NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

DEBATE CONTINUED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Resuming adjourned debate on motion for second reading (Bill 72) an Act to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act, and the resolution of the Honourable Sir Mackenzie Bowell in amendment thereto.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I am sure it afforded us all a great deal of pleasure on Friday last to listen to the address which was delivered by my hon. friend from Queen's, N.B., and it afforded me pleasure at the adjournment of the House to congratulate him upon the energy and ability and eloquence with which he discussed the subject which is before the House. No doubt he gained a great deal of enthusiasm and inspiration from the magnitude of the theme and the importance of the subject he was discussing. A considerable portion of his opening remarks was devoted to the importance of the scheme and to the great benefits which might be expected to result to all portions of Canada from the construction of this great transcontinental railway. My hon. friend expressed himself as an ardent supporter of the policy of the present administration in this respect, and as a warm admirer of the leader of the government, to whom he gave credit for originating this great scheme. He devoted some remarks to the province of New Brunswick, and to the city of St. John. It is only natural that those of us who come from the province of New Brunswick should feel an interest in the city of St. John. It is the principal seaport, and also the great commercial and business centre of the province of New Brunswick, and it is only natural that from whatever portion of the province we come we should feel a deep interest in the welfare of St. John. My hon. friend called attention, apparently with a good deal of satisfaction, to the fact that the trade of the city and its winter export business had grown very considerably, especially during the six or eight years since the Liberal party came into power. He pointed to the fact that, during the last winter, six independent lines of steamships had been employed in carrying away from that port the products of the western section of our Dominion, and he, certainly, seemed to express great gratification that during the years of Liberal rule the trade of the port had grown to very satisfactory dimensions. He omitted to state that this large volume of business comes to the city of St. John via the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that the Canadian Pacific Railway was extended to the city of St. John as the result of the policy of the Conservative administration; that that policy had been the means of giving the Canadian Pacific Railway Company access to the city of St. John, and made that city the eastern terminus of its system. I was glad to note that this fact did not seem to detract from the pleasure which he expressed that the trade of the city of St. John had developed under the Liberal administration. He called attention also to the speech which was delivered by the eloquent leader of the prevent government in the House of Commons, I think it was as far back as 1896, in which he promised that as his party had come into power they would adopt a policy on the transportation question that would largely increase the share which the city of St. John should thereafter have in the export trade of this Dominion, and make it in a larger sense than it has heretofore been, one of the winter ports of this Dominion. He did not explain what had been done by the leader of the government in pursuance of that announcement. The omission may have been an oversight, and with the permission of the House I shall refer very briefly to it. I must do Sir Wilfrid Laurier the justice to say that he immediately set about to redeem the pledge which he gave at the time to the people of St. John. He called to his cabinet the late Minister of Railways and Canals, and it was, no doubt, upon his advice, the policy of the administration upon the transportation question, was largely framed. That policy was very shortly afterwards announced to the people of the country. We were told that it was necessary to extend the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, and, if that we done, this road would be placed in a position to compete successfully for a large share of the business between the great west and the maritime provinces, and that St. John might then expect to become what it had long had the ambition to become, one of the great ports for the export of western produce during the winter season. That was the declared policy of the government, and it was consistently followed until 1903. The Intercolonial was extended to the city of Montreal and, in pursuance of the same policy, a wharf property was purchased in the city of St. John, an elevator was built there, and another elevator was built in Halifax. Other expenditures were made, involving, in the whole, an outlay upon capital account in connection with the Intercolonial Railway which amounts to something over twenty millions, some five millions in excess of the sum the government now estimate will be required to build another new road from Quebec to Moncton. That is the policy which the hon. leader of the government and his colleagues pursued for six years in order to redeem the pledge which he made to the people of St. John, but it is regrettable to state that the traffic did not come, that not one steamer was loaded as the result of that policy. And I must here congratulate my hon. friend from Queen's (Hon. Mr. King) upon the happy disposition he must possess. It would naturally occur that a person under such circumstances, who had been an ardent supporter of the government, who had such admiration for its leader, and who is such a warm believer in the policy of the government during those six years, would have experienced a feeling of disappointment that the large amounts of traffic which they had reason to expect would follow the policy adopted, had failed to materialize, that not a single steamer had been loaded, and that the elevators which had been constructed in St. John and Halifax stood idle, and useless. I could not, however, detect in the speech of my hon. friend any tone of disappointment. He appeared to be in an unusually exultant frame of mind, and he referred again to the speech of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and in referring to the new policy that they had adopted, he remarked, that Sir Wilfrid himself had taken charge, that he had conducted the negotiations, and it had been through his instrumentality that the arrangements have been completed for carrying out this grand scheme for the construction of another transcontinental railway. 'Now,' he exultingly exclaimed, 'Sir Wilfrid has redeemed the pledge which he gave to the people of St. John in 1896.' My hon. friend must pardon me if I do not share his joyous feeling in considering this subject. I cannot but have a feeling that as the same party, the same government, and the same leader inaugurated the policy of 1896, which has proved a disastrous failure, that the new policy which they are inaugurating now may share the same fate. I cannot, either, forget that notwithstanding this scheme is before parliament for discussion, the work has not yet been commenced, the surveys have not even been made, it has not even been demonstrated that the scheme is feasible, and even if, at a later date, it is found so, it will require at least ten years to bring this scheme to completion. If the scheme is carried out, we will then have a great transcontinental railway, it is true, extending from the Pacific to Moncton, but so far as the city of St. John, in which my hon. friend and I are both equally interested, is concerned, we have to rely upon the statement which he read to us from the speech of Mr. Fielding in the House of Commons, that after this railway is completed from Quebec to Moncton, the company will find it in their own interest to build a branch to St. John, in order that they may get an outlet for their traffic at that port. There is no provision in the contract for connection with St. John, and we have to rely entirely for that part of the scheme, upon the interests of the company itself. I must express some sympathy with the people of St. John, for, according to the statement of my hon. friend himself, they will have to wait ten years, and possibly fifteen years, before they feel even the first wash of that great wave of prosperity which is to overtake them as the consequence of this policy in the far-distant future. A great deal might happen in the course of ten or fifteen years, and I assume a great many things will happen. It is just possible that the city of Halifax may, within that time, become the terminus of the fast Atlantic steamship service, and become the Liverpool of America ; but as far as St. John is concerned, it appears from the argument of my hon. friend, that they will have to be content to move along in the same old way in which they have been moving on for the last ten years, and that they will have to content themselves as best they can with what measure of prosperity comes to them by the traffic which reaches them over the Canadian Pacific Railway which was built so long ago under the Conservative administration. I certainly feel sorry for those of the city of St. John who belong to the same generation as my hon. friend and I do, who listened to the speech of Sir Wilfrid Laurier in 1896, and are now told that they will be dead and buried before the pledges which he then gave can be fulfilled.

My hon. friend devoted so much attention to the scheme as a whole, and to the great benefits the Dominion was to receive from it, that he gave little, I think scarcely any attention to the measure which is now before the House.

The Bill which we are considering proposes certain amendments in the original contract which was submitted to parliament last session. The hon. Secretary of State and others who follow him gave some attention to these amendments and generally regarded them as rather unimportant in their character as making no very serious differences in the relations between the government and the other parties to the contract than those which existed under the original contract submitted last session. It is possible that my hon. friend regarded them as of so little importance that he did not consider them worthy of his attention. I wish to offer a very few observations with regard to one or two of them.

The first clause in the Bill before us proposes an extension of the time, so far as the mountain section of the railway is concerned, from five to eight years for its completion. With this section of the Bill I have no fault to find. Indeed it meets with my entire approval. I had a feeling of relief when I discovered that this section had been incorporated in the Bill. We were told last session by the leader of the government that the construction of another transcontinental railway was a matter of urgent importance, that the interests of the Dominion were such that it was necessary to enter at once upon the construction of this great work, and that its early completion was necessary in order to avoid some dangers which were likely to overtake us. It is gratifying to know this year that these dangers no longer threaten, that the crisis which then existed has passed, and that the Grand Trunk Pacific can proceed leisurely and deliberately with the construction of the mountain section of their road and complete it in five or eight years as may best suit their interests.

With the next clause in the Bill I do not so heartily agree. This clause materially increases the obligations of the government in connection with this work. Under the original contract, the obligations which the government were to assume were limited to the amount of $30,000 per mile of the railway. That limit has been removed, and the government obligations are only limited now to three-fourths of the cost of the work, whatever that may be. They are further increased by the agreement that they would implement the guarantee of bonds, beyond the 75 per cent in order to make good any difference there may be between the price which these bonds realized, when they are placed on the market, and their par value. in other words, the government under this section agrees that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway bonds, which it guarantees and which bear interest at three per cent, will sell upon the market at par, and to undertake that, if they do not bring par, they will make good any difference there may be by a further guarantee of bonds. This change in the contract materially increases the obligations of the government and the country with regard to that section of the road. But that is not the only objection to this change. It makes it, as hon. gentlemen will readily see, in the interest of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company to swell the construction account upon that section of the road to the highest amount possible, and for the very obvious reason that the bonds issued to cover three-fourths of the construction of that part are to be guaranteed by the government, and the government is to pay the interest on those bonds for seven years after construction has been completed. It is well known that in railway construction there are a number of expenditures which may be charged to construction account, or may be taken out of maintenance and operating expenses. It will be to the interest of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company to have every possible expenditure charged to construction, and as I read the contract, the government will be powerless to prevent that, for as it appears now under the present contract the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company will be in a position to demand that the construction account should not be closed until that road shall be completed up to the most perfect standard possible, and if that is done, as every one knows, the result would be this: that for the first five or ten years after the road is completed and in operation the expenses for maintenance or repairs will be comparatively nothing, and as the result the whole of the receipts from that section of the road during the first seven years at least of its operation, will go, after paying the mere running expenses, into the treasury of the Grand Trunk Railway Company as holders of the bonds and stock. Besides this, and for the same reasons it opens the door for manipulation in the sale of the bonds and stocks of the company. It is not necessary for me to go into particulars with regard to that, for everybody knows that in these transactions manipulations are possible, and it will be in the interest of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company to manipulate these bonds and have them placed on the market at a price which will yield to the holders of them—the nominal interest may be three per cent—a much larger return upon the money actually paid for them.

There is another clause of the Bill to which I think serious objection can be made, and that is the clause under which the government abandons its rights of foreclosure. This clause of the Bill materially alters the relations between the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific Company. Under the general contract, the government stood in the position of mortgagees for the amount of the bonds which were guaranteed by them, and had the right of foreclosing that mortgage and taking possession of the property in case the interest—I think it was for three years—was not paid, or the company failed to redeem any of their obligations to the government. That has now, in my opinion, very unfortunate, been abandoned, and the relations of the government and the railway company are no longer those of mortgagor and mortgagee, but the government and the Grand Trunk Railway have become, practically, partners in this enterprise. In case the interest is not paid, the government have no recourse until the interest is in default five years, and then the only remedy they have is to require that a receiver be appointed, and the receipts above the operating expenses be divided between the government and the Grand Trunk Railway, in the proportion of three to one. These changes, to which I have referred, appear to me exceedingly objectionable. This remark may be made with regard to them, that they are all in the direction of lessening the risk and obligations of both the Grand Trunk Railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific and increasing the obligations and burdens which will rest upon the government and the people of this country. It can hardly be expected, therefore, that those of us who opposed this measure last session, will find it acceptable now in its amended form. Indeed, the amendments to which I have referred appear to me to justify entirely the position which the opposition took last session. It was held, by those of us who opposed the Bill, that this scheme was impracticable, that the safeguards placed in that Bill would never be enforced, and that they were illusory, and the amendments which have been introduced in the Bill before us prove that that contention was entirely right. The most important safeguards which the Act contained are proposed to be removed by the very Bill we are now considering, while all the objectionable features of the contract remain. Let us look for a moment at the position of the government and railway company after the prairie section is completed. It has been contended, and the strongest argument which has been offered, in my opinion, in support of this measure is that it is a great transcontinental railway intended to have the effect of bringing Canadian traffic to Canadian seaports. Now what will be the result—a result which some of us pointed to last session—under the Bill in its amended form, the inevitable result, after the prairie section is completed? We know it will be the policy of the company and in the interest of the company to proceed at once with the construction of the prairie section, and that will be pushed through to completion as rapidly as possible. What will be the position then? The Grand Trunk Railway, I am informed on good authority, has already obtained connections between Chicago and Duluth and the boundary line, and that negotiations are in progress by which within a very short time they will have connections between Winnipeg and Duluth, on one hand and Chicago on the other. This gives them in the summer an independent line through United States territory, giving them connection with the waters of Lake Superior, and with their own system at Chicago, which will give them connection with the whole Grand Trunk Railway system throughout Ontario and the east. It will be all-rail system when the navigation of the lakes close. During the period that that western section is being completed, which is now extended to eight years, and during ten or more years required for the completion of the eastern section, freight which must necessarily be exchanged between the Grand Trunk Railway system in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and the prairie section in the west, will go by the lakes in the summer over their own connections at Duluth, and over the all-rail connection via Chicago in the winter time. So it is obvious that any portion of the trade of the great west which by the construction of that prairie section they are able to divert to their own lines, instead of being carried, as proposed, to Canadian ports, will be diverted through United States territory to Portland, Maine. During the early history of this enterprise, as the Bill now stands, it is inevitable that such a result must follow. What may happen later on it is difficult to surmise. There is a clause providing that, during the progress of construction of the eastern section, the government have power to lease any portion that may be completed to the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, and that it can be operated under the general terms which are proposed for a lease of the whole section after its final completion. It is well known that the Grand Trunk Company have now a line to North Bay; that in the interval, since this Bill was introduced last session, they have been pushing forward their surveys, the report of one of which was given to the House on Friday last by my hon. friend from de Lanaudière, on to Winnipeg. Indeed if that report be correct, they have that portion of the line surveyed, and it is only reasonable to expect that within a few years, at all events long before the entire line is completed, connection may be established there, and the same results would follow, so far as the carrying trade from Canada to the United States ports is concerned, for any portion which the Grand Trunk Pacific received in the Northwest Territories and which came over their lines to their system in the older provinces, would necessarily be conveyed to the city of Portland for export.

Now, a few words with regard to the eastern section. Indeed this is the portion of the scheme to which the most serious objections may be urged. We complained last session on this side of the House, of the lack of information regarding the country through which this railway was to pass. We have received no information of an official character since. The only new light which has been thrown on the subject was that given us by my hon. friend opposite (Hon. Mr. Casgrain, de Lanaudière), on Friday last, when he read a memorandum taken from a report to which, he says, he had access in the Grand Trunk Railway offices in the city of Montreal, and which was prepared by their chief engineer, Mr. Stephens. From that report he concludes that the portion of this railway east of the city of Winnipeg, extending somewhere in the neighbourhood of a point north or northwest of North Bay, was found to be practicable, and it was ascertained to be possible that a road with very easy grades could be constructed over that distance. We are not, of course, in a position to contradict that statement, or to offer any criticism upon it; but I pointed out last session, and I do not intend to repeat the figures now, that a portion of the line immediately west from Quebec, where it followed the general line of the Lake St. John Railway, was exceedingly difficult, and that a number of grades were there to be met with exceeding sixty or seventy feet to the mile. We all of us have some idea of the general physical features of the country in that portion of Quebec through which this railway is to pass. We know that it is a country full of lakes and rivers, and hills or mountain ranges. We know that the general course of these rivers and ranges of hills is from north to south, while the general course of the railway will be from east to west, and for my own part I can scarcely conceive it to be possible that, under such circumstances, a railway of the standard my hon. friend described can be possibly built through a country of that character, unless, indeed, it is done at an enormous expense. It will readily be admitted that engineering skill can accomplish anything if it is backed by a sufficient amount of capital; but I venture to hazard the opinion that a railway such as has been described may be found to be impracticable, or, if it can be constructed at all, it will cost two or three times the amount that is estimated by the government as the cost of this projected railway. It is not, however, necessary to spend more time on that phase of the subject, for there is another feature of it which I consider of vastly more importance, and on which we have definite information to enable us to come to more definite conclusions. I refer now to the prospects of that portion of the railway as a commercial enterprise. In considering that, we have, of course, to take into consideration the sources from which it may expect to derive its revenue. A good deal has been said about this railway being a great highway for the traffic between the east and the west; that it is to be a great thoroughfare for carrying the trade of the prairie sections in the west to the cities and seaports of the eastern provinces. Let us for a moment calmly consider what are the prospects of a railway such as has been described successfully competing for that business. It is now fairly admitted on all sides that during the season of navigation it is utterly impossible for that railway to compete with the lake and river routes. The hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) on Friday referred to some figures which were submitted in the House of Commons last session by the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton).

I did not understand him fully to endorse the statements which that hon. gentleman made, but he did express the general opinion that it was surprising at how low a rate a modern railway could carry heavy traffic. We all admit the great improvements that have been made in railway construction, and the great reductions that have taken place in freight rates. But any theory which may be supported on that basis is entirely and completely answered by the practical experience of other railways. The experience, for instance, of the rival lines which connect the city of Chicago and city of New York, to my mind settles this question beyond a doubt. We all know that those great trunk lines of railway have been brought up to the highest state of efficiency at an enormous expense. Nothing that engineering skill or an unlimited amount of capital could do to bring those road-beds up to the most perfect standard, has been left undone in order that trains may travel over them at the highest rate of speed and carry freight at the least possible expense. But with all this expenditure of capital, those railways find it unprofitable to carry the heavy freight from the west to the seaports on the Atlantic coast, and, notwithstanding all they have done in that direction, it is found that freight can be carried for less than one-half during the summer season via the lakes and Buffalo that it can be carried by the all-rail routes, and even at those double rates the railways, I understand, are careless about such traffic and often refuse to accept it. The rates which the Hon. Mr. Charlton submitted to the House, are so far below the rates which have prevailed between Chicago and New York by the lakes and by Buffalo, and I think are less than one-third or one-fourth the rates which are actually paid to railways when they do carry this freight between Chicago and New York, that I think it is difficult to found an argument in face of the practical experience of these railways that such freight can be successfully carried at a rate which will pay even operating expenses over this railway from Winnipeg to Quebec, and I may say that the government apparently recognizes this fact, for the Hon. Mr. Sifton, in his address in the House of Commons a few days ago, referring to this subject, said that wheat was hauled last season from Duluth to Quebec for 3½ cents a bushel, and, certainly, a railway cannot compete with this. That may be taken as evident. So much then with regard to the through traffic during the summer seasons; but it was argued by Mr. Sifton and, I presume, will be argued by others, that, when the lakes and rivers are closed, this railway will avail itself of the traffic which may offer during the winter season and that during the winter season it will be able to do a large and profitable business. Let us examine that proposition a little more carefully. In the first place, we must take into consideration the fact that the operating expenses of a railway in the winter season are very much greater than they are in the summer season. There is a large expense necessary in order to keep the track clear of snow. The quantities of freight which a train will carry have to be very much reduced; the cost of fuel in the winter time for doing the same work is very much larger than it is in the summer season. I have heard the opinion expressed by those who have had practical experienc in the business, that the fuel required in the winter season is nearly or quite double what it is in the summer season for doing the same amount of traffic. Now, under these conditions, it would be necessary to impose very much higher rates of freight in the winter season, in order to meet the increased cost of operating the railway. My hon. friend who spoke on Friday told us that the relative rates at which heavy freights could be carried by rail and water routes was in the proportion of 6 to 1: that is, if it costs in the summer season one cent a bushel to carry wheat from Montreal by the water route, it would cost six cents by the all-rail route. This difference would be considerably increased if that wheat was carried by the all-rail route in the winter season. It will be obvious then to any one that the farmer in the Northwest Territories will endeavour to ship his wheat in the fall when the low rates prevail. If he does not succeed in doing that, he will hold his wheat until the next season rather than submit to the large extra charge which he must necessarily pay for freight if he forwards it during the winter season. The same observation applies not only to grain, but to the moving of all classes of heavy freight. The result, as hon. gentlemen will at once perceive, is that the quantity of heavy freight which is moved in the winter time will be very small compared with the quantity moved in the summer time, and it will be obvious to any one that this class of freight cannot be carried in the winter time by the all-rail route except at a very considerable loss to the shipper. From this consideration one result which will follow is that the quantity of traffic offering in the winter time will be very much smaller than the quantity which will be offered during the summer season. But there are other considerations. This railway will not, it is true, have the lake and river route to compete with in the winter season, but it will have all the existing railway lines of railway which connect the great west with New York, Portland and other seaports on the Atlantic coast, and the rates of freight, which should be maintained, will only be equal to what other railways are willing to carry the same freight for. So that it cannot be reasoned that during the winter season this railway, even if it were so disposed, could very materially increase its rates and bring them up to give it what would be a paying rate for its traffic during that season of the year. Taking into consideration these principles which must govern the rules of traffic, both from the west to the east and from the east to the west, leads one to the obvious conclusion that from its through traffic this railway cannot expect to receive any very large revenue. It is a well known principle to all railway men that trunk lines of railway cannot and do not depend upon their through traffic for the profits which pay the operating expenses and which pay the interest upon their bonds or the dividends upon their stock. The competition which exists between these numerous trunk lines of railway keep the through rates down to so low a level that no railway could exist if it depends for its revenue upon through traffic alone. Railways all depend to a very large extent, indeed to the largest extent, upon the receipts which come to them from the local traffic which originates along the line. What will be the position of this section of the transcontinental railway with regard to local traffic? So far as we can see, there will be no local traffic, for there is no settlement. My hon. friend's argument is that if this railway is built the country will be opened up and will soon be settled. They proceed upon the principle that on the heels of railway construction settlement necessarily follows. I scarcely think that is a sound principle, and when I heard my hon. friend, the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière on Friday last describe to us the number of townships which were to be laid out all along this line, I thought he had a most vivid imagination. We are told that a portion of this country is fertile in its character. We have been told about a clay belt in the northern part of Ontario, which, I believe, is estimated to contain some sixteen million acres. We are told also that there are other sections along the line of railway where fairly good stretches of agricultural land are to be found. From all the reports that reach us, I have no doubt that these statements are correct. I have no doubt from the reports which we read of travellers and missionaries and exploring parties that this much may be said of the country through which this railway passes, that there are fairly good sections of agricultural land, that vegetables may be successfully grown, that the hardier kinds of cereals will ripen; that a certain amount of stock can be successfully reared. But while all that is true I do not think there is an hon. gentleman here that would calmly hazard the opinion that a man who intended to devote his life to agricultural pursuits, who intended to make his living by farming would prefer to settle in that northern country rather than on the fertile plains of the Northwest. We know that there are hundreds of men leaving far better districts in the older provinces every year and removing to the Northwest in order that they may carry on their farming operations on a larger scale and to better advantage and with more profit to themselves. I have no doubt that if that country is settled, these agricultural lands will be to a large extent cultivated; but I believe it is a fair statement of the case to say that the products which are raised there will all be required for local consumption, that those who go in there will not pretend to conduct their farming operations on a larger scale than is sufficient to meet the local requirements of the place. We know, from our experience in other sections of the country, where railways pass through tracts of country very similar to those which I have described, where this railway is to pass through, that that is the general experience. We can always point to different sections in the provinces from which we come, along the lines of railway, where farmers are cultivating their lands, are raising vegetables and grain and keeping a certain number of cattle, but they merely raise what is necessary for their own requirements, and I think it is really a most extravagant statement to say that in a section of country which this railway will traverse between Winnipeg and Quebec we can ever expect that farming operations will be carried on to that extent that there will be a large surplus of agricultural products to export to foreign countries, such as would furnish any profitable traffic for the railway. My hon. friend referred not only to the agricultural lands in that section of the country, but to the timber that is to be found there. From the reports which I have access to, I have been led to the conclusion that there is a large portion of that territory rocky and barren ; that there are certain portions which are covered with swamp or muskeg, that there is a very considerable portion which has a growth of timber, but the timber generally is of a stunted and dwarfish character. The statement which the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière made on Friday, goes to confirm me in this matter. He enumerated a number of classes of trees which grew in that section of the country, and he told us that many of them were suitable for making pulpwood. We know that the trees which are used for pulpwood are of rather a small growth. He told us too that there was timber there which was suitable for making railway ties and furnishing the timber which was necessary for temporary structures during the building of the road, and he also told us there was some class of timber there which would make suitable spars for boats ; but I think there is no hon. gentleman here who will assume to say that timber of that character, even if it is found there, will furnish any large or remunerative traffic for the railway. I have no doubt that there are sections of the country, particularly along the rivers, where certain tracts of timber may be found of a superior quality ; but I have yet to learn that there are any tracts of timber land there of sufficient extent and having timber of such a quality as would induce lumbering operations on any extensive scale, and I think it would be folly to affirm that these timber lands are sufficiently valuable anywhere along that line to attract any large investment of capital, to lead to the establishment of any important industries, or to furnish anywhere along the line business of a character which would supply profitable traffic for a railway of this character I believe the only other source of traffic for this section of the railway to which I have heard reference made is the possible development of the mineral resources of the country. There may be mineral resources there, but if they are, I believe they have yet to be discovered. So far as minerals are concerned, we will all admit Canada is rich in mineral resources. Minerals, I believe, are to be found in greater or less quantities in almost all the provinces of the Dominion—probably in every province of the Dominion ; but, notwithstanding that, experience shows that there are very few places where minerals are found in sufficient quantity and under such circumstances as will justify capitalists in expending money for their development, and still fewer cases where mineral wealth has been found of such a nature and such a character that it was an inducement to capitalists to go in and establish any important industries. So far as this section of the country is concerned. it seems to me presumption to argue that we may expect any mineral development there of a character which will furnish local traffic for this railway. Now, those are the only sources that I can think of from which this railway can hope to derive any important remunerative traffic through that section of the country, and we stand in the position that it cannot compete successfully for the through traffic and the nature of the country furnishes no local traffic, and I leave it to hon. gentlemen opposite to explain where this railway is to derive a business that will support it, or even to pay its operating expenses. It seems to me that the very nature of the arguments which have been used show the weakness of this whole scheme. My hon. friend repeated the argument, which, I think, was used on a former occasion by the eloquent leader of the government in the other House, that the Great Architect of the Universe had placed this vast region there, and they could not believe that he had placed it there for no useful purpose. It is not for me to criticise the doings or the motives of the Architect of the Universe, but we must remember that that same Architect of the Universe created Greenland's icy mountains and the Desert of Sahara ; and we all know, too, that there is not a section of the country, or a province of this Dominion, where we do not find large tracts of land, some of them rocky and barren, others of them desert like in their nature, which are unfit for human habitation. Why did the Architect of the Universe place them in this position, and what was his object in putting them there is difficult for us to explain. We are told too, in a general way, that we must enter upon this scheme enthusiastically if we have faith in our country. Faith in an enterprise is, of course, necessary to the enthusiastic projection of it ; but I must warn the hon. gentlemen against placing their faith in visionary theories. Faith in visionary theories has led many a man to embark in many an enterprise which has led him to bankruptcy. Faith in the representations of enthusiastic and optimistic promoters has led hundreds and thousands of men to financial ruin. I think I have as much faith in the future of Canada as any hon. gentleman present. I believe she has great resources and a glorious future before her, but I recognize the fact that in any scheme which we undertake for the development of her resources or for the promotion of her greatness we must not follow visionary theories; we must base our faith on some business principle and keep our policy in harmony with the dictates of reason and common sense. There is only one other point to which I desire to refer before I resume my seat, and that is the question of government ownership. There is no person in this chamber who has more persistently opposed government ownership of railways than I have myself, and I have not changed my views or opinions upon that point, but I may say with regard to this scheme that, in my opinion, it involves government ownership in its worst and most objectionable form. We are building a great Transcontinental Railway. We are handling over to a private company the construction of the paying part of the road. When the western section is built, it will be the property of a private company, and it will be owned by them and operated by them to their own advantage. The government undertakes the construction of what the Minister of Railways terms the lean part of this enterprise. They undertake the construction of the part where construction is most difficult, where the cost will be the greatest and where there is really no prospect of remunerative traffic, but we are told—at all events it has been argued in the other House and I presume it will be argued here—that this does not matter, that the contract which is before us contains a provision that when the road is completed, as the Minister of Finance stated in the House, we have secured a good tenant; we have made an arrangement by which it is to be rented to the Grand Trunk Railway, and they are to undertake the responsibility of its maintenance and its operation, and after some seven or ten years at the most they will pay the government a rental equal to three per cent upon the cost of this construction. I readily admit that the provision is in the contract, but, as I said as regards the provision which the contract contained last year, which was found necessary to eliminate this year, I believe that this provision in the contract cannot be made effectual. We will suppose that that railway, after it is built, is found to be so unprofitable that it will cost some hundreds of thousands of dollars annually besides its earnings to cover operating expenses, does any hon. gentleman here seriously believe that the Grand Trunk Pacific under those circumstances will carry out the strict terms of that contract? Besides this I cannot find in the contract any means that the government will have of compelling them to carry out their obligations. So far as I can understand the contract the only remedy which the government will have in case they fail to carry out their obligations in that respect will be to take over the road and own and operate it themselves. That I frankly confess, as an opponent of government ownership, is a result which we have to fear and I scarcely see how that result can be avoided. What then is the condition of the country? We have that Transcontinental Railway it is true, but we have added some seventy-five or probably one hundred million to the permanent debt of the country, and while we have eighteen hundred miles more of government owned railway, we have an asset which is of no commercial value and no practical use, and one which, in order to cover its maintenance and operation, will impose a burden upon the people of this country amounting to some hundreds of thousands of dollars per year. These are my views with regard to government ownership, and the results which may be anticipated if the present scheme is carried out; and holding these views I shall find it my duty to vote in opposition to the Bill which is now before the House.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—Will the hon. gentleman vote for the amendment? His arguments are against it.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I crave the indulgence of this House while I express the views I entertain in reference to this grand scheme for a transcontinental railway. In expressing those views, I hope that I may do so in a moderate manner while showing that the views which I entertain are views which are in the interests of the country and not simply in the interest of party. I have listened to the speech made by the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland. I was very much surprised indeed that in less than one short year he has, like his leader, seen the error of his ways and is now a converted believer in that which he did not believe a year ago. They say it is never too late to mend. They say it is a good thing to become converted in a short time. Six months ago we found the hon. leader of the opposition then holding up his hands in holy horror at the idea of a government controlling a railway, and we heard him but a few days ago holding his hands equally as strong and saying that he had become converted and was now going to support government ownership. Who converted him? He heard the voice in the other chamber of this House. The orders had gone forth, and although he believed strongly the other way and has the courage of his convictions, yet he has to yield. It puts me very much in mind of that old hymn that used to be sung so lustily at various meetings throughout the country, which runs as follows:

While the lamp holds out to burn, &c.

I will let him finish the sentence. He will know more about it than I do. I think he has put himself in that position again. I do not think my hon. friend from Westmoreland will be able to vote for the amendment moved by his leader. What position will he be in if he does? He certainly cannot vote, but perhaps he will do, as I noticed he did in the parliamentary proceedings some thirty years ago when he made a very strong speech on one side of the question, and when the yeas and nays had been recorded he either had taken to the woods or found his way home, so that he would not have to record his vote.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I was not in parliament thirty years ago.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I said twenty years ago. My hon. friend knows full well that twenty years ago when the House was sitting in October, that he made a very strong speech, and I must say a fairly eloquent speech, in favour of giving a grant of $30,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway without the necessary information such as the information we have in regard to the feasibility of the present scheme. I will refresh his memory, because I suppose he has forgotten. The resolution was introduced by Sir Charles Tupper. It was at the time when we found the difficulty in 1884 to get the members of parliament together, and very likely my hon. friend from Stadacona (Hon. Mr. Landry) was there also. He will remember when the French were on strike. They would not appear before their leader. He had to send a messenger to room No. 16 to try and get them out.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There was no No. 16 at that time.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No; No. 8.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—No. 8. They remained there, and, I have no doubt, the hon. Senator from London remembers the time as well as the hon. leader of the opposition, that, true to their instinct, the French members were not going to grant that $30,000,000 without some consideration and for the benefit of our friends in Quebec——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—They fought well. I give them credit. My hon. friend says hear, hear. They are ever ready to look after the loaves and fishes. We found on that occasion that day in and day out came the difficulty that no discussion could go on, no vote could be taken. The Conservative party advanced and put up this man and that man to keep the debate going on lest a vote might be taken. and they would find the French members of the party were not adhering to them. They were led by a very strong man, a very able man who was afterwards a speaker and afterwards made a judge, and the leader of the government and my hon. friend from London and the hon. leader of the opposition came down handsomely and they granted a concession that the representatives from Quebec in the House of Commons demanded. And what was it? That they should get that line of road north of the St. Lawrence. They made them concede it to them, and my hon. friend who has taken his seat being a member of the House at the time—did he find any difficulty ? Even though he spoke in favour of the proposition he thought it better to not record his vote for it. I congratulate him very much on an occasion of that kind. I understood it only took six months for the leader of the opposition to change his mind in regard to government ownership. I am not surprised that his obedient followers, after twenty years of repentance, should have found that they could change their minds as well as their leader and so he votes for hon. gentleman's amendment.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—And he yet votes for you.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I hope so.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I do not know if any one who can change his opinion within six months can really be depended upon, or any party would be greatly benefited by having his adherence for the time being, because they would be unable to rely on him and say whether he would be with or against them. We have heard a good deal from the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) going over the various items in reference to the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill. I ask hon. gentlemen if you can place your finger upon any important matter in this Bill that is brought before this House that would induce you to record your vote against it ? The whole weight of his argument was that for commercial purposes, for carrying freight between the east and the west, it would not be a commercial success. He turned a deaf ear to the idea that there were other advantages and benefits that the nation might receive from the construction of the railway, even if his statements in respect to the carrying of freight were true. Then he referred to that section between Quebec and Winnipeg. We have heard of blue ruin, of people decrying their own country. Have we not a grand Northwest, and should one who is Canadian born so far forget himself as to publish abroad such statements. Because his speech goes to the world, and people in the United States will be only too ready to seize upon it and say that a senator of the Dominion stated in his place in the Senate that that northern part of Ontario and Quebec was uninhabitable and consisted of muskegs with stunted pine and spruce, and that it would be a burden to those who would attempt to settle there. The hon. gentleman asks is it possible to find a man who is inclined to follow agricultural pursuits and looks forward to building up a home for himself and family, who would think of going to settle in that part of the country. I know of many farmers as intelligent as can be found in any part of Canada, who are going up there to-day to settle. In New Ontario we have hundreds of millions of acres of land just as habitable as any portion of Ontario or of any part of Canada. We know that the Ontario government have surveyed those lands and are building a railway to open them up. If the hon. gentleman has not the reports of the Ontario government before him, he can get them very readily. plans, maps and references. It is said, and I think truly said, that you will find even better lands in Northern Ontario than in the garden of Ontario the western peninsula. But the hon. gentleman not only decried the land, he ignored the forests of pulp wood. Canada is known all over the world as having the best supply of pulp woods to be found anywhere, and this railway will pass through vast regions of pulp wood forest, now inaccessible. That pulp wood is a commercial commodity that will furnish an inexhaustible supply, because it does not require many years to re-grow and we will be able to supply paper not only for Canada but for the United States and Europe. Are we to regard the construction of a road through such a country as a waste of money ? In New Ontario there are farmers who have been settled on their lands for many years, who are prosperous and satisfied, yet the hon. gentleman comes here, and for the sake of supporting a view which he entertains adverse to the Grand Trunk Pacific, says that that part of Canada is uninhabitable. I agree with the hon. gentleman that the Grand Trunk Railway would be glad to extend its line into this new territory, but the Ontario government are building a road there which will open up the country for colonization. I wish we in Canada could say that every section of the country was as good as New Ontario. I agree with the hon. gentleman, to a certain extent, that the prairie lands are more accessible and more readily settled than the timbered lands of the north. But the hon. gentleman says there are muskegs in that northern country. Is that a proper title to apply to lands which grow a very valuable timber? Going all through that new territory from Quebec to Manitoba you will find as good land as any one would desire to locate.

But the hon. gentleman says if the Grand Trunk Railway gets this road the government is to build, that they will not run it long before it falls back into their hands. The agreement distinctly shows the Grand Trunk Pacific are desirous of leasing that portion of the road as soon as it can be constructed, and, as soon as any portion of it is completed, they are ready to lease and operate that portion. That being so, is there any reason why we should entertain a fear that the road will fall into the hands of the government? I feel satisfied that the Grand Trunk Pacific will be ready, as soon as the government is prepared to transfer the road to them, to assume control of it. My hon. friend contends that local traffic is the most profitable traffic for any railway, and he contends there will be no local traffic on this road. Those are not the views that he entertained when he supported so strongly the granting of $30,000,000 with all the exemptions to the Canadian Pacific Railway. We know that as soon as these roads are built, settlement will take place and the local traffic will grow. That has been the experience of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Therefore, his argument in that respect did not amount to very much. The hon. gentleman also said that if this road was built from Moncton to Winnipeg, it would have to compete with other railways during the winter, and in summer with the rail and lake routes. I agree with him there, but that will bring freight rates down, and St. John and Halifax and other eastern cities will find that the traffic of the west will be brought there for shipment to Europe at a low figure. His statement only shows that as soon as you get the road constructed it will be to the advantage of the people. It is not being built in the interest of the railway company. It is intended more as a colonization road to open up lands in Ontario and Quebec for settlement. It would look to me as if the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland is quite indifferent to the benefits which might accrue to the country by the construction of this railway, as long as we can prevent competition with other roads. Does the hon. gentleman dread the competition of this road with the Canadian Pacific Railway? No doubt, like my hon. friend the leader of this House, he would be very favourable to the success of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but we have the interest of the country at heart, and we must be prepared to see other interests opposed to the project. The hon. gentleman laid great stress upon the possible diversion of traffic to Chicago and other points in the United States. We know that in that respect he could not be as sincere as he pretended to be. When the Conservative government were in power their sins were many, and one of them was in purchasing the Rivière de Loup branch from the Grand Trunk Railway Company, they stipulated that the purchase money should be applied to the construction of a road to run into Chicago. Would you for one moment suppose that these super-loyal Conservatives would use the money of the people of Canada to get communication into Chicago and to United States ports?

I hardly would have believed it, but knowing it to be true I am forced to the conclusion that in an unguarded moment, in a moment of weakness to which Conservatives are liable occasionally, they yielded to the tempter and allowed themselves to be led away and gave the money with the understanding that it should be applied in the manner I have mentioned. I believe it is in the interest and for the welfare of the people of Canada that this Northern Transcontinental Railway should be built, and feeling that, I consider it my bounden duty to see that view is carried out. When the loan of $30,000,000 was made to the Canadian Pacific Railway we know how it was obtained. We know that it is not unusal to have strikes occur in the Conservative party. The hon. leader of the opposition will remember, no doubt with sorrow, that later on there was another strike. It appears that when a Conservative is very anxious to secure anything he does not reason out the question, but goes on strike to secure it. As a New Brunswicker, representing the people of that province for the last twenty-four or twenty-five years, it was the bounden duty of my hon. friend to do everything in his power to promote the interest of that part of Canada where he lived. Has he been true and faithful to the trust imposed in him when he was a member of the House of Commons? I am afraid if his record be examined into it will be found that he has been an unfaithful servant, and that he is no longer entitled to the confidence of the people of New Brunswick. Hon. gentlemen will remember the glowing terms in which Sir Charles Tupper, many years ago, announced the policy of building the Canadian Pacific Railway from ocean to ocean; that it was going to bring the teeming millions of Europe to inhabit Canada. You remember also the glowing terms in which he introduced his resolution to grant the Canadian Pacific Railway $30,000,000 after the directors of the company found themselves unable to proceed any further with their enterprise. It is true that the people of Canada advanced that large amount of cash and gave them immense land grants—a kingdom from which they have realized a large amount of money. They agreed to relieve the company from taxation and exempt them from the duties that they should have paid on articles they imported for the railway from the United States, so anxious were they to get a road built from ocean to ocean to bind the provinces together and improve the relations between the maritime provinces and the other provinces of the Dominion, so anxious were they to get that interprovincial trade which we all feel is in the interest of the Dominion and for the development of that sentiment which every Canadian ought to entertain in endeavouring to make his country a land worthy of the people who inhabit it. What did Sir Charles Tupper say on that occasion? I have no doubt that many here will be glad to hear again the words of Sir Charles Tupper, spoken twenty years ago:

> I believe the interests of the company will involve the necessity of their securing direct and complete through communication with the great ocean ports of Canada.

That is right; we all agree with that—that it is in the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway to be in direct communication with all the ocean ports of Canada, not the ports we have heard of from my hon. friend opposite (Hon. Mr. Wood) of Chicago, Buffalo, and other ports of the United States. We do not care about their ports. We have as good ports of our own.

> For the summer season at the harbour of Quebec I have no doubt that every measure will be taken that can be taken to attain that important object. I trust that by the shortest line to the sea, reaching ports in the maritime provinces by a shorter line than the Intercolonial Railway and by connecting the links which have been shadowed forth in connection with this matter they will never rest until they have come, not only to the harbour of Quebec for summer, but that, looking to the vital importance of having, as they will have, a great ocean port there in summer—the vital importance of having a Canadian port opened throughout the whole year, winter as well as summer—they will never rest until they have established a route of communication to St. John.

Did my hon. friend whose voice we heard the other day wait that long time before they got to the open port of St. John. He added: 'To Halifax to St. Andrews and ultimately to Louisburg.' When did they open these ports? They made their connection I suppose with the Intercolonial Railway, but the Intercolonial Railway could not compete with a road which was shorter and more direct. He said further:

> I say, Sir, the fact that when they have reached the harbour of Louisburg, they will make it the interest of every man who has a letter to send or who wishes himself to pass in the shortest period of time from London to New York to go through that harbour, will compel the company, in the interest of this great national work, not to rest short of attaining even that point as the ultimate object. But I have no hesitation in saying that the distance between Montreal and Halifax in winter can be shortened by the measures that are in contemplation as to give every reason to believe that the company will find it their interest until Louisburg is reached, to make Halifax at all times—in the winter at any rate—the great shipping port for the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Did my hon. friend hear those words sounding in his ears? I think he did? If you will bear with me, I might inquire a little later on where that hon. gentleman made his great speech in favour of the Canadian Pacific Railway. He did not wait for information in reference to surveys or anything else. He was willing to give the $30,000,000 and say he believed it, because Sir Charles Tupper told him that he would get those ports opened to the traffic and the grain would teem down from the great Northwest over this road to the sea. Has that been realized

At six o'clock, the Speaker left the chair.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. WILSON resumed his speech. He said: When the House rose for recess I was endeavouring to point out that it was in the interest of Canada, that this National Transcontinental Railway fathered by the Grand Trunc Pacific Railway should be constructed in the very best interest of the nation. In attempting to doso, I have to repeat perhaps some of the remarks I made on that occasion, but whatever I might say, I think that hon. gentlemen opposite, in their remarks, have been unable to show that there was any serious objection to the agreement that is now before us. We all feel a desire that we should, as far as in us lies, endeavour to do what will be for the welfare of Canada. I could not help but remark when the leader of the opposition was replying to the leader of the House that he spoke of that hon. gentleman being so mild and so gentle—I do not suppose any one will accuse the leader of the opposition of that—that he could hardly conceive that his soul was in the measure he was proposing to this House. A more dispassionate, calm, argumentative speech perhaps has never been made in the Senate. It was full of information and of argument. He placed before the House the information which had been obtained, and the arguments that could be used in support of the measure, and if that was not showing that his heart was in the Bill nothing could have possibly done so. He is an old politician, who has occupied a public position for many years. I can remember him, in 1871, holding a prominent position, as the hon. senator from London (Sir John Carling) will remember, in the legislature of Ontario, and from that time down to the present day I do not think that one single aspersion can be cast upon his character, or his integrity, and his desire to do the best he possibly can for his country, and I thought it was unfair on the part of the leader of the opposition to insinuate that he was not sincere in wishing the Bill to pass this House. Considering everything, the Conservative party, or the opposition here to-day, are not what they ought to be if we consider their course in the past. In the other House, when the proposition was before parliament to grant thirty millions to the Canadian Pacific Railway, did the Conservative party say then that the traffic over that line would be profitable? Their doctrine then was that the Canadian Pacific Railway ought to be built, not only as an institution of the country, but to enable settlers to take up and cultivate the lands in the Northwest. I have no hesitation in agreeing with the hon. member from Stadacona (Hon. Mr. Landry) that the Canadian Pacific Railway has done an immense amount of good; that the project was wisely conceived by the grand old Conservative leader, who, I am sure, if he were here to-day, would not approve of the course the Conservative party is taking now, unless he should be, like the leader of the opposition, prepared to change his political opinions with regard to government ownership of railroads. We know that that grand old man had an experience of many years, and that he was strongly opposed to government ownership of railways, but no one can deny that he was a truly loyal Canadian. To use his own words, he was born a Britisher, lived a Canadian, and hoped to die a true Canadian loyal to the empire.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He never said he was born in Canada.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He said he was born a 'foreigner'.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—He was born a British subject, whether in Canada or in the mother country. I suppose the leader of the opposition would like to have me say he was a foreigner. I cannot do so, because he was not a foreigner at all. He was born a true loyal Briton, and remained so until the end of his days.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The hon. gentleman never said that of him before.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—The hon. member can speak for himself.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I have always said it.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I am not so situated as to refuse to give a good man credit for his good qualities, or to condemn a bad man for his bad deeds, and I hope my hon. friend will take warning and act in the same way that I have endeavoured to do.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I am always generous towards a bad man.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I am glad to hear there are some good qualities about the hon. member. He is certainly better than I supposed he was.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I should like to know what clause of the Bill the hon. gentleman is discussing ?

Hon. Mr. WILSON—The hon. member from Westmoreland, after referring to the amount of money that had to be expended on the Intercolonial Railway, and the increased cost of extending the road to Montreal, stated that not a single steamer had been loaded with grain at St. John. Why is that ? Did we not hear twenty years ago that St. John was to be made a prominent winter port. Have we not heard even since then, when an application was made for grants to roads in that part of Canada, that we were to have St. John one of the leading ports of the Dominion? I am surprised that those who come from New Brunswick, descendents of the United Empire Loyalists, have not received more justice from the Dominion. I might almost say they were driven into confederation, and they expected that the promises made to them would, to a certain extent, be fulfilled. Have the promises made by the Conservative party been fulfilled ? Not at all. It is now for the Reform party, which has always been described by the Conservatives as the disloyal party, to do justice to that important element of the population of the Dominion. Do hon. gentlemen mean to say they should be left in the position described by the hon. member for Westmoreland—in a position where, notwithstanding the promise to make St. John the winter port of the Dominion, not a single vessel has been loaded with grain ? Who has been to blame ? The leader of the opposition said he had made some arrangements whereby St. John was to receive consideration that it had not received before. He claimed credit for having done more for St. John than any other premier in Canada. I have no doubt he did, for he says so ; but what has he accomplished after all, when not a single grain steamer has been loaded at that port ?

I wish now to refer to the 75 per cent guarantee on the mountain section of the Transcontinental Railway. The hon. gentleman from Westmoreland thought that clause an unfair one, and the leader of the opposition stated that the change involved a higher guarantee than had previously been arranged. The hon. Secretary of State said that that was apparently the case, but that the railway company had to expend 25 per cent out of their own pockets, and that if the bonds were guaranteed, to the extent of 75 per cent, with the investment made by the railway company, it would be safe security. If, for instance, some one came to you to borrow $500 on a mortgage, and said ' I intend to use that money to increase the value of my property, and I will spend 25 per cent of my money in addition, would it not be considered by the money-lender a safe investment ? Therefore the hon. member who conveyed the impression that the railway company might increase their issue of bonds, thereby diminishing their value, is not justified in his criticism. The hon. gentleman knows full well what a construction company means. He knows full well, as the hon. leader of the opposition knows what a construction company means. He knows from the record of the Canadian Pacific Railway what a construction company means, investing in stocks, bonds and things of that kind. Yet the government will control the amount of bonds issued by the railway company. The hon. leader of the opposition shakes his head. I read the statement of the Minister of Finance—and I believed it, and I am willing to accept it and that it will be faithfully and truly carried out. Then again, reasons were advanced by the hon. gentleman why he and this House should not endorse the resolution or the Bill now before the House because the power the government had to foreclose the mortgage was released by an extension of time. Is there any objection to extension of time as proposed by that resolution ? Is there any reason to fear that after the company has leased the road for a length of time and have failed to meet their obligations, that the government are going to forclose the road ? Is that the rule generally carried out ? Is that the practice that we have found hitherto in connection with railroads ? Such is not the case, when we know that the road was built for a purpose. We know that that road was built in the interest of the country, and the country can afford to invest a certain amount and delay getting our payments back for a while on account of the good it is doing in the interests of the people of Canada. Therefore, I should say that objection is a frivolous one. I do not mean that it has not a certain amount of force, and that it may influence to a certain extent many hon. members of this House, but if they will carefully look back to by-gone days, when roads were built for the purpose of colonizing the country and advancing the welfare of the people, they certainly cannot expect that a different policy will be pursued in this case. Then the hon. gentleman referred to the expense of operating the road, and made a point that in the winter time it would cost very much more than it would in summer, and thereby the railroad traffic could not be made profitable in competition with other routes. We know perfectly well that in the winter season the railroads must keep their tracks open, and therefore may just as well, if they have to retain their men and keep the roads in running order, carry freight in the winter, even if they do not make as great a profit on it as they will in the summer. But for the sake of keeping the road open they will continue to do so. I want to say one word more about the road from Quebec through to Winnipeg. I would not have it known that in the Senate of Canada that hon. members would be guilty of making any remarks disparaging the capabilities and welfare of New Ontario. I am a resident of Ontario. I believe in the capabilities of Ontario. I believe that if you construct a northern road from Quebec to this New Ontario, you remove, to a great extent, what has been complained of that Canada is a mere fringe of settlement along the United States border. We must broaden ourselves. We must extend our settlement to the north as well as east and west. Instead of being a stretch of territory from the Atlantic to the Pacific with only a narrow belt along the border settled, we must extend our settlement north as well, and build up the country, so that people cannot say that country is but a mere fringe with no depth to it. I, therefore, strongly protest against that expression being used by an hon. member. Is there anything in New Ontario by which that portion of Canada can be made useful, productive and prosperous ? We have heard hon. gentlemen saying that it is a country characterized by stunted pine, muskegs and lakes ; but are there no minerals, are there not fish, are there not inexhaustible stores of raw material of various kinds, and will they not prove to be an inducement for the settlement of those sections of country ? I believe that in less than ten years we will find New Ontario where this Transcontinental Railway is going to run teeming with almost millions of people, prosperous, thriving and happy. I anticipate that such will be the case, and I hope that the Senate will be able to convince the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland that his ideas of New Ontario are fallacious. I will crave the indulgence of the House while I attempt to show that my hon. friend from Westmoreland had not the same idea a few years ago in reference to many things that he has to-day. We turn to 'Hansard,' of February 19, 1884, and my hon. friend will find that his name figures there as Mr. Wood of Westmoreland, and he is reported as having made these remarks that I am about to quote.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Dispense.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—If any hon. gentleman doubts the correctness of the report all they have to do is to send across the floor of the House and I will let them have the copy of 'Hansard.' This was upon a grant of $30,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway upon the resolution moved by Sir Charles Tupper, when he stated that they intended to construct the road through to St. John and Halifax

> The company is relieved of none of the responsibilities which it then assumed. It assumes the additional responsibility of engaging to effect the completion of this important work.

They were allowed a certain length of time in which to complete the road. They came to parliament and asked them to lend the company this $30,000,000. The government on that occasion said : 'What security have have you to give us for the $30,000,000 ?' They replied that they would give about 21,000,000 acres of lands, and what lands were these ? Lands that they had bought ? Lands for which they had paid something ? No, they were the lands that the government had given to the company for the purpose of constructing the road, and the government not only gave them the land, but the government paid them $25,000,000 in cash on account of the construction of the road. They came to us with what? It is as if I went to some hon. gentleman after he gave me a certain article, and saying to him 'I want to raise a loan of 50 cents upon this article.' Was that a reasonable advance for government to have made at that time unless they had some justification for it? Now we come to what my hon. friend said on that occasion:

> The fact, Sir, that the amount of aid asked from the government of this country was but a small proportion of the amount required for that enterprise, and that the company were willing to invest largely of their own capital in that scheme, was a strong proof of their confidence in its success. I am not aware that the statements which were made at that time have since been contradicted.

Further on he says:

> It has been said that it may be unwise to connect our railways with the railway system of the great Republic to the south of us. I, Sir, for one do not apprehend much danger from that quarter; for I feel, with the facts to which I have referred before us, that it will yet be found that we have in this Dominion, not only those vast fertile plains which are capable of affording a profitable traffic to more than one great line—

Mark you more than one great line of railway. What does the hon. gentleman mean? Did the hon. gentleman mean then that the Dominion of Canada would assist any railway company that would build another line through to the great Northwest? Had he prophetic vision then? The policy was brought in by his own political party. To-day that vision is blinded by the hands of those with whom he is not in full accord. He says:

> —affording a profitable traffic to more than one great line of traffic, but that we have in our seaports upon the Atlantic coast advantages which will yet attract within our borders the mail and passenger service, as well as a fair share of the freight traffic of this great continent.

And yet he comes here and tells us to-day that not one steamer has been loaded with freight or grain in winter at the Port of St. John.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I beg your pardon.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I thought the hon. gentleman said that.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The hon. gentleman entirely misunderstood me. I said there had not been sufficient grain carried over the Intercolonial Railway to load a vessel.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—To the government elevator—not one load.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—No.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Does the hon. gentleman still say, there has not been one load of grain shipped from the elevator there—that St. John does not amount to anything more than that? If those are the hon. gentleman's views, I am not here to quarrel with them.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The hon. gentleman does not understand me yet. I said the export trade had increased in St. John. I endorse what my hon. friend said. There had been a satisfactory increase in the trade of the port of St. John, but it was all due to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the extension of their system to St. John, but that nothing came over the Intercolonial Railway.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Very well. That is why I want on the present occasion to do away with traffic over the Intercolonial Railway, to a certain extent, and to offer him a better line to go down to the Port of St. John and Halifax. We know that on account of the greater distance on the Intercolonial Railway they cannot carry the freight as readily there, and more than that, it was known by the Conservative party. Do we not know that the hon. leader of the opposition said in the House of Commons that the Minister of Railways said that we had a short line of road running where? Would you believe it? Through the state of Maine to give competition with the traffic on the Intercolonial Railway, and yet we are told by hon. gentlemen that not a pound of freight comes over the Intercolonial Railway to St. John, and why? Because they offered facilities and held out inducements to build a competitive road and paid the Canadian Pacific Railway large subsidies out of the Dominion treasury for the sake of building a road through American territory, and shutting off traffic that would otherwise have come to our own ports. In the face of these facts we hear the cry 'You are trying to starve the Intercolonial and take the traffic from that road thus destroying it.' Who did that? The hon. leader of the opposition was in the House at the time the short line was built. It ill-becomes those who have been in charge of the affairs of the Dominion in the past to charge our friends, the present government with not doing what they ought to do in the interests of the Dominion. My hon. friend was not so very careful in the matter of granting concessions in his time. At that time he said it was our duty, on an occasion like this, to try to build up in this Dominion a large and growing population, of prosperous and contented people that we might be the envy of our friends across the border. Are we in any way indebted to them for such a result? Is there any reason why our ports at St. John and other places are not as feasible and just as good in the matter of accommodation as will be found anywhere? I repeat that the people coming from down by the sea are the best citizens we have in this country. We feel that they are brothers, and if we are willing to sacrifice a little in the interests of our brothers, we ought to feel that those people are entitled to it. They were, perhaps, to a certain extent forced into the union against their will, and a feeling of hostility had been engendered in their breasts, and we should deal justly and liberally with them. It will conduce to the prosperity of the Dominion of Canada if every portion of this extensive country shall be united not only by railroads but in sympathy, kindness and generosity, and I hope the day may never come when it will not be the aim of every individual to strive to the utmost of his ability to foster trade relations between the various provinces of the Dominion. If we do what we can to promote the prosperity and contentment of the people we have a grand country with a great future before us. Nature has done much. Providence has handed down to us one of the finest inheritances that possibly could be bequeathed to any nation. From one end of the Dominion of Canada to the other we find everything calculated to make the people happy and prosperous, and the glorious news has gone abroad that Canada is prospering. On that account immigration into all parts of the country is rapidly increasing. I am not claiming that all this prosperity is due to the party in power. But I say that they have contributed much to the welfare and prosperity of the Dominion. When we see our able and efficient leaders in this chamber and in the other House devoting their time and ability in the endeavour to unite the people and make them prosperous, are we true to our country and to the instincts of the people if we do not unite one and all of us to do what we can to promote the prosperity of Canada. I shall vote in favour of the second reading of the Bill. I am not in favour of government ownership of railways, although I would be better satisfied that the present government rather than a future should own the road. However, I do not expect to live long enough to see the party of hon. gentlemen opposite come into power.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—When the hon. gentleman, who has just finished his speech, commenced his oration, he said he was to address himself to the question free from party spirit, giving us the impression, we had a veritable baa lamb meek and mild; but, as the hon. gentleman proceeded, I found it difficult to decide whether he was a wolf in sheep's clothing or a Chinaman with a large bundle of dirty clothes to wash. I hope he will bleach and starch the things well, and get paid for them when he carries them home. What can be the use of bringing in the irrelevant matter of the hon. gentleman's views on a question twenty years ago, that if a man held an opinion on public matters for twenty years, he is not competent to give an opinion as things are at this day. Is that a sound argument? Is my hon. friend a Mede or Persian, whose opinion altereth not. Has the hon. gentleman changed his opinion in twenty years? If not, he must be an Elgin marble—without sight, hearing or sense. But the hon. gentleman, although from Elgin, is not an Elgin marble. He lives, moves and has a being. I shall, therefore, ask him what was his attitude towards the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1874 to 1878? Was he friendly to the scheme or unfriendly? I know he will give an honest answer.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—That was thirty years ago.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The hon. gentleman was arguing from opinions expressed twenty years back.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—What was the question.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.—From 1874 up to the time the contract was let for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway was he friendly or hostile to its construction ?

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I was not a member of the House of Commons in 1874, and I never opposed the construction of a road to the Northwest. I always believed that we ought to have a road, in the same way as I am in favour of the people of St. John, Halifax and Lunenburg having fair treatment. Those are the views I have always entertained.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The hon. gentleman was opposed to the Canadian Pacific Railway at that time.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—No, I supported the Mackenzie government, and he was in favour of the construction of the road. I hope the hon. gentleman does not intend to misrepresent me.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Canadian Pacific Railway was never intended to be run through Lunenburg.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Every member of the hon. gentleman's party in parliament and out of it was strongly opposed to the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—No ; the hon. gentleman was asleep at that time.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Then we have an enlarged number of public men and men in private life, who have changed their minds. The Liberal party of Canada, to a man, were opposed to keeping the compact with British Columbia to construct a transcontinental railway, and if that party had had its way a blot would have been placed on the fair name of Canada by breaking the contract with British Columbia ; but Providence be thanked, a government came into power imbued with honest principles, who looked upon the keeping of a contract as sacred, and the Conservative party built that road—saved the honour of the country so shattered by the Liberal party—made the country.

The object of the Canadian Pacific Railway was not to open the Northwest so much as to keep faith with British Columbia. The government of this country entered into a contract with British Columbia to have railway connection with that province, and if it had been left to the Liberal party to carry out that contract, it never would have been completed to this day, and if it had not been completed, where would the Northwest be to-day ? Where would be the teeming quantities of grain and cattle and horses exported from there, and the thousands of emigrants coming into this country ? They could not have gone in and the crops could not have been raised. There would have been no one to raise them if it had not been that the Conservative party, with a deep sense of honour and integrity, looked upon the compact with British Columbia as a sacred thing and carried out that compact, and to-day we have the vindication of the policy of the Conservative government in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway to a marvellous degree of success.

They made the country, expanded our commerce from Hong-Kong to England, and over this continent. That is what the hon. gentlemen opposite have been contending against. If they had had their way, the Northwest would have been a wilderness, inhabited by the wolf and the musk-rat. I am not going to express an opinion of the country from Winnipeg to Quebec, whether it is good or bad ; very little is known about it. I will not go into the figures as to the mileage or anything of that kind. All I claim is that the road has not been asked for by the country. It has been pushed on by the Grand Trunk Railway and the premier of this government, who has taken the whole responsibility on his own shoulders. When the hon. Secretary of State rose to move an amended Bill to the Act of last year, I could not believe my eyes. I thought he must be joking, or have the nightmare. Could it be a fact that a complete surrender has been made of the contract entered into last year ? Could it be possible that a Bill framed by a master in the art of making contracts, and who has taken the whole responsibility of it on his own shoulders, had broken down of its own weight soon after it was completed ? I might use this metaphor : did not the master potter take this unshapen lump of clay to fashion it after his own mind, and brush to one side all the little potters, saying this will be my creation. So he fashioned it, polished it on this side and on that side, and thought he was making a perfect image to stand for ages—gave it eyes that could not see, ears that could not hear, legs of clay he gave it to stand with a foot on the Atlantic and a foot on the Pacific—to span the continent, like the colossus at Rhodes, and the decree went forth to all Liberals to fall down and worship the beast. Power was given to this beast to torment Conservatives for twelve months. While the master potter was still full of admiration of his own creation, the legs of clay gave way and down came the beast on its face in the dust. Hence the patchwork now before the House. I say that contract is a breach of promise; it ought to be dealt with by the Divorce Committee. If the contract is broken this year, look out for next year. The gentlemen behind this enterprise have found a soft place, and they know how to get more out of the country. The company, aided by the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr.Cox), has only to press the electric button and the premier will dance like the aurora borealis on a frosty night, and scatter the money of the country with liberal profusion. When they want anything they are sure to get it. They did not ask for this railway; they asked for a much smaller thing, but the premier said, 'No, we will give you something greater; we will build two thousand miles of railway and give it to you for ten or twelve years, and we will guarantee your bonds for the construction of the western section to the extent of three-fourths of the cost of construction. There will be no limit to the cost of constructing that Rocky Mountain section. We will pay the interest, if you cannot meet it, because we are at the bottom of the whole thing. We will relax the conditions of the five million deposit, so you can use it almost immediately. My reputation is at stake,' says the premier. I have the people at my back and they will do just what I tell them.' It is extraordinary, how people blind themselves, how this project can be made a party question, and that people can be led to say that it is just the thing, though in their hearts they may not believe in it at all. My impression is that the hon. Secretary of State and Sir Richard Cartwright are as strongly opposed to this scheme as any two men in the country, if they would only give their unbiassed opinion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—If they are not, why did they oppose the carrying out of the contract with British Columbia ? They opposed it as long as they could.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, they did not. Who commenced the Canadian Pacific Railway ? It was the Mackenzie administration. They were prosecuting the work during the five years they were in power.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I know they had some sort of a scheme——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They were building the road west from Winnipeg when it was taken over in 1879.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I am aware of that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What road ? The hon. gentleman means the road from Minnesota to Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I know what I am talking about.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was a member of the government at that time, and I know we spent about twelve millions on the railway, at all events.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The project was forced upon the Mackenzie government against their grain, and if they had not been afraid that British Columbia would leave the union, it would not have been carried through. This government will be famous in history for its infamous contracts. Let us review briefly some of the more important contracts entered into, and concessions made by the present government, showing how some ministers disregard the interests of the country. Take the Stikine-Teslin Narrow Gauge Railway, a contract under which 3,750,000 acres of the cream of the Yukon gold region was to be given to a company—for what? Really for nothing. Access to that proposed railway had to be through thirty miles of United States waters, by a river, part of which is frozen for five months in the year, barring access to the railway for that period. That railway was to end in Teslin Lake, which is frozen over for six months of the year, and the terminus was to be six hundred miles from Dawson.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—What clause of the Bill is the hon. gentleman discussing?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I am showing that the government is not to be trusted to make a contract in the interests of the country. That is one of their contracts which was made, not in the interests of the country, but in the interest of a company. Then we come to the purchase of the Drummond County Railway. We all know the fight we had in this House over that scheme, and how the Senate saved a million dollars to the country. Then comes the Treadgold concession, under which miles of the Yukon water courses are handed over to a company for a nominal consideration, much to the injury of small companies and individual miners in subjecting them to exorbitant water rates. The Treadgold Company was allowed, under its concession, to charge one dollar per hour for a miner's inch of water. The whole scheme was challenged in this House, and more particularly the clause establishing an excessive water rate, resulting in a reduction to twenty-five cents, which show how unsound and one-sided the concession was. It gave to this company the monopoly of water, a necessity, without which miners cannot live or carry on their work. Then comes the leasing of miles of rivers in the Yukon district to the members and relations of one family—I think about twelve miles, to people all bearing the same name. That could not have been done in the interest of the country. It was due to political exigency. And now comes a more overwhelming concession, and one-sided contract on which no sane or business man would enter with his own money, though he might be reckless enough to risk the property and money of others as is being done in this case. I do not oppose this Bill from party feeling. If a Conservative government should introduce such a Bill, I would do as I am doing now, endeavour to expose the fallacy of it, and show what a bad bargain was made. I should like to think that the commerce of the country required this road, that all the habitable lands of the Dominion to which access can be had are occupied, and that the time had come to open up more land for settlement, but none of these conditions prevail. Who has asked for this grand costly railway? Not the Grand Trunk Railway. The general public did not ask by petition or in public meetings for this railway. The provincial governments and municipalities who are in close contact with the people, did not ask for the railway. The Boards of Trade of our largest commercial centres, who understand the position and needs of transportation, did not ask for this railway when they were before the Transportation Commission.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Does British Columbia ask for it?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—No.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Does British Columbia want it?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—There are men in all parts of the county who would like to see a large expenditure of public money. They say it does not cost them anything individually, so let it go on. I know there are many in Victoria and all over the country who think just that way. Seeing this railway was not asked for by the commerce of the country nor by the people in meeting assembled, we have two factors in the case, and what are they, as the basis of the scheme? First we have the jealousy of the Grand Trunk Railway Company of the unrivalled prosperity of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and second, we have the vanity of the premier of the Dominion. He wanted to make a name for himself, and carry out the affair single-handed. These two factors are the whole thing. As you know, the company asked aid for a railway from North Bay to the Northwest, or perhaps to the coast. They asked for $6.500 per mile, and 5,000 acres of land per mile, but the premier said no, I will not give you that, but I will give you more. We have in the Northwest to-day, railways doing excellent work opening up the country, and I say it is most unfair that government money should be given for the construction of competing roads. I would have no objection to this company going in there on their own account and unaided. It would be fair competition, but this company is going in backed by the government, and the unfair competition will kill the smaller railways which are doing so much for that part of Canada. If there were not millions of acres of unoccupied land south of this projected railway, if in the east it did not duplicate the Intercolonial Railway, if it was not being given away for a certain number of years for nothing, I would vote for the Bill without hesitation, but there are millions of acres of land unoccupied which are accessible by existing roads, and therefore, I cannot vote for the Bill. With regard to the amendment of the leader of the opposition in favour of government ownership, that is offered as an alternative. We have a scheme before us which will involve a large expenditure of the public money. We have either to face this project or own the railway, and of the two evils, I prefer government ownership, though I put myself on record against it last year, and would oppose it to-day under any other circumstances. The true policy, in my opinion, would be, since we have to build the road, to own it. If we were not building this road, then I would say help the railways in the Northwest to construct branch lines, and get the accessible lands settled first of all, and then when you want more lands opened up, it will be time enough to build this northern route, but not sooner.

With regard to my own province, there is nothing in the contract to compel the company to commence construction on the Pacific before the very last day and all the rest of the line is completed. I have an amendment to propose to that part of the Bill which I fully expect my hon. friend from Victoria to support, in order to do justice to a province which contributes per head more towards the public works of Canada than any other province. I believe the company has left the matter of commencing construction on the Pacific slope within a reasonable time out of the contract to use it as a lever on the provincial government to obtain land grants and money subsidies as a condition of making an early commencement. The whole scheme is extravagant, premature and thoroughly unbusinesslike. It is unfair to other companies and an extinguisher to the Intercolonial Railway. It is a reckless, one-sided agreement, favouring the company throughout, with no corresponding benefit to the country, and I shall vote against the Bill.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The hon. gentleman from British Columbia has expressed his disapproval of referring to past history, but it is almost impossible to deal with a great public question of this kind without making some reference to the past history of this country. We have had two or three very important railway schemes which have been aided by the people of Canada, and in discussing this project. it is impossible to do so, without at least making some comparisons with the experience of the past for the purpose of ascertaining how this project bears comparison with former projects. In referring to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, my hon. friend was rather severe on the Liberal party. If he had thought for a moment he would hardly have risked his reputation as a senator by saying that the Reform party were bitterly opposed from start to finish to the construction of that railway. My hon. friend has surely not forgotten everything that took place with regard to the inception of that scheme. Opposition was offered to the construction of the Lake Superior section, because at that time it was thought that the great lakes would largely serve our purposes, in the early experience of opening up that country, and that if, after a number of years, the country should prove to be productive, and more extensive transportation facilities were needed, they could be furnished. Mr. Mackenzie's scheme was first to use the lakes from the prairies to Port Arthur ; then, when an all-rail route was proved to be necessary, it could be constructed. My hon. friend surely must remember the abuse that was heaped upon Mr. Mackenzie at the time he purchased the steel rails required for that particular section from Port Arthur to Winnipeg ; how he was condemned for having gone into such a large purchase at a time when the best business men in the Dominion thought it was most opportune to secure them. I notice my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, shakes his head. We can all be wise after the event. There are many men in Canada today who are poorer than they would have been had my hon. friend been able to tell them some months ago that stocks were going to drop. It is the same with regard to Mr. Mackenzie's purchase of the steel rails; he acted on the best advice that he could get. But I am not arguing whether that purchase was prudent or imprudent; I simply call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that the purchase was made, and that the construction of the road was well under way from Port Arthur to Winnipeg before the change of government. Yet my hon. friend says, as if he was speaking by the book, that the Reform party held up the Canadian Pacific Railway scheme from start to finish. Now he draws attention to the fact that the contract for the mountain section was not carried out as it was first made. He knows that that contract provided for an impossibility. At that time, we had no transportation facilities, no way of getting men and material for the work, and it was absolutely impossible to complete the road within the time agreed upon. What did Mr. Mackenzie do, as a wise man? He negotiated with the province of British Columbia for an extension of time.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Will the hon. gentleman say what we got then?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The government asked for an extension of time.

Hon. Mr MACDONALD (B.C.)—The government offered the province $750,000, ostensibly for an extension of time, but truly to buy out the whole rights of the province to the railway. I went to Lord Dufferin myself about the matter, and showed him the minute of council passed by Mr. Mackenzie. Another member of the House went with me, and Lord Dufferin told us that he had said to Mr. Mackenzie that he ought to be ashamed to allow a thing of that kind to leave his office.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—My hon. friend has been condemning us for going into past history in connection with those matters. Now he is drawing our attention to a private conversation between himself and Lord Dufferin, and he states it with a good deal of evidence of sincerity, but the condition of things is this: Lord Dufferin is dead, and we cannot tell whether the hon. gentleman is stating a fact or not.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Does the hon. gentleman doubt my word?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It may or may not be, but my hon. friend is dealing with very ancient history, history that cannot be unearthed, because there is no one living that knows anything about it but himself.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—No one in this House can convict me of a lie in all these years I have been here, and the hon. gentleman cannot do it.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I am not attempting it, and my hon. friend need not be excited. I have been trying to refresh my hon. friend's memory.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It is very clear.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It does not appear to be, because the hon. gentleman has been dealing with things which are not in line with the facts at all. I am trying to show where he is mistaken. An arrangement was made whereby the time for the construction of the road through British Columbia was to be extended. The hon. gentleman admits that Mr. Mackenzie made an arrangement for that extension, and that the money was paid, so he kept faith with the people of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The hon. gentleman is quite wrong; the money was never paid or accepted.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I do not remember——

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—But I remember.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Senate threw out the Bill. It was passed in the House of Commons where the government had a majority.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—That may possibly have been a good act on the part of the Senate—I do not know.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Keep to the facts.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I have been drawing my hon. friend's attention to some inaccuracy in his remarks about the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. As far as I am concerned personally, I was opposed to the construction of the section north of the lakes at the time it was gone into. I thought it would have been better to have deferred the building of that portion until we knew more about the Northwest. However, our friends differed from us and that section was built. I am glad that it was built. We are all friends of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I admire that company. They are a credit to themselves and to Canada. They have done a great deal to develop the resources of the Dominion, and fill up Manitoba and the Northwest. It is a good and creditable line. I earnestly hope that when the Grand Trunk Pacific is built, that it will contribute as much towards the settlement and development of new territory as the Canadian Pacific Railway has done, and that it will be as great an advantage to Canada. My hon friend said something about referring this Bill to the Divorce Committee. His friends have intimated that if they get into power, even though this Bill does pass, they will take advantage of the divorce power, and make it their own absolutely, whether it is started by the Grand Trunk Railway or not, and whether it is wholly or only partly built. My hon. friend's leader has announced that the purpose of his party is to own and operate the road. The operation of the road shall have my attention a little later on.

Now, it is rather singular to see my hon. friend from the Pacific coast opposing the construction of this road. I cannot understand it. I asked a friend a few minutes ago, if the hon. gentleman from Victoria lived at a place called Port Simpson, which is likely to be the terminus of the Grand Trunk Pacific, would he oppose it ? I have come to the conclusion that as the hon. gentlemen does not live at a place which will be served by the Grand Trunk Pacific he is rather jealous. Victoria is a very handsome and progressive city, and I have no doubt the hon. gentleman would like to see the trade of British Columbia focussed there and at Vancouver. I have no doubt he feels a little jealous at the idea of a line being constructed to Port Simpson, and trade, which otherwise would go to Victoria and Vancouver, centered there. But my hon. friend cannot expect that all the trade which goes across the continent will be dumped into the lap of the city in which he lives. He must expect that in the near future, ports will be opened up north of Victoria. I have no feeling against the city where the hon. gentleman lives. I hope it will hold its own, and that there will be plenty of trade for all the ports on our Pacific coast. From year to year, as Manitoba and the Northwest develop, I look forward to a very large amount of the surplus products of that part of Canada being exported from the Pacific coast, and I have not the slightest doubt that Victoria and Vancouver will yet grow to be wealthy and large exporting cities. I believe in the matter of mineral resources, British Columbia has merely broken the crust, and that in the near future, very important developments will take place in that province. I believe the Canadian section of the Rocky Mountains will be found to be as rich as any portion of the range in the United States. What is needed there is development. Trouble has beset the province during the last few years, but they will get over that, and the mineral wealth of British Columbia will unquestionably build up very large centres of trade and there will be plenty of room for two or three other large coast cities besides Victoria and Vancouver, which will do a large import and export business, and my hon. friend need not be the least afraid on behalf of Victoria. In all these public improvements we should cultivate a spirit of loyalty to the best interests of the Dominion, and not get into our mangers, and snarl at everything that is not bringing cream to our own doors. I hope my hon. friend will form a better opinion of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and, like others, when he comes to realize the advantages it will confer on that country, he will come down and frankly confess that one of the brightest and best days in the history of Canada was when that scheme was undertaken.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I shall say so if it is.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Another insinuation my hon. friend made was that the premier of this Dominion was trying to make a name for himself in the construction of this transcontinental road. I am sorry my hon. friend made this remark. I do not think the premier's career so far would warrant any man in casting a slur upon him, or questioning the purity of his motives. I have never in my business or public life met a more humble or unassuming man, or one more patriotic and devoted to what he conceives to be the best interests of the country than Sir Wilfrid Laurier. In some things he may differ a little from us. We may not all be able to see things just in the same light as he sees them. But we know we can rest assured that when he comes to a conclusion with regard to a great undertaking like the Grand Trunk Pacific, the idea of making a name for himself in connection with it, is the most remote thing from his mind. The object and aim that he has is to do something for Canada, to do something that in years to come, when the great good that will be accomplished by the construction of that line will be referred to, people of this country will unanimously declare that it was a good thing in the history of Canada when Sir Wilfrid Laurier and those associated with him conceived the idea of constructing a line such as the Grand Trunk Pacific. I heard the remark that dropped from the Secretary of State in his introduction of this Bill. There was one feature of those remarks that I admired, and it was this: While it is desirable to build a line through that section of country, which would tend largely to open up and develop new territory, by connecting it with the Grand Trunk, and thus bringing to the doors of all the manufacturing institutions in Ottawa and Quebec a most convenient way of shipping any goods that they had to the Northwest, and supplying the demands of our friends there; that there was no other line that could accord better or greater facilities than the Grand Trunk Railway, because it had connections everywhere. Now, that is true, and it is a most desirable thing in itself, because when we build a road that has in the older provinces such a very large connection as the Grand Trunk has, we are building a road that will bring the people of this Dominion together on lines that could not possibly have been accomplished by an independent road which has not those connections, and in that way will be most valuable to the people of the older provinces. They will also be valuable to the people of the new provinces, because we hope that we will deal with each other to a greater extent in the future than we have done in the past. We hope that Canada will become largely self-sustaining, and the people of the Northwest will supply us with a great many things that we can take from them, and which I certainly hope we will take.

We earnestly hope, on the other hand, that for the very large amount of money that has to be spent to produce the road that is now under consideration, and that has been spent upon the surveys which have been made; by the immigration policy that has been adopted, I may say the magnificent and desirable immigration policy that has been followed whereby thousands have been brought into that country, the strain upon the resources of the older provinces will, to some extent, be relieved when we realize that we will have a large market there for many articles that our people can produce to advantage, and the result is that in business lines we will be very closely together. Consequently I feel that the country will develop quicker than it possibly could develop if we had only an independent line that had no such connections as the Grand Trunk has. My hon. friend has drawn attention to the fact that the government are giving away this line for some years virtually for nothing. He says they are to receive no interest for the first seven years, and then for three years, if the finances of the company or the earnings of the line are not sufficient, to pay the interest, the amount in default will have to be added to the gross debt of the road. If my hon. friend knows anything about railways—and I am sure he does, because he is an intelligent reader—he knows perfectly well that the first three or four years is the most expensive experience that a railway has. There is not a railway in Canada to-day which has not had virtually to be built a second time. The Grand Trunk was first built, and then for three or four years they were rebuilding. In several ways they had to expend very large amount of moneys. The Canadian Pacific Railway, after its construction, were for years rebuilding, and they are not through with rebuilding yet. There are many trestle works and many other works to-day that are not in as complete a state as the Canadian Pacific Railway would like to have them. I dare say the Grand Trunk Pacific expect that in the first seven years of the existence of that road they will be called upon to pay a very large amount in the way of second construction. There is no doubt about it; it is the experience of every road. There is no road on the continent that has not had that experience, and I have no doubt it will take the Grand Trunk Pacific a very considerable number of years, perhaps all of those first seven years to get that road into a condition that will make it a first-class line. Then, after they get it into that state they will have to pay interest upon the amount invested. My hon. friend talks about government ownership. I am sure that any statesman and member of this or the other House who will cast his eye for a moment over the experiences of Canada in connection with the Intercolonial Railway, and in the light of that consider the question of government ownership and operations of railways—any patriotic, honest statesman would say, if that is to be experience of Canada in the future, it is better that we should have no more of it.

What has been our experience with regard to the Intercolonial Railway? We have some $66,000,000 of money sunk in that road. The people of this Dominion have been paying interest on the money invested in that line from year to year. There has not been less than fifty millions of money paid in interest alone upon the money that is sunk in the government railway, not one dollar of which has ever been returned from the earnings of the line. Does my hon. friend want us to go into an experience of that kind again? He surely does not. The Intercolonial railway has, I admit, served a fairly good purpose. I dare say it has contributed to keeping down freight rates. It served the purpose for which it was built admirably, in that sense, but as a money earning road, as a road returning to the treasury of this country a decent reasonable annual return for the money sunk in it, it has never done it for one year. Now that is the condition after thirty years of experience in government ownership. Do we want to build another road, invest fifty eight or sixty million more, pay interest at three per cent, which would be two milion and a half and put up for all time to come, with a road that is simply going to earn its own running expenses? We do not want that I thought this would be the experience of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Allow me to tell those who advocate government ownership and government operation of railways that there is no place in the world's history where you can point out that that system of owning and operating roads has been a success, has met the expectation of the country or people that inaugurated it. In Australia there was fair progress made. But recent years proved most conclusively that it is a drain upon the treasury of that country in place of being a source of revenue. Take the experience of the United States, or the experience of any country that has invested money in that way and throughout the experience has been that a road operated under political influence never can be kept free from that political influence. It will crop up and it will work out. I believe there have been men at the head of the railway department in Canada who were honestly and conscientiously determined to operate the Intercolonial Railway in the very best interests of this country, to do the very best they could to get a return out of it and after all they were unable to do it simply because the constituencies through which it ran always had some little advantage they wanted to get, something for friends and so on.

You cannot possibly relieve yourself and keep yourself free of these political influences, and when you cannot do that you cannot run a road on clean commercial lines, and lines that will bring a return to the people of this country. Consequently, I think that we have had enough of government ownership. We had better not attempt it any further. Let us accept and benefit by the experience we have had in the past, and in connection with this road, I do earnestly hope that our experience will be better from the money consideration than it has been in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. There is one other point to which I will draw the attention of the hon. gentleman and then, with the permission of the House, I shall move the odjournment of the debate. My hon. friend has advocated giving government aid to the company. He said the better plan would be to give a certain amount of aid and let the company built the road themselves.

I think the feeling of this country has grown stronger in opposition to granting money for nothing to railway companies. I think the feeling is that we have done too much in that line, that we have given too much of our money and too much land to railway companies, and the policy that will continue in that line is not the policy that the people of this country will support. I believe that is correct. I believe the earning capacity of these lines, when built, will be such that they ought to be able to make a reasonable return for the aid that they get, and I very much admire the policy introduced by the Hon. Mr. Blair, when he was Minister of Railways, whereby in any aid that was granted it was stipulated that any service that railway was called upon to give to the government of the country, such as carrying mails, military stores, or anything of that kind, was to be counted as against the interest of the money that had been loaned to them. I think that was a good change. I thought it was an improvement that might be pardonable, but to give out and out grants of money for the construction of a road such as we have done in the past, is a policy that I do not think the people of this country are in a temper to continue much longer. My opinion is that the country has now been so far settled and developed, that wherever roads are built, unless it is a most inhospitable region—and thank heaven we have not many of them—that they ought to look forward to earning money for the return invested, and the sooner we lead all railway projectors to realize that the government's financial door is closed against the grants that we have been accustomed to give in the past, and that the lands that the country has will be held for actual settlers in order that when they come in they may get a home for themselves, the better for Canada.

With the permission of the House, I move that the debate be adjourned.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY BILL.

DEBATE RESUMED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Resuming the further adjourned debate on motion for second reading (Bill 72) An Act to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act, and the resolution of the Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell in amendment thereto.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN said : In resuming the discussion of the subject which the House is called upon to give special attention to, I desire to present some arguments, which I hope will be considered pardonable, on the whole scheme and the reasons why I consider that it is necessary that we should have another transcontinental line. I admit that the amendments before the House would naturally confine us to two points, one the extension of time for the construction of the road, and the second the increased guarantee on the mountain section.

That is virtually the Bill before the House now, but I think I may be allowed to travel outside of the field, as outlined in the Bill, and give some little consideration to the whole question. I endeavoured to answer, as best I could, the remarks that were made by the hon. gentleman from Victoria last night. I had not the privilege of listening to the hon. member from Westmoreland, for whom I entertain a very high regard, and whom I should have liked very much to have followed had I been here. I was, unfortunately, unable to be present during the course of his address. In the first place I believe that in the sober serious thought of the people of Canada who have carefully looked over the relations between the provinces and the general developments which has taken place, a second transcontinental line is an absolute and imperative necessity. As I stated last night, the Canadian Pacific Railway has done a great deal for Canada. It has rendered admirable service, but owing to the location of that line, which closely hugs the north shore of Lake Superior for about one hundred and fifty miles, an interior line behind the height of land is necessary—a line that will open up a new avenue between the east and the great Northwest. There is a great deal of force in the argument that the water-ways of this country will greatly facilitate the carrying of the surplus products from the Northwest; and the transportation of the necessaries of life into that country for its increasing population. But, while that is the case, owing to the enormous increase of population and of products for export, a six or seven months avenue via water is not sufficient, however cheap or good it may be. We want an all the year round system whereby the products of that country can be carried to the seaboard at all seasons. We must admire our water-ways, which are contributing so largely to the development of the country, and I have no doubt that from year to year very large warehouses and elevators will be erected upon the south shore of Georgian bay, on the west end of that bay, and on the eastern side of Lakes Huron and Erie. I have no doubt, at the different railway points, it will be found necessary to erect very large warehouses to receive the grain required for the millers throughout Ontario as well as for export. But after all, while that will be the case, the focusing point at which the greater part of the grain will be gathered will undoubtedly be Port Arthur and Fort William. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have erected very extensive warehouses there. The Canadian Northern is following on the same line, and I have no doubt when the Grand Trunk Pacific is built they also will establish a connection at Thunder Bay and erect very large warehouses to store grain for export. But after all that is done, and with all the facilities and cheapness resulting from the utilization of our water-ways, we cannot afford to be for four or five months of the year frozen up, without an ample outlet for the products of that western country, if it was found advisable to export them during the winter months.

Another point to which I would draw the attention of the House is this: I do not think it fair or just to grant aid to the Grand Trunk Railway to enable them to build a line from Quebec to Winnipeg without also aiding the Canadian Northern and the Trans-Canada railways. These lines were hammering at the doors of parliament for aid to construct a road that would virtually follow the same course that will be adopted for the Grand Trunk Pacific. The question which I am sure presented itself to the government is this, whether it is better for us to offer a uniform system to all the different applications and to all the constructed roads, or build a first-class, well-graded line with easy curves, built on the very best possible style known, laid with heavy steel rails, and give to all roads running into Winnipeg running powers over that line to eastern points. If the principle of allowing all lines to utilize that road during the months they would want it most—and I have no doubt the government have come to the conclusion it can be so adopted, it is a much better scheme to have subsidized the Grand Trunk Pacific than the Canadian Northern and then possibly another line, and we do not know how many more that might look for subsidies. Under present conditions, the government would be able to say we have built one first-class line. We have let it to the Grand Trunk Pacific with the specific understanding that the government have the right to grant running powers over that road from Winnipeg east on equally low terms with those on which the Grand Trunk Pacific is permitted to use that line.

If the Canadian Northern want to use it, they are to get the right to use it. If the Canadian Pacific Railway should decide to take advantage of the provisions of this contract, there is nothing in the world to prevent them doing so, and if the Trans-Canada line or any other line undertake to extend their road west of Winnipeg they have nothing to do but to apply to the government, and terms can be arranged by which they can utilize that line to the best advantage during the months that the lakes are frozen, because I feel quite sure that it will not be used during the months of navigation to the extent that it would be if there was no navigation at all. The reason why the government came to the conclusion that this was the best scheme to adopt is owing to the fact that for the summer months when navigation is open, the line will not be overburdened with work. It may do but a limited business. Undoubtedly, along the line there will be some business to be done, but it will be very limited when compared with what it would be if they had not the lakes and water-ways to contend with ; but owing to the fact, traffic will be limited and viewing it from that standpoint they came to the conclusion that an arrangement of this kind would be the best thing under all the circumstances and I am willing to give them the opportunity of working it out as I have no doubt that they made thorough and careful investigation before they came to the conclusion that a line built in the way that they propose, would be the best scheme to adopt. Another thing, in my humble opinion, is that a line such as proposed by the Grand Trunk Pacific is an imperial necessity. We know that we are at present on the most peaceable terms with our neighbours to the south. I had the privilege of drawing the attention of this chamber to this point last year. I do not think it will be considered amiss if I again refer to it. We live on the most peaceable terms with our friends to the south, and we most earnestly hope that the day will never come in the history of this country when we will be forced to take up arms to defend ourselves against an invasion from the United States. We want to live on the very best and most friendly terms with them. Allow me also to draw the attention of the House to the fact that England is one of the most peace-loving nations on earth. She advocates peace. She never advocates war, but after all there is not a nation on earth that makes such preparations for war as England does. She keeps the largest navy, larger than any other two nations in the world. She does not keep the largest standing army, but she undoubtedly has a well equipped, thoroughly efficient up-to-date army, notwithstanding the fact that she is the strongest and foremost advocate of peace the world knows. While we advocate peace, and hope it will continue, after all we are justified in looking into the future and in doing so we must come to the conclusion that if any difficulty were to arise between us and the United States—and as I said, and I cannot repeat it too often, we hope that is may never come—under present conditions a small steamer loaded with two or three guns could demolish the Canadian Pacific Railway for one hundred and nfty miles along the north shore of Lake Superior and cut our Dominion in two. The result would be that the population of the east would not be able to render any assistance to the west, and the population of tne west would not be able to render any assistance to the east. Again we know perfectly well that matters are very much disturbed in the far east at the present moment. We know that the United States has taken a very prominent part in questions of nationl defence, far more than she ever did previously ; we know that she is spending this year over $80,000,000 of money upon her navy. We know that she is coming to the front as a naval power as rapidly as she possibly can. We know that the United States have within the last year decided that they will deepen the Erie canal which runs from Buffalo to Albany. We know that they purpose cutting it to a depth of twenty-one feet, so that it will carry any ordinary boat from the Hudson through to the upper lakes. While she is doing that I dare say from a trades standpoint, to compete successfully with the Canadian water-ways, it is at the same time opening up an avenue by which they will be able to run gun-boats from New York or any point on the Atlantic straight up to the great lakes. There is no doubt about that. I do not say that that will ever occur. We hope it never will. We hope there will be no necessity for it, but these things are being done. Now is it not wise on our part to construct a road at a respectable distance removed from danger, beyond the height of land, beyond the enormous rocky regions which in the case of trouble rising will form a protection to us. The region is very rough.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—What about the section between Quebec and Moncton ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I am drawing the attention of the House to that portion of the road between Quebec and Winnipeg. That portion of the road between Quebec and Moncton will have to run very close to the northeast corner of Maine. That is quite true, but when we get to Quebec we are fairly safe. We can take the eastern line and run down to tide water or we will have two lines. We will have the Intercolonial Railway which will be undoubtedly an advantage to us. If the first line should be interfered with, we will have a second line, and if they interfere with the second we will have our own eastern line on the north shore of the St. Lawrence which will carry us to tide water. The most dangerous point is that point along the north shore of Lake Superior. I contend that from that standpoint a second transcontinental road is an absolute necessity.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN (Alexandria)—May I ask my hon. friend if the Grand Trunk Pacific did not give notice that they would build from North Bay so as to avoid that very point ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Yes. I might say in reply to my hon. friend that the Grand Trunk applied for a charter to build from North Bay west. There is no doubt about that ; but, after all, they would not give us the advantage of an interior line the whole distance. We might have from North Bay west, but there is a very important section both in Ontario and Quebec that would not benefit by the construction of a road of that kind, and, after all, we had better be honest with ourselves and admit that we are selfish, and we cannot blame any province, if it is selfish. We in Ontario would like to get that road and the people of Quebec would like to get that road. Can you condemn them for it ? The people of Nova Scotia are the parties who are largely, no doubt, at the back of the movement for the construction of the road from Quebec to Moncton. Can you blame them ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is not one foot of it in Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—They must have been a very strong element in the government advocating the construction of the section, or it would not have been adopted. There must have been a strong feeling in the province of Nova Scotia that the construction of that line would tend to bring the surplus produce of the Northwest down to the seaports of that province. There must have been a strong conviction that when they were spending a very large amount of money to secure as great a share of the traffic in western produce as possible the reason which made them advocate the construction of that line was to shorten the distance the produce would have to be hauled to reach Halifax or any other part in Nova Scotia. There is no doubt about that. From the Quebec standpoint, we all admit that the immigration policy that has been adopted and carried out in Canada for many years has been to get the people to settle in Manitoba and the Northwest. We have been spending four or five hundred thousand dollars a year on immigration, and I think it is well spent. I am glad to see that there has been a magnificent success attained in the bringing of people into this country, and it is settlers we want. There has been an enormous amount of money spent. In all the immigration pamphlets that have been issued, every effort that has been put forth has been largely on behalf of Manitoba and the Northwest. We are satisfied that that should be so, but after all the time has come when there is a section in the province of Quebec that our people believe should be opened up. There are large areas of cultivable land there to be settled. I cannot speak from personal knowledge, but reading the reports that have been published, and taking the opinions of men who have spoken apparently intelligently on that subject ; there must be sections of land in the province of Quebec, between Lake St. John and Lake Abitibi that could be developed and become suitable as homes for settlers.

