back of the Bill and I will say that the bulk of all our crop in the province will have to go into No. 2. Grade No. 2 white oats only requires to be 32 pounds to the bushel. No. 2 white oats shall be sound, reasonably clean and clear from other grain, and shall weigh not less than 32 pounds to the bushel. A little mixture is not a matter of vital importance to oatmeal millers, but the question of reducing the standard itself is a very serious matter. It is not the particularly clean quality that they want. They want the oats that they sell, and the result is that this clause is striking very forcibly at some people. I know it suits the shippers very well. The shipping interests should be satisfied, but the oatmeal millers complained very loudly. I have a letter from the president of the association in which he says he has strongly urged the change, in fact he had a promise that some consideration should be given to their interests, but it has not been given, and it will devolve upon me, when we reach that clause, to move an amendment with regard to oats.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I should like to ask whether the part four, relating to grades, is changed from the law as it stands ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There are some changes, but not in oats.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am speaking of all the grading, whether it has been changed in any particular ? If there are changes in the grading, it will give rise to a great deal of discussion and this House should not pass it without careful consideration. My opinion is that this Bill should be laid over until another session. It is a Bill of such great length, and deals with such important matters, and it appears from the explanations of the Secretary of State that there are many changes, and I fear that consideration will not be given to it at this stage of the session that it merits, and I submit earnestly to my hon. friend that this Bill should not be passed this year. It contains ninety odd provisions, and if it is entered into it will open interminable discussions. My hon. friend from Wellington has called attention to the grading of oats. I agree with what he has said, but I would have very much more radical objection to make to the whole grading of oats, because the weight required for first quality of oats is very low. Any decent white oats will weigh forty pounds to the bushel in our country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That shows the difficulty of dealing with the question.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If thirty-four pounds to the bushel is a proper weight for white oats in one part of the country, and forty pounds in another part of the country, it shows how difficult it is to make the law uniform in this respect. I hope my hon. friend will not press this Bill at this stage. The Militia Bill will come before us. It is an important Bill, and you have to do the best you can with it; but if the consideration of this Grain Inspection Bill is imposed upon us, with all other work which is to come before the House, I fear prorogation is not close at hand.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think the fears of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield could be minimized, because, as has been stated by the hon. Secretary of State, this is a consolidation of the Grain Inspection Act.

Hon Mr. FERGUSON—But there are many changes.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No, there are very few. It is a consolidation, and it is important that the Grain Inspection Act should be consolidated. For a number of years we have been passing inspection Acts affecting the inspection of grain west of Port Arthur. We have tried to get that inspection to conform with the Duluth inspection, and that was really accomplished one or two years ago, and the Act is so satisfactory, so far as the west is concerned, that they practically want no change at all so far as the west are concerned, and I venture to say that the consolidation that takes place here affects the west much more than any other part of Canada, and in fact no change is made. But it is a consolidation of the different inspection Acts that have been passed from year to year and it is important that they should be consolidated. It is very inconvenient to have to refer to three or four Acts for the inspection and handling of grain, and I think my hon. friend will find such is the case. This matter was referred to a committee of the House of Commons, and all parties interested in the handling of grain, the millers, the grain dealers and the exporters appeared before that committee, and after a very careful consideration this measure was produced. There was a complaint about the inspectors at Montreal wishing to have changes made. They wished to reinspect the Manitoba wheat at Montreal. That was opposed by the western grain dealers and exporters and they did not have their wishes carried out. With regard to the objection made by the hon. gentleman from Wellington about the oats, it is rather amusing to a person who listens to the different opinions given. I remember a gentleman a few years ago introducing a Bill to make the standard of oats thirty-two pounds to the bushel. He said he wanted the standard changed to 32 lbs., he objected to thirty-four pounds. He stated that he never got oats weighing thirty-four pounds down there and introduced a Bill to that effect. I do not think the standard weight of oats has been changed by this measure at all as it is very important to have a high grade of oats which is clean for seed. No. 1 white oats, as a rule, is a grade that is very seldom required and only, as a rule, used for seed and an inducement for clean farming. The man who can produce that quality of oats gets a good price for them. The next grade is the milling oats which is not quite so clean. If a person is buying oats for seed he should get them practically pure and clear of foul seeds. That grade is required. Frequently, several carloads of oats are purchased in the east to be shipped to Manitoba for seed, and it is very important to have a grade under our Act that can be relied upon, so that when a person is purchasing from a distant point he knows that the inspection is controlled by an Act of parliament, and he can really get what he is buying.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the suspension of the 41st rule.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Could we have this Bill in French this afternoon?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This Bill has been a subject of discussion in the Commons for the last two or three months. I have been expressing the hope to the Trade and Commerce Department, who had charge of the Bill, that they should try and get in down here sooner, but they did the best they could. There were so many persons who had views upon it, and so many interests to harmonize that it was absolutely impossible to get it here sooner. We had the subject up a few years ago. The interests of Manitoba were fairly well considered at that time and it was held in this chamber for a fortnight to allow experts to express an opinion, and I am told in this case that they have come to mutual understanding. It is the result not of the deliberations of the House of Commons, but of those interested in the trade. We export a large amount of oats, and it is quite important we should have some standard by which people buying Canadian oats would know what they are going to get. We must have some sacrifice, of course, in some cases because individual views cannot be placed upon the statute-books. We must have one grade to be known as the Canadian article. I think hon. gentlemen will appreciate that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The proper course would have been to have introduced a Bill making these amendments, and hand them to the commissioners consolidating the laws, who could do it very much better than we can. Instead of that we are forced to do the work of these commissioners by wading through the provisions of the Act.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—This consolidation has taken place before a special committee of the House of Commons, who examined the experts before that committee. There was a lot of work done by the committee of the House of Commons where the grain dealers and experts appeared before them and expressed their opinions.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The result of that should be put in a short Bill, stating the amendments, and let the commissioners consolidate the whole thing; whereas we are going to spend days of work at consolidating laws which should be done by commissioners.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—We have the evidence from the hon. Secretary of State that the Bill of which this is said to have been a consolidation, has been found unsatisfactory, and that the objection was taken not only by the people of this country but by the people of the country to which we were sending our exports of grain, against the provisions of the Grain Inspection Acts of the Dominion, and if these inspections are made, I presume that there are changes made in the Bill to do away with them and after it has taken more hours of the time of the popular branch of the legislature, and a special committee, the Bill is sent to the Upper House and it is supposed we are to let it go through swimmingly, because it is assumed we know nothing at all about it. This kind of legislation is making the business of the Senate, in a great measure, a farce.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—The principal portion of the legislation of the Dominion comes up in the last days of the session. We have appropriations coming up for millions, over which we have practically no control. We do not debate them here. Whereas I hold that it is the right and duty of the Senate to debate the Appropriation Bill when it comes before us. It has been done on former occasions, although it has not been the practice of late years.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, after confederation it was not done. The Supply Bill never took over fifteen minutes or twenty minutes in this chamber when my hon. friend's party were in power. I was here, and know about it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I have understood it was claimed by hon. gentlemen who were members of the Senate in earlier days of confederation that it was the duty of the Senate to discuss the Appropriation Bill as a whole. Although they had no right to object to any item in it, still it was their right to talk on the general question of appropriation. That right I think they ought to retain. We ought then to be more particular when Bills over which we have some control come before us in the last days of the session, to see that they are properly looked into and discussed by this chamber, and not have Bills of such importance as the Militia Bill, which is another Bill of a great number of clauses, occupying many pages and affecting the whole people of this country, besides a number of less importance and less volume than those two brought up in the dying days of the session to be passed through as if we had no control over them whatever.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—This is a very important Bill because it affects the trade and commerce of the whole of Canada in the matter of grain, and the importance of it was recognized by the other branch of parliament, and they appointed a special committee, men having a knowledge of the grain trade to look over the amendments necessary, and also the consideration which is of so much importance to the trade and the producers. The grain growers of the west were particularly anxious that the Act should be consolidated for convenience of reference, and it is also to meet the wishes of the producer that it should be done. But with reference to the attention which was given to it in the other House, I may say that these gentlemen who composed that committee invited all interests to be present and urge whatever amendments they thought desirable, and they were fully considered. I understood the committee took the ground that they would not disturb whatever had been working well in the past, and the amendments which have been made have only been in the direction of making the Inspection Act more workable in the future, so that no radical changes have been made in the Bill. In the complaints my hon. friend spoke of, against the Inspection Act, I think there may be a distinction made. Complaints we not made against the Inspection Act. I refer to the proceedings of the Montreal Chamber of Commerce, and I think the hon. gentleman is referring to the same thing. The complaints were rather as to the working out of the Act in reference to certificates. This committee endeavoured to work it out as best they could. Perhaps we cannot give the Bill that consideration which we should at this stage of the session, but bearing in mind that a thorough analysis and investigation was made of the amendments in the other House, it relieves us, to a great extent, of the responsibility we would otherwise have, because they had technical evidence before them and analysed it and arranged it in a way they thought would be more workable, securing to those dealing in grain all the advantages they were entitled to under the statutes of Canada. While the Act may not be perfect, it is felt that it is going a long way towards making it more workable and satisfactory in Canada.

Hon. Mr. BLACK—While I concur very largely in the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island, that it is very objectionable that at this stage in our proceedings we should have these important Bills forced upon our attention, yet the Bill is of such a character that, unless we have an expert committee appointed by this House to go into it fully, I very much question whether we can make any improvements in it, and, further, I have a suspicion that if we were to take this matter up in the House and deal with it without a committee, we might injure the Bill instead of making it more perfect. I know there has been a good deal of attention given to this Bill in the other House. Take one objection raised here, the inspection of oats : of course we do not raise as much grain in the east as you do in the west, or even in Ontario ; but we have a higher standard for No. 1 oats. As the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island has said, a good farmer in Nova Scotia would not like to sow white oats unless they weighed thirty-five to forty pounds to the bushel ; at the same time I apprehend a serious difficulty in discussing this Bill in this House, that while we may make some improvements we run the risk of injuring it. I am a farmer, and have farmed all my life. I think I have a fairly high standard of excellence in farming. The general standard for the oats of commerce has been thirty-four pounds to the bushel, and I do not think it would be wise to change that figure at all. Taking that as a sample of the objections we might raise I very much question whether we would improve this Bill. I am afraid we would injure it if we undertook to give it detailed discussion and amend it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—With so little time.

Hon. Mr. BLACK—With so little time, and I agree that it is very objectionable that this House has to deal with important measures just at the close of the session and I am told that this has been the record of this House, for a long period in the past.

I believe that objection does not apply merely to the present government, that the former government for years performed their work in about the same way. Members of the Senate have been so repeatedly called to order, because of being out of order, that I am very delicate about touching anything that does not pertain to this Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon .gentleman will set us a good example.

Hon. Mr. BLACK—If I thought the business of the Senate was going to be conducted in the future as it has been during the past thirty or forty days, I would tender my resignation and never show my face inside its walls again. As I have taken so little of the time of this body, I may perhaps be allowed to say that it is imperative, for the credit of the Senate, and for the country generally, that some steps should be taken before we face another session to so revise the rules and regulations of this House, that there should be a very stringent enactment to alter this state of things, and make a radical reform in the Senate of Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole at the next sitting of the House, and that this Bill be the first Order of the Day.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (166) An Act to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, 1902.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

The Senate adjourned until 3 p.m.

Second Sitting.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PATENT MEDICINES.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General ; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid upon the table of the Senate a statement showing the names of all liquid mixtures known as patent or proprietary medicines purporting to remove the most varied forms of disease occurring in the human body, and when weakened by such disease or by any indulgence, habit or accident, to restore it to its former strength and vigour. Showing also the amount of money, if any, paid by importer, maker, mixer or vendor, to the government as special tax or license, and to whom paid. Showing likewise if the government has any knowledge of the ingredients which are employed to make these compounds :—

1. Has such knowledge been acquired from the statements of the parties who have the formula ?

2. Has it been acquired by qualitative and quantitative analysis of the Dominion analyst, or by any other practical chemist, if so, what quantities are contained in a determinate, say one fluid ounce, of the following named ingredients :—

1. Water, quantity in a determinate measure, say one fluid ounce, of the preparations examined.

2. Alcohol in any form other than absolute ; methylated or proof spirit or any other form ; essences, ethers or any other solvent ; colouring or flavouring substances, and, lastly, the solid ingredients in said preparations, the quantity and names of each.

He said : This subject is more important probably than many are aware of. The hon. gentleman who spoke yesterday did so with a great deal of feeling and emphasis of the great work he did in the investigation of the Mutual Reserve Fund Insurance Company, work which I think was not equalled by any I know of during this or any former session. He said he did that as a matter of duty to his country and to his profession. I also can say with equal emphasis and with the utmost sincerity that this is a duty which is imperative on me, and which I think may be the means of leading to something very useful. The College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario, at their last meeting, through Dr. Bray, an eminent and experienced surgeon of Chatham, brought forward a series of analyses of different nostrums or compounds which are sold under the name of patent medicines. These had been analysed by the analyst of the Public Health Department of the state of Massachusetts, who would be admitted to be a sufficient authority. He found that upwards of sixty of these liquid medicines contained a very large percentage of alcohol. Ordinary whisky contains about 25 per cent of alcohol, and lager beer, which is with some persons capable of stimulating even to the stage of intoxication, contains two to five per cent. But some of these patent medicines contain as high as thirty to forty per cent of alcohol, and they are sold sometimes under the head of vegetable preparations containing no alcohol or mineral matter. Of course it is a monstrous lie

—the whole business is a compound of mendacity and audacity, as anyone can see who chooses to examine the analyses. There may be some hon. gentlemen here who think the medical profession has some feeling of envy or jealousy towards these medicines. Such an idea is beneath contempt. It is impossible that it could be so. If such a feeling cannot exist amongst ordinary educated men, still less can it do so in the minds of physicians. The physician belongs altogether to private life. He understands the living of the people; he is their confidant and adviser in many cases. He is not actuated by a desire for gain or anything but a sense of duty. He tries to observe the promise he made solemnly on the day of his graduation, to do his duty to the best advantage of his patient, and not to lend assistance to anything that is secret or would be wrong in the profession. He recognizes the awful responsibilities of the profession of which he is a practitioner; he recognizes the fact that he is brought into more intimate relations with the many problems which are associated with the human body. He is allowed to examine that which is the greatest masterpiece of the Creator, and which is a worthy casket for the immortal soul and intellect. Any physician who recognizes the dignity, the responsibility and the value of his profession would not condescend to do anything ignoble or mean or contrary to its teachings. There is a law that there can be no secrecy in the practice of medicine. The fact of a physician having anything to do with a nostrum or secret medicine ipso facto, is expelled from the practicing body of physicians. There is no formal expulsion. He simply disappears. You may remember the case of the Surgeon-general of the United States at the time of the war of the rebellion. His name was Bliss. Some time after the war he assisted in compounding a secret remedy, which was supposed to be a cure for cancer, named Cunkong. For that he fell, and fell never to rise again. I mention this to show that there can be no feeling but a feeling of humanity and a desire to put down fraud. You may ask how are these compounds made? They are made from ordinary substances, but the greatest liberty is taken with language, that can be conceived. Within the last few days boxes of pills were distributed to the members of the Senate with the compliments of a member of the Commons. These pills are coated with a lemon yellow colour, and have on the outside flavour of lemon. It is called 'The Fruitative' that is a name coined for the purpose of conveying the idea that it consists altogether of fruit. There is not a particle of fruit in it, except the lemon that may be in the coating. Once you dissolve the covering, you come to a most bitter and strong purgative. That I found myself by examining it. The proprietor of this pill has the hardihood to say that it is all fruit, discovered by a physician right here in Ottawa, under our very noses, and that this is the essence of apples, oranges and other plum fruits. He says there is a little bit of nux vomica, the tincture I suppose. That is the nut from which strychnia is extracted, a very good remedy when given in proper quantity. He says there is another extract, one of the alkaloids of Peruvian bark. Now, there are only two alkaloids in that bark. Quinine, which is used the world over as an excellent remedy in a variety of cases. Its discovery was a great boon, useful in a great many of diseases, greater probably than any other given to man. It has no particular purgative action, but it is, he says, a remedy for catarrh. They mention the most incompatible acute diseases and chronic for which this pill is a remedy. There is no disease or diseased condition for which this pill is not regarded as a cure. Now, catarrh is simply a discharge. Catarrh signifies a discharge, and wherever is a mucous membrane there may be catarrh. There is a variety of catarrh which is more prevalent in the United States than here, a discharge from the nose. Most people at some time or other imagine they have it, and this is represented as a remedy for that. How could this be a remedy? I assert that this 'fruitative' pill contains no more fruit than there is on the table of this House at this moment. See the audacity and the lying assertions made in connection with it. It is represented as an antiseptic, anti-neuralgic, anti-malarial, and I don't know how many antis. How are these patent medicines kept up? Their reputation is obtained by misrepresentation and fabrications of cases made up. Where do the testimonials which they publish come from? They are all tissues of falsehood from beginning to end. There is not one of them got by fair means. I can get as many testimonials as you please for the cure of any kind of disease. All I have to do is to pay some poor fellow 25 cents to sign a testimonial.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Does the hon. gentleman include the doctors who give their certificates ?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I have no reference to physicians, I simply have reference to the medicines. I am astonished that the hon. gentleman's understanding is not keen enough to recognize that I could not say that about the doctors. There are quacks in the profession, and somebody has said that there are as many in it as out of it. These pills that I refer to, are advertised pretty much as other patent medicines are. You can take that case as a sample of the rest. I am not going to discuss all these compounds. What I started out to do, was, to show the great danger of these medicines to the homes of the people of this country. There is a medicine which is called 'Celery Compound.' It is flavoured with oil of celery and has a sweetish taste, and is full of alcohol. Any one who tastes it can detect it quite readily. Then there is 'Peruna,' which has had a wonderful run. How has that become so popular ? By advertising. The advertisements are something marvellous, and names are used without scruple, of people in the highest walks of life, and they are all forgeries. In saying this, I take no advantage of the protection of the Senate. I am willing to say the same thing at any time on the platform or on the street. I promise you that I shall not say anything that is not strictly true, and I challenge contradiction. A small quantity of alcohol in these compounds would not be of much consequence, but there is a considerable quantity consumed when a number of doses are taken. This new remedy 'Peruna' is an excellent thing to go fishing with. It is as nice a whiskey as you ever tasted. The name had no radical significance. It is a soothing name designed to attract. The prunes in it probably suggested the name 'Peruna'; that is the only way I can imagine they got the name. That is put forward as a panacea for the most opposite diseases. This, of itself, to any intelligent man, shows the imposition, and the necessity there is for a person taking care. Who are the men who furnish these medicines? They keep themselves in wealth by advertising. That is the string that flies their kite. Cut away the advertising and they die. The amount they pay for advertising is enormous. You read of as much as £200,000 being spent in a year in England by one company in advertising a patent medicine, and they are justified by the results. I was told of one of these adventurers, whose name probably some of us know, having at the first start spent sixty thousand dollars in advertising, and he did not sell enough to keep him afloat. He did not despair. He went to a newspaper man and said : Put in $50,000 more and I will pay you back. He did so and the money flowed in, and from that time on it has been a golden mine which gives him money enough to do what he likes. How does he get his money ? From the demoralization of homes, from the poor and afflicted, from those who are too ignorant to understand the ways in which those men draw up the testimonials which they publish so lavishly. The unfortunate man who is given up by the doctors invariably falls into the hands of those people, and they keep him up as long as they can. I never hear of one of them that despaired. They always tell the people to keep on using the remedy. I was very glad to hear the other day of a debate on this subject in the House of Commons. Sir William Mulock in that debate, to his honour be it said, suggested the idea of keeping out these immoral circulars, pamphlets and books—of stopping the spread of them through the post office, and thus preventing the dissemination of falsehoods and misrepresentations throughout the land. It was a noble thing to do, and I was very sorry that any opposition was offered. It ill-became Dr. Sproule to drag into that discussion the cures at the shrine. I do not know how he dared to make any comparison between shrines and patent medicines. I have been four times at a shrine and I always came away rested, and the better of it, but there was not any miraculous intervention. At St. Anne de Beaupré they do not make any money out of it. All that is paid there is the money put into the collection, five and ten cent pieces. The people who bring excursions there may make money, but the fathers there are no party to that. I would be very happy to take Dr. Sproule down to St. Anne de Beaupré, at some time, and he would have such a revulsion of feeling that he would have serious notions of abandoning his faith altogether. At all events he would not consider it a miracle. It is most ungracious of a public man to refer to such matters in that way. I felt very much wounded by it, because I have been at the place myself and it was a dastardly invention to say that anything was sold there. We know what simony is, and it would be the greatest simony in the world for them to sell to any sufferer any possible means of cure or religious observance for the purpose of assisting them corporeally. I now wish to direct your attention to a great evil which I wish to bring to an end. The reason I brought this up was because Dr. Bray introduced it at the meeting of the Ontario Medical Council. I had thought of it before, but I had not the courage to bring it before the public on my own responsibility. I did not think it would be entertained by this House. But I knew that representations from a large, influential and distinguished body of physicians—there are over a couple of thousand of them, and the college is their mouthpiece for expressing publicly anything they think the public should know—would carry weight. Seeing there was such an enormous amount of this compound 'Peruna' in use, and testing it afterwards, I saw there was a terrible temptation brought into the houses of the people to seduce them. You have no idea how seductive some of these compounds are, and the pleasing effects which follow, but only temporarily, the use of them. Many a woman has been made a drunkard by them. Can there be any sin greater than bringing into a house a compound to poison the family and bring them to destruction? I remember, when a student, I was cautioned to be careful how we gave tinctures to patients. Tinctures are only alcoholic solutions of substances that water will not dissolve. Anything resinous or oil you know will not be dissolved by water, so alcohol is used. You would think nobody would ever get a taste for alcohol from the use of these, yet I was told by the physician who taught me, that tinctures have that effect and that a doctor must think carefully in prescribing any tincture in a mixture lest it be the terrible means of stimulating a taste for alcohol which, once acquired, cannot be overcome. Of all the evils and miseries which can befall a family or people the worst is drunkenness in the home. If the women are kept from it it is not so bad; but if the women are corrupted, and especially the mother, it is hopeless. There is another remedy that is sold regularly, 'Broma Chloral,' made up by a respectable firm in Baltimore. The active principle of it is morphia, hydrate of chloral and other powerful ingredients. I saw a man of over 50 years of age who was carried away by the use of it a couple of years ago, and narrowly escaped with his life by an attack of typhoid fever. I am conjuring up no bugaboo. I am not trying to make a sensation. I do not care if my remarks are never made public, but the subject is one which should command the attention of the Senate, and if the Senate can veto the manufacture and sale of these pernicious compounds, they will have done enough to justify their existence and a great deal more. There are some other points to which I should like to allude, but that is the main one. Perhaps the hon. Secretary of State will be able to tell us how these compounds are manufactured. The idea of giving a patent for one of these compounds makes me feel very bad. Patents are supposed to be given, for what? For inventions and they must have two qualities, utility and novelty. These have neither utility nor novelty; they have antiquity and inertia. The medical council recommend that the drugs of which these patent medicines are composed, and the quantities of them, should be printed on the bottle or label. They do not want to interfere with any vested rights, or to interfere with any inventor, but solely, in the exercise of their duty, seeing the drunkards that have been made by those drugs, and the other injuries that have been caused by them, they say that they cannot possibly be of any use; that they only make great wealth for a few, to the destruction of hundreds of human lives. The subject is worth looking into; the secret diseases they develop, and habits that are to be deplored. If you could see the cases that languish in prisons or asylums, it would astonish you.

It is an evil thing for the government that they are licensing and giving power to certain persons to poison the people of the country. 'Peruna' will do the work, and therefore, I think it is worth while looking into. These compounds should be analysed anyway, and the manufacturers of them should not be allowed to mislead the people. If a poor tavern-keeper happens to overlook the time of closing, and sells beyond the proper hour, he is liable to prosecution and a penalty. Why should these people be allowed to sell the strongest kind of whiskey ad libitum, at all hours, and to any one who is willing to pay for it! There is no restriction to keep them down. I have started on this in good faith and I am very grateful for the consideration the House has shown in permitting me to bring this subject to its notice. I would not have urged it so strongly, only I believe it is necessary. I believe every statement I have made to be true, and I challenge contradiction.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was quite unnecessary for my hon. friend to use the apologetic terms he did at the end of his observations. On the contrary, we feel under obligation to him for the very admirable address he has given us. I should like to see it circulated broadly throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion, and the evils could be met by attention being prominently brought to them. I am entirely in sympathy with the whole subject of the hon. gentleman's address. The medical men, I am glad to see, not alone of Canada, but of Great Britain and France, have recently become alive to the very great importance of checking the sale of sweets which contain alcohol in one form or another. Children become drunkards simply from the purchase and use of such sweets, and, as the hon. gentleman has stated, it has made sad havoc, especially in London and other cities of Great Britain, where the frequency with which women are known to be under the influence of alcohol is most deplorable, affecting not only the generations in existence, but, as the hon. gentleman truthfully remarked, the generation unborn, because no strong, virile progeny can spring from a drunken mother. The subject ought to be taken up by all serious men who feel an interest in the progress of the human family. No subject is of greater importance. On every occasion I should be glad to give way to an address such as the hon. gentleman has given. I go further, perhaps, than he does on this subject. I am not only opposed to the use of medicines containing alcohol, but I go further. It might not be entertaining to hon. gentlemen to hear me speak on that subject, and therefore I will not take up time in doing so. But I was very much impressed a few years ago in reading, when the Chinese first began to visit Europe, some of their comments on western civilization in Paris. They observed: You have one very curious custom in this country; you pay your medical men when you get sick; in China we pay our medical men so long as we are well; the moment we get sick no more charges can be collected. I thought the Chinese philosophy was somewhat in advance of the principle which prevails in Europe and America. I can only say we are all grateful to my hon. friend for his address, and I trust we shall all be stimulated to act on the advice he has so eloquently given us.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I would fail to be able to do the subject the same justice my hon. friend did. He has brought before this House facts which every one ought to consider, and every medical man knows full well to be true, and of such importance as to warn and guide men against the use of the average patent medicine. There is a wide difference between the medical man and those who produce and sell patent medicines. A medical man who has made any important discovery which is likely to be a benefit to the human race, does not patent his discovery. He at once makes it known for the purpose of benefiting humanity. It is not so with the man who patents a medicine. There is nobody who does more for the public gratuitously than the medical man; and, therefore, I am in full accord with the sentiments expressed by my hon. friend from Kingston. I see that the leader of the House strongly favours the remarks of my hon. friend. I hope he will take it into his serious consideration, and try and frame some measure to meet the evil. I admit it would be very difficult indeed, because those who deal in patent medicines are not very ready to publish the formula on which it is prepared, because the more alcohol they can get into a patent medicine, the greater will be the effects on the patients, and the greater the inducement to continue using it. I am, therefore, in full sympathy with what the hon. gentleman has stated, and also thoroughly in accord with the leader of this House in believing that no greater curse can be inflicted on the human race than indulgence in those beverages whereby the mother may contract the drunken habit and lead to the injury of her offspring.

The motion was agreed to.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 74) An Act to amend the Fisheries Act.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

INSPECTION OF GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the House into Committee of the Whole on Bill (113) An Act to amend the Grain Inspection Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not propose to enter into the merits or demerits of this Bill, but it is one of a character that requires a very great deal of thought, and very careful consideration, more particularly by those who are interested in the grain trade, and in other matters affecting the trade of the country. It will be within the recollection of every hon. gentleman present, who has been in the Senate for any length of time, that scarcely a session has passed that we have not had the introduction of a Bill for the inspection of grain or the inspection of fruit before us, and I was somewhat impressed with the argument of the hon. gentleman from Killarney when he made that pathetic speech just before the adjournment of the House. It was like the cooing of a dove. I have a distinct recollection of that hon. gentleman's energy and the practical knowledge which he applied to a Bill of this character upon a former occasion. It came from the House of Commons after a very great deal of consideration by that House, and yet when it reached the Senate it was found by practical men who understood the situation that it was not of a character to meet the requirements and wants of the people. I noticed also that the hon. gentleman from Killarney intimated to the House that the Bill was in accord with the wishes and wants, and met the desires of grain-growers and exporters in the west. That may be strictly correct, but as the hon. Secretary of State mentioned, on moving the second reading of the Bill, there are interests in the east that are not considered, and consequently time is required for those who understand the question, dealing in grain, living in the eastern portion of the Dominion, to consider the question which might meet the requirements and desires of those in the east. This Bill may, for aught I know, meet those difficulties. It is true, it has been before the House of Commons for a month or two, and they have been considering it before a very large committee. I have no doubt they have come to the very best conclusions at which they can arrive, from the knowledge they have of the business, and yet we find in the past that we have been placed in precisely the same position that we are in to-day, that the Commons having considered a Bill of this character, and having made all the changes and amendments that they thought necessary in order to protect the producer of grain, and also the purchaser as well as the shipper, yet when it came to this House, it went back to the House of Commons with a number of amendments and suggestions which staggered that House. Whether that will be the case with this measure or not, I am not prepared to say, but I do say that a Bill of ninety-three clauses, affecting a subject of as much importance as this Bill under the title of the Inspection Act, should not be rushed through in ten minutes, half an hour, or an hour. That will be the course on this Bill. I venture to make the statement that there is no man, except perhaps the hon. gentleman from Killarney himself, who has read the Bill and given it that close study, that those who are asked to pronounce a judgment upon it should give it. I may be in error, but I am of that opinion. It was only laid upon the table of the Senate yesterday, and I have not read it. I pay, I think I may fairly say, as much attention to measures introduced in this House, as any hon. member in the chamber, because I have a very great dislike to expressing an opinion or record a vote in favour of or against a measure, the effect of which I do not understand, and I certainly, in now recording a vote in favour of or against this Bill, should be precisely in that position. I see no other result to follow, from proceeding with this Bill at this time, than to allow it to go into Committee of the Whole and read the marginal notes, or we might skip them, because that is a mere farce. We might just as well make the motion at once, that all the clauses from one to ninety-three be adopted, and have the Bill reported from committee. I have not the slightest idea that there is any one in this chamber, unless it be the hon. gentleman from Wellington, who has intimated a desire to have one clause changed, who has considered this question sufficiently to justify him in making any motion to amend it. I have made these remarks to put myself on record, so that if there is anything wrong in the Bill I do not propose to be held responsible for it, and do not wish to express my acquiescence in the Bill, without a further investigation. There is another Bill before us which has been before the Commons for a few months. We are now within a few days of being five months in session, and there is another Bill which we shall be asked to deal with in the same manner. When that Bill comes up we should take some trouble to analyse it, and thereby obtain the opinion of the Senate. I say that, because I have some knowledge of the subject of this Grain Inspection Bill. I do not suppose the hon. Secretary of State will accede to the request of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, to allow this measure to stand until next year. He shakes his head. I anticipated that, and it answers the same purpose as if he spoke for an hour, that is one reason why I announced. as far as I am concerned, my intention not to offer any opposition to the Bill. It will go through and the government will take the responsibility, and right or wrong, they will have to abide by it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I beg to assure my hon. friend that his fears are not well founded. He has referred to the former occasion when a Bill of this character regulating the inspection of grain. was before this chamber. We had it here for three weeks I think.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This Bill ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The ancestor of this Bill, the Grain Bill, a few years ago. I know I took a good deal of interest in it, and the hon. gentleman from Wolseley and my hon. friend from Killarney took a very great deal of interest in it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Which Bill ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Grain Inspection Bill, the Bill on which this measure was founded, because at that time the eastern interests were stronger than the western interests. That Bill was conceived entirely in the interests of the people in the east, and I, among others, felt that a wrong was being inflicted on the west, and, although it was a government Bill, I approved entirely of the changes made in this chamber, and we really did make it a Bill that was acceptable to the people of Manitoba and the Territories. The reason that this Bill is not opposed by anybody is because the principles that we then laid down have been affirmed, and the experience of the last few years has satisfied everybody that the demands of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories were based on fair and just principles, and the east could take care of itself, because there are so many more to speak for it. At that time the west was not represented so well, on so important a subject. The sound principles we laid down on a former occasion are maintained in this Bill, and the eastern people have quite recognized the difficulties of a few years ago, and have fallen in line with the principles that were laid down on that occasion. Therefore, my hon. friend need have no apprehension that this Bill has not been fairly and justly considered, and is not one that is acceptable to a large number of those who are interested—that is the farmer, the elevator man, the exporter and the producer. The various classes interested are quite prepared to accept this Bill. Where such a large number of persons are affected by a Bill of this kind, you cannot expect absolute unanimity. If you tried for years and years you could not accomplish that, but this Bill satisfies the largest number of the persons who are interested in these matters.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I endorse every word uttered by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition with regard to the consideration we are going to give to this Bill, or that we will be able to give to it at this time. I have no reason to believe that there is anything wrong with this Bill. I have not heard that there was. Unlike the Militia Bill, I do not know that there is a strong opposition expressed against this Bill anywhere, but I have to call attention to these circumstances in connection with it. Up to the present time we have had no separate statutes dealing with the inspection of grain. It has been done under the General Inspection Act. This is a Bill which takes the inspection of grain out of the provisions of the General Inspection Act, and provides that it shall be dealt with under a separate law. Now I must complain that this Bill is not brought to us in a way that makes our duties at all easy in considering it. It has been usual when a consolidation such as this takes place, even without the radical change that is now proposed to be made, taking this departure, and taking the subject out of the General Inspection Act, it has been usual to have something in the printing of a Bill that would show what part of it was new and what part was old, something to show whether you are repealing, consolidating or amending. I have looked in vain for that. I find at the conclusion that the repealing clause says that all the provisions of the General Inspection Act, chapter 99 of the Revised Statutes, and of anything in amendment thereof, in so far only as such provisions relate to grain or the inspection thereof are repealed, and the provisions of this Act are substituted in lieu thereof. There is no clue as to what you are enacting new, and to what you are consolidating and amending. The matter is brought before us in such a shape that it requires tenfold the labour that it would require if we were treated as we were with the Railway Bill, and many other Bills that were brought up that were a consolidation, by having notes attached to each clause, showing the sections which were amended or were new ones. My view is that if the government had simply introduced the Bill, making the changes that they thought were necessary in the matter of the inspection of grain, declaring such and such a section to be amended in such a respect, a very small Bill would have covered it, and the commissioners who are now consolidating the laws could take it up and make it a consolidated statute. That would be very easy, and we could then have gone over these amendments in a very short time. We could have compared the new section with the former section and a very short Bill would have answered. We could have considered the matter while we were having these preliminary canters over this measure. No such facilities are given to us however, though my hon. friend admits that it contains many alterations, and my hon. friend from Killarney endorses them. He has not stated what they are, and there is nothing in this Bill that will enable us to refer to the former enactments. There is no note in the Bill that will enable us to go to the Consolidated Statutes or to the other amendments, to the provisions which have been made since that time, to find out what the law is now, and what the changes proposed to be made are. My hon. friend may be supplied with a brief on that point. If so, we must wait until he furnishes us with it. We have not that information with regard to one single section of this Bill to facilitate our labours, and I think the proper course to pursue is to withdraw the Bill and introduce it next session.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I think there is something in the suggestion that has been made, that when we deal with consolidation of voluminous Acts that the new clauses should be indicated. It would facilitate the work of hon. members of this House; but apart from that, I think it would be hardly fair to refuse to consider, even at this stage of the session, this Bill, for this reason: I understand that this Bill has been considered by a special committee in the House of Commons, that the parties interested have been heard before that committee. It would be losing the benefit of that work if we were to refuse to consider the Bill at the present moment, and I go further. Would it be fair towards the House of Commons, who have taken the trouble to go thoroughly into the matter and have heard the parties interested, to attempt to meddle very much in it by changing this Bill, unless we were prepared to call in the parties interested from the west and from every part of the country as was done by the committee of the House of Commons. I reverse the position. Suppose we had done the work ourselves, would we appreciate the House of Commons going over the same work in technical matters, and possibly arriving at different conclusions ? It does not follow that we should not scrutinize the Bill as much as possible, and it is possible that in committee we may find the Bill so defective that the suggestion made by the hon. leader of the opposition and the hon. gentleman from Marshfield may be adopted. But, prima facie, it does not appeal to me as being a suggestion that should be followed at this stage.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I find we have another difficulty. I sent for Bligh & Todd's Index, thinking I would be able, by that, to get the references to the different Acts we are now consolidating, and I find that that gives me no light, for the reason that all the Acts form part of the General Inspection Act, and I would have to wade through these. It does not furnish any guide as to what part refers to grain and what to other things, and I have not that advantage. I do not know how I am going to find out what sections are new and which are old.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. Secretary of State will tell us that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We are imposing an enormous amount of work upon the Secretary of State ; and furthermore, with due deference to him, I do not see how he can possibly know, unless he has a list made out.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think we are borrowing trouble in this matter. When we get into committee I think it will be found the changes are not so numerous. We are prepared to accept the statement of the hon. leader of the opposition, that he has not read the Bill, and I think he remarked that if he did he would not know much about it, and that the hon. gentleman from Killarney was very well versed in the measure, and had given it a good deal of consideration. While this grain inspection was under the General Inspection Act, it was set aside as the grain inspection portion of the Bill. The government now see fit to make it a separate Bill, and I would say that the people interested in the grain trade and the grain-growers have had ample time to consider this Bill and the provisions of it, because, in the early part of the session, the Bill was printed and copies were distributed all over the country. The Grain Growers' Association in the west considered it, and they made a recommendation to the government that there should be no change made in the inspection law of last year. The Grain Growers' Association, representing the Northwest Territories and Manitoba, had considered the operation of the Inspection Act that was then in force, and is in force to-day, and there has been no change made in the west, because the grain growers, the grain dealers, the exporters and the millers, came to the conclusion that the Act was in such good shape after the efforts of the House of Commons and the Senate in past years, that it was so nearly perfect that they asked that no changes should be made, and none have been made as far as the western inspection is concerned. Some slight changes have been made in the eastern section. I think there are only one or two changes in the western inspection, making it more plain. When we go into committee the Secretary of State, without taxing himself to any great extent, will be able to give explanations that will make it clear that the Bill is in the right direction, and should be passed into law. It is important that these Acts which affect the inspection of grain in Canada should be consolidated and not scattered all through the Inspection Act. There are two separate inspections, one for the western and another for the eastern trade. One of the claims made by the eastern section was that they should have a re-inspection of Manitoba wheat at Montreal.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is that a new matter ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No, it is old. We have asked for years to get an Inspection Act for the grain trade of Canada, and I have given special attention for twenty years to the matter, and we consider it to be so nearly perfect now, that the grain producers and dealers are satisfied with it and I think we have it now where both sides will recommend no further change in it. The eastern section wish to re-inspect our Manitoba wheat in the east. The west object to that, and the committee that had charge of this Bill in the House of Commons, who heard all parties interested, have produced what we have before us, and I think when we go into committee that the explanation given will be so easily understood that hon. gentlemen who have not given the same attention to it that other members have, will come to the conclusion that the legislation is in the right direction and it will be allowed to pass.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How does the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry think the speech he has made in reference to this Inspection Bill, would appear if printed as a preface to the Consolidation of the Railway Bill, with which he tinkered for a week or two, and in which he made fifty or sixty changes ? I think the speech he made to-night would not be very applicable to that. However, I merely want to compliment the hon. gentleman on the speech he has made; the two positions are analogous to my mind. I have only simply to thank the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie for the statement that if I read the Bill the probabilities are I would not know anything about it after I had read it. The only thing I object to is the hon. gentleman judging my stupidity by his own.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I was using the hon. gentleman's own words, when he said he had not time to read it, and if he did he would not understand it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I had in mind the Railway Bill, when I made those remarks, and I thought there was a big difference, because it did not require the special knowledge that this Bill requires—the technical knowledge. We were in a position to deal with it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If my hon. friend is satisfied I am. I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State—I cannot gather it from looking over the pages—whether this Bill will deal with the product of grain, flour and meal, or is it confined to grain?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Only grain and hay.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And still it is the Grain Inspection Act.

The motion was agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is not the first occasion when the Grain Inspection Act was isolated from the General Inspection Act, because if hon. gentlemen will refer to 1899, they will find we amended the General Inspection Act only in relation to the grain inspection. For many years it has been practically separated from the General Inspection Act.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But Bligh & Todd's Index furnished no clue for me to find what clauses we were repealing, because there was no light thrown upon what part of the General Inspection Act dealt with grain and what didn't. I notice in some of the Bills passed since that, there is a distinction but there is no assistance given.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I thought that would be useful, and endeavoured to have it codified, but they found that was impossible. It would be practically impossible with the many changes and alterations.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Is it the intention of the government to have it printed by itself?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume so, if there was a request for it. I think it should be printed to distribute among the farmers of the community.

On clause 10,

10. An inspector or deputy inspector shall not ordinarily act as such except within the district for which he is appointed or the local limits, if any, assigned to him ; but the minister, on the recommendation of the chief inspector of a division, may authorize and require any inspector or deputy inspector to act temporarily in another district or beyond such limits.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does not this add to the number of inspectors ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There will be an addition of some inspectors, because there will be subdivisions of the larger districts.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—And increased work will necessitate an increase of officers.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 11.

11. An inspector or deputy inspector who is appointed in and for a division, and to whom no local limits have been assigned, may act as such anywhere within the division.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This has been a matter of administration heretofore.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It opens the door for appointing a man who has no duties to perform. It enables the government to put a man on the list and under pay when he has no duties to discharge.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If we are to take the statement made in the House of Commons upon the question of appointments, particularly on the canals, we find there are many under pay who have nothing to do during the whole session. They are getting large pay and allowances for horses, besides, and it is not at all improbable that the same power, if necessary for political purposes, will be used under this clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The government can abuse any part of its administration, but it is idle to say in advance that they are going to abuse it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It may not be abused, but in passing this clause we are opening the door for the appointment of deputy inspectors for whom no work was in sight at the time of their appointment. They can send one of these inspectors anywhere they like.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Anywhere they like, within the division.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—His political influence would not exist probably beyond the division.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 13,

13. Chief inspectors, inspectors and deputy inspectors shall respectively be paid such salaries as are determined by the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Are the salaries fixed ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. The object is to collect sufficient fees to make the service self-sustaining.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is customary to have a schedule fixing what the pay of these officials shall be. It is so in the Penitentiary Act. In this case you actually are giving the government power to pay anything they chose ; there is no limit. They may, if they chose, pay one of those inspectors as much as they pay the Governor of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The effect of it will be to reduce the salaries of many of the inspectors. Just after the change of government, we noticed that the inspector of grain at Fort William, was receiving $8,000 or $9,000 per year. He was drawing his income from fees, and the accumulation of grain was increasing year after year. Now, the highest salary paid to a chief inspector, if I recollect right, is $4,000.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has evaded the question altogether. We were not speaking of the amount of money each one received. What we object to is that there is no schedule attached to the Bill showing what salaries are to be paid. It is not a question of whether they are to be paid by fees or by salary. When the late Minister of Justice, Mr. Mills, occupied the position now occupied by my hon. friend, he introduced the Penitentiary Bill. I called his attention to the fact that it had no schedule of salaries. He said at once he thought there should be a schedule, and he postponed the further consideration of the Bill until he brought down a schedule. This clause gives power to the Governor in Council to appoint as many inspectors as they please, and pay them any salary they like.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think the proper way would be to have a schedule attached, fixing the salaries of the chief inspectors, &c. It would be amended by adding the words. 'But the total amount of such salary shall not exceed the amount of fees collected.'

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It would be very hard to work that out.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. Secretary of State says there will be a large saving on the whole.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It would be some restriction on the Governor in Council paying excessive salaries to friends of their own, such as Jackson for instance.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are not changing the salaries at all. The Governor in Council has control of the salaries, and there is no intention to make them higher. I shall endeavour to get from the Department the salaries that are being paid. There is no intention to disturb or increase the present salaries.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There may be no intention. My hon. friend's intentions may be very good at this moment, but there is a certain place with an unsavory name that is paved with good intentions. This parliament ought to take care to help him to carry out his good intentions.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are not fixed by statute anywhere.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is in error. If he will get the Act to which I called attention, he will find that they are fixed in the schedule to that Act. It is the same with the Civil Service Act, and the Governor General cannot exceed those salaries except he comes to parliament with that very convenient phrase 'Notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act to the contrary'. I pointed out last year that there were some 70 or 80 cases of that kind; there are not so many this year so far. Will the hon. gentleman give us the information before the third reading ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Will my hon. friend hold the clause until we get the information ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, the salaries are not changed by this Bill except where an unreasonable amount has been obtained by fees, and a salary is to be paid instead.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In the case to which the hon. Secretary of State called attention, the inspector received $12,000 a year. He was a very worthy man, but that is altogether a payment beyond the duties he performed. That should not continue, but it still leaves it open to the Governor in Council to say what the salaries shall be, without consulting parliament. That is not the universal mode of dealing with this question. There are very many Acts in which the salaries are fixed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Certainly 25 per cent of the salaries in this country do not come before parliament, men who are not included in the civil service. For instance a vote of $50,000 may be taken for the Railways or Public Works Department for works, and a portion of that goes for salaries. A gentleman died the other day, a Mr. Rubidge, who was sixty years in the public service. His salary never appeared in the public accounts. It was taken out of the appropriations for the works he was supervising.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is one of the great abuses to which voting sums in lump has been carried. The government pay just what they please and parliament knows nothing about it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That has been the practice of all governments since Canada was established.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—I know some points where there has been an accumulation of grain. The inspectors were paid by fees, and when the government found the fees made an excessive salary, they put an end to payment by fees and paid salaries. There was one such case in our own district.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is not the point we are discussing at all.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—The point is whether the salaries will be in excess of the fees. Probably in some cases they would be, and in some they would not. Where there is an accumulation of grain brought to a district and the fees are very large, no doubt the officer's salary will be less than the fees, and where the fess are large, the salary will be less than the fees.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We are not discussing whether the inspector should be paid by salary of by fees. What we are contending for is that the salary to be paid should be fixed in the Act.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman has just explained, that if the payment is by fees one man might be receiving too much, and the other not enough. If the government have power to regulate the salaries, surely it is more likely that the inspectors will be paid in proportion to the importance of their duties.

The CHAIRMAN—It is hardly possible to fix the salaries by schedule because they will vary very much according to the locality.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—So they do in all departments.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 29,

29. The chief inspector shall distribute portions of all standard samples so chosen to such persons as the minister from time to time directs, and in the inspection of grain of the character described in section 27 inspecting officers shall be governed by the samples so chosen.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is a wide power. It may be necessary, and I do not suppose it will be exercised except by those dealing in grain, although it gives power to the chief inspector to distribute samples to such persons as the minister from time to time may direct. That might take a very wide range. I suppose the intention of that is to give samples to parties who are interested in dealing in grain, but it gives the power, without defining the class of people to whom the sample shall be given. Anybody who demands it is entitled to it.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Suppose a board of trade in Great Britain or France would write to the minister asking for samples of commercial grades, the minister would instruct some inspector to send him an official sample, and that would be used maybe in judging the quality of the cargoes and stand as a record.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When they arrive in a foreign country.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Yes.

The paragraph was adopted.

On clause 50,

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Does the government purpose collecting those fees by stamps or in money ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the same clause as in the old Act.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It should be by stamps and that would prevent the inspector putting part of the fees in his own pocket.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The clause is the same as in the original Act.

Hon. Mr. WATSON.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But we are amending the Act., and I do not well see how the fraud could be avoided by stamps ; that would not prevent a dishonest inspector from putting the fee in his pocket.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—If he gets a fee for every inspection, he also issues a certificate. The stub-book would show how many certificates he has issued, and what they were for. The stamps would not be any improvement.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 64,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I suppose this is really to meet a case where grain might be inspected at Port Arthur and be No. 1, but during the journey, on account of rust or damp or any other cause, it might not bear inspection at the elevator in Montreal, and this would provide for a re-inspection of it.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Yes. It is for the purpose of providing grain that may go out of condition.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 65,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Clause 65 and several following clauses are from the Manitoba Act.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is this a provincial law ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—No. It is a provision applying west of Port Arthur only.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is it clear that these provisions although they may be applicable to Manitoba are not applicable to the east ? They might be perfectly applicable and suitable to Manitoba and the west and might not be equally suitable to the east.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. Secretary of State know that the grain dealers and those whose business it is to look after these things in the eastern section of Canada, or rather, in the eastern division, have been consulted and concurred in making these western sections applicable to the east ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. This subject has been discussed for the last three months with the head of the department, and the Bill was first considered by the government four months ago, and it has been held over to obtain the approval of the parties who were consulted, and their approval has been obtained.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I asked that question in view of the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, whether this has been approved by those interested in the trade from the east, and I take it for granted it has been.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The boards of trade of Toronto and Montreal and the millers were here, and were heard.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 69,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does this include the North-west ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Everything west of Port Arthur.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We were told that from clause 65 onward the clauses were taken from the law of Manitoba and the west. Now we have special provisions as to Manitoba inspection. Are these same provisions still retained in this part we are now dealing with ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, they are all the same in the Manitoba schedule now—no change in them.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Do I understand these sections from 65 onward, which we have been considering, and which have been made to relate to the eastern division, are still continued in force in the western section ? These sections have hitherto been applied to the western trade. There are two parts in this section, part 2 and then there is part 3. Part 2 contains special provisions dealing with the eastern divisions. and we are told that hitherto these sections deal with the Manitoba trade. If that is so, and if they are necessary provisions, do they still continue as bearing on the western trade, or are they taken out and made only to apply to the eastern trade ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Up to clause 69, they are still in operation in the west. When we get to clause 70, we reach clauses which apply exclusively to the west.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Part 2 had reference formerly to Manitoba. I understand it was necessary to make these provisions apply to the east. Now we come to special provisions for the Manitoba division. Are these clauses which formerly bore on the Manitoba trade still retained for the Manitoba trade ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, and now we are coming to Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am sorry I cannot make myself understood. Part 2 starts with special provisions as to the eastern division, and the explanation we received was that these sections formerly were in the law relating to inspection in Manitoba and the west, and that these sections have now been placed in this part which apply specially to the eastern division.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Look at clause 66, and then read clause 78 in the Manitoba part.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Take 64 and 76.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I wanted to find out whether those sections which formerly related to Manitoba and the west, and which we are told now apply to the eastern division, are retained in the special provisions which bear on the western section ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Yes, practically.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Have they been found to be entirely unnecessary in reference to the west ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—They are practically repeated with some changes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We ought to know if they are repeated ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the hon. gentleman will look at 66, he will see the changes are very trifling.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I observe that 66 is exactly the same as 78, but it seems a most extraordinary thing to repeat a clause in that way; but I wanted to find out whether it was so or not.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—There are some words included in 78 which are not in 66.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The puzzle is to know why these clauses, from 63 to 69, are taken as the hon. Secretary of State says they are, from the Manitoba

Act and made applicable exclusively to the eastern division.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Not exactly word for word. It is in general terms. The principle is the same.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then you make certain clauses to which I have called attention, applicable exclusively to the eastern division. Are they not equally applicable to the western division ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—They are in so far as they can be made applirable, but the rircumstances and conditions make it necessary to have some slight differences. The wording is different, although the same principle guides in both cases. These clauses that we are discussing refer altogether to the identity of the grain after it is inspected, the preservation of the certificate, the honesty, if you like, of the certificate, and what was found to work well in the west, so far as it could be adopted, was arranged to be applied to the east, but the circumstances to some extent may be slightly different, owing to the system of handling grain and the wording is to some extent different from that in the west.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The first explanation we received was not accurate. The three sections were taken from the west and made applicable to the east, then I wanted to know what was going to happen if these provisions were taken away altogether from the west. The explanation now is that these clauses have been taken from the west and modified, anl the full clauses were maintained in the west.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 78,

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I cannot understand why these two provisions should be in the law. Why should not one of them be made a general provision applying to both the east and the west ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Convenience is the only point.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG--It is a matter of convenience. For instance, in the west a dealer or producer, if you will, if he secures that part of the Act which relates to the western division, he will have all those provisions of the law applying to that district.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I can see no object in it whatever, except to swell the size of the Bill. It reminds me of the Dutchman who thought his brother a great poet because he had written a book as big as a cheese. In this case, the same provision is put in twice when it is not necessary.

Hon. Mr. BLACK—It seems to me the only explanation that can be given of it, is that the requirements of the east are not of as broad a scope as those of the west, and you put in the east specifically and you supplement that statute by adding to it what is required for the west. That is about right, is it not ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If the hon. gentleman will read clause 65, he will find that it contains general provisions applying to the east and west.

Hon. Mr. BLACK—But there are some that would not apply to the east.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—You have to have the hard Manitoba for the western one, because it is a Manitoba certificate.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But if it was made a general provision as it is in 65, it would apply to the east and to the west.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—In the east you deal with Manitoba certificates, because the grain carrying certificates is passing through. You deal with eastern certificates, because the grain of Ontario is being handled down here, but west of Port Arthur we only deal with one certificate, the Manitoba certificate ; therefore we have to put in the word ' Manitoba ' when we deal with the west, because that is a distinguishing certificate applying to western grain.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 80,

80. When grain shipped from any elevator is being systematically reduced in quality below the general average quality of the grain of similar grades in the bins of the public elevators, the chief inspector shall instruct inspecting officers that no such grain shall be allowed to pass inspection except on a lower grade. The inspectors shall at all times keep careful watch on grain received into terminal elevators, and, if they find any grain being received as above described, shall at once notify the chief inspector, who shall make an investigation forthwith and take action accordingly.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My objection to that clause is, that it would be impossible to operate it. When grain shipped from any elevator is 'being systematically reduced in quality, below the general average quality.' How would it be possible to prove this was done on a system? I could understand if it was found to be generally below a certain percentage, but to prove that it is done on a system would be a matter of great difficulty.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The only thing we have to provide against with fines and penalties is that a system of mixing shall not be practised. That is one reason why the west want inspectors separate from the east. A system has prevailed of mixing or bringing up grades. They get a grade of extra No. 1 hard, and take it to a mixing elevator, and mix it with a lower grade of wheat, and it will pass inspection as No. 1 hard. That has been practised in the east, and in the west I may say, and it is important that this No. 1 hard grade should be kept separate. Grain men do doctor wheat, and as soon as they pass inspection, they run skin grades, I think they are called. I do not want to go back to a clause that has already been passed, but I have discovered a reason why the hon. gentleman made a mistake when he compared clause 78 with clause 75.

The CHAIRMAN—We have disposed of clause 78.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I want to explain that it is on account of this mixing. In the east they do allow mixed cargoes, and where there is a mixed cargo, it is written on the certificate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is that what is understood by 'systematically reducing' the wheat?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes, mixing.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I have not the Grain Act here, but the Manitoba Grain Act contains that clause. It properly belongs to the Inspection Act. It has reference to what are called 'sorting elevators.' In fixing the grade we fix the minimum. The grade has to be up to that standard or better, consequently, they average in the public elevator in each bin, a grade that is better than the minimum, but if any large quantities of grain were systematically reduced to the minimum, and then poured into the public bin, your average in the public bins would be reduced, and the samples which were sent out would be somewhat misleading. Now, it is exacting that wheat going out of a sorting elevator must be equal to the average in the public elevators, not the minimum but the average, and the inspector in inspecting the grain, inspects it on the basis of the average in the terminal elevator, so they have to put up a higher quality than the minimum, which is fair and reasonable, so as to preserve the quality of the grain in the public elevator.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When you say it must be proved that it is systematically reduced, you would have to show they were doing it on a system. How could you show that?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—They do it on a system. Of course you know the grain is not inspected in these elevators.

The clause was adopted.

On cause 68,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How do you determine 'reasonably clean'? Would not that be subject to varying interpretations by different inspectors?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I suppose so, but inspectors, as a rule, have a system.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They have samples.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Yes, they have samples and testing sieves. They can sift the grain and tell what dirt there is, and they will preserve a uniform standard.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Why is goose wheat retained in the grades? Is it a wheat that is grown extensively in any part of the Dominion? We grew goose wheat in Prince Edward Island many years ago, but it was abandoned. I do not think any farmer grows it now. From what I know of Manitoba, I think there is no such wheat grown there for commercial purposes, so it must be grown entirely in Ontario and Quebec.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I see by my copy, which I have just received, that it is translated into French, 'California wheat.'

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—A wheat must be very dry that will weigh 61 pounds to the bushel. I suppose the explanation of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona must be a correct one, that it corresponds with California wheat, but I do not think it is grown extensively in any part of Canada.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—There is a considerable quantity of it grown in our district. It is largely used for feeding purposes. It is chopped as a rule for the purpose of feeding cattle.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Is it a spring or fall wheat ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It is a spring wheat.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is it a wheat that weighs heavier than the ordinary spring wheat ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It is generally considered a good article for feeding purposes. It is heavy, coarse wheat. Some grind it into flour and use it for food.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It must be a hard, dry wheat to weigh 61 pounds to the bushel.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—So it is, a very hard wheat. I intimated this forenoon that I intended to move an amendment to the standard for oats, but, after carefully discussing it with some well-posted gentlemen, I thought it better to leave the matter over until next session, and then, if nobody else does it, I shall feel it my duty to introduce an amendment to the standard for Ontario oats, by adding another grade, not disturbing the present grades at all.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When the grades were before the House, an hon. gentleman who is not now with us, and myself and some other senators, took a good deal of pains to consider this question, and I was impressed when I saw these grades, that they are very inaccurate from a local point of view. They were not the weights we thought should be attached to the different grades in Prince Edward Island, but I found in talking the matter over and discussing it, that the grades after all suited the general trade of the country fairly well, and the general quality of oats that goes on the principal markets of the Dominion and exported from Canada, that these grades were fair as applying to the general bulk of our products, though I was at first surprised to find the grades as they were. I thought they should be higher with regard to oats, yet after full consideration, in connection with other gentlemen who knew a great deal about the matter, we concluded it had been fairly well considered.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I am sure the committee that had the Bill in charge did what they could to make it acceptable to the whole Dominion, but there is one section of the people who feel that they have a grievance, that is the oatmeal millers. In my district there is one of the largest exporters and manufacturers of oatmeal in the country, and he thinks the law should be changed, because in its present shape it militates against the oatmeal miller, and in favour of the exporter of oats in bulk.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would not the oatmeal miller require the heavier grain ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—In grading the first grade you will not get one load out of 25 or 30 that will grade No. 1, because there is a little barley or other grain mixed with with it. If it does not grade that, it is put down to 32 pounds. A grade of 32 pounds to the bushel is not a kind of oats that the oatmeal miller wants to buy, but notwithstanding that fact, it suits the exporter, and when it is graded No. 2 white, the oatmeal miller has to pay the price for it, or it goes into the hands of the exporter. What the oatmeal millers want is an additional grade, whereby they will be able to compete in the market for the kind of oats they want to turn into oatmeal.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If the oats is otherwise good, they do not object to its being mixed.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is one of the best reasons that could be given why this Bill should not be rushed through.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You could not make a change now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You can make it now if you like, but perhaps it would not be advisable to do it ; and why ? Because the Bill has been kept away from the House until the last moment of the session. It is a pity. Here we are consolidating a law affecting the grain trade of the whole Dominion. A senator has pointed out that it does not meet the circumstances of a certain section of the country, and we are promised next year a Bill to amend this Act. We are making a consolidation of the law which is to last only five or six months, and then we are to have an amendment to it. If sufficient time had been given, and the point raised by the hon. gentleman had been brought before the committee in the House of Commons, or if we had had sufficient time to enable us to make this Bill a little more perfect than it is, and send it back for approval, there would be no necessity to take action again next year. We have been tinkering at this law for the last thirty years.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The matter was considered fully in the other House, and suggestions were made, but the millers were so anxious that the Bill in its present shape should pass, that they were willing to have it as it is rather than not have it at all, because they were anxious that this consolidation should take place, and afterwards, if it was found that it would not work satisfactorily, they thought an amendment could be made, but they did not want to delay the Bill for the purpose of carrying that out.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That does not meet the point I raised. If this had been brought here three weeks earlier, we could have given it more attention.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would not have made any difference. It was all threshed out and thoroughly discussed in the other House, and it would not be accepted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. Secretary of State says supposing we did amend the Bill the majority in the House of Commons would not accept it. If they did not accept it now, they would not next year, unless good reasons were given for it. If we had had sufficient time to consider this Bill and make the addition to which reference has been made, it could have gone back, and if they rejected it I do not suppose the Senate would have insisted on their amendment. I am only pointing that out as one of the reasons to justify the remarks I made at the beginning of the consideration of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. BLACK—We have gone through this Bill, and there has been no serious objection that I could detect until we came to the weight of oats, and I presume that the objection raised by the hon. senator from Toronto would raise the standard of oats if he moved an amendment to it.

The CHAIRMAN—No ; it would lower it.

Hon. Mr. BLACK—I would contend, and strongly contend, not to lower the standard of oats, for I hold that any oats that is down to the weight of 28 pounds is scarcely fit to put on any market, and if I were to remodel that grade for oats at all, I would commence with No. 1 at 36 pounds and run down to 30 pounds, and if I was on a committee where we had free scope to express ourselves, I would contend earnestly that no oats should be called marketable oats that weighed less than 30 pounds, and that they should grade as high as 36, although I will admit that the standard for oats throughout the country has been so long 34 pounds that it would not be wise to interfere with it. Surely oats weighing less than 30 pounds is not fit to mill. So if we want to amend this law we surely have the time to do all we could do, if we had a month to devote to this particular clause.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We have passed in the course of about two hours, 78 sections of this Bill, and we have not changed a single letter or word.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—So much the better for the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Either this Bill must be the work of heaven-born genius somewhere else, or we are the most acquiescent people that ever sat around a legislative board.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Both.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not admit either one or the other. I daresay it is a well-prepared Bill, but I think with such a body of men as sit around this board, if they were given a fair opportunity, they could make some improvement in the Bill, and the longer it is fairly considered the more plainly these amendments and improvements would suggest themselves. But we are going through it in a thoroughly perfunctory manner, without an opportunity of considering its details, and my hon. friend the Secretary of State, who is generally so good-natured, begins to get his bristles up, if we talk of an amendment at all. We really begin to be alarmed that he will get ugly on us, if we suggest a change in the Bill. In fact, that is the way with all the government Bills, and that is the way we are to be treated not only with this Bill but with all the Bills that we have to consider in the next four days. We need not lay the flattering unction to our souls that we are legislating at all, we are receiving perfunctory explanations and dealing with them in a perfunctory manner.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The Bill before us is a compliment to the members around this board who have worked on its details for days at a time in years gone by.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We could have made a score of amendments to it, if we had had time.

At six o'clock the Speaker took the chair.

After Recess.

The Committee was resumed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why is no weight given for No. 1 barley ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Because if it possesses all the other qualities mentioned here, it will have the weight at least of the next grade.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Suppose you went into a court with a question of that kind, and you had barley that would meet the requirements for No 1—'plump, bright, sound, clean and free from other grain,' but which weighed less than 48 lbs. to the bushel ; does the hon. gentleman think that a court would not declare that a bushel of grain as within the meaning of that clause ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It must weigh better than 48 pounds, if it is 'plump, bright, sound, clean, and free from other grain. Therefore, if the inspector found a sample of grain that did not weigh over 48 pounds to the bushel, he would not necessarily grade it as number one.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But suppose it contained all those qualities, but did not weight 48 pounds ?

The CHAIRMAN—I am quite satisfied that irrespective of weight it would be graded No. 1.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—No. 1 barley as here set out is intended for brewing purposes, and will bring a higher price than No. 2, even if it weighs less than 48 pounds. After all, it is the colour and brightness that secures the better price. No. 2 barley is used more for feeding purposes.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the 2nd reading of Bill (124) An Act to amend the General Inspection Act.

The motion was agreed to.

Under a suspension of the rule, the House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 121,

121. Upon or attached to every ball of binder twine sold or offered for sale in Canada there shall be a label with the name of the dealer and the number of feet of twine per pound in the ball marked or stamped thereon : Except that binder twine manufactured in Canada for export need not be labelled with the name of the dealer, but there shall be attached to every ball so manufactured a label with the number of feet of twine per pound in the ball marked or stamped thereon in the same manner as when for sale in Canada ; and the onus of proof that such twine was manufactured for export shall rest upon the manufacturer, dealer, carrier, or other person in whose possession the twine is found.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The question is whether this clause would not lead to some difficulty. The name shall be held to mean the person or firm manufacturing or importing. If any person goes to the United States and buys a lot of twine, he would be the importer, not the manufacturer, and he would be responsible under this for every ball of twine that he purchased. He would either have to take an indemnity from the person from whom he purchased that twine, that each ball of twine and each pound, contained so many feet, or what position would he be in ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The consumer purchases from the dealer, and you cannot protect the dealer. He must satisfy himself there is the quantity in it when he buys it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is not the point at all. Suppose the hon. gentleman went to the United States, and bought a hundred tons of this twine, he would be responsible when he brought it into this country, as to the number of feet which it contained.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Unless you took the word of the manufacturer in the United States—and there is where the frauds have been—you would have to take an indemnity from the manufacturer from whom you purchased in order to protect yourself if you sold in this country. It is a very good protective policy.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is the only plan you could possibly adopt.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to know how you could carry it out ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The dealer has to be careful with whom he deals.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—There was a law last year which may not have been as clear as that, and perhaps that is the reason why they amended it, dealing with binder twine in the same way, and it was found that a great deal of twine had been sold in Canada, represented to be so many feet per pound, but when they came to examine it, it was very far short. There was a lot of twine seized under the law of last year, and it had a good effect, and we hope next year there will be no such cases.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How would you protect the importer ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He has to protect himself.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is it at all practicable ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If it prevents the importation of binder twine, and puts the whole manufacture into the hands of Canadian manufacturers, I have no objection.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He can take security from the manufacturers. That is the only way.