I had a letter a short time ago from the state of Illinois. There are quite a number of Canadians who are settled in that state, and for some reason or other they have been speaking recently of migrating to Canada, and naturally they would like to go to the province of Quebec. They are French and speak the French language. Their instincts lead them to form associations with their own people and who can blame them.

They want to go to Quebec and I had a letter of inquiry from a friend of my own, if there were any sections there that those people could go and settle on. I wrote to the premier of Quebec and got information from him and wrote back. He thanked me kindly for the information I had afforded, and undertook to send it to those people as being the very information they required, and I do not know, but that it may be the means of bringing a large influx of people from that section to the district of Quebec, that will be opened up by this line. Would that not be a good thing? It is population we want. In New Ontario it is generally considered that there is a district of country through which this road will run that is equally as good as some sections in Manitoba and the Northwest. It is said we have a clay belt there that eventually will be utilized for agricultural pursuits, that will produce many things with which a considerable export trade can be carried on. We hope that is the case. I was talking to a man a few days ago who told me he had put in eight years exploring in that country. He has put in every summer and during that time three winters. He says there is a district of land which is capable of being utilized in agricultural pursuits quite as large as the settled portion of eastern Ontario. If that is the case it will be a good thing for the province to open that portion of the country. Besides agricultural land there is a very large amount of timber there, that can be taken out. There are no facilities for taking it out by the streams, because the streams run towards Hudson Bay, but by having a railway so that the timber can be marketed, there are large areas of forest which will be exceedingly valuable. If we can develop that part of Ontario, I think it will be a good think. Ontario is anxious for increase of population just the same as any other province, and the building of this road will contribute to the development and prosperity of every one of these provinces even through New Brunswick where I am rather disposed to think the road has not many friends, but after all I believe there is a district through which this road proposes to run that will be opened up and although it has a very sparce settlement now I have no doubt that towns will spring up there and population will increase. Take the northern portion of Ontario north of Lake Superior where the Canadian Pacific Railway runs, consider what has happened there. Look at the centres of trade that have been established where there is apparently nothing but rocks and nothing for the people to do unless at some landing or to work on the Canadian Pacific Railway line. After all, towns have grown up and some sections have been utilized for agricultural purposes and considerable has been accomplished. That is a good thing. If that is done in a region so rocky, rough and so undesirable from a settlers standpoint along the north shore, what will be the result if you open a section of country that is supposed to contain agricultural lands, that is supposed to contain a very large amount of timber, and also that I earnestly hope will prove to contain coa that will supply some portions of this Dominion. From an imperial standpoint thi line is a necessity. From a peace and defensive standpoint it is a necessity, and therefore I consider that the building of the road is beyond all question a patriotic act, and something which we should endeavour to carry out as rapidly as possible. Some of the advocates of imperial federation and the policy proposed by Mr. Chamberlain say that if a proper development takes place in Manitoba and the Northwest, we can supply England with her daily food from the beginning of the year to the end of it. Well, I should be glad indeed if we could do it. I have that faith in our country which enables me to say conscientiously that I believe that inside of ten years the population of this Dominion will be so increased that we will be enabled to supply the foodstuffs required by the mother country. There is another point to which I want to draw the attention of the House. We know that we have now a very large influx of population into Manitoba and the Northwest. We hope it may continue, but should there be a failure of crops for a year or two, and we earnestly hope that no such catastrophe may overtake that country, it would give it a set back from which it would not recover for fifty years, if we had not public works under construction which would enable the people to earn a living, and to take up locations and make homes for themselves. We know that the construction of this railway will be a decided advantage in that regard. There is no immigration policy on earth in a new country equal to public works well and properly carried out. Take the history of this contenant. What did the United States do after the close of the war, when they obtained their independence? The first think they did was to spend money lavishly in building canals. They built no less than thirty-eight canals, some of them over three hundred miles long, at an enormous cost. They are valuless to-day, but they were the means of bringing population into the United States. People in the United States got to learn that where there were plenty of public works going on, and where there was an opportunity of earning money, immigrants would go there, and although the government spent some $200,000,000 in the construction of canals which are to-day, to a large extent, useless, what did they accomplish? They brought population into the states. It supplied the people who came into the states with plenty of work, and they earned money. What was the first start in Canada after the close of the United States war. Why, it was the building of the Welland canal upon which a very considerable amount of money was spent. There is no doubt about that—and very extravagantly spent. I do not know but there was, perhaps, more extravagance in connection with the construction of that work than with any work that was ever inaugurated in Canada; but, after all it was the means of creating employment for the people who came from the old country, and we can point to homes in Ontario to-day where the occupants of those homes earned the first dollar they ever made in the construction of the Welland canal. In the construction of that work and I believe the way they were paid was that they got part script and part money, and for that script they could go to any place in Ontario and draw land. In several sections of this province there are yet living the heirs of those who worked on that very work and drew land with their script. You have a similar experience in connection with the construction of this railway. All over the civilized world people will hear of the enormous public works and large expenditure of money in Canada, and will pour into the country to work on the road, and after working a year or two will become settlers and help to develop the country. From that standpoint this road will be a great benefit to Canada.

There is another point to which I would direct the attention of the House, and that is the value of this route for the exporting of cattle from Manitoba and the Northwest, which is becoming a large and important business. The cattle have to go out by rail; they cannot very well be shipped on boats. It is well, therefore, that there should be roads through the northern as well as through the southern parts of the Northwest Territories. These cattle will probably be shipped in the early part of the season before the opening of navigation. That is a point on which my hon. friends from the Northwest will be in a better position to speak than I am, but I have no doubt that the exportation of cattle will be largely over those lines, and the better, the straighter, the more complete this Grand Trunk Pacific line is the better will be the facilities to get those cattle to the sea-board.

There has been a great deal of cavalling with regard to the probable cost of the line north of Lake Superior from say one hundred miles west of Quebec until we come to the eastern border of Manitoba. There has been, and no doubt there is, a good deal of guess work as to what the probable cost of the line will be, and especially the portion through the Rocky mountains and westward to the coast. The reason is simply this; the cost of getting in supplies is a serious matter in building a road through an unsettled district where there are no roads. The Canadian Pacific Railway in building their line north of Lake Superior realized this. I have no doubt they would have liked very much to have gone north of the height of land, but when they came to realize the cost of getting supplies across the rocky ridges north of the lake to support those engaged in building the work they thought it better to keep close to the shore where for one hundred and fifty miles along Lake Superior they could deliver supplies as they wished during the progress of construction. That was very great advantage. The Grand Trunk Railway has had its engineers over the line proposed from Edmonton to the Pacific. They have made a through investigation of it and have come to the conclusion that a guarantee of $30,000 a mile would not represent anything like three-fourths of the cost of constructing the section from the foot of the Rocky mountains to the Pacific coast. And I have no doubt they are correct when we come to consider the cost of getting supplies into that district. We have the history of the Canadian Pacific Railway and of all the transcontinental lines in the United States, and we know that it has been found impossible to construct the Rocky mountain section of any one of them for less than $60,000 a mile. I have no doubt that the Rocky mountain section of the Grand Trunk Pacific will cost as much, and one thing that will largely contribute to that cost will be the difficulty of getting supplies into that district. I have no doubt that the Manitoba section can be constructed for from $13,000 to $15,000 per mile, because that prairie section can be easily constructed and supplies are available along the road. Nearly everything that is needed can be procured, and that will tend to cheapen the cost of constructing that section. But when you come to the section extending from Winnipeg to within one hundred miles of Quebec you have a very different state of things, and it will unquestionably cost more. I do not object to the government guarantee of $13,000 per mile for the prairie section ; if they had gone as high as $15,000, although I believe that will more than build the road, there is no danger after all of that section of the line ever going back into the hands of the government. The only danger is in connection with the eastern section and the Rocky mountain section. I do not think there is much danger of either of them going back, because if the Rocky mountain section cost $60,000 a mile the Grand Trunk Railway would have to provide one-third of the cost. That would mean an expenditure, at the estimate I have given of $15,000 per mile for the prairie section, which would amount to a large sum, and the Grand Trunk Railway would be very careful about taking any risk of expending that much of their own money if there was danger of losing the road and having it fall into the hands of the government. I do not think there is any probability of that occurring ; I think it will be a successful undertaking.

Keewatin is an immense territory. We do not know as yet what it will develop into, but this line will pass through a portion of that district before it enters Manitoba. It will be the first line to touch Keewatin at all. I have heard some one say who has traversed the country west of Hudson bay, that there is nothing to prevent a portion of that district becoming a good grazing country, and we hope that the ultimate result of building this road will be to develop that section of the province. Then we have the opening up of Hudson bay itself. We earnestly hope that a great fishing industry will be developed in that bay, and that one of the first things done as the result of building this road will be to construct a branch line that will tap the waters of that magnificent inland sea. The Ontario government is now extending a line northward towards Hudson bay, and I have no doubt that very soon an important fishing industry will be developed there. Then as to minerals. I have seen excellent specimens of gold from the shore of Hudson bay, as good as I have ever seen from any part of the world. If gold should be discovered there in paying quantities we will have a very large mining industry and that also will furnish traffic. All these things will stimulate trade, attract population and increase the wealth of the country, and it is such increase that we want.

Now with regard to the two points that the Bill asks for, I think both of them are wise and prudent. In the first place I feel certain in my own mind that a guarantee of $30,000 a mile would not do much more than cover half the expenses from the foot of the Rocky mountains to the Pacific. It would require about double that amount per mile. In that view you could hardly consider a guarantee of $30,000 a mile on a road that would cost $60,000 a mile a serious risk. A mortgage for one-half its value could not be regarded as a very great concession to the company. You can generally mortgage property for one-half its value. I have no doubt the bonds would bring nearly as much with the guarantee of $30,000 a mile as they will under the proposed guarantee, but the company want, and no doubt they are correct in their estimate, a guarantee for three-fourths of the cost of the road. Even with this change the government would be quite safe. I have no doubt they would look closely after the expenditure of the money upon that section of the road. In the interest of the country it is necessary they should do so. I am quite sure they will not allow the Grand Trunk Pacific to put in all manner of charges together with the actual cost of construction of the line. I hope the government will see, and I have confidence in them that they will see that the money for the construction of that line goes into the work itself and that proper supervision is had, so that full value will be given for every dollar.

The request for an extension of time, I think, is reasonable. Such extensions have been found necessary in connection with nearly every large undertaking. It was found necessary when the Canadian Pacific Railway was constructed; the time under the first contract was considered altogether too short. Then in the case of the Chignecto Ship Railway—although it was a work in which very few had confidence—the time was extended more than once, and prudently extended. In this case, no doubt, the company want to be in a position, when they undertake to finance this contract, to show that they have ample time to carry out the work, so I raise no objection to this paragraph. I have not myself carefully investigated the Bill. I have read it very hurridly and I hope that the government has guarded themselves at every point where there would be any risk of extravagance. I hope they have guarded themselves in the issuing of the bonds which they are guaranteeing, as to the amount to be issued, the interest they will bear, the denomination, and so on. If I remember right in the Act they have made provision for those things.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—If they have done so, it is all right. I can easily conceive if the government had not made provision for that how easy it would be for an unscrupulous company to ask a guarantee for bonds issued for a very long time at a high rate of interest, which they could place on the market and pocket a very large sum by the selling of the bonds above par. I hope the rate of interest will be such that they will not be able to take advantage of the country.

There is another provision of the Bill which has been found fault with, and that is with regard of the company being in arrears for interest for some five years before the government can take over and control the line. The point was raised in the other House that possibly the company might be in arrears for four and one-half years interest and by paying a half year's interest they could go on six months more, and at the end of that time say another six months interest, and in that way keep out of the hands of the Dominion treasurer some six or six and one-half years of accrued interest. I hope that this measure will not permit anything of that kind to be done. I do not believe that the government would sanction a Bill that would tolerate anything of the sort, and that they will provide against such a position, and that if the company run in arrears they will have to pay up the interest. Another provision should be made, that if they are in arrears, a certain amount of the receipts of the line should be set aside to meet over due interest until the amount is wiped out. I earnestly hope that all these conditions and stipulations will be provided for. Possibly they are already provided for.

I have about covered the different points that I did not touch upon last night. I have endeavoured to point out as best I could why we should support the construction of this road. I believe the government is sincere and truly patriotic, and are doing the best they can for the country in undertaking the construction of this line. They will endeavour to show the people when it is built that it is a decided advantage to the Dominion. I believe this great work will be constructed without any extravagance. I earnestly hope that the commission which has been appointed to look after the eastern section of the road will discharge their duties faithfully and fearlessly.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Has that commission been appointed?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I do not think it has, but the government have intimated their intention to appoint a commission to overlook and supervise the expenditure in connection with the construction of the Transcontinental Railway. I do not know exactly how it is to be done, but I am sure they will take steps to guard the interests of the country at every point. The sooner we get that road the better. The future of Canada points very strongly to its being a necessity. With the enormous influx of settlers, it is the very best safeguard against conditions which might prove very serious to us as a people and a country. I think public works are the very best protection against disastrous conditions which might otherwise overtake us, and I have no doubt by the time the road is built Canada may contain seven or eight millions of people. We know that when the construction of the Grand Trunk Railway was being carried on, there was a very large influx of population into the country and many parts of old Canada were settled then which would not otherwise have been settled for years. It was so with the Canadian Pacific Railway and other roads. We know also the enormous advantage railway building was to the United States; I question very much if that country would contain the enormous population it has to-day if it had not been for the enormous expenditure on railways. They have grid ironed their country with roads and large towns have sprung up in districts which would have been unknown to-day had those lines not been built. There is nothing like a railway to open up a country, nothing that can contribute more to the settlement and welfare of the people. By the construction of this National Transcontinental Railway through Ontario and Quebec, Keewatin and Manitoba—which is now fairly well accommodated—and through the western territories and out to Port Simpson great facilities for exporting will be opened up, population will flow in, and in ten years what is now looked upon as the tail end of this Dominion may become the head and chief portion of it. Manitoba and the Northwest Territories may have a larger population in twenty years than the eastern provinces. If that should be the case, I hope they will use their powers prudently and well. I have been amazed at the enormous growth and prosperity of Winnipeg. It is a marvel in itself. No other city in the Dominion has made such strides. I hope when this road is built other Winnipegs will spring into existence. There is plenty of room for them, but Winnipeg will be the great commercial centre and the Grand Trunk Pacific will connect with it. Looking at it from an imperial standpoint, from a Dominion standpoint, from a provincial standpoint, or from the standpoint of the safety of our homes and the people who are to follow us we should have transcontinental line which will afford the means, if England chooses to assist us in the hour of danger, by which the provinces of the Dominion and every portion of the empire can co-operate in defence of the country. The road is a necessity, and I hope we will live to see it in operation. I hope many who hear my voice to-day will have the pleasure of travelling by this great highway from the city of Quebec right through to Port Simpson and behold the development that will surely take place, and realize the advantages to Canada of the construction of that great line.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I must confess that for one who has admitted that he has not read the Bill before us, my hon. friend from Wellington has made an able speech on the subject. Nothing was left unsaid that he had already said last year and this year on the subject with the exception of the bonding privileges. He made an admirable speech I must admit, but I am sure he has failed to convince others as well as myself that this road is a necessity.

I must now turn my attention a little to my hon. friend from West Elgin (Hon. Mr. Wilson), a gentleman I have known for many years, and whom I intended to follow last evening, but was prevented from doing so by a little circumstance. He delivered a lecture to the Conservative party on the subject of their sudden conversion to government ownership. Had he been just, my hon. friend should have gone into the question of conversions generally. He ought to have told this House how Sir Richard Cartwright had become a convert from free trade to protection. He could have shown how Sir Richard Cartwright has been converted from thinking that the extraction as he used to call it, of $35,000,000 from the pockets of the people, which was being spent by the Tory government was extravagant and wrong, to defending to-day the extracting of $65,000,000 from the tax-payers of the country. He might have touched on another subject with regard to Sir Richard Cartwright. He might have searched the Commons 'Hansard' of 32 or 33 years ago and found there that Sir Richard Cartwright had stated that they might just as well throw the millions of dollars that this country was expending on the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway into the sea, as put it into such an unwise project. He might have looked at the speech of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who is so enthusiastic to-day over the idea of building a second transcontinental line, and found where he advocated the idea that the Northwest could never be approached except through United States territory. He might have quoted Mr. Blake as saying that the wonderful province of British Columbia of which they speak now in such glowing terms, was only a sea of mountains and not worth the cost of building a road through it.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Mr. Blake's remark was a quotation from a remark by a Professor of Queen's University.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—He quoted it because he approved of it. My hon. friend might have gone a little further and shown that the whole party was opposed to the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, particularly north of Lake Huron, and that they offered as a substitute at the general elections in 1874, what ?

The water stretches route where they sunk ninety thousand or one hundred thousand dollars, on works which to-day are inhabited by bullfrogs and muskrats. The whole party supported that, so that he should have read a lecture to his reform friends and say that they had suddenly become converted from the opinions they held then. They opposed the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway. They opposed even the purchase of the Northwest Territories that they now value so highly, and they thought the Tories were paying too much for it when they bought it from the Hudson Bay Company. They were wrong in opposing the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and unless they are in a position to show that they have received some supernatural inspiration since then, they are bound to be wrong now. I cannot see it in any other light. That is precisely the stand that they ought to assume, unless they can show some more tangible reason, some better ground for their conversion and show that we are now wrong although we were right thirty years ago. So much for my hon. friend from west Elgin. Now the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière, in the opening remarks of his speech, said that this was the most important Bill that had been presented to parliament since confederation. I certainly agree with him that it is a most important Bill, but the importance of the project is one strong reason why we should be careful not to take a leap in the dark. For that reason we ought to proceed slowly ; we ought to proceed carefully with full knowledge of where we are going to build the road, and ascertain whether it is prematurely forced on the country or not. Let us look at the question from a business standpoint. Who has asked for this road ? Has any body of business men asked for the road ? Have the farmers of the west asked for the road or have the merchants or manufacturers of the east asked for the road ? The Grand Trunk Railway Company itself, which is really and virtually the Grand Trunk Pacific, never asked for the transcontinental railway ? They asked for power to build a road from North Bay to Winnipeg, and from Winnipeg to the Pacific ocean, and we must remember that no one can have a better eye for fields anew than the Grand Trunk Railway if they felt there was money in it, and that it was necessary to extend their lines into new territory. They saw where the profit was, and for that field they made an application to parliament. They asked for the road then from North Bay to Winnipeg and from Winnipeg to the Pacific coast. They asked in that admirable, wonderful and confidential letter which was subsequently submitted to the House, for a subsidy of six thousand dollars in cash and four thousand acres of land per mile. Now there is something peculiar, something very hard for people who are outside and cannot possibly see into the details, to be able to follow the history of this matter. In 1902 the Hon. Mr. Tarte resigned his portfolio in Sir Wilfrid Laurier's administration, and after he had done so he toured this country from east to west and addressed large meetings at many important centres advocating the importance of deepening our canals and the importance of the transportation question generally. He pointed out clearly that if we did not make a move in that direction, the traffic that virtually and really belonged to us would find its way through the channels of the United States to the sea-board. We also find that in 1902 Mr. Blair made a speech at Vancouver or Victoria, I do not remember which, in which he promised, or, rather, stated, that he was seriously considering the advisability of having a government transcontinental railway built across this country, and he mentioned the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Georgian Bay. We find also that in 1902 an application was made to parliament by the Grand Trunk Pacific for a charter, in November I think ; and in December 1902, if I am not mistaken, a letter asking for aid was sent confidentially to the premier, stating upon what terms the company would be willing to build this road. All these propositions were before the government in the latter part of 1902. Parliament met in 1903, and as a blind—for we can see nothing of it now—as a blind, a paragraph was placed in the speech from the Throne stating that a commission would be issued to investigate this very important question of transportation. It would never do to allow Hon. Mr. Tarte to get the credit of having forced upon the government the idea of deepening our canals. It would never do to allow Mr. Blair, who had evidently taken the bit in his teeth in the cabinet when he advocated the building of a transcontinental railway owned by the government ; it would never do to allow him to have his way ; so in order to get rid of both of these gentlemen—and it happened that it was not very long until they got rid of Mr. Blair—this paragraph was inserted in the speech from the Throne, but they kept in view all the time, evidently, the fact that the Grand Trunk Pacific, an important corporation, had made an application, and that they would seriously consider what to do with reference to the deal that was to be placed with that company. It was evident at this time that the period of incubation had begun. This incubation began suddenly without appointing the commission, remember ; but as a matter of shame the commission was subsequently appointed, and are perambulating the country to-day, for what purpose ? The Lord only knows, for their report cannot possibly be used for years and years to come, even if it should be in favour of the building of the canal. But suddenly, while this period of incubation was going on, a resolution was presented to the House by the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, asking that the Act which he intended to introduce, ratifying the contract that had already been made with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, should be passed by the Dominion parliament, confirming the contract as he and his friends had made it. That contract, of course, was, as hon. gentlemen know, with the Grand Trunk Railway Company to build a road from Winnipeg to the Pacific ocean, and the building by the government of the eastern section and leasing of it to the company for fifty years. The failure to comply with the terms of that contract on the part of the Grand Trunk took place. Whether that failure was accidental or not, we cannot say, but there is one thing quite evident that as a result of that failure the Grand Trunk Pacific Company will evidently pocket many millions. Moreover it looks almost as if that scheme had been contemplated, because our government, extravagant as they are, anxious as they are to precipitate everything on the country in the way of expenditures, they even were afraid to present it in one Bill, and had to make two bites of it. The result of that failure, however, was that a new Bill had to be presented to parliament, and that is the Bill we have before us to-day. Let us compare some of the clauses that are contained in the present Bill with the clauses of the former Bill. In the eastern section the road is to be leased to the company for a period of fifty years, and an extraordinary feature of the Bill is that instead of giving the company the option of continuing the lease for the next fifty years, the tenth paragraph is amended by adding thereto the following clause :

Provided further that in the event of the government determining to undertake the operation of the said eastern division, the company shall be entitled for a further period of fifty years to such running powers and hauling rates as may be necessary.

The option is not with the government. The company have the power to continue, and even if the government should put an end to the contract at the end of fifty years, according to the reading of this clause, the company have the right to say: 'We will not accept the position; we have the road and want to continue it for another term.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Another extraordinary feature in the contract is that the company is to have the road free for a period of ten years instead of seven as in the former Bill. That is a very important matter, and a matter that involves many million dollars. Of course we are dealing in millions to such an extent that we do not really follow the figures. There are many other things I could say with reference to these two sections. For instance there is a clause in the contract which obliges the government, at the end of the lease, whenever it may be—the chances are if it is a hundred years we will not live to see it——

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Not likely.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—There is a clause in the contract which says the government is obliged to take over such branch lines as the railway company may not require. Those who are in opposition to government ownership of railways will have an opportunity of perhaps having a few little lines of government railways on their hands at the expiration of that time. Now let us consider the mountain section. The government guarantees three-quarters of the cost of construction, and when my hon. friend from Wellington spoke of the change as a beneficial one he admitted that it might cost sixty thousand dollars per mile. In the former contract they were only bound to guarantee $30,000 per mile. Their obligation was to be held at $30,000 a mile, while under this amended contract there is no limit to it. It is to be three-quarters of the cost, whatever that cost may be. That means a great advantage to the company. There is also an extension of the period for which they were to have the interest free. It is extended from seven years to ten years. Then we come to the clause referring to the prairie section, and what does that say? The saddle is put on the other horse then. The limit to which the company will hold the government down is, that they will become responsible to the extent of $13,000 a mile not three-quarters of the cost Why? For the reason that it will simply cost somewhere about eight or ten thousand dollars per mile only to construct a great many miles of that section. Some hon. gentleman said 'humph,' whatever that means. I can tell the hon. gentleman that I have an estimate from as good a man as there is in Canada, who has built railways, and he told me that $8,220 per mile will build a great many miles there, what number of miles he could not tell me for the reason that he did not know the territory or district; but from eight to ten thousand dollars we are safe in saying will build a large portion of that prairie section. He has even given me the cost of grading and cost of track laying, the cost of the ballast and ties and the cost of steel and fastenings, and they amount to $8,000 a mile.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—How much does the hon. gentleman allow for the right of way?

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—It cannot cost very much there, but supposing it was $1,000 per mile, that would be only $9,200. Now with all these advantages in favour of the company hon. gentlemen we can clearly see why this second Bill is before us. It is as apparent as noonday. There is money in it to the Grand Trunk Pacific.

I have already referred to the period of incubation. It was short for so vast a scheme, and when the egg was broken to the House the product was minus the feathers, no surveys, no plans, no information could be given as to the nature of the country through which the road was to pass was given to the House, and without this information, of course no estimate of the cost could be given. It might be $150,000,000, $170,000,000 or $200,000,000; no one yet knows, and the only reason the government could offer in such precipitation was that the bonding privilege with the United States was in danger. Now, I will come to the point at which I maintain this honourable House should show its usefulness—it is co-equal in power and authority with the House of Lords in England, and Todd in his book on parliamentary work says in vol. 1, page 36:

> As an independent branch of the legislation, they are therefore entitled to exercise a very substantial power, which should serve as a positive check upon the lower House where it may have been induced to act with unwise precipitation.

If even there was a case of unwise precipitation it is here—no mandate power or authority was given by the people of this Dominion at the last election to embark on such a vast project as this, creating a burden on the revenues of the country, the extent of which has yet to be ascertained. The only petition that came from the people in reference to this project since the election, was cartloads of petitions against it, but no notice was taken of them. What does all this mean? It means the creation of an enormous debt. Our debt now is nearly $50 per head of the population, and it means a doubling of that debt for the building of this new transcontinental railway. The scheme, I repeat, is unasked for, is at present unnecessary and is therefore prematurely an indefensible expenditure.

For these reasons and for many more forcible reasons given by hon. gentlemen in the Senate, and for the very able and powerful arguments advanced by the opponents of this Bill in the lower House which were not answered by the government when under discussion to which we could not be indifferent as it proceeded, I shall vote against this Bill.

Some hon. GENTLEMAN—Question, question.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are we to understand that the government have no one on their side to defend the Bill? If that be the case, I ask permission to make an explanation. My hon. friend from de Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) said he felt very much flattered when he was asked to reply to the remarks I made upon this Bill. He raised a laugh at my expense——

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Oh, no.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, yes; the House laughed at his quotation from a speech of mine in opposition to government ownership and operation of railways. I think he left the impression on the minds of hon. gentlemen that in my speech last year I had opposed government ownership of railways. I have read the speech to which he refers, and I find there is not a word in it that could by any enforcible construction be interpreted to refer to government ownership of railways. What I did say was that opposed as I was to the government running a railway, I would prefer this proposition made by the leader of the oposition in the other House to accept the measure then before the Senate. I also called attention at that time to what I had seen when in Australia as to the running of railways by the government, not government ownership of railways. What I said was this:

> I do not propose to compare it with the scheme or discuss it in any way. (That is the proposition made by the leader of the opposition in the other House.) But this I will say, speaking for myself, I am opposed to the government running railways, and if we are to take the Intercolonial Railway as a sample to guide us in future, all I have to say is God protect us from the financial results that must follow if the government are to own and run the railways.

Then I referred to the Australian railway system. I pointed out the other day that since the Australian railways had been placed in the hands of a practical Canadian railway manager, and removed from the government influence that formerly prevailed, he has made them pay, not only interest on the investment, but also running expenses. My hon. friend from St. Thomas made the same statement, and it seemed to be relished by those who listened to him. If we are to have a vote now, I think it would perhaps be taking advantage of the absence of a great many members, although I am afraid that those who support the government from party motives will object to my just and sensible amendment. I would suggest that to-morrow or the day following be fixed for taking a vote, and then every member of the Senate who desires to record his vote on this question can do so.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—We can take the vote on the third reading.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER moved the adjournment of the debate until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER—I am afraid the motion is lost.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I intended to address some observations to the House before a vote was taken on this motion, but I do not feel well to-day, and would be very much obliged to the House if they would adjourn the debate and give me an opportunity to speak to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am quite willing that the debate should be adjourned until to-morrow, on the understanding that the vote will be taken to-morrow.

The SPEAKER—I understand the leader of the House assents to the adjournment of the debate, on the understanding that a vote shall be taken to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It is impossible to make an arrangement of that kind since the motion of the hon. member from St. Boniface has been declared lost. It is suggested that the debate end to-morrow. I do not see how that can be arranged. The hon. gentleman might make such extended remarks that he would occupy the whole sitting to-morrow, and there would be no opportunity to answer him before a division. The question now is on the second reading of the Bill.

The SPEAKER—The only way is to come to some understanding. The motion of the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface having been rejected, it cannot be renewed.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Unfortunately, it is impossible for the Secretary of State or anybody to bind the House to end this debate to-morrow or at any time. There is no rule which governs that. It is useless to undertake a contract which we may not be able to enforce.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—If the leader of the House consents, as I think he did consent just now, to an adjournment of the debate until to-morrow, unless there is a revolt among the friends of the government the arrangement can be accepted unanimously. The fidelity of the government supporters should show itself in that way.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There can be no question as to the correctness of the remarks made by the hon. senator from Killarney, but the practice has been in both Houses that when the leader of the House makes a proposition of that kind, and it is acquiesced in by the opposition, it is always acceded to. If, however, the hon. gentleman from Killarney wishes to take the leadership out of the hands of the hon. Secretary of State, I have no objection. If the hon. gentleman thinks there will not be time enough to complete the debate to-morrow it can be arranged to take the vote the following day, but as the hon. gentleman says neither the leader of the House nor any one else can bind the House, every one is free to take the position he thinks proper. I am glad to see that my hon. friend is so independent. As a matter of courtesy to the leader of the House, his suggestion should be acceded to by his followers.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I have never seen such a suggestion as the hon. gentleman has made just now carried out under the circumstances. The suggestion is that an hon. member shall have the right to speak to-morrow and possibly keep the House for three or four hours until the very close of the debate. Such a proposition has never been acceded to, and I have never heard of such a suggestion being made.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The suggestion did not come from this side of the House. It was made by the leader of the House.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I understand the only objection is that my remarks might be extended, and it is not desirable that the House should be tied to taking a vote to-morrow night. Why not arrange to take the vote Thursday night.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I should not like the hon. gentleman to limit his remarks to a certain time, but can he tell us how long his speech will be.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—We would all like to hear a carefully thought out exposition of the whole subject, and unless those who are going to vote against the amendment are afraid they will be converted, there seems to be no reason for their objection to the suggestion of their leader. I hope they will be converted sometime to what is good—that they will change from the evil course they are pursuing in this debate. The leaders on both sides having agreed upon this, I cannot see what objection anybody can have to adjourning the debate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Suppose we compromise by saying that the vote will be taken Thursday.

The SPEAKER—By consent of the House the hon. gentleman from Marshfield can move the adjournment of the debate without any stipulation at all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The suggestion of the Speaker is a good one, but the rule is distinct that you cannot make a motion of that kind without something intervening. In order to accomplish that, I move that the House do now adjourn. The intervening motion made by the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface, it can be defeated and my hon. friend can then move to adjourn the debate.

The motion to adjourn the House was rejected.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON moved the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (123) An Act to incorporate the Kingston and Dominion Central Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Sullivan.)

Bill (126) An Act respecting certain patents of Siegfried Gironcoli.—(Hon. Mr. Poirier.)

Bill (129) An Act respecting certain patents of Edwin R. Cahoone.—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Cobourg.)

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND ASSOCIATION COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I call attention to the fact that the evidence given before the select committee appointed to investigate the standing of the Mutual Reserve in Canada has not been printed and distributed. Parties have asked me for it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I gave orders to have it printed promptly. They sent up some copies of it, and Dr. Dawson says they were sent back. They did not want them until they were all in. I do not know who gave the order to have them sent back. I gave orders to send them up promptly as they were printed.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Could not Dr. Dawson tell us who gave him that order ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He is out of town today attending a meeting of some society, of which he is a member.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In the meantime, could an order be given to have those copies sent back to us ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall try to have it done.

NAVIGATION OF CANADIAN WATERS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (112) An Act respecting Navigation of Canadian Waters.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 1,

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is a very sweeping clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes ; the object is to have our rules conform to the rules adopted in the United States. Their vessels navigate the inland waters. This applies only to inland waters, and from time to time we have evidence of the necessity of rules of this kind, and therefore we thought it right to give to the Governor in Council the right to make the regulations. The regulations are those which are now existing in the United States. The memorandum furnished me by the department reads as follows :

> The rules adopted by Canada for Canadian vessels in Canadian waters are the international rules adopted by the great civilized nations, including the United States, for vessels passing in regard to lights and signals on the great sea highways of the world.
> These rules were years ago adopted by the United States government for their vessels on the great lakes, but later on they changed them and adopted rules which they thought were more fitting for inland navigation.
> The Department of Marine and Fisheries for some years have been considering the advisability of abandoning the international rules on the great lakes for Canadian vessels, and adopting rules to accord with the rules adopted by the United States on the lakes, so as to have on the great lakes uniformity in lights and signals for steamships passing each other, and also for sailing ships.
> The department has now come to the conclusion that it will be advisable to adopt the United States rules, but the present law does not give the Governor in Council power to abandon the international rules on the great lakes and adopt new rules, and the Department of Justice, which was consulted in the matter, has decided that legislation is necessary to give the Governor in Council power to repeal the International rules on the inland waters and formulate new regulations for the great lakes. Until legislation is effected to give the Governor the power, matters must remain as they are, but as soon as parliament gives the Governor in Council power a report to council will be made repealing the old rules and bringing in new ones as far as the great lakes are concerned, and the River St. Lawrence seaward as far as Montreal.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is no restriction in the power given to confine the changes which are to be made in the signals to the great lakes. How far would the government be empowered to make regulations to make signals that are given, say on the St. Lawrence, where the the sea-going vessels come up to Quebec and Montreal? I suppose for the safety of ships the intention is to have the rules and regulations governing navigation in the lakes, and Lake Ontario and the upper lakes conform with the United States rules.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As far east as Montreal. It refers to inland waters.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The St. Lawrence is an inland water, and so is Hudson bay. The official would have to be careful in applying it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Care will be taken that it is limited to inland waters strictly speaking. It should not extend east of Montreal. I do not know whether the United States conform to the international rules when the vessels get beyond their lines or not. The United States are within the international rules so far as sea-going vessels are concerned, and there is no embarrassment there; but hon. gentlemen will quite recognize that on the lakes, where United States vessels navigate, it is highly important that we should both have the same signals.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is left in the hands of the minister I suppose, and he would not extend it outside of inland waters.

Hon. Mr. WATSON from the committee reported the Bill without amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

TIMIGAMI RAILWAY BILL.

CONSIDERATION OF AMENDMENTS POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called:

Consideration of the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours to (Bill 94) An Act respecting the Timigami Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Edwards.

Hon Mr. SULLIVAN—In the absence of the hon. gentleman from Russell, and as a matter of humanity, I move that this Bill be referred back to committee. It would take too long to give the whole history of the matter, but it is something that should be considered by the committee. As the matter was explained to me, the committee would be wanting in ordinary humanity if they hesitated to consider. A gentleman spoke to me about it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It was considered very fully by the Railway Committee. It occupied about one hour and one-half and I can assure the hon. gentleman that the matter was carefully considered.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I was not aware of that, but there seems to be something very strange in the Bill; a gentleman's name is mentioned as director and then it is struck out. The gentleman informed me that the committee struck his name out and substituted another name very unjustly. That would seem to be a very unusual thing to do unless the name were put there through fraud.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—As far as that point is concerned, the name was struck out of clause 1. In clause 2 the board of provisional directors is named without the name which appeared in the first clause. The person who owned the charter, Father Paradis, was the gentleman referred to. The people who bought the charter produced a receipt and a power of attorney by which Father Paradis had transferred to a Mr. Bremner his whole interest in this charter, agreeing himself to withdraw from the directors.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Except one-thirtieth.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—In that transfer to Bremner there was an understanding that Father Paradis was to receive a portion of the proceeds of the sale of that charter. The people who bought the charter had nothing to do with that whatever, and another gentleman, Mr. Armstrong, appeared there.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Those are the conditions on which he sold to Bremner.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—But his agreement was that he was to receive an interest in the sale of the charter. He sold his right to the charter.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Except one-thirtieth.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No, no. The receipt was produced and the only claim he could have is against the Bremner estate, Armstrong also appeared before the committee as one of the original promoters. He also sold his interest in this charter, and at the present time he is not looking to have his name attached to this Bill or to have anything to do with the people who now own the charter. He is suing the Bremner estate for his share, and the committee decided if Father Paradis had any claim at all, it was against the Bremner estate, and he could take action against them.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The committee constituted themselves judges, and tried the case.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No, we decided on the evidence before us and the gentlemen who owned the charter appeared before the committee and stated he did not want the name of this Father Paradis on the board. He had no interest in the company, and he did not want his name there.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If Father Paradis sold his interest to Bremner, and certain conditions and rights were to be reserved for Father Paradis.

Hon. Mr. WATSON. In the charter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not talking of the charter, I am talking of the sale. If the sale was made by Father Paradis, and Bremner bought his interest in this railway with a proviso that he was to retain a thirtieth interest in it, surely Bremner could not sell to another company any more than he owned in this company. If he bought it with a restriction, he could only sell the rights and privileges that were reserved under the bargain he made with Fathr Paradis.

Hon. Mr. WATSON. That is right.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If that be the case, then Father Paradis retains the right that he had originally, because Bremner could not dispose of it. He has no right to dispose of what belonged to another man. Had I been present at the committee, I should have advocated that there ought to have been a provision reserving the rights of the parties who had the original charter for the construction of that work, and if he disposed of it there should be a clause indemnifying him to the extent of whatever right he might have. That is constantly done in disputes of that kind. The same thing was done in the Brockville and Westport Railway case last session, after it was discussed two or three days. It has occurred in scores of cases where the originators or promoters of a scheme of this kind have obtained a charter to build a road and then having given time and expended money in explorations and surveys, their rights should be protected. I heard a portion of this discussion and it does seem to me that Father Paradis had some rights and they should be protected. If there is a clause in the Bill protecting those rights, the courts can decide that.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—If the proposition stated by the hon. gentleman were correct, it would be perfectly right to insert such a clause in the Bill, but the circumstances are not as he has stated them. The fact is that Father Paradis sold his interest in that charter for a consideration of $100 and gave a receipt for it which was produced. Father Paradis admits that he got the money, but to remove any possible chance of Father Paradis having any claim for legislation to protect his interest, he gave to Bremner a power of attorney to deal with his interests in the charter.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Subject to conditions.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Then there was another agreement by which Bremner was to account to Father Paradis for a certain interest in the proceeds of the sale of the charter. The people who bought the charter, knowing that Father Paradis had sold his interest and had given a receipt for it, and also a power of attorney to act for him, left him out of it.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—This man showed me a document under which he retained one-thirtieth interest, and he told me that he had been cheated, and showed me the document to prove it. I told him the Bill would not come up to-day and he went home.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The committee examined all those books.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Then I do not care. I simply put in the protest for him in the name of humanity. I do not know the man, but I saw by the document he showed me that he retained one-thirtieth interest in this charter, whatever it was.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Father Paradis has no interest in this as a property at all. He was named as a provisional director and as one of the incorporators, but he had not subscribed for a share. In order to have the charter placed into hands where it would be developed, Mr. Bremner bought out the interest of all those who were provisional directors, and he agreed with Father Paradis and gave him $100, which was delivered over and receipted for. He also agreed that he would give him a certain proportion of whatever consideration he received on the sale of the charter. That is Bremner's personal obligation. There is no interest that should be put in and safeguarded by the clause in the Bill. It was the profit that Bremner would make on turning over that charter, whatever it would be, that he has a right to now. Bremner died, and his estate is being administered by the National Trust Company of Toronto, and Father Paradis has filed his claim against the estate. He got an adjournment of the committee in order to get Armstrong as a witness. Armstrong appeared and stated that the agreement was that Paradis should retire from the board altogether, in addition to having sold out his interest. It is only justice that these English capitalists who are going to build the road should have it free from any such encumbrance.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER—I was present part of the time before the committee and it strikes me this is special legislation, and I am very doubtful whether it is good legislation. It is simply passing a law by which we shall say that a man shall be put out of a company. I should like to know if this is good law. Is there not a means of putting him out? Why do they not have a meeting of shareholders and refuse to elect him as a director. Why do they not apply to the courts of justice to have him put out? Are we going to decide private quarrels between individuals when it is not at all necessary for parliament to interfere? To my mind, this legislation would be bad law if it were passed. It strikes me that there are reasons why we ought to send it back to the committee because there has been a misunderstanding. There are two clauses to the Bill. The first clause strikes out the name of Charles Alfred Marie Paradis and James Holdatch. Paradis was present in the committee at the time I was there, and I understood it was decided that this clause was abandoned. He gave explanations that satisfied a great many members of the committee, which satisfied me at any rate, and I understood it was decided that this clause should be abandoned, and that the name of Father Paradis would remain. I left the committee with a great many others. My hon. friend to my left was there. It was clearly understood then that the committee had abandoned this clause and that the name of Father Paradis would remain in the Bill. After this clause was struck out, the second clause was adopted in my absence, and in the absence of a great many members of the committee. By the second clause the provisional directors were appointed, and the name of Father Paradis was left out, although when there was a large attendance of members of the committee the principle that Father Paradis' name should remain in the Bill was adopted. It was after a number of members had left the committee the change was made. This ought to be a sufficient reason for referring it back. There certainly has been a misunderstanding, and I think the matter should be discussed again in committee.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—A witness whom Father Paradis brought to Ottawa appeared before the committee, and it was shown by him that Father Paradis' action had been adverse to the building of the railway from its very inception, and, it was felt by Mr. Bremner, before he went to England to dispose of the charter, that he could not sell it with Father Paradis' name in it as one of the incorporators. Father Paradis therefore agreed, upon the payment of $100 to allow his name to be removed from the list of provisional directors. the proof that he did so was in the document in the custody of the committee, Father Paradis himself admitted having received the money, and having retained it. That was admitted also by Mr. Armstrong. The only remaining feature of the whole transaction is simply that on the arrival of Mr. Bremner in England he was enabled to dispose of the charter, and in doing so Bremner was liable to Father Paradis for a division of the proceeds of the sale. One of the conditions of the sale was that Father Paradis was not to be one of the directors, and the gentlemen who composed the board distinctly stated, as Father Paradis never put a dollar into it, and the company had settled with Bremner in full for what they considered the value of the charter, paying him the amount they agreed upon, any claim Father Paradis had, was entirely against the estate which they are now settling with the National Trust Corporation in Toronto. The men who bought the charter, and are going on with the railway, distinctly say that they object to Father Paradis' name being placed on the provisional board. It is true he could be out voted at the first meeting, but the incorporators of the company felt that in order to strengthen the hands of the directors that it would be better for the financing of the road and the conduct of matters that Father Paradis' name should not be in the Bill at all—that he had shown himself hostile to the road from its inception. Therefore I think this House should proceed slowly in the face of what the English owners of the road have said, that they did not want Father Paradis on the board, Father Paradis having sold his interest, and having agreed to withdraw from the board, I think it would be bad legislation on the part of this House to revoke the decision of the committee and put his name back on the board.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—This Bill is nothing new in this House. The matter in question has been discussed before. I should like, for the information of the hon. gentleman from Kingston, to say that the one-thirtieth which Paradis was to receive when Bremner made the purchase from the provisional directors, he gave them each $100. He was to retain 70 per cent of whatever the charter sold for, and divide the balance of 30 per cent with the other directors. The other directors that were on the board with Father Paradis have a claim for that 30 per cent. It does not go to Father Paradis. It is to be divided amongst all the other directors that were on the board.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—That is not in the document.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Yes.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—This Bill was up before, and the solicitors were here and threshed it out, and it was up in the other House; and as far as that legislation was concerned, the Hon. Mr. Tessier, when similar legislation was given in this House to that which is asked to be given now for Father Paradis, came here at that time and had a director put on the board by the Senate in 1898, after the solicitors of the company had gone home, and when they thought the whole matter was settled. True, he was afterwards removed, because when the Bill was sent over to the other House it was sent back for reconsideration, and the Senate struck off the name.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Father Paradis and the other gentlemen were the provisional directors of that company. Father Paradis and the whole of them sold their rights. All the others were taken back except Father Paradis.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Except Father Paradis and Holdatch. But there is another agreement that is not spoken of besides that paper which was signed by Father Paradis. Mr. Bremner signed another agreement out of that sale, signed by Father Paradis, and by that paper Bremner says that the other conditions of the sale will be settled to the satisfaction of Mr. Armstrong. That is the paper that has been alluded to. That part of the sale was never acted upon. Mr. Armstrong never gave a decision. So that we are called upon to-day to pass a law that Father Paradis has no claim at all. I move the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Wednesday, June 22, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

UNITED STATES COASTING REGULATIONS.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State if his attention has been called to a fine imposed by United States customs authorities on a British vessel? A Canadian Pacific Railway vessel recently left Skagway for Victoria and carried a number of passengers and landed them at Victoria, from which port they took another steamer to Seattle. The voyage of the Canadian Pacific Railway steamer was not continued to Seattle. On going back the next trip, the steamer had to call at Katchikan to get a clearance at the customs-house, and on going back the second trip the company were fined $2,800—or $200 for each passenger carried by the steamer to Victoria. It is a matter which must come before the Foreign Office, because the government here cannot settle it. The vessel did not call at two United States ports.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not heard of the incident. My colleague (Hon. Mr. Templeman) is aware of the fact. He thinks an appeal has been made to Washington. No report has been sent to the government at Ottawa yet.

THIRD READING.

Bill (42) An Act respecting the Sprague's Falls Manufacturing Company.—(Mr. Wood, in the absence of Hon. Mr. Baird.)

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

DEBATE CONTINUED.

The Order of the Day being called:

Resuming the further adjourned debate on motion for second reading (Bill 72) An Act to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act, and the resolution of the Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell in amendment thereto.—(Hon. Mr. Ferguson.)

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON said: Before proceeding with the observations which I propose to make on this measure, I desire to thank the House and especially the hon. leader of the House, the Secretary of State, for the courtesy shown to me last evening in permitting me to move the adjournment of the debate under somewhat unusual circumstances. I have heard that anxiety has been expressed on the part of some hon. gentlemen least I should make too long a speech on this question. While I am always anxious to make my actions such as will meet the convenience of hon. gentlemen, yet having given some study and consideration to the subject before the House and having due regard to its magnitude, much as I should like to meet the convenience of hon. gentlemen, I feel that I have a duty to discharge, and in the discharge of that duty it may be necessary for me to take up some considerable time. I may say further in explanation, I have had nothing whatever to do with the suggestion—though some hon. gentlemen may have thought so—of an arrangement to have a division of the House to-day. It is not my desire in any way to shut out any hon. gentleman from giving his views, and, as far as I am concerned, I should like the subject to remain open for discussion as long as any hon. gentleman in this House wished to put his views before the Senate and the country upon it. At the outset, I wish to notice a point referred to by the hon. member from Queen's, N.B., who, I am sorry to see, is not in his seat and who delivered a very able address, from his point of view, in the discussion of this question. He made this observation, that all parties in Canada were now in most entire accord with regard to the construction of this National Transcontinental Railway—the only question between them being just whether it was to be owned by the government or by the Grand Trunk Pacific Company. I must dissent emphatically from that position taken by the hon. gentleman. When the question took particular form, about the early part of March, 1903, in consequence of the government having announced in the speech from the Throne, that it was their intention to refer the transportation question to a commission of experts. There was then perfect accord between the political parties in this country with regard to that action of the government. There were at that time, and since, many propositions before the country with regard to the bettering of our inland transportation. We had the Georgian Bay canal proposal; the Mackenzie and Mann scheme; the Trans-Canada scheme; propositions for deepening the St. Lawrence canals, all for the purpose of improving transportation facilities in Canada. There was at that time, and I believe still is, a perfect accord between the different parties in Canada that the time had arrived for a forward movement in the matter of transportation. But that that forward movement should be on the lines of the Bill before us, of a railway covering the same route and of the same character as the one now proposed—that there is any accord on that point I deny from most emphatically. I have said that when the notice was given by the government of their intention to appoint a commission, there was an accord, and that was the policy of the government as late as the 11th of March, 1903. It was their policy much later than that, for at the end of May in that year, Mr. Sutherland, a member of the government, brought down to the House of Commons, an Order in Council which had been passed for the submission of the transportation question to a commission and I may say that was a very carefully worded and able document. It covered the ground admirably, and there was no fault found with that proposition. A few weeks later, we learned that promoters had approached the government with a proposal which would render the appointment of that commission a mere farce. We learned that a ministerial crisis had come about, and that one of the members of the government, the Minister of Railways and Canals, had resigned, because he would not agree upon a policy settled by his colleagues, of at once committing the country, in advance of an inquiry to a fixed scheme of transportation, one which would impair the power of Canada to deal with any other scheme of transportation for years to come. It was then that a distinct cleavage arose between the two parties of this country on the transportation question. The Conservative party took the ground that there should be an expert investigation of this subject, and on the report of experts a measure best adapted to our needs should be framed. The government decided to go on, without that information, with the scheme they had before them, and which must have been pressed upon them with a great deal of skill and influence for they adopted it in the face of their own announcement of a policy act only upon the report of the committee of experts who should go into the subject from beginning to end. With regard to the discussions on this Bill, I have been a student of parliamentary literature since confederation. I followed the debates in the House of Commons last year and this year upon this scheme. When I speak of the scheme I speak of the Bill of last year, with the modifications of this year, and I am free to say that never in the history of Canada was there so able, so thorough and so fair a discussion of a great public measure as that which was made in the House of Commons by the Opposition both last year and this year. There was no talking against time or criticism for the sake of criticism. There was clear, close discussion of the scheme on lines which would commend themselves to reasonable men differing in their political views. On the part of the government there has not been a defence of this Bill, put up in either House, at all equal to answering the arraignment of measure by the opposition. Hon. gentlemen may differ from me on that point.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My opinion is that this Bill has not been defended against the attacks upon it, and it has not been successfully defended because I believe a great many of the objections to it are simply unanswerable. What do we find when this Bill is taken up in the Senate? The Secretary of State opens the discussion on it in a somewhat protracted speech. I do not want to be unfair to my hon. friend the leader of the House. He has my sympathy in this respect. That considering the important duties that devolve upon him in this House, and the management of his department, I do not think he receives that support from his friends in the government, and, perhaps, I might add, in this House, in the discharge of these very arduous duties to which he is entitled. It is absolutely impossible for any one like the hon. Secretary of State to assume the responsibility of all the work which comes up in the Senate and then to address himself to the defence and the examination of a measure such as this without such assistance as I think his colleagues in the government should give him. In the disorganized state of the government for the last year or so with reference to this particular measure, the resignation of the Minister of Railways, the vacancy remaining open during the whole discussion of the subject last year in parliament and the silence of the present Minister of Railways my hon. friend in addressing the House evidently had not that information which should have been furnished him to make an adequate explanation of the Bill to this House. My hon. friend has my entire sympathy, because I know it would be next to impossible for any hon. gentleman to perform that duty in the way I know he would like to discharge it, My hon. friend, the minister without portfolio (Hon. Mr. Templeman) laughs derisively at my statement. If my hon. friend would assist his colleague with something more than brilliant flashes of silence, he would find more useful occupation than laughing in derision at something which must be patent to every member of the Senate. While my hon. friend was evidently not supplied by his colleagues in the government and the Department of Railways with information to submit to this House it was apparently given to another hon. gentleman who informed us that he was entrusted with the high honour of replying to the hon. leader of the opposition. By whom he was so entrusted he did not say, but he left it to be inferred that he was entrusted with the duty by the government. It is the first time I have heard a declaration of that kind in parliament, and it sounded novel to me. I think the part undertaken by the hon. gentleman from De Lanaudière, with regard to this discussion, has not been in keeping with what we have a right to expect in the treatment of this important subject. The information which that hon. gentleman undertook to give to this House should have come to us in some other way than through that hon. senator, obtained, as he says, from some of the officials of the Grand Trunk Railway in Montreal. I think I am right in holding the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière responsible for some extraordinary statements which were filtered through my hon. friend the Secretary of State. Some of these statements have reference to the cost and length of this road, I think I am right in that view, from the fact that when the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière took the floor a little later he repeated some of the figures and statements which had previously been submitted by the Secretary of State. And we had also the spectacle while the Secretary of State was speaking, of the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière advancing to the minister's seat and presuming to coach him with regard to some of the observations he was addressing to the House. Now, I find that these gentlemen agree in stating that the mountain section is 766 miles in length, and that the length of the prairie section is 1,100 miles. We have had no such figures as these given to us in either branch of parliament up to the time the Secretary of State addressed the House. He himself gave the figures of the mountain section last year at 480 miles. His colleague, the Finance Minister, speaking on the third reading of the Bill in the House of Commons, makes the distance from Winnipeg to the Pacific 1,480 miles—480 miles for the mountain section and 1,000 miles for the prairie section, and yet we are gravely told this year by the leader of the government in this House that the length of the prairie section is to be 1,100 and the mountain section 766 miles—in other words that the mountain section of the Transcontinental Railway is to be 124 miles longer than the mountain section of the Canadian Pacific Railway, counting that road from Calgary to Vancouver, which is only 642 miles. The distance stretches out since we were discussing the question last year, and after the Minister of Finance had said the last word on the third reading of the Bill in the House of Commons until it got into the hands of the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière, the length of the mountain section stretched from 480 to 766 miles while the length of the prairie section also increased by 100 miles—from 1,000 to 1,100 miles. It has been said officially to the Senate that the length of the western division is to be 1,866 miles instead of 1,480 miles as stated in the House of Commons. I confess I am not able to understand this, nor is anybody else. If some 300 miles had been added to the mountain section and a corresponding mileage had been deducted from the prairie section, I could have understood it; then it would have resolved itself into this, as to whether the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière had been simply trifling with the House in regard to the question, or whether his language is evidence of a new effort on the part of the Grand Trunk Railway to take advantage of the government in some other way. If it is intended to work out the matter in this way that the mountain section is to be 766 miles, it can only be done by adding some 30 per cent of the prairie section to the mountain section, and in that way the Grand Trunk would obtain a decided advantage, because they would get a guarantee of bonds unlimited except by the cost of the road, on 300 miles of very rolling prairie, instead of $13,000 per mile, and they would also have interest on the bonds for this 300 miles charged to the government for seven years, and capitalized for three years more. If that is an intimation to the people and to parliament, that the mountain section is going to be stretched out with this result, it means the addition of several millions to the cash outlay and the obligations the government will have to assume with reference to this road. But these are not the only mixing and muddling of figures. The hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière informed the House, that the figures hitherto supplied as to the length of the line between Quebec and Winnipeg, were all erroneous. With the superior knowledge, that he claimed to possess, he said the distance would be only 1,350 miles as against 1,475 miles given everywhere else until the discussion was opened in this House. Here again we have another instance of mixing and muddling which the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière has done. And when my hon. friend from Westmorland interrupted the hon. gentleman and told him the figures which he was giving to the House were entirely different from those given by the members of the government elsewhere, he said: 'I am sorry for the government, why did they not ask me.' Was there ever in the history of this parliament such an arraignment of the government as when that hon. gentleman said he was sorry for their ignorance of the scheme, which they were endeavouring to push through parliament, neglecting the all-important matter of consulting the hon. gentleman. Notwithstanding the superior knowledge which the hon. gentleman claims to possess in the matter, I was inclined to compare him, when he came to deal with the subject in this House, to that hot impetuous youth who implored Jupiter to give him permission to run the chariot of the Sun for one day. We know what was the result. The steeds ran away, the chariot was overturned, and the King of Heaven in his wrath smote the presumptuous youth with a thunderbolt, precipitating him into the sea. If there were any firm ruler in this government, a similar fate would surely overtake the hon. member for de Lanaudière. Then we had another mixing and muddling of figures by the Secretary of State, and that was in putting the cost of the prairie section at $25.000 a mile. In all my reading on the question—and I do not think there has been anything of importance said upon it in parliamentary records that I have not looked at, yet this was the first time that I ever saw any statement made that the cost of the prairie section would reach the amount of $25,000 per mile. Indeed, the hon. gentleman from Wellington, who addressed the House, after hearing the hon. Secretary of State, shows what his opinion of that estimate was by telling us he believed the road can be built on the prairie for from $13,000 to $15,000 per mile, and my hon. friend from Glengarry, a practical man puts the cost at a much smaller sum. However, we had members of the government in the other House, and leaders of the opposition, concurring in placing the cost of the prairie section at $20,000 per mile and that is also the estimate of Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson, speaking at meetings in London, with Mr. Hays by his side, who certainly knew as much about it as the hon. Secretary of State or the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière. Let me say further that Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson, in addressing the shareholders of the Grand Trunk, with all the responsibility it involved, and we know it involved a great deal, gave the distance precisely as it is given by the Finance Minister on the third reading of the Bill in the House of Commons that is altogether 1,480 miles from Winnipeg to Port Simpson, and we have all those parties agreeing, while this House has been supplied with information entirely at variance with that supplied to the House of Commons and entirely different from what is believed to be accurate by hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House. My view is that the government drifted into the position they took with regard to this Bill. They had a policy distinctly announced to parliament, and nothing could be more distinctly announced of obtaining expert opinion upon it. From the time Mr. Sutherland submitted that Order in Council until the end of June, Celebs was never more deligent in search of a wife than the government were in searching for suitable gentlemen to appoint on this commission. Everything indicated a reference to a commission, and I am free to say, there is every evidence that the leader of the government drifted into this policy, and drifted very suddenly and greatly to the surprise of his friends in parliament. I heard the expression of surprise myself from those high in this House. They could not refrain from expressing their amazement at the announcement of such a measure as this, considering the previous action of the government and the suddenness with which it was sprung on the country. But what do we find ? We find that the gentlemen who were active in protesting, who told us they were writing letters to the premier protesting against what he was proposing to do, gentlemen who expressed a desire that the Conservatives were in the majority in the Senate in order that they might throw out this Bill—we find all these gentlemen now singing praises to the premier for his statemanship in bringing forward this great measure. Such praises sound to my ears as ludicrous as if Defoe had in his history of Robinson Crusoe presented that famous mariner and his man Friday on the lonely island after that memorable shipwreck as expatiating on the great and wonderful seamanship by which Robinson Crusoe had discovered the island. The position of the premier and the friends who laud him to the skies for the position he has taken on this Bill, which is merely a position which he drifted into evidently very much against his own intentions, is quite as ludicrous as the idea I have described if Defoe had put it on paper and applied it to his hero Robinson Crusoe and his man Friday. My main objection to this scheme, apart from the route, is to the Grand Trunk Railway being the party with which the government has made this contract. That lies at the very root of the question. True, the Grand Trunk Railway is a powerful and well-managed company, having at its head a gentleman recognized as a very able railway man all over this continent. That would be an advantage if other things were equal, but the great disadvantage of dealing with that company is that it has connections in the United States. The people of Canada were not so fully alive to that objection when the Grand Trunk Railway was assisted by the government of the old province of Canada. At that time the provinces were not confederated and the first aim and object of the legislature appeared to be to get an outlet to the ocean somewhere. The Grand Trunk Company as it exists to-day, is not to blame for that any more than the people of Canada ; but nevertheless the Grand Trunk has that connection and has an interest in diverting the trade of Canada to United States ports, and I entirely disagree with the hon. gentlemen who claim, rather timidly, that there are ample provisions in this Bill against injury to our trade resulting from the control of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company by the Grand Trunk. I have only to point to the words of the premier last year, when he introduced this measure to parliament. He said frankly and freely that shape legislation as we would, with all the skill that lawyers possess, to secure Canadian trade for Canadian ports, we could not do it, and the only way to secure that trade was to make the company interested in Canadian ports, which he claimed could be done by compelling this company to operate a line to Moncton. I do not agree with that at all, because the Grand Trunk Railway still retains an overwhelming interest in their Portland extension, an interest which to them must remain paramount, and which would always influence them in this matter. I agreed with the premier's statements made last year, that we could not frame an effective provision in the law even if we did our best, but I fail to find any provision in this Bill to bind the Grand Trunk Railway to carry its freight to Canadian ports. The government resisted every attempt last year and this year to insert a clause in the Bill to compel the Grand Trunk to use its influence to secure the carrying of the Canadian trade to Canadian ports. We have other evidence of what the interest of the old Grand Trunk Company is, and what they really propose and intend to do, and I have only to refer, in proof of that, to the words of Mr. Hays in London, when addressing a meeting of shareholders of the Grand Trunk Company in March last:

> The Grand Trunk to-day is drawing from this country that we are now seeking to enter, and seeking to tie up to the system, a very large portion of its traffic which we stand to lose if we do not embrace this enterprise.

Could any words be stronger than that? That they stand to lose this trade unless it is tied up in their system. He says:

> We cannot hold it. We are to-day handling from fifteen to twenty million—last year it reached 24,000,000—bushels of grain, which came across the lake from Lake Superior down to our ports, feeding the whole Grand Trunk system locally throughout Ontario, and this gives us the whole of the way from Montreal, thus contributing a very large portion of our earnings. We cannot hold that to our system if we do not take some means of fastening it to us.

Could any words be plainer than that this trade will go to other channels and not to Portland unless these means were adopted of tying up the trade to the Grand Trunk. He goes on to say:

> Now, we have another rival in that same territory which is competing with us to a certain extent now, that brings the grain down to the lake and conveys it by water across from Port Arthur and Fort William to these Ontario ports of ours. That line we do not control, and there is no likelihood or possibility of our controlling it in the near future; and that railway is making its connection with the United States lines to the south of St. Paul and Minneapolis up to Winnipeg, and drawing this grain and traffic, which is not only to-day feeding the Grand Trunk very largely, but is the only direction in which we can look for an increasing traffic. That traffic will be lost to us if we do not tie it up.

As I have already remarked no attempt has been made to bind the Grand Trunk Company at all. One would have thought that some provision might have been inserted that would more effectually bind the Grand Trunk Pacific. In the other branch of this parliament an amendment was proposed and voted down by the government, to provide that the Grand Trunk Pacific should submit to an investigation at any time when a complaint might be made to the government with regard to the diversion of the Canadian trade to United States ports, and that whenever such complaint was made the Railway Commission would have power to come in and make a thorough investigation, summoning all the parties before them, examining the books and records of the company, going to the very fountain head of trade and finding whether there was any foundation for those complaints, and report to parliament. That was the amendment proposed, in order that parliament would be seized of the fact whether this contract was being faithfully carried out. Any hon. gentleman will see that if that were in the law, the people would come to know, not through the grumbling of the press and of rival companies attacking them and perhaps attacking them unfairly, but there would be an investigation by an impartial tribunal, and information would be laid before parliament as to whether there was anything done to divert trade from our own ports. But that amendment, as I have said, was voted down by the government. My hon. friend from Queen's, New Brunswick (Hon. Mr. King) in addressing the House undertook to find some penal consequences which he thought would result to the Grand Trunk Pacific if they did not live up to this obligation. He said the government could take possession of the road. A provision to investigate the fact and ascertain how the contract was being carried out having been voted down by the government majority in the House of Commons, how could the government come in and take possession of the road without an investigation of the facts, and without a proper process, I fail for my part to understand.

Another suggestion that he made was that we might make the preference applicable only to goods that were imported over a Canadian railway and through our own ports. Well, the House of Commons have passed a resolution in that respect but the government have shown that they are only trifling with it. It was passed for spectacular purposes, because they have not announced their determination to put that provision in the tariff law and bring it into force. It is only put there for spectacular purposes, and the premier himself expressed his grave doubts as to the propriety of the step, although it was allowed to pass without opposition. As far as the other end of the preference is concerned, and that is the one the hon. gentleman from Queen's placed the greatest amount of reliance upon, that the British government may be induced to limit a preference to such of our exports as go out of our own country and reach the British market over our own railroads and in our own ships. I imagine that Mr. Chamberlain has a big enough task before him in persuading the British people to give us a preference at all without attempting to throw entirely out of joint all commercial treaties with foreign countries with regard to freedom of trade, between British and other ports of the world, and the very mention of such a proposition as being a possible remedy, at all events at the present time, is absurdity complete. Before I leave this point, I may say that I fully agree with the hon. gentleman from Queen's (Hon. Mr. King) when he says that Canada should place a great value upon the possession of our own ports. I say it is impossible to put a value in money on the importance of our open ports on the Atlantic and the Pacific. As remarked by the hon. gentleman from Queen's, Russia is spending her blood and treasure to secure an open port on the Pacific. Russia's commercial disadvantage is her exclusion from the seas of the world. She has no open ports, except in the Black Sea, and she is not allowed to pass her warships through the Dardenelles. The Baltic is frozen up for a great part of the year, and so is the Arctic ocean, and Vladivostock, and Russia is spending her blood and treasure to endeavour to keep possession of an open port on the Pacific. We have not only one open port; we have many open ports, both on the Pacific and on the Atlantic, and those open ports constitute a valuable portion of our assets as a people. How long could we preserve our autonomy if we had not these open ports? And a great deal will depend upon our future—I was going to say everything will depend upon whether the people of Canada east and west and in the centre and everywhere are true to our own seaports. It was Ralph Waldo Emmerson who said that England's great commercial position in the world was due to the fact that she had the best business stand in the world and it is a good thing for us in Canada that we have such an excellent business stand. We will commit a fatal mistake, a mistake which our children will lament after we pass off the stage of action, if we do anything at this time which will impair the usefulness of these ports, and divert from them to the ports of a foreign country, a trade which should belong to them. There is another question in connection with this subject upon which a good deal has been said by hon. gentlemen, and that is with respect to the government ownership of railways. That question is not necessarily involved in the discussion of this Bill. The whole question of government ownership is not involved in the consideration of this Bill and in the resolutions submitted by the opposition in the House of Commons, and by my hon. friend here, any more than it has been involved in some other things that Canada has done for many years past. In fact, it is not more seriously involved in this question by the attitude of the opposition than it is in the Bill we have before us. We have in this measure a proposition of government ownership for 1,900 miles of this transcontinental railway. A few years ago the government extended the Intercolonial Railway from Quebec to Montreal. Was that not acknowledging the principle of government ownership, as far as that particular case was concerned? I will not be unfair, I shall not say it was committing us to the principle of government ownership beyond this that under the circumstances that existed then and there, the government came to the decision that it was important in the interests of Canada, and of the Intercolonial Railway that we should extend it into the city of Montreal. Another proposition is before parliament just at the present time—at least we know it is coming. It has been announced that the government is to buy a railway in New Brunswick called the Canada Eastern Railway. Passing no opinion upon the wisdom of that purchase at the present moment, why is there not the cry raised: 'Oh, you are committing the country to government ownership? No such cry has been raised, and still it is a partial acknowledgment of the principle of government ownership. Our position is that the government having introduced a Bill which provides for government ownership for about 1,900 miles of railway, and after building and paying for it we are giving this railway practically away to a private company, and we are not retaining that control, which we ought to retain over the rates. I do not propose, and hon. gentlemen of the opposition do not suggest, that we should maintain that control in the way in which the present Intercolonial Railway is controlled and managed by the government. We make no such proposition, but we do say that when we are practically paying for nine-tenths of it, assuming obligations for more than nine-tenths of the entire road from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and owning half of it, that we should own the whole of it and place it under the management and control of an able commission of experts, that would be as free from political influence as the Auditor General is free to-day from political control; and if we so place it, the government would exercise public control through the board of commissioners, and whatever money there was in the enterprise, run as it would be on the highest plane of business principles, would belong to the people of Canada, and there would remain with the people's representatives opportunity of controlling rates and giving transportation at actual cost, instead of making millionaires of any number of men. Now, just as the government took the position in 1897, that it was necessary in the interests of the Intercolonial Railway that it should be extended to Montreal, we say now that it should go further west. I may say for myself that I always viewed with favour the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, and my opposition to the Bill of 1897 was entirely grounded on the terms and condition on which that extension was made. I held with my hon. friends on this side of the House that the terms were too favourable to the Drummond County Railway people and unfavourable to the people of Canada. We took that position, and time has shown that we were right, for a Bill which was $1,000,000 better for the ratepayers of Canada came back to us again and we passed it. That was my own position, and I voted against the scheme until such substantial amendments were made to the measure as made it in the public interest, and I then voted for it. There are to my mind infinitely stronger reasons to-day why the Intercolonial Railway should go further. Extending that railway to Montreal, has made it necessary to go further. What is the position of the Intercolonial Railway at this moment? What was its position before it came to Montreal, and what has it been since. There are various transportation agencies employed in bringing the trade of the west, including that of the great province of Ontario, to the east for export and also for the trade of the east itself. All these agencies and channels are employed, I may say, in bringing that trade as far as the city of Montreal. When it reaches there the Intercolonial Railway is in no position to compete for the carrying of that trade to a Canadian seaport. But it is placed in this position: that for export it can only get for carrying the produce of the west from Montreal to Halifax or St. John precisely the same rate as the Grand Trunk charges for carrying that produce from Montreal to Portland or the Canadian Pacific Railway receives for carrying it to St. John. That is, the geographical position is against the Intercolonial Railway, and I cannot blame the competing companies for this. The only condition on which the Intercolonial Railway can get export trade is by carrying it at the same rate to Halifax, seven hundred and fifty-seven miles, as the Grand Trunk carries it to Portland, a distance of 297 miles. This is the difficulty we have to deal with. How are you going to get over that? How is the Intercolonial Railway to get a reasonable share of the business, how are our ports to get a fair share of the trade of the west? I answer by extending our own system into the west and getting hold of the trade at the point of origination. If you get hold of it there you will have the carrying of it to Montreal which is the fat end of the carriage, and having had the fat end, you can carry it over the lean end to Halifax and St. John, which you can never do if you get only the lean end of the business and you will not get much of it even on these terms because the companies have the origination of the freight, and can influence shippers as to the routing of it so that they will bring it through their own channels and the Intercolonial Railway has no means of preventing it. If you want the Intercolonial Railway to become a paying road extend it to the Georgian bay, and thence into the Northwest, so that it will gather the freight at the point of origination and when that is done, it will not only carry it to Montreal but carry it to Halifax and St. John and make some money out of it, not so much as a competing road will do in carrying it to Portland, but there will be some fair and reasonable competition and in addition to that, by extending our own railway to the west, instead of sending the fox to guard the geese, every man connected with that railway and every influence it possesses will be used to bring the trade to our own ports.

I come now to a point which has been discussed fully in both branches of parliament, and I do not propose to utilize all the information I have collected with regard to it. It is not necessary I should do so, but my hon. friend the Secretary of State summed up not what were the total obligations of the government in connection with the scheme but he summed up what he says were the obligations of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and he made it up in this way: He estimated the mountain section at 766 miles, which makes a wonderful difference as to the obligations of the Grand Trunk Railway, and the government as compared with 480 miles. He estimated the paririe section at 1,100 miles. He was only looking at one side of the contract. By increasing the mileage he managed to add to the obligations the Grand Trunk Railway were to undertake and putting them all together, and, adding the cost of rolling stock which is to be supplied for the use of the railway from another source, he brought the obligations of the Grand Trunk in connection with the scheme up to $35,000,000 or $36,000,000. I submit my hon. friend has no justification for the position he has taken from the Bill before the House this year or last year. I have here Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson's statement, made at the meeting of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, on the 8th March, where he estimated the Grand Trunk obligations as being one-quarter the cost of construction of the mountain section at $50,000 a mile or one million two hundred and fifty thousand pounds. The interest for four years at three per cent—that is during the period of construction—£150,000. Added to this assuming the cost of the prairie section to be $20,000 a mile, the Grand Trunk share would be £1,400,000, interest during construction, £168,000, total, £2,969,000, or fourteen million nine hundred thousand dollars.

That was Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson's estimate, and he went on to say :

> As regards the three millions of guarantee, that, as I stated to you, will undoubtedly be a liability, and, as I stated to you also, will swell the liability of the Grand Trunk Company. As regards the five millions for rolling stock it is not five millions—it is estimated at three millions. With that the Grand Trunk has nothing to do. That rolling stock will be provided by the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, and, as the general manager will tell you, they have laid their plans for providing that rolling stock by a trust fund. Therefore, you may wipe it out and call it four millions. And as regards the one million deposit, that deposit will not cost you one single halfpenny. Therefore, the liability comes back to the sum which I have just mentioned—namely, about three millions, and I have stated distinctly and clearly that that is what we estimate the liability of the Grand Trunk to be—evenually a possibility of three millions of capital and, under any circumstances, not more than £118,000 of interest per year.

This was the statement, that instead of $35,000,000 or $36,000,000, as stated by the hon. Secretary of State, being the obligation assumed by the Grand Trunk Railway, it is only $14,900,000. An examination of the legislation of last year and this year proves conclusively that the Grand Trunk Railway Company intend, and I think very properly from their point of view, to provide the rolling stock through a rolling stock trust, and have it charged up against the earnings of the road ; and therefore, there is only $14,900,000 as the capital supplied by the Grand Trunk Railway instead of the amount stated by the hon. Secretary of State.

Now, we come to the obligations which Canada is assuming with regard to that subject. I may not go through these details, but after examining them carefully, I have come to the conclusion that the total obligations of the government in cash and in guarantees for the construction of the railway, the western division and the eastern division and the Quebec bridge, will amount if our bonds sell at par to $152,065,719, or. if the bonds guaranteed by the government are not floated at par, but are sold, as is much more likely to happen, at 90 per cent, our obligations would be swelled to $174,017,000.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—If the company continue to operate the road, our obligations will not amount to that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If it works out as the government intend it shall, that will be the extent of our obligations. If everything turns out well, I do not say the government will ultimately have to pay that amount. On the other hand, the obligations which the Grand Trunk Railway assume are obligations which I believe if the whole undertaking is prosperous, they will not have to provide for. If everything works out well and payments are made promptly, the obligations will not have turned out to be so great; but at present we are assuming these enormous obligations, and we have to weigh them with the obligations the Grand Trunk Railway Company are assuming, and when we do that and find that our proportion is so enormously greater than that of the company the conclusion is irresistibly forced upon us that for the paltry contributions thrown in by the Grand Trunk Railway Company it is absurd to give the whole enterprise away, for them to control it in their own interest and not in the interest of the people of Canada. Another point was raised in the House of Commons by a gentleman whose name is a guarante for the correctness and importance of any statement he may make on a financial question. I refer to Mr. Osler, one of the members for Toronto.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Perhaps my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie is a greater authority than Mr. Osler, but whatever my hon. friend may think or say, there are on both sides of this House, gentlemen who have a very great respect for Mr. Osler's opinion on a financial question. Mr. Osler made a point in connection with the point I am now considering, and it is this : we are doing all this on a basis of three per cent. Should the rate of interest go higher within the next fifty years, what will be our loss ? He went further, and said he was expressing the opinion of the financial world to-day, that interest is going up. There has been a swing of the pendulum for nearly fifty years downward, and the experience of the world is that the pendulum will not always swing in the one direction, and that when it swings upward it is likely to go nearly as far as it came down. Mr. Osler gave it as his opinion that the rate of interest will go up, and that before ten years even, for the very best securities, such as those of the government of Canada, the rate will more likely be four per cent than three per cent. If that should happen, what would be the consequence ? He said the difference between our furnishing money at three per cent to the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and borrowing at four per cent would amount at the end of fifty years to $118,000,000. This had reference to the cost of the eastern section at $40,000 per mile, namely, $76,000,000. I know Mr. Osler was ridiculed by some of the less informed members of the House of Commons for having made that statement. I notice one gentleman who thought himself a great authority on finance, questioned the accuracy of Mr. Osler's statement. In order to satisfy myself that the statement was correct, I wrote to Mr. Fitzgerald, the Superintendent of Insurance, who is an actuary of high standing, asking him to state for my information in connection with the discussion of this Bill, what would be the difference between three per cent and four per cent on $76,000,000 for fifty years, computing the interest on the difference at 3 and 4 per cent and compounding annually. His answer is as follows :—

Office of the Superintendent of Insurance,
Ottawa, June 17th, 1904.

Dear Senator Ferguson,—In reply to your letter of 16th instant, I beg to say that the difference in interest between a 3 per cent rate and one of 4 per cent upon the sum named would be $760,000 per year. The amount of $760.000 annually at the end of 50 years would be at 3 per cent $85,725,621, and at a 4 per cent, $116,026,981. Interest in all cases compounded annually.

Faithfully yours,
W. FITZGERALD,
Superintendent of Insurance.

Hon. Senator Ferguson,
The Senate, Ottawa.

I found on comparison there is a difference of two millions between the two statements and it arises from the fact that in Mr. Osler's calculation the interest was compounded semi-annually, while in this instance the interest is compounded annually. Now this may not happen. The prevailing rate of interest may not be so high as four per cent during the next fifty years, but there are strong reasons for believing that it will be higher than three per cent. The fact is the occasions when it has dropped below three per cent are so unimportant and few, that they are not worth taking into the calculation. It is more than probable that the rate of interest on money that the government will borrow to do all these things for the Grand Trunk Railway, will be higher than three per cent. It will involve a very heavy strain and loss on the people of Canada. Before leaving this subject, I wish to point out there is just one change in the contract which may appear very simple, which works out a very great deal to the people of Canada. Hon. gentlemen opposite have told us that these changes are unimportant, but it is possible by the use of a very few words to make serious changes in a contract or in a law. I find by carefully going over the agreement of last year, that with regard to the guarantee on the cost of construction of the mountain section—working it out on the estimate of Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson at a cost of $50,000 a mile, and $6,000 per mile for interest during construction. The amount of our obligations under the old agreement would be $21,300,000. In other words, we could only be called upon for thirty thousand dollars per mile under the old contract, an obligation amounting to $15,000,000. Interest for seven years would amount to $3,150,000, and three years further interest capitalized at $1,350,000. Just one criticism might be offered to this—that we might not be ultimately called upon to pay all that three years' interest. But I am putting in the full extent of our obligations, and I have no hesitation in saying that the Grand Trunk Railway Company would not be such fools as to show any earnings that would be applied to the bonds for those three years. What the hon. gentleman from Wellington calls 'second construction' would be on about that time, and the company could easily apply a very large proportion of their earnings to improving the road, and when they could get that money on such very easy terms as three per cent, and repayment extending over forty years, they would find a useful way of expending it on their road. They would not be such fools as to show a surplus for those three years, and the government is sure to be called upon for that. As I have said, under the old agreement the liability is $21,300,000. In considering the new agreement, we will first proceed on the assumption that the bonds will sell at par. I assume the cost of the mountain section, 500 miles at $50,000 per mile and $6,000 per mile for interest during construction; three-fourths of this would be our proportion, which would amount to $21,000,000. Then there is the interest for seven years at three per cent on this sum, amounting to $4,410,000. That we are certainly bound to provide. Then comes interest for three years, capitalized. That also is positively certain. There is another item imposed on us by the amendment to the contract referred to by the hon. member from Wellington, and I am glad to see he showed more care and caution than most of his political friends, inasmuch as he realized the importance of this question, and expressed a hope that the matter had been provided against. I am sorry to say the hon. gentleman's hope is to be disappointed, because no provision is made in the Bill against the danger which he apprehended. There is a provision in this Bill that at the end of the period of construction and the seven years and three years—eighteen years from this time—if there is default in the payment of interest equal to five years, then the government could come in, not to foreclose as ordinary bond-holders would be able to do, but to take control by the appointment of a manager who would distribute the receipts between the government and the Grand Trunk Railway. Under this provision, as it stands, there is not the slightest doubt that the government has no power to assume the management of the road until there is a default equal to five full and complete years, and it is quite possible for the company to allow the default to go for four and three-quarter years, pay a quarter-year's interest or a half-year's interest, and then the condition has not arisen and may never arise under which the government could come in and enforce the collection of arrears. They can go on until their default reaches the full five years, and the government cannot collect. As the Bill stands, it is perfectly reasonable to charge against the new agreement interest for four and a half years, which cannot be collected, and that would amount to $2,835,000. Assuming, therefore, that the bonds would sell at par, the difference between the agreement of last year and the agreement of the present year is $8,835,000. It made no difference to us last year, with regard to our obligation, whether the bonds sold at par or not. We only had to guarantee bonds of a certain face value, and our obligation ended. Now it is altogether different. We have not only to issue bonds of a certain value, but, if those bonds do not realize an amount equal to their face value, we have to issue further bonds to make up the difference, and assuming that the bonds would sell at ninety per cent, this would be the state of the calculation : The obligations we would assume, and the cash payment we would have to make, would amount to $33,363,750, under the new agreement, while under the old agreement it would be $21,330,000, making a difference of $12,063,750 as between last year's agreement and the present one ; and still hon. gentlemen in the House of Commons and some members of this House have treated these amendments as though they were trifling in character, and did not call for serious consideration.

In addition to the remarks I have already made with regard to the singular course pursued by the government in the manner in which they have given parliament information on this question, let me refer for a moment to the document that my hon. friend the Secretary of State very kindly laid on our table since this discussion began, a document referred to by the Minister of the Interior in the House of Commons. This is a memo. furnished on the 5th of April last by Mr. James White, geographer of the Department of the Interior, and based, as he says, upon certain surveys, plans, and other documents, which he was allowed to inspect in the general offices of the Grand Trunk Railway Company in Montreal. It is an extraordinary way to submit information of such importance to parliament. One would think that an engineer of very high standing would be selected for the purpose of examining the plans and documents and preparing this statement for parliament, even if it were proper at all to receive them in what we might call a surreptitious way from the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. If they were to be filtered to us from the Grand Trunk Railway in this way, one would have thought the proper thing would be to entrust the duty of examining them to some railway engineer who would carry some responsibility with him, and we would at least respect his report. In place of this, the geographer of the Department of the Interior, who may be a good man in his own department—I have no doubt he is, because his reports on the altitudes of Canada are very interesting publications—but to entrust him with this duty was certainly a most singular thing. This information was partly quoted by the Minister of the Interior in the House of Commons. He did not read the whole of it, and it was not laid before this House until it came to us the other day. I find on reading it that my hon. friend from de Lanaudière has drawn his inspiration largely from the report of this geographer. He has led us to believe that he has technical knowledge and skill, and when he rose to address the House, one would have supposed that he was an experienced railway builder. I know he is an excellent surveyor, but he has leaned in this debate very much upon the document furnished by the geographer. In connection with this, I may mention that we had last year submitted to us, when we entered on the discussion of the agreement with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, what was called a mountain of information. It was a pamphlet compiled by a geologist, Dr. Ami, and a map was annexed to that document showing the course of the road to be constructed between Winnipeg and Quebec. Hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House professed to find a vast amount of important and useful information in that document. It was stated to this House with the greatest assurance, particularly by the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière, that the route of that railway as laid down by Dr. Ami, was an almost ideal route, that it traversed a plain extending almost the entire way between the two cities, with a very gentle incline eastward. To use the language of an enthusiastic supporter of the Bill, you had only to start an engine and train on the track at Winnipeg, and it would glide down all the way to Quebec impelled by its own momentum. This pamphlet was claimed to contain mountains of information, by the premier and his friends. But we had another incident about the time of the opening of this session. The Minister of Justice addressed a meeting near the city of Quebec, in course of which he intimated that it was not the intention of the government to follow the direct route talked of last year, that it was intended to take a more circuitous northern route, and that they would find a much more level and preferable route to that proposed when the Bill of last year was before us. Just about the same time another geologist was heard from, Dr. Bell, Acting Director of the Geological Survey. Let me say I have great respect for Dr. Bell. As a geologist, he has done first-class work, but it was an extraordinary course, in taking up an enormous enterprise like this, involving an expenditure of nearly $200,000,000, and tying up the destiny of Canada for generations, to go to a geologist for information, and still more ridiculous to quote, as the premier did in the House of Commons, the remarks of a missionary made some 200 years ago, about a part of the country between this and the north pole; but it is to missionaries and geologists and geographers that the government go for information, with regard to carrying out an enterprise involving such an enormous expenditure. Dr. Bell stated, when addressing this meeting at Quebec, that the route as proposed last year was not a good route. Can it be possible, after the reputation given to that route by my hon. friend from de Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) and other hon. gentlemen in this House, and in the press supporting the government that the present acting director of the Geological Survey was put up to say that the route was not a good one, and that a much better route could be obtained by following a more northerly course to Winnipeg. Dr. Bell points out what I think is absolutely true, that the distance between two points so far north by a northerly circuitous route, as compared with a direct route, is not as great as it would appear to be on an ordinary map. By the use of a globe it will be found the difference is very little indeed. Here is what Dr. Bell said:

Again the actual difference would be greatly increased along the generally straight route by the numerous minor departures from a straight line, which would be rendered necessary by the uneven character of the country, as compared with the northern route. A comparison with the existing section of the Canadian Pacific Railway between Mattawa and Rat Portage, shows this amounts to nearly 30 per cent increase in the mileage, as compared with the straight line between these points, and there would be a corresponding disadvantage on the proposed southern route, to say nothing of the innumerable steep grades both eastward and westward. The nominally straight line between the head of Lake Nipigon and Quebec, on this standard of comparison, would really be one thousand and fifty-three miles.

Dr. Bell, it will be observed, says that the direct route so highly lauded last year, would be increased thirty per cent in length from curvature, owing to the uneven character of the country. Dr. Bell was no doubt put up by the government to make the statement which I have quoted, for surely we are not to believe that the acting head of the Geological Survey of Canada would deliver an address bearing on the paramount question in the minds of the people of Canada to-day without the sanction and authority of the government. After that declaration and the statement of the Minister of Justice that a more northern route would be taken, what have we now? We have this geographer telling us, and his word supported by the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière, that it is not proposed to take this northern route in the province of Quebec at all. He says:

From the interprovincial boundary line it will probably run south-eastward to the head waters of the St. Maurice; thence shown the valley of the last named river; thence across the country to Quebec.

The hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière quoted these very words, but he introduced another bit of information, and that was that they would follow the St. Maurice down to Grand'Mère, thence to the city of Quebec. This is the information we are getting, entirely different from the statements made by the Minister of Justice and the acting director of the Geological Survey, and from the information given by Dr. Ami last year. We have the most absolute contradictions between the different batches of information given to us by the government, with regard to this question. It shows how utterly unprepared the government were with regard to this project, and it is no wonder the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière should say he was sorry for the government, that it was a pity they had not asked him. If the line comes down to Grand'Mère, it will of course intersect the Great Northern Railway running between Quebec and Hawkesbury, and pass within twenty miles of the Canadian Pacific Railway running from Montreal to Quebec. They cannot run from that point to Quebec for the last 102 miles—for that is the distance between Grand'Mère and Quebec—except by parallelling both the Great Northern and the Canadian Pacific Railway. There is other information in this report of the geographer in the matter of routes, and this document bears on the face of it information that the Grand Trunk in making the surveys to which it refers were not dealing with the scheme before the House, but with their own original plan of a railway from North Bay to Winnipeg. That is the route about which this information has been given to us by the geographer. It would seem that a long time before reaching the interprovincial boundary between Ontario and Quebec, they have deviated the line southward, getting the best grade they could find between Winnipeg and North Bay, and it therefore indicates one of two things: either that the Grand Trunk Railway Company have simply in their minds, as a good many people believe they have, an intention to go on in their own way, building to North Bay, and not bothering their heads much about the eastern extension, and which it is doubtful if the government intend to build, or the geographer's statement is information regarding work that was done a considerable time ago, in fact, pretty early last year. If this work was done, last year, and is not a recent development as the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière says it is, it should have been submitted to parliament long ago. Either it is information obtained last year, or the Grand Trunk Railway are proceeding on their own original plan, knowing the government better than we do, and believing there is no intention of building the eastern section from North Bay to Moncton. Now there is another piece of information in this memo. It claims that an extremely good grade has been obtained for this line all the way from Winnipeg to North Bay, but, even if that statement is correct, not more than two-thirds of it would belong to the main line of the National Transcontinental Railway, assuming it is carried out as the Bill before us provides, down to Moncton. It claims that grades have been found not more than four-tenths of one per cent per mile. All I can say is if such grades have been found, it is remarkably good and it will afford an excellent route for traffic, which traffic can be carried at a very cheap rate, and if the cost of the road is not abnormally increased, on account of getting such a low grade, every one will have cause to congratulate the country on that. But, if it means that as the eastern extension is to be a part of the Transcontinental Railway, and as the Grand Trunk people will not have to provide the money for building this road, they may be selecting a route entirely regardless of what it will cost, and it may be found, notwithstanding the opinion of the geographer to the contrary, that a very large amount in excess of any estimate we have before us will be necessarily expended before we can get a road with grades such as this over the route to be traversed by this railway. I may say that the information I had last year from private sources, and which I referred to in my speech on that occasion is that on the route for some hundreds of miles after passing the meridian of Port Arthur, a plateau would be found, with a very easy grade for some 200 or 300 miles, and I would not be at all surprised to learn that such a route has been obtained. But there has been a well established opinion both in the House and in the country, that the route of the railway extending east from about the point where the Grand Trunk Railway say they will divert to North Bay, all the way to Quebec will be a most difficult line to construct, and I hesitate to accept as correct the statement that (except at the expenditure of an enormous amount of money which would just simply swamp the country,) a four-tenths of one per cent grade can be obtained between Winnipeg and Quebec, I would not say it would be impossible to obtain such a grade at all, but it is certain if it can be found all the way through, it can only be at a heavy cost per mile from one end to the other. We have had a great many statements made about the route of this railway. There have been some contradictory statements made with regard to the route in New Brunswick as well as in regard to routes through the province of Quebec. It was stated in parliament that this road would run along near the northern boundary of Maine, and take the most direct course that could be obtained from Quebec to Moncton. Instead of that we have the Finance Minister stating to the House of Commons the other day that it is the intention of the government to build that road from Edmundston to Fredericton, and divert from that place to Moncton, across the country, a distance of 100 miles, which, if hon. gentlemen will look at the map, they will see is as exact a zig-zag as one could describe. It is possitively a forked lightning line in the province of New Brunswick according to the statement of the hon. gentleman. The Hon. Mr. Emmerson, Minister of Railways, stated in the city of St. John, during the by-election last winter, that it was intended to come down to St. John, by what is called the old New Brunswick Central Railway, from Chipman to Norton, and join the Intercolonial Railway there and enter St. John on the eastern side and thus get all the advantage of the harbour frontage at Courtenay Bay. Just at the same time Mr. Hays wrote a letter to the mayor of St. John, asking for a reservation of space for the Grand Trunk on the western side of the harbour. These two propositions came before the electors at the same moment. Each had a very laudable object in view, and that was to get votes for the government candidate, but Messrs. Hays and Emmerson did not consult each other about the statements to be made, and the two were sprung upon the people at the same time and discredited each other to the detriment of the chances of the government candidate. I ask hon. gentlemen if they think it is possible to get a four-tenths of one per cent grade in that part of the province of New Brunswick? Let them go over the road which now runs from Edmundston to Fredericton, and they will find this state of things to exist. I am indebted for my information on this subject to the publication of the geographer.

Between Newburg Junction and Shewan, a distance of five miles, the grade is 1·04 per cent, or seventy-three feet to the mile.

There may be a grade that is a great deal sharper than that at some point within the five miles—very likely there is—but the average between these two stations is one and four-tenths per cent per mile. How much? Four times as difficult a grade as the one which we are told is to be the maximum grade for the construction of this railway all through its whole length from Winnipeg to Moncton, and this is through a part of the country where a railway is already built and owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and where the best grades that could be got—they had the whole country before them—were obtained. The same points are to be touched, Edmundston and Fredericton. I am not going to say that the Grand Trunk Pacific built by the government of Canada without any limitation as to money, may not be able to get a better grade than that, but I do say they cannot overcome such a difficult grade as that. Perhaps a good deal of money has been spent already in getting even as good as that is, but such a grade as that cannot be overcome, involving such a long distance—and there are other places on the same line of equal difficulty. Then another point referred to by Mr. Emmerson, about reaching the city of St. John, was simply political clap-trap, and perhaps it is not worth while referring to it. He said that gentlemen connected with the Grand Trunk had acquired stock in the New Brunswick Central Railway and they intended to come to the city of St. John by that road. I find that between Annandale and Salmon Creek on the New Brunswick Central, a distance of three miles, the average grade is 1·07 per cent, or eighty-eight feet to the mile, something like five times greater than the grade which we are told is to be the maximum on this road. I will give you another illustration regarding grades on what Mr. Fielding says is to be the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway and that is a point between Burt Lake and Upper Keswick on the line between Fredericton and Woodstock; there I find that there is a grade of 85 feet to the mile, covering the whole three miles, an average grade of one and six-tenths per cent. We are told by the hon. member for de Lanaudière, that it is the intention to come down the St. Maurice to Grand'Mère and utilize the valley that way. They would probably have to take about the same route to Quebec as the Great Northern does. What do we find on that route? We find that for five miles between the stations of Charlesbourgh and Lorette, very near the city of Quebec, there is a grade on the Great Northern Railway of 67 feet to the mile, or one and three-tenths per cent—immensely greater and more difficult than what we are told is to be the maximum grade of the transcontinental railway. I admit that if the transcontinental railway comes down to the valley of the St. Lawrence and hugs the shore of the river where the Canadian Pacific Railway goes through, they will get an easier grade, but I do not think the people of Canada are prepared to be told that this great transcontinental railway, which was to open a new country from ocean to ocean, is going to parallel two existing roads for one hundred miles between Quebec and Three Rivers. Now there is another statement made by the geographer, which I wish to deal with, and which I think is very misleading. He says :

> There is nothing to be gained by reducing the grade below 0·03 per cent, as it does not require the expenditure of more power to haul a train up such a grade than it would to start it on the level.

And my hon. friend from de Lanaudière appropriated this statement and gave it to us in his speech. I have turned up Wellington and Smith whom I am told are the very best authorities on railway engineering. Smith is a Canadian writer of great authority and Wellington is a standard writer. Wellington has tables which disclose these facts :

> On the level a mastodon engine with twenty-one-inch by twenty-six-inch cylinder will carry fifty cars weighing fifteen and one-half tons and carrying thirty tons, the same engine on a three-tenths of a one per cent grade will carry twenty-eight cars of the same capacity and of the same weight. The difference between the two is as fifty is to twenty-eight.

If the hon. gentlemen would look closely they will find that there is a catch in the words of the geographer. What it means is that the same power required to start a certain weight on the level would carry much more weight when it is moving. How does it work out in operation ? If you use an engine which will just start a certain weight on the level, and which is able to carry that over a grade of three-tenths of one per cent, you must manage your line so that all your starting points and sidings may be on the level, and you may aim at not having to make any start where there is a grade ; but supposing something happens and you have to stop there, you cannot move—that is you are carrying such a load as is proposed for a level start, therefore you must use an engine suitable for a three-tenths of one per cent or four-tenths per cent grade one of vastly more power than would be necessary to operate a road on the level, and, consequently, the cost of operating a road where you have a grade of that kind is a great deal more than where you have it on the level, besides the greater cost of fuel. I am free to admit that three-tenths of one per cent is an excellent grade, but try to make the country believe this grade is as good as on a level is perfectly absurd, and the difference between moving a heavy train on such a grade, as compared with moving it on the level is very great indeed. I am not making the statement on my own authority, I have the books here and if any hon. gentleman doubts it I will show him the source of my information. I believe the authority I have quoted is accepted by railway operators everywhere. What is the statement made by Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson, in London, in regard to grades? Did he say the maximum grade on this road was to be 21 feet to the mile ? Nothing of the kind. He says they were to build a road with grades east and west of not more than 91 feet to the mile, nearly five times greater than was stated in the House by the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière. I am not going to run down the project, because it will be necessary in some parts of it to have severe grades and it may be useful road notwithstanding such grades. I hope there will not be very many. But there is no use in deceiving the House or country by stating that a road of this ideal character is to be built. My hon. friend pointed to the Grand Trunk between Montreal and Toronto, and told us just such a road as that was to be built, and said the contract provided for that. If hon. gentlemen will look at the contract they will find it is not a correct statement. There is an important qualification there, making allowance between an old road and a newly constructed railway. A newly constructed railway is allowed to use very much more severe grades, and to build bridges and other works differently from those they will ultimately put in when they become well established. My hon. friend told us this grade was only reached on the Grand Trunk recently at an enormous expense. He admitted the cost was very great. It is not claimed in the Bill that we are going to conform with these grades immediately. The road shall come up to the standard as far as a newly constructed road should reasonably be expected to compare with an old road that had undergone a second construction, and which had become an important thoroughfare, and which it was necessary to put in the best possible shape after forty years operation. Before leaving this point, I will direct my attention to another point referred to by the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière, and that is, his endorsation of certain figures and calculations which were submitted to parliament last year by Mr. Charlton, member for one of the Norfolks. He said he had examined very carefully the figures of Mr. Charlton, and he fully and completely endorsed these calculations, and he described Mr. Charlton as a very wonderful man indeed, in consequence of having made such calculations as these. I have been in communication, last year and this year, with gentlemen who know all about these subjects, and Mr. Charlton's calculations were the subject of criticism and afforded them some amusement.

The absurdity in the calculation was pointed out. Mr. Charlton looked up the returns of three or four of our railways and he found they gave a cost of haulage as an average of about $1 per train mile of all their trains, and he made his computation from that. It is true that the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière in this House added 50 per cent to that, making it $1.50 in place of $1. But if hon. gentlemen will look into it carefully they will find what this means. One dollar per train mile is the average cost in Canada of all trains. The average train is ascertained by statistics to be less than seventeen cars, and the hon. gentleman was applying the average cost of moving with a comparatively light engine, a light train of seventeen cars, with that of moving the heaviest engine that could be built, on the heaviest rails laid down, and carrying the heaviest load that could be carried—60,000 bushels of wheat. The absurdity of that comparison is evident the moment it is stated. Railway men tell me that the last-named train cannot be moved at less than three times the cost of the average train. They tell me the train that carries the empties back would be several times heavier than an average train, and the empties would have to be carried back where there was no bulky traffic westward, and the carrying of the empties back and the heavy train forward could not be accomplished at less than five or six times the cost of an average train. Once we consider that point we will see that Mr. Charlton's calculations evaporate in air, and yet we have the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière endorsing those figures and speaking of Mr. Charlton as a wonderful man because he made such calculations as that. I do not think there is any authority in Canada to-day who will be found to admit for one moment that it is possible to carry wheat on an all-rail route from the west to tide water as cheaply as it could be carried on an all-water route or part water and part rail. My hon. friend from de Lanaudière admitted that before he went on to endorse Mr. Charlton's calculations. If he were correct in his admission he could not accept Mr. Charlton's calculations because that would be making the cost by rail cheaper than the cost by water route, which the hon. gentleman said would be impossible. There are a few points in reference to this Bill which I think may be better dealt with in committee, and I have very nearly traversed all the ground I intend to cover at present. Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson, in London made the following statement:

> I must not forget to mention that in return for the support which we ask you to accord to the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, the Grand Trunk Company will retain a controlling interest in that company, and will become the possessors of the whole of the common stock, amounting to $25,000,000 or £5,000,000.

And he goes on to say what may be the prospective value of that security:

> What may be the prospective value of that security or when it may acquire a substantial value, I cannot precisely predict, but you must bear in mind the certain and rapid development of the Northwest on the one hand, and the actual and very profitable results on the other hand, which have attended the working of other railroads operated under conditions and in districts not dissimilar from those contemplated for the Grand Trunk Pacific Company.

Here we have Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson saying that in return for support which they are giving the company they are getting this common stock. There can be no doubt about that. The Grand Trunk Pacific have amended their Act of incorporation to enable them to dispose of this stock, for what? For the guarantee of the bonds. There is no doubt about that. We have passed the Bill ourselves giving them power to dispose of this common stock, not for any value, because you cannot put a commercial value on the guarantee of the bonds, but they may dispose of it in consequence of that guarantee. Last session the Bill did not include the word 'guarantee.' Section 11 of the Act of incorporation did not include that word. Now, that clause is repealed, and a clause is introduced which has this change enabling them to dispose of this stock in return for a guarantee, showing plainly that they are not to receive money for it, but they are to give it for a consideration, and that consideration is to be the guarantee of those bonds. If the obligations of Canada are ten times greater than the Grand Trunk Railway obligation, why should the Grand Trunk Railway be given all this common stock, whatever it may be worth in the future, and I hope the day will come when it will be valuable—why should it be given to them in return for the paltry support they are giving to the enterprise ? Or why should not the stock be divided in the proportions they guarantee, giving three-quarters to the government and one-fourth to the Grand Trunk ? If that were done, there would be some reason and fair-play about it, and if the government were holding three-quarters of the stock of the company it would enable them to control the rates, the moving of the traffic and its destination at Canadian ports. It would enable the government to pass the dividends on their part of the stock, and allow the producers of Canada to get the benefit of low freight rates. They would get that if the government held three-fourths of the stock. But no, it is all given to the Grand Trunk—$25,000,000—and there is nothing in the Bill to prevent the Grand Trunk Railway getting the whole of that $45,000,000. There may be no preference stock declared at all.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The whole thing is subject to resolution of the directors.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend is correct. There is nothing to prevent the whole amount of that stock going to the Grand Trunk, and all that for the support which they are giving to the scheme, support which amounts to only $14,900,000, when none of the stock goes to the government of Canada which is, in obligations and in cash, supporting the scheme to the extent of somewhere between $150,000,000 and $170,000,000. Now last year we were told that the government had been extremely careful. They told us so themselves. I do not believe many people think them very careful in anything—but they told us last year they had come to the conclusion that this stock must not be speculated with, that the Grand Trunk Railway Company must keep that stock during the existence of this lease for fifty years, and they strenuously resisted any proposition whatever which would lead to any disposition of the stock of the company except that it should go to the Grand Trunk Railway Company and be held until the expiration of the fifty years. Now they have changed all that; they enable the Grand Trunk Railway Company to do what they please with this $25,000,000 of common stock as long as they hold sufficient of it to control the Pacific Company. It is not necessary, as I read the Bill, that they should hold much of it. They may sell half of it. They may hold a string to the balance so that they retain the control, but all the stock may go into speculation notwithstanding all that was said to us last year with regard to the great wisdom shown by the government in requiring the Grand Trunk Railway Company to hold it for fifty years. And in speaking of this common stock, not only is it very objectionable that it should go to the Grand Trunk Railway Company who are doing so little to support this scheme, and none to the government, but I think a very vicious provision has been made to facilitate watering to the utmost extent in connection with this common stock. There is no doubt about it, all the legislation, and I have notes of eight or ten provisions in various laws of last year and this year, and they all point to an open door with regard to the watering of stock and placing it among promoters, and for which no substantial contribution may ever be made towards the construction of the road, and that stock may yet appear claiming dividends from the earnings of the road and increasing the cost of transportation to the people of Canada. On that question let me read the views of Mr. Blair, and these opinions were given in that famous memorandum which he submitted to his colleagues, and which has now become public property. He says :

And any new transcontinental lines should be built under conditions which would make every dollar of bonds and every share of stock available in cash as near the face value as possible. If bonds may be disposed of by companies at a large discount, and stock distributed gratuitously, or on terms which produce little or no cash at all for construction and equipment purposes—which has been forbidden by law—the business, such railways may do will, for dividend purposes, be always unduly burden and will be a grave handicap for all time to the development of the interior. With capital shares and bonds ultimately coming into the hands of innocent buyers at prices increasing with the growth of the railway traffic, it will be impossible for either a railway commisison of the government itself to reduce tolls below a dividend-paying basis. An appeal from the holders of the company's bonds and shares, to fix tolls sufficiently high to insure a moderate dividend cannot easily be resisted, and as a consequence the country through its business and traffic, is in effect as much charged, though indirectly, with the weight of these obligations as if the amount was covered by an issue of government bonds.

Moreover, the system is not sound. Why should a few people be allowed to make themselves millionaires in such a way? No one nowadays puts his money into the capital shares of a railway company at the inception of the undertaking. It has been done hitherto; it is not done now, and why not? Because with government assistance supplementing the sale of bonds the railroad can be built. And yet capital shares are issued by the million and appear later, when the enterprise becomes a success, in the hands of the purchasers who clamour for dividends upon them.

That is the view of Mr. Blair and I think it is the view entertained by every one who has an interest in the welfare of the country—that the common stock of a great corporation of this kind should not be allowed to pass without a sufficient value for it, and the allowing of this common stock to pass to the Grand Trunk Railway Company to do as they please with it absolutely for the paltry consideration of the guarantee which they are giving to the bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, amounting to $14,900,000, is to my mind a monstrous piece of legislation.

I have just a few remarks to make on two other points. A great deal has been said about the running rights which the government have over those lines under their lease to the Grand Trunk Pacific, and the running rights which they can give to other railroads for operating over it. Railroad men tell me that those are very slight advantages indeed, that there are very few advantages to other railway companies and the public from those running rights. The Grand Trunk Railway Company will have control of the railroads; they will have their staff and equipment, and any other company may only come in and use the line for some very limited purposes and to a very limited extent; but I would say this, the original agreement contained a provision that the government should have certain running rights over the western division during the continuation of the lease, and that the Grand Trunk Railway Company would have a right to run their trains over the Intercolonial Railway. It is now provided, however, at the termination of that period of fifty years, that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company would continue to have more than ordinary running rights over the eastern section, notwithstanding the termination of the lease. It is not the kind of running rights it was provided the Grand Trunk Railway should have over the Intercolonial Railway, but they are to have haulage and running rights sufficient to meet the requirements of the trade that they were carrying on between their western division and the Grand Trunk Railway system of Canada. These are running rights and haulage rights which are qualified by the Act, and of immensely more importance than the rights the government will have over the western division during the continuance of the lease; but while it is provided if the lease terminates at fifty years and the government runs the eastern section the Grand Trunk Pacific's right to use the eastern division for their purposes shall continue in a manner very much more important and valuable to them than the usual running rights such as I have described that the government were to have over the western division. But while that is provided for in the case of the Grand Trunk Pacific, the government lose their running privilege over the western division. Surely if the Grand Trunk Railway at the end of fifty years, terminate their lease and the government undertake to operate their own end of the railroad, and the Grand Trunk Railway retain all their rights and running privileges over that railroad, the government should retain some running rights over the western division; but there is no reciprocity in it at all. Any motion to give that fair-play to the government of Canada was rejected in the House of Commons. The government determined to give the Grand Trunk Railway Company its own way in everything and secure no right of any kind for the country, but that in the original agreement, and that was very slight indeed. I have already touched on the question of rolling stock and I do not propose to deal with it again. Should the position I have taken be disputed, that Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson told the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway Company in London that the Grand Trunk Railway Company would not be called upon to contribute anything towards furnishing the rolling stock, but that it was to be raised by a trust and paid for out of the earnings—if that position is disputed, it may be discussed further in committee, but as far as I have been able to learn, and I have gone over all the clauses of our legislation last year and this year, and the General Railway Act, the Act of Incorporation and the two agreements, point unmistakably to the fact that the intention of the company is that the company shall provide money out of a trust fund and pay for it out of the earnings of the railroad and not make it an obligation against the Grand Trunk Railway Company.

I know I have not touched many points of great importance in discussing this question, but it is impossible in a two hours' address to cover all the ground. I am convinced, the more thoroughly I have examined this question, that when the government of Canada entered into this contract with the Grand Trunk Railway they took a step that is going to prove in the future a most serious detriment to the best interests of the people of Canada. They are handing over the trade of the Dominion to a corporation which has an interest in diverting it from Canadian ports. They have not provided safeguards against such a diversion of our trade. They have assumed obligations and burdens entirely disproportionate to the value of the enterprise and to the obligations assumed on the part of the contracting company. They have committed us to an enterprise that will impair the ability of the country to enter upon other much needed schemes for the development of our country for many years to come. I do not say it is going to ruin the country; I do not say that if all this money were lost, that Canada cannot stand it? The country is prosperous and growing, and able to do very great and important things, but I do say there is a limit to the obligations we can undertake and preserve our credit before the world. We will have to go into the markets of the world and borrow a great deal of money. We are allowing our bonds to be floated for the purposes of this company to an enormous extent. We will have to impair our credit considerably and in the event of a depression—and hon. gentlemen know some day we will be visited with a wave of depression in this country—having to carry all these burdens we will not feel ourselves as free to deal with transportation in other lines as we should like to do. A supreme act of folly was committed by this government when it rushed headlong into this project without investigation, and without getting expert advice which it was their duty to obtain, and that folly will come back upon the people of Canada for many years to come.

At six o'clock, the Speaker left the chair.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If I were to consult my own pleasure, and I am sure that of this honourable House, after the very lengthy speeches which we have heard in the Senate, and which have been delivered in the other chamber on this question, I would give a silent vote on this Bill. I deem it my duty, however, at least in the interest of the division which I have the honour to represent here, to offer a few remarks. I desire to congratulate the hon. gentleman from Marshfield (Hon. Mr. Ferguson) upon the very able address which he has delivered this afternoon, in which he criticised for over two hours an exceptionally good measure, as I propose to show. I do not intend to follow the hon. gentleman on all the points which he has discussed, and which I believe have been already discussed both in the Senate and in the other chamber, nor do I propose to follow him in the figures he has quoted, especially with regard to distances and the cost of the road. Any opinion which I would express on those figures, not being a railway man, would not have the weight of the opinions which have been uttered by others in both Houses of parliament.

The first point which I believe was discussed by the hon. gentleman and which was the subject of an objection on his part, was, that the government should have appointed a commission on transportation for the purpose of inquiring as to the best mode of meeting the requirements of the country in regard to the construction of this railway. I can very well appreciate the desire of my hon. friends in that respect. They have been waiting so long before adopting any policy on this question, both last session and this year especially in the House of Commons, that they would have derived a great deal of benefit if such a commission had been appointed. It would have enabled them to form a better opinion, and agree upon one scheme, which they have hitherto been unable to do. As far as the government is concerned, it did not require anything of the kind, and from the very moment the question was approached, the government came to parliament with a complete measure, a measure which commended itself to the good judgment of parliament and of the country. Last session, we heard a great deal from hon. gentlemen opposite as to the measure which was then submitted for the first time as being premature. It was claimed that the government had not the proper information and that the conditions were not as was claimed, and that, anyway, there was no hurry to present a measure of the kind. The hon. members of the opposition have changed their opinion in that respect, as well as in several other respects. I believe now that they are all agreed upon as to the necessity of immediately constructing a transcontinental railway.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—No, no.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I propose to show that they are agreed upon this, and I shall rest my argument, not on the speeches made by hon. gentlemen opposite, but on the resolutions offered by the leader of the opposition in the House of Commons and by the hon. gentleman who leads the opposition in the Senate. The only difference between the two parties, as I propose to show, is, whether the work should be done by a company or by the government—a road owned and operated by the government, and whether the Intercolonial Railway should or should not form part of this transcontinental railway. But as far as the urgency of building a transcontinental railway is concerned, I say we are all agreed.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—No.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I go further. As far as the advisability of building a railway from Moncton to Winnipeg independently of the Intercolonial Railway, we seem also to be agreed. Let me refer to the amendment presented by the hon. leader of the opposition in the House of Commons on the 5th April, 1904. I call attention to one of the paragraphs in the preamble of that resolution :

This House is of opinion that in considering these problems and initiating and developing any great national system of transportation, it should be our aim to provide the best and cheapest carriage for our products and importations; to secure their transportation through Canadian channels and Canadian seaports and for that purpose to make the Canadian routes the most economical and serviceable ; to open up valuable territory for colonization and development ; to stimulate interprovincial trade; and to bind more closely together the scattered communities of our country.

If hon. gentlemen will compare this part of the preamble of the motion with the remarks offered by the hon. leader of the government when the measure was presented last year, it will be found to be the same thing almost word for word. Anyway it is the same idea, and the reasons offered for the measure in both Houses are exactly the same. If I turn to the resolution itself, what will I find :

The House is of opinion that instead of ratifying the proposed amended contract it would be more in the public interest to initiate forthwith, and develop with all speed, a system of national transportation, which should include :

1. The immediate construction and control by the Dominion of such lines of railway in the west to the Pacific as the enormous importance and increasing development of the great western country require.

2. The extension of the Intercolonial Railway to the Georgian Bay and thence to Winnipeg, and the extension and improvement in the province of Quebec and in the maritime provinces of the government system of railways.

3. The development and improvement of our canals and inland waterways, and the thorough and efficient equipment of our national ports and terminals on the Atlantic and Pacific as well as on the St. Lawrence and on the great lakes.

4. The thorough examination, exploration and survey of the country between Quebec and Winnipeg, with a view to the future construction of such lines of railway as may be found in the public interest.

Does not this clearly imply the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Georgian bay, and the construction of a railway from Winnipeg to Quebec, independently of the Intercolonial Railway, after having obtained the necessary information for the location of the road ? I therefore say that according to this resolution, according to the position taken by the hon. leader of the opposition in the House of Commons, he admits the urgent necessity of immediately constructing a transcontinental railway, and he contends only that the Intercolonial should form part, for the present, of this transcontinental line, and that the portion from Winnipeg to the Pacific coast should be constructed, owned and operated by the government, and that as soon as possible another line of railway be constructed from Winnipeg to Quebec. Therefore, I say that the only thing which divides the government and the leader of the opposition in that respect is the question of ownership and operation of the road, and as to whether the Intercolonial should be extended to Georgian bay. Now let me call the attention of this honourable House to the motion that has been offered by the hon. leader of the opposition. It is in these lines :

That in the opinion of this House it is inexpedient to commit the country to the proposed enormous obligations upon the terms and in the manner set forth in the agreements proposed to be ratified by this Bill, thereby adopting a policy which will impair the power of Canada to deal effectively with the transportation problem on other lines for many years to come ; that if such obligations are to be assumed, the road should be built, owned and controlled by the government in order that Canadian seaports may be assured for the outlet of all freight and government control of rates be secured.

This amendment urges the government ownership of the road, and criticises in a general way the terms of the contract entered into between the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific. But I say that this resolution itself implies also the necessity of the building of the road, and what divides us are really questions of detail. I desire, in as few words as possible, to recall the circumstances under which this measure was presented last year, and what it implies. Hon. gentlemen will remember that last year the Grand Trunk Railway Company came before parliament with a strong determination of extending their railway system in the west. The Grand Trunk Railway Company is a corporation second to none in magnitude on this continent, and I do not suppose for a moment that any one on the other side will undertake to say that it would have been good policy on the part of the government or in the interest of the country to deny the Grand Trunk Railway Company the right of extending their system to the Northwest and through to the Pacific coast. I take it that there cannot be two opinions on this question, that it is in the interest of the country that a corporation of that magnitude should extend its system to our western coast, and I will show in the course of my remarks some of the advantages which will be derived from their doing so. The question was as to whether the Grand Trunk Railway Company should be antagonized and left to reach the west in their own way through Chicago and North Bay, or whether it was not in the interest of the country that the government should try to harmonize their interest with that of the country and induce them to join in the building of a railway which would best serve the interest of the Dominion and meet the conditions mentioned in the resolution of the hon. leader of the opposition, to which I have called the attention of the House. What then did the government do ? They declared their willingness to help the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada to reach the Northwest and the Pacific coast, but provided they should at the same time adopt the route which was in the best interest of the country, and provided also that they would consent to take a lease for the operation of a part of the transcontinental road extending from Winnipeg to Moncton. It might have served the interest of the Grand Trunk Railway Company to entirely ignore the wishes of the government and build their railway to suit only their own interests, but what would have been the consequence? The consequence would have been that the trade of the Grand Trunk Railway would have been entirely diverted from our Atlantic ports, and would have gone in a great measure to the United States. Was it not incumbent on the government to prevent that, and to enlist the experience and good-will of the Grand Trunk Railway system, and induce them to adopt a line of railway which will extend not only from the Atlantic to the Pacific, but which will also be the means of opening up large portions of Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick. If I am not mistaken it has not been suggested by any hon. gentleman on the other side, here or in the House of Commons, that, as far as the western division is concerned, there is any danger of it being a failure. It has been taken as admitted—in fact it has been referred to as being a settled fact—that the western division will be a success. If it should be a success, what is the responsibility of the government? The government does not grant any land or bonus, but merely guarantees a portion of the bonds for the construction of the railway. On the other hand to what extent does the Grand Trunk Railway Company or the Grand Trunk Pacific Company contribute towards the building of that western division? First, the company have deposited with the government five million dollars in cash. The Grand Trunk Railway Comapny has to guarantee the bonds to cover 25 per cent of the cost of the road, and to provide rolling stock to the amount of twenty million dollars. Is it not a fair guarantee, a fair contribution on the part of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and does it not compare advantageously with the agreements which have been made with all other railways of any importance in this country? Of course there can be no comparison between the aid given to the Canadian Pacific Railway and to this enterprise. It is not necessary to call the attention of this honourable House—it is in the minds of all of us—to the bonus the Canadian Pacific Railway received both in land and money; but I say this proposition compares most favourably with that of the Canadian Northern, who obtained a subsidy, and with all the important railways which have been constructed in this country. Now, as a part of the bargain, and a very important part, there is the fact that the Grand Trunk Pacific Company undertakes to lease and operate for fifty years what is called by the hon. gentlemen opposite the lean portion of the railway, the eastern division, and to pay during 43 of the 50 years, as rent interest at the rate of 3 per cent on the cost price, and this cost price is to include all renewals and everything which will not be charged to operating expenses. Now, what will be the result of this lease? The lease is important in several respects. First, it meets in a great measure the policy which has been enunciated by the leader of the opposition, government ownership. It does away with the bad administration which is inherent to a government operating a railway. The building of the road will have the effect of increasing the value of land throughout the whole Dominion, an advantage beyond measure. We are to have a transcontinental railway extending over 3,400 miles of territory. Let us suppose there is only one-half of the territory traversed by this railway which is agricultural land, and take only twenty miles on each side of the line, it represents over 120,000,000 acres of land, and will it be denied that the construction of this railway will enhance the value of those lands to the extent of one or two dollars an acre? Is it not quite plain, therefore, that the expenditure which will be incurred by the government in building that portion of the road will be amply recouped indirectly by the enhanced value of those lands? Another advantage is that the government secure the running rights for the Intercolonial Railway and for all other railways which may choose to avail themselves of it, both on the eastern and on the western divisions, and in this connection I desire to answer an objection raised by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield. He stated that these running rights were to exist only for fifty years, that there was no provision in the contract whereby those running rights would be continued if the lease should be renewed for another period of fifty years.

My answer is this, that it will be in the option of the government to renew the lease or not; therefore, it will be in the power of the government when they consent to grant a renewal lease to make it a condition that these running rights shall be secured as part of the new contract which shall be made, and, therefore, it was unnecessary at this stage, to complicate the present contract and create unnecessary difficulties which can be easily met at the expiration of the fifty years. I ask, can it be denied that the Grand Trunk Pacific Company and the Grand Trunk Railway Company will be the means of making during those fifty years operation of that eastern division a most valuable property, a property which at the expiration of the term of the lease will be of immense value, and which will not only represent the outlay involved in the construction of the road, but will very likely be worth two or three times the amount of that outlay. This will be secured through a large expenditure of money, but an expenditure which will bear interest at the rate of three per cent, and which will be paid during forty-three out of the fifty years by the Grand Trunk Pacific Company. It is claimed that the Grand Trunk Pacific may be unable to carry out their obligation in that respect, that they may have to give up the road. All kinds of suppositions may be indulged in, but the question has to be considered from this aspect: whether the government is not dealing with men of experience who have the necessary ability to carry out any undertaking on which they may enter, and as to whether the government has not exacted the proper guarantees for the carrying out of those obligations. The guarantees that the government has secured are the five million dollars of rolling stock, which are to be specially marked as belonging to the eastern division, and which will be a permanent guarantee to the government for the payment of the rent, and the additional security is in the expenditure to which I have referred, which will be made both for rolling stock and for the construction of the western division, and which represents a large amount of money, and the guarantee resulting from the value of the portion of the railway which is designated as the western division, and which it is not supposed for an instant will be a failure. I say, therefore, we need have no apprehension in that respect, and that the company with which the government is dealing will be amply able to meet their engagements. The hon. member from Marshfield said that his main objection was to the fact that the Grand Trunk Railway Company was connected with the enterprise. One of the main reasons why this measure commends itself to the country is that the Grand Trunk Railway Company is connected with the project, because of their experience and ability to carry it to success, and because of all the guarantees offered, and the amount of money which they bind themselves to invest in the enterprise. The hon. gentleman feared, on account of their having the terminus at Portland that they will be interested in diverting the trade of the Northwest to the benefit of that port. The government has guarded against that, by the fact that it has made them guarantee a part of the construction of the western division of the road, and in the fact that the Grand Trunk Pacific with which the Grand Trunk Railway are connected, and will remain connected, have undertaken to pay the rent or interest on the cost of the eastern division; and to enable them to pay that intrest on the cost of the eastern division, of course, they will be interested in making that division earn as much as possible, and, therefore, will feed that division as far as possible.

The hon. gentleman has referred to the remarks of Mr. Hays in England, and has given an interpretation to them which, in my opinion, they do not bear at all. Mr. Hays very frankly says that the Grand Trunk Railway Company are interested and expect to benefit by the western traffic, but that does not necessarily imply that Mr. Hays had in his mind the export freight. He no doubt had in mind the summer traffic, for instance, which they expect to get in a great measure, and the local traffic. I call any traffic between the eastern provinces and the west, local traffic. But the hon. gentleman cannot find in Mr. Hays' remarks any expression which can support his construction, or anything tending to show any intention of divertng the trade from Canadan ports. The hon. gentleman has stated that the government have not in the contract properly guarded against that diversion of trade. I shall not take up the time of this honourable House, but I invite the reading of clauses 42 and following of the contract where it will be found that the government have specially stipulated that it is an essental part of the contract that the Grand Trunk Pacific shall not divert the traffic. We are asked what is the security as to that? Well, the parliament of Canada will have the matter in its own hands.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the 42nd section, to which the hon. gentleman refers, apply to the Grand Trunk Railway Company or to the Grand Trunk Pacific Company exclusively?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The sections to which I have referred, 42 and following, refer to the Grand Trunk Pacific, not to the Grand Trunk Railway; it would not have been reasonable to exact anything of the kind on the part of the Grand Trunk Railway Company.

And in that respect let me say this once for all. I do not claim, and nobody will claim, that if it had been open to the government to make an ideal contract that clauses would not have been found which would have bound the Grand Trunk Railway Company and even the Grand Trunk Pacific Company in a more rigorous way ; but what I claim is, that the government has exacted all reasonable conditions and obtained proper guarantees. It takes two parties to make a contract, and it would have been useless on the part of the government to impose conditions which were unreasonable and which the Grand Trunk Railway Company would not have accepted. Then I say that the government will have the remedy in its own hands should the Grand Trunk Pacific Company try to evade that clause of the contract. The remedy will be very simple—to cancel the lease if they so choose, or to extend the Intercolonial Railway for the purpose of competing not only with the Grand Trunk Pacific, but with the Grand Trunk Railway as well. I am sure hon. gentlemen opposite will not deny that that would be an effective remedy, to threaten both companies with having the Intercolonial extended to Winnipeg, and that they would come to terms and very quickly cease diverting trade to foreign ports. The leader of the opposition and the hon. gentleman from Marshfield have committed themselves to government ownership and operation of railways.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Nothing of the kind. There is nothing in the resolution to justify that remark.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It is the point on which he is co-operating with the hon. leader of the opposition in the other House. Last session the breach was much wider. The hon. leader of the opposition in this House then was against government ownership. He had been against government ownership all his life I think ; but this year, at the last moment, he has decided to make a jump to that extent, but he would not go so far as to contend that it would be advisable to have the government operate the road. The hon. gentleman has an easy way to solve the problem. It is to have a commission.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not say anything about a commission.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—To have a commission and remove it from government control. Well, I would ask the hon. gentleman by whom would that commission be appointed ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When I suggest a commission I will answer the question. I have not suggested a commission, neither have I advocated that the government should run the road, either last session or this session, and if the hon. gentleman will do me the justice to refer to my remarks he will see that I did not.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. leader of the opposition is so near the hon. gentleman from Marshfield who has spoken, that I thought they were agreed on that point.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We may be.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am willing to accept the correction, and am rather gratified to see that they part again in that respect. The hon. gentleman from Marshfield has advocated this afternoon, a commission, which would be independent of political control, to use his own words. I would ask the hon. gentleman by whom such a commission would be appointed, and what means he would be able to suggest to secure such a commission ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If a commission is to be appointed, we should like to have it in the same position as the Auditor General—independent of the government.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentlemen were in power for twenty-five years, and had a government owned road, and did it ever occur to them that a commission of that kind could be secured which would be independent of political control ? A commission of that kind would be the nominee of parliament, and of the majority in parliament, whatever that majority might be, and, therefore, the members of that commission would be under the direct influence of the party in power and controlled by them.

The question has received the serious attention of able men, not only in this country but in other countries. I have in my hand a study of the question, published quite recently by Mr. Paul Leroy Beaubien, who is one of the greatest economists of the day, and what is the expression that he uses in dealing with the government ownership and operation of railways. He says:

It would be the worst venture, from an economic and financial point of view.

And he calls attention to the fact that in the United States, where they have 40 per cent of the railways that exist in the world, where they have 240,000 miles of railway in operation, there is not a single mile owned by the government. It is all owned by companies. They are a progressive people, and if government ownership of railways were feasible, if it were in the interest of the community at large, if the people could be educated to that, would they not have tried to adopt that system? Is government ownership and operation of railways obtaining in England? Is it obtaining in France? In other countries where it exists at all it is the exception. A very small part of the railways in all the world are owned by governments, and it is only in cases where there are special conditions. Then, Mr. Rouvier, Finance Minister of France, during the course of the month of January, took part in the discussion of the problem, and I have here his speech on the question, and he takes the same position. He and Mr. Leroy Beaubien showed that it was not in the interest of the country to have railways owned or operated by the government. And we have on this an expression of the opinion of able men who are not biased, who cannot be supposed to be biased in favour of the government. I call the attention of the hon. member to the Montreal 'Gazette' of last Monday, where I find that Mr. Clouston, the general manager of the Bank of Montreal, on his return from England, expressed his opinion on the question. Here is what he says:

I look upon the policy of state-owned railways as inimical to the best interest of the country. I think Canada's experience with the Intercolonial Railway should be a good enough lesson as to the principle of public railway ownership. Our make up, as a people, would be unfitted for the owning of railways by the state.

When he used the expression 'Our make-up as a people' I take it to refer to the extent of the country, to the diverse interests of the different parts of the country, as being exceptionally objectionable to government ownership of railways. A day or two after, we had a similar expression of opinion on the part of Mr. G. E. Drummond, the president of the Manufacturers' Association, who, also, had just returned from England, and who endorsed the opinion of Mr. Clouston, and said that he (Mr. Clouston) admirably expressed his opinion. I do not think that the hon. gentleman will find that there are many business men in the country who will be ready to join him in advocating the government owning and operating the railways, and I am gratified to find the hon. leader of the opposition does not believe in any such proposition. The principle of government ownership, I have shown, is embodied in this measure, as far as it can be embodied in the interest of the country. It is embodied with this guarantee that the road is to be operated by a responsible company for a long term of years, that the interest on the outlay is to be paid by that company, and that the company is to make of that railway property a valuable property, when it may revert to the government for the purpose of operating it, if the government at that time are educated to the principle of state-owned railways operated by the government. Now this measure is in no way in conflict with the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to the Georgian bay. The government is in no way committed to not extending the Intercolonial Railway, if in five or ten years it should be advisable, to the Georgian bay. It will be open for the government to do so, and it will have the advantage of the benefits which may be derived from the fact that in the meantime the Grand Trunk Pacific Company shall have been built in the west, and will have been the means of developing the trade and traffic very exhaustively. The hon. gentleman from Marshfield has referred to Mr. Osler, for the purpose of making good the opinion he expressed that the cost of the eastern division of the transcontinental railway might be increased because the bonds when sold on the market might not bring one hundred cents on the dollar, and he has referrerd to the opinion of Mr. Osler to the effect that the rate of interest has a tendency to increase. Well, I find the hon. gentleman has expressed opinions which are rather risky, not only in that respect, but in other respects. If we refer to the debates of last year I find that the hon. gentleman, Mr. Osler, went to the extent of saying—page 9203 of Hansard—that the eastern division would have cost at the end of the fifty years, $500,000,000. That cannot be called a moderate or cheap estimate, and the statement of a gentleman who is ready to venture into such an exaggeration should be taken with a great deal of precaution. It is well known that the tendency of interest is rather in the direction of decrease rather than increase. It is well known that all over the world a great accumulation of money has taken place within the last ten, fifteen or twenty years, and that the interest, from six, seven or eight per cent, that it was fifteen or twenty years ago, has diminished to one-half of those rates, and for my part—and I am sure I am supported in that opinion by a great majority of business men—I have no doubt that the interest on money instead of being four or five per cent, as it is now, will drop to two per cent in ten or twenty years, and, therefore, instead of being a source of increase in our obligation we may expect that the bonds will sell at par, if not more than par. These are the only points in the remarks made by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield to which I desire to call special attention. Let me, in closing, say that I admit—and nobody will deny—that the contract now is not as favourable as it was last year, that concessions have been made to the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada, but the opposition, I claim, are responsible in a great measure for those concessions. If they had not taken the position they took last year, if they had not delayed the measure as they did, if they had not made the speeches they made in the House of Commons and in this House, and thereby frightened a large number of shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada, the government would have obtained the ratification of those shareholders, and the bargain would have been ratified and the deposit would have been made in the terms of the agreement passed last year. I claim that the contract, amended as it is, is a fair contract. It was not amended in any essential part. It remains a reasonable contract, and in my humble opinion it is a measure which commends itself to the judgment and the appreciation of the people, a measure which will inure to the great benefit of the country at large.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I would ask the hon. gentleman if he can say why the commercial men of Montreal, and the Board of Trade, did not ask for this railway ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I would remind the hon. gentleman that there are a great number of gentlemen who did ask for the railway, and I would ask him in return why did not the Board of Trade declare themselves in favour of the government operating the road ?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—That is not an answer to my question.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—What about the Board of Trade of Victoria ?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I do not know. Did that board ask for it ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—British Columbia is unanimous in favour of the construction of the road.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I crave the indulgence of the members of the Senate for the few remarks which I desire to make before being called to register my vote on this very important measure. These remarks will be as concise as possible.

My first objection to the Bill before us at present is to its title. I confess that such an objection would not be sufficient to have the Bill entirely thrown out. Still, it has its importance, and I venture to say that this scheme should not be styled 'The National Transcontinental Railway.'

Why call it 'National'? I quite conceive that if the road was to be a government road—a road built and owned by the people of Canada, we might supersede all claims of other companies and call such a road 'national.' But it is not so. The road is to be owned for the greater part by a commercial company, and, moreover, a company which is to-day as much an American concern as a Canadian one.

When the people of Canada made an appeal to financial men or corporations to build our first transcontinental line—which was then a political and public necessity—did we see the Grand Trunk respond to the appeal ? Not at all ; they were too busy in the building up of their American extensions and their American port. But other parties, men of energy and ability, backed by Canadian financial institutions, came forward and undertook, under grave circumstances, to endow the people of Canada with a railway line, which was really a link between the provinces of confederation, and which stands to-day at the front rank amongst all transportation routes; and until the government decides to have its own transcontinental railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway is alone entitled to be called the 'National' road.

It has been the pioneer road across our domains; it has cemented, to a great extent, the interests of each province to the interests of its sister provinces; it has largely contributed to the increase of our trade, thereby contributing to the prosperity of Canada. Under these circumstances, that great enterprise and the men who had the courage to undertake the same at the time it was built, should not be deprived of the merit to which they are entitled, in name as well as in fact.

My next objection is to the character of this new enterprise. It is neither a government enterprise, nor a railway corporation enterprise. It partakes of both characters, in a form which does not appeal to the good sense of the people. It reminds one, to a certain extent, of the water stretches route of the Mackenzie government, and may have the same fate. The Mackenzie government was replaced by a more far-seeing administration, which, sizing up the situation and the public necessities of the time gave to Canada an all-rail road with all its advantages. History will likely repeat itself in this case, and a new administration may realize what this government does not dare or does not care to give us; a real national road. It has been in the past the lot of Conservative governments to repair the errors of Liberal governments, to remodel their ways and to make practical schemes of their ill-conceived projects. So will it be in this matter also.

The legislation of last year, and the new Bill present themselves to us in the nature of a partnership agreement, by which the people of Canada are called upon to build the whole road, as it were, by actual outlays and by direct guarantee, and the Grand Trunk, unrestricted, is to reap the earnings. Not that I wish to say that the country will not directly derive some advantages by the construction of that railway, but I say that if we look closely to the contract that is now the object of our consideration, one cannot fail to recognize that this contract is entirely one-sided from the point of view of actual agreements.

The responsibility of the government does amount in round figures to at least $150,000,000. The responsibility of the Grand Trunk is only about $15,000,000; that is only one-tenth of the whole responsibility.

The government undertake to build the part of the road which for long years to come, will not be a paying concern. On the other hand, the Grand Trunk, the other partner, is to have in full ownership of the paying part, although aided by the people of Canada, in the construction of the same to the extent of almost the total cost of construction. I could point out other features of this contract equally to the disadvantage of the country; but this is sufficient for the purpose of my argument.

Notwithstanding all that parliament is asked to do for this company, the government will not even have the right of effectually controlling the rates of transportation on this railway except in so far as they may have such control under the general law; the government does not obtain reciprocal advantage in the way of running rights; they do not even insure the carrying of Canadian products through Canadian ports.

I do not find fault with the Grand Trunk when it tries to get the best bargain possible. The Grand Trunk is a commercial enterprise, and its directors are bound to make the best efforts to better its condition. But, on the other hand, we have assuredly the right and the duty to go into all the details of that bargain also with a view to protect the interest of the people.

One of those great interests that we must have in view is to give to the people the best and cheapest means of transportation from one section of the country to the other both ways. It is the general understanding, confirmed by experience, that waterways are cheaper for the bulky trade than railways.

Now, we have in this Dominion the best waterways in the world. Some need no improvements, others would require to be deepened and enlarged. We have that long stream, known as the proposed Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian bay canal, which should have been the first object of the government's care. This route would not only have advantages as a connecting link between the west and the great lakes to Montreal, the commercial metropolis of Canada, but it would bring forth immense wealth by the development of the resources that are now lying dormant along that route.

By the present undertaking the government is going to tie up the responsibility of the country to such an extent that we have reason to believe that such a useful public work as the Georgian bay canal will have to wait many long years before it can be realized. On one hand, you may by this new transcontinental provide for some public needs in future years, but on the other hand you will prevent the realization of an important commercial route which is of an immediate necessity.

On what ground can a public enterprise aided or built by the public funds, be justified ? By the necessities of the hour. We should not tax the people, it seems to me, for more than is required by their actual and tangible necessities, except it be for some state reasons, as it was in the case of the Canadian Pacific.

Now, what do we require in the west ? What do you require yourselves in the east? Because any outlet for us will be an inlet for you ; any prosperity that may come to us from the establishment of those outlets will shine upon you also.

What we require in the west is not precisely new outlets of transportation which may be required fifteen years hence, but immediate facilities for the exportation of our grain. This transcontinental line will, no doubt, be of great advantage for those who will live in the vast west in the decades following this one, but, in the meantime what shall we do ?

If no misfortune comes upon us, the crop of this year will tax to the uttermost the present means of transportation, and next year, with the arrival of new immigrants, with the expansion of the cultivated area, the crop will exceed the actual possibilities of exportation. What we would require under such circumstances is the immediate improvement of those means of transportation, that is the construction of local branch lines to carry freight to Winnipeg, the doubling of the tracks from Winnipeg to Port Arthur, the building of elevators, and for the near future, the canalization of the Ottawa to Georgian bay. To that policy the attention of the government should have been directed first.

It is said that the new line will have the effect of developing lands along the Saskatchewan and further north and west. True it will, when it is built. But here again I question the immediate usefulness of that new line with regard to the colonization of that section of the west. I will give two reasons to justify my views on that point.

The first one is that the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian Northern are at present extending their lines in that direction. The construction of these new lines will open to colonization a vast area of land, more indeed than can be settled for some years to come.

The second reason is that we have, at present, an immense quantity of good colonization lands in the districts fairly well provided with railway communications. To my mind, it would be better for the country and for the settlers themselves, to confine our efforts to those districts than to induce people to settle in too far from neighbours and markets while public lands in convenient districts are available. Under those circumstances it seems to me that instead of handicapping the credit of the country in the building of new lines where there is no immediate necessity, our attention should be directed, and our resources be devoted to the improvement of existing routes both by water and by rail.

But let me tell you hon. gentlemen, that this new enterprise has been put on foot partly to hamper the development of these routes.

Here is what Mr. Smithers, vice-president of the Grand Trunk, said in London, two days before the opening of our parliament, at the general meeting of the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway Company :

> It is not good for this company to have all its reasons and policies proclaimed on the housetops. (Applause.)

This is a warning, hon. gentlemen, that the Grand Trunk has some surprise in store for us. They do not want to disclose all their objects and designs. Should we not then be on the alert? Mr. Smithers continues :

I presume that every speech that has been made here to-day has been made solely in the interests of the Grand Trunk, and solely with a view to helping us ; but there have been such things known as views being put forward, even within a company, that were not wholly guided by the interests of that company. I can tell you—and Mr. Hays will support me in saying it—that there are many schemes in Canada, as there must be in all new countries—there are many schemes in Canada which are only waiting to come out, which we consider—and we do not wish to go any further than that—but we consider the scheme we propose to you to-day, after long examination, is the best and safest means for defeating those competing schemes—(hear, hear)—and we believe—not that we are leading you into new dangers to-day, by asking you to pass this scheme, but that we are putting the Grand Trunk into a position in which it has never been before, that we are strengthening it from the large increase of base from which we shall draw traffic, and to which we shall give traffic.

One of the objects of the Grand Trunk which is disclosed here is that the company wants to tie up the traffic of the Northwest to the Grand Trunk itself.

We have no objection to the Grand Trunk coming to the west. We have long expected that one day it would come. In fact it should have been the first to reach those fertile plains. But, as I have said before, when it was needed and expected, it did not respond to the appeal and did not come. The Grand Trunk does not move unless it goes into partnership in which it has the lion's share. It owes at present to the country about $50,000,000, of which we will very likely never recover a cent. Recently, under the pretense of extending the Intercolonial to Montreal, the country entered into a bargain by which the Grand Trunk has been able to put their Victoria bridge in that magnificent state of repair that we see to-day without disbursing a cent of their own money. To-day they have managed to force the government to come before parliament with a measure which ensures to the Grand Trunk immense advantages without reciprocal advantages to the country. What is the object of the Grand Trunk in wishing to tie up to their system the traffic of the Northwest ? We must ascertain for ourselves, because, as Mr. Smithers told in his first sentence, they have not proclaimed all their reasons and policies on the housetops. But we may surmise that it is with the view of advancing the interests of their lines and insure dividends to their shareholders. At present, as told by my hon. friend from Westmoreland, they are engaged in negotiations by which an outlet for their western system, when built, will be insured, through American lines, the old eastern system, not to Canadian ports, however, but to their own Portland port, thus depriving the Canadian channels and ports of their legitimate share in that western traffic.

Again, I say let the Grand Trunk do their best to increase their revenue and dividends, but if they are to take only their own interest to heart, let them do so at their own risk and expense, as any other commercial enterprise is allowed to do, and let Canada take also its own view of the matter and refrain from helping others to hamper Canadian trade.

Another object disclosed in the remarks of Mr. Smithers is the defeating of other schemes. What are they ?

Amongst other schemes which the Grand Trunk wants to defeat must be :—

1st. The Intercolonial itself, which Mr. Blair contemplated extending west ;

2nd. The Trans-Canada Railway, which seems to be the best and the shortest route from eastern seaports to the extreme western seaports.

3rd. The Canadian Northern, which is pushed forward with a commendable spirit of enterprise by Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann.

Right here, I may observe how inaccurate is the statement of those who speak of the present scheme as offering us a second transcontinental line. It will be rather the third one. For at present Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann are constructing their line westward, and they expect to be by next fall not very far from Edmonton, if they have not already reached that point then.

These are, very likely, some of the schemes that the Grand Trunk wants to defeat, and consequent on the defeat of such schemes, the chances for their line and the development of their business would be enhanced proportionally.

I do not think that such a policy should be the policy of any of our large railway corporations, but let us find no fault with the Grand Trunk in this instance. It remains to be said that our government, at least, should not be found in the position of being a partner in such a policy. If, for the sake of argument, we can assume that the Grand Trunk should wish to defeat those Canadian schemes, I fail to understand why our own government should help them in doing so.

Now, hon. gentlemen, let us refer to the time allowed for the construction of the road. I have already said that the western part of the country requires immediate transportation facilities. In the case of the Canadian Pacific, it was built, the whole of it, within five years. Now, the Grand Trunk is to be allowed eight years for the construction of its line, including the prairie section. There is no doubt that the road will not be completed previous to the expiration of those eight years. The Grand Trunk has no interest in the speedy completion of the road. On the contrary, they have a considerable interest to take the whole eight years. At the meeting of the shareholders in London, Mr. Hays said :

> The Grand Trunk Railway is not going to be called upon under its guarantee for one cent for eight years after this enterprise is started—after the construction of the line is commenced—the cost of the line during construction being added to capital and provided out of capital, and the securities which the Grand Trunk will guarantee will not be issued for eight years.

This quotation is amply sufficient to justify the statement I made a moment ago, viz., that the construction of the road will be extended over the full eight years. In fact the contract itself is an invitation, and even a reward for that extension of time in the construction of the road. The government will provide for both capital and interest during that period. Then the longer the period of construction is, the better it will be for the financial advantage of the promoters of this enterprise. And so, while the interest of these gentlemen will be served, the interest of the country will be neglected.

Then, what is the position ? This parliament is about to authorize the construction of railways at the total expense, as it were, of the people, with the result that no immediate relief will be given to the trade of the west ; with the result also, that when built, the new railway will be a strong competitor to lines already in operation, and which had a reasonable expectation that no other road should be rushed through the territory served by them, at least for a certain number of years, on account of the large capital invested therein.

For perhaps a thousand miles or more, the new transcontinental railway will run parallel to the existing lines, and sometimes run just between their systems. That is for the west. As for the east, it will ruin the trade which now goes to the Intercolonial; it will defeat the maritime provinces in their wish to build up a trade for their ports ; on the whole it will divert the national trade from Canadian channels, from Canadian cities and ports. It will put off for many years to come the reduction of transportation routes, and thereby prevent for many years to come the reduction of freight rates on all kinds of goods, thereby again imposing upon the people at large heavy taxes, which, though indirectly paid, by way of high rates to transportation companies, are, nevertheless, a burden which it is our duty to alleviate as promptly and as much as possible.

And all that at the cost of an enormous expenditure by the country, with the prospect of having thrown upon the hands of the Dominion a few years hence the lean part of the route, and not only that, but also branch lines constructed by this Grand Trunk Pacific, and afterwards abandoned by them on account of their unremunerative character. As a set-off to that, we are offered a doubtful three per cent on part of our outlays, the amount of which cannot be determined at present. I say a doubtful three per cent, because we may find ourselves in the future in the same position that we are now in with regard to the Grand Trunk ; that is, with a nice asset upon one page of our books, but also with a corresponding debt upon the page opposite—that is, with a legitimate claim with no expectation of being recouped.

Now, under such circumstances, is it a wonder that the people should pause before going headway into such a scheme ? Is it a wonder that some public men who had been up to the present, and are still on principle, opposed to government ownership, should be willing to undertake the construction of the proposed railway line as a government work ?

The fact is that this measure of the government places the country face to face with government ownership, and places it in its worst form. We have already the Intercolonial. We are going to build at our expense an extension of over a thousand miles up to Winnipeg. We will own practically a line extending on half the distance between the two ocenas. Is not this already extensive government ownership, but government ownership on the less paying part of that new transcontinental, which, moreover, will be a competitive line for our old Intercolonial ?

Now, what is the object of the Grand Trunk in going into that enterprise. It is to tie up the traffic of the west to their railway system. Mr. Hays said to the shareholders of the Grand Trunk that their dividends were not secure unless the Grand Trunk obtained access to the west.

May we not say the same thing about the Intercolonial ? Let us give to the Intercolonial access to the west, and deficits will be changed into dividends for the country. If the Grand Trunk refuse to build the eastern part of the road, it is because they feel it will be unproductive for a number of years. On the other hand, if they consent to build the western section, it is because they feel it will at once pay them to do so. Well, what is good for the Grand Trunk should be good for the country also.

Since we must commit the country to the building of that route, let the government build the whole road, not the worst part of it only. By having the government construct and own the line, there would be advantage in many ways with regard to the material aspect of the scheme.

For instance, the Grand Trunk is not bound to complete the road before eight years, and it is in the interest of the Grand Trunk that the building of the road should extend through the full eight years. Not so with the government. The government would push the construction as fast as possible, and we could have the road completed within four or five years.

A saving of money could be realized by the fact that the bonds issued direct by the government would realize a higher price on the market than the bonds issued by the company, though guaranteed by the government. Five per cent might be saved in this way on the round sum to be floated for the construction of the road. And then again, the cost of the construction of the road in the prairie section is placed at $25,000 a mile and in the mountain section at more than that. Men of practical experience are of opinion that $12,000 or $15,000 can build the road in the prairies. Under the present arrangement the company is authorized to place on the market enough bonds, bearing the government guarantee, to realize three-fourths of the cost price fixed by the company in the mountain section. As it stands at present, the arrangement does not preclude manipulation in the placing of those securities on the market. And there is scope for manipulation. And if there is, the ultimate cost of the road must be higher than it is anticipated. By government building and controlling, through an independent and expert commission, the very reverse of what I have just described might be secured.

But there are other considerations worthy of our attention in the solution of this problem.

Even if it were not to cost less to the country by its being built by the government rather than by the company, there would be some advantage derived not to be ignored in this debate. Apart from putting on a good financial basis an improfitable asset of the government, I mean the Intercolonial, it would be the best way of regulating freight rates, which is of primary importance for our farmers and traders. Legislation on this matter can hardly be relied on. Action by some interested lines is what brings more effectually the desired results.

In the second place higher interests would be served.

The question of contributing to the defense of the empire is now agitated. Canada does not refuse to do its share ; but we must be left free to choose our own way of doing it. The construction of this highway by the government would be a most important contribution on our part to that policy, by giving to the provinces, the colonies and Great Britain a new connecting link, and a good military road, national in its character. We cannot say as much of the scheme that is before us at present.

Thus, instead of a combination of government and private corporation ownership, one partner of which is bound to look first at his own interest and to divert the trade to American channels and seaports and all that at the expense of the country, let us have the entire ownership of the road in order to assure our trade to Canadian channels and seaports and to serve, at the same time, the general interest of the empire.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I shall not attempt to follow the hon. gentleman in all he has said with regard to the position which he and his party have taken on this subject. I shall only allude to one or two things to which he made special reference. The first thing he said was 'why call this Transcontinental railway a national railway.' I want to tell him that it is to distinguish it from the Canadian Pacific Railway, because it is a national railway, and runs through the Dominion, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, all the way through Canadian territory. It is not like the Canadian Pacific Railway which runs through the states of Maine, Michigan, Minnesota and Dakota. The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway is not an international railway; it is a Canadian national highway. Then the hon. gentleman said that the Conservative party had for the last number of years—in fact ever since the defeat of the Mackenzie government—to rectify the errors of the Mackenzie government. Did any one in a public place like the Senate of Canada ever hear of such rubbish ?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I use the word advisedly. If the Conservative party had followed the advice of Mr. Mackenzie there would have been no need for another transcontinental railway for the next 25 years. I am glad to see—and I am sorry Mr. Mackenzie did not live to see it—that the very policy inaugurated by the Mackenzie government is being carried out in the new railway built in the Northwest, Manitoba and British Columbia on the line laid out by Mr. Fleming 25 years ago. That is the route that is being covered by the Mackenzie and Mann railway, and partly by the Grand Trunk Pacific. The blunder was committed by the Conservative government in leaving the line laid out by the Mackenzie government and adopting one from Indian Head, 400 miles, through an alkali bed where you could no more expect wheat to grow than on the table of this House. Then instead of going by the Yellow Head Pass, a pass over two miles wide, they went through another part of the Rocky mountains, and I want to say for the credit of the Canadian Pacific Railway that while it is a very costly undertaking to maintain and guard the safety of passengers going through the passes of the Rocky mountains, every mile of railway from Calgary to near Vancouver is guarded by a man watching the track. That is not the kind of a railway that would have been built by the Mackenzie government. The Yellow Head Pass is two miles wide, the grades are easy, the altitudes being less as you go further north. There would have been no fear of land slides in the Yellow Head Pass. Yet the hon. gentleman says the Conservative party have been since 1878 rectifying the mistakes of the Mackenzie government.

He said also that the cost of the Grand Trunk Pacific will be excessive. Did he ever stop to figure out what the Canadian Pacific Railway cost the people of the country ? If he has not done so, let me tell him that instead of the road being built in five years, as he told the House, it took eleven years to build, and 150 miles of that line was constructed, not by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but by the Dominion government, and handed to the company. In other words the government built for the Canadian Pacific Railway a property which cost $37,000,000, and in addition to that gave them 25,000,000 acres of land which to-day is worth from $2.50 to $5 an acre. Averaging its value per acre at $2.50 and adding the $35,000,000 in cash, you get the round sum of $125,000,000, spent by the Conservative government, in covering up the mistakes of the Mackenzie government, and yet Canadian people do not own one inch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, have no control of its rates, and never had any control of its rates, and if there is any control now, it is since the Laurier government came into power. When they built the Crow's Nest Pass Line the government made the Canadian Pacific Railway rates amenable to the parliament of Canada. So much for the mismanagement which the hon. gentleman says occurred under the Liberal government, and which it has taken the Conservative party these years to rectify. I want to say a word with regard to the vote I propose to take, and my position in this House. The names of my hon. friends from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Cox) and myself were associated with the original Bill that came before parliament last year, as provisional directors. I felt that if it should in any way interfere with the independence of parliament, as represented in the criticisms offered in the other House by Mr. Haggart and other members of the loyal opposition who are always opposed to everything this government does because they do everything so well—and I might say the same thing of the opposition in this House—when they took exception to Mr. Cox and myself being on the board, I felt it incumbent on me to see Mr. Hays on the subject and give him my personal assurance that I should be glad to be relieved of the position; that I wanted to maintain my position as an independent member.

I am not going to follow the debates in this House, because there has been so much said with regard to the railway from so many different standpoints that I thought perhaps, as one having some slight experience in railway matters, having been connected with railways for the last 35 years, that I might know something of the present state of the railway system as compared with its state 35 years ago. Let me assure my hon. friends, if the Canadian Pacific Railway were to be built to-day, the mistakes of the Mackenzie government, which my hon. friend speaks about, would not be made. If Sir William Van Horne or Sir Thomas Shaughnessy had the building of it, not one mile of the Canadian Pacific Railway would be constructed where it is located at the present time. Everybody knows, who knows anything about railway building, that in the present day and under scientific principles, the railway that is to pay, the railway of the future, must have the minimum of grades and maximum curvatures. A great deal has been said about this railway running through an unknown land. I was very glad the other night to hear the admirable speech made by the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière (Hon. Mr. Casgrain), who has taken a great deal of pains to get information with regard to the surveys and the general character of the line, the standard of grades and curvatures. The principal criticism of this project is that the country through which the line is to run is not known, and because it is not known, of course it must be bad from the opposition standpoint. Now, we have not very far to go for an illustration of what can be done on a line with easy grades and curvatures. Right in the neighbourhood where my hon. friend from St. Thomas comes from, there are two railways running near each other, the Canada Southern, which is operated by the Michigan Central, and the loop line of the Grand Trunk Railway, within a stone's throw of it. In the case of the Canada Southern, they have spent a large amount of money on its engineering, more than has been spent on any other railway in Canada, and what has been the result? On the Canada Southern they found two stretches of ninety miles each, with only one curve and one grade, and yet alongside of it another railway, similarly situated, but not so well located, running through the same counties, on which there are more unfavourable grades and curvatures. On the Canada Southern Railway in the old days, it is well known to railway men that a single engine of the minimum power of that day could haul sixty loaded cars. To-day, I am informed by the hon. member from St. Thomas, that he has himself counted a train hauled by a big mogul engine, of eighty loaded cars, and if a single engine can haul such a train over the Canada Southern, I am prepared to show they will haul 100 empty cars. Now that is the class of railway the Grand Trunk Railway intends to build, as the Transcontinental railway, and it will compete successfully with any other railway not built up to that standard. Notwithstanding the remarks made by the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface (Hon. Mr. Bernier), who claims that the water route is cheaper than an all-rail route, I want to tell him if there are any canals intervening, whether there are tolls on them or not, the railway can beat the canal for the carrying of grain, and I will give him proof of it: In the state of New York, the Erie canal runs from Buffalo to Albany. It is a ditch only six feet deep, and yet for years and years, it has been the grain route from Buffalo down to Albany and to the sea-board. An appropriation was sought for in the United States to enlarge the Erie canal. The New York Central people said if you will give us the interest of the money that the government are asked to spend in the enlargement of the Erie canal, we will carry every pound of grain from Buffalo to the sea-board free, showing conclusively that the railways once properly constructed and equipped, as this railroad will be from Winnipeg to Quebec, can successfully compete with the water routes. I venture my reputation as a practical railway man that this railway, under the conditions I have named, can carry grain from Winnipeg to Quebec for less money than it can be carried from Winnipeg to the sea-board by the rail and water route, whether you go down to Depot Harbour and take the Canada Atlantic Railway there, or go through the Welland canal. Some years ago, in discussing this very transportation question with Mr. Hays, one of the ablest railway men in this country, he said if the government will give me as much money to ease the grades of the Grand Trunk Railway as they have spent in enlarging the canals, I will carry all the grain from Port Colbourne to Montreal for less money than it can be carried by water.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Has not the state of New York voted $100,000,00 to deepen the Erie canal ?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Quite so, but that does not affect the statement I made, that the New York Central people offered to take the interest—not the capital but the interest yearly, of the outlay upon the enlargement of the Erie canal for carrying every pound of grain free from Buffalo to New York by rail. I am substantiating that by a statement made to myself personally by Mr. Hays, that he was prepared, with the same gradients as we propose to have on the Grand Trunk Pacific, to carry grain by rail as cheaply as it can be carried by water.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The barley that is used in the state of New York, about sixty miles from where I live, is brought from California by ship from San Francisco, landed at New York and carried by rail to Saratoga and Syracuse. The Transcontinental railways do not bring any of that. How could that possibly pay if the hon. gentleman's position is correct ?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I have seen the very same thing myself in the city of Victoria ; a vessel taking out coal to British Columbia and selling it at a profit and bringing a cargo back.

Some members of the opposition have advocated the extension of the Intercolonial Railway westward as against the projected National Transcontinental Railway. It is rather peculiar to hear these hon. gentlemen advocating the extension of the Intercolonial Railway, when, during all the years they were in power, they never took the trouble to extend it west of Lévis. They left it six miles from nowhere, and when Sir Wilfrid Laurier's government came into power, and advocated the extension of the line into Montreal, every Tory in the House of Commons but one howled until he was black in the face. I claim that was one of the best propositions the Intercolonial Railway management ever made, but, notwithstanding that, the physical conditions of the road are such that the government would be justified in building a line from Quebec to Moncton regardless of the Intercolonial Railway, because the Intercolonial Railway was never built on business principles, and never was conducted by my hon. friends opposite on business principles. I can tell my hon. friends interested in the maritime provinces that the coal barons of Nova Scotia used to get their coal carried to Moncton and other points for ⅝ cents per mile, when if cost the government 5-10 cents per mile for carrying it. The tax-payers of this country were mulct in order to benefit the coal barons of the maritime provinces. No doubt these gentlemen would like to see the Intercolonial Railway extended. They had their families and friends carried everywhere for a mere trifle. It was no wonder the Intercolonial Railway was a failure under Mr. Haggart, and under a far abler man, Mr. Blair, notwithstanding the fact that the road is first-class, and its equipment good. But what was the position of the Intercolonial Railway ? And here was one mistake at all events that was not made by the Mackenzie government and had to be covered up. What was the position of the Intercolonial Railway when Mr. Blair took hold of it ? The agents of the Intercolonial Railway dare not ask the Canadian Pacific Railway for a pound of freight for their line. They were handicapped and the Canadian Pacific Railway had running rights over it until Mr. Blair came in and fought the Canadian Pacific Railway to a finish. The opposition propose to extend the Intercolonial Railway over the Booth road and thence northward, following the Lake Shore and on Winnipeg. My hon. friend knows the north shore better than I do, and I venture to say that neither Sir William Van Horne nor Sir Thomas Shaughnessy would build one mile along the north shore in the same locality, if they had the power to change the line: and they would have been only too glad if they could have sold that portion of the road to the Dominion of Canada to form a part of the Intercolonial Railway. Would we have been opening a new part of the territory? Would we have been relieving the constituents of my hon. friend from St. Boniface by extending the Intercolonial Railway to Winnipeg? What the people of this country want is a new railway, built into a new section of the country, in order to develop Canada as Canada requires to be developed. In the past, the railways sought the population; to-day the population seeks the railway, and they will not go into a new section unless they have railway accommodation. Look at the millions of dollars worth of valuable timber destroyed in the older portions of the province of Ontario—millions upon millions of valuable merchantable timber. If the farmers of Ontario had saved one-fourth of the timber and had only cleared one-fourth the land they would have been better off than they are to-day. Why did they destroy the timber? They had to clear the land, and they could not sell the timber. There was no railway to carry it away, and consequently they joined together and destroyed this valuable asset of the province. Now, what would be the case with this new railway? It would open up new territory, develop water powers and very valuable timber and mining areas, and the products will either be brought out by that railway, or manufacturing industries will be established along the line to make the raw material a merchantable article; yet my hon. friend opposite desires simply to extend the Intercolonial Railway and not to build the new railway, and my hon. friend from St. Boniface asks the question, why should this be called a national railway? It is national in every sense of the word, because it is national from the Atlantic to the Pacific, but not a foot of it goes to the United States territory. My hon. friend from de Lanaudière has given us the distance between Winnipeg and Quebec as being some 1,400 miles. When I came here some 35 years ago, the standard of a locomotive was 20 cars and 20 miles an hour. What are they doing to-day? Four hundred tons was the running capacity of a locomotive. To-day the standard train is 40 cars 40 miles an hour carrying fifteen hundred to two thousand tons—four or five times more than the capacity thirty-five years ago. What does that mean? It means that a ship load is brought by one engineer and train crew—one conductor, and his two brakemen—four or five times more than was done twenty-five years ago, and done in half the time. Allowing the time for changing of engines, for relays of cars and everything else, and give them 20 miles an hour from Winnipeg to Quebec, a train will land wheat from the farmers' elevator at Winnipeg, in Quebec in seventy hours alongside of the steamship in the summer time. I was standing quite recently at one of the railway stations of the Grand Trunk Railway when a conductor brought in his train. He went in to get his orders. He came off a branch line. He was asked by a passenger to give his tonnage to the telegrapher. His tonnage was 1,085 tons of coal. He was not asked how many cars he had. My hon. friends who argue against this railway forget that under modern conditions a train of the new line of railway will carry twice as much as the railways of twenty years ago, for half the money, and the railway can do that while the rates are competitive and there may be no difference between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific after the two roads are in operation. There will be competition in time and delivery, and the railway that takes the freight to the sea-board in the least time, and makes prompt delivery will get the work. Not very long ago there was a race to catch the outgoing Allan steamer. A train load was ready to leave Chicago, and twenty-six hours after it left Chicago it was alongside of the steamer in Montreal, brought down by the Grand Trunk, and let me say that this was done before the Grand Trunk was double tracked either between Chicago and Port Huron or Port Huron and Montreal. My hon. friend who leads the opposition, and I hope he will for many years occupy that position, for there is no man I admire more, knows, because it is in his own locality, that if the Grand Trunk Railway, when originally built, had been as carefully constructed, and run under the same conditions it has been by Mr. Hays since he became manager, it would never have had a competitor in this section of the country. At Trenton, west of Belleville, I had the pleasure of putting in a bridge there where the gradient was raised 20 feet, and a hill cut down 12 feet, making a difference of 32 feet. At this point for 30 years an engine had been running night and day——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What did that cost?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—An engine had been running there from the opening of the road, for the purpose of doubling up the trains, at a cost of some $10,000 a year to the company. They cut down the grade 12 feet and filled up the hollow 20 feet and buried the station out of sight. Last year they opened 27 miles of railway entirely, went through a ravine, filled in a cut of 72 feet deep, put in culverts 250 feet long, and cut down grades here and there until they had practically a level road between Scarborough and the city of Montreal—an easy grade all the way. The day will come perhaps when they may have to go round by the Lake Shore to get easy access to the city of Toronto. I am only speaking about the physical conditions of the Grand Trunk as it was. With the experience these men have had, with the remarkable condition they found the road in, with the alterations that have taken place, with the knowledge they possess, with all the disadvantages they had to fight, they will now be in a position to obviate all these difficulties in building the Grand Trunk Pacific. I venture to say that with the experience they have had—and I hope we shall all live to see it, and have a ride over the road—they will be delighted with the conditions under which the Grand Trunk Pacific will be built. I want to feel proud that Canada requires another transcontinental railway—proud of the government that is able to cope with the conditions of the country at this particular time, and glad that the government are far-seeing enough and courageous enough to open up a new section of country, rather than ask for the extension of a railway which has been an acknowledged failure under both political parties from its inception up to the present moment.

And I for one am delighted to know that the hon. leader of the opposition repudiates government ownership in its entirety. He believes in some portion of the road being owned by the government and operated by commission. I want to say to my hon. friend that practically the Grand Trunk Pacific east of the city of Winnipeg, instead of being managed by a commission is managed by a railway company who are to pay rental for the operation of that road. So that so far as that portion of the line is concerned for all time to come the government will own the line from Winnipeg east, and all other railways that my be built in the future will have running powers over that line, and any one who remembers the condition of the road between the city of Montreal and Toronto, in the early days of the Grand Trunk will also remember that people would not make a trip over the line to Montreal without taking an extra risk on their lives. When the Canadian Pacific Railway was built in opposition to the Grand Trunk it was declared it would ruin the Grand Trunk. I have travelled a little over that railway and I can assure my hon. friends who do not live in that portion of the country that at no time has the Grand Trunk had more business between Montreal and Toronto than at present, and so it is with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and instead of being ruined I can assure hon. gentlemen that, so far as my observation goes, the present management of the Grand Trunk Railway has made the Canadian Pacific Railway mark time and forced their hands, and the result is that the conditions of the railways are better now than at any time in the history of Canada, and I feel assured that the same thing will obtain in the building of the Transcontinental Railway that is taking place under our own observation in our own country and that there will be a healthy competition in the Northwest; that the facilities for transport will compete and those who offer the best services in the east will get the traffic.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman promised to tell us the cost of levelling the grade—the cost of the improvements at Trenton.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I could not give the exact figures, but it was contemplated that they could afford to put two hundred thousand dollars into it—they said they could spend that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It cost nearly half a million.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—No, it did not. If the hon. gentleman knew the cost why did he ask ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Because I wanted the hon. gentleman to give the information.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Must we conclude from the remarks made by the hon. gentleman some time ago that he is no longer a director of the Grand Trunk Pacific ?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—No. The company is not organized yet. I was one of the provisional directors.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In the bill ?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—In the original Bill. My own name and that of Senator Cox were mentioned as directors.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And in the new Bill we will have a clause to strike out the hon. gentlemen's name ?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—No, I would not be like Father Paradis ; I would not like to be kicked out.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Coming from the Northwest Territories it may not be unreasonable to claim the indulgence of the House for a short time whilst I express my opinion on this measure. I do not hesitate to say that this is one of the most important measures that has come before parliament since the advent of the present government to power. It is a measure that involves an expenditure of $150,000,000, and all the speeches which have been made in support of the project have been about on a par with the speech of the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat. I have had a query in my mind as to how it was that the hon. gentleman was defeated in Lincoln. That problem is solved to-night, because if he undertook to treat the people of that riding to the same kind of speech which he has made tonight, I do not wonder he was defeated. No body of intelligent men would believe one-half of what he said. This is a very important Bill, involving the building of a railway supposed to be from the Atlantic to Pacific ocean, and for which there have yet been no surveys made. This House is not in possession of a survey of one mile of the railroad from one end of the road to the other. Every gentleman who spoke in favour of this Bill has been talking, in a manner, on a question he knew nothing of whatever. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken to-night, has made no reference to the nature of the road. He has not told us the requirements of the road. He has talked about all the railroads in the United States from California to Maine and has not made any comparison which is analogous to the proposed road. He tried to mislead us by saying we had no transcontinental road in Canada, and referred to the Canadian Pacific Railway branch line in the States. Does he not know the Canadian Pacific Railway goes through Canada from end to end, excepting where it goes through a little piece of Maine ?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Is that all through Canada ?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—All but the state of Maine.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—And Minnesota.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I say as it was chartered to be built, and built it was all through Canada, excepting a little piece through the state of Maine. The hon. gentleman did not apparently know this unless he desired to mislead the House by telling them the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway went through the states of North and South Dakota.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I have travelled over every bit of it.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I have listened carefully to all the speeches in favour of and against the Bill, and it may be a piece of presumption for me to add a word in opposition to the Bill after the very able arguments and speeches made by the hon. leader of the opposition the hon. gentleman from Marshfield and the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Nobody else ?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Three speeches full of arguments a plain and clear arraignment of the project and not one single argument in those speeches has been answered, and the hon. gentleman in reply to it has simply talked about the faults in the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway. We live in an age of intelligence and progress and we do not expect to follow the faults of past ages. We know the difficulties under which the Canadian Pacific Railway was built, and we know from the attitude assumed by the hon. gentlemen opposite that it was a difficult thing. The west was an unknown country, and the opposition were opposing the scheme. It was wonderful that they got so good a road. The hon. gentleman talked about the Mackenzie route. I happen to know a little about it. It was through a northern country, where they have not raised a bushel of wheat the last two years that was not frozen. The Canadian Pacific Railway passes through the best section of the Canadian Northwest, and the branch lines leading from that line traverse the best section of the country, and when you undertake to traverse that country about 250 miles north of the international boundary, by another transcontinental railway with branch lines going out north and south, it will not serve so good a country. The Canadian Pacific Railway and the Mackenzie and Mann road, traverse the best land of the Canadian Northwest and the land that produces the wheat that will be shipped to the sea-board. That is the district which Dr. Saunders said contained one hundred and seventy-one million acres of arable land on which the people could raise wheat, and he computed the product at eight hundred million bushels. That land has been already intersected by railways, by the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Canadian Northern, the Mackenzie and Mann system. I understand by the hon. gentleman's argument that this road is to take the Mackenzie route to the north. That is what I infer from his argument, when the hon, gentlemen condemns these roads and says the Mackenzie route is the best. I did not think that this Bill would be before parliament again. I thought, last year, we had disposed of it after we had discussed it at great length. It was started in great haste, no survey made. You undertake to give a charter for a railway through this country, 1,900 miles from Moncton to Winnipeg, without a foot of it being surveyed. No man had any accurate knowledge—no knowledge in fact except from Indians and half-breads who had been hunting through the country. They knew nothing about its capabilities for railway purposes, yet you undertake to charter a road which is to cost millions upon millions through an unknown country. No one had petitioned for it, but there were hundred of petitions in the House of Commons against its construction. The hon. Prime Minister said that it was in great haste he introduced the Grand Trunk Pacific last year. He said it was important this Bill should be introduced at once so that the road could be commenced and carried to completion. He evidently could not wait, because he was in a great hurry. He said that time would not wait. Mr. Blair said that Cox would not wait, but he is waiting, the most docile fellow you ever saw ; there is not a frown upon his countenance, and time has waited, and the Bill is here before us. The only man who has not waited long is Mr. Blair himself. He has a good position, and I am glad of it, and it showed the great judgment he possessed in the estimation of the Prime Minister, who appointed him to that position. Last year Mr. Blair protested against this line of railway. He placed a memo. of his policy before the government, which the government did not accept. He was not elected to the House of Commons in 1896. At that time Mr. Blair was a member of the government of New Brunswick. When Mr. Laurier came into power, he sent for Mr. Blair because he realized that Mr. Blair was an able man, and he showed great wisdom in selecting such a competent man to take the position of Minister of Railways. Mr. Blair knew that the Intercolonial Railway had been operated at a disadvantage. He tried to amend that with his judgment and skill ; he undertook to change the rates to make it a paying concern, but he could not do that and then he introduced a Bill to extend the road to Montreal and he was in a hurry to have it done. The Bill to authorize that extension was carried in the House, but defeated in the Senate. Afterwards, the same measure was brought before the Senate in such a shape that there was a saving of a million dollars to the people of Canada. The Senate passed the measure because they realized it would help to give the Intercolonial Railway freight which otherwise it would not get. The Grand Trunk took the freight to Portland, and the Canadian Pacific Railway took the freight to St. John. Of course the Intercolonial Railway could not pay if they did not get the freight. He realized the importance of extending the road to Montreal to get freight and he made a bargain with the Grand Trunk which is virtually the Grand Trunk Pacific, to transfer a certain portion of their freight to the Intercolonial Railway at Montreal. How many car loads of cattle have gone over that railroad from the Grand Trunk Railway since then ? I do not know of any at all. How many train loads of wheat have they given to the Intercolonial Railway ? How many carloads of freight have the Grand Trunk Railway given to the Intercolonial Railway in accordance with their promise ? I will not go into the figures, but I know the amount is very small. The result is that Mr. Blair realized the importance of another railway in the west. There is no doubt we want more railway transportation in the Northwest Territories. No man said a word against that. Nobody said that the introduction of this Bill would give greater facilities to the transportation of wheat and cattle in the Northwest Territories. I want to tell hon. gentlemen in plain English you cannot ship one load of cattle over this proposed road. The cattle that are shipped are prairie fed cattle, and they are shipped to the nearest port of entry that is possible, in the fall and that is Montreal, and they are shipped out because they are not stall fed cattle. Nineteen out of twenty of the stall fed cattle of the west are required in our own country for meat. When Mr. Blair took his trip to the coast he realized the condition of things. He saw that we wanted more transportation in the Northwest Territories, and he promised then that they would build another road and it would be a government road. Mr. Blair got great praise for it, and if the government had carried out the policy that Mr. Blair placed before the council there would have been no opposition to it in the House of Commons or in this House. We want more transportation for the wheat in the fall. We have a grain growing association, composed of farmers entirely. These men take into consideration the best means of getting their grain shipped out of the country in the fall of the year. Every farmer wants to ship out as much grain as early in the navigation season as he can. The hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière said there were only four or five weeks you could ship wheat out of that country. That shows what he knows about it. There are at least three months every fall during which you can ship grain out of the Northwest by the waterways. We could not ship enough in five or six weeks, and even with the transportation facilities which we have, we cannot ship enough in the twelve weeks. We do not want more railways at the present moment, but we want more rolling stock and locomotives. If the policy foreshadowed by Mr. Blair when he asked them to extend the Intercolonial Railway to the eastern side of the lakes, use the water stretches from Fort William, and then build another road from there to the coast had been adopted, that would have given the necessary facilities for transportation at one-half the cost and in one-quarter of the time which the present scheme will require. When the hon. gentleman says you can ship as cheaply all rail as by rail and water, he differs from any other man I know. The Canadian Pacific Railway do not do that; they have their elevator at Fort William and they store the wheat there in the winter time and ship it by water in the spring. It is better for the farmers to hold the grain from the fall till the spring than to pay the excessive railway rates. It only costs five or six cents to store wheat. Nineteen hundred miles of this railway is to be constructed through what kind of a country ? Through a barren wilderness that nobody knows the first thing about. The man who undertakes to say that he knows anything about the country; that he has reliable information, certainly must have a higher regard for his intelligence than the country would have. The hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière said he had been admitted to the private sanctum of Mr. Hays, and it was as a great favour he was admitted there—to see the surveys on the 1.043 miles of the route from North Bay to Winnipeg. He described in that report the character of the country, the character of the timber and the character of the soil. He said that there was a certain quantity of clay soil that would be good for agricultural purposes. I think he is wrong in that. If Mr. Hays had information—it is positive proof that the project is not feasible. If Mr. Hays had that information in his desk three or four months ago why did he not place it before parliament? Why have we not been supplied with a copy of that survey, to show the grades and curves and the character of the country? There is positive proof of the lack of reliable information. The hon. gentleman delivered his speech in a jocular manner, as if he did not himself believe one-half of what he was saying, as though he was playing a huge joke on the Senate. I contend that if Mr. Hays had the report from his engineer of the survey that the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière was permitted to see, apparently as a great favour, they could not have held him from placing it before parliament. It would have been in every newspaper of Canada, and justly so. It was their bounden duty to do it. If they had that survey, why did they not produce it? Do they expect this parliament to bow to them as to the great Mogul? I say it would have been common sense to have laid the surveys before the House, and let the country know where and on what kind of a line they were asking to build a road. The fact of their not doing it, is prima facie evidence that their reports are unfavourable, and that they do not intend to build the road and the government will have to build it. I want to refer again to what the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière said about the timber in that country. He described the different kinds of trees, that they were small and would only make pulp wood. We know the kind of wood that makes pulp wood, and we know the kind of soil such timber grows out of. I am a New Brunswick lumberman, and I know when I come to a gravel bed I will find scrubby timber. You never find good lumber growing in such places. Good timber grows on good land, and bad timber on poor land. Pulp wood is the highest class of timber they have described as growing in that country. They were not talking about a soil that would produce good timber. Many hon. members heard the speech which Mr. Blair made when he retired from the government. I do not think a more sarcastic speech was ever delivered against a political leader. He was mild in tone because he realized that Sir Wilfrid took him out of the legislature of New Brunswick and jabbed him into the House of Commons. But after he got him there, Mr. Blair found it necessary, as a man of principle and character and a public man——

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I am glad the hon. gentleman endorses him. I have heard all the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House traduce Mr. Blair as hard as they could.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—You blackened him the best you could before he left the government.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I deny the charge. Mr. Blair did not go into the full details, but he opposed this policy of the government for building that road. He left the government. He ridiculed the scheme of his leader. Everybody was surprised at Mr. Blair retiring from the government. That showed his high statesmanship. He did not believe in the policy of this government, and who was better qualified to judge, Mr. Blair or Sir Wilfrid Laurier? Mr. Blair, as Minister of Railways, had made a study of it and propounded his policy, and laid it before the government, and they rejected it. After he had left the government, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in a very unfriendly way, and in a most unkind speech, ridiculed him, and yet at an early day he appointed Mr. Blair to the highest position in the gift of the government, chairman of the Railway Commission. That is not consistent, not according to the policy this government has followed. He gave as his reason for appointing Mr. Blair to that position that he was one of the ablest men in Canada. Mr. Blair was a railway man, and he selected him as the best qualified for the position, and Sir Wilfrid did not let petty spite influence him in making the appointment. I was very glad to hear him say that, because they have not exhibited that absence of petty spite on other occasions, when they dismissed officials such as postmasters because they had voted against the government candidates in the last election. Here is a man who left the government and said hard things against the government policy, and the members of the government said hard things against him, and yet they appoint him to this important position because they admit he is the ablest authority in the Dominion on railway matters. How did Mr. Blair create that impression on Sir Wilfrid Laurier's mind? He presented a measure to the government and explained his policy. His colleagues realized that it was a great policy, and that he is an able man, and that is why they selected him for the position. Could there be stronger evidence that the policy of the government was wrong, and that Mr. Blair's policy was right? Mr. Blair's policy is to-day the policy of Mr. Borden, for the construction of a railroad to the west. Nobody has shown us the necessity for the railway provided for in this Bill. The only two staple products we have in the Northwest Territories and Manitoba are wheat and cattle. We bring in a good deal of merchandise, but we ship out a great deal more natural products, and the greater part of that, notwithstanding we have a railway that would compete for the freight if it could, is brought by water to Fort William and shipped thence by car to Winnipeg. I know of my own knowledge, because I have been trying to get freight shipped from the east to the west, that invariably the rate quoted by the water route is one-half the rate by rail. In shipping wheat we want cars. The farmers of the Northwest held a meeting last year at Regina, at which I was a delegate, and passed a resolution which they sent to the government, and to the Canadian Pacific Railway, that they wanted transportation before navigation closed for 75 or 80 per cent of the crop. I protested and said that it was rather hard to ask the railways to ship out in three months so large a percentage of the crop, and advised that if they could get only 60 per cent before navigation closed, it ought to be enough, and I think the resolution passed that way. Now, I may say that the Canadian Pacific Railway to-day have their line largely double-tracked. It will not be completely double-tracked for three or four years, but they have built long sidings, and a great many of them, all the way from Fort William to Regina and even west of Regina. I want to say to the hon. gentleman who spoke about alkali plains west of Indian Head, that he made a mistake, because we find good wheat lands extending a hundred miles west of Indian Head, and I am told there is one section of that part of the country that will produce in a few years a very large quantity of wheat. The hon. gentleman's statement was a mistake, as in fact nine-tenths of the statements in his speech were. As I have said, there are sidings all the way from Fort William to Moosejaw—sidings so long that you can pass trains without stopping either one, and these sidings serve almost as well as a double track. The Canadian Pacific Railway has realized the great importance of doing everything they possibly can to facilitate the transportation of grain before the close of navigation. If the company possessed sufficient rolling stock and locomotives they could take a great many more trains over their line than they do, and if they started a train every hour, that would be 24 trains every day. They could do double that, but say twenty-four trains of thirty cars each. Each car is supposed to contain a thousand bushels. There are some of smaller capacity, but the average is a thousand bushels. Twenty-four trains with thirty cars to the train, each car containing a thousand bushels, gives a daily transportation of 720,000 bushels of wheat from Winnipeg through to Fort William. My plan has always been to assist the Canadian Pacific Railway with cars and locomotives during the fall season, so as to enable the company to carry the wheat to Fort William before the close of navigation. That would relieve the congestion complained of in that country. If you want lower rates, how can you obtain them? How is it done in business? By competition. Does any one suppose that it is possible to carry wheat 1,900 miles by rail, through an uninhabited country, where there is no local traffic, in competition with the rail and water route?

It would take fourteen different engines to haul one train-load of wheat from Winnipeg to Moncton. It would be impossible to compete with the cheaper route, and without competition you cannot lower the rates. If the Crow's Nest Pass deal ever lowered the freight rates in the Northwest, I have never discovered it. What did lower the rates, and to a very considerable extent, was this: the year before last a Bill was passed by the local legislature of Manitoba guaranteeing the bonds of the Mackenzie and Mann road, on the condition that they would carry grain from Winnipeg to Fort William for less than the rate which then prevailed, and if they could not afford to carry it at the reduced rate, the government agreed to make good the loss. A great many people in Winnipeg thought they could not do it, and the agreement was opposed. They sent petitions down here to the federal government asking them to disallow the Act, but the Act went into force. The year before last, the rate was reduced by two cents per hundred pounds, and last year by four cents, between Winnipeg and Fort William. What was the result ? The Canadian Pacific Railway lowered the rate to Wolseley two cents per hundred pounds, simply because the Canadian Northern lowered theirs. In 1902, we paid 19 cents per hundred ; last year the rate was 17 cents, showing that when the government made an arrangement with the Canadian Northern, that they would carry grain at a reduced rate, the Canadian Pacific Railway had to come down at once to the same rate, notwithstanding the fact that the nearest point on the Canadian Northern to Wolseley is 150 to 200 miles. When we have a railway that will reduce the freight rates you will have the rates brought down on all competing roads, whether at competing points or not, because they cannot afford—public opinion would not permit it—to charge higher rates than their competitors. The Northern Pacific came into Winnipeg and got a large bonus, but there was no provision by which railway rates were fixed. They gave a subsidy to the Northern Pacific of half a million dollars to come in, and they at once formed a combination with the Canadian Pacific Railway and did not lower the rates. I mention that circumstance to show that the simple fact of the railway coming in gives no redress to the farmers of that country. If the government build and own a road in the Northwest, they will operate it on business principles, and that will satisfy the farmers of the Northwest Territories. The government would not form a combination, but if they bring the road in under the control of the Grand Trunk Railway, how long will it be before there is a combination formed with Mackenzie and Mann, the Canadian Pacific and the Northern Pacific ? Just one day ; they would agree upon a common rate, or perhaps do as they did in Ontario last year, raise the rates so as to make it better for all of them. If this was to be a government railway they could at once put on rolling stock and let the Canadian Pacific Railway have it, under rent for say three months. It would not cost much to the country to hold that rolling stock for nine months, and it would facilitate the movement of the crops and put money in circulation before the close of navigation. Those are some arguments which should make us pause before passing this Bill. It is a Bill that has not had proper consideration. It has not been submitted to the people. Why, undertake to launch a scheme surrounded by such doubt and suspicion, without consulting the people, when there is an election so near at hand ? The government does not own this country ; it is simply managing the affairs of the people for the time being, and they should not undertake to make a bargain of such importance without consulting the people. I say get your surveys, collect your information and place it before the people as business men would do. Let the country have an opportunity of understanding the project and then, if it is sanctioned by the people, all would be well. If Sir Wilfrid Laurier wanted to immortalize himself in the estimation of the Canadian people and especially those of the west he would have come down with a policy to build the Hudson Bay Railway, a road five or six hundred miles long, to connect with the lines already existing, he would have every member from the west of Lake Superior supporting him, because it is a measure that is popular in that part of Canada. Hudson Bay offers the natural outlet for that country, and the Hudson Bay Railway would cost less and accomplish more for the development of the country than building 1,900 miles of road through a barren wilderness between Winnipeg and Moncton.

One thing I have noticed, is the happy result of delay. I understand that the prairie has been widened three hundred miles by delaying this Bill. We have five or six hundred miles more in that vast country than we had any idea of; the country has grown while the Bill has slept. The arrangement last year was to guarantee the road through the mountain section at $30,000 a mile. That has been done away with. The government undertakes to guarantee three-fourths of the cost of the mountain section. That is a case of book-keeping. I know that this Grand Trunk Pacific that has been eulogized as being a company of such wise and able men must be up to book-keeping as well as everything else. They have shown themselves expert bargain-makers, because every change in the contract is in their interest, and none in the interest of the people. If the government had undertaken to restrict the freight rates or to secure the trade of the Northwest for Canadian seaports, something would have been accomplished, but it is conceded that it will take fifteen years to build the eastern section of the railway, and trade cannot reach the port of St. John until the road is completed and open from end to end. In the meantime, during that fifteen years, the Portland route will be so thoroughly established that the traffic of the Northwest can never be diverted to St. John and the company will soon find an excuse for taking freight to Portland rather than to St. John.

We were told the other day what an excellent road this Grand Trunk Pacific is to be. If they are to haul trains of fifty loaded cars, what sort of a road must it be? It will be a first-class line, and as the government is to guarantee three-fourths of the cost, whatever it may be, the result of the company's book-keeping will be that the government will pay not merely three-fourths, but five-fourths of the cost. They will take contracts themselves and sublet it amongst themselves, and there is where the great steal will be, in the mountain sections. They have it in their power, and there is not a clause in the Bill that is in the interests of the people of Canada. How the representatives of the maritime provinces can support this Bill I cannot understand. Before the road can be completed, as I have said, the trade will be diverted to Portland, and it will never reach St. John. Build the road as a government work and what will be the result? You can lend the company a couple of million dollars worth of rolling stock, which will serve present purposes, and the Canadian Pacific Railway can carry more grain out of the Northwest than will be grown there the next ten years, by the two railways we now have. If you do not do that, you will want twenty roads in a few years, because with less than a million acres of wheat land cultivated the transportation facilities at present existing are taxed, and there are a hundred millions of acres of land there suitable for wheat growing. People are pouring in by the tens of thousands and settling upon the land, and it is land they can have under wheat within a year. What we need is transportation, and under this system we will not have it in time. Within eight years there will be a congestion of traffic, unless you come to the relief of people. I want to say now, and I stake my reputation on the accuracy of my statement, there will be a congestion of traffic this very year if we have the crop that we expect. The commissioner of the elevator business told me that the prospect was that the wheat crop of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories this year would be eighty million bushels. That cannot be carried out with the present facilities for transportation, and we can not expect the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to put on rolling stock enough to carry out in three months what would furnish them traffic for the whole year round. If the government could loan them rolling stock for three months, there would be a great relief throughout the Northwest. If the policy of the leader of the opposition in the other House were adopted, you would only have to extend this railway from Montreal to some harbour on the great lakes, and utilize the water route until the main line is built to Winnipeg. There is no great necessity at present for an all-rail line. Coming down here, I see very few trains passing between Fort William and North Bay either summer or winter. The water route takes the trade of the country. I venture to say that the interest on the cost of constructing nineteen hundred miles of road from Winnipeg to Moncton would pay for moving all the wheat exported from the Northwest in the next ten years. Navigation on the lakes from Fort William to Georgian Bay ports is a month longer than on the canals. Vessel-owners do not want to take cargoes to Montreal after a certain period in the fall, for fear of ice. The canals freeze earlier than the open lake. If the government would put on some ice-breakers and keep the ice broken at Fort William, they could ship wheat from there to Georgian Bay ports a month longer than by canal. That wheat would be carried in the winter to St. John and would furnish winter port business, whilst if you wait for the opening of this new route for traffic you will not find sufficient traffic to keep it going until your grandchildren are grey-headed.