The clause was adopted.

On section 122,

122. Every dealer who sells, offers for sale, or has in his possession for sale in Canada, any ball of binder twine not labelled with the name of the dealer as required by the next preceding sction shall be liable to a penalty of not less than twenty-five cents and not more than one dollar for each such ball.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I should like to know if there is any provision for those that have twine in their possession at the present time. Some of those have all the twine they require for harvest, already in their possession before the Bill passes ?

I notice the third clause reads :

Nothing in this Act shall be construed as affecting any dealer with respect to stocks of twine actually in his possession on the 15th day of May, 1902.

That is two years ago. Well, there is a great deal of this twine in the hands of dealers that has been bought since that. What is to come of those that have in their possession such twine to-day ? Every retailer in the country has bought twine for this harvest, and he has bought it not expecting this Bill will come into force. What will be his position when this measure passes ? He is liable to be fined 25 cents a ball for all he has in his possession. Is he supposed to unravel all the twine he has in his possession and mark it ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—He is not to unravel it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Such twine is excluded from the application of the Act.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—By which section?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The section the hon. gentleman has read.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—That is only up to May, 1902. The twine must be in their possession on or before that date.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—I think the law in reference to the marking of twine was the same as that which came into force in 1902.

It is to protect any one who had twine in stock before the law came into force.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I should like to know whether people who have short twine in their possession at the time of the passing of this law will be forbidden to sell it ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The 15th May, 1902, is the date on which the previous Act was sanctioned, and that Act contains a provision similar to this. It contains among others the following provision :

Upon or attached to every ball of binder twine offered for sale there shall be a stamp with the name of the importer, &c.

And then the penalty clause : The law here is more exacting than the Act of 1902, but in substance it is to the same effect.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The same principle applies.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This clause will take effect the moment it is sanctioned by the Governor, will it not ? Is there anything in this Act to protect the holders of binder twine, as indicated by the hon. gentleman from Wellington ? If so, I fail to see it, because if there is binder twine on hand, purchased prior to the pasage of this Act, and it does not come up to the standard of binder twine provided under this Act, will they not be liable if they sell it ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—This is simply superseding the Act of 1902, and the Act of 1902 made it illegal for a party to have binder twine in their possession that did not have this marking upon each ball.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What time will this amendment come into force when it is added to the law that is upon the statute-book ? It will be when it is sanctioned by the Governor General. This is entirely to protect the farmer, which is right enough, but the innocent purchaser prior to the passage of this Act should be protected.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—He cannot be innocent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is a queer doctrine to lay down.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The object of this Bill is to introduce the exception which is to be found in section 121, commencing with the word 'except' in the fourth line. The first portion of that section is word for word as it was in the Act of 1902. That is one object, and the only other object is to make the Act more workable, to better reach the fulfilment of the conditions which had been enacted in the previous Act ; so clause 3, to my mind, is fully sufficient to protect all acquired rights.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman thinks so, all right.

The clause was adopted.

On subclause 3 of section 122,

3. All balls of binder twine not properly and correctly labelled in accordance with the provisions of the next preceding section shall be confiscated to the Crown, and may be seized upon view by the inspector of binder twine.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is there more than one inspector ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Mr. Haycock ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think that is the name.

The subclause was adopted.

On clause 3,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If they bought before the penalties were imposed they would, of course, not be liable.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This protects every person having a stock of twine on hand on the 15th May, 1902. That is long enough.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. McKAY (Alma), from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second read- of Bill (153) An Act to amend the Post Office Act. He said: This is a Bill making certain domestic arrangements in the Post Office Department. There are a lot of isolated cases. The most important thing is the appointment of two chief superintendents, one for Montreal and one for Toronto. Post offices having receipts of half a million dollars are to be supervised by a chief superintendent. There is also a clause relating to transportation, which reads as follows :

10. In places enjoying the free letter carrier delivery system the Postmaster General, in lieu of paying street railway companies for the transportation of letter carriers, may pay to any carrier, to defray his cost of transportation, a bulk sum not exceeding fifty dollars a year, but this provision shall not apply to places where carriers are entitled to free street railway transportation.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

On clause 1,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Section 12 of the Act authorizes the appointment of a chief inspector, and this Bill supersedes that. Section 15 of the Act refers to the duties of those officials. It defines the powers of the chief inspector in the post office, and hon. gentlemen will see that changes are made in section 15.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is that covered by clause 2 ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. Instead of being the chief inspector, he is called here the chief post office superintendent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was going to ask the hon. gentleman the reason for making this change. You substitute the words in clause 15 of the present Post Office Act, 'Chief Post Office Superintendent' for 'Chief Inspector' in each case where it applies. Are there any additional duties given to the post office superintendent that are not now enjoyed by the chief inspector, or is it understood that in repealing the clause which gives the authority to appoint the chief inspector and substitute the chief post office superintendent, the authority of the latter officer in and over the management of a post office where the revenue is up to and over $500,000, repeals the appointment of a chief inspector whose duties in the past have been to go through the whole of a province on inspecting tours, to the different post offices, while the inspector who is under him has districts allotted to him, beyond which he never goes, unless specially authorized by the minister to do so ? What object is there in making this change. My hon. friend told us the other night, when he introduced the Bill, that this chief post office superintendent not only was to supervise the management of a post office where the amount to which I have referred is collected, but that he had a superior position to that of the postmaster himself, though his salary is but $3,000, while the salary of the postmasters in large cities collecting over $500,000 is $4,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I had no authority for making the latter statement. I assumed that a man appointed with all that array of names must occupy some very high position. I may be mistaken. I do not understand the ramifications of the Post Office Department with the various classifications they have with reference to the clerks and their duties. They are eternally changing them, and it is hard to keep up with them. It does not repeal section 15. Section 1 repeals the clauses of which I have read a part.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I want an explanation of clause 1. I have not been able to ascertain what clause of this Bill provides for the appointment of this new officer.

The CHAIRMAN—Section 2. That is the reason why the two sections are being discussed together.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The second section is amending section 15 of the Revised Statutes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. Section 12 of the Post Office Act, cap. 35 of the Revised Statutes, is repealed, and in section 15, instead of any chief inspector, we have the words 'any chief post office superintendent,' and every post office inspector and assistant post office inspector may, for the purposes of any inquiry or investigation apply to any judge of the Exchequer Court of Canada, &c. That is for the purpose of making inquiry or investigation.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My point is this. We are repealing this section 12, which gives the Governor General in Council power to appoint chief inspectors and so on. What clause of this Bill provides for the appointment of this chief superintendent that we are talking about?

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is not provided for in this Bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Section 15 does not provide for it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The chief inspector has already been provided for in previous legislation. I do not think my hon. friend the Secretary of State is perhaps treated altogether as he ought to be by his colleagues.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Things are pitched into my hands.

Hon. Mr. POWER—He cannot be expected to know the details of all these Bills that come up at the end of the session. I wish to direct the attention of the committee to cap. 28 of the Acts of 1902. Section 9 says:

9. A chief post office superintendent may be appointed at a salary not exceeding $3,000 a year, or whose duty it shall be from time to time to inspect the city post office and such other post office as the Postmaster General from time to time indicates, to examine into their management and efficiency and to advise and instruct the various staff with a view to promoting the efficiency of the service.

And the next section reads:

No person shall be eligible for the appointment of chief post office superintendent unless he has been a clerk or person of higher rank in the city post office for at least ten years. His appointment as such superintendent shall not, unless and until so determined by the Governor in Council, have the effect of relieving him from the position held by him in the service at the time of his appointment, provided that his total salary shall not exceed three thousand dollars a year.

Now, in 1903, there was another Act passed. I take it that when the superintendent was appointed it was felt there was no necessity for a chief post office inspector, provided for in section 12 of the chapter of the Revised Statutes and consequently the superintendent taking over the duties of those inspectors, the section providing for the inspectors has been repealed.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I understand from what the hon. Speaker has pointed out—and I have the section that he refers to before me now—that, in 1902, authority was given by the parliament for the appointment of a chief post office superintendent, and it appears then that section 12 of the Revised Statutes was still left in operation, still continuing the appointment of these post office inspectors. May I ask if this chief post office superintendent was appointed under the Act of 1902? Was an appointment made then?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I think not, because there is an item this year in the estimates for two superintendents. They were never appointed.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In other words, that power was never exercised. The appointment was not made?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And the old section 12 of the Revised Statutes was allowed to remain in force, and the old mode of inspection was changed?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Now it is proposed to abolish the office of inspector and chief inspector that we have had, as provided in section 12 of the Revised Statutes, and to put into operation the clause of the Act of 1902, empowering the Postmaster General or Governor in Council to appoint a chief superintendent. That gives rise to this thought: what position will these officers be in whose offices are now being abolished? Will they lose their offices altogether?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no. I do not think there are any.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—What is their position? If the offices that they hold are being abolished, as section 12 would abolish them, where are they to be? Is there proviison for them in some other law?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I could not tell you.

Hon. Mr. POWER—They will probably be appointed superintendents.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I know there have been no superintendents named. I understood some time ago the Postmaster General was going to name two new superintendents. I do not say that they are new, but to give new titles to two officials.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Certainly it may be all right, but I think it is due to the House that we should know precisely how the repeal of clause 12 is going to affect old and valuable public servants.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman may be quite sure——

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We cannot be sure. If the offices that men hold are swept away, and the Act puts these offices out of existence, we want to know whether men who have been a long time in the service are going to be dropped out ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Without knowing a word about it, I can assure my hon. friend it is not the fact. It has been discussed for months past. I know that there are gentlemen applying for the position, because one of them came to me.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not know who the gentlemen are.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Nor do I.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The Act says that the government may appoint a chief inspector, with authority, &c. That provision was allowed to remain in the law, while the government in 1902, took to itself power to appoint another officer who should be called 'chief post office superintendent.' If the intention is that the chief inspector, if there is only one—I do not know anything about the persons who are holding the offices, I have no interest in them—if it is the intention that the person who is holding the office should receive the new appointment, we could understand it. If, on the other hand, it is going to put the government in a position to call in a man from outside——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He must be ten years in the department.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He may be a new man.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—He may be a new man. I have not had time to study the Act since the Speaker called my attention to the Act of 1902, to see what it provides. The hon. Secretary of State says that a man must be ten years in the service. That would make it decidedly better, still not safe, because there are a great many men ten years in the service, and some one of these might be appointed, while the man who has been chief inspector and a most deserving man might be superannuated and left out.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Does the hon. gentleman really think that if some one was hurt by this Bill we would not have heard a complaint or a howl ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We do not know. The Bill comes to us to-day.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—But it has passed the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will take one stage of the Bill and make some inquiries. I observe there is no chief inspector mentioned in the Post Office Guide. They are called post office inspectors there.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am sure, if the Secretary of State does not himself complain, we have no right to make any complaint on his behalf, but this is an illustration of how my hon. friend is treated by his colleagues. Should not the Postmaster General have given my hon. friend a brief to explain the matter to this House ? The hon. leader of the Senate comes to this House depending on the post office directory.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I have made a suggestion privately, which I should repeat publicly. We see in the Commons that every time something pertaining to the department arises the deputy minister appears in the chamber to give his minister information. This is general legislation that has been initiated in the other House, which the minister of the department is more cognizant of than the minister in this chamber, and yet he needs the assistance of his deputy by his side all the time. If the deputy minister is required in the House of Commons to remain by his minister who initiates a Bill, a fortiori, should we not have every time, when a Bill affects a department, the deputy minister of that department to assist the minister here ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am not surprised at my hon. friend not having information. It would be surprising of he should have it. But the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from de Lorimier is to the point. Why is there not somebody here to give the information when we require it ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—We may be disposed to suggest amendments, which if the proper officer was here to make explanations might not be persisted in.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The complaint made by the hon. gentleman is one I have spoken of many times. In the Commons the deputy is sitting alongside the Speaker, and furnishes the information required. I never introduced a government Bill in this House that I had not the government official sitting by the table there, so that when questions were asked I would go to him, and if the hon. Secretary of State would follow the same course it would save trouble.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Post Office Department is a department I am not familiar with. We can let the measure stand till another stage.

On clause 5,

5. Whenever a year's revenue of a post office reaches five hundred thousand dollars, the Governor in Council may by promotion appoint to that post office, at a salary of one thousand eight hundred dollars a year, a person to be designated a superintendent, whose duty shall be such as is from time to time determined by the Postmaster General; and no person shall be eligible for such promotion unless he has been a clerk in a city post office for at least five years.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This is a provision which seems to require explanation. I know that attention was called to it by the hon. leader of the opposition when the Bill was at an earlier stage. Suppose you have a competent postmaster in charge of a city post office. This applies really only to Toronto and Montreal. Here you have the postmaster at Montreal and the postmaster at Toronto receiving salaries of $4,000, and you put in an $1,800 officer, apparently to superintend those postmasters. If he is not to be superior to the postmaster, why should he be called superintendent? That is a matter calling for explanation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The post office business in Montreal and Toronto has increased so enormously that they are establishing sub-offices and introducing the tube system, which exists in New York and London. The proposal in Toronto was to establish an office at the Union station, and then the letters which had been sorted for the different sub-post offices in the city of Toronto would be sent in these tubes like a shot to the particular branch that they were intended for, and the same in the city of Montreal. The Postmaster General can scarcely be charged with extravagance. I am always glad to see a respectable sum paid in the Post Office Department, because if there has been any weakness in the government, I think it is in the matter of the poor pay that the post office clerks receive, and I am glad to see a man get a good living in the Post Office Department.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The only reason that I can see for this is that instead of appointing inspectors under the fifth clause, you appoint superintendents. Under the first clause you substitute the words 'chief post office superintendent' exclusively.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Those two appointments have no connection.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand that. There is a chief post office superintendent now, and he has been appointed, Mr. George Ross. The date of his appointment was 1st July, 1902. If they have the power to appoint under this a chief post office superintendent, the office has been already filled; and in the fifth clause, as I have already pointed out, the chief post office superintendent is to take the place of the chief inspector, and the 5th clause then gives the power to appoint a superintendent at $1,800, and if the information the hon. gentleman gave the other night be correct, as pointed out by the Speaker, he would dominate the postmaster who receives a salary of $4,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I may be entirely wrong in that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Perhaps we had better report the Bill and get the information at the third reading.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I want to point out in this connection that it appears, in 1902, parliament gave power to the government to appoint a chief post office superintendent instead of a chief inspector, and still the duties of that officer were not clearly or fully defined. For instance, with regard to these proceedings that were to be taken under section 15, it was still necessary they should be taken by the chief inspector. Also that the chief superintendent who was appointed a couple of years ago would not really be able during that period to perform his functions, because it was only the chief inspector who could.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I know Mr. Ross has been down to Halifax.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—What I want to point out is how lame the law has been left for a period of two years, inasmuch as taking section 15, which is still the law, it was only a chief inspector that could be sent to make the inquiry. Although we created the office of chief superintendent, we did not give that official power to do this, and the department has been left crippled in that way during that time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no crippling about it. He performed the duties.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If so he did it illegally.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Admitting that, who is going to inquire about it ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not see why the hon. gentleman from Marshfield should feel so strongly about this. If he would turn to section 9 of the Act of 1902 he would find that it provides what the duties of the official should be. Mr. Ross came to Halifax last fall and they were introducing a new system of collecting mails, using carts and also these large boxes for holding newspapers. so that the people do not have to carry newspapers to the post office. He spent some time there instructing the staff in the way things should be done. My hon. friend need not worry ; he has had plenty to do and power to do it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—He has been drawing his salary all right. But if he found a serious defalcation had occurred in one of the offices and it was necessary to institute an inquiry and make application to a court and he would turn to the Postal Service Act to find his authority. I suppose he would expect to find it in section 15, and there it is provided that a chief inspector should make the inquiry, but he is not a chief inspector ; he is chief superintendent. I doubt very much whether he would have authority to put that section 15 into operation at all.

Hon. Mr. POWER—All he would have to do is to call on the post office inspector of the province, whose office is in the building, to take the necessary steps.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Would the inspector of a province be the chief inspector ? If I read section 15 right it is only the chief inspector who could make this inquiry. The inspector of the province would have no more power to do it than any man of the street.

Hon. Mr. POWER—They do it all the time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—A number of superintendents have been appointed but I do not find any of them designated chief superintendent. A superintendent was appointed in 1897 in each of the provinces at a salary of $1,600 a year.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But not one of them could perform the functions of chief inspector under section 15.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What puzzles me is to know why there is this change in the law, except to repeal it and give power to do that which has been already done.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 6,

6. Notwithstanding anything in section 6 of chapter 28 of the statutes of 1902, as amended by section 3, chapter 49 of the statutes of 1903, the election provided for by the said section 6 of chapter 28 may be exercised at any time within three months after the passing of this Act.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have an idea what this means, but I should very much prefer to hear it explained from the government benches.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the hon. gentleman has taken the trouble to look it up, I have not had time to do so. I do not profess to know anything about this Bill and if hon. gentlemen prefer, I will move that the committee rise and let it stand until to-morrow. I looked upon this Bill as dealing with a domestic matter in the Post Office Department. I felt perfect confidence in the Postmaster General, and thought we could take the Bill on trust. Nobody outside of the department takes any interest in it so long as letters are promptly delivered and at lower cost. I do not profess to know anything about the details of the Post Office Department. I know it is under the best head that ever controlled the department. It has about doubled in every way since 1896.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am very glad to know that the hon. gentleman has such unbounded confidence in the Postmaster General, whom he designates as the best man that ever controlled the post offices. There may be a difference of opinion on that. If I were to say there never was a Postmaster General who assumed so much and deserved so little, I would be nearer the truth, and could prove it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I know he would not err in the direction of extravagance. I prefer that the committee should rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto), from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill, and asked leave to sit again.

PAYMENT OF RAILWAY SUBSIDIES BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (157) An Act respecting the payment of certain Railway Subsidies. He said: This Bill provides for the payment of those particular subsidies that involved a greater cost than fifteen thousand dollars per mile for construction. As hon. gentlemen know, the usual subsidy is $3,200, except where the cost of the road is in excess of $15,000, and then the subsidy may be increased in the proportion fixed by the statute up to $6,400. Heretofore the practice has been to pay only the $3,200, and wait until the road was finished before any additional amount was paid over to the contractors. The contractors have felt that this was unfair; that they have not been able to finance the building of a road as readily as they could do if they had some idea whether they were to get an increased subsidy over the $3,200. This Bill provides that when the plans and surveys have been completed, if a certificate is furnished by the engineer in charge, which has to be approved by the chief engineer of the department, that the road will cost over $15,000 per mile, say $18,000, then the subsidy that would be paid over in the event of $18,000 per mile being the cost of the road shall be considered, and that 60 per cent of the excess shall be paid during the progress estimates, the balance, 40 per cent, being retained until the road is completed and delivered over. It is simply for the purpose of enabling the contractor to finance better.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The whole of the $3,200 will be paid.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And 60 per cent of the excess.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, reserving 40 per cent to see that no loss will be sustained.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think this is a most dangerous Bill, and I will give an illustration which I think will impress itself on the hon. Secretary of State with regard to this very matter. When parliament authorized the construction of 44 miles of railway between Charlottetown and Murray Harbour, in Prince Edward Island, the Minister of Railways for the time being gravely announced in parliament that the surveys were completed, and ample estimates made, and the cost of the road would be $480,000. A return was brought down here the other day in answer to a motion of mine, which shows that between cash already paid up to April last, and estimates for the completion of the road, which is now almost finished, the actual cost of constructing the 44 miles is $1,126,000, or more than double the estimate prepared by the government engineers and submitted by the Minister of Railways to parliament.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—What relation has that to this Bill?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It impugns the accuracy of the estimates.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The accuracy was on the right side; there could be no injury there.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In that case we had estimates submitted gravely and in good faith, I presume, by the government engineers, that this road was to cost only $480,000, while now we have a statement brought down that the actual cost has gone up to $1,126,000. I imagine it would be the easiest thing in the world for a railway that wants to get a sum in excess of $3,200 to get estimates by engineers that the road will cost more than $15,000 per mile. There is no trouble in the world. With regard to the bridge over the Hillsborough river, an estimate was made that it would cost $800,000. That was stated on the reports of engineers in the employ of the government of Canada. The same return to which I have referred shows what a dangerous thing we are doing when we allow a payment in excess of $3,200 a mile to be made on estimates submitted by engineers—I presume engineers, too, in the employ of the company that is getting the subsidy ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am very much surprised at my hon. friend's remarks; he has forgotten that these roads to which subsidies are to be paid are to be built by private companies who have some interest in keeping down expenses, while the line in Prince Edward Island to which the hon. gentleman refers is built by the government. Does he not know the numbers of hangers-on they must provide for, particularly just on the eve of an election ? Why should he be surprised that the actual cost is more than the estimae ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman has been long enough a minister of the Crown to know such things.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is no argument; it is a burlesque on the word, but nothing of the kind ever occurred when I was in the government. What roads did we build ? Both the governments built some portions of the Intercolonial Railway, as well as of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Did not the Mackenzie government complete those sections ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, the Canadian Pacific Railway completed them.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The government gave them away.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, they did, however, complete the Intercolonial Railway. It is strange that my hon. friend should be surprised at the cost of the Murray Harbour branch and the Hillsborough bridge exceeding the estimates, and from the manner in which the hon. Secretary of State accepts my statement he is equally surprised that my hon. friend should consider it strange. If they complete the work without spending another million, it will be an occasion for more surprise.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The company getting this subsidy will have an interest in swelling their estimates, and presenting them to the government to enable them to draw this increased amount of subsidy, and whenever they would demand that increase, there is no question they would be able to get engineers to prove that the road was very expensive.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The great protection is that the certificate is not to be furnished by the company's engineer or on a contractor's estimate. but on the report of the chief engineer of the government railways. It happens to be the same official who occupied that position for a number of years under the able administration of the government which preceded this, and which I understand now for the first time had no hangers-on. It seems to me the estimate must be correct. The criticism has failed to name any hangers-on under the present government ; the former hangers-on I suppose were lopped off.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Ever since I have been a member of this House whenever a question of bounties to railways has come up I have been opposed to them. It is a vicious principle. In a country such as this, if a railway is required, and there is trade enough to warrant the building of it, there is enterprise enough to undertake the work without calling on the parliament of Canada for aid. It was well enough perhaps at the outset of confederation, when little was known about the resources of the country, to start one or two roads in that way, but to continue that up to the present time was a great mistake not only on the part of this government. but on the part of the one that preceded it. The political party controlling the government of the day were the parties who received the principal advantage of those railways. I believe they are used, in a great measure, for the purpose of influencing the electors in favour of the government of the day. and, entertaining that belief. I have opposed them at all time since I have had a vote in this parliament, and I must admit I have generally stood alone. On several occasions I had the support of two or three gentlemen who coincided with me in that view. Unfortunately they have taken their departure for a better world.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—They were too good for this world.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I hope that was the case. Therefore I am just as much opposed to the increase of these subsidies as I was to the original grant, and if I had any support in this matter I should vote against the subsidy entirely.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman must be satisfied ; we are moving towards a better order of things, because since the present government came into power it has inaugurated, to a considerable extent, a new policy, guaranteeing the bonds of railway companies, instead of giving them subsidies. That was done in the previous sessions, and on a very large scale last session, I think with the approval of the hon. gentleman. So that what the hon. gentleman could not persuade his friends to do he has seen his opponents do since 1896.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—You may guarantee bonds to such an extent that it would be better to build the road at once.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—It strikes me the statement made by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield is a strange one. It appears there is a large amount of public money being expended in Prince Edward Island. Does the hon. gentleman take exception to that? Does he not believe that the road and bridge ought to be constructed, and when we find that this road must be approved by the Deputy Minister of Railways or the Chief Engineer, is not that a sufficient guarantee that the money will be properly expended ? The contractors apparently cannot finance the construction of a road unless they have a larger amount than $3,200 per mile. Is this the first time that a thing of that kind has occurred ? Will the hon. leader of the opposition pretend to say that he has not come to the rescue of companies to enable them to finance the construction of a road ? It has been a common occurrence in the past, and I am surprised now, when it is admitted on all hands that the construction of railways has facilitated the improvement and development of the country, that there are gentlemen in this House who haggle and complain about the large cost of a railway, even when the money is being expended to the advantage and for the benefit of their own province. Unless they wish to retard the progress of the business in the House, it would seem to me they are finding fault merely for the sake of finding fault.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—The hon. gentleman does not understand the position in the province from which I come. The road being constructed there will be the property of the government ; it is not a private venture.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Is it necessary or is it not ?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I)—The railroad which is being built in Prince Edward Island is the property of the government. The greater part of that road was built by the people of Prince Edward Island, before confederation, and the cost of it was taken out of the terms which the government of Prince Edward Island was to receive from the Dominion of Canada and contributed by the people of Prince Edward Island themselves. There is no taunt to be thrown out by hon. gentlemen from any other provinces against the people of Prince Edward Island on account of the railway being constructed there.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman from Elgin (Hon. Mr. Wilson) can miss a point in a discussion with as great facility as any gentleman I ever heard speak in this House ; so much so that he misses it very much oftener than he strikes it. I was not alleging that there had been extravagance in the building of that road in Prince Edward Island. What I did point out was the fallaciousness of the estimates; that the estimates of cost which were submited have been more than doubled in the construction, although those estimates had been submitted to parliament with all seriousness by the government at the time. I am not, however, discussing the question of extravagance in connection with the construction of the road. That may have occurred ; I have no doubt it did occur. If I had time I think I could show the House that there has been a great waste of money in the construction of that railway and bridge in Prince dward Island. I may tell my hon. friend, whatever his rule may be in that matter, I am just as much opposed to waste in the public expenditure, if it occurs in my own province as if it occurred in any other part of Canada

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I am not surprised at either of the hon. gentlemen from the island feeling that I have said something to cause them irritation. Why should they not be irritated ? They have been pursuing a certain line, which I am satisfied the citizens of that island would not approve of. Let them go down there and explain on the platform the course they are taking here, and I do not think the people of the island will feel very grateful to them for the way they are haggling over the amount that is being expended for the construction of the railroad and bridge. The hon. gentleman from Marshfield says I more frequently miss a point than hit it. It is easy for him to make that remark. I might do the same, speaking of him, but it would not be an argument. It would be merely empty words, and therefore no argument coming from him or anybody else. I am satisfied the proposition offered in this Bill is a correct one. It is in the interest not only of the construction of railways, but of the country, or we would not have the Bill before us at the present time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman's accusations against the representatives of Prince Edward Island is easily explained by his speech. Let them go down and explain on the platform, he says, and what will the effect be ? The whole speech of the hon. gentleman is intended to show the people of Prince Edward Island that two of the senators from the island are not looking after their interest. The very charge the hon. gentleman makes against us he has turned against himself by his own utterances. He stated a few moments ago that I had in the past supported subsidies for railroads. That is quite true. The hon. gentleman himself, when he and I had the honour of sitting in the House of Commons together, and the party to which he belonged, opposed that principle to the uttermost extent. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman did personally or not, but I know that bright and shining light, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, denounced it as robbery of the very worst kind, and he said those subsidies were granted for no other purpose than to assist in carrying the elections. He ridiculed them with all the power he possesses, and used all the adjectives he is so capable of using in denouncing the whole thing as a piece of robbery, particularly in the case of short lines ; and yet since these gentlemen have been in power they have subsidized a number of railways, one of them half a mile in length, and in the Subsidy Bill now before the other House, they are subsidizing a road three miles in length, and are duplicating subsidies to some roads—aiding them to the extent of 100 per cent above the aid we proposed. That is the difference between them and their predecessors. They condemned the principle when it was inaugurated by the Conservative government, and now that they are in power themselves, are doubling the iniquity, as they called it, of granting aid to railways; yet one of these gentlemen reads us a lecture because we criticise their conduct. The hon. gentleman himself is too honest and straightforward, but fails when he attempts to make a political point.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (148) An Act to amend the Dominion Elections Act. He said : This Bill diminishes the number of electoral districts in which the returning officer has the right to fix the nomination day. The Governor General fixes one day for the whole Dominion. Then there are certain exceptions. There are three exceptions in British Columbia. There were two in Ontario, and they are abolished, and three in Quebec.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think there was only one in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. Algoma. In British Columbia there are three, but it is owing to the fact that there is an additional constituency added. Burrard has been divided.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In what position will the Yukon Territory be ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They elect a member.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Will the election there come off the same date and the same day as the general election ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I think not.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is not provided to be held over ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—There was a separate Act passed for that ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is it provided for in that Bill ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I could not say. The election in the Yukon Territory costs about forty thousand dollars. We disfranchised a good deal of the district. It would have cost about a hundred thousand dollars if it had gone on, so we just took an area around Dawson, and it cost forty thousand dollars.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not as large as some districts in British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. Wherever they heard there were three or four hundred miners away up on the Mackenzie river, they were sending out deputy returning officers, and such a thing was monstrous. As it was, it cost more than all the elections in New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I want to call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to the fact that there is no occasion in the world for not having those elections on the same day as the other elections in other parts of the Dominion of Canada. It is unfair to whichever party is the weakest in the Dominion of Canada. Supposing the present government have a very small vote in Ontario and the other provinces, then those delayed constituencies hearing the result of the elections, vote with the strongest party, and that would affect both parties.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We could not possibly hold the elections on the same day in all those places.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The notices could be sent three or four days earlier to Cariboo and those places. There is a mail every week. Subclause 2 of the Bill says :

2. At every general election he shall fix one and the same day for the nomination of candidates in all the electoral districts, except in the electoral districts of Chicoutimi and Saguenay and Gaspé, in the province of Quebec, and of Comox-Atlin, Kootenay and Yale-Cariboo, in the province of British Columbia.

Then section 29 reads as follows :—

29. In the electoral districts of Chicoutimi and Saguenay and Gaspé, in the province of Quebec, and of Comox-Atlin, Kootenay and Yale-Cariboo, in the province of British Columbia, the returning officers shall fix the day for the nomination of candidates, and also the day and places for holding the polls ; the nomination in the said electoral districts shall take place not less than eight days after the proclamation hereinbefore required has been posted up,—neither the last day of posting it up nor the day of nomination being reckoned ; and the day for holding the polls shall be at as early a date as possible, but not less than seven days after nomination, and at a general election it shall, if posible, be the same day as that fixed by the Governor in Council for the other electoral districts, but not sooner.

There is a contradiction there.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is the old statute.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It excepts them from holding the election on the same day, and then it says if possible they shall be held on the same day. There is no occasion for holding elections on different days.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I must differ from my hon. friend. I know that in Burrard it was absolutely impossible to hold them for three months, because in November and December parties have to travel on snowshoes and dog-sleighs.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

On clause 1,

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend informed us on the introduction of the Bill that there were two less in the number of constituencies held over after the date of the general election than there were before.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I think not.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Algoma.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It will be the same number, because there is one more in British Columbia. Burrard has been divided. There was only one in British Columbia, and it has been divided, one in Ontario—practically the number is the same.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I was going to say to my hon. friend from Victoria that I did not doubt at all if he would push the government a little on the matter they would knock out the whole of them. It is well understood in Canada that the party that wins in the general contest has a better chance in these deferred contests than the defeated party.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That might help the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I can therefore understand my hon. friend's desire to reduce the number in the waning hopes of the government, and I have no doubt if my hon. friend would push the matter they would knock the whole of them out, because they would feel that it would be better for their party not to have the elections deferred.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to have seen an amendment in this Bill. Without interfering at all with the reasons given by the hon. Secretary of State for the delay in holding the elections, I think that a provision might be made by which the fears that have been expressed by my hon. friend from Victoria and emphasized by the hon. gentleman might have been avoided. If it be necessary for a delay of a month or two months to hold the elections in the outlying districts, provision might have been made in the issue of the proclamation for holding the elections providing for a time at which the election should be held in Chicoutimi, and also in Burrard and the other outlying districts to which he has referred. Then the date of the nomination might be fixed by the government, giving ample time to the returning officer to send his officers into these localities, and, then, a certain time after that for holding the elections. That would remove the power from the returning officer to be used by the government to fix the dates to suit the convenience of the government, by which they would expect to derive benefit from it. I am not going to refer to what has taken place at past elections. We do know what took place in reference to the interference of members of the government with the election in one of these districts, and we also know one of the results.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Nipissing.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I merely refer to the principle that I think might have been adopted, which would have avoided a repetition of the case to which I have called attention, and it would prevent the use of the power given to returning officers in these districts to manipulate time, either from his own party standpoint, or at the instance of his party, or at the instance of other parties representing that particular district, or at the instance of the government themselves, no matter what government is in power. Whether that has ever suggested itself to the Secretary of State or any of the members of the government, I do not know. If we had time enough to consider this question, I should like to have moved an amendment in reference to these particular districts, in the line I have indicated. I think the hon. Secretary of State would not disagree with that, if he could get his colleagues to accept the principle.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The returning officers can be required now to carry out the very suggestion my hon. friend makes. He is required to hold the elections at the earliest possible time. That is the only control. In some of those constituencies it depends entirely on the time of year the elections are held. If it happened to be in the summer season, the time would not be one-third of what it would be in winter. In Burrard it took nearly three months, because the returning officers had to go in dog-trains, and even then the elections were not correctly held, and in some places they were polling ten days after the polls were closed in other parts. You cannot make arrangements for the distant points. The returning officer is bound to use all possible despatch, and if he can only hold the election for such out of the way constituencies on the day the other elections were held, it would be his duty to do so.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It would be his duty to do so. I think it would be his duty to have the nomination on the same day, and the writs would be sent earlier so that he would have time to issue proclamations for earlier the same day in all those districts. He may have more time for the return of the writ, but the polling day should be the same in all of the districts.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As soon as the parliament is dissolved, the writs issue on the same day, and they go out to every constituency. The only control we have is by requiring the return within a certain day. If you thought it was possible for the returning officer in Gaspé to have his election within a month, you could make the writ returnable within a month. It would depend entirely on the season of the year, whether the distant places were accessible.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is quite true, but to send out the information and the writs for those outlying districts before the others would inform the electors when an election was going to take place. The government is not very likely to do that, because very often governments themselves do not know, but the issue of the writs could be done on one day, and at the same time you could fix the date of the elections in the different constituencies. The hon. gentleman says you could not do that on account of the period in which the election was to be had. The hon. gentleman told us a few moments ago that he had had a great deal of experience. I know he has, and that experience would suggest to him what time he could give for Burrard, which is the most extensive constituency in the country, and also for the others. If it were in the winter he would require the three months to which he has called attention. If it were in the summer it would only require about thirty days. We who have had some experience in elections and with some returning officers, know that if it was left in their hands to hold the election at the earliest possible moment, it would depend on the prejudices of the returning officer, and the suggestions made by him, or by the party to which he belongs as to what he would consider to be the earliest possible moment. He could delay it a month just as well as he could delay it three days, which is a stronger reason for adopting the suggestion which I have made. It would work favorably for both parties, not against one more than another. I have thrown out the hint, but I do not suppose, at this period of the session, it will be accepted. All the charges against both governments about holding elections off at a period when they could best manipulate constituencies, particularly in lumbering districts, where delay can be used to the advantage of the party in power, or vice versa, as the case may be——

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Does the hon. gentleman admit that his party drew some advantage from such facilities ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, I do not admit anything of the kind. I said we were charged with it, but I know the other party has.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman knows more about others than about himself, or at least says he does.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman knows more than he will admit.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We obstructed last night, but we are rushing to-night.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

BOUNTIES ON STEEL AND IRON BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (165) An Act to amend chapter 68 of the statutes of 1903, respecting the bounties on steel and iron. He said : This is a small Bill of five lines for the purpose of making clear what parliament intended, by adding after the words 'for use' the words 'or when used.'

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Will this not make the provision retroactive a little ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is nothing said about its being retroactive.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes, it will be retroactive, because it is to be held as if it was part of the original Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is quite true.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It will not affect transactions which have taken place in the past, but it will operate in this way : If an article is not bought for the purpose of being used in any manufacture, but is afterwards used for the purpose, it will operate.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What has arisen to necessitate the addition of these words ? Has it been an objection by the Auditor General ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Some objection has been offered to it.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—I think I could explain. The Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company are coal-raisers and producers as well as manufacturers of steel. In their case, if they manufactured steel, and it was used by the coal company they could not make the application for the bounty, and the same way in making spikes. It is a case in point with the Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, that when an article is used in the coal company, which is a different concern altogether, although under the one company they could not get the bounty.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

SATURDAY SITTING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that when the House adjourns it do stand adjourned until Saturday, and that there be two distinct sittings of the House on that day, the first from eleven o'clock to one o'clock, and the second from three o'clock, and that each sitting be deemed a separate sitting of the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will it be necessary to sit to-morrow (Saturday) evening ? It has not been usual ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it will not be necessary.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (167) An Act to provide for the payment of bounties on crude petroleum from Canadian wells.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (168) An Act to amend the Inland Revenue Act.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is that a Bill regulating the sale of tobacco ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is with reference to the forfeiting of licenses.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It does not mention tobacco, but that it what it is intended for.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, that the license be forfeited in case of sale or assignment of goods under restrictive conditions.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned until eleven a.m. to-morrow.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Saturday, August 6, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock a.m.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (168) An Act to amend the Inland Revenue Act. He said : You probably are aware that a tobacco trust has for some years been in existence in the United States, and has absorbed the trade, and fixed prices in that country. A few years ago they obtained a charter to carry on business here, and gradually, by the same methods as they had pursued in the United States, they have absorbed 80 per cent of the trade in Canada. Among other things they discriminate against Canadian leaf, favouring the foreign article.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has the hon. gentleman any authority for the statement he has made, that this tobacco trust has absorbed 80 per cent of the Canadian establishments ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have been told so by the minister, and I have sent for Judge MacTavish's report, which may possibly give us some information. About six or eight months ago, on representations made to the government, they issued a commission to Judge MacTavish to make a report on the subject, and his report was that it was a trust which was gradually absorbing the whole tobacco trade of the country, and there has been a very general complaint from all sections from those outside of it. The trust has a very large capital, and from the possession of that capital, and the opportunities they have over ordinary dealers, they have been able to control a larger portion of the trade.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is it the intention of this Bill to compel people to buy tobacco grown in this country ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. This concern has roped in a very large clientele. They attached a condition to those with whom they deal, that they must not deal with any one else ; that they must give their orders entirely to this concern. We all know very well that a large concern having once established a clientele of the majority of dealers, probably not many of them have bank accommodation, and consequently, find it a convenience to deal with a large house that is able to give them long credits, and so other persons who are in the trade are at a disadvantage for the reason the larger concern attaches to every sale they make the condition that the dealer must not buy elsewhere.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—And under this Bill the retailer can buy where he likes—that is the intention ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The intention is to give freedom of purchase. The only way to reach a party who has succeeded in obtaining that control in trade is by withholding a license, unless they deal as other concerns deal—unless they removed from the agreement with the persons who purchase from them this condition that they must only buy from this particular house. Once a man begins to deal with them he is in their debt, and is powerless to go elsewhere. At all events, there is that advantage to him personally, that he gets some advantage, but he is bound to buy only from that particular house. The object is to remove that restriction, which is merely a restriction of trade. This Bill authorizes the Minister of Inland Revenue to withhold a license from any firm that takes that position. That is the whole object of the Bill. I am told that in the cigarette trade the combine have certainly over 80 per cent of the business of the country.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—This Bill applies, I understand it, to transactions between the company and parties whom they force to accept their goods on that condition. What I want to know from the hon. Secretary of State is this : will this Bill apply to men or dealers who voluntarily enter into a contract with the company ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It applies only to the American Tobacco Company.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is not the point on which I want an explanation. I understand the Bill deals rightly, and penalizes rightly a company which forces dealers to buy from them alone. That is proper in this trade or any other trade. Will this Bill affect me if I voluntarily enter into a contract with the company to sell their goods only ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The party attacked is the tobacco trust, not the people who buy from them. The party who makes this contract, the company which insists when it sells an invoice of goods that the party buying must not purchase that kind of goods anywhere else ; it only affects the American Tobacco Company.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If I contract with the company that if they will sell their goods to me, I will sell no other goods of the kind, would this Bill affect me? Will it deprive me of the right of making a contract of that kind with the company ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, not the purchaser.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—It will deprive the company of making such a contract and will have the same effect.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It applies only to the company that sells.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This does not, on the face of it, declare that it is confined to tobacco. It applies to every business that is carried on under a license from the Department of Inland Revenue. If the principle be good, then it should apply to every trade as well as to the tobacco trade. In the state of Massachusetts there is a law of a somewhat similar character, but it applies to all business. Now, if this Bill becomes law, it prevents a person from making a bargain to deal in an article of one manufactory exclusively under contract with any manufacturing company, and any violation of it will entail the cancellation of the license. Is not that the purport of the law ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, but the law is intended to apply to only one individual case.

Hon. Sir MACKNZIE BOWELL—Then why not say so ? It would apply to all distillers and brewers as the Bill stands.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—A denial does not change the law. The provisions of this Bill applies to any and all business carried on under license from the Inland Revenue Department. Now the same mode of doing business is carried on by brewers and distillers who will be affected by this Bill. They give a certain discount to those who will sell their goods exclusively. To prevent a thing of that kind being done, would be a direct interference and restriction of trade. Will this Bill affect a verbal agreement to the same effect as the written contract to which the hon. gentleman refers ? This law will not prevent that. It will be simply a question of honour between the manufacturer and the dealer. If the dealer did not carry out the understanding, the manufacturer would not give him the advantages promised. I believe this question has been before the courts, and the decision is, that contracts of this character are not in restraint of trade under the law. Judge MacTavish, I understand, has decided in the same way although he makes certain suggestions on the question; so that, really I cannot look upon this kind of legislation as other than a direct interference with, and restriction of the trade of the country. I am as much opposed to what are termed monopolies which control and injure other industries and raise the price to the consumer as anybody, but this is the very contrary. Instead of raising the price of the article to the consumer, a general law affecting all trades, and condition of business, I am not so sure that it has the opposite effect. If this Bill were made general in its provisions we might not adopt it with safety, because that would be legislation on a general principle. Are not the facts as shown by the last census return in direct contradiction to the statement of the hon. Secretary of State, that this tobacco trust, as it is termed, has absorbed 80 per cent of the trade ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The cigarette trade, not the general tobacco trade.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the census of 1891 will show there were about ten manufacturing establishments in the country at that time, and the census of 1901 shows there were twenty-eight, so this tobacco trust cannot have had much effect in restricting the manufacture of tobacco. However, we can deal better with the details of the Bill, in committee.

The motion was agreed to and the Bill was read the second time.

BOUNTIES ON CRUDE PETROLEUM BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (167) An Act to provide for the payment of bounties on Crude Petroleum from Canadian Wells. He said: As hon. gentlemen are aware, changes were made in the tariff from five cents per gallon to two and one-half cents per gallon. The industry in this country is confined to only a few localities, and those engaged in the industry had always opposed the reduction of the tariff on coal oil. The reduction was made on the demand of the consumers, and the producers claim that they ought to be protected as well as any other industry. Therefore there was no way of cutting down the price of coal oil, and this device has been adopted as doing the least injury to any industry, giving a bounty to the producers, inasmuch as they lose the benefit of two and one-half cents duty on each gallon of petroleum. The bounty is a cent and one-half on the imperial gallon.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is a further extension of what is termed protection under the bounty system.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Helping Canadian industries.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Or in other words, to use the hon. gentleman's own language in the past, it is taxing those who do not use the article, for the benefit of the producers—is that it ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It would be interesting to know when my hon. friend's conversion took place ; whether it was of the St. Paul character, sudden. or the result of long reflection ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—There has been no public announcement.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then it has been gradual.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—Coercion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman would express his honest convictions, I do not think he would move a Bill of this kind. I have been in favour of encouraging certain industries by giving bounties, but my hon. friend and his colleagues have out-heroded Herod on this question, and carried it to such an extent that they are imposing a system of protection of a much worse character than if it were imposed directly. If you put a direct tax on this oil, then the parties who use it would pay the taxes. Under this system those who pay for gas or electric light have to pay also for the production of the cheaper kind of oil that is used by those who have not to pay for gas or electricity. That is the real object of this Bill. I am rather surprised at the sudden transformation that has taken place on this and other questions since the treasury has been in the hands of the present government. No words can be found in the English language stronger than those which have been used by the present Secretary of State in condemnation of this form of protection.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—It is evolution.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There may be special cases in which bounties would be perfectly justified without having the effect to which I have called attention, but I am speaking of the principle generally. My hon. friend has been one of the most violent opponents of the bounty system. I do not know what will come next. If there is anything his party have condemned when in opposition, I expect to have it produced in the shape of a Bill of the most arbitrary character at the earliest possible moment.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—While I admit that my hon. friend has had a very extended experience in Canada, after all I can hardly endorse fully his views on this subject, for this simple reason : The government has a surplus, and there is no way in which they can more judiciously spend a portion of it than in encouraging the production and sale at a low price of such necessities as coal oil. My hon. friend says that those who pay for gas and electric lights in their houses will have to contribute towards the production of coal oil through this bounty. If there is any commendable feature about it, it is that feature. My hon. friend can afford to have electric light in his house and he can afford to contribute his mite towards giving the poor man cheaper coal oil. I entirely approve of assisting in the development of home industries of this kind. If we leave our producers of petroleum open to competition from the United States they will soon be wiped out of existence. If our wells were tied up, and we were entirely at the mercy of the United States for this commodity, we do not know what price we might have to pay. The Standard Oil Company largely controls the oil interest, and they might extract from our people double what it will cost in this way to encourage the development of the oil industry in Canada. It would be wrong to allow these industries to be crushed out, and while I deplore the putting on of a heavy duty to keep them alive—because if we did that they would be sure to increase the price of oil—when the treasury can afford a small bounty to encourage the industry, and when the effect would be to cheapen oil to consumers in this country, I think it is a laudable, prudent and statesmanlike act. I commend the government for the course they are taking, and I think they are entitled to credit for it. My hon. friend says it is another form of protection. Whatever you may call it, in my humble opinion, it is a desirable course to take from every standpoint. You are legislating in the interest of the great mass of the people and in a way that must commend itself to every one.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend can turn a corner with about as great agility as anyone I have ever met with. My hon. friend is on record hundreds—I would probably be right in saying thousands of times in saying that protection in every form is legalized robbery. Now he says the protection in this Bill, and it is protection to the very core, is wise and statesmanlike legislation.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I never condemned granting a bounty to a home product.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State how many oil wells are in operation to-day? I am informed that the Standard Oil Company practically own all the oil wells in the Dominion. If so why should we pay a bounty of one cent and one-half on each gallon they produce, while at the same time reducing the duty by two and one-half cents? I may mention also that since the reduction in the duty, there has been no change in the price of oil in the country. Why? Because the Standard Oil Company has a monopoly of the oil sold in Canada, and of the Canadian oil wells. Before this Bill is read the second time, I should like to know from the hon. Secretary of State if what I have heard is correct, that the Standard Oil Company practically own all the oil wells in Canada?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman from Lauzon has been misinformed when he states that the Standard Oil Company control a majority of the oil wells in Canada. They own a certain number indirectly, but if I am to judge by the vote taken among the well-owners of Petrolea district some time ago, on a question which interested the Standard Oil Company and in which they participated actively, the independent well-owners not only were a majority in number, but represented a larger area and a larger number of wells than the Standard Oil Company and their sympathizers. I think that answers the hon. gentleman's question.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He asked the information from the Secretary of State.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If the Secretary of State has any official information on the subject he will furnish it, but as I am somewhat familiar with the question, I thought I could give my hon. friend the benefit of my experience. With reference to the price, I know the Standard Oil Company do not market the principal part of the oil sold, in the city of Montreal. They may lead in certain oils, but illuminating oil is not controlled by them in Montreal. The independent companies have sold as much coal oil as the Standard Oil people, who are known in Montreal under the name of the Imperial Oil Company. The independent companies have a greater sale in Canada than the Standard Oil Company under its divers names. As to the price of oil, I will not be contradicted when I say that following the announcement that crude oil was to be admitted free of duty, refined oil was reduced, as the benefit of that reduction was given to the consumers by all the companies, the independent companies as well as the large United States corporation. At all events, that was the announcement through the press to the citizens of Montreal. I cannot speak for other parts of Canada.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—I am very much indebted to the hon. gentleman for the information he has given, but at the same time I would have preferred to have the information officially and from the hon. Secretary of State.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have no figures. Certainly, in making the change we did, it was at the instance of the Canadian producers. It was represented that if they did not receive that assistance, the Canadian oil wells would be practically closed, and those views were pressed very strongly by representatives of the counties of Lambton and Kent, where the oil region is. Hon. gentlemen who have read any of the local papers of that district will see that the farmers from time to time are discovering wells. Where none have been discovered before, they are being found now at a certain depth. It is an industry that is largely among the people ; there is no doubt about that. The Standard Oil Company will grasp all they can get. That is their policy, and it would be very much to be regretted if they were able to absorb the Canadian crude oil industry. It is hoped also that this may stimulate oil industries elsewhere. As hon. gentlemen are aware, even up on the Saskatchewan, there are parties now boring for coal oil and up north of Edmonton. I do not know whether they have succeeded to any extent. They have also discovered oil in New Brunswick, and this Bill will stimulate those efforts.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What about the Gaspé oils ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know. Although mentioning those, I do not attach any importance to them because they are entirely inprospecto. They may never be valuable, but it is just as well to encourage, if possible, an industry of that kind. In reference to the observations of my hon. friend, my views on the particular question have not undergone any change, if the conditions were such as I would have desired. When in 1896 the present government faced the conditions that existed, it would have been most improper for them to have swept away industries that have grown up in the preceding years, and it is not a sign of statesmanship at all to adhere to the opinions and views expressed years ago. Am I to be bound by the views I held 20 years ago or five years ago ? The conditions are changing more rapidly in our days than in former years. Did the world think any less of Sir Robert Field when he changed his views on that important question ? Mr. Gladstone entered public life as a strong High Church Conservative, a man who opposed home rule bitterly in his early years, and who changed his views, and they are now erecting monuments because he changed with the times.—and that is really the duty of a statesman, to recognize conditions and to change with the conditions. I am never ashamed to change my opinion. None of us are infallible. We gain experience every day, and that man is not fit to hold a position as administrator who says that I expressed such an opinion five years ago and I must adhere to it. It is sometimes wise to make a change.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The people are going to make a change.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think we have laid the foundation for Canada's prosperity so broad and satisfactory that even if a change does take place the progress of the country cannot be disturbed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has the hon. gentleman a recollection of any report having been made by the late Dr Dawson giving the result of his investigation as to the existence of oil, not on the Saskatchewan, but about Athabasca ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, no more than in a very general way.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 2,

2. The Governor in Council may authorize the payment out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of a bounty of one and one-half cent per imperial gallon on all crude petroleum produced from wells in Canada on and after the eighth day of June, one thousand nine hundred and four—the said bounty to be paid to the producer of the petroleum.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The total amount paid under this clause was between $175,000 and $200,000. It is impossible to make any absolutely correct estimates.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I want to call the attention of the hon. gentleman from Lauzon (Hon. Mr. Bolduc) to this matter. He said he understood all the oil wells in the western portion of Canada were owned by the Standard Oil Company. My hon. friend from de Lorimier pointed out that that was not the case, a statement which, I think, is quite correct, but I think my hon. friend from Lauzon has perhaps confounded the fact that the refineries in Pretrolia and the western section are mostly all owned by the Standard Oil Company, and consequently they control the price of the raw product that is owned by the independent producers, and that being the case they can control, and have controlled the price of coal oil. There is no mistake about that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I differ absolutely from my hon. friend. I know that the assertion that the Standard Oil Company own all the refineries is not correct. There are two refineries in Canada, one at Sarnia owned by the Standard Company and one at Petrolia owned by the Canada Oil Company, absolutely independent, and this Canada Oil Company has been fighting the Standard Oil Company.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I stand corrected. I am inclined to think the hon. gentleman is correct. I know they were acting in unison for some time, and at the same time they had been fighting each other.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—A sham fight.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am much obliged to my hon. friend for calling attention to it.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—It does not affect the price of oil ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, but you must bear in mind that, if a portion of the oil-producing wells in western Canada are owned by the Standard Oil Company, we are bonusing their product just as well as we are bonusing the product of the Canadians who produce it, and the greater the number of wells the Standard Oil Company succeed in getting possession of—and with their enormous wealth they are gradually absorbing them and no doubt will be enabled to absorb them all because I do not think the refinery to which my hon. friend has called attention, that is owned by the Canadian Company, have the wealth to withstand the onslaught of the Standard Oil Company if they think proper to make it ; and if they do not make it, it is because there is a tacit understanding between them to keep up the price. I do not think there can be a doubt about that, and it is a pity the Inland Revenue Department have not dealt with the Standard Oil Company as they propose to deal with the tobacco trust. I want to point out to the hon. gentleman from Wellington this fact, that if the government were to place crude oil upon the free list entirely, it would place the whole market in the hands of the Standard Oil Company. If you have direct and distinct free trade with the United States in any particular article, you place Canada in the same position as a state of the union so far as a trust affects it, because if the trust in the United States be sufficiently strong, and wealthy enough to control the trade of that country, they can also, under free trade, control it in Canada, unless you can establish here an industry with the same wealth and power that they have. The result is that you drive out of existence the manufacturers of Canada and you place Canada in the same position as the union, so far as a trust is concerned, plus the expense of freight in sending the article into Canada ; and in order to meet that you give to the producer one and a half cents per imperial gallon for all crude oil that is produced, and by that means the Standard Oil Company will get as much as the Canadian producer provided they pump as much of the oil. So that you are bonusing this hydra-headed monster that is controlling the oil wells of the whole country just as effectually and to the same extent that you are bonusing the Canadian producer.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I beg to differ from the hon. gentleman, and from the conclusions he draws from that legislation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to be convinced.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I shall try to convince the hon. gentleman. I doubt that the Standard Oil Company owns oil-producing lands to any extent in Canada, and I have reason to believe that all they have got in the way of control is through contracts with a number of well-owners to give them their crude oil at a certain rate. A large majority of the well-owners sell their crude oil either when the Standard Oil Company needs it or to the refinery in Petrolia. But the day the crude oil of the Standard Oil Company is admitted free—it has now under this law the right to do so—it would very quickly drop the purchase of Canadian oil, and as their refineries can get at very cheap rate the United States crude oil to our borders, a thing not to be objected to, because the production in Canada is much below the fifty per cent mark of what is used in the Dominion, we must of necessity rely upon United States crude oil. But if that bounty were not given, the Standard Oil Company, with its immense fleet of steamers would draw its crude oil exclusively from the United States, and the Canadian oil producers would be without a market for their product.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not want to be convinced of that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—So far my hon. friend admits the argument. This bounty has the effect of giving a help to the Canadian producer, and giving him a chance to sell a cheaper article to advantage, if the bounty is taken into account, so this bounty enables the government to put on the free list the crude oil. We are encouraging the maintaining and the pumping of those Canadian wells by the giving of that bounty, and through the giving of that bounty the country is getting richer by the fact of this Canadian production from its own land, and the users of coal oil, who are a very large class in this country, are getting their oil two and a half cents a gallon cheaper. We have been contending for a number of years in favour of cheaper oil. I have felt that the reduction which was made in 1897 of one cent was not sufficient, and the people of the province of Quebec thought they were entitled to cheaper oil. They are absolutely satisfied with the fact that under this legislation the duty has been cut down by fifty per cent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman made one great mistake. This Bill does not put crude oil on the free list. It does not refer to it at all.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No. I am arguing generally on the legislation of this session.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman argued that this Bill placed crude oil on the free list. Does not the hon. gentleman believe that the object could be accomplished much better by putting a direct tax on the crude oil which comes from the United States into Canada ? Of course it would. By placing the bounty on oil you assist the Canadian producer, there is no doubt about that, and also the Standard Oil Company in Canada and you leave them free——

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—There are Canadian producers selling to the Standard Oil Company.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If that be the case, and you give a bonus to the Canadian producers they can afford to sell the oil under the bounties they receive, to the Standard Oil refining Company, can they not ? But that is not the point. If you leave the law as it is you drive out of existence the Canadian oil producers in the western portion of Canada. That is, I think, admitted, and this Bill admits the fact, because in order to enable them to continue the production of the oil you bonus them to the extent of 1½ cents per imperial gallon. Suppose instead of giving them 1½ cents on the imperial gallon, you impose a duty of 1½ or 2 cents upon the importation of every gallon of oil produced in the United States, then they will have a direct protection and the general pocket would not be taxed to meet it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The consumer would then pay more for his refined oil.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not a bit of it. That does not follow at all. If you adopt that principle you had better produce the oil and distribute it free among the people upon the principle laid down by my hon. friend, that those who are able to light their houses with gas and have a little to spare might just as well devote it to lighting the houses of other people who are not so fortunate. How much does my hon. friend contribute in that direction from his own private purse? If he contributes it, it is because the law compels him to. It is not of his own generosity. I dare say he gives as much to the poor as anybody, but I question very much, if the question was put to him as to the price of oil, that he would give one cent for this reason, but he gives it because he has to give it. If he had to pay his share for the amount of oil that was consumed in the county of Wellington he would kick as hard against it as against some other matters.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I should like to say a word about a subject which should be discussed in this connection, which has not been referred to at all. The members of the House have been considering what the result of the bonus has been on the price of refined oil. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that it has a much wider bearing than that, for crude oil is used largely for manufacturing purposes, heating purposes, and so on. I remember a few years ago when the government of which the hon. leader of the opposition was a member raised the duty on crude oil. At that time the manufacturers were using a large quantity of crude oil. By raising the duty it practically gave the producers of crude oil a monopoly of the business and a great many using crude oil in the manufacturing of machinery had to abandon the use of petroleum and use coal, and it is claimed by manufacturers that this bounty will enable them to again start the use of crude oil for manufacturing and heating purposes. If that is the case, this Bill is in the right direction. I call attention to the fact that in the United States they are using crude oil on locomotives. A greater quantity of heat can be produced out of a ton of oil than out of the same weight of coal and railways are using the crude oil at a great many points for fuel. I know that manufacturers in Ontario have fully appreciated the bounty offered by the government on crude oil, claiming that it enables them to use crude oil again as they have done in the past. There can be no doubt at all about this huge monopoly in oil and I, along with the hon. leader of the opposition, would approve of the government taking power to license the sale of oil as they do with regard to the sale of tobacco. I think the time has come to consider the stand we should take in Canada, when we see the result of those immense monopolies and trusts in the United States where nearly everything there is money in to-day is governed by a trust. They are settling down in the States to the fact that something must be done to give the masses of the people some show for their money. These trusts are growing in numbers and power and it is the duty of the government of Canada to protect our country against such a danger to the state. We have it here to a certain extent, but not to the extent that they have it in the States.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does this Bill accomplish the object the hon. gentleman refers to ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It is in the right direction, because there is no monopoly at the present time in the exploration for crude oil, and every day we read of new oil fields being discovered and developed, and as these wells are found people will be encouraged to work them when they are going to get a bonus of one and a half cent a gallon on the oil produced. I think it is a move in the right direction, and certainly ought to meet the opproval of the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Let me congratulate the government on another conversion to the principle of protection. My hon. friend tells the committee that all the manufacturers are in favour of this measure, because it will give them a cheaper fuel.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Not all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Well, we will say the manufacturers, but not all. That is another system of protection. Does the hon. gentleman not believe that those manufacturers whom he formerly denounced as legalized robbers, would like to have all their fuel furnished at the expense of others ? I do not believe they would object.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I am not a recent convert at all. I opposed the duty on crude oil in the House of Commons, and gave similar reasons for it—the fact that crude oil was being used for fuel by manufacturers, and on account of the duty being put on it they had to shut up their furnaces. They claimed they could do much better with crude oil as a fuel than with coal.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What year was that ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not remember the year.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to know when the period existed in this country when there was no duty on crude oil.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I was referring to the time the duty was increased. It was not free. I am not a convert at all. I am simply approving of the government's policy in putting the crude oil on the free list, as I believe it should have been put before. I am also in favour of giving a bounty for the production of oil, thereby encouraging natural industries in Canada instead of imposing a duty on the manufactured article imported into this country, which is bound to fatten the pockets of the monopolists. Under this bonus the people who produce the oil get the one and a half cents a gallon and the consumer gets the advantage of two and a half cents a gallon on the refined products. The price of oil has been reduced. It is advertised in the Conservative papers as being reduced. I remember when the Ottawa 'Citizen' announced that oil was reduced two and a half cents a gallon, and the Montreal 'Gazette' said it was reduced two cents a gallon. It was simply a matter of news, that because the duty was reduced the price was reduced.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—How does it stand now ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not know.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When I hear hon. gentlemen opposite say that they are not opposed to protection and never have been, and when the same thing is asserted in the press and on the platform and all over the country, I am led to reflect what a wonderful delusion we were labouring under when we thought we had free traders and opponents of protection in this country. It was simply a delusion. The hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie, the hon. gentleman from de Lorimier and the hon. gentleman from Wellington never were free traders and never opposed protection at all.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—There is at least one free trader left, and I think there are more.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Put him up on a high pedestal.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—Oh, no. I simply want to protest against the principle of giving this bounty. It is entirely wrong, and based upon no sound economic principle whatever.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Quite true—a compromise.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—I cannot understand a principle which gives a bounty to the production of oil any more than a principle of giving a bounty to the products of the farms. There is not one particle of difference. It is wrong in its entirety, and I simply desire to place myself on record against it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I should have made one exception in regard to there having been no free traders in the past or at the present time in Canada in favour of my hon. friend, but I am afraid his free trade principles just go so far as preaching it without practising it. My hon. friend has seen the finger-post on the road, and is like that post, because, though he points to the way, he never travels it. He is always found supporting protectionist measures of the government. He drops in as a supporter of the government all the time, and preaches free trade.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—I think there are many others who hold the same view that I do ; but I want to say to the hon. gentleman from Marshfield that if at any time he will move a resolution enunciating the principles of free trade he will find me a supporter.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Why does not the hon. gentleman move it himself ?

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—What is the use so long as we have so many high strung protectionists as my hon. friend who has just resumed his seat ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman from Rockland ought to do it himself so as to place himself on record. That would be the honest way of doing it. We would not expect any gentleman who holds opposite views from those of the hon. gentleman to make the motion. The hon. gentleman could do it himself, and I should like to see the ministerialists vote against each other.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—It is too late in the session to provoke a debate on the question now.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Will the hon. gentleman vote against this Bill ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—We are in committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We shall see if he votes against it.

The clause was adopted.

The Bill was read a third time and passed.

ANIMAL CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (166) An Act to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act. He said: This measure includes a generic disease. It appears there is considerable injury to Canadian stock by the stock which comes from the United States which are diseased in the generic organs. The name of the disease is maladie du coit, and it provides that the compensation for slaughtered animals shall be two-thirds instead of one-third, and it fixes the valuation.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have looked over the amendments proposed to the Act in the Bill now before us, and I cannot see any objection whatever to them. I think they are in the right direction, but I must express my profound regret that the government has not dealt thoroughly with this question. The Contagious Diseases of Animals Act is, I think, without exception the worst Bill on our statutes. It was dealt with the last time most unskilfully, and, I would say, with a stupidity that is perfectly marvellous on the part of the Department of Agriculture. The Contagious Diseases Act is like the Indian's gun. It calls for a new lock, stock and barrel.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the hon. gentleman has any views well thought out and will give me a memorandum of them, I shall call the attention of the minister to it. He is guided by officials who profess to make a study of the subject.

Hon .Mr. FERGUSON—I think the Minister of Agriculture knows these are not only my views in regard to the class but the views of others also.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is the new disease ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a disease of the generic organs, akin to syphilis. It is a venereal disease and it has been found necessary to add that to the Act.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I think the Bill is certainly in the right direction, a very important move in the direction to prevent diseases that are accumulating not only in the United States but in the western part of Canada. We have had that disease there, and it is something that ought to be remedied if there is a possibility of doing so. While I can sympathize with my hon. friend from Marshfield that the Contagious Diseases Act may be deficient in many respects, he must bear in mind that with the inferior animals as well as with the human race, it is very difficult indeed to deal with those diseases. We must progress slowly and reasonably, and, therefore, I hope my hon. friend may be spared long enough to ascertain in the future that the government is doing everything in their power to remedy a matter that should have been looked after many years ago.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

On clause 2,

Hon. Mr. POWER—What is the reason for increasing the proportion of the cost that the country is going to pay ? I think the owner of the animal ought to bear the heavier portion of the loss which is incurred by his having a diseased animal. The old rule was that the country paid one-third but this Bill provides that the country shall pay two-thirds.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It has been considered that sometimes a man's animal might be saved, and it is thought to be a hard case that the animal should be killed. It is difficult to be perfectly sure of it, and, therefore, it is thought to be fair that the government should pay two-thirds.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is the latter clause of this paragraph any different from the law as it stands on the statute-book ? I know it is as far as the two-thirds is concerned, but it says the owner of the animal shall be entitled to compensation at the full value of the animal so slaughtered—that is the value of the animal before it became diseased. Is that any change or did the old law provide for the payment under similar circumstances on the value of the article at the time ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no change in it. The old law provided that when it was shown that an animal had been slaughtered on insufficient grounds, and that it was not justifiable, the owner should be entitled to the full value of the animal.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—That should be changed. How can you ascertain if it is slaughtered on insufficient grounds ? These vague terms should be wiped out. Supposing it was said a man died for insufficient reasons, would that not be vague, and who has made a mistake ? It is most confusing and perplexing legislation. I suggest that that Bill should be left over. I would not vote for it on any account. It would show stupidity on the part of the Senate to vote for such a thing. These few lines alone kill the whole Bill and make it stupid. Who is to diagnose the disease ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The officers of the department.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—How would they know they had made a mistake ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We must trust to somebody. They employ the best experts they can.

The CHAIRMAN—The post mortem will show it.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Why do you not provide that if on the post mortem it shall be found that the animal did not die of that disease——

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—This is the law as it stands.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I thought that was new. If it is the law, why is it repeated ? The clause reads :

Provided that when it is clearly shown that an animal has been slaughtered on insufficient grounds, and that the slaughter was not in accordance with, or justifiable under, this Act, the owner shall be entitled to compensation at the full value of the animal so slaughtered.

What does that mean ? If the slaughter was not done properly, if the animal was struck in an improper place, that would be improper slaughtering, and it is very vague. I certainly think the Senate will show a great deal of stupidity if they adopt this language.

Hon Mr. FERGUSON—I do not agree with my hon. friend. If he knew as much as I do about the Bill, and the incongruity of it, he would refrain from criticising this clause, because it is perfectly hopeless to make the Bill respectable by amending it as is now being done. It contains a perfect absurdity, because it provides that suspicion is a proper ground for slaughtering an animal, and it provides that if the animal was not slaughtered in accordance with, or in a manner justified by the Act, the owner may be compensated. Suspicion is not a proper cause for killing an animal and I doubt, under the strict interpretation of that clause, whether the owner could obtain compensation. The hon. gentleman would have a big task on his hands if he tried to make this Act presentable, and the only change this makes in the existing law is to pay more equitable compensation to the owners. That is right. It provides that the owners of the animal may be paid under two sets of conditions, one where the animal is found not to have been affected with the disease and the slaughter has been found to have been without justification, then they are to be paid the full value, and it fixes in section 3 the value of grade animals on one scale and of pure-bred animals on another scale. Both of them are very much more correct than it was in the Bill as it originally stood, and the Bill, notwithstanding the incongruity in the language, will be doing a service because it provides more equitable treatment for the owners of animals.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—From the lucid explanation of the hon. gentleman I think it would make the affair a great deal more stupid ; but I wish to state that two or three session ago, when the Hon, David Mills was leader of the House, cases of that kind came up, tuberculosis, matters involving a tremendous amount of scientific work and a tremendous amount of patronage, employing experts and buying microscopes, &c., I asked the hon. leader of the House to refer the Bill to a committee composed of the medical men of the House, and that Bill was never heard of since. It was a good thing. This is another instance of semi-scientific men trying to dabble in the French language.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Was that Bill properly slaughtered ?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—It should be properly slaughtered ; I never saw more unintelligible jargon than there was in that Bill.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 3,

3. Subsection 4 of the said section 12 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following : ' but shall not exceed, in the case of grade animals, one hundred and fifty dollars for each horse, sixty dollars for each head of cattle, and fifteen dollars for each pig or sheep; and in the case of pure-bred animals, three hundred dollars for each horse, one hundred and fifty dollars for each head of cattle, and fifty dollars for each pig or sheep.'

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is a very good amendment. As the law stands there is no limitation.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. WILSON, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

THE MILITIA BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (No. 5) An Act respecting the Militia and Defence of Canada. He said: The Bill now under consideration makes certain changes in what is called the Militia Act of Canada, and it is thought better to recast the whole Bill, as ought to be done in very many cases than to submit for consideration changes which involve a reference to a number of statutes passed in former years. We had a sample of that in the Post Office Act. To understand it we had to refer to numerous volumes, and I think it is very bad practice, although I heard some hon. gentlemen recommending it rather than have a new Bill. If changes are made, it is better to give us a new Bill, and that has been the policy adopted in reference to the Militia Bill. The most important change is the substitution of what is called a militia council for the general officer commanding, rather substituting a chief of staff in his place with the aid of this militia council. The Militia Council is to consist of the Minister of Militia, who is president, the chief of staff, the adjutant general, quartermaster general, the master general of ordnance, the deputy minister and the chief accountant. They are the advisory board for the minister in all matters affecting the regulations of the department.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Is there any imperial officer on that board?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There may be.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There may be, but there is not at present. Under the Militia Act as it stood, there was a branch known as the naval militia. That has been removed from that Act, the intention being to place it under the control of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and it is more germane to that department. We already have, as hon. gentlemen know, vessels that are under the control of that department, a very small fleet, and therefore it seemed better in the institution of a naval reserve that we should connect it with the department that has charge at the present time of vessels having sailors. I do not think the Bill will be ready for the present session, but that is the object of removing it from the Militia Department, to found a force to be known as the naval reserve.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is that provided for in the Bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is removed entirely from the Militia Department, and a Bill will be submitted at a future session. It was impossible this year to prepare it. The provision in the old law was that the officer of the army who had the same rank as a Canadian officer, took precedence, and now it is proposed to change that and the Canadian and imperial officers will rank according to the date of their appointment. In the past the imperial officer, no matter how young he was, or how recently he might have been appointed, if in the same rank, he took precedence of the Canadian officer. There is provision for the officer commanding the imperial troops at Halifax to take command of the militia in time of war, and the Bill provides also that a senior officer of the department should be appointed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is not new.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I really cannot say. Provision is made in the Bill to increase the permanent force from 1,000 to 2,000 men, and also to increase the pay of the permanent force as well as the pay of the active militia. As regards the active militia, the increment of the officers and the men who recently performed annual training in camp, they have been paid according to the new scale, and it has been found a great incentive to good work being done, and has worked most satisfactorily. Changes have also been made in the mode of calling out the militia in aid of the civil power. The clause as it originally stood provided that any three justices, of whom the mayor might be one, it was optional, it need not be compulsory, could order out the militia. Now it is proposed to use the word 'shall.' If the head of the municipality refuses, provision is made for calling on a judge to give the authority for calling out the troops in the event of a riot. The Bill will have to be considered in committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not propose to discuss at any length the merits or demerits of the Bill at the present moment, further than to call attention to one remark made by the hon. gentleman in reference to the substitution of a council for the general officer commanding, and the hon. gentleman gave us the names of the officers who are to compose this council. If I have read the Bill aright, there is no such provision in the law. That is merely a statement made by the Minister of Militia, as to what he may do in the future, but it leaves the power entirely in his hands to appoint just whom he pleases. He indicated to the House of Commons whom he thought would compose that council. Those who have had any experience in managing and working the volunteer force of the militia of this country will concur in the objection which I am about to urge upon that point. I am not opposing or expressing any opinion in opposition to the formation of the council to which my hon. friend has called attention, but I think it is exceedingly unfortunate, in order to remove that council from even suspicion of political influence, that the names of the parties who are to form that commission should not be mentioned in the Bill. In England the gentlemen who are to form that council are to consist of four military men, the names are given, and three or four, I am not sure which just now, are civilians. They are put on for very good reasons, and that is the suggestion thrown out by the Minister of Militia as to the formation of this council, that a certain number of them shall be military men, who are supposed to have experience, officials who are under the minister in his department and consequently would be subservient to the will of the minister. There cannot be a doubt about that. The composition of the council in England makes the members of it independent of the minister, and of the government, and equal to the minister, so that each member of that council stands in the same position in relation to the minister, that each member of the cabinet in Canada or England stands to the sovereign. That is, they must be unanimous in whatever recommendations they make in connection with the army or navy, and if one of that council differs from his colleagues upon principle or for any other reason, he has to pursue a course exactly similar to that which is pursued by a cabinet minister. He either subordinates his own opinion to those of his colleagues, or he leaves the council. That is the position, as I understand it, of the council as it exists in England. It makes it a totally independent body. Supposing the Militia Council of Canada is composed, as foreshadowed by the hon. Secretary of State, first of the Adjutant General, who is under the control and direction of the minister; and the deputy head who has to do just what the minister tells him. He is there a nonentity, so far as the administration is concerned. His whole duty is to do what he is told to do. Then how much better position is the Accountant in? I forget who the other gentleman was. I think he is the Master General of Ordnance, that is Mr. Macdonald. Every one of those gentlemen is under the head of the department. That is, they are under the command and direction of the Minister of Militia, and, consequently we might just as well abolish the council altogether, because when the minister comes down with his propositions they will be taken for granted, unless the principle is carried to a much greater extent than it should be of governing by deputy. He has a proposition to make and a plan to suggest to his colleagues; he suggests it and asks for the authority of a council composed of men suggested by the hon. gentleman, and what position are they in then? I will not use the language of my hon. friend with reference to the Contagious Diseases of Animals Bill, but I will certainly say that the council would not only be ineffective, but utterly useless. I do not propose to go into the other point referred to by the hon. gentleman; as my hon. friend indicated, we can do it better in committee. There are many features of the Bill which are a very great improvement on the present law; there are also omissions which I think it would be our duty as an integral part of the British empire to provide against.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Did the hon. gentleman mention, among those who are to compose the Militia Council, the name of the Minister of Agriculture ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is a mistake.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I suppose the hon. gentleman thinks the ministers are disqualified from sitting on such a council ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, but is he going to do justice to the agricultural class by putting him on the council ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—There are hon. gentlemen in this House who seem to turn up their noses at farmers.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend need not champion the cause of the farmers in this House, because I am myself a farmer.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—But the hon. gentleman is a dyed in the wool Tory before he is a farmer.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned until 3 p.m.

Second Sitting.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Routine proceedings.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (168) An Act to amend the Inland Revenue Act.

(In the Committee.)

On first clause,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has the minister any further explanation to make on this ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is the result of the inquiry made by Judge MacTavish, and I notice that in his report he refers to legislation on very similar lines in the state of Massachusetts.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I called attention to that this morning.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The minister thinks it is in the interest of the great body of the people. They are becoming alarmed that this huge concern will, like its progenitor, develop into a trust and may be attended with serious consequences—that they may fix the prices for leaf and products, and it is for these reasons that the minister thought it wise that this action which he considered to be in restraint of trade should be at once checked, and that these parties should be placed on the same plane as all other manufacturers and not allowed to sell goods on the basis on which they have therefore been selling them. My hon. friend called attention to the fact that this Bill affects all industries under the Inland Revenue. That may be quite true, but I presume the minister's announcement, that it was only intended to apply to the manufacturers of cigars and cigarettes, will be sufficient to induce parliament to accept the Bill if they are in favour of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Whatever the House of Commons may do, I do not think the Senate will be prepared to accept a declaration from the minister as to the effect which the Bill may have on one particular industry, and his announcement of the fact that it is not intended to apply to any other. I take it for granted that if a case arising under this Bill were brought before a judge, he would not take the declaration of a minister on the floor of parliament as an interpretation of the Act itself.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No such question can arise before a judge.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How does my hon. friend come to that conclusion?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—By the terms of the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The terms of the Bill are general, and apply to every industry in the Dominion that is carried on under a license. How then can my hon. friend say that a question of that kind could not arise before a judge ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Because it can only arise before the Minister of Inland Revenue.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the point I was coming to. Not only does this establish a principle which is wrong in itself, but it makes the Minister of Inland Revenue the absolute, judge, jury, and hangman in the case. Talk of the tyranny of the Turk, or of Russia! Could you place a law upon the statute-book giving more arbitrary power than this gives to a single minister? What is there to prevent the grossest frauds being perpetrated under this power given to the minister? Understand me, I am not accusing the present minister nor do I suppose for a moment he would do it, but it places the power in the hands of any gentleman who may be the Minister of Inland Revenue for the time being. Supposing he wants to exercise this power, every one living in Ontario knows how power is exercised by the inspectors of tavern licenses, and by those who recommend and grant licenses to sell liquor, particularly at election times. This power could be used precisely in the same way. I do not wish to be understood as advocating the liquor trade, but a brewer advances to a tavern-keeper a certain amount of stock conditional on his selling only the product of his brewery. That would come within the meaning of this law, because that is carried on under a license. Any one who has been in England and has observed this particular point, knows that there are districts in London where you will find on the signs 'Dealers exclusively' in a certain quality of beer, Bass', Allsops', or some other, and the conditions on which they obtain the beer from the brewers is that they will not deal in any other. This tobacco trust controls trade to the same extent precisely. This Bill unfortunately affects the liberty of the subject to this extent, as provided in subclause 2:

2. The decision of the Minister of Inland Revenue as to whether any sale or consignment of goods is, or is not, subject to any such conditions, or upon any such terms, as is or are defined in subsection 1 of this section, shall be final.

I repeat, it makes him the judge and jury in the case. The power here given may be used to influence a large number of men engaged in this particular business, and it may be exercised in the same manner as other powers, to which I have called attention, are exercised. Do not understand me to be advocating the interests of tobacco or liquor dealers; the position I take is against interference directly with trade and with the liberties of men who are engaged in trade. My hon. friend says this is a monopoly. Is it monopoly? Judge MacTavish in his report says it is not a monopoly within the meaning of the criminal law, and a judge who tried a case of this kind in the province of Quebec—I think it was in the city of Quebec—gave the same decision. Now, when I pointed that out to a gentleman who is advocating this Bill, how do you think I was met? He said: 'Oh, they were bribed, to give that decision.' I said I was not prepared to accept that explanation. I have a better opinion of the judge at Quebec who gave that decision. He gave it under the law as it stands on the statutes, and that is not a statement you should use in favour of a Bill of this kind.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Nor one that should be repeated.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What does the hon. gentleman mean by that?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It seems to me it is putting up a man of straw to knock it down easily.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, he is one of the advocates of this Bill. I gave no credence to the statement; I mention it as a reason which was given to me why I should pay no attention to the decision of the judges, and I do not think I should be held responsible in the manner my hon. friend indicates, for repeating that which is being said by the advocates of this Bill, because I repudiated it to the man who mentioned it. I want to put a question in a way different from the manner in which it was put by the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Cloran); I should like to get an explanation from the hon. Secretary of State, if he can give it to me: Supposing I, a grocer in Ontario, should go to a manufacturer in Montreal, not the manufacturer come to me, and say to him: On what terms can I purchase a certain brand of tobacco which you manufacture, and which is very popular in the section where I live? Perhaps the first question he would ask is: 'What is the extent of your trade?' because just in proportion to the extent of my trade would be the advantages he would give to me. I would state the extent of my trade is $50,000 a year, and his reply would be : 'If you will take my tobacco on the terms which I suggest, I will give it to you for ten or fifteen per cent less than I will sell it to another man who deals in all kinds of tobacco.' Would he, under such circumstances, come within the meaning of this law ? I think he would.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, there must be an agreement to buy from nobody else.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Very well, say that I give that pledge; it would not be a written contract. I would say, 'If you give me a discount of ten per cent below the price you sell to others I shall sell only your goods.' That would not be a violation of this law, and yet my hon. friend says he wants to prevent the restriction of trade. That is what puzzles me. The law itself is a direct and positive restriction of trade. What was the object for the present government putting a duty on the raw leaf ? I know that was advocated for years, while I was in the government, and it was resisted for certain reasons then given, that they could deal better with the excise duties and it would be safer for the revenue than to put a duty on the raw leaf grown in Canada. Another reason was that it was always represented to the government and the Minister of Inland Revenue, that no tobacco fit to use either as chewing tobacco or for the manufacture of cigarettes or smoking tobacco could be made out of Canadian leaf. These were the reasons that induced the government not to take that step. The present government, however, took a different view of that question and carried out a principle, which, to my mind, ought to have been carried out years before. They placed a duty on the raw material. What has been the effect of that ? In 1897 the total amount of Canadian leaf, so far as the Inland Revenue reports show, was about 600,000 pounds manufactured during that year. The last year's output by the different factories, amounted to no less than 3,041,687 pounds. That is the result of a protective policy, and I commend my hon. friends for having adopted it. It furnished to the manufacturers of this country the product of the farmer to the extent of over 2,000,000 pounds, while under the free admission of foreign leaf tobacco there was only about 600,000 pounds of Canadian leaf manufactured in Canada. That has been the result through the introduction of United States capital in addition to Canadian capital in building large factories. I do not know the qualities of tobacco ; I never did or could use it, but if the taste can be acquired for the use of tobacco made from Canadian leaf, then we have just so much added to the industry of the farmer who raises the leaf, and we find employment to the extent of the output of the factories, that would not exist otherwise except in the manufacturing of tobacco from the foreign leaf. The protection given to the producers of tobacco in Canada was a good move, as the result has shown. It has been in force only a few years and the output of the factories has reached nearly four million pounds, instead of about half a million pounds before the duty was imposed. If the enforcement of this law, and throwing the manufacturing into the hands of a larger number will lead to the use of more of this kind of tobacco, so much the better for the farmers who produce it. But the quality of the article will have to be the ground on which it is sold and used. Now, as a matter of principle if it is right as applied to this particular industry, is it not right in all other branches of industry ? Let me give a practical illustration in the business that I have been connected with ever since I was a boy. Suppose a manufacturer of type-setting machines came to our town and wanted to sell me a couple of machines. I asked what the price was, and if he would give a certain reduction for cash. Having obtained his terms, I said 'I will give you the list price on condition you will not sell a machine to our opponents in this town.' Would that be wrong, I should like to know ? Was that man who sold the type-setting machines to be restricted in the sale of the article ? That is the principle underlying the bottom of this whole legislation, and it applies to every conceivable business in the country, though the present government have not the courage or the power to adopt and place on the statute-book a law similar to that on the statutes of Massachusetts. If it is good for one branch of business it is good for the whole, but believing, as I do, that it is a direct infringement of the liberty of the subject and placing a power in the hands of the Minister of Inland Revenue that is not exercised by the Czar of Russia, I not only give utterance to my opinions on the subject but will record my vote against the adoption of any such principle in our legislation.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I did not endeavour to follow my hon. friend's argument. I have been looking over the clauses of the Bill, particularly subsection (B), 'Notice of forfeiture'. It may possibly be reasonable to follow the man that violates this law if it is adopted, but I cannot see the reasonableness of following the owner of the property. The clause reads :

> From and after the insertion thereof the license shall be null and void ; and no license shall be granted to any other person for carrying on any business in the premises occupied by him until the Minister of Inland Revenue is satisfied that the dealings above referred to have ceased.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is necessary.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Supposing I was the owner of the property and I leased it to a man in the tobacco and cigar business. There are many places in connection with hotels where such a business is conducted. The lessee might enter into a covenant of this kind, and violate the law and he might lose the right to sell.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It only applies to the large manufacturer.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It declares that the place in which he does business is deprived of a license until such time as the Minister of Inland Revenue is satisfied.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the manufacturer—only one person.

Hon. Mr McMULLEN—If it only applies to the manufacturer, and not to the seller, it is a different thing. I thought it applied to those who sell cigarettes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a most arbitrary thing to put on the statutes

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—A great parliamentarian said once that there was no law ever passed that you could not drive a coach and four through. I believe there are very few of our laws that you cannot drive eight horses and a coach through. The object of this Bill is to crush a monopoly. That I am in favour of. I am opposed to trusts and monopolies, but in this Bill I find means taken to do away with an evil in social or commercial life. I am afraid that the provisions in this Bill go to justify the maxim which is not admitted either in theological, social or commercial life, that the end justifies the means. The end of this Bill is exceedingly good and proper and one that should be attained by correct means, but if the means taken to attain the object are not within the limits of individual or public right, then it is a proper position to take to discuss the merits of the means. For instance, to do away with a monopoly this Bill proposes that a license of a man carrying on a monopoly shall be set aside and cancelled if he does a certain thing. That certain thing is this, if he :

> (a.) makes a sale of any such goods, or consigns them for sale upon commission, to another person, subject to the conditions that the purchaser or the consignee shall sell or deal in goods of a kind produced by, or obtained or to be obtained from, any other manufacturer or dealer ; or
> (b.) makes a sale of any such goods, or consigns them for sale upon commission, to another person, upon such terms as would, in their application, give more profit to the purchaser or the consignee if he should not sell or deal in goods of a like kind produced by, or obtained or to be obtained from, any other manufacturer or dealer.

I believe it is within the right of parliament to say so, but this clause does not cover the action of a man who would be as guilty as the manufacturer himself. For instance, the retailer, as has been pointed out by the hon. member from Belleville, might go to a manufacturer and ask him to sell him goods and say : 'Now, what advantage will you give me if I will sell only your goods ?' This law does not govern that transaction. Consequently, you leave a loophole whereby the object of the Bill is defeated. This Bill strikes at a manufacturer who makes a contract. If you want to have the Bill effective, it should strike at the retailer and every man who wants to make a monopoly contract with the company that this Bill prevents the company from making. So the Bill is not complete. Another way to get rid of the penalty under this law is this : A manufacturer produces to the extent of.

say, one million dollars. Under this law he cannot sell to wholesalers or retailers under an exclusive contract. What has the manufacturer to do to set aside this law? All he has to do is to call in John Brown & Company and sell the entire product to them, without any conditions or contract. John Brown & Company pay one million dollars for the output and put the product on the market under contracts which this Bill is designed to guard against. The law will not govern John Brown & Company's action and there will be no penalty, because John Brown & Company are not manufacturers. That is why I say this law, although designed to accomplish a good object, will not attain that end. The manufacturer makes no contracts, but any retailer may go to the American Tobacco Company and offer to sell their goods exclusively. Now, why should not the law strike at that retailer as well as at the manufacturer? Why waste time putting on the statutes of this country a law which will be ineffective, however good the object it wishes to attain? I am not here to suggest the means which should be taken by the government or the department, but I point out the very weak spots in this Bill. Having had something to do with the administration of justice in this country, I say it is not right to put on the statutes laws which are not clear as to their meaning, and which will prevent judges on the bench from exercising their discretion in the administration of the law. Judges find it a great hardship to be obliged to interpret the meaning of Acts of parliament. I know I have often been asked, why not make your laws clear, so that there will be no responsibility resting on our shoulders when we have to interpret them? In the last clause the minister is given an extraordinary power, a power that I should not like to exercise, a power which can be exercised in the courts of our country only through three channels—the prosecuting counsel, the jury and the judge. Under this Bill enormous interests are left to the discretion of one man. It is a tremendous power to put in the hands of any one, that he shall be the prosecuting attorney, the jury and the judge. I quite agree with the hon. member for Belleville that it is a dangerous power to place in the hands of any man, however able and conscientious he may be. I am not going to say that the present Minister of Inland Revenue would not discharge his duties faithfully and conscientiously, but parliament ought to be very guarded in giving such power to any one individual, especially when it is a question of administering public affairs. We never can tell when a time may arrive when a spirit of vengeance, or party welfare, or other influences, may cause the administration of the department to be turned against the ends of justice. I am prepared to accept the Bill as a half-way measure towards destroying this evil in commercial life, which, in the end, attacks the social welfare of the people, but I would ask the leader of the House, in dealing with measures of this kind, that when they propose to attain a useful object, they should at the same time adopt fair means to accomplish their end.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I want to call attention to a point which seems to have been omitted. An importer of tobacco may make contracts with any one and promise discounts on the conditions which have been mentioned, and this Bill would not touch him. You touch the manufacturer but not the importer.

Hon. Mr. POWER—In dealing with measures affecting the revenue, we must give a certain amount of credit to the representations made by the minister in charge of the department, who is in a better position to know where the shoe pinches than an outside observer. There is no question there are a great many provisions in our revenue laws which seem tyrannical. The Customs Act contains provisions which seem utterly repugnant to one's ideas of justice and fair-play. The leader of the opposition presided over that department for a good many years, and he is quite aware that what I say is true. The hon. gentleman was not anxious to be a tyrant, and he was not a tyrant, but it was absolutely necessary, in order to be in a position to deal with the various schemes which suggest themselves to people in trade to evade the revenue law, to have the law strict and apparently unreasonable. This Bill affects simply the manufacturer. The hon. gentleman from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Cloran) thought it should affect the dealer also. He wanted to know why it was limited to the manufacturer. There are two reasons why, one that the manufacturer is the only person who comes under the control of the Department of Inland Revenue. That department has nothing to do with the dealers outside.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—How about the importer ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The importer does not come under the control of the Inland Revenue Department. The reason why the dealer is in a different position is this : If the manufacturer refuses to sell to the dealer the dealer cannot go elsewhere ; he cannot get the same article from another party. Where agreements have been entered into with certain persons to sell the products manufactured, then the dealer who does not accept the terms of the manufacturer, has no opportunity to purchase elsewhere. Then the hon. gentleman suggested that this measure might be defeated by a firm named John Brown & Company buying out the whole stock of the manufacturer. The case which has given rise to this particular legislation is the case of a company called the Empire Tobacco Company. I should like to know how many John Browns there are in Canada who could buy out the Empire Tobacco Company ?

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—They could buy themselves out.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The law could not apply to the case where a dealer met a manufacturer and asked as a favour that he should do something. It must be a case where the manufacturer makes that a condition. If the man comes voluntarily and says, 'I wish to sell your tobacco, and I do not propose to sell any other tobacco but yours,' there is nothing in this Bill to prevent the manufacturer letting him have goods on special terms, but the manufacturer must not make it a condition with the dealer that he shall not sell the goods of any other manufacturer. It seems to me that is a reasonable proposition. I believe in liberty as far as it is consistent with the general good, but it is evidently a very objectionable condition of things that dealers in various articles are tied up to sell the products of certain manufacturers only. The hon. gentleman who leads the opposition referred to the case of brewers in England. I think it is recognized in England that these 'tied houses,' as they are called, constitute a very objectionable feature in connection with the sale of beer in England.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The same thing exists in Canada, only it does not appear on the signs.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is an unfortunate condition of things. I take it for granted that this Bill is to apply only to the tobacco manufacturers, but I think it is based on a sound principle. It is in the interest of freedom of trade and contract, apart from the first contract with the manufacturer, and if it applies to other things as well as tobacco so much the better.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman attempts to illustrate his argument by reference to the Customs Act. He will find there is no such power vested in the Minister of Customs.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I said some of the customs laws were tyrannical.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I stated, when I spoke before, that I did not wish to be understood as insinuating anything against the hon. gentleman who is at present Minister of Inland Revenue, but I said this was not a sound principle, and I repeat there is no such power vested in the Minister of Customs. There are clauses in the Customs Act which, to the uninitiated, appear very tyrannical, and in opposition to what would be considered the liberty of the subject. But when you come to consider the reasons for placing these apparently tyrannical sections in the Customs Act, it is exclusively to protect the revenue and not to interfere with any individual. For instance there is a clause which is considered extraordinary; the person who is accused has to prove, in the case of violations of the Customs Act, that he is innocent. That is not applied in any British country to any other business or any other proceedings in connection with trade; but the reason for that is, unless that clause were in the law, it would be impossible to reach the frauds which are being committed by the smuggler, for the reason that his books and his invoices are the only evidence which would prove the violation of the law. I merely give that as an explanation to show that so far as I understand the two positions they are not at all analogous.

In this particular I take a different view altogether from the Speaker. He says he thinks he is right for certain reasons: I think it is a direct interference with trade and commerce in its broadest and in its narrowest sense.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The leader of the opposition says that he does not find in the report of Judge MacTavish that the American Tobacco Company and the Empire Tobacco Company—and they are one and the same company—had in Canada a couple of years ago a monopoly of the tobacco trade. That is obvious. But the question which should have been discussed, perhaps at greater length, by the hon. gentleman from Belleville is whether, from the report of Judge MacTavish, there is not a strong presumption that that monopoly is about to be formed.

If the methods adopted by this United States trust are such as to bring about a monopoly into its own hands of the tobacco trade of the country, then should we not be a unit in favour of enacting laws to prevent that object from being attained. The parties who are in the trade are meeting the competition of the United States trust. One firm they have already injured so considerably, that they have been crowded out fatally by the methods followed by the trust, and if that is not prevented by this Bill the Canadian companies will be crowded out the market altogether. The plan is a very clever one. The tobacco trade is carried from the manufacturer to the retailer through the wholeseale grocers of Canada. The wholesale grocers of Canada have an army of commercial travellers who cover the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific. In taking orders for a multitude of things they take orders for tobacco of various kinds. The United States trust did not create a demand from its inception for certain brands of tobacco or cigarettes or plug tobacco of their own manufacture. They came in with immense wealth behind them and bought the manufacturers which made the best brands and had the best reputation on the market. They did not weight themselves with a load to carry from the bottom of the mountain up. They took the brands that were already on top and stimulated the demand considerably by an immense expenditure of money in advertising—spent hundreds of thousands of dollars not only towards creating but stimulating the demand for various brands. When they had done that through a considerable expenditure of money, they then applied the methods complained of. Now, what are the methods, and what is the effect of them? It is to offer to the wholesale grocer a certain advantage if he will deal exclusively in those brands. The wholesale grocer has already such a demand for those brands, that he must carry them, but the owner of those brands, the United States Tobacco trust, will only give him those brands on terms that will pay him to sell them provided he signs an exclusive contract. If he does not sign the contract, he is given only two per cent discount, and it has been established in evidence that two per cent is not worth thinking of in the carrying on of that trade. So that the wholesale dealer is face to face with this difficulty: either secure the handling of those brands which are in great demand, or fall back upon the brands of the independent manufacturers for which there is less demand and lose profitable customers not only in the tobacco trade but for other articles, who will go to the wholesaler who can sell them what they require. In this way the wholesalers have been compelled to sign exclusive contracts; and what was the result? When the wholesale grocery trade of Canada has closed its doors to all other manufacturers, and has agreed to handle exclusively the goods of the United States trust, where are the other manufacturers? The other manufacturers you may say could send out an army of commercial travellers and sell their goods throughout the land and save the profit of the middleman. But it is no small expense to cover the provinces with commercial travellers for just one line of goods, and it is admitted that it is an immense burden upon them. They have, besides, to reach the retailer directly. They must open thousands of accounts. They have the whole difficulty of collecting those accounts. They have the losses which they sustain by selling to small dealers throughout the land. When they sell to a few wholesale grocers of good repute they know with whom they are dealing, and stand very little risk indeed. With that system of closing the regular channels of trade which carry those goods from the tobacco manufacturer to the retailer through the wholesale grocer and the monopolizing of those channels by one company alone the result is fatal. It has already been felt, according to the allegation of all the other manufacturers, and what will be the result? To my mind it is inevitable that the company that monopolizes those avenues of trade through the wholesale grocers is bound to monopolize the trade of Canada. This measure has for its object the prevention of such a condition. The day when this monopoly is established, the tobacco grower will be at its mercy; the trust will pay the price it pleases. The hon. leader of the opposition has congratulated the government. It is not very often that he is in that mood.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Always when they are right.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—He has congratulated the government on their protective policy in encouraging the growing of Canadian leaf tobacco, but there is in that congratulation a sting or a taunt. He thinks the Liberal party is going back on its policy. It is useless for me to dilate upon the fact that there is no free trader in Canada except the hon. gentleman from Russell (Hon. Mr. Edwards).

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not allude to you, because I know you were always an honest protectionist.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If the hon. gentleman will look at the expression of policy of the Liberal party he will see that we have always been for a revenue tariff in this country.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The leaders of the party have been on each side of every conceivable question that is contained in the books.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman is speaking of the Liberal party.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am speaking of the leaders of the party.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I say there are here no absolute free traders, as there are in England, people who will accept direct taxation as a result of free trade. There are few instances, but even if we go back to the book by which these absolute free traders go, if we go to the theorists, to all the writers who have thought and expressed their views upon free trade, we have them all admitting that in a new country, for the purpose of developing a new industry, protection is not bad but is tolerable. We are in that condition towards tobacco. Here is a Canadian industry which needs to be protected and needs to be developed under very difficult circumstances owing to the competition of a foreign country alongside of us, which has secured a long and admitted lead, and I think to even the free-trader, even the hon. gentleman from Rockland would admit that this is a case where the government did right to intervene without violating its own principles. The hon. gentleman from Victoria spoke of the retailer not being covered by this Bill. The retailer as well as the wholesaler comes under the exclusive contract system, and the retailer has had to accept, in very many cases, the law that was imposed upon him, and will I know in some cases be gladly freed from these contracts which were imposed upon him. So that when the government deals with the party who holds the license, the government deals with the proper party. The hon. gentleman from Victoria has spoken of the chance that would be given to the licensee to turn over the whole output of his factory to a go-between, who would thus be able to escape from the prohibitions of the law. I am not very much afraid of such a subterfuge being resorted to, without the government's arm being long enough to reach it. I will add but one word as to the extraordinary power contained in this Bill—called so by the hon. gentleman from Victoria, and criticised by the hon. leader of the opposition as well. The hon. leader of the opposition was in parliament in 1886, possibly a Minister of the Crown himself.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—And he must have shared the responsibility of his colleagues in putting upon the statute-books the revision of the Inland Revenue law as we find it there. Yes, if the hon. gentleman has a good memory—if not, he can refresh it by looking at the law—he will find the same power given to the Minister of Inland Revenue in a still more stringent form. The Minister of Inland Revenue is given, in virtue of the law, which came out of the joint brain of the hon. leader of the opposition and his colleagues at the time, the sole judgment and right to give a license to a party or withhold a license from him. A man, in order to obtain a license, must make application under the terms of the law, must state where he will do his business, give diagrams of his manufacture, &c., and yet when he has done that, and even when he has shown that he is of good repute, that he has the capital he requires to carry on the business, the Minister of Inland Revenue can withhold his license from him, and he can do more than that. How long is that license for ? It is for twelve months, and when that licensee comes back after the twelve months have expired to get a renewal of his license, the minister can refuse to grant it, without giving a reason. I think that this law is far less stringent than the one the hon. gentleman put on the statute-books, because the Minister of Inland Revenue can only act within the four corners of the Bill which is now being discussed, and he must keep within the spirit and within the letter of that law, and render his judgment. The hon. gentleman from Victoria says he renders his judgment without the safeguards that are given the citizens of this country. The citizens of this country are not surrounded with the same safeguards as are found in this Bill. It was said that the judge who renders a judgment generally has a prosecutor before him that hears the defence. The judge before whom the citizens of this country appear for judgment, is clothed by this parliament with very considerable powers, and is given absolute responsibility. He is responsible only to his conscience, while in this case the judge who will with a due sense of responsibility render that decision and cancel that license will have to answer before one superior tribunal for his Act ; he will be responsible before the parliament of Canada, and it is upon his responsibility as a member of the government of Canada, forcing all his colleagues to share in that responsibility, that he will render a decision which will surely be criticised and passed upon by the parliament of Canada at the following session.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—With reference to a proper investigation into the Inland Revenue to which the hon. gentleman has referred, it is just as susceptible of a satisfactory explanation as that which I gave to the hon. Speaker in reference to the other question. I have not the time to discuss it now, unless the hon. Secretary of State desires it. I know he wants to occupy as little time as he can with this measure.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will take the hon. gentleman's word for it.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole, consideration of Bill (No. 153) An Act to amend the Post Office Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—At the time the committee rose, we were considering section 6, which reads as follows :

Notwithstanding anything in section 6 of chapter 28 of the statutes of 1902, as amended by section 3, chapter 49, of the statutes of 1903, the election provided for by the said section 6 of chapter 28, may be exercised at any time within three months after the passing of this Act.

That has reference to the letter-carriers. They were allowed an option whether they would continue on under the superannuation plan—those who had been paying superannuation, or whether they would come in under the more recent Civil Service Act, which only entitles them to a fixed sum, when their time expired, and they have asked for three months longer in which to decide the matter. The explanation I have received from the Post Office Department reads as follows :

Under the Act of 1902 it was made optional with letter-carriers to come under the new scheme contained in that Act, or to remain under the old law. The time in which to exercise the option expired within three months after the passage of the Bill, and some of the letter-carriers, when it was too late to exercise that option requested to be allowed to come under the operation of the new law, and last year parliament passed an Act extending the time. That time has now expired, and now a considerable number of letter-carriers have again stated their desire to avail themselves of the provisions of the Act of 1902.

Not having made their choice, this section gives them three months further time in which to exercise the option. The memorandum further states:

It is purely a matter of choice with the letter-carriers as to whether or not they come under this Act or remain under the old law. The difference in principle is that under the old law, a letter-carrier was paid an annual maximum salary of six hundred dollars. Under the new Act he is paid at the maximum, $2.25 a day, and is also eligible for an annual bonus of $20. Thus he may, under this law, earn in the 315 working days, say $705, which with the $20 bonus makes $725. More than half are in under the new Act, and many more wish to be also transferred to it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I informed the House when we were in committee before that I had found a satisfactory explanation of this clause myself, but my hon. friend was not then able to give one, and he has done quite right now in furnishing the House with the information. There is no objection, as I informed the House then, to merely extending the time within which the letter-carriers could exercise this option. I might point out to my hon. friend that we have been proceeding up to this time in what was felt to be not a very satisfactory manner, because explanations which we were seeking were not given to us. My hon. friend no doubt has these explanations now with regard to the first section. I have been looking at it still further, and I confess I cannot very well understand what the state of the law has been during the last two or three years, or how it will be now that we repeal section 12.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will read what the department have sent me. It is as follows:

This section abolishes the office of chief inspector for the Dominion. No chief inspector has been appointed since the death of Mr. Sweetnam, and it is proposed to abolish the office.

They make another name for the office and call him the Chief Post Office Superintendent. In regard to subclauses 2 and 3, the department state:

At the present time besides chief inspectors and post office inspectors, we have assistant post office inspectors who frequently conduct examinations and inquiries, as does the chief city superintendent. It is proposed by the change in this section to give to the assistant post office inspectors and to the chief city superintendent the same powers that have hitherto been held by the inspectors, viz., to hold inquiries and to examine persons on oath or affirmation.

The explanation given by the deputy minister is that the business was so largely increased that they required additional inspectors vested with power to make the investigation.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I scarcely think that explanation is complete. We are now repealing section 12, and section 12 defined the duties of the chief inspector, and gave power to make certain inquiries. I do not find the duties assigned to the chief inspector by section 12 now proposed to be repealed, have been enacted as belonging to the chief superintendent, and, in my judgment, if we repeal section 12 we will have the chief superintendent without the power to do what the chief inspector has been doing. If we read section 12 we will find that it gives power to the chief inspector with regard to instituting inquiries, and controlling assistant inspectors in every part of Canada; and then we turn to the amendment of the year 1902, and in section 9 it provides that the chief post office superintendent may be appointed at a salary not exceeding $3,000 a year, whose duty it may be to inspect the city post offices, to examine into their management and efficiency, and to advise and instruct the various staffs, with a view to promoting the efficiency of the service. If my hon. friend will compare clause 9 of the Post Office Act, of 1902, with section 12 that we are repealing, he will find that there are powers in this clause we are repealing, that are not contained in this section of 1902, and I think what we will have is a chief superintendent clothed with very limited powers indeed, and it seems to me that since the death of the chief inspector, we have not had any officer, but a superintendent under section 9 of the Post Office Amendment Act of 1902, and that officer has not been in a position to perform his duties efficiently, or to perform some duties at all, inasmuch as there being no chief inspector, there was no person to set in motion these inquiries that are provided for in section 12.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I submitted that to the deputy minister, and he said there was ample power under the Post Office Act, and they never had it questioned.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend is an expert in interpreting statutes, and if there is that power he will be able to show us where it is to be found. I confess I cannot see it. If hon. gentlemen will look into it carefully they will find that since the death of the chief inspector there has been no officer in the department who could legally have made an application to a court for the carrying out of an inquiry. In fact, I do not think, since he ceased to appoint anyone as chief inspector, that any one was legally empowered to institute such an inquiry, and no provision was made under the old Post Office Act as it is found in the Revise Statutes for any one to make application to the court for a subpœna or to compel the attendance of witnesses, except the chief inspector. We are now proposing that the chief superintendent shall be able to apply to a judge, and that is right; but since the death of the chief inspector, the gentleman who has been drawing the salary of chief superintendent has not been able to perform the duties of chief inspector with regard to summoning witnesses or conducting an inquiry, and if we now repeal section 12, I doubt very much if power will remain in the superintendent to do those things that the chief inspector had power to do under that section.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is not the opinion of the department. Mr. Ross has been actually carrying on the duties and performing the services, and it has not been challenged by anybody. I presume the Act has been carefully looked after by the Department of Justice. My hon. friend shakes his head.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The Postmaster General may be an adept at issuing proclamations of a certain character in the manner of a potentate, but he has not been carefully discharging the duties of his department. It is evident from the amendments now proposed to be made that he allowed the Post Office Act to get into a crippled condition by certain amendments which he made in the law, and that it has been dragging along in that crippled condition for the last two or three years. Under the Act of 1902, he created the office of chief superintendent. He left in the statutes the clause which assigned duties to the chief inspector, but similar duties were not assigned to the chief superintendent. The chief superintendent has been drawing his salary and performing some work for the department, but he is not empowered, and will not now be empowered, to perform the duties which devolved on the chief post office inspector up to the time of his death. It is clear that during the last two or three years there has been nobody in the department with power to make an application to the Exchequer Court of Canada or to any judge, as provided in section 15, with regard to these inquiries which were specially the duty and within the power of the chief inspector to institute. That is the position in which things have been, and in which they will remain unless some power is given to the chief superintendent to perform the functions which belonged to the chief post office inspector under the law as it has stood up to the present time. Now I will read section 9, of the Act of 1902, and my hon. friend will very soon discover that my view is right:

> A chief post office superintendent may be appointed at a salary not exceeding $3,000 per year, whose duties may be from time to time to inspect the city post offices and such other post offices as the Postmaster General may indicate, to examine into their management and efficiency and advise and instruct the various clerks, with a view to promoting the efficiency of the service.

These are the duties that were assigned by parliament to the chief post office inspector under the law as it stands in the Revised Statutes. It provides that the Governor in Council may from time to time appoint one or more persons to be chief inspector of the Post Office Department, with authority over all, or over as many post office inspectors, and assistant post office inspectors and their respective districts, as the Governor in Council designated, and with such other duties connected with the Post Office Department as are assigned to him or them by the Postmaster General, and with power in any part of Canada to inquire into and investigate complaints or suspected cases of misconduct or mismanagement on the part of any person employed in the post office, or perform duties in, or in connection with, any post office in Canada, &c. These are the powers, and then the procedure in carrying out an investigation instituted by the chief post office inspector under that clause is given to him in section 15. Now, my point is that the chief superintendent, appointed under the Act of 1902, has not the power to institute these inquiries which the chief post office inspector has the power to institute under section 12, which we are now repealing, and that he had not the power up to the present time of making this application to court; that there was no person who had the power under the law to make these applications to court with regard to inquiries instituted under section 12. The chief superintendent, who was appointed under the Act of 1902, had no more power to make this application than the man on the street, because it was enacted that the chief inspector should do it, and no other man, so far as I can see, can perform the duty that the chief inspector was specifically empowered to perform. There is the last paragraph of section 15, which might seem to help out a different interpretation, but I think, when you read it closely, you will find that it does not do so, and it is now proposed to repeal that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes; in fact, we agreed to that. My hon. friend will find it in section 2 of the Bill:

> By striking out of the first line thereof the words 'Any chief inspector,' and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'The chief post office superintendent and every post office inspector and assistant post office inspector'; by striking out of the eighth line thereof the words 'chief inspector,' and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'chief post office superintendent, inspector, or assistant inspector, as the case may be'.

The assistant post office inspector would have power to take similar proceedings as the chief inspector is empowered to take under section 15 with regard to any inquiry that it was his duty to make, but it does not appear from the Post Office Act that it was his duty to make these important inquiries which are set forth in section 12. It was the duty of the chief inspector to make them. Anyway, it is not worth while considering that, because we are now proposing to strike out this paragraph of section 15 altogether, and therefore it will not be helpful hereafter at all events in working out the law. I hope I have made myself sufficiently plain. There can hardly be any doubt about it unless there is some other clause which I have overlooked, and to which I can find no reference made in the various amendments to the Post Office Act since 1897. Unless something has been done which I cannot see, that is the position in which things have stood and will stand that since the death of the chief post office inspector, the department has been in a crippled condition because there was no person to make these particular inquiries required under section 12 and no person to bring matters before the court as provided in section 15, and when we have repealed section 12 we will leave the department still in a crippled condition, inasmuch as the chief superintendent will not have power to institute these inquiries that are provided for in section 12, although he will from this time forward have power to make application to a court which only the chief inspector could make up to the passing of this amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But the powers to be given now under section 15 extend not only to the chief superintendent, but to every post office inspector and assistant post office inspector. The section will read:

> The chief post office superintendent and every post office inspector and assistant post office inspector for the purpose of any inquiry or investigation may apply in term or vacation to any judge of the Exchequer Court, &c.

It gives the power to all those persons.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I say this Bill is going to make that right as far as the procedure of applying to the court in the future is concerned; but the department has been in a crippled position ever since the death of the chief inspector. That only covers part of my point; the important point is when we are repealing section 12 are not we leaving the power with any person in the department which the chief inspector had under section 12?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Where is it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not going to look it up, certainly. When those Bills go to the Department of Justice, I do not feel called upon to look them up.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has the Department of Justice reported on this Bill ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume so. I am quite sure the Post Office Department will not be caught in the dilemma my hon. friend represents.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not sure about that. They may be innocently caught. I call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that the late Minister of Justice, when occupying the position that he now occupies, said that these Bills had been brought in without reference to him. The point raised by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield is very important, and the third reading might be delayed until the hon. gentleman can ascertain where the power and authority is, if there is any doubt about it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I cannot see how there is any doubt as to the effect of this Bill when it becomes law. Because the second clause says :

2. Section 15 of said Act is amended by striking out of the first line thereof the words 'any chief inspector,' and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'the chief post office superintendent and every post office inspector and assistant post office inspector.'

Then when you get down to the eighth line of the section you find the chief inspector again struck out and these other words substituted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Any number of those officials are substituted for the chief inspector. The reason given was they required a very considerable number, the investigations having increased very largely, and it was quite impossible to deal with them unless they had a number of officials vested with power to make the investigations from time to time.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend the Speaker, omits just one point, and that is with regard to procedure. This amendment makes the procedure all right in the future, but where is the power to institute these inquiries ? Certainly section 9 of the Act of 1902, does not give that power. It gives general power with regard to oversight over things and all that, but inquiries such as are provided for in section 12 of the old Act, I do not find vested in the chief superintendent at all. While my hon. friend the Speaker is quite right in pointing out that the procedure now is made clear, the point I am at a loss to understand is, who in the department now has the power to institute these inquiries which will require applying for subpœnas and all that procedure mentioned in section 15 ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Those persons holding the offices we have named.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—They have power to issue subpœnas ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They have power to carry on an investigation before a court.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not see that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the department have not made it right, they will suffer.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is just the point I want to be enlightened on. If my hon. friend can show me that power is vested, under any law passed since 1897, or since that time, in the chief superintendent or any other officer, I am then enlightened and my objection will be removed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will ask the deputy minister to be here at the next stage.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Clause 12 gives certain powers to the inspector. You have repealed that clause, and then you substitute for the chief inspector a chief superintendent, but you give him no powers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think section 15 covers it. I do not profess to have made a very deep study of it, but it does seem to me that section 15 covers it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is very important we should know this. I have compared as far as possible, all the amendments throughout, and I cannot see that the power in section 12 that we are now proposing to repeal has been vested in this chief superintendent. If that were done all would be right ; if it is not done, the department will be powerless in cases that may arise in connection with the post office, and nothing could be more important. Criminal prosecutions, or what will lead to criminal prosecutions, may require to be instituted with regard to stealing letters, defalcations or anything of that kind, and it is necessary that some person in the department should have power to start inquiries to lead up to that. It is all very well to provide procedure once the inquiry has been instituted, but it appears to me if it was necessary under the old Act to clothe the chief inspector with power to start and conduct these inquiries, it is equally necessary to vest such powers in the chief superintendent.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 7,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The explanation about this is that section 6, chapter 20 of the statutes of 1898, which is being amended by section 7 of this Bill by inserting the words 'stampers' and 'sorters,' exempted clerks employed in the city post offices, from passing the promotion examination provided for by section 39 of the Civil Service Act, stating that they shall be examined only on the work of the post office at such times and by such persons as are from time to time designated by the Postmaster General. The amendment to this section is intended to include also 'stampers' and 'sorters' under the provisions of this section of the law.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is what it is proposed to do, but it is made retroactive. The only inference which can be drawn from this section is that the Postmaster General has been away back since 1898, at at all events since 1902, dealing with these stampers and sorters under the Post Office Act, while they were really under the provisions of the Civil Service Act, and that he has been dealing with them contrary to law. Now he finds it necessary to amend the Act and give it a retroactive effect, so that the actions of the minister during these years shall be made legal and effective, just the same as if they were made according to law. I have looked over it, and that is precisely what I find is being done. Perhaps it is all right to have it done, but it does not indicate that this great Postmaster General of ours has been conducting the affairs of the department with that care and accuracy with which many people credit him.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It simply means that he exercised powers he had no right to exercise, and I presume this is one of the cases where the Auditor General has stepped in to prevent the payment of salaries that ought not to have been incurred under the law.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If so, I never heard of it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is just another instance of where a proclamation from the same source has not the effect of law.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not see what Sir William Mulock has to do with the merits of the clause before the committee. The question is whether this clause should pass. I am not saying whether the Act of 1898 was wise or not, but that Act exempted those clerks from civil service examinations, and if the clerks are exempt, the stampers and sorters ought to be also.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is perfectly equitable, but the Postmaster General should have been guided by the law. He has no right to set himself above the law and do things that the law did not warrant him in doing, and although it may be perfectly right now to make the illegal conduct of the Postmaster General good and valid, it does not say that the Postmaster General was not reprehensible.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There are many questions asked at the civil service examinations which are undoubtedly irrelevant to the duties which the person has to perform. Confining the examination to the duties which the person has to perform, whether a sorter or a stamper in the post office, is quite right. Suppose he fails in that examination, and has been in the employ of the department for a long time, is it to be understood that he is to be dismissed and that only those who pass the examination are to be retained?

Hon Mr. SCOTT—I am quite unable to answer that, but I do not think he should be dismissed, from my point of view.

The clause was adopted.

On the eleventh clause,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—At present the salaries are determined by sec. 'B' of the schedule contained in the Civil Service Act, but this is only intended to apply to city offices, on what is commonly known as civil service basis. There are now growing up a good many places called cities, which are not on city basis. Therefore it is left to the Governor in Council to determine whether such offices shall or shall not be on city basis. If so section 'B' applies. This makes no change in the actual condition of affairs to-day.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That certainly is a very smooth explanation, but it does not reach the vital point in this amendment. This is a very sweeping change indeed. Gradually, since the present Postmaster General assumed office he has been taking to himself, by the amendments we have passed from time to time, more and more power with regard to the employees of that department. The power to deal with the post office employees has been gradually taken away from the Civil Service Act and put into the provisions of the Postal Act, bringing them under the control or power of the Postmaster General and taking them away from their former position in the Civil Service Act. Now this amendment provides :

11. The provisions of section 25 of the Civil Service Act (including schedule B therein referred to) regarding officers, clerks and employees, shall only apply to the officers, clerks and employees appointed by the Governor in Council to positions in post offices in such cities as are from time to time determined by the Governor in Council to be within the meaning of the said section and schedule. In all other cases the salaries and allowances of postmasters shall be determined in accordance with the provisions of section 33 of The Post Office Act.

It will be in the power of the Governor in Council at any time to declare that certain cities are within the meaning of schedule 'B' of the Civil Service Act. Any officials in the cities that are so declared, will come under the Civil Service Act, but where there is no Order in Council to that effect, existing or made, all the rest will pass under the Postal Act within the power of the Postmaster General. It is simply taking all the officers of the department out of the control of the Civil Service Act and bringing them under the Postal law, excepting where a special order is made by the Governor in Council to the contrary.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does this give power to the Postmaster General to recommend to his colleagues to have an Order in Council passed removing any city——

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—All will come under the power of the Post Office Department, unless there is an Order in Council passed to say they shall not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is what I intended to say. The present Civil Service Act regulates the salaries of post office inspectors, mail clerks, &c. Will this clause have the effect pointed out by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield? If it is to have that effect, you had better at once accept the suggestion I made a few days ago, and repeal the Civil Service Act, because it has been violated in almost every department. Would the hon. Secretary of State make a note of this fact, together with the other point raised by my hon. friend, and on the third reading of the Bill let us know really what they mean by this clause?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think the hon. gentleman from Marshfield has properly explained it. I myself have long been of opinion that the Civil Service Act is not adapted to the Post Office Department as it is to other departments, because there are classes of officers there that are not found anywhere else. When the Civil Service Act has come up, I have always protested against post office officials coming under it. It may apply to first, second and third class clerks, but when you come to a number of officials below that in the Post Office Department there are no corresponding positions in the civil service. The effect was, last session, that the messengers were put in with sorters and stampers. What is the consequence? Messengers are now able to run up to $700 a year. It is absurd, preposterous.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It should not have been done.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was done to help the messengers. When you go outside of first, second and third class clerks, all other classes in the post office should stand by themselves, and should not come under the Civil Service Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is a great deal of force in what the hon. gentleman says, but it applies to all departments where men have to be appointed without any other qualification than power to do physical work. It applies to almost every department, but more to the Post Office Department on account of the number of men they must have, packers and sorters, who do not require any great amount of intellectual ability or education. But why not confine it to them? Surely the Civil Service Act should apply to those who are clerks of the department.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes; I limited them to first, second and third class clerks.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—A third-class clerk, or temporary clerk, may be made, after experience, a second-class clerk, and so on up to the highest point; but this clause repeals the whole, and it is really setting aside the Civil Service Act and placing it in the hands of the minister to an alarming extent. The department with which I was connected for a number of years furnishes another illustration of giving the minister too much power without the knowledge of his colleagues. Now, as to preventive officers, for instance, the present Minister of Customs has very ingeniously substituted another word in the amended Customs Act in order to overcome that difficulty, and it is just what the Postmaster General is doing now.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is proper that we should understand what we are doing. We are practically blotting out the Civil Service Act, so far as it relates to the Post Office. We provide that all the clerks and employees under schedule B of the Civil Service Act, excepting those that may be in cities, especially described by an Order in Council, will pass under the control of the postal law. I want to make this point in connection with that: We have been making an appearance at least in Canada since confederation, of trying to build up a civil service on respectable lines in connection with the Civil Service Act. I admit freely that neither party have completely done their duty with regard to that. Although we have had a Civil Service Act, we have passed so many supply Bills with provisions that 'Notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary,' so and so shall be done, and have left so many loopholes for the purpose of getting out, that persons can be appointed with large salaries, over the heads of older and more experienced men, for political reasons. I do not know that this government has transgressed in this direction much more than any other.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But they have added the sin of hypocrisy because they have condemned their opponents for doing it, and my hon. friend says they have done it more than their opponents. We will not make anything by recriminations, but we should look at this point: The Civil Service Act is an Act that provides better for fair-play, and for disinterested treatment in the Civil Service of Canada than is provided in the Postal Act, and it is very important that we should retain all the officials that are under the Civil Service Act under the provisions of that law, and make the law better, unless we make the postal law equally fair and just to the officials. Now, we have not done that. It is the sweet will of the Postmaster General, that we are handing these officials over to, and I think we are doing a dangerous thing, and some day or other parliament will wake up on this question and straighten up our Civil Service Act and make it more efficient, putting it on the same lines as the Civil Service Act in other advanced countries, and when we do that we will have to gather up all the officials that we are now allowing to slip from under the provisions of that Act, and bring them under the folds and safeguards of a proper Civil Service Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I quite admit that the Civil Service Act is an illogical and preposterous series of tangles, and I should be glad to see the two political parties meet together, and appoint experts to frame a new Act.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I might say I entirely agree with the remarks that have fallen from the Secretary of State, and I agree somewhat with my hon. friend from Marshfield. Undoubtedly our Civil Service Act should be entirely recast. I can well remember when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power. There were two commissions appointed to examine into the Civil Service of Canada, and report recommending whatever should be done in the way of changes. The last report that was made, a proposed Act to recast the whole Civil Service Act. It never was cast; it never was even introduced, and it lay as a dead letter. There was nothing done. I have railed at the Civil Service Act and the rottenness of it, when I was in the House of Commons. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition knows that for years I claimed there should be a Civil Service Board of Supervisers. That commission recommended it, and that these men should inspect the entire work of the civil service, and wherever they found that there was a large number of clerks doing limited work, they should recast the work of that department and dispense with the services of those that were not necessary. I believe if a board of that kind was appointed we would save a very large amount of money. I agree with what the hon. Secretary of State has said. I dare say each government that has been in power has felt it impossible to keep within the limits of the Civil Service Act. I know that years ago there were votes and votes passed, with the provision, 'Notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary,' so that both parties agree that something should be done.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I congratulate the Senate, slim as it is, on this beautiful evidence of deathbed repentance. They have agreed that both sides of the House are equally sinful, but they did not, as is usual with dying repentant sinners, give any promise of better behaviour in the future.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In case they don't get well.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I hope they will crystallize these sentiments into resolutions for improvements in the future, and that we shall have a recasting of the Act next session.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is one point in connection with that report of the civil service to which the hon. gentleman referred, a great deal of difficulty was found in carrying into effect their recommendations. Their recommendation, was based to a great extent upon a principle which prevails in England, on the appointment of civil servants, based almost exclusively upon their educational requirements. My hon. friend knows very well that there are many men of the highest education, young men who are totally unfit to perform the duties of an ordinary clerk, and consequently it is difficult in dealing with questions of that kind to carry out in its entirety the recommendations made by that committee; but the great object in the passing of the Civil Service Act, was to ensure the appointment of men qualified to do the work which has to be done in different departments. I have already admitted that in the matter of sorters and packers in the Inland Revenue and Post Office Departments, that a civil service examination is totally unnecessary—that is under the law. I remember very well, as an illustration of what I mean, when we were discussing it at the Treasury Board, Sir Alexander Campbell was very strongly in favour of the educational requirements. I put it to Sir Alexander Campbell 'Will the hon. Minister of Justice tell me what necessity there is for a man asking the question which I have in my mind, as to where the Chignecto canal was to be built. What in the world has that to do with the examination of cloth, as to whether it is composed of linen or cotton, and which is the most valuable component part? I said, 'Can you tell yourself?' But of the four gentlemen of the board there were only a few of us who knew where the Chignecto canal was, and I would not have known had it not been for the fact that I had been discussing the canal question.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto), from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

DEBATES OF THE SENATE.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE moved the adoption of the report of the Standing Committee on Debates and Reporting of the Senate. He said: The first portion of the report deals with the special reporter of the Senate, and will be found at page 684 of the minutes. It contains the resolution which has been passed heretofore, to bridge over from the present session to the next session, but leaving it entirely to this House next session, to decide as to whether the special reporter will be continued, and leave it in the power of this honourable House to dispense with the service upon giving one week's notice. The same resolution was passed last year, and on several previous occasions. The committee did not think that they could decide the question—that it was a question for the House to decide whether the special reporter should be continued or not, and I think it would be well to take up the question early at the opening of parliament next year and decide what is best to be done. The other portion of the report recommends the payment of $200 to Mr. Bouchard as one of the French translators of the Debates, and $100 to Mr. Chapman, the other French translator of the Debates, as a bonus for the heavy translation work which was done last year. As chairman of the committee, I think the bonuses are fair, and should be voted. Mr. Bouchard is the chief translator of debates. There are two translators of the French debates, Mr. Bouchard and Mr. Chapman.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I was going to observe that the first paragraph of this report appears not to be sufficiently explicit. It reads as follows :—

> Your committee recommend that Mr. H. R. Holmden be again appointed for the next session of Pariament, upon the reporting staff of the Senate, to be paid at the rate of thirty dollars ($30) per week, with the understanding, however, that his services may be dispensed with at any time during the session upon one week's notice given to him.

I think we should say 'commencing with the beginning of the session.'

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—That is always understood.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the usual order for years.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I move that the report be adopted.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I should like to inquire whether the French translation is kept reasonably well up-to-date ? When I was on the committee we had a great deal of difficulty on account of the translations being allowed to get behind, and we had to put on an additional force to keep up with the work.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Yes. they are well up this session. I think they are up to the 24th June. Last session the work was very heavy.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is very satisfactory. It has always appeared to me, that if the French translations are to be of any use, they should be printed at once. Printing them a year after, seems to be almost a total waste of public money. I am in entire accord with the contents of the report, but I should like to know as to whether any provision is being made or can be made, which will provide for the more prompt receipt by members of the proofs, the more prompt correction of them in the 'Hansard,' and, if possible, the more prompt delivery of the revised Debates to members of the Senate, than in the past ? I approve of the distribution of the unrevised Debates in 'Hansard' form. It is very convenient because the unrevised Debates, after all, are an important part of the record, because if people want to know at any time what is being said in parliament, they wish to see it almost at the time. After it becomes a week old, it is simply a record. Of course we like to have our speeches embalmed in decent form. The unrevised edition should be delivered very soon after the speech has been made, and it should be in a form that could be sent out to any person who wished information as to what happened on any measure of any consequence. But the difficulty has been about the matter of corrections. A rule was made that these sheets should be pasted on foolscap with wide margins for members to note corrections. I only saw that pasting once during the session. The number of copies was limited. There were not enough to cut up in that way, and there was not a large enough staff to paste them. Members did not get them, and we had to make our corrections on the margin of the form that we received. The margin seemed to be quite inadequate for that purpose, even if it had been printed on good paper. It was printed on paper so bad that you could not make your corrections with ink, because it would spread.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Use a pencil.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I bestowed a good deal of labour in looking over a very long speech I made on the Transcontinental Railway Bill, and I blotted every page, and when I turned back I could not decipher my own corrections, and I had to do it all over again. If I had done it with a pencil probably I would have avoided all that trouble. I do not wish to have this system departed from, of furnishing the unrevised proof in the 'Hansard' form, I suppose at the present time, we cannot get over the difficulties that stand in the way of having a very prompt delivery in this House. Three years ago, when I was on the Debates Committee, the late Minister if Justice was also a member of that committee, and we summoned the King's Printer before us, and we went into an inquiry on the matter, and the King's Printer gave us the most exact and complete information. There was no question raised that he did not satisfactorily explain as far as he was concerned, but he showed plainly that it was absolutely impossible for the Printing Bureau, with its present facilities, to give the Senate the same service as is furnished the House of Commons, and that to do so would require larger premises and a larger staff. We tried to impress on Mr. Mills the necessity of treating the Senate the same as the House of Commons. It might cost a little more, but it would be money well expended, and it would keep the Senate's proceedings right up-to-date. The House would occupy a more important position in the estimation of the public than it does now when it is often a week or ten days before the revised 'Hansard' can be got out. In connection with that, there is a lack of facilities in communicating with the Printing Bureau, and I am pleased to know that the hon. gentleman had this in his mind, and that he is going to provide a remedy. I find that we are dependent upon the courtesy of the officers of the House of Commons in sending the copy to the Bureau and bringing back to our reporters the printed proofs The copy is given to a messenger who hands it to an officer of the House of Commons, who keeps a thorough register and a thorough communication for the House of Commons' own work, but does not feel obliged to do so with regard to ours, and if our copy arrives in the House of Commons at a time when there is no House of Commons work to go down the copy will remain until the Commons have something to send. I think in one case one of our documents was held over twenty-four hours without being sent to the Printing Bureau, because there was no provision for their being carried directly from our end of the building.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would be easy to arrange that. A couple of boys on bicycles, one here and one at the Bureau, would do the work. There would be always one on hand to take the documents down. In regard to the Printing Bureau, hon. gentlemen know my views. As long as six years ago, I had an item in the estimates, and it was struck out every year, until this session, although in the House of Commons it was urged by members on both sides, that the Printing Bureau should be enlarged and proper facilities provided. The work there has been quadrupled. It would be idle to suppose that the printing facilities that were calculated to perform the work of parliament twelve or fifteen years ago are adequate for the vastly increased strain on the Bureau at present. The government are now building an addition to it; that will be completed before we meet next year.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is there an addition being erected ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, they are erecting an addition. It was only to cost $7,500, to be a store-room outside; however, we managed to have it built quite as substantially as the remainder of the building, and fire-proof, and now I have induced the Minister of Public Works to carry it up on a level with the upper floor of the building, and that will give it increased facilities. The present roof is very combustible. The building is fire-proof until you get to the upper story, which is stuffed with inflammable material, and all built of wood, unfortunately. It is now proposed to put on a flat roof and make the attic available and fire-proof like the rest of the building, so after this year there will be no difficulty in having a sufficient force there to perform the work.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am totally at variance with my hon. friend from Marshfield as to the character of folded sheets for proof-reading. A more inconvenient system could not be adopted than that which has prevailed during the present session. I should like to call my hon. friend's attention to the last paragraph in the report. The committee recommend that $200 be paid to Mr. Bouchard and $100 to Mr. Chapman as a bonus to each of them for the heavy translation of last year. I have always understood that Mr. Chapman was one of the best translators upon the staff. He was strongly recommended for appointment by the hon. member from Grandville (Hon. Sir A. Pelletier). I have learned that it was on account of his absence during a portion of last year that he is given only $100. I met him in Paris last February and when I heard the encomiums passed on him as a literary man, I felt proud of him as a Canadian. He went there in his literary capacity and obtained honours which reflect credit upon Canada. I learned that he employed a substitute during his absence, by whom the work was done as well, if not better than the other translators, and that he paid out of his own pocket $150 to his substitute. If you give him only $100 of a bonus he will be out of pocket $50. It seems to me from the credit which Mr. Chapman reflected on Canada and his ability as a translator he should be put on the same footing as Mr. Bouchard.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If the facts were as the leader of the opposition stated, I would agree with him in admitting that the recommendation should have been $200 for each of them, but the hon. gentleman has been misinformed. Mr. Bouchard, who has been in the service for some 20 years, has no office in the building. He has to make the translation at his house, and he has to communicate with the Printing Bureau and that entails a great loss of time. That is one of the reasons taken into consideration by the committee. I would have preferred not to state the other reason, but since the question was asked, I must state the fact. Mr. Chapman is well qualified to translate, and it is not because he was away that he does not receive as much as Mr. Boucahrd, but because the translation made by the party to whom it was entrusted by him was not properly done. Strong complaints have been made, and I have myself deemed it my duty early in the session to remonstrate as to the manner in which some portions of the translations have been made. Taking that into consideration, the committee thought they should make the recommendation which appears in the minutes. We are all proud of the honours Mr. Chapman has received, and for my own part I regret sincerely that we could not conscientiously deal otherwise than we have dealt with the matter. Now, with regard to the advance sheets of the printing and the means afforded for correction, as chairman of the committee I have given a good deal of attention to the matter this year, and have been able to ascertain what is wanted for next session to perfect the system. About a month or six weeks ago we inaugurated the system of issuing an unrevised edition. We soon found that the margin was too narrow to admit of corrections, and I arranged with the clerk of the House to have one of the messengers placed at the disposal of the reporters to paste copies of the unrevised edition on wide sheets to give space for corrections. I got these sheets on several occasions, but I noticed some time ago that they were not prepared half the time. I remonstrated and found that it had not been done for one reason or another. If I am a member of the Debates Committee next year, I will try to have a system established whereby there will be a special messenger to carry the reporters' manuscript to the Printing Bureau and get receipts for everything he takes and showing the hour of delivery, so that every one will be responsible for his own delay. It is the only way to deal with the matter properly and efficiently.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Could not the hon. gentleman add another $50 to the bonus given to Mr. Chapman, so that he will not be out of pocket ?