I feel justified in voting against this Bill because I do not believe it will commend itself to the intelligent consideration of the electors of this country. The argument that this line is needed in a hurry is all bosh. There is no danger of war, and it is not a military necessity. If there should be a war, I would not want to be on that northern railway, because I would run risk of being starved to death, and I would prefer to take my chances of being shot. If parliament would accept the policy of Mr. Borden, who is an honest man, who has done his best for the country, acting from conscientious conviction, they would act in the best interest of the country. After thoroughly studying the question and having given to it his mature consideration, Mr. Blair found that he could not support his leader's policy, and he resigned his position in the government. If you want any further proof that his judgments was sound, and was so considered by the Prime Minister, you have the fact that he appointed Mr. Blair to the high position of chairman of the Railway Commission.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not know that at this late hour, or even if I had longer time at my disposal that I would undertake to analyse the north by south speech we have heard from the hon. gentleman from Wolsely. He has told us to start with, that the country through which they proposed to build this road. or the route of the Alexander Mackenzie survey, is no good for a transcontinental road. That there never had been a bushel of wheat attempted to be grown there that had not been frozen.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The last two years I said.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I am not surprised at that. I ought to be, from a gentleman coming from the west, and growing wheat. I remember a year ago of reading an account of a speech made by the hon. gentleman at a place down in Glengarry, at a meeting of Conservatives where he made statements similar to those he expressed to-night. He was reported, I think it was a carefully prepared report; it looked as if it had been revised. He went on to describe the position of the Northwest country and standing on the platform, he said: 'I want to illustrate to you the condition of that Northwest country, the country through which these people propose to open up the railway. I want to tell you when I am on my farm at Wolsely I am just in the position I am now standing on the front of the platform. I am at the limit. If I take one step off the platform I fall and go to destruction. I am in the same position on my farm at Wolsely. If I go a few miles further west or north I am off the platform, the country is no good.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I did not say one single syllable that the hon. gentleman has uttered. I will tell the House what I did say. I was invited by my hon. friend (Mr. McMullen) to go down to Glengarry to make a speech. It was the occasion of the nomination of a candidate. I did not undertake to talk politics. I hardly ever do on an occasion of that kind. The 'Free Press' of Winnipeg has lied about the matter, and any other paper which reported the speech as the hon. gentleman reads it tells a wilful lie. I was standing on the platform speaking about the Northwest. I said 'I am perfectly safe standing on the platform where I am. If I take one more step I may fall.' I said 'I want to illustrate that I have lived in the Northwest twenty years and there has never been a year in that twenty years—(and I say it now before this honourble House, to go on record on the report) that the mercury does not get down to 33 in the month of July when the wheat is in blossom. If it went down one or two more degrees it would mean ruination, as it would be for me to fall off the platform ; but it does not go down. Thirty-three is the lowest limit except behind some bluff or some little ravine.' I said it truthfully, but they distored my words and misrepresented them for political purposes. I say it is not fair for anybody to make the statement the hon. gentleman makes to-night when he says that I referred to the country as being no good north of Wolsely. I said that from 100 to 200 miles north is the limit of raising good wheat in the Northwest Territories, and I challenge contradiction to that statement. They may raise patches here and there successfully.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I am sure the hon. gentleman will thank me for giving him the opportunity of explaining that statement.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I took the occasion to explain it in the press.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I did not read it in the Winnipeg 'Free Press.' I think I read it in the Ottawa paper a day or two after the speech was delivered, and I was quite correct in making the statement as I read it. It has never been contradicted and the hon. gentleman did say to-night—and I would not expect him to say anything else—that the country through which the Mackenzie survey was run never grew a bushel of wheat that was not frozen.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I said the last two years. The hon. gentleman should confine himself to facts.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—We have had a long discussion of this matter. It was discussed a year ago. I took part in the debate last year and I do not purpose going over the same ground I did last year ; but the hon. gentleman made a few statements which I wish to correct. He has spoken of the necessity for railway facilities in the Northwest; he has told us that he believes that all that is necessary is for the government to furnish the Canadian Pacific Railway with additional rolling stock and that will satisfy the needs of the Northwest, and, almost in the same breath, he says 'If the government do not do that, you will be in a worse position than before and in a few years you will want 20 railways, and why ? Because the people are rushing in there. Did any person ever hear a speech more north by south than that. He says if you do not furnish the Canadian Pacific Railway with rolling stock you are going to want twenty railways, and yet he opposes the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific and he argues that because you have the Canadian Pacific Railway north of Lake Superior you do not want any other railways. He sticks to Blair. He has not heard gentlemen on this side of the House denounce Mr. Blair, but we have heard him denounce Mr. Blair as not being a business man——

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Never.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—What did he say about Mr. Blair when he recommended the purchase of the Drummond county railway? That he was a man who should be behind the bars for suggesting such a thing. I am not surprised at the hon. gentleman mixing himself north by south, because he is a new convert on the question of government ownership. He addressed the House on that question and as the hon. gentleman was running north by south I was anxious to know his position on the question of government ownership. He delivered a speech on the extension of the Intercolonial Railway when Mr. Blair was Minister of Railways on June 26, 1897. He spoke as follows:

> I may say here that I voted on Wednesday night against the purchase of the Drummond County Railway and the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, on the ground that I am opposed to that principle entirely, and on the ground, also, that I did not think the deal they were making was a good one.

And he further says :

> I will oppose it because I do not think it would be a just and proper expenditure of public money, and because I am not in favour of the government owning railways. If the government would introduce a scheme to sell the Intercolonial Railway to the Grand Trunk and a rival line competing with the Canadian Pacific, I would vote for it.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—That would be all right.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—This lending cars to another company——

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—That is all right.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman further says :

There would then be two gigantic concerns competing for traffic, and the country would receive the benefit. But I think it is monstrous for the government, after subsidizing the Grand Trunk Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway, to build a rival line themselves, and it is not on party grounds that I am opposed to it, because if the government had been composed of angels I would have voted against it.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—That is a different thing from this road.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Why this idea of government ownership is new to the gentlemen on the opposite side of the House. It is a new policy for them to suggest or advocate or be dragged into, because I see very few hon. gentlemen opposite me who have not denounced government ownership of railways. What did the elder members of this House who were members of parliament when Alexander Mackenzie proposed a government owned and operated railway, do when that proposition was made? Were they satisfied with it? No, they opposed it most bitterly, and, even after large proportions of that road were built by the government of Mr. Mackenzie, after Sir John Macdonald had built a portion of that road after the Conservatives came in, they sought the first opportunity they could to dispose of the lines they had built to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, not a government owned or controlled road, although the people of Canada were taxed for an amount that would more than construct the line of railway; they gave them $37,000,000 worth of completed line, free gift, and $25,000,000 cash and 25,000,000 acres of land. That was not enough. They gave them a monopoly for twenty years in Manitoba and the west, exemption from taxation on the land, and exemption from taxation as to the railway and rolling stock and not only that but exemption from duties on the material required to construct that road. In addition to all that, a few years after receiving all that assistance the Canadian Pacific Railway come knocking at the door of parliament asking for a loan of $6,000,000 and shortly afterwards they asked for $30,000,000. Both requests were granted. These hon. gentlemen talk about government owned railways. The people of Canada put up enough money and credit at that time to construct two railways like the Canadian Pacific Railway and the government cannot have any control under the railway commission Bill they passed a year ago, because stockholders are guaranteed 10 per cent before the government can interfere with the rates, a contract made when some of these gentlemen of this House were members of the government, and I was surprised to hear the motion made by the hon. leader of the opopsition the other night in favour of government control of railways. The hon. gentleman was very careful to say nothing of operation. It appears to me, as far as the present contract is concerned, that the hon. gentleman has very little ground on which to vote against the proposition now before parliament, because he has always declared himself against government owned and operated railways. The government is going to own theroad from Winnipeg to Quebec. They control the rates over the western division and they can operate the Intercolonial over the new line, if they see fit,and can give any railway running powers over that road. They have absolute control of rates, I want to say to the hon. gentleman from Glengarry that I do not think that he deliberately misled the House the other night, but he said that as far as the prairie section was concerned the minimum of $13,000 was the guarantee and it did not matter what the road cost the 75 per cent guarantee was removed. If the road cost only $9,000 a mile, which he said it could be built for, he said the company's bonds had a guarantee of $13,000 a mile. Such is not the case. They get a guarantee of 75 per cent on a cost not exceeding $13,000 a mile. He claimed that it could be built for eight or nine thousand a mile; that he had the evidence. I will refer to a return brought down last year to parliament from the Canadian Northern, the Mackenzie-Mann road, giving the cost from Prince Albert east to Grand View, where they show in detail the estimated cost of the road to be over $19,000 a mile, and if you add for the 80-pound steel which the Grand Trunk Pacific have to put on their road, it will cost over $20,000 a mile, and I say it is absurd to offer any such argument to this House that a standard road such as is to be built under the conditions of this contract, could be built for eight or ten thousand dollars a mile. In the opening remarks of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield he said, who is demading this railway? What new demand has been made for it? One thing we do know is that the Conservative organization sent in petitions saying they did not want it, but evidence has been produced during the past year that I think ought to convert even the hon. gentleman from Marshfield. The hon. gentleman knows very well that some men who have been very high up in politics, in whom his party have had confidence, men of good judgment, have changed their minds in the last year or two so far as the Grand Trunk Pacific is concerned, and the support of the government is concerned. I want to call attention to the opinion of Mr. Haslam, a gentleman the hon. gentleman from Wolsely knows well, whom he will give credit for having sound judgment, a gentleman who declared the he is going to support the Laurier government candidate giving as his reason, on account of the government's railway policy, their tariff policy and their immigration policy, that he is prepared to support the Laurier administration, and, to use his own language—I will not read it all, because he gives a very full reason for his change of political views. Mr. Haslam was not elected at the last general election. He was the Conservative candidate for Selkirk. He ran within one of being even with Mr. McCreary who was elected, and this is what he says:—

In looking at the map of Canada, one cannot but be impressed with the very small part of it which has been developed. The railway system of Canada at the present time simply touches the fringe of its territory.

I should like the hon. gentleman from Wolsely to listen to this:

And it seems to me that those people are very shortsighted who the expediency of attempting anything in the way of railway building through any districts except those which are known at the present time to have either agricultural or mineral wealth. I do not believe that there is any part of the world's surface, where climatic conditions are such that civilized man can live, that is not adapted to some economic purpose or other. For this reason I believe that the building of the Grand Trunk Railway from Quebec to the Pacific ocean is a work as far-reaching in importance to Canada, and one that will be fraught with quite as good results, as the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which was at the time so much criticised.

He deals with other matters of public concern. This is addressed to the editor of the Winnipeg 'Telegram' in early May, and reads as follows:

On all the lines which I think essential to permanent progress we are moving rapidly, and I think securely, under present conditions. To make a change and to place ourselves under the weaker leadership and reactionary policy which seems unfortunately to be characteristic of the Conservative party at the present time, would, it seems to me, be most unwise and imprudent.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Will the hon. gentleman say whether Mr. Haslem did not change his political attitude not less than two or three years ago?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—He was the Conservative candidate at the last election.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Was the change not made two or three years ago? and before the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway was talked of?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—This is what he states now.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Does the hon. gentleman not know that that is the case?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No, I do not know.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I know it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman knows Mr. Haslem.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And he is not a resident of Canada. He lives in St. Paul.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—That is no argument. I know there are few men doing more to settle up the Northwest than that gentleman, and he is liable to be a candidate for parliament.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—And liable to be defeated.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I know he was a Conservative candidate, and Hugh John Macdonald canvassed in his behalf and he came within one of being even with Mr. McCreary. He gave the reasons why he changed his allegiance, and it is principally on account of the Grand Trunk Pacific policy.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Would the hon. gentleman be kind enough to read the letter of Mr. McDonald, Liberal, ex-mayor of Winnipeg, and a dozen other Liberals protesting against that contract.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think there were twenty-four altogether, Mr. Buchanan came in later on. You might also add Mr. Roblin, Haggart and Hugh Sutherland—They were held up as going to vote against the Liberal government, if the government insisted on the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific. I do not expect that anybody supposes those gentlemen would vote for the Laurier government. They have been opposing that government for years. I am not quoting the words of a man of no standing .This man gives his reason. I want to inform the hon. gentleman from Marshfield and the hon. gentleman from Wolsely, who think that men ought to talk about something they know something about they ought to follow that principle and not talk north by south. I will give the opinion of another gentleman. Mr. H. A. Mullen, a gentleman who exports about one-fourth of the cattle from Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, who was the Conservative member in the Manitoba legislature. He was a member up to the last general election and was tendered the unanimous nomination in his old constituency in Russell. He refused. Mr. Mullen wrote a letter which has been published in which he gives his reasons for supporting the government railway policy, and his reasons are as follows :—

Hence I consider it to be entirely consistent with sound and progressive Conservative principles to approve of and strongly endorse the policy of legislation of the Laurier government on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway question as being wise and farsighted and in the best interests of the entire Northwest and calculated to result in the opening and buildiag up of a vast extent of country and in bringing about a full realization of its magnificent possibilities.

That is what Mr. Mullen has to say. My hon. friend says: 'Who asked for this road ?' Did any person ask for it ? Has any person opposed it except the twenty-five dissatisfied Liberals ? Has any word come from any board of trade protesting against the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific ? I venture to say not. I have here a resolution passed by the board of trade of the Northwest Territories a few days ago:

That in the opinion of this convention the development of the resources of the territories amply justify and urgently require the immediate and rapid construction of the projected transcontinental line through the northern part of the country.

That is the united boards of trade of western Alberta, eastern British Columbia and the Northwest Territories, so that all along the line they are asking for this road. Have you any better evidence of the necessity that exists for it than the statement of the hon. gentleman from Wolsely, that if you do not furnish the Canadian Pacific Railway with two million dollars worth of rolling stock you will need twenty railways in a short time ? I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to another question, that of rates. The hon. member and the hon. leader of the opposition said something about a bargain made by Mr. Roblin and the control of the rates. His statement was that it saved hundred of thousands of dollars, and probably millions of dollars to the farmers of the province of Manitoba. The hon. member for Wolsely (Hon. Mr. Perley) has also referred to it, and told us about the way in which the government control was obtained. I do not know what attitude Mr. Roblin will take on the present Bill. He has been north by south many times beforeon this policy, and I do not know how he will get over the bridge, because Mr. Roblin was the one who brought about government ownership. Mr. Hugh John Macdonald appealed to the people of Manitoba on the question of government ownership of railways, but he had a saving clause ;—'In so far as practicable' —and I remember well Sir Charles Tupper, being on the platform with Mr. Macdonald, rather objected to the suggestion of government ownership, but he said 'I think I should not raise much objection because my friend, Mr. Macdonald, says as far as practicable, and if he is elected, he knows it is not practicable, and no harm will be done.' But Mr. Roblin came into power and secured a railway. He bought out the Northern Pacific, a road which was induced to enter Manitoba by a subsidy to give relief to the people from the Canadian Pacific Railway. Notwithstanding what the hon. gentleman from Wolseley has said, the Northern Pacific broke the monopoly. As was said by the hon. leader of the opposition, previous to that, on account of the monopoly given to the Canadian Pacific Railway, the people were almost in rebellion. So aggrieved were the people with the iniquitous bargain made by the government with the Canadian Pacific Railway, giving them a monopoly for twenty years that the people were almost in a state of rebellion. So much so that the government realizing the condition of affairs and the importance of their claim, got parliament to grant the Canadian Pacific Railway a loan of fifteen million dollars on condition they would consent to wiping out clause fifteen of the Act which gave them a monopoly. As soon as that was done, the Greenway government offered a bonus of $1,750 a mile to the Northern Pacific to extend their line into Manitoba, and that extension immediately brought down the rates. The rates continued to drop until Mr. Roblin bought the Northern Pacific and handed it over to Mackenzie and Mann. The rates may have been reduced at Wolseley, but I speak by the book when I say they have not been reduced. I can tell the hon. gentleman that the rates on lumber from Rat Portage to Brandon, Portage la Prairie and other points have been increased since the government purchased the Northern Pacific. Under Northern Pacific operation lumber sold at Brandon for $2.25 less than at Carberry, because it was a competing point on the Canadian Pacific Railway, although Brandon is about 35 miles further away from Rat Portage. At Portage la Prairie I could buy lumber cheaper than it can be had at a point 20 miles from Winnipeg, because there was competition. But the Roblin government bought out the Northern Pacific and gave the people to understand that they were going to operate it, and would connect with the Northern Pacific at the boundary line. But no sooner had they control of that road, than they transferred it to Mackenzie and Mann. They bought it at $20,000 a mile from the Northern Pacific. My hon. friend says that a road can be built in Manitoba for $9,000 a mile, and if ever a road was built for that it was that Northern Pacific. Wages, and material were cheap at the time. However the Roblin government purchased the road, and hardly was the ink dry on the agreement, until it was transferred to Mackenzie and Mann. My hon. friend talks about rates; why the rates on the Canadian Northern to-day on the southern freight are from two to three cents higher than they were before the change.

Hon. Mr. WATSON.

The following table shows the increase in rates since the change:

Per 100 lbs.	Former rate.	Present rate.
Woodenware	42½	55
Binder twine	42½	57
Roofing paper	42½	48
Furniture	50½	75
Window glass	42½	48
Iron	42½	48
Iron (galv.)	42½	48
Nails	42½	48
Pipe	42½	48
Pipe (cast over 5 in.)	31½	48
Axle grease	42½	48
Fence wire	42½	48
Green apples	31½	45
Sashes and doors	23	30
Vegetables in bags	93	110
Vegetables in boxes	65	75
Fruits, mixed car lots	43½	75
Fruit in boxes and barrels.	62	110
Cranberries	37½	60
Cement	27	36

Cartage to be added to the present rates.

The lower rates were in force when the Northern Pacific controlled that road, before it was purchased by the Roblin government and turned over to Mackenzie and Mann.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Are the rates which the hon. gentleman has quoted for car-loads?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Between what points?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Between St. Paul and Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—How much of that line is owned by the Canada Northern?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—From the boundary line to Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But the rates quoted are from St. Paul.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The increase in rates has been a matter of controversy, and it has been shown that the Northern Pacific have continued their rates from St. Paul to the boundary line. It is the result of an arrangement between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian Northern.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is not the Canadian Northern that is putting up the rates.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—If that is the case, what becomes of Mr. Roblin's government control ? He bought out the Northern Pacific, yet the rates are higher than they were before the purchase. We have before us the resolution moved by the hon. leader of the opposition. He must have found it hard to bring himself to move such an amendment, because he has expressed himself very strongly against government operation of a road. In fact it was government owned roads he opposed so very strongly last year, and he gave his reasons. I was interested in looking up what the hon. gentleman had to say with regard to government owned roads last year. He said:

I do not propose to compare it with this scheme or discuss it in any way ; but this I will say, speaking for myself, I am opposed to governments running railways, and if we are to take the Intercolonial Railway as a sample to guide us in the future, all I have to say is, God protect us from the financial results that must follow if the government are to own and run many other roads in the future.

He gave his reasons for that, and I want to call attention to those reasons because the debates in the other chamber show that one of the great arguments for government ownership, control and operation of roads is the fact that they are owned and operated by the government in Australia and have been a success there. The very reason the hon. gentleman gave last year for opposing this project is because he had studied the operation of government railways in Australia, and had come to the conclusion that they were not a success, and for that reason he could not vote for government ownership here. I have further evidence to justify the hon. gentleman in the stand he took last year, because I find the same condition prevails to-day. Of course, when the hon. leader of the opposition was speaking he referred to the operation of government railways a few years ago, when he was in Australia. Things are not changed, because the Australian Commissioner of Railways is to-day in America studying our railway system. He came to Winnipeg on the 16th and the folowing interview is published:

Mr. Kirkcaldie has come to America for the purpose of studying the details of railway management in Canada and the United States in order to ascertain if there are any features of the methods in vogue here that might be adopted with advantage in Australia, where all lines are owned and operated by the government. Much study has been given to the railway problem in Australia and the best brains of America and Great Britain have been employed to operate the government lines in a satisfactory manner, but entire success has not yet been attained, the financial aspect being the most serious. Mr. Kirkcaldie occupies the position of railway commissioner in New South Wales, and he has been delegated by his government to make an exhaustive study of the railway question in the countries which are accounted to have the bsst couducted railways in the world. He will spend some time in the leading railway centres for the purpose of interviewing officials and informing himself on departmental details.

So that the hon. gentleman was perfectly justified in taking the position he assumed a year ago against government operation of railways on account of his knowledge of the Australian railway system. I am surprised, however, that the hon. gentleman has been converted by his leader in the other House, or the ex-Minister of Railways, Mr. Haggart, to this milk and water system of government owned railways, but he cannot have any part in supporting it after the strong stand he took a year ago. Nothing has been stated to show that government owned railways are better to-day than they were last session. I might give the opinion of the Commissioner of Railways in Manitoba, the premier, Mr. Roblin. He had purchased the Northern Pacific and turned it over to the Mackenzie and Mann system, and had to give some reason for going back on the supposed Conservative policy of government owned railways, and this is the reason he gave in a speech in the legislature of Manitoba on the 16th March, 1901. He said when introducing the resolution to transfer the Northern Pacific road to the Canadian Northern:

Now, the question I proposed myself was, why did we want the Northern Pacific as a government road ? We realized that we could not operate that road and secure such material benefit for the people of the country as we desired, without subjecting ourselves to all the dangers that threaten to overtake government operation of railroads as shown in other portions of Canada. We realized that it was not wisdom on our part to undertake the control of the road and operate it ourselves and make it part of the political organizations of the day. (Hear, hear.) I fancy my hon. friend who says hear, hear, agrees with me that unfortunately one of the most regretable things in the public life of Canada to-day is what is known as the spoils system. It cannot but be realized by any man who is a lover of his country that it is injurious to the public service. Desiring to avoid what would necessarily be additional patronage to the government, we decided we would operate it.

What is government ownership ? What object does it serve ? Is it simply to own a railroad for political advantage ? I think not. It is a means to an end ; and the end is, in order to serve the public with the minimum rate. I claim that in the Bill before the House we have all the practical benefits of government ownership without the disadvantage of having to operate the road through a department of the government, or a commission the government might appoint. We have exactly what a government railway would be expected to give the people, namely, the control of the rates. We have escaped all the dangers of government ownership, and secured all that is practically beneficial and desirable.

That was the view entertained by the premier of Manitoba—at least that was his view. I suppose, when the new policy is discussed on the public platform, he will be somewhat of an acrobat, like the hon. gentleman from Wolseley and will try to play on the other tack, in that respect like the leader of the opposition. We all admit that the control of rates secured by Mr. Roblin and referred to by the hon. leader of the opposition the other day, practically means nothing. The hon. gentleman from Wolseley practically gave the case away to-night when he said the government agreed to give the reduced rates that is a short way of putting it. That is correct. I do not know whether he really meant what he said or not, but the government did guarantee the rates for this reason, that under the agreement made with the Canadian Northern, when the Roblin government disposed of the Northern system to the Canadian Northern, that agreement provides that the government shall have a right to control rates. But, in case of dispute, the matter is referred to the courts and the courts have to decide and the first thing to be considered, not at the instance of the tax-payer of the province, but the first thing to be considered by the courts in fixing the rates is the interest of the company; consequently if the government insist on the rates being reduced the stockholders are bound to get the expenses paid first, and if there is any shortage in paying the rates on the guarantee—because that rate is given on the guarantee—the government had to supply the deficiency. I want to call particular attention to this because it has been suggested that the Roblin government secured control of rates for a guarantee of $10,000 a mile. But the Greenway government had practically all the advantages, and a better rate, previous to the change of government, for the guarantee on that road for eight thousand dollars a mile. The Roblin government increased it to $10,000 and the interest on that guarantee is four per cent. The liability, as far as the interest is concerned, is as great on the ten thousand dollars a mile on the Canadian Northern, as it would be on the Grand Trunk Pacific at $13,000 a mile at 3 per cent. Now as to our control, I do not think it will be argued by hon. gentlemen opposite that the provisions in the schedule to this Act is not exactly what it means. It reads as follows :

The rates and tolls to be levied and taken by the company upon any part of the said railway shall be under the control of the governor in council, or of such authority, commission or tribunal as is designated or constituted under any Act of the parliament of Canada for the regulation or control of the business of railways.

That is absolute control of rates, which, no doubt will be affected. One argument by the hon. gentleman from Wolseley was that the people want to ship their wheat out in the fall. His first argument was that they did not want to ship it out in the fall, because it cost them more money and they would rather hold it in the country than pay extra freight and later on he said that did want it out, and that they were going to get it out by using ice-breakers at Thunder Bay to keep navigation open, bring it to Depot Harbour and ship to St. John. He said that you would have a month longer navigation in Thunder Bay than in the canals down east. That may be right. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman how is he going to get his wheat from Thunder Bay to Depot Harbour without taking it through the Sault Ste. Marie canal, which is much further north and freezes up before the canals on the St. Lawrence, and still he has to go through the Sault to get to Depot Harbour, and that is his great scheme. It is just as reasonable as most of his suggestions to-night. It cannot possibly be done; I believe that the people of that west, to a man, want this transcontinental railway. I believe now, as I did last year, that wheat can be carried by rail as cheaply as by the scheme proposed by Mr. Borden by the lake and rail route, for the reasons given by the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière on this subject, given in details. We are told by hon. gentlemen that there is no information about this northern country. There is a sort of apology made by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield that there is some survey now. He did not dispute that there is a good grade east of Winnipeg. We were satisfied last year. People had taken the trouble to inform themselves and the ascertained that good grades could be obtained east of Winnipeg. We have the information that Winnipeg east to a point north of North Bay, where the profiles and plans are completed, they have a grade of three-tenths of one per cent, which grade is caapble of carying wheat as cheap as by the lake and rail route. In the west the population is growing by hundreds of thousands. Last year some nine million acres of land were taken up and settled upon, with that rapid increase in cultivation which has taken place, we must have an outlet for our products. We cannot be without it. We cannot store our wheat for six or seven months in the year. Wheat has been carried from Winnipeg to St. John by the Canadian pacific Railway notwithstanding the fact that they had these heavy grades and sharp curvatures to encounter. An argument is advanced here by the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland that you could not operate this road in the winter time. The road will be operated in winter time.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—He said it would be more expensive to operate in winter.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—That is the view I will take of it if it is to be operated in winter time at all, the more trains you run over it the cheaper will be the rate of freight. There is no question about that at all. If you could operate it by running trains every two hours in the day it is going to be cheaper to operate the road by the tonnage than running two or three trains a day. I want just for a moment to suggest one proposition made by a gentleman in the other House, which has not been advanced here. It was advanced last year, and that is the purchase of the Canadian Pacific Railway north of Lake Superior. There is no question in my mind that the Canadian Pacific Railway would like to dispose of that portion of the road, and there is no question to my mind whatever that if they did dispose of that road, the Canadian Pacific Railway would divert all their trade by the Sault line and Lake Superior. They would never operate a train north of Lake Superior. They have easier grades and better road on the Sault line and that is the way the freight would come. I am surprised at the reasons given by the hon. leader of the opposition, speaking in support of this amendment, as to why he wants government control of the road. It is to secure the freight for our own terminals in Canadian ports. When he was a member of the government, what did he do ? We are told by the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface that the Conservative party always had to rectify the wrongs of the Liberals. What were some of the first duties of the Liberals when they came into power, if it was not to right the wrongs that had been done by their predecessors ? The Conservative government were subsidizing steamers to Boston and United States ports to induce freight to go to American ports instead of to Canadian ports. One of the first acts of the Liberal administration was to cancel those contracts and give them to steamships going to Canadian ports. Probably the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface will mark that down. The government also had an arrangement made with the Canadian Pacific Railway whereby they were not to compete with them for freight on the Nicolet branch ; that the freight had to go through the state of Maine. I thought while the hon gentleman was speaking that we might make a pun and state that the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway was through the state of Maine. I should like to have said a little about the reasons why the road should be built at once. I intended to give some figures that would show the amount of land taken up by homesteaders last year, on the amount of land sold by the different companies last year, amounting to some nine million acres. I should like to have called the attention of the House to the importance of the immediate construction of the railway in that western country. You can only have a reduction of rates and proper service by competition. The hon. gentleman from Wolseley has said that, although he stated several other things between times. I say that it is of the utmost importance that the government should be encouraged in every way to prosecute this work to its successful completion. I believe it is much better for the government to lease the road east of Winnipeg to the Grand Trunk Railway than to undertake to operate it as a government road. I believe the leader of the opposition agrees with me on that point. I do not for a moment think that the leader of the opposition would suggest that the government should build that road and operate it.

Hon. Mr. McKAY (Truro)—He has not done it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No, and I do not think he would. I believe he is honest and consistent, and he knows what he has said in the past and with the information that he has with regard to the operation of roads by governments he would not rise in his place in the House and support a motion for government ownership and control of railways.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And yet the hon. gentleman quoted from that speech I made last year to leave the impression that I had. The hon. gentleman did not quote me correctly.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I quoted from the Debates, and I leave it with the stenographers or the hon. gentleman himself. I quoted what the hon. gentleman said last year.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman quoted as much as suited himself, and did not read the whole statement; but I shall take another opportunity to correct him.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I wish to say that I had no desire to put the hon. gentleman in a wrong position. I believe he was sincere in his statement. I read it exactly word for word. The statement is on page 1384 of the second volume of the Debates and reads as follows:

> I am opposed to government running railways, and if we are to take the Intercolonial Railway as a sample to guide us in the future, all I have to say is, God protect us from financial results that must follow if the government are to own and run many other roads in the future.

I then went on to say without reading further that the hon. gentleman gave his reasons and related his experience in Australia. If he desires, I will read that part of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The sentiments there expressed are exactly in accordance with the resolution I moved today.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I have not misquoted. I have given it word for word.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has read it correctly, but he did not do so before.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I will leave that to the reporter. Then he gives his reasons for expressing the opinion and calling upon the creator to protect us, and he says:

> I have already told the House that I am giving my independent views upon that question. I shall not discuss it further. I watched the operations of the railroads in Australia when I was there. They are government railways. They produce no argument in my mind that governments can own and operate railways as well as it can be done by individuals. I believe to-day that if the Grand Trunk Railway Company, or the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had possession of the Intercolonial Railway they would run it with much advantage, to the people living in the maritime provinces and at less expense than it is run today, and they would run it without losing any money. That may be a heterodox view to some of my friends from the maritime provinces, but I have come to the conclusion from having watched the management and the operations of that road under both governments.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Where am I advocating the government ownership and operation of railways in what the hon. gentleman has read?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I say the hon. gentleman is not advocating government ownership and operation of road. I am arguing the contrary, and I am surprised that he should now propose that the government should own the road.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And control it, but not operate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is nothing there about operating it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I know there is nothing there about operating, and I venture to say the hon. gentleman would admit he is not in favour of the government operating that road. I know the hon. gentleman would not want to operate that road.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I said so distinctly in making the motion.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Certainly, I want that pronouncement made by the hon. gentleman. I want to make him repeat it. The hon. gentleman is not in favour of government owning railways, because this proposition is going to be used through the country, and is now used by some people, that the Intercolonial Railway is to be extended into the west and the government policy is in favour of owning and controlling and operating that railway. That is what is held out to the electors in Canada and to the people in the west, but the hon. gentleman says he is opposed to that and never suggested that the government should operate that road. He has emphasized that he wants to own and control, but he is careful not to say the government should operate it. I do not know what control means, but he avoids 'operation;' he said so last year and repeats it now. When I have secured that declaration, I think I have cleared the atmosphere of a good many stump speeches that might otherwise have been delivered. I have no doubt what the result of this vote is going to be.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Nor I.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The good sense of the House will guarantee a good round majority in support of the Bill. I have no doubt of that at all. I trust that in the near future we will see the completion of this road and we will have, as stated by the hon. gentleman from Lincoln, a government road from the Atlantic to the Pacific entirely in Canadian territory. It will be the means of opening up and developing a large territory to the north. It will double the size of Canada; it will reduce railway rates and give the relief demanded by the people of Canada and give it at little or no cost to the resources of the Dominion. I was interested in the remarks the hon. gentleman from British Columbia the other day when he said the few people who were supporting the Bill were people to whom it would not cost anything. He is perfectly right. I believe the intelligent people of Canada are supporting the Bill today because it is going to be at no cost to the country.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—A couple of hours ago I had no intention of saying anything on this measure. but this debate has assumed such proportions that I think it is the duty of some one to remonstrate and protest against this manner of proceeding. The debate was commenced in a dignified manner, and is terminating after the manner of a stump or platform discussion, with the strongest feeling of party politics on both sides. I deplore this. It is no matter to laugh at. It is a matter which the Senate ought to consider carefully and pause before they plunge deeper and deeper into the abyss of partyism from which it may never be extricated. The fathers of the federation were men of two sides of politics. The state of the country at that time demanded a combination of the French and English and of every shade of politics. They met with the most laudable desire to produce such a constitution as would lastingly benefit this country. They had the example of the United States. They had the example of the mother country, and they had genius and intellect, and they understood the habits and feelings of the people. These men constituted an Upper House, and the Rt. Hon. Sir John Macdonald, the most distinguished Canadian of his time, in this country, this illustrious man on the 29th January, 1865, introduced in the House of Commons the resolutions of the conference and explained the nature of the new constitution. What does he say about this House? He says that they divided it into three great divisions of twenty-four members each. He says:

> The objection has been taken, that, in consequence of the Crown being deprived the right of unlimited appointment, there is a chance of a deadlock arising between the two branches of the legislature, a chance that the Upper House, being altogether independent of the sovereign, of the Lower House, and of the advisers of the Crown, may act independently, and so independently as to produce a deadlock. I do not anticipate any such result. In the first case we know that in England it does not arise. There would be no use of an Upper House if it did not exercise, when it thought proper, the right of opposing or amending or postponing the legislation of the Lower House. It would be of no value whatever were it a mere chamber for registering the decrees of the Lower House. It must be an independent House, having a free action of its own, for it is only valuable as being a regulating body, calmly considering the legislation initiated by the popular branch, and preventing any hasty or ill-considered legislation which may come from that body, but it will never set itself in opposition against the deliberate and understood wishes of the people. Even the House of Lords, which, as an hereditary body, is far more independent than one appointed for life can be; whenever it ascertains what is the calm, deliberate will of the people of England, yields, and never in modern times, has there been, in fact or act, any attempt to overrule the decisions of that House by the appointment of new peers, excepting perhaps once in the reign of Queen Anne.

In this country, we must remember, that the gentlemen who will be selected for the legislative council stand on a very different footing from the peers of England.

He further says:

The members of the Upper House would then come from the people as well as those of the Lower House, and should any difference ever arise between both branches, the former could say to the members of the popular branch: 'We as much represent the feelings of the people as you do, and even more so; we are not elected from small localities and for a short period; you as a body were elected at a particular time, when the public mind was running in a particular channel; you were returned to parliament, not so much representing the general views of the country on general questions, as upon the particular subjects which happened to engage the minds of the people when they went to the polls.

Besides, it must be remembered that an Upper House, the members of which are to be appointed for life, would not have the same quality of permanence as the House of Lords; our members would die; strangers would succeed them, whereas son succeeded father in the House of Lords. Thus the changes in the membership and state of opinion in our Upper House would always be more rapid than in the House of Lords.

The extract continues:

There is this additional advantage to be expected from the limitation. To the Upper House is to be confided the protection of sectional interests; therefore is it that the three great divisions are there equally represented, for the purpose of defending such interests against the combinations of majorities in the Assembly. It will, therefore, become the interest of each section to be represented by its very best men, and the members of the administration who belong to each section will see that such men are chosen, in the case of a vacancy in their section.

In the formation of the House of Commons, the principle of representation by population has been provided for in a manner equally ingenious and simple.

The duties of the Upper House are defined. In no part is there a word said about discussing such questions as have been discussed in the Senate to-night. They are simply to protect sections of the people whose rights may be threatened, and, consequently I hold it is not a point in this House to have government and opposition having caucuses as they do in the lower House. I never heard in this chamber, until the other day, that abominable word 'caucus.' It should never have been mentioned in this House. It is a word of ill omen and it was a very long time before the English people would admit it into their government. There is also the word 'whip,' which is of still greater abhorrence to me. We should have some reason given for using the words 'leader of the government' and 'leader of the opposition,' or they should be put aside. If I am one of the opposition and if the hon. gentleman from Belleville is the leader of the opposition, then I am a traitor? I have not consulted him. I have not voted with him on every occasion, I have been opposed to him on occasions, and I have never thought of asking him his opinion or consulting him in any way as the chieftain or leader from whom I should take an opposition. What would be the use of this House as an independent body, sitting in a judicial capacity and judging the affairs of the country, if not actuated by justice, truth and honour. If it continues on in the manner in which it has done to-night I say that the Senate will have fallen from its high estate, and no longer will it be looked up to as an institution of honour by the people of the country. For the right hon. gentelman who is the premier of the government I have the highest and most sincere regard. He has been honoured above any other Canadian. He has been admitted to be one of the chosen few to give their advice to the king. He has been honoured by being made a privy councillor. He has also had the degrees of the oldest universities in England and Europe, institutions which are hoary with learning and antiquity. He has had their highest degrees ; France has honoured him with the highest class, the Légion of Honour ; but great as these honours are, and much respected as these honours are by every Canadian, I say it would be a far higher honour if the right hon. gentleman could fold his arms and say : 'I have raised the Senate to a higher position than it was when I became leader of the government. I have placed in the Senate men eminent for their services to the state, and eminent for the services that they have rendered to the public, and I have selected them because of their independence in judging things on their merits, which is so needed in a body of this kind.' I mention that to show that that being the platform of the Liberal party, I had expected something of the kind might happen in their appointments to this House. It did not happen. I am an independent member of this House ? I know that my words may fall like a post-prandial expression of opinion. To whom am I responsible ? Because I am responsible in the highest degree to somebody in occupying this position ? Am I responsible to party ? No, not to party. To whom am I responsible ? First to the Ruler of the Universe to whom we are all responsible. I am responsible to the country, and, lastly, to myself and my own conscience. These are all ; I have nothing to do with party, and when that word is hurled across the floor of the House, and when old sores are raked up—I do not say that one side is worse than the other—perhaps the bad example came from I won't say which, but I hope members will look into and see that words uttered by an humble member of this House are worthy of consideration, and if they cannot, in their time, have it to say that they were of the era which witnessed the elevation and the improvement of this Senate.

In this case the first point to consider by any hon. member who wishes to take an honest view of the project, is, first, is this railway really necessary ? I am willing to admit it is necessary—well, not in its entirety. I am willing to admit that, wherever it was started, there seems to be a general consensus of opinion and no strong feelings of opposition for doing everything to keep the North-west Territories, the hope and the saviour of this country, supplied with every convenience that civilization can afford in its rapid course to success and prosperity. Therefore I am not unfavourable to that. The next point is, where is that railway to be located ? As to that, I can form some opinion ? The course is marked out on this map which I have before me, and if that is the survey it is well done, whether it be an actual survey or only a partial one, or whether an imaginary one I don't know. It begins at Port Simpson, passes midway through British Columbia, and on towards the Atlantic distributing its favours equally to the different western provinces. It then takes a slice out of the southeast corner of Keewatin, and after that it takes another slice off another corner. Hon members, when they were boys, may have been treated to potato-cake, and this map reminds me of the cuts and triangles in the cakes which used to be made in my time. There is a slice exactly like that taken off Alberta. I should say this is a map from Mr. Sifton's office, and it is a map of Canada. It is attached to the blue-book. Then a line goes to the southeast corner of Saskatchewan, and on again and takes another triangular piece off Manitoba ; it then goes straight through Keewatin, and then it goes straight on and lavishes its favours on Ontario. It gives Ontario full and plenty of its services, for it runs from one side of it to the other across the northern end so that Ontario cannot complain. It then enters the province of Quebec and passes through it in much the same manner. It curves through it in an undulating way, till it reaches New Brunswick, and entering New Brunswick it strikes that fertile plain which for two hundred years was covered with beautiful grass and valuable timber, and where it was left without any discovery. I do not deny the existence of such a territory. It is quite possible it may be there. There are a great many things undiscovered in this world, and a great many men whose talents are undiscovered. The line then passes down to Moncton. Nova Scotia does not seem to get any, nor that exacting and particular place, Prince Edward Island. It is a wonder its members did not object, but they are getting the bridge built. I know Prince Edward Island would not be behind in getting favours if they were going. So far as the route goes to Quebec, I can vote for that. I think it is required there, but not as a freight carrier. We should make use of the waterway for carrying freight—the most magnificent waterway in the world. It is a pity the Welland canal is not enlarged a little. If the House will permit me I will read a short statement from one of the ablest men in Ontario, in regard to the transportation question. He has been a shipper for forty years. He has an elevator working every year, and he ships more grain than any man in Ontario. I spoke to him on the subject and he handed me this paper. Hon. gentlemen will understand the Welland canal is only fourteen feet deep, the same as the St. Lawrence canals. I asked a contractor about how much it would take to deepen this canal, and he told me it would be about $20,000,000. I will read this portion of the letter :

A further saving will be made of three-eighths to one-half cent per bushel on the River St. Lawrence ; as soon as the trade warrants the forwarding companies building large barges, the grain can be carried for 1⅜ to 1½ cents per bushel. It has been carried in the past as low as 1⅜ cents per bushel without loss to the companies.

To work these savings it would have to be done in large sized steamers carrying from 175,000 to 250,000 bushels. These steamers would discharge at Kingston. If they were able to go to Montreal it would not be any improvement, but a loss, as the grain can be carried much cheaper in barges from here down to Montreal than it can be carried in ocean steamers, owing to the difficulties in the way of the large outlay of the steamer.

The River St. Lawrence rates :

The present rate from Kingston to Montreal on the class of barges now used is 1⅜ cents. In 1902 it was 1⅜ to 1½ cents.

These barges, as you are aware, are small, most of them carry 20,000 to 25,000 bushels, a few 40,000 to 45,000 bushels.

The coming barge will be from 60,000 to 75,000 bushels. The crews for large barges cost very little more than for the small ones, so when I based my figures from Kingston to Montreal at 1⅜ cents, I think I was very conservative.

This certainly would give a transportation company a good profit.

Below I show you the comparison between F.O.B. ocean steamer, port of New York via Buffalo, and F.O.B. steamer port of Montreal via Deep Water Welland

You see the great difference there is in favour of that route. The commission, who are taking evidence in the matter, are not ready with their report. I thought I would mention this because I know the gentleman is reliable. I know it is reliable, and I challenge any hon. gentleman to disprove it, and I challenge any hon. gentleman to prove that a railway can carry freight as cheaply by rail as it can by water. It is impossible to do it. I have the greatest authority for saying so. I have great deference for the opinion of the hon. gentleman from Lincoln, and I think if we discussed the matter together he would understand. Times are changed. There is no similarity that I can see between the existing railway route and the one proposed. But circumstances and conditions are entirely changed from what they were in the past. The Canadian Pacific Railway was a necessity. If any hon. gentleman who says that there is any similitude between the inception of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Transcontinental Railway projects, I hope it will be on record. I think the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie might rejoice in the title 'Lord Portage la Prairie,' or his colleague might like the title 'Duke of Killarney.' When this road is constructed I hope titles will result from it. We are all glad when Canadians receive titles, but we hope they will live in the country. We congratulate the gentlemen who have been offered titles by the sovereign, and we try to show them every respect, although we sometimes do not. With regard to government control, I would have nothing to do with it. The State Civil Service of Canada is bad enough, God knows, but to add a railway to it, and to have every man looking for a job down to the firemen,—because the lower the position the more bitter the fight, is simply not to be thought of. It is more difficult to appoint a guard in a penitentiary than to a position higher. I say it is a misfortune for any young man who gets a position in the civil service, unless he has a 'pull' and can hoodwink somebody and go to the minister with influence behind him for promotion. I remember going once to a gentleman who was a minister, and I had to stand at his door and the member of parliament who was to come with me did not arrive on time. I had to go into his presence alone. It was terrible. He did not ask me to sit down. He looked at me in a scornful way, and asked what brought me there, and I told him my mission. He said, 'I will inquire into it, and do what is right.' I was glad to hear afterwards that he fell in the general disaster. I only mention this to show the trouble members of the cabinet have. If a young man is as stupid as an owl, and incapable of anything at all, put him in the service. That is the follow who gets the pull; but without the pull he has no chance whatever. I think there is a large amount of patronage attending this matter. You are a powerful party, you have a well united party, a strong party. Party government is necessary. I hope you are not going to repeat the doings and practices of the party which manages the affairs of Ontario. If you do, party government wil go to the dogs. The morality of the people, I am sorry to say, has become very dull, in Ontario, and under such considerations is it not unfair that you should have this grant of money, this patronage and power to handicap your opponents. This scattered, disjointed Conservative party whom you say are almost guilty of deeds that were incorrect, have not shown that genius for government that is shown by you. I am willing to admit that as far as I am concerned, but you should give them a chance. Perhaps they might do something equal to the humblest of you. Now, with reference to the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie, I know he does not mean it, but a gentleman coming here blindfolded would make sure he was in the House of Commons if he listened to that gentleman. The hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière also made a speech. I wanted to apologize to him when he was here, because I happened to interrupt him while he was making his beautiful peroration; I apologize to him in his absence. He is the most complacent gentleman I ever saw in my life. he reminded me of little Jack Horner who sat in the corner, who put in his thumb and pulled out a plum and said 'what a good boy am I.' He makes a statement and then laughs and smiles in a most complacent manner—what a good boy am I. He is young, and will get over that. I am happy to think the good feeling which exists on these occasions is not broken. We will try and do better for the future.

I have not been canvassed by any one. I am sure the government are going to carry this Bill. I hope they will be successful with it and I hope money, honour and prosperity will follow the building of the Transcontinental as it did the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The House divided on the amendment, which was rejected on the following division.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I ask that the names be read.

The names were then read by the clerk.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I move that the votes given by the Hon. Messrs Cox and Gibson be disallowed.

Hon. Mr. FISET—On what ground ?

Hon. Mr. COX—I voted against the amendment. I do not intend to vote for the original motion.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—The hon. gentleman is a little early in his protest.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Last year a Bill was presented which became law, in which Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson, Lord Welby, John Brock, Joseph Price, and Alfred Smithers, all of the city of London, England, the Hon. George A. Cox, H. M. Pellatt, E R. Wood, of Toronto, and the Hon. Wm. Gibson of Beamsville, Ontario, became shareholders in the company and were incorporated under the name of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company. This company has a contract with the government. This company is going to receive sums of money, and the members I have named who form part of that company have, by virtue of section 31 of our rules, no right to vote on a question where they have a personal, pecuniary interest, and for that reason I move that their vote be disallowed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume the gist of the question is, have those gentlemen any pecuniary interest ? The mere fact of their being mentioned as promoters in the Bill, I do not think disqualifies them, because frequently Bills are brought into this chamber in which gentlemen are named as provisional directors until the company is organized, and because they take some interest in it, because shareholders practically, it cannot be contended that they have any pecuniary interest in the matter.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If it were simply in the formation of the rompany, all right, but there is a contract by the government with a company and we are voting on that contract.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It is not a vote on the main motion. It is on the amendment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is equivalent.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The amendment might be of any kind at all, and would it be contended that the hon. gentleman was debarred from voting on the amendment? It is simply a principle that is to be affirmed by the amendment, and it seems to me the question could only be raised on the second reading.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But the hon. gentleman must know if that motion had carried, it would have defeated the Bill. The voting in order to keep the Bill in existence and not have it defeated is showing as much interest in the Bill as if he voted the other way. I am rather sorry the question was raised at all ; but it does strike me that if these gentlemen are disqualified from voting on the main motion, because of their being provisional directors, they are equally disqualified from voting on the amendment for the reason which I have given, that if the motion was carried, then the Bill would have been defeated and their interest, whatever it might have been, would have been lost. On the contrary if the Bill is now carried, as I presume it will be, they stand in just the same position. I cannot for the life of me see any difference. I am quite satisfied if the hon. gentlemen who have voted had taken the view I did they would not have done so, and one gentleman has stated he does not intend to vote on the main motion, which shows clearly what his views are on the matter. I may be wrong.

Hon. Mr. COX—I wish to say that I had decided not to vote on the main motion, and so stated to the members of the government, and had supposed that I was quite within my right to vote against the amendment. If I am wrong as to that, I am quite willing that my vote should be stricken out. I had decided not to vote on the main motion, although I question very much whether I have not the right to vote. I do not think there is any reason why I should not vote, but the fact that I am a provisional director, and probably will be a director of the company, I decided I would not vote on the main motion.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The fact that the hon. gentleman is a provisional director does not disqualify him from voting here at all. The question under our rule is whether he has a direct personal interest—direct pecuniary interest. These hon. gentlemen know whether they have a direct pecuniary interest, and if they have not, as I understand both of them to say that they have not, they have a perfect right to vote, and in fact under our rules they must vote nuless excused by the Senate.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I cannot see that the point can apply to the motion now before the House. It is an amendment declaring in favour of government ownership. I cannot see why these hon. gentlemen have not a perfect right to vote against that principle. The question of voting for the Bill, is a different thing altogether. If the vote of my hon. friend had been made on the motion for the second reading of the Bill, I would say the hon. gentleman from Stadacona would be justified in raising the point, but I cannot see how these gentlemen can be debarred from voting on the question of government ownership.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the amendment is carried, then the interest they have in the passing of the Bill is jeopardized.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—They might not be.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I think I stated to the House most distinctly for fear that it might jeopardize my position of independence in parliament, that I asked Mr. Hays to relieve me from any responsibility and to remove my name from the board, and he was kind enough to do so. For the information of my hon. friend, I will tell him that I have no pecuniary interest in the railway, and do not expect to have, and would not have my name struck from the vote on the hon. gentleman's suggestion or that of anybody else in the House. I state in the House that I have no pecuniary interest and do not expect any, and am not going to be debarred from exercising my franchise in the House by any clap-trap talk by my hon. friend The hon. gentleman has to accept my statement.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman need not get excited at all.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I did not get excited.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—The hon. gentleman from Stadacona must accept the word of the hon. gentleman from Lincoln.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Another hon. gentleman is getting excited. The hon. gentleman told us just now that he had sent in his resignation to the directorate.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—There has been no election.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But there have been provisional directors. When it organizes the provisional directors disappear, but the law declares that the hon. gentleman from Lincoln and the hon. gentleman from Toronto are two directors, and the contract is passed between the government and the directors.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The government and the Grand Trunk Pacific.

The SPEAKER—There is nothing before the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I beg pardon, I made a motion ; and if the hon. Speaker does not wish to put it, it is all right. I made a motion that those votes should be disallowed.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Seconded by whom ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not want a seconder.

Hon. Mr. COX—With the permission of the House, I will withdraw my name.

The motion was declared lost.

The House then divided on the motion for the second reading of the Bill, which was carried on the following vote :

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman from Missisquoi came in after the motion was put.

The SPEAKER—He came in after the motion of the amendment was put, but before the motion for the second reading.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—If there is any question about it, I beg to withdraw my vote. I hope there will be no misapprehension as to the way I should have voted, and the way I should vote again if necessary.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I draw attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman from Stadacona did not vote from his seat.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—I wish to call attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman from Truro did not vote.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—I am paired with the hon. gentleman from St. John. But for that I would have voted for the amendment and against the Bill.

The Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I have a list of some twenty members of the Senate who have been paired, and I think it would be well to have it appear in the Debates.

Hon. Mr. COX.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think that is bad practice. It was never introduced until last session.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, June 23rd, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THIRD READING.

Bill (8) An Act respecting the Nova Scotia Permanent Benefit Building Society and Savings Fund.—(Hon. Mr. McDonald, C.B.)

Bill (K) An Act respecting the Northern Bank.—(Hon. Mr. Watson.)

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on (Bill 72) an Act to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act.

(In the Committee.)

On the third clause.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think we ought to have some explanation with regard to how this common stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific is to be handed over to the Grand Trunk Railway Company. This is one of the clauses relating to that subject.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think I stated very fully the position which the Grand Trunk and the Grand Trunk Pacific occupy with respect to the stock of the company. The total amount is $45,000,000, of which $20,000,000 will be preferred stock and $25,000,000 common stock. Originally it was intended that they should hold the whole of it. It was pointed out that it was practically useless to put it in their vaults. It was very unusual to deprive a railway company of the opportunity it might have for raising money on its stock. It had some value, and therefore the change was made in the direction of allowing them to sell a portion of the stock, retaining however the major portion in order that they could control the board of directors. They are bound to retain a sufficient amount of stock to control the affairs of the company.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The hon. Secretary of State has said that $45,000,000 is the capital of this company, $20,000,000 of it being preferred stock. If he will refer to the Act of last year, which has not been changed, he will find that the $20,000,000 is not called preferred stock, that the capital is $45,000,000, and it only becomes preferred stock upon a resolution passed by a majority of the shareholders. They may create preferred stock or not just as they please. They may make a gift of the stock to any number of men if they choose, and, moreover, they are only obliged to keep sufficient stock to be able to control the policy of the company. They can sell the rest. The directors can. after the stock has been allotted, call the shareholders together and create $20,000,000 preferred stock which will have the ordinary preference, as far as dividends are concerned, over the common stock. Now, it is only the common stock which can control the policy of the company, and it is of that they are to retain simply an amount to control the policy of the company. Further they were obliged to keep the common stock put into their hands until such time as the fifty years lease terminated, which afforded some security to the government that they would carry out the terms of the lease. Moreover, they were to retain the same stock until all the bonds for which the government became responsible were paid. All these conditions that they had in connection with the stock they are relieved from, under the terms of this clause, so that they can dispose of the stock as they please, place it in the hands of a few friends of the Grand Trunk Railway Company and draw their dividends as they are earned, and all they are obliged to keep is a sufficient amount of common stock to be able to control the policy. I can understand why this stock would be handed over to the Grand Trunk Railway Company under the Act of last year for this reason; that they were becoming responsible for one-fourth of the bonds that were to be issued for the construction of that road. I could understand that they should have the stock if they choose, but now they are relieved from the position they held as second mortgagees and are on a par with the government, yet they get the stock free from any incumberance or liability, if the directors please to hand it over to them.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There are two points of view from which this question of the stock is to be considered; first, the manner in which the Grand Trunk Pacific Company is enabled, under all legislation of last year and this year, to deal with the stock, and next how the Grand Trunk Railway Company can dispose of that stock after it has reached them. Now last year, when we were dealing with the General Railway Act, we eliminated from it a clause which permitted the passing of stock in companies at less than the face value or a proper market value. That clause was dropped, because it was held that operations of a very doubtful character had been carried on under it, and it lead to the watering of stock and the distribution of stock among promoters and others, and the passing of stock for a very doubtful consideration. But while it was dropped from the General Railway Act a similar provision was inserted in the Grand Trunk Pacific Incorporation Bill. It is clause 11 which is as follows:

> The directors of the Company elected by the shareholders may make and issue a paid-up stock, shares in the Company, whether subscribed for or not, and may allow and hand over in payment for plant, rolling stock, docks, elevators, wharfs, warehouses, vessels, or materials of any kind, or, as consideration for rights and services rendered, powers and privileges acquired and also for the bona fide claims of contractors and engineers, such an amount of such common stock as shall be a gain and bona fide value for the property purchased, as for the rights, powers and privileges acquired, or services rendered, as aforesaid, other than promotion services, due regard being had to the then market value of the stock; and such issue and allotment of stock shall be binding on the Company, and such shall not be assessable for calls.

That was the clause in the Act of incorporation of the Grand Trunk Pacific as passed by this parliament last year. I suppose that was considered to be sufficient, in view of the provision in the agreement last year that the Grand Trunk Railway Company should hold this stock during the continuance of the lease. I do not know for what reason that clause was then considered to be ample. But that clause has been repealed this year, on the application of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and another clause has been inserted which reads precisely the same, only it introduces another consideration to be accepted in consideration of the stock—I am now referring to section 3 of the amendment to their charter proposed this session. The only material change, as far as I can see, is that it introduces guarantees as a consideration for the passing of this stock. This amendment renders clear what Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson said in England, that for the support which the Grand Trunk Railway were giving the Grand Trunk Pacific they were to receive this common stock, and in order to carry that view out and make the law clear on the subject the word 'guarantees' is introduced in clause 11, so that it renders it quite easy to pass this stock over to the Grand Trunk from the Grand Trunk Pacific with no consideration whatever but simply the guarantee of the bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific. Now that guarantee is a consideration on which it is absolutely impossible to put a cash value. It would be a very difficult matter indeed to reduce that to dollars and cents, and, therefore, the authority is taken by the Grand Trunk Pacific to pass this stock over to the Grand Trunk for no consideration whatever, beyond the guarantee for one-fourth of the cost of constructing the mountain and prairie section.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—How are they acquiring the rolling stock?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am dealing with the acquiring by the Grand Trunk Railway and the giving by the Grand Trunk Pacific of this stock without any cash consideration whatever. Is there any restriction put upon what they shall do with it after they acquire it? They get it for very slight consideration, as I have shown, and they can proceed to deal with it as they please. The only limitation, and it is not a limitation, is that they shall report to the Minister of Finance and show how this stock has been disposed of.

When the hon. Secretary of State introduced this Bill and made his explanation with regard to it, he dealt with this matter, and pointed out to the House that the 309th section of the Railway Act amply provided against any improper distribution or use of this stock on the part of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and my hon. friend tried to impress the House with the view that ample provision was there made to prevent what we may call watering stock, or the distribution of it, or the passing of it to promoters at a mere nominal consideration. It must be borne in mind that although that stock may pass to-day for a nominal consideration, yet in the hands of innocent buyers, some day in the near future it will come up and be entitled to a dividend if the road earns anything over working expenses, interest and rent to the government, and it will be properly entitled to a dividend if there should be any surplus. The stock will pass from hand to hand as the country prospers and the trade of the railway grows, and finally it may reach par in the hands of innocent buyers. Their claim to dividends cannot be resisted. At all events, there is no provision in this law or any law, so far as I know, which will prevent the Grand Trunk Railway Company, if they are in possession of such earnings, from declaring a dividend upon stock which might have been given away in the first instance to promoters for a mere nominal consideration. We know what occurred with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and we know hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House—I think I can recognize some of them—declaimed with great earnestness at the time the Canadian Pacific Railway was launched, and particularly when it began to be a going concern, with prospects of earning dividends, about watering stock, and the fact that dividends became payable upon stock for which less than par value had ever been given. Now, we are opening the door for the same thing again.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Parliament authorized the Canadian Pacific Railway stock to be sold, a certain amount of it, at 25 cents on the dollar.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If parliament did authorize it, why should we authorize the passing of this stock for a guarantee.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because they are not likely to give away for nothing something which is of some value.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is not a safe course for parliament to pursue in dealing with a question of this kind. We know what people have done before, we know what corporations are constantly doing, and what they will do to the end of time, and I do not blame them for doing it; they are perfectly right in doing it, if it is legalized by parliament. But what are we doing? Every dollar represented in either bonds or stock—I am quoting the words of Mr. Blair—should be used in the construction of that road at as near the face value as possible.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We should make every provision that would protect the public against the watering of stock. Last session the members of the government laid great emphasis on the fact that a provision was in the Bill to prevent the watering of stock.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But there is no watering of stock. How can there be watering?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If you allow this stock to be distributed among promoters for a nomianl cnsideration, and it goes on and reaches, through the prosperity and development of the country, a par value, the Company will be called upon to pay reasonable dividends upon that stock, when it may be that only five or ten cents on the dollar had ever gone into the construction of the road. You may say that is not watering stock.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If not it is something just as bad, and it ought to be prevented. What did hon. gentlemen in the government tell us last year? Every word I am saying now was the burden of their speech. At that time we were dealing with only one aspect of this stock business, and that was the manner in which it should pass from the Grand Trunk Pacific to the Grand Trunk Railway. That matter stood as it does to-day with this difference, that the law is now made clear that that stock can be passed simply for no other consideration than the guaranteeing of the bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company. While that part of the question remains substantially as it stood last year, only the operation is facilitated. the other phase of the question, when the stock goes into the hands of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, is entirely changed. What I have been saying and trying to impress on the House as a good sound view is, that this stock should not be allowed to be distributed by the Grand Trunk Pacific without being placed on the market; that it should be protected against being distributed to promoters. My own view is that three-fourths of that stock should belong to the government—no nine-tenths of it. The government is, in cash or other obligations. assuming nine-tenths of the cost of this road, and it would be nothing but right that a large proportion of this stock, instead of being handed over to the Grand Trunk Railway Company should be handed to the government who would hold it in the interest of the taxpayers of Canada, so that when traffic is offered to this road and it grows it would be in the power of the people of Canada in that way, to control the rates. But if this Bill passes without such provisions with regard to the stock, no matter how it may be disposed of, it will loom up by and by as soon as this road begins to earn more than expenses, and claim dividends, although very little if any of the money represented by the stock has actually gone into the construction of the road. Last year the government held that it was most important that that should be guarded against. They claimed they had guarded it, and took great credit for having done so; but they are now opening the door for the passing of that stock with little or no consideration, and later that stock will come in claiming dividends and in that case it will come out of the trade of the country and will consequently keep the rates up.

Hon. Mr. COX—That will be after the interest is paid on the bonds.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes.

Hon. Mr. COX—And if the interest is going to be paid on the bonds a great deal of our trouble here will be ended, any apprehension that we ever had, particularly on the other side of the House, that these bonds would be paid by the government.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The point I am making is that the difficulty and injury to Canada would not stop there, supposing every bond was paid. If this stock comes up and claims dividends, although no money for it went into the construction of the road—

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Surely that is watering stock.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—A dividend cannot be paid if it is not earned.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It can only be earned by taking it out of the trade of the country, and dividends should only be paid on money which actually went into the construction of the road, and not on stock allotted to capitalists and promoters for a mere song. The stock will pass into innocent hands, and faith must be kept with them, and if you can wrench out of the trade of the country a revenue to cover expenses, interest on the bonds, etc., then you will have to wrench out of the producers in the country a further amount in order to pay dividends on this stock.

Now that would be all right if provision were made, as was made last year, that this stock should be held by the Grand Trunk Railway during the continuance of the lease, and consequently Parliament could then deal with it when the road was able to pay not only working expenses but interest upon the bonds and earn a surplus. It would then appear whether the Grand Trunk Railway Company had paid in dollar for dollar or a reasonable amount for this stock and it had gone into the construction of the road and to the benefit of the enterprise. Nobody could then reasonably complain if they should get dividends upon it. That was provided for last year, but these provisions have been all swept to one side by the legislature this year, and the stock may be distributed, it may be disposed of for very slight consideration. There is no limit placed upon that, and it may pass for promotion services, or for anything of that kind.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman will not say so if he will read the clause of the private Bill of the Grand Trunk.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Which clause ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Clause 3, which the hon. gentleman referred to, which reads as follows :

The directors of the company elected by the shareholders may make and issue as paid-up stock, shares of the common stock of the company, whether subscribed for or not, and may allot and hand over in payment for plant, rolling stock, docks, elevators, wharfs, warehouses, vessels or materials of any kind, or as consideration for rights, powers, guarantees and privileges acquired, or services rendered, other than promotion services, and also for the bona fide claims of contractors and engineers, such an amount of such common stock as is a fair and bona fide value for the property purchased, or for the rights, powers, guarantees and privileges acquired, or services rendered as aforesaid, due regard being had to the then market value of the stock ; and such issue and allotment of stock shall be binding on the company and such stock shall not be assessable for calls.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Exactly, and does the hon. gentleman really ask the House to believe that that puts a restriction on the Grand Trunk Company as to how they are to dispose of the stock !

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—That is another question.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman could not have read the clause for any other purpose than to show that it placed a restriction on the Grand Trunk Company.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman said the stock could be given over for promotion purposes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It could only be given over to the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Pacific and they are precluded by this clause.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is most extraordinary that a very clever lawyer like my hon. friend from de Lanaudière should put forward such a contention. All the restrictions that are imposed in clause 3 are imposed upon the Grand Trunk Pacific Company whose stock is being dealt with. It is the Grand Trunk Pacific stock which is being dealt with, and they cannot hand it over for promotion services ; but they can do so for a guarantee, and they have handed it over for a guarantee, and this clause does not prohibit the Grand Trunk Company from using the stock of another company which they have acquired under the law for promotion purposes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—In virtue of what principle would the hon. gentleman draw the conclusion that the Grand Trunk having an asset in their hands would give it away for nothing ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Let us follow the hon. gentleman and see how he has backed down. He interrupted me to quote this clause to show that the Grand Trunk Pacific could not use this stock for promotion purposes. Now, I show him that this clause has nothing to do with the Grand Trunk's action, and he says : 'Would it be likely that the Grand Trunk would give this stock away for nothing ?'—just going back to the position taken by the hon. Secretary of State a moment ago. I do not say that my hon. friend's desire was to mislead the House, but hon. gentlemen will see that when he quotes a provision of the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill in dealing with its own stock as binding the Grand Trunk Company, the result would be—although my hon. friend may not have meant it—to make the House believe that all these wholesome restrictions about giving the stock away for promotion services were preserved. There is nothing in our law, so far as I know, that would prevent a company acquiring the stock of this Grand Trunk Pacific Company in a legitimate way. They can do as they please with it. We made the way as easy as it can possibly be made. They are not getting it for promotion services ; they are getting it for a guarantee, and the law says they can do that, but they are free to give it away for promotion purposes. They are not bound by any statute as regards the stock of another company which has come legally into their possession. Both my hon. friends, when pressed on this question, fall back and say : 'Would the Grand Trunk be likely to do this ?' I meet my hon. friend from de Lorimer just as I did the hon. Secretary of State. We judge the future by the past. We know what has been the history of corporations with regard to matters of this kind, even when dealing with their own stock, when restrictions were not thrown around them as they were thrown around the Grand Trunk Pacific. But in the case of the Grand Trunk there are not these restrictions. It is the Grand Trunk dealing with the Grand Trunk Pacific stock. Under the law, we are providing nicely for their purposes, and my view is that a proper safeguard should be provided against giving this stock to anybody unless ample consideration was paid for it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman's objection is based on the fact that this Bill authorizes the disposing of a part of that stock, or the whole of it, for the purpose of paying for the guarantee which will have to be given by the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he would suggest what we should add. Under this agreement the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada is bound to guarantee 25 per cent of the cost of the building of the western division. Surely this is worth something. The Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada has deposited $5,000,000 with the government ; surely it is worth something. Would the hon. gentleman suggest that this House should be prepared to set a value upon that guarantee, and that it is not a proper matter to be dealt with between the two companies ? These two companies are responsible companies, represented by people who have their reputation at stake, and we must presume that the agreements which will be made will be fair agreements. The hon. gentleman's objection is based on what took place as regards the Canadian Pacific Railway. I will recall to the hon. gentleman the fact that as far as the Canadian Pacific Railway is concerned, the objection arose from the fact that the Conservative government had entered into an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway which prevented the government controlling or reducing rates until 10 per cent was paid on the stock, and it became a very material question as to whether the stock was watered, or was sold for less than its reasonable value ; but in this case there is no restriction at all. The government reserve the right to fix the rates, and I would ask the hon. gentleman what is to become of the receipts of the road ? The hon. gentleman stated that the receipts would go to pay the dividends on that stock. Whatever is the amount of the stock, and whatever is the amount of the receipts, after the charges are paid, the receipts will be divided among the shareholders ; whether it be 3 per cent or 10 per cent, it will be divided among the shareholders, and I fail to see that the government is very much interested in determining the exact price at which these guarantees shall be valued.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I will draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to an authority which has often been quoted and referred to by my hon. friends on the other side on railway matters. That authority has been filed by a railway expert in the other House—simply to sustain the contention expounded by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry. I would cite the opinion of the Hon. Mr. Haggart as to the effect of selling stock at a low rate, or the watering of stock, upon the earnings of the railway and the effect upon the rates. He said :

I have peculiar views in reference to stock watering. They differ a little from those of the hon. leader of the opposition. My views are more like those of the hon. leader of the government, while they differ from those of some of his colleagues—the Postmaster General, the Finance Minister and the late Minister of Railways. In fixing rates on railroads, I do not think it matters at all what has been paid for the stock. The whole objection to watering stock is that the amount of stock watered might in some way represent an actual investment in money in the undertaking. A great many state railways in Europe have been acquired by expropriation, and the question of watered stock does not enter into the calculation of their value. The value of the railways for expropriation has been ascertained in two or three different ways. In Switzerland they simply look at the net earnings of the railways, capitalize those, and in that way get at the value of the railway as a going concern.

The Interstate Commerce Commission never took account of the nominal value of the stock of an undertaking in fixing rates. They only consider the actual expenditure upon the undertaking. It is true, experts differ on this matter. The hon. Minister of Finance gives me the title of expert. I differ from the Postmaster General and the ex-Minister of Railways on this matter, though I must say they have some authorities on their side. Some evidence was given before the Interstate Commerce Commission by prof. E. R. Johnson, who is a celebrated authority on these matters. It was as follows :

Q. On the effect of watering stock, and unnecesary additions to the bonded indebtedness upon railway employment and railway wages, have you any remarks to make?—A. It is usually said that the watering of stock or the unnecessary additions to bonded indebtedness do not affect the scale of wages paid or the rates charged by railroads. I question whether the statement in that form is true.

For the purpose of fixing rates, the Railway Committee do not consider the question of watered stock ; they only consider the actual cash value of the undertaking at the time, which is to be arrived at by the net profits capitalized. That is entirely different from the opinion of the ex-Minister of Railways, whom the First Minister has spoken of as the greatest railway expert in the world. To get at the value of a railway for the purpose of expropriation, the method followed in countries where that is done is to take the net earnings of the road over ten years, get at the average per year and capitalize the railway on that amount.

So that the fear expressed by the hon. gentleman from Glengarry and the hon. gentleman from Marshfield would fall to the ground if the opinion of Mr. Haggart is to be followed and accepted. In this case we have not only the right by the government of fixing the rates and controlling the rates expressely mentioned in these contracts, but we have the Railway Act itself, which gives ample power to the Railway Commission to investigate into the actual value of the capital which is entitled to earnings in order to arrive at the true rate that should be charged.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am quite aware of the views entertained by Mr. Haggart on this question. I have read them, and I must say they are very peculiar. I have not met any authority on this subject exactly on the line of his contention. I am not going to push this matter. There is no use. The government and their supporters have determined to pass this Bill exactly as it is given to them. We are here as a legislature deliberating upon it—not to deliberate but just to pass it. I am afraid that is the intention and I have no hope that it is different. I am quite well aware that any argument addressed to this House will be useless after the efforts in the other House to obtain amendments to the clause. I wish to put my views on record. They are entirely in line with those expressed by the hon. gentleman from Glengarry. There are two processes provided for in regard to this stock. First there is the process by which it can pass from the Grand Trunk Pacific to the Grand Trunk. I have described what that process is. That is the provision that my hon. friend referred to, but it has nothing to do with any dealing with that stock on the part of the Grand Trunk Company when they get possession of it. I pointed out that we had simplified the process by which it can be passed by the Grand Trunk Pacific to the Grand Trunk. We have made the guarantee of the bonds a consideration for which the stock may pass to that company. There is no question whatever about that. Other considerations may come in, but it is provided that for one consideration and another—and it may be all for this consideration so far as we know. We have opened the door to make it possible that all this stock might pass for this consideration and this alone. It is then passed to the Grand Trunk Railway, and, as I pointed out, the Grand Trunk Railway is another company ; it is dealing with the stock of another company which becomes an asset. Last year it was provided it could receive it and hold it, but it could not put it on the market.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No value to it in that way.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I submit that that stock would day after day and year after year proceed to acquire a value, just according as the enterprise would become prosperous, and it is just that and that alone which would make it become valuable, and as long as it was held by the Grand Trunk and the Grand Trunk Railway could show when that stock reached par value, they had put in dollar for dollar in construction of the road, they would be entitled to a full and reasonable dividend when it was earned. There could be no doubt about that. Last year the government occupied an inpregnable position with regard to that stock. It shut the door to speculation and watering of stock. It prevented such a thing being possible and it would make it an easy matter for the Railway Commission to settle the dividend after it had become a going concern—had paid its working expenses, and paid the interest on the bonds.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman forgets the purchase of the rolling stock.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We will deal with that when we come to that clause. None of this money will be required to go for that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Certainly it will. The hon. gentleman could not now name a figure for the stock.. I am quite sure he would not give twenty-five cents on the dollar for it.

The clause was adopted.

On clause eight.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I just wish to enquire of the leader of the House if he understands this clause as I do, that it provides for the whole of the common stock passing. It says it shall not be less than $24,900,000, but there is no limit, providing the directors do not declare any preference stock. Once the preference stock is declared, then the amount so declared up to $20,000,000, cannot be dealt with under this clause, but providing no preference stock is set aside, then the whole of the forty-five million may be passed to the Grand Trunk.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not understand the matter as the hon. gentleman from Glengarry does. I understand the Act provides specially that there shall be twenty million of preferred stock not subject in any way to the directors. Clause 26 of the agreement of last year provides that the capital stock of the company shall be $45,000,000, of which not more than $20,000,000 shall be preferred, and not less than $25,000,000 of common stock.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Bill 64 of last year incorporating the company, clause 4. says:

> The capital stock of the company shall be $45,000,000, divided in whole or in part in shares of $100.

That is all it says. It does not say that $20,000,000 of it are to be preference stock at all. That is at the option of the shareholders. At a meeting called for that purpose they can declare that $20,000,000 of it may become preferred stock, or they can leave it alone just as they like.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is correct.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It shall not be more than $20,000,000, but need not be more than $1,000,000 or any amount.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State if the $20,000,000 of preferred stock could be handed over to the Grand Trunk Pacific the same as the common stock?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They only undertake to acquire the common stock.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I understand that, but the question is whether the Grand Trunk Pacific have not the power to hand over, and the Grand Trunk the right to receive the $20,000,000 preference stock, in guaranteeing the bonds of the western division ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It just depends if they come within the provisions of the Act. They could not hand it over unless there was value for it. It would be for the courts to determine. It does appear to me it comes within the provisions of the Act.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It has no bearing on the preferred stock. One has only to refer to section 27 of the agreement of last year, and to section 9 of the agreement printed as schedule to the present Bill, and it will be seen how this stock is to be held by the Grand Trunk Railway. It is provided that the Grand Trunk Railway shall subscribe $24,000,000 and keep under clause 9 at least a majority of the stock. Clause 9 reads as follows:

9. Notwithstanding anything in the twenty-seventh paragraph of the said contract contained, the Grand Trunk Railway Company shall not, after the acquisition of the twenty-five millions dollars ($25,000,000) of common stock therein mentioned (less shares held by directors, not exceeding one thousand), be prevented for making any such disposition of such common stock as the said Grand Trunk Railway may deem expedient, provided, however, that the said Grand Trunk Railway Company shall, during the delay mentioned in the said paragraph, continue to hold a majority of the said stock by such title as shall enable the said Grand Trunk Railway Company to control the policy of the company.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—My hon. friend is drawing a distinction between the two stocks. I do not think it is necessary to do that for the purpose of understanding the provisions of this Bill. I do not think it is intended that a preference should be created until it suited the convenience of the company.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I would call the attention of hon. gentlemen to the fact that the clause with which we are dealing is merely referring to common stock. It cannot be preference stock.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—But we have no common stock until the preference stock is created. The stock that is authorized in the beginning is $45,000,000. It is neither preference nor common; preference is created by the authority of the shareholders.

The subsection was adopted.

On clause 10.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It is true I voted against this Bill and opposed it. Now that it has been approved of by the majority, I want to do the best I can for my province with it. This Bill mentions four places where the work of construction is to be commenced simultaneously. I am sure the hon. Secretary of State and my hon. friend from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Templeman) will agree with me that it is only fair to British Columbia, which will contribute towards the construction of this road, that work should be immediately commenced on the British Columbia section. The trade created by the construction of the work on the Pacific coast will be the principal benefit of this project to British Columbia. If that is not done, the work will be commenced at Winnipeg, and pushed toward the Pacific coast. My hon. friend from Victoria surely cannot object to this motion, which I now move, as part of clause 10:

The construction of that portion of the said railway within the province of British Columbia shall be commenced at, and from the place selected as the terminus on the Pacific coast of the said railway, on or before the first day of June, one thousand nine hundred and five (1905), and shall be prosecuted with due diligence day by day until completed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The provisions set forth in the Bill for the construction of the western division are as positive and direct as any hon. gentleman can ask for. Section 10 of the agreement of last year reads as follows:

10. The work of locating and constructing the said western division shall be commenced forthwith after the ratification of this agreement by the parliament of Canada, and shall proceed with the utmost despatch and shall be completed within five years from the first day of December, 1903, unless prevented by the act of God, the King's enemies, internal disturbances, epidemics, floods or other causes beyond the control of the company. And, in case of the interruption or obstruction of the work of construction from any of the said causes, the time fixed for the completion of the said western division shall be extended for a corresponding period.

It goes on to limit the time for completion. That is ample to protect British Columbia—the company are bound to proceed forthwith. We know, as a matter of fact, the surveys along the Pacific coast and up to Edmonton have been pushed with greater vigour than surveys in any other direction, and I was able to quote the other day the result of investigations made by the engineer. It is quite true their work was easy, because Sir Sandford Fleming, in 1872 and in 1882, in his reports, had pointed out the feasibility of constructing a road through the Rocky mountains either by the Peace River Pass or by the Pine River Pass, and the engineers had settled down to estimating the cost, although hon. gentlemen questioned the correctness of the figures I gave. My hon. friend may rest assured the work will be commenced long before the time he mentions. It is in the interest of the company; they are getting their supplies in by the Skeena river. They surely would not carry them overland from Edmonton. That would be unreasonable. I will undertake this: If, when the House meets next year, and I should be a member of the government, any government in power at the time would be amply justified in accepting such an amendment as my hon. friend proposes, if it could be shown that the company had not faithfully complied with the terms of the schedule. I think my hon. friend may rest assured that that will be done, and if he brings it up next year I am sure the government would at once bring pressure on the Grand Trunk Pacific to force them to go on with the work.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The western division, as I understand, commences at Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is nothing in this case to compel the commencement of the construction of the road from the Pacific coast eastward.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You may commence at the Pacific coast or at the eastern end. They will commence at both ends.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is nothing to compel them to commence at both ends. The object of my hon. friend's amendment is to ensure the location and commencement of the work on the Pacific coast, and the construction eastward simultaneously with the construction at the other end. The hon. Secretary of State has quoted paragraph 10 of the agreement to show that the work must be commenced on the western division within a certain time, but you may commence the location and construction of the western division at Winnipeg, and you may not touch the extreme western end of the road for months or years. There is no question about that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It says 'The work of locating and constructing the said western division shall be commenced forthwith.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That may be—they may commence at Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not necessarily.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know that, neither is it compulsory to begin at the western end, as my hon. friend by his resolution wants to compel the company to begin. My hon. friend predicates his opinion on what the Grand Trunk Pacific may do, or if they fail to do it, the government may compel them to do. We have had sufficient experience of railway construction and railway contractors; unless they are bound to do a certain thing, in a certain way, they will do it just when it is to their advantage, and if the desire is to have this work commenced and prosecuted as rapidly as possible, and have the western division constructed, what objection can there be to compelling them to commence work at both ends? The location may take place at the western end of the line, but they could commence to build at the eastern end. In the new Bill there is a provision to compel the commencement of work at certain points on the eastern division; why was that put in? It was put in to satisfy the demands of the maritime provinces, and to meet the cry, if I may use that expression, which had been raised, and the suspicion which existed, that this work on the eastern division would not be prosecuted at all. In order to satisfy the minds of those who took that view in the maritime provinces this clause was added to the Bill. It was not in the Act of last year. It was an amendment moved by the Minister of Justice for the purpose I have indicated But even in this Bill, the latter clause leaves it open to the company to begin just when they please, because it says:

> And that between Quebec and Moncton shall be completed as nearly as practicable at the same time.

Now if it is to be constructed as nearly as practicable at the same time, why not have the same provision applying to the west, because it is in the west we expect the freight to be procured, both cattle and lumber and through freight, to be carried eastward. That is the trade which is anticipated will arise from the construction of the road, and the terminus being at a port on the Pacific coast so much nearer to the markets of China and Japan with which we expect to develop a large trade, it is as much in the interest of the company as of the country. We all know the result of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the placing upon the Pacific ocean of a line of steamers; trade has grown up between Canada and the Orient, and if this road is to accomplish what is expected of it, being four or five hundred miles nearer China and Japan and the islands of the Pacific than more southern routes, it is in the interest of the company and very much in the interest of the country that the work should be commenced on the Pacific coast and pushed eastward as rapidly as possible. There is a great deal of force in the amendment, and it is no answer to it to quote the 10th clause of the old agreement.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The reason the 10th clause is inserted in the agreement is that the eastern division is controlled by the government. We have already made a contract with the Grand Trunk Railway; we cannot undertake to alter it now. The language in the 10th clause was as strong as it could well be made without defining any particular points. It says that work shall be 'commenced forthwith.' It is not to be supposed that the company will not exercise common sense. If my hon. friend had control of the road, he would begin at both ends, and I am sure the company will begin at both ends, because it is so evidently in their own interest to do so, if only for the purpose of getting in supplies. In any case, it is not in our power to amend it now, after we have this contract signed. We are not going to throw it over for another year to have this particular point settled. I do not think the country would approve of it. It is evidently in the interest of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company to build the road as rapidly as possible. Every company that has the means will finish its line as soou as it can be done. In this case, money will not be lacking. The company will have the money to begin at once, and contracts will be let simultaneously all along the line as soon as the route is defined; therefore my hon. friend need not have any fears that the work will not be commenced before we meet again next year. The government would be very glad indeed to bring what pressure they could to bear to see that the views of our friends in British Columbia are met. I think they are reasonable, and if we were making the contract now, we probably would provide for that, but the clause in the new Bill is an afterthought. It was not in the orginal Act. My hon. friend should be quite satisfied with the explanation I have given him.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I fully appreciate the remarks of the hon. Secretary of State, but he will see that the first agreement was so indefinite that it had to be amended, and this agreement states distinctly now that the work must be commenced at Winnipeg. There is no doubt this reference to the western portion applies altogether to Winnipeg, and not to the Pacific end. If the company are in earnest about commencing at the Pacific coast, my amendment cannot do any harm, and I should like to press for its adoption.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If the hon. gentleman was ever taken seriously by this House, his amendment would be rejected with scant courtesy, because he has put himself on record, and if one single member of the House considered that he represented the sentiments of British Columbia, he would be told by my hon. friend that British Columbia does not want this railway. The hon. gentleman says that no one wants this railway. He has been shouting throughout this debate: 'Who wants this railway? Certainly not British Columbia.' He was so well acquainted with the sentiments of British Columbia last session that, as soon as the speech of the leader of the other House had been delivered, he rushed into print. What did we see on the order paper of the 12th August, 1903? A resolution by the hon. gentleman—nay a speech, in which he says among other things:

> That the House does not approve of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway proposition, as presented by the premier in the House of Commons, and consider its inception incomprehensible, and its fulfilment unnecessary under existing transportation conditions.
> That the entering upon a scheme of such gigantic a character as that proposed by the government, without proper surveys and exploration of the route having been first made, is reckless and unjustifiable.

He did not talk then of prosecuting the work on this railway day by day and year by year across the Rocky mountains to reach his province. Further on in the resolution of the hon. gentleman I find the following :

That governments do not operate railways as economically and with the same necessary, close business capacity as private companies do,

That the country has an object lesson before it in the partial failure of the Intercolonial Railway.

That this House should object in the most unqualified manner to railways being constructed and operated by governments.

And this is what he backed last year, by his vote :

That the government—with the public treasury at its command— should consider, and hesitate before doing any act which may lessen and divide traffic on the Intercolonial and Canadian Pacific railways, or cause competition.

And now the hon. gentleman wants the work to be prosecuted without interruption, in order to give the advantage of competition to British Columbia. The resolution continues :

That the one is entirely the creation and an asset of the country.

That the other has been largely aided in its construction by public grants of money and land, and is filling a highly essential place in the commercial economy of the country, and its usefulness should not be lessened.

I did not know what had happened the hon. gentleman after putting that resolution on the order paper, except I heard a strong protest coming from the Pacific coast against his resolution, and as I did not see him again until the beginning of this session, I concluded that he was hiding in the Rocky mountains for fear of being stoned by the people of British Columbia who expressed themselves unanimously in favour of this great project. Now, the hon. gentleman comes here and tries to press the government to hurry on that railway which last year and to-day he has declared to be unnecessary. He is not the only member who has taken this illogical position. What have we seen in the other House as well as here ? Members from British Columbia who declared that this road was unnecessary, east of North Bay, tumbling over each other in their efforts to get the work started simultaneously everywhere. They have stood by their leader, and the true policy of an opposition is to criticise, but now that the principle of the Bill has been accepted they want to force the company to proceed with the work of construction at once on the whole line from end to end. Of course it was the duty of the hon. gentleman to oppose this measure; as an opposition they are in duty bound to be pessimists. It is our duty to be optimists. Pessimism has built nothing in this world. Optimism represents action, and it is because the Liberal party is to-day in power and feels its responsibility, and that to govern is to act, we are proceeding with optimism to the building of this road, and we look pitifully upon our friends, who, from being optimists for a number of years in the past, have become largely recognized as the pessimists of the present. This is a digression from the clause under consideration.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—But it is most pleasant to see what optimists hon. gentlemen may become when their duty to oppose has been fulfilled, and when they are face to face with the clauses of the Bill, how ardent they are to see that this country should, as soon as possible, get a railway constructed from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman from de Lorimier has given us an illustration of how he will shine on the stump in the next election, when he does not run the risk of being brought up shortly by somebody who knows something about the subject. My hon. friend has surely not forgetten that when the premier introduced this Bill last year there was what is called an alternative scheme presented by Mr. Borden, one of the main provisions of which was that a new railway should be constructed through the Rocky mountains.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—Where is that scheme now ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Such quibbling as that may do on the stump, but it is scarcely suited for the Senate of Canada. My hon. friend knows very well that there has not been the slightest departure from that policy ; it still stands before the country. The opposition have not retracted or modified one word in what was put forward by the leader of the opposition on that occasion. All that has been said since is in line with that plan, and part of that plan was that there should be a railway built through the Rocky mountains—but how ? It was to be built by the government, and placed under joint control, so that the government railway, the Canadian Northern, and the Grand Trunk Railway should use it in common.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—According to Mr. Borden's plan of last year, the railway west of Winnipeg was not to be built by the government.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Whether it was to be built by the government or not, that was part of the scheme.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—No, no.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It can be shown that the line through the Rocky mountains was part of that scheme, and that it was to be used as I have described.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—No.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Hon. gentlemen say no. My hon. friend from de Lorimier made a positive statement on another subject a few moments ago, where he was found to be astray. The amendment is reasonable, that the company should begin work on the Pacific end as well as at other places, and the company is only asked to do what the government profess and bind themselves to do. The government are bound to begin at four points and work eastwardly and westwardly on the line from those points in order to hasten the construction of the eastern division. Why should not the company be bound in precisely the same way to hasten the construction of the mountain section ? There is this provision that they shall proceed forthwith, but they may build the prairie section, and not expend a dollar on the British Columbia section beyond the surveys for four or five years. They may move on carefully and easily, and say 'we are proceeding forthwith.' My hon. friend from British Columbia is perfectly right in moving an amendment to bind the company as the government are bound.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I am very glad the hon. gentleman from de Lorimier quoted from the resolution I submitted last year. It contains the same sentiments that I hold to-day. There are two evils before the House—one is this Bill, the other government ownership. I favour the smaller evil, government ownership. The hon. gentleman would not have had the courage to put such a resolution as mine on the order paper, even though he shared my views. He would be a sycophant—he would not dare to do it. Last year the hon. gentleman made a speech about this resolution of mine while I was away.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The hon. gentleman said that if I would show my face in this House again, I would come back with a mandate. Well, I show my face here, and I have come back without a mandate. I am free to do as I like. The hon. gentleman in using those words spoke as a criminal lawyer. I believe he is a criminal lawyer, and he knows that these words 'dare not show his face' are generally applied to criminals. I object to those words being used in speaking of me, or of any other member of this House. I believe the hon. gentleman has written a treatise on criminal law ; when he writes a treatise again he should define the meaning of those words.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I said I believed that no one takes the hon. gentleman seriously, and he has just proved it. I have hardly been able to understand the disconnected ideas that he has been trying to put in offensive phrases. He speaks of pocketing the money of the country. I do not know. I have never looked into the hon. gentleman's record I have never branded him as a criminal I look upon every man as an honest man until he has been proved guilty of something. I have never accused him of a dishonest act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Every one will have noticed that whenever an hon. member on this side of the House makes a suggestion as to the improvement of the present Bill, something that he may have said on a former occasion is read to convict him of what they call inconsistency. Does it not suggest itself to the hon. gentleman that my hon. friend might be perfectly consistent in what he said while the first proposition for the construction of this road was under consideration, and he, having done all he could to defeat that measure, was acting then in accordance with what he conceived to be his right; but the parliament of Canada, representing the people and both Houses, having affirmed a certain principle, and having declared that a certain work should be done, is the gentleman who oppose the original scheme to be accused of inconsistency because he tries to make the scheme which has been affirmed by both Houses of parliament as perfect as he possibly can? I may have opposed this measure, my hon. friend may have opposed this measure, and he might have been quite conscientious in doing it, but if he were on this side of the House and he were opposing the construction of a road such as we have now under consideration, and his ideas and opinions had been voted down, would it be inconsistent or improper as a representative of the people or as a member of the Senate, for him to make such suggestions as he thought would be in the interest of the province from which he came, or in the interest of the Dominion generally, that that law should contain a certain proposition? The position taken by my hon. friend, and those who have been battering away at the opinions that an hon. gentleman may have held under certain circumstances, that he should not try to perfect a Bill after he has been defeated, seems to be the whole stock in trade of the discussion that has taken place upon this motion. I made a motion myself—and because I propounded a scheme in the House, being defeated on it, am I to be debarred for all time to come from trying to perfect the measure which is being adopted by a majority of the House?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then it was a senseless task quoting my hon. friend's remarks to show that he is opposed to this road.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I admit all that the hon. gentleman says as to improving a Bill once you have voted against the principle of it, but I do not admit that a gentleman having pleaded that he is against building a second transcontinental road as a competitive road, that he is against the spending of money, that he is against assuming the responsibility of building that transcontinental road, that there is no necessity for it—should then move that it should be improved upon, because if he is logical he would have no objection, if this obligation was to be carried on that it should be carried on in the mildest form possible, as a financial obligation assumed by the company. But no; once he has declared that this railway is useless, that it is bad policy to build it, that the country does not want it—once he has said that, he turns round and says 'I want that you should work day by day and hurry up and finish it.' I say that is illogical and is not improving the Bill to make it workable. I see eye to eye with the hon. gentleman opposite, but I do not admit the position taken by the hon. gentleman from British Columbia.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—To my mind there is just about as much difference in the hon. gentleman's explanation between the acknowledgment of a portion of the position that I laid down, and the objection he takes to the hon. gentleman's position, as there is between tweedledum and tweedledee. A member might conscientiously approve or disapprove of the construction of the road altogether, but having been defeated in that, and parliament having declared that that road shall be built, he is quite consistent and quite logical in trying to have that road built in the manner that suggests itself to him it should be built—quite consistent—just as consistent in that as he would be in the position which I first laid down and which my hon. friend approved. I cannot for the life of me understand the distinction. If the hon. gentleman's proposition is to be acted upon, and to be accepted as logical and correct, then the moment any member of this House votes in opposition to a proposition that may be made, and which is affirmed by the House, then he is debarred for all time to come from trying to improve it or to have anything to say in connection with it other than to try to defeat it altogether. It is not a logical position to take. My hon. friend tried to defeat this Blil, but did not succeed, and he is in the position of one who, though opposed to a scheme that is before the House, desires to make it as profitable to the section of the country that he represents and to the Dominion as possible. That is really his position. Supposing I had gone the length attributed to me over and over again in the quotations from my speeches; supposing I had declared in favour of government ownership, control and management of a road, and I had been defeated in all that, would it be inconsistent in me to make a proposition to this House, although it might not be strictly in accordance with the views I expressed before and which might have been defeated by the House? It would still be quite correct and logical for me to take such a course as to bring the scheme ultimately adopted as nearly in accordance with the views I held as possible; otherwise the moment the House adopts the principle of a measure, those who opposed that principle are to sit here like dumb brutes and not say a word and make no suggestion as to the way the details of the scheme should be carried out. There are other sections of the contract to which my hon. friend could scarcely make the same objection. I see by the statement of the Finance Minister that they have laid down a policy with regard to the eastern section of the country, but there is no provision in the Bill to carry that policy out. I shall take occasion before the Bill is through to test the views of hon. gentlemen on the proposition which I shall make in connection with the eastern section of the road in order that the policy, affirmed by Hon. Mr. Fielding, may be carried out as to the route between Quebec, Fredericton and St. John. If the government intend, as the Finance Minister says they do intend, to build the eastern section of the road through a certain section of New Brunswick, a great objection urged by the members of the opposition, and by myself in particular at the last session of parliament, will be removed. One of the great objections I took to this Bill was to the construction of the road from Quebec to Moncton as directly as it could be done; for two or three reasons. That it would be constructing a road which would parallel, to a certain extent, the Intercolonial Railway and therefore render it, if this road was ever to be successful, a road for the carrying of local business almost entirely and not carrying the through freight to the sea-board; and one of the objections was—and to my mind a very strong one, and it has not been combated or brought before the House as strongly this year as last year—supposing you can get a route from Quebec to Moncton shorter by 60 miles, and if you can get the grades as it is said can be done, but which engineers deny,—and some of the most eminent of them have told me that it was a mad scheme, that owing to the topography of the country through which it would have to run it would be impossible to get that grade; but if you could get to Moncton by that route how much nearer are you to a Canadian seaport, which it is necessary to reach in order to ship the western grain to the European market, than you are at present? When you reach Moncton you have to go back westward again in order to reach St. John. If you desire to go to Halifax you proceed by the Intercolonial Railway and at present you are in the same position, so far as reaching a seaport is concerned, as you will be after the construction of this road. The only difference will be this: the difference of distance between Quebec and Moncton by the new road and the Intercolonial Railway, as it exists.