Mr. BEIQUE—I cannot change the report.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I wish to direct attention to the press report in the 'Globe' of the proceedings of this House on Thursday night, when the previous question was moved. I have no objections to the publication of an accurate report, even though the subject is not very creditable, but I do not like to be misrepresented. That report in the 'Globe' was entirely misleading. In the first place it said that the hon. member for Toronto (Hon. Mr. Kerr) asked that my words be taken down. He did nothing of the kind; it was the hon. senator from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Cloran) who asked for it, and there were several other errors. I notice always that when little incidents of that kind occur in the Senate, the newspaper reports try to make it look about as ridiculous as possible. The Senate is entitled to due courtesy.

The motion was agreed to.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION.

The Order of the Day being called:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Honourable Mr. Cloran: That the Clerk of the Senate be directed to lay on the table all the accounts which have been or which may hereafter be presented to him for payment, in connection with the Select Committee appointed to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada, with a view of having the Senate approve of them and authorize the clerk to pay the same.—(Hon. Mr. Dandurand.)

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved that the Order of the Day be discharged and that it be fixed as an order for the second sitting on Monday next.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—By adopting this motion. does it have the effect of putting this order at the end of a list?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It will be immediately under the Bills.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Will it hold the position it occupies now, the first order after the Bills?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Yes.

The motion was agreed to.

THE PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved the adoption of the third report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Printing of Parliament. He said: The report provides for an increase and that the officials shall be placed on the same basis as the Civil Service for annual increases, but it has been pointed out by Mr. Fielding that if they did, the Printing Committee would practically lose control of the services of these gentlemen, and a proviso has been suggested at a recent meeting.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG moved in amendment:

That the third report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on Printing of Parliament be concurred in, with the exception of the words 'that from and after the present fiscal year the said superintendent, the first and second assistant superintendent, and the clerk of distribution of printed documents of parliament receive their respective annual increments as provided by the Civil Service Act,' and that the following proviso be added, namely, 'provided that the said second-class junior clerk shall continue to perform the duties hitherto performed by him.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In the documents ordered to be printed is the report of Judge Britton's investigation in the Yukon concessions ordered to be printed? I do not mean the evidence, but the simple report itself? I think that ought to be printed for circulation.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think that was left in the hands of the chairman.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In the case of the Chinese Commission, a sub-committee was appointed to see that the report itself should be printed in a form that would bring it within the compass of ordinary readers. There was such a mass of matter that few would attempt to wade through it, but a compendium was got up for publication. Perhaps a similar course could be pursued with regard to the report on the Treadgold concession.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The matter was mentioned, and left in the hands of the chairman with the understanding it was to be printed. The premier gave an undertaking in the House of Commons that it would be printed, and while no motion was made that it should be printed, it was understood that it would be.

The amendment was adopted and the motion as amended agreed to.

ALIEN LABOUR LAW AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (162) An Act respecting Aliens.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read the second time at the second sitting on Monday next. He said: This Bill has undergone so many changes in the House of Commons that I am quite unable to say what those changes were from the original Bill that was printed.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until Monday next.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Monday, August 8, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock a.m.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

BAGGAGE TRANSFER FROM INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY TRAINS AND FERRY BOATS BETWEEN LEVIS AND QUEBEC.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired of the government:

Did a person named Rouleau, of Lévis, once have the contract for the transfer of baggage from the trains of the Intercolonial Railway to the ferry-boats between Quebec and Lévis, and vice versa?

Did the government afterwards give this contract to Messrs. Halé & Marceau?

In what year, and for what reasons, was this contract taken away from Mr. Rouleau?

Have Messrs. Halé & Marceau relinquished their contract to the government?

Why?

Was it on the expiration or before the expiration of the said contract?

Who succeeded Messrs. Halé & Marceau, and who is now doing the work for the execution of which they had the contract?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answer is no.

FRENCH TRANSLATION OF MILITIA REGULATIONS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired of the government:

When will the French officers of the French militia of Canada be put in possession of a French translation of the rules and regulations for the militia and of the last volume of Infantry Exercise?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is expected that a revised edition of the Regulations and Orders for the Militia will be issued at an early date. A French edition will be issued as soon as possible thereafter. As the 'Infantry Training, Canada, 1904' required slight modifications, which are now under consideration, with a view to deciding whether this manual of training shall obtain as the drill book for the militia, it is difficult, at this stage, to say it would be printed in both languages, but, if it is to obtain, it should certainly be printed in French as well in English.

SALE OF WOOD TO THE GOVERNMENT.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired of the government:

How much have Messrs. Arcand & Bros. received for the sale of wood to the government since 1896 on the St. Maurice?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Departmental records do not show that any wood was purchased from Mr. Arcand since 1896.

SUPPLY OF IRONMONGERY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired of the government:

Has Mr. Arthur Desaulniers, of the county of Champlain, obtained from the government since 1896 a contract for the supply of ironmongery?

At what price, and how much has been paid him each year?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This department has no knowledge of any contract having been entered into with Mr. Arthur Desaulniers.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACT WITH MR. ADOLPHE CRETE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired of the government:

Has Mr. Adolphe Créte, of Grandes Piles, obtained a contract or contracts from the government since 1896?

For what amount?

For what objects?

In what years?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This department has no knowledge of a contract having been entered into with Mr. Adolphe Créte.

DREDGING OF RIVER BATISCAN.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired of the government:

How much has the government expended yearly since 1896 for the dredging of the River Batiscan?

Who represented the government in these works and supervised the execution of them?

How much a day did these representatives receive?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answers are as follows:

1896-97	Nil.
1897-98	Nil.
1898-99	Nil.
1899-1900	$ 10.00
1900-01	10,488.28
1901-02	11.108.68
1902-03	9,826.14
1903-04	6,061.38
	$37,494.48

Messrs. A. J. M. Isola, Arcade La Haye and Philippe Cossette.

Mr. Isola was first paid $2 per working day, then his salary was increased to $3 per day.

Messrs. La Haye and Cossette were paid $2 per working day.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURE ON RIVERS ST. ANNE, BATISCAN AND ST. MAURICE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired of the government:

What amount of money has the government expended, year by year, from 1895, inclusive:
(a.) On the River St. Anne, county of Champlain?
(b.) On the River Batiscan?
(c.) On the River St. Maurice?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT. The answers are:

1895	$14,906 05
1896	4,373 90
1897	3,003 83
1898	48 00
1899	24 00
1900	24 00
1901	1,199 21
1902	2,907 17
1903	48 00
Total	$26,534 16

1900	$ 10 00
1901	10,488 28
1902	11,108 68
1903	9,826 14

(c)

1895	$ 1,721 50
1896	955 77
1897	162 33
1898	1,048 43
1899	255 00
1900	6,291 30
1901	9,598 29
1902	11,498 83
1903	14,552 54
Total	$46,074 99

PAYMENTS TO JOSEPH LACHANCE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired of the government:

What amount has the government paid, since 1896, to Mr. Joseph Lachance, contractor, and to the municipality of Ste. Anne de la Pérade, respectively, for the purchase of stone used in or to be used in the works on the River St. Anne, in the county of Champlain?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The name of Jos. Lachance and that of the municipality of Ste. Anne de la Pérade do not appear on accounts for stone purchased, since 1896, for works in the River St. Anne.

PAYMENTS TO ERNEST VALLEE, AND MR. HERMENEGILDE LEDUC.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman handed me, on Saturday, in answer to the question 'What are the sums of money which the government has paid yearly since 1896 to Mr. Ernest Vallée and to Mr. Herménégilde Leduc, both of the county of Champlain, and for what objects were these sums paid'. The answer was 'would the hon. senator ask for a return, and there is a note.' As the hon. senator does not mention any special works, it would necessitate the examination of a very large number of accounts. We might agree that this motion would be carried as a demand for a return.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

PAYMENTS FOR PUBLIC WORKS IN THE COUNTY OF CHAMPLAIN.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired of the government:

To whom has the government entrusted the distribution of the money due for public works in the county of Champlain since 1896?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Payments were, when possible, made by cheques, when not, they were entrusted to the paymaster.

PUBLIC MONEY ON DEPOSIT AT STE. STE. ANNE DE LA PERADE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired of the government:

Has the government since 1896, made any deposits of money in the bank kept by Mr. J. A. Rousseau, at Ste. Anne de la Pérade ?
What is the amount of such deposits ?
How much has been paid in interest on these deposits, and to whom was the interest paid ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No money was deposited by this department.

SUPPLY OF STONE FROM THE RIVER STE. ANNE DE LA PERADE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired of the government:—

How much has the government paid since last session, and to whom, for the supply of stone for the works ordered or executed, (1) in the eastern part ; (2) in the western part of the River Ste Anne de la Pérade ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Would the hon. senator ask for a return. This answer will necessitate the examination of all the accounts from December, 1903, to March 4th, inclusively. Some 75 different parties have supplied stone, and their accounts will have to be examined and the amount of each given.

PAYMENTS TO MR. PIERRE NAULT.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired of the government:—

How much has Mr. Pierre Nault received yearly since 1896 for the supply of iron and wood respectively ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Would the hon. senator give more details, such as the name of the place and the works in connection with which the expenditure was incurred. The department have not been able to find any such thing.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY.

LEGAL EXPENSES OF THE BEHRING SEA ARBITRATION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE asked for the names:—

1. Of the Canadian counsel in the Behring Sea case ?
2. How many days each served ?
3. How much per day was paid each counsel ?
4. Amount each counsel got, naming counsel ?
5. Amount of retainer paid each counsel ?
6. Total amount each of the counsel got, and the names ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT:

1. The Canadian counsel before the Behring Sea Claims Commission were F. Peters, F. L. Beique and E. V. Bodwell.

2. F. Peters, 237 days ; F. L. Béique, 183 days ; E. V. Bodwell, 188 days.

3. Fifty dollars.

4. F. Peters, $13,350 ; F. L. Béique, $9,650 ; E. V. Bodwell, $11,500.

5. F. Peters, $500 : F. L. Beique, $500 ; E. V. Bodwell, $300.

6. Answered by No. 4.

THE LATE SENATOR AIKINS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Before the Orders of the Day are called it is my melancholy duty to remind the House that one more of its old and honoured members has passed to another and, I trust, better world. It was my privilege to sit with the late Senator Aikins for a number of sessions in the old parliament of Canada. He was elected in 1854, and he sat in the parliament of United Canada from 1854 to 1861. Then he was elected for probably the most important division then existing, and perhaps also to-day, considering the population, and the principal cities and towns in the district, for the legislative council in the old parliament of Canada. Having known the late Senator Aikins for over forty-four years, I am reminded that he is a man who stood very high in the estimation of his fellows, honourable and high-minded in all particulars. In every characteristic of life he secured the esteem and respect of those with whom he came in contact. From the earlier years when I knew him he was a Liberal.

When it became evident in 1864, 1865, and 1866 that it was incumbent on both political parties to solve the many problems that then engrossed the attention of the politicians of the day, Mr. Aikins became one of the coalition government formed by the late Sir John Macdonald, and, like many other men, even of the Liberal party, was won over by the charming manner and the influence that the late Sir John Macdonald was able to exercise on those with whom he was associated. Mr. Aikins was never an extreme politician, always being guided by what he conceived to be best in the interest of this country. He lived a life full of usefulness and was honoured by his fellow-men. I may say that after withdrawing from Canadian politics, he became Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba for five years. On his retirement from that office, it was recognized that he deserved any further elevation that could be offered to him and he was reappointed to the Senate. His death is a matter of sincere regret to me, particularly as those who were early in public life like myself are so rapidly passing away. There are very few of us left now who sat in parliament early in the fifties. I can only say that the late Senator Aikins earned the esteem and kindly feeling of all those with whom he had associated in the years he was a representative man. He has gone to his rest full of honours and with the respect not only of those with whom he was associated, but also of these who had the pleasure of being acquainted with him. I, therefore, move that the Senate express its regret in the ordinary way at the departure of our late friend and colleague.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I can add very little to that which has already been said by the hon. Secretary of State; but I can say for myself, that ever since I had the honour of sitting in parliament with the late Senator Aikins, in the House of Commons and particularly in the Senate and as an associate in the government from 1878, until his appointment as Lieutenant Governor of Manitoba and his return to the Senate as an independent member of this body, I was on as intimate terms with him as any one could possibly be. All that has been said of him by the hon. Secretary of State is literally and absolutely correct. I do not know that Senator Aikins had an enemy anywhere. From 1854, he was elected as a member of the Liberal party, and remained so until circumstances arose which necessitated dropping strong party feelings in order to bring about confederation of the provinces. He became a member of what was termed the Coalition party. While I freely admit the reason given by the hon. Secretary of State for the deceased senator remaining with and under the leadership of the late Sir John Macdonald, was probably the result, to a certain extent, of those charming fascinating manners of the late leader, I should like to go a little further and say from my personal knowledge and intercourse with Mr. Aikins, in addition to the attractions which characterized the late leader of the Conservative party and gave him such an influence over those with whom he was associated, there were other reasons why he remained with the Conservative party. Those reasons were that he had come to the conclusion that the policy of that party, the principles which had brought them together, were best suited to the interests of the country. From my personal and intimate knowledge of the late senator, I do not think any personal likes or dislikes would have induced him to depart from that which he believed to be absolutely right.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We differ, as the hon. gentleman very properly says, in accordance with the constitution of our minds, and our association, on matters governing the country as in other matters, and in that respect he was led. I have reason to know and believe, from thoroughly conscientious convictions of what was right. Of late he suffered from physical infirmities and it was only through the care, attention and devotedness of his family that his life was spared to them for so long a time. It is seldom that a man who has been, like the late senator, half a century in public life and actively participating in all great questions which have agitated the country during that period, passes to his eternal rest without a single word ever having been uttered, or an insinuation made against his reputation for honesty and sincerity. This will be a pleasant reflection for his family, and must be to all who, like the hon. Secretary of State and myself, had known him for so many years. It will be well for those of us who have served our country in accordance with what we believe to be right for so long a period, if we can leave to our families and friends a reputation of a like character. I deeply regret the loss of one whom I have known and respected so long. No less than three of our fellow-senators, have passed away since the beginning of this session. How many more will be taken from us before next session no mortal can tell ; but I hope when our turn comes, that we may leave behind us such a character and reputation as that of our late friend and colleague, Senator Aikins.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—As the only representative in the Senate of the home district which the late senator represented in public life, I may be pardoned for adding a few words to what has been so well said by the two hon. gentlemen who have just spoken. Senator Aikins was widely known throughout the district from which he came. He was personally known to a very large number of those who elected him in the first instance to positions of public trust, and he was largely known in later years by a still larger circle of people throughout that community. He was considered to be a man of sound judgment and business capacity. He was known to be possessed of an upright mind and many high qualities of personal character and individual worth. Possessing the attributes in a community where he was so well known for many years, it will not be amiss to say that he has lived respected and died regretted by a very large circle of friends and acquaintances.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I cordially concur in all that has been said of our late colleague. I wish to call attention to the fact that we of Manitoba also had an acquaintance with Mr. Aikins as governor of our province, where he, by his honourable record, endeared himself to people of all parties, and left the province regretted by every one who had the pleasure of his acquaintance and knowledge of his high ideals in the office which he held. He bore in this House a very high record as senator, and he also held what may be considered the higher position as governor of the province of Manitoba, to the satisfaction of the people of that province, and his departure was regretted by them when his term of office expired.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

MILITIA ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The Order of the Day being called :

Committee of the Whole House on Bill (5) An Act respecting the Militia and Defence of Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Speaker do now leave the chair.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We have not yet received the French version of this Bill. I consented the other day to the second reading on condition that we would have the Bill in French before going into committee. I think it was the hon. minister himself who promised that that would be done.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did so, and I do not know the cause of the delay.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Possibly the hon. member, in consideration of the circumstance, will withdraw his objection.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—If the hon. minister will consent to postponing the third reading of the Bill until it is printed in French, I shall request my hon. friend from Stadacona to withdraw his objection ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—With the understanding that we shall have the French edition before the third reading, considering the session is so advanced, I am willing to withdraw the objection, but I protest at the same time against this way of dealing with the Senate, and particularly with the French element of this House. We have a right to have the Bill in French.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No doubt of it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We should have it, not so much for the use of the House, but if I had had copies of it some time ago, I would have been in a position to make suggestions that I cannot make now. I withdraw my objection on the understanding that we are to have the French edition of the Bill, before the third reading.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman is quite within his right. The Bill should have been translated into French. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman is aware of the circumlocution through which these Bills have to go. I have represented the facts to my colleagues and suggested a change. Those Bills are translated, and sent down to the Bureau and printed in due time, but we have a gentleman at the head of the translating branch in the House of Commons who piques himself on having a particularly French style of language, and he alters line after line and page after page. The hon. gentleman would be surprised if I showed him the alterations that are simply changing words without changing the meaning. I do not think that is proper. Delay arises not alone in this particular case, for I have had occasion to complain of it repeatedly; the translation department is delayed in consequence of this gentleman choosing to make his changes after the translation is completed and in print. It is not fair or right. There is no reason why this Bill should not have been translated a week or a fortnight ago. The changes made by the House of Commons during the past week have been comparatively trifling, and are limited to a few paragraphs and there is no justification or excuse for this delay. It ought not to be tolerated, and I propose to express my opinion to the members of the government who have control over that gentleman. If he is so particular about the translation and wants it in particular French he should do it himself. It is done by other men who are probably as good translators as he is, and then after they have devoted their time and attention to the work, he makes changes in it. I have brought it to the attention of the Prime Minister and have showed where this gentleman has altered words where it made no important difference and there was no justification for it whatever, except that he has individual ideas of his own about translation.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I would add this information, that in the House of Commons, the French translation of that Bill has been completed. Only the amendments made since the Bill was reported from committee had to be translated. That is why there is no excuse for the delay in printing the French edition.

The motion was agreed to.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 2, sub-clause (g),

(g.) 'On active service,' as applied to a person subject to military service, means whenever he is enrolled, enlisted, drafted or warned for service or duty during an emergency, or when he is on duty, or has been warned for duty, in aid of the civil power.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—When a man is enrolled, does that mean when he is on active service ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is to be read with the remainder of the sentence. The mere enrolling would not put a man on active service, but when he is enrolled for service or duty during an emergency.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The interpretation of this Bill is embodied in the sub-clauses of this second clause. 'Emergency' is defined in sub-clause (b) and it 'means war, invasion, riot or insurrection, real or apprehended.' Are we to understand that this applies to every man when he is enrolled ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—An ordinary enrolment would not be an enrolment under this section; it is only when he is required for active service, for the purpose set forth.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—To understand that properly, the punctuation should be different.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the clause can have only one meaning ; he is on active service only during an emergency or when he is called out in aid of the civil power.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The word 'subject' covers it all. It only refers to conditions which arise when he is on active service.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The law says that active service means whenever he is enrolled.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Enrolled for what purpose ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—'Enrolled, enlisted, drafted, or warned for service or duty.' That applies to the word 'warned.'

The CHAIRMAN—Just so soon as he is warned, he is on active service.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There are three circumstances to which the words 'active service' apply. First he must be enrolled before he becomes a member of the corps. Then he may be warned and called out in cases of emergency; but, when he is on duty, there are other duties besides those which pertain to aiding the civil power. The words 'active service' would apply to a man on any duty after he has become enrolled. Active service means men who are enrolled and called out in case of an emergency, or to any duty, or being warned for duty in aid of the civil power.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Will any reasonable amendment we may offer be accepted ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Certainly, if it be made apparent that it would improve the Bill. The Bill is here for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I know a Bill was in the other House recently, and they would not permit a single amendment, because they said if any amendment were accepted it would defeat the Bill in the Senate. We want to know if the same rules apply here ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume at this stage of the Bill, if it were a mere technical point, it would not be done ; but on any point involving a principle I think it is open to the Senate to make a change. It is a matter of opinion whether the changes would be necessary or not. The Bill has undergone a close scrutiny, and has been before the Department of Justice, and has engaged the attention of experts for a considerable time. So that on a cursory examination one would not hastily want to make a correction unless it was proper.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am surprised my hon. friend should ask a question. Do not we all know that this Bill is sent down to us to be swallowed en bloc. Sent to us at this late stage. is it not plain that such is the case ? We are just to read it over.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A much more intricate Bill passed the House of Commons on Saturday where they were afraid to make a change. That is a Bill which the Bank of Commerce devoted a great deal of time to, where they would not allow a single change to be made. They recognized that there was a sound principle in it, and unless for some good purpose it was not desirable to make any change in it, and I presume the same principle would guide us here.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think if the hon. Secretary of State gave a short answer and said 'Yes, if it meets the approval of the government,' he would have answered the whole question at once. It is just possible he might have a new Bill to amend the Bill we have just passed. We have already amended two Bills passed this session, and I think the attention of the Secretary of State has been called to a Bill where amendment of a serious character has been made. Whether they propose to amend it or not I do not know, but that has nothing to do with this question. I am very much inclined to think that the statement, particularly broadly made by my hon. friend to my right, is the correct one. I question very much whether any amendment, no matter how pertinent or how necessary, would be passed. We have a Bill for the purchase of a railway coming up next, although I believe it is not yet before us, just of the same character.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 3,

3. The Interpretation Act and section 2 of this Act shall apply to all regulations, orders and articles of engagement lawfuly made or entered into under this Act.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Why is the word 'lawfully' inserted in this clause ? Who is the judge ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is the existing law.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That reason might be given to children. but it is really no reason.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 4.

4. The command in chief of the militia is declared to continue and be vested in the King, and shall be exercised and administered by His Majesty or by the Governor General as His representative.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In this clause the words are 'Commander in Chief of the Militia' and in the former Act the words were 'Commander in Chief of the Land and Naval Militia.' There is a distinction here between the existing statute and this Bill. This applies only to the land militia ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose we shall have no wars between now and next session to know how the militia will succeed ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I hope not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Taking the explanation of the hon. Secretary of State, and looking at the time, we will find the reason is this : the defence of the country is to be divided between the Minister of Militia and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries would be the head of the Admiralty and the Minister of Militia the head of the land forces.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Where is the Minister of Agriculture?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He is to be general superintendent, to supervise the other two; in other words whenever he has any political object to accomplish he will interfere and become the acting head, and perhaps the Minister of Militia may very conveniently be out of the way, so as to enable him to accomplish the political ends he has in view. That is the only explanation I can conceive, and I now give it to the minister. Perhaps the Secretary of State can explain why it is the two defensive branches of the country are to be under two heads ? In the past it has been under the one head, and it should be so, I think, now—that is, the general supervision. It does not follow that because the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has to do with some of the vessels that are navigating the river, that the supervision of the naval force should be relegated to him. I can only give one reason for it myself, and that is we do know that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries objected to take what we considered to be—I do not consider it—an inferior position in the cabinet unless certain duties that pertained to other departments were relegated to him, so that he could have a certain amount of patronage at his disposal for his friends. That is the plain interpretation of it. We do not know what has been done altogether, but we know to a certain extent; that is that a portion of the duties pertaining to the Minister of Public Works has been transferred to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The principle which guided them in doing it might be applied to every department of the government, but I do not know any reason why the Minister of Militia should not have supervision of the construction of a drill shed and everything that pertains to it, because he really knows more about it than the Minister of Marine and Fisheries can possibly do. I have given hon. gentlemen my reasons why I think this change has been made. It is to take from one minister and give to another, in order to make the department over which the Hon. Mr. Prefontaine presides more important than the other. That is the only reason I can suggest for it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The question before the committee just now is clause 4 of the Bill, and the objection taken is that there is nothing said about the naval militia. This clause provides that the command in chief of the militia is declared to continue and be vested in the King, and that covers the naval militia as well as the land force ; we have no other military force in Canada except militia. We have no troops which are, in law, regular troops; so that when you vest in the King the command in chief of the militia you vest in him the command of all the military forces in Canada.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That does not include the navy.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It appears to me it does. It includes naval militia as well as land militia.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The militia means all the military force in Canada; but we draw a clear distinction between militia and naval force.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We were told a moment ago that the term 'militia' was to be applied only to land forces, and not to the naval force.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The naval forces have not been created, I understand?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—So that this bill does not provide for it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—There was a sum in the estimates which was withdrawn. A proposition was to come before the House of Commons, but it was withdrawn. So why discuss this question now ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. minister says it does not apply to the naval forces.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—What naval forces are there in Canada to-day ? Until the forces are created we are only talking about air.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The present law provides for a military naval defence. What is the use of people attempting to draw such hair-splitting distinctions as has just been done ? It is simply a question asked very pertinently, why were the two forces put under separate heads, and a simple explanation could have been given to that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The Bill states that it is a measure respecting the Militia and Defence of Canada, and we have the Minister of Marine and Fisheries announcing that he is about introducing a Bill for the creation of a naval militia. There is a clear intention to separate the authority, and the changing of those words shows that there is such a determination ; still, notwithstanding all that, we are calling the Bill a Bill respecting the Militia and Defence of Canada.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I will call the attention of the hon. minister to the law as it stands to-day. The law reads : 'The command in chief of the land and naval militia.' And 'the land and naval militia' is stricken out all together and the words 'The commander in chief of the militia,' substituted. In the law as it stands to-day, it says 'By His Majesty' that means personally. Could we have any explanation why this change to-day ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Under the British North America Act, the Governor General represents His Majesty.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We are not speaking of the present Bill at all, but under the old law it was by Her Majesty personally.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Was that not absurd ; how could Her Majesty command personally ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I thought what was in the law before was absurd enough, and we should remedy it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The only reason suggested is that stated by the hon. Secretary of State, that the Governor General represents His Majesty, and when the words 'His Majesty' are mentioned in any of the clauses, it means the Governor General. The Governor General in Council means the action of Council sanctioned by the Governor General. Hence, I do not see any necessity for striking out the words 'His Majesty.' If 'His Majesty' were left in the Act as it was, then the Governor General as he is represented here would exercise the same right through the powers that he received from the Crown, and this seems to me to be another step in the direction indicated by the Solicitor General in London the other day, that it is to cut another of the links that connect the two countries. Obliterate the word wherever you can, as it has been throughout the whole of the Bill, and it will be understood, by those who give the matter any consideration, looking at the past utterances of certain political gentlemen and leaders of opinion, in this country, that cutting adrift is really what it means. I do not know that any good is to arise from discussing that point ; because my opinion is that if you move an amendment to substitute the words to which the hon. gentleman has called the attention of the Senate, and make the Bill similar in character to the old law in this respect, it would be voted down. I have taken this opportunity to give utterance to my sentiments and put them on record as to why this change was made, and because I think we are advancing in that direction as fast as we can by the action of the present party.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I feel bound to disclaim the hon. gentleman's idea that the changes made in the Bill have in any way a tendency in the direction he indicates. The best tie between this country and the mother country is the recognition of this country in the management of its own domestic affairs. That will be the strongest tie, when other ties will fade away, that will preserve Canada to the empire. It is our free system of government which makes us fully appreciate the value of the union of the empire. No other tie can be as strong as the appreciation of the liberty and privileges we enjoy under the Union Jack, and there is not the slightest fear that the mere expression of words, will have any meaning at all to weigh in the balance with the feelings of loyalty that exist among the Canadian people. The surest and strongest tie is a representative form of government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I quite agree with the hon. gentleman, as far as the vast majority of the people are concerned.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am surprised at the hon. Secretary of State taking the remarks of the hon. gentleman seriously. The hon. gentleman is in active politics, and is plying the game now that was played in 1900, and as fruitlessly, I hope.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has no right to say I am playing a game. I am uttering a sentiment which I believe to be true and correct.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—We are all doing that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have very great doubt. While the hon. gentleman has imputed to me motives that I do not entertain, he must not be surprised if he gets a retort as long as I keep within parliamentary usage. I intend to give utterance to my sentiments on this and on other occasions, and the hon. gentleman may do precisely the same; and when I do so, and when I object to his statements, I shall not tell him he is making them from party motives and insincere purposes. I take it for granted he is sincere, and I hope he will give us credit for being sincere.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. leader of the opposition should not be the only one to impute motives.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 5,

5. There shall be a Minister of Militia and Defence, who shall be charged with and be responsible for the administration of militia affairs and of the fortifications, ordnance, ammunition, arms, armouries, stores, munitions and habiliments of war belonging to Canada, including the initiative in all matters involving the expenditure of money.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Are we to understand by this clause that there are occasions when the Governor General is not the representative of the Crown?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It is just a re-enactment.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not care what was in the Act previously. If all the Act must remain as it is, we do not need this Bill at all; but if we want to improve the law, we should try to do so.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Would it be an improvement to say the Governor General was not the representative of the King? If the Governor General is the representative of the King, why not put in those words? How could he act differently?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is really no object in having the King's name mentioned in this. It is on a very much broader foundation. The fifteenth section of the British North America Act provides that the commander-in-chief is declared to be vested in the Queen. That is the sovereign. The sovereign of the Dominion is the head of the army and navy of Canada.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Suppose there is a levee en masse ordered by the Governor General, and the government should say: 'Oh, we have no authority to interfere in that case, because in the law it is provided that the Governor General is acting as a representative of the Crown'?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But under our system of government, he must act with the consent of his advisers, just as in England.

On sub-clause 2,

2. The Governor in Council may, from time to time, make such orders as are necessary respecting the duties to be performed by the minister.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the old law with slight amendments. The words 'in all matters involving expenditure' are left out.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is an inversion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think it is a good change. I have no fault to find with it. Then the Minister of Militia and Defence is left out.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 7,

7. The Governor in Council may appoint a militia council to advise the minister on all matters relating to the militia which are referred to the council by the minister. The composition, procedure and powers of the council shall be as prescribed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is with reference to the appointment of a militia council. The Secretary of State, when he introduced the Bill, gave us the names of those whom it was suggested would constitute the council. Would he be kind enough to repeat those names ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The minister himself will preside. Then there will be the chief of the staff, which is a new appointment. That has not existed before. Then the adjutant general , the master general of ordnance, the deputy minister, the chief accountant of the department—they are the advisory board.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The explanation given in the other House of the reasons which led to this change, was to adopt as much as possible the principle which has been adopted in England, the appointment of a council who are to advise. This is, I must confess, a very poor imitation of that which has been enacted in England. If the hon. senators will look at the recommendation which has been adopted by the council in England and will consider for a moment the position of that council, they will see a vast difference between that which is proposed by this clause in Canada, and that which is in force in England. In England, the council is totally independent of the militia, and independent of parliament. Here, if the appointments are made as has been indicated by the hon. Secretary of State, they become mere creatures of the minister. He has the same officers at his disposal at the present moment as he will have if this council is appointed. I do not know any clause in this Bill, so far as I have been able to investigate it, that defines the powers given to this council. In England they are vastly different. Their powers are defined, and it was further provided that this council must agree upon any recommendation which is made to the government, and that if any one of them disagrees with his colleagues, he has to leave the council, the same as a member of the government who disagrees with any policy which may be proposed by the cabinet, he has to surrender his own individual opinion or retire. Who are the parties who are to compose this council in England. First of all, the council is to be composed of the Secretary of State for War. He is the head of the department and occupies a position in the cabinet similar to that which is occupied by the Minister of Militia in Canada; then we have the chief of staff. The inspector who is to be appointed is supposed to take the place of the chief of the staff ; then the adjutant general and the quartermaster, and the master general of ordnance. These are all men occupying high and responsible positions in the force in England, and the civil members would be the parliamentary Under Secretary of State for War and the Provincial Secretary. The permanent Under Secretary of State for War is to be secretary, and he occupies a position somewhat similar to that of the deputy head in this country. The duties that are laid down for these officials are that the Secretary for War is responsible to the Crown and to parliament, as our Minister of Marine would be, and would be the means of communication with parliament, and the first department—that is the military policy in all its branches—the war department, intelligence, mobilization, training, military history, and higher education in the war regulations. These are the duties. In the third military branch the duties would embrace transportation, &c., while the Secretary of State would have the management of the civil part of the business, which would be the financing, looking up the estimates, and so on. It is not necessary that I should take up time in going into that. Taking the summary of the duties, the minister is responsible for operations of war, &c., but I will not weary the House with that. I propose to show what these particular recommendations were, that is the alternative adopted by the government. I am reading now from 'The Broad Arrow,' the military gazette of England, under the head of 'Army Council.' The fourth paragraph reads as follows :

> 4. The members of the Army Council will act in a dual capacity (a) as colleagues of the Secretary of State at the council table, and (b) as superintendents of the several branches into which the business of the War Office will be divided.
> 5. The responsibility of the Secretary of State to parliament and to the country for the administration of the military forces will in no sense be diminished, but it will be shared by the members of the council.
> 6. The council will decide all questions of military policy and all important questions affecting more than a single branch of the War Office.

7. The decisions taken will stand, and executive orders will be issued in the name of the council as a whole. It thus becomes the duty of any military member or members of the council who may dissent from a decision taken either to resign office, or to accept a share of responsibility for the action involved. While therefore loyalty to the service should prevent any member from retaining office, if what he considers a vital principle of policy is contravened, loyalty to colleagues will prevent the opinions of individual members from becoming known outside the council room. The dissent of any member who does not thereupon resign is, by that fact, annulled, and he must accept his share of the consequent responsibility.

Now here is a council which is totally independent in character. They must agree with each other upon questions of policy affecting the army and the navy. How far will the appointment of the gentlemen to whom the Secretary of State has called attention come within the meaning and intention of the council? They are the appointees of the government of Canada, serving in a department over which the Minister of Militia presides, and, consequently, must become the mere echo of the minister himself as to matters of policy; and what will be the regulations to be adopted by the government in case those gentlemen differ from the minister? Does anybody suppose for a moment that the minister will surrender his opinion, and that he will allow these gentlemen, who are creatures of his own or of the government, to change the policy of the government? It seems to me so ridiculously absurd when you think of it in its application, that one can scarcely conceive the adoption of that policy under the circumstances suggested by the hon. Secretary of State. If we were to have an independent body to compose that council, and to advise the minister, who would not be subject to the dictation of the presiding officer—and I want the hon. Secretary of State to understand that I am not applying this principle to the present minister or any other minister, because if there is a change that same law will prevail, and the same power will be vested in the future minister as is vested in the present minister. But if the council was somewhat similar in composition to that appointed in England, and the regulations governing them were those that I have read as governing that council, then much good would result from it. I shall also read from the same report, in the paper from which I quoted on April 2, of the same year, as follows:

In part I, section III, of our report we have laid stress upon the need for effective inspection, and we have proposed the appointment of an inspector-general of the forces, with a staff of inspectors, 'subject to the Army Council.'

2. We have defined the duties of the inspector-general as 'those of review and of report upon the practical results of the policy of the Army Council within the financial limits laid down by the cabinet.' Thus he should 'form a judgment, either personally or through his staff, as the Army Council may direct, on the efficiency of officers and men, on the handling of troops, on the standard and system of training, on the suitability of equipment, and generally on all that affects the readiness of the forces for war.'

The important point as applied to our present position is that clause which refers to the efficiency of officers and men. Under this regulation, we could not have in England an interference with any member of the cabinet with the Inspector General, whose duty it is to do that which Lord Dundonald did in the case of the difference that arose in the 13th Scottish Light Dragoons in the eastern townships of Quebec. I look upon this clause as exceedingly important for the welfare of the militia in this country. If there is one thing more than another that would destroy the efficiency of the militia force in this country, it is the introduction of party policy. I do not say politics, because that can be used in a much wider sense, but I say party policy. I have had a good many years' experience in the volunteer force of Canada. I assisted in raising a volunteer corps as far back as 1857 and in that corps these officers were Conservatives and Liberals and, so far as my knowledge is concerned, either in that independent company or in the 15th Battalion with which I served during the Fenian raid, or in the 49th Battalion of which I was an officer for some years, the question of politics never entered into consideration, and many of our principal officers, captains, lieutenants and others belonged to the Liberal party. The colonel originally belonged to the Liberal party and I was connected with the other. Every man in this country when he comes to the conclusion that party politics will govern the selection of the officers of the force, must feel that it will interfere with the efficiency of the militia.

Paragraph 7 of the report of this commission recommends as follows:—

7. The inspector-general and his staff should have no executive or administrative functions. They are intended 'to provide the Secretary of State and the Army Council with eyes and ears.'

That is a very forcible statement. The inspector general must of necessity be an experienced army officer. The Minister of War in England may not necessarily be so, so that when you have an inspector general of large and extensive experience, it rests with him, under these regulations, as the report says, to provide the department with eyes and ears. The 7th paragraph continues :

And their reports should deal only with existing facts, pointing out defects, commenting upon efficiency, and thus enabling the governing body of the army to know the practical results of the measures it adopts. Their attention should be concentrated upon the question of the fitness or unfitness of the army for war.

Of course I can understand, the distinction there is between England, with a large standing army, and Canada dependent as it must be in the future altogether upon its volunteer force ; consequently, the same rigid rules will not in all cases be applicable here as in England. But, unless principles such as those which are laid down in this report to which I have called attention are adopted in this country, I fear that that council will be as great a farce as possibly can be conceived in the management of the militia. That is expressing a very strong opinion, but I express it for the reason I have already pointed out. The composition of the council is not of the character indicated in this report. and unless some principle of that kind be adopted, it will be of very little use. It will be nothing more nor less than what it is to-day. The minister at the head of the department will be, in the management of the affairs of the militia, paramount. He may consult those gentlemen but they are all, with the exception of one, the Inspector General, members of the Canadian Civil Service—if I may put it that way. The gentleman who is to be appointed Inspector General may be an Imperial officer or he may not. I have seen it indicated in the papers that the Minister of Militia and Defence has applied to the War Office at home for an Imperial officer to accept this position. The gentleman whose name has been mentioned is regarded as a very able and efficient officer by every one in Canada who has paid any attention to militia matters. He will be the only one who may be considered to be independent of the minister and the rest of the council, and even in the literal sense he will not be independent of him, because if he runs amuck, to use a very familiar expression, against the ideas of the minister or some other minister who desires to have certain things done, which probably the minister himself would not do if he were present, all they have to do is to treat him as they did Lord Dundonald, send him a cheque at 12 o'clock at night for fear he should make a claim for ten minutes more, and summarily dismiss him. That is the position, as far as this council in concerned. I have given expression to my own opinions, I do not desire to detain the Senate on this question longer than I have done, but the reading of this report carefully from beginning to end would throw more light upon the action of the Imperial government in the appointment of this council, than dealing with the few lines which we have in the Militia Bill without any explanation at all other than that indicated by the Secretary of State as to the composition of that council. We are without any knowledge of the regulations and instructions and the powers which are to be given to this council in Canada ; we are told nothing and will simply have to wait patiently to see what the result will be. I sincerely hope, without being accused of uttering sentiments from a party standpoint, in the interests of the militia, that the head of the force in Canada will adopt, as far as at all practicable, the rules and regulations that have been laid down in this very exhaustive report made by the commission appointed by the Imperial government. If they do that and divest it altogether of the curse of partyism which has characterized, I regret to say, the management of the department for some little time past, I shall be very glad.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—For all time ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman would allow me to occupy another half hour. I have the documents under my hand to establish the facts which I have stated. I was simply going to remark that the appointment of this council, if the principle laid down by the British commission in their exhaustive report be applied as far as practicable to this country, will be a benefit to the force. Otherwise militia affairs will just degenerate, as they have been degenerating in the past, into confusion worse confounded.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am much obliged to the hon. leader of the opposition for having named to us the officials who comprise the imperial council. Every hon. member present who paid attention, will have noticed the marked similarity, comparing great things with small, between the officials he named as members of the council in England and those named under this Bill, except the Minister of Militia. The Secretary of War is the government official at the head of all those who compose the army council. The hon. gentleman named first the Chief of Staff, which was the same, the Adjutant General, the Quartermaster General, the Master General of Ordnance, the deputy minister who represents the department practically, and the Inspector General.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The Under Secretary for War.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, he is the deputy minister. They are practically word for word the same as the officials named in the army council in England. The army council framed in the Bill is an exact copy of the army council mentioned in the English Bill, Sir Frederick Borden has copied the very officials, except that the English council is larger necessarily. Sir Frederick Borden is made a member of that council.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill and asked leave to sit again.

The Senate then adjourned until three o'clock.

Second Sitting.

LAND TITLES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (158) An Act to amend the Land Titles Act, 1894.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the rule be suspended and that the Bill be read the second time. He said: This Bill is purely a technical one, relating to the registration of lands in the Northwest Territory. It passed through the House of Commons without debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What is the difference between the legislation repealed by this Bill, and the Bill itself?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am unable to explain what the difference is.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—So are we.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The House of Commons took it on the word of the Minister of the Interior. He thought it was necessary in the administration of the lands in the Northwest, and with that assurance the House passed it without comment.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And I suppose we are to pass it without any explanation?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, we can suspend the committee stage until I can get the information.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the House of Commons accepted it on the assurance of the Minister of Interior, we surely can, as a matter of courtesy to the hon. Secretary of State, accept it also. Without having the original Act before us with which to compare the Bill, it would be impossible to understand the changes. I am quite willing to accept the statement of the hon. Secretary of State.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am quite willing to accept it also, because he says he knows nothing about it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Surely my hon. friend is not serious in proceeding with the Bill until we have copies of it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am quite willing to postpone the further consideration of the Bill for the present. It is purely a technical Bill which is thought by the legal branch of the Department of the Interior to be necessary.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—There are many in this House, and throughout Ontario, who are interested in lands in the Northwest Territories, and they would like to know the meaning of this Bill. I should like very much to have some explanation of it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It reminds me of an incident that is related in the 'Pilgrim's Progress.' One of the famous witnesses against the 'Pilgrim,' when he had completed his evidence, said, 'Now if there is anything more necessary to say against these men so that they shall be put to death, we stand here ready to say it.' We ought to put a placard somewhere, that if the government wish to bring any more Bills we are ready to pass them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Bills are distributed now. This is following a very bad precedent. I could point out where in the past twenty or thirty Bills were passed just before the guns were fired for prorogation. We had not time to more than read the titles of them. I do not care to follow the example, and when I found the Bill was not distributed, I sent to find out why. It appears it was printed, but owing to some defect in our system here, we cannot get Bills distributed promptly. If hon. gentlemen desire it, I shall move that the committee rise and report progress.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is a way of meeting the difficulty. Just after confederation, Sir Alexander Campbell, when a member of the government which introduced the consolidation of the criminal laws of the Dominion, said it was utterly impossible to consider them, and he took the responsibility, though a member of the cabinet, of not only suggesting but moving that the consideration of any important Bills which came down from the House of Commons be postponed for consideration until the next session. A resolution of that kind was carried on a motion by Sir Alexander Campbell, and important legislation was necessarily delayed until the following session. That is the course which this House should pursue now if it has any respect for itself.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have just picked up a volume of the Debates, and I find that a very important Bill was brought up and some one asked Sir Alexander Campbell what it contained. His reply was 'I have not read the Bill,' and it was put through the stages in a short time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But the hon. gentleman knows we cannot amend a supply Bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I know, but here on the 17th of May the supply Bill, the St. John Harbour Bill, and the Tariff amendment Bill passed through their three stages.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Were they distributed or not?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know. Also the Judges' Salary Bill, the Inland Revenue Act amendment Bill, the Railway Subsidies Bill, the Windsor Branch Railway Bill, and other important measures were passed the day the House prorogued.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is that a justification for this course now?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is no justification whatever; only I plead that it is a practice which has prevailed, and a very bad practice. It seems to be impossible to get Bills from the House of Commons earlier in the session. Hon. gentlemen are kept here at a great inconvenience. Among the Bills which were passed, on the occasion to which I have referred, was the Chignecto Marine Transport Company's Bill. All those Bills were introduced and passed while the Senate was waiting for prorogation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is no justification for our passing Bills without knowing what they contain. I hold in my hand a Bill affecting the Customs: I have not had an opportunity to read it. That is a very important Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It certainly is. I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Hon. Mr. OWENS, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress and asked leave to sit again.

BOUNTIES ON LEAD-BEARING ORES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (169) An Act to further amend the Act providing for the payment of bounties on lead contained in lead-bearing ores mined in Canada.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the rules be suspended in so far as they relate to this Bill. He said: This Bill provides that any balance of the sum of five hundred thousand dollars unexpended at the close of any fiscal year may be carried forward to the next succeeding year, and payments may be made therefrom in such succeeding year of any portion of the forty per cent hereinbefore provided on such ores, and such only as are delivered for smelting in Canada, but were not actually smelted until after the close of the year in which they were delivered.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We have already this session passed a Bill dealing with this subject.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The other Bill to which my hon. friend has called attention was a Bill providing for the changing of the mode of payment of the bounty on the ore.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the allotment of the subsidy, the law had been interpreted that it could only operate from the time the Bill received the Royal assent, and the Bill to which my hon. friend refers gave an interpretation that the Bill was intended to operate from the time the resolutions were introduced in the House of Commons, some months before the House was prorogued last year, in October, and the resolutions were brought down some time before that and it was to give a retroactive effect to the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This Bill is to carry forward the unpaid portion of the five hundred thousand dollars voted for that purpose, so that you would not have to revote it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—So that it would not lapse.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—My hon. friend knows the sum of five hundred thousand dollars was voted for bounties. The understanding of the law was that if a sufficient quantity of lead was mined and smelted in the country to take up the entire five hundred thousand dollars, it would get only 60 per cent of the bounty earned from time to time on evidence submitted, the remaining forty per cent being held in reserve. The Bounty Act in its wording said that the bounty was to be paid in each fiscal year for the fiscal year. A doubt has arisen as to whether the full bounty established in the fiscal year that has closed, or rather the forty per cent of that which has been held over to the following fiscal year, could be paid. That is the doubt that is being removed by the Bill now before us. It is to pay to all parties who have earned the bounty the 40 per cent that has been held in reserve from last fiscal year to this fiscal year. It makes no change whatever in the total amount of bounty paid. The intention was to pay the full bounty when earned, and the 40 per cent was held in reserve until evidence was furnished that it was earned.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If the 60 per cent on the quantity of lead produced would absorb the whole five hundred thousand dollars, there would be nothing to carry over?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There will be 40 per cent.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Half a million dollars is the total extent of the bounty. Suppose the amount produced was sufficient at sixty per cent, to absorb the whole five hundred thousand dollars, nothing could be carried over? It is intended to assist the industry to the extent of half a million dollars.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I think my hon. friend is confounding two things. No greater amount than five hundred thousand dollars will be paid as bounty. That question does not arise this year, because the production of lead during the last fiscal year will not have amounted to more than fifteen or sixteen thousand tons, earning probably one-half the entire bounty, so that that question of the earning of five hundred thousand dollars or over, does not arise. Under the law, the mine owner who earns and receives the bounty directly from the government, is paid sixty per cent of the bounty when he furnishes evidence to the Inspector of Bounties under this Bill, a government official, that he has sent to the smelter a certain quantity of lead. On the production of that evidence the entire bounty is not paid ; forty per cent of it is held in reserve until further evidence is adduced that that ore has been smelted in Canada, and that all the requirements of the law have been complied with. That forty per cent held in reserve is a protection that the government has that the law shall be properly observed and that the bounty shall be properly earned. The Bounty Act said last year that five hundred thousand dollars was to be paid each fiscal year, and there is that forty per cent held in reserve for the protection of the government, the overplus of the fiscal year. A doubt has arisen whether it can be paid now to the miners who have earned the bounty, and this Bill is to remove all doubt, and to pay the men who have earned the forty per cent.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Must it be smelted in Canada ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Yes.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—What was paid last year ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—My information is that the government paid $225,000 or $230,000.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does this Bill provide for the payment of any balance that will remain on the first of the fiscal year ? Take the case pointed out by my hon. friend ; he says about half the money has been expended in bounties. Of that amount sixty per cent has been paid and forty per cent is coming due in the second year, but there remains some $250,000 that has not been paid at all. That is the balance of the five hundred thousand dollars ; will that balance which was not earned in the first year, be earned in the second year ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—No. The unearned balance lapses. It does not continue.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If sixty per cent amounted to $240,000, the forty per cent added will make the total less than half a million dollars, even after this Bill passes.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill passed through its final stages under a suspension of the rules.

BILL INTRODUCED

Bill (170) An Act to amend the Customs Act.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN

DEPARTURE OF LORD MINTO.

MOTION.

The following message was received from the House of Commons :

On motion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, seconded by Mr. R. L. Borden (Halifax), an address was voted to His Excellency the Governor General, in the following words :—

To His Excellency the Right Honourable Sir Gilbert John Elliot, Earl of Minto and Viscount Melgund, of Melgund, county of Forfar, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom, Baron Minto of Minto, county of Roxburgh, in the Peerage of Great Britain, one of His Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, Baronet of Nova Scotia, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George, &c., &c., Governor General of Canada.

May it please Your Excellency :

We, His Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Commons of Canada in parliament assembled, desire to express our sincere regret at the approaching termination of your official connection with this country.

Your Excellency will bear from our shores our high respect and esteem.

It must be a gratification to Your Excellency to reflect that the period of your administration of the affairs of the Dominion has been one of marked prosperity on every hand, during which the development of Canada has increased at a rate unexampled in its previous history.

We are sensible of the fact that Your Excellency has watched our progress with sympathetic interest, and has omitted no opportunity of familiarizing yourself with the people and resources of the Dominion. While we cannot expect to enjoy, in the same exclusive degree as in the past, the advantage of Your Excellency's personal interest in our affairs, we venture to hope that we may continue to possess in the Earl of Minto a friend and advocate in the Imperial parliament and in the councils of the Crown.

We beg that when you deliver up to the King the charge committed to your hands by our late revered Sovereign Lady Queen Victoria, you will not fail to assure His Majesty of the unalterable loyalty and devotion of the people of Canada to the Throne, and their abiding affection for the Motherland.

We feel that any expressions of regrets at Your Excellency's departure would be imperfect that failed to include the gracious lady who for the past six years has so acceptably fulfilled the duties devolving upon the wife of the Governor General of Canada, and whose kindly interest in every movement having for its object the alleviation of suffering and the brightening of the lives of the poor, have endeared Her Excellency to all classes of the community.

In bidding farewell to Your Excellency and the Countess of Minto, we desire to assure you that you take with you our warmest wishes for your future welfare and happiness.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is my pleasant duty to bring to the notice of the Senate the address adopted by the House of Commons to His Excellency the Governor General on the early termination of his official connection with this Dominion, and to invite the Senate to join in this address, a proposal which I feel will meet with your cordial approval.

When in October, 1898, His Excellency accepted the trust committed to him by his sovereign, we felt that in his coming to Canada it was not alone to discharge the high and important duties of his office but that it would afford him an opportunity to revive many pleasant memories and to renew friendships formed in years gone by.

Long before his appointment to the office of Governor General he knew something of this country and of its conditions, having been Military Secretary to Lord Lansdowne from 1883 to 1885.

Among all classes of the Dominion there is a consensus of opinion that during his term of office he has so ably discharged the duties incidental to the high position as to earn the warm approval of the Canadian people. During his term of office he has frequently visited all sections of the Dominion and has acquired an intimate knowledge of the conditions existing in every part of Canada. He has entered into the spirit of our Canadian sports, has encouraged every movement having for its object the mental and moral improvement of the people. He fully appreciates the resources that Canada possesses and recognizes the great possibility of her future; and while his official connection will shortly terminate, we may rely on Lord Minto proving an earnest and valuable friend in the discussion of all questions arising in Great Britain affecting Canada's interest.

Knowing as thoroughly as he does the sentiments of the Canadian people, it will be a satisfaction and pleasure to His Excellency to be able to convey to the sovereign an assurance of the loyalty and fidelity of his subjects in the Dominion and to assure him that their allegiance is not dependent upon the presence or absence of commercial treaties.

Canada has given, in the past, ample proof of her warm allegiance to the empire. As I have often said on former occasions, the grounds upon which our allegiance are based are broad; they are based on those solid principles which have given to this country the freest institutions that prevail in any land on the face of the earth. The observance of the treaty made in 1760, after the fall of Quebec, and the manner in which the British government has carried out that treaty with a large element of our population, has won their lasting gratitude, and inspired a loyalty that nothing can disturb. It is based on principles that are so dear to them that they recognize that any change must in a great measure diminish those privileges. Then, the population of the maritime provinces and of Ontario has been largely influenced by the earliest settlers, the United Empire Loyalists, who made very great sacrifices rather than desert the flag. Their influence has had a marked effect on the sentiment that prevails throughout the country. No Canadian can boast of a prouder lineage to-day than to be a descendant of the United Empire Loyalists, who made sacrifices unparalleled in the history of the last century.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend who says 'hear, hear,' knows something about it, because the United Empire Loyalists settled in the district from which he comes, and a large part of the population there to-day is of United Empire Loyalist descent. That sentiment has gone beyond the lineal descendants of the original settlers and has been the germ that has helped to keep alive a deep feeling of loyalty for the mother country. His Excellency can assure the British people that they need not fear, if reciprocal arrangements are not made at once with Canada, that there is any possible danger of our forming an alliance with the country to the south of us. That is one of the absolute impossibilities in the destiny of this people.

The address naturally refers to the gracious lady who has presided over Government House during the last five and a half years, and who has won golden opinions not only by her charm of manner, but by the earnest way in which she has entered Canadian life. Associated as her name is with the establishment of cottage hospitals she will long be gratefully remembered by the people of Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved, seconded by Sir Mackenzie Bowell, that the message be taken into consideration now.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved, seconded by Sir Mackenzie Bowell, that the blank space in the address be filled in with the words 'Senate and.'

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved, seconded by Sir Mackenzie Bowell, that His Honour the Speaker do sign the joint address on behalf of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and it was ordered that a message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House that the Senate had agreed to the joint address by filling up the blank space therein with the words 'Senate and.'

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I would ask the hon. Secretary of State to inquire for those returns, concerning the steamer 'Neptune' and Joseph Painchaud, that I asked for at the beginning of the session. The hon. gentleman was good enough to give me this morning a return in response to my motion for information about the steamer 'Gauss,' which I moved for later in the session. The other two returns were asked for at the beginning of the session. The papers in the case of the steamship 'Neptune' were all ready at the end of last session, but were not brought down.

THE MILITIA BILL.

HOUSE AGAIN IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (No. 5) An Act respecting the Militia and Defence of Canada.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We were discussing clause 7 when the House rose at one o'clock and we heard from the hon. Secretary of State that in his opinion the speech made by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition was a confirmation of the course followed by the government in the creation of the proposed Militia Council. I think he did not catch all the remarks made by my hon. friend on my right? The distribution of the duties to the English Military Council settles the matter. Nothing of the kind is provided for in this Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That would not be by statute. The instructions here have not been prepared. They would probably be on the same lines.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We have nothing to assure us that even the composition of the Militia Council will be on those lines. The law says:—

> The composition, procedure and powers of the council shall be as prescribed.

Hon. Mr. POWER—By the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I'm very glad the hon. gentleman for Halifax gives that information.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The Bill gives that information.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The powers of the council shall be as prescribed. The Bill says the Governor in Council may appoint a Militia Council to advise the minister on all matters which are referred to the council by the minister. If we refer to subsection 1 of clause 2, we find:

> (i.) 'Prescribed' means prescribed by this Act or by regulations.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Read I and J.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—J reads as follows:

> (j.) 'Regulations' means regulations made by the Governor in Council under the authority of this Act.

And nothing in this clause refers to the regulations. The composition, procedure and powers of the council shall be 'as prescribed.'

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND—It is by the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is enacted in clause No. 2 that when the word 'prescribed' is used it is used in the manner pointed out by subclause 1 of No. 2. It means prescribed by this Act or by regulation. Is there anything in this Act that prescribes it?

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND—No, nothing.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is there anything in the regulations which prescribes that?

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND—Nothing.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—On what do we rely? Prescribed by whom, when, and in what way? Will it be prescribed by regulations, or by Order in Council, or by what?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it is perfectly plain. The regulations must be approved by the Governor in Council, whatever they are.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the hon. gentleman admit that 'regulation' and 'Order in Council' are two different things?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Those regulations must be confirmed by Order in Council. It is perfectly clear.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is not clear at all. What will be the position of this Militia Council? The hon. Secretary of State told us that probably the militia council will be composed of the minister, the chief of the staff, the adjutant general. Is the deputy adjutant general to be a member of this council?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Adjutant general. I gave the hon. gentleman the names. There was the Chief of Staff—that is a new appointment—the Adjutant General, the Quartermaster General, the Master General of Ordnance, the deputy minister of the department, and the chief accountant of the department.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Is the chief of staff to be an imperial officer?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Where is the chief inspector in that?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The chief accountant would stand in the same relation in Canada as the inspector would in England.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Clause 31 reads as follows:

31. There may be appointed an officer, who shall hold rank not below that of colonel in the militia or in His Majesty's regular army, who may be, subject to the regulations and under the direction of the minister, charged with the military inspection of the militia, and such officer shall be paid at such rate, not exceeding six thousand dollars per annum, as is prescribed.

Will this military head form part of the military council? Of course, but he is not included in the list given by the hon. member. The chief inspector——

Hon. Mr. POWER—No; he is not an executive officer.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have no such official.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman from Halifax is not a member of the cabinet, and cannot answer.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman had better confine himself to the Bill, and not make any reflections on me. As a member of the committee, I have a right to answer questions, and the hon. gentleman has no right to cast reflections.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman has a right to answer questions wrongly.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The chief inspector, by virtue of his office, cannot be one of the council. The duties of the inspector general are to see that the orders of this council are properly carried out, and the inspector general in England is not a member of the council, neither is he to be a member of the council here.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is it to be the duty of the chief inspector to see that the orders of the council are carried out? If it is the duty of the chief inspector to see that the orders are carried out correctly, then he is qualified to act as a member of that council, according to the arguments brought forward by the hon. gentleman from Halifax.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Not at all.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman denies that the chief inspector is a member of the council, because he is an officer who is obliged to see that what the council has passed is carried out, and in that way he is on the same footing as the minister himself.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman thinks it is an absurd proposition, but it is a remarkable circumstance that in England they are adopting the same policy.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Clause 7 has been discussed a great deal. I have had forty-seven years' experience in military matters and was trained at Woolwich, where they knew more about it than the lawyers here. Clause 7 covers the whole thing. There is nothing in this Bill, except a few immaterial clauses, outside of clause 7. Clause 7 covers all we are aiming at. It takes from the General Officer Commanding all authority and power and vests it in the militia council. Clause 7 reads as follows :

7. The Governor in Council may appoint a militia council to advise the minister on all matters relating to the militia which are referred to the council by the minister. The composition, procedure and powers of the council shall be as prescribed.

We have had a great deal of trouble here. We have ministers of the Crown thoroughly responsible to the people of this country and to parliament, and they have had on many occasions to combat the views of general officers coming here from the old country, most distinguished, and most of them have been good officers. They have had their own views as to what should be done, and how it should be carried out—not with the present government, but with the late government. This takes it entirely out of the hands of the General Officer Commanding. It is sought to establish an auxiliary force in Canada, not a Canadian army, but a force organized for protection internally and externally, for I do not think any of us are prepared to subscribe to the doctrine that levee en masse, whatever it is to be, is to be for outside purposes. Although we may be very willing to aid, still we are not in any way bound to carry out any of the duties imposed on us by sending an army out from this country. We will co-operate and look out for the enemy within the gates rather than the enemy outside the gates. This clause removes the whole power and the whole administration of the Militia Department from any general coming here from any imperial office, and places it entirely in the hands of the government of the day, whoever they may be. I endorse that, and I think it is right. I do not find any fault with the Governor General appointing a council to act. There is nothing in the law which says they may not remove this council at any time. It is only for the moment. These appointees are not to remain for ever. They are subject to the will of the Governor General, who, after all, represents the Crown, and I presume in any case their term of office is not for ever. They are simply advisers, as I take it, to the Militia Department. Heretofore there has been a jumble. My hon. friend commanding the brigade from Stadacona, I think, will agree with me that in the past it has been everybody's business and nobody's business to administer the militia of Canada. The General Officer Commanding has his views and the minister has his views, and the minister is responsible to the country, and in many instances they could not come to a proper conclusion. Under this Bill all these officers that are appointed, such as have been named to-day, are simply creatures of the will of the government. There is no doubt about the fact that they are there to advise. Take the Master General of Ordnance, he is there to look after his department, and the Adjutant General looks after his department. You are providing heads of five, six or seven departments, each one working out his department, meeting in council and giving their advice as to what should or what should not be carried out. That does not in any way interfere with the rights of the Crown or with the government. That does not say their views are to be adopted, but at the same time it places the responsibility on each one of those branches, to carry out the branch under his charge, and to be able to carry it out in a way that will make each branch, if possible, permanent. I think there is a great deal in that. Hitherto we have had an adjutant general who really carried out the whole thing. All the officers that were under him before, in the militia branch, were under him. He was superior to them, and his view prevailed. To-day it is not so. This council, meeting together, will decide or discuss what is best for the militia of Canada. There are many things they may discuss. If I understand it properly—and I tried to read the Bill—the orders are passed by His Excellency in Council. His Excellency approves of them. Those orders stand, and in those orders are embraced the King's regulations, also following out the Army Act. They cover everything in respect to the discipline of the army and all regulations. These regulations as passed, were very imperfect. They improve from time to time. They were altered as it was thought best to alter them under the circumstances, but conflict very largely with the Queen's regulations and the Army Act. But the King's regulations, as they are to-day, are so elastic, that wherever the regulations and orders of the militia of Canada do not govern the conditions of the other, then the King's regulations come into force. Following that we have the discipline under the Army Act, which covers everything again. Therefore we had, first of all, the regulations and orders as passed by the officer commanding here, through the adjutant general, then confirmed by the Governor in Council, which embodies, as I said before, the Queen's regulations, and the Army Act. While those regulations are very good in their way, the day is passed for them to be operative. Everything has changed. Take the question of punishment, take the matter of drill, and many other questions which it is not necessary to go into—those are all to-day vested in the Governor in Council. I think it is a very wise provision, that instead of their being in the hands of the General Officer Commanding, whoever he may be—because we have had general officers so different from one another with regard to drills, and many other matters, it shall now be placed under a militia council. Canada is becoming a great nation, and there is no use discussing our militia from any other standpoint than that of the militia of a country that is bound in the future to make a great mark—that they should have the power of administering their own militia affairs. I cannot see any great harm in vesting in the government all the power to make and break the regulations, so long as they do not conflict with the Army Act and the imperial idea. I say that the Bill has provided for that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Clause 126.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—We are governed here, after all, by the Queen's regulations, and they cover the Army Act. I can see what my hon. friend on the other side of the House says, that there is power in the Bill for the minister to make these appointees of the council, but it does not say that he shall appoint this man or the other man. I think this clause is a good one. It is perfectly elastic. It allows the government to do anything they like, and I cannot believe that any government would take such steps as would be inadvisable, in regard to the militia of Canada, on whom in time of trouble, will depend the defence of our borders.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is the clause which brings us under the King's regulations ?

The CHAIRMAN—Clause 74.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Clause 74 reads as follows :

74. The Army Act for the time being in force in the United Kingdom, the King's Regulations, and all other laws applicable to His Majesty's troops in Canada and not inconsistent with this Act or the regulations made thereunder, shall have force and effect as if they had been enacted by the parliament of Canada for the government of the militia, and every officer and man of the militia shall be subject thereto from the time of being called out for active service, and also during the period of annual drill or training under the provisions of this Act, and also at any other time while upon military duty or in the uniform of his corps upon or within any rifle range or any armoury, or other place where arms, guns, ammunition or other military stores are kept, or any drill shed or other building or place used for militia purposes, or during any drill or parade of his corps at which he is present in the ranks, when going to or from the place of drill or parade, and also whether in uniform or not at any drill or parade of his corps at which he is present as a spectator.