Whether the construction of a road from Quebec to Moncton, at an estimated cost of $75,000,000 is a compensation, or is justifiable in order to save the sixty additional miles over the Intercolonial Railway is a question for parliament to decide. If the Canadian Pacific Railway by their short line, a road 200 or 300 miles longer than the Grand Trunk Railway, can carry the freight to St. John at the same rate as the Grand Trunk takes it to Portland, why should not the government with an expenditure of $75,000,000, carry it over the sixty or sixty-five miles of road on the Intercolonial Railway to St. John That is really our position, and what we have contended is that if this transcontinental road is to be continued from Quebec to the maritime provinces in order to reach a seaport, then the nearest possible route should be taken in order to reach that seaport, and that would be St. John. The Finance Minister has pointed out in that speech what he says the policy of the government is, and what they intend to do, and I think it is not only logical but it is in the interests of the whole trade of the country that that should be made compulsory on the government by incorporating it as a part of the Bill now before us, just in the same manner as my hon. friend desires to have the commencement of the road to be constructed from the Pacific coast eastward at the same time as it is commenced at the eastern end of the western section in Winnipeg. If the road is to be built, let us have it as rapidly as possible. Let it be commenced at Port Simpson on the Pacific coast, and from Moncton westward and from Winnipeg westward, and let us have the advantages which are to arise from the construction of the road as rapidly as possible. I am going to repeat what I said last year. My own view is that the road will not be located through the prairie section of the country on the route that it ought to go to develop the great resources of the Northwest. If the proposition which was originally made, as I understand it, by the Grand Trunk Railway people was accepted, it would have met the views that I have expressed in this House, and that is, that the road should be located north of Lake Winnipeg, and run through the northern part of the Northwest Territories, on the north shore of the north Saskatchewan, or as near to the north Saskatchewan as possible, to Edmonton. Then it would open up a large area of country that will not be opened at all by the route that has been suggested by my hon. friends. This road is to start from Winnipeg between the railways that are now built, running westward. We have the Canadian Pacific running pretty nearly through the centre of the prairie section. We have the Canadian Northern, with its branches, running northward through a section of the country, which are tapping the fertile wheat-growing belt of that country, and this road is to be located in precisely the same direction. It is to supply a section of the country which is already supplied with railways, and over which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is rapidly constructing branch lines in order to secure that traffic; and what they are not doing still further to the north, the Canadian Northern is doing, and which will supply the wants of that portion of the country. Therefore, there is no necessity at present for the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific in that part of the Northwest. Any one who has travelled through those prairies over the railways in what you call the central portion of the district lying to the north of the Canadian Pacific Railway, has driven down the northern Saskatchewan from Edmonton to Prince Albert, ought to know what the requirement of that country is, and that is where the road ought to go, and if it did the objections that would be taken to the present route would not be one hundredth part as forcible as they are to-day. I have not had an opportunity of expressing my views upon the route——

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—The hon. gentleman has been to Moncton. He should get out to Port Simpson.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, and I have been a good deal further north than that. I have seen as much of British Columbia, the province from which the hon. gentleman hails, as he has himself, and I have been just about as far north, and I may say without boasting or being egotistical I do not travel without keeping my eyes open and utilizing what intellect I may possess in order to store up as much information as possible, therefore, I am speaking from experience, from what I have seen, and what I know. Whether the hon. gentleman speaks from experience or not I am not prepared to say. I think the proposition of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona is one that ought to be accepted, and if it is not accepted now, I hope that when the third reading of the Bill is moved he will repeat the motion so that we can place ourselves on record.

Hon. Mr. POWER.—I think that perhaps the hon. gentleman is not open to the charge of inconsistency made by the hon. gentleman from de Lorimier. The hon. gentleman from de Lorimier based the charge on the ground that the hon. gentleman from Victoria had been opposed to the construction of this Transcontinental Railway last session, and that now he was not opposed—that he was very anxious to hurry the work through. I think the hon. gentleman from de Lorimier is not quite right. The amendment which the hon. gentleman proposes is one which, if it became law, would probably if not defeat the Bill altogether, postpone it for some indefinite period. The Grand Trunk Pacific Company and the government have entered into a solemn agreement. They have entered into two agreements, one of which was ratified by an Act of parliament last year; and because there were certain features in that agreement which were not satisfactory to the shareholders of the Grand Trunk that agreement had to be followed by the agreement which is now before the committee for ratification. If we undertake to insert into that solemn agreement, which has been executed by both parties, something new and something which would impose a burden upon one party to the contract, that party will very probably say that they did not enter into that contract; and they would have a good reason for not going on with the work; so my hon. friend from de Lorimier will see that the hon. gentleman from Victoria is not quite so inconsistent as he might have appeared. Apart from that technical view of the matter, I agree with the hon. leader of the opposition in thinking that if an hon. member of this House opposes a measure which he thinks on the whole to be not in the interests of the country, that there is no reason whatever why, when the policy of going on with the measure is adopted, he should not endeavour to make it as perfect as possible.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Contradict himself.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That may be. Consistency is a good thing; but I think the interests of the country are of a great deal more consequence than personal consistency.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have already said there is that danger, that if this House were to insist upon amending the agreement in the way suggested by the hon. gentleman from Victoria, it might have the effect of altogether defeating or, at any rate, postponing for some indefinite time the undertaking of the work which he now has so much at heart. But the hon. gentleman will see that if the government have no control over the location of the road, or very little control, from Winnipeg west, the interests of the Grand Trunk Pacific will naturally lead them to locate that road through the prairies, and out to the Pacific ocean, by the best and most advantageous route. Where the government have control—that is from Winnipeg east they have inserted stipulations in this Bill to say that the work shall be commenced immediately at certain points, so as to, as far as practical, insure that the work will be proceeded with almost simultaneously at the principal points from Moncton to Winnipeg. The Bill provides that the whole road shall be completed within eight years. Supposing that we were to insert a provision such as is desired, and if that provision were accepted by the company, I very much doubt whether it would be in the interest of the country any more than in the interest of the company that the amendment should be made. If you build a road from Port Simpson to the Rocky mountains that road by itself will not do much good. It will not have very much traffic. Its traffic will depend largely upon the prairie section, and looking at the thing purely as a matter of business, I think it desirable that the prairie section should be completed rather in advance of the mountain section, because until the prairie section, or a very considerable portion of the prairie section adjoining the mountain section has been completed, there will be no traffic for the mountain section, or no great traffic, and I think the people who are undertaking to build this road are people who are interested in the welfare of Canada. Their own interest points that way. It would be to their own interest to build that road in such a way that it would have at the earliest possible date the largest amount of traffic; and I think it is unusual to interfere with business corporations and to dictate to them how they shall conduct their business. We provide that the work shall be completed within what is deemed by parliament to be a reasonable time, and, within the limit of that time, the company should be allowed to use its own judgment as to the best way the work should be done. I, therefore, hope the hon. gentleman will not persist in fighting this question through any longer. I hope that the road will be completed within eight years; and if it is I think we shall have reason to be satisfied. Hon. gentlemen will remember that when the Canadian Pacific Railway charter was adopted by the country, the contract which was made by the government of that day with the Canadian Pacific Railway syndicate was adhered to. It was not seriously modified in parliament, and we have to deal with this contract as a whole.

The government come and say 'We have made an agreement with this company for the construction of this road, and we submit it for the approval of parliament; we cannot alter this contract now any more than you could have altered the Canadian Pacific Railway contract.'

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Did the hon. gentleman say that the company will have a right to locate the section from Winnipeg west to the Rocky mountains?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Subject to the approval of the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—But that is already located. Did we not have a map here yesterday showing the way it is to run? That map is issued under the authority of the minister, and on it was pointed out the location of the road.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—The approximate location of the road. My hon. friend the Speaker brought the discussion back to the place from which it should never have departed, the original point made by the hon. gentleman from Victoria. The leader of the opposition travelled very far afield, went over the whole line from Fort Simpson to Moncton, and when I suggested that he should take the return journey and get back to the subject, he inflicted on me one of those characteristic lectures he gives to modest members of this House periodically. He advised me that my knowledge of British Columbia was very limited, that he had travelled over the province and knew more about it than other members of the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I said nothing of the kind.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I frankly admit that the hon. gentleman's knowledge of British Columbia is superior to mine, and it was only because I wanted to bring my hon. friend back from Moncton to the subject under discussion that I interpolated the little remark I did. The hon. member from Victoria is not far astray on this question; he does not misrepresent public opinion on this question as much as he generally does on public questions affecting the great province of British Columbia. My hon. friend from Victoria misrepresented British Columbia entirely on the general question of constructing another transcontinental line of railway. I state unhesitatingly that I do not believe there are half a dozen thinking men in the province of British Columbia on either side of politics who share the views of my hon. friend from Victoria, or support him in the views he expressed in the extraordinary resolution he put on the order paper before leaving for the west last session. When my hon. friend got to Victoria and met the board of trade, a resolution was proposed recording a vote of censure against my hon. friend for having misrepresented public opinion on this great railway question. I must say my hon. friend has got nearer right in his present motion than I ever found him before on a British Columbia question, and I would be heartily in sympathy with his proposition if it were now possible to amend the contract as he suggests? But that cannot now be done without endangering the project or at least deferring commencement of the work. When this contract was made, the question of where the work of construction should begin was not considered. There is nothing in the contract requiring the company to begin construction anywhere. They are not compelled to begin at Winnipeg. They may begin where they please, but I expect, as in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway which was not required to begin construction at any place in particular, that this company will begin construction on the Pacific coast as well as at other places. The Canadian Pacific Railway, as hon. gentlemen will remember, without being required to do so,—or rather it was the Mackenzie government, previous to the organization of the Canadian Pacific Railway syndicate—commenced construction at Yale, at the head of navigation on the Fraser river, and built easterly fully 100 miles of the most difficult portion of the line, and when the Canadian Pacific Railway Company took over the work they continued the building of the line from the Pacific coast eastward, at the same time building the line from Yale to the city of Vancouver, driving the last spike at a place some 300 or 400 miles from the coast in 1886. The Canadian Pacific Railway could not have been built in the time it was built, or as economically as it was built, if they had not commenced construction from the Pacific end. I take it that if the Grand Trunk Pacific Company are the men we believe them to be, if they are going to build this railway economically and make a commercial success of it, they must commence construction on the Pacific coast. I cannot conceive for a moment that the Grand Trunk Railway Company would transport all their rails and iron, and the vast quantity of supplies that cannot be obtained in the Northwest Territories, for nearly 4,000 miles, down to the Pacific, instead of beginning construction on the Pacific coast. It seems to me so utterly ridiculous, that I for one cannot conceive it possible that the company themselves would think of building a great transcontinental line in such an unbusiness like manner as that. The railway cannot be built—I am not a railway man but I use my common sense in this matter—in seven or eight years from the present time, seven years from next December, unless work is prosecuted diligently from the west through the Rocky mountains. It will take the seven years to locate the railway, locate and establish the western terminus, complete the surveys and build the five or six hundred miles of the mountain section; so that I say the company, without any stipulation is bound to commence on the Pacific coast. At the same time if the adoption of an amendment of this kind would not imperil the agreement, I would be with my hon. friend from Victoria in support of it. the hon. Secretary of State has stated that if the company do not carry out the conditions of the agreement in its spirit as well as in its expressed stipulations, implied as well as expressed, and do not begin construction on the western end of the line, he is prepared at the next session of parliament to introduce legislation compelling to prosecute the work in British Columbia. I cannot say what particular line of legislation it would be, but it is possible for this government——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Or any other government.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Yes, or the government of my hon. friend's, when they come into power—to force the company to carry out the full spirit of the agreement on which we are now entering. This question has been receiving my consideration for several months. I have been in correspondence with the Grand Trunk Pacific people on the subject and have interviewed Mr. Hays and Mr. Wainwright in respect to it. I have a letter from Mr. Hays—it does not contain very much, it is true, but I will give it to the House for what it is worth—in respect to commencing construction on the Pacific coast. The letter is dated June 17, and reads:

> Replying to your recent inquiry relative to the date when construction will begin on the Pacific coast end of the new Transcontinental Railway, I beg to say that it is too early as yet to definitely name a time for the commencement of building operations at either end of the road. Surveys must first be completed and at the western end, the important question of harbour facilities has to be determined. The important work of surveying, which has been in progress for about a year, will, as a matter of course, be prosecuted diligently until finished. It will be the policy of the company to complete the work in the shortest time possible and the work will be continuously carried on until the last rail is laid, which I believe will be before the time fixed under the agreement.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—What is the date of the letter which the hon. gentleman wrote to Mr. Hays?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—It was several days before the date of this letter. It is quite true, as Mr. Hays says, that the question of harbour facilities and the selection of the line through the mountains has not yet been determined. It is a very important matter. It will take the company another year perhaps to locate the line in British Columbia and agree on the harbour. My hon. friend, in his resolution, only requires that work shall commence twelve months from now on the Pacific coast end of the line. They may not be ready even then to commence. There are so many things involved in selecting the terminus of a great railway, the question of harbour facilities, the question of access to that harbour, and whether it is an open port all the year round—though all our ports are for that matter open in British Columbia. These matters the company, I understand, are now investigating, and it seems to me it will take at least a year before construction can commence at all on the Pacific coast; and if, as I have said, the Grand Trunk Pacific does not in the full spirit of this agreement, carry out the contract in the interest of British Columbia I shall be prepared to support any necessary legislation next year to compel them to do so.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I should like to know if this Bill has passed through the House of Commons without any amendment ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I understand there were some amendments ?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—What course had to be pursued to get the assent of the Grand Trunk Railway Company to the amendments ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I understand that the agreement, as it is in the Bill now, was not amended in passing through the House of Commons. It could not be amended without referring it again to the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. The clauses of the Bill, I understand, were slightly amended.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—What was done in that case ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I would imagine that any amendment of consequence affecting the agreement would have to be sanctioned by the company's shareholders.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I understand the hon. minister without portfolio agrees with his colleague from Victoria in thinking this amendment desirable, but he says if we amend this Bill we endanger the whole thing—is that the case ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. POWER—What I said was, that if we undertake to interfere with the agreement, not with the clauses of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE — The agreement and the Bill together. I am very glad to see that both the hon. gentlemen from British Columbia agree that we ought not to amend, but if I am not mistaken it has been amended in a very important sense.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—It has been amended to provide that work shall begin at four different points simultaneously

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—That is the government section.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I think we have been told that we cannot amend.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—But it was amended in the House of Commons, to provide that work shall begin at four different points simultaneously.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I read from the agreement made with the shareholders the clause relating to the mode of carrying on the work of the western division. That can only be changed by getting another meeting of the shareholders of the company to alter it. With regard to the eastern division, the Grand Trunk Pacific had no voice in it at all; the government controlled that absolutely. They do not lease it to the Grand Trunk Pacific Company until it is finished, so the two changes to which my hon. friend refers are not on the same plane. With regard to the western division, we cannot make any change in that different from the agreement, unless we submit it to the Grand Trunk Railway Company; but with the eastern division we are at liberty to do as we please.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The Grand Trunk Railway Company has a voice in the choice of the route ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Clause 7, which I shall read shows to the contrary :

7. In order to insure, for the protection of the company as lessees of the eastern division of the said railway, the economical construction thereof in such a manner that it can be operated to the best advantage, it is hereby agreed that the specifications for the construction of the eastern division shall be submitted to, and approved of by, the company before the commencement of the work——

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—That is the location of the road.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The clause continues:

—and that the said work shall be done according to the said specifications and shall be subject to the joint supervision, inspection and acceptance of the chief engineer appointed by the government and the chief engineer of the company, and, in the event of differences as to the specifications, or in case the said engineers shall differ as to the work, the questions in dispute shall be determined by the said engineers and a third arbitrator, to be chosen in the manner provided in paragraph four of this agreement.

That gives the company a voice in the choice of the route.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is simply that the grades shall be at least equal to the grades in the western division.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The reference made by my hon. colleague to the resolution of the board of trade I explain in this way; on returning from Ottawa last year, I was invited to meet the board of trade of Victoira. There were about fifteen members present, and I explained my views. I do not know whether there were more Liberals or Conservatives present. At all events, two Liberals framed a resolution to pass a vote of censure on myself for my views, and they were not able to carry it, and did not carry it. The thing rested there, and they never sent me a mandate or resolution or anything to conform to their views. The hon. gentleman from Victoria said I misrepresented the people of British Columbia on every occasion. I want him to withdraw every word of that. If not I shall express my opinion.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I am not very sure whether the Debates will show that I used the words 'every occasion,' but I certainly meant to say 'on many imporant occasions." From that I will not recede.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—If the hon. gentleman had not made that statement I would not say a word, but I would remind him that whenever I presented myself as a candidate in Victoria I was elected. The people chose me to represent them and I was elected three times. When my hon. friend went before the electors, what became of him?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I was snowed under.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—He did not represent the views of the people then, and I would not have said this much if he had not accused me of misrepresenting the views of the people of British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—A short time ago I made a statement with regard to the policy of the Conservative party in reference to this National Transcontinental Railway. My hon. friend from de Lorimier had made what, I thought, was something very like a stump speech in which he declared the Conservative party had been against a transcontinental railway, and gave us an illustration of what he would say on the stump when he came to deal with this question. I undertook to show that the leader of the opposition in the House of Commons, very shortly after this Bill was brought down, had given out what was termed an alternative policy, part of which was the construction of a railway through the Rocky mountains from Edmonton to Port Simpson. My hon. friend contradicted me.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I understood the hon. gentleman to say construction by the government.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend in the first place, I understood, contradicted the statement in toto.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—He went on to say there was no proposal to construct a government railroad at all. However, take it as he puts it himself, that his contradiction only went as far as the construction of a government railway through the Rocky mountains, I undertook to say a few moments ago that he would be found as far astray on this as he was on another matter a short time before. I shall read what Mr. Borden said, and the House will see how far he was justified in making the contradiction he did, and I may say he was supported by a perfect chorus of contradictions of my words coming from gentlemen on that side of the House. I said I would like to look into the matter and find out who was right. Mr. Borden says:

As far as the line from Edmonton to the coast is concerned, I do not believe that at present there is in Canada any call for two railways. We know that the Canadian Northern Railway is looking for an extension to the coast. It has its charter to the coast and it has its line partly built to Edmonton and from Edmonton west. I repeat that you must regard the Canadian Northern Railway as one of the great transcontinental systems of Canada. At some point on this side of the Rocky mountains there should be a common point, a junction between the Canadian Northern Railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. From that on to the coast there should be one line. That line should be built by these companies under such an arrangement as would give them joint control. Reasonable assistance should be given by the government by a guarantee of bonds in aid of construction. Should there be any difficulty in coming to such an arrangement, the government should build that line itself and maintain and control and give these railways for a term of years equal running powers over it. There is no reason why we should build competing lines through the Rocky mountains, but there is reason why we should build the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway into the west, because the west is developing rapidly. But from some point near Edmonton to the Pacific ocean, there should be one railway. If these two great corporations, the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway—or the Grand Trunk Railway as it is in fact—had equal running powers over that line to the coast, under independent control, by that means you would have in fact three transcontinental railway lines in Canada, and I think you would have the transportation problem in Canada settled, as to its main features, for the next twenty-five years.

Now, I hope the hon. gentleman from de Lorimier is entirely satisfied that his memory was wrong with regard to this, and that a transcontinental line through the Rocky mountains was a part of the opposition project from the very inception of this discussion.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—But not by the government.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes, by the government.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If these two companies should fail to come to an agreement.

The amendment was rejected.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Yeas and nays.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Personally I should like very much if my hon. friend would offer that amendment at the third reading, and let us have the votes recorded.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I shall do so.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I move that the following words be added to the section :

At the same as the western section will be completed.

If the government will accept this I shall not say a word.

The CHAIRMAN—The hon. gentleman wishes to provide that the eastern section shall be completed as rapidly as the western section ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes. Will the government accept it ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, we cannot.

At six o'clock, the committee rose for recess.

After Recess.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 10,

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In the contract we find that the western section of the road has to be completed within a period of eight years, but I see nothing in the contract nor in the law that limits the time for the construction of the eastern section. By clause 8 of the agreement of last year, it is enacted that the construction of the eastern division shall be commenced so soon as the surveys and plans have been made and determined for the location thereof, and shall be completed with all reasonable despatch. There is no limitation for the period of construction, and if we turn to the law that contains that provision, clause 21, we find that it is enacted that the Governor in Council may at any time suspend the progress of the work on the eastern division until the next session of parliament. So that from parliament to parliament, from session to session, an Order in Council may be passed at any time to suspend the progress of work upon the eastern division. There is no time limit at all. If we couple with section twenty-one, which empowers the government by a simple Order in Council to suspend the progress of the work on the eastern section, clause 8 of the agreement, we find that there is no limitation at all, although we are told this afternoon that the government intend to complete the eastern section within the same period as the western section, and the nature of my amendment is just to incorporate in the law that wish or desire or will of the government. If the government honestly intend to build the road within the limit they state, there can be no objection to putting it in the law, and, therefore, I move that at the end of clause 10 of the present Bill the following words be added :

And eastward from Winnipeg in such manner that the section between Winnipeg and Quebec and that between Quebec and Moncton shall be completed as nearly as practicable at the same time as the western section will be completed.

I do not think the government should object to the insertion of this clause. It does not interfere with the agreement passed with the Grand Trunk. The idea is that those two sections may be completed simultaneously and at the same time as the western section will be completed. The law as it stands at present compels the government to work simultaneously on two or three ends of the eastern section from Winnipeg to the east from a point on the junction of the Winnipeg road from Quebec to North Bay eastward and westward, from Quebec eastward and westward and from Moncton westward. By the Act of last session the government is compelled to finish those sections simultaneously, as nearly as practicable, but there is nothing in this Bill that compels the government to complete the road in the same period of time that is given to the western division. I hope the government will look upon this amendment in a most favourable light.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Perhaps the hon. gentleman would explain the reasons why he wants this to be done. He has given no reason.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What is the reason for making a difference in the obligations imposed upon the company for the western section, and the obligations of the government with regard to the eastern section? They are obliged to complete the mountain and prairie sections in eight years. We ask that the eastern section be completed in the same period, as far as it is practicable, leaving the words as they are in the Act. I am addressing myself to the representative of the government in the House, and I suppose if the government accepts my amendment, hon. gentlemen will accept it.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—The hon. gentleman has asked my opinion. I do not think the government can accept the amendment. The proposed words to be added would, to my mind, be of no effect whatever.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—They are not dangerous.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—The clause which my hon. friend proposes to amend reads as follows:

> The work of construction on the eastern division of the National Transcontinental Railway shall be commenced, as nearly as may be, simultaneously at Moncton, at Quebec, at the point of junction of the eastern division with the branch southerly to a point at or near either North Bay or Nipissing Junction and at Winnipeg, and shall be carried on westward from Moncton, eastward and westward from Quebec, eastward and westward from the point of junction aforesaid, and eastward from Winnipeg, in such manner that the section between Winnipeg and Quebec, and that between Quebec and Moncton shall be completed as nearly as practicable at the same time.

My hon. friend proposes to add:

> As nearly as practicable at the same time as the western section would be completed.

Which would really spoil the sense of the section as it applies to the various sections of the eastern division.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the hon. minister mean it would spoil the policy, or the game of the government?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman is playing a game and he wants to know our game.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—It will spoil the sense of the section, and would make it unintelligible to that extent. Furthermore, I do not think the words would have any effect. The amendment merely says that it shall be completed as nearly as practicable at the same time as the western section. That means little or nothing.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am demanding the little.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—It will be the policy of the government to complete the eastern division of the road within the time limit provided for the western section. I do not think it would be wise to make this proposed amendment. It would be of no avail or effect, and, unless my hon. friend can show some cogent reason for it, I do not think we should accept it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It would show the country the intention of the government, if the government intend to finish the eastern section in the same period that is allowed for the western section.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The amendment would defeat its own object. It is evident, by the wording of the clause, that the government intends to proceed much quicker and complete the section much earlier than the eight years; but as the government is but the executive of parliament, it retains power, in its discretion, to stop work for whatever cause, and there may be important reasons. They can come to the fountain of all power, parliament, and explain the situation, and ask for other powers in connection with the construction, or explain why they stopped work. The hon. gentleman says the eastern shall be completed within the same time as the western section. According to the way they are to proceed, beginning at many sections, it is apparent it will be constructed in less time than the western section; but it is quite clear that the hon. gentleman will supervise, as a member of parliament having superior power to the executive, while parliament is in session, and inquire to what extent the work is being done, because I see he is now quite converted to the scheme and desires it should go on and be completed in good order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is very easy to overcome the difficulty. We should have a word more—' before or at the same time.'

We do not want to prevent the government from finishing the road in three years if they chose to do some but we want at all events that it should be finished as soon as the western part of the road is finished. I observe that the hon. Secretary of State has just arrived, and I will ask him as leader of the government in this House if they will be kind enough to accept my amendment for these reasons: the law as it stands to-day does not fix any period for the completion of the eastern part. It fixes the period for the completion of the western part at eight years. But by the present Bill the government is not bound to finish in the eight years construction may go on for ten, twenty, thirty, or forty years, and there is nothing in this Bill to prevent the government from letting it run for that time. But if the government desires to finish that eastern section in the same time as the western section, we ask that that amendment be adopted, providing that the eastern section shall be completed, as far as practicable, in the same time as the western, or before the western section if the government desires.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is rather an extraordinary request. The government of Canada is directly under the control of the parliament of Canada. The parliament of Canada is dependent on the views and opinions of the people of Canada, and probably the government of this country respond to public opinion as quickly, or probably more quickly, than the government of any country in the world. The great difficulty in the constitution of the United States is that public opinion may change, and it will be one, two and sometimes three years before the representatives of the people can be made responsible. In Canada they can be made to respond promptly, and the government of the day will necessarily and naturally just finish this road as soon as the interests of the people require it, and as the parliament can justify it. The parliament of Canada will, from time to time, have to vote the money to carry the work on. From my own standpoint I think it is in the interests of the people of the country to build the road at the earliest possible time consistent with securing the very best road that can be obtained? We should not rush it rapidly but we should try to secure the very best grades and curves, and I hope my hon. friend will take that view of it. I think it would be rather unfortunate to send this Bill back to the Commons with a paragraph of that kind, because the House of Commons may say that in a year or two the public mind may change and they might desire to have it postponed.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Or might want to have the road completed at an earlier day than the day we named.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Then I would suggest that the government should not press the Bill at all.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think the hon. gentleman is in a position to give direction to the government when his views are so decided. He is absolutely against the Bill, and I do not think it becomes him to direct any detail, more particularly a detail which so directly depends upon the will of the people of Canada.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the will of the people of Canada is to be consulted—and I suppose this is a principle of our system of government—I would humbly pray the government not to go on with the Bill before consulting the people of Canada and ascertaining what they will say on that question. because the Bill has been sprung upon us without the people having been consulted at all.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The people of Canada were consulted in by-elections and showed a strong liking for the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I deny that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Montmagny re-elected a member by an increased majority.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Not increased.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Over a hundred majority.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I am surprised that the government does not accept the amendment at once, because the eastern end is the terminus of the road. What is the use of building the western part, if you do not provide a terminus at the end of the eastern section, unless you intend that western freight shall go to Portland. I should think it would be the first thing the government would do, to see that the eastern end is completed to carry the freight to our own ports. If the government do not do this, it is virtually saying they do not intend to take it to the maritime provinces, but intend to go to Portland.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am glad to hear my hon. friend tell us that the eastern section, about which his party has been raving for months, is so important that it should be provided in the law that it shall be constructed within a certain time. It is the best justification of the policy of the government when my hon. friend urges that they should build from North Bay down to Quebec and Moncton, that we should hurry up that eastern section in order to prevent the grain and the produce from the Northwest being deflected through another channel.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is simply to correct the harm the government have done in giving the Grand Trunk charge of the freight. You have sent the fox to protect the geese.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—There is no question about it, that in this House as well as in the other House, the Conservative party were unanimous.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman does not know what I was going to say.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Nobody knows.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The party were unanimous, I have the statement of the leader of the party in this very debate and the admission of the important members of the Conservative party in the other House, that if the Grand Trunk proposition as originally made had been accepted by the government, of building from North Bay west with the ordinary subsidies and other advantage they would perhaps have, and which could have been examined, that there was no difference of opinion on that proposition. I have the very words of the hon. leader of the opposition on that point, that there was no difference as to that question. The Grand Trunk Railway proposition would have been granted. The Conservative party of Canada represented in both branches of parliament, would have voted any reasonable amount of subsidy to build from North Bay down to the Pacific coast; but where we ceased to agree was when the government said 'No, we know that the Grand Trunk is interested in going simply to North Bay to make the junction with its own road.' It has been repeated over and over again by my hon. friend's that the Grand Trunk did not want the eastern section and does not want it to-day; but the Liberal party has taken upon itself the responsibility of saying: 'You shall not stop at North Bay and deflect all the produce from the west into the old channels with the possibility of its going to United States ports.' The hon. gentleman from Westmoreland stated that we were allowing the Grand Trunk Pacific to build a branch line to Port Arthur and make a junction at North Bay, and all our work would be in vain in trying to bring commerce to a Canadian seaport, that the produce either by the water route or North Bay would be deflected into Grand Trunk channels. This has been said three or four times in this debate, by the members on the other side of the House. We said: 'Well, this is your conviction, that whatever we do on Canadian soil, the Grand Trunk will see that the commerce of the west flows into the old channel and goes to Portland.' It is fatal, according to my hon. friend. We say it is not fatal. We are not such pessimists. We will try our very best to attract that commerce to a Canadian seaport, and we will build this 354 miles from North Bay to Quebec to reach a Canadian seaport, let it be Quebec, and via Moncton to St. John or Halifax. My hon. friend from Wolseley now absolutely admits the whole case, when he says: 'Well won't you build the eastern section as quickly as the western section? Are you not afraid that the commerce will be deflected from North Bay to Portland?' Yes, I will say to the hon. gentleman from Wolseley that we were afraid, and it is because we were afraid, that the Liberal party declared that there should be a Canadian route on Canadian territory to Quebec, Halifax and St. John, and in the name of the Liberal party I thank the hon. gentleman from Wolseley for having, at the last hour, admitted the whole story. I believe that it was only his strong Conservative party proclivities that made him vote as he did yesterday.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend has made another stump speech. It is another illustration of the kind of speeches my hon. friend will make on the stump on this question. In place of all this rhetoric which he has employed, if he would look into the situation as it would stand under the Grand Trunk proposition of stopping at North Bay; if he would take the trouble of reading the letter of the Grand Trunk Railway promotors what would he find?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I have read it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Why has he not told the House something about what it contains? By the eighth paragraph, the promoters agree to bind not the Grand Trunk Pacific but to bind the Grand Trunk Railway, to do what? To hand over the traffic at Montreal so that it should be forwarded by Canadian ports, so that if that proposition had been carried out—bad as it might be, I am not one that would support it. Yet there was some assurance that our trade would be retained for our own ports. It would be infinitely better than this scheme in this respect, that the old Grand Trunk Company would be bound to deliver freight intended for export through Canadian ports, at Montreal to the Intercolonial Railway. There is no such binding agreement in this contract in any way, and as hon. gentlemen have pointed out from the time the western division is ready to deliver traffic at North Bay and Port Arthur, and it pours down there, there is no restriction upon either the Grand Trunk Pacific or the Grand Trunk Railway.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—This is as we stand just now.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is just the position. There is no obligation upon any person, because it will be delivered there to the Grand Trunk Company. It cannot be delivered to any other. If the contract could be made on the proposition of November, 1902, we would have the old Grand Trunk Company bound to deliver their freight at Montreal for shipment there during summer, and to the Intercolonial Railway during winter, and that would have been probably very much better than this obligation that binds the Grand Trunk Pacific when the eastern division is completed, but which does not bind the Grand Trunk in any respect. That would be the case at the completion of this contract, but during the long years that will no doubt transpire between the completion of the western division there is no restriction upon anybody and the trade will go en bloc to Portland, and there is no obligation to send it anywhere else. It would have been different if the Grand Trunk had made a contract terminating at North Bay on the terms of their own proposition.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I should like to say a word about the proposition of the hon. gentleman from Montmagny to add a provision that the eastern section shall be completed at as early a date as the western section, and take the chance of being accused of making another stump speech. Some speeches are not quite as lengthy as that of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield which he delivered yesterday, a second part of which he delivered in committee to-day. I was surprised to hear the remarks of the hon. gentleman who introduced the motion and the reasons given. One is astonished to hear the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Wolseley, giving the reasons he gave last night. His contention is that we ought to adopt this motion and hold back the construction of the western end until the eastern end is completed. That is his argument.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Nothing of the kind.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman says that he wants it provided, that the eastern section shall be completed at the same time as the western section.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That does not force the western section to wait for the eastern section, but it will force the eastern section to be proceeded with and completed as quickly as the western section.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I say it would not be possible for the eastern section to be completed as soon as the other, because west of North Bay practically all the surveys are made, and the eastern section is through a new territory which has not been surveyed up to the present time. Information has been in the possession of parliament for the last 25 years for practically every mile of road west of North Bay, which has been actually surveyed. I should think the first thing the government would insist on should be the construction of the road from Winnipeg to Port Arthur, and then they should urge the Grand Trunk Pacific to construct their prairie section west of Winnipeg to supply the needs of the western section. You have not to wait for freight. It is there already and you have exactly what the hon. gentleman contended for. You have exactly Mr. Borden's policy—to bring the grain to Port Arthur and then you can take it to Depot Harbour and over the Canada Atlantic Railway and deliver it to the Intercolonial Railway. I say it would be the height of folly to adopt any such proposition as the hon. gentleman proposes, that the eastern section should be completed at the same time as the western section. Reference has been made to the proposition made by the Grand Trunk Railway. I think it was stated last night by the hon. gentleman from Kingston that I was speaking as a party man. If there was any crime in being a party man, I am a pretty strong supporter of the Liberal party, but if the government had adopted the proposition submitted by the Grand Trunk for the construction of a line of railway west and through the prairie section I should have opposed it, and why ? On account of the obnoxious conditions which where attached to it. Probably the same conditions were asked as the government granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway. They asked $6,400 a mile, a land grant of 5,000 acres a mile, they asked for exemption from taxation for all time on rolling stock and road bed, and asked to have material admitted duty free, and that the land should be exempt from taxation for twenty years, the same as the Grand Trunk asked. If the government had considered that proposition, they would not have had my support. They did wisely to refuse it, and undertook to submit a proposition to the Grand Trunk Pacific which we have to-day, that of building the road to Moncton, and the government owning and controlling the road. That was the proposition of the Liberal party years ago at the time of the Mackenzie government, and had they remained in power they would have approved of the Grand Trunk proposition and would have accepted it for building the road from North Bay to Winnipeg and on through to the mountains. I say it would have been the height of folly, so far as parliament is concerned, and the interests of Canada, because the interests of Canada are bound up in the Northwest, to delay the building of this section. The great need for this road is to furnish an outlet for that country with one hundred thousand settlers going in there annually and the millions of acres of land coming under cultivation. We must have an outlet, and if a portion of that traffic can be brought down by the very route suggested by Mr. Borden in his policy of last year, the proposition of routing the wheat from Fort William to Depot Harbour and down the Canada Atlantic Railway to Montreal, and then down the Intercolonial Railway, why you have that route at the present time. With this road we will have an additional outlet, and I trust the hon. Secretary of State acting on behalf of the government will refuse to accept any such proposal as that suggested by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The remarks of the hon. gentleman would leave the impression on the House that if a road from Winnipeg eastward to North Bay be constructed you will then be enabled to use the lake routes. That cannot be urged, neither would it have the slightest effect until the branches which are to be built by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway from either Nipigon Harbour or Port Arthur northwestward to intersect the main line, for the construction of which this government has given no aid at all, are completed. The Ontario government have, during the last session of the legislature, grated $2,000 a mile and 6,000 acres of land to assist the Grand Trunk Pacific in the construction of that road. Until that road is completed or the Ontario government road from North Bay to Lake Temiscamingue and then Northward to the main line, one or the other must be connected before the benefits which are to arise from bringing out the western traffic to which he called attention can be had.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman is perfectly right, and I have no doubt the very first line the Grand Trunk Pacific will build will be the branch line from Fort William to connect with the main line north of Fort William. I take it for granted that the Grand Trunk Pacific will, at the earliest possible moment, insist on the Grand Trunk Railway building the road between Winnipeg and Fort William. The very best branch available to get in their supplies will be from Fort William. There is no question about that. The very first thing they will do will be to build it. The Grand Trunk are not going to pay exorbitant freight rates for materials going in there for construction, and the very first place they will strike will be Fort William, and they will build a branch to get in their supplies. Of course the Grand Trunk Railway will try if possible to get their construction material in by the Grand Trunk Pacific. That is the portion of the road that will pay best, and earliest, because they have the freight waiting for them in Manitoba and the west, and they can get the traffic at once.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I am not in favour of this Bill at all. The Bill has been passed against my efforts in every way, but now that the Bill is passed, I am desirous of making it as perfect as I can and that is within my province. Hon. gentlemen are talking about the Canadian Pacific Railway as being some antediluvian affair. They cannot make a speech except it refers to ancient history. The only Bill we have before the Senate is for a railway that will carry out the freight from Winnipeg to St. John or Halifax. You have no line to Fort William. You have to depend upon the Grand Trunk Railway for that, and you have no guarantee about it. The arguments of the hon. gentleman were that they would have, by this project, an all-rail route, and it would be cheaper. If that is the case, why do they want to build to Fort William ? This Bill provides for a road from Winnipeg to St. John. It is common sense to build the eastern section as soon as the other. We do not ask it any sooner, and if that is done they will be able to take the freight right through. I do not wish to injure the Bill, but I wish to make it workable.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Does the hon. gentleman want to take wheat from the west by an all-rail route ?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—You do.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Does the hon. gentleman ?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—No. The hon. gentleman is in favour of an all-rail route, according to his own statement He would only be able to use this road in winter time, and he cannot take the wheat down by the lakes in the winter time. You cannot take it that way, but you are going to take it down the other way and you have no terminal points. You might as well take a man into the woods a mile, and let him cut lumber with no means to get it to the shore. You say you are going to take the road to a maritime port, and if you do you want to provide that the road to that port will be open as quicky as to any other port. That is common sense. I should think the government would freely adopt the clause suggested by the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is no constitutional objection in the way of adopting the amendment moved by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona. This particular portion of the measure is one which the government can deal with and which parliament can deal with; we are not bound by any agreement with a third party.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—They have no faith in the government.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The first question is whether that is a desirable amendment, and then whether it is necessary. If it is not necessary I do not think we should undertake to make it, even though it be a desirable one. I am free to confess that when the hon. gentleman first moved the amendment, it occurred to me that it was probably calculated to do good; but on looking at the original agreement, and looking at the wording of the clause which is now before the committee, I have come to the conclusion that it would be a mistake to adopt the amendment, and I wish to submit very briefly the reasons which have led me to that conclusion. I submit them to the hon. gentleman from Stadacona with the hope that he may possibly see the thing as I do. The eighth paragraph of the original agreement is as follows :—

The construction of the said eastern section shall be commenced so soon as the government has made its surveys and plans and determined upon the location thereof, and shall be complete with all reasonable despatch.

That is a pretty strong and clear statement of what is to be done. As soon as the surveys are made—and the surveys are being made now—the construction is to be begun. You cannot begin construction until the surveys have been completed; you want to know that you are locating the line in the right place, and then you go ahead, and the work is to be completed with all reasonable despatch.

That, I think, is a reasonable provision, and it will be noted that last year when this original agreement was before parliament no such amendment as the one now submitted was proposed. That paragraph No. 8 in the original agreement, is still in force. What does this clause 10 provide ? It provides that the work of construction, from Winnipeg East.

Shall be commenced, as nearly as may be, simultaneously at Moncton, at Quebec, at the point of junction of the eastern division with the branch southerly to a point at or near either North Bay or Nipissing Junction, and at Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. POWER.

So that as soon as the work is begun at Winnipeg and carried eastward towards North Bay, the work must be begun at Moncton, at Quebec, and eastward from North Bay. Is there any probability that there will be any unnecessary delay in beginning work eastward from Winnipeg ? I think hon. gentlemen must feel there is not, because until the portion of the road between Winnipeg and the place where the branch runs down to Fort William has been built, the Grand Trunk Railway will have no connection with their prairie road so that the road from Winnipeg East is essentially one of the first portions of the work to be completed.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Up to the junction.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That gives the Grand Trunk Pacific a summer route, but the Grand Trunk Pacific requires a winter route, and they must continue on to the point where their branch to North Bay intersects. Clearly the interests of the Grand Trunk Railway, the Grand Trunk Pacific and the government are all identical, that the road from Winnipeg to North Bay junction must be built at the earliest possible date. This section, which I am glad to see in the Bill before us, provides that the work east of that, in Quebec and New Brunswick, shall be begun and continued simultaneously with that on the road from Winnipeg to North Bay junction. I do not see what further guarantee we want. For my part, I think that is perfectly satisfactory. You do not want anything stronger. The most essential part of the whole line to the Grand Trunk Pacific, and Grand Trunk Railway and the government, is the road from Winnipeg to North Bay junction, and you have the guarantee that the other eastern portions of the road shall be built simultaneously with that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How does the hon. gentleman reconcile paragraph 10 in the Bill before us with paragraph 8 of the old contract to which the hon. gentleman referred a moment ago ? The argument of the Speaker, I think, would be unanswerable if the paragraph in the original agreement did not exist. However, they may be bound under clause No. 10 to commence the work at different points simultaneously. No. 8 provides distinctly that the construction of the eastern section

> Shall be commenced so soon as the government has made the surveys and plans and determined upon the location thereof, and shall be completed with all reasonable despatch.

I understand a survey has been made from Winnipeg to North Bay or Fort William. Now, if I understand the position of the Grand Trunk Pacific, or the Grand Trunk Railway, that they have a road pretty well surveyed and ready to commence work upon at once from Winnipeg eastward, in order to accomplish the object that has been so forcibly laid before the committee by the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie, then we have no knowledge, nor has information been given, that even a survey has been attempted yet on that eastern portion of the road running from Quebec, and if there was a survey there, and they were ready to commence, is it reasonable to suppose, or can they under clause 8, go on simultaneously with the two? The one says that the different points to which the hon. Speaker called attention, shall be commenced east and west; the paragraph in the original agreement says the eastern section shall be commenced as soon as the surveys and plans have been determined, and then prosecuted with all possible despatch.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think paragraph 8 is quite consistent with clause 10. Paragraph 8, which was deemed sufficient last year, is as follows:—

> 8. The construction of the said eastern division shall be commenced so soon as the government has made the surveys and plans and determined upon the location thereof, and shall be completed with all reasonable despatch.

That is a general proposition, applying to the whole line. I think it is quite possible—I have not kept myself au courant with what is going on in the other House—that because the surveys were being made immediately east of Winnipeg a little more promptly than on the other sections of the eastern division, clause 10 was inserted in this Bill at the instance of members from the province of Quebec and from the maritime provinces to guarantee that the work would be done all along the eastern section at or about the same time. It says the work of construction shall be commenced, as nearly as may be, simultaneously, so if they are bound to carry on the work at all these different points, we have the best possible guarantee that the work will be done. Then I would invite the attention of the hon. member from Stadacona (Hon. Mr. Landry) to this fact, that while there is little doubt that the contracting company will build a road, at any rate into the prairie section at a very early date, they may take the whole limit of time before they complete the whole road. They naturally would not at first build across from the neighbourhood of Edmonton to the Rocky mountains; and this amendment really, instead of helping to accelerate the work on the eastern section, might postpone it, because it is not at all impossible that the work west of Edmonton will not be done as soon as the work between Winnipeg and North Bay.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I should like to correct, with all humility, the hon. gentleman from Marshfield who made the extraordinary statement that if they favoured the Grand Trunk Pacific proposition it was that the Grand Trunk Railway offered—not the Grand Trunk Pacific but the Grand Trunk Railway, and he emphasized that point—to bind itself to deliver over grain to the Intercolonial Railway at Montreal. The hon. gentleman reproached me for having failed to read very carefully the letter of November 3, 1902, addressed to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, but I had read it sufficiently to convince myself that it was the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company—it was signed by Mr. Cox himself and by the president of the Grand Trunk Railway Company—so that the important argument he drew from that letter falls to the ground in so far as it bound the old Grand Trunk Railway to deliver that freight to the Intercolonial Railway. But there is another thing to which I want to draw the attention of this chamber, and that is if the hon. gentleman styles himself, and is proud to do so, a farmer, he can turn around as quickly as any Philadelphia lawyer to find an argument to get out of a hole, because he said yes, we were in favour of the Grand Trunk Railway proposition in preference to the other, because it was the Grand Trunk Railway and not the Grand Trunk Pacific that was to deliver freight at Montreal to the Intercolonial Railway in order that it should reach a Canadian seaport. I draw the attention of the House to the fact that the whole of the present scheme was opposed by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, and the whole party to which he belongs, last session and this session also before they knew anything about this proposition of the Grand Trunk Pacific made on the 2nd November 1902, and which was only put before the House on the 28th May, 1904. When I stated that I was glad to see that admission from the hon. gentleman from Wolseley, that the eastern section was important to prevent a diversion of the traffic to the old Portland route, I had in mind a very strict contract made by the Grand Trunk Pacific Company with the government to carry all the unrouted freight by the new line to Quebec and to a Canadian seaport, and the importance that we attached to this binding agreement that this unrouted freight should go through that Canadian channel. We attached still some importance to the fact that the Grand Trunk Railway Company has bound itself to see that we receive three per cent on all our outlay, because it will be a sufficient inducement for them to have that road produce that amount of interest.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend tries to get out of the difficulty in which he finds himself placed in by that stump speech he made, accusing all the Conservatives of favouring the construction of the Grand Trunk Railway to North Bay only, and not favouring the extension of the line eastward. I distinctly stated that although some members of the party had expressed themselves in favour of that, I never was favourable to it; but that would have been better than the terms of the contract before us now so far as securing trade to Canadian ports, because there was section 8 in the proposition of November 2, 1902, by which there was to be an interchange of traffic at Montreal.

That in order to provide for connection with the Atlantic seaboard all the year around and through an all-British territory route, your petitioners will be prepared to enter into an arrangement with the government for an interchange of traffic or other satisfactory agreement with the Intercolonial Railway at Montreal, or to consider such other proposal as the government may submit.

My hon. friend says that this letter was on behalf of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company; the letter was written by the promoters, but could they bind the Grand Trunk Railway? Who was to deliver the freight at Montreal? Who was to have possession of it? Not the Grand Trunk Pacific but the Grand Trunk Railway, and they undertook to have this traffic handed over at Montreal and they say they would enter into such a proposition as the government might submit.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Who was to enter into that agreement if not the Grand Trunk Pacific?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Messrs. Hays, Cox and Wainwright offered first to make this agreement, but the traffic they were agreeing about would be in possession of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and, surely my hon. friend does not say his government would be satisfied, after the traffic would be in possession of the Grand Trunk Railway, to proceed on the mere word of Mr. Cox or Mr. Hays or any of these men, that that traffic would be handed over to the Intercolonial Railway? The Grand Trunk Railway would be in possession of the traffic, and they said they were willing any such arrangement should be made as would be satisfactory to the government. Therefore my hon. friend will see that this proposition would be better for the country, as far as carrying Canadian freights to Canadian ports is concerned, that this contract now before us when it is finally and fully completed, because there is no obligation that would bind the Grand Trunk Railway, whereas in the North Bay proposition it is plainly indicated there would have been.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend says that Mr. Hays approached the government and said if you meet our proposition we are ready for an interchange of freight at Montreal by which there will be a Canadian route found for Canadian products, and we are willing to consider any proposition you may make to carry that out. Who supposed for one moment that the government or Mr. Hays imagined anything else than that the Grand Trunk Railway would bind itself to deliver at Montreal the traffic which was brought to it at North Bay and at Port Arthur. Otherwise it would have been a farce. I have said that that proposition, if carried out, would be better than the proposition contained in these agreements, because the old Grand Trunk Railway is not bound at all in these. Traffic may be handed over to them; they get it into their possession and they are not bound to deliver it at Montreal. In this contract the Grand Trunk Railway are not bound at all in the way they would have to be bound if these men were sincere in their proposition to the government of November, 1902. If the government were not a set of fools they would insist that what the company proposed should be carried out to the letter, and in the spirit as well. But contrast the position of affairs under this contract, on the assumption that the western division will be constructed years before the eastern division. What will happen then? The trade gathered up in the Northwest will be handed over at North Bay to the Grand Trunk Railway which is not bound to make an interchange as was offered in the proposal of 1902. Does my hon. friend see the difference? If he does not I despair of convincing him of anything.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman asks me what will become of freight passing Fort William and North Bay, before connection is made between the eastern and western sections. Undoubtedly it will find its way to the seaboard through the ordinary channels, as it has been doing up to this date.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And nobody is bound?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—What amuses me is to see how my hon. friend finds any agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway to transfer freight at Montreal how solemn and sacred an agreement it is; how impossible it is for these companies to deviate from this contract; but when we show them a similar contract as strict as any contract could be, forcing those people to send their unrouted freight through a Canadian channel to a Canadian seaport, 'Oh no', says he 'it will come by Port Arthur to the Grand Trunk Railway and will find its way through the old channel to Portland', if that contract is as binding on the Grand Trunk Pacific and Grand Trunk Railway at Montreal. Notwithstanding all the arguments made by a half dozen of my hon. friends in this chamber, and two or three dozen in the other chamber, that the freight is bound to find its natural channel down the old system of the Grand Trunk to Portland,—I am glad to find that the contract we are making is solid and strict enough to be restricted by both parties, and we will get all the advantage of it and will find that all the unrouted freight will follow the Canadian route to a Canadian port.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend misses the whole point between us when he admits that this contract will permit the freight to follow ordinary channels. Before connection is made between the eastern and western sections what is its natural channel? Portland of course. The hon. member admits the whole thing, whereas, if he will turn to this other proposition which the government concealed until the other day, he will find that Canadian ports would have secured the trade.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The difference in time between the completion between the eastern section and the western section may be a few years, and possibly only a few months.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We are trying to make it as short as possible, but my hon. friend is trying to leave the door open as long as possible, and we know the Grand Trunk Railway will have an interest in keeping it open as long as possible. The hon. gentleman admits the whole thing when he says the traffic will go by its natural channel, which is Portland, while he is forced to admit that somebody at all events was going to be bound that the freight should be delivered at Montreal to the Intercolonial Railway by the original offer.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière to say in answer to my hon. friend from Marshfield, that an agreement entered into under an arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway, has not been carried out—that is to hand over to the Intercolonial Railway the unconsigned freight going eastward?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No, I did not say that. I said I was glad to find that my hon. friend was sure that if that offer of the Grand Trunk Pacific of November 2, 1902, had been accepted, the freight would have been delivered at Montreal to the Intercolonial Railway. I draw from his affirmation that a contract of that kind could be made sufficiently binding, evidence that the present contract will be equally binding in its terms and that the unrouted freight would be sent by that eastern section of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Unless I misunderstood the hon. gentleman, he said he had experience of other contracts.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No, I did not refer to any other contract.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Thus far they would be on a par, with this difference, that somebody would be bound to hand the freight over in case the other proposition had been accepted, while nobody but the Grand Trunk Pacific is bound in this case.

The amendment was rejected.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I should like to know the distance from Winnipeg to the North Bay junction.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is over 900 miles, I think, to the point of junction connecting with North Bay—it may be 1,000 miles from Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I would call attention to clause 42 of the original contract, which deals with freight going through Canadian channels. I would ask the hon. gentleman to look at the amendment. There is nothing in this part of the agreement which provides for freight and merchandise from China, Japan, and other eastern countries being carried over the line to Canadian ports. The company might transfer that to the Grand Trunk Railway at North Bay and send it on to any port they like. I do not move an amendment because I know the House will not accept it, but the amendment which I would suggest is as follows :—

The construction of that portion of the said railway within the province of British Columbia shall be commenced at, and from the place selected as the terminus on the Pacific coast of the said railway, on or before the first day of June, one thousand nine hundred and five (1905), and shall be prosecuted with due diligence day by day until completed.

Now that is a far better section than the one in the original contract. It is more comprehensive and clear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend will see that we could not, of course, alter the agreement at all, but section 42, and 45 bear on that point. Section 45 is as follows :—

45. The company shall arrange for and provide, either by purchase, charter or otherwise, shipping connections upon both the Atlantic and Pacific oceans sufficient in tonnage and in number of sailings to take care of and transport all its traffic, both inward and outward, at such ocean ports within Canada, upon the said line of railway, or upon the line of the Intercolonial Railway, as may be agreed upon from time to time, and the company shall not divert, or, so far as it can lawfully prevent, permit to be diverted, to ports outside of Canada any traffic which it can lawfully influence or control, upon the ground that there is not a sufficient amount of shipping to transport such traffic from or to such Canadian ocean ports.

And there is also section 42, which is in the same direction. I think it is pretty well guarded.

The clause was adopted.

On the eleventh clause.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What is the meaning of this clause ?

11. Section 9 of the National Transcontinental Railway Act is amended by striking out the word 'three' in the fourth line thereof and substituting the word 'four.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There are four commissioners instead of three.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Why are there four ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because the country is pretty wide and there are so many localities which should be represented.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Has the country grown wider since last year.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is it true that one of the four positions has been offered to the premier of Quebec ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not heard that it was. I have heard no more than I saw in the newspapers.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What will be the salaries of those positions ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Are they fixed ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not sure.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Has the Hon. Mr. McClelan of New Brunswick been offered the presidency of the board ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman knows just as much as I do about it. All I have seen is what appeared in the newspapers. I have not heard the name mentioned in the council chamber.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I suppose the truth is, none of those commissioners have been appointed ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, none of them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is a great deal of force in the suggestion that three would be ample, unless it is necessary to find a place for some supporter of the government and add to the expense of building the road. There cannot possibly be necessity for four commissioners.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If two are on one side and two on the other, how will a disputed question be decided ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In that case the motion will be lost.

The clause was adopted.

On the schedule.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Will the Chairman please read the clauses of the schedule.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, the schedule is never read. By the first clause we adopted the schedule and it is unnecessary to read it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It just amounts to this ; we have a Bill laid before us which we have no power to amend or alter ; if we do it vitiates the whole contract. We were told the same thing last session when the original agreement was adopted, yet just as soon as the Act was passed the Grand Trunk Railway people took exception to it and altered it as they thought proper and brought it back to the government and with all humility the government accepted the changes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is true.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And yet they boasted that the contract was so tight and fast that no change would be accepted. At the dictation of the Grand Trunk Railway Company they consented to change it in very important particulars, and it is brought back to us and we have the same story over again. You may just as well swallow it without debate.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We made a contract with the Grand Trunk Railway in Canada. We thought it was fair and reasonable on both sides. The company refused to accept it. Communications passed backwards and forwards for two or three months. The company demanded more than is here. We had either to throw it over or make such changes as are necessary.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has to accept whatever the Grand Trunk Railway dictates. They will have nothing to do with the matter unless they have their own way. The government are mere puppets in their hands. It is only verifying what has been said repeatedly, that the Grand Trunk Railway owned the government instead of the government owning the railway.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I remember an incident which occurred in 1881. I remember perfectly well when negotiations were on foot for two or three months. I remember gentlemen who represented the company brought the government to those terms, and those terms were a good deal more onerous than these. If you think it is in the interest of Canada to enlist the co-operation of the company in any enterprise you have to meet them thoroughly, and that is what we did.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If my hon. friend would allow us to deliberate on those clauses I think we would get on faster. It is a matter of infinite satisfaction to know that the dangers which threatened us as a people a little over a year ago have passed away. We were told then that owing to the danger of the abrogation of the bonding privilege, we had to do something in very great haste. We were in danger of having the Canadian Pacific Railway on the north shore of Lake Superior destroyed by United States gunboats. We are delighted to know that hon. gentlemen opposite have got over their alarm. We never had any feeling of the kind ourselves.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—We were never so concerned as to think that a few months would make a great deal of difference, inasmuch as it was patent to every one that this road could not be constructed in one half year. On the face of the contract itself, it appeared that it would take at least five years to construct the line, so, notwithstanding the dangers, we had to wait for five years. The condition of things described by the leader of the government in the other chamber still exists—those bonding privileges can be denounced any day. We hope they will not be until we are absolutely independent, but these conditions must be faced, every year the hon. gentleman from Marshfield might say, well, let us bless the Almighty that those impending dangers have not fallen on us.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman not utter the same prayer.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—We will join with the hon. gentleman. It is simply childish to repeat at every sitting of this House that the dangers with which we were threatened no longer exist. They do. These are conditions which we may have to face at any time. We hope our neighbours will not denounce the bonding privileges, especially within the next seven or eight years. until we have a trancontinental railway built exclusively on Canadian territory.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I want to call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to the position taken by himself and most of his supporters who have discussed this question; whenever any objection is made to the terms of this contract, we are reminded of the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Now, in the last speech my hon. friend made he referred to a contract of some kind in 1881. I shall be inclined, if I hear much more of this, to go into the history of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Oh.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend must know that it is totally irrelevant. The contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway was entered into under altogether different circumstances to those which prevail to-day. I might go on for a couple of hours to show the difficulties that presented themselves to the Mackenzie government, because they were just as great as those with which the Conservative government were confronted, and what resulted from those difficulties in the expenditure of money and otherwise. Now I do not desire to do that. Let us take this question before on its merits and deal with it without reference to any other. The country in 1904 is altogether different to what it was in 1874, when the hon. gentleman assumed office under his colleague (Hon. Alex. Mackenzie), and the circumstances and difficulties which presented themselves at that time prevented Mr. Mackenzie from going on with the road. I know, and my hon. friend knows what Mr. Mackenzie had to encounter, and after the change in government those same difficulties presented themselves. Why should we have that continually thrust forward whenever any objection is made to this contract? I have no objections to enter into a discussion on the subject of the Canadian Pacific Railway from 1874 to the present time, but it would be of no advantage in discussing this Bill. If it is to go on, I promise my hon. friend to deliver a half day's speech on that question in defence of the government of which I formed a very humble member. I had something to do with the giving out of that contract, the construction of the road and the loaning of the money of which we have heard a great deal. I heard a whole speech delivered the other evening by the hon. member from St. Thomas (Mr. Wilson) about the loan of $30,000,000, which had as much to do with the matter before the House as if I had read a chapter from Gulliver's Travels.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend entirely misunderstands me. I said it was a most unusual thing to read a schedule attached to a Bill. I have never known it to be done. It was not done under similar circumstances in 1881, or on any other occasion. I presume hon. gentlemen are familiar with it. I have no objection to its being read, only I thought it could only be read with a view of criticising it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In connection with the Drummond Railway matter we read that contract. This very schedule was read in the House of Commons. My hon. friend the leader of the House was very anxious, when we were reading the clause about the common stock, to explain how the rolling stock was going to be provided. I am constrained to ask for information on that subject, more particularly as my hon. friend was anxious to enter upon an explanation when we were discussing the common stock. I am more anxious for an explanation, in view of the words used by Sir Chas. Rivers-Wilson at a meeting of the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. The report of that meeting has been very fully presented to the public in one way or another. Hon. gentlemen who have read it will remember that Mr. Allen had raised a question with regard to the liabilities and obligations of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and he counted the deposit as an obligation, and he also put in the $20,000,000 for rolling stock as another obligation which he said the Grand Trunk Railway Company would have to assume in connection with this scheme. In reply to Mr. Allen, Sir Chas. Rivers-Wilson said :

> As regards the five millions for rolling stock, it is not five millions—it is estimated at three millions. With that the Grand Trunk has nothing to do. That rolling stock will be provided by the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, and, as the general manager will tell you, they have laid their plans for providing that rolling stock by a trust fund. Therefore, you may wipe it out and call it four millions. And as regards the one million deposit, that deposit will not cost you one single half-penny. Therefore, the liability comes back to the sum which I have just mentioned—namely, about three millions, and I have stated distinctly and clearly that that is what we estimate the liability of the Grand Trunk to be—eventually a possibility of three millions of capital and, under any circumstances, not more than £118,000 of interest per year.

Now, Sir Chas. Rivers-Wilson made that statement at a meeting of the shareholders of this company, and Mr. Hays, the general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway Company sat at his side and he never would have made that statement and outlined to the meeting what Mr. Hays' plan was and the intentions of the company without the authority of Mr. Hays. Now, in the speech on the second reading of the Bill the hon. leader of the House informed the House that the Grand Trunk were assuming obligations of fifteen million dollars on rolling stock. I should like him to explain to the House how that is, in view of the statement made by Sir Chas. Rivers-Wilson.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am quite unable to explain Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson's statements to the shareholders. Like many other statements, they were rather of a rose-ate character. He was interested in having the agreement settled.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—He would not mislead them surely ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know anything about the statement I never read it. I heard it quoted but paid very little attention to it. I regarded the Grand Trunk as the endorser of all the Acts of the Grand Trunk Pacific ; they were practically going to control the road. They would control it by its stock, and they necessarily are at the bottom, and no doubt it was an indirect round about way of bringing them in. But having gone into it, it would be practically the Grand Trunk road.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend surely is not serious when he says that in such an important matter, Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson speaking before the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway, with all the responsibility that that involves, and it is a great one, would misrepresent the facts ? We remember the case of Whitaker Wright —and it would be almost as bad as Wright's case, if Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson should make such a statement and it was erroneous and had no foundation for it. He made the statement with Mr. Hays by his side, and, surely, the hon. gentleman is not serious when he tells us that statement was erroneous. I think I can show hon. gentlemen in this House that Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson was fully authorized to make that statement. Of course we know he must have been authorized by Mr. Hays to make it, but from the legislation on the subject that has been passed by the parliament of Canada, we now see clearly and emphatically that the statement was made with the fullest knowledge of the law relating to this subject, and we wish to point out to the hon. Secretary of State what is the relation of the statutes that we passed this year and last year with regard to that question. I will turn first to the Act of incorporation of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, as passed by this parliament last year, and if my hon. friend has the Act, and will turn to section 13, he will find the following clause adopted by this parliament. I am sorry the hon. gentleman from de Lorimer is not present so that I might have the benefit of his views with regard to these provisions, but if my hon. friend the Secretary of State will kindly give the matter attention for a few moments, he will find that Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson did not make an erroneous statement.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not say he made an erroneous statement. I said he was giving a roseate statement to the shareholders, and that I always regarded the Grand Trunk as being behind the proposition.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I thought the hon. gentleman used the word erroneous. My hon. friend did not use the strong word I thought he had used. I am surprised that he did not correct me sooner, but I think if we investigate a little closer we will find it amounts to about the same thing, although my hon. friend is more polite than I gave him credit for being. If it is not true that the plans had all been arranged, and that the Grand Trunk Pacific Company was enabled under this contract to raise the money for the rolling stock in another way than by providing it out of their own resources, in other words if it was not correct that they were enabled to raise that money by means of a trust and pay for it out of earnings, Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson must have made a roseate statement to the shareholders and an erroneous statement to them, and the conclusion I must draw from my hon. friend's remark, although he does not say 'erroneous,' nevertheless he would be justified in using it if that conclusion is right. If the hon. gentleman will look at section 13 of the Bill of last year, not as it appears in the statutes, he will find that it reads as follows :—

And the company may issue such bonds, debentures or other such securities in one or more separate series, and limit the security for any series to such of the franchises, property, assets, rents and revenues of the company, present or future, or both, as are described in the mortgage made to a trustee or trustees to secure such separate series of bonds, debentures or other securities and every such limited series of such bonds, debentures, or other securities, if so issued, shall, subject to the provisions contained in section of the Railway Act, form a first charge upon, and be limited to the particular portion, section or sections of the railway, and to the franchises, property, assets, rents and revenues of the company with respect to which they are issued and which shall be described in the mortgage made to secure the same.

This is the power which the Grand Trunk took to themselves, under their Act of incorporation, with regard to giving the first lien on that property. That is subject to the provisions of the General Railway Act. If we turn to the general railway Act we can find what its provisions are. Turn to section 112, which is, as I explained, precisely the same section in the Revised Act as section 94 in the old Act, and reads as follows:—

The company may issue such securities by a mortgage deed creating such securities mortgage charges and encumbrances upon the whole of such property, assets and revenues of the property, present or future, or both as are described therein, but such property, assets, rents and revenues shall be subject in the first instance to payment of any penalty then or thereafter imposed upon the company for non-compliance with the requirements of this Act and next to the payment of working expenditure of the railway.

On turning to the interpretation clause of the General Railway Act I find what is the interpretation placed on the words 'working expenditure.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not the references, and my hon. friend must not expect me to give a professional opinion. I have not been able to follow it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I will wait until the hon. gentleman gets it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not prepared to give a professional opinion.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—What are we here for. Is there no gentleman on the other side of the House who is prepared to discuss such an important point as this. Is it that my hon. friend will sit back in his seat and say that he is not called upon to give a professional opinion ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have given my opinion as a legislator and as I understand the Bill, I am not bound to give a professional opinion.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman is not called upon to give a professional opinion, but as the hon. leader of the House, in charge of this Bill, he is entitled to give us an explanation of the Bill, and to show us what it means, and if he cannot do that, it is a very strange state of things. It is remarkable.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not responsible for my hon. friend's interpretation. I do not interpret it that way.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Nothing is to be gained by treating the House in this way.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not going to be brow-beaten by the hon. member.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am not brow-beating the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, the hon. gentleman is.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No. I am undertaking in the most reasonable manner to discuss the provision with regard to rolling stock. My hon. friend volunteered to give us information regarding it at an earlier stage in the discussion this evening when we were talking about the common stock. He said: 'We will discuss it when we come to it,' and he sits back now and says he is not here to give a professional opinion and will not deliberate with us. Is that the position?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I gave the hon. gentleman my view of the rolling stock when I addressed the House on the second reading, and I think it is plain to any that reads it. I do not propose to be brought into an elaborate discussion of a variety of Bills. This has no reference to this question at all.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It has no reference to this question?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend was willing to admit it had full reference to the question when we were dealing with common stock, and he was ready to give the explanation then. How is it he has lost the desire to give an explanation when we reach the very question that a few hours ago he was most anxious he should explain. I submit I am approaching this subject in a most reasonable manner. I am undertaking to show that there is not one dollar obligation resting upon the Grand Trunk with reference to the rolling stock. I am proceeding to show from the statutes of Canada that we have so provided that we are only going to have the security of a first mortgage. All the security that we are going to have is that first mortgage upon the property of this railway. I am showing that under the law as we have made it this rolling stock is not a property that can be included in that first mortgage. That is the position that I take, and I think it is due to this House that my hon. friend should explain the attitude of the government in regard to it. He should explain the different provisions of the Bill. I propose to lay my views before the House with regard to it. And I propose to do it as I always do in a reasonable manner, and I think I shall be able to convince every hon. gentleman who will follow me and take the trouble of looking into the law, that the Grand Trunk are not going to be bound to put up one dollar of their own money to pay for this rolling stock. I have already quoted the provision of their Act of incorporation, which provided that any mortgages they would give would be subject to the general provisions of the Railway Act, naming the 94th section. I have read to the House that same section that parliament has re-enacted as section 112, which declares that the working expenditure of the road, and any penalties imposed upon the company for violation of the law, should be charged upon the road before the interest of any mortgage which might be made upon it. And I have showed by the interpretation clause that rent of rolling stock let to the company shall be included as working expenditure, and then, in order to make the matter clear, there is another clause in the Interpretation Act which says that the expression 'rolling stock' means and includes any locomotive, car, car-tender, snow-plough, or any description of railway equipment designed for movement on wheels over the tracks of the company. Here we have the definition of rolling stock. We have an interpretation of what working expenditure means. It includes rolling stock. Then we have a provision in the law which declares that we have working expenditure including rent, or rolling stock, where rolling stock is let to the company, shall be a charge on the earnings of the road having priority over a first mortgage. We have the matter complete. These explanations show most clearly what is meant by Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson, when he said the Grand Trunk intended to raise the money to buy that rolling stock by a trust fund. That might be roseate, but it certainly was not erroneous on his part.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not use the word erroneous.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I know the hon. gentleman did not say that, but I say if the statement which the hon. gentleman made that the Grand Trunk Railway Company are to find $15,000.000 of their own money to pay for the rolling stock, is correct. Sir Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson's statement was roseate, not simply roseate but erroneous.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, no.

Hon. Mr FERGUSON—If that is so, we have the whole matter completely admitted. That is the words of Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson, that the Grand Trunk would not be called upon to put up any money for the rolling stock, that Mr. Hays had all his plans made to raise it by a trust fund, and we find under the different laws of Canada, that that can be carried out completely. That the rent of the rolling stock can be included in the working expenditures.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman knows that there are $5,000,000 in the bank of Montreal, and he will see now that the $5,000,000 canot be taken out until $5,000,000 worth of rolling stock is placed on the eastern division The Grand Trunk has contributed that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The Grand Trunk can put that on the road without purchasing it, and I do not find any fault with them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They no longer own it, when it is put on our road.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend cannot have paid the slightest attention to the subject, because it is expressly provided in the law that it may be continued to be rented, that it shall not be the property of the Grand Trunk Pacific, and that the rent shall be embraced under the head of working expenditure until the principal amount is paid. I am not finding fault with this method of doing it, although it comes all the worse on the people of Canada, because we have to get the working expenses paid before anything else. The working expenditure is the first charge upon the railway, and the working expenditure, including as it does the rent of rolling stock —that is the position I take—it will make the working expenditure just that much greater. It will be greater to the extent of this rent, and the consequence will be that we will be just that much further off realizing the amount of money with which to get our interest on the government bonds, and of course it will be so much further away from paying a dividend. I admire the candor of Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson in informing the shareholders what the company intended to do. It was open and candid, and I believe every word of it. He was working a plan that was feasible under Canadian law. But I do find fault with the statement of the Secretary of State when he said, on moving the second reading, that the Grand Trunk were putting up $15,000,000 of their own money, and on that account their obligations should be counted up very much larger than they would otherwise be. I have put this view before hon. gentlemen. I have very little hope indeed from the spirit and temper of my hon. friend the leader of the House who is generally very courteous, but the temper with which he received my remarks and the readiness with which he dismissed them, does not encourage one to discuss the question. This is a specimen of the way this matter has been treated by the government from the start, and I think their supporters should insist on proper explanation in order that they should know what they were voting upon.

The clause was adopted.

On the fifth clause of the schedule.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the eastern terminus of the mountain section has been determined, at what point is it supposed the prairie section will begin? From the remarks made by the hon. gentleman in introducing the Bill one might be led to suppose that the mountain section would begin at or near Edmonton.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is an uncertain point. I think the clause provides in case they are unable to agree upon the exact point where the rise takes place, and what is considered the Rocky Mountains, it shall be left to an impartial engineer to decide. It is thought to be two or three hundred miles west of Edmonton.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In travelling over the Central Pacific you reach the summit in the state of Wyoming, long before you reach the mountain. I think in our own country you get near the mountain before you reach the summit. On the Canadian Pacific Railway you are in the mountains before you reach the summit, and it may possibly be that when you go as far north as Edmonton the height of land may be before you reach the summit.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—On a map of British Columbia, about two hundred and fifty or three hundred miles before you reach Edmonton, there is an area marked Grand Plain, so it is still prairie country up to that point, I suppose, although undulating.

The CHAIRMAN—There is a large district there called Grand Prairie.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I suppose it will be west of that.

The clause was adopted.

On the sixth clause.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I wish to have some explanation about this clause. At the second reading, my hon. friend the Secretary of State made the statement that for seven years the interest would be paid by the government, on the bonds which the government guarantee, and then, for a period of five years after that, the net earnings would be applied to the payment of interest, but where the earnings were not sufficient it would be provided for out of capital. My hon. friend confused the Bill in this respect. Last year's agreement contained a seven years' period in which the government paid the money without recourse. There were then three years following in which the company were bound to provide it if they had earnings sufficient, or to the extent those earnings would go. My hon. friend said that was the provision, and that under this Bill the three years is extended to five years. Certainly that is not the situation the new contract creates. There are the seven years for which the government pay the interest, then three years in which the whole, or a portion of it, may be provided out of capital, and a five years period after that under this new agreement during which the government cannot enforce the payment of interest. I think it is a most objectionable clause, and I cannot refrain from expressing my surprise that the government appear willing to have this contract put through without amending it. My hon. friend from Wellington expressed his doubt with regard to this question when we were discussing the Bill at the second reading. If hon. gentlemen will read the sixth section carefully they will find it increases the obligations of the government:

6. Notwithstanding anything in the said contract contained, the government shall not exercise any rights in respect of possession, foreclosure or sale, by reason of non-payment of interest by the company under the thirty-first, thirty-second or thirty-third paragraphs of the said contract, or under all or any of them, unless and until there shall be such default to the extent in the whole of a sum equal to five years of such interest, as the company is not relieved from payment of or permitted to defer or capitalize by the provisions of the said paragraphs.

My interpretation of that clause, and I do not think it will be seriously disputed, is that it creates an additional period of five years during which the government cannot enforce their claim in any way whatever. It is not five consecutive years, but a default extending on the whole over five years. Now I assume such a state of things as this: The company allow this interest to get into arrears for four and one-half years, or four years and nine months, and then pay three months' interest. They are not then in default for five full years. Not until there is a default amounting to five full years has the government any remedy at all by appointing a manager. It will enable the company to get into default with impunity; they may make their minds perfectly easy about it, there is no remedy in the agreement for such a state of things. They may go on so long as they take care not to get into a default equal to five full years; by taking that precaution they may continue in definitely without paying that amount. If any other construction can be put on that clause I should like to hear it. I have never heard it, and I should like to have the hon. gentleman's views.

Hon. Mr SCOTT—As the agreement stood last year, there were the seven years in which the government were to pay the interest Then there were three years in which, if the receipts were not sufficient to pay the interest over and above working expenses, it was to be capitalized after the three years. Now my hon. friend says that those two periods would still be considered under the amended agreement—that is the seven years and the three years—and five years beyond that. I do not so read it. It says:

6. Notwithstanding anything in the said contract contained, the government shall not exercise any rights in respect of possession, foreclosure or sale, by reason of non-payment of interest by the company under the thirty-first, thirty-second, or thirty-third paragraphs of the said contract.

They were bound after the seven years to pay the interest, so that the three years is absorbed in the five years. It practically gives them two years more.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is quite clear where the interest is in default for the three years, the company were not being released from any liability; they were simply being allowed to make that part of the capital and pay interest on it as part of the capital. That was the original agreement. I will read part of paragraph 32:

The government shall not, during the next succeeding period of three years following the period of seven years above-mentioned, be entitled to exercise any rights of foreclosure or sale against the company, or to take possession of the said railway, if the default of the company consists in failure to pay during the said period of three years the interest upon an amount of bonds equal to the principal amount guaranteed by the government.

Five years supersedes all that. My hon. friend shakes his head. I have made a study of the Bill, and that is my opinion; I may be wrong of course. The courts may decide it differently, but that is the interpretation, as I understand it, and I think the language is practical and clear because it is very sweeping. Under the 33rd paragraph they were bound to pay the interest for seven years. I hope the provision in the amended paragraph makes another arrangement; it certainly disturbs the three years proposition, because it gives greater latitude to the company; Instead of three years they get five years during which nothing can be done, and it is widened a little more as my hon. friend contends. It need not be five consecutive years, but anything equal to five years arrearages would entitle the government to take proceedings to put an independent authority in possession of the road. Then my hon. friend says it will be to the interest of the company not to disturb that, but to let it go on. I cannot see it in that light. They are certainly losing the interest on their proportion, because they only get 25 per cent over the running expenses while we get 75 per cent.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—That would be after a default had been made and the road had been put in the hands of the receiver; but if the company were in default only four and one-half years, the road could not be put into the receiver's hands if they kept paying a certain amount of interest each year, so as to keep it in default less than five years continuously. They would still be in possession.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They would soon be in default. Their object would be to get the interest on their bonds.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—They would get the interest on their bonds.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They would get only their proportion.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Who is to apportion it? There is to be no apportionment until it gets into the receiver's hands, because the Grand Trunk Pacific Company control the interest and can pay it as they like.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot understand how such a state of things could arise. Just now we had a long discussion about the value of this stock. Where would the stock be during all this time, the stock that you thought was to be of so much value?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When we were talking of the company's stock, my hon. friend wanted to get to the rolling stock; now he wants to get back to the common stock again. My hon. friend only read about one-half of this clause to the House, and he stopped short. I was surprised when my hon. friend expressed that view at the second reading. I thought it was a slip. I have read all the important statements made by the leaders on both sides, and never heard the view put forward by my hon. friend on the second reading of the Bill here. I shall not read the whole clause through but ask his attention particularly to the last three lines. The last three lines are as follows :—

Unless and until there shall be such default to the extent in the whole of a sum equal to five years of such interest, as the company is not relieved from payment of or permitted to defer or capitalize by the provisions of the said paragraphs.

Nothing can be plainer. It covers two cases, the seven years, and the further period of three years, during which the interest may be capitalized, and then the five years commences from that time under the contract. and my contention is that five full years default must occur before enforcement. It may be many years before the default of five complete years takes place, and the government cannot step in and collect it.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The hon. Secretary of State took the view that it would be to the interest of the company to have the interest paid on the bonds which the government guarantee. I differ from him on that point. It appears to me it would be entirely in the interest of the company to let this interest stand unpaid. As the hon. member from Marshfield has just pointed out. the first seven years' interest is paid by the government The next three years they are allowed to capitalize under section nine, under that agreement, in case the earnings are not sufficient to pay the interest by an issue of forty years' bonds. Then this clause provides that interest must be five years in arrears before the government can ask a receiver to be appointed to take possession of the road. The two points my hon. friend made seem to me to be very well made under these clauses, first that the government are helpless, they cannot take action to protect themselves until the end of fifteen years, and, second, the government can keep the interest on the bonds guaranteed by the government in arrear as long as they do not allow five years interest to become in arrears. The government will have to pay and the company can always keep it in arrears and the government have no remedy.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—For the first seven years the government pay the interest. But the hon. gentleman says that for eight years after that. the three years and the five years, the government may not be able to recover that interest.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The hon. gentleman does not quite understand me. During the last period of five years, the company can always keep the amount in arrears and the government have no means of collecting it. I presume the government will not accept any amendment, but it appears to me that an important contract like this should be more clearly worded, so that it could not be open to any misunderstanding or doubt about its construction.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is perfectly idle for us to be discussing it. because we cannot alter it. The courts must settle it. We cannot do anything about it If we differ on the interpretation it will be finally for the judicial committee of the Privy Council to decide.

The clause was adopted.

On the seventh clause.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Perhaps the hon. gentleman will inform the House whether the words 'working expenditure' include rolling stock ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not prepared to say off-hand. The hon. gentleman and I do not agree on the question of rolling stock. On the question of rolling stock attached to the eastern division, which is the one we are particularly interested in, it is absolutely the property of the eastern division, and cannot be removed from it, because we have to be satisfied of that before we give up the $5.000.000 deposit.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is no provision in any of the contracts that it shall be owned by the government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the discussion the words 'ear-marked' were introduced. It was understood that rolling stock to the value of $5.000.000 was to be 'ear-marked,' which means that it is to belong to the eastern division exclusively

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is to be assigned to the eastern division, but it is not said to be the property of the easteru division.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—So long as nobody can take it away. that may be considered ownership.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The government and the country are interested in the rolling stock on the western division also. In case the road does not pay the interest on the bonds, and a receiver has to be appointed, the question then arises which my hon. friend has brought up, and if our interpretation of these contracts is correct, the company is in this position, that it can hire the stock, have it in the hands of trustees under a certain rental, and that rental will have to be paid out of the earnings before any portion of the earnings can be distributed to pay the interest on the bonds which the government is guaranteeing. That appears very clear to me, and the ownership of that rolling stock is an important point. If it was owned by the company there would not be any prior claim on the earnings for the use of the rolling stock, but if it is in the hands of trustees for which they have to pay rental, as Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson says, a charge for rolling stock will come ahead of the security which the government have for interest on the guarantee.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—For the purpose of having a fine discussion the hon. gentlemen are conjuring up things which cannot possibly arise. Does any body conceive that fourteen years from now that road will not pay running expenses and interest on the bonds? If so, we had better not build it, that is all I can say.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—If we are to assume that, there is no need of taking any security at all. When we are taking security it is well to look into the terms of the security.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are told by gentlemen from the Northwest that for 1,000 miles, at all events, this road will pay from the hour it is opened. The company will be making money out of it while we are paying interest. We are agreeing to pay interest for seven years, yet hon. gentlemen are conjuring up the prospects that fourteen years from now this road will be practically bankrupt.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The Grand Trunk Railway Company have taken that into consideration. They are wise, and the fact that the agreement is allowed to stand as it is now, shows that the company have the government absolutely in their power, and can make them do as they like.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Does my hon. friend think, if this is a good thing, that we should break with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, because they, not having the confidence in the future of this country that we have, should have those absurd provisions inserted in the contract? We do not regard them as of any value whatever, because it is a condition that cannot arise. Surely my hon. friend has more confidence in the great west as to what it will be fourteen years from now, when the population will be three or four millions?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend does not dispute the contention of the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland and myself, but he thinks we are conjuring up a contingency that is never likely to occur. If that is the case there is no need of any security at all, but as the Grand Trunk people have taken such immense care to have every contingency provided for, is it not a little strange these contingencies have not been provided for by the government for the protection of Canada?

The paragraph was adopted.

On paragraph 10.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This clause calls for an explanation. It provides that at the termination of the lease at the end of 50 years when the government undertakes to operate the eastern section, the Grand Trunk shall have running powers for another 50 years over it. This is something more than the running rights and privileges we have been giving to the government or to the companies in last year's agreement or that of this year. It provides that they shall have such haulage powers and running rights as shall be necessary for continuity of operation between the western division and the Grand Trunk system in the east upon such terms as may be from time to time agreed upon. My view is that there would be nothing unreasonable in that were it not that it goes so far as to say these haulage rights and running rights shall be such as to secure the continuity of such operation between the western division and the Grand Trunk system —that is in the older provinces. That might be construed into almost a continued lease of the road or the operation of the road to such an extent that the government could not operate it advantageously itself, or that they could not lease it to any other companies who would without that provision be willing to pay a higher rent. I think if it had been simply running rights, without qualifying them in this way it would be better. We are not railway men and we do not know what that would involve. Who ever would determine that point would have to hear evidence and make an examination of what are these haulage rates, &c., for the 50 years that would be required in order to connect their western system with the system of the Grand Trunk in eastern Canada.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Continuity of operation explains that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That would be a question of evidence and they might be able to show as a matter of evidence that they required such a use of that road, assuming their road in the east would continue to grow and prosper and the west would develop, it might mean they had a business which would require an outlet over that road to such an extent as would almost monopolize the whole road and the government would get no use of it.

Hon. Mr. KERR—They would have to pay for all they got.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Before the committee rises I would like to make a suggestion. The two points which were raised by my hon. friend from Marshfield appear to be points of importance, and I presume the Secretary of State not having had his attention called to them was not as well prepared to give explanations as he might be if he had time to look into the matter a little further, and I should like to suggest that the committee rise to-night and have another sitting to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG from the committee reported the Bill without amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I move an amendment that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to a committee of the whole House to be amended by adding to section 10 the following clause :

The construction of that portion of the said railway within the province of British Columbia shall be comenced at, and from the place selected as the terminus on the Pacific coast of the said railway, on or before the first day of June, one thousand nine hundred and five (1905), and shall be prosecuted with due diligence day by day until completed.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Has the rule been suspended ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not necessary.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It cannot be read without the consent of the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Where a public Bill is reported from committee without amendment, it can be read a third time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to have this question decided if the Bill can be read a third time if an objection is taken to it.

The SPEAKER—Rule 41 reads as follows :

No Bill shall be read twice the same day ; no committee of the whole House shall proceed on any Bill the same day the Bill is read the second time and no Bill shall be read the third time the same day that the Bill is reported from committee when any amendments have been made in committee.

In this case no amendment has been made. The rule with respect to private Bills is different.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This implies that it might be read the third time provided no amendment is made. I admit that in the first place, but if an objection is taken to the third reading, can the promoters of the Bill insist upon its being read ?

The SPEAKER—Yes, there is nothing to hinder it being read the third time if the majority vote for the third reading.

Mitchell,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the motion for the third reading is put, I desire to call the attention of the House on the third reading, to a statement of the hon. Finance Minister in the House of Commons, in which he defined the route which should be taken through the province of New Brunswick; and as there is no provision in the Bill to carry out the policy which was then enunciated and laid down by the Minister of Finance, I take it for granted that there can be no objection to having a clause inserted in the Bill to adopt the route which he declared to be the policy of the government. It may be said that having announced their intention to take a certain route through New Brunswick, that ought to be sufficient guarantee to the people in New Brunswick and in other portions of the Dominion, that the policy which he there lays down as to the route would be carried out. It might occur that before these gentlemen had an opportunity of carrying out their policy, there might be a change of government and there might not.

Hon. Mon. TEMPLEMAN—Oh, oh.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman from Victoria says 'oh, oh.' Changes of government have taken place, and I am sure if there were a change in government the hon. gentleman would have no confidence in the incoming government. I think there is little doubt about that. Therefore there should be no objection to a provision in this Bill for the purpose of carrying out the policy of the present government and to prevent the possibility of others, who might have to deal with the question, violating their policy. The hon. Finance Minister spoke as follows :—

We are making the scheme larger——

And he was referring to certain propositions and charters which had been granted in the past for the construction of railways through that province. He says :

We are making the scheme larger, because instead of starting from Edmundston and using the Intercolonial Railway down to Rivière du Loup, our policy is to start from the Quebec bridge, run through the counties of Quebec, until you turn the corner of American territory at Edmundston, and down through the centre of New Brunswick to Fredericton.

I should like to call the attention of my hon. friend from Wellington to that statement of the Finance Minister, that in the construction of this road which he claims was to be of so much benefit in case of difficulty with our neighbours, that they intend to build the road through New Brunswick until it turns the corner of United States territory at Edmundston, and then down through the centre of New Brunswick. The contention of the opposition has been in the past that the road should run through New Brunswick on such a route as to reach the nearest seaport on the Atlantic, and this proposition of the Finance Minister, or this pledge of the Finance Minister, as to what they intended to do, is only acceding to the request which has been made by the opposition in the past, and if it is the intention to adopt and carry out the policy which he here lays down and declares to be the policy of the government, there should be no objection on the part of the hon. Secretary of State and his followers to make it a part of the Bill. This portion of the Bill which we are trying to amend is not of the character of the laws of the Medes and Persians, as is the contract that is entered into. This portion of the Bill has been amended in the Commons, and, certainly, that can be no objection, if the government intend to do what they have pledged themselves to do in this declaration of the Finance Minister, to accept the amendment which I propose to make. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. gentleman from Wolseley, that the Bill be not now read the third time, but it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole with instruction to add after the word 'time,' in the 39th line of section 10, the following :—

Provided that that portion of the eastern division of the National Transcontinental Rail way commencing at the Quebec bridge shall run through the counties of the province of Quebec until the corner of the American border at Edmundston is reached; thence down through the centre of New Brunswick via Fredericton to St. John.

The proposition which I ask the House to affirm is literally copying the words of the Finance Minister with the addition of the words 'To St. John.' We all know that if you go to St. John or Fredericton you necessarily go down the valley of the River St. John and by that means you reach by the nearest possible route the nearest Atlantic port, and then you would accomplish really what we have been contending should have been accomplished.

The Bill was read the third time and passed.

The SPEAKER—It is moved that the House do now adjourn.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Quite a number of gentleman are absent to-night. They have been paired, and have requested me to have their names recorded. I have a list of them, and I will read them and they will be placed on the record.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a question of order. There is nothing before the House.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—There is a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER—There was a motion that the House should adjourn.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I rise to a point of order. I was interrupted by an hon. gentleman on a point of order and I have a right to speak now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Let us have the Speaker's decision on the point of order.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It has been decided. The point of order was taken that there was nothing before the House and the Speaker ruled that there was.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to another point of order. When a point of order is taken and a member is on his feet he sits down, and he cannot speak afterwards without the consent of the House. I am right in that.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It would be very easy to shut off a member from speaking if that were so.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Ask the Speaker's ruling.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—What is the rule?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. Speaker knows the rule.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The hon. gentleman from Stadacona, a few days ago, put forth a contention the very reverse of what he states to-day. He said to an hon. member :

You should sit down until the point of order is decided, and then rise and make your speech.

The SPEAKER—Any senator called to order shall not proceed pending the decision of the question of order.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The list of pairs reads as follows :

PAIRS.