2. Officers and men of the permanent force and members of the permanent staff of the militia shall at all times be subject to military law.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is in active service ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I take it the moment a militiaman has his uniform on and is out in the field, he is on active service ; while he has his uniform on he is subject to military discipline, and may be called to war. In the marginal note it says : ' Army Act applies.' The Army Act is too voluminous to deal with just now. It relates to court-martials and many things, to the warrant given to the general as to what he is to do when he is sent out to a colony. When His Majesty's general is in a colony, where there is trouble, he supersedes all officers in charge. If Canada becomes a theatre of war, the imperial government steps in and takes the responsibility of fighting and defending the country, but in the meanwhile the force we have to-day or to-morrow is a force raised as an auxiliary force to aid that force, and finally, so long as we remain an integral part of the British nation, to come under the imperial regulations. There are a few details in this Bill that do not amount to anything. If I am wrong in my view, I should like to be corrected, but my view is that clause 7 takes away from the general sent here from England all power, and vests it in the Governor General in Council, which is narrowed down to a committee of the departmental officers to carry it out, and my hon. friend says, and says correctly, that an officer will be senior here to be called the inspector——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Chief of staff.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The chief of staff will take the place of the General Officer Commanding, except that he does not take the powers of the general. He is merely there as a servant, so to speak, to administer what the government of the day decide on the recommendation of their council so appointed. I think when you have said that you have said everything. The Bill is a wise measure. Under it the government may do anything they like, so long as they do not interfere with the King's regulations and the Army Act. Sir Patrick McDougall was the best officer we ever had. He recognized that we had to have some kind of military organization of our own. He placed the Militia law on the statutes, or guided it. And he made a second line of defence, namely, the reserve. That still remains on the statutes, unless it has been altered by this Bill.

He gave us the regulations and orders which were the best that could be got for the moment, but we have passed through that stage. We have shown that we are able to go abroad and capture the King's prize at the ranges in England. We have shown that we could send men to the Soudan who acquitted themselves creditably; we proved that we could send 7,000 men to South Africa who could fight and come out of the struggle with honour. With that record before us, we can look forward with confidence to the future. I think there is no question on either side of the House that some alteration is necessary in our future organization. What is the good of having an army, even a civilian army, for I am not prepared to subscribe to the doctrine that we must raise a standing army to go fight abroad. I will not subscribe to the doctrine that we are prepared to tax this country heavily for a sentiment. We have nothing to do with many of those foreign questions. They are governed largely by conditions at home which make it imperative for the government of the day, whether they are seeking to hold themselves in power or to uphold the prestage of the Empire all over the world. Their views and ours might largely differ; but we might agree that if the nation was in trouble we would throw in our lot as far as possible to help them out. I do not think that Canada should ever subscribe to the doctrine that we have to be placed on a war basis and tax our people hundreds of millions simply to keep up an army when we need the money for our railways, canals and other public works necessary for the development of our country. Some years hence, when we may have passed away and others succeed us, and Canada has a population of 20,000,000 or 30,000,000, it will be time enough to decide whether we shall take part in the affairs of the world and possess an army or not. The government of the day has come to the conclusion that it will do the best it can under existing circumstances. We have some 40,000 men to train every year, and they say, give us the power to say what shall be done. What is the use of men walking about in brilliant uniforms if they cannot use rifles? We have shown that we have good marksmen and good oarsmen; we are not lacking in intelligence in this country. If our officers are not up to the mark, what is to prevent the government sending officers abroad to learn, as the Japanese have done. Our officers are bright and can be trained. Let them go abroad and learn, and come back here and take hold of our militia and put it into good shape. The government is right in saying 'We are prepared on our own responsibility to run our militia as we think fit. We are willing and anxious to have imperial officers come here and give us the benefit of their advice, but we are not prepared to have them say that they control the Canadian force to do with them as they think fit.' The grasp must be in the hands of the minister and not in the hands of any officer loaned us by the Imperial authorities. When this Bill which defines our position is passed, we shall get on very much better, and the Militia Department will be able to decide what is required and carry it out. There is a great deal to be said in favour of this Bill. The question of cadets, taking the boys in school and teaching them to shoot, even at short range—

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not think the hon. gentleman has a right to discuss the whole Bill on one clause of it.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—It all turns on that clause.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not see any reference to cadets in that.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—It says :

The composition, procedure and powers of the council shall be as prescribed.

Having that power, they have everything in their hands. They have stripped the general of all his powers, and have taken control of the militia, saving and excepting the King's regulations, and the Army Act prescribed by the parliament of Canada. We cannot make anything out of our militia more than an auxiliary force. I think it is the very best Bill for the present that can be produced. I am not going to say that it is perfect, or that what will answer to-day will answer a year or two hence, but it contains nothing very objectionable. There is nothing binding about it ; it can be changed hereafter if necessary. I agree with the leader of the opposition, that there should be a little more independence in that council. There is very little in it but departmental officers. I think the cavalry, whether mounted infantry or whatever you call them, should be represented on it. So should the artillery.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are represented by the Master General of Ordnance.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—He simply has charge of the munitions of war. In England when they had an ordnance department years ago, they had an officer of artillery, an officer of engineers, and a storekeeper, and the three of them made a board which was known as the board of ordnance. I do not find any fault with that, because it can be altered. I do not presume for a moment that the government will tie themselves up by anything they do to-day; it can be altered if necessary. There is no question of politics in this at all. We ought to adopt this Bill and depend on the government of the day, whoever they may be, to make such changes in the future as may be considered in the interest of the militia. I have made quite a study of this Bill, and have had a great deal of experience, because I have been commanding a regiment of cavalry for twenty years, and I must know something of the Army Act and other things connected with the force. I do not think the government could have brought in a better Bill than they have brought in to-day.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The military men have occupied a great deal of time in discussing this Bill. It would not be out of order, therefore, if on behalf of the peaceful citizens of the Dominion, I should offer a few observations with regard to clause 7. I have listened to the remarks of an ancient soldier of our Canadian army and the remarks of an active officer, the hon. member from Stadacona, and the remarks of an imperial officer, and who, I am glad to see, is to-day a Canadian officer. They have furnished a great deal of information, but the explanations of the hon. gentleman from Rothesay are amply sufficient to justify this House and the people of Canada that the policy of the government of the day is not one of militarism. We are not in this young country destined to become a military power. We have too much vacant land to fill to make militarism our policy and to cover fields of glory with our noble dead. The mission of this young country is to build up a prosperous, peaceful and happy people, and you cannot have peace, prosperity and a contented people where war is winging its deadly flight over the land. Under the circumstances, this Bill will appeal to the peaceful sentiment of this country, and why? All on account of clause 7. It is a mission of peace to the Canadian people, a guarantee that in the future we will not be involved in conflicts which are not our own, or which are not necessary for the national honour or safety—that we shall not be driven to war except when our national life shall be in danger or our national honour tampered with. Clause 7 puts the responsibility for embroiling this country in warlike manœuvres in the hands of men in whom we have confidence—the Governor General in Council. I have more confidence in the government of the day, whether Conservative or Liberal, than in any officer who may command the army or excite this country to go into an expenditure for warlike organization not necessary under existing conditions. Clause 7 will not allow an officer, whether he comes from Australia or from Downing Street or elsewhere, to dictate the militia policy of this country. It takes out of his hands that power which the late Lord Dundonald assumed——

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—He is not dead.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No, and I hope he will live long to enjoy his well-earned honours. He fought well for a warlike country, but when he came to this young country and asked us to do what the parent country was doing, when there was no necessity for it, he overstepped the mark. No doubt his intentions were good, but he lacked tact. Under this Bill the power to make preparations for war will be left in the hands of the minister on all matters relating to militia. I do not say whether the council suggested is complete or incomplete. It may be sufficient for the day, but, as the hon. gentleman from Rothesay has suggested, if it is not sufficient, the Act can be amended next year or the year after. The hon. member from Rothesay has given us valuable counsel as a military man, and I am prepared to accept it. I approve of the clause which takes the power from an individual officer, however well he may have served the Empire, and placing it in the hands of the government. We are a democratic people and want to be governed by democratic principles. That is the doctrine that will prevail in this country. When the government suggested clause 7 to put the amendment of the Militia Department in the hands of the minister, advised by a council, I think the Senate cannot do better than accept the suggestion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not propose to follow the hon. member for Rothesay or the hon. gentleman for Victoria (Hon. Mr. Cloran), but it would be interesting to know what there is in clause 7 that has any reference at all to the speeches which have just been delivered. I admired the good sense of the hon. Secretary of State when he shut his eyes and apparently took a nap during their delivery. I hope, Mr. Chairman, if I should stray from the clause under consideration you will call me to order. Clause 7 provides for the appointment of a council to advise the minister, but it will be observed that nothing can be considered by that council unless it is referred to them by the minister, and the minister is therefore absolute and the council has nothing whatever to do with it.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—What is the good of the council ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You had better ask the Secretary of State. I am not defending this Bill. I say the Bill is a great improvement on the present Act, and to a large extent I concur in the remarks of the hon. gentleman. I am discussing clause 7, which says the council is to advise the minister on all matters referred to the council by the minister.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Perfectly democratic.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not see much democracy in that. It is an absolute power vested in the minister. If that is democracy, according to the hon. gentleman, I do not understand the meaning of the word. Then it goes on to say :

The composition, procedure and powers of the council shall be as prescribed.

Whatever the Governor in Council may think proper to prescribe, the minister is absolute under this clause, and any suggestions that may be made by the council appointed to give him advice can only be upon such matters as the minister may refer to them. As to the question of militarism, I am quite prepared to discuss that when the question comes up, but it has nothing to do with this clause, nor does this clause affect in any way the meaning which would be attached to the word militarism. I do not know anybody in this country who is advocating that to-day, nor does this clause give power to the council to advise the minister whether we shall go to war or not, unless the minister asks advice of the council.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—In England who is the head of the military council ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The head of the council is the Minister of War. Just as the Minister of Militia will be the head of the council here.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend misunderstood me. I said that clause 7 took the heart out of every piece of the Militia Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Perhaps I do not read it in the same way my hon. friend does. I hold now in my hands the Regulations and Orders of the Militia in Canada. In that there is everything to prescribe what their duties are, and an attempt is made to show that under clause 7 all this falls into the hands of the council.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman will look at clause 126, he will find the powers he refers to are given to a large extent to the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That is the same thing again :

126. The Governor in Council may make regulations for carrying this Act into effect, for the orginization, discipline, efficiency and good government generally of the militia, and for anything requiring to be done in connection with the military defence of Canada.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman will read clause 7 he will see it refers to the powers of this council, that is all.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I look at it through a different pair of glasses. Powers are given to the Governor General in Council which are very wise, and therefore, quoting the clause that my hon. friend talks about is only a sequiter, one falling into the other, and that while the Governor in Council has the right of carrying it out under the other clause, he has at the same time appointed a council which makes those recommendations which they would pass under clause 127.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It depends altogether on what the Minister of Militia may refer to the council.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—You put the whole matter into the hands of the Minister of Militia, and he is advised by these officers.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They become his officers to the extent of the questions which are referred to them.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Exactly.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Would not the Governor in Council be superior to the minister ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—All the suggestions of the minister would be liable to be passed on by the Governor in Council ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The minister is responsible to parliament in the first instance, for the discharge of his duties.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Any emergency I suppose he would submit to the Council ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, and all appointments go before the Council.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The Governor General appoints the Militia Council.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—And the Minister of Militia is not supposed to adopt any serious policy without submitting it to the Council.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The Governor in Council names a Militia Council, and to that Militia Council refers the questions upon which he wants advice, and only those. I want to know what will be the composition of that Militia Council ? The Secretary of State gave me the names of the minister himself, the Chief of Staff, the Quartermaster General, the Director General of Ordnance, the deputy minister, the Adjutant General and the accountant. In discussing clause 7, to understand the subject, I refer the minister to sections 30 and 31. I know the whole Bill turns on clause 7. By clause 30, the government may appoint an officer that he brings from England or any place, called the Major General. By clause 31 he may appoint another officer taken from His Majesty's forces, called the Inspector General. The government is not obliged to have a commanding officer from abroad. They may select him from the militia, or from His Majesty's regular army. This officer is called the Major General. Is the Major General the Chief of Staff ? The hon. minister says that those who will compose the Militia Council will be the minister, the Chief of Staff. Who is the Chief of Staff ? Is it the Major General, the Inspector General, or the Adjutant General ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume it will be the senior superior military officer, whatever name you give him—I presume the major general. The chief of staff will be the highest officer in the service.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman said they would be the chief of staff and the adjutant general, but those two persons may be the same one. The adjutant general may be the chief of staff. Supposing the government does not bring from His Majesty's regular army, a major general, who is the chief of staff ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The general officer could not be chief of staff.

Hon. Mr. LANRDY—Why not ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Because he would not be the general officer.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Lord Dundonald was chief of staff. The next was deputy adjutant general Lord Aylmer ; so by this Bill, if a major general is not chosen in the militia who is the chief of staff, it is the adjutant general. Hon. gentlemen may say no, but it provides :

2. In the event of a vacancy in the office of general officer commanding, or in the absence of that officer from Canada, the Governor in Council may detach an officer of the headquarters staff, who shall be charged with the military command of the militia.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That is all right, he commands the militia.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The adjutant is actually in command. If that council was created to-day as commanding officer of the militia he would hold the first place after the minister, as the Secretary of State said, and besides that, he is the adjutant general.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Who is the adjutant general now ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Col. Aylmer.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Who is the commanding officer now ? Is it not Lord Aylmer ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The office to be filled yet is chief of staff. That is the only military office to be filled.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman is right there. Under this Act there will be no general.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—They must have one either chosen from the Canadian militia or from the British army.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—No, the chief of staff becomes general here, and is chief officer.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the hon. gentleman will look at clause 36, he will see that provision is made for the chief of staff :

36. The Governor in Council may establish a general staff, headquarters staff, and district staff, and may appoint a chief of the general staff and such officers to the respective staffs as are deemed necessary, and shall define their duties and authority.

The clause which provides for the General Officer Commanding is clause 30, and they are two totally different officers. I think the better way is to devote ourselves to the clause which is before the committee, and consider that on its merits. In the past there has been a sort of divided authority between the minister and General Officer Commanding, and there has been a great deal of conflict. I am not going into that, but the proposition under this clause is, that instead of having this General Officer Commanding, there shall be a Militia Council, of which the hon. Minister of Militia himself is to be one. The old saying that two heads are better than one, holds perfectly true, and if the minister consults a half dozen of his subordinates before he takes any important action, he is much more likely to be right than if he does not consult any one. The War Council in England is substantially the same thing. Then, as to the power of the council, we have to take the declarations which are made in parliament by the minister in charge of the Bill, as indicating the policy which is to be pursued, and he spoke of appointing certain officers. In England this questrion has not been settled by an Act of parliament, but by Royal warrant. Still, I think in this country, it would be better to go into greater detail in an Act of parliament and not leave so much to the Governor in Council. However, this is following the English practice. What is the composition of the council ? 'The composition, procedure and powers of the council shall be as prescribed.' When you go to the interpretation clause, you find prescribed means, 'Prescribed by this Act or by regulations,' and regulations means 'Regulations made by the Governor in Council under the authority of this Act.' If this Act does not prescribe anything, it is to be done by regulations. So that, practically, as this Bill does not deal with the powers of the council, the powers of the council are such as are fixed by the Governor in Council by regulation. Then it rests with the Governor in Council to instruct the minister, and to control him, and to compel him to submit to that council whatever subjects the Governor in Council thinks necessary, and if the Governor in Council prescribes the powers of the council, and gives the council power to deal with certain questions, the minister cannot prevent it; and at any rate the minister will act with his colleagues and under their direction. If I had been asked to draw the clause, I should have drawn it differently. But I think it is going to be a great improvement on the present system, as it substitutes seven heads for one head.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend from Halifax is rather lecturing the House.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—When he is in the chair I think he has a perfect right to lecture the House, but I do not think he should dictate as to whether this clause should go or not. We are trying to help the government. No one is opposing it. Some of us have had experience. Perhaps my hon. friend has had more than the rest of us. My hon. friend talked about England. It is not analogous at all. There is an Army Act enacted every year in England. That has nothing to do with the Militia Act. There is a Volunteer Act in England, and each branch is governed by its own law, and equipment, drill and everything else. Therefore, this Bill is not analogous at all. It is a Bill brought in by the government, of which I entirely approve. There should be some alteration made in the future, but it is not necessary to bother with it to-day. It has nothing to do with the Army Act. The Army Act has to be brought into force by a vote. You must have a standing army in England. We have no standing army here; it is a volunteer force, if you go to the bottom of it, but it is called rather the Canadian army. It is called the Militia of Canada, under the British North America Act, and I presume it has been thought prudent from that day to this, not to interfere, and the chances are that they would not interfere with the Act of Confederation. There is nothing analogous between the two. As to the General Officer Commanding, I think there is a good deal to be said as to whether there is to be a general at all. As I read it, there need not be a general at all. The minister can be the general himself. I read it that we can have the head of every department a general. I do not see any objection to it. I should like to see forty generals walking around, with lots of gold on them, standing on the right and standing on the left of the Crown. The ladies all like the uniform. If our officers did not have good uniforms they could not get along. Clause 30 reads as follows:

30. There may be appointed an officer who shall hold rank not below that of colonel in the militia or in His Majesty's regular army, who may be, subject to the regulations and under the direction of the minister, charged with the military command of the militia, and such officer shall have the rank of major general in the militia, and shall be paid at such rate, not exceeding six thousand dollars per annum, as is prescribed.

2. In the event of a vacancy in the office of general officer commanding, or in the absence of that officer from Canada, the Governor in Council may detach an officer of the headquarters staff, who shall be charged with the military command of the militia.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Will the general chief of staff be always a different officer from the adjutant general?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, clearly, I think so, yes. It is a new creation, an officer who is not now on the staff at all in the Militia Department. I may say the real object of this clause and the method of carrying it out, was for the purpose of obtaining greater uniformity in the management of the forces. The general officers who have come out to Canada have all had individual views, and they came out here thinking they would carry their own individual views into effect, so that the result has been that there has been a lack of consistency in the management of the militia forces, and it was thought by invoking the heads of the staff and the chief of staff, who would be somewhat subordinate to the minister, that greater uniformity might be obtained in the management of the forces, that the regulations will not change from year to year according as the general officer commanding is changed. It has been found that every general officer has views different from his predecessor, and he desired to inaugurate changes that were not perhaps in the best interests of the forces, and this is a way of securing uniformity. Every regulation passed must be confirmed by the Governor in Council. That was the practice in England. The Army

Council in England was named, not by statute, nor by the regulations, nor were the regulations made in that way. It was named by letters patent, I have the statute before me, and this council is the advisory of the Secretary of War. Any regulation made has no force or effect unless it is based on an Order in Council and published for the information of the world, so that hon. gentlemen I think are foreseeing very many difficulties and inconsistencies that are not likely to arise. The minister will have to give an account of his administration to parliament, and parliament's approval will be had from year to year on the methods that have been employed. The Orders in Council must be published and will have no force or effect until they are published. It is simply the principle that two heads are better than one. This body of experts assembled by the minister about the board, are perfectly free to express their views as they think best, and suggest what they think best, and in that method it is hoped a very great improvement will be made.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The idea of having a militia council will do away with all those inconveniences which we have experienced in the past. I approve of all that, but I want to know if the government is at liberty to choose a commanding officer from abroad ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They may. That is just possible, but not likely.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Or they might bring in an inspector. It is more than possible. It is probable, because they have applied for one already if rumours are correct.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The chief of staff is the only officer in contemplation.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Colonel Lake ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He would come as chief of staff.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He will take the place of the officer commanding ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I presume not.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Those things are not well defined. The chief of staff, who is coming here, will be the commanding officer of the militia. We must have a commanding officer, and we do not want to give that commanding officer all the power he had in the past, but we want him to be one of the voices in the council. If you go to England and ask him to come here, it is because he has some expert knowledge, and something to do with military science, and we would want that his views be heard in the council. We do not want him to be the predominant voice, but want him to be heard.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am not a military man, but I think we have drifted in discussing this clause, as to who should constitute the militia council. The policy of the Act is to leave that entirely in the hands of the government, as in England ; it is not settled by Act of parliament. It is done by the government, and this is the principle of the Act. The hon. Secretary of State has announced, in answer to a question that has been put to him, that the intention of the government is to have this council composed of so-and-so. That will be a matter to be decided on from time to time by the government, and therefore, the only way to deal with clause 7 is either to pass it as it is, or if the hon. gentleman is ready to suggest, instead of leaving the composition of the council to the government, how this council should be composed, and to have it in black and white in the Act ; but unless the hon. gentleman is disposed to adopt that course we are discussing absolutely for nothing.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I understand that the hon. gentleman is under the impression he is discussing for nothing, because he does not understand the question. When the hon. gentleman said he was going to appoint the chief of staff one of the councillors, I wanted to know, and have a right to ask, if that commanding officer would be the inspector, or who he would be. Perhaps I did not ask it in very clear terms, but at the conclusion I got the answer, and I know why the hon. gentleman does not understand it yet.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The only difference in this law and the practice now is that you appoint a council that may advise, but it is well known that the hon. Minister of Militia never acts upon matters of this kind unless he has some reason why he would not seek the advice of those with whom he was surrounded. At present, if there is any matter concerning the militia, he consults his deputy—I am speaking of the past—who has knowledge of certain matters pertaining to the office. He may be a military man, and may not. If the question is one affecting the forces, he calls in the aid of the adjutant general. I do not think we have ever had a man holding the position, in my long experience in the matter, that I would have more confidence in, and who would perform his duties more assiduously and conscientiously, than Lord Aylmer. What little I had to do with him led me to that conclusion. I recollect distinctly the great opposition there was to his promotion. I think the government did well in promoting him. But in going back to the point again, the Minister of Militia has the same means now at his disposal to acquire information as he will have under this new council, provided it is composed of the gentlemen mentioned by the Secretary of State. That advice can be no more than the gentlemen by whom he is now surrounded would give him. The government appoint the Inspector General, and they ask his advice on just such questions as they think proper. It is not at all likely he would be consulted on questions of policy. That rests with the government altogether; and so far as that goes, the success of this council will depend in a great measure upon the appointments which are made, and the power which is vested in the council. We are asked why have we not taken some objection to the general powers given, and why are we not prepared to bring down some amendment to carry out the views which we hold? We have only had this Bill in our hands a few days, and never knew from one hour to another what changes might be made in it in the other House, and it is utterly impossible to carry out the suggestions made by my hon. friend. This council is supposed to take the place of the major general who has commanded in the past, and they will suggest what will be done; but the law also gives the power to appoint a major general at six thousand dollars a year, the same salary as the present one, and it also gives the power to appoint an inspector general, whose duties are laid down very clearly by that report which I have read. If they do not carry it out, so much the better, but whether the major general be a Canadian or an imperial officer——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Or a 'foreigner.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Whether he be a 'foreigner' or a Canadian, you cannot tell until he is appointed. The inspector general is in the same position.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 8,

WORKS FOR DEFENCE.

8. The minister shall have the control and management (including charge of the maintenance and repair) of all military buildings, and also of the construction, maintenance and repair of all forts and fortifications and other works for defence in Canada.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is a departure from the old law to that extent. All the works were in the hands and under the control of the Minister of Public Works.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is dividing the Public Works Department among a number of ministers. I am inclined to think this is an improvement, for the reason that the Minister of Militia and his officers would be better able to judge of what is necessary in military construction, whether it be fortifications or drill sheds, than the Minister of Public Works. The power did exist a number of years ago, because I remember very well when the Minister of Militia, Sir Adolphe Caron, had an architect of his own in his department, and that office was afterwards abolished.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—If my hon. friend will look at section 6 'works of defence,' he will see that it is exactly the same as clause 8.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is maintenance and repair—not construction.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is a vast difference.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 9,

9. Every work in any part of Canada, certified by the commander of His Majesty's regular forces in Canada to be required for the defence of Canada, shall be held to be a public work within 'The Expropriation Act,' and, for the purposes of such work, the expression 'minister' in the said Act shall include His Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for War.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Certified by the commander——

Hon. Mr. POWER—The officer at Halifax—Major General Parsons.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 11,

11. All the male inhabitants of Canada, of the age of eighteen years and upwards, and under sixty, not exempt or disqualified by law, and being British subjects shall be liable to service in the militia ; the Governor General may require all the male inhabitants of Canada, capable of bearing arms, to serve in the case of a 'Levee en Masse.'

2. Nothing in this section shall prevent any male inhabitant of Canada, under the age of eighteen years, enlisting as a bugler, trumpeter, or drummer.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—If the father objects to the child acting in the capacity of bugler, trumpeter, or drummer, have they a right to take him ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I think not. The authority is recognized that the parents have control of the children.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—During the last camp, I noticed a boy under the age, and his mother came after him, and they gave him up.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 12,

12. The following persons only shall be exempt from liability to service in the militia :

Members of the King's Privy Council for Canada ;

Judges of all courts of justice ;

Members of the executive councils of provinces ;

Deputy ministers of the federal and provincial governments ;

Clergy and ministers of all religious denominations ;

Telegraph clerks in actual employment ;

Officers and clerks regularly employed in the collection of the revenue ;

Wardens and officers of all public prisons and lunatic asylums ;

Members of the naval militia ;

Members of the police force and fire brigade permanently employed in incorporated cities, towns and villages ;

Professors in colleges and universities and teachers in religious orders ;

Persons disabled by bodily or mental infirmity ;

The only son of a widow, being her only support ;

Pilots and apprentice pilots during the season of navigation ;

Persons who, from the doctrines of their religion, are averse to bearing arms or rendering personal military service—under such conditions as are prescribed.

2. Half-pay and retired officers of the regular force shall not be required to serve in the forces in a lower grade than that of their rank in such forces.

3. No person shall be entitled to exemption unless he has, at least one month before he claims such exemption, filed with the commanding officer within the limits whereof he resides, his affidavit, made before some justice of the peace, of the facts on which he rests his claim.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I asked how many members are there actually of the naval militia ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It has not been formed yet.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—They will be easily exempted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The exemptions are extended from the old law, to privy councillors, all senators, members of the executive council of the province, members of the provincial legislatures, and deputy ministers. That is carrying the exemption to a pretty wide extent.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Members of parliament and senators are not exempt.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 19,

19. The Governor in Council may dispense with the services of any officer or man of the militia at any time ; and any officer or man may be permitted in time of peace to retire from any corps on giving to his commanding officer six months' notice of his intention so to do.

2. This section shall not apply to the permanent force.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In this clause, a man may be permitted in time of peace, to retire from any corps. That is analogous to section 15 of the Act with some words added.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Governor in Council may dispense with his services.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I understand that may apply to any officer, but it includes any man.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There may be some reason.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Here is politics coming in again.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This clause was inserted for some purpose, to cover, I suppose some practice in the past. 'The Governor in Council may dispense with the services of any officer or man at any time.' It does not say that it should be for cause. The minister may suggest to his colleagues the dismissal of any man without sufficient cause.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The regulations provide that an officer is liable to removal from the militia.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But it says 'From reasons which are given.' My objection to this clause is, that it dispenses with the services of a militia officer with or without reason. In the regulations, the reasons given are, absence without leave from manual training, medical unfitness, misconduct or incapacity, residing outside of limits, failing to qualify, having reached the age limit, disbandment of corps. and sentence of court martial. My hon. friend has had more experience than I have had, because he has had command of troops, and he will recognize at once, that these are all good reasons for dispensing with the services of an officer of militia.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Are these the only reasons ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—These are the only reasons given.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If he was a thief ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He would be mentally and morally unfit for the position. I think that would be covered by No. 5, 'Misconduct or incapacity.' There would be good reason for dismissing a thief.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Is it not a fact, that the Governor in Council would not be supposed to sign the dismissal, unless for good reasons ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman's supposition is the correct one. Every reasonable man's supposition would be that they would not do it, but you give them the power here to do it, if they think proper, and if the head of the department in the future should be composed of gentlemen of the same character as the minister who recently interposed and interfered with the appointment of men, he would be equally likely to go further and dismiss a man because he was not politically his friend. Why should you leave it open to such an abuse ? Why should we not add this clause in the Army Regulations ? If I thought it would carry in the House, I would gladly move that this clause be amended.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Is it taken from an Act of parliament ? I think it is taken from the regulations.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is taken from that which is made equal to an Act of parliament, by an authority given by the Militia Law to the Governor in Council. This book was printed in 1898. They would not declare that to be an order, unless the Governor in Council had the power to pass it, and consequently it is equal to a law. That is a point we had better take a note of, and test the sense of the House on at the third reading, unless my hon. friend is willing to accept it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We must presume the Governor in Council—

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think it is quite fair to be always assuming that the Governor in Council are going to act improperly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am very much amused at my hon. friend's confidence in the present Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have sufficient confidence in any government for that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman had not the same confidence in the Governor in Council in former years. I do not think that ought to be left open. Have we not had an instance where a man was called to account and removed from the service, because the chief officer, Mr. Foster, who was in the department, had the cheek and impudence to write, I suppose at the instance of the Minister of Militia,—for what reason ? Mr. Foster gives the reason. He writes that he is authorized by the hon. minister on the ground that he is charged with having of late taken some active part in politics on behalf of the opposition.' He was an imperial officer, brought from England, and was in the department at the time. There is an instance in which the authority was used improperly, and it was substantiated beyond a doubt, I have all the authority here to show that Lieut.-Col. White, of the west, has not taken any part in politics, further than to attend a public meeting. And supposing he had taken part, I should like to know, unless he was in uniform at the time, if there is any reason why he should be called to account for it?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Did Col. White occupy any permanent position, or was he simply an ordinary officer in the active militia?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He was colonel of a volunteer regiment. Mr. Foster was a staff officer at headquarters, and he says he was instructed to demand an explanation from this man, and he was afterwards refused the right to go to his school of instruction, because he had attended a public meeting. If that is to be the policy that is to be carried out, there can be no liberty in this country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There were good grounds for the course pursued by the department.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like very much if the hon. gentleman would lay the case before this House. I have gone through this mill myself, as the hon. gentleman knows. The only difference between this government and the old government was this: When I was called to account for daring to express my opinion on militia matters, while I was connected with the force, Sir John Macdonald refused to have any action taken against me, holding that as a private citizen conducting a public journal, I had a perfect right, when not on duty, to express my opinion. The present government, however, deny the right to an individual of expressing his political views. That is the complaint I make. The moment a man takes off his uniform, and retires to the position of a private citizen, he is no longer amenable to the King's regulations or the authority of the Militia Department. If he were, the sooner we would, by Act of parliament, make him a free man, the better it would be for this country. This is giving power to the Minister of Militia—because that is really what it means— .

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The Governor in Council.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It really means that the Minister of Militia when he makes such a recommendation to the Governor in Council, if the Governor in Council accepts that recommendation, the man goes without cause being assigned; and if you call the minister to account for it, he says: 'I have authority under the Militia Act.' I think the power is an exceedingly dangerous one.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the hon. gentleman intend to amend that clause?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No intention at all?

Hon. Mr SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We cannot improve it? Well, I shall give notice of an amendment at the third reading.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a good plan adopted by the government to choke off discussion?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is carping at nothing.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Speaker was rising to speak when the hon. gentleman shook his head, and intimated he should not speak. As a supporter of the government, the Speaker sat down and obeyed—he understood the nod and acted upon it.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—A nod is as good as a wink.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We are not to discuss these questions. If the hon. gentleman adopts that policy, he will find that there are some who will discuss them. If the Speaker thinks I am wrong in my deductions, I should like to hear him explain why.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think much time has been saved by my not getting up. I simply proposed to say that I agreed very largely with the views which the hon. gentleman expressed with respect to the independence of members of the militia, when they are not in uniform or on duty, but there is nothing in this clause which deals with that. I was going to say further, that if we were engaged in drafting this Bill, it would be well to have some words inserted, and put conditions on the action of the Governor in Council; but I do not think that the danger of interference by the Governor in Council is so very great, because the people are very sensitive with respect to political interference with the militia, and a very small interference of that kind makes a tremendous uproar in this country. The average government and minister will be very slow to interfere improperly with the militia. I do not think that the country is running any great risk in letting this go as it is, for the present at any rate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I doubt if the hon. gentleman has watched closely what has taken place in the past. Take the case of a gentleman in my own city, Col. Ponton. He had, in the eyes of the minister, the audacity to express an opinion as to what had been done in the disbanding of the corps that was in Halifax during the Boer war, and because he expressed an opinion to the effect that the volunteers at that time had not been treated fairly, he was called to account for it. He had been colonel of the Argyle Light Infantry for about six or seven years, but was on the retired list when he expressed his opinion, and I have the letter of the adjutant general directed to Col. Ponton, demanding an explanation of what he had said at that meeting, assuming the right to dictate to an independent gentleman as to whether he should say the course of the department in the disbanding of the corps was one that he thought should not have been taken. What did Col. Ponton say ? He simply told the Adjutant General, Colonel Montizambert, at Kingston, in plain language, that it was none of his business, that he intended to say what he thought proper, that he was not amenable to the King's regulations, or the Minister of Militia or the deputy adjutant general. That was followed up until Lord Dundonald came here and took the matter in hand and put his foot down on it, and said : 'The man has a right to do as he pleases, so long as he is not disrespectful, or does not violate any rule governing the force.' There are other cases to which I could call the hon. gentleman's attention, and for that reason, I fear to put that power in the hands of the Governor in Council. A man who has no brains or soul or heart, is unfit for the position he holds, and it is exceedingly dangerous to put such powers in his hands.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Those reflections are quite uncalled for, if the hon. gentleman knew all the facts of the case. I am not prepared to go into it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The facts of what case ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Of Col. Ponton's. The hon. gentleman is taking his views from Lord Dundonald.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Later I shall give the facts.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Lord Dundonald gave the facts in a speech at Toronto. I have the letter of Col. Montizambert in my hands, in which he says he is authorized to make a demand for this explanation.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Who asked Col. Montizambert to demand an explanation ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He writes, 'I have been instructed to call upon you for your reasons for making them, and to state whether the remarks attributed to you were made by you.' Who was his superior ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Lord Dundonald.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, Lord Dundonald was not here. He came afterwards, and these papers were laid before him.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—What is the date of that letter ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The 19th November, 1902. The further investigation of this matter, so far as Col. Ponton was concerned, was not gone on with because when the matter was referred to Lord Dundonald he stopped further investigation for the reason I have given.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—What time in the spring of 1902 did Lord Dundonald come to Canada ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not certain about that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will ask the Minister of Militia for the facts.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My point is this : so far as Lord Dundonald is concerned, this action was taken, so far as this correspondence shows, without his knowledge. The hon. gentleman asks when did Lord Dundonald come here ? Lord Dundonald may have been here at the time. My point is this : when the letter was referred to Lord Dundonald for his report on the action of Colonel Ponton, he stopped all further investigation and Colonel Ponton never heard anything more about it. The action must have been taken without the knowledge of Lord Dundonald, even if he were here at the time, and it may have been at the instance of the Adjutant General. Colonel Montizambert says he was instructed. It could not have been by Lord Dundonald, because when it was brought before Lord Dundonald, he stopped the matter at once, acknowledging the right of a citizen to express an opinion if he chose so to do.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The hon. gentleman asked the question, who was the superior officer of the colonel who wrote the letter, and when he was answered that it was Lord Dundonald, he said Lord Dundonald was not in the country.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was under that impression. The point really is this : he said he had been instructed to do it, and it must have been by somebody above him.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—By Lord Dundonald.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No. Lord Dundonald has denied that distinctly, and said he put a stop to the investigation.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I would suggest this to the leader of the opposition : he is reading from the regulations, but I think on inquiry it will be found that the government in England can dismiss an officer from the army without cause. Otherwise what would be the consequence ? Suppose we have causes enumerated, then it would raise a question as to whether an officer could be dismissed for any cause not specified in the regulations. Suppose it was for misconduct, the officer might refuse to accept his dismissal, and say, 'What you call misconduct on my part is not misconduct,' and the government might be obliged to go to court and wait for a judgment as to whether it was misconduct or not. I do not think under any system of government anything of the kind can be allowed that might be open to denying the right of the government to dismiss an officer of the army. These regulations are merely for the guidance of the officers, but there is always the absolute right to dismiss an officer of the army.

At six o'clock the committee rose for recess.

After Recess.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (5) An Act respecting the Militia and Defence of Canada.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved, in amendment, to add after the words 'at any time,' the following :—

For any of the following reasons : first, absence without leave from manual training ; second, medical unfitness ; third, misconduct or incapacity ; fourth, residing outside of limits ; fifth, failing to qualify ; sixth, having reached the age limit ; seventh, disbandment of corps ; eight, fraudulently retaining pay of the corps ; ninth, by sentence of court martial.

I suppose three and eight may be the same —misconduct.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend means breach of military discipline. It covers that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In the Regulations and Orders of the Militia of Canada the eighth reason for which a man could be dismissed is referred to by this paragraph, 'c' 49, chapter 41, section 95. Section 95 the marginal note has 'fraudulently retaining pay of the corps or signing false parade states.'

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That is a criminal act.

The CHAIRMAN—Look at clause 103 of the Bill and you will find it is provided for already.

103. Any officer or man who obtains by means of any false pretense, or who unlawfully retain or keeps in his possession, any of the pay or moneys belonging to any officer or man, is guilty of an indictable offence.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Then we may strike out eight and put nine in its place.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There may be many other reasons for which the services of an officer might be dispensed with and, therefore, I am not prepared to accept the hon. gentleman's amendment. I am not sufficiently familiar with the rules of the service to say that the hon. gentleman's amendment would cover everything, but I think the Governor in Council may be trusted to do what is right and proper without limiting them to the causes set forth by the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is very good to rely upon the spirit of justice of the Governor in Council in theory, but in practice it is not always reliable. The motion that I made some time ago for returns were to illustrate that phase of the question. A man having served thirty-nine years as a public servant has been turned out of office lately by Order in Council. He denied that he was guilty of any wrong-doing, and asked for an inquiry, which was refused. He was not allowed to defend himself. No reason was assigned. The government refused his appeal, giving no reason. I should not like a repetition of that way of conducting business in this country.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I know my hon. friend has only the good of the militia at heart. Would it not be subversive of military discipline if you were to put something in the Bill that would tie the hands of the department ? No officer has a right to apply for a court martial.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is in the King's Regulations.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—We are bound by the King's Regulations.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Only when we are on active service ; but this clause empowers the Governor in Council to act at any time.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Does the hon. gentleman not think that he would reach what he wants to reach by doing what every member has a right to do—call for papers ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I would reach it if I were asking for a return concerning any case. I could bring it before the House, but that would not be preventing an injustice.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Would not the government hesitate before doing such an injustice to any officer ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Not always.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I would pin my faith to the government of the day no matter what party was in power. I know when the Conservative government was in power, influence was used against me, but the government did not interfere.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If there is good reason to drum a man out of the service, we are willing to give the government power to dismiss him ; but to empower the government to turn out an officer without any reason is what I object to.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—As colonel of a regiment, more than that, as commander of a brigade, I appeal to my hon. friend, does he really think that any government of the day would turn a man out without reason ? I would ask my hon. friend to let that go. I have the good of the service at heart, as he has, and I think if he would drop his amendment it would be better.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If it were a question of sentiment, I would accede to my hon. friend's request, but why does not the government, in the interest of justice, accept the amendment ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman will oblige me very much if he will let the clause stand.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—In considering this clause, the case of Col. Ponton was mentioned by the hon. gentleman from Belleville as an illustration of what might be done by the exercise of this power, and it is claimed that the opposition to this clause is rather justified by that particular case. In the few minutes which have intervened since that incident was discussed, I have tried to repossess myself of the facts in that case, and it is just as well that they should be shortly stated. Col. Ponton, in referring to Capt. Conger, who did garrison duty at Halifax, said that the manner in which the garrison was disbanded reflected on the authorities. He said they were bundled out with four weeks' pay and without uniform. That appeared in the Belleville 'Intelligencer,' which the hon. gentleman opposite knows something about, and, of course, attracted the notice of the department, and upon that it was brought to the notice of the General Officer Commanding for necessary inquiry, and instructions were given by his orderlies to the District Officer Commanding at Kingston.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Who gave the order ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Lord Dundonald.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that it was by Lord Dundonald's instructions ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—By his instructions the letter was written. On that, the inquiry was made by Col. Montizambert, and the letter was written to Col. Ponton.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Can the hon. gentleman prove that assertion ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—What kind of proof does the hon. gentleman want ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I want the letter of the general giving the instructions.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—If it was a matter of sufficient importance, I think we could get it. It was done in November, 1902. On that the inquiry was made by the District Officer Commanding at Kingston. An answer was received and returned within a few days to the General Officer Commanding at Ottawa. That was early in December, 1902. It was, of course, the duty of the General Officer Commanding, under the circumstances, to have reported to the minister of the department, but he never did so. On the contrary, the papers were pigeon-holed, and retained until the month of May, 1903.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What papers ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The information in reply to the inquiry which was made in Col. Ponton's case. In 1903 Lord Dundonald took those papers from the file and retained them in his possession until after his speech in Toronto, where he posed as the champion of the liberties of the people, citing that particular case. These papers taken by him in May from the department were under his control until July, 1904, and were then used in his speech in Toronto about the middle of July last. I have before me a report of Lord Dundonald's speech, in which I find the following :

But, gentlemen, can this regard for freedom be claimed with equal truth by those who thus accuse me of dragooning the people of Canada? Let me give you only one instance. Shortly after the late General Officer Commanding, this dragooner of your liberties, appeared amongst you, Colonel Ponton, of Belleville, a citizen of Canada, in pursuance of the exercises of his undoubted right as a citizen, delivered a speech in which he criticised some action of the Militia Department. By order of the minister he was, without my knowledge, called upon for an explanation. He stood upon his rights, and in reply protested against being subjected to this inquisition, claiming the right of free speech in a free Canadian community. Now, what did this enemy of the liberties of the Canadian people do when the papers were officially placed before him to discipline Colonel Ponton, of Belleville ? He ordered no further action to be taken and closed the incident.

This was with reference to his 'dragooning' the people of Canada. It will be borne in mind that the only purpose for which those papers were in his hands were for inquiry and to report upon that which had been published in the press. It will be borne in mind that, all the time he had these papers in his possession, he never conferred with his minister with reference to the incident, or answered in any way the inquiry which ought to have reached his minister, and that he posed on the public platform as a champion who was interfering between the monster minister, who was tyrannical with his officers and the people, pretending that there had been an attempt on the part of the minister to interfere with the rights of Col. Ponton. The inquiry was simply an investigation into what appeared in the public papers. Was there any interference with free speech in asking for a report of the circumstances and what justification was there for making such a charge ? Having got Col. Ponton's reply, it was his plain duty to have brought it before the minister instead of retaining it in his possession until he made use of it on the public platform.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Will the hon. gentleman state why these facts were not made public before the farewell was given to Lord Dundonald ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I did not think the matter of sufficient moment, until it was brought forward by the hon. gentleman from Belleville.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If the hon. gentleman had given these facts to the public, the farewell would not have been so hearty.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I am speaking now of the attitude Lord Dundonald has assumed with reference to this matter. Who was it did this ? An officer of high standing, who had been in command of the militia, and ought to have known whether he had any right to make use of those documents on the public platform as he had done. Even if the report had been in possession of the minister; even if Lord Dundonald had reported on the matter and discharged his duty, which he did not do, what was his duty under the King's Regulations? I will read rule 2118 of the King's Regulations:

2118. Access to official records is only permitted to those entrusted with the duties of the office or department to which they belong, and these records are not to be made public, or communicated to persons unconnected with such offices or departments, without the sanction of the authorities concerned. The only legitimate use an officer or soldier can make of documents or information of which he becomes possessed in his official capacity is for the furtherance of the public service in the performance of his duty. Publishing official documents or using them for personal controversy, or for any private purpose, without due authority, will be treated as a breach of official trust.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Hear, hear. Why did you not say that before.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—This is the champion of the rights of the people, and that is a distinguished officer's idea of discharging his duty towards those under whom he held office in this country. I thought, after the observations made by the hon. gentleman from Belleville, it was fair to make a little inquiry into this matter; I was quite sure I had read somewhere a different version of what had occurred, from the way it was put here. I was quite sure it was Lord Dundonald who had charge of the inquiry, and when the hon. member from Belleville said that Lord Dundonald was not in the country at the time it occurred, I was quite sure my hon. friend was not well informed of the facts, notwithstanding he possesses all the information of the 'Intelligencer.'

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—From the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Toronto, he is greatly at fault in not having given these facts to the public. They should have been given to the public before to-day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I acquit the hon. gentleman from Toronto from any such charge as has been laid at his door, by the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Cloran), from the simple fact that the hon. gentleman from Toronto knew nothing of the statements he has made until after his interview to-night with the Minister of Militia, so the hon. gentleman is not to blame for having failed to give utterance to them until now.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Allow me to correct a misstatement.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Order, order. The hon. gentleman from Belleville has the floor.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I am sure I will be allowed to make an explanation.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I have had no conversation with the hon. Minister of Militia on the subject.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman will state on his word of honour as a senator that he did not receive that information since the subject was brought up here this afternoon. I will accept it.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I said a few minutes ago, I made inquiry, but I did not communicate with the Minister of Militia.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman may not have communicated with the Minister of Militia directly, but he must have communicated with some one connected with the office who had possession of the record; I know the Minister of Militia was present here this evening, and I obtained some information from him myself with regard to Lord Dundonald. In the first place, the hon. gentleman says that a report of the speech made by Lieutenant-Colonel Ponton appeared in the 'Intelligencer.' Why did he not mention the organ of his own party, the 'Ontario,' as well? The Grit organ published it in much stronger language than the 'Intelligencer' did. Who sent copies of those papers to Lord Dundonald and instructed him to make the inquiry? That is what I should like to know.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The minister.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then that is precisely what I said. That is just the position to which I take special objection. There is nothing in that report further than a statement of the manner in which the force was disbanded in Halifax. Supposing, for the sake of argument, that all that Col. Ponton said was true, did it contain anything to justify what was done? I may say Col. Ponton, in his explanation, which I have under my hand, and which it would have been well if the hon. gentleman had read to the House, says that he did not use as strong language as the synopsis of his speech would indicate; but while making that explanation he says in his reply to Col. Montizambert:

As I stated nothing but facts in the speech which I uttered, and as I confined myself to what I esteem a question of public policy, and as I believe I expressed the sentiments of ninety-nine out of one hundred of Canadian citizens, I have nothing to apologize for and nothing to retract, even supposing that I am accountable for what I said or did, and I said nothing that I would not again repeat at headquarters or elsewhere.

That is the explanation given by Col. Ponton of his utterance. My position was, when I spoke in the first place, and it was denied by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, that Col. Ponton being a retired officer, the Minister of Militia had no right or authority to call him to account. Col. Ponton, I claimed, was only exercising a right that he possessed as a citizen of Canada in giving free expression to his views. I do not deny the right of any man to ask another for an explanation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Minister of Militia or any one else might write to Col. Ponton asking if he made such and such statement, and if so, why; but the Minister of Militia, through his officers, assumed the position of controlling his utterance. The hon. gentleman shakes his head. What other reason suggested itself? Supposing Col. Ponton had never been a volunteer officer, and had delivered the speech to which I have referred, does anybody suppose that the Minister of Militia would have ever thought of calling him to account for it? The thing is absurd. The hon. gentleman from Toronto never touched the question at all. He has taken the position that Lord Dundonald did wrong in referring to the question. I will not dispute that, but it does not touch the matter. Supposing he did something deserving of dismissal, does that affect the assumption of right on the part of the Minister of Militia to call a civilian to account for what he had said?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Not for what he said, but for the charge made by Col. Ponton.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not a lawyer, used to special pleading, but I fancy I have a little common sense. The point I raised is attempted to be destroyed by a reference to an impropriety which the hon. gentleman says Lord Dundonald committed. What I wanted to impress on the House when I spoke before was that this letter to Col. Ponton was instigated by the Minister of Militia. That was denied, and I was asked what authority I had for saying so. The only answer I could give was that Col. Montizambert said in his letter that he was instructed to write. The House will remember that I qualified my statement immediately afterwards, that it might have been shortly after Lord Dundonald came to the country. He came to Canada in July, 1902. The letter of Col. Montizambert is dated November 20th, 1902. The speech for which Col. Ponton was called to account was delivered on the 29th of October, so that it must have been brought immediately to the notice of the Minister of Militia, who immediately directed that an inquiry be made. Col. Montizambert asks for an explanation on November 20th, and the reply of Col. Ponton is dated November 22nd. Admitting, for the sake of argument, that Lord Dundonald did wrong in referring to that correspondence, how does it affect the point at issue, the interference of the Minister of Militia, who now asks for power under this Bill to dismiss any one from the militia? Accepting the statement made by the hon. gentleman from Toronto—and he has not referred to a single document to sustain it—Lord Dundonald must have considered the matter of very little importance, when, as the hon. gentleman says, he pigeon-holed the documents. He must have thought either that the matter was very trifling, or that Lieut.-Col. Ponton had not violated any rule of the service. Supposing the hon. gentleman's statement is right from beginning to end, of which he furnished no proof, I deny the right of the Minister of Militia, or of any officer commanding the force, to demand an explanation from any citizen of this country who is not on actual service for criticising the affairs of the militia. If he is permitted to do that, then our liberties are subject to the prejudices of the Minister of Militia, guided by such a man as the Minister of Agriculture. I congratulate my hon. friend behind me (Hon. Mr. Baker) on being connected with a family who are willing to give their time and spend their money in defence of their country, and I congratulate him still further on the fact that he has the enmity of a popinjay like the Minister of Agriculture. That may not be parliamentary. However, if the hon. gentleman thinks it is unparliamentary, I withdraw that word, and apologize to the popinjay for having made the comparison. Let us confine ourselves to discussing the main question at issue, that is, the right of the Minister of Militia, or the officer commanding the forces of this country, to arrogate to himself the power and authority to call any free subject, though he may be a volunteer, when not on duty, to account for what he may have said. The difference between my own case and Col. Ponton's is this: 'When I was called to account for utterances I made, it was by the officer commanding, and I was sustained. There is no question about that.

In this case Lord Dundonald, commanding the forces in this country, took the other ground, and, according to the statement made by the hon. gentleman from Toronto, instead of making a fuss and going to the Governor General and his ministers to demand the dismissal of Col. Ponton, he pigeon-holed the matter. Whether he did right or wrong, I am not going to discuss; but in the ordinary procedure of life, outside of military rules and regulations, he would have done just right under the circumstances. In this case the minister and the party with which he is connected, objected to the course taken by Lord Dundonald, and it has been re-echoed to-night by the hon. gentleman from Toronto; while in the other case, the rulers of this country, from Sir John Macdonald down, refused to allow the commanding officer at that time to interfere with the right of citizens of Canada, to give utterance to their opinions, whether in parliament or out of it, as to the management or mismanagement of this country. That is the difference between the two parties, and there cannot be a question of doubt about it. This clause has been put in the Militia Bill to give the minister power to dismiss any man in the force, or to degrade him if he is a retired officer, by depriving him of the rank which he holds, or taking any other course which political vengeance might suggest, because it says distinctly, the Governor General may dispense with the services of any officer or man of the militia at any time, without giving any cause or reason. If the committee rejected the proposition made by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, I should move—although I have little hope of it being carried—to add the words 'the Governor General may for cause.' Then the government will have to give a reason for the dismissal. My hon. friend from Rothesay has more faith in the government and members of it than I have.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I said any minister might do it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think any minister would do it. I believe there have been ministers who would never think of doing it; but if such things have been done in the past, men holding office not in the militia, but in other branches of the service, dismissed without cause, and refused investigation by this present government, what right have we to presume that they would not do the same thing in the future if a military volunteer officer offended them in any particular way? Is there any reason to think they would not avail themselves of the power given under this clause, with reference to the dismissal of a militia officer? I have no faith in any of the promises they might make, nor am I prepared to agree with the hon. Secretary of State when he asks, is it possible that any minister would do such a thing? We know the government have done things equally as bad as that, and they have given us no cause to believe that they would not repeat it, if occasion presented itself.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman is confessing.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am confessing my opinion. I hope the hon. gentleman will grant me absolution.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend is framing his argument on the question of active service. Without agreeing or disagreeing with him, I will ask him if it is not the fact that under the regulations we have (R. and O.) no officer can leave the service without six months' notice, and his resignation must be accepted before he can leave. Is he not under active service all the time ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Oh, no, no.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I think so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but if he were retired from the force——

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That is another point.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman were retired from the force, and not on active service, or any service, would he consider himself amenable to the militia authorities ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend is drawing a close deduction there. If an officer is retired from the service, he has nothing to do with the militia, excepting he is granted the privilege of wearing a uniform and standing behind the saluting point. He cannot be called out. If he is liable to levee en masse he must be under sixty and have his rank.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And be responsible for anything he does ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Was Mr. Ponton a reserve officer or a retired officer ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—His time had expired and he was put out on the reserve list. He had served the full length of time, and they gave him an extra year.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—He had retired at the time my hon. friend talks about ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Any officer is responsible for what he does while he holds a commission. A retired officer does not hold commission. There is no question about that, but speaking on this clause, it is a good fighting argument.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Supposing I retire retaining the rank that I hold at the time, would the hon. gentleman say I am amenable on account of anything I say of the Minister of Militia or his department ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—No, because the hon. gentleman is simply a civilian, having an honorary rank.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No ; that rank had been given to me years and years after I retired from the service.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—It is only honorary rank, just the same. The hon. gentleman is retired from the service the same as myself. He cannot be called upon for duty.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But after the hon. gentleman retires from the service he retires retaining his rank.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Honorary rank.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then the hon. gentleman may be appointed afterwards honorary lieutenant-colonel of the battalion in which he formerly served in the service. They cannot very well deprive a man of rank, except for cause.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—In the R. and O. they have honorary colonels in England, and there is a fine distinction there. An honorary colonel in England is a colonel who has gone through the various gradations of rank, and the honorary colonel gets a thousand pounds a year sterling, because it is a matter of remuneration. Furthermore, the regulations say that unless a gentleman annually sends his name in to show that he is on deck, he can be struck off the list of honorary colonels. Therefore it is purely honorary.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I call the attention of hon. gentlemen to something that occurred a few months ago in Montreal. We know that when the volunteers were called out for the Valleyfield riot, the Montreal regiment furnished a certain number of soldiers. Colonel Cole and Colonel Cook had a row in reference to this, and it came before the court. Colonel Cole had given an order to Colonel Cook to parade one night with his regiment in the drill hall. Colonel Cook refused. He was put under arrest. He appealed to the general. The general dismissed the case, because he did not approve of what had been done, and it did not go further in the military circles. It dropped there, but Colonel Cook was not satisfied. He addressed himself to another tribunal, and sued Colonel Cole for a certain amount for having unlawfully put him under arrest, and the whole question of what constituted active service came up before the court. It was Judge Langelier who, in the first instance, decided the case, and it was afterwards carried to the Court of Appeals, and that court, by the unanimous decision of the different judges, maintained the judgment of the first instance, and decided that Colonel Cole had no right to put Colonel Cook under arrest, because he was not on active service, though he was present in the drill hall at the time the order was given to him by Colonel Cole. According to that decision, what becomes of the case of Colonel Ponton? He certainly was not under the military law. He was not in active service; more than that, he was on the reserve list of officers. More than that, the government had no right to ask Colonel Ponton to withdraw any expressions he had used in that interview or in the paper, the Belleville 'Intelligencer.' I think my hon. friend will admit that an officer who is not in military uniform, but in civilian dress, is not under the King's regulations at all, and has no order to receive except the order that he may receive to begin his annual training—that is the only order to be given him, or if he is called out to suppress a riot. But in the case I have referred to, there was an agreement between the district officer commanding of the Sixth District and Colonel Cook, an agreement which had been ignored by Colonel Cole, who was the officer in command at the time, and for those reasons the Court of Appeals sustained the judgment of the court of first instance, and declared that the militia were not on active service on those occasions.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This unfortunate controversy has taken too wide a range, and we have wasted a lot of time. The hon. leader of the opposition covered up the real point at issue. No one found fault with Col Ponton. Here was a charge made by Col Ponton, which, if true, was an extremely improper and unfortunate condition of things, that the men had been bundled out of Halifax without any provision having been made for them, without their uniforms. Col. Ponton was not called upon to make any explanation of that. The letter simply asks whether the remarks attributed to him were made by him, and his reasons for making them. It was quite natural that a gentleman of standing in his position, an officer who occupied the rank of colonel, should be asked to state whether those statements were true. The gravamen of the whole charge was why Lord Dundonald's name was brought in, and the hon. leader of the opposition got away from that in a very ingenious manner. It was Lord Dundonald's conduct. No one was finding fault with Col. Ponton.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What was it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because Lord Dundonald acted most improperly and most unbecoming a gentleman, in his line of conduct in regard to that. In November, 1902, when the minister saw this statement, he asked Lord Dundonald to write to Col. Ponton, asking him to give his reasons for making that statement, in order that he might make further inquiry. Lord Dundonald paid no attention to it and never made any report of it, and the minister forgot all about it from November, 1902 to 1904.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The ministers have a knack of forgetting things.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No reference was made to it by Sir Frederick Borden until this grandiloquent speech in Massey Hall, Toronto, when Lord Dundonald made this statement:

> Gentlemen, this imperial monster, this wolf, stood between the Minister of Militia and his prey.

Lord Dundonald had no right to make that statement. Sir Frederick Borden never asked him to make a report, except in November, 1902, and never mentioned the subject again. This matter was merely brought up to show that the conduct of Lord Dundonald was not defensible. It was not the action of a gentleman or officer certainly, to treat the minister in that way. He held the papers, and did not even return them to file, but nothing was said about it. The minister did not follow it up. He had no desire to give Col. Ponton any annoyance, and nothing more would have occurred if Lord Dundonald had not endeavoured to make a point out of such a shallow affair, as he did in the city of Toronto, and to use those extravagant words that he used in leading the public to believe that Sir Frederick Borden was going to persecute Col. Ponton because he had not given him an explanation of the matter, whereas, as a matter of fact, Sir Frederick Borden never thought of it again, until it came out in the public press.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. Secretary of State has told the committee with a good deal of suavity and some adjectives I might use, that Colonel Ponton was not called upon as an officer of the militia or as a retired officer, to make the explanation. Has he the letter before him, signed 'G. C. G. Montizambert, Col.'?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. It reads: 'I have been instructed to call upon you for your reasons,' &c.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not want the hon. gentleman to interrupt me. The hon. gentleman said that Col. Ponton was not called upon as an officer of the militia to make that explanation. I should like him to explain, if that be the case, why the district officer commanding the 3rd and 4th divisions, who signs himself Colonel, writes to a brother officer in this way:—

Lieut.-Col. W. N. Ponton, R.O.:

Herewith is a clipping received this morning from Ottawa, from the Belleville 'Intelligencer,' of the 29th ult., containing alleged remarks made by you. I have been instructed to call upon you for your reasons in making them, and to state whether the remarks attributed to you, were made by you.

Does anybody think that if you were writing to a gentleman simply asking for an explanation that you would use the language, 'I am instructed to call upon you'? Would one civilian write to another in that way, unless a complaint had been made against him that he had slandered somebody?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Sir Frederick Borden never followed it up.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why not?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He never thought of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then he did not do his duty.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Because Lord Dundonald did not report to him the answer he got.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What difference does that make, I should like to know, as to the right of the minister or the officer commanding, Lord Dundonald, or any other officer, to call upon Lieut.-Col. Ponton as a retired officer of the militia, to account for what he said? That is the point I am arguing—not the improprieties, if any were committed, of Lord Dundonald. It would be well if the hon. gentleman who has taken the other side of the question would try and confine himself to that point; I did not desire to go behind it. I am not defending Lord Dundonald for what he said in Toronto, but I believe what he said was true.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Much ado about nothing.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has the hon. gentleman been reading Shakespeare? I differ from the hon. gentleman on that point altogether, and without pursuing it further, that letter of Col. Montizambert was the demand of a superior officer to a retired officer, to make an explanation of what he had said at a public meeting. That is what I complain of—an official demand—not as the hon. Secretary of State said, an unofficial demand. If he had written to him as one gentleman to another, 'Well, you have written so-and-so, you were wrong, Ponton; what were your reasons,' that would be perfectly within the rights of one citizen in dealing with another; but coming back to the main point, I reiterate that he had no right to make the demand, and if he did make the demand, Col. Ponton was quite right in repudiating his authority to do so.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—We have had an hour's discussion over a small matter, over a letter addressed to a gentleman who was a lieutenant-colonel in the militia, who made a statement of some importance, and who was asked what ground he had for making that statement. If that gentleman answered, as I believe he did, it may have been his own business. That was the end of the matter, and if the officer commanding had returned the answer to the government, and the government had decided to discipline him as they might have done, and the general officer commanding had stood betwen the tyrant and his prey, to justify his declaration in Toronto, then he could plume himself, either in Toronto or elsewhere, on having defended a citizen of Canada against a tyrannical minister. But nothing of the kind occurred. That officer answered the query ; the General Officer Commanding, received that answer, kept it in a pigeon-hole or in his pocket, and that was the end of it. And here is this simple little fact which we have been discussing for nearly two hours, to demonstrate that the Governor in Council should not have absolute authority to dismiss an officer from the militia. This is a very flimsy pretext for two hours' idle discussion.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think it would be a mistake to pass the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona. It is very difficult to enumerate in a document of this kind all the possible cases that might arise. An officer might be guilty of high treason, and I do not think he enumerated high treason among the offences for which he could be removed.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Would that be misconduct ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I should like to hear that amendment read, because I do not understand that simple misconduct was one of the offences.

The CHAIRMAN—The amendment is that after the word 'time,' in the 41st line, the following words be inserted :—

For any of the following reasons : First, absence without leave from annual training ; second, medical unfitness ; third, misconduct or incapacity ; fourth, residing outside of limits ; fifth, failing to qualify ; sixth, having reached the age limit ; seventh, disbandment of corps ; eighth, by sentence of court martial.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That includes almost every offence one could imagine.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Mental unfitness—what is that ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I desire to call the attention of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona to the fact that it would be exposing the government to be dragged into court, if the amendment was carried, whenever an officer was dismissed for cause, because then the court would have to decide as to whether the cause was sufficient or not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is that not right ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Who would be the judge ? It is a term that is commonly embodied in a contract, that the employer may dismiss for cause, but the court will decide as to whether the cause was sufficient or not. Surely the hon. gentlemen do not propose that the government's hands shall be tied in that way? Under the law as it stands in the statute-book, regulations have been made by the Governor in Council. These regulations might have been narrowed or extended. It implies that a regulation may be made under the Act indicating the causes from time to time, for which a dismissal may be made, but the government must always have the supreme power, and I think it exists in every country, of dismissing an officer, if the government see fit, without being subject to the control of the court.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to call attention to the fact that under the law the government have the power at any time to disband any corps of the active militia. That just means that you have a corps perhaps five hundred strong, and the government can, without showing cause, except the cause they chose to show to parliament afterwards, disband that whole corps ; and you undertake to tie the government's hands, and to say that if they find it desirable in the public interest that a certain officer shall be dismissed, they cannot dismiss him, although they can disband a whole corps.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the government wants to dismiss a man without reason, I think that throws a great deal of odium on the individual who is the object of the dismissal. If the government wants to dismiss a whole corps, they will do it only for proper reasons, and they will be able to justify the act; but I think it is going too far to dismiss a single officer or private by Order in Council ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend will see the difference between the two cases of disbanding the corps, and dealing with an individual.

Hon. Mr. POWER—A big difference, yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Because in disbanding a corps. they would have to strike men of all political parties, and there would be no danger, but under this clause they could select individuals. There would be very little danger in performing a larger operation because they must strike friends and foes, and public opinion could be formed on the question. There is much more danger arising out of dismissing individuals that may be selected, who would not have as many friends as a regiment would have.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I must express my surprise at the attempt of the hon. gentleman from Halifax to draw an analogy between the case he mentioned, and the one which has been referred to, which gives authority to the government, because, as a rule, the Speaker is a somewhat close, and very keen critic, and I do not know any man in the House who is more capable of drawing a distinction between the disbandment of a corps and the dismissal of an individual. I have given him credit for a good deal more keenness than that. He said that a corps might be disbanded for public reasons. Corps are usually disbanded because of disorganization ; that they are allowed to run down. The officers do not keep them up, or it may be the locality no longer requires them, and the public interest would be that they should not be kept on the army roll, showing a force that did not exist. If the hon. gentleman is sincere in what he says, let it be so stated; I would suggest to my hon. friend from Stadacona that if they accept the proposition I shall make, he should withdraw his amendment. Although the enumeration of the articles in the King's Regulations are such as to cover every offence not becoming a gentleman in the army, for which they would dismiss a man, there is a reason for it. His conduct might be such as to justify his removal. That is, misconduct covered by the King's Regulations, and surely a country that has had a standing army for the number of years that England has had one. and having open regulations to guide them as to offences for which officers and men can be dismissed, they certainly should not be objected to in Canada. If my hon. friend persists in making that motion, I shall very gladly vote for it, because I think there ought to be some limit to the power of the minister in this regard. If his motion is voted down, I shall move an amendment. My intention was to insert the words 'For cause', but after what has fallen from the hon. Speaker with reference to public interest, it would be well to make it read : 'For cause and in the public interest'. I deny that it would be in the public interest, if a man was dismissed simply because he held different views from the minister.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I should like the minister to explain the meaning of the words, 'The Governor in Council may dispense with the services of any officer or man of the militia at any time.'

Does it mean this : Supposing a man is captain in the militia, can the Governor in Council declare that he is no more a captain, without giving any reason ? Is that the meaning ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—It seems to me this is a very arbitrary power. A man may be a first-class officer. Some enemy of his may spread a calumny against him, and the government may dishonour an innocent man who has been calumniated. I do not think you will find such a case in the regular army in Europe. I understand, as the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry said, that every government had a right to change its officers. I understand that. You may not have sufficient grounds to bring him before a court-martial ; but the government thinks he is not directing the army as he ought to. They do not take away his rank from him, but I am afraid the minister did not think of the danger of dishonouring a man in the army without any cause.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The words are, 'Dispense with the services of any officer or man of the militia at any time,' and it is suggested that the government be deprived of that right.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I think the hon. gentleman was not listening, because I put that question, and it was answered that it meant that he might be taken away from his rank. Then as I think it was admitted on our side, I do not think we ought to give the power to the government to dishonour a man without cause.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The government, since confederation, have never had the power which my hon. friend thinks they should have.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I will ask permission to withdraw my amendment.

The amendment was withdrawn.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I move that the words, 'For cause' be inserted. I wish to make a provision that if a gentleman is dismissed that he may not be disgraced without knowing the reasons for that disgrace.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—I think it rather unfortunate that this question should come up just now, for in listening to the able speeches on both sides, it appears to me, judging from the frequency—the regrettable frequency—with which their names have been brought into this discussion, that the Minister of Militia and Lord Dundonald seem to influence the very atmosphere in which this question is being discussed. Looking at it in the abstract, the amendment appears to me so reasonable that I do not know why it should be objected to. Let us forget for a moment the present occupant of the position of Minister of Militia, and let us suppose that some one else were there to-morrow, or next month, or a year hence. I think it would be a great misfortune to give to any individual, on becoming Minister of Militia, fresh from a contested election, with all the warmth and excitement it engenders, the power of dismissing, without cause, a man who might have worn His Majesty's uniform for many years. I think it would be most unfair. Something of that kind was attempted with an elder brother of mine, and it came home to us; but the British authorities sustained him, and when it was found that there were attempts to remove him without cause he was maintained in his position. I am satisfied that few ministers would attempt to remove an officer or man without cause. Then why not so provide in the law. Otherwise I should be obliged to vote that the Bill—in many respects an excellent one—be not entertained, because the amendment for its improvement is so very reasonable. If we had always a Minister of Militia who was at all times removed from political influence of every description, it would be a different matter, but I think it would be a great misfortune to place it in the power of any individual—I make not the slightest allusion to the present occupant—the right to dismiss a member of the militia force without cause. The present Minister of Militia is a member of my own profession, and I should be sorry to reflect upon him in the most remote manner, but there may be a change, and this law is likely to last for some time I suppose, and not change with the occupant to whom it is proposed to concede such unconstrained power.

The committee divided on the amendment, which was lost on the following division :—

Yeas, 11 ; nays, 17.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I voted by mistake. I had forgotten that I was paired.

The CHAIRMAN—It makes no difference.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I may state that I am paired with the Hon. Mr. Coffey, and if I had voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I shall take the opportunity of moving the amendment on the third reading, and I now beg to move that the following words be inserted:—

'The Governor General may for cause,' leaving out the words, 'in the public interest.'

The amendment was lost on the following division :—

Yeas, 9 ; nays, 16.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 21,

21. The Governor in Council may direct that any portion of Canada shall be a military district for the purposes of this Act, may alter the limits of any such district, may cause two or more districts to be grouped together for the purposes of command and administration, and may divide any military district into sub-districts, brigade, regimental and company divisions, as appears expedient.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—By the old Act Canada was divided into 12 military districts, and under it there was one military district in the province of Nova Scotia, one in New Brunswick, one in Prince Edward Island, one in Manitoba, the Northwest Territories, and the district of Keewatin, one in British Columbia, three in the province of Quebec, and four in the province of Ontario. By the new law, the Governor in Council may direct that any portion of Canada may be a military district for the purposes of this Act, may alter the limits of such district, and cause two or more districts to be grouped together for the purposes of command and administration, and may divide any military district into subdistricts, brigade, regimental and company divisions, as appear expedient. Are the provinces which had two or three military districts before liable to lose some of them? Will British Columbia lose its military district? Will Prince Edward Island lose its military district? The power is given to the Governor in Council to do away with all those districts. They may create any district the Governor in Council wants for any purpose. I think before passing that clause we should have some explanation from the Secretary of State. All this is done away with by the Bill, and they may put it in one province and take it out of another.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the hon. gentleman had read section 17 of the present law, he would see that substantially it is the same as the existing law. In it is provided how Canada is to be divided, but section 17 says:—

Her Majesty may alter the districts specified in the next preceding section, and increase or diminish the number thereof, as is deemed necessary, and may name the territorial divisions, which shall form part of the three military districts of Quebec, and the four military districts of Ontario, and alter the same from time to time.

So that substantially the new Bill is the same as the old.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 25,

25. The permanent force shall furnish schools of instruction for the militia, and provide instructors therefor; and it shall also be available, at all times, for general service.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not desire to oppose this clause, but I should like to have a provision that the permanent force should furnish schools of instruction for the militia, and that the French element of the militia should be provided with instructors who understand the French language. If we do not complain we shall never have it. I call the attention of the minister to something that is required in our rural districts. We had a camp last year, and I suppose we had about eleven or twelve instructors. There were only two who understood French, and could give the instructions to the corps in French. I understand in the provinces where English is well known that need is not felt, but in the divisions of Quebec, where the rural population are French who do not understand a word of English, all the commands are in English, and the instructions are in English, and it is a hard job for people to train under such conditions. They must learn the words of command by sound. I should like, in the interests of our rural population, that those schools should provide a certain number of instructors who are able to give the instructions in French.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall take a note of the matter, and will call the attention of the Minister of Militia to what I think is an important omission, and I have no doubt he will be governed by it. Of course, a remedy should be provided for such a condition.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend called attention to that matter about a year ago, and it seemed to be a perfectly reasonable suggestion. I cannot see any reason why it should not be adopted. It would seem to be a waste of effort to try and drill men in a language they do not understand a word of.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—One of the qualifications of a British general is that he must understand the French and German languages. An officer never could be promoted to the rank of general without this qualification, and for a very good reason; in case of a war it would be necessary to be familiar with those languages.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I was told lately—I do not know if it is true—that Lord Dundonald had told the officers that they must learn French if they wanted to be promoted in Quebec.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—More than that, at the time General Hutton was here, there was an order passed imposing that obligation, but it was ignored.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 30,

30. There may be appointed an officer who shall hold rank not below that of colonel in the militia or in His Majesty's Regular Army, who may be, subject to the regulations and under the direction of the Minister, charged with the military command of the militia, and such officer shall have the rank of Major General in the militia, and shall be paid at such rate, not exceeding six thousand dollars per annum, as is prescribed.

2. In the event of a vacancy in the office of General Officer Commanding, or in the absence of that officer from Canada, the Governor in Council may detach an officer of the headquarters staff, who shall be charged with the military command of the militia.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is a clause which removes the provision in the old law, that was introduced by the late Alex. Mackenzie, providing that the General Officer Commanding shall be an officer of the British army, holding a rank not less than colonel. This Bill makes provision that he may be of the British army or of the Canadian militia ; in other words it opens the door to the appointment of a general officer commanding the forces from the Canadian militia. That is really the change that is made in this provision. While I am not prepared to admit what has been charged, that on account of that restriction a Canadian officer may be appointed who by experience is less fitted for the position than one who has served in the regular army, I must add that we have no colonels in the Canadian militia who have had the experience, and who have made military tactics a life study, who have been educated to the profession from boyhood up, and, consequently, it would not be unreasonable to suppose that while a Canadian officer may have the same ability and talent and aptitude for command, he could not by any possibility have the same knowledge of the requirements of an army or militia force as one who has been trained all his life in it. There is also another reason why I object to this change. I very much fear that if a Canadian militia officer be appointed to that high and honoured position, that while he may have the ability to fill the position with credit to himself and advantage to the country, he would be apt to be influenced in his management of the militia to a much greater extent than one who has no personal interest in Canada outside of his official duties. A British officer would be less likely to be influenced for political or other reasons by the minister of the day. Those are the reasons which suggest themselves to me, that it would be impolitic, unless the Canadian officer had been serving in the army—and that I should very much like to see—to make the appointment from the Canadian militia. But they are drawing a distinction between a man who has served the country and holds a commission in the British army, who is not a born Canadian. It has been argued that it leaves an impression in the minds of the people that it is a reflection on the ability of the Canadian officer. I do not admit that for a moment. I have given my reasons why I think it is preferable, and it can be done under this law, to have an officer in that high position who has no intimate or personal relations with the different officers of the country, that he is much more apt to be governed by military reasons in giving advice to the Minister of Militia than would a man who is a resident of the country, who has mingled with all the officers, who has been associated with them at mess, who may be connected with them by blood, or for any other reason, and I am quite sure that is the reason the then Prime Minister of the country, the Hon. Alex. Mackenzie, added that clause to the Militia Bill when the law was under consideration at that time. These are the reasons that I have for hoping that in the appointment of an officer of that kind, it is very important that some regard shall be had to the reasons which I have advanced, why it would be better to have an officer who has served in the regular army, whether he is a Canadian or an Indian or an Australian. I do not care what part of the British empire he comes from ; if he has had experience in the British army, so much the better.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The subject is not a living one, and need not be discussed, because there is no intention whatever of taking any action in regard to that clause. I think that has already been stated in both chambers ; I certainly stated it myself, that the Militia Council was to supersede the general officer. Conditions may arise in the event of any emergency, or in the event of our having to send a force outside of this country, when it might be advisable to adopt the suggestion of the hon. gentleman, and place an imperial officer at the head of the militia; but at present we are going to try what the Militia Council will do. We think it will be more effective, and more advantages will arise from it than from having the militia under the control of a General Officer Commanding. I shall not go over the list of general officers. We have had a great number of officers. We had trouble with the general officer commanding in 1861, and we have also had trouble with others. Their periods of remaining here have been short. They have invariably changed the order of things established by their predecessor, and it is on that account thought wise to depart from the custom of the past, in order to secure uniformity in our militia regulations in the future. There is no necessity to discuss that clause, because there is no intention whatever to act upon it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no doubt that is the intention of the government, but the next clause provides for the officer to take the position. The hon. gentleman will remember that when objections were taken of a similar character to that which I have just given utterance, the Minister of Militia said they were taking the power to make the appointment, and they were not restricted to a military officer in Canada, or one in Great Britain. That is the position he took. I do not think he went so far as to say that it was not their intention. I do not so read it; I wish to make one exception to the statement made by the hon. gentleman. There was a major general in Canada who served his term and left Canada without any difficulty. I will not give his name, for the reason that he never did anything. He remained in Canada his five years and allowed the militia to do as they pleased. While I was Minister of Customs I ordered out the corps in Winnipeg to go to Cross Lake to quell a riot there, and sent them home again. Sir John Macdonald came to me—the Minister of Militia was not in the city at the time—and said: 'Bowell, I wish you would take that matter in hand.' I did so, and I wired and sent a force of militia to Cross Lake, and afterwards sent them back. I met the general later on, and I said to him, 'I have usurped your authority.' He said 'How is that?' I said 'I have ordered out the militia, sent them to Cross Lake and sent them home again,' and he said 'All right' and passed on.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—And he did not make a speech at Montreal or Toronto protesting against the hon. gentleman's action.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, he did not. The hon. gentleman seems to have that on the brain. The gentleman to whom I refer never came in contact with the government and never did anything except to draw his salary like a gentleman.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am not a very close student of military matters, but we are now considering a clause of very great importance, and we have had a statement from my hon. friend the Secretary of State which I think I understand, and it is this: that notwithstanding that we are keeping a provision in the law by which a General Officer Commanding may be appointed, either an officer of the Canadian militia or a British officer, that it is not the intention to appoint such an officer; but to operate this advisory council and carry on the militia force by the advice of the advisory council and to carry on the military force by the advice of the military council without appointing a General Officer Commanding?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the present understanding.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am glad I understood my hon. friend correctly, but I will say that, in my humble opinion, I think they are pursuing a very dangerous course by doing anything of the kind, and I cannot concede for a moment that the true interest of the defence of Canada can be served by the minister. The present minister may be, and I think is, a military man to a certain extent. He has given a good deal of attention to it, but a man of his qualifications may not always be obtained, and I presume that the intention is only to carry out this system as long as the present minister is in power, and it may be changed afterwards. But at any rate, I do not think it is a wise provision to attempt to run the defence of Canada by means of this council. When we were passing the other clause, I did not think any more was intended than merely to have that as an auxiliary, but still it was in contemplation, as I saw it was in the Bill, to appoint a General Officer Commanding. Now we learn that it is not the intention. I think that we are going backward instead of forward in the matter of the defence of the country. A paper was handed me this evening which contains a cablegram from London to-day. The cablegram appears in the Montreal 'Star,' a portion of which I shall read. A good deal of it is not relevant, because the subjects have been threshed out sufficiently to-night. It is in regard to an editorial in the London 'Post,' and reads as follows :—

> The 'Post' severely criticising the militia says the old fallacy that a mob of men with the ability to occasionally hit the target constitutes an army is still widely current in Canada, or at any rate the Canadian press would appear to be of the opinion of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his ministers, that the defence of Canada can be assured most cheaply and effectively by trusting to the patriotism of the people, who they seem to think will be able to improvise an army at a moment's notice.

I think that is a warning, and that there is an importance in it that we should not disregard.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend makes a great mistake here. He is turning down all Canada. He is reflecting on them. whether they be of English, Irish. Scotch or French descent. What did we find in the Boer war ? Though we had 250,000 British soldiers there, the Boers walked through them. Why ? Not because they were braver or better armed, but because they knew the conditions of the country and used their intelligence. Look at the Japanese to-day walking through the Russian hosts. Why ? Because you must have intelligent men to fight successfully. My hon. friend is bringing in a Bill which is intended to put the militia, not on an aggressive basis. but on a basis which will enable them to organize better than they were before, and get intelligent officers. It cuts away the cast-iron rule that we must have an English officer. There are good English officers. and bad English officers. A man goes into the British army as a profession, and rises from a lower to higher grades, and then gets command for five years, and goes. He may be a good man, or a poor officer—that is to say, he may have been thoroughly instructed in the science of war, but unable to apply it. Are we going to say that with 6,000,000 of people in this country, we have no men who are fit to command in a fight ? I do not hesitate to say that give me ten Perrys, entrenched, each with one hundred rounds of ammunition, and they will kill eight hundred out of one thousand men who attack. I cannot understand for a moment why we are going to say that we have not in our own country men fit for any emergency. Take my hon. friend, the brigadier officer ; I would be willing to trust myself under his command or as his associate. The idea here is that we must have a British officer, but as my hon. friend has said, the government have quarrelled with the whole of them. They were good men, but not familiar with conditions here. They knew the science of war, but could not apply it . Suppose a war were to break out to-morrow here, who would have to face the enemy ? Not men fighting under the cast-iron rules laid down in the past, but smart young fellows who can hold the enemy at bay everywhere, Perrys, who can take cover, shoot straight and beat back the assailants. What British officer is better than that ? Why should not our own men go abroad and learn, as the Japs did, when they sent their officers to every civilized country in the world to pick up what information they could ? Are the Japs any better than Canadians ? Nobody will dare to say that they are. We can trust any government in this country.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We are discussing it on general principles.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I say we have young men—I could point to one or two in the House of Commons to-day—smart, bright fellows ; give them a chance, whether they be French or English, and they will do credit to the country. The Militia Department is empowered to use its functions and give these men a chance. We can produce par-excellence as good men in this country. be they French or English, as can be produced in any part of the world.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Nobody in this House will for a moment join in disparaging Canadians. It is true. as the hon. gentleman has said, that Canadians distinguished themselves in the Boer war. Give them equal opportunity, training, and experience, and I have no hesitation in saying that they will be found to distinguish themselves in any position they may be called upon to fill. They have proved that in the past, and nobody doubts they will do so in the future. It is a question of qualification and experience. When we speak of British officers, we must remember that there are Canadians, and not a few of them, in the British army, and a British officer who is a Canadian may be appointed. What I want to see is a qualified General Officer Commanding appointed. It is important for Canada that the commanding officer should be a man of experience and wider training than can be had in Canada.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Who beat the British soldiers in the United States in the old wars ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We are not talking about the United States.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—They were men who had no military training whatever, but who knew the country and the surroundings.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not object to interruptions which are relevant, but I do not want to be interrupted by an irrelevant remark. The whole thing is to have qualified men for this position. Brave and capable as the Canadians proved themselves to be in South Africa, the results would not have been so satisfactory if there had not been a Roberts, a Kitchener and a Dundonald to lead them ; and here we are proposing to drift away and leave the door open for a clumsily constituted advisory council to take the direction of our militia matters. It is no wonder the London 'Post' says that we have as much confidence in a mob as in a regular army. I did not know until the debate was in progress that so dangerous a proposition was before us. It does not appear from anything we know, how far the minister will be bound to take the advice of the militia council, even when he does consult them. We are practically launching out on a scheme of militia organization under which a Minister of Militia, who may know nothing more than I do about militia matters—and I confess frankly that is not very much—might undertake to run the militia affairs of the country as he thought proper, with an advisory council which he may or may not consult, and whose advice he is not bound to accept even though he does consult them.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Marshfield seems to think there was something very remarkable in the abolition of the office of General Officer Commanding. We have not in this country given very much study to military matters. We have not been called upon to study them as they have had to do in other countries ; but we know that in Germany they have no Commander-in-Chief. They have substituted a chief of staff for the commander-in-chief. In the United States they had a Commander-in-Chief until about a year and a half ago, when they by statute abolished the office. In England, where they have given a good deal of study to this question, they have abolished the office of Commander-in-Chief, and substituted a military council and Inpector General and Chief of Staff ; so we are following the example of countries where the subject has been considered very fully, and probably are not far astray. The hon. gentleman from Belleville expressed a sort of guarded regret that the government and parliament should depart from the course taken by Mr. Mackenzie in 1875. Mr. Mackenzie's government, and the hon. gentleman who leads this House was then a member of that government, I suppose were influenced by the same views expressed here to-night by the hon. gentleman ; and they thought it would be a better system to have an English officer of experience at the head of our militia than to have what we had before them, an adjutant general, who, by the way, was generally an English officer of experience. The idea was to take the office out of politics. It did not take the office out of politics, because, with the exception of the gentleman to whom the leader of the opposition refers, every General Officer Commanding who has been in command of the militia since 1875 has fallen out with the government of the day, and left Canada before his term expired. It is only fair to say that there was one other officer who had no quarrel with the government, and that was the General Officer Commanding who preceded Lord Dundonald. The government and the minister had no quarrel with Major General O'Grady-Haley.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He had not time.

Hon. Mr. POWER—For some reason, the War Office people were anxious to send the other gentleman here in his place. There were three reasons why Major General O'Grady-Haley gave satisfaction. He had served in Canada as a comparatively young officer, he knew the country and understood the people, which the average English officer does not at all. Then again General O'Grady-Haley had no ambitions or interests outside of Canada. His career in the imperial army had ended. His only object and his only duty here was to serve the Canadian government and do his duty by the Canadian militia. The average general officers commanding, men like the one who preceded General O'Grady-Haley, and men like the one who succeeded him, were thinking perhaps less about doing their duty as commanding officers of the Canadian militia than they were of making an impression on the home authorities, where they looked for advancement after leaving here; and that alone is a sufficient reason why we should not have those English officers coming out here who propose to go back again after their term with us expires. Instead of trying to do his duty by the Canadian militia the officer, as a general rule, is thinking of making a marked impression on public opinion in the old country, with a view of promoting his own interests after he goes home. Further, with respect to Major General O'Grady-Haley, there has not been much said about him, but he was really a most competent officer and did his work remarkably well. The institution of the school of musketry and some other improvements were due to him; and my own belief is that when the present little excitement has simmered down, hon. gentlemen, and the public generally, will realize that General O'Grady-Haley, although he did his duty in a quiet way, did it effectually and that there has been no better general officer in Canada since the office was instituted. I do not propose to go into a general discussion of the subject. There was one matter which was just indicated by the hon. gentleman who preceded me, and that was the want of continuity. An inferior system which is continuous is better than frequent changes of system, and as some hon. gentlemen stated a while ago, in the case of those English general officers commanding, the first thing an officer commanding did when he came out here was to either try to reverse the policy of his predecessor, or to point out that under his predecessor the militia had not been properly handled. Take for instance the case of General Hutton. He succeeded General Gascoigne. General Gascoigne had made a report for 1897, in which he spoke in the highest terms of the Canadian militia. How well they turned out, &c., and any one reading that report would think that our Canadian militia were a very superior body of men. General Hutton, a man of great ability, and a most competent officer, when he came out here in his first report condemned the Canadian militia, indicated that they were very much below par, and that he was very much disappointed in the force. He published another report a year later, shortly before he went away, describing the Canadian militia as splendid fellows. I suppose the change was all due to the remarkable reforms which he had instituted during the intervening twelve months. And so it is. We do not get our judges, our Ministers of Customs or men at the head of any of our public or private institutions from England, and I see no reason why we should look to England for our general officers commanding. I am glad to know that the government do not propose to have any more of those officers, and I am rather sorry that there is any provision at all for a General Officer Commanding. There is just one other point about General O'Grady-Haley. He did not separate himself from the force, did not reserve his confidence from his Canadian subordinates, and that has not been the case with his successor and other general officers commanding. They found here Canadian officers quite competent to do their work and men who from their official positions should have received the confidence of the General Officer Commanding. These Canadian officers have not had that confidence. The practice has been for the General Officer Commanding to import from England younger officers whom he got around him and to whom he did give his confidence, the confidence he withheld from the men who by virtue of their superior official positions were entitled to receive his confidence.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I deny in toto the remarks made by my hon. friend against General Hutton and Lord Dundonald. I happened to serve under both of them. I am not speaking from a political point of view. I will not refer to the Dundonald incident, taking it from a political point of view. I am speakng of those two men as soldiers, as we knew them in camp. General Hutton greatly improved the militia when he assisted at our camps. He was truly a soldier. He told some very hard truths, but I think he gave a good stimulus to the Canadian militia. So did Lord Dundonald. Without wishing at all to interfere in the political battle that is now going on, I take this occasion to speak of Lord Dundonald as a soldier, and I say that he was extremely popular amongst our militia. Both General Hutton and Lord Dundonald understood French very well, and were able to come in contact with everybody in the camps. Under Lord Dundonald our men learned to make entrenchments, a thing that had been ignored before in the training of our militia, and we learned a lot of things practically. The soldier had not merely his rifle, but he also carried a pick and shovel and learned how to make trenches, and go through the necessary details of work in the field. All those things were taught by General Hutton and Lord Dundonald, and in that respect I wish to give my testimony in favour of those two generals. General Herbert, who preceded them, I think, had commenced those improvements. I have nothing to say against General O'Grady-Haley. He was a very quiet gentleman, and came to camp like an ordinary officer. He did his duty, there is no doubt about that, but I do not think he had the vim the others had in making improvements. I just take this occasion to do an act of justice. Lord Dundonald has been accused of trying to engender racial prejudices in Canada. Speaking in the name of the French Canadian element in our militia, having been in contact for two years with Lord Dundonald, I say in justice to him that amongst the French element of our militia Lord Dundonald was the most popular general we ever had. The government may find that he interfered in politics, or charge anything else against him; I do not discuss that—I am speaking of the merit of General Dundonald in the field and in contact with our militia, and I say that not a single French Canadian has a word of complaint against Lord Dundonald. We were speaking a moment ago of the experience of our Canadian officers. In the wars that are now going on in Thibet and Manchuria, our Canadian militia should be represented by some of our Canadian officers who would learn something from observing the manœuvres in the field. I am told that at this moment there are a few of our officers in Japan. Can the minister tell me the names of our Canadian officers who are now serving in Manchuria ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is Thacker.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is he the only one ? I thought three had been sent. Three names were mentioned. I know Thacker is there now, but are there no others ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not aware if there are any others.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I know three were named, and I regretted that an officer representing the French Canadian militia had not been named among them. In justice to that element, the government might have named one.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not wish to speak positively, but I think the Japanese authorities refused to have more than one, either that or the English authorities would not allow more than one.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If that is so, I would not press my demand. If three Canadian officers are detailed for such experience in any other war, I should like a French Canadian to be appointed as one, to share with his brother officers in the fruits of that experience.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE ROWELL—The hon. Speaker has passed an unnecessary reflection on the commanding officers in the past, by saying their only object, apparently, was to so conduct themselves here in the interest of the imperial authorities as to obtain promotion at the end of their term. I am not prepared to admit that statement. Every man who serves in the army looks for promotion, whatever his position may be; but I do not think that the general officers commanding in Canada deserve the severe criticism that has been passed upon them. While there have been difficulties between the government and former commanding officers, I have yet to learn that any of those difficulties arose on account of party feeling or politics. I have read in the newspapers, however, that difficulties arose between the Minister of Militia and General O'Grady-Haley. I cannot remember now what those difficulties were, but I know I saw it mentioned in either a Canadian or English paper, that difficulties had arisen, and that when General O'Grady-Haley went home, his services were utilized in some capacity equal to that which he occupied here. He was thought well of by the Imperial authorities who managed the army. However, that is a matter of very little consequence. The difficulties that have arisen in the past between the commanding officer and the government have not been of a political character as far as I know. The difficulty with Lord Dundonald was not that he introduced politics into the service, but that he objected to the introduction of politics, and had a row accordingly.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—That was a pretext only. That is generally admitted all round now.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, it is not admitted at all.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—He said so himself.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. What he said was that he took advantage, in making that speech, to expose the introduction of politics into the militia, knowing the consequences which would follow, in the interest of the militia. I always thought, and said so to gentlemen in the other House, that some of his acts were indiscreet. The reason he gave was that he could not trust those with whom he was associated, and that he had to put the case in the hands of the opposition. Now, I am not prepared to defend that; I am not going to discuss it. What I did say was, that his difficulty arose out of the position taken by one member of the cabinet on political grounds, to ignore a certain family in his constituency. Lord Dundonald resented that, and he made it public at the expense of his position, knowing, as he says, the consequences which would follow, and he said he did it because he wished to throw the searchlight upon the management of the militia in that particular. That is the position. I have read pretty carefully what he said, and what has been said on the other side. I have already admitted that I thought his action was indiscreet; that he might have taken another course, though I do not hesitate to say that the man who will deliberately sacrifice himself for what he believes to be the interest of the country, deserves commendation and praise from every Canadian. In reference to the race question, unfortunately the man that introduced that question was the Minister of Militia. No one ever thought of accusing Lord Dundonald of exercising his authority against any class or creed in this country. It was an exceedingly unfortunate expression that was used by the Minister of Militia in discussing this question in the House of Commons, when he said Lord Dundonald had treated a certain officer in the province of Quebec in a certain way, and that he hoped it was not because he was a Frenchman. That was the introduction of the race question. It set the heather on fire. Many of the opposition newspapers took it up at once, and denounced it. That was followed immediately afterwards by the government papers of Quebec, particularly French papers, accusing the opposition of raising the race cry because they denounced the Minister of Militia for having done so. Every one who knows the circumstances knows that to be the fact. I am, as I grow older, more strongly impressed with the wickedness, in a country like ours, of raising that question upon any occasion. We should look upon all classes of the community as British subjects, with equal rights and privileges, and when we have positive evidence that any man in authority attempts to use his power against any creed or race, I care not who he may be, we should denounce him from one end of the country to the other. We should learn to live more as British subjects should live, having as we have in Canada representatives of people from all parts of the world. I do not suppose that anywhere there are more races represented in one place than in London, and yet you never hear the race question raised there in the way it is in Canada, and it is regrettable that it should be raised here on any occasion.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I should like to say one or two words to explain an apparent misapprehension that has arisen in the minds of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona and the leader of the opposition. If I left the impression that the English general officer commanding, General Hutton or Lord Dundonald, were not pleasant with the military officers generally, I certainly did not mean to do that. What I want to say is that they did not give to the members of the headquarters staff with whom they were associated, the confidence to which they should have given, and that in the case of the late officer commanding, that confidence was given to subordinate officers who were brought here from the old country. That is one point which I think it well to explain. The other was that the leader of the opposition seemed to be under the impression that I had stated the only object of the general officer commanding was to stand well with the imperial authorities. Either I did not express my meaning correctly, or the hon. gentleman misapprehended me. What I said was that Major General O'Grady-Haley had only one object here, and that was to do his duty as to the Canadian officers, because he had no future in England, but the other gentlemen who accepted the position were divided between their duty to Canada and their expectations of promotion on the other side of the water. With respect to the Lord Dundonald episode I think that has been talked threadbare.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am very glad the hon. gentleman has made that explanation, because I should not like it to go abroad, particularly in England, that any one would accuse the general officer of having but one object in view, to impress on the English government that he had performed certain duties in this country which would lead to his promotion. That is what I understood the hon. gentleman to say, and that is what I attempted to explain away. I do not wish to be understood as justifying all the acts of General Hutton, of whom the hon. gentleman has spoken so eulogistically. General Hutton, we know, went so far in his official capacity as to instruct some officers not to have any communication with the Minister of Militia without his authority, and another of these officers, who, having had a consultation with the Minister of Militia was instructed that he should report to him. That Sir Frederick Borden should have resented conduct of that kind in any officer of his department, I am not at all surprised. He did what I think any independent man would have done. Lord Dundonald has never gone so far as that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman from Belleville said that the French Liberal press had taken up the race cry and accused Lord Dundonald and the Conservative party of raising it elsewhere. Just at the beginning of this quarrel of Lord Dundonald with the government, I remember that the conduct of the Ottawa 'Citizen' was most reprehensible, if not criminal. It published articles which no one, whatever his partisanship on the other side of this chamber may be, would have countenanced for a moment. I remember for the first few days that followed the opening of this incident, the 'Citizen' had an article in which it spoke of French domination which was unbearable, that a man could not step into the lobbies of this parliament without meeting messengers or clerks who could not speak a word of English, when, as a matter of fact, nearly all the employees one meets in the lobbies are of English, Scotch or Irish descent. I am simply mentioning one of the incidents that I can remember, but there were articles in that vein for a week in the Ottawa 'Citizen' which I am quite sure would be condemned by any reasonable man. A member of the Senate could not make a remark on that question without being styled by the 'Citizen' as a senator from Quebec, which was of course with the intention of trying to show that there was some line of clevage between the two provinces. It was kept up for a number of days. I hope if it has subsided lately it has been due to the leader of the opposition in the other chamber, because the hon. gentleman was appealed to see that some of those who supported him in Ontario should stop the campaign which was started and carried along by them.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There certainly was a wave of excitement inaugurated about the time this trouble was started. The unfortunate words of the premier, probably not intentional, but nevertheless a very unfortunate word to use in the House of Commons in that discussion, gave rise to things being said from another point of view that were regrettable. The article the hon. gentleman refers to, the only one I saw in the Citizen, I candidly say was very regrettable, and certainly could not receive the support of anybody in this country, whatever political party he may belong to. Even more regrettable than that was the language of the Minister of Militia when he tried to insinuate what he had not the manliness to say in an open way,that Lord Dundonald had passed over a French officer on account of his nationality. I am told that not one French officer joined in the cry the Minister of Militia attempted to raise against Lord Dundonald, and there was not one criticism against Lord Dundonald on the ground of his slighting anybody because of his nationality.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have not read the articles to which the hon. gentleman referred, but I venture this statement, that these articles in the Citizen were the result of the articles written in the Liberal press of Lower Canada. Unfortunately, when these incendiary articles are published, there are generally some reports of them published in Ontario newspapers, and they are taken as the expression of the whole French Canadian people. I generally keep newspaper clippings of this kind and I could educate the House on the race cry as discussed in the Liberal papers of Quebec, 'La Presse' and 'Le Canada,' and others, The articles in the 'Citizen,' no doubt, were in reply to just such attacks as those which I have before me. No doubt the unfortunate expression used by the premier, on the question of nationality did lead, as my hon. friend says, to a good deal of discussion which never would have arisen had he not used that expression. I am not so charitable as my hon. friend on my right who says that the word was used no doubt without considering the meaning which would be attached to it. I believe the premier when he used that expression meant exactly what he said.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, oh.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am expressing my own opinion.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman is surely carried away by passion when he makes such a statement.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Because if he took the context of the phrase which he alludes to, he would see that it cannot be construed as the hon. gentleman puts it now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the hon. gentleman's opinion.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It is not an opinion ; it is a question of fact. If the hon. gentleman takes the whole phrase and the context, he will find that what I say is true and he will feel a little humiliated at having expressed himself as he did.

The clause was adopted.

On subclause 2 of clause 30,

2. In the event of a vacancy in the office of general officer commanding, or in the absence of that officer from Canada, the Governor in Council may detach an officer of the headquarters staff, who shall be charged with the military command of the militia.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We have a vacancy now. Who is discharging the duties of the office at present ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Lord Aylmer.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Lord Aylmer is the adjutant general. In this case if the Militia Council is created, we will have one man filling two positions, chief of the general staff and adjutant general—is that the case ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have already explained ; I see no inconsistency in the adjutant general for the time being acting as chief of staff, or general officer commanding for that matter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to call attention to the changing of this word 'detached'.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a mere technical error, a misprint, as I am informed by the clerk of the House of Commons.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We are dealing with the Bill as it is before us. Some years ago, when the hon. senator for Richmond (Hon. Mr. Miller) was Speaker, when a similar question arose, decided that even a change in a technical error rendered it necessary to send the Bill to the House of Commons. I do not object to the word, but we are dealing with the Bill as it is in our hands, and if that decision is of any value, if we change this clause, it will have to be sent back. That would not delay the Bill : the House would accept it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I would call the attention of the minister to the fact that the Bill as presented to the House of Commons read in this way :

2. In the event of a vacancy in the office of general officer commanding, or in the absence of that officer from Canada, the command of the militia shall devolve upon the next senior combatant officer on the headquarters staff.

The Bill went to committee, and when it came out of committee, it read :

In the event of a vacancy in the office of the general officer commanding, or in the absence of that officer from Canada, the Governor in Council may detach an officer of the headquarters staff who shall be charged with the military command of the militia.

It cannot be a clerical error there.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I asked Mr. McCord whether it was a typographical error. I asked in case we should change it, if it would be necessary to send it back to the House of Commons and he said no, the word 'detail' was the word originally used.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is the difference ? Worcester gives this definition to the word detached: 'to send away as a part of the military force, or of the fleet for particular service, used especially in military language.'

Taking the meaning of the word as given here, I think it is better to leave the clause as it is.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 31,

31. There may be appointed an officer, who shall hold rank not below that of colonel in the militia or in His Majesty's regular army, who may be, subject to the regulations and under the directions of the minister, charged with the military inspection of the militia, and such officer shall be paid at such rate, not exceeding six thousand dollars per annum, as is prescribed.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Was Colonel Lake asked to fill this position ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not aware that he has been asked.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think it was announced in the House that he was.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Possibly. It has not come to my knowledge, at all events.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. Secretary of State may remember that I asked the same question some time ago, and if I remember correctly he said he would make inquiry. It was stated in the public press, and I think also in the House of Commons, that the Minister of Militia had asked Colonel Lake to get permission from the imperial authorities to be allowed to come to this country to assume that position. He may remember I said I thought it an extraordinary course to take, when the imperial authorities have the power to make the appointment. The law had not been passed, but still it was an unusual course to take.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 36,

36. The Governor in Council may establish a general staff, headquarters staff, and district staff, and may appoint a chief of the general staff and such officers to the respective staffs as are deemed necessary, and shall define their duties and authority.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is under this clause there was some talk of getting the services of Colonel Lake.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—All these officers exist. Will the chief of the general staff be in the future the commanding officer ? Could we have from the Secretary of State a reply to this question : Is the chief of the general staff, who is to be named under this clause, to be the commanding officer of the militia ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I really could not say. I presume he would be the senior officer commanding. There is not to be a general officer commanding the militia in the sense in which the militia has been commanded before, as the hon gentleman has been advised several times. The militia council is superseding the general officer.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I agree with the hon. gentleman that the council is going to continue the traditions of the militia in this country, but under clause 30 a British or Canadian officer may be appointed as Major General Commanding the Militia.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not the Major General, but chief of the staff.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—By clause 30, an officer called the Major General, may be appointed to command the Canadian militia. I am asking if the Governor General, by clause 36, will name that man if he is named the chief of the general staff ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot be more definite than I have been. I said at the beginning it was not intended to take any action with regard to clause 30. That is what I am advised—I understood that clause was not to be acted on at present.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Shall we strike it out of the Bill ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it may be used at some future time.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If it is used, will the officer be chief of staff ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot say.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 39,

39. Commissions of officers in the militia shall be granted by His Majesty during pleasure, and all warrant and non-commissioned officers shall be appointed in such manner and shall hold such rank as are prescribed by the regulations.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is that the same as the old law ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Except the word 'warrant'.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Clause 42 is said to correspond.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is it the same thing?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know that it is.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Can we not be informed ?

Hon. Mr. THIBAUDEAU (Rigaud)—Read it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I find it is greatly different.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Why does the hon. gentleman not explain ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I want to ascertain if the hon. gentlemen know the law.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It reads :

Commissions of officers in the militia shall be granted by His Majesty during pleasure.

That is word for word.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is the officers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—And the remainder of the section reads :

Non-commissioned officers shall be appointed by the officer commanding the corps.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And the new law is, what ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In such manner as prescribed by regulation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is a material difference in these two clauses. I am not surprised to hear the hon. Secretary of State say there is no difference, but I was surprised at the hon. gentleman from Halifax, for I do not know a closer critic in the House, almost to a fault. This amendment takes the power which was given, under section 42 of the Act of the old law, to the commanding officer, and declares that the appointment shall be made of non-commissioned officers by warrant and so on, by regulations made by the department, or, in other words it gives the power and responsibility to the Minister of Militia here to do that which in the English army, and which in the Canadian army prior to this proposed change is vested in the commanding officer.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, they are to be appointed under regulations to be made.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And those 'regulations to be made' can have no other object than to vest the power in the central authority in Ottawa instead of with the colonels commanding the regiment. Who can know better than the colonels what men in the regiment are best fitted for the positions of sergeants, corporals and lance corporals ? He is in contact with them every day. He knows exactly their ability. The captain knows the ability of each man in his company A man may be well educated, a man may know his drill thoroughly and yet he is not capable of communicating that knowledge to the company that he is drilling. No one knows that better than my hon. friend to my left. There are some men particularly adapted for it. Why should the right or authority to appoint such officers be taken from the commanding officer of a regiment? Under these regulations he will never know what to do unless the regulations are of a character to invest in the commanding officer the same powers that he has now under the present law on the statutes. Suppose an officer commits an error and does that which should deprive him of his rights. He may get drunk. He may misbehave himself on parade. What does the colonel do? He orders the stripes to be taken from that man at once and he is reduced to the ranks. Why should he not have that power instead of having it done by the Minister of Militia framing a resolution? I think this is going to injure the efficiency of the militia. A commanding officer should not have this power taken from him, nor should he be restricted in any way. I have no fault to find with the provision that the government should make the appointment. That is the practice in England and in this country. But here is a material change, and I am at a loss to know what has suggested it, unless it be from the purpose of the centralizing the power in Ottawa that has been exercised by commanding officers in the past without any complaint, as far as I ever heard, by the colonels of the regiments. In other words it is taking from the commander an authority and power which he should possess, and vesting it in regulations which are to be adopted by the Minister of Militia here. I should be very glad to hear an explanation and a reason given for this change. I think it is a very bad change, to use stronger language, a change which would be detrimental to the well-being and the proper regulation and management of all companies and of the regiments. In an independent company, the captain has that power. He appoints his corporals and sergeants, and does so from the knowledge he has, and yet he could not do that unless he complies with the regulations made at Ottawa. They may be all right and they may not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman assumes that the regulations are always to be in the most objectionable form he can conceive. He has no right to draw those inferences, and it is quite unfair.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

He assumes a motive in every way he can It is not a reasonable thing. There may be some grounds for this. I am not familiar with the details of the matter, but I am quite sure that every feeling of honour and propriety and right dictates every change in this Bill. No motive has ever been suggested.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We have heard that speech fifty times to-night. I am dealing with the principle involved, and not with the party that makes the regulation, and the hon. gentleman has no right to say that I impute motives to any person. I say it may be abused for a purpose, and after the hon. Secretary of State has driven me to it I shall say that I have no doubt it will be abused. I may be wrong in that, but the power is taken to do it. Give us a reason why it is changed? It is open to abuse, no matter who is the minister, but if there is a good reason for it, the hon. gentleman will find no one more willing to withdraw the inferences than myself. The hon. gentleman says that there is no reason to suspect that any wrong may follow from it, nor is there reason to suppose that these regulations will not be what they ought to be. There must be some reason for the change. Give us the reason, and if it is a good one, I shall withdraw all that I have said in reference to it; but to take it on the mere ipse dixit of the Secretary of State to say 'You have not right to criticise it because it is there and nothing wrong will flow from it,' that is not at all convincing.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the hon. gentleman's opinion. every clause is wrong.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, every clause is not wrong. I said there were improvements in the Bill, and the hon. gentleman is drawing upon his imagination, which he has no right to do.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Will the hon. gentleman tell us why that clause was changed?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I really cannot. I am not familiar with the details of the Bill at all. I cannot pretend to be.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We should let the clause stand.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman criticises every clause in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—This is the first clause I have asked to stand, in order to give the hon. gentleman time to inquire why the change has been made. It is a very serious change. You are taking away from the commanding officer of a regiment his whole command of his regiment. If you take that power away he has no more authority. It is a very serious matter, but there may be reasons for it, and I would ask that the clause be allowed to stand.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will make inquiry of the gentleman who drafted it. We commenced the discussion on this Bill at 3 o'clock, and it is now nearly half-past eleven. and although many of the clauses are a counterpart of the present law, we have only reached clause 38.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not those clauses which are a counterpart of the law that we are discussing. I should like to know what we are here for, unless it is for us to swallow holus bolus every measure presented to us without discussion ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will ask the Minister of Militia to give me some information on that clause, and I will inform the House before the Bill is read the third time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL— It is understood that if the reasons given are not sufficient to justify us in passing the clause, that we will move to strike it out on the third reading.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will make no promise further than to speak to the minister.

The CHAIRMAN—I find that the word 'detail' was written in the blue print before it came to this House, therefore, any amending that the Secretary of State has done here was simply to make the copy we are working on conform to the blue print.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The House declined to take my explanation, I said that the clerk came here and said it was a mistake and that the word should be 'detail.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman want the amendment continued on the record ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. I was forced to take this course by the hon. gentleman refusing to accept my explanation of it.

On clause 54,

54. Officers, warrant officers and non-commissioned officers of the permanent force shall be entitled to daily pay and allowances at rates to be prescribed.

2. The Governor in Council may, from time to time, fix the sums to be paid to privates of the permanent force, regard being had to length of service, good conduct and efficiency ; but the ordinary pay shall not exceed the amounts following, that is to say :

For privates, per diem, 75 cents.

For buglers under eighteen years of age, per diem, 40 cents.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—During our last camp we had those increases by a special order, but it turned out that some of the non-commissioned officers were paid higher than the officers. That is a fact.

The CHAIRMAN—In error.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No. The sergeant-major was paid more than the lieutenant.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 63,

63. The Governor in Council may make regulations for the management of existing rifle associations and clubs, and those hereafter formed ; for prescribing the constitution, objects and duties of such associations and clubs, and the conducting of their business and rifle meetings ; and for furnishing rifles and ammunition for the training and practice of persons, whether they are, or are not, members of the militia.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There are some associations formed in the cities in the different provinces, and they generally, up till lately, had ammunition and a certain allowance paid towards their organization. I heard recently that was cut out. I would suggest that every organization or club for rifle practice should be encouraged. It is the basis on which the efficiency of our militia rests. Rifle shooting should be taught in preference to parade movements, and I think it should be encouraged. I hope the hon. Secretary of State will call the attention of the Minister of Militia to that point.

On clause 65.

CADET CORPS.

65. The minister may—

(a.) Authorize boys over twelve years of age, who are attending school, to be formed into school cadet corps ;

(b.) Authorize boys over fourteen years of age, and under eighteen years of age, to be formed into senior cadet corps ;

(c.) Authorize senior cadet corps, or any portion thereof, to be attached to any portion of the active militia for the purpose of drill and training.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It will be interesting to know whether the minister, in framing this law, got permission from the labour organizations in the country to insert a provision of this kind in the Bill, because I have seen in Toronto resolutions passed by labour unions condemning this practice, asserting that they had no right to authorize boys to join these cadet corps, those particularly who were attending school. There is a great deal of pandering to that element just now, and it would be well to know if the government has got the consent of these organizations to this clause ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would be purely voluntary.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is a good answer to the question I asked.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 70,

70. The Governor in Council may place the militia, or any part thereof, on active service anywhere in Canada and also beyond Canada, for the defence thereof, at any time when it appears advisable so to do by reason of emergency.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the minister explain to us why the change is made ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the hon. gentleman will read clause 71 it will help him to understand it.

71. Whenever the Governor in Council places the militia, or any part thereof, on active service, if parliament is then separated by such adjournment or prorogation as will not expire within ten days, a proclamation shall be issued for the meeting of parliament within fifteen days, and parliament shall accordingly meet and sit upon the day appointed by such proclamation, and shall continue to sit and act in like manner as if it had stood adjourned or prorogued to the same day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The question I ask is, why the change is made from the present law by adding the words 'for the defence thereof'. The old law reads:—

Her Majesty may call out the militia, or any part thereof, for active service either within or without Canada at any time when it appears advisable.

The new clause reads :—

The Governor in Council may place the militia or any part thereof, on active service anywhere in Canada and also beyond Canada, for the defence thereof, &c.

The old clause gave wider latitude to the government than this clause does.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon gentleman knows, probably, if he has followed the debate in the other House, that this was debated for several days, and this clause was, I think, a compromise between the parties.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—My conviction is that it is to harmonize it with the regulations in Great Britain.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman will turn to the Army Act he will find there is power and authority which is not given in this Bill, for the Minister of War to apply to the militia, and ask them to go out. There is nothing of that kind here. This is a peremptory declaration that they shall not be called out for that purpose. It is not necessary to go into the reasons which induced England to adopt that policy, but we must not forget that they have a very large standing army, not only in Great Britain but all over the world, and, consequently, the same power would not be used in regard to the militia that there would be in Canada where we have no standing army, beyond what may be called the regular corps, and the provisions in the Army Act are, in case the militia may be required, His Majesty—which means of course the Minister of War—may ask them to volunteer individually and also to turn out as companies and regiments ; so it recognizes the right of the Crown to do that, while I admit it is not positive or peremptory. It strikes one who has paid any attention to the administration, that there is a reason for putting this in, and if I give expression to the reasons which appeal to me, I lay myself open to the charge of adversely criticising these clauses, a right which the hon. Secretary of State thinks we are unduly exercising. Of course, as a senator, my impression is that this Bill was sent here expressly for the purpose of being criticised. We know the difficulty that arose when the Boer war broke out, when it was suggested by some officers of the volunteer force that their corps should be allowed to volunteer in aid of the defence of the empire ; the premier, in an interview with a reporter of the government organ in Toronto, the 'Globe,' expressed very strong opinions against the sending of any Canadians volunteers out of the country, and questioned the right, under the clause which I have read here, from the old law, or the power to do so. Of course my hon. friend recollects that interview as well as I do, no doubt. Now while there might be supposed to be a doubt under the old law which says :

Her Majesty may call out the militia, or any part thereof. for active service either within or without Canada.

Those who took a different view at that time contended that this gave the right to the government to allow volunteers to leave the country, even without the consent of parliament. The present Bill removes that power and authority, because it declares that they cannot be sent out of the country for the defence thereof.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, they can.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Governor General may 'place the militia or any part thereof on active service in any part of Canada and also beyond Canada for the defence thereof.' The hon. gentleman is right, but the condition is that it must be for the defence of Canadian territory and not in aid of the imperial authorities, should their services be required.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It is not for agression or contest.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I admit it is not for aggressive purposes. When we assist in the defence of the empire, it is not a war of aggression. I do not know that there is anything in the law, however, that prevents a company, or men in a company, from volunteering for service abroad. I would much rather have seen the clause left as it is in the original. However. the wisdom of parliament thinks differently. and the fact that clause 71 provides for the assemblying of parliament to obtain authority, removes the objection to a very great extent which I would have to the adoption of the clause. Having put myself on record on that point, I have no more objection to it.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 74.

74. The Army Act for the time being in force in the United Kingdom, the King's Regulations, and all other laws applicable to His Majesty's troops in Canada and not inconsistent with this Act or the regulations made thereunder, shall have force and effect as if they had been enacted by the parliament of Canada for the government of the militia, and every officer and man of the militia shall be subject thereto from the time of being called out for active service, and also during the period of annual drill or training under the provisions of this Act, and also at any other time while upon military duty or in the uniform of his corps upon or within any rifle range or any armoury, or other place where arms, guns, ammunition or other military stores are kept, or any drill shed or other building or place used for militia purposes, or during any drill or parade of his corps at which he is present in the ranks, when going to or from the place of drill or parade, and also whether in uniform or not at any drill or parade of his corps at which he is present as a spectator.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Could the hon. minister give us the meaning of that clause ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is very much the same in spirit as section 82 of the law as it now stands. That section provides that the active militia shall be subject to the King's Regulations and Orders for the Army.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What is the difference ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It looks about the same.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I find armoury and rifle range have been added. It goes too far. If a man is near a rifle range he falls under the King's Regulations.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—These words are added 'Whether in uniform or not.' He is to be held amenable to the King's Regulations if he is there, even as a spectator. Many volunteers go to witness the drill of their corps and go in uniform. Under the old law they would be amenable then to the King's Regulations, but this makes them amenable to the King's Regulations whether they are there in uniform or not.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It is the same in the Act as it stands.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If he is a spectator in unform all right ; but if not, why should he be under the King's Regulations ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—It does not make any change in the existing law.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If he goes there with his corps it is all right, but supposing a man is ill and not able to perform the drill and goes there as a spectator, as a civilian ; he may have leave of absence, and if in uniform would be just as liable to military punishment as the man who is really on duty; but this makes him amenable to the King's Regulations even when he is there without uniform.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If he is on leave of absence or sick leave, I do not think he falls under this clause.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We must give the commanders of these regiments the credit of having a little common sense. The hon. gentleman will not allow the Governor in Council credit for having common sense, but surely he will not deny that the officers have some.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the Army Act and King's Regulations which are specified here, should be published by the military authorities of the country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Are they not ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—They are not published. We are under the King's Regulations and the Army Act, and we know nothing about them except those of us who get copies from England and changes are made in the Army Act every year.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman's point is well taken.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—They should be published in Canada. As we are bound by the law, we should at least have an opportunity of knowing what the law is.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no doubt of that. I will speak to the minister about it.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 82,

82. The civil authorities by whom such requisition may be made are :

(a.) If the place where such riot or disturbance occurs or is anticipated is municipally organized, the mayor or warden or other head or acting head of the municipality, together with two justices of the peace, or in the event of such mayor, warden or other head or acting head refusing or being unable to act, the county or district court judge or one of the county or district court judges having jurisdiction in such place, acting alone, or if there is no such judge then any judge of a superior court who has jurisdiction there ;

(b.) If the place where such riot or disturbance occurs or is anticipated is not municipally organized, the county or district court judge, or one of the county or district court judges, having jurisdiction in such place, or if there is no such county or district court judge, then any judge of a superior court who has jurisdiction there.

2. Wherever under subsection 1 of this section a judge is designated as the civil authority by whom a requisition may be made and there is no such judge, or the judge, or all the judges, who might have acted are absent, or unable to act, the requisition may be made by any judge or magistrate having jurisdiction at the place where such riot or disturbance occurs or is anticipated, who may do alone whatever is authorized by the Criminal Code, 1892, to be done by any two or more justices of the peace.

3. Where the requisition is made by a judge, any statements of fact contained therein shall be final and binding upon all parties in any way concerned.

4. Where the requisition is made by justices of the peace, any statement of fact therein contained shall not be open to dispute by the officer upon whom the requisition is made.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understood the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry had an amendment to propose to this clause. If he intends to propose any amendment. it will be just as well that he should let us have it now, so that we can think over it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It is merely to add the words 'or refuse' in clauses 81 and 82 after the word 'unable.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. Secretary of State accept the amendment ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, the minister says he would prefer to have the Bill pass without amendment. This little inconsistency is the result of an amendment moved by an hon. gentleman in the House of Commons. However the minister informs me that he does not think an amendment is necessary, though he admits the clause could be improved, but it is not worth while making a change at this stage of the session.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It would not take five minutes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Bill would have to go back to the House of Commons and be delayed there.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It seems extraordinary that a minister of the Crown should go to a private member and ask his permission to make a change in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I asked the Minister of Militia and he said he did not want any amendment made to the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I give notice that I shall move amendments to clause 82 and 86 at the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is an extraordinary position to take when we see a plain defect in the Bill, that we cannot amend it. It is a government Bill and they are all powerful in the House of Commons and it would not take long to carry the amendments.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill and asked leave to sit again.

The Senate adjourned until eleven A.M. to-day.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Tuesday, August 9, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven a.m.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, would the hon. Secretary of State let us know if he has those returns I asked for ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman does not expect that I should perform miracles. I could not see anybody between one o'clock this a.m. and now. I have done all in my power and failed to get them, and the hon. gentleman must only take the best course he can. I cannot be constantly ballaragging the department.

RECIPROCITY WITH THE UNITED STATES

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Before the Orders of the Day are called I wish to direct attention to a despatch which appeared in the 'Citizen' this morning :

FOR RECIPROCITY.

Senator Lodge Declares in Favour of Reciprocity with Dominion of Canada.

Boston, Aug. 6.—The opening of the presidential campaign by the North Dorchester Republican club of this city took place at Point Shirley, Winthrop, to-day, with Senator Henry Cabot Lodge and Herbert Parker, attorney-general of Massachusetts, as speakers.

Senator Lodge's address was his first public utterances in the campaign. He was given a cordial reception. The senator devoted his time principally in defining the attitude of the Republicans on the question of reciprocity with Canada. He said in part :

The Republican national convention at Chicago declared as follows :

We believe in commercial reciprocity, wherever reciprocal arrangements can be effected consistent with the principles of protection and without injury to American agriculture, American labour, or any American industry.

The President of the United States in his reply to the committee of notification, spoke as follows :—

We believe in reciprocity with foreign nations in the terms outlined in President McKinley's last speech, which urged the extension of our foreign markets by reciprocal agreements whenever they could be made without injury to American industry and labour.

With this utterance of President Roosevelt, I agree absolutely and entirely, and I know no Republicans who do not agree with him precisely as I do.

I should have given notice of motion, I suppose, before bringing this up.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not worth while giving notice of motion.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Would the hon. Secretary of State call the attention of his colleagues to this movement in the United States, in view of the Alien Labour Bill which is so strongly opposed in many parts of this country ? I have received a deputation from the strongest Liberals in Kingston and letters from people on both sides, shipping firms and the largest forwarders in Ontario, opposing the Bill. I thought it might be possible that the government, in view of this declaration, and in view of the general consensus of opinion against the passing of this Alien law, might withdraw it, and not obstruct any feeling of reciprocity that may exist in the United States, by any action on the part of Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman pays me a very poor compliment if he thinks I am going to bring a paragraph of that kind before my colleagues. They are not taking the smallest interest in it ; it is the greatest humbug I ever heard of. Senator Lodge is simply trying to draw off some of the Democrats. Massachusetts has gone largely for reciprocity with Canada. This is chaff, and it has been put out in McKinley's day and ever since over-and-over again. It does not mean anything. Of course if we give them the Canadian market for nothing, and they reduce their tariff from 60 or 70 per cent to 30 per cent, they are willing to enter into some such arrangement.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Massachusetts has been agitating in favour of reciprocity with Canada for some time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, but Senator Lodge is a humbug. He will not bring over anybody to his side but the simplest-minded persons.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Lodge's reciprocity is on the same lines as McKinley's reciprocity ; they would take anything we would give them and give nothing in return.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—You do not know.

The SPEAKER—Orders of the Day.

MILITIA BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole, consideration of Bill (5) An Act respecting the Militia and Defence of Canada.

On clause 82, subclause (a),

(a.) If the place where such riot or disturbance occurs or is anticipated is municipally organized, the mayor or warden or other head or acting head of the municipality, together with two justices of the peace, or in the event of such mayor, warden or other head or acting head refusing or being unable to act, the county or district court judge or one of the county or district court judges having jurisdiction in such place, acting alone, or if there is no such judge then any judge of a superior court who has jurisdiction there ;

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is a change there. As the law stood the mayor could or could not act, as he pleased—the mayor and two justices. Now it is proposed to make it compulsory on the mayor or warden to be one of them, but if he refuses absolutely, a judge of the county court having jurisdiction in the locality may act, and if there is no such judge, then a judge of the Superior Court. It seems a fair and reasonable proposition.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—This is exceedingly important, and it is easily seen that there is an inclination to bow to the labour organizations in the amendment of this clause. I must confess that, personally, I do not like it. Now supposing, a month or so before an election, a riot is threatened and the labour organizations say to the mayor, 'If you sign that requisition to call out the militia you will not have our votes.' The mayor would be deterred from taking any part. If it is thirty or forty miles from the county town and the judge had to be hunted up, it would take some time, and while looking for the judge, property might be injured or possibly destroyed. I shall move an amendment, that in the event of the mayor refusing to act, any other magistrate may act in his place. I do not believe in allowing organizations to riot and destroy property anywhere. I know of an instance where a strike took place, and, if this clause had been the law, the mayor would possibly refuse to act. He would say : I am not going to injure my standing in the community ; I want to be elected mayor again. If I sign the requisition to call out the militia the result will be that these people will vote against me, and I am not going to do it.' This happened forty-three miles from the town where the judge could be got. If the application had to be made to the judge, and delay had occurred in getting an order, time would have been lost and property destroyed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Perhaps it would be better, before taking a vote on that, to consider the other paragraphs, because they are alternative propositions.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—If there is anything to cover the point, I am willing.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—In Ontario, police magistrates are better qualified to act than the mayors. Do they come in under this Bill ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A police magistrate is equivalent to two magistrates.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In some cases only.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN moved, that in the event of the mayor refusing to act, any other third justice within the county may be called upon to act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the hon. gentleman will wait until we get to the last paragraph, provision will be made for that.

The sub-clause was adopted.

On sub-clause 2,

2. Wherever under subsection 1 of this section a judge is designated as the civil authority by whom a requisition may be made, and there is no such judge, or the judge, or all the judges, who might have acted are absent, or unable to act, the requisition may be made by any judge or magistrate having jurisdiction at the place where such riot or disturbance occurs or is anticipated, who may do alone whatever is authorized by 'The Criminal Code,' 1892, to be done by any two or more justices of the peace.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There are certain localities where riots are very likely to occur, particularly on railway, construction and public works where it is almost impossible to reach a judge.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In case of failing to find the other two, one might have to travel hundreds of miles to get the necessary signatures.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is proposed to add to subsection 2 the following words :

And if there is no such judge, or the judge or all the judges who might have acted are absent or unable to act, a requisition may be made by any judge or magistrate having jurisdiction where such riot or disturbance occurs or is anticipated, acting with two justices of the peace, and if there is no such judge or magistrate residing and being in or at such place and unable to act, any three justices of the peace having jurisdiction therein.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Will that cover the point where the mayor or warden declines to act, that the three justices of the peace can act ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—There are many parts of the country where you could not get three justices of the peace.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—In Ontario the only resident judge is the county judge. The other judges are all centralized at one portion of the province, and in many instances are hundreds of miles away. The judge's residence is always the same—that is the weak point.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And three magistrates could not be got in any new part of the country ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—As long as the law plainly sets out that in case the warden or mayor declines to act in the premises any other third justice can take his place and sign the requisition to call out the militia, that will suit ; but, as the leader of the opposition says, in some cases the judge lives many miles away from the scene of the riot. In parts of the county of Grey, the judge lives 75 miles from where a strike might take place. In the town where I live, he is 43 miles away It might take a day to find him and get the application signed, and another day to get back, and all that time the riot might be in progress and people terrorized and probably injured. When an incident of that kind occurs, any resident justice of the peace, or two or three of them, should have the power to call out the militia.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What the hon. gentleman says is quite correct. The county in which I live extends 125 miles north from the Bay of Quinté. But the senior and junior judge live at Belleville ; that shows the difficulty there. Then the warden lived 75 miles north of the front of the county and there would be just as much difficulty in reaching him. There is no locality that I know of where you would get three magistrates together except in the centre of population. Back where the Canada Central Railway is, the one that is being extended from a place called Bancroft, 75 miles north of Belleville to connect with the Canada Atlantic Railway, 25 or 30 miles still further north, where would you get three magistrates ? All the damage may be done while you are searching for the right men to sign a requisition. I think if you make that two magistrates you would accomplish the object we have in view.

Hon. Mr DANDURAND—I doubt very much if there is any danger in leaving to the mayor a certain share of responsibility.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—If he chooses to exercise this function.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—There is always sufficient public opinion to bear upon him in such emergencies to act if there is any danger to property.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But the law provides for two cases, where it is a municipal organization and where it is not a municipal organization.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the minister insists on keeping the number unchanged ; say the mayor and the reeve of a municipality.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He would be a magistrate of course.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would he be a magistrate in that sense of the word ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Not always. In Ontario the reeve is not ; the mayor is ; the law has been altered in that respect.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am speaking of the rural districts What I am pointing out is the difficulty of carrying out this law in the rural parts. Take the case of Senator Edwards : Back in the Gatineau country they are building railways ; could he get three magistrates there, and if so, within what distance ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—If the mayor of a town is ex-officio a magistrate, the reeve of a township is not. And even if he were, he would be just as bad as the warden or mayor. He would be looking for re-election, and would not jeopardize the labour vote by signing a requisition to call out the militia.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is only in labour centres.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The safest thing is to give the warden or mayor power to take part in suppressing a riot, but in the event of their declining to act, empower any other magistrate to act.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is this to be borne in mind with respect to the question, that it was considered at considerable length in the other chamber ; and the decision arrived at there was that if the warden refused to act, then a judge was to be called in. After all the county or district court judge is as likely to be independent of the labour people as two or three justices of the peace would be. There is no reason why we should come in direct conflict with the other House in connection with a matter to which they have devoted special attention. If some such amendment as that suggested by the hon. Secretary of State is made further down in the section, it will have the desired result, that, is, if the warden does not act and if the judge does not act, then the three magistrates act.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—That will not suit my proposition. You have to go to the judge and go to the warden ; that means delay. That does not improve it at all. I want the Bill amended to provide that if the warden or mayor refuses to act, any third justice can take his place and call out the militia. If you have to go to the mayor and warden and judge before calling on a justice of the peace, that involves delay.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I wish to take objection to the doctrine laid down by the Speaker. He has told the Senate that because the Lower House, who represent the very class of people to whom my hon. friend has called attention. has given a great deal of thought and attention to this clause, ergo we should not interfere with it. I have always understood that one of the functions of the Senate was to check the popular branch where we thought they were interfering with the rights of the people. That is supposed to be one of the advantages of a second chamber, that it is not amenable directly to the popular will, or to put it in another way, to the mob ; and yet the hon. Speaker says that the Senate ought to accept the decisions of the House of Commons, because they represent this very class of people. We want to protect our people against such influence. One would think in reading the clause that it is so worded as to prevent the possibility of meeting those difficulties. The duty of the Senate is to correct this if they think the House of Commons is wrong, and not to pass it merely because the House of Commons has given great consideration to this matter. I do not see why the warden should be selected ; he is living often in the centre of the county or at one end of it and he may be a long distance from the scene of the riot. If the government are wedded to this proposal there is no use in pressing an amendment.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—In so far as I am concerned, I decline to dicusss this question as applied to labouring men any more than to any one else. I am one of those who believe that the labourers of the country are just as peaceable and law-abiding as other people, and riots are just as possible from other sources as from that source. It is simply for the general good and maintaining the peace of the community that I discuss it. The question, as affected by the residence of judges, varies in different parts of Canada. In the province of Quebec there are district judges. I suppose it is so in the maritime provinces.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—But in Ontario the county judge and the judges residing at Toronto are the only judges. In the old Act, if I recollect right, the sheriff of the county came in.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Two justices of the peace.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—The sheriff did not, under any circumstances, have jurisdiction ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. the sheriff had no power.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—Under any circumstances, the necessity of having to go or to send to Toronto from the most easterly portion of Ontario is not workable, and some provision should be made whereby immediate action can be taken if the warden or county judge declines to act.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I think it would be a serious thing to give the power of calling out the militia to too many justices of the peace. We have a great many justices of the peace over this country, and it would be easy to get two of them in almost any county to sign a requisition. It is a very serious thing to call out the militia at all. This Bill provides probably enough means for calling them out in place of giving to two magistrates in every county where we have fifteen to twenty or thirty, the power. It would be a serious matter to give the right of calling out the militia to too many people.

Hon. Mr. BLACK—We are discussing this too much from our local standpoint. Take, for instance, the county of Cumberland, which I represented for a long time in the local legislature. It is 50 miles wide and 100 miles long. It is not at all likely that any riot will take place in that county except in the towns. Generally riot occurs in mining districts where it would be very easy to get two magistrates to call out the militia. In fact I might say there are cases where it would be almost difficult to get a magistrate not in the employ or under the control of the managers of the mine. Now, there is a local case where it would be a very dangerous thing to give that power to two magistrates. The case of the destruction of property has been cited, but if you refer to history you will find that there is bloodshed very often in those cases, and it very rarely occurs until the militia are called out. It ought to be a very extreme case when that is resorted to. When strikes and riots occur, there is intense excitement in the community, and it requires in those cases very clear-headed, judicious men to deal with it. In my own county I would say that the mayor or warden and then the judge are all accessible, but I cannot say how it is in the case of some counties that have been cited here. It may be more difficult, and we should legislate to provide for all. I am prepared to look at it in the broadest light. The reeve has been spoken of ; in the maritime provinces we do not know what reeve means.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—It means the mayor of a municipality.

Hon. Mr. BLACK—We call them mayors always.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The reeve in Ontario is the head of a township municipality.