For the Bill.	Against the Bill.
King,	Wood,
Thompson,	Kirchhoffer,
Kerr (Toronto),	Baker,
Pelletier,	McMillan,
David,	Hingston,
Godbout,	Poirier,
Jones,	Lougheed,
Domville,	Owens,
Ellis,	McKay,
Béique,	MacKeen,
Edwards,	Bolduc,
Wark,	Gowan,
Fulford,	Forget,
J. P. B. Casgrain,	Casgrain (Windsor),
McHugh,	McLaren,
McMullen,	Merner.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie has taken advantage of a motion to adjourn in order to accomplish that which he could not otherwise accomplish, namely, having the pairs recorded. Now it is supposed—and it is a mere supposition I must admit, that the conduct of this House should follow the practice of the House of Lords in England as nearly as practicable. Such a proposition as that which the hon. gentleman has made was never heard of in England, and the question is whether we should reduce this House to the position of the Democratic branch in every particular. The hon. gentleman has taken advantage of the motion to adjourn to accomplish that which he could not accomplish in any other way. In the House of Commons it is an understood thing that the pairs shall be recorded, in order that the constituencies may see how their representatives would or would not vote. I am not personally opposed to the course pursued, but I ask in all seriousness whether we should adopt the principle that is carried out in the Democratic branch altogether in matters of this kind. It is very well known that it should be done where the members have to appeal to their constituents, where they may be brought to account for not being present to cast their vote. Then it is quite proper to say: It is true I was not there; I had to leave upon private or other business, but my vote would have been recorded in favour of or against the measure, and in order to establish the fact that I had not opposed the measure, or was in favour of it, I paired with so-and-so, who held views different to mine. That is really the rule, and I think it is a great pity that we are introducing in the Senate the practice of the Democratic branch in the manner in which we are doing. We have travelled within the records a good while. I am not saying I am less guilty than the rest, but the closer we adhere to the practice in England, the more it will be to the credit of the Senate in this and some other matters. I give my views upon this question, because I am in favour of adhering as closely as practicable to the usages of the House of which we are supposed to be the counterpart, so far as our Democratic institutions and the circumstances of our country would admit.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I would just like to say that I do not think that the hon. leader of the opposition wants to read me a lecture for doing what I have done.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, I am just giving my opinion.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Last session, on a vote on this same measure the pairs were recorded.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has already spoken.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman is quite right. I have no right to speak. But I shall see that the hon. gentlemen keeps in order after this.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am quite prepared to agree with the views of the hon. leader of the opposition as far as the past is concerned, but when the hon. leader of the opposition wants to impose upon this House of progress and modern ideas the methods and ideas of the past, I think I am in a position to protest against that. The hon. leader of the opposition suggested that this honourable House should follow the procedure and practice which has been followed for the past seven years in the old country. We are here in an era of progress and development of ideas, and I do not think the hon. leader of the opposition——

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Will the hon. gentleman allow me one word? It is stated in our rules that we should follow the practice of the House of Lords.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If it is in our rules, we are old enough to remedy the rules, if necessary. I do not oppose the ideas of the hon. gentleman as coming from old stock, but we of the younger generation do not propose to be governed by ideas that prevail three or four or five hundred years ago.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The hon. leader of the opposition is not that old.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—But he speaks to practice and ideals that are three or four hundred years old.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They are just as much in force to-day as ever.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—They should be enforced to-day if accepted, but I, as one of the younger members of the House, representing the young ideas of the country, the development of thought and progress, do not wish to say that the ideals of the past are not worthy of respect and veneration. Far from it; but I say here to-night in response to the hon. leader of the opposition that when action is taken, just as the hon. member from Portage la Prairie has done, that it should not be thrown in his face that he is violating the rules of the House because such rules were adopted one or two hundred years ago. Under these circumstances I do not think the hon. member should be called to order by the hon. leader of the opposition.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I hope my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie will give this matter his earnest consideration, because I think it a pity we should depart from what has been the custom of the House. I know it was done last year. Members scarcely observed what my hon. friend had done. He had come from the other branch of parliament; and it was done before it was fully realized that the record was made in this way. It was the first time, I am told that such a record had ever been made in the Senate of Canada, that is what other members have told me. I think it is a pity that we should depart from the traditions of the House of Lords, which we are bound by our rules to follow. There is another reason why we should not do it, and that is, it may be all very well in an assembly such as the House of Commons, which is recognized to be a partisan House, with two parties, but the impression is generally held in this country that this House is more judicial in character and that members cannot be counted upon with certainty beforehand as to their views on any measure, as they are in the other branch of parliament. I hope that is the opinion of members of this House. How can any hon. gentleman therefore make out a list of members' names stating how they would have voted if they had been here, on motions that they could not possibly have any notice. They knew that on the third reading of the Bill the principle of the Bill was to be decided, and there would be no harm in counting them in the way they agreed between their brother members that they should pair with other members.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I only give it on the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend narrows it down to the third reading of the Bill. I do not think that that should be done. If it is permissible in one case, it would be permissible in other cases. I hope it could not be positively certain how every member would vote on the motions which came up here to-night. That being so, is it not more in keeping with the dignity of the House that such a record should not be made. It is all very well to make it in the House of Commons, but our House is differently constituted, and we should make an effort to keep this chamber from being regarded as a mere popular branch, echoing the views of the two parties in the country. Then section 124 of our rules provides :

> In all unprovided cases the rules, usages and forms and proceedings of the House of Lords are to be followed.

This is an unprovided case. There is no rule with reference to it. The rule is all in favour of a different course with the exception of last year and I think there is nothing to be gained, but much to be lost in the way of the dignity of this House in adopting this practice.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—There has been an endeavour to place the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie in a false position. He was not permitted to make an explanation, a courtesy which is generally allowed to all members in this House. He was shut off by an hon. gentleman who made himself particularly objectionable by standing up and forcing the rule and he possibly is the one who violated the rules in every shape and form more than any other member of the House, and trespasses more on the patience and good will of the House than any hon. gentleman. The hon. member from Portage la Prairie was merely explaining that he was not imposing his views on the House at all. He was only giving information to the House of the views that certain members hold here, who were absent, for and against the Bill, and he was doing this at the request of many of those members, members representing both sides of the question in so far as voting for or against the Bill. He wished to have this information recorded in the debates so that they could refer to it afterwards as having been placed on record on this measure and I notice that while my hon. friend from Marshfield would suggest that in these votes it is impossible to foretell how hon. members would have voted who are absent, if we look at the record of the vote taken here to-night, there is a remarkable coincidence that in all the different measures, so far as either side was concerned, they were wedded to their opinions and stuck to them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Wedded to their party.

The Senate adjourned.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN, from the committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Life Association of New York, presented their fifth report as follows :—

The Senate,
Committee Room No. 8,
Friday, 24th June, 1904.

The Select Committee appointed, by the Senate made 19th May, 1904, to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York, beg leave to make their Fifth Report, as follows :—

1. In the course of the inquiry now being made by Your Committee, George D. Eldridge, of the City of New York, Vice-President of the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company, formerly known as the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York, having been duly summoned, appeared as a witness before Your Committee and was examined upon oath.

2. During the examination of the said witness this day certain questions were put to him by the Honourable Mr. Landry, which questions the witness declined to answer. The said questions and the replies made thereto were taken down by the shorthand writer employed by Your Committee, as follows :—

"Q. What is the salary of the President ?—A. I respectfully decline to answer.

"Q. What is the salary of the Vice-President? —A. I respectfully decline to answer.

"Q. There are two Vice-Presidents ?—A. Yes.

"Q. The same answer applies to both vice-presidents ?—A. Yes.

"Q. What is the salary of the Secretary ?—A. I respectfully decline to answer.

"Q. What is the salary of the Treasurer ?—A. I respectfully decline to answer.

"Q. Is there any other officer ?—A. The Comptroller.

"Q. What is the salary of the Comptroller ?—A I respectfully decline to answer.

"Q. What is the salary of the Medical Director ?—A. I respectfully decline to answer.

"Q. Is the counsel a member of the Association ?—A. I think he is a constitutional officer under the present constitution.

"Q. At all events, if he is, what is his salary? —A. I respectfully decline to answer.

"Q. Is there any other officer ?—A. There are two Assistant Secretaries that are constitutional officers, I think.

"Q. What are the salaries of each of the two Assistant Secretaries ?—A. I respectfully decline to answer.

"Q. Do you know what those salaries are ? —A. From memory I could state some of them, and from memory I could not state exactly others.

"Q. You could tell what is your own ?—A. I could.

"Q. But you decline ?—A. I respectfully decline to answer.

"Q. Why do you decline ?—A. Because I regard the information as coming to me confidentially in my position as Chairman of the Executive Committee. I regard it as a matter of great detriment to the policy-holders of the Company to have this information spread upon the public records to be printed and scattered broadcast. In addition to that, under the law of the Dominion of Canada to which we are subject, there is an officer established who has the absolute power to visit our office, and ascertain any information that he may desire in connection with the Company ; and in addition to that I have to say that the Insurance Department of New York, in the State of New York under our jurisprudence gives absolute credence and faith to every Act of the Insurance Department with reference to Canadian companies, and we are entitled to the same credence and the same treatment in reference to the Acts of our own Insurance Department as the Acts of the Canadian Department are given in reference to Canadian companies. And furthermore, that my declining to answer is by advice of my counsel."

3. And being thereupon ordered by Your Committee to answer, the witness persisted further in his refusal.

4. Your Committee being of opinion that the questions should be answered, as being material to the investigation, report the refusal of the said George D. Eldridge to comply with the Order of Your Committee in these particulars, and request the action of the Senate thereon.

All which is respectfully submitted.

H. J. CLORAN, Chairman.

He said : It now rests with me to move immediate concurrence in the report, or that it be considered at a future day. In the opinion of the committee it is well that the Senate should pronounce at once upon the merits of this issue. A witness, Mr. Eldridge, vice-president of this company, has been under examination through the hands of counsel and members of the committee and has refused to answer questions put to him, as shown by this report. The committee did not desire to take action then. Finally the committee deemed it necessary that an answer should be given, although refused in the first place. The question being put and finally refused, the committee deemed it necessary to report the fact to the House. What action the House shall take is quite indifferent to me as chairman of the committee, but it is for the Senate to say whether a witness should be compelled to answer questions which have a direct bearing on the subject of investigation. I therefore move that this report be concurred in.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—This is a matter of such importance that it should be discussed with closed doors.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It cannot be discussed until we know something of the report. I understand that the report has been very much emasculated, that a good deal of the evidence given this morning has been struck out. It ought to be referred back to give us the facts as they appeared. They may be in the report, but certainly it cannot be adopted now. It must stand until a future day.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—As chairman of that committee, I cannot allow the accusation to go forth to the country that the report is emasculated. I am not responsible for the information furnished the hon. Secretary of State, but I am responsible for what has transpired in the committee, and this is what I say: The hon. senator from Stadacona (Hon. Mr. Landry), a member of the committee, objected to only one point, and that was the refusal of the witness to answer his questions. He did not object to the evidence that had been taken for three hours during the morning; he simply asked the committee to put on record this fact, that the witness George D. Eldridge, vice-president of the company, refused to answer questions put by him specially, and that is the only matter referred to the Senate. The hon. gentleman is perfectly within his rights in referring to what he considers an irregularity in the taking of the evidence; so the hon. Secretary of State should not say that the report of the committee is emasculated.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understood the committee was to report the evidence to the House, and that a good deal of the evidence taken this morning is not reported.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We should have the whole of it before us.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Whoever has told the hon. Secretary of State that a good deal or a portion of the evidence given this morning has not been reported, or has been struck out, has done it for the purpose of poisoning his mind against the committee. It could not be for any other purpose. What are the facts? I submitted a statement with regard to the amounts received from policy-holders of the New York Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association from 1886 down to 1902. Unfortunately, in copying the figures out of the annual returns, I took the reports of the New York Mutual Life instead of the reports of the New York Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association. My hon. friend laughs; he will laugh differently, if he is in the interest of the company, when I tell him the other side of the question. When they drew my attention to the fact that I was in error I suggested that that should be struck out, and I would substitute the correct figures. I went to the library, took down the annual returns for sixteen years and extracted the correct figures and submitted them to the committee. Now, what are they? They are virtually this: the New York Mutual Reserve Life admit that they have drawn in assessments out of the policy-holders and those who have been policy-holders in Canada since 1886 down to the present time a little over $5,100,000. They claim they have paid to the policy-holders something in the neighbourhood of $3,060,000, which leaves a balance that should be in their hands of $2,100,000. They claim that out of that they have paid $990,000 for expenses during the sixteen years, or a little over $56,000 a year, which their branch of business in Canada is costing them. Taking that out, they should have over $1,000,000 to the credit of the policy-holders, but all they have is $228,000 in the hands of the Dominion government. These are the figures I submitted in place of the figures to which the hon. Secretary of State has drawn attention, as having been eliminated. When we found the mistake we made the correction. I am very glad the investigation is being made. I only hope the people of Canada will have their eyes opened to the true state of affairs.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Have we any report of this committee with their finding in regard to the transactions of this company before us?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Not yet.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Then why is my hon. friend discussing the position of the company without any report before us ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—He is discussing a charge made here against the committee.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That has nothing to do with what purports to be a fact ascertained by the committee, that such and such is the record of the company. Is there any report of the committee making a finding of that kind ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—What led me to make the statement as submitted is this : The hon. Secretary of State drew the attention of the House to the fact that a considerable portion of the evidence given this morning had been eliminated from the evidence required to be brought to the House.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I rise to a point of order.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I have made my statement in reply to that.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I do not understand there is a question about it. As I understand the chairman of the committee. the whole of the evidence taken this morning had been omitted.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The evidence taken this morning will be submitted to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Is it before us now ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—All the evidence will not be here until the printers furnish printed copies. The hon. gentleman from Stadacona, as a member of the committee, with due power to examine the witness, put certain questions to Mr. Eldridge which, in the opinion of the committee, were perfectly legal and in the interest of the policy-holders in Canada. The witness refused to answer. All that the hon. gentleman from Stadacona wishes to do is to call the attention of the House to the fact that Geo. D. Eldridge, vice-president of the company, has refused to answer the question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We cannot discuss the report until all the evidence is before us.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I humbly beg to differ from the hon. Secretary of State with reference to that matter.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I object to the motion to adopt the report to-day.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—This is not a regular report ; it is simply a report of an incident in the investigation, which the committtee has a right to submit at any time. The hon. member from Stadacona is perfectly within his right as a member of this House, to bring the matter to the attention of the Senate. This honourable House can deal with the matter as it pleases.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—You want to compel an unwilling witness to give evidence ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The point before the Senate is whether this report shall be considered now or at a future day.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When we have all the evidence.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The hon. Secretary of State has pointed out that it is unfair to ask the House to pass an opinion until they have time to examine the circumstances, because this report is somewhat unusual in character. Therefore, we must proceed with greater care and caution, and when the hon. senator from Welllington made his explanation a moment ago I fancy he misunderstood the hon. Secretary of State. The leader of the House did not refer, I fancy, to the incident which he mentioned, but to the fact that only a portion of the proceedings which surround this incident we are asked to pass judgment on has been reported to the House. Possibly if that explanation had been made by the hon. Secretary of State, the hon. senator from Wellington would not have been called upon to make any statement at all. I am not finding fault with him, because if he felt it applied specially to what he refers to, he was justified in defending himself. The question is whether we are in a position to-day to discuss this report. This is a very delicate and somewhat intricate matter, and it would be well to postpone the consideration of this report to a future day, as the judgment of the House may decide. Certainly the good sense of the House will not dictate that the report should be considered now. when no one outside of those who sat on the committee is familiar with the circumstances surrounding the incident which has elicited this special report from the committee.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I understand that the witness would not answer certain questions. I expected the hon. gentleman would move some resolution referring to the refusal to answer. I do not see how we can discuss the question until the witness answers the questions.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The matter brought before the House is very simple. The committee was going on with the business when the witness refused to answer certain questions. What had we to do? We could only report to the House that the witness refused to answer. We were obstructed in the work we were doing, and the hon. Secretary of State pretends that we come here with a false report.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. I said that they were reading the report, when I came in, and until I knew what it contained it was not fair to ask my approval.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If he does not know what the report contains, what right had he to criticise it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because I understood a portion of the report had been suppressed.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It was not suppressed. We just took the incident which occurred in the committee and made a special report of it to the House. This is not the first time that such a case has come before parliament. In 1891, in the House of Commons, when the Connolly affair came up, Michael Connolly, one of the witnesses, refused to produce certain papers, and hand over his books. What was the course taken on that occasion? The committee reported the fact to the House.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Michael Connolly was a British subject, was he not?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Does the chairman of the committee consent to postpone the report of the committee?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am not speaking about the report of the committee.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I am not addressing the hon. gentleman; I am addressing the chairman of the committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman has no right to interrupt me when I am speaking. I say in 1891 the report of the committee was laid on the table. No motion was made to adopt the report, but the Minister of Justice, Sir John Thompson, made a motion. In this House the government do not seem inclined to take action. They are in the dark, and dare not take their proper position in this House. It is left for private members to vindicate the honour of the Senate. I find in the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons for 1891, page 222, the following entry:

> On motion of Sir John Thompson it was resolved that Michael Connolly, the witness named in the first report of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, be ordered to attend at the bar of this House on Monday next, the 8th inst., at three o'clock in the afternoon.

What had Mr. Connolly refused to do? He had refused to answer a question and to obey the order of the committee to hand over books in his possession. The committee reported the facts to the House of Commons, and the Minister of Justice offered a motion to compel Mr. Connolly to attend at the bar of the House, a few days later. A day was fixed, but, in the meantime, the death of Sir John Macdonald occurred, and it was postponed until after the funeral. Basing my action on this precedent, I move:

> That an order of this House be issued for the attendance on Tuesday the 28th day of June inst., at three o'clock in the afternoon, at the bar of the House, of Geo. D. Eldridge, of the city of New York, now in Ottawa, vice-president of the Mutual Reserve Life Association Co., the witness named in the report of said committee appointed to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada.

The House may take what course seems best when the witness appears at the bar. We shall have the reasons presented then. Our position will be defined by the action of the House when Mr, Eldridge appears and is examined at the bar.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That must stand as a notice.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not give it as a notice of motion

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Otherwise I shall move an amendment that it stand until Tuesday next.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If I understand the hon. gentleman he asks to have it stand as a notice of motion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It can stand as a notice of motion until Tuesday.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not offer it as a notice of motion; it is a motion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. member should let it stand until Tuesday.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—As I understand, the hon. gentleman is entirely out of order in making a motion at all. There is the motion of the chairman to concur in the report, and the hon. gentleman is entirely out of order.

The SPEAKER—The motion of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona is in order. We have a precedent in our own House; in that case the motion was that the report be adopted. The report was adopted first, and then a motion of this character was immediately proposed and passed, inasmuch as there was nothing in the report which required that it be adopted. This report simply states facts, and I do not think there is any necessity for the adoption of the report as preliminary to the introduction of this motion. Further, inasmuch as this is a matter which affects the business of a committee of this House, which cannot be conducted without action, the motion is a proper one. If the motion was that Mr. Eldridge be called to the bar this afternoon, I should see an objection to it; but it is that he be called to the bar next Tuesday, and that gives Mr. Eldridge time to prepare to act then. I am not trying to influence the House, I simply say, as a matter of order, the motion of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona is, in my opinion, perfectly in order, and I therefore shall put the motion.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Notwithstanding the other motion.

The SPEAKER—Yes. I think some disposition should be made of the other motion first. I understand the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Cloran) to move that the report be adopted. He must either withdraw his motion or take this as an amendment.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I fully concur in the remarks of the hon. Speaker and his decision. He has set forth the situation in a perfectly correct manner. There was absolutely no need for myself or any member of the committee to move the adoption of the report. I therefore, with the consent of the House and my seconder, ask permission to withdraw the motion I made. The duty of the committee was to report the facts to the House, and leave any member of the committee to take action. The hon. member from Stadacona has taken action on that report. I therefore, with the consent of the House and my seconder, withdraw my motion.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The assent of the House must be given.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Then I call the attention of the Speaker to the fact that until the motion is withdrawn, which can only be with the consent of the House, I am perfectly in order in saying that the hon. gentleman from Stadacona cannot move his motion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—One motion is an amendment to the other.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—There is no necessity for an amendment; with the concurrence of the House and my seconder, I ask permission to withdraw my motion as unnecessary.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—As seconder I give my consent.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I object to the motion being withdrawn. Let us see where we are.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I submit that this report, if we follow the practice which has prevailed in the past, must stand over, for future consideration. I refer to page 555, of the last edition of Bourinot, with reference to concurrence in reports, where it is laid down that motions for concurrence in reports of select committees are allowed to pass, but it is the general course to give notice, and it is always done when objection is taken by one or more members and a debate is likely to arise. This is a subject which the House should be seized of before discussing it. Out of this report arises a proposed action which is unusual.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I must still call the attention of the House to the importance of this motion. If Mr. Eldridge were a British subject we would have a full right to put him under arrest, but he is a foreigner—I think that is the word—and it would be well to refer the question to a sub-committee to inquire if we have really a right to compel him to appear before the bar of the House. At all events if we discuss this publicly as we have done, these things will be in the papers, and we shall have to-morrow probably articles in the United States and perhaps in the English papers, saying that we are conducting affairs too hastily, and without taking time for reflection. I move an amendment that the consideration of this report be postponed.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I fully concur in what has been said by the hon. member from Montarville. This is a matter of very serious importance. Mr. Eldridge, no doubt, from the position he occupies, is a prominent citizen of the United States. He certainly has been very patient in answering questions of all kinds, giving all necessary information, and cheerfully repeating it over and over again, up to one point. When he is asked to state the salaries of individual officers of the New York Mutual Reserve Fund Association, he declines to answer, because he is advised by his counsel to refuse. I am informed that corporations of that description, insurance companies, banks, loan companies, &c., take a lump sum for the payment of salaries. The annual report does not state what the salaries of the individual officers are. Mr. Eldridge stated to the committee that the Inspector of Insurance, who had the right to go to New York and ascertain any of those facts, if he thought fit to do so, but he was advised by counsel that he should not state the individual salaries. The only object of getting at the salaries is to ascertain the cost of doing business in Canada, and if the lump sum is stated, that is all the information that is necessary. I say it would not be fair treatment, and I submit to some members of that committee and to all members of this House who have heard the investigation, that Mr. Eldridge has been subject to a most absurd examination. He has been told——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I have the floor.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman must sit done when I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie must take his seat until the point of order is decided.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—My point of order is this: the hon. gentleman is making reference to what took place in the committee, and he says the examination in that committee was the most absurd thing he ever heard. He has no right to say that, and I want the ruling of the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I am speaking of the report before the House which deals with that question. If I am out of order the report is out of order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I ask the ruling of the Speaker on that question—he said the examination was most absurd.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do say that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We do not want to have the Senate gagged. The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Landry) thinks he is free to state what he likes as to what was done in the committee, while no one else is permitted to do so.

The SPEAKER—The hon. member can discuss the report of the committee, but not the means taken to arrive at it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I shall refer to what has been admitted in this chamber. A member of the committee has stated that he examined Mr. Eldridge at length about a different company altogether from the one under examination. Why bring a witness from New York to examine him about a company he does not belong to, and then tell him that he is a fraud?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That he is a perjurer.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—As a member of that committee, having taken part in the proceedings since I was appointed to it, I am in a position to say that Mr. Eldridge has been a cheerful witness. He has been examined, cross-examined, and re-cross-questioned. It is a serious matter to bring a citizen of the United States before the bar of this House.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Not a bit.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I agree with the hon. gentleman from Montarville (Hon. Mr. De Boucherville) who says it is a serious matter. There is no comparison betwen the case of Mr. Connolly, which has been cited, and this—no comparison at all. Connolly was charged with fraud as a contractor, having wrongfully secured public money from the Dominion of Canada, and I say we ought to go slow and have the evidence before this House before we attempt to even suggest that this gentleman ought to be brought to the bar of the House to answer questions. I say he has been advised, and I am informed by bank managers and presidents that it is usual for loan companies and institutions of that kind, to do what the Mutual Reserve has been doing, submitting these things in lump sums with no details, and I consider it is drawing the line very tight to say that when this gentleman will not come before us and answer questions which are not answered by bank managers and presidents of other financial corporations, he should be brought before the bar of the House.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—If a committee of this House has the power to summon any witness before it, it does not matter whether they have the power to make the witness give his evidence; they have the right to come back to this House for power. It is in the power of the House to compel this witness to give his evidence. It does not matter if he comes from Jericho.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The question has gone outside of the limits of the report, but not through any fault of mine. I have simply asked the House to endorse the action of the committee, when a certain witness was asked a certain question and declined to answer that question. The opinion of the committee was that the witness was bound to answer the question, but the witness still declined. Our power ceased there: we have no power to imprison a witness or inflict a fine. We have no power to send him to jail for contempt of court.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—That is very fortunate.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We simply report his declining to answer the question, and all the House has to do is to say whether he shall be compelled to answer the question—not to discuss the actions of the committee and say that they were absurd.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—They were absurd.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman has no right to rise in that capacity, and say the action of the committee was absurd. All that the chairman of this committee asked is whether this House will consent to force Mr. Eldridge to answer the question, yes or no, and nothing else. That is the question we have to decide. The hon. senator from Toronto has objected to my withdrawing the motion. I cannot withdraw it if he objects.

The SPEAKER—I did not put the motion of the hon. gentleman, and it is not before the House.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then the next motion before the House is the motion of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona. What is it? He asks this honourable House to call the witness to the bar and ask him why he does not answer, and if he does not answer it is for the House to take action.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—There is a motion that the matter shall be postponed till Tuesday, and I confess that the request of the leader of the government of the House would be sufficient for me to support his proposition, because he is the constitutional leader of the House, and so far as some matters of procedure are concerned, although I do not always see eye to eye with the hon. Secretary of State in everything pertaining to the control of the House, unless under very exceptional circumstances, I should feel constrained to support him, and I shall vote for the amendment of my hon. friend to my right.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—I may say in reference to the report, it sets forth some facts. It says that certain questions were asked of the witness, which he refused to answer. I take it for granted that all the questions that he objected to answer are the ones included in that report, and he gave as a reason for refusing to answer those questions, that there was an officer of this government who had authority to go and examine their books, and another reason that he thought it was unfair to the company to have it spread on the minutes and proceedings of that committee, and go broadcast over the country, as to what salaries the company were paying their officers. I think the committee might very well accede to that, because the government officer can go there and he can furnish any member of that committtee with the information they are trying to obtain. I think, in justice to that company, that he should not be asked to expose something that might injure them in the business they are doing. If he gave it in a lump sum, that is all that is necessary for the protection of the policyholders.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—We have that now.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—Then let them get it through the Superintendent of Insurance, and then each member can see it and it does not become public property and go into public print, and for these reasons believing the witness was perfectly in his right, and acting in the interest of the company, I think we should not take the course suggested.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—We were informed in the first place that the evidence given in the committee to-day was not before the House; that we were not seized of the facts in a sufficient manner to act upon the information. We were also told that the report was emasculated to a very great extent. What are the facts ? The hon. gentleman who moved the first resolution, merely stated what actually took place in the committee. He asked for no further instructions, and nothing else. Those facts were before the House and were read by the hon. gentleman and placed on the record, and everyone knew perfectly well what were the grounds of his moving in the matter. Therefore, I say the House was seized of all the information necessary to enable them to act. Have we not the information that this witness, Eldridge, was deliberately asked several times to answer certain questions. Is that information not before this House ? Is the House not seized of those facts sufficiently to give an intelligent vote ? I regret exceedingly that any hon. gentleman of this House should not be in a position to record his vote one way or the other. So much for the report. I believe that all the necessary information respecting this report is before the House. As far as the charge that the report is being emasculated is concerned, that report was not before the House. It is not a question that is before the House. Therefore, I contend that it is not right that we should discuss this report. Some hon. gentlemen say we should move slowly, that we shall get ourselves into difficulty. Are we in any way to sacrifice the honour and integrity of this chamber by allowing the witness—it may be Eldridge to-day and someone else another day—to refuse to give us the information we are entitled to ? One hon. gentleman says : 'Send an expert to New York.' That might be all right on this occasion, but on some future occasion the witness might be from some other foreign country in Europe, and we could not send an expert for evidence. The hon. gentleman said that the special committees are not permitted to compel a witness to answer every question that is put. Would that be a reasonable proposition ? Are you going to hamper the authority of this legislature in that manner ? If you do you are lowering the dignity of this House, and I for one, feeling that that witness should be obliged to answer the question put to him in the committee, say that he should be called before the bar of this House and compelled to give his reasons. It is said it is customary in banking institutions and organizations that nothing more than the ordinary lump sum is given. We can get the salaries of each and every one of the officers of every society in the Dominion of Canada. It is said in this case that absurd questions were asked. Who is to be the judge of the absurdity of questions—hon. members in this House or the hon. member who asked the information ? It is easy for us to report idle words, but it is difficult for us to feel fully seized of the facts, of whatever question the examiner might feel disposed to ask of a witness. It was not an idle word or absurd question put when he was asked the salary of these officials, and in future, when the report comes up, and his evidence is before us, we will be able to show why these questions were put, and we will be able to show they were not answered, and that they were important questions, and should have been answered. Feeling that way I shall vote for the motion of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat appears to have expressed the mind of a great many hon. gentlemen of this House, that Mr. Eldridge had no right to refuse to answer the questions which were put to him by a member of this committee this morning and that, consequently, upon this report the Senate is not guarding sufficiently its own dignity if it does not take immediate action upon the motion of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona to have this man summoned to the bar of the House. While that opinion may be correct, I feel that I am not sufficiently convinced of the correctness of the position to take the responsibility of voting for a motion of that kind on this occasion, and I should like to remind hon. members of this House that when the question was put which this witness refused to answer he did so under the advice of counsel, and, as I am informed since, under the advice of most eminent counsel. We have not so far had the advice of eminent counsel to assist us in deciding whether the gentleman's course was right or not, and for my own part I think it would be much more becoming the dignity of the Senate if we proceeded, as the hon. Secretary of State has suggested, cautiously in this matter, and only adopt such line of action as has been marked out, after the most careful consideration and after consulting the best constitutional advisers we can find. We must remember that this gentleman is, as my hon. friend has said, a foreigner. How that effects his position here I am not prepared to say.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It makes no difference.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I will not pretend to express any opinion, but as a member of the committee who consented to the report which has been presented to the House, I did not see any reason why the witness should not have answered the questions which were put to him; but he took that course deliberately after taking the advice of eminent counsel, and it would become us now, under those circumstances, to proceed cautiously before we adopt any such steps as are proposed. I am sorry the hon. gentleman from Stadacona did not accede to the request of the hon. Secretary of State, to allow this to stand as a notice of motion, and no doubt the Secretary of State will be able; in the meantime, to confer with the hon. Minister of Justice, and the best legal advisers whom the government have, and give us some light upon the question, so that we can act more intelligently on Tuesday next, and if the matter is pressed to-day I shall certainly vote for the amendment to defer it until Tuesday next.

The amendment was adopted.

DEBATE ADJOURNED.

The Order of the Day being called resuming the adjourned debate on the consideration of the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours to (Bill 94) An Act respecting the Timagami Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Landry.)

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—This Bill is one which stands in my name. A discussion took place on it a few days ago, when I was absent. The object of the Bill is to extend the time for the construction of the road, and to remove from the provisional directors of the company the names of certain persons. A good deal of time was taken in the discussion of this Bill in committee. I am not myself a member of that committee, and I admit that when the Bill was handed to me I knew nothing of its merits so far as the removal of the directors is concernel, and, therefore, took no part in the debate upon it before the committee. With regard to the internal affairs of a chartered company I do not think they should be interfered with by this House. Parlament should not deal with such a matter. If finally, it becomes apparent that the provisional directors of the company cannot work together and there is nothing wrong, let proper evidence of the facts be brought before parliament, but to simply say that an arrangement has been made by them, whereby certain directors are to disappear and that they cannot have a meeting of their board because of the absence of some of their directors, I do not think it is at all a reason why parliament should interfere. Let the company have their meeting and they can then displace any of the directors they feel disposed to drop. It is easy for a gentleman to appear here and make statements that some of the gentlemen have sold out; this House has nothing at all to do with that matter. If they have sold out, then it is a matter for the company to deal with, and not a matter for parliament. Further, one of the provisional directors who is interested says that he has matters of considerable importance to bring to the notice of the committee. That gentleman should be given a hearing. He should have every opportunity of bringing before the committee every matter which he considers important in connection with the Bill, I therefore move:

That the amendments made in committee affecting Bill 94 be not now concurred in, but that said Bill be referred back to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours for further consideration.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—This Bill has been before the Railway Committte on two occasions, occupying practically the whole sitting on each occasion. On the first occasion, after a long discussion, at the request of Father Paradis, a postponement was had in order to enable him to bring a witness who would establish his contention with reference to the position he occupies towards the company. On the second occasion, the witness appeared, and the result of the whole business, of his own statement in writing and of the statement of the witness who was called afterwards, the facts were all brought out, and the House is as able to deal with it now as if the Bill went back to the committee. I shall, therefore, trouble the House with a recital of the circumstances. This company was incorporated some years ago for the construction of a railway in north Ontario. The railway was not built within the time required, and an extension of time was granted, that extension being granted to the same persons who had been incorporated before. They were still unable to make arrangements for the building of the road. Ultimately Mr. Bremner, who was in this country representing capitalists in England, who have purchased and established very large works at Sturgeon Falls for the manufacture of pulp and paper, made an arrangement to purchase the charter and rights of the company from Father Paradis and the other provisional directors, in order that he might place it before capitalists in England, and secure money to build the road, which was of great importance to the large works they have established at Sturgeon Falls. An arrangement was made with Father Paradis. For $100 he sold out his interest in the company, and executed an agreement acknowledging the receipt of the money then paid to him, and which he admits he has retained ever since. It was agreed that if the charter should be sold, there should be paid in addition to that one-thirtieth of the profit realized from the sale of the charter in England, that one-thirtieth to be divided among the other provisional directors, who also had largely sold out their interests in the road. Father Paradis gave the most ample authority to act in his name by power of attorney. Under a power of attorney of that kind, there is no power to represent a provisional director. A man must appear in person at the board, so long as he remains a member of the board. That was the arrangement. He desired the opportunity of calling Mr. Armstrong to sustain his contention, that he was entitled to something more, and he stated there was, contemporaneously with that agreement, another agreement by which Mr. Armstrong was to protect him and have some say in the matter. When Mr. Armstrong was called a document was produced which left it in the hands of Mr. Armstrong to determine what was to be done with reference to the consideration that was to be paid Bremner out of the proceeds of the sale —in other words, what apportionment of the expenses there should be, and in the absence of any apportionment, of course, Father Paradis would be entitled to only one-eighth of the one-thirtieth part of the consideration. It also appeared from Mr. Armstrong that one part of the arrangement was that Father Paradis was to retire at once from the board.. On that, Mr. Bremner went to England to place the matter in the hands of capitalists, who took up the scheme, and who have been ready to go on with the construction of the road. He spent a large sum of money in the preliminary work, and made arrangements for the completion of the road.

It is necessary that the time should be extended, and it is under those circumstances that they come here to parliament and ask for an extension of time, and for a change in the names of the provisional directors who will have control of the expenditure of the money in the construction of the work. It seems to me that this is a proposition that should be received and acted upon. Father Paradis, having agreed to retire from the board, having sold his interest for $100 and this proportion of profit which Mr. Bremner is to account for, should be no longer considered in the matter. The other provisional director whose name is to be stricken out is dead, and the name should therefore be removed, not merely because he cannot attend, but because his name being there he would figure in the number of the quorum required to transact business. Under the circumstances, it seems not unreasonable that this Bill should pass. The agreement covers the whole ground that Father Paradis should drop out of it, that his consideration has been secured to him by Mr. Bremner, and he has since proven his claim by filing it with the trust company on the estate of Mr. Bremner, who died after the sale of the charter in England. Everything, therefore, so far as Mr. Bremner is concerned, is to be carried out, because the estate is liable, and the trustee who holds it would be accountable. Everything the present owners have arranged to be done can be carried out. They have done their part, and are ready to go on and build the road. It is of considerable consequence for the large enterprise at Sturgeon Falls that they should be allowed to go on with the work without interference on the part of people who have ceased, or ought to have ceased, to have any right to take part in the proceedings of the company. Under the circumstances, I oppose the reference back to the committee. The whole of the facts were known; it received a great deal of consideration, and the conclusion was arrived at finally that the only thing to do after hearing the representative of the English capitalists who is here, and who showed the large amount of interest they have taken in the work, and their readiness to go on with the construction of the road, and it is only right that the Bill should pass.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is alleged that Father Paradis sold his rights, and that the bargain is complete. I dispute that. The bargain is not complete. The transaction took place between Father Paradis and Mr. Bremner. Certain conditions were to be fulfilled which have not yet been fulfilled, and parliament is asked to intervene and declare by legislation that Father Paradis is no more a director of the company. Father Paradis, like the other directors of the company, sold out his share under certain conditions. They all sold to Mr. Bremner, and Mr. Bremner had power of attorney to negotiate in England, but there were conditions attached to his power to negotiate which were not fulfilled. The other directors, as soon as Mr. Bremner came back, were taken into the company with the exception of two, and Father Paradis was one of the exceptions. This Bill asks for an extension of time; no one objects to that, but it also asks that the name of Father Paradis be dropped from the provisional board of directors. Have we a right to interfere in a family quarrel? The law is there. If the directors want to dispense with the services of Father Paradis or any other director they have the means in their own hands. Let them meet and choose their own directors, but let us not attempt by law to settle a dispute which is now pending before the courts. My hon. friend from Toronto said that Father Paradis had signed an agreement. That agreement provides that:

In consideration of $100 of lawful money of Canada paid to me (that is, Father Paradis) at or before the signing thereof, on the allotment to me of my share of thirty per cent interest to be allotted among the provisional directors of the Timagami Railway, I do assign &c.

Father Paradis assigned for $100 and thirty per cent, that is nearly one-third, not one-thirtieth. But besides that condition which has never been complied with, Mr. Bremner, who is the party in the case, signed another agreement which I hold in my hand, which contains the following :—

Referring to the agreement of even date, I am willing and agree to pay you on the basis that may be approved by Mr. L. O. Armstrong in addition to the terms named in said agreement.

Mr. Bremner, by this document, confesses that there are other conditions, and that Mr. Armstrong is the party who will settle the whole thing. Well, Mr. Armstrong has never settled that difficulty. The bargain has never been completed, and we are asked to strike out the name of Father Paradis and thereby do what the directors or the shareholders could do themselves. I hope that this Bill will be returned to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours for further consideration, to provide that no injustice shall be done to Father Paradis or any one else. We do want the committee to be neutral in the question, but if the company wants an extension of time, to grant it and let them settle their own internal quarrels among themsives.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Under the rules of the House, I am not permitted to state what occurred in committee, but the motion made to refer the report back to committee simply because the hon. gentleman who makes the motion and who had charge of the Bill was not present, is showing want of confidence in the committee. This matter was not dealt with in a hap-hazard way. The Bill was discussed at two different sittings of the committee and the whole time of the last sitting was given to this particular Bill. Every detail was considered. Father Paradis came there with a witness to substantiate what he complained about, and when the evidence was brought out that very witness warned the people to have nothing to do with Father Paradis. The gentlemen connected with the railway are not the men who formed the railway company originally. A new company bought out the first promotors of this enterprise. It was felt by the first promotors that the name of Father Paradis was not a source of strength, and Father Paradis admits, and the receipt was laid before the committee, that he took $100 to retire from the directorate of the company. He admitted that the money was paid to him on a Sunday, but he waived the legal question that might arise on that account. A bargain was made, which he signed, with regard to his retirement from the provisional directorship. Mr. Bremner said before he would go to England with the charter that he had to remove the name of Father Paradis from the directorate ; otherwise he could not sell the charter. Father Paradis had sold out his position but he was not debarred from receiving a proportion of the proceeds of the sale of this charter, and it was agreed by Mr. Bremner that thirty per cent of the money received from the sale should be equally divided among the other directors on the provisional board.

Now, the hon. gentleman who got the money for this charter got it in good faith, and without the name of Father Paradis, and on the strength that Father Paradis had sold out his directorship. The claim of Father Paradis against the Bremner estate is still good, and as the estate amounts to about $60,000, the security is ample. The hon. gentleman says we are not to interfere is a family quarrel ; that is a good reason why we should not take up the case of Father Paradis, because he has parted with his interest by barter and sale. It has been pointed out in the committee that ever since the commencement of this railway, that Father Paradis has been its most persistent opponent. My hon. friend from Stadacona is incorrect when he says that Father Paradis was the only man removed from the board. Changes were made, and new members were put on the board, and Father Paradis' name was allowed to drop because he had expressed a desire that it should, and because he had sold out. Now he asks this honourable House to reinstate him after he had sold out all his interests in the directorship. This legislation will not deprive Father Paradis and his co-directors of the thirty per cent of the amount paid for the charter. I understand the English capitalists paid $12,000 for the charter. They were fools to pay it, because they could have come to parliament and got a charter for nothing. However, Mr. Bremner agreed to give his colleagues 30 per cent of the proceeds, which would amount to $3,600. According to the undertakings given by Mr. Bremner to Father Paradis, that amount should be divided according to Mr. Armstrong's arrangement. They are applying for this $3,600, and I hope they will get it. No member of either side of the House has any desire to deprive Father Paradis of his fair proportion of this $3,600. When this report was presented to the House, a motion was made by the hon. member from Stadacona to hold it up, and I therefore move that the report of the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours be now concurred in.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The amendment cannot be a mere reversal of the main motion.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The motion which was made before was to concur in the report. Then the hon. member from Stadacona moved that the consideration of the report be postponed.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—What the hon. member from Stadacona asked for, was a postponement of a consideration of the report, and that motion was never concurred in.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—With regard to the suggestion made by the hon. member from Toronto, the motion to which he referred is not before the House, is not on record, is not formally dealt with at all, and therefore is the same as if it had not been made.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I ask the Speaker's ruling with regard to it.

The SPEAKER—A good deal depends upon the condition of the record. But if the motion which the hon. gentleman from Toronto says he thinks he made, was actually made, then the motion moved by the hon. gentleman from Rockland would be an amendment to that. If no motion of that kind was made, then the hon. gentleman's amendment would be out of order. There was no motion before the House to amend.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Would there not be a motion before the House to adopt the report ?

The SPEAKER—The chairman of the committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours reported the Bill, and some hon. gentleman moved that the report be concurred in ; but I do not think the question was actually put from the chair, and it was suggested that the consideration of the report be postponed, because the hon. gentleman from Rockland was not here ; and the same thing happened when the matter came up again. The hon. gentleman from Stadacona asked that the matter stand over until the hon. gentleman from Rockland was present. Now he is here and substantially, of course, the question is whether the report of the committee be adopted or whether this amendment shall be adopted.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—It seems to me that the order as it appears on the paper to-day sets forth the whole question. It is a resumed debate upon that report. There is no motion before the House except the one which I made.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I was in the Railway Committee when this question was fully discussed. Father Paradis had every opportunity of presenting his case. If my hon. friend in presenting the resolution he has to-day for a reference of this Bill was prepared to state before this House that new evidence had come to light that it would be well in connection with this Bill to place before the committee, there might be some reason why we should seriously consider whether it would be proper on our part to refer the Bill back, but every single point that has been referred to by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona was fully threshed out in committee. I cannot see any ground at all for referring the Bill back to committee, unless my hon. friend is prepared to show to the House that things have since transpired which can be brought forward to prove that a great injustice has been done to this man. I do not think we should interfere with the bargain. I have no doubt Mr. Bremner's estate is equal to any covenant he entered into, and I cannot see what can be gained by a further reference, for the committee, after fully threshing out the whole question and considering every point that has been mentioned to-day, decided to make this report and it is now before the House. I do not see on what ground we should refer it back.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—This honourable House has given a good deal of attention to this particular Bill. It was before us in 1898, and again in 1900. The records of the House show that they spent two full days discussing this question. Father Paradis was here opposing the legislation that the promoters of the Bill wanted at that time. Matters occupied a good deal of time in the other House. The Bill came from the other House and the Senate made certain amendments to it—and I must say that when Bills come from the other House and are amended and are sent back, the custom of the House is to accept our amendments; but, on that occasion, they felt that they could not agree to the amendments. They were looking after the interests of the company, and if they were going to give them a Bill at all they wanted to give them one that was useful. They felt that the interests of the company would suffer by the amendments made by the Senate; that they were made only for the purpose of blocking the enterprise and to work a villainy. They asked the Senate to reconsider their amendments, and they were taken out of the Bill. I feel that—and I speak in all fairness of Father Paradis—in the interests of the company his name should be stricken from the Bill. I think it is doing him a kindness to have him removed from the board where his colleagues do not want him. It would be doing him and them a kindness. It will place the company in a position that they can go and carry out the completion of the road. For that reason, I will support the amendment.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—The argument advanced by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken should operate in the very opposite way from that in which he advanced it. If one member differs from the rest of the board, is that board to come to parliament and ask us to legislate in order to put out a person who is a member of the board? I say it is most extraordinary legislation and should not be countenanced by parliament. There is a proper place for settling matters of that kind and that is before the courts, and I think the arguments that have been advanced here respecting this matter ought to tend in the opposite direction from that advanced by hon. gentlemen on the other side. The fact that this legislation has been before parliament at three different times, and that at each time parliament has rejected such a Bill as was attempted to be passed, is a very good reason that we should again follow the same course. If this gentleman has not at this moment any interest in the charter or in the road which has been chartered, it is very easy for those who are holders of the charter and who are members of the corporation to put him off if he deserves it, or if it is in the interest of the company that he should be put out of the board; but it is not good legislation for this parliament to legislate a man off a board to which he was elected, and on which he certainly had a right to be as long as his name was in the charter granted to that railroad.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before the motion is put to the House, I wish to say I am a member of the committee, and attended one of the meetings for a short time. I was called away, and was not able to hear the whole statement of the case. As far as I did hear it, it seemed to me to be rather complicated, and it was rather difficult to find out the merits of the case as between Father Paradis and Mr. Craig, who, I think, represents the other interest in the question; but to my mind, there is one consideration which appears almost conclusive, and that is that the hon. gentleman who had charge of the Bill, who proposed it to the House and had charge of it in the committee, the hon. gentleman from Russell, a gentleman who has had a great deal of experience in such matters as this, after the Bill went through the committee, and this action was taken, on a careful survey of the situation, thinks that justice had not been done, and he moves that it be sent back to the committee. Under the circumstances, and from the regard which we all have for the opinion and judgment of the hon. member from Ottawa, I think this step should be taken.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman from Marshfield has just stated that because the member who had charge of the Bill asks to have it referred back, the House should refer the report. The hon. gentleman explained to the House a few moments ago that he was not at the committee, and was not aware of the arguments advanced before that committee.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—He is not a member of the committee.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No, but everybody on the committee knows this matter was debated at length, that all the evidence we have here was heard, that it was sent back for one week to afford Father Paradis an opportunity to bring a witness there, and his witness came, and his evidence was really against Father Paradis.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—He wrote letters to the gentleman who owned and controlled the charter, which he produced, warning him that he had better have Father Paradis off the board. That letter was read by a gentleman who had put his money into the charter, and expected to build the road. It seems to me nothing can be gained by sending the Bill back to the committee. We had put in two hours on it, listening to all the evidence, and the conclusion was practically unanimous.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—It is quite true that I did not hear the second day's proceedings in the committee, but I heard the first day's proceedings, and what I am arguing for it not what one gentleman or another may have said. What I am arguing for is a sound principle, that parliament having granted a charter should not step in and interfere with the internal matters of a company so chartered. I am not defending Father Paradis at all, nor finding fault with any one on the other side, but I contend firmly for the principle that parliament should not interfere with the internal affairs of the company in this respect. It is evident to every one that there is a quarrel between them. This parliament granted the charter, and under it certain provisional directors are named. It is quite in order for that company to meet. They have never met. They admit that. When they meet they can arrange their own affairs, and I hold that it is entirely improper for parliament to interfere. The hon. gentleman from Lincoln made the statement that I was disrespectful to the committee in my action. I am not here to represent the views of any committee. I have a right to my own opinion, and it is my opinion, and always will be my opinion, that parliament should not be exactly as paternal as parliament sometimes assumes to be. The internal affairs of a company should be dealt with by the members of the company, and parliament should not interfere at all until it becomes evident that it is absolutely necessary in the interests of the people that it should do so. There is no evidence that that is the condition in this case.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I want to call attention——

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The hon. gentleman has spoken.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I have a right to speak to the amendment. What I want to point out is this : that the general rule or principle that the hon. gentleman from the Ottawa district has cited is a very sound one, and I should like to see it applied; but this is entirely different. This is not the case of a company coming to have a director removed. It is the case of a company who has had a charter with this gentleman's name in it, and the time for the operation of the charter has expired or is about to expire, and parliament is practically granting a new charter for a new company, and it says the conditions and terms on which they should grant it is without that name in it.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—Just before the hon. gentleman from Rockland rose to speak I was about to express the same opinion as he has placed before the House. I entirely agree with the position he takes.

The SPEAKER—It is moved by the hon. gentleman from Rockland that this Bill be referred back to committee, and then it is moved in amendment by the hon. gentleman from Lincoln that the report be concurred in.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The main motion is the concurrence.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Hear, hear.

The SPEAKER—I quite agree that in an ordinary case, the hon. gentleman would be right ; but this Bill appears to be singular in various respects, and as a matter of fact no motion was made for concurrence in the report. Some hon. gentleman moved, but the motion was not seconded, and no question was put, and some hon. gentleman —the Hon. Mr. Tessier, I think—moved that the further consideration of the report be postponed till a future day. When the consideration of the amendment came up today it was moved by Hon. Mr. Edwards—and that was the first motion—that the report be referred back to the committee. Then it was perfectly legitimate for the hon. gentleman from Lincoln to move that the amendments be concurred in.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Allow me a word in explanation.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Order. The Speaker has given his ruling.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I want to know if there is any motion at all?

Hon. MEMBERS—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If there is no motion at all why should—

Hon. MEMBERS—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman has the consent of the chair.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If that Bill was in the orders of the day, does that fact not suppose there was a motion to refer it?

The SPEAKER—The report got on our order paper from the motion moved by the Hon. Mr. Tessier, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Landry, that the further consideration of the report be postponed, and it was postponed, so that the hon. gentleman from Rockland might be present; the hon. gentleman from Rockland being present today and having to deal with the report of the committee, moved that the report be referred back to the committee, and then the hon. gentleman from Lincoln moved that the amendments recommended by the committee be concurred in.

The House divided on the amendment, which was carried on the following division:

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I paired with the Hon. Mr. Sullivan.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON moved the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. I do not think the hon. gentleman has a right to make that motion when the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill is here.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—The Bill is the property of the House, and after the report of the committee has been adopted anyone can move that the Bill be proceeded with.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—It seems to me to be futile to offer any further opposition. I am not going to raise any objection.

The Bill was read the third time and passed.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (123) An Act to incorporate the Kingston and Dominion Central Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Sullivan.)

Bill (126) An Act respecting certain Patents of Siegfried Gironcoli.—(Hon. Mr. Poirier.)

Bill (130) An Act respecting the Huron and Ontario Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Cobourg.)

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

Hon. Mr. LOVITT moved the second reading of Bill (119) An Act to amend the Canada Temperance Act.

Hon. Sir JOHN CARLING—Will the hon. gentleman explain the Bill?

Hon. Mr. LOVITT—It is a copy of the old law with the exception of the words 'With or without hard labour.' It gives the magistrate the option of inflicting hard labour.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This Bill has passed the House of Commons, and it is asked for by a considerable number of persons in the provinces, particularly in Nova Scotia, where the Canada Temperance Act is in force, and in the county from which the promoter of the Bill comes, I am informed, a license has not been issued for over forty years. At the same time, there is a pretty general sale of liquor by men of straw, who are put up at the instance of other parties, and who, when called upon to pay a fine, are quite unable to do so. This Bill, therefore, provides a month's imprisonment for the first offence. Under the law as it stood the penalties are not different from the penalties under this Bill. It is simply the substitution for the earlier penalties of imprisonment. Under the law as it stands, a man had to be convicted, I think, twice before he could be imprisoned. I will read the words of the statute as they stand now. They are exactly the same down to the twelfth line. The clause of the present Bill reads as follows :

100. Every one who, by himself, his clerk, servant or agent, exposes or keeps for sale, or directly or indirectly, on any pretense or by any device, sells or barters, or in consideration of the purchase of any other property, gives to any other person any intoxicating liquor, in violation of the second part of this Act, shall, on summary conviction, be liable to a penalty for the first offence of not less than fifty dollars, or imprisonment for a term not exceeding one month, with or without hard labour, and for a second offence to a fine of not less than one hundred dollars, or imprisonment for two months, with or without hard labour, and for the third and every subsequent offence, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding four months, with or without hard labour.

This proposes to give the power of imprisonment at the earlier stages, not waiting for the commission of the third offence. The penalties are the same, fifty dollars for the first, and a hundred dollars for the second. The only change really is in the imprisonment, the imprisonment being rather at the earlier stages than on the third condition.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—My attention has been called to the fact that this gives very arbitrary powers to magistrates without any appeal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It does not change the law as it stood with reference to the question of appeal in any way.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I was told that it did.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. Under the law as it stood, imprisonment could not be imposed except after the second offence. It must be on the third charge that imprisonment should be imposed. This Bill proposes to allow the convicting magistrate to impose imprisonment on the first and second offences.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is that a government Bill ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is not. As I happen to be familiar with the law, Mr. Lovitt asked me to speak about it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I should like to say a word or two with regard to the principle of the Bill before it is endorsed. I understand it went through the House of Commons without any scrutiny and it is now in the hands of the hon. senators.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—Where did you understand that ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—From parties interested on both sides of the question—those who want the amendment and those who are opposed to it. At the present moment I speak not only on behalf of those who are opposed to the amendment of the law, but from my experience in regard to the administration of license law. The amendment proposes to place in the hands of the magistrates who are charged with the administration of the license law, whether under the Scott Act or under the provincial license law, it proposes to put in their hands power which would be dangerous. I am not speaking now from personal experience but from what I have heard from persons who are suffering from the administration of justice. Statements are made that magistrates in certain counties where the Scott Act is enforced, have too much power already. This amendment proposes to give them further power, namely, to send a man to jail with hard labour. To-day their powers are restricted to fine and imprisonment, or both. These defendants can be sentenced to hard labour—they cannot be called criminals because that has been decided in Quebec, in a case in which I took part, that a man violating the license law is not a criminal. I was prosecutor in a case in which I asked the court to have the defendant sentenced to the penitentiary on that ground, but the court would not hold with me. It is a serious thing to put in the heads of ordinary magistrates such a power. I have here a statement made on behalf of the interests which are opposed to this amendment. It is a circular sent forth by the Nova Scotia Hotel Association. I suppose these men have some rights, as well as the men who are favouring the amendment. I will not assume responsibility for the statement, but this is the statement which they send out and for which they are responsible :

> We further beg leave to point out that there is no appeal from the magistrate's court, who, in most cases, is not graced with legal acumen, but is selected mostly for his known sympathy with the prosecution and has been known on several occasions to carry a typewritten judgment, in favour of the inspector, with him for immediate use after the trial. His prejudices being one-sided, he frequently convicts without evidence worthy of the name.

Now, that is a very serious charge made against the magistracy of this country.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—Who is making it?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The Hotel Association of Nova Scotia, signed by D. McDermott, secretary, I suppose a responsible body. We have a similar association in Ontario, the Licensed Victuallers, a very respectable body, who cater to the wants of the public, and I suppose the Nova Scotia Hotel Association is on a similar basis, and commands the respect of the community in which they reside. This is the statement made by that association, so that I do not think it is proper to ask this House to consent at once to endorse the principle of increasing the power of magistrates who are able to act this way. I am speaking on behalf of people I do not know, but I like fair-play and justice. I know in our own province, Quebec, there is great repugnance to inflicting upon the defendant in a liquor case the full penalty of the law. I know in my own case, as prosecutor, the judges have asked me time and again to allow the minimum penalty to be inflicted. It depends upon circumstances whether the offence against the law is a serious or a trivial one. A hotel-keeper who will give liquor to a child or a drunken man is not in the same position as the hotel-keeper who will sell liquor to a man who comes off the train at three o'clock in the morning, and wants a stimulant ; and we cannot put these discretionary matters in the law. So that to increase the power of magistrates who are openly charged before the Senate and before the public as being incompetent to administer the law as it exists, would not be proper.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This Bill only interests, directly at all events, such parts of the country as have adopted the Canada Temperance Act. I believe that is not the state of the affairs in the larger provinces of Quebec and Ontario. In Quebec the evil effects which my hon. friend appears to anticipate, will have no effect because the Canada Temperance Act is not adopted there. I come from a province where we have the Canada Temperance Act in force in all the counties, and I may say there is a very strong feeling amongst the people of the province of Prince Edward Island in favour of making the provisions of that law more stringent than they are.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not know that the present amendment has been suggested from my province in any way. I have not heard that it was, but I do know from the knowledge I have of the people there, and their views on this question, that they regard this as a very useful amendment in helping them to carry out what is the will of the people of the province of Prince Edward Island or the will of the majority of them.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—I come from a province in many parts of which we have the Canada Temperance Act. In the city to which I belong we have had it for twenty-two years, and I must say it has worked very badly. Before we had the Canada Temperance Act we had thirteen houses where liquor was sold under licenses. Under the Canada Temperance Act we have fifty people selling without license, and they have been at it for twenty-three years. It is going from bad to worse, and I am perfectly satisfied that instead of decreasing drunkenness is increasing. I see many people now under the influence of liquor, particularly on Sunday, minors passing in the place where I live, half dozen at a time, drunk, and I never saw it under the old license law. They have made every effort to improve the condition of affairs. They have sent some to Dorchester ; they have fined others, and imprisoned some, yet still it is worse than ever. What are the facts ?

In the first election, in 1884, the Temperance Act was carried by a majority of thirty-one. In a district (Ward No. 5) where the majority of the liquor-sellers were, the vote stood forty-one to ten. Those people were perfectly satisfied ; it suited them down, because they knew that under a license law they could not get a license, but under the Scott Act they could sell without license, and they have been selling. Who are the people that are now fined ? The respectable hotel-keepers, who run houses to accommodate the public ; while the illicit sellers are not touched. In Moncton they have an arrangement by which they fine the leading hotel people fifty dollars every quarter, which is equal to a license fee of $200 a year. In Fredericton they are doing the same thing, and all over the provinces the Act is a dead failure. It is the same in Prince Edward Island, as the returns show. There is more rum brought into Prince Edward Island now than ever there was. In some parts of Nova Scotia, where the Scott Act is in force, it is a dead letter. It is so in Cape Breton. It is a perfect humbug to amend this law. Under the present Act there is a fine of not less than fifty dollars for the first offence, and this law is to be administered by the magistrates throughout the country, many of whom, as we know, are irresponsible people, and it is proposed to give these magistrates power to add to the fine, imprisonment at hard labour. Look at the position in which that puts a respectable man.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—A man who violates the law is not respectable.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—The proprietor of the Queen's hotel in Fredericton was put in jail for violating the law, and he had a perfect levee in jail, and the very first man that called on him was the Anglican Bishop. What is the use of having a law on the statutes which is a dead letter ? For a second offence, the fine is the same as for the first, but for the third offence there is added two months' imprisonment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—For the third offence the punishment is the same as the present law.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—They have added two months. It was two months' imprisonment, now it is 'not exceeding four months.' It is a bad Act.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—I am sorry I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman from Northumberland.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—I am sorry too.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—This assertion that the sale of liquor has been increased because of the Temperance Act is all nonsense, and is always the argument used by those who violate the law. In the county from which I come the Act has been in force for years.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—How does it work ?

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—Very well. Those who violate the law say there is more liquor sold than before we had the law, but that is absurd. In any business the more public you make it, the more business you do. The more stores you have, the more you will sell, and the man who says that because you have a more stringent law there will be more people to buy liquor and get drunk, states what is absurd. Some hon. members besides myself have received a circular from the Nova Scotia Hotel Association. I consider the sending of such a circular to hon. members a piece of impropriety. Some of the members of this association are violators of the law, and they are the people who are anxious to have the Scott Act repealed. The circular states :

> We further beg leave to point out that there is no appeal from a magistrate's court, who is not in most cases graced with legal acumen, but is selected mostly for his known sympathy with the prosecution, and has been known on several occasions to carry a typewritten judgment in favour of the inspector with him for immediate use after the trial. His sympathies being one-sided, he frequently convicts without evidenec worthy the name.

I never heard of such a thing. I do not believe there is a justice in the county where I live who would be guilty of carrying a typewritten judgment in his pocket, ready to be delivered before he heard the evidence. I am sorry to have to make these remarks, but they are called for by the language of the circular. Who are the people who are anxious about this ? The circular says :

> We further beg leave to point out the visionary character of the men who are hounding on legislation of this sort.

What are the difficulties now? When these hotelmen are convicted of a first offence, and afterwards of a second offence, they drop out and hire a young man to take charge of the bar. He will be fined for a first and second offence also. They never will get a third conviction against him. For the first and second offence they go to the prosecutor and say, 'we accept service and will confess judgment,' and then they change bar-keepers, and the trouble is you can never catch them on a third offence. They are afraid that the magistrates may have the power to imprison them at hard labour for violating the law. I approve of the Bill and shall give it my support.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—We should be very careful about adopting this clause. The Scott Act is a permissive law; each municipality must adopt it before it goes into force. It has been adopted in many parts of Canada; if we now amend its provisions and declare that a first violation of the law renders the offender liable to imprisonment, we insert a penalty which the law did not contain when it was adopted by the people.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is a good point.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—If we so amend a law, and a case arises under it which is carried to the higher courts. I am inclined to think the conviction would be quashed on the ground that the conviction was under a law which was not adopted by the people. Can parliament amend a permissive law of that kind and insert provisions which have not been adopted by the people? The point is well worthy of consideration. I have known cases where men have been, unfortunately, tempted to sell liquor in violation of the law. If those men could on a first offence be sent to jail for thirty days, it would be a very serious and arbitrary act. I do not like the idea of giving a police magistrate power to impose such a penalty.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—We have had a trial of the Scott Act. The people of Ontario must have had some wisdom when they tried it and kicked it out. In the province of Quebec the experience has been the same, and they now echo the sentiment of the song:

Hang his eyes if ever he tries to rob a poor man of his beer.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR.

Instead of passing this Bill, it would be better if the government introduced a Bill to repeal the present Act, and if such legislation is considered expedient to pass a law applicable to all parts of Canada alike. Is it right to give the people of Ontario the power to decide what they shall eat, drink and wear and deny to the people of the maritime provinces the same freedom, if by a catch vote this Act can be brought into force? By the revenue returns, we find that the consumption of liquor is increasing in this country and it must be used surreptitiously in many parts of the Dominion where the Scott Act is in force. The government have no objection to drawing a revenue from the importation and sale of liquor, and they should not sanction such legislation as this. This measure proposes to put a terrible instrument in the hands of country magistrates, whose intentions may be good, but whose prejudice might lead them to render unfair decisions from which, as I understand, there is no appeal. It might often happen that a worthy man who furnishes ale to his guests, might be sent by a vindictive magistrate to prison, as was done in Fredericton in the case of Mr. Edwards, a very respectable man. We know how it works in the maritime provinces. The fines are imposed as the substitute for license fees. I am not justifying the use of liquor; I am objecting to putting an arbitrary power in the hands of the magistrate. Under present conditions a respectable hotelkeeper pays fines amounting to $200 a year; under this Bill, by threatening imprisonment, the fines could be increased to $300 per year. I ask the hon. Secretary of State to take time to consider this question, and the promotor of the Bill to allow it to stand until next week.

Hon. Mr. LOVITT—It has already been hanging over for some time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It can be discussed in committee.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I am opposed to the principle of the Bill, and I do not want to affirm the principle by voting for a second reading. I should have to ask the House to divide on the question whether it is right to give a magistrate the arbitrary power of sending a man to jail because he has sold liquor. It is not a question whether the temperance principle is right or wrong, but whether such an arbitrary act may be committed under a law which is in force, in my opinion, unfortunately, in the maritime provinces. My friends tell me that it is not working well, that it would be better to have a high license Act, and not lead people to drink in secret. Let us have a high license Act and proper inspection, and see that only good liquors are sold. I shall move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—In view of the very serious point raised by the hon. senator from Wellington, I think it would be in the interest of the administration of the law to submit the point to the Department of Justice whether this amendment is ultra vires or not. We should have an opinion on that before passing the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOVITT—The Minister of Justice put this through the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—This point was not raised.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that when the House adjourns it stand adjourned until Tuesday at three o'clock.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I would point out that our witnesses are here at great disadvantage to themselves, and great loss of money and time. They are prepared to go on with the investigation into the condition of the Mutual Reserve Fund Association. They would have gone off to-day at four o'clock to their homes had they known that this adjournment was to be proposed.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman has a right to object to the adjournment.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Then I object.

The Senate adjourned until Monday next.

THE SENATE.

ICE-BREAKERS ON THE ST. LAWRENCE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL rose to :

Call the attention of the government to the following despatch from Montreal, published in the Toronto 'Globe,' of the 17th May :

(Special despatch to the 'Globe.'

Montreal, May 16.—Captain Spain and Lieut.-Colonel Anderson, of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, held a conference here to-day with a number of harbour commissioners and shippers in order to get an expression of opinion regarding the government's proposal to place ice-breakers on the St. Lawrence to prolong the season of navigation. Captain Spain drew attention to the fact that $300,000 had been placed in the Dominion estimates for an ice-breaker. While nothing had been decided upon definitely, it was thought that a vessel measuring 200 feet long, 43 feet beam and drawing 18 feet of water would about fill the bill. He was of opinion that Armstrong, Whitworth & Company, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, would be the builders, as they had more experience than any other company, they being the builders of the Russian ice-breaker 'Ermak' and other large vessels.

Colonel Anderson remarked that it would require a larger vessel to do the work below Quebec, and intimated that the government had in hand the question of placing a vessel of sufficient capacity to keep the ice out of Cape Rouge.

Mr. Thomas Harling, of the Canadian Ocean and Inland Company, who recently returned from England, said that he had a conversation with Mr. Miller, of Armstrong, Whitworth & Company, the builders of the 'Ermak,' and that the experience with these ice-breakers had been very satisfactory indeed. He suggested that with the ice-breaker might be also a wrecking steamer, the only additional equipment required being pumps.

A resolution was passed, approving of the scheme for the winter season of 1904-5, the government to have at least one breaker.

And inquired :

1. Whether it is the intention of the government to purchase ice-breakers ?
2. If so, how many ?
3. Have tenders been asked for in connection with the construction of these ice-breakers ?
4. If so, was any Canadian ship-building firm asked to tender, and if so, what firm or firms were asked to tender ?
5. If tenders have not yet been asked for, is it the intention of the government to invite tenders from Canadian ship-builders ?
6. Has the government committed itself to any firm or individual to purchase one or more of these ice-breakers ?
7. If no Canadian ship-building firm has been asked to tender for one or more of these ice-breakers, what are the reasons why such tenders were not asked ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answers to the hon. gentleman's question are as follows :

1. Yes.
2. Two.
3. Yes.
4. No Canadian ship-building firm was asked to tender, for the reason that after consulting with the Canadian firms and stating that these vessels must be ready and on their stations on or before the first of December, it was deemed quite impossible for any firm in this country to be able to carry out the contract in such a short time :

moreover, it was considered advisable to get tenders from firms which have a specialty of building this kind of vessel.

5. When another ice-breaker is required, it is the intention of the government to have the same constructed in Canada. I may say here the proposal of the minister was that on the upper lakes there should be an ice-breaker or two and that they would, necessarily, be built in Canada.

6. Yes. One of these boats is under construction, to be delivered at Quebec on the 1st of December, 1904.

Question No. 7 is answered by No. 4.

I understood they were rather for the lower St. Lawrence, and another reason which I heard given, which is not in these answers, was that they necessarily could not pass through the lakes—those that would be required in the lower St. Lawrence. If I understood the minister correctly the ice-breakers required for the upper lakes would be built in Canada.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Where were the Russian ice-breakers constructed ? In England ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I really do not know.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Under the circumstances, I suppose there would be no objection to bring down the correspondence. I therefore move, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Ferguson :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General ; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid on the table of the Senate, copies of all correspondence with ship-builders and others, relating to the purchase, or building of ice-breakers, for use on the St. Lawrence, or other Canadian waters.

My reasons for asking these questions were, first, that I am not aware that any appropriation has been yet made by parliament authorizing the purchase of these ice-breakers. If such be the case, it is only another evidence of the government taking upon itself the responsibility of entering into contracts for large amounts of money without authority of parliament. I might, however, be in error, but I think I am not. If ice-breakers are to be obtained I cannot understand why the Canadian ship-builders should not have had an opportunity of stating whether they could furnish them. We do know that the ship-building establishments in Canada have a hard struggle to keep in existence ; that they have a difficulty in finding sufficient employment at the price received for the construction of ships when they come in competition with those from other countries. Under the circumstances, the Canadian ship-builders should have an opportunity at least of tendering for this work. The English ships built under the Merchants' Shipping Act have a right to come in without payment of duty of any kind. Formerly, vessels bought in the United States were taken to the British ports and there entered under the British registry. If my recollection serves me right the present government have given another interpretation to the law in that respect. I know that during the time of the late government that matter was considered very fully, and under correspondence that took place under the interpretation of the law by law officers of the Crown at that time it was thought we had not the power or authority to exact duty under the circumstances to which I call the attention of the House. While there can be no doubt that under the Merchants Shipping Act, an imperial Act, British vessels could come in without payment of duty, it was a grave question whether a United States vessel or a vessel built and owned in the United States could be taken to a British port and there registered and admitted free of duty as a British vessel. I know that was the interpretation put upon the law at that time, and it was acted upon. Expressing my own individual opinion, I am very glad to see that the government have taken this course, because it is another step towards protecting the ship-building industry of Canada. There are ice-breakers on the Detroit river which were built in Canada, I understand, and if they could be built in Canada why should not an opportunity be given to Canadian ship-builders to supply whatever may be required for use on the St. Lawrence ? There may be, as the hon. gentleman has pointed out, a question as to whether the ships of the size that would be required could be taken through the St. Lawrence canals to the lower ports. The government have shipyards where they build their own dredges and do other work of that kind. We have in Ontario, the Polson works and the Bertram works, Toronto, and a ship-building establishment at Collingwood, besides the government establishment, and some of them have already built ice-breakers. However, when we get the correspondence we can better judge the reasons why Canadian ship-builders have been ignored. I suppose there are ship-building establishments in the maritime provinces. Whether they have the appliances necessary for constructing ice-breakers of the character required to keep the St. Lawrence open, I am not prepared to say, but I think in all cases of this kind where Canadian industries can be employed, the work should be given to them. I am glad to learn that if ice-breakers should be required for the upper lakes they will be constructed by Canadian ship-builders. I am quite satisfied that if our Canadian establishments were given sufficient time they would be able to supply the government with all the vessels of this kind that may be required.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The policy of the government is quite in accord with the line my hon. friend has indicated, and it was only exceptional circumstances that prevented the government following it in this instance. A few months ago an agitation arose as to the propriety of keeping the St. Lawrence river open below Quebec. It was thought that by doing so we could extend the season of navigation. That was the first suggestion that prompted the making of the order, and the minister entrusted with the order, as we are advised here, ascertained that the Canadian firms would not be in a position to deliver ice-breakers as early as they would be really needed. If they are built on the upper lakes there would be a difficulty in getting them to the lower St. Lawrence. There will no doubt be more ice-breakers required if we are to lengthen the season of navigation on Lake Superior. It has been suggested that by the use of ice-breakers the lake ports could be kept open ten or fifteen days longer in the fall. Even that would be a very valuable extension—and ice-breakers might be built for that purpose on the upper lakes. Speaking from my own experience, the best ice-breaker that I have ever seen was that used at the Straits of Mackinaw. I have gone across the Straits in mid-winter when there was a solid mass of ice to be broken through, even at the docks, before the vessel could get out, she had to break a way for herself and work out in that most difficult channel. It struck me that nothing could be stronger or more effective than the ice-breaker I saw there. In regard to the other question, the Merchants Shipping Act, my hon. friend is aware that owing to representations made by the present government the law has been changed. Formerly it was found that a foreign vessel registered in a colony such as Newfoundland, for instance, could come into Canada and compete for Canadian trade. That seemed very improper, and the objection to it became apparent at last, and we were able to remove the objection.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The law has not been changed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think the statute is.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The interpretation of the law has been changed. Has there been any appropriation taken by parliament or authority given for entering into these contracts ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There are now, I think, two or three Bills that really have not been printed yet, and I presume the appropriation will be found in one of those Bills when they come down. The supplementary estimates for the coming year, have not been printed yet and I hope they will contain something of the kind.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The government has taken the responsibility of entering into contracts involving the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars without consulting parliament ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have confidence enough in parliament that they will vote the money.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

The Order of the Day being called :

Resuming the adjourned debate on the second reading (Bill 119) An Act to amend the Canada Temperance Act.—(Hon. Mr. Domville.)

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE said : When I moved the adjournment of the debate it was not with any view of causing obstruction, nor was it with any view of expressing an opinion as to the legality of this clause until

I could consult with some legal men. It was not unreasonable to expect that those responsible for the legislation of parliament should have time to think what they were doing, and what effect such legislation as this might have on the public or on individuals. I have not changed my mind on this subject since I spoke last. It strikes me that if parliament allows the manufacture and sale of liquor in the country and derive a large revenue from the six or eight million gallons of spirits manufactured by our distillers, it is somewhat unfair that a portion of the community which may be influenced by prejudice are to be allowed to trample on the rights of others. This is a permissive Act and we know how it has worked where it has been tried. It has proved a failure in Ontario and Quebec. Evidently a majority of the people think, whether wisely or unwisely, that they should have a right to use spirit. I for one should be very sorry to set myself up as a judge as to what people should drink, in view of the fact that Her Majesty used liquor and the present King uses it. Why should we interfere with a poor man's chance of earning an honest livelihood, by keeping a hotel and supplying his guests with refreshments. I have been round a good deal, and I find that guests do not stay long at a temperance hotel. In my own county the Act has been adopted, and we all know how difficult it is to repeal the Act when it is once in force. People do not choose to go to the front and express an opinion against the temperance people. I respect the clergy to a considerable extent, but I do not follow them very far. I would find it difficult to decide which denomination I would belong to. All of them have something good, and so it is with this temperance question. One man says if you drink alcohol it is bad for you, that is as a beverage, but if you take it as a medicine it is all right. In our county, if you want liquor as a medicine you can get all you want.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—And sometimes more than you want.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Yes, sometimes. In this age of enlightenment, with the Liberal party in power, it seems strange that people should be found anywhere who seek the power of arbitrarily coercing their brothers. Why should they undertake to reclaim the world ? Is the ordinary man who differs in opinion from them to be made the victim of some magistrate who would send him to jail at hard labour, because he supplies his guests with liquor ? There is a good deal to be said on the liquor question. The government should appoint inspectors to see that only good liquor is sold. Under this wretched Act young men who might, perhaps, be satisfied with one drink at a bar, secure it by the bottle now, and do not stop until the bottle is finished. Why this legislation is to be forced upon unwilling people I cannot understand. I have no doubt by the legal advice I have obtained that if this measure is in force there will be no end of litigation. There is a new plea coming up. They say the law which they voted for is not the law which will be in force under this amendment, and there will be five hundred cases right away in regard to this matter. Every man who is fined will set that up as a defence. Would it not be better for us to do one of two things ? If this honourable body feels that there should be prohibition, bring in a prohibitive Act to prevent the manufacture, sale or consumption of liquor in the country. If they think that liquor must be produced here and used, why not make the manufacture of it a government monopoly ? Let us have a spiritual minister, and adopt the Gothenberg system which has worked so well in Sweden, by which the state gets all the revenue, and there is no object in selling to make money out of it. The distillers have a right, under the existing law, to carry on their business, and they make a grtat profit out of the manufacture of liquor, which the government could, under the Swedish system, have a part of the revenue of the country.

I do not hesitate to say, with the growing population we have, that if the government took that matter up we would hardly require any taxes at all. The profit on 6,000,000 gallons of alcohol or whisky would give us such a revenue as would largely go to redeem the public debt or give us a large surplus for public improvement ; but some people do not think that. On the other hand, if selling liquor is such a criminal Act that a magistrate can commit a man to jail on the first offence, why not abolish the Act altogether ? There is one of two things that must happen in this country, and there is no use in hiding behind the bush. We must have freedom all over, or we must compel the people to be temperance men if it is possible for them to be so. I do not think there is any line to be drawn between the two. I speak with every respect to the temperance people. I respect all the clergy, and I speak with respect of the members of this House and elsewhere who may have the desire to help their brother men. We all know that a great many public men have been unfortunate in respect of their drinking habits, but a friend told me the other day that on looking over the House of Commons and the Senate he found that of the old members the only survivors are those that took some whisky. The rest are all gone. It is a very funny statement, but looking at a picture of some eighty or ninety members of this House the only survivors of the early days of confederation are those who use whisky.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—Where is the hon. gentleman from Sarnia ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—He was not in that picture ; but the hon. gentleman from Sarnia, on a pinch, I think, would not object to anybody taking something for his stomach's sake or for his many infirmities. I feel that this is a serious matter. I come from St. John, in the county of King's, where we have good, law-abiding citizens. Men who try to do their best, men standing up for the constitution of the country, men who sent out their sons to South Africa to fight for the liberty of British subjects there, are to-day met with this Bill which says they must go to jail if they sell liquor—not only go to jail but imprisonment with hard labour. If that is fair-play I cannot see it.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—They would be the better of a little exercise.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Then they had better send them to the Senate and they would get lots of exercise because they could walk up and down the corridors. I think hon. gentlemen should consider this Bill. There are many of them interested, and it seems to me that this matter should be postponed to another session. It may have merit in it, that I do not see at the moment. I am entirely opposed to this Bill being passed in its present state. If anything is to be done it should be in a different shape. I do not think I have endeavoured in any way to prejudice the case.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—What does the hon. gentleman say ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Just a mere exclamation of surprise.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—It does not take much to surprise the hon. gentleman. I have been more surprised than he has.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The hon. gentleman will be surprised before the end of the session.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I do not know what is coming. I suppose I have to meet the great future as well as anybody else. I would ask the Senate to consider this matter and let it stand over for another year. Then we might get a general expression all round and might arrive at a better conclusion. I am entirely opposed to this Bill.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—I have listened with considerable attention to the last speaker and I fail to see that he has advanced any strong arguments in opposition to the measure now before us. His one argument is that the government collect duty upon liquor, allow it to be manufactured, and therefore it should be sold. The government take very good care not to allow it to be sold where the majority is against its being sold, and this Bill only applies to counties which have the Scott Act where the majority of people are opposed to the sale of liquor on any terms, and I can see no reason why this House should not give them the proper machinery for working it out. A great many people have said that the Scott Act is a failure. It has done an immense good to the country. In the counties adjoining the county in which I reside I know parts of the country where liquor was formerly sold every five or six miles and I can truthfully say that the Scott Act has completely abolished the sale of liquor in every district where it is in force.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—Is it in force in your county ?

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—No, but it is in the adjoining county. We never tested it in my county because we felt the majority would not vote for it ; but in the adjoining county they have had the Act in force, I think, from the second year after it became law, and it has completely abolished the sale of liquor in the country districts. There is only one small town where it is sold, and there is very little sold there. I am in favour of this Bill, because I think it will be the means of helping to carry out the object of the Act. No persons need feel alarmed about the working of this measure if they are not offenders. Following out the logical conclusion of the argument which the hon. gentleman has just made, the more stringent you make the law the more people there will be who will violate it. If that be the case, then, we had better repeal all the laws upon our statute-book against forgery, theft and murder. That would be the logical conclusion of his argument. I believe the Act has done a great good in the different counties in which it has been enforced. Like every other law it will not enforce itself. There must be behind it a good, strong public sentiment in order that it may be operative. It has been a good educator, and it has educated public opinion in every county that has adopted it. I have not any doubt that in the counties in which the Act is enforced it is working well. It is working well in the counties of New Brunswick. Of course there are some places where people sell liquor contrary to law. In that same place there may be people who would commit forgery, who steal, and who sometimes commit murder. There is a very stringent law against these crimes, but we should not, therefore, say that we should abolish all these laws. We find violators of the law all over the country. My idea is to give this law the proper machinery to put it in force and the law will be observed. Therefore I am in favour of the measure.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have no right to speak, as I have already spoken on this question, but I rise to make an explanation in the absence of an hon. member who asked me to mention the matter. The hon. member from London——

An hon. MEMBER—He is a brewer.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—But a member of this Senate. He desired me to ask this honourable body to permit this Bill to stand over until after the adjournment, which is to take place either to-morrow or Thursday. I am simply laying his request before the House, and I have nothing more to say at present.

Hon. Mr. BLACK—I crave the indulgence of this honourable body while I make a few observations on the Scott Act. Having had for the last fifty years some experience in regard to temperance work, and more particularly in observing the result of temperance efforts in the province of Nova Scotia, I was a little surprised to hear one hon. gentleman, on the occasion of the former debate on this measure, state that is was a dead letter where it was in operation in Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—If I said Nova Scotia, I meant New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. BLACK—I don't refer to the hon. gentleman from Rothesay. I refer to the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland. My experience in regard to the operation of the Scott Act in various counties where it has been in operation in Nova Scotia is that where there is a strong, healthy, moral temperance sentiment that the Scott Act works admirably, and in places where a very strong anti-temperance feeling obtains that the Scott Act is not so effective, because there is not enough moral influence behind the working of the Act to enforce it. This is a very small matter that we have before us to-day. I do not think it calls for a full discussion of the whole of the temperance enactments in this country. Most of us in the Dominion of Canada believe in responsible government ; and whereas in Nova Scotia, and especially in most of the counties of Nova Scotia, a preponderating influence is in favour of temperance, and in adopting the Scott Act, they had an overwhelming majority. They are only carrying out this permissive measure on the lines of responsible government, and I do not see why any hon. gentleman should say that we are in that instance cramming things down people's throats. On the other hand, I do not know why the man who rebels against this enactment and who violates the law, should send a circular to this honourable Senate of Canada and protest against any amendment to this Act, he himself being a culprit. It seems to me that it is on a par with a prisoner dictating to the judge what his sentence shall be, for these men to tell us what amendments we should enact in regard to the Temperance Act, and the penalty they should be subject to when they violate this law. I rather think this amendment is of a benevolent character. If a man has violated the law of his country and is incarcerated in prison where he has time to meditate upon his evil, it is rather a relief to that man to give him something to do. I am an industrious man myself, and I think it would be adding horror to confinement to allow a prisoner to have nothing to do but meditate on the number of young men whom he has led astray by his billiard tables and the intoxicating cup and the domestic happiness he has destroyed. I think it is a very benevolent proposition to let that man have something to do. We often hear our anti-temperance friends say, when they are opposing any temperance enactments, that it is in the interest of the friends of temperance. I think it is in the interest of convicted liquor sellers that they should have hard labour rather than let them lie in a moody, silent spirit to meditate upon these evils I have described. I am not one of those who say that everything that temperance people do and want is right. I think they have made mistakes ; they have generally been tinkering with the license business, and they say that in some instances amendments to the license Act have repealed the Scott Act. Well, they have repealed it in cases to which I have referred, where there was a strong feeling against the Act, not where the people were a temperance people and willing to enforce it. In that case we find it easy. But who are the people who want to repeal the Scott Act ? We find all over this country wherever there is an effort to repeal the Scott Act it comes from the violators of the law, and when we find that the men who violate the Scott Act are opposed to any amendments being enacted, it should be a logical reason why we should vote for this amendment. I am not here to say that a man who runs a hotel or perhaps supplies the traveller to whom my hon. friend refers, is not a respectable man. But those are not the men that the Scott Act pinches. The men that the Scott Act takes hold of, are the men that in the lanes and in the dark places set up billiard saloons and open up a gambling rendezvous and entice young men in to gamble and drink. These men cannot lay very good claims to high position. These are the men we want to stop from this nefarious business, and this amendment to the law will teach them that there is something besides paying a paltry fine, that they are to be under a little more stringent penalties. The hon. gentleman from Westmoreland, in discussing the subject the other day, said that these men were respectable men, that it would lead to the incarceration of respectable men. I should like to know how you can call a man respectable who is punished for a violation of the law ? It seems to me illogical. I cannot understand it. I will be excused if I make a very short speech on such a large subject, because this is one of the things upon which the wise men have had something to say and have exhausted their wisdom in regard to it. But I will say that to make this evil doing easy is to make the law lax and inoperative, but to fasten up the channels so that a man cannot sin easily is a matter in the interests of those who should be protected, not the man who wants to make a little money out of an illegal traffic. We want to consider to-day the interests of the great masses of the people, the mothers, the wives, the children, and to make it hard for men who place temptation in the way of men from factories and shops, in order that they may make a little money by their downfall, instead of letting them take their earnings home to their wives and families. I say they appeal more strongly to us, and I hear their voice all over the country saying, 'Sires, Senators, protect our homes.'

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—I am a very well known tetotaler and have been all my life. But on some points I thoroughly agree with my hon. friend from Rothesay. I have strong misgivings as to prohibitive legislation. This subject has taken a far wider range this afternoon than the matter proposed in this amendment warrants. Just so long as the manufacture of liquor is a legal business in this country, I have my sincere doubts about laws in restriction of the sale of it, and I, further think that moral suasion will do far more for the temperance question than legislation will. Of course these views come from the fact that I am such a well-known free trader. I do not believe in restriction. Just so long as the manufacturing of any article is legalized——

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—And endorsed.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—But this question is not involved at all this afternoon. There is on the statute-books of Canada to-day a Temperance Act and, until that Act is repealed, those in the different portions of Canada who desire to avail themselves of the Act have a right to do so. Further, I suppose it is those counties that have the Act in operation, and who desire to make it operative, and who are not able to make it operative because perhaps of the laxity of the law in some respect, are asking for this amendment. They are not asking anything new at all excepting that they may secure prohibition by a more stringent enactment than it is now. It is in consequence of this, I am compelled to vote for the amendment.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—It may well be supposed from the length of my life and my prominence on the temperance question that I should have something to say with regard to this measure. I entirely concur in the remarks which have been uttered by recent speakers, that we are not dealing with the general question of prohibition. We are dealing with a small matter, the amendment of an Act to make it more operative than it has been found to be hitherto, and if we would confine ourselves to that discussion it need not be much prolonged. I would have no objection whatever to discussing the large and full question, for in my judgment it is a more important one for the country than anything that can be mentioned. I believe that if we could manage in this country of ours to carry a prohibitory law which would do away entirely with the manufacturing and sale of liquor for drinking we would take a position which would give us a high place in the world. Where do we stand to-day? Does Canada not stand high above all civilized countries in this very matter of the use of intoxicating liquors? A smaller proportion is consumed by Canadians individually, in proportion to population, than in any other civilized country in the world. How has that come about? Was it by the efforts of those who are now opposing this Bill, for instance? Have they done anything to bring that state of sobriety into operation in this country? Is it not rather the result of the labours of those who, like myself, have been for sixty years working for this object? Is it not rather the necessary and natural result of the educational influence which has gone out from those opposed to the use of intoxicating liquors? And see what it has done in Canada. Can you go to any other country where you will have public dinners, and large gatherings of people where you will see no liquor brought to the table at all? I can remember in my early days at a public dinner, it might be the Governor General's dinner, where many gentlemen would be under the influence of liquor. It would be wrong to call them drunk, but by the words to which they gave utterance it was quite clear their minds were unhinged and not in the right condition, and that they were doing what would have brought a blush of shame upon their face in their hours of sobriety. To-day spirituous liquor has entirely disappeared from many public functions, and to be a total abstainer brings no reproach as it did in these days I speak of 64 years ago. It cost something to be an abstainer then. A man had to lose a good many social enjoyments and entertainments because of his peculiar views on that score. But the temperance principle has grown so largely that the whole community is educated in the matter and now it is no disgrace to a man to proclaim himself a total abstainer and a prohibitionist. So far from being ashamed of it, I am proud to be classed among them, and it is a pleasing incident in my long life that for 23 years I was president of the Dominion Alliance for the suppression of the liquor traffic. It is not necessary for us to now go into the merits of prohibition as if there were an attempt to repeal the Scott Act. All we are considering to-day is, shall we make more effective a clause which has been found inoperative on account of its defects. That is the whole question before us. We are not even creating an offience, the offence exists now, as has been already mentioned, under the existing law. It is found in counties where the Scott Act is in force that the violations of the law are such that it is rendered in a great measure inoperative, and the people are asking us to provide a remedy that is in harmony with all the rest of the Act, not introducing a single new feature, unless it may be the increasing of the punishment to which a person would render himself liable for violating the law. It is well known that in many cases where the law is frequently violated and a man is brought before the magistrate, he may be convicted of the offence a dozen times, but the magistrate has seen fit to call each one a first offence, and, consequently, there was no second offence and no increasing of the punishment such as is sought for by this Bill. Adding a little to the term of imprisonment would be better than increasing the money penalty. Many a man engaged in this traffic is quite willing to pay the fines over and over again, but he would not be willing to spend thirty or sixty days in jail. That would be a different matter. Consequently, I think this amendment is necessary to give effect to the legislation already on our statutes, and from whom does the opposition come to-day? Does it come from the counties or provinces where the Act is in operation? Not at all. The main objection comes from the provinces where they know nothing about the working of the Scott Act. The men who are trying to direct us in our legislative duties have no interest as citizens of the country which will be affected by this legislation living in a place where the law is not in operation, and I think that should have some effect in forming our judgment. Shall we give to those who are operating the law and finding it satisfactory, the increased assistance which they require in order to keep it in effect and doing good? I can give statements such as have already been quoted as to the good which has resulted from the Scott Act, and although in Ontario it was repealed, it was not because there was any change of sentiment with respect to the question of prohibition and the value of the law, but simply because it was rendered inoperative, by the authorities of Ontario some years ago who were decidedly opposed to doing the least thing in the world to aid in its enforcement. We were met with the statement: 'It is a Dominion Act and let the Dominion enforce it,' a very unwise statement to make by persons who have charge of the administration of the law in the province, and who should guard it in all respects; but it was really the cause of its repeal in Ontario. Many of the municipalities all over Ontario have been using the more limited power which is conferred upon them by the provincial Act to pass the same kind of law in the municipalities, showing their desire for it, and surely it cannot be forgotten by any of us that the enormous vote which was taken two or three years ago for prohibition in Ontario, shows that it was not regarded as a political party question at all. I think we will only be doing an act of justice and propriety in complying with the request to grant this legislation.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—On principle I am favourable to all that will do away with the abuse of intoxicating liquor and diminish the use of it. When the Scott Act was passed, I was greatly in favour of it, almost enthusiastic over it, because I thought its effect would be all that was anticipated by the framer of the Act. We have had all sorts of experiences, especially down in the lower provinces, with that Act. I have watched the operations of it with an open mind, starting, as I said, with favourable intentions towards it. I find that, except in a few places, particularly in mining districts, that the Act has not worked satisfactorily. It is in those few places where my hon. friend speaks of, that is in Pictou county and about Sydney, where it has certainly worked well, and why, because public opinion was favourable to the Act; but in most of the other counties, I might say pretty well in all of the other counties it has, if anything worked the other way, and why? Because at no time in the world's history have men been able to enforce sumptuary laws, and this is one of them, if public opinion is against it. Hon. gentlemen know how the kings of England, when they were most powerful, and the kings of France, tried to impose sumptuary laws on their subjects, and how they failed. The Scott Act is a failure wherever it is in force in the lower provinces, except in those few counties I mentioned. In the case of this Bill, in my estimation it is the choosing between the two evils; which is the worst, licensed bars, or the Scott Act? The Scott Act does not prevent the selling of liquor as it is enforced in eight-tenths of cases. It is simply a different way of licensing the selling of liquor. A man can get a drink in the open licensed bars, but children are forbidden by law, and a sense of shame prevents older people from taking children to bars. A man would not care to go with a child into an open saloon, and as there are no places to get liquor except in the bars, the consequence is that eggs that are rotten remain rotten; men that drink will continue to drink, but that fresh sound eggs will not be contaminated. Where the Scott Act is, liquor selling is a hidden thing and it works evil in many ways. First, it is an understood thing that a seller of liquor will be convicted if prosecuted. People will go on the sly to places where liquor is sold and get a drink under cover, or will send their children to get it for them. Children will learn to drink, though they would not so readily learn, if the bar-rooms were licensed by the law. For that reason I have come to the conclusion that the Scott Act, however salutary it may appear on the statute-book, and however lofty in its object, has been pretty much of a failure in its application; notwithstanding its comparative failure people will continue the Scott Act where it is in operation, for diverse reasons; though many of them would be glad indeed if it was the other way. Prohibitionists have an air of superior sanctity, I won't call it hypocrisy, but it savours of hypocrisy. The Scott Act favours the breaking of the law, which should not be the case. If we amend the Act, as proposed, and if my conclusions are right, what position will we be in? The Scott Act is an Act that is voted upon and accepted by districts. The government cannot force the Scott Act upon a county. It is optional with the people and must be adopted by a majority of the voters of the county, before it can be brought into operation. Now where the Scott Act has been adopted, the people have voted for the Act as it appears in the statutes, but have not voted for this amendment. What will be the consequence? Here we are dealing with the law which can only be put in force by the legally expressed will of the community. We are forcing an amendment of the Act upon people who have not been called to vote upon it. The first effect will be a bountiful harvest of lawsuits. Lawyers will take exception to it whenever an opportunity occurs, and cases wil be carried to the higher courts, certainly to the Supreme Courts of the provinces.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is not the hon. gentlemen aware that the parliament of Canada has made many amendments to the Scott Act, and it has never been contended even that the amending of the law would invalidate the Act where it has been adopted?