Hon. Mr. BLACK—I am perfectly satisfied with the Bill as it is, but it would not meet the local conditions in the county from which I come. I would not think it wise legislation to allow the magistrates hastily to decide this thing. I would rather delay a little to get at the judge, because sometimes it is not best to be hasty in such matters. Of course it reflects upon a certain official part of our population to say that they are not all as intelligent and discreet as we would like them to be. In our section of the country, we often have justices of the peace who are not the wisest of men, and my experience has been that in the appointment of these officials the man that should be justice of the peace will not accept the office, and the man who should not have been a justice is the man who wants to be appointed. I would not like to leave anything to their decision.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—In the county of Frontenac, it would be quite a job to find the warden. He lived last year on Wolfe Island, four miles across the lake from Kingston, which is the nearest point to it. In the county of Lennox the warden came from Amherst Island, a very difficult point to get to; in fact the warden is the most difficult man to get at in any of the counties near which I reside. Whether they are more conveniently situated elsewhere, I cannot say. Of course telegraphs are more generally used now. I do not know who suggested putting the warden next to the mayor. The mayor can be got at, but the warden is the most difficult of all those people to reach.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I think we should be all agreed on this, that the warden or mayor or judge or magistrate are the proper authorities to deal with the matter if they can be reached. It is only in cases where they are not on the spot, or where they refuse to act, that we have to provide for justices of the peace. It would not be required, I take it, in the old provinces. It may be required in the west. I think we would meet the difficulty by adopting the amendment suggested by the hon. Secretary of State, together with the amendment which I am going to suggest in subsection 2, by adding after the word 'absent' in line 33 the following :

Or not to be found within ten miles from the place where the riot or disturbance occurs or is anticipted.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—The hon. senator thinks that such a difficulty could not arise in the older provinces, but only in the Northwest. I submit that great danger may arise in the old provinces in localities where neither judges, reeves nor magistrates can be found.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—And no troops.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—We passed a Bill to construct a railway running some hundreds of miles north of the St. Lawrence, through the province of Quebec, the greater part of it a long distance from all settlements. Supposing there are five or six hundred men employed on that line, and they go on strike and begin to riot, where would you find a magistrate or judge in all that region ? That is a contingency which the government should try to meet. I should like indeed to have an explanation how in a case of that kind anybody could be found to issue the warrant ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman speaks of the possibility of a riot occurring during the construction of the National Transcontinental Railway. If we cannot find a justice of the peace, we cannot find militia. It will be necessary to reach a place where the militia can be ordered out, and the interested parties will have to come to the settled parts of the country to find magistrates or militia.

On this question of enlarging the jurisdiction of the parties to whom we may apply to have the militia called out, the reason given is that the parties mentioned in the Bill before us would not, perhaps, be available. Wherever there is possibility of a riot there will be a sufficient aggregation of men to find there magistrates and mayors of towns or cities If you go much beyond those aggregations of men, you will have no riot, and there is hardly a place where such an occurrence could take place where you will not find some of the parties mentioned in the Bill available. As to their refusing to act, I share the view expressed by the hon. gentleman from Cumberland (Hon. Mr. Black) that it is a somewhat risky thing to allow justices of the peace, even three of them, to have the power to call out the militia. One strong-headed man being justice of the peace, or not, who is bent on getting out the militia, will find three weak-headed men called justices of the peace to give their signatures to any kind of a requisition. It seems to me there is a considerable responsibility involved in calling out the militia, financial responsibility, and responsibility to the people. Should we not leave to men in high places, the mayor and warden, that responsibility which will finally fall upon the people who elected them ? I am convinced that we should leave some responsibility with the constituted authorities that are answerable for their actions and will have to pay heavy bills. We have had complaints all round for the last two or three years of the heavy bills for calling out the militia needlessly. So I am convinced we should not enlarge the number of parties who might have the power to call out the militia, and that, with the names in the Bill, we are sure we have men with a greater sense of responsibility, and it would be dangerous to extend it to three justices of the peace.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE — The hon. gentleman from de Lorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) took it upon himself, and I thank him very much for doing so, to answer a question I put to the leader of the House.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I have to apologize to the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is his usual course.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I suppose the government will not endorse everything he says. His answer was that a riot taking place at such a distance, would render it difficult to get the militia there. Does the hon. gentleman believe that in case there was a riot of the men working on the National Transcontinental Railway, and they were destroying the railway plant, that they should not be interfered with because it would take two or three days to inform the commander of the militia to send the troops to quell the riot, and that it would take two or three days longer to get them there? Should the government allow rioting and destruction of property to go on? The hon. member shakes his head. I suppose he withdraws what he said. I have asked the question not in any spirit of opposition. I shall be very glad if the government think there is nothing very serious involved in my question; if they do think such a difficulty might arise, would it not be better for them to make provision to meet it? I am ready to concede that they want to do what is right. Should there not be some means provided, under such circumstances, where a judge or reeve or magistrate could not be found, to call out the militia?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman knows that troops are not available in Canada at all the corners of concession lines. Sometimes they are three or four hundred miles away from the scene, and, therefore, it may take some time to get troops to the scene of a riot, so I think there will be ample time to induce some municipal authority to act. It is exceedingly difficult to frame a Bill to meet all contingencies that may arise in a country like Canada. This clause has been framed to try to meet all possible cases. At the same time one cannot allow the power to be too readily exercised. The people would not approve of it. There are some justices that have not very level heads. There are men who, in ordinary conditions, have good sense but who lose their heads in times of excitement, and therefore it would not be safe to trust it to one or even two justices. The precaution here is one that is really essential. Wherever a judge is available, he, having a calm judicial mind, is not likely to be carried away by any improper motive or fear and would not too hastily act. I think the alternatives that we have mentioned in this Bill will not arise. In fact I did not think it was necessary to insert any of them, and after a conference with some gentlemen who had given it a great deal of thought, they considered that we were creating possible contingencies that are not likely to arise, because the judges all over the country are available.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—But if there are no judges to be found?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There are always judges in the districts. They may be a long way off. There is no doubt about that, but, at the same time, the troops are a long way off, and the person who would get the judge would hand the papers over to the district officer commanding, so that I think that element may be discarded. Wherever you have troops, you have some judicial authority who can be called upon to act, because the troops that would be called out would be those scattered in cities and towns. You would scarcely get them in the rural municipalities. Wherever there are towns or cities a judge is always available. If a judge happened to leave his district, there is some one to represent him. There is the deputy judge, and the judge of the higher courts. The provision is very ample, and I do not know that we can improve upon it because there are so many alternative propositions that are not likely to be exhausted.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I am quite willing to leave the clause as it was in the old Act; that is that the reeve, mayor, or warden may be one of the judges, but in this case he must be, and, if he refuses, no other magistrate can do it and you have then to go to the warden, and if he declines to act you have to go to the judge. Let me give you what will be the result, in the county in which I live. Supposing that a riot takes place in the town where I live, it is forty-three miles from the county town and the warden lives fifty-two miles from the county town, away in the south-east corner of the county. He may or may not refuse to act. The probabilities are that he will not act. He would say 'If I sign that requisition, all the labour in the town will be against me. It is not necessary that I should do it.' You may go to the warden and he will say 'show me the statute,' and when he reads the statute he will say 'The mayor of your own town can do it, and why should your own mayor not do it? Why do you come fifty-two miles to get me to do it?' And he declines to sign the requisition. Then you go to one of the judges and say to him 'I want you to call out the militia.' And he will ask 'what for?' And you will say 'a riot in Mount Forest and we want the militia.' He will say 'Why does your mayor not sign it?' You will say 'He did not want to sign it.' He will ask you 'What does the statute say.' The statute says that if the mayor and warden refuse go to the junior judge.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is never a case of that kind. The judge acts at once.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—No, no. If you go to the junior judge, he will ask 'Why do you not go to the senior judge?' You say 'We were to him, and he sent us to you and says that it is better that the senior judge should act,' and they keep the deputation dancing back and forward between the junior and the senior judge—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Does the hon. gentleman think there is a possibility of a mayor in Mount Forest, seeing lives and property injured, refusing to protect it?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I think it is quite possible. I believe at the present moment if there was a riot you could not get our present mayor to sign, because he would come to the conclusion that if he took such an action the people would vote against him.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—This is a tedious discussion, but a highly important matter, because it is one in which difficulties may arise in one way or another. Primarily I think the cost of calling out the troops should not be imposed upon the county, or a district without those who have to pay the piper being consulted. On the other hand, there is difficulty that perhaps, just as my hon. friend stated, the authorities will refuse to sign. But in this provision, the reeve of the township, who is the mayor of the township, does not come in at all. He is not a justice of the peace. He is simply by virtue of his office, a magistrate for the time being. He is the chief magistrate but he is not a justice of the peace. He could not sign this requisition. Now, I suppose that in all instances it is the whole county that would have to pay the expense and not the individual township that might be involved. I believe that the chief magistrate of the township, in any district where such difficulty might arise, is one of those who should be consulted. For instance, there may be trivial attempts to call out the militia. The local authority may refuse, and a judge at a distance might override that refusal and force the calling out of militia when it is not required at all. These difficulties will occur, and I think we should take some time to arrive at the best and the most judicial way of dealing with this matter. I am one of those who believe that in every instance the chief magistrate who, in rural districts, is the mayor of the municipality or the reeve, is one of those who should be consulted.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Suppose you send to a distance, the magistrate cannot come in and see whether there is any necessity for it or not, and is he going to sign the requisition on the statement of some messenger who was sent? If that be so, the troops may be called out without any real cause at all. I think it should be compulsory on the chief magistrate to sign the requisition.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The amendment of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry is a very desirable one, because it removes any doubt. As the clause is framed now, there might be some doubt as to whether you have to go to the mayor or warden or judge, no matter how far away his residence might be, and I think it is very desirable that an amendment such as proposed by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry should be adopted, so as to provide that if a riot takes place where there was no mayor or judge living in the immediate neighbourhood, then resort could be had to a justice of the peace, and I hope the committee will adopt that amendment and deal with the amendment of the hon. Secretary of State later.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I would like to change the suggestion I made. Instead of making the amendment where I suggested in line 33, I would leave the sub-paragraph as it is, and add at the end of the paragraph the following :—

And in case none of the above authorities are to be found within ten miles of the place where the riot or disturbance occurs, or is anticipated, the requisition may be signed by three justices of the peace.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I believe that the amendment which has just been moved will mix up the Bill too much. It says 'If they cannot be found'. It will result in lawsuits. People will get magistrates in the country to call out the militia. I think you might better have a Bill that would be explicit and not leave it open to all kinds of misunderstandings. This Bill says 'if they cannot be found'. I might say I cannot find them. I might get the militia out for a corporation. It is the corporation that generally calls out the militia, and not the union. If I were a magistrate and I wanted to get the militia out to shoot, I would not look very hard for the mayor or warden, and I would run the risk afterwards of proving he was not within ten miles.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I may say that in the last alternative I read to the House, provision was made for the three justices of the peace. It will come in at the very end. Subsection 4 reads, as follows :—

4. Where the requisition is made by justices of the peace, any statement of the fact therein contained shall not be open to dispute by the officer upon whom the requisition is made.

When a requisition is made by a judge or magistrate having the power—that is in certain districts in Quebec, for instance, where there are judges who, like our stipendiary magistrates, having the power of two justices of the peace, acting with two justices—or by three justices of the peace—That is the last alternative. One of those amendments makes provision for a final appeal, if all the other provisions fail, to three justices of the peace. Those amendments I have suggested here have had the advantage of being prepared in the Department of Justice, where a great deal of thought has been given to the subject, and, therefore, if any amendments are to be made they cover it and might perhaps relieve us from some of the responsibility in accepting their amendments.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think it is to be regretted that the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry did not adhere to his original intention of putting the amendment in, so as to show that this last amendment should be resorted to when the judge or warden was more than ten miles away. I think the amendment of the hon. Secretary of State is a proper one, but there should be something to make clear the meaning of the earlier paragraph.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The trouble with the amendment of the hon. Secretary of State is simply that you have to go through all the operation of applying first to two justices of the peace and the mayor. If the mayor won't sign you have to go to the warden, and if he won't sign it you have to go to the county judge, and you have to apply to the junior judge, and then you have to go to the third justice of the peace after that, and when you go to that man, he says he does not know anything about the law. You will read over the law, and he will say 'The warden and mayor should sign, and then the county judge'. If they have all refused he will say 'I do not know that I will sign'.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The hon. gentleman's plan would not get over it. The proper way is to make it compulsory on somebody, the mayor or the judge. Supposing three magistrates understand that the other authorities have refused, they will refuse also, then where are you ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman would not give any discretion to those magistrates.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I do not believe that a magistrate should have anything whatever to do with calling out the militia to be paid for by the municipality. I think the mayors should have that responsibility. They should be depended upon and should act for the people in the municipality, and not justices of the peace appointed by the local government.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—That is very true, but how can you get them to act ?

Hon. Mr. DAVID—The law was good as it was. There is always a warden of the municipality who is responsible.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The amendment reads as follows :—

Acting with two justices of the peace, and if there is no such judge or magistrate presiding and being in or at such place and able to act, any three justices of the peace having jurisdiction there.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I propose to insert after the words, 'Unable to act' in line 33, the words 'Or not to be found within ten miles'.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I object to that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think it is desirable to make clear when you can call upon those inferior officers. That is substantially the amendment suggested by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry. The judge may be at the other end of the county, but he is absent anyway. His home is at the other end of the county. Supposing a riot took place in the eastern end of the county of Halifax, the county judge resides at the city, and the riot may take place a hundred miles away, at a place to be reached only by water or over a coach road, and if you wanted to appeal to the three justices of the peace, you could not claim that the judge was absent or unable to act. He is at home and able to act. It is desirable then that there should be something of this kind.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—What will bring on a strike at such a place ? There is nobody living there.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There might be a strike, although I do not say that there is likely to be one. We have a mayor who resides in the city, and we have a warden who resides in a part of the county remote from the place where I have supposed the riot to be taking place. You cannot get at that warden, because you would have to travel thirty miles by coach to reach him and I think the amendment of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry is a very necessary one to provide that when the officer whom you might go to is too far away, beyond a certain reasonable limit, you can call upon justices of the peace.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think we are constructing imaginary possibilities. I am not aware that in the past any difficulty has arisen in finding proper authority to sign requisitions. Those riots do not occur in remote rural places. If they are likely to occur, the provincial authorities will necessarily have stipendiary magistrates there to look after the peace. The railways will see that they will have magistrates at hand in the event of having trouble. These possibilities are distant and remote. We are losing a great deal of valuable time by creating obstacles that will not arise.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Although I am of opinion that my amendment would be in the right drection I call attention to this fact, we are dealing with an important measure at the end of the session, and it would be well not to introduce by way of amendments matters which may lead up to a great deal of discussion in the other House, and pass the Bill as it is, and next session it can be amended. I thought of suggesting other minor amendments, but as they are not of serious importance I thought the best course was to defer the matter until next session, when we could perfect the Act.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I am quite willing to accept the amendment of the hon. Secretary of State under the circumstances. It has been considered by the Department of Justice and I am willing to accept it.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Let us forego the amendment now. There is a great deal of consideration to be given to this clause. It may not suit the conditions. A good deal can be said on both sides. I have refrained from discussion of it because I think it is not expedient to do so. I would suggest to let the matter stand to be dealt with at another time.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—We have passed eighty clauses without a single amendment, and I think we have done very well. We have now struck an important clause and I think the suggestion of the hon. Secretary of State is a fair one, and I am willing to accept that.

The clause was adopted.

On sub-clause 4 of clause 82,

4. Where the requisition is made by the justices of he peace, any statement of the fact therein contained shall not be open to dispute by any officer upon whom the requisition is made.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I propose to amend this clause by adding after the words 'by the' in the first line, the following words:

A judge or magistrate having the powers of two justices of the peace acting with two justices of the peace or by three justices of the peace, no statement therein contained shall be open to dispute by the officer upon whom the requisition is made.

The amendment was adopted.

On clause 83,

83. The requisition provided for the next preceding section may be in the following form, or to the like effect, and the form may be varied to suit the facts of the case :—

county of

To wit :

Whereas it has been made to appear to our satisfaction that a riot or disturbance of the peace, beyond the powers of the civil authority to suppress (or to prevent or to deal with) and requiring the aid of the active militia to that end, has occurred and is in progress (or is anticipated as likely to occur) at

(Where the head of the municipality, etc., has declined or is unable to join in the requisition, say)

And whereas the warden (or as the case may be) of the has declined (or is unable through) to join in this requisition :

These are therefore to require you to call out the active militia present in or such portion thereof as you consider necessary for the purpose of suppressing or preventing, or dealing with) such riot or disturbance.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I came in a little too late, but I have a very important amendment to make to clauses 82 and 83 either at the end of clause 82 or 83, and I am confident that it is in the interests of the municipalities. I beg to move that the following be added as paragraph C. :

If the place where such riot or disturbance occurs or is anticipated is a port or harbour under the control of the government or of the harbour commissioners, the requisition shall also be signed by the chairman of the Harbour Commission, or the officer in charge of the port.

In order to understand this amendment, it is only necessary to add another amendment which I propose to make in three words to clause 86, which concerns the payment of the military force when it is called on by the civil authorities. Clause 86 provides that in all cases the municipality will have to pay the cost of the militia when it will be called on. I want to say a very few words, because I understand it is not too late to bring the question before the House. It is this : that the law which obliges the municipality to pay the cost of the services of the militia in all cases is unjust and unfair, and, perhaps, contrary to the principles of the constitution. What does the constitution say? It provides that the military service shall be under the control of the federal government. It is a very excessive power which was given to the federal parliament, and I remember one of the grievances of those who were opposed to the establishment of confederation was that this clause was giving too much power to the federal parliament. I do not want to discuss that, because it is now too late, but I say that the consequence of the power given to the federal parliament is that when the militia is called out, the government must pay for its services and that it appertains to the government to give the services or to help the civil authorities without obliging the municipalities to pay for these services. Why was the militia organized? It was to protect the country against internal or external violence, against inside and outside enemies. In both cases, the government should pay for the services that the militia is called to render to the country. And why were the civil authorities to call out the militia in certain cases? It was because it was considered the municipalities had not the power nor the means to support militia, or a permanent force for such incidents as occur in time of strikes. The condition is that in all those cases, if you want the service to be appreciated, it must be gratuitous, and the government must pay for the services. Suppose a strike occurs on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, in a district far distant from a town where there is a small municipality? Supposing the municipality has to pay for the service of the militia, it would amount to ten times the revenue of the municipality and perhaps more. But I do not want to go so far as that. I wish to sum up what I have to say in three statements. First, because the ports and harbours, according to the constitution, and according to the special law, chap. 47 of 57 and 58 Victoria, are under the control of the government, when they have been so designated by an Order in Council. Orders in Council have been passed in many instances, declaring that such port is a public port, and the consequence is that the port and harbour are under the control of the government. Consequently, vessels when in such a port or harbour, are not under the control of the municipality. They are under the control of the federal government. Shipping is under the control of the government. The goods which are in a harbour are under the control of the municipality. Very often they are from different parts of the country. When a riot occurs in a port or harbour the service which is rendered by the militia is a public service rendered to the whole of the country, and the whole of the country ought to pay for such service.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—And when a disturbance occurs in a port or harbour under the control of the harbour commissioners, the vessels are not under the control of the municipality, and the goods which are there to be protected are not under the control of the muncipality, but even the place where the riot occurs is not a municipal property, and is sometimes the property of the government, or the harbour commissioners. So that, for all these reasons, I contend that when a riot or disturbance occurs in a port or harbour being the property, or under the control of the government or harbour commissioners, the municipality should have nothing to do with it. The government has a permanent force. They say when the municipality pays it, it is because the permanent force not being necessary, they are obliged to apply to the active militia. If the volunteer force is not sufficient to quell a disturbance, the permanent force must be called out. The permanent force must be increased by one thousand. I think with two thousand soldiers, the government will have sufficient force in such cases to do all that is required. Conflicts may occur between the municipalities and the government. I am sure there will be a great deal of friction, because the struggle between capital and labour will increase. We are only at the commencement of a big struggle between labour and capital, and the militia will be called upon under many circumstances to suppress riots, and there may be many cases of rioting and insurrection. Under such conditions nobody will contend that the government is not obliged to furnish the force necessary to suppress rioting and violence. There are many circumstances where there is not much difference between a riot and an insurrection, and very often a riot is the commencement of an insurrection. If the municipalities continue to be obliged to pay for the services rendered by the militia, I am sure before long it will happen that when a strike will occur in the harbour of Montreal, the municipality will refuse to call out the militia, because they will, with reason, say that they are not obliged to meet the expenses of such service, when these services are rendered in the interests of the whole country. If the House is not ready to accept the other amendment, which I shall propose to clause 86, saying that after the case is provided for in this paragraph, the municipality will have nothing to pay if you are not ready to accept the other amendment, I think this amendment will be useless.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I could not accept the other amendment, and I do not think the Senate is in a position to place amendments of that kind in a money Bill, attaching a penalty to the Crown, so that the Crown instead of the municipality, shall bear the expense.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—The question of money does not arise, because the government will call on the permanent force.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There will be the expense of transportation.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—It is not a necessary consequence of the amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think the House would be disposed to make any exception in favour of Montreal and Quebec. I think they ought to have police force enough to keep under control the body of men who look after a ship. If the police supervision in Montreal had extended far enough, the strikes would not have been serious. It was simply on account of the lethargy of the authorities.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—The hon. Secretary of State may say what he likes against my amendment, but his remarks do not apply to all the ports under the control of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It never occurred anywhere else.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The principle involved in the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman, so far as the maritime provinces are concerned, and where the harbour commissioners are under the control of the government, I think, is a very good one; but I question whether we have the power to enact it. It is throwing on the government a liability, and the Senate has no power to do that. It incurs a liability or charge upon the revenue, which is against our constitution to meddle with.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I am not ready to say that my opinion is better than that of the hon. gentleman, who has had more experience, but I reserve my amendment for the third reading, and will consider how I can answer the objection.

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND—It is scarcely fair to speak of the cities of Montreal and Quebec as not open to special privileges, but so it is ; the Harbour Commission of Montreal is really and truly a government department. The majority of the members are appointed by the government. They are ruled by the government, and the territory which they administer is not under the control of the city, nor is it owned by the city, and the port is essentially a port of the Dominion. It is a fair argument, therefore, that the expenses of administering that port and policing it, ought well to be considered by the government, and I think the amendment which has been suggested by the last speaker is a fair and reasonable one.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I drew attention to the fact that the port of Montreal goes much beyond the limits of the city of Montreal, and difficulties, friction and strikes may take place at the west or east of Montreal, and it may develop on the front of the city of Montreal, coming from the neighbouring municipalities, and yet when the militia is called out, it is always the city of Montreal that has to pay for the maintenance of that militia during the time of riot.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—I am not one of those who want to impose upon Montreal anything that is unfair, but I cannot conceive why the port of Montreal should not take care of matters of this kind, just as all other districts of the country do.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—So it does, but there are two claims put forward, because it is a public port, and because the government have jurisdiction over certain ports. They have jurisdiction over the entire distance between Montreal and Quebec. Their jurisdiction is not confined to Montreal. It extends along the St. Lawrence river from Montreal to Quebec.

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND—Not at all.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—The Harbour Commission control, just as they do in Montreal, the entire distance, but under any circumstances, I for one cannot conceive why this matter should be different in the city of Montreal from any other portion of Canada. or any ports.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—That is what we claim.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—It is true the city of Montreal is, in a sense, a national port ; but the whole country is contributing to maintain it as a great national port, and I do not see why it should be made an exception in this respect at all.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The amendment is withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—It is not intended simply to make the amendment apply to Montreal. If it were adopted, it would be more beneficial and advantageous to other ports than Montreal, because Montreal is rich enough to pay for such services; but suppose a riot takes place in a port which is attached to the municipality, take Maisonneuve as an example; suppose a riot takes place in the port of Maisonneuve, the municipality is small, and the whole of its revenue would be absorbed by the expenses of the militia for one or two weeks. I think it is a mistake to say that this amendment is especially in favour of Montreal. A riot may be caused by labourers coming from all parts of the world, Italians, Spaniards, Germans and all nationalities—people engaged in the works under the control of the government. Well, is it fair and just that the expenses in such a case—I do not speak of Montreal but I speak of any port in Canada—that the expenses in such a case should be borne by the municipality?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Are there not provincial police in Montreal?

Hon. Mr. DAVID—No.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I should like to ask a question. It is a very serious matter. Who has charge of the troops on an occasion of this kind? Supposing that any catastrophe should occur,—fortunately there has not been any so far, but it may occur at any time—is the military authority to guide and direct the troops altogether, and in the event of firing on a mob or using deadly weapons, is the officer to take the full responsibility? Has the mayor or the civic authority the power of preventing a useless slaughter of people? Is there any provision made for it or not?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The senior judicial authority calling out the troops must be present and read the Riot Act, and give the people fair warning before any attempt is made to fire on them.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Who reads the Act?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The mayor or judicial authority who signs the requisition.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Not only that, but the senior officer in charge must get the order in writing, before he directs the troops to fire.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Every precaution is taken.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—from the committee, reported that they had made some progress in the committee, and asked leave to sit again.

BILL INTRODUCED.

POST OFFICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The Order of the Day being called:

Third reading Bill (153) An Act to amend the Post Office Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said: The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Ferguson) suggested that the powers which were intended to be conferred on the superintendent were really struck out by this Bill. I submitted his view to the Deputy Postmaster General, and stated that I in some degree concurred in the opinion of the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Ferguson), and therefore he consented to an amendment, restoring the latter part of clause 12 of the Postal Act. The latter part of the clause contains the authority for the chief post office inspector to make his inquiries, and striking that out rather took away the power and jurisdiction of the inspector. Under the present Bill the chief superintendent is substituted for the post office inspector, and the amendment I propose is to strike out the first nine lines of section 12 instead of the whole section, and to retain the powers which are contained in that section for the chief superintendent. I therefore move that the clause be amended by striking out the first nine lines, and inserting the following words : 'The chief post office superintendent shall have power to' My motion is that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be amended in the direction I have indicated.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is that the correct procedure, to amend a Bill at the third reading ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Our practice has been to amend it either by referring the Bill back to a Committee of the Whole, or to make correction in the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think Bourinot, in his work, says the Bill must be re-committed, but the Senate has often adopted the course proposed by the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of making the suggested amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As I have said, when section 12 was struck out it was thought there were other clauses in the Post Office Act which enabled the official to make the inquiry, but the hon. member for Marshfield maintained there was no power, and by repealing clause 12 we were depriving the chief superintendent of the powers which originally belonged to the chief inspector, and he said a part of that clause ought to be retained. On submitting his opinion to the Deputy Postmaster General, and coinciding myself with that view, they authorized the change.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND, from the committee, reported the Bill with an amendment, which was concurred in.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

MILITIA BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole, consideration of Bill (5) An Act respecting the Militia and Defence of Canada.

On clause 136,

136. The following Acts of the parliament of Canada are repealed, in so far as the active and reserve militia land force is concerned :—Chapter 41 of the revised statutes intituled 'An Act respecting the Militia and Defence of Canada ; ' chapter 19 of the statutes of 1898, intituled ''An Act further to amend the Militia Act and chapter 18 of the Statutes of 1900, intituled 'An Act to amend the Militia Act.'

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—If those Acts are repealed, the Acts on the statutes before them come in force, do they not ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This Bill will not come into force until there is a proclamation.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—But if you repeal those three Acts of the revised statutes and another one passed in 1898, the old law will come into force.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This Bill we are now passing will supersede all those Acts.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Then why do you say here that such and such Acts are repealed ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because all preceding Militia Acts are repealed when this comes in force.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The Interpretation Act in the revised statutes contains an express provision that the repeal of a repealing Act shall not revive the original Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This repealing clause repeals all Acts affecting the active and reserve militia land forces, so that any law or portions of laws now on the statutes, referring to the navy forces still remain in force.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 19,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the brief that was handed by the department to me, clause 19 was said to be similar to section 15 of the Act as it stands. On examination, I found it did not agree with that clause. On looking through the Act in the revised statutes, and the amendments, I did not find there was any Act corresponding to clause 19 : therefore, after a conversation with the Minister of Militia, we have decided to substitute section 15 as it stands in the original

Act for clause 19. I move the substitution of section 15, which is as follows :

No officer or man of an active militia corps raised and maintained by voluntary enlistment shall be permitted to retire therefrom in time of peace without giving to his commanding officer six months' notice of his intention so to do.

The latter part of clause 19 corresponds, but of course the two first lines do not correspond.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has the hon. gentleman called the attention of the militia authorities to the other clause to which we took very serious objection ? That is the taking from the commanding officers the right to appoint their own non-commissioned officers ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There are some clauses as to which I have made notes here, and I shall take the earliest opportunity to see the minister about them. In the short time I have had at my disposal, I have had no opportunity to see him.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We cannot deal with it then this session ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not in the short time at our disposal.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should be glad to see that change, because I think it would be in the interest of the service.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall bring it to the notice of the minister and possibly something may be done.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported the Bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read the third time.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I have not given up my amendments. I have confidence that they are good, and time will prove that they are. I want to amend clause 82 by adding after paragraph B the following :—

If the place where such riot or disturbance occurs or is anticipated is in a port or harbour under the control of the government or of a harbour commission, the requisition shall also be signed by the chairman of the harbour commission or by the officer in charge of the port.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.

Besides being signed by the mayor and the persons mentioned in paragraphs (a) and (b), the requisition shall have to be signed by the chairman of the harbour commissioners, or by the officer in charge of the port. I offer this amendment, because I intend to move another amendment to provide that when a riot takes place in a harbour or port under the jurisdiction of the government or of the harbour commission, that the municipality is not bound to obtain the services of the militia. I think it is proper to give a guarantee to the government that the militia will not be called out indiscriminately under circumstances where there would be no good reason to call them out ; and then I want to give to the government a certain guarantee that before acting the requisition will have to be signed by the persons named in paragraphs (a) and (b), and also by the chairman of the harbour commission, or by the officer in charge of the port when not administered by a harbour commission, but which is under the jurisdiction and direct control of the government. I want to say once for all, that this amendment will apply not only to Montreal and Quebec, as some hon. gentlemen have insinuated, but to all the ports and harbours of Canada. There is a clause in the statutes which perhaps I ought to read, which provides that by Order in Council the government has a right to declare that a port in any part of Canada shall be considered a port under the control of the government. I have here a book showing that there are between 60 and 75 ports in the same position or worse than Montreal, because I am sure there are perhaps 50 of them which are less able than Montreal to pay the expenses connected with the calling out of the militia in case of riot and disturbance. And hon. gentlemen must not forget that the amendment applies to places where the municipality has no control ; that it applies to ports and harbours which, under the constitution, and under special statutes, are under the direct control of the government or of a harbour commission, which amounts to the same thing, because when a port or harbour is under the jurisdiction or control of a harbour commission it means the government. Then, when a riot takes place in such a harbour, it takes place on wharfs which are the property of the government. Do not forget this important point to show the distinction of a riot taking place within the limits of a town or municipality, and a riot in a port; the difference is generally that the riot takes place on government property, or on the harbour commissioners' property, which amounts to the same thing. As I said this morning, what is the object of calling out the militia at such a time? It is to protect the property of the government, to protect steamers, and all kinds of vessels, foreign shipping generally, which are under the protection of the government and not of the municipality. It is to protect goods which are not necessarily the property of citizens at the port, but are destined for other parts of Canada. Moreover, when a riot takes place under certain circumstances it generally is and will be on account of a question of wages, because of difficulty between the government and wage-earners employed on government works. Not in municipal works, but in government works. Why should the municipality pay for the militia, when they have nothing to do with the disturbance, when it is not due to municipal questions, and when sometimes the government is the cause of the riot, which is very often a question of wages, and the riot is provoked by men coming from all parts of the world, employed by the government, and contractors. Is it not unreasonable to say that in such a case the municipality will not be responsible for the payment of the militia? Let the government employ the permanent militia. The government is obliged to pay for the permanent force, so that the government will have no reason to apply to the volunteer militia in such cases. Although there is much more to be said on this question, it is sufficient to show to the hon. members of this House, that the question is more serious than it is thought to be by many, and I do not hesitate to predict, although I am not a prophet, that before long there will be friction and conflicts between the government and the municipalities on that question, very serious conflicts, very serious difficulties, because a riot may take place in a great port which is attached to a small municipality. The other ports are more interested than Montreal. It is said that this is intended specially for Montreal, but I am making this more in the interests of other ports of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose this motion is similar to the previous motion, that the Bill be sent back to a Committee of the Whole to make this amendment?

The SPEAKER—No. When this motion was rejected in committee, the hon. gentleman gave notice that he would move the amendment on the third reading of the Bill, which he had a perfect right to do. It can be done either way, but inasmuch as the hon. gentleman moved the amendment in committee, and it was rejected, he gave notice that he would move it at the third reading. I think the usual way is not to refer the Bill back to the committee under such circumstances.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I have another amendment to propose to another clause of the Bill; both might be taken together.

The SPEAKER—One at a time.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the hon. gentleman could move the two amendments together. Will he not lose his right to move a second amendment, if he does not move them both at once?

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I would not move the one, if I did not believe the other would be accepted.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I understand this motion is similar to one made in Committee of the Whole, that the hon. gentleman from Mille Iles is desirous of moving a second amendment with reference to the payment of military forces, when they are called out, the payment to be made by the government. If he does not get the latter, he does not want the former. Would it not be more convenient if the House dealt with the two, if the House would deal with the latter amendment especially. I submit with all due deference to my hon. friend from Mille Iles that it is contrary to the rules and practice of the Senate to impose a clause of that kind in a Bill which will mean the expenditure of public money. I quote from Bourinot at page 626, if hon. gentlemen desire the authority.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I am not ready to move that amendment, because I find that there has been a change and a modification in the appreciation of the law on that subject. I have not had time to consult many authorities, and I do not pretend to be posted as I should be, but I say that they are less severe than they were before, and that now the Senate is permitted to insert amendments, and it is for the House of Commons to say if they will accept the amendment or not, and they will generally accept it, unless it be evidently in violation of the rules. Bourinot says :

> Many other entries will also be found of the House accepting Senate amendments, rather than delay the passage of a Bill at an advanced period of the session. It is quite regular, however, to agree to amendments which affect charges upon the people incidentally only, and have not been made with that object.
> In order, however, to expedite the business of the House, the privilege claimed and exercised by them, of laying aside Bills sent from the Senate because they impose pecuniary penalties ; nor of laying aside amendments made by the Senate because they introduce into or alter pecuniary penalties in Bills sent to them by this House. Provided that all such penalties thereby imposed, are only to punish or prevent crimes, and offences, and do not tend to lay a burden on the subject, either as aid or supply to Her Majesty, or for any general or special purposes by rates, tolls, assessments or otherwise.
> It is frequently found convenient to introduce Bills involving public expenditure in the Senate, and in such a case, the money clauses are embodied in the Bill as presented, in order to make it more intelligible. When the Senate goes into committee on the Bill, these clauses are ordered to be left out. They are printed in red ink or italics in the engrossed Bill sent up to the Commons, and are technically supposed to be blank. These clauses are always considered in a previous committee by the Commons.

I contend that it is not a question of money, and that the payment by the government of the militia is not a necessary consequence of the adoption of the amendment because the government may employ the permanent militia. If they employ the permanent militia, nobody will contend that the government will ask the municipality to pay the expense, because the government pay for the maintenance of the permanent force. In such a case, the government will not ask the municipality to reimburse money which the government pays out in the usual way. It is only, I suppose, when the active militia is called out that extra expense for maintenance is incurred. I say nothing obliges the government to call out the active militia. They may send to the municipality only the members of the permanent force. Then I say it is not an absolute necessity that the government should incur the expense of calling out the militia, if they can use the permanent force.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am in full sympathy with the motion made by the hon. senator from Mille Iles.

The SPEAKER—I think there is a point of order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I say on the point of order that I do not think it can be taken now. The only motion before this House is the first motion moved by the hon. gentleman from Mille Iles.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is all.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And that first motion does not involve any expenditure of public money at all.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The hon. gentleman from Mille Iles presented the two amendments. The first was regarded as unimportant unless the second was adopted by the House. Therefore I thought, in fairness to the House and in fairness to the hon. gentleman, that we had better deal with the question of the second amendment as it involves the first.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No, it does not.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We must take things as they are. As a matter of fact before this House now there is only the first motion moved by the hon. member. I asked the hon. gentleman to take the two amendments together, because if he had put only one and one was voted down, I thought he would lose the right of proposing another amendment. The hon. Speaker said he did not think the point would apply, evidently not accepting the proposition which I made that the two motions should be put together.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman assented to the proposition to move them both together.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, only one was put.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—As there is only one motion before the House, and that is the first one proposed. I may state that I am in perfect sympathy with the movement which is made to protect the rights of the municipality. I think this is one of the most important amendments suggested in regard to the administration of the Militia Act. The point the hon. senator from Mille Iles desires this honourable House to accept is that where a riot takes place on government property that the adjoining municipality on one side of the river or the other, on the east, west, north or south, shall not be called upon to pay the expenses of quelling that riot, and I think that the principle which the hon. senator has laid down is right and just. A riot takes place on government property, property on which the government pay no taxes to the municipality. Take the Lachine canal or the Soulanges canal, which are altogether government property, paying taxes to no municipality along the ten, twelve or fourteen miles of the length of that canal. A riot takes place, and the militia is called out to protect the property. Whose property? The government property? What municipality are you going to force to pay for the quelling of a riot on that property? You cannot force any of them. Why force a municipality on the south side or the north side of that canal to pay for such a thing? Why force the city of Montreal to pay large amounts for militia expenses incurred in the protection of government property, instead of forcing St. Lambert or Longueuil to pay for it? I say that the hon. senator from Mille Iles has asked us to place in this Militia Bill a principle safeguarding the rights of municipalities when the property which is protected by the calling out of the militia is government property. Take, for instance, the port of Montreal. There is a stretch of property and merchandise on that line and on those wharfs worth millions which does not belong to the city of Montreal, and with which its administration have nothing to do, which property does not contribute one cent towards the cost of the municipal administration of the affairs of Montreal. Why call upon the city to protect property which contributes nothing towards the city treasury? Why call upon the city of Montreal to pay out tens of thousands of dollars for the protection for which it is not responsible? If the House will accept this amendment with the other amendments, I will maintain the position which I hold jointly with the hon. senator from Mille Iles; but if it is going to be an obstacle in the way of this Bill being adopted immediately and sent down to the House of Commons I would ask the hon. senator to withdraw his amendment at present for this reason: I have consulted with the minister responsible for this Bill and when the matter was laid before him he said we were right, and if it could be remedied by a Bill next year, it would be done. As a matter of justice and of law you cannot call upon me to pay money for protection of property which contributes no revenue to the city of Montreal. I could understand if the harbour commissioners were obliged to pay taxes on the full value of their property, that the city of Montreal would be obliged to afford them the protection which they afford to other citizens who pay taxes into the city treasury. But that corporation is a distinct corporation from the corporation of Montreal—and I suppose it is the same in all the ports—a distinct corporation who are not liable to the municipality for any taxes. It is not fair to sanction a principle which involves injustice, and if the hon. senator has confidence in the wisdom of the government and their desire to do right by the municipalities, and if it is the desire of this House not to accept the amendment to-day if my hon. friend is willing I would be content to have this amendment withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I withdraw nothing.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then I stand with the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I would think it very unfortunate if we had to vote on this motion, when it is in fact incidental to the larger question involved in the second motion. If the second motion is objected to on a point of order, then the hon. gentleman from Mille Iles will withdraw that motion even if it were adopted.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Not necessarily.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I thought the hon. gentleman said he did not care for the motion if it were not followed up by the other motion providing for a charge upon the public treasury for the maintenance of the militia while on duty.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I did not deal with the point, because I thought it was coming up later; but I wanted to point out that the second amendment involved no question of expenditure on the part of this Bill. His demand is to prevent the government from charging the municipalities for the protection of the property of the government. It is not a question of spending money. We are not asking the government to spend money, but we want to lay down the principle that the government has no right to charge the municipality with expenses which it has not lawfully and rightfully incurred.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is clearly a question of Montreal vs. the Dominion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman seems to assume that the government have something to do with the harbours all over the country. I am not aware that they have. It is the first I have ever heard that they had. I think the harbour masters of Kingston, Collingwood or any other place would be very much annoyed if they heard that the government had any right to dictate terms to them as to the harbour property. The city of Montreal has helped the harbour of Montreal in large sums.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—And they pay a low rate of interest.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is idle to place the city of Montreal on a different basis in this matter from any other portion of the Dominion, and I do not suppose the House would be disposed to entertain a proposition by which the treasury of the country will be taxed especially for the benefit of the city of Montreal.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I do not think it is the city of Montreal alone. I think it is unfair to mention Montreal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—What other cities besides Montreal and Quebec are there? We do not hear of it from St. John or Toronto?

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I represent the district of Sorel, and in that district the government owns a great deal of property and owns the Sorel shops. I do not know exactly the name of the municipality where they are located. The government employs three or four hundred men.

Hon. Mr. THIBAUDEAU (Rigaud)—Double that.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Supposing there was a strike there to-morrow and the militia were called out, would it be fair to saddle that municipality with the expense of ten or fifteen thousand dollars? I do not suppose their revenue is more than $5,000 or $6.000 a year. Many of the men who work in the shops reside in Sorel. I do not think they have the means of paying for such protection; they are too poor. A strike might be provoked there on account of the men not being paid enough wages, and would it be fair that the municipality where the shops are should be compelled to pay for the expense of quelling that strike? I think it would be most unjust.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—The same thing would apply to other government works. The Grenville or Carillon canal, for instance, where a riot might take place. It would be equally unfair to call on the adjoining municipality to pay for the protection of government property there. It is not a matter of the city of Montreal against the Dominion; it is simply a question of the government defending their own property, and not calling upon the adjoining municipalities to pay for something in which they are not specifically interested. I would support the amendment.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to lay down the principle that all properties not taxable shall protect themselves?

Hon. Mr. OWENS—No, but if the government owns the property the government should protect it.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Does the hon. gentleman contend that all properties which are not taxable in the province, which do not pay municipal taxes, shall be called upon to protect themselves in case of trouble?

Hon. Mr. OWENS—The motion is not dealing with that question at all. It is dealing with government property, and the government should protect their own property.

The House divided on the amendment, which was lost on the following division:

Hon. Mr. FROST—I am paired with the Hon. Sir John Carling, so that my name must be struck off.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Perhaps Sir John Carling would vote the same way.

The SPEAKER—I do not see that it is a government question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a government Bill.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—If it is a government Bill I have a right to vote.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman is paired with any one, his duty is to adhere to the pair.

The name of Hon. Mr. Frost was struck off, leaving the division yeas, 11; nays, 13.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—With the leave of the House I withdraw my second amendment.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I beg to move that Bill No. 5 be not now read the third time, but that it be amended by striking out in clause 39 all the words after 'shall be appointed,' in the ninth line down to the end and replacing them with the following:

By the officer commanding the corps or regiment to which they belong and shall hold their rank during pleasure.

That is replacing the old law and giving to the commanding officer of each regiment the right which he has had heretofore, to name the non-commissioned officers of his regiment.

The amendment was declared lost on division.

The motion for the third reading of the Bill was carried, and the Bill was then read the third time and passed.

LAND TITLES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (158) An Act to amend the Land Titles Act, 1894.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is a Bill of a somewhat technical character. It has been found necessary to make some changes to admit of certain documents to be registered in the Northwest Territories. Under the Land Titles Act the rule is that only straight conveyances are to be registered. There are a number of agreements and documents which would be very convenient for the people up there to have registered, to give them in that way a degree of legality which they cannot otherwise possess, and therefore these amendments are made with that view. The explanation furnished me of the reasons for the change is that agreements for the sale and purchase of lands in the Territories cannot be registered under the provisions of the Land Titles Act, the transfer must be absolute. Therefore, when the Hudson Bay Company, or any company who had received a land grant from the Crown, sells a parcel of land to an individual, and the latter, prior to receiving his transfer from such company, obtains, either for the purpose of paying such company the purchase money for such land or for erecting buildings thereon, purchasing stock, or other purpose satisfactory to himself, a loan from another company upon the security of the land the mortgage executed to secure the repayment of such loan cannot be filed with the registrar as the law stands at present. The delay in the execution of a transfer from an individual to an individual does not occur, as it does in cases of purchases of lands from the large companies referred to. The reason that the Hudson Bay Company is named in the amendment is that only a small proportion of that company's lands has been granted to it by Canada, its title being derived under the original charter from Great Britain. True, the grant is from the Crown in both instances, but grants from the Crown under the provisions of the Land Titles Act are grants under the provisions of the Dominion Lands Act, or, in other words, grants from the Crown as represented by the Dominion. The amendments have been pressed for for several years, not only by the land companies and loan companies and the solicitors of such companies, but by settlers and persons interested in their welfare and advancement. The amendment of subsection 2 of section 33 of the Act is necessary if section 73 is to be amended as proposed, and advantage has been taken of the amendment of subsection 2 of section 33, to provide for another very necessary amendment, the entering in the day-book of maps and plans to be filled with the registrar under the provisions of the Railway, Irrigation and other Acts, but not registered. At present it is not considered that the registrar is acting contrary to the provisions of the subsection in question, as it now stands, in entering such maps and plans in the day-book, and as he has not another record book in which to enter them, it is now difficult to keep track and trace of them in his office.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (170) An Act to amend the Customs Act.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into a committee of the Whole on the Bill

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The explanation furnished me by the department is that the object of section 1 is to make the provisions of the customs laws in regard to customs 'duty' also applicable to 'special duty,'—applying to the collection of the special duty and to penalties, for evasion or non-payment of the same. Vide Customs Act, sections 6 and 7, re collection, and section 192, &c., re penalties. Under sections 2 and 3 the provision for collection of an additional sum is dropped on account of the new provision regarding special duty. In case of the undervaluation of dutiable goods not subject to special duty or otherwise, there are penalties provided under section 192, &c., of the Customs Act for evading any part of the duty properly payable.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is harping back to the old law. The law previously imposed a duty upon an article composed of more than one material upon that which bore the highest duty under the tariff. That was repealed, and a very cumbersome clause was inserted in place of it, under which you had to consider the value of the component parts of the article, and that of which it contained the most. I pointed out at the time the great difficulty arising under the law. Now, I observe that they are going back, slightly modifying the clause, and I think that experience has taught them that the going back to the old law would be an improvement.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The explanation given me by the department as to section 4, re entry at not less than invoice value: This amendment is deemed necessary to aid in securing the entry of goods upon true invoices representing actual sales by the exporters. The object of clause four is to promote uniformity in regard to the valuation of imported goods, and to discourage litigation. This is a necessary power for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the resolutions this year in respect to special customs duties.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I see a difficulty will arise out of this as well as under the old law. There is no doubt about that. The department in Ottawa in the past had the power of revising the decision of any official in the department, no matter what it was, in any part. There was a special power given for that purpose. The only point that strikes me in this that is new is to make it final and conclusive except as otherwise provided in this Act. That would mean it would not take anything from the right to put it into appeal. I think the amendment is a very good one.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BAKER, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was read the third time and passed.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (173) An Act further to amend the Inland Revenue Act.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the rule be suspended and that the Bill be now read the second time. He said: The only change is by the addition of the words 'unless otherwise directed by the department,' in the 15th line.

By clause 7 of the Act it is provided that the Minister of Inland Revenue may refuse to grant any license; at the same time clause 20 says in substance that the license shall be used by the collector upon the favourable report of the inspector.

The change proposed is with the view of conciliating the two enactments.

The amendment proposed by the second clause is in the following words: 'or when manufactured from sugar, syrup, molasses or other saccharine matter not otherwise provided for.'

This amendment is proposed with the view of making clear our right to collect duty on spirits made with domestic molasses. Our law provided for a duty on spirits made with foreign molasses. But it is not very clear whether we can collect duty on our domestic product.

The amendment made by the third clause is in the addition to the section, the following words to be found on line 15: 'Except that malt imported into Canada, crushed or ground, shall be subject to a duty of 2½ per pound.'

We have no provision in our law authorizing us to levy a duty on crushed and ground malt, commonly called malt flour. Lately large importations of malt flour have been made and it is to be presumed that that malt flour will supersede malt in the breweries or distilleries. Then it should be taxed to the same extent as the malt itself. The sum of 2½ of duty on malt flour is equivalent to 1½ cents on the malt itself.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—From the explanation the Bill is simply for the purpose of protecting the revenue in certain cases, and to cover cases that are not provided for in the present law?

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill passed through all its stages.

CANADA EASTERN RAILWAY PURCHASE BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (163) An Act authorizing the government of Canada to purchase the Canada Eastern Railway and to take possession of the Fredericton and St. Mary's Railway bridge.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the suspension of the rule and the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This Bill has been on the tapis for some little time. I remember when they were running the last election in the province of New Brunswick it was then mooted that Mr. Blair, the then Minister of Railways and Canals, was in negotiation with Mr. Gibson, the principal owner of this road, for its purchase, and it was denied with a very great deal of vehemence, and a good deal of earnestness by the press, and also by those who are connected with the government. At the same time it was not only currently reported, but believed that negotiations were proceeding for the purchase of the road. Since that time the scheme for the purchase has culminated, and now we have a Bill presented to the House to pay some $800,000 for this road; and the government are also taking power to take over St. Mary's bridge in aid of which the government had loaned some years ago $300,000 towards its construction.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are absolute owners of the bridge. The government had a mortgage on the bridge, and it has been forfeited.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, it has not been forfeited. This Bill does not go as far as that. The government advanced for the construction of the bridge so much, and took a mortgage on it some sixteen years ago. If my information is correct, not a cent has been paid since that time.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Neither principal nor interest.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Now it is proposed to take that bridge over and, according to the last clause, it will be found that they are not to close that mortgage to which the hon. Secretary of State has referred, for twelve months, on the ground that they want to give the owners of the bridge an opportunity of paying off the mortgage and taking possession of it as owners. In the future, in case the National Transcontinental Railway goes to Fredericton, and crosses that bridge, it may possibly be of some value. The object of that amendment made in the House of Commons giving the power to the government to close the mortgage finally at the end of twelve months and take possession of the bridge, was to prevent the owners of the bridge at some future period, should the government take possession of it without foreclosure, compelling the government to account for the receipts during the period it was in their possession. We know in Ontario what the law is in respect to mortgages. The original Bill as introduced had no provision of that kind. The hon. member for Hamilton pointed out the difficulties in which the government might be involved in the future in case the bridge should become a valuable property, and a demand be made upon the government for a statement of receipts and expenditures. Under the law, they would have a right to demand that they should account for them. It was pointed out, and it is a grave question—at least so some legal gentlemen say—as to whether the Dominion has a right to go even that far in assuming the ownership of the bridge. However, that is not a point that we need discuss now. If I am wrong, the hon. gentleman will put me right.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The right of foreclosure exists under the Act without going to the court.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, we are to give now $800,000 for a property which is certainly not worth that sum. If that be a paying road, as it has been represented, then the owners would not be likely to part with it. They have been trying for years and years to sell that road to the government. The information that I have today is that competent engineers have been over that road and their report is that it will cost at least $4,000 per mile to put it in a proper shape for use. Then, in addition to that, we have no statistics to show what the earnings or cost of the road have been, nor the aid which it has received from the Dominion government, the local government and the municipalities. When this question was first mooted a month ago I asked the Secretary of State if he would endeavour to obtain the information which would be necessary to enable this House to deal with a question of the kind. None of that information has been laid before parliament. No one knows what the original cost was, what subsidies were given in aid of it, or what state the road is in at the present moment. My information is, as I have already stated, from engineers, that it would require at least $4,000 per mile to put it in running order. Then there is another point we ought to know before the road is purchased. What is the weight of the rails laid on that road? Perhaps the hon. member for Rothesay could tell us.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I do not know.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have been told that the weight of those rails is only fifty-six pounds to the yard.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I should judge about that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—They are over sixty pounds.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If they are fifty-six pounds to the yard, what does that mean? It means a re-railing of the whole road.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Not necessarily.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does anybody suppose that the heavy engines of the Intercolonial Railway, of which this is to form a branch, and the heavy traffic it is expected will run over it, will be safe on rails weighing fifty-six pounds to the yard? Every change on the Intercolonial Railway has been to increase the weight of rails in order that they may do the business of the road more rapidly, and the engines upon it are very large and powerful. We know that from the large estimates that have been voted by parliament for that purpose, so that we are really buying a comparatively worn-out road, and involving the country in another heavy expenditure. I venture to predict that instead of $800,000, the road will cost before it is in a position to make it up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway a couple of million dollars. I do not think, judging from the improvements that have been made on the Drummond County Railway, and which were absolutely necessary to enable the Intercolonial Railway to use it even as a feeder, that it can be done for less. We do not suppose for a moment that the Intercolonial Railway with its heavy rails and powerful engines will use a line to Fredericton with fifty-six pound rails. Common sense will force every one to come to that conclusion. Then, why should we buy that road? The only reason that I have heard or seen advanced is that if the government do not purchase it and make it a feeder to the Intercolonial Railway, it will fall into the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and thereby divert certain trade which naturally, it is contended, belongs to the Intercolonial Railway. The traffic on that line, I take it for granted, would go over the Intercolonial Railway, provided that was the cheapest and most profitable way to send it. Why then do we want to buy up this road? Is it to be understood that all the lateral lines in the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are to be purchased by the government? Is it to be a new system of government ownership and management of railways in the maritime provinces that is to be adopted? That is a question which we may fairly ask. Then I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State, who is responsible for the utterances of the premier, how the government reconciles the declaration made by the premier not a month ago to a deputation which waited upon him, asking for assistance to survey the Georgian Bay canal, with this new policy. The premier replied that he was opposed to government ownership of railways, but was in favour of government ownership of waterways. I presume he made that statement with the idea that there should not be another waterway connecting the upper lakes with the St. Lawrence owned by a private corporation. I am not prepared to dispute that policy, but what I want to know is how he and the cabinet reconciled that declaration with the fact that they must have been then in negotiation for the purchase of this Eastern Extension Railway in the province of New Brunswick? If the public is to be constantly told that the men who rule and control the country are not in favour of a certain policy, while at the same time they are in active negotiation for the purchase of a road, pursuing a course diametrically opposed to their declaration, what confidence can the people have in them? How many iron bridges are there on this road? It crosses, as I understand, a number of streams. Whether they are large rivers or not I am not prepared to say, but, from the information I have, there is not an iron or steel bridge on the road. If that be the case, it will necessitate the reconstruction of every bridge on that line. Even if some of the bridges are of steel, they are only built for the purpose of local trade, with light engines, and small trains. The consequence is that we shall be saddled with this 136 miles of road at a cost of $800,000, and the cost of maintaining and keeping in repair a bridge in which we have an interest of $300,000 and arrears of interest for about 15 or 16 years at four per cent, with the prospect of renewing all the rails for the 136 miles, reconstructing all the bridges, and retieing the road—in fact, almost rebuilding the whole line. That is the responsibility the government is assuming, and in the face of the declaration made by the premier, it is for the country to say how far confidence can be placed in declarations made by the government. If the policy is to purchase all the local roads in New Brunswick, the system had better be carried out at once to its full extent. The declaration was made in the House that during last year, or a few years past, this road in the state in which it is, has had a surplus over expenditure of about $2,000—a very small amount, that would be swallowed up by the construction of one small bridge at any time. To any one who has given the question the slightest attention or consideration, it must be evident that this is an improvident bargain, entailing on the country an expenditure which ought not to be incurred. It is taking over property that the owners have been trying to get rid of for years, because it is an incubus upon their finances, no matter what they might say to the contrary, and foisting upon the government an unprofitable undertaking. If we live a few years after the purchase of this road, if my predictions are not fulfilled in respect to it, I shall be very glad to acknowledge my error.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have a few figures relating to the construction of the road, and to its reputed value and the subsidies it has received. I hope before another stage to have some further information. The length of the road with bridges is 136½ miles. The road and the rolling stock together cost $2,098,412; cost per mile, $15,429.29 with the rolling stock. The cash cost, however, is put down at $13,000 per mile, in the opinion of Mr. Schreiber, and the total cash cost is estimated at $1,768,000.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—What is meant by the first cost ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume that included commissions and discounts and rolling stock.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—That is to say, they paid in cash $1,768,000, and they valued it at $2,098,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The subsidies the road received were, first, from New Brunswick, $400,000. The province waives all right to any consideration, owing to the road being taken over by the government of Canada. The Dominion have given a subsidy of $350,400, and they received old rails from the Intercolonial Railway from time to time equal to $24,439, making a contribution from the Dominion and from the provinces of $774,839. The road was commenced about 1875, and nine and one-half miles was built then. In 1884 and 1885 the line was built from Chatham Junction to Gibson, 108 miles. In 1886 eight and one-half miles was built to Indiantown, and in 1894 five and three-quarters, and four and three-quarters were built to Nelson on the Miramichi. That makes 136½ miles. In addition to that there are sidings of eight and one-quarter miles. As to the rails, the report handed to me places the weight 65 pounds, 58 pounds and 60 pounds. I have not the proportionate quantity for each mile. There are rails on the line of those various weights.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I suppose the 56-pound rails are the old rails worn out on the Intercolonial Railway when given to them ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—No, they were new rails. The rails on the sidings would be old rails.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Mr. Schreiber estimates it will cost about $1,000 per mile to put the road in good repair. It is now in good condition, as appears by the report of several engineers.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Not counting the renewal of rails ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—They do not intend to put on new rails at that price.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Clearly not. As to the reasons for buying the road, it has been urged by the members from the province of New Brunswick, and the Minister of Railways, that if it were acquired by the Canadian Pacific Railway valuable territory, a natural feeder for the Intercolonial Railwy, would be lost, and that if the road is put in good condition and close connections made with the Intercolonial Railway its value will be very much enhanced.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. gentleman tell me where it will connect with the Intercolonial Railway ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—On the Miramichi. It comes across from there—starts from Chatham junction.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was urged that the traffic of a very large section of New Brunswick would go to the Canadian Pacific Railway rather than to the Intercolonial Railway, and that the trade was certain to increase in the future. I hope that the prophecy will be fulfilled.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I should like to know about the old rails. Were the second-hand rails from the Intercolonial Railway used ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think not.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Were the new rails bought by the government ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As they are put down as Barrow steel rails, I presume they were new rails.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—New rails that the government had no use for ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I could not tell anything about the history of them.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—The hon. gentleman says the government bought it because they do not want to see it go into the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—And to make it a feeder of a very valuable territory to the Intercolonial.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Is it to the knowledge of the hon. gentleman that the Canadian Pacific Railway made an offer for the road ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know anything about the history of the road.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—The hon. gentleman said that the Canadian Pacific Railway wanted to buy it, and that the government considered that the Dominion had better buy it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I say that representations had been made that the road would probably fall into the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I said it was so reported.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is in error as to the character of the rails. I was in the government at the time these rails were given, and as indicated by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay, when the rails began to wear out on the main line they were taken up and a better class of rails laid down. The rails taken up were put on the switches of the Intercolonial Railway and the surplus rails taken up from the old track were donated in aid of local roads, and this is one of them.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Only the branches.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Perhaps, but the rails they received from the Intercolonial Railway were given to them as rails that were not required, having been taken up and replaced by rails of a better quality. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman from Wellington will remember very well the transaction at the time.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Because the first rails that were given under such circumstances were given by the government of which my hon. friend the Secretary of State was a member, the government of the late Alexander Mackenzie, and the same policy was pursued by Sir John Macdonald's government after it came back to power.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think I stated the value of the old rails given by the Intercolonial Railway was $24,439.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That would not go very far.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That would be only worth old iron, and that is all the Intercolonial Railway could have done with them if they had sold them.

At six o'clock, the Speaker left the chair.

After Recess.

Mr. DOMVILLE resumed the debate. He said : This is entirely a provincial question. We have to consider first, is the railway built, second, why was it built, and, third, who built it. Without going into any elaborate figures, we find that the Dominion government gave a subsidy and the local government also aided the enterprise, and the government of the day, whether right or wrong, laid down a standard of what the rails were to be. They were to be fifty-six pounds, and fifty-six-pound rails were laid down. It would be a mistaken argument to take the position that the road was no good, because if that were true, where are all the other railways, and why are we trying to develop and open up this country ? One would infer from the remarks of my hon. friend from Belleville (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell) that this road was no good. Can we for a moment suppose that the Dominion government and the local government would have subsidized this company to the extent of $774,000 to build a railway that was no good ? We must inquire why that road was built. It cuts the Intercolonial Railway at right angles, and extends to Fredericton, passing through a fine agricultural country, as good as any we have in New Brunswick, excepting perhaps the river fronts. It gives a straight line from the Gulf of St. Lawrence to Fredericton, and a short route for the transportation of fresh fish in cold storage to the United States markets. The whole of the Miramichi coast is interested in this line. Is there any one who will say, if that road had to be built to-morrow, that the 136 miles could be constructed for $800,000 ? That would be only $6,000 per mile. Why, the rails are worth to-day nearly $3,000 per mile, and if the road is any good at all it is dirt cheap at the price named. I do not say that the road will not require repairs ; every railway does. The Grand Trunk Railway which was built half a century ago and passes through the very finest part of Ontario, has never been a paying line; even to-day they are only paying dividends on some of the preferential stock.

Take the Intercolonial Railway; has that ever paid anything? No. I care not who may run it, it will go behind. Every railway goes behind until the country has developed a trade, and then it becomes a paying proposition. The Canadian Pacific Railway has had a different experience. It runs through the great grain and cattle lands of the west. The business has been well managed, and they have been able to hold their own and pay dividends. If we are seeking to develop Canada, why should not the maritime provinces get a share of the benefit? Having spent a great deal of money on these local roads, why not go a little further and say, 'You have struggled to open up the province of New Brunswick; we will assist the further development by taking over these roads and managing them ourselves.' It would be a mistake to say that while we are paying so much attention to the great west we are going to neglect the maritime provinces. Perhaps some hon. gentlemen may argue that we have nothing to do with this railway. I take the ground that every railway is a high road with rails upon it, that the engine has taken the place of horses for the transportation of freight. Any railway which is building up the maritime provinces will earn a revenue for this country. My hon. friend from Hastings (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell) complains because the rails are only 56 pounds to the yard. Who ordered 56-pound rails? Not the present government, but their predecessors who, in their wisdom, thought such rails were suitable. As to the condition of those rails, I am not thoroughly informed, but I have no doubt from what I do know that they are in good order, and that the road, for a road of that kind, is in fairly good condition. As to the equipment, what road can you build to-day for anything like the cost of this? Take the Canadian Northern; the papers brought down to the House show that the road has cost between $16,000 and $17,000 with bridges and some of it $19,000 a mile. At these figures, what would it cost to build this road which we are now getting for $800,000? Over $2,000,000. It cannot be an injury to the Intercolonial Railway; it does not draw traffic from it, and if it helps to build up St. John and Fredericton, is not that doing a great deal towards the development of this country? What fault can be found with that? No hon. gentleman will take the ground that nothing shall be done for the maritime provinces. We have in the province of New Brunswick the Buctouche Railway, the Kent County Railway, the Albert Railway, the St. Martin's and Upton Railway, the Havelock Railway, the Norton Railway, which is commonly called the Central. All these railways have cost so much. Are we going to assume that because they have been constructed it is not the duty of the government of the day to have nothing more to do with them? We have given $10,000 or $12,000 a mile in the way of subsidies to aid construction; are you going to say to the people there shall be no prosperity in the maritime provinces, and that these roads are not to be placed in a paying condition? I take it as a cardinal principle that the government should help those railways, collect them together and run them in connection with the Intercolonial Railway, without the expense of keeping up so many managements. If you take the ground that we do not require the Intercolonial Railway, you simply say that we should not have come into confederation. When we did go into confederation how many people believed in it? Take up the annals of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia and you will find that nobody wanted to have anything to do with confederation or with Canada in those days.

Those ideas have passed away, and nobody thinks now of breaking away from the confederation. Everybody believes in building up a great nation and developing the transportation routes of the country. As to the bridges on this railway, I do not know whether they are of iron or of steel. I do not believe there are many bridges on the line, because it does not cross many rivers, but if a road like this had steel bridges such as you find on the western roads, you could not build it to-morrow for $25,000 per mile, because we know the shorter the mileage the greater the ration of expense in putting up bridges. The owners of this road have lost money. The figures produced here show that the road cost in cash, $1,768,000. The subsidies from the government amount to $774,000 : where did the balance come from ? The unfortunate promoters who put their money into the project thought it would benefit themselves and develop the country, but they have lost money. The $800,000 they are receiving will not pay them. That amount would not build the most ordinary roadbed. Culverts have to be put in, rails laid, and right-of-way secured. Nobody will say that 136 miles of roadbed could be constructed for $800,000. The government are acquiring for $800,000 a property which, with a comparatively small additional expenditure, will be a benefit to the maritime provinces, and especially to New Brunswick. It may be argued that the government should not own railways. I contend that the government should either have no railways or own all the railways. In the maritime provinces the government own the Intercolonial Railway . then let them acquire these branches. Having assisted them, they should get the possession of them and put them in proper shape for traffic. The St. Martin Railway was closed up for a year ; the Buctouche road stopped running for a time, and all these other railways have been doing indifferent work. Why ? Because they have not had the fostering hand of the government. They have not been in the hands of strong corporations that could put them on a paying basis. I have no doubt if the government would take up these branch roads at once, and put them in proper shape, and administer them properly, while they might not pay directly they would pay indirectly. If they are run successfully, even though they do not yield a revenue above expenses, they will develop our agricultural and mining interests and thus contribute to the prosperity of the Dominion. I remember my experience the first time I came to Ottawa, in 1872. We had to take the railway to Holton, from Holton drive to Madawaska, and at Madawaska take the railway to Danville Junction, on the Grand Trunk Railway ; and when we came to Prescott Junction it took two or three days to get to Ottawa from Prescott. That occurred on several occasions. That condition of things has passed away. I remember the difficulty we had in getting to the Northwest. When I went out to the Red River first, it was something to be able to talk about that I had visited Winnipeg and the prairies. To-day we can take a pullman here and be in Winnipeg inside of three days. Canada has expanded, and our ideas must expand with the growth of the country. I venture to say that in three or four years, those of us who will then be surviving will feel how little we now appreciate the expansion of the country. Taking that ground, we ought not to pass strictures on those railways and bridges. If we must find fault, let us censure the governments that in the past subsidized this railway, because if the ground is taken that the line is useless to-day, it was equally useless then.

If the governments of the day, both the Dominion and the local governments, thought in their wisdom that it was a line well worth building, and assisted the project with money grants, now that the company come in forma pauperis, and say 'We have tried to do the best we could with the railway, but it has been a losing concern. We have struggled against adversity, but having lost all our money, we want you to take this line off our hands, help us to get out of it, help the country and operate the railway. So far we have been able to carry it on but not successfully, either from want of means or of railway knowledge. Not being railway men to a great extent, we have not made it pay, and we are willing to lose the difference between $2,000,000 and $800,000 out of our own pockets. Personally I have no interest in the matter at all. I am only interested as a New Brunswicker in the development of New Brunswick. I have great faith in New Brunswick. I have faith in this road when it is run by the government ; although it does not pay at present, it is going to pay indirectly in the good service it will give to the people, and by the country that it passes through being developed, and producing a traffic that will eventually pay for the running of the road. It has been stated by my hon. friend that this deal is the result of a political pull. I cannot see that there is anything political in it. The bridge was an unfortunate bridge. Why did the government grant money towards the construction of an unfortunate bridge ? Take the bridge at St. John, I fought, when I was in the Commons, with all my might to prevent them granting the money. They gave more money to build a bridge across the river, than it ever cost. A Mr. Tucker—not the member—came up to Ottawa, and was not able to pay the fees to get the Bill through. The promoters had to wait till the following session to raise the fees for the Bill, and what did they do? There is a bridge across the River St. John. I do not know what tolls they are charging to-day but they were charging four dollars a car for every car that went over that bridge. Who pays it? The Canadian Pacific Railway. Who gets the money? People that never invested a shilling in the enterprise. It is owned by a private corporation, who draw large dividends by charging a heavy toll on the bridge. They are controlling the trade across the River St. John, but they never put a dollar of their own into the bridge. Then the Fredericton bridge was constructed, because it was supposed that it was an absolute necessity to make the connection between the Canada Eastern Railway and the west to allow fresh salmon, smelts and other fish to be sent to market quickly, by that short cut. They could not get through there unless they had a bridge. It must have been poor policy to have granted them government aid. I am not prepared to say it was not. It was thrown away as far as the government was concerned, because those people who got the money have nothing to-day. The government got the bridge back, and the company has to submit. The money has been expended, and it is gone. I do not think the bridge at St. John is safe. I do not believe a heavy train could run over it at all. It is tested to the last half inch. It is a bridge built years ago for lighter rolling stock than we have to-day, and every time I travel over it I feel glad when I arrive at the other side, to know that I am safe. That is a fact. Now I wish to take three positions: first of all, that the government of the day who voted money for these enterprises must have known what they were doing. They must have appreciated the fact that the railway was necessary.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It was done for a purpose.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Perhaps it was done for a purpose, and perhaps this was done for a purpose, but did they succeed in the purpose, considering all the money they paid out? Perhaps they might not succeed in this scheme. The whole question comes down to this: Is the railway there necessary? Is it going to be of any use for New Brunswick. And being in an unfortunate position, is the government justified in taking up the road and making it a part and parcel of the Intercolonial Railway? I do not see anything else to consider at all.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Who are they buying it from?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Buying it from the creditors.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Who are they?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman does not want me to name them. I do not believe Mr. Gibson will get a dollar out of it, and I think he has sunk a fortune in it. I do not think there is a dollar in it which goes to him. I could tell the hon. gentleman to whom the money goes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is what we are asking.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman will have to put a notice on the order paper if he wants the information. If hon. gentleman on both sides of the House would only have a little kindly feeling, it would be all right. We have a very large and prosperous country, and if hon. members would only view the question as I view it, that the government of Canada while distributing its bonuses here and there, while endeavouring to build up this great country, is perfectly right in saying that something is due to the maritime provinces. I do not think there is any one in the province of New Brunswick who understands the situation, who will not justify the purchase of this railway by the government. I do not care what his politics are or who he is, he will say that the government have made a most judicious purchase. I state without fear of contradiction that this is a railway for the general advantage of the provinces, and a railway that is for the general advantage of the maritime provinces must be for the general advantage of the Dominion; then, never mind who gets the money. The question is whether you have a cheap property, and whether that property is an advantage to Canada. If the Senate votes about eighty millions of money to-morrow, as they are going to do, and if they are willing to have our railway system developed, then the least thing they can do is to allow this Bill to go through. You will be doing a generous act and the people of Canada on both sides of politics will appreciate the fact that the Senate have recognized that we have done what we could to better the conditions of that little province known as New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I can well remember in the early history of my political life hearing a good deal regarding the Canada Eastern Railway. I remember that it was called Gibson's road, and I can remember very well when voting subsidies for the construction of that road, it was said that we were voting money for the purposes of building up the personal interests of one man. Mr. Gibson was at that time a good friend of my hon. friends opposite. He has changed, I think, once or twice, in his lifetime politically.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He knows where his interest lies.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—And it appears to me he is willing to support the party in power. He was a man of that kind, so far as I remember. He secured at one time the retirement of Mr. Temple in order to provide a seat for the Hon. Mr. Foster, who was elected there afterwards, and sat for that constituency for a considerable time. It was during the time Mr. Foster was here, as representative of the county, that a grant was made for the purpose of building the Fredericton bridge. We criticised very pointedly the grant towards the construction of that bridge. It was not a grant. It was a loan. The government loaned $300,000, and in addition to that they paid a bonus of $15,000 to every $100,000—that is, $45,000 as a bonus and $300,000 as a loan towards the construction of that bridge. I remember distinctly myself following the matter up, and every year asking for a return of the amount of interest that was collected on that investment and inquiring why the interest was not collected. I believe it was not collected under either government. I do not know whether their receipts during the time the Conservatives were in power were larger than they have been recently. Whatever the condition may be, I believe they have both virtually treated the company that built that bridge in the same way. Neither government has collected any interest, as I understand. The bridge has been built some sixteen years, and the interest was $12,000 a year. That would amount to about $200,000, without compound interest, and $300,000 that has been loaned, which virtually makes about half a million. When this Canada Eastern Railway was built it was looked upon as a lumber or timber line. It was built for that purpose. It was considered that there was a large amount of timber in the district, and Mr. Gibson has utilized that road, for fifteen or sixteen years, for the purpose of bringing timber to his mill, which is erected, as I understand, at Fredericton, at the bridge. The road has been in existence sixteen years, and we are paying about $5,800 a mile for it. As far as I am concerned, I am entirely opposed to the purchase of branch lines in any province to be added to the Intercolonial Railway. I am opposed to that policy on the ground that there are no branches with the exception of one, I think, that has been added to the Intercolonial Railway which has not been virtually a drain upon the main line, rather than an assistance. I opposed the construction of the Pictou branch. I opposed the construction of the Oxford and New Glasgow line. All these lines that were built virtually duplicated the Intercolonial Railway, and what is the condition to-day? We have sixty-six millions of money virtually sunk in the Intercolonial Railway, upon which the country is paying at least three per cent interest, That is about $2,000,000 a year of interest paid by the taxpayers of this Dominion, and in addition to that, last year they had to pay a million and a half of money to keep the line running and make up expenses. With all that experience in the past, we are adding to it by the purchase of this road.

The price to be paid for this branch may be reasonable—I do not know whether it is or not—but it is quite clear after it has been operated for sixteen years, that it is not in a condition in which it can be utilized either by the mortgagees of the road or the party who owns it, and the only hope for its future is to unload it on to the Intercolonial Railway. When we consider the fact that there are wooden bridges along that line that are sixteen years old, what kind of condition must they be in? The country will have to replace all these wooden bridges with iron bridges, and that is going to be a serious expense, and if the Intercolonial Railway is going to use their heavy engines on that branch, they will have to put on heavy rails. The 56-pound rails will not carry the large engines which are run on the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway and the Intercolonial Railway. They have the old style of rails, and a lot of wooden structures, virtually rotten, and a poor roadbed. I have not seen the country, but I am opposed to the purchase by the government of this railway for the reasons that I opposed other additions to the Intercolonial Railway. We should have confined ourselves to the main line and not have added anything. What was the experience of the Grand Trunk Railway years ago? The Grand Trunk added a number of branches to its main line. I know from the general manager of that road that they considered that those branches in place of being an advantage were a disadvantage until such time as they accumulated a certain amount of trade, and got solidified and in first-class shape, and were relaid with good steel rails. In some cases they commenced to pay, but it would have been better for the Grand Trunk Railway and Great Western if they had held to the main line of their road instead of adding largely to these systems by buying up and building branch lines. That was their experience, and the country's experience with regard to the Intercolonial Railway will be just the same. This is the commencement of a system that may be followed out. We are beginning by this purchase. I have heard it said that there are a great many more lines in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick that would like to sell out. We are beginning a system which may result in the country owning the whole railway system of the maritime provinces. Influence will be brought to bear on the government, and it will be said, 'Well, you bought Gibson's line, why have you not a right to buy my line.' I can remember when our friends opposite were in power, Sir John Macdonald stating across the floor of the House, that they had virtually gridironed New Brunswick with roads; that they subsidized them until the country was covered with railways. We are now beginning to buy them up. I have no desire to deprive Nova Scotia and New Brunswick of their fair share of public money. I am quite willing they should look forward to successful development of any resources they have, through their country being opened up. At the same time I very much fear that a system of this kind will result in further expense and new bridges. My hon. friend from Rothesay in his speech mentioned two or three or four lines that were doing no work. Is it expected that we shall buy those lines also? Influence will be brought to bear upon the government, and they will be urged that they should take up those lines and rebuild them, and put them in proper shape. I am entirely opposed to doing that.

We have had a great many railways built in past years, like the Baie des Chaleurs and many other roads that should never have been built; that there was not a trade which would justify the construction, and they have been and are to-day, monuments of the grossest folly in some cases. I do not know whether this road is in that position or not. It may have done a large timber trade in the past. I daresay it has; but the timber trade there is getting pretty well cleaned out, and now there is little for the road to do, unless it is made a connecting link with some system that will secure freight, and in that way it may be made to earn something. I would very much prefer, in the face of our experience regarding government roads, that we should decline altogether to have anything to do with this road. I would rather see something given to help it out of its difficulty, and let the owners work it rather than we should endeavour to put it in running order. My hon. friend said it has cost about twenty-five thousand dollars a mile. If it was built sixteen years ago, I do not think it cost within ten thousand dollars a mile of that. We built about 125 miles in our district, and I can say after it was built, steel rails and all, the cost was only about sixteen thousand dollars a mile, so that this railway must run through a hilly country if it cost anything like twenty-five thousand dollars a mile. I observe that the company received $350,000 from the Dominion towards its construction and $400,000 from the province, and when you deduct those amounts, and give credit for the amount of money the road must have earned, which would be more than running expenses, I have no doubt that the party that is selling it is getting a good portion, if not all, of the money they have put into it. They are getting $800,000 out of it, after getting the $750,000 or $850,000 to help build it. I do not know how Mr. Schreiber, as chief engineer, formed his opinion in regard to the value of the road. I have not seen his figures or estimates, and I do not know what value he puts upon the wooden bridges. I should like to know that, and also the value he places upon the iron. He says it can be repaired for about a thousand dollars a mile. It is amazing to me, if a bridge sixteen years old can be strengthened so that it will carry the engines of the day, for a thousand dollars a mile. There must be very few bridges on it. My hon. friend said something with regard to the government ownership of roads. I have no confidence whatever in the government being able to run a railway as cheaply as a private company. I think we have experience in all lines of public expenditure, that where the government is called upon to go into the construction of any public works, a railway or a building, as a rule these things cost the government, I do not care who is in power, from twenty-five to thirty per cent more than it would cost the individual. That is about the average. Then with regard to the government operating a road, what is the secret about the Intercolonial Railway? The secret about the Intercolonial Railway is that the employees have virtually taken the government by the throat. They have formed combinations. They have stipulated conditions upon which they work. They have made their own terms for their own services.

The telegraph operators have a combination there. They made a demand upon the government, and they increased the rates beyond those paid on any road in Canada, and they have that combination to-day. A telegraph operator cannot go on the Intercolonial Railway and look for a job, and the government cannot put him there. The Minister of Railways cannot employ a man without the consent of the association. That is the condition into which things have drifted. As long as you allow the operators of the road, the station men and so on, to control the arrangement and operation of the line, to dictate their hours, dictate their wages and everything connected with the road, you will never be able to run a railway and make it pay. The government have lost control. I know it is pretty hard for a government to fight combinations of that kind. They would naturally say to themselves, 'We found things in the condition in which they are when we came in. If we lower men's wages there is a general cry and they will turn out and vote against us and our friends.' I know of a man who was in charge of the Intercolonial Railway, a man who made a determined effort to try to run it on business principles, and what was his confession, after making an honest, determined effort? If it had not been for political influence he could have done it. If it had not been that he was dictated to and that he must do something for this friend and that friend of the party in power, he could have made the line a profitable business. But he could not persist in the lines that he had laid down. He had to resign, and the result is that on the Intercolonial Railway to-day I venture to say there are more men employed to the mile than on any other road in Canada.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, or in the United States either.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I daresay there are. I am not blaming one party more than another with regard to the matter. The two parties, to use a vulgar phrase, may touch thumbs with regard to the responsibility in the matter, because I criticised for years the expenditure of my

hon. friends opposite. Although I believe a very honest and determined effort was made to turn over a new leaf, after all the influence of members through whose constituencies the road ran, was brought to bear, and they demanded that something should be done; some friends must get work; some sewers must be dug to give them employment, and by that method the road has developed into what it is to-day, sixty millions sunk, and it has run half a million behind in earning its expenses. I point that out to show that it is utterly hopeless for a government to undertake the operation of a railway. With regard to the contract that has been made for the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific, I am glad to know that while a large portion of that road, from Moncton to Winnipeg, has to be built and owned by the country, before there is a rail laid down on it it is leased to a party that has to operate it and pay as a rental 3 per cent on the money invested. It is far better to operate it as an independent line, in the face of the expenses that we have paid in the past for operation by the government. I hope the government will make an effort to get rid of the Intercolonial Railway. I remember on one occasion travelling with the general manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Mr. Van Horne, in his private car. He stated to me some years ago, before they built the St. John branch, that if the government of Canada would give the Canadian Pacific Railway control of the Intercolonial Railway, he would not hesitate to say that they would pay $1,000,000 a year and operate it in the interests of the country and give just as good a service as the country was getting under the operation by the government. How much better that would be?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And without raising the rates.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Yes, and give just as good a service. I hope the Intercolonial Railway will not be further extended. There has been some talk of the government extending the Intercolonial Railway by buying out the Canada Atlantic. I hope the government will not entertain such a proposition. I should like to see them dispose of the Intercolonial Railway and that just as soon as possible, if there has to be a sacrifice made. The United States had a little experience in building roads. They built the Central Pacific or Southern Pacific, and I know that the country lost over thirty millions. They never made it pay. The United States government will never put another dollar in a railway, and I believe the United States to be the shrewdest nation on the face of the earth. They do not own a road now, or attempt to own any road. So far as this Bill is concerned, I express my regret that the government have bought the road. I suppose that they were coaxed or goaded into it to make some arrangement with the creditors, and it was taken over. I am afraid that is the initiation of a scheme that will force them to make other purchases. We will find people hammering at the doors of parliament, urging that roads which have been subsidized years ago should be taken over and made part of the Intercolonial Railway. Eventually we may own the whole railway system of the maritime provinces, and we will have a load on our hands which will take from the public treasury a large sum, and parliament will have to provide for a large deficit on them year after year. I am afraid that will be the result if this is to be continued. I do not know why the government decided to buy this road. Possibly there may have been some reason. I have heard no reason except what the Secretary of State says to-day, but I fear it will result in more purchases of that kind, and we will keep adding to our government railways. When the present government go out of power, if they ever do, the other party will come in and if they are urged to take over branch lines, what will be the argument? They will say 'When the Reformers were in power, they bought the Canada Eastern Railway in New Brunswick, a road 136 miles long. That is a precedent. Now we want you to buy these other roads.' The result will be that, whatever party is in power, the people will keep urging them to buy unprofitable lines, and add them to the Intercolonial Railway. I have had such an experience in criticising for many years the management of the Intercolonial Railway, in the House of Commons, that I finally gave it up. I made up my mind it was of very little use. Year after year we had exposures of jobbery. I remember in one case, it was declared that in some sections they were supplying flat cars to run loaded wagons on, and box-cars to take a team in, and running them to St. John, and running them to Halifax, and after the load was taken off and sold, the empty wagon was put on the flat car, and the team and the other stuff was put in the box-car and the whole carried back, perhaps forty, fifty or a hundred miles. I remember that circumstance being proven before a committee of the House. I do not know whether such things are done now or not. I cannot tell, but I have had such a sickening of government ownership of railways that I earnestly hope that we will get rid of all we have got, and I will be glad to see not another foot added to what we possess.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

On clause 3,

There may be paid for the said railway and undertaking and other property as aforesaid, out of any unappropriated moneys forming part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, the sum of eight hundred thousand dollars.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is the government bound by that clause to pay that sum? It says may.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It is only permissive.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I hope the government will not avail itself of those powers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If we can get it cheaper, we shall do so.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BAKER, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (172) An Act to amend the Customs Tariff, 1897. He said: The items are in a general way a reduction of the tariff of 1897. For instance, item 22, 'paraffine wax candles, 25 per cent ad valorem,' was 30 per cent. Item 323 is amended by adding the following proviso:

Provided that for duty purposes the minimum value of an open buggy shall be $40, and the minimum value of a covered buggy shall be $50.

The Act of 1897 imposed an ad valorem duty of 35 per cent. That is changed to a specific duty. It appears that very cheap buggies came in from the United States and were entered at a very low figure. Clause 9 removes the duty from artificial teeth after April next. It appears large quantities are in stock in various establishments in Canada, and if they were put on the free list the importers would lose a large sum. One change, therefore, will not take place until April next. Clause 15 adds to prohibited goods the following: 'Stallions and mares of less value than fifty dollars each.' It appears in the Northwest very poor stock comes in from the United States, and the intention is to exclude them. The evil may exist in other parts of Canada, but it prevails to a greater extent in the Northwest than anywhere else.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was then read the third time, under suspension of the rule, and passed.

ALIENS LAW AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (162) An Act respecting Aliens. He said: This Bill provides a penalty for making false representations as to the condition of the labour market in Canada in countries outside of the Dominion. We can go into details of this Bill when it is referred to Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I see that the hon. member from Toronto is on his feet. Has he an amendment to move?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—No, I thought the hon. gentleman was going to raise a point of order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Not yet.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be referred to a Committee of the Whole House to-morrow.

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND—I appeal to the government to drop this Bill. It is a highly contentious measure. I hope they will postpone it until another session.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until 11 a.m. to-morrow.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Wednesday, August 10, 1904.

First Sitting.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

TRANSLATION OF DEBATES.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to ask the hon. Secretary of State if anything is to be done, regarding the translation into French of the Senate Debates? We are in the dying hours of the session, and I think it is time to lay my complaint before the hon. ministers. We have had no French translation of the 'Debates' since the month of April. If we are to be supplied with the French copies of the 'Debates' two or three months after the session, the expense of the translation is useless. We should get it from day to day, as soon as it is translated, and printed. The printer has a lot of the manuscript translation before him. It is kept there, and nothing is done with it. If the hon. Secretary of State occupies his present seat next session he should apply the proper remedy so that we may have the 'Debates' furnished us from day to day.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a long-standing grievance, and dates back to confederation. I have never been on that committee, and I really do not know what the trouble is. There may be some reason at the Bureau, because, as the hon. gentleman knows, the Bureau is quite unequal to the labour it has to perform, and cannot keep it up with anything like fair rapidity. We are now authorizing an addition to it, and it is quite evident that we shall have to send out a great deal of the work. This, however, is a class of work we could not very well send to other offices. It has to be done in the Bureau. I understand that the translation and printing have been completed up to the end of June. I think it is in a very much better position than it was in former years, so that there is some improvement. We hope the improvement will be greater another year, and that the service will be more satisfactory in the future, than it has been in the past.

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We have had only one or two copies of the unrevised edition this year. If the Bureau could be enlarged——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are enlarging it now. The work of extending it is going on.

ALIENS BILL.

SECOND READING.

The Order of the Day being called, second reading (Bill 162) An Act respecting Aliens.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be referred to Committee of the Whole House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—As the hon. gentleman did not give any explanation on the second reading. I would ask him to explain the Bill as it stands now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Bill has been subjected to very many important changes—that is the Bill as it will be submitted to the committee. It has been criticised a good deal, and one has to acknowledge that there is considerable opposition to it; but I think all the objectionable clauses have been removed. It has been practically so amended that it will be accepted by this Chamber without hesitation; clause 4, which was very stringent and far-reaching, has been practically struck out. The amendment which I shall propose simply meets a case which attracted a good deal of attention recently in Montreal, where an Italian agent represented to some of his fellow-countrymen in Italy that there was a great opening in Canada, and by giving him a commission they were sure to receive employment. The consequence was 4,000 or 5,000 Italians were stranded in Montreal for some time. The amended clause will meet a case of that kind. It has nothing to do with legitimate engagement of labour. If any employer of labour chooses to make arrangements to bring persons from abroad he can do so, supposing his object is honest and fair, and he really means to give them employment—that he is not acting for the purpose of extorting money from the people. That will be the whole affect of clause 4.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—The hon. gentleman wants to amend this clause?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What will be the effect of the clause as amended?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman asked me, as I was unable to explain the Bill at the second reading, to give an explanation of it now, as we hope it will pass, and therefore I am not reading the Bill as originally printed, but as I hope it will be amended in committee. The very sweeping clause in the Bill as it is now, will be reduced to making provision for such a case as occurred recently in Montreal, where an Italian had induced a large number of his countrymen to come to Canada on the assurance that he would get them employment on payment of a fee. It is only cases of that kind that will come under clause 4. The Bill in its original phraseology and spirit had a great many objectionable clauses in it and those have all been removed.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is that the only clause to be amended ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The most important change in clause 5, is that instead of the minister being clothed with authority to do certain things, it is reserved for the Governor in Council. It is thought it would be safer.

Mr. BAKER—The explanation by the hon. Secretary of State, it appears to me, makes the Bill more odious and objectionable than it was in its original form, for we find it is aimed at a special case. Is the parliament of Canada legislating for a special case ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I only mentioned that as an illustration.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—The principle of the Bill is so vicious, the construction of it is so bungling, and the affect of it may be so disastrous, that I move that the House do not now resolve itself into a Committee on the Whole on the Bill, but that it go into Committee of the Whole this day six months.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Would it not be better to await the result of the committee's work and, on the third reading, the hon. gentleman will have the same opportunity that offers now to move his amendment ?

Hon. Mr. BAKER—The objection to that is that the Bill has been introdcced in the very dying hours of the Senate. Why should the Senate be called upon at such a time to consider a Bill of such importance, and far-reaching effect ? It is perfectly monstrous that any government should delay legislation of this kind to the last moment of the session. It is an open secret that the government is at sixes and sevens on this very Bill, and the spectacle is not one to be contemplated with satisfaction by any man whether he is on the right or left of the Speaker. There is no right or left, it is true, in the Senate, but the Bill is so objectionable that even on the ground of the lateness of its introduction it ought not to be entertained in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I admit this is most important legislation which has come late in the session in both Houses, but the reason given by the hon. gentleman to reject the Bill in toto, is not absolutely satisfactory to my mind. He takes clause 4, as proposed to be amended by the Secretary of State, and says that his objection is to the fact that it covers a special case. If he will read the amendment to clause 4, he will find it is not made to cover a special case. It has sprung from facts in a special case in Montreal, but it is general in its application, and absolutely innocuous as to its effect. It will be an offence for any one to attract aliens to this country in order to defraud them. It is so absolutely mild and insignificant, that if the hon. gentleman had said he opposed the Bill because this clause is meaningless I could understand his argument. For my part, it does not go far enough, but I would be satisfied if the other clauses are not harder to tackle than this one, to pass the Bill this session, and see how far we can amend it in following sessions. But there is a clause of far more importance than that—clause 5. I do not know that the hon. Secretary of State has given full explanations of the amendments which he intends to move. We may strike considerable difficulty owing to the importance of clause 5, the newness of the legislation and the considerable amendments which are being suggested by certain members of this body and which will be submitted in committee. I agree with the hon. gentleman from Killarney (Hon. Mr. Young) that we could, as we have nothing else before us, and are waiting for the Supply Bill, do our best to see how far we can legislate towards bringing out of this committee a satisfactory Bill on certain of its clauses. There are very important clauses in this Bill some of which are absolutely unobjectionable, clauses which were unanimously accepted by the House of Commons and which will be found equally satisfactory to this House; so as we have still an hour and one-quarter at our disposal to tackle that heavy piece of legislation, we should go as far as the time would permit us.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—I submit that the explanation of my hon. friend makes confusion worse confounded, and adds another reason why we should cry a halt. To admit that the legislation, cannot be justified, but begging the Senate to pass it in the meantime in order that it may be amended and licked into shape at some future time——

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—The proposition is so objectionable, that I do not see how it can receive the support of the independent members of the Senate. We are all perfectly independent here; we have no occasion to pander to the prejudices of any class of subjects in the Dominion. I say the Bill is so objectionable that it would be wise and better, and more consistent with the dignity of the Senate if the consideration of it were stopped at this very point. Having stated my opinion of the Bill however, I am perfectly ready to withdraw the motion with the permission of the Senate, and allow the government to blunder on with their legislation.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The objection taken by my hon. friend to referring the Bill to Committee of the Whole, attacks the Bill itself in its present form.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—We are discussing the principle.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is the proper motion to make. We cannot accept the amendments that we do not understand. The Bill is not in a good form to-day; it may be put in a good form in committee, but as the Bill stands now, and my hon. friend's motion is directed against the Bill as it stands now, it is very objectionable. Clause 4, provides:

4. Every person who does, in Canada, anything for the purpose of causing or procuring the publication or circulation by advertisement or otherwise, in a country outside of Canada, of false representations as to the opportunities of employment in Canada, or as to the state of the labour market in Canada, intended or adapted to encourage or induce the immigration into Canada, of persons resident in that country, or who does anything in Canada for the purpose of causing or procuring the communication to any resident in such country of any such false representations, shall, if such false representations are thereafter so published, circulated or communicated, be guilty of an offence, and liable, on summary conviction before two justices of the peace, to a penalty of not more than one thousand dollars and not less than fifty dollars for each and every such offence.

I understand that the government to-day is willing to withdraw the clause and substitute another for it, but that has not been proposed yet, and as the Bill comes to-day before the committee, the hon. gentleman from Bedford (Mr. Baker) is perfectly justified in asking for a division of the Senate on the Bill containing that and other clauses. The hon. Secretary of State said he intended, when the next clause was under discussion, to substitute the authority of the Governor in Council for the authority for the minister alone. Clause 5, is as follows:—

5. In every case where the parliament of Canada since the first day of January, 1903, has authorized or hereafter authorizes the construction at the public expense, or has aided or hereafter aids by gift of money or land or by loan or guarantee or other valuable consideration, the construction of a railway or any portion thereof, it shall be unlawful to let or sublet the work of such construction to any alien, or to any corporation not incorporated under legislation of Canada or of a province, and the majority of the directors and the majority in value of the shareholders of which, are not British subjects, or to employ or suffer to be employed on said work any person who is not at the time of his employment a British subject, or a person bona fide domiciled in Canada and so domiciled for at least six months continuously immediately prior to such employment, or who is not certified to by the Department of the Interior as having come to Canada as an immigrant intending in good faith to settle in Canada, unless the minister is satisfied that there is not available sufficient unemployed Canadian labour to enable the work to be properly prosecuted and performed within the time limited by law or by contract, or there is some other reason deemed by the Governor in Council sufficient in the public interest; in which case, and in so far as the minister may deem it necessary, and for any particular portion or portions of the work, and for any specified period or periods, and as to any particular number of persons, the minister may consent in writing to the employment of persons whose employment would otherwise be unlawful. The term 'construction' shall include work of surveys and all other work preliminary or incidental to actual construction. For every wilful violation of any of the provisions of this section the person, partnership, company or corporation guilty thereof shall be liable to the same penalties as are provided in respect of a violation of any of the provisions of section 1 of said Act of 1897 as amended, which penalties shall be recoverable in the same manner as are the penalties mentioned in the said section 1 as amended.

The change promised by the hon. Secretary of State is only on the question of the minister being replaced by the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There are some other minor changes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is the only change the hon. gentleman referred to.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The House is free to move other amendments.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes; and the minister is free to change his views as he pleases.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—With the consent of the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose so, but he probably got that consent beforehand.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Did the hon. gentleman give his consent?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No; before giving my consent I want to know what the amendments will be, and how the Bill will come out of committee. When it is reported from committee it will be time enough to say whether we shall approve or disapprove of the changes to be made in committee. I shall be free to take my position then. There are others who may have taken their position before. They have assembled in committee, and helped to bring the government out of the bad position in which they find themselves.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—All before three o'clock to-day?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not know. I suppose we are at liberty to discuss all those amendments. What I want to find out is this: the hon. Secretary of State mentioned only one change in that clause——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not want to detain the House; that is the reason.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Now we are told there are other changes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes; and in other clauses.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In fact, it is a new Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose the preamble will remain as it is, but even the title may be changed yet. It is a radical change in the Bill we are now asked to adopt, and the motion made by my hon. friend cannot touch that principle before we go into committee. His motion is directed against the principle of the Bill as presented to the House. If his motion is lost, then, when we go into committee, we may make what alterations we like, and at the third reading, if the Bill as reported from the committee, does not meet the wishes and views of the hon. gentleman, he can move the six months' hoist.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Hon. gentlemen will see that there are provisions in this Bill which are not controversial, provisions for the protection of the country, which it is important should be passed, and passed without delay. Take clause 7 and the following clauses. The law has been found to be defective, and not to give sufficient power to the government to protect the country from the introduction of the class of persons mentioned there. For the protection of the country, clauses 7, 8 and 9 are immediately pressing and urgent. Therefore, it will be seen there are provisions in the Bill which ought to be dealt with. As to the other provisions of the Bill, which are controversial, it is intended to suggest something which may be acceptable. If it is acceptable, well and good; if it is not, the House is open to express its opinion about the matter. Under the circumstances, I think we would be doing our duty by passing into committee and learning what the position of the Bill will be.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—This applies essentially to immigration. I want to know are not some of these matters provided for in the Immigration Act?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—They are not.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Are they entirely new?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—They are practically all new.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—We must not forget that the hon. senator who proposed the six months' hoist has asked leave to withdraw his motion. It would be better to comply with his request, and we can discuss the Bill in committee. Just now we are in a very peculiar position. I move that the hon. gentleman be allowed to withdraw his motion.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Is it not proper to discuss the principle of the Bill now ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I think it is. There will be no other opportunity offered. I think this is a most extraordinary Bill. Considering the occasion and the subject, no such important legislation has ever been proposed here before at such a stage of the session. Here is the Senate thinned out to a remarkable extent. I admit that those who remain are all wise men except myself, but at the same time it is not treating the House fairly. The hour for prorogation is fixed, and we cannot carry on this debate longer than up to three o'clock. I object entirely to this word alien. Acts of this kind are not to be approved of under any circumstances. Some of the clauses are of a beneficial character, but they belong to immigration, and should not be put into an Act of this kind merely to give it a colouring and pretense to carry it through. Speaking of Alien Acts I consider this an un-British measure. The British parliament has never, except in the gravest extremity, passed an Alien Act. It had always been a prerogative of the sovereign, but up to the time of the French revolution it was seldom acted upon by parliament. Then it became necessary to have an Alien Act. Why ? Because there were 7.000 or 8.000 emigrés in England. The French Republic wanted to be recognized, and what was the answer of Lord Grenville ? He said if the representative of the republic was there as the ambassador of His Most Christian Majesty, he would be willing to receive him, but as the representative of a republic he could not. Talleyrand was sent away on very short notice a few days afterwards when King Louis was killed. When Napoleon, after the peace of Amiens, demanded that the English people should send away from their country those who were there as he said, plotting against the government, what was the answer of the British government, and it was endorsed by the whole country? They said: So long as those people conducted themselves properly, they would receive the protection of English law. I mention that to show how seldom, and only in what dire extremity, such laws are made by the British parliament. We have no time to study the effect of this measure. Who on earth can study it as it goes along ? The lawyers, who are sharp of intellect and trained to such work, may be able to grasp the question, but I confess it is more than I can do. The Bill as put forth in the first place, was a great bid for a certain vote. It was intended to take in one swoop the whole labour vote of the country. Never before was there such excitement started in a moment as when the terms of this Bill were known. The people all over the country, by a consensus of opinion demanded a change, and I think it was wise, so far as the party was concerned, and in that respect only, that the alien trouble could be remedied. I do not see anything in this Bill that we could not do just as well without. I do not see anything that is sufficiently attractive to be voted for except those clauses which provide what is already in the Immigration Act. I do not care how much the Bill may be amended, it would be better to drop it in the interest of the country and every one concerned, even in the interest of the political party at present in power. I think that would be the best course to take in the public interest. The Bill is not in accordance with British law.

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND—Before the matter is dealt with, I should like to say that while I might not be inclined to move the six months' hoist, I would have renewed the appeal, as I indicated last night in one sentence, that the government should postpone this Bill for another session, for the reason that it has come too late and there is not time to give full consideration to the important questions dealt with in the Bill. It may be that the amendments made in the Bill as it is proposed to us now have removed in a very large measure the objections made to it. We will consider these clauses when we get into committee. It may be that they are perfect, but they suffer from the fact that they were in very bad company when they first made their appearance, and for my part I once more respectfully appeal to the government: on the ground that at this stage of the session, this matter cannot be considered in a careful and systematic manner as becomes deliberations of this House, and it would not be wise on the part of the government to force this measure through this year.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I must say that I am quite in accord with the sentiment expressed by the hon. gentleman from Kennebec (Hon. Sir George Drummond) that it is too late for us to deal with a measure of this kind. There has not been a session since I have had the honour of a seat in this House in which important Bills have not come up as now, during the last stage of the session, and I think it is the duty of hon. senators to take a stand against such a system as has been prevailing here for many years past of having the most important Bills introduced in the Senate in the last days of the session, when a majority of the senators have departed for their homes. It would become a fixed principle if we do not take a strong stand against it. Many Bills have come to this House late in the session which we should have had during the earlier days. I think this is a proper occasion on which to take a stand against this practice. This is certainly an important Bill. It would appear to me as if the fourth clause of the Bill was intended to strike at the government itself, or at their agents abroad, for the statements that they are sending broadcast through different countries to induce immigrants to come to this country. The hon. senator from Toronto pointed out that clause 15 of the Bill contained a provision which he thought would be beneficial to the country It would certainly be a very bad measure indeed if he could not find one clause that would meet with the approval of the country. I congratulate the hon. member on the strong reasons he has advanced to induce us to support a Bill containing quite a number of clauses—namely, because there was one clause in it which might meet with general approval. It is a somewhat singular coincidence that an Aliens Bill was introduced in the imperial parliament during the present session. It was debated there for several days, and at the conclusion of the debate, extending over seven days, the Attorney General said the government would withdraw the Bill, because at the rate of progress it was making it would take 515 days to pass the imperial House of Commons. If a Bill of that nature was likely to take such a length of time in the imperial House of Commons, a Bill of a similar title introduced in this House should I think be expected to take a little more time and attention from the honourable senators than we can give it in the closing hours of parliament, when we are within just three hours of prorogation.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—It may be three days.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.) It is possible, as the hon. gentleman says, that it may be three days ; but judging by the small attendance here I doubt very much whether we can extend the time as long as that. It is proposed that certain amendments shall be made in the Bill. We know nothing of what these amendments may be, but I am opposed to the Bill as it is presented to the House, and I hold that it is the proper time to make the motion that this Bill be read this day six months, and therefore I shall object to the withdrawal of the motion made by the hon. gentleman from Missisquoi.

The amendment was lost on division.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

In the committee on clause 2.

2. Section 3 of the said Act of 1897, as said section is enacted by section 1 of chapter 13 of the statutes of 1901, is amended by striking out the word 'knowingly,' and by inserting after the word 'Canada' in the seventh line the words 'knowing or having reasonable grounds for believing that he was then an alien or foreigner.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This section strikes out the word 'knowingly' from section 3 of the Act of 1897.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I shall object to the word 'foreigner' there. You may be a British subject and a foreigner.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—This clause strikes out the word 'knowingly.' Whether he does it knowingly or not he will be prosecuted.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It was only to meet a case that was decided, where the evidence was perfectly clear, that a man had every reason to believe he was dealing with an alien in violation of the Alien Labour Act, and the man said that it was not proven that he knew it, and these words are added, —' or having reasonable ground for believing that he was then an alien or foreigner.'

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND—I think the change would make it a little more stringent in a prosecution at law.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—No; less stringent.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It is difficult to prove that the person actually knew, and in all cases of that kind it is open to the prosecution to prove, that the party against whom the complaint has been made had reasonable grounds for knowing.

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND—And should have known.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Is implied to have known, and the object of the clause is to substitute for the word knowingly, 'knowing or having reasonable grounds for believing that he was then a foreigner.'

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND—It seems to me the word knowingly in the original Act of 1897 is quite tight enough, and I should not like to be a party to any measure which would make it stronger. I therefore oppose this clause in the modified Bill, because I think it is quite enough to enact that if he does it knowingly he is liable.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I move that the word 'foreigner' be struck out.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I move that the word 'alien' be struck out and the word 'foreigner' left in.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The word 'alien' and the word 'foreigner' mean exactly the same thing.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Then why repeat the word?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I do not think they would mean exactly the same according to the way English people understand it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is there a difference between the two?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No; I think not.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Then the motion will carry?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto).

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Which will the hon. gentleman strike out?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The words 'or foreigner.'

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND—I move that the whole clause be struck out.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Section 3 of the Act of 1897——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That has been amended by chapter 13 of the Act of 1901. That is the controlling Act now. We are amending that Act by striking out the word 'knowingly.' A person may assist without knowing that he is assisting. He may not be guilty of the fault you are imputing to him if you strike out the word 'knowingly.' You replace that expression in the 8th line by the words 'knowing or having reasonable grounds for believing.' I do not find that this amendment will read properly. It means nothing at all the way it is stated.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then it is harmless.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the amendment is carried it will read thus:

> For every violation of any of the provisions of section 1 of this section, the person, partnership, company or corporation violating it by knowingly assisting in encouraging or soliciting immigration or importation of any alien or foreigner into Canada to perform service of any kind under contract or agreement expressed or implied, parole or special with such alien or foreigner previous to his becoming a resident or a citizen of Canada, &c.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Knowing or having reasonable grounds to believe.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But what does 'knowing' apply to? Not to the guilty party, and I think the hon. minister wants to reach the guilty party. It does not apply at all.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no objection to allow that word to remain in, if that is going to carry the clause.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is not much use in discussing the measure if there is no fixed policy.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The object is to get through with the Bill. If the hon. gentleman has any objection to striking out the word, I have no objection to allow it to remain in.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The question has not yet been put on the amendment which was moved by the hon. gentleman from Montarville to strike out the words 'or foreigner', and before the question is put, I propose to call attention to this. We propose to insert certain words in section 1 of the Act of 1901. When we come to look at section 1 of that Act we find the words 'encouraging or soliciting the immigration or importation of any alien or foreigner into Canada.' The words 'alien or foreigner' are used there. Later on, it is proposed to insert these words 'such alien or foreigner' so that you admit the words 'or foreigner' in the middle place, and you leave them out in the other two places, and you have to amend the original Act in the two places, if you propose to amend this Bill.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—I do not like to be uncharitable, but the observation of the hon. gentleman from Halifax makes it quite apparent that this Bill was carelessly constructed, if such a word may be applied to any instrument that finds its way to light, without any care or diligence whatever. The hon. Secretary of State has very frankly confessed that the object was to get the Bill through, and it was quite apparent the object of whoever drafted it, was not to draft a Bill that would meet the approval of any body of legislators who gave an intelligent and intelligible consideration to what might be brought before them. The Bill as it is, is really a thing, if I may use a slang phrase, 'that no fellow can understand.'

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman is throwing a slur on the Commons whose child we have received and are now examining. It is the joint effort of the brains of the House of Commons which has produced this Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is not an answer. I should like the hon. gentleman to explain to us the meaning of the clause.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I understand the government accepted the amendment suggested by the hon. gentleman from Montarville, and also consented to insert the word 'knowingly.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The word 'foreigner' is repeated in other parts of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It might be struck out in the same way.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I withdraw the proposition. I have no objection to stand by the other proposition that the word 'knowingly' remain there.

The committee divided on the amendment to strike out the word 'foreigner' which was lost on the following division.

Yeas, 4. Nays, 11.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon leader of the Senate accepts the suggestion to strike out the word 'knowingly.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the clause is to remain I have no objection. I do it to expedite the business before the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I would not like to take the hon. member by surprise and say that we accept his decision.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was simply making a concession.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think that the clause, taking out the word 'knowingly', means nothing at all by the addition of those last words, 'Knowing or having a reasonable ground for believing.' Does that apply to the guilty party who is an alien? Must a man have reasonable ground to believe that he is a so and so, or does it apply to somebody else, to the prosecutor for example, one who may lay a complaint, if he has reason to believe that the guilty party was then an alien or foreigner? To what does that apply?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—A person is charged with having imported or contributed to importing an alien, and with the word 'knowingly' in the section, it has been held by a judge that, as it was not proved that he actually saw the certificate of naturalization of the party, although he knew or was supposed to know that he was an alien, because he was living in the state, to the knowledge of the accused, the word knowingly as contained in the Act had not been complied with. The proof was not sufficient to meet all the provisions of the Act, and the amendment is merely for the purpose of substituting for the word 'knowingly' or in other words, instead of compelling the prosecution to prove actual knowledge, to make it sufficient that the prosecution prove that he had reason to know that he was an alien.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—The contention of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona is, that as the clause has been amended that the words knowing or having reasonable grounds for believing that he was an alien, applied not to the alien himself, but to the person making the charge. I think the clause should be written out so that there would be an opportunity for every person to understand it.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I think a word should be added there. A person might do things which would look very suspicious, and he might do things that were wrong, but not knowingly. You cannot sin unless you know you are sinning, and at the same time he might do things which he would not do if he knew he were committing a wrong. So that you are opening the door there for a judge to think that the man knew he was guilty anyway. I do not think we should strike out the word 'knowingly.' A man is considered innocent until he is proven guilty.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The proposition is, shall this clause be adopted. The hon. Secretary of State has just stated that he was ready to drop the word 'knowingly' if we allowed the clause to pass. I move that section two be amended by striking out all the words in the 1st, 2nd and 3rd lines to the word 'knowingly'. The Act of 1897 has been amended by the Act of 1901, so that it is the Act of 1901 that is now in force, and when you propose to amend the Act of 1900 as amended by the Act of 1901, you look at the statutes and you find that 'Canada' is in the eighth line of clause 3.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the better way is to strike out the clause altogether. If we leave the word 'knowingly' in the clause, then there is no object in keeping in the other words which are proposed to be substituted. Better strike out the whole clause.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—We are told that an interpretation adverse to the decision of my hon. friend has been given by some court of competent jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—After having spoken to the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, I amend my motion and will substitute the word 'fifth' for the word 'eighth' so that it will come after the word 'Canada' in the fifth line.

The CHAIRMAN—The proposition is that all the words after the word 'amended' in the eleventh line, be struck out and further that the word 'seventh' be replaced by the word 'fifth.'

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I suggest that the clause be withdrawn, as there is a misunderstanding about it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that the clause be struck out.

The motion was agreed to.

On clause 3,

3. Section 6 of the said Act of 1897, as amended by section 3 of chapter 13 of the statutes of 1901, is hereby repealed.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—That is repealing the provision respecting the Attorney General taking proceedings for deporting; the other provisions of the Act, later on, supersede that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It is replaced by cause 6.

On clause 4,

4. Every person who does, in Canada, anything for the purpose of causing or procuring the publication or circulation by advertisement or otherwise, in a country outside of Canada, of false representations as to the opportunities of employment in Canada, or as to the state of the labour market in Canada, intended or adapted to encourage or induce the immigration into Canada, of persons resident in that country, or who does anything in Canada for the purpose of causing or procuring the communication to any resident of such country of any such false representations, shall, if such false representations are thereafter so published, circulated or communicated, be guilty of an offence, and liable, on summary conviction before two justices of the peace, to a penalty of not more than one thousand dollars and not less than fifty dollars for each and every such offence.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I beg to move that this clause be amended so as to read as follows:

Every person who by false representations does in Canada anything for the purpose of inducing another person to come to Canada with intent to defraud such person shall be guilty of an offence, &c.'

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—That is quite the contrary of this.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I think no person will object to that. In other words a person cannot induce any alien to come in order to rob him.

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND—I think the clause was intended to mean a great deal more than that. Not only should it deal with the case of a man who, by false representations, induces another man to come with intention to defraud, but it should deal with people who, by false representations, induce people to come to Canada or prevent people from coming to Canada, and that is my view of the situation. I would move some amendment to that, adopting the hon. gentleman's amendment as a substantial improvement. I would add 'to deter or to discourage immigration into Canada of any person by false representation.'

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—That is right.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The two propositions are separate ones. I suggest that my amendment be introduced, and when that is done we will deal with the one proposed by the hon. gentleman from Kennebec.

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND—I should like to ask whether the qualification 'with intent to defraud' would not impose great practical legal difficulties in the way of conviction? I suppose it would, but it is most proper.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am not quite satisfied with the limited extent of this clause. In order to reach the party who makes the false representation, it must be established, and I agree with the hon. gentleman from Montreal, who made that same remark, that it was with intent to defraud that party, because it seems to me the false representation should be sufficient. If you induce a party, by making false representations, to come into Canada, you may qualify the false representations if you want to, but besides the false representations, the meaning of which we could settle, if you add, 'with intent to defraud the party,' it seems to me we are undertaking a very large contract. It is ugly enough and injurious enough to induce that party into Canada on false representations. You might imagine a case where the agent in Italy, or on the continent, might make the false representations, and not be within this country or within the reach of the law at all.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I do not believe the hon. gentleman from Toronto is serious in this amendment. What is there in this which the hon. gentleman wants to strike out which will not be approved by everybody? What objection can there be to this clause? Is it not perfectly right? Why does the hon. gentleman strike it out? If it is done in Canada it will be punishable, but if it is done outside of Canada the party cannot be punished by our law. We have had such cases. I think it was said some time ago that this clause was to meet the case of the Italians in Montreal. It is not only the Italians; the papers have published other such instances very often. I could not cite cases now in which the employees of the government were accused of having made these false representations in England. You are striking the whole of this out, and providing that if, in Canada, such a thing is done, the party will be guilty. I think we should leave the clause as it is. I should like anybody to show me what harm there is in this clause as it is passed by the House of Commons. Those hon. gentlemen who have read the records will find that this question was thoroughly discussed in the House, and we had plenty of opportunity to see both sides of it.

Hon. Mr. THIBAUDEAU, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill, and asked leave to sit again.

The Senate adjourned until three p.m.

Second Sitting.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Routine proceedings.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (No. 171) An Act to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hon. gentlemen will probably have been aware of the subsidies proposed to be granted to a number of Railway companies by this Bill, the details having been already announced to the public. I may say that these subsidies are limited to companies whose rights to a subsidy are now expiring. Those that have expired for a year or more will not come within the provisions of this Bill; it is practically a revote. The mileage is very much smaller than usual, because the subsidies are limited to a few subsidiary roads.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What is the total?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not made it up, but the mileage of all these railways is less than 400 miles.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What is the amount?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The amount is $3,200 per mile, with the provision that if the cost exceeds $15,000 per mile, for such portion in excess of $15,000 they get a proportion in excess of $3,200 not to exceed $6,400 altogether.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—What is the total amount?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot tell the amount, but the total length is about 400 miles. The mileage of many of them is very short, running from a mile and one-half to eighty miles.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We are asked to swallow this Bill without knowing a word about it, although we are voting away subsidies to the amount of $2,560,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Perhaps a little more.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, not nearly as much as that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is what the subsidies would amount to at the rate of $6,400 per mile.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the maximum rate, which will only apply to small portions of them. The rate is $3,200 per mile.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Are there any railways included in that list that were not included in the subsidies voted last year?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Only those voted last year and not all of those, because any that have not been entitled to a subsidy within a year past are not included. In some cases the time is expiring in the month of August. They have been commenced, and it is only fair and reasonable that there should be an extension. In some cases the right will not expire until next year, and it gives them a couple of years longer; but any companies that became entitled to a subsidy and allowed the subsidy to expire over a year ago, are not included in this list.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Have any of these been partially paid?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think so. I move that the Bill be read the second time.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill passed through its final stages.

BOUNTIES ON LEAD ACT FURTHER AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (No. 175) An Act to amend an Act passed in the present session, and intituled an Act further to amend the Act providing for the payment of bounties on lead contained in lead bearing ore mined in Canada.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I thought we had already passed that Bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—So we had, but there was an error that was overlooked in this chamber. We could not go back to consider the Bill. It was intended to apply to the past, because some of the subsidies had been earned before the fiscal year terminated. The gentleman who drafted it thought it was wide enough, that the word 'any' would include what had already been done, but when I saw it last evening, I said, no I did not think it would, and I sent for the law clerk and told him he had better draft a short Bill and send it to the House of Commons because the Bill we had passed was not broad enough.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill passed through its final stages.

COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL—

COMMONS AMENDMENT CONCURRED IN.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved concurrence in the amendment to Bill (164) An Act to amend the Companies Act 1902.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What is the effect of the amendment ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the original Act of 1902, there was a clause authorizing the State Department to issue letters patent for all purposes except for the construction and organization of railways, telegraphs and telephones. It was not intended that a contractor should be debarred from taking a contract, for instance, to supply poles for a telegraph line, or to build a railway as a chartered company ; but the court has held that under the language of the statute, the word 'construction' is so wide that a company authorized to construct public works for instance—and a number of charters of that kind have been issued—would not have power under the Act to take a contract for the construction of a section of railway. In order to remove that, a member of the House of Commons introduced a Bill in the early part of the session to amend the Act in that particular, to make it clear that this word 'construction' had been interpreted by the courts too widely. The intention of the Act was that a company might be chartered to undertake the construction of a railway, a telephone or a telegraph line, but not to organize or hold a charter. However, we took up the Bill here and passed it, and it went to the House of Commons where exception was taken to it. As the Bill contained other clauses which were useful, it was thought better to drop this clause. The Bill contains, for instance, a provision in which the leader of the opposition took an interest last session and this session, that is where shares are less than $100 and the company desires to consolidate them, it can be done. There was an omission in the Act of 1902, a provision intended to authorize the directors of a company to accept bills of exchange and give promissory notes without obtaining the authority of the shareholders, or without the passage of a by-law. That Act had been a long time on the statutes, but through an accident it was omitted from the Act of 1902, and this Bill has a clause supplying that deficiency.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What is the clause struck out by the House of Commons ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The clause is as follows :

3. Nothing in this section, or in any charter or letters patent heretofore or hereafter issued, shall be deemed to prevent any company to which this Act applies from acting as a contractor in railway, telegraph or telephone construction.

A company chartered for construction purposes cannot take a contract for the construction of a railway, telegraph or telephone. That is the effect of it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—That is the effect of it as far as the Bill goes, but there is a considerable question as to the right contained in the provision of the law of granting those letters patent. This clause was more a declaratory clause than otherwise, because legal opinions are not unanimous on that point.

The motion was agreed to.

THE RULES OF THE HOUSE.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It will be within the recollection of hon. gentlemen that at the close of last session the hon. leader of the opposition suggested that in order to preserve better order and decorum than has prevailed, I am sorry to say during the session just closing, the Speaker should be vested with more authority than he possesses under the rules as they exist. The hon. gentleman suggested that a committee should be struck at the beginning of the present session for the purpose of framing rules of that character. Unfortunately, nothing was done. A few days before he left here, he made a similar suggestion, with the hope that at the beginning of next session, rules would be framed to confer on the Speaker power to preserve proper decorum in the Senate, practically powers possessed by the Speaker of the House of Commons. The House is separating without anything having been done. I would suggest that the Speaker himself, and other hon. gentlemen, might prepare suggestions and when we meet next year, a committee could be struck to take those suggestions into consideration and from them frame rules for our own observance.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I quite agree with the proposition of the hon. gentleman, and I hope members who are not present here to-day will be notified—at all events, that those who have occupied the position of Speaker in the past, Sir Alphonse Pelletier and Senator Miller—so that they may prepare whatever suggestions they may have to offer at the beginning of next session. That, however, is not very pressing now. What is more pressing is to adopt the Alien Labour Bill, and I think we should go immediately into committee to give the government a chance to pass that Bill, because if the hon. leader of the Senate loses time in making those propositions, he may not have his Bill passed.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Instead of rejoicing with the hon. gentleman, I regret that the Secretary of State considers it necessary that a committee should be appointed to frame rules, and I hope it will not be found necessary in the future, but that the rules which govern gentlemanly conduct in this House, and which have been found sufficient in the past, will be enforced in the future.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I propose to submit a resolution for the consideration of the House, expressing the desirability of appointing a select committee at the beginning of next session for the purpose of revising the rules and forms of procedure of the Senate, and that His Honour the Speaker be requested to examine the rules during the ensuing recess, with a view to offering suggestions to the committee to make alterations necessary to remove all doubts as to his power, and make it conform more to the power possessed by the Speaker of the House of Lords.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I object to such a motion without notice.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is nothing very serious in it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is because it is not serious that I object.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have thrown out the idea, and I trust hon. gentlemen who take an interest in the subject will deal with it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We must take it up in a formal way.

ALIEN LABOUR BILL.

BILL DEFEATED.

The House resumed, in Committee of the Whole, consideration of Bill (162) An Act respecting Aliens.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto) moved the adoption of clause 4, as amended.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—As amended, I suppose it reads :

> Every person who by false representations does in Canada anything for the purpose of inducing another person to come to Canada with intent to defraud such other person shall be guilty of an offence, &c.'

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I proposed to add, after the words 'found guilty of an offence,' the words 'willingly by false representations.'

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The man who makes false representations must do it willingly.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No ; the hon. gentleman may make a false representation in this House and not do it willingly.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It cannot be false unless a man knows it is false.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—'Knowingly' is the word I intended to use.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I should like the hon. gentleman to be reasonable about it. It is the way all our statutes are framed. It is exactly the expression in our Criminal Code. As the hour is getting late, I would ask the hon. gentleman to deal with this Bill so that it will become law.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We can if the hon. gentleman does not speak too long on the subject. It is proposed to give power to two justices of the peace to condemn a man to pay $1,000. That is too much for two justices of the peace ; they are not accustomed to such a sum ; they never go over $50. I think it is against the spirit of our law and traditional tribunals to give power to two justices of the peace to impose such a penalty. It should be before a superior court. If the hon. gentleman is willing to put it that way, I do not object to the clause.

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND—I prefer the amendment of which I gave notice at the morning sitting. It is to this effect : In line 22, after the word 'induces,' to insert the following : 'or to deter or discourage.' I am quite willing to take the clause with those words inserted.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Does the government accept the amendment of the hon. senator from Toronto ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I should like the hon. gentleman from Toronto to follow the usual course and explain why he proposed to strike out clause four and substitute his amendment. What objection has he to clause four in the Bill ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The object is to avoid contention. The clause as it was drawn before was objected to, and there was a difference of opinion on it in the Senate, and on that account it has been changed to the phraseology of the section put, in what was supposed to be a form that would be acceptable to all. It was thought that no one would in any way question the propriety of enacting that a man who induces a person by false representations to come to this country with the intent, when he came here, that he should defraud him should be punished by a severe fine. It was understood that that would be accepted by everybody.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—A gentleman in Kingston employs 500 or 600 men. About two years ago they struck. He sent by an agent to Germany or Scotland or some foreign country.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Order.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Well, say Germany. A number of men came out and went to work. The strikers got at them and induced some of them to stop work. Supposing they represented that this man's agent had made false representations to induce them to come to Canada, would the proprietor of the factory be liable to punishment for the act of his agent in a foreign country ? That ought to be considered. It would be too bad to punish him for false representations made by his agent, when his intention may have been to act in good faith. The fact is it would be better to strike out the clause altogether.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Knowing the excessive legal ability and talent of the hon. gentleman from Toronto, I am a little surprised that he should ask us to introduce in this Bill something which is already covered by the criminal law of the country. There is no need to say in this Bill that anybody who by fraudulent representation does a thing to defraud another shall be liable to a penalty ; he comes under the criminal code. He does an act which is governed by the common law of the country. I quite agree with the Minister of Labour in the provision contained in this clause, and with Sir George Drummond, that there should be an alternative—that nobody shall be allowed to induce people to come to Canada by false representations, and that nobody shall deter or discourage people from coming to Canada by false representations. You would then have a clause which would aim at the labour agitator who is working against the interests of the country, and prevent others from inducing people to come to the country under false representations.

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND—It is impossible to conceive that we can get through with this Bill. I therefore move that the committee do now rise.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Before that motion is put, I wish to say that I think it is a matter to be regretted, because there are some parts of the Bill that ought to be passed, and the minister in charge has stated his willingness to make such amendments to the provisions as contained in the printed Bill as would meet any reasonable objections; but it apparently is the determination of some hon. gentlemen to talk this Bill out. It has been charged that this Bill has been brought down at a late hour of the session. There is no question about that at all. The reason for that, I think, is quite apparent to most people, that this Bill is practically framed on the information received from Judge Winchester's report. The judge has been investigating the charges against the Grand Trunk Pacific of employing United States engineers, and the Bill could not be prepared until that information was received by the minister. However, it appears to be the determination to attack the Bill. I think the reasons for the delay in bringing the measure down are fair reasons, and it is a pity provisions that should be passed by the legislature should not be enacted this session. However, if the committee are determined to obstruct the Bill, there is no particular reason why we should sit here with the large gathering who have assembled to witness prorogation, as it is evident the Bill cannot be passed.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—Not being one of the talkers I think I can properly resent the imputation that has been cast upon members of the Senate——

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman can, yes.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—who find the time too short to discuss this Bill upon its merits. There is no responsibility thrown upon anybody but the government who neglected until the last moment to bring forward this measure. They alone are responsible for it, and I say that on behalf of those gentlemen who are seeking to discuss this measure upon its merits, I resent the imputation that they are doing it against time, to talk the Bill out.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I am not a member of the government, but I would say in reply on behalf of the gentlemen who are promoting this Bill, that they could not possibly have had the information which would enable them to frame the Bill correctly, until they had the report of Judge Winchester, and clause 5 is dealing almost entirely with the report of Judge Winchester or the fact that the Grand Trunk Pacific employed United States engineers. Investigation was demanded, and the report was only handed in a few days ago, and it was not possible to frame this clause until that report was presented.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The trouble is caused by the Bill being presented at this late hour. I have no doubt it is all right, and I have not a word to say against it, but at this period of the session it is impossible to take it up and deal intelligently with it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It is quite evident that even if we want to give a cursory attention to some clauses of the Bill that at this late hour we could not do ample justice to it, and if we are obliged to accept the motion of the hon. gentleman from Bedford, there is one remark I want to make, and it is that this is not an Alien Labour Bill, but it is what we have called an omnibus Bill. There were very many things in it, some of which no one could object to and others which should be amended, but there is one special clause that was drafted in view of the disclosures that were made before Judge Winchester, who conducted that inquiry on the employment of a number of strangers in connection with the Grand Trunk Pacific. This Bill will go over till we meet again in six months.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Perhaps before that, and I hope that the incidents that justified the government in acting on certain lines will not be intensified by what will happen during the ensuing six months, and that public opinion will not be thus educated as it has been by the hiring of such a number of United States men as were employed, according to what we have learned from the report of Judge Winchester, on the Grand Trunk Pacific. I hope that when we come back to this chamber next session we shall find that due justice has been done to Canadian labour and Canadian skill and Canadian professional men.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is all we want.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—The hon. gentleman who has just spoken says the Bill has come so late that we cannot examine it, and the House has just passed a Bill involving an expenditure of three or four millions without even seeing the Bill. It seems to me very strange after passing that Bill that we should say: 'We have not had time to study this measure.' The principle of the Bill has been discussed in all the papers in the whole country and in the House much better than that Bill which voted three or four millions without our knowing what it was, and I am surprised to see that the ministers of the government in this House have been ready to accept every amendment, and some of the members on the other side have been ready to endorse the proposition that the Bill be thrown out.

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND—I hope the committee will deal with my amendment.

The motion was agreed to, and the committee rose.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I think I have a right to move that this Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, and I make that motion.

The SPEAKER—No; I do not think so. The Bill is dead. Prorogation is to take place in seven minutes, and we cannot deal with the Bill. Notice of motion would have to be given.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the only way to revive that Bill would be that government give notice so as to put it back on the order paper.

The House adjourned during pleasure.

After some time the House resumed.

THE SUPPLY BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (No. 174) An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial years ending respectively, June 30, 1904, and June 30, 1905.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We have not the Bill and we are asked to swallow $77,000,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I hope the hon. gentleman will not ask that I shall enter into any detailed explanation of this measure. I shall have a very brief resumé. The main estimate is $55,017,238.84. The supplemental estimates brought down from time to time amount in one instance to $7,065,266.31 and in another instance to $397,450. That is, the amount of consolidated account sums up to $62,479,955.15. In addition to that, certain sums of money have been voted from time to time the estimates charged with the capital account. The total amount charged to capital account during the current year is $12,692,104 making a total of consolidated and capital account of $75,172,059.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not find the figures given by the hon. gentleman to be very correct. If we look at the Bill we find that the first item given $55,000,000 is in reality, counting the capital with it, $62,935,000, and supplementary estimates one of $21,000, another of $10,000, another of $1,865,639.30, and another one of $11,839,272.70. Another of $681,070.50, and the last one $397,450, giving a total of $77,749,879.36. That is what the Supply Bill is asking today.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The figures have been prepared by the official in the Finance Department who is charged with the preparation of the estimates, and therefore I am quite sure that the totals that I have given are absolutely correct. I have the details but we would not have time to go through them.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We have the details printed by the government themselves.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Notwithstanding what the hon. gentleman says, I think you will find on comparison that my figures are absolutely correct, because I have the details all here taken from the department.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is a simple matter of addition, and I too have the figures given by the government themselves, in the different supplementary estimates given to us, and I find it amounts to $77,749,000.

The Bill was read the second and third time and passed.

BILLS ASSENTED TO.

At four o'clock p.m., His Excellency the Governor General proceeded in state to the Senate Chamber, in the Parliament Buildings, and took his seat upon the Throne. The members of the Senate being assembled, His Excellency was pleased to command the attendance of the House of Commons, and that House being present, the following Bills were assented to, in His Majesty's name, by His Excellency the Governor General, viz :—

An Act to amend an Act passed in the present session and intituled : 'An Act to further amend the Act providing for the payment of bounties on lead contained in lead-bearing ores mined in Canada.'

To these Bills the Royal Assent was pronounced by the Clerk of the Senate in the following words :—

In His Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General doth assent to these Bills.

Then the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor General as follows:—

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY :

The Commons of Canada have voted the Supplies required to enable the government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following Bill :—

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1904, and the 30th June, 1905.

To which Bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

To this Bill the Clerk of the Senate, by His Excellency's command, did thereupon say :—

In His Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks His Loyal Subjects, accepts their benevolence and assents to this Bill.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the Fourth Session of the Ninth Parliament of the Dominion with the following

SPEECH

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I am glad to relieve you from further attendance in parliament after a session that has been protracted to a longer period than I had anticipated when addressing you on the eleventh of last March.

The terms and conditions upon which the National Transcontinental Railway will be built and operated having been finally adjusted and agreed upon, the work of construction will proceed as rapidly as the surveys of the line and the location of the road will permit.

The consensus of opinion expressed on the changes in the tariff affords very gratifying evidence that the alterations have met with general approval.

The arrangements made by my ministers with the government of Mexico for line of steamers between that republic and Canada on the Atlantic and Pacific will, I hope, add materially to our foreign trade.

The steadily increasing revenue has amply justified the liberal aid granted towards the improvement of our rivers and harbours and the construction of other public works materially benefiting the trade and commerce of our country.

The changes made in the Act respecting the Militia and Defence of Canada, providing for the increased strength and efficiency of the force will, I do not doubt, meet with general approval.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I thank you for the liberal provision you have made for the public service.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

My official connection with the Dominion of Canada is drawing to a close. Be assured I shall watch its future progress and development with deep and abiding interest and pray that the peace and prosperity with which this favoured land is now being blessed, may under God's providence long continue.

The Speaker of the Senate then said:

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

It is His Excellency the Governor General's will and pleasure, that this parliament be prorogued until Monday, the nineteenth day of September next, to be here holden, and this parliament is accordingly prorogued until the nineteenth day of September next.