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I am not aware that the parliament of Canada have made amendments of this nature.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh yes, it has.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—At all events it would be a source of litigation, and the lawyers will reap the benefit of this legislation and there will be no benefit to the public at large. I shall be surprised if it can be shown that amendments of this nature have been made to the Canada Temperance Act. For these reasons and others which I could give, I cannot see my way to support this amendment.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have no experience in the working of the Scott Act, but so long as it remains on the statutes we should not refuse to amend it so as to make it effective. I would appeal to the hon. gentleman from Shediac (Hon. Mr. Poirier) whether it would not be better, if he disapproves of the Scott Act, to give it a full trial. He objects to it because he says it has not worked well up to the present time. Those who favour the Scott Act ask that they be given the means of properly enforcing it. Let them have the means, and then if it is found that notwithstanding this amendment they are unable to enforce it, possibly parliament would be disposed to support a Bill to repeal the Act. The hon. gentleman from Rothesay, who has spoken against the Bill, is, I believe, a resident of the county of Kings. On turning to the Statistical Year Book of Canada, for 1902, page 628, I find that the Scott Act was carried by a vote of 2,080 to 370. Surely in that case public opinion was strongly in favour of the Act and it should be effective. The hon. member for Shediac (Hon. Mr. Poirier) says that the Act is effective whenever it is favoured by public opinion; the hon. member for Rothesay must therefore have had experience of a very effective measure in his own county. If it was a law applying to parties holding licenses I should hesitate before adopting this amendment, because the owner of a license might be condemned for the act of his servants, while he himself was acting in good faith; but where the Scott Act is in operation and no license can be issued, I fail to see that anybody on whose premises liquor is sold can be in good faith. He is clearly violating the law, and the law cannot be too severe to prevent the offender continuing to violate the law. I agree with hon. gentlemen who have called the attention of this House to the fact that the question does not involve the consideration of the Scott Act, as to whether it should be continued in force or not. It is on the statutes, and I believe in the principle of that Act, because it is the application of popular government. The voters in each county are given the opportunity of declaring whether the sale of liquors in a county will be permitted. It is a permissive Act, and I believe in it, because it is the means of removing temptation; but whether we favour the Act itself or not, so long as it is on the statutes we should not refuse the means of enforcing it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I understand that I am not in order in moving an amendment, as I have already spoken, but if the House will not permit me to move a motion now other means will be taken.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—I move the adjournment of the House to give the hon. gentleman a chance to move his amendment.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman cannot move an adjournment, he has already spoken on the question.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman having already spoken, is not in order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If the hon. gentleman was making a motion on the merits of the question I could understand it, but he is merely moving the adjournment of the House which, I understand, a member can do at any time.

The House divided on the motion, which was adopted by the following vote:

Non-contents.

AN ADJOURNMENT.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—About the end of last week, a number of gentlemen mentioned to me that they would like to be absent during the present week, and as Friday is a holiday, and there would, therefore, be only two sitting days. Wednesday and Thursday, I saw no objection to an adjournment over this week. I therefore gave the notice on the paper with a view to moving, as I do now :

That when the House adjourns on Tuesday next, it do stand adjourned until the following Tuesday, at three o'clock in the afternoon.

I think it will be more convenient to adjourn this week, than on a later date. During the next fortnight at all events, the House of Commons will be occupied with the estimates, and I do not know of any important measure that is likely to come down. The most important measure before the parliament is the Militia Bill, and that is not in a position yet to be presented to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No doubt all that has been said by the hon. Secretary of State about the business of the House in general is perfectly correct, but I should like to call the attention of hon. gentlemen to the fact that the committee investigating the business of the New York Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, in Canada, is sitting from day to day. It sat for four hours in the forenoon yesterday : it sat last night and again this morning, and will have another sitting this evening, and I am in hopes it will finish the investigation to-morrow. It is important that the business of the committee should be finished before we adjourn. It is impossible that the committee should sit with the House not in session. It is a matter the Senate should consider before agreeing to an adjournment of the House from to-day. I suggest it would be better to make the motion to adjourn on Thursday. The chances are the committee will be able to complete its work before then.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The House has power to authorize the committee to sit during an adjournment.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—In this House it has the necessary power.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I personally regard the report of that committee, in whatever direction it may be, as absolutely valueless. It can only damage those interested, and it would be inconsistent with my view to hold the House for the report of a committee in which I can place no confidence whatever. No good can flow from it. The public are well advised of that now, and I am in duty bound to speak candidly on the subject.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I consider it my duty to entirely dissent from the statement the hon. Secretary of State has made to this House, with regard to that committee. The committee has elicited most valuable information in the interests of the policyholders of that company in this country, and I quite agree with the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie. The committee should conclude its labours before the House rises. There are two or three witnesses here from New York who are staying here day after day expecting to be called upon to give their evidence. These men should be examined and allowed to go home. By to-morrow the business of that committee could be completed, and the report could be printed and ready to be handed in when the House assembles again. It would be much better to do that, and then adjourn for a week, or longer, if business is in a condition that will warrant us in doing so. I met some gentlemen last night who said they expected there was to be a meeting of the Railway Committee to-morrow, and they had made preparations to be here to attend it. They had got notice, they said, that the Railway Committee was to meet on Thursday. The business of the Mutual Reserve Fund Investigation Committee should be wound up before the House rises, and the evidence will be printed and ready for submission to the House when hon. gentlemen return.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I confess I do not feel any great admiration for the investigation into the affairs of the New York Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association ; at the same time we have to deal with things as they are. That investigation was ordered by this House, I think, very unwisely. It was ordered nevertheless by this House, and that being so, and witnesses being present, we should sit until Thursday, or to-morrow at all events, to enable these witnesses to be examined and the investigation brought to a conclusion. Probably it will be found that by doing so, the hon. Secretary of State will be enabled to vary his proposition in such a way as would met the convenience of a very large number of the members of this House. There is something still on our order paper. More business is coming to us. I presume there will be a report on the Bill introduced by the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Kerr) in relation to the Mutual Reserve policy-holders. If this business is attended to to-morrow and Thursday, looking at the state of business in both ends of this building, I believe we could then adjourn until the Tuesday, not of next week, but until Tuesday, the 12th of July, and that the public business would not suffer in consequence. The Lower House will be engaged for a week or two yet on the estimates, and there will be no important business coming from the House of Commons for the next week. We could, therefore, adjourn from Thursday next until the Tuesday of the week following, and we would likely, when we got back, have work to occupy us until the close of the session. I hope the leader of the House will accept the suggestion and give us the adjournment until the 12th July, from Thursday next.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I entirely disagree with the hon. Secretary of State and the hon. gentleman from Marshfield when they say they have no confidence in the work that is being done by the special committee.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman said he did not anticipate that any good would result from the investigation, so that it comes to the same thing. For my part I have given a good deal of my time to that investigation, and if I thought that no good would result from it, I surely would have been saved the trouble of sitting on that committee. We may not all be agreed as to the manner in which the proceedings are conducted, but I am sure that good will result from the investigation. If it were only for the purpose of removing from the mind of the public the impression that much more harm is being done than there actually is, and showing exactly to what extent the Canadian policy-holders have been affected, I repeat I am confident that the result of the investigation will be beneficial, and it is important that it should be brought to a close as soon as possible. I do not think it is open to any hon. gentleman in this House to anticipate what may be the report of that committee. There may be majority and minority reports or we may all agree and no hon. member has a right to anticipate the result and say he has no confidence in the result of the investigation. The committee has been appointed by this honourable House and everybody must submit to that decision, and try to do things fairly and give the public some benefit from the investigation. I, therefore, urge upon the Secretary of state the advisability of allowing this investigation to be closed as soon as possible, and I think it can be closed to-morrow, before we adjourn. It is idle to suggest that the House should adjourn and the committee sit. The members of the committee will not remain here if the House adjourns.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—As chairman of that committee I have to say that personally I have no objection whatever to the adjournment of the House for the next two or three weeks. The convenience of this House will be my convenience, but I am in charge of other interests besides my own. There are on this committee several members of the Senate who will not feel like sitting here after the House adjourns. The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry is perfectly right in that statement, and I would not feel like it myself. We are on a labour of love, but there is a limit to love in a matter of this kind, and I do not propose to accept the proposal of the hon. Secretary of State that the committee can sit after the House rises. As the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry has stated, we have been devoting considerable time to this investigation. Three hours in the mornings and two hours or more at night, so that we are working from ten in the morning until ten in the evening and it is not right that we should be asked to do so. So far as that is concerned I have no objection to the adjournment, but as chairman of the committee, and on behalf of the committee, I do protest against the adjournment under the circumstances. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry when he repudiates any denunciation of this committee either as to its formation or manner of procedure. The committee has been constituted by this honourable body, and I do not think any hon. senator has a right to say that it is a valueless committee. It is an imputation upon the wisdom and prudence of this honourable House. The Senate has sanctioned the creation of the committee. One hon. member said he has no admiration for it; that is a mild criticism; it may pass. We are not sitting there for admiration; we are there for other purposes—to be severely criticised by the friends of the policy-holders, who do not think we are doing our work rightly. These criticisms will not affect the judgment or action of the committee; so I pass them over. As regards the work of the committee and the mode of its proceeding, it must be borne in mind, notwithstanding the opinion of some of the members of this House—

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Did my hon. friend understand me to say that I had no admiration for the committee?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I took down the word.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No, I said I had no admiration for the investigation, but I may say more, that I have the most profound admiration for the hon. gentleman and great respect for the members of the committee.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If the hon. gentleman has no admiration for the object for which the committee exists, then he can have very little admiration for the committee. If he has no admiration for the object for which the committee exists he cannot come before the House and say he favours the existence of the committee. But that is apart from the merits of the situation. To come back to the point I was stating to the honourable House, I want it to be borne in mind as chairman of the committee that we are not sitting there in any way as a judicial body. We are simply sitting there as a body to investigate and to find out the truth by all legal means possible. We are not sitting there as a court governed by judicial rules by any means, so that I am not surprised at members who stray into the committee once in a while to see how things are going on making remarks altogether irrevelant against the dignity and honour of the committee. These things are pardonable because the gentlemen who made these remarks are not cognisant of all that has transpired from the first sitting of the committee until now, so that these matters I pass over. As the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry says, the committee is doing work which, if it does not satisfy the policy-holders that they have not been fairly dealt with by the company, it is work that will favour the company, if is shown that they have done all in their power to advance and protect the interest of the policy-holders. We are simply there to ascertain what the company has been doing with the proceeds of the Canadian business. That is the sum and substance of the investigation. On behalf of the witness here, and on behalf of the Finance Department, and the expense of the investigation, and on behalf of members who will have to attend—I ask, not personally for I am in favour of an adjournment, but on behalf of these interests I ask that the adjournment do not take place to-night.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—With the permission of the leader of the House I would suggest that the motion be that when this House adjourns on Thursday it stands adjourned until the 11th or 12th of July next.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is Dr. Sproule's day.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think the better way, if the feeling of the House is, we should sit to-morrow and the day after, is to leave the date of adjournment an open question. I could not really at this late period of the session consent to an adjournment over the second week. There are no other important measures to come before the Commons except the Militia Bill and the estimates, and sometimes the Commons makes a pretty rapid rush when they want to get away, and it would not seem proper or decorous for the Senate to decide on an adjournment for a fortnight from now. It would surely not be rational. Having learned the feelings of the House we will allow the question of an adjournment to stand until Thursday, and we must decide on Thursday according to the state of public business.

Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not particular as far the adjournment is concerned whether it takes place to-morrow or Thursday. I generally oppose long adjournments, and I do think it would be a fatal mistake at this late period of the session to adjourn for ten of twelve days. I sympathize with those gentlemen who live at a distance and cannot take advantage of a short adjournment, but we have the interest of the business of the country to consider first, and to adjourn for ten days or a fortnight at this period of the session would not be in accordance with the dignity of the House.

Whatever adjournment takes place, an adjournment for a week ought to be the longest period that should be accepted by the House. The suggestion made by the hon. Secretary of State to let the matter stand until Thursday, when it can be fully considered, is quite correct, and there was very much force in the remarks made by the hon. gentleman who asked for to-morrow and Thursday in order to complete the work of the committee. I shall not express any opinion as to the propriety of the work of the committee. I voted for the committee and I hope its investigation will result in good both to the company and to the country. Perhaps it was altogether unnecessary to introduce a question as to the effect which the investigation may have at the present time. It is very well to urge the necessity of sitting until the work of the committee should be finished, but the Secretary of State has expressed very strong views upon this question from its inception in this House. Whatever the result may be, let us have an end to it at the earliest possible date. I hope the Secretary of State and others will not, at this period of the session, agree to adjourn for a week.

The motion was allowed to stand until Thursday.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (111) An Act respecting the Edmonton Street Railway.—(Hon. Mr. Casgrain, de Lanaudière.)

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK INVESTIGATION.

SIXTH REPORT.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN, from the Select Committee appointed to examine into the condition of the Reserve Fund Life Association of New York presented their sixth report.

The Senate,
Committee Room No. 2,
Tuesday, 28th June, 1904.

The Select Committee appointed by order of the Senate made 19th May, 1904, to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York, be gleave to make their sixth report, as follows :—

That, at the meeting of your committee held this day, it was, on motion of the Honourable Mr. Béique, resolved, that a further report be made to the Senate that the witness, Mr. Eldridge, has volunteered to give for each year the amount, in the aggregate, but not in detail, paid to the officials of the company, as asked for by the committee.

All which is respectfully submitted.

H. J. CLORAN,
Chairman.

He said : In connection with this report, I may state that the committee came to the conclusion to have it presented to this honourable House, because there were present at the meeting to-day, two or three members who were not present on Friday, when it was unanimously decided by the committee to report to the Senate one witness under inquiry declined to answer certain questions. The members of that committee who put in an appearance this morning, asked as a matter of information to the Senate to report this one fact, that in the examination of the witness, Mr. Eldridge, he stated he would answer questions as to the aggregate amount of the salaries, but he declined to answer questions in detail, on his own responsibility, and that he so declined on the advice of his counsel. That explanation I may say was given on Friday last to the committee. Mr. Eldridge declined to answer the questions put to him by the hon. senator from Stadacona (Hon. Mr. Landry) but at the same time expressed his willingness to state the aggregate amount of the salaries. We had that explanation last Friday to the committee. Notwithstanding that excuse of the witness for declining to answer, the committee resolved unanimously to report that the witness declined to answer the questions put to him. To-day, to satisfy the hon. members who were not present on that occasion it was decided to make the report that I have presented to the House this afternoon

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Does this report supersede the report on the order paper to-day?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is simply a supplementary fact which has direct bearing on the refusal of the witness to say whether the committee was right in demanding this information from the witness.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then I am to understand that item three will still be called on the order paper and moved.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Certainly. I suppose with the consent of the House the two reports can be considered together. One is supplementary to the other. The second report is the justification of the witness for his refusal to answer. If necessary I shall move that this report be taken into consideration at the same time as the report on the order paper for to-day.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Do I understand from the hon. gentleman that the aggregate amount which the witness is willing to give, is for each year, or a certain period ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—For each year.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—To a great extent, that ought to be satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—He is to give the aggregate salaries of the officers for each year.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—It is a matter of internal economy.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That has been all discussed by the committee.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I would suggest that this report be agreed to now, its object being to put the House in possession of certain information. I see no objection to moving the adoption of this report now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Suppose you do concur in the report, what have you concurred in ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I understand by the rules of the House if any one objects notice of this motion would have to be given.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They simply report a fact.

The Order of the Day being called :

That an order do issue for the attendance on Tuesday, the 28th inst., at Three o'clock in the afternoon, at the Bar of this House, of Mr. George D. Eldridge, of the City of New York, now in Ottawa, Vice-President and Actuary of the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company, the witness named in the Report of the Select Committee appointed to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York, in Canada.—(Hon. Mr. Landry.)

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Hon. Mr. Landry is absent, and I have been requested to act in his absence. I do not want to take the responsibility of disposing of this motion. I am simply spokesman of that committee. If it is necessary to preserve the position of the hon. senator from Stadacona I shall move it, but if not I shall not do so.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It must be apparent to every one that it is trifling with the House to have motions of this kind on our orders. The committee have evidently reconsidered the question, and think it only necessary now that the witness should give the aggregate amount of the salaries. The House should decide what is the proper course. As I understand the explanation of the chairman of the committee, on Friday, a point arose as to whether Mr. Eldridge should be obliged to answer a question calling upon him to name the individual salaries of the staff of management. He declined to answer on the advice of counsel. Now, if I understand it right, some members of the committee would be satisfied if Mr. Eldridge gave the cost of the management of the association for a series of years back, so that the public would be able to learn what the actual disbursements in connection with the management really were. If we decide that point to-day, it would shorten up the investigation. I shall give my reasons why I think the committee ought to be satisfied with the offer made by Mr. Eldridge to give the figures en bloc. The parliament of Canada when passing the Insurance Act decided what information the insurance companies should be bound to furnish year by year. The provision is contained in section 26 of the Act. I am informed by the department having charge of the insurance matters, that in the United States where this company was incorporated, the returns require that the cost of management, that is the salaries of officials in the home office, shall be given en bloc, not in detail. I am advised that a similar rule prevails not only in insurance companies but in banks and analogous corporations. A similar rule has always been observed in Canada, I have not heard that any exception has been taken to it. I presume, therefore, that it ought to be satisfactory to the Senate, when parliament has decided what information those companies ought to give. We ought not to go behind that unless there is some very important interest to be served, which I cannot see arising in this investigation. The book published by the insurance department contains those reports. I asked Mr. Fitzgerald particularly whether, since the change of management which occurred some years ago in the Mutual Reserve Company, he had any reason to suspect the business had been extravagantly managed. He said not ; on the contrary he thought it was as fairly and honestly conducted as any other insurance company, and he referred me to the figures showing year by year the sums paid by the management of the company.

Then I had the curiosity to ask him : 'How does it compare with other companies.' He said : 'You can look them up in the book.' I therefore took the policies in force according to the official return. It was 64,701, the commission and bonuses to agents which, I understand, are 25 per cent, amounted to $300.991. The salaries of officers in home office, $285,722. The Mutual Life of Canada issued 23,622 policies, which is about one-third as hon. gentlemen will see. It will be 69 as compared with 64,—one-third of the policies issued by the Mutual Reserve. They pay for salaries and commisions $196,000. The Manufacturers Life have policies extant on the 31st of December, 1902, 21,945, commissions and salaries, $233,000. I have just given the number of policies.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I would respectfully call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to this point, that we have not got any report as to the position of that company before us, and it will be very inconvenient to go into a discussion just now as to what the position of the company is. I have no desire to interrupt my hon. friend, but if he proceeds other hon. members will wish to speak, and we will have a discussion precipated on the House as to whether this company is solvent or in a good position, which should not take place until we have the report.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are face to face with the proposition that Mr. Eldridge shall be brought before the Bar of the House to answer certain questions, and I am endeavouring to show that the proposition that the Mutual Reserve has not given sufficient information to satisfy the committee is foundationless, inasmuch as parliament has laid down exactly what return and what report the company shall make, and I am showing, from the cursory glance I have made as to other companies in Canada, that their commissions and salaries are not in excess, and, in many instance, are less than those of other companies doing busines in Canada. That is the whole object. I am not going into the details of it. I will hand it to the reporter, and will give the page of the blue-book on which those reports are contained. It is to this extent satisfactory, because hon. gentlemen may have formed the opinion that the amounts paid were excessive. They do look so to my mind, but on examining other companies we find that they are all extravagant. I find so much cost for commissions and so much for salaries, but it is the prevailing practice. It is not peculiar to any one company. Looking over this book you will find it is the proportion everywhere, so that you will find the Mutual Reserve have considerable less expense than some companies now doing business in Canada. On the face of it, we should not be carried to a conclusion that the Mutual Reserve is paying extravagant rates to its officers. I gather my deductions from other companies. The hon. gentleman from Westmoreland suggested in the discussion the other day, when this question first came up, that he would like to know the opinion of the Minister of Justice before adopting this motion. I consulted the Minister of Justice, and his opinion is the same as my own. that we have the right, but that it would be very unwise to exercise it in this case. The witness is not charged with any crime, as in the cases quoted in past years. He is simply a witness coming here voluntarily, not being ordered to come, but coming of his own accord and remaining here in order to give this committee all the information he possesses in reference to the internal affairs of the company, and, as far as I can learn, he has been regarded as a very fair and reasonable witness, giving his evidence without any seeming prejudice or feeling one way or the other, and refusing to answer the question as to those details simply because it was confidential and he did not consider, under the law, he was bound to disclose it, and he was so guided in that judgment and decision by the advice of a very eminent counsel. For these reasons I should like that this order would be refused, in view of the other proposition made by the hon. chairman of that committee, that the committee should be satisfied with the answer being en bloc of the sums paid for the long period of years. I presume the House now will come to the conclusion that that will answer all purposes, and that the order on the paper to-day will not be pushed to the extreme extent that it was at one time contemplated, of calling this gentleman to the bar of the House, and if he still refuses leading us into a very unpleasant result. I need not say what that may be, but certainly if the House once made an order he must answer. The House must go further if he refused to do so, and it would scarcely look proper or seemly on the part of the Senate in the case of a gentleman coming here of his own accord, not bound to attend, not under subpœna, coming from the United States, having given all the information the parliament of Canada requires and that the department requires, and the department being amply satisfied that the returns made by this company are true that is since the change of management. I think it is pretty well conceded that before the present management came into office, when Mr. Wells, who seems to be rather a favourite with some gentlemen, was connected with the company the business was managed with great extravagance and waste. We are all agreeing on that, but it is many years gone, and we cannot get back the money ; it is wasted, and this is not the only insurance company that has been played with in that way. On a former occasion I showed this chamber that there were thirty or forty assessment companies that must go to the wall. The principle is absolutely unsound and nothing but ruin meets them in the end if they last over forty or fifty years, unless a new generation comes in and they get new blood from the newer members. It was very unfortunate no doubt, that in 1885 this parliament passed the Act. I think I read on a former occasion the opinions of a number of senators, denouncing the change then made. I do not know what influence brought it about. Mr. Wells claimed the honour of having placed it on the statutes. He said he was here in 1884 and did not succeed, but in 1885 he succeeded. He was a member of the company during all the time this waste of money was practised by the management, in which vast sums of money were lost, and, no doubt, hastened the contingency of ruin to every man who is connected with it on the assessment basis. That the company itself recognize that the system was wrong is obvious from the fact that some five or six years ago, when parliament had under consideration some changes in the Act, they withdrew the assessment system and have not been issuing any such policies since. I therefore hope the conclusion the House shall come to will be that we shall refuse to adopt the proposition submitted to us, and accept the offer made by the vice-president of this company to give evidence of the cost of management en bloc for a series of years back.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When I interrupted my hon. friend, I was under the impression he was going into a general discussion of the affairs of the company, and I thought it would be a pity if that would be precipitated just at this stage. Later on he was confining himself to the question as to whether we should insist upon answers being given to questions before the committee as reported to the Senate. I have no doubt whatever that we have the power to insist on answers being given to these questions, if we consider it in the public interest and expedient to exercise it. My hon. friend the Secretary of State has pointed very properly to the power that legislation gives to the government with regard to securing returns from insurance companies, but if my hon. friend will look at section 25 of the Insurance Act, subsection 11, he will find that there is very much more inquisitorial power than that contained in clause 20 which deals with returns. It is in the power of the Minister of Finance to institute an investigation through the superintendent of the insurance into the affairs of all these companies.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I quoted that the other day.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It has a direct bearing on the question now before us, and I will read it for the information of hon. gentlemen. It is as follows .—

> The minister may from time to time instruct the superintendent to visit the head office of any company licensed under this Act and incorporated or legally formed elsewhere than in Canada and to examine into the general conditions and affairs of such company, and if such company declines to permit of such examination or refuses to give any information necessary for such purposes in its possession or control, the license shall be withdrawn.

So that there is most ample power in the hands of the department to go to the office of any company, whether Canadian or foreign and insist on the department becoming seized of all information embracing such things as are covered by these questions, but to my mind the spirit of our legislation in dealing with railway companies, banks and insurance companies—not only the spirit but the letter of our legislation, does not call for such detailed information of the affairs of the company to be published. There is no return containing any such information as this required under the Bank Act. We have, under the Insurance Act, the most perfect power of going to the head office of the company and getting the information, but it is not supposed for a moment that this detailed information with regard to the domestic affairs of the company should be published. It never is published. I have no doubt the insurance department have been compelled on many occasions to make such inquiries one way or the other into the affairs of the insurance companies, but not for publication. Then take the Railway Act. If hon. gentlemen will look at the statistical clauses from 302 onward to the end of the Act. will find that they call for the most complete returns, as explained in schedule 1 of the Railway Act, of the affairs of the company ; but while we call for all kinds of information, that information is regarded as confidential this far. that it must not be published by the commissioners, and if any officer of the Railway Board discloses any part of the information that is communicated—if any officer shall disclose the information. he is liable to a fine of $500 and imprisonment. The section reads as follows :—

> The Governor in Council may call for information and the board may publish it, but if there is any part of that information which they think the company would object to publish they must not publish it until they call the company before them and until they have had an opportunity of saying why the information should not be published.

In regard to the Bank Act and the Insurance Act. the spirit of our legislation is that these details are not to be given to the public. We have provided against it. If the gentleman was compelled to answer these questions what would we be doing ? we would be applying a different rule to the Mutual Reserve than is applied to other institutions doing business in the country. that is, as long as our general legislation with regard to these corporations remains as it is at present. It may not be right. Hon. gentlemen may take a different view, and say all this information should belong to the public. They may be right, but while that is the policy of our legislation we should deal impartially with all, and I will say that if Mr. Eldridge was called upon and compelled to give these details, which he says are regarded as confidential in his company, and they were spread out on the journals of this House, so that the agents of any other insurance company would be able to reproduce these answers and distribute them and make a canvass against the company on the ground that they were paying extraordinary salaries, while very likely, if the same information were brought out with regard to the other companies. it would be found they were paying quite as much.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—That would be right.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am not going to say anything about that. But it would be only right providing our laws call for precisely the same information coming out with regard to other companies. It would not be right to single out any one company and compel it to disclose information which we do not obtain from other companies.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Where does the law prohibit that information ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The spirit of the law prohibits the bringing out of such information as this in the publication of returns with regard to a railway company, unless the railway company is heard with respect to anything they would be likely to have an objection to.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—My hon. friend has not answered the question. He stated distinctly that our laws prohibited the publication of that information.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman has entirely misunderstood me. I said the spirit and intention of our law is that this information is not to be brought before the public in the way of publication of returns, and if my hon. friend is prepared to controvert that statement I shall be glad to hear him. I have referred to the Bank Act and say that no such information is called for there. I have looked over the General Insurance Act and have gone over our Railway Act, and I am perfectly correct in saying that the spirit of all this legislation is that information such as this, of the domestic affairs of a company is not called for or there is no provision made in the law for its publication, and, in practice, it is never published.

My contention is that such being the spirit of our legislation all through that we should not in this case insist upon the answer to questions which would be putting this company in a different position from that of any other company. My hon. friend from Elgin, by the question he asked me, clearly misunderstood me. There is no doubt we have the power to do this. There is no question the parliament of Canada had the power to make our Railway Act different from what it is. We might have said in the Insurance Act that when the superintendent of insurance went to Toronto, say to the head office of any insurance company, and ascertained the amount of salaries or any other expenditure, that he should publish that. Parliament could certainly say so, but parliament has not said so. The information is obtained and it is left for the department to decide what part of this information shall be given to the public, and up to the present time such information as is contained in these questions has not been called for in any of the returns or has not been spread out in any report before the public.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I accepted my hon. friend's denial with reference to the statement, yet he was not satisfied, and if I had observed him correctly I would have had the reporter read what he said. He conveyed the impression distinctly, as far as I was concerned, and I think the hon. members of this House so understood it. that there was no law to compel him to do so and so. However, I shall wait until we receive the report of the debate and then we will be in a better position to judge; but I call the attention of the House to the fact that there is no motion before the chair. My hon. friend who placed this matter on the order paper has not moved the adoption of this report, which the House refused on Friday to discuss for lack of information. I congratulate the leader of the House, if he sees his opportunity to go into the whole matter of insurance, and to discuss not only this report but the report which is to be taken up and considered to-morrow. Further I say that we had a definite understanding that when the House met, and the second supplementary report came in, that the two reports should go together. I appeal to this honourable House that we should have those two reports together, so that we can consider them, if they contain information for us to consider. We cannot consider them now on account of the lack of information. What information have we to-day to enable us to consider the matter intelligently and cast an intelligent vote, further than we had on Friday last?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think the House understood me clearly. The hon. gentleman does not draw the distinction between the words which I do. Perhaps I do not understand the meaning of the words, or we do not understand them alike. I said parliament had power to compel the witness to answer. We have power to make a law that all companies should supply the information, but we have not made that law.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from Elgin has raised a question in respect of the resolution before the House. I read from the Minutes of Friday last, as follows:

> That an order of this House do issue for the attendance on Tuesday, 28th June, instant, at three o'clock in the afternoon at the bar of this House, of Mr. George D. Eldridge, of the city of New York, now in Ottawa, vice-president and actuary of the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company, the witness named in the report of the select committee appointed to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada.

That was substantially a motion for concurrence in the report. Then the Hon. Mr. DeBoucherville moved the amendment, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Ferguson:

> That further action with respect to the refusal of Mr. George D. Eldridge to answer certain questions put to him as a witness before the select committee appointed to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada be postponed to Tuesday next.

That simply postponed the dealing with the original motion until to-day. The order paper, I think, is quite correct. This motion of the Hon. Mr. Landry is the motion now before the House, and if it does not meet the approval of the House some hon. gentlemen can move an amendment.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I propose to move in amendment to the motion, that all the words after the word 'That' be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

> The offer made by the witness George D. Eldridge to give for each year the amount in the aggregate, but not in detail, paid to the officials of the company, will satisfy the requirements of the investigation.

And in support of my motion, I desire to say that I entirely agree with the remarks which have just been made by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield. It is the policy of the law as it stands on our statute-book not to exact from insurance or railway companies any details of that kind. For my part I am rather inclined to think that the sooner the law is amended to exact fuller information the better it will be ; but, until the law is amended, I do not think that it would be proper to single out any one company and place them at a disadvantage as regards their competitors, and we have here to deal with quite a serious matter. It is a matter in which we are dealing with a foreign company, and it is a well known principle of international law that foreigners are entitled to be treated as citizens of the state and if it is not within the policy of the Canadian law to exact such information, I think it would be a mistake to exact it from a foreign corporation, and it might give rise to serious complication.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—The hon. gentleman says it is not the law to give it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I say it is not the policy of the Canadian law, not the spirit of our law as it stands on our statute-book, to exact details of that kind and I say that a company from which we would exact such details in being singled out for the purpose would be made to occupy a disadvantageous position as regards their competitors, and therefore that this foreign corporation would have the right to ask to be respected in that respect, and that we should not open up a question of that kind. Moreover, is there any necessity for anything of the kind? The hon. member from Marshfield and the hon. Secretary of State, on a former occasion, and the hon. gentleman from Toronto on another occasion, also drew the attention of this House to the words of the statute under which it is open to the government to have these very facts ascertained from the books of the company. The superintendent of insurance can go to New York and examine into all the books of the insurance company, and that is surely a better mode of obtaining information than resorting to forcing the witness to give information when he says that he considers that his duty towards the association is not to divulge that information to the public ; that it would place the company at a disadvantage, and that he has no objection to give the information in the aggregate, but not in detail as to salaries being paid to each individual. If we get this information, whether it be $20,000 or $50,000, when we have the total amount paid each year for the nineteen years, the company has been carrying on operations, will it not be all that is necessary ? The witness has offered to name the individuals, whether they be six, seven or eight, what positions they occupy in the company, and to give the lump amount paid to them all. I submit that it is all the information that is required to deal with that matter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The amendment of my hon. friend anticipates one that I had drafted myself. I take the same view precisely that my hon. friend has expressed, and I had an amendment prepared, which I hope my hon. friend will accept instead of his own. It gives, as he will see, the source from which the information came, that Mr. Eldridge was willing to furnish the aggregate amount paid to the officials. My amendment is as follows :

That in view of the statement contained in the supplementary report of the select committee appointed to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada, presented this day, that Mr. Eldridge had volunteered to give for the information of the committee the aggregate sum paid annually to the officials of the association, be it resolved that such information be accepted as sufficient, and that the motion to summon Mr. George D. Eldridge to the bar of the Senate be discharged.

I am not particular which amendment is adopted, but this gives the reason why we take the course suggested.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have no objection to accepting the wording of the hon. gentleman's amendment.

The SPEAKER—As I understand, with the consent of the House, the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry accepts this amendment instead of his own.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—When I moved on Friday last, that this question be adjourned until to-day, I said I thought that there might be some complication on account of the gentleman who was to be ordered to appear at the bar being a foreigner, and that the hon. Secretary of State should consult the Minister of Justice and have his opinion on the point I raised. It may be the hon. Secretary of State has spoken on that, point, but I did not hear him if he did.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I stated that I had consulted the Minister of Justice and his opinion was that though we have the power to summon the witness to the bar, it would be very injudicious and imprudent to do so, that the circumstances were not such as would justify us in taking that action.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The reason why the committee thought it necessary to bring the matter of Mr. Eldridge's refusal to answer questions was, that the New York Mutual Reserve Life is before parliament with a Bill, to recast their system of doing business. In 1885, when they came before parliament asking power to become a corporate body in Canada, authorized to do business here, and make a deposit with the government, positive assurances were given by them that they were prepared upon terms very much less than were charged by the old line companies, to accept and carry on insurance in Canada. In view of that assurance, the parliament of Canada granted them a license to do business. Now, at the end of nineteen years, they come back for more legislation, frankly confessing that the basis of their system, the money gathered to meet the demands on their company, is insufficient. They are here to ask us for a Bill to do one of two things, either impair the policies to a sum at which the insured would get a policy in an old line company, or else be authorized to ask the holders of policies to contribute an increased sum over the assessments they have been paying, if they want to continue their policies at the amount now existing. What the committee thought was that it would be well to probe to the bottom the causes which had led up to the necessity of their coming to parliament for such legislation. I believe the aim of every member of that committee is to do the best we can for the policy-holders in the unfortunate dilemma they are in to-day. In view of all that, we thought it would be well if we could ascertain whether the payment of exorbitant salaries had contributed to the company getting into the position they now occupy. That is why we pressed to ascertain whether extravagant salaries was one of the causes that led up to the present condition of things. However, as far as I am concerned, I have no desire to force this company to disclose what they wish to conceal unless it is in the interests of the policy-holders. If it is considered that a statement of the sum en bloc of the salaries paid each year will enable us to form an accurate opinion as to whether those payments contributed to bring about the condition of things which now exist, I am perfectly satisfied. I have no desire to find out the different amounts paid to them as officials. It has been said by the hon. gentleman from Montreal, and the statutes have been quoted in support of his view, that insurance companies are not required to give in detail the salaries paid their officials ; but that applies to companies which are on a financial basis that is satisfactory to their policy-holders ; companies that are not under the necessity of coming to parliament to get legislation. This company, after nine years doing business, are now before us asking us to clothe them with power to exact from policy-holders more than the amount covenanted for in their policies. In justice to the policy-holders, should we not endeavour to know whether any acts of the managers of that company have contributed to bring about the condition of things that necessitates their coming here ? That is one reason why it was thought we should have the information. However, I have no desire to deal with this gentleman if the House comes to the conclusion that the information en bloc is sufficient to enable hon. gentlemen to form an accurate idea as to what we should do with the company and the Bill ; I was sorry to hear an expression that fell from the lips of the hon. Secretary of State in connection with this matter. He stated, and the statement will go abroad throughout this country, that all insurance companies are extravagant.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said I thought we all paid too much for our insurance and when I come to be advised that an agent gets 25 per cent commission, besides the salaries paid to managers, I have nothing to withdraw. It is a palpable fact.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Of recent years insurance has cost more to get it than it cost in years gone by, but to say that every company is extravagent——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I qualify that.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—There are companies in this country which are admirably conducted. The Ontario Mutual Life, with which Sir Wilfrid Laurier is connected, is well and economically managed. It would be entirely unfair to say that company is extravagant. I am glad to hear the hon. Secretary of State say he did not intend to convey that idea, because we must not forget that there are no organizations to which Canada lends her sanction that are more important to the people than life insurance companies, in which people invest such a large amount of money. There are very few families that are not pinching themselves, in some cases, denying themselves even necessaries of life, to keep up their insurance. When a life insurance company fails to carry out its covenants with its policy-holders, parliament is justified in demanding from them full information before giving them more legislation, and legalizing them to do business with the public. When a company comes before parliament asking for amending legislation, it virtually acknowledges that its system in the past has not worked out well in the interest of the policy-holders, and we should know before granting them legislation whether we should virtually recommend them to the public by acceding to their request. We should guard insurance legislation in the interest of the public. When this company came to Canada in 1885 the line companies said to parliament: You are backing up a tramp off the road without any responsibility, without any record, without any means, without any assets, and you are asked to legalize them to do business with the people of Canada, and the argument that this company will use will be that 'having deposited $50,000 with the government it is safe to do business with us. The government have looked into our affairs have pronounced us good and sound financially and we ask you to insure with us.' Now, after nineteen years experience they come to us and say 'We find that the basis of our system was not sound.' Are we not justified in probing to the bottom the causes which have lead up to this condition of things, in view of the fact that we are asked to clothe these people anew with legal status before the people of Canada to do business again? That is why I, as one of the committee, strongly supported the getting of all the information we should get. That I believe was also the reason of other members of the committee. In view of the wording of the Act, and the fact that the witness is a foreigner, I have no desire to be harsh, and am perfectly willing, if the House, so desire, to accept the statement he proposes to make of the yearly expenditure, and let us come to the best conclusion we can on his statement.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—It is contended by some hon. senators that because the law as it stands gives us certain directions for dealing with these questions, we should not persist in our action with referrence to a witness who has refused to answer questions put to him. The argument has no foundation whatever. Parliament is the maker of laws, and, outside of the sanction of parliament, the law must prevail: but when parliament is in session it must have the power of exacting all requirements it can enact by law. If it were not so, this company would be on a better footing than Canadian companies. The fact that the gentleman is a United State citizen is of no avail. He is on our soil, and a witness in connection with business transacted in Canada under Canadian law. There cannot be any complication with the United States if we insist upon his answering. This company is doing a large business in Canada. Many serious complaints have been made against the methods of the company. Now the Senate has ordered an investigation of these matters, and it seems but right that we should go on with it. The argument of the hon. Secretary of State that we should not go beyond the statement that the statute requires them to report, is absurd.

Suppose this company, or any company should make a report in which we would have reason to believe there is something wanting, would not the House of Commons or this Senate or parliament have a right to go beyond that, and make an investigation? There is reason, as repeated by the hon. gentleman from Wellington, to inquire whether the witness is receiving an exorbitant salary. There is a rumour in circulation that this gentleman is receiving the nice sum of $45,000 a year for his salary. If that be true, that would be a scandal. That would be taking illegitimately a portion of money that should belong to the policy-holders. If we were to make an investigation of the affairs of all the insurance companies we might find other cases of the taking by illegitimate means of moneys that should go to the credit of the policy-holders, and which the policy-holders were given to understand would go to them. Some years ago on the retirement of a manager of an insurance company, the directors voted him as superannuation a sum of $12,000 or $13,000 annually. I say that this should not be tolerated. It is taking from the earnings of the policy-holders, money that should return to them. Part of it at least should return to them and, under the circumstances it seems to me that the Senate should adhere to the recommendation of the committee. If the witness should again refuse to answer, we need not go beyond that if it is not thought proper to do so, because that refusal would do more harm to the company than good, and under the circumstances, I would not insist myself on proceeding further.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Before the amendment is put I have to express my regret that action is taken in the matter, although I suppose that it is impossible to do otherwise in the absence of the hon. senator who made the motion. He would have been in a position to give the views of the committee more fully, and probably more effectively than any other member on it. In the meantime I have to express my surprise at the attitude taken by several of our leading senators in this honourable House as to how joint stock companies and banks and other institutions should be treated in regard to the salaries of their officers. I do not know whether it is that 'a fellow feeling makes us wonderous kind,' but institutions that are chartered and are working under incorporation Acts of this parliament should have nothing to hide from the policy-holders or share-holders. It is a false policy to assert before the people of this country that it would be detrimental to a company, whether insurance, banking, railway or otherwise, to let the world know, to let the stock-holders or policy-holders know, where their money is going. On what ground do hon. senators base that provision? Not on the law, but as the hon. gentleman from Marshfield said, on the spirit of the law. Will he tell me what is the spirit of the law? Who is to ascertain the spirit of the law? Who is to interpret the spirit of the law? Is it the man who pays, or the man who refuses to tell what he collects? In this case, it is the policy-holders who have a right to interpret the spirit of the law, and the interpretation of the law is that the men who receive their money should tell how much they get, and how hon. senators can endorse an opposite principle is more than I can understand. There is another reason why this committee was anxious to get at the details of the salaries of the different officers of this company. We did not ask for the salaries or the payments to ordinary agents throughout the United States, Canada, England or other countries. We asked for information regarding the expenses of the whole office to which the policy-holders of Canada have contributed a very large share. Out of $5,038,000 contributed during nineteen years by Canadians to the treasury of that company, that company only returned to the widows and orphans $3,068,000, leaving within a few thousand, $2,000,000 to be accounted for. They accounted for two portions of that, but not for a third, they account of $999,000 odd paid to ordinary agents throughout Canada, and other expenses of office work and so forth, but that money remained in the hands of Canadians. That explains one portion of the extra $2,000,000 they received from Canadians. Then they say 'we explain the difference by saying that in the hands of the government there are $228,000. That leaves a balance of $758,000.' I may add that Mr. Eldridge, the vice president of the company, said that apart from the $228,000 in the treasury of Canada there were $16,000 in the banks of Canada, but what banks he did not let us know. I put the question to him 'if you issued the cheques to-day that money could be taken out of the banks.' He said 'certainly.' Consequently, all the money in the hands of the people of Canada is $228,000. Take the $999,000 and the $228,000, and it gives $1,200,000, leaving a balance to be explained of over $700,000. When he was asked where that went to, what did he say? For the maintenance of the home office, for the expenses of the company, as at New York, and so forth. Now, under these circumstances, the company should state how much of this money has gone for rent, how much of this money has gone to pay salaries. We can get no information beyond the fact that the money went over to New York, that it was in the hands of the company, and that there was no specific amounts either charged up or down; it was there en bloc. There was another matter the committee had under consideration, although not publicly, and it was this: Evidence was given that the business of this company is administered by a board of directors to the number of twelve. Are they men independent of the institution? Are they men who are not subject to the administration? Why, no. Nine out of the twelve directors are paid officers of the company, so that practically the board of directors meets and votes salaries to themselves, nine out of twelve. That is, there are eight directors who are paid officers, whose salaries are regulated by themselves, and there is one employee, who is also a director, making nine out of the twelve. Here you have a board of directors who vote money to themselves, the money of thousands of policy-holders of this Dominion: yet we are told by the witness that he will not answer our question, and say what he is getting, or what the president and the other five or six officers of the company are getting as salaries. It was under these circumstances that the committee unanimously made the report asking, not for vengeance, not to have Mr. Eldridge enjoy the privilege and honour of being locked up behind the bars of this House, but simply to put the president of the company in a position to defy the people of Canada, and say: 'We will take your money, and not tell you how or why.'

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—It seems to me the question before the House at the moment is not one that involves all the ramifications hon. members are indulging in. The question before the House is this, as I understand it. The committee dealing with this matter, a few days ago, made a report to the House, in which it stated that a witness refused to answer certain questions. To-day in the committee an alternative proposition was made with regard to the salaries, which was that he declined to answer the giving of salary of each official, but would give the aggregate of the salaries; and the question, as I understand it, before the Senate now is whether this alternative proposition will be accepted. This debate has taken a very wide range, as seems to be frequently the case in this deliberative body, and we are travelling all over the compass, so far as financial managers are concerned. I am not a stockholder. I am not a bank director, and have no interest whatever in the banks of Canada, excepting that I am a borrower from them, and I hope long to be a borrower from them; but I have some knowledge as to the foundation on which the banking system of Canada rests, and I do not hesitate to say that a little knowledge with regard to the matter of our banking institutions would be a dangerous thing. I do not hesitate to say that the stockholders generally of our banks know very little of banking, and necessarily must never know very much of banking. That is understood by the general managers of our banks and by the directors who administer the affairs of the banks; and it would be an exceedingly dangerous thing indeed if they at all times imparted all the knowledge that they possess in so far as our banking is concerned. My hon. friend who has just spoken referred to that matter and seems to think that——

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The stockholders of a bank and the stockholders of all our financial institutions, as well as the stockholders of every industry of Canada, are entitled to know all the internal workings of the company they are interested in.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—Not denying for one moment the statement of my hon. friend, who is a director of a bank, I do not hesitate to tell him that I have had a little more experience than he has, or will have if he remains a director for some years to come, and I know that the statement I make is correct, that it would be a dangerous thing to disclose this information, and before the hon. gentleman is a director very much longer he will find that the directors conceal very much with regard to the ramifications of our banking institutions. He will know it later on.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—But they have no right to do it.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—I am talking about a matter of policy, I am not talking about right. I wish to say a few words with regard to the speech of the hon. gentleman from Wellington. While not desiring for one moment that this investigation shall be burked, the Senate having undertaken the responsibility, my honest desire is that the affairs of the institution shall be ascertained as fully as can be, and that finally the very best shall be done for the insured in this company, who are practically the stockholders; but if I am asked my private opinion as to the rights of this Senate to interfere in family matters, as it is doing in this respect, I must say, as one senator, I shall have to dissent. This company is composed of the policy-holders. If it had been organized in Canada, it would be subject to the laws of Canada just to this extent, that those gentlemen who have become the shareholders are elected directors and manage the affairs of the company, and it would be under the supervision of the Insurance Department. That is the extent of the responsibility to Canada. This company is organized in another country, however.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Would the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him if the policy-holders form the company, are the policy-holders either directly or indirectly entitled to the information as to the salaries of the various officers of the company?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is the only point.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—I will answer the hon. gentleman. They perhaps are, but not through this instrumentality. If hon. gentlemen will allow me, I shall proceed to make my argument. Every incorporated company in Canada administers its own affairs. I hold, as a matter of principle, that we have no more right to investigate the affairs of this company than this company has to investigate the affairs of my company—not a particle more. If I became insolvent, the conditions would be just the same; this parliament would have no right to interfere.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is wrong.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—This insurance company is doing business in Canada under a Canadian license to do business, and is answerable to our Insurance Department, and to no one else.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—It would be proper for the Insurance Department, if they were not satisfied with the reports made, to investigate.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Will the hon. gentleman allow me to correct him? We have it in writing from the Finance Minister, who is the head of the Insurance Department—that we can proceed with the investigation, and it has nothing to do with him whatever.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Does the hon. gentleman say that the Finance Department approve of the action of the Committee?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—They did approve of it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The advice was to get counsel if we considered it necessary.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They declined to give counsel at first.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—The hon. gentleman will take some time putting me right from his point of view. I hold that this is entirely a domestic affair; it is a matter entirely between the policy-holders who compose this company, and, as is the case with every other company, they control their own affairs, and if they are dissatisfied with the management they have the remedy in their own hands at the annual meeting. That is the principle I hold, and in that respect my hon. friend from Wellington is entirely wrong. As to my hon. friend saying the Finance Department said you could do so and so, I suppose the Senate can do what is right, but I hold the principle is wrong and that we are doing something we properly should not do. Referring again for a moment to this matter of ascertaining certain facts from the officials, it is the general practice that the information that has been asked for is not given with respect to such matters. I think that is the position in regard to banking institutions generally, but coming right down to the question, in so far as these policy-holders are concerned, is it not, after all, the aggregate of that expenditure in that connection that we are interested in if we are interested at all ? It is the aggregate amount, and in so far as I am concerned I shall be perfectly satisfied with the alternative suggestion that was made and shall vote for the amendment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I wish to make a suggestion as to changing this motion with the consent of the House. In drafting it rapidly I think I left out a few words that should be inserted. I desire to have it read in this way : 'That in view of the statement, &c.

Be it resolved that the information contained be accepted as sufficient and the order discharged.

That makes it more explicit.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I think this debate might have been conducted with a little more calmness. This debate might have been conducted with more calm deliberation. I do not see any necessity for the hon. Secretary of State going into a line of attack on various kinds of business. It is an unfortunate debate sprung upon us without knowing it was coming up and in anticipation largely of what the committee cannot report until the investigation ends. We have been anticipating the report of the committee all along in this matter. I think the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry said he had no confidence in what the committee was doing.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I take exception to anything of the kind being said.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Then I did not hear the hon. gentleman correctly. Another hon. gentleman said he could not see what good it was making this investigation. There is one thing before us ; while we may be ingenious here in arguing, while we may be anxious to serve one side or defend the other side, we have ranged on the side that I am supporting in this matter the policy-holders throughout Canada whose money has been squandered. Under the other banner are arranged those who wish to find some defence for the company. What will the public say ? They are watching this thing. I have letters from some of those who have been robbed. When the facts reach the policy-holders throughout the country, what will they think of those who do not wish to have all the facts known ? They want to know where their money went. I might have the idea myself of immense salaries being paid, out of all proportion to the work done, and, in addition to salaries, perquisites and emoluments which cannot be stated. It is all very well to say that parliament has no right to interfere, but it is an empty excuse to the people of Canada who have lost their money in this company. The company are asking for special legislation, and the Senate has every right to know what their position is before granting or even looking at their legislation. There is no desire to persecute Mr. Eldridge. I should be sorry to see him under the care of the Sergeant-at-Arms, because it might give our official a good deal of work, and the country would lose $4 a day. It amounts to this—the information cannot be obtained that parliament ordered should be given. The witness took his oath to tell the truth. the whole truth and nothing but the truth, but he has declined to tell the whole truth. The committee was obliged to report that fact to the Senate. We were not satisfied to take a large sum en bloc as evidence without getting details ; the president might have taken nearly all of it himself for anything we know. We want to know why those who are managing the company have been paid such large amounts. It would have been better not to have instructed the committtee to get the facts, than to consent to a suppression of part of them. However, when the evidence is printed, the people can see how matters stand for themselves. To-day, in the committee, it was decided to report Mr. Eldridge's willingness to give the same statement which he had offered to give on a previous occasion, and which the committee had declined to accept, and the committee now asks parliament to accept. Why did not the Senate apologize to him ? Let the hon. Secretary of State apologize to the insurance companies of Canada. He says they are all charging too much—that they are extravagant. I cannot agree with the hon. senator from Russell (Hon. Mr. Edwards) when he compares banking and other great institutions of this country which have millions of surplus funds and are paying large dividends, with a company that is not a company at all, but a fraternal association, who have agreed to assess themselves and pay claims through their officers.

The hon. Secretary of State says that all the assessment companies must go to the wall.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I am not pretpared to dispute what my hon. friend says, but it is unfortunate to ring the death knell of the Foresters and other assessment associations in Canada. We are charged with hurting this company, but my hon. friend is attacking all the assessment companies in Canada. I cannot subscribe to his statement that the Foresters and other kindred associations must go to the wall; but if it is true, who is responsible for allowing this thing to go on? My hon. friend says that the parties are only answerable to the insurance inspector. If that be so, the insurance inspector is superior to the Senate; and if he thinks it right to let this thing go on he can do so, and nobody is responsible to the public. The public rely upon the report of the Insurance Department, yet while that department reports that these assessment companies are all right, the hon. Secretary of State says that they must all go to the wall. It must be thoroughly understood that while the committee presented this supplementary report to-day, with the exception of one or two members, the committee are in favour of those questions being answered. But my hon. friend says it is not wise to test those questions, and that is something to be considered. But if the witness can refuse to answer those questions, he may refuse to answer others We have been trying to find out one fact—where all this money is gone and who got it, but when we touch an important point the witness declines to answer, and says: 'You cannot compel me.' The House is now asked to declare that the witness shall not be compelled to answer, and therefore the committee will be frustrated in its attempt to investigate the condition of the company in Canada. Those who are trying to frustrate the investigation must put themselves on record, and the people can judge whether their interests have been considered or not. The hon. Secretary of State asks, why single out one company? Does he want us to take up all the insurance companies in Canada? If he does we can begin next session, and the hon. gentleman can give us the name of the company he wishes us to take up first. This is the only one that is seeking legislation or relief at present.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The company is not seeking relief.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Who is?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The policy-holders. The Bill is brought in by the policy-holders

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—At whose request?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—At my request, as the only way of saving anything for the policy-holders in Canada.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—Did not Mr. Eldridge write to the policy-holders that this Bill was being brought in for their benefit?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I never heard of it. He may have done so after the Bill was introduced. Certainly it was not done through his inspiration. It was my own motion. Those who represented the company hesitated at first, but I said it was absolutely necessary that the policy-holders should get relief, and that I saw was the only tangible way it could be afforded.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Mr. Eldridge explained to the committee that he asked for it two years ago himself.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I never heard of it.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I object to hon. gentlemen expressing opinions until the whole of the evidence is in. So far we have heard from only one side. It may turn out that matters will take a different form, but that can only be known after the investigation. You cannot tell what a hog's skin is worth until after the bristles are off. As the hon. member for Stadacona is not here, and there is a general desire that no harsh measures should be adopted, it would be better to postpone the consideration of this report. If we are to accept the situation that a witness shall not be required to answer questions, it would be wise to think over the matter for a day or two. By that time we may have Mr. Landry here and we will understand the matter better. I have no desire to deal harshly with anybody. I therefore move the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was declared lost.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

NOTICE OF AMENDMENT.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I beg to give notice of an amendment to Bill (34) An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company. The directors of the Grand Trunk Railway Company have found, since the Transcontinental Railway Act passed, that they were assuming more powers to themselves than were necessary for the carrying out of the obligation entered into by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and were somewhat trespassing on the rights and privileges of the shareholders of the company. They would have under this amendment to refer to their shareholders for any outside or wider power, that they may need. I make this explanation in order to make it clear to those who are present this evening. The clause which I propose to move is as follows :

" 7. Except to the extent and for the purposes mentioned in Sections three and four of the Act to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act passed at the present Session and for the purpose of providing the deposit mentioned in the Scheduled Agreements, the Directors of the Grand Trunk Company shall not engage the credit of the Grand Trunk Company nor enter into any stock of the said Company or any securities held or owned by the said Company, nor apply any money so realized or any such stock or securities or the proceeds thereof, without the assent of the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Company, which assent may be given by a majority of the votes of the persons present or represented by proxy and entitled to vote at any general meeting of the Grand Trunk Company duly called.

" The certificate in writing of the Chairman of such meeting that such assent was duly given may be filed in the office of the Secretary of State, of Canada, and a copy thereof, certified by the said Secretary of State, should be taken and accepted in all Courts of Law as sufficient evidence of such assent."

This limits the power given to the directors of the Grand Trunk Railway Company to the implementing of the agreements with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company and the government of Canada.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow.

THIRD READING.

Bill (126) An Act respecting certain Patents of Siegfried Gironcoli.—(Hon. Mr. Poirier.)

CAPTAIN BERNIER AND THE CREW OF THE STEAMER 'GAUSS.'

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL rose to call attention to the following telegram published in the 'Mail and Empire' on the 8th day of this month :

Captain Bernier complains of men supplied him —Political pull the reason—One man was shipped as gunner although the 'Gauss' has no guns—Wanted fresh bread.

(Special to the 'Mail and Empire.')

Quebec, June 14.—Captain Bernier, who arrived here yesterday with his Arctic vessel, the 'Gauss,' after a thirty-six days' cruising, is far from satisfied with the personnel of his crew. He claims that with the exception of four men, including his first and second officers, the crew of twenty-four was foisted upon him at Montreal by the Dominion government.

They were not of my choice, and, with the exception of a few good men, all landlubbers, or fresh water sailors, who never went aloft in their lives or knew how to read a compass.

Some, no doubt, thought because the 'Gauss' was a government vessel they were going on a picnic, but the moment we started from Bremerhaven I gave them to understand that I was master of the vessel. Nevertheless, they were unfit for work.

I stipulated with the government before leaving Canada that I required six men for each watch, but I found when we set sail that I could only have three ; the others were of no use. Consequently my officers and myself had to do double duty, and I was on the bridge the whole of every day until we came to anchor in the port of Quebec.

Shipped as a gunner.

Among the crew, as gunner, was a young man named Laferriere, who, I have since learned, is connected with a Montreal French paper. I do not know why he was given to me, because the 'Gauss' has no guns on board, and was in consequence not in want of a gunner, but I presume influence was responsible for his appointment. I also had a steward who was forced on me though I objected to him, and who had the furnishing of the meat at his own discretion to the crew.

With regard to complaints made about the quality of the provisions, Captain Bernier said :

The provisions consisted of salt pork, hams, salt beef, sea biscuits and flour. The crew rebelled against the biscuits. They wanted fresh bread, and you can judge for yourself what kind of sailors they were when they refused biscuits. I have sailed the ocean for thirty-five years as a master, and in all my experience never heard of such a crew, and in future I will have the shipping of my own men or know the reason why.

And inquired of the government :

1. Have any steps been taken to ascertain whether Capt. Bernier uttered the language attributed to him in the above telegram, reflecting upon members of the government in accusing them of having foisted upon him incompetent men to man the steamer 'Gauss' ?

2. If so, has he assumed the responsibility of making the charges, and will a sub-Committee of Council be appointed to investigate and report upon this act of insubordination on the part of Capt. Bernier in charging ministers with forcing upon him "landlubbers" to man a vessel purchased by the government to be used in the discovery of the North Pole ?

3. For what reason, and for what purpose was a gunner appointed for duty on the steamer 'Gauss', there being no gun upon the vessel ?

He said : I think I need hardly say to my hon. friend the Secretary of State that these charges made by Captain Bernier are of a serious character, that men totally unfit to assist in the navigation of a vessel, where the lives of the crew and all on board were at stake, were, as the captain says, foisted upon him. This appears to me to be an act of insubordination quite equal, if not of a much more serious character, than that for which the government have dismissed a very eminent military officer. Is the country to understand that in matters of this kind, where human life is put in jeopardy that government influence is to be used to provide pleasure trips—because the appointment of this gunner could have been for no other purpose—for men totally unused to the sea and knowing nothing of navigation ? Since I put this notice on the paper, I saw it stated that Captain Bernier has denied having used expressions of this kind. It is somewhat singular, the House will think so, that any reporter would deliberately concoct a story of this kind without any foundation in fact. Not only was this report telegraphed to the Toronto papers, but it appeared also in some French paper in the city of Montreal. If my recollection serves me right it was in 'La Presse.' The charges are of such a serious character that I think we ought to have some pronouncement of the policy of the government on this question. I shall say nothing further until I hear from the hon. Secretary of State what he has to say in explanation in the answers he may make to the questions.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have understood from various sources that Captain Bernier has pronounced the report a forgery—that he never made such a statement. The answers from the department only reached me just before coming to the Senate. They are not as full as I should like to find them. The answer to the first question is : On receipt of the various reports an officer was immediately despatched from the department to investigate the trouble ; the evidence was taken under oath and the matter is now under consideration.

I understood Captain Spain was the officer, but I have not seen his report, and I do not know whether it is yet prepared. I presume that it will give us full information.

Question No. 2 is answered, therefore, by answer No. 1.

In regard to the specific question of the appointment of a gunner the answer is: A gunner was appointed for the purpose of getting into touch with and drilling the men at various drills and exercises which are necessary on board ship. He was selected for his experience in the militia, having received certificates as drill inspector in that arm of the service.

I presume until we can get Captain Spain's report, I shall be unable to give any further information than the department has furnished me.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to state that when this report is received, it will be laid on the table of the House ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not able to say. If the hon. gentleman will move for papers, I shall send it to the department. Of course, I cannot answer off-handedly what the department will do. I shall be glad to get the papers in question.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The answer giving the reason for the appointment of this gunner, is, he was appointed for the purpose of drilling the men. Captain Bernier says there are no guns on the vessel, so I suppose he was put there to teach the hay-foot, straw-foot drill. I think the answer of the Secretary of State to the first question is not in accord with the answer given in the lower House, to this same question. It was there declared, as reported in the newspapers, that this man was taken on as an experienced seaman. Now it appears he was a military man, sent to drill the crew. I shall act upon the suggestion the hon. gentleman makes, and will put on the order paper a notice that I intend to move for the report of Captain Spain and any other information there may be on this subject.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I had not seen the report of the answer in the House of Commons, I was not aware that any reply was given.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—All I have heard is that the captain declared the report to be a forgery.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I understand the hon. Minister of Marine announced in another place, that he had a formal denial over the signature of Captain Bernier, of the truth of this report.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The minister was asked to produce it, and he said he would, but he has not done so ; and if the hon. gentleman reads a little further, he will find the minister did not know whether it was by a telegram or a letter, or how he got the denial.

THE AUDIT ACT.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.) moved :

That in the opinion of the Senate of Canada the government should during the present session of parliament, amend the Audit Act in accordance with the recommendation of the Auditod General, and thereby retain the services of that official whose mental vigour, courage, ability and long experience well qualify him to discharge the duties of his office, with advantage to the people of Canada.

He said : I was induced to put this notice on the paper by the comments made by the Canadian press the last two or three years. The reported resignation of the Auditor General has been freely commented upon throughout the Dominion and the sentiments of the press of all shades of politics are in favour of the retention of Mr. McDougall in that office. The Liberal-Conservative press, the Liberal press, and last but not least, the Independent press of Canada criticised the reported resignation of Mr. McDougall and the action of the government adversely in not meeting his wishes with respect to the amendment of the Audit Act. I find that Mr. McDougall's letter applying for superannuation was laid upon the table of the House of Commons yesterday. I shall read a portion of it which refers to his application for a superannuation and his retirement from office :

Auditor General's Office,
Ottawa, June 21, 1904.

To His Excellency the Governor General in Council :

I have the honour to request the government to superannuate me, to take effect from the 1st

July next. This may be done by superannuating any time during this month. The superannuation, if the time is not named, counts from the first of the following month.

This is in pursuance of the following sentences in the preliminary part of my report: 'The magnitude and number of the transactions going through this office are now so increased that I feel parliament should seriously consider also the amendment of the Audit Act along the other lines suggested in a former report, to enable this office to cope with the expansion of the business of the country. I feel so strongly on this point that if parliament does not see its way to bring the matter up this session I shall at the end of the session ask to be superannuated.'

The session is not ended, but from the remarks of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice on Mr. Lennox's motion for a committee, it is plain that the Audit Act will not be amended this session, and therefore there is no purpose in delaying my superannuation.

That is sufficient to show what Mr. McDougall has done. It is plain that he has given satisfaction to the people of Canada, and to all governments up to this date. He has been acting as administrator of the Audit Act for about twenty-six years. That Act is antiquated. Very few Acts are on the statutes that have not been amended since it was enacted. I believe Mr. McDougall is eminently qualified, from long experience in the office, to say what the amendments to the Audit Act should be. He has discussed the matter with the government for many years and without disrespect to any one, I think Mr. McDougall is as qualified from his experience in that office, to recommend what amendments are required as any minister of the Crown. Mr. McDougall as Auditor General has shown himself to be a man of great courage. It is a difficult thing for a civil servant to oppose the views of any minister. All ministers are powerful, and unless a civil servant is a courageous and determined man, he is always likely to yield to the minister. It is much more so when several ministers combine against a civil servant. Mr. McDougall, although in the civil service, is a servant of parliament, and perhaps the fact that the government is not able to dismiss him without a vote of parliament has fortified him in his position.

But I believe Mr. McDougall, independent of that, is a man of courage, a man of independence and of all men that I know is best qualified for the position which he has occupied for twenty-five years. It is evident that Mr. McDougall would not resign the position of Auditor General if the government had seen their way clear to amend the Audit Act as he suggested—not altogether as he suggested, but there is no doubt he intended to help the government in making an amendment to the Act that would suit the altered circumstances of the country. Mr. McDougall, in his application for superannuation, says he is sixty-five years of age. Although he has reached that age, there is no man in Canada, if I had the appointment, that I would appoint to the office of Auditor General sooner than Mr. McDougall. His physical appearance justifies the belief that he has many years of usefulness before him. Considering the fact that the public press of Canada, from one end to the other, are practically unanimous in favour of Mr. McDougall's retention in office, and in favour of the government not accepting his application for superannuation. I have put this motion on the paper with a view to test the opinion of the House on the question, and to see whether this is in accord with what I believe to be the unanimous opinion of the people of Canada as represented by the press.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Whatever views or opinions the government may have of the propriety of making any amendment to the Audit Act, it is not now possible at this period of the session to take any action. The government does not propose to make any amendment during the present session. I should regret that that decision should involve the resignation of the Auditor General. He was appointed by an administration of which I was a member. It was the Mackenzie administration that placed the Audit Act on the statute-book. I had charge of the measure in this chamber, and derived great assistance from the members generally in the consideration given to that Act in 1878. Mr. McDougall was selected as the Auditor General, being a gentleman of the highest integrity and possessing all the qualities that fitted him to discharge the duties of that office. I see no reason for changing the views that I then held, and I am quite prepared to join in many of the observations made by the hon. gentleman from Cape Breton. I feel, however, as many others feel, that as years went on Mr. McDougall from evolution, from no motive other than a feeling of intense interest in the work of his department gradually extended and enlarged the scope that was originally intended under the Act. The Act has been on the statute-book since 1878. There have been no amendments in the direction of enlarging the scope of Mr. McDougall's work. Hon. gentlemen will remember that, during the eighteen years of Conservative administration, there was considerable friction between the members of that government and the Auditor General. That was quite natural. The tendency of any official who has a sincere desire to do his duty, particularly in the auditing of the public accounts, is necessarily to become suspicious of all disbursements that do not meet with his approval. His powers under the Audit Act were first to see that in every case presented for payment there was an appropriation by parliament. If contracts were given out improperly, it was his duty to call the attention of parliament to the fact. He held office by the will of parliament practically, as his removal from office must be approved by parliament, and therefore, he is, in a sense an independent official, and one that I recognize has rendered the country very great and valuable service, and I should regret myself that the decision that I have announced would lead to the conclusion of his services and his withdrawal from his present position. I do not at all agree with the observations of the hon. gentleman who introduced this motion, that the press has so universally approved of Mr. McDougall in all instances. They have recognized him as an honourable and painstaking officer, but they have at the same time criticised Mr. McDougall on very many occasions as devoting too large attention to the small matters that come under the notice of the Auditor General's Department, and hon. gentlemen will quite understand that the tendency of that office has been to expand and enlarge its powers. For very many years after the Act was passed, and during the early eighties, the report published by the Auditor General yearly was a reasonable volume giving in succinct form fair and proper criticism of the main subjects of expenditure. I happen to have in my hand the volume issued in 1882. Hon. gentlemen will see the size of it. That has expanded into the two large volumes issued recently. I ask the hon. gentleman has the business of the country expanded to such a degree as would warrant the publication of the Auditor General's Report to the extent of 2,500 pages.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman forgets it is a 'growing time.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a growing time, but I do not think we have grown quite so fast as that. The Auditor General has some very superior men in his employ, but he has one or two other officials who probably like to delve and peer into matters which probably are outside the jurisdiction of that department. As the hon. gentleman has quoted the press as at all times praising the Auditor General, I shall quote for his information a leading organ of the Conservative party, the Montreal 'Gazette,' which is a strong party paper and generally expresses the views of the Conservative party. In discussing this question on Friday last they say :

> Almost immediately thereafter a Conservative government came into power and remained in power for eighteen years. Mr. McDougall's reports were the cause of many troubled hours to its members ; they have been possibly more bothersome to the Liberal ministers who are now in the place of power.

I shall simply quote one or two paragraphs :

> One of the duties of the Auditor General is to make a report to parliament. From one this has grown with the growth of the country's affairs to two huge volumes of about 2,500 pages. Some of the contents are valuable ; some are not. They include a record of the payments on behalf of the government from the interest on the debt to the price of half a dozen cakes of soap, and the cost of washing the towels of a public office. It is proper and necessary that even the smallest of accounts should be audited. It is hardly needful that their details should be compiled and printed year after year at considerable cost to the country. They are not in a large number of cases of any value, either in themselves or relatively. They are made use of in the House of Commons chiefly during the discussion of the estimates, and for the worrying of the ministers. This does not as a rule make for the dignity of parliament.

That is the opinion of the leading Conservative organ. I cannot say that I agree with all those observations. I recognize that as years went on, the office has been no doubt magnified and the powers of the Auditor General have sought to be enlarged. I am not finding fault with the Auditor General because I think it was a proper thing to call the attention of parliament to it. The Auditor General sometimes puts himself above the law. We had the Civil Service Act before us last year, and in that Act there was a clause authorizing the appointment of a civil servant who had not passed the examination, but who had been in the employ of the government for a period of years. I may say that the former administration had passed a similar Act and limited its operation to one or two years, the period in which that right had to be exercised. It was for the purpose of giving the opportunity to many of the employees of the government who have been for a long series of years faithful servants, the chance of being placed on the permanent list. We know that in the Public Works and Railways, and in other departments there are men who have been there for 20, 25 and 30 years. Some of them desired to be on the permanent service, and that clause was introduced as a similar one had been introduced some years ago, but, limited to a short period, and the Auditor General took the stand that it was not proper legislation, and for a very considerable time, he declined to recognize appointments made by persons who, although on the staff of the government, had not passed the civil service examination. I am not now criticising the Auditor General for his action. I am merely showing that in the opinion of many he assumed to hold powers larger than parliament authorized. Parliament was responsible for the legislation; if it was a mistake, and I am not prepared to defend it, it was for parliament to correct it. There are other instances of a similar kind where the Auditor General has interfered even in defiance of Acts of parliament. I am bound to say that any interference on his part has always been from a conscientious feeling. Nobody can question that the Auditor General has been most anxious to perform in the most perfect manner all the duties incidental to his office, but the tendency of an officer in his position is to constantly enlarge the scope of his power. The hon. gentleman making this motion did not point out any special amendments to the Audit Act, that he thought should be introduced.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He said they were in line with the suggestions of the Auditor General.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I could not at the moment say what they are. During the administration of which my hon. friend was a member for eighteen years, it was not thought necessary to add to the powers possessed by the Auditor General. Some few amendments were made, but not in that direction. They were more as to the details of the office, and not in any sense enlarging the power of the Auditor General. It was only after the change of government, when the political friends of the Auditor General came into power, that he pressed for changes in the Audit Act. The amendments, I believe, will be found in one of his earlier reports, after the change of government in 1896. The government would regret should it be made the occasion of Mr. McDougall's withdrawal from his present position. We would very much rather he would remain where he is. Although there has necessarily been friction from time to time between him and the departments it always passed away, and has left no ill-feeling. In referring to the action of the Auditor General's staff in devoting too much time and attention to minor matters, I might remind the House that there have been some very large expenditures which have been improperly made that the Auditor General was unable to take any control over whatever. That is, he has not been able to check them. I would refer to a subject that hon. gentlemen are perfectly familiar with, that is the Curran bridge, where the estimate was $125.000; the cost was increased to half a million, and there is no doubt large frauds were perpetrated. The Auditor General failed to check that expenditure. Of course he could not. I am not finding fault with the Auditor General for that or any other matter, because there are so many that have to do with the expenditure after a public work is entered upon, and you cannot always readily detect the men who will commit frauds. I may mention the frauds that were discovered in the Militia Department. It was beyond the power of the Auditor General to check them. So many people have to be trusted, that frauds will be perpetrated, no matter how anxious the government may be to avoid them, or the Auditor General to check the accounts. He can only know the circumstances after they are brought to his notice, and parliament has had cognizance of them. There was a waste of nearly a million dollars in what were known as the McGreevy and Connolly frauds in Quebec. The Auditor General could not control that expenditure, simply for the reason that frauds can be committed where you have to deal with parties outside. You cannot always rely even on those who ought to certify to accounts, and therefore I do not hold the Auditor General responsible for those defalcations; but I do recognize a good deal of truth in the observations made by the hon. gentleman from Montreal, who said it would be better if more attention were given to larger matters, and less to minor matters. As to the contingencies in the departments, it ought not to be necessary to spread out in the Auditor General's Report in detail the correspondence relating to small expenditures. It is in that way the volumes have been enlarged to the size they are to-day. The Auditor General can, of course, call the attention of parliament to improper expenditures. That is his duty. As a rule, the Committee on Public Accounts every session take up all those questions. It is rather creditable to this government that during the present session, the Public Accounts Committee have not met more than two or three times. There have been no serious charges to bring before it for examination, and, therefore, there has been less for the committee to do than in other sessions. I do not know what reports the Auditor General has made to them of improprieties in the past year. He always reports to parliament on expenditures that he considers are not warranted, where contracts have been given out without calling for tenders, and where contracts have been given not to the lowest tender, but to a higher one, and various matters of that kind. I have not heard that any questions have arisen in the Public Accounts Committee in any way criticising seriously the action of the government during the past year. Under the circumstances, the government is quite unable to accept a proposition of this kind, which they would regard as extremely unreasonable, and the Senate is not the chamber, I think, to introduce a proposition of this kind. The House of Commons has to deal more particularly with the subjects which come under the notice of the Auditor General. The government, of course, have no intention just now of making any change in the Audit Act. As I said before, hon: gentlemen opposite had control of the Act for eighteen years. I do not know whether they were pressed to make amendments or not. The hon. gentleman has said that the Act is out of date. It was a very good Act, and has been found to work very well. I do not know of any weakness in it; it certainly has not come under my notice. The power of the Auditor General in regard to all subjects committed to his control is practically unlimited. He can only be overruled by the Treasury Board, in matters that would properly come before that tribunal. All governments have from time to time, overruled the Auditor General. I do not know that there have been more over-rulings during the last eight years than there were during the preceding eight years. I am quite aware that the Treasury Board has from time to time had to differ from the Auditor General. He gives his reasons. The Auditor General has a right to counsel, and he from time to time consults the leading counsel in Canada as to the action which he takes. If hon. gentlemen choose to read the reports from time to time, they will find that, as a rule, he was governed by the advice of the most eminent counsel that could be obtained, with a view of keeping him within the fair scope of his duties. I do not wish to minimize in any way the valuable services that the Auditor General has rendered to this country. Whatever criticisms may have been expressed, whatever faults he may have been charged with, they have all been on the right side. His desire has invariably been to save the public revenue and restrict rather than to enlarge the public expenditure. Those who are responsible for the expenditure are the government of the day. While the Auditor General may have erred, it has always been on the side of economy and the protection of the public revenue. The government, in declining at the present time to make any changes in the Audit Act, still recognize that the Auditor General has been an efficient servant, and they hoped that their decision not to make a change at the present time would not lead to his withdrawal. His resignation has not been accepted, and I hope it will be reconsidered, and that he will remain in the service of the country.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I deem it due to myself that I shall explain to hon. gentlemen something with regard to the notice I placed on the order paper some time ago. I then gave notice that I would ask the government whether it was their intention to amend the Audit Act in the manner indicated by the Auditor General in his report. That notice I gave immediately before the May vacation, and before I returned to this House the question had been taken up in the House of Commons, and the discussion there divested the matter of a good deal of its novelty and interest. At all events it seemed useless to discuss a question which had already been answered by the premier elsewhere. However, I am entirely in accord with the resolution which has been moved by my hon. friend from Cape Breton. It is one that is well worthy of the consideration of parliament, and I am only sorry to learn from the hon. Secretary of State that it will not receive the support and sanction of the government. When Mr. McDougall was appointed Auditor General by the out-going Mackenzie administration he at once came in contact with the in-coming government led by Sir John Macdonald. Such an audit as he was empowered to make under that Act was something new in Canada, and, as a consequence, friction arose between the Auditor General and many of the departments and some of the ministers. That continued for many years, and it was not much wonder if the idea seized many members of the government and their friends that Mr. McDougall was pushing the matter in the interest of the political party from which he had received his appointment. That impression I know prevailed for many years. I am told that the late Sir John Macdonald, when premier of Canada, rose entirely above such a feeling as that, and whenever he was approached by any of his colleagues the ministers in the way of criticising the Auditor General he upheld Mr. McDougall as being a useful officer. I have no doubt that a ministry wishing to govern the country in the public interest would find an able and experienced Auditor General of very great service. Whatever feeling may have existed in the minds of many Conservatives with regard to Mr. McDougall's political feelings before the change of government, they have had ample evidence from that time forward that Mr. McDougall has been acting in a most impartial manner for he continued to be the same fearless, independent and able critic of the conduct of the present administration that he had been during all the long years he had been auditor under the previous governments, and no one can successfully point to anything Mr. McDougall as Auditor General has done under any government to indicate that he was animated by political feeling or desired to serve the purposes of any party. On the contrary, his sole aim, throughout has been to work in the interest of the people of Canada and prevent wrong-doing in the expenditure of the public revenue. I regret the retirement from the public service of such a valuable public servant, in what may be regarded as the prime of life—of such an able, fearless and independent man. At any time it would be a loss. The experience he has gained in the performance of his duty is simply invaluable, and no man, however good he may be, can become, for years, as efficient an officer as Mr. McDougall is to-day. The retirement of such a public officer would at any time be a loss to the country, but I hold at the present time it is a very serious matter to the people of Canada, because we are launching into enormous expenditures and pledging the credit of the Dominion to an enormous amount. Our revenue has expanded, but our expenditure has kept pace with it. That has been the case under normal conditions, but we are approaching what I call abnormal conditions, with the construction of this great National Transcontinental Railway, and I hold there has been no time in the history of Canada when a public servant of Mr. McDougall's ability, courage and experience has been required so much as it is to-day. My hon. friend, the Secretary of State, was fairly complimentary to Mr. McDougall, yet his speech was in the line of fault-finding. He was ready to join with those who said that Mr. McDougall magnified small matters in his reports. We all know that in the performance of such duties as he had imposed upon him, nothing is too small to require that it shall be done right. That ground is indisputable. In addition to that, my hon. friend went further and referred to some transactions in the past political history of Canada in which he alleged Mr. McDougall had not been successful in preventing frauds or corrupt expenditure of the public money. I am not going to follow the hon. gentleman; I think it is rather unfortunate in the discussion of this question that a debatable matter should be brought in, such as the Curran bridge or the McGreevy contract questions. There is no necessity to bring them in. It would be found, if they were discussed, that there was considerable difference of opinion with regard to these matters, and if discussed at all they would immediately lead us away from the point we have before us.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not hold Mr. McDougall responsible in any way.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman did not find him responsible, but he went so far as to say that his watchfulness and skill were not sufficient to prevent wrong-doing. I dare say if we examined the Auditor General's Report it would be found that Mr. McDougall was as vigilant on that as on other occasions. My hon. friend, although he introduced the subject in a way to prevent the Auditor General getting the credit, wants it now to be understood that he does not hold Mr. McDougall responsible for anything that occurred at that time. I shall not go into the question now, or go into the details of another transaction which has occurred more recently, and which has come before the public mind in connection with the proposed retirement of the Auditor General, and that is the Davis contract for lighting the Cornwall canal. I want just to point this out and if hon. gentlemen will take the Auditor General's Report, as many of them no doubt have, and read the long correspondence that took place on that subject between the Auditor General and the Department of Railways and Canals, and ultimately with the other departments and with Mr. Aylesworth, the counsel he had called in—if they will follow that struggle from the beginning up to the time an amended contract was entered into as a result of his efforts, they will find that Mr. McDougall did his duty in that matter in a most conscientious manner and with a courage and persistence that few men would have been capable of exercising. The result of that effort on the part of Mr. McDougall was, as he says himself in a foot-note that completes the correspondence, a saving to the people of Canada of an amount equal to about $500,000. I am not one of those who believe that there is not an earnest desire on the part of many hon. gentlemen supporting the government and their friends all over the country that the Transcontinental Railway should be constructed without public scandal of any kind. We know how prone human nature is to go wrong, and that in dealing with a question of that magnitude the government will have to deal with all kinds of contractors and there will be opportunities for wrong-doing and obtaining more money than they are entitled to from the people of Canada. In view of that fact, I appeal to my hon. friend the Secretary of State if it is not worth while to go a long way if necessary—I do not think it will be necessary—to meet the suggestions of the Auditor General, in order that the people of Canada may have an assurance that that vigilance which he has directed to the conduct of the expenditure of the country for so long a period will be continued from the inception and during the carrying out of this Trancontinental Railway. We are not asked to go a long way. If hon. gentlemen will look at the letter which appears as an introduction to the Auditor General's Report for last year, they will find that the amendments he seeks are very few. He may have suggested other amendments—I know he did—years ago, embracing other changes besides those indicated in the report of last year. I have had the report on my desk, of an interview which one of the Ottawa newspapers had with Mr. McDougall a couple of months ago, in which he slightly amplified and enlarged on the amendments he suggested in his report, but we have this to understand clearly, that these are the only amendments which Mr. McDougall was prepared to insist upon. Now, let us look at what these amendments are. The first is that no contract be made with the government after the work is completed. Is not that self-evident? Why should not that be the law? Why should contractors be allowed to go on and put the government in their debt, and then the government may before a settlement of the debt, allow them to come in and make a contract after the work is completed? That request of the Auditor General is one which the government shall meet. Now we come to the next, which reads as follows —

> That in contracts given without tenders, or where tenders have been called for and the lowest tender has not been accepted, the proper officer of the department be required to certify that the prices are fair and just.

Is that not self-evident? Is there anything in that amendment which any hon.

gentleman in this House will not say was just and reasonable. Now there is only one other, which is as follows :

That in all cases the technical officer, on whose expert knowledge the department relied in making the contract, be required to supply the fullest information to the Auditor General and all other government officials who have the duty of dealing with contracts.

Those are the only three amendments on which the Auditor General insists. I may be told that the Auditor General drew up amendments to the Act some years ago that embraced more points than these. That is true. As I said before, I have a copy of this. The other amendments were not very important. They were merely provisions for facilitating the transaction of the business, but I am clear in saying that these were the only amendments, as will be seen from the report of the Auditor General himself, on which he was prepared to insist. I think it was the duty of the government to have met the Auditor General on these points. I have been told that his feeling with regard to this is that without such provisions he has asked for, he would hesitate to undertake the duties that will devolve upon him in the near future on account of the magnitude of the transactions in which the government is engaged. Hon. gentlemen will agree with me that the government has not done its duty, inasmuch as it has not conceded these amendments and in that way conserved to the people of Canada those safeguards which they would have if Mr. McDougall continued as Auditor General.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I desire to say a few words on this question. For many years I endeavoured to discharge my duty as a member of the House of Commons in opposition to the government of the day. I took the Auditor General's Report as my guide usually, and I endeavoured to criticise estimates from time to time as they were brought down, and point out where I thought money could be saved. Some people may fancy that it is a small thing to draw attention to small items, but small items will make big items. By accumulating them you will run hundreds into thousands and thousands into millions. I never considered myself above criticising, in the interest of my country, what I thought required criticism, and I never hesitated to criticise any items that I thought required to be considered, if they were even in relation to the Governor General or the King, or Queen. I consider that a member of parliament has a duty to perform, whether he is a supporter of the government or an opponent of the government, and I endeavour to the best of my ability, humble as it is, and inefficient perhaps, to discharge my duty. The Auditor General's annual report was the basis of my investigation as a rule. I am somewhat disposed to differ from the Secretary of State with regard to the voluminous character of the Auditor General's Report. Unless you draw public attention even to small matters, small matters will grow to be big ones, and the only way that you can prevent questionable transactions from being hidden so that the public will not learn anything about them, is by curtailing and restricting the publication of the Auditor General's Report, leaving out many of those small things that are published and that some people did not like to see there, because they were participants in the advantages that accrued in the expenditure of those small items. I do not think that the Auditor General's report should be reduced, I would leave him to judge what should or should not be published for the information of parliament. I am entirely in sympathy with the view expressed by hon. gentlemen, that he has been an admirably good servant for this Dominion. He has served the country well. He has filled his place with great credit to himself and credit to the government that appointed him. I entirely agree with the remarks which have been recently made and I think it is a very great pity, at this juncture, that he should be forced to leave the place that he has so admirably filled. I am not going to say that the Auditor General has not peculiarities. We all have our peculiarities, and sometimes when a man has occupied an official position for many years, he is very apt to form cranky notions with regard to things that those outside of the official duties that he discharges cannot very well agree with. The Auditor General may be peculiar in that way, but, after all, he has so admirably filled the office that the government should exhaust every possible means to retain him where he is. I would respectfully suggest—I do not know whether it has been done or not—that there should have been a committee from both Houses, of men on both sides of politics, who would have looked into the amendments to the Act that the Auditor General has suggested, and after a due and careful consideration a report to both Houses. I do not agree with the Secretary of State on another point, that the Senate is not the proper place to discuss this subject. The Auditor General is the servant of both branches of parliament. He is just as much the servant of and under the control of the Senate as he is the servant of and under the control of the House of Commons, and he can only be removed by joint action of both Houses. If that is the case, why have not the Senate as good a right to look into matters under the control of the Auditor General as the Commons have ? We have just as good a right, in my opinion. I should have liked very much if the government were in a position to say : 'We offered Mr. McDougall, if he would agree, that we would choose the best talent on both sides of the House, the government holding a majority as they are certainly entitled to do, select a committee and let them go over the Act carefully and fully and let them fully consider the effects of the proposed amendment. If such a committee came to the conclusion, after twenty-five years' experience of the working of the Audit Act, that it would be well to amend it or make certain concessions in small matters, I think it would be very much better that the government should adopt that course if it would be acceptable. I do not know if Mr. McDougall would accept such a proposition or not. I should not ask him to accept. I would simply ask that a committee be appointed to look into the whole thing, and then if desirable amendments were suggested, to incorporate them in the statutes. I should like to see that done, and I agree with the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island that at this juncture, it is most desirable that Mr. McDougall should remain where he is. There is no question about it. I have every confidence in him. I am proud to think that for the past session the Public Accounts Committee, after having exhausted every effort during the last session to hunt up and expose extravagance, have not been able to lay their finger on any serious wrong on the part of the government. That they have so felt during the present session, that they have absolutely abandoned investigation, and have not called the Public Accounts Committee together at all—at least not more than a week or two for organization. I am glad of that. I do not attribute it to Mr. McDougall's policy. I attribute it to the earnest desire on the part of the government to conduct public business properly, but I wish it to be understood that, while that is a fact, I want an Auditor General like Mr. McDougall, who will faithfully discharge his duty, and in view of the very large expenditures we are likely to have in connection with the Grand Trunk Pacific, if we can in any way retain his services as Auditor General until that work is completed, it would be a prudent thing to do. My hon. friend has said something with reference to the Curran bridge. The hon. Secretary of State drew attention to it—that the Auditor General was not able to prevent serious losses in connection with that structure. He certainly should not have made reference to it, as an evidence of Mr. McDougall's slackness in not detecting the fraud. What is the fact ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said I did not hold him in any way responsible.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Still reference should not be made to that. That is not the reason that the construction of the Curran bridge was done by day labour, There was an amount of money voted by parliament and the government decided, owing to the fact that navigation would be closed the following season if the work were not done within the winter months. It was only by working day and night that they were enabled to complete the structure, and thus save the obstruction to navigation, and an appropriation was therefore taken to do it by day labour. My hon. friend would not expect me to show how many men were working at one place and how many were at work at another place. Then there was the McGreevy contract, that he referred to. What is the fact with regard to that ? Could the Auditor General have detected it? In the first place, the McGreevy contract was let at a fixed sum. Take for instance the bridge at Montreal ; what was the contract ? It was to excavate 800,000 yards at 25 cents per yard. After the contract had been let and the contractor had started work, he said there was no provision in the contract that required him to take the dirt out of the harbour. He was only to dredge it up and put it in the scow alongside the dredge. There was nothing in the contract requiring him to take it out of the harbour, and Sir Hector Langevin, then Minister of Public Works, agreed to allow him 10 cents a yard to carry it down the river, and that agreement was sanctioned by the government and the Auditor General could not be held responsible for that. I have no doubt similar difficulties occurred in connection with other works. I have not the least doubt the present government had trouble with the Auditor General. I am satisfied they had no doubt about his honesty and ability, but the best evidence of the fact that they appreciated his influence and earnest efforts in the interest of the country is this ; Sir John Macdonald, I remember well, made a speech in the House of Commons. He introduced a Bill for the purpose of increasing the salary of the Auditor General from $3,000 to $4,000. Sir John introduced that Bill himself and in doing so he pronounced Mr. McDougall as being one of the most efficient, faithful, devoted servants Canada had. That shows that they appreciate his earnest efforts in the discharge of his onerous duty. The position that the Auditor General occupies is one of the most undesirable positions that any man can possibly occupy, for the simple reason that he stands as umpire, he stands guard between the government, whatever party is in power, Grit or Tory, and the people of the country. He is supposed faithfully to discharge his duty with an eye to save the public money, and look carefully after its expenditure, and he is supposed to keep pretty close eye upon every department of expenditure in order to carry out that object, and the duties of the office that he fills. I have no doubt Mr. McDougall has done that. I believe that he has faithfully served the country, and I should like to see him continue his position as Auditor General. With regard to the Davis contracts I should like to see a thorough and exhaustive investigation of the whole matter. I should like to learn whether there is anything wrong, I don't care who the perpetrator is. In my humble opinion we as senators should hew to the line no matter where the tree falls. I do not care if there was wrong done when our predecessors were in power, that does not justify wrong-doing now. I should like to see an investigation held. During all the time I have been in parliament I have exposed extravagance, and I have condemned contracts that, on their face, or in their working out, bore evidences of corruption. I am prepared to do it to-day. I will not sacrifice the few hours of my existence by doing anything which I conscientiously think is wrong. I do not care about the result. I am willing to support the government as long as they do what is right, but if they perpetrate wrongs and do things which I cannot conscientiously support, I will have to cut loose. All I have to say is that I hope some way will be found of settling the difficulty that has arisen between the Auditor General and the government ; by the government, to some extent, meeting him in the suggestions he has made. He has had twenty-five years experience as Auditor General. That certainly must have given him a great deal of insight into public expenditure and he must have gathered information during that time that will warrant him in taking the position that there is a necessity to amend the Audit Act in the way he mentioned. I am not capable perhaps of judging them, but they appeared to be very unimportant amendments. I would not ask him to consent to the formation of a committee for the purpose of investigating and reporting upon the whole matter, but I would try to see if some arrangement could not be brought about, by adopting the course as suggested, and I would throw the onus on him of refusing what a committee of the House recommended should be done with regard to the amendments suggested by him.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I may be excused for saying a few words upon the question from the fact that I have had nearly eighteen years' association with Mr. McDougall as Auditor General. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken has relieved me of the necessity of referring to one or two points to which my hon. friend the Secretary of State called the attention of the Senate, and he has done it in a manner that does not require any amplification on my part. If the Secretary of State had followed the tone of the press in regard to this matter he would scarcely have made the remarks he did. There have been very few of those that have come under my observation that did not refer in the highest possible terms to the Auditor General. There are one or two in western Canada who have referred to the position that he has taken, at the same time defending the government, no matter what they do right or wrong. No matter how faithful a public servant might be, they would condemn him if it would only mislead their readers into the belief that the government was right on all occasions. The Secretary of State has expressed a regret that they should lose the services of this officer, but he made the most extraordinary statement, that the Auditor General had attempted to override the laws as they stood upon the statute-book. I am inclined to the opinion that there is no evidence of any attempt on the part of the Auditor General to override the law. His position has been to prevent the overriding of the law by ministers of the Crown, by which public moneys would be expended improperly and illegally. He has in no instance, in all my long experience with him, taken the position attributed to him by the hon. Secretary of State. There have been occasions on which he has given interpretations of the law, and the ministers of the Crown have appealed to the Treasury Board to override decisions of the Auditor General, but in most of these cases, in my opinion, when an appeal was made to an eminent counsel, sometimes he would refer the question in dispute between the Treasury Board and himself to Sir Christopher Robinson, sometimes to Mr. Lash and sometimes to other gentlemen standing high in the profession, and in almost every case, so far as my recollection serves me, they have decided that he was right and that the Treasury Board was wrong. My hon. friend from Wellington said that a man who was in an office for a long time might become cranky. I scarcely think that is the right word to use. A man who is a long time administering the affairs of a department becomes so thoroughly acquainted, not only with the details but with the law under which he governs the department, that he is always ready to give an opinion and if he adheres to that opinion as Mr. McDougall has done, if the opinion does not coincide with the view taken by those who differ from him they are apt to call him a crank. Perhaps I speak feelingly on that subject. I was thirteen years at the head of one of the most important departments, so far as administration is concerned, in the country. We had to come in contact with every importer, probably nearly 1,000 a year, and having come in contact with them over and over again, I should rather be inclined to repudiate that charge that it makes an officer cranky. I thought I knew the law and endeavoured to administer it. It was not in accordance with the views of others, and they came to the conclusion that I was taking an extreme view which I should not have taken. I am quite willing to admit that that may be the case with the Auditor General in many respects. The Auditor General's Reports, in the earlier part of his official life, were, it is true, much smaller than they are to-day, and for this reason. So many large public contracts were not being carried on at that time. The expansion of the business of the country in every respect, both in the departmental and in the outside work, was very much smaller than it is to-day; consequently when he began his duties and had to study the laws governing the audit of public accounts in England, and in other portions of the world, as years rolled on he necessarily became better acquainted with his duties, and the result was an increasing volume. We never heard any of this condemnation of the Auditor General's voluminous reports during the seventeen or eighteen years that the Conservative party were in power, and those who occupied seats on the opposition benches criticised and the criticisms were of a character sometimes, as I thought, going far beyond the limit of fair, legitimate discussion; but I fully concur in the estimation made by the hon. gentleman from Wellington in this respect. If you do not carefully guard the expenditure in the departments, of what may be considered the smaller items, where a great deal of wrong is committed, you very soon forget to look after the larger sums into which they grow. There is such a thing as going too far, but beyond that I would have no objection to the size of the volumes which the Auditor General presents to us every year. I think there might be a great improvement in the presentation of that volume to the public and members of parliament, by which they could ascertain what expenditures had been incurred in connection with the different departments without having to go through the whole of the two volumes. That I have suggested to the Auditor General himself, and I have no doubt if he considers the matter he will adopt a reform of that kind. The remark by the hon. Secretary of State in reference to the proper examination of officers was scarcely fair, in my opinion. The Civil Service Act lays down the principle upon which officials shall be appointed, and when that law has been exceeded and payment is demanded from the Auditor General to meet the expenditure incurred, part of his duty was to refuse to pay it, and that necessitated the placing in the estimates of what we saw the other day, and which I pointed out last session in discussing the estimates, the words :

Anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary notwithstanding

To the extent of sixty or seventy times in last year's estimates alone. That is not overriding the law by the Auditor General ; it is overriding the law by a minister who makes an appointment of an official who has not passed the qualifying examination, and it is the duty of the Auditor General to resist the payment of these accounts until the authority of parliament has been obtained for the payment of them. It is unfair to state, and it leaves a wrong impression on the minds of the people who read the statement, that the position taken by the Auditor General is that in order to annoy the government of the day and show his officiousness, he tries to override the law. I have had a long experience with the Auditor General. I sat in the House of Commons with him before he was appointed. There was scarcely a public question on which we agreed. When he was appointed to the position of Auditor General, I know Mr. Mackenzie did not consider it beneath him to approach the leader of the opposition Sir John Macdonald at that time, and consult him in the selection of a gentleman for the position, and when Mr. McDougall's name was suggested Sir John Macdonald accepted him at once, and told Mr. Mackenzie that he should have the support of the party which he was then leading. Why ? Because Mr. McDougall had obtained in a university those high qualifications which are necessary to any one holding the important position of Auditor General. Speaking from my personal experience, I can say that in the thirteen and one-half years I was in the Customs Department, during which there might have been, if I had felt so inclined, friction between the Auditor General and myself, I never had the slightest difficulty with that gentleman. While in the Railways and Canals Department, where many claims are made that require the most minute investigation, and where difficulties arose in meeting the demands put forward when there was no appropriation to meet them, I never had the slightest difficulty with Mr. McDougall. He would suggest means to meet that which was required for the time being. I am not going to criticise my own colleagues, nor shall I criticise the hon. gentlemen who administer the affairs of the country at the present time, but this I will say, and the Auditor General's Report proves it, if there was friction during the long administration of the Conservative party between the Auditor General and the government, it has multiplied a thousand per cent under the present administration, and why ? Because those who are now administering the affairs of the country have endeavoured to override the law, and the Auditor General, as an honest man, put his foot down, and consequently came in conflict with them. That is why he has had more difficulty of late years than he had with the old government. That occasional friction will occur is beyond doubt, because we all differ on minor points, but in the main I do not think we could get a better officer than Mr. McDougall. Why did the government, at the beginning of this parliament, introduce a law to curtail the powers of the Auditor General and take to themselves larger powers ? There can be but one conclusion in the mind of any one who has paid the slightest attention to the administration of affairs during the last seven or eight years. We all know the attempt that had been made to override the decisions of the Auditor General and make his office a nullity. It is because he would not permit that, and because he exposed it in his reports, that the government came down with a Bill to diminish his power when in the public interest it should have been extended. I know my late chief, Sir John A. Macdonald, had a very high opinion of Mr. McDougall. I was glad to hear the remarks made by the hon. senator from Wellington. He used the very familiar expression we were accustomed to when difficulties arose between the Auditor General and certain supporters of the government, in the past, because they have been occurring all the time. All you require to prove that is to refer to the letter of Mr. Mackenzie, where he said he had to sit on the watch tower all the time to guard the public treasury, not against his enemies, but against his friends. Sir John Macdonald used this expression in discussing it with him. The Auditor General is a splendid buffer between those who want you to do what you should not do, and the public treasury, and he always sustained and supported the Auditor General. I know the government appreciate public opinion, and I hope they will take means not only to meet the views of the Auditor General, but to put him in such a position that he can protect the public funds from improper expenditure. The Auditor General is not an officer of the government of the day. If he were, my honest convictions are that he would have been relieved of office long ago, because he has been not only a buffer but a block in the way of extravagance and improper acts. I shall not be led into discussing the question of Public Accounts Committee of the House of Commons. If I did, I should probably run amuck against some hon. gentlemen who have been speaking so eulogistically of that body. We have only to read the proceedings of the Public Accounts Committee during the last few years to see that the large government majority in that committee has obstructed every attempt to expose improper expenditure, and the fact that there have been few meetings of that committee during the present session is not evidence that no wrong has been done by the government, but incontrovertible evidence that the majority of the committee have studiously and steadily refused to call the committee, in order that investigations might not go on. Even when they did meet, minor matters were discussed, and motions were voted down until they reached one o'clock and the committee rose. That is about the history of that committee. I was on it under both governments and I have had some idea of its workings. The hon. senator from Wellington made an unanswerable explanation in reference to the Curran bridge. It is true, it was built by days' work, and that frauds were committed in the returns of the pay-lists which were made, and which the Auditor General could not possibly know anything of until they were presented. Just as soon as they were presented, they were stopped. I had two or three weeks of the responsibility of the Railways and Canals Department, during the time of that very Curran bridge scandal, and I have a pretty good knowledge of the difficulties which presented themselves during that time, and when the pay-lists were blocked, the Auditor General was the first man to assist in blocking them. How could the Auditor General know anything about the McGreevy and Connolly frauds in the province of Quebec, until the accounts were brought before him after the errors and frauds had been committed? Just as soon as they came before him, he was the man to say: 'Is this right? Is it in accordance with the contract? Are you not claiming more than you ought to?' And then the matter was brought before the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Justice did what every one will commend him for doing, entered a criminal prosecution against those men and sent them to jail.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not hold the Auditor General responsible.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is true, the hon. gentleman did not say he held the Auditor General responsible; on the contrary, he said he did not hold him responsible, but if he did not intend to leave the impression that the Auditor General should have stopped the frauds he would not have referred to it. He could not know it until the question came before him. He had not the giving out of the contract. He had his duty to perform when the contract was placed before him after it was made. When he began to examine the payments claimed under the contract, he began to ask, is this claim in accord with the terms of the contract? Just as he did in the Davis case, and just as he did in perhaps the more flagrant case in connection with a claim for 15 per cent on the alleged cost of a bridge on one of the railways. The claim was for over $36,000, and he refused to pay it, although it was certified by the department to be correct. When the investigation took place it was proved the contractor was entitled to only $14.755 instead of $36,000; thus a fraud to the extent of some $22,000 was prevented by the Auditor General, on one claim alone. There is a case in which the Auditor General's services to the country has been rendered in a fearless manner, and in opposition to the department which certified the accounts. I do not say there was a desire to leave a wrong impression on the minds of the House, but those who knew nothing of the circumstances would come to the conclusion that the Auditor General was responsible for the Curran bridge scandal and the McGreevy-Connolly frauds. I hope the hon. Secretary of State will in future, as he has to-day, take the Montreal 'Gazette' as a guide for his political course. If he does he can depend upon it he will not go astray as often in the future as he has in the past. I read that article in the Montreal 'Gazette,' and it is like all articles which come from the pen of the editor of that paper, conscientiously put, and where he thinks even his own party is wrong, he does not hesitate to say so. It is an example we might all follow. I hope the Secretary of State will read the 'Gazette' carefully and attentively in future. The reference of the 'Gazette' to what he calls finding fault with small items is very easily explained. To those who have not been behind the scenes, and know very little of the working of the different departments, the Auditor General's attention to small items may appear an unnecessary waste of time. We have had pages and pages of his report showing purchases by people in the public employ, of luxuries which the general public do not approve of, and, if no fault had been found with such payments, the government might take it that the expenditure in that respect had been approved of. I can say, after a long experience of seventeen and one-half years in different departments of the government, I have scarcely ever found, during that period, that the Auditor General was in the wrong when questions arose affecting the expenditure of public money.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I would suggest that the hon. gentleman strike out of his motion that portion which suggests that every amendment which the Auditor General recommends should be adopted.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—I agree with the view of the leader of the opposition with reference to the Montreal 'Gazette.' I do not interpret the article quoted by the hon. Secretary of State as he has interpreted it. The Montreal 'Gazette,' in several editions of late, has advocated the retention of the Auditor General. The hon. Secretary of State, in the course of his remarks, stated that the Auditor General had not, while the Conservative party was in power, asked for any amendments to the Audit Act. I shall be very sorry to believe that if the Auditor General thought the Act required amendment he would not ask the Conservative government for the amendment.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—It was not needed then.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—From that fact, I infer that the Auditor General did not see any necessity for amending it then. It has been suggested that the Senate is not the place to bring up this question. I agree with the hon. senator from Wellington, that there is no higher body in Canada than the Senate. It represents the people and the Crown. It is non-political, and what other body is in a better position to pronounce upon a question such as the duties of the Auditor General? I believe the people are nearly unanimous in support of my motion. The Senate is independent of the people, of the Crown, and of the government, and no other body in Canada is more capable of dealing with this question than this honourable body. I am willing to act upon the suggestion of the hon. senator from Wellington, to drop out the portion of my clause which he has quoted. My intention was to say that the Audit Act should be amended according to the suggestions of the Auditor General, and with the approval of the government. With the consent of the seconder I beg leave to drop that portion of the resolution.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I feel that this resolution is not very satisfactory in the way it is worded. It affirms two things, one of which nobody can object to, and another to which I am not ready to subscribe. The hon. gentleman begins by saying that in the opinion of the Senate of Canada the government should, during the present session of parliament, amend the Audit Act in accordance with the recommendation of the Auditor General. He has consented to strike out 'In accordance with recommendation of the Auditor General.' I wonder how many members of the Senate have closely looked into the working of the Audit Act and the recommendation of the Auditor General to be in a position to say to what extent those recommendations commend themselves to the Senate. I am absolutely in doubt as to whether the Audit Act should be amended or not. It seems to me it would need a greater study of the question than any member of this body has made of it up to the present time, to be able to decide what should be done. How many of us can say that he understands the Audit Act and just where it should be amended. If it needs amendment, then the work should not be undertaken in the last days of the session, and in view of the fact that the Finance Minister, who is responsible for the administration of the Act, has gone into the matter and framed appropriate amendments to be submitted to parliament, it is pressing the government unduly to ask them to go into the question at this late hour of the session, when neither branch of parliament can give it proper consideration. As to the other part of the resolution, I think we are all agreed. I have not heard any one express an opinion that we should not try to retain the services of the present Auditor General as long as we can. If the hon. gentleman presses his resolution, he will simply force a majority of this body to reject a motion part of which we all approve of. I will suggest to the hon. gentleman that after hearing the general expression of opinion in favour of retaining the Auditor General he would better serve his purpose by withdrawing the resolution.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I entirely agree with the remarks of the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière. The reasons he has given should commend themselves to the judgment of the Senate. I desire to further call the attention of the House to other reasons which should induce the hon. member from Cape Breton not to insist on his motion. First I call attention to the fact that, as worded, it says that the government should amend the Audit Act. It is not in the power of the government to do anything of the kind. But apart from that, we have a letter from the Auditor General, a portion of which was read by the hon. senator from Cape Breton in which he says:

> This is in pursuance of the following sentences in the preliminary part of my report:
> The magnitude and number of the transactions going through this office are now so increased that I feel parliament should seriously consider also the amendment of the Audit Act along the lines suggested in a former report.

Therefore the Auditor General suggests not only the amending of the Audit Act as mentioned in his last report, which has been read by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, but also that it be amended along the other lines suggested in the former report. For my part I do not know what that former report contains, and how can I affirm, even if we are to take the word 'government' as intended to mean parliament, that parliament should amend the Audit Act along those lines? I am satisfied that a great majority of this House have not had an opportunity to study the question, or of knowing exactly what suggestions have been made by the Auditor General. The resolution, I respectfully submit, does not hold together. It suggests that the government should amend the Audit Act and thereby retain the services of the Auditor General. The conclusion does not at all follow from the premises. For these reasons I regret that I shall have to vote against the motion, if it is pressed. The hon. gentleman should be satisfied with having drawn the attention of the House to the question, and having obtained an expression of opinion to which, for my part, I am ready to assent. We all agree that the Auditor General is a valuable servant, and that he occupies a very important position, and having proved that he possesses the character and ability to fill that position, it would be in the interest of the public that he should remain the Auditor General; but I repeat the hon. member should not press for a vote upon this resolution.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—The hon. gentleman has read the first paragraph of the Auditor General's resignation. In the last paragraph he says :

I feel so strongly on this point that if parliament does not see its way to bring the matter up this session, I shall at the end of the session ask to be superannuated.

That is, he feels so strongly that parliament should amend the Audit Act that he asks to be superannuated unless it is done. My resolution is in accordance with the Auditor General's letter.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I would suggest to take out the word 'thereby.'

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The Auditor General has been making these complaints to the government for some little time past, and they have absolutely refused to do anything. In the other House the hon. member from Lennox moved a resolution to leave the whole power with the Prime Minister to appoint a committee to examine into the complaints, but the Prime Minister would have nothing to do with it. It is evident that the Auditor General has some grievance with respect to the law. How are you going to get at it if the government has undertaken to deal with the matter ? For that reason. I should be inclined to vote for the motion. I admit that I do not know all the details. but I understand the object of the proposed amendment of the Act is to give the Auditor General power to deal with the public expenditure in a more efficient manner than he can under the Act as it now stands.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—It appears to me that a very little alteration would do away with one of the objections.

The Senate divided on the motion, which was rejected on the following vote :

FEDERAL GRANTS OR SUBSIDIES TO PROVINCES.

MOTION DROPPED.

The Order of the Day being called :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General ; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate, all the correspondence between the federal and the provincial governments in connection with the increase of the federal grants or subsidies to the different provinces.

Hon. Mr. DAVID said : A discussion took place last year on this important question. I believe there are no new documents or correspondence between the government and the provincial government on this question, and at the suggestion of some hon. members of this House. I think proper to drop the motion with the intention of renewing it next year.

The motion was dropped.

THE TREADGOLD COMMISSION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL inquired of the government :

'First. When will the report of the Treadgold Commission be presented to parliament ?

Second. Has the Treadgold Commission been cancelled by the government ?

Third. If so, what was the reason for such cancellation ?

Fourth. Has any demand or request been made for compensation by said Treadgold Company for any expenditure made by it in connection with or on account of said concession ? If so, what is the policy of the government in relation thereto ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Messrs. Treadgold and Young. some little time ago, addressed a communication to the minister stating that they found from causes that are not explained they were unable to float the enterprise. and, therefore. they withdrew their application. On that an Order in Council was passed accepting the relinquishment of the concessions that had been made to them. That is practically the whole story. No compensation was asked. The only condition attached was that they should be protected for anything done during the time they held the concession—that is for any act they might have performed. It did not carry with it any compensation, however ; they simply delivered up anything they had received under the Order in Council, and previous Orders in Council were cancelled.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand the words 'Protected for anything thereby had done' to mean they were protected for anything they did while they held the license, or that they are protected for the expenditure made under it ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no ; it would limit it to any act they had done. They had the authority to do certain things while they were holding it ; that authority has been cancelled. If during the time they had purchased any claim, for instance, that would be respected, or anything of that kind ; but it is not coupled with any compensation to be paid them. The concession was without any condition whatever.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand that no report has been made by the commission appointed to investigate ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No report.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is that on account of the death of one of the members of the commission, or are we to have a report later, after the elections take place ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A day or two ago an official communication was sent to Judge Brittton that as the concessions had been now cancelled, there was no object in making a report in reference to the Treadgold concession. There was no object whatever in making a report under the circumstances.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I hope the government will order a report to be made. The country has been put to an enormous expense to inquire into the circumstances connected with the concession, and now, after spending months to investigate it by a commission, we are told we are not to have a report at all—that the government have instructed the commission not to make a report. I do not know what the country will think of conduct of that kind. The people will be anxious to know what the effect of granting that concession to the Treadgold Company was. The fact that it has been cancelled cannot by any means satisfy the public mind. I am very much afraid the public will come to this conclusion, that the commission appointed by the government to investigate the complaints which have been made against the granting of that concession were of such a character that the government would rather not have a report, and for that reason they cancelled the concession and the contract, and then ordered the commission not to make their report.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am quite sure no mortal knows what the report might be. My hon. friend will recollect that before they entered on their report, Mr. Bell was killed, and no intimation whatever was given of what the report might be. They, no doubt, will transmit the evidence taken on the subject, and it would be rather preposterous to draw a conclusion when the whole concession has been cancelled.

Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The press has intimated what probably would be the effect of the report, or rather, what it might contain. Perhaps the press in that case, as in others, has been given information that has been withheld from parliament. I will not prolong the discussion on this question now further than to enter my protest against the conduct of the government in appointing a commission to investigate the very serious charges made in connection with the Treadgold concession, and then, while the report is being prepared, they cancel the concession and instruct the commission not to make a report.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The government did not cancel. The parties withdrew. I think I explained in a few words that they were unable to finance the enterprise. The cloud thrown on the enterprise by some of the hon. gentleman's friends in another place, I have no doubt, have had an effect on the money market, and whether the concession was good or not, that, I fancy, was the barrier—I speak subject to correction—in the way of their raising the money. They could not get the money.

Hon. Sir. MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the country may be congratulated on the fact that the opposition were the means of putting a stop to the project.

TRANSPORTATION OF NORTHWEST TERRITORIES CROP.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY inquired of the government:

If the government have since last January received any representations from the Northwest Territories Wheat Growers' Association regarding the proportion of the season's crop they desire to have shipped prior to the closing of navigation at Fort William; also, in view of the large crop expected this year, are, or will the government use their influence with the railway companies of the west towards providing sufficient rolling stock to move at least 60 per cent of the crop before navigation closes?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No other minister has received any communication from the Wheat Growers' Association other than the Minister of the Interior, who informs me that he has had some letters from them calling attention to the importance of having, as he thought, about 50 per cent of the crop out before the season closed. He was not very sure as to whether it was fifty or sixty per cent my hon. friend referred to. The answer to the latter part of the question really gives the fact that, last year, when the government authorized the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to increase its stock, they made a special stipulation that, some very large amount, I think it was $10,000,000, should be invested in the purchase of rolling stock, and that, I understand, has been done to the full figure, in fact really more; therefore it is to be hoped there will be abundance of cars to carry the crop to Lake Superior waters before the close of navigation—to carry, at least fifty or sixty per cent of it. Whatever influence the government can bring to bear on the two railway companies in that direction they will naturally exercise.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I am glad to receive the answer from the hon. minister. I might say that in the Northwest Territories, during the last two or three years, owing to the great success of the farmers in raising wheat, they found extreme difficulty in getting it shipped to market, and they have organized a Wheat Growers' Association in the Territories, not so much for the purpose of educating one another in the methods of raising wheat because they think they have that problem pretty well solved, but rather to secure a more prompt shipment of their grain in the fall. There is a prevailing opinion—and I think it is necessary I should say so—with a great many farmers that they should not be compelled to hold over the greater proportion of their wheat. It is customary for most people when they have their produce ready for market, to feel that they are entitled to sell and ship it. The farmers in the Northwest, the moment the seed is in the ground, commence to prepare for next year's crop. We work the soil from now until the harvest comes on, then after harvest we again work the soil, and the following spring we seed it. There are eighteen months from the time we commenced to prepare the soil before the grain is harvested and in the granary. We ought to be permitted to sell it within eighteen months, but railway people say no, the farmers can hold their grain until the next spring and they compel the farmer, virtually, to hold it back for two years. We think that is unfair; still I am proud to say, a large number of farmers are able to hold a portion of their crop. Last year this matter came up at Regina at the grain-growers meeting. I was present as a delegate, and the meeting recommended that the Canadian Pacific Railway be required to carry out seventy-five or eighty per cent of the wheat before the close of the season. After discussing the matter, they concluded that it was too much to expect. They wished to be reasonable in their demands, and they thought 60 per cent was a reasonable amount, and that the government who has control of these things should act in the matter. We sent a copy of the resolution to the government, and it has had some influence on the company, to furnish us cars. It is unfair that a farmer should be compelled to hold his wheat for two years after he has spent 18 months at heavy expense preparing for it. It is heavy expense, feeding teams and so on, without any return sooner than 18 months. I cannot sell my grain while it is in the elevator at Wolseley. I must have it on the car. I cannot realize on it in the elevator, but once I get it on the car I can sell it in five minutes. Therefore it is proper that transportation facilities should be provided to carry out the crop before navigation closes.

OKOTOKS AND HIGH RIVER LUMBERING AND DEVELOPMENT COMPANY BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY moved the third reading of Bill (No. 51) An Act to incorporate the Okotoks and High River Lumbering and Development Company, as amended.—(Hon. Mr. Perley.)

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I was requested by the Hon. Mr. Edwards, who takes some exception to the Bill, to ask the indulgence of the House to permit this Bill to be postponed until after the adjournment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If that is done we will be detaining for weeks the gentlemen who have been promoting this Bill in the city. They have been here for a long time and they desire to return to the Rockies. I think the hon. gentleman from Russell, having given expression to his opinions which are very strong upon the question of expropriation in particular, after that and some other concessions which were made in this Bill, would be quite satisfied. I do not think he imagined for a moment that he could succeed in inducing the House to reject the Bill after its having been so thoroughly discussed in committee. If this Bill involved a new principle, I should give it the strongest possible opposition. There are provisions in it, giving power to the Minister of the Interior that should not be conceded, but these powers are now enjoyed by the minister in the Irrigation Act, and I scarcely think it would be fair to deprive this corporation of the same rights that are given to others under almost similar circumstances. If the Act regulating irrigation were to be recast and the power of expropriation there given and which is also given in this Bill was eliminated, I should give it my hearty support; but I am not prepared to say, after the investigation which has taken place in the Private Bills Committee, and the thorough manner in which this Bill has been threshed out, that these gentlemen should be kept waiting until this matter can be brought up after the adjournment. I think after a moment's reflection, the hon. gentleman from Russell would not feel at all annoyed if we passed the Bill now. No one would accede to the request of the hon. gentleman quicker than I would, if it were only for personal reasons.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I may say that today the hon. gentleman was discussing the subject with the minister, and gave his reasons for his opposition to the Bill. The minister frankly admitted in my presence, that he was perfectly justified in eliminating anything from the Bill which would give powers to this company which they should not have. The minister agreed with Mr. Edwards with that understanding, Mr. Edwards having to leave the city to fulfil an engagement, the Bill was to be allowed to stand.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As far as my recollection goes, of recent years we have not been giving private companies powers of expropriation.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I know it has not been done latterly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is scarcely a railway in the country that has not been given these powers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is true of railways, but not of private corporations. I have no recollection of it having been done of late years; if so, it is an exception, because I have known several cases in which there has been a refusal to grant expropriation powers. The Bill cannot receive the Royal Assent any sooner by passing it today, and I should hope the hon. gentlemen would allow it to stand.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I understand that when this Bill was first introduced this company asked for all powers of expropriation as it is given in the Railway Act. That clause was struck out, and in place of it the power given to irrigation companies in the Northwest was inserted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Substituted by the Minister of the Interior.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Substituted by the Minister of the Interior. I have seen the minister and he said he thought it would not be fair to this company to strike out clause 9, as suggested by the hon. gentleman from Russell (Hon. Mr. Edwards), but that if anything was done at all, and the House considered some restrictions should be placed on the company, it would be better to refer the Bill back to the committee for the purpose of restricting the powers of expropriation. He said, after discussing the matter fully with the gentlemen interested, that they certainly would require some power of expropriation to prosecute their work. It was explained before the committee that the country in which these gentlemen purpose to operate is at the foot of the Rocky mountains, and it is absolutely necessary for the carrying on of their operations to have some powers to improve streams or for building tramways for getting out logs. All provisions for guarding the interests of the west are provided, because they cannot do certain things without first obtaining the consent of the authorities in the Northwest Territories. The local authorities in the district have jurisdiction to say what they shall do under the expropriation powers conferred by this Bill. I understand the gentleman who is promoting this Bill has been here since March. He has 200 or 300 men in his employ, and it would certainly be a hardship for him to have to remain over during this adjournment. It is a pity the hon. gentleman from Russell is not here. The Bill ought to receive its third reading; however, if it should be regarded as discourteous to the hon. member from Russell, I do not want to press for the third reading in his absence.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I may say, as a member of the Private Bills Committee, that this clause, as well as the Bill as a whole, was considered at two meetings of the committee. This clause itself was the subject of opposition raised by the hon. senator who has given the notice to amend. It received a great deal of consideration, and it will be observed that it is a qualified clause on its very face, because it restricts the right of expropriation to the lands actually required for the construction, maintenance and operation of dams, piers, reservoirs, &c. It does not give the general right of expropriation. In reply to the hon. Secretary of State, I would say that last year we had a very much more extended clause inserted in one Bill, if not in two Bills, that we passed. In fact, the expropriation that was first sought in this Bill was following that precedent; but, I understand, this qualification of the lands actually required was inserted by the Minister of the Interior himself. The members of the committee were all ultimately agreed, except the hon. member who gave the notice of motion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—How many members were at the meeting of the committee?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—A large number. On the second occasion they adopted this clause without any difficulty. At the same time I should be sorry to do anything in the absence of a member who desires to oppose the Bill. The whole matter should be fully discussed.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a third time and passed.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (121) An Act respecting the Century Life Insurance Company.—(Hon. Mr. Perley.)

Bill (29) An Act to incorporate the Canadian Credit Indemnity Company.—(Hon. Mr. Young.)

PILOTAGE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (100) An Act to amend the Pilotage Act. He said: This Bill proposes to authorize the Governor in Council, when it appears to him to be in the interest of navigation, to appoint the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to be the pilotage authority for any pilotage district or for any part thereof. Last session we passed an Act authorizing the Minister of Marine under certain circumstances, to be the pilotage authority for the district of Montreal, and we separated the pilotage district of Saguenay from the Harbour Commission of Quebec. He does not take all the powers of the former pilotage authorities, because he does not propose to sit on a tribunal for the trial of offences by pilots.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD, (B.C.)—Are all the pilots to be named by the government?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. At present the pilots are named by the board. This is to authorize the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, where the interests of navigation require it, to represent the facts to the Governor in Council and if they are satisfied it would be to the advantage of navigation they can place in the Minister of Marine and Fisheries the power of administering the pilots.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned until the 11th July.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

NOTICE OF AMENDMENT.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I beg to give notice that when the Order of the Day for the third reading of Bill (34) An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company is called, I shall move the following amendment after clause four:

In all cases where persons are employed in or in connection with the surveys for or the construction of the said Transcontinental Railway, preference shall be given to British subjects by birth or naturalization.

It shall be unlawful to employ any person in or in connection with the surveys for or the construction of the said Transcontinental Railway, or any part thereof, who is not a British subject by birth or naturalization, or who, being an alien, has not for one year immediately preceding such employment been a bona fide resident of Canada.

Provided always that whenever it shall be made appear to the satisfaction of the Railway Commissioners that it is not possible to obtain labour for the construction of the said railway with reasonable despatch owing to the restriction aforesaid with regard to the employment of labourers, it shall be lawful for the said commissioners to suspend for such time and on such terms and conditions as may to him seem reasonable in the premises the operation of the said restrictions as to employment of labour for construction purposes only. And a copy of such order of suspension shall be forthwith published in the 'Labour Gazette.'

For every violation of any of the provisions of this section the person, partnership, company or corporation violating it shall forfeit a sum not exceeding $1,000, nor less than $50, and a further sum of $50 for each and every day during which such unlawful employment shall continue.

The sums so forfeited may be sued for and recovered as a debt by any person who first bona fide brings his action therefor in any court of competent jurisdiction in which debts of like amount are now recovered.

I give notice of this resolution to call the attention of the Secretary of State to the employment of alien labour in this country. Any one who has followed the report of the investigation by Judge Winchester in the country can see how those provisions are being outraged and the law trampled upon, yet the government have not moved a foot to enforce the law, which I believe is quite strong enough to prevent anything of the kind being done. My intention is to refresh the mind of the hon. Secretary of State and the government to which he belongs. It was promised by the premier in the other House that an additional amendment should be made to the Alien Labour Act. The first clause of the Act of 1897 reads as follows:

From and after the passing of this Act it shall be unlawful for any person, company, partnership or corporation, in any manner to prepay the transportation, or in any way to assist or encourage the importation or immigration of any alien or foreigner into Canada, under contract or agreement, parole or special, express or implied, made previous to the importation or immigration of such alien or foreigner, to perform labour or service of any kind in Canada.

Then the next clause goes into the question of the fine, but that was amended in 1901 by the following section:

For every violation of any of the provisions of section 1 of this Act, the person, partnership, company or corporation violating it by knowing, assisting, encouraging or soliciting the immigration or importation of any alien or foreigner into Canada to perform labour or service of any kind under contract or agreement, express or implied, parole or special, with such alien or foreigner, previous to his becoming a resident in or a citizen of Canada, shall forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding one thousand dollars, nor less than fifty dollars.

To-morrow I shall move my resolution, and in the meantime I desire to refresh the mind of the hon. Secretary of State as to the condition of the law as it now stands.

YUKON TERRITORY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (39) An Act to amend the Yukon Territory Act. He said:

This Bill embraces a single section, and the object of it is to give authority to the commissioner and his council to divide the Yukon Territory into electoral districts, and to make provision for the election of local members and to define the franchise; provided, however, that a longer residence than one year shall not be necessary.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (101) An Act to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act, 1898. He said:

It has been observed in the last two or three years that a number of vessels are being propelled with naphtha, electricity and other fluids or energies that are not provided for in the law as it now stands, and the object of this clause is to bring them under the provisions of the Act, and where they carry passengers for hire, then they are made subject to the inspection and the regulations of the department.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—When the Bill comes before the Committee of the Whole House I shall ask the hon. Secretary of State with reference to the salaries of the engineers and other employees on steamers in British Columbia. They have petitioned for better pay. They are poorly remunerated, and they have terribly long runs. I hope the minister will to-morrow let us know if anything can be done to give them relief.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall make inquiry.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

SHIPPING CASUALTIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN moved the second reading of Bill (102) An Act to amend the Shipping Casualties Act, 1901. He said :

There are two material clauses in this Bill which is in amendment to the Shipping Casualties Act, the first providing that the minister may appoint an officer to make inquiry into any marine accident or casualty that occurs so that an investigation may take place. The other amendment is providing that the responsibility of the pilot for an accident may be inquired into at the same time. These are all the provisions of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time .

KINGSTON AND DOMINION CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN moved concurrence in the amendment made by the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours to Bill (123) An Act to incorporate the Kingston and Dominion Central Railway Company. He said :

This is merely a formal amendment declaring that the work is for the benefit of Canada. That is all the amendment that is required, as hon. gentlemen will see, and it was necessary to have this amendment passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned till to-morrow.

MUTUAL RESERVE INSURANCE COMPANY INVESTIGATION.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON moved :

That Mr. D. E. Cameron and R. B. Cannon be summoned to attend the select committee appointed to inquire into the affairs of the New York Mutual Reserve Assurance Company.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Might I ask what the object of this motion is ? The committee, as I take it, have the power to summon any witnesses they desire to appear before them. What peculiarities are there in this case that power should be taken out of the hands of the committee and the Senate should be asked to order the appearance of any particular witness before the committee ? It is a very unusual course.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Doubts were expressed at the meeting of the committee when this motion was read, as to whether the committee had power to send for these gentlemen. It was done at the request of Mr. Aylesworth, who wished to have these men examined. I gave notice in the committee, to prevent any trouble or irregularity, that I would bring it up in the Senate, and move it from my place in the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the committee decided they had no power to summon witnesses ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The reference to that committee gave them power to send for persons and papers, and to report to the House. If that be the case, there certainly must be some other reason for the course the hon. gentleman is pursuing. Did the committee refuse to send for these witnesses ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—No.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I think the hon. senator from Lincoln, who has given notice of this motion, is under a misapprehension as to what the committee is allowed to do in this matter. The House will remember, the committee was appointed to inquire into the truth of certain statements alleged to have been made by Mr. Wells. That was a special resolution adopted by this House, and the committee at the time carried out the duties imposed upon it in regard to that question. An investigation was made into the truth or falsehood of the alleged statement made by Mr. Wells. Mr. Wells was examined on oath and Mr. Eldridge was also examined on oath in regard to that matter. The duty imposed upon the committee was simply to examine Mr. Wells and Mr. Eldridge and nobody else. It was not a question of verifying which of them told the truth or falsehood. The committee was simply authorized to examine these two gentlemen and to report to the House. The committee made a report, which report was adopted by the House and the committee ceased to exist, as far as that particular question was concerned. The enlarged committee which is sitting to-day has simply to inquire into the affairs in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Life Association, and not the question of privilege which was raised by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona some two or three weeks ago. The committee that is now investigating the affairs of the Mutual Reserve Association came to the conclusion that they could not summon these two gentlemen in regard to a matter which was already settled by this House.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The question as to whether the committee has a right to summon these gentlemen and to examine them under oath was argued in the committee, and the committtee came to the conclusion that they had no right, inasmuch as the chairman of the committee had made a report. The inquiry was based on a question of privilege raised by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, who asked that Mr. Wells be examined before the bar of the House in reference to his alleged statement that they had paid some $10,000 to members of parliament to procure a charter for the company. It was moved by the hon. gentleman from Lincoln that a special day be set aside for the purpose of hearing evidence before the select committee appointed to investigate the affairs of the Mutual Reserve. I am not aware that the enlarged committee knew that any special day was set aside for that purpose. In fact the very first day after the committee was appointed. Mr. Wells was examined and subsequently Mr. Eldridge was examined, and these two gentlemen contradicted each other. It was explained by Mr. Eldridge's counsel, Mr. Aylesworth, that he wished to produce two other witnesses to prove that Mr. Wells had stated that he had spent $10,000 to procure this charter. These two gentlemen it is proposed to call as witnesses, it is claimed by Mr. Aylesworth, will substantiate the fact that Mr. Wells made that statement. On account of the committee having reported, it was thought they had not the power to summon these two witnesses, and it was agreed, I think, without dissent, that the only proper way to procure the presence of these witnesses was to move in this House that these gentlemen be summoned and examined. The hon. gentleman from Lincoln stated in the committee that he would take this course and move in the House that these gentlemen be examined.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As the motion stands these two gentlemen are to be subpœnaed to prove that Mr. Wells told a lie ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Or that the other man told the truth, I do not know which.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is a nice way of putting it. I do not know that it is a matter of much consequence to the House or whether it is worth going to the expense of bringing two men here to prove that Mr. Wells or Mr. Eldridge perjured himself. Most of those who have read the evidence will come to their own conclusion as to who told the falsehood.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It appears to me that the most important part of the investigation now going on is to learn who among the officers of that particular company are telling the truth.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I did not happen to be in the committee when the question of subpœnaing these men to give evidence was brought up, but I certainly think that if the committee had not power to subpœna those men the proper course would have been to ask the House to clothe them with additional authority to bring the witnesses before them. It would be unusual to pass the resolution which is now before the House. It would be stepping outside of the ordinary course pursued in both Houses of parliament, which is to leave such matters to the committees, delegating to them all necessary powers. If these are important witnesses in connection with the matter now being investigated, I am quite willing that they should be summoned by the committee, but it would be establishing a precedent which might be objectionable if we pass this resolution. I hope the committee is prepared to do whatever is necessary to elicit the required information, but if they have not the power to do that, the proper course is to clothe them with that power. The proper course is to leave the matter in the hands of the committee.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Suppose those witnesses should be subpœnaed, the committee has no power to examine them. The committee is instructed to investigate into the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association in Canada and nothing else. The matter to which the testimony of these two witnesses would relate is a matter already passed upon. It is for the House to say whether that matter should be reopened. It is a case judged, and if these two gentlemen should come before the committee the committee would have no power whatever to examine them.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Cloran) is under a misapprehension. He deals with the committee as having occupied two different positions. There was no special committee appointed to investigate the Wells matter. That matter was brought up in the Senate and referred to the committee appointed to examine into the affairs of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, and therefore, there was but one committee which is still in existence, and possessed of full power. The question came up in this way: before the committee was enlarged, the Wells matter was inquired into and two witnesses were examined, Mr. Wells on one side and Mr. Eldridge on the other. They contradicted each other and Mr. Aylesworth, representing Mr. Eldridge, offered to have two other witnesses examined for the purpose of establishing that Mr. Wells had made the declaration to them that it is alleged he did make. The committee decided that it was not necessary, and made their report to the Senate and it was adopted. After the committee was enlarged, Mr. Aylesworth, acting on behalf of the Mutual Reserve, made an application to the committee. He stated that Mr. Eldridge was placed in a false position, and he being a prominent officer of the company, the position in which he was placed by the report of the committee, was liable to injure the company. It would be published broadcast that he had made a statement which was untrue and therefore it would be detrimental to the company. He applied to have these witnesses heard. I myself took this position, that a report had been made by the committee to the Senate, and the Senate having accepted the report. I doubted whether the committee had any power to deal with the matter any longer. I suggested that the application be made in the Senate, but the next day the solicitor of the committee brought up Mr. Wells as a witness to be examined under the general inquiry into the position of the Mutual Reserve Company, and he put the very same question to Mr. Wells. I cautioned him at the time, that it would open the door to Mr. Aylesworth bringing these other two witnesses, and he said: 'I am doing it for the purpose of allowing them that opportunity if they wish to avail themselves of it.' Therefore I am of opinion that now it will be proper for the committee to examine these witnesses, because Mr. Wells was again brought before the committee and examined on the same point. I would, therefore, consider the motion unnecessary, but if the chairman of the committee is going to contend that the committee has no power to examine these witnesses, I shall surely vote for the motion.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I simply hold the opinion held by the hon. gentleman. His first impression was that the committee had no power to deal with it. He should hold to that opinion.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I say I believe the committee would have no power had not the same committee allowed Mr. Coster, the solicitor of the committee, to bring the same witness there again on the general investigation, and to introduce the very same subject that had already been dealt with. The matter had been dealt with specially, and for that reason, I thought it was closed as far as the committee were concerned ; but when the committee allowed the matter to be brought up again in the general investigation it seemed but fair that the other party should be allowed to bring these witnesses to contradict Mr. Wells, who has been heard on the subject in the general inquiry.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—There is no intention to debar the company from bringing those witnesses, but the hon. gentleman should not say because the solicitor cross-examines a witness on that point that it resuscitates the whole committee. It does not give it a new lease of life. The committee has ceased to exist so far as that issue is concerned. If the Senate say the matter has to be reopened we have no objection.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—If we are to take the position indicated by my hon. friend from de Salaberry, then there is no reason for this motion, because the committee on the general question of investigation into the affairs of that company is still vested with power to call such witnesses as they deem proper. Consequently, the resolution can have no result if we take that position. I understand the object of bringing these witnesses is to contradict a statement made by Mr. Wells on the first issue raised, viz., the question of privilege. It is alleged that Mr. Wells had stated that $10.000 had been expended in securing certain legislation in parliament. That question of privilege concerned the members of parliament, and as the minutes show, it was referred to the committee with special instructions to hear two witnesses, that is all.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—If the hon. gentleman will read the minutes of proceedings, page 311, he will see that I am right. These witnesses were heard, and the committtee declared themselves satisfied, so far as the question of privilege was concerned. They reported, and the report was accepted by this House. That ended the question of privilege, and it is not proper and we should not allow two more witnesses to be called on this same question of privilege which has already been decided. We have nothing whatever to do with the questions which arise between the witnesses. We are not the guardians of their characters, but we are the guardians of the dignity and honour of parliament and that was the point raised at that stage of the investigation. Whether Mr. Wells was right, or Mr. Eldridge was right, does not concern us, and it seems to me that the question having been closed by the report adopted by the House, we have no right to go beyond it and there is no reason why we should hear the witnesses mentioned in the motion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—This committee was appointed on the 19th May, on a motion by the hon. senator for Rothesay, to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada. To that main motion the Hon. Mr. Gibson moved in amendment that all the words after 'That' be struck out and that the following words be substituted :

> The position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada, be considered by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, &c.

The amendment was rejected, and the main motion was adopted. The committee was vested with :

> Power to send for papers, persons, telegrams and records, to employ clérical services and with leave to report from time to time, &c.

A few days after, a question of privilege was raised in this House by myself, relating to an accusation made by one of the officers of that company against the government which was in power in this country in 1885 and members of a committee, in that House.

I asked that Mr. Wells and Mr. Eldridge be examined at the bar of this House. My question of privilege was set aside by a motion referring that special question of privilege to the committee already appointed. That was equivalent to the formation of a new select committee to investigate the matter. The committee, in obedience to the order of this House, proceeded to hear the two witnesses that were designated by this House. That was the order of the House, and the committee could not go beyond the authority given them by the Senate. We heard the two parties, and the contradiction is not so great as has been represented. One said he had never declared that he had spent $10,000, or that he had ever spent any money for the purpose mentioned. The other witness stated that he had heard that declaration, but that the money had never been paid—that all the time he had been connected with the company it had never come to his knowledge that any amount had been paid for such purpose. The first he heard of it was fourteen years after the money was alleged to have been spent. The committee made its report, which was adopted by the House. In the committee the questions were put to the witnesses and the committee reported the evidence to this House. 'If a committee should report once without having received the power in question,' that is the power to report from time to time, and on this particular question the committee received only the authority I have read. 'If a committee should report once without having received the power in question it will be defunct until revived.' The committee has reported on the special question. It was the final report, and that report has been adopted by the House. As far as it relates to that question the committee is defunct and they have no right to bring up the question in its deliberations. They are sitting now for another purpose altogether and are considering another matter, and I think the motion of the hon. gentleman from Lincoln cannot confer on this committee the power to examine witnesses in a matter where the committee had no power to proceed.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—It may be recollected by those who took an active part in the discussion in regard to the Mutual Reserve that the hon. gentleman from Stadacona was the prime mover in the motion to have the witness Wells appear at the bar of this House to be examined in regard to statements he was alleged to have made and which were read by the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Kerr). I took the ground—and the House agreed with me—that in order that this affair might be properly dealt with on its merits, and not appear to be of a farcical nature such as the proposition the hon. gentleman from Stadacona wished to carry—to have both these gentlemen (Wells and Eldridge) summoned before the bar of the House, as a matter of convenience, they should be brought before the special committee which had been appointed to inquire into all the affairs of the Mutual Reserve Fund Assurance Company of New York. What are the facts? On the 8th June, the motion I made to have these gentlemen examined before a special committee was carried, and on the 10th of June these men were examined, and a report was brought in by the chairman of that committee. He says that committee is defunct. The committee was enlarged becaues it was——

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Not for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The hon. gentlemen will correct me when I am through. The committee was enlarged, because it was felt that it was impossible to conduct the affairs of the committee inasmuch as one hon. gentleman had never acted, having withdrawn from it. That left the committee with only four members, and the House had sanctioned a committee of five. Later on the House agreed to an enlarged committee, and a further enlargement was made. The chairman took the ground in the committee that he now takes in the House, and that is that this committee had ceased to exist. I fail to see in his report one single word asking for the discharge of the committee on the ground that they had finished their investigation. As I understand it, the men were hastily examined together and objections were taken to their being cross-examined by counsel. My hon. friend from de Salaberry stated the way in which the case was opened up to the committee again by counsel for the committee. He pointed out to the chairman that he would establish a dangerous precedent in asking for a rehearsal or a corroboration of what had taken place before this specially appointed committtee ? He pointed out the dangerous course he was taking, and now because of that departure from good principle he objects to the same thing being done by counsel on the opposite side. It was a reasonable request for Mr. Aylesworth to make, that his client had been unfairly treated, that he wished to have some questions put to other witnesses, and that privilege was denied him in the committee, by the chairman, who ruled that the committee was dead, that their functions were over, and that the subject was beyond the purview of the committee altogether. When this was objected to by some members of the committee, he said 'You can move now to have these two gentlemen summoned, but I very much question the legality of it.' I said 'Mr. Chairman, if you will move in the House that these gentlemen be subpœnaed, the matter will be perfectly satisfactory to the committee. He would not give his assent to that and I gave notice to the committee then that I would take this course and I am doing it simply because of the ruling of the chairman, that the committee had no power to send for these two gentlemen. The committee is not dead. They did not pass out of existence. The same committee is to-day as much in existence as it was the first day, only an enlarged number, and I think, in all fairness to the dignity of this House and to the dignity of the members of the committee, that a gentleman, particularly a gentleman of the standing of Mr. Aylesworth, should at least receive some consideration at the hands of this House if he cannot receive it at the hands of the committee; that a reasonable request of this kind should be granted by this House. That is one of the reasons why I have made this motion, because it was felt in the committee, after the chairman's ruling, that it could be done only by the consent of the House. Then, after the committee were willing that the consent of the House should be asked, the chairman was unwilling to allow any other motion to be put by the committee for fear we might go on in an irregular manner. In view of what is taking place both in this House and in the committee—although I am debarred by the rules of the House from discussing what has taken place in the committee—I think we should give the committee ample means to send for any one and every one. As far as the question of economy is concerned, I do not know what the costs will be, but it is the first time I have heard the question of the costs of an examination raised, and surely after all the expense and time which has been taken up already, the mere matter of sending for a couple of witnesses on the request of such an eminent counsel as Mr. Aylesworth, should not be refused.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—There seems to be a good deal of feeling in the House in regard to this matter. The hon. gentleman from Lincoln has just stated that he thinks that witnesses should be summoned if they are material for the investigation. Dwell on that for a moment and see how you apply that to the opening up of this investigation on the question of privilege raised in this House. I do not know what words to characterize it with, but it is hardly presentable in a way that I or others can understand. Mr. Aylesworth has gone to England, but he stated before leaving that he would like to have these witnesses brought forward to corroborate what Mr. Eldridge has said. Perhaps it would have been better form if Mr. Aylesworth had stayed here to see the matter through but he has flitted to England. He is a man of large experience and capability, and he states to us 'I have two men whom I want you to hear, to upset what Mr. Wells has said or to substantiate what Mr. Eldridge has said.' Supposing they can do so, what has that to do with my hon. friend's statement that these are material witnesses in the case now being investigated, for which I made the motion for the committee to investigate the affairs of the Mutual Reserve in Canada and to send for papers, persons and records. There was no question put to the committee as to shutting out these gentlemen. I thought I heard an hon. gentleman say that this was the most disgraceful committee he had ever heard of in his lifetime. I cannot agree with him there. Perhaps I did not hear it correctly, but why is it there is so much difficulty about this matter ? Some poor wretched people who have lost their all, people who invested in this Mutual Reserve in the hope that they would have some money laid by for their widows and children, find that they have not got it to-day, and when the simple question is brought up here to hold an investigation with a view of getting relief from parliament or from the government of this country to help them out of their misfortune, we find that as in the old days of Achilles warriors spring from the soil. How is it? I personally have no objection to the examining of these witnesses, but I wish to point out that I do not think the matter has been placed before the Senate as candidly as it might have been. No evidence was taken in the committee. I presume when the hon. gentleman enlarged that committee by seven and seven more were put on—making the committee nineteen in all—that is a pretty fair percentage of the members of the Senate. They could not all be accused of being interested. They could not all be accusers nor all be designated as having an open mind or having formed an opinion before they heard the evidence. Out of the nineteen there would be some members who would give fair-play. The proper position would be to make the motion in committee and then discuss it. The chairman could not rule it out. He had only one vote. He is not so formidable. But that course was not taken. I understand that when hon. gentlemen get before the committee it enlarges their position all over the country as champions of the cause, defending people, and their doings are published in our record. But there is nothing in that at all. It is hard, solid facts that have to be threshed out in this matter, and these hard solid facts cannot suffer by all the witnesses they bring here. They can summon all the witnesses they like, but do not charge the committee with incurring undue expense or delay, or with blocking the investigation. We must take the debates, to show our position, and I am satisfied to do that. I have no objection if they require more witnesses. It is for the House to decide whether the committee are to reopen the investigation which has been already reported upon to the House. I have no objection to these men being heard but I do object to hon. gentlemen exhibiting such terrible feeling in the matter, as illustrated in the expressions which I have heard from those around me. I do not think it is quite correct. The Senate ought to be able to exert a good influence. They are old enough and have had enough experience, and it is really unfair to the committee to cast insinuations such as I have heard in the corridors and outside, against the committee. It is composed of hon. gentlemen from both sides of the House. I suppose it is to be assumed that members of that committee are quite as competent as hon. gentlemen who are not members of it. The hon. gentleman from Lincoln seems to intimate that this committee was not prepared to receive any fair suggestion—any thing in the nature of fair-play. There was no reason why they should not, having increased the committee to a larger number. Had the right thing been done with this insurance Bill it would have gone to a committee of the whole House instead of to the Banking and Commerce Committee; still hon. gentlemen differed, some thought one thing, some another. I think the Banking and Commerce Committee are a fine committee who will do their duty. They do not require any coercion; they do not come to the House for special instructions. They do their work well. I should not have said anything at present had I not heard an unwarranted statement by an hon. gentleman not far from me, which should not go on the records of this House. I have no objection to the committee examining whoever they please. I do not care what they do provided we find there is a disposition evinced not to hold up what the company may be doing in New York but to look to the interests of the people in this country who have suffered and see what can be done to help them and have a thorough straightforward investigation from top to bottom, let the blows fall as they may.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Cobourg)—I have listened attentively to this discussion. I suppose some hon. gentlemen will recollect that I opposed the appointment of this committee; but the committee having been appointed by this House, I have felt it my duty, as it was my duty, to bow to the will of this House and to respect that committee, collectively and individually, and have acted in that spirit ever since, and will continue to act in that spirit. But I do not subscribe to the doctrine that if a committee, appointed as this committee was appointed, reports from time to time as to the matter upon which they have been investigating that they are thereby functus officio as to that matter and as a committee. I contend that that committee has yet all the power that it had at the moment of its appointment, and it has just as much power to summon the two witnesses mentioned as it had to summon any witnesses examined by that committee. No one who saw that committee sitting today would say it was functus officio. They would say it was very much alive, and if ever it was functus officio it has been resurrected. I cannot on any question pronounce judgment until I hear all the evidence, and after all the witnesses have been examined. It is alleged that some injustice has been done to some witness. Well, in the interest of justice and fair-play, if I were chairman of that committee—and I hope the committee would sustain it—I would say, I shall not allow any witness to leave the committee room if he feels that he has been unjustly treated, and for the credit of the committee, and from a clear sense of justice, whatever has been the result of calling witnesses, I would have them called and the committee would not lose any respect, but rather gain increased respect for their proceedings, if they would call these witnesses. I would go further than that; if the chairman of the committee thinks they have not the power to call these witnesses, I should be prepared to take the responsibility of clothing them afresh with power to do it, and respectfully request that they summon these two gentlemen. I cannot subscribe to the doctrine that because on a certain branch of the inquiry the committee have reported and the Senate has accepted their report, that they are thereby discharged as to that matter as a committee. I think they have all the power they originally had, and they will continue to have those powers until they have finally reported and the Senate has virtually discharged them from their duty.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I call attention to the rule laid down at page 451 of Bourinot, which reads as follows:

> When a motion has been stated by the Speaker to the House, and proposed as a question for its determination, it is then in the possession of the House, to be decided or otherwise disposed of according to the established forms of proceeding. It may then be resolved in the affirmative or passed in the negative; or superseded by an amendment, or withdrawn with the unanimous consent of the House. It is, however, an ancient rule of parliament that 'no question or motion can regularly be offered if it is substantially the same with one on which the judgment of the House has already been expressed during current session.' The old rule of parliament reads: 'That a question being once made, and carried in the affirmative or negative, cannot be questioned again, but must stand as a judgment of the House.'

The authority given by this House is given by motion which has been put by the chair. That motion has been carried. The committee has the right to call witnesses, and by this motion of my hon. friend this House is asked to reaffirm in this particular case a power which is already given. I think the motion of the hon. gentleman is not in order, inasmuch as it reaffirms what has been already decided by the House.

The SPEAKER—I do not think the point of order is well taken, because no resolution of this House has been passed deciding that these two gentlemen shall be examined.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (40) An Act respecting the Canada Southern Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Toronto.)

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (58) An Act respecting the Imperial Loan and Investment Company of Canada.—(Hon. Mr. Cloran.)

Bill (136) An Act respecting the Similkameen and Keremeos Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Watson.)

Bill (142) An Act respecting the Rio de Janeiro Light and Power Company, Limited, and to change its name to 'The Rio de Janeiro Tramway, Light and Power Company, Limited.'—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Toronto.)

YUKON TERRITORY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (39) An Act to amend the Yukon Territory Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This Bill consists of a single clause. It authorizes the Commissioner in Council in the Yukon Territory to make ordinances in addition to the ordinances already authorized to be made, dividing the Territory into electoral districts, and also to make the franchise, with this single stipulation, that the franchise shall not require any voter to be a resident in the Territory longer than one year. That is the whole Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the language of the latter part of the clause carry out the idea which the hon. gentleman has mentioned ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the intention.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It seems to me that the words 'not longer than twelve months' should be 'not less than twelve months.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They could not, under this clause, require a residence longer than one year.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The intention is that voters shall be residents at least one year in the Territory ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is not that the intention ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They cannot attach a qualification that a man must be thirteen months in the Territory before he can vote. They may make a qualification for a shorter residence than one year.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Under this Bill the Council of the Territory can prescribe simply residence in the district at the time of the election, and no more than that, if they please. If they choose to go further, they may say that a man shall be obliged, before being entitled to vote, to be a resident for a period of so many months, but they cannot go beyond twelve months.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The intention of parliament is that nobody should vote except he has been a resident at least a year within the district.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is not the intention.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is the law as it is in the Northwest Territories to-day. It is the qualification required to vote for the assembly or the House of Commons—that is to say, a voter has to be resident in the Territory for at least twelve months. That is surely the intention here.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that it proposes to give the council power to permit persons who have not resided in the Yukon Territory twelve months, to vote ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, it is proposed to leave it entirely to the Yukon council, provided they do not propose a residence longer than one year.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—As there is a doubt about the meaning of this part of the clause, I would suggest that the committee rise and report progress and let the Bill stand until we have the French edition distributed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the intention of the government is as interpreted by the hon. Secretary of State and the Speaker, it would enable a Yukon candidate a day or two before the election to import a sufficient number of people to carry the election. It is a most dangerous provision. The whole object of legislation should be to prevent frauds of that kind. It places the power in the hands of the Northwest council to swamp the legitimate residents of the country. I would respectfully ask the hon. gentleman to let the Bill stand and inquire of the Minister of the Interior what the meaning of the clause is.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Can the hon. gentleman point out why there should be a distinction between residents in the Northwest and residents in the Yukon ? I am almost confident in saying that the hon. Secretary of State is labouring under a mistake, and that the intention of the government is that the residence should be at least twelve months. That has been the policy throughout the whole of the Northwest Territory in federal and local elections, and why there should be such a radical departure as is now laid down by the hon. Secretary of State, it is difficult to understand. Surely it is not saying too much to provide that aliens in that territory should put in at least one year's residence before exercising the franchise.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Aliens would have no right to vote until they became naturalized. This applies only to British subjects.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I think it would be better to let the Bill stand until the French edition is distributed.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill and asked leave to sit again.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (101) An Act to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act, 1898.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is a very simple Bill the object of which is to give control to the Department of Marine and Fisheries of a class of vessels that are propelled by gas, fluid, naphtha, electricity, &c. Representation is made that in some cases these vessels even carry passengers.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would it not be well to make this apply to automobiles ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I should certainly like to see it applied.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment. The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the House adjourns I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State to inquire for the returns concerning the lighthouse keeper of Crane Island for which I moved early in the session.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall make inquiry of the Marine and Fisheries Department.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Wednesday, July 13, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND from the Committee on Banking and Commerce reported Bill (H) An Act further to amend the Insurance Act, with several amendments.

He said: In partial explanation of the amendments which have been made in this Bill I desire to say that the Bill received very close, careful and protracted consideration at the hands of the committee. It was submitted also to a sub-committee, who reported on it more than once. It was also put into the hands of Mr. Fitzgerald and Mr. Bradshaw and another expert on the subject of the Bill, and in consequence of the remodelled character of it, it has practically been rewritten, or nearly so. This measure, dealing as it does with matters of a highly technical character, affecting the interests of a large number of policy-holders in Canada is of a most important description. I can only say that it presents a great many questions for consideration which an expert alone can deal with, but Mr. Fitzgerald, in the committee, gave us the information that he had most carefully considered the interests of the Canadian policy-holders in framing the Bill as it is and I commend it to hon. gentlemen with that belief.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto) moved that the amendments be taken into consideration to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—The amendments are numerous and important, and I trust that the hon. gentleman will not ask the House to deal with them to-morrow. A later date would be more satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The Bill should be reprinted and in the hands of every member before the House is asked to consider all the amendments. Every member should have an opportunity to read and study the amendments. I agree with the chairman of the committee that it is an exceedingly important Bill, and I am prepared to give it my best consideration in the interests of the policy-holders. We should have time to carefully study the Bill before being asked to pass it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I have in my hand. the first report on this Bill. After the title of the Bill 'An Act further to amend the Insurance Act,' we read the following: 'Reprinted as redrafted June 13, 1904, by Messrs. W. Fitzgerald, Superintendent of the Insurance Department, Thomas Bradshaw, representing the Canada Life Insurance Officers' Association and George D. Eldridge, President of the Mutual Reserve Company, in pursuance of instructions from the sub-committee to whom the Bill was referred by the Committee on Banking and Commerce.'

This is an extraordinary way to bring a public Bill to the cognizance of this honourable House. I think it is the first time anything of the kind has been done, a public Bill referred to a sub-committee, to be reprinted and circulated in this House, with the names of Thos. Bradshaw, Geo. D. Eldridge, and Mr. Fitzgerald as authorities to impress this House with the important character of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—Notwithstanding its being presented with that endorsement, the Bill was amended by the committee to-day, after careful consideration from the first word to the last, so the fact that it was so drafted does not by any means indicate that the Bill must go through as printed.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I understand that all these things could be properly said in the House—that the Bill had been referred to a sub-committee and examined by Mr. Fitzgerald, Mr. Bradshaw and Mr. Eldridge, but what appears to me as being singular and without precedent, is the fact that this Bill is put before the country with that endorsement.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Perhaps the Bill thus printed is a report to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and not for this House, because I understand this is not the Bill as reported to-day.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I hope the hon. gentleman is right. I hope the Bill will not come before this House with that endorsation. It is either a public Bill or a private Bill, and in either case we do not want on it the endorsation of Messrs. Fitzgerald, Bradshaw and Eldridge. I protest against it, if this is the final form in which the Bill is to appear.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND—It is not the final stage. It was presented as a report of the sub-committee to-day, and then amended by the committee in many particulars, so that when it comes before the Senate with those amendments inserted it will be without that endorsation ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The objection taken to the form of the Bill by my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Landry) is deserving of a great deal of consideration and respect. I think he is right. The irregularity has arisen in this way. The Committee on Banking and Commerce met, and as there was a great deal of discussion on the merits of the Bill it was referred to the sub-committee with instructions to call in the aid of these experts, one representing the actuaries of the Dominion, the superintendent of insurance, and Mr. Eldridge, also an actuary, and vice-president of the Mutual Reserve Company.

The result of their deliberation was this Bill, which was reported by the sub-committee to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, as it came into their hands after being reprinted. After it came to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, other amendments were made, as mentioned by the chairman of the committee to-day, and that Bill as amended, should have been presented to the Senate, the Committee on Banking and Commerce taking the responsibility, and should not have had the endorsation commented on upon it. I think it was an error, not an intentional one, but an oversight in reprinting the Bill and circulating it with that endorsation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not intended that the Bill should be printed in this form, but it is a very great satisfaction to the House, to be advised in a measure so important as this one, and one that has elicited so many different views and opinions, that the action of the committee has been supported by those experts and by the company particularly interested. It is a very great advantage to the House to be so advised, but, of course, at the next stage the Bill will come in the ordinary way, simply with the amendments. I would suggest that the hon. gentleman should add to his motion that the Bill be reprinted in proper shape.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I may state for the information of the House that the law clerk has informed me that he would have the Bill reprinted for circulation.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I would suggest that the amendments be considered on Friday, and if the House is not ready to take up the Bill then, its consideration could be further postponed until next week.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It is desirable that insurance men should have an opportunity to examine this Bill. If it is distributed to-morrow, members can consider it, and send copies of it to the different insurance companies who can look over it, and express their opinions before it comes up for third reading. I consider therefore that Tuesday next is as early as the House should take up the Bill. Notwithstanding the recommendation given by the Secretary of State to the distinguished individuals whose names appear on the back of the Bill, I hope that when it is reprinted it will be without that endorsation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am informed by the law clerk that it is already in the hands of the printers, and that it will be printed with the amendments made by the committee, and without the endorsation complained of. That endorsation was only put there for the information of members of the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Under the circumstances, I move that the amendments be taken into consideration on Friday, with the understanding that if hon. gentlemen are not ready to consider them then, the matter can be postponed until Tuesday of next week.

The motion was agreed to.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

THIRD READING

The Order of the Day being called :

Third reading of Bill (34) An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND said : I do not intend to move the amendment of which I gave notice, for various reasons, one of which is that it is doubtful if that amendment could be made to this present Bill, as it refers to another public Bill which has already been adopted. As I am the promoter of the Bill, I have considered the advisability of accepting the amendment suggested by the hon. gentleman from British Columbia (Hon. Mr. Templeman), and I strongly feel, for the reasons already given by some hon. gentlemen in this House and by myself, that it would interfere, to a certain extent, with the contract as signed between the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, and that no such amendment should be made. I therefore content myself with simply moving the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the motion is put I desire to raise a point of order.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is what the hon. gentleman is always doing.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The first clause of the Bill reads as follows :

1. The agreement bearing date the twenty-ninth day of July, one thousand nine hundred and three, a copy of which forms the schedule to the National Transcontinental Railway Act, and the supplemental agreement between His Majesty, represented by the Honourable H. R. Emmerson, Minister of Railways and Canals, and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company (hereinafter called 'the company'), bearing date the eighteenth day of February, one thousand nine hundred and four, a copy of which forms the schedule to the Act of the parliament of Canada, passed at the present session thereof, and intituled 'An Act to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act,' and the execution of the said two agreements respectively is hereby confirmed and declared to be valid, subject to the provisions of the said Acts.

I claim that a Bill of this character should contain the agreement to which it refers. Todd, in his 'Private Bills Practice,' says :

In Bills for confirming any letters patent or agreement the committee is required to see that there is a true copy of the same annexed to the Bill.

I claim that this Bill should have the two agreements attached to it. We have the same principle laid down in 'Private Bills Practice in Canada,' by Edward Hartney, in 1882 :

In Bills for confirming any letters patent or agreement, it is the duty of the committee to see that a true copy is annexed to the Bill.

May propounds the same doctrine :

Where any agreement is to be sanctioned, such agreement is to be printed and distributed with the Bill.

This will be found at page 777 of the 10th edition of May. Bourinot says the same thing at page 770 :

The Bill must also have attached to it a copy of any letters patent or agreement, when its object is to confirm such.

The Bill, I contend, is not in proper form ; it should have the two agreements annexed to it, and cannot pass in its present shape.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman is quite correct, if they had not already been printed and form part of the law of the country ; but last session and this session the agreements have been before parliament.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The National Transcontinental Railway Company Bill is not passed yet. It has not received the sanction of the Governor General. We do not know what the Governor will do with it, and therefore it is not yet the law of the country. We are asked to validate that agreement, and I take it that it is necessary it should be the schedule to this Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—And be repeated three times in the statutes ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—As often as the hon. gentleman likes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No ; we shall not stultify ourselves that way.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I ask for a decision on the point of order raised.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. Secretary of State has already mentioned the fact that the agreement of last year was printed in the Act of last year, and the Bill of last session, the private Bill, was adopted in the same condition, the agreement being a schedule in the National Transcontinental Railway Company Act. We have again an amending agreement this year as a schedule to the National Transcontinental Railway Act, which has already been passed by the House, and the Grand Trunk Pacific Company Bill, the third reading of which I now move, refers to the schedule in the National Transcontinental Railway Bill already passed, so we have followed the same course this year that was followed last year. I see no reason why these schedules should be repeated in every Bill relating to the same matter.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman must not forget that this Bill declares that the two agreements are hereby declared to be valid.

The SPEAKER—There is a provision which was adopted by the House on the recommendation of one of the committees to the effect that where a Bill proposes to ratify an agreement, the agreement should be set forth as a schedule of the Bill. The object was to provide that this House should know what it was doing when it undertook to ratify an agreement. We cannot deal with the agreement of last year, because that has been disposed of, but the agreement of this year has been considered by the House, and I feel doubtful whether, even if the objection were a substantial one, it could be taken at this stage of the Bill when it is up for third reading. The Bill has been before the House for a long time and if there was any formal objection to be taken, it should have been raised earlier ; but in any case I think the reason of the rule having ceased, the rule itself would cease to operate in this case and I hold that the point is not well taken.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not wish to discuss the question further than this—the remark made by the Speaker would lead to the conclusion that objection could only be taken at a certain stage of the Bill. I was under the impression that it was not only parliamentary practice, but the object of having Bills read the first, second and third times, a certain time intervening between each reading, was to give members an opportunity to consider what amendments or objections might be made to the Bill. Something might occur before the third reading which would be a fatal objection to the Bill. I am not appealing against the decision of the Speaker, but that has been my interpretation of the rights of members. My recollection is precisely the same as that of the Speaker in reference to how the suggestion was made to have agreements annexed as schedules to Bills dealing with them, but do not the authorities quoted to-day clearly lay down the principle, apart from the suggestion made by the Railway Committee, that the Bill shall contain the schedule which it is proposed to ratify ? I have not had an opportunity of looking at the authorities to which my hon. friend has referred, but they lay down a principle for our guidance in legislation. Of course, I am speaking, I frankly confess, under correction, but these are the ideas that suggest themselves to me on hearing my hon. friend read that statement and the remarks of the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The rule is a safe and sound one, no doubt; but is it to be presumed it is based on common sense. Here are two Bills coming from the House of Commons together, the National Transcontinental Railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific Bills. Every member of the House is familiar with the agreements. They have been discussed in this chamber. When the Bill was being passed in this chamber, if somebody had suggested that a copy of the agreement should be attached to it, would the House have accepted it? I certainly think not.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I think the point was raised by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona and rejected?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes in committee.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The committee showed a good deal of common sense. I do not think the committee would stultify itself, because there happened to be a rule that did not exist, as far as the two Bills were concerned. By no possibility could the rule be quoted in regard to those Bills going through the House pari passu, that we must attach the agreement to the Bills.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It may be possible that those who take a different view from the hon. gentleman have no common sense?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am sorry for them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is an ample compensation, if the hon. gentleman is sorry for them.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I should like to know what question we are addressing ourselves to now?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—To the question of order.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It has been decided.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I would ask the hon. gentleman why was it found necessary to ratify the contract of last year, and the amendment of this year? Parliament last year ratified the agreement of that year, and the parliament ratified the contract of this year. Is it quite necessary to ratify the Bill twice over? While he does that another hon. gentleman breaks through the charter of the company—commits a breach. The charter of the company chapter 122 says distinctly that when $2,000,000 is subscribed, certain things can be done, and the hon. gentleman's Bill reduces that amount to $1,000,000. If you confirm one agreement why do you break through the other? The other day the hon. Secretary of State had before us a Bill containing a breach of contract, and the hon. gentleman from de Lorimier now has a Bill with a breach of a charter, so that with all his other accomplishments he contributes to making a pair of breaches and these breaches are quite large enough to take in a big sized cabinet minister and Mr. Hays together. I am not opposing the Bill, but I contend that this is in a line with the logical sequence that my hon. friend preaches to me and others. It in very logical. The hon. gentleman last year spoke in the strongest language approving of the first contract. This year he spoke with equal strength in advocating that it be amended and breaking the first contract. That is logical sequence, and here he comes again with a still stronger point of logical sequence to break through the charter of the company. Of course this opens up the whole question, but I am not going to take advantage of that fact. I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State or anybody who knows, what is the nature of the security deposited for the $5,000,000? Is anybody certain that there is one dollar of money or one government bond deposited? I believe that not one government bond or one dollar of money has been deposited. What the securities are I do not know, but I know they are not government bonds and they are not gold.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Montreal bank.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—And there is another very curious thing about the matter; the whole country supposed that the object of the Bill of last year was to have a competing line so as to keep down prices and rates from the Northwest to the sea coast. Does the hon. Secretary of State know that the charter of the company gives them the right to lease their lines to another company, gives them a right to hand over their franchise, their maps and surveys and all the material of the railway to any other company, and not only that, it gives them power to amalgamate with any other company, instead of producing competition. If this company find, after going a certain distance, that they cannot complete their line, they can sell out to or amalgamate with another company. I am not aware that hon. members of this House have followed the Bill closely enough to know that like any ordinary railway company this company have the power to sell or dispose of their charter. I have placed on the order paper a motion about the employment of alien labour in the construction of this railway, and I should like the Secretary of State to say what the government intend to do about it. Of course if they make it a party question there is very little use in my making the motion, but I think every hon. gentleman in this House and every man in this country desires to see our own people employed before they import aliens to do the work on this road, and if this resolution of mine carries, or if it is rejected I hope the government will consider the matter. I believe the Alien Labour Act is quite strong enough as it is to enable the government to prevent the importation into the country of engineers and surveyors to do the work. If the hon. Secretary of State does not give a satisfactory reply I shall reserve my right to move this amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Would it not be much better for the hon. gentleman to move the amendment, unless he is prepared to withdraw it after he hears my explanation. So far as the policy of the government on this subject is concerned, it is pretty well established since we came into office in 1896, that we were the first government to introduce any legislation on the statute-book which attached the conditions to persons coming from the other side under contract seeking employment in Canada. We made it an offence for persons to come in under contract, and we amended that by saying that if they came in in pursuance of a proclamation that was distributed in a foreign country to the south of us, they would not be liable. In various ways we have shown our desire to favour the employment of British subjects. When it became evident that Mr. Hays was employing United States engineers to the serious disadvantage of many eminent Canadian engineers who were quite qualified to take up the work of the location and survey of the line, the government took a very active course in appointing a commission to inquire into the facts, and I think the hon. gentleman can scarcely criticise the action of the government. We have been as decided on this matter as circumstances warranted. It is just possible that, so far as the employment of alien labour goes, we may be adopting too stringent measures. This road will probably involve the building of four or five thousand miles of railway, taking the main line and the branches, and with the other railways that will be built in the next ten years probably up to eight or ten thousand miles. I think I am quite within the mark when I say that the transcontinental line and the Mackenzie & Mann lines and the lines towards Hudson Bay and the other lines that are to be built, will reach that figure. Now, do hon. gentlemen suppose that there are men to be found in Canada that will be equal to the construction of that work within the periods fixed? We have therefore to be a little cautious in adopting too stringent legislation. If British subjects can be found to carry on the work, the preference will certainly be given to them. At the same time we have to recognize the fact that we are inviting people to settle in the Northwest, and we are spending a good many hundreds of thousands of dollars in order to favour that migration not only from the British islands, but also from various parts of Europe, Scandinavia and also from the United States, where we have had immigration agents for some years, and the enormous benefit that will be conferred on the country by the emigration to the Northwest will be fully recognized by the people of the Dominion. When a man goes into the Northwest it would be a very hard case if he were going to be a permanent settler to say to him the first year: 'It is quite clear you cannot plough your land this year; you cannot put in a crop, nor can you be employed on any public work that the government have subsidized.' Would it not be considered that this was a stringent law, when this man was going to be a bona fide settler and eventually become a British subject? It would be very hard to say to him that he should not be permitted to work on a railroad that is being built in the same section of the country that he is going to settle in. I am merely pointing that out as one of the possible difficulties if we make the enacting law too stringent. The general policy of the government will be in the direction of the hon. gentleman's motion; if the law is not stringent enough it will be made sufficiently so this session or the next session, so that I think he may rely on the government carrying out the policy that it has already inaugurated. If it is a good law, and it requires to be amended so far as this railway is concerned, it should apply to all railways. My hon. friend's amendment would apply only to the Transcontinental Railway, but he knows very well that there are other railways being constructed, and if the amendment is a proper one to be applied to this railway it should be applied to all the others. Therefore I hope my hon. friend will not at the present moment press his amendment. As I said before, it should be applicable, not only to this railway, but to others.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is a Bill promised by the Postmaster General.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I hope this parliament will terminate before the end of the year, and I do not think it is wise to bring in Bills continuously. If a Bill can be got ready it may be brought in this session; but I do not see any great harm if it does not come in until next session.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But the promise has been made in the lower House that this Bill was to be introduced. I am asking the character of the Bill. I am induced to ask that question because from the remarks that the hon. gentleman has made one would be led to suppose the Bill will not be of a drastic character.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman knows my individual views on that subject.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think I do.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—And I think that measures, even of a limited character in regard to that subject, are apt to be drastic; but I am not going to discuss that just now. So far as the promises of the government are concerned, my hon. friend knows the government do not always carry out their promises with reference to legislation. They may or may not. It may be introduced at any time, I do not know what its character may be. It is not in shape for introduction. When it comes I hope it will meet the approval of parliament.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I do not wish to speak against the decision of the Speaker, but I desire an explanation. Perhaps I did not understand the hon. Speaker, and he can correct me if I am wrong. I understood him to say that the authority cited by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona was sound, but at this stage of the proceedings it would not apply. Would the hon. Speaker have the kindness to correct me if I am wrong?

The SPEAKER—I did say to the hon. gentleman that there should be some limit as to where a debate on any particular question should cease. My decision was given some time ago, and other business has intervened. I am not aware that I said that the authorities quoted by the hon. gentleman were sound. I said I thought there was some understanding in this House that an agreement should be attached to a Bill when it was intended to ratify it; but I do not think there is any such rule. I think it is a sort of understanding come to by the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, for their own guidance, which does not bind the House. I did not rest my decision on the fact that this was the third reading of the Bill; but I said that even if one had some hesitation in ruling that the point of order was not well taken, the hesitation would be lessened by the fact that this objection was taken at this stage of the measure. The Bill has been before the House for weeks in its various stages, and this is a technical objection. As I understand, the hon. gentleman from Stadacona says it was raised in the committee, so that attention has been called to it, and to allow a measure to be defeated on a merely technical question like this, at this stage, would be contrary, as the hon. gentleman says to common sense, and rules of parliament are based on common sense.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Without appealing from the decision of the Speaker, the objection which I shall make can stand. The fact of the question having been raised in the committee does not apply to all the members. When I saw the Bill I thought it was merely a Bill to regulate the internal economy of the Transcontinental Railway. It was only a few days ago that my attention was called to it. Therefore, if the schedule had been put in the Bill I would certainly then have thought of it. Several hon. members have been absent and other hon. members did not make a study of the Bill, and I think it is always right to call the attention of the House to any matter which is being wrongly done. The 7th edition of May, page 481, reads as follows :

> If it should appear during the progress of a Bill that these rules have not been observed, the House will order it to be withdrawn.

I think that applies exactly to this Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I rise to a question of order. To what question is the hon. gentleman addressing himself ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—To the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I said I did not appeal from the decision of the Speaker, but I wish to read this quotation from May.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I desire to say a few words in reply to the hon. Secretary of State, who stated that my motion applies to this company only. Of course it does, because this company have been guilty of most flagrant breaches of the law, and only this company. Strangers going to settle in the Northwest should be certainly looked upon as bona fide settlers, and if a Chinaman or any other alien resided in the country one year he could be employed on this railway under my resolution. He is not debarred at all. Mr. Hays was in Ottawa recently, consulting with the government about this labour question. I cannot tell what influence he is bringing to bear, but I do not see why we should not move in the same direction as they are moving in the United States. If a Canadian goes under contract to the United States, what happens ? He is stopped and deported. I do not believe in deporting any one from Canada, but I do not feel that we should not allow aliens from the United States to come in under contract to do work that should be given to our own people. The company have not exhausted the home supply of engineers and skilled labour. The evidence of Mr. Stephens was full of prevarication. A man was giving his evidence once in a court in British Columbia, when the judge said to him : 'You are prevaricating.' The witness said : 'I cannot help it. I lost my teeth some years ago, and ever since then I have been prevaricating.' Whether Mr. Stephens had lost his teeth or not he was prevaricating, and even Mr. Hays's evidence was not what it ought to have been. There are scores of capital engineers in Canada to-day who can do the work that is being done by engineers imported from the United States : but, as the Secretary of State says the government will do something in the matter, I shall not press the resolution.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would suggest to my hon. friend to withdraw his resolution for the present and wait until the government measure comes down, and if it is not of a character that will meet his views he can move an amendment. I think there is very little difference in the opinion of the Secretary of State and my own upon the character of drastic Bills of that nature. I understand the hon. gentleman consents to withdraw his amendment. Then the question is on the third reading and I desire to place on record that I dissent in toto from the decision given by the hon. Speaker as to the right of every member to take objection at any stage of any Bill, and as a rule provides for signing a protest if it be necessary, I shall be quite willing to do that. I accept with a good deal of humility the declaration of the hon. Secretary of State that it would be neither common sense nor good judgment to differ from him, on the authorities cited by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, and other authority that is indisputable. It may be the opinion of the Speaker, and it may be the conscientious conviction of my hon. friend opposite that it is nonsense that May and Todd and all the authorities were not possessed of the common sense which would characterize men of their great experience in framing rules and laying down principles to guide the legislative bodies under the British constitution. I am not going to discuss that question but I wish my own views to be put upon record on this question and having said that much, I propose to congratulate my hon. friend (Hon.

Mr. Dandurand) for having dropped his motion, he relieved me from giving expression to my opinion upon the question of order. Just look at these authorities I have on my desk. I have precedents from the House of Commons, I have precedents from the Senate, to prove that the hon. gentleman could not by any possibility make that motion here. I have the authority of His Honour the Speaker, who took objection, when he was a plain member of this House, and we have Todd and May and a number of other authorities, but I am relieved from making that speech. Do I understand that the minister without portfolio intends to withdraw his motion, or does he propose to send the Bill back to the committee to add the amendment of which he has given notice ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—It is not my intention to press my amendment.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—You are a nice fellow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Perhaps the hon. gentleman thinks he has accomplished the object he had in view—that is of showing the people of British Columbia that he was in accord with them in desiring to have a provision of that character attached to the Bill. I hope the people of British Columbia will not think it was done as a fake motion, knowing well it could not be carried, because the hon. gentleman knows as a question of order that he could not have made that motion, the principle involved in that motion having been already decided by this House, and I think that rule, whether it is common sense or not, is pretty clearly laid down in the books. I wish to point that out to the hon. gentleman, and when the question comes up in his own province I have no doubt he will be able to point out the inference which he would draw, and which many members of this House drew, from the fact of the motion being put on record. We have only to consider the question of the third reading of the Bill. The point of order of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona having been declared by the Speaker as being not well taken, we shall have to accept it as it is, having put my own views upon record—and I am only speaking for myself—I am satisfied to let the Bill go through, because I cannot prevent it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—With regard to the announcement of my hon. friend from Victoria, I am surprised he is now going to withdraw his motion after the heroic effort he has made to bring it forward and to put himself right before the people of British Columbia. I do not care who brought it forward, but if the hon. gentleman had, early in the session, fought in the cabinet for this provision, he would have got it ; but in the meantime the company have interfered and the hon. gentleman dare not move. I am surprised at such cowardice——

Some Hon. MEMBERS—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I will call it cowardice. I do not care.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (137) An Act respecting certain patents of the Canadian Office and School Furniture Company, Limited.—(Hon. Mr. Merner.)

Bill (40) An Act respecting the Canada Southern Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Toronto.)

YUKON TERRITORY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The Order of the Day being called :

The House again in committee of the whole on Bill (39) An Act to amend the Yukon Territory Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Speaker leave the chair.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the Speaker leaves the chair, might I ask the hon. Secretary of State if he has considered the point raised at the last stage of this Bill ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes ; the object of the Bill is the interpretation I gave it yesterday, to debar the council from attaching any qualification to the franchise that would require a longer residence than one year, and the reasons given are that there are many people who have interests in the Yukon who go in there in the month of May, by the first steamer, and come out in the fall on the last steamer, and it might be interpreted to operate against their right to exercise the franchise should an election be held in the meantime.

The motion was agreed to.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. leader of the opposition pointed out what I consider a great defect in the Bill, and that was that an ordinance might be passed declaring residence of a week, or some short period, would be sufficient qualification, which would be contrary to the sound principle which we all adhere to; and, therefore, I suggest an amendment limiting them to a period of not less than three months or more than twelve months. The clause would then read in this way:

1. Notwithstanding anything contained in the Yukon Territory Act, chapter 6 of the statutes of 1898, or in any Act in amendment thereof, the commissioner in council may make ordinances providing for the division of the territory into electoral districts for the purposes of the election of the representative members of the council of the territory, each of such districts to be represented by one or more of such members, and ordinances prescribing, as a qualification necessary to entitle any person to vote at an election of a representative member for an electoral district, residence in the district at the time of the election for any period not less than three months and not longer than twelve months prior thereto; and any ordinance heretofore made by the commissioner in council in so far as it did or so does provide or prescribe, is hereby declared to have been valid and effectual from the date when it was passed.

I move that the clause be amended by inserting the words 'not less than three months and' after the word 'period,' in the 11th line of the clause.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That will meet my objection on that point, although I still think the clause is very badly worded. We know the character of the population of a mining district like the Yukon. A reported discovery of gold causes a rush, and I have seen myself in Dawson hundreds of miners walking the streets just after such an excitement had taken place. If there was no provision as to residence, such as has been suggested in this amendment, you might have a thousand people flocking to any particular district on the eve of an election within a week, and within a few days later they might be all gone again. While there are many respectable people who go there to better their fortunes, we know the character of a large number of the people who migrate from one place to another in a mining country, and these were the reasons which prompted my objection to the Bill when I first read it. There are hundreds of people who own and work mines. They go in every spring and come out in the fall. These people have a substantial interest in the country, and should not be prevented from recording their votes, because they have interests which might be destroyed by the votes of many who go in there simply to pick up what they can, and then go out of the country. To give the council the right to regulate the franchise so that a man shall not be prevented from voting who has been out of the country for twelve months is a new feature in legislation. I can understand them giving the council the right to regulate their own franchise, but it should be upon a basis of realty, of residence or of taxation, but this provision is something new. If the object be to secure the real property owners a right to vote, it will be a conservative—I do not mean politically—policy.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I fail to see why a distinction is made between federal and local elections in the Yukon. The Act, as it at present stands with reference to federal elections, provides that every male person shall be qualified to vote for an election under the Act 'who has resided in the Yukon Territory for at least twelve months immediately preceding the election.' Now this government has laid down the principle that the local franchise shall be practically the franchise for the Dominion. That is the principle which prevails, with very little exception, throughout the whole Dominion. Why this particular license should be extended to the Yukon Territory is beyond my comprehension. The qualification should be the same for the federal as for the local franchise. On the other hand I fail to understand why this restriction which my hon. friend the Secretary of State has pointed out, should surround the franchise for the local elections in the Yukon Territory. To say that the assembly shall not exercise its discretion to determine what the franchise should be, is to take out of their hands something upon which they surely can exercise a very proper discretion. The suggestion made by the hon. Secretary of State, and embodied in this Bill, is vicious. It will permit, in fact compel the Yukon assembly to establish a franchise by which those living within the territory for a period of less than twelve months to vote. It seems to me that no person, in any part of Canada, should have a right to vote who has not been at least a year a resident in the particular territory or district in which he is to exercise the franchise. It surely would take that time to familarize himself with the various subjects under discussion, and the merits of the candidates presenting themselves for the suffrages of the people. Twelve months residence should be the very least time to qualify a voter.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think this measure is open to the objection taken by the hon. member from Calgary. Although it is called a Bill to amend the Yukon Territory Act, it is really to amend the Act of 1902, the first section of which reads as follows :

> Subsection three of section 5, is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor :—
> 3. The natural born and naturalized male British subjects in the territory who have attained the full age of 21 years, and continuously resided there for a period of not less than twelve months shall elect five representatives to the territorial council.

The measure before us does not propose to repeal that. Now what does the measure before us propose ? It proposes that the council may, by ordinance, require that a voter shall have lived in the district—not the Yukon Territory but the district in which he is to vote, for a period not exceeding twelve months. That is a reasonable provision. As the population there moves about a good deal looking for new mining locations, I think it would be an exceedingly unreasonable provision to say that a man who had been three or four years in the territory should not have a right to vote for a councillor unless he had lived in the district for a full year. I do not think the Bill requires amendment.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—When we see lawyers differ as to the meaning of the Bill it is no wonder that laymen differ over it. As a layman looking at this Bill, I find it says that notwithstanding anything in the Act to which the hon. Speaker has referred as the qualification necessary to entitle any person to vote at an election for a representative in the Yukon Territory, all he requires is to reside in that territory, for a period of not less than 12 months. He does not require any other qualification whatever. The object is to give a person who has lived a certain time in that Territory the right to vote.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like if the Speaker will explain to us what the first line means if it is not a repeal of the whole of the section of law to which he called the attention of the Senate. 'Notwithstanding anything contained in the Yukon Act' the following provision shall guide in the election of the council. When it begins by such a declaration as this, I should take it for granted if I were to go up to vote, having been a resident of the district in which the election was to take place, I could properly take the oath administered to me that I had been a resident of that district for the required time, and consequently could vote. Would any returning officer be justified, under this provision, in putting the oath of qualification to me, if I were a resident in the district for three months, that is put to the voter provided for in the general law for federal election ? If the first line can be explained to me which refers to the law the Speaker has called attention to, I should like to know where the limitation is ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I quite appreciate what the government is aiming at. His honour the Speaker is right in expressing what the intention is, but the introductory words sweep aside the qualifications of a year's residence within the Yukon Territory. I fail to understand why the language has not been adopted that obtains in the Northwest Territories Act, which provides that the voter shall be resident for a certain number of months within the electoral district, and resident twelve months within the Territory. Then it is quite clear, but the government cannot be complimented on the clearness of the language used in this section, because I can scarcely conceive of a more complex, obscure clause than this, and it will certainly lead to any amount of complication in the interpretation of it by the returning officers and others in the Yukon Territory, distant probably from legal advice. It should be cleared up.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the hon. member from Calgary is not quite right again. The Yukon Territory Act did not contain any provision for electoral districts, or in fact any provision for the election of members of the council at all. That is provided by subsequent Acts, and this Bill is to empower the council to divide the Yukon Territory into electoral districts for the purpose of the local council, and it is necessary to say notwithstanding anything contained in the Yukon Territory Act, because the Yukon Territory Act deals with the Territory as a single district. The first provision was for the election of two councillors to be elected by the whole district, and now there are five elective councillors, and this measure provides that each one shall represent a district and authorizes the council to divide the Territory up into districts.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It goes further than that. It authorizes the council to do what they have not now the power to do—to provide what the qualifications of voters shall be, and, notwithstanding the opinions given, I question very much whether a man could be prevented from voting if he had been in the Territory for three months and one day. Under the law there is nothing to prevent him swearing in his vote. If the intention of the government is as has been stated by His Honour the Speaker, then adding the words found in the Northwest Territories Act, quoted by my hon. friend from Calgary, will make it clear.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS from the committee reported the Bill with amendments which were concurred in.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I should like to call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to the return which he presented to the House yesterday to an address dated the 14th of June, 1904, of a copy of all reports made since the opening of navigation, to the Department of the Interior on the subject of the French steamer 'Le Malou,' and more particularly a copy of a report of Frederick Potvin concerning this vessel. The Department of Trade and Commerce reply that they send a copy of the only report on the subject, and know nothing whatever of a report said to have been made by Dr. Potvin. The Department of the Interior say they have no records bearing on the subject in question. It would appear to be a matter relating to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I know as a matter of fact that Dr. Potvin has made a report on the steamer 'Le Malou.' It may be in the Department of Marine and Fisheries and I would ask the hon. gentleman if it is there to have a copy of it produced.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall inquire.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Might I ask the hon. gentleman when I may have the return, promised some time ago, of correspondence having reference to contracts for the construction of ice-breakers ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall make inquiry. It is very hard to keep track of those things. We always send to the department, that has charge of the work and they are sometimes very remiss.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—While the hon. gentleman is addressing a note to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, perhaps he will be good enough to inquire about the papers relating to the case of Painchaud.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I sent over to-day to make further inquiry on that subject.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow.

THE TREADGOLD CONCESSION.

MOTION.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that he will cause to be laid upon the table of the Senate all correspondence between the government, or any member thereof, and His Honour Judge Britton, relating to the report which he should or should not make, as to his findings in relation to the granting of the Treadgold and other concessions in the Yukon Territory of Canada:

He said: It will be in the recollection of members of the Senate that a few days ago I placed a notice upon the paper, asking questions as to the report which was to be made by the commissioners appointed by the government to inquire into the effects which the Treadgold concessions had upon the Yukon Territory. It will be remembered that very grave complaints had come from that part of Canada, as to the effect which that concession had upon the gold mining industries of the Yukon. Those complaints it will also be remembered, were not confined exclusively to one party, but the leaders of the Liberal party, more particularly the president of the Reform Association, joined in the complaints. The question which I put was, whether the Treadgold concession had been cancelled, as reported in the newspapers, and also whether a report was made by the commissioners appointed to investigate the effect of the concession. It will be remembered also, that the hon. Secretary of State informed the Senate that the Treadgold concession had been cancelled, that no claim had been made by the Treadgold Company to be reimbursed any expenditures they had made in that country, but that certain rights which they had acquired under that concession were to be respected and guaranteed by the government. It will also be recollected that the Secretary of State evaded—I will not say that—neglected to answer the first question as to when the report was to be made, but upon being pressed by myself, for a reply, he informed the House that no report would be made; that Judge Britton, the only surviving commissioner, had been instructed by the government that it was not necessary to make any report, the concession having been cancelled. A few days afterwards, the leader of the opposition in the House of Commons said that he had noticed in the public press, that such an order had been given, and asked if such was the fact. The premier replied that he had seen that a statement of that kind had been made in another branch of parliament, but that he had not had time to see his colleague, and therefore was not in a position to answer the question, giving the impression that if a notice of that kind had been served upon Judge Britton, it had not been authorzied by the executive; but he said that he would answer next day. Sir Wilfrid Laurier did answer the next day: he said he had seen his colleague, meaning I presume the Secretary of State, and had learned that he had written to Judge Britton, instructing him that it was not necessary to make any report, or intimating to him that as the Treadgold concession had been cancelled it was not necessary to make a report, and that as soon as the action of the Secretary of State had been learned by the Executive Council, the Secretary of State had been instructed—no, I do not think that was the word—that the order not to make a report, had been cancelled, and the judge had been instructed to make a report. Any one familiar with the principles of responsible government must be surprised at the action of the Secretary of State, and the manner in which the country is governed under the present cabinet. This is not the first time these things have occurred. We have repeatedly had in this House, members of the government moving measures sent up from the House of Commons, of a very important character, some of them affecting the legal rights to estates in portions of Canada, and others again—affecting the tariff, the imposition of duties upon tobacco, and changes in the Customs Department, &c., of which the minister who proposed the measures had no more knowledge than any member of this House who is not a member of the cabinet, and consequently could not be held responsible for the contents of those Bills, except as a member of the cabinet. I might state further, that the gentleman who led this House before the hon. Secretary of State occupied that position when questioned on such points, frankly acknowledged that the Bills sent to him, although they affected legal rights and properties, and acquiring and disposing of lands in the Northwest Territories, had never been submitted to his department; having laid down what he designated as a principle, the governing by heads of departments and not by the cabinet, where every man is held responsible under our system to the people. We were told that in England the heads of the different departments acted without consulting in all cases, the cabinet. Whatever may have been the principle guiding the administration of affairs in England, it certainly has never been the principle that has guided the administration of the government of this country until the present cabinet came into power, and we now have the humiliating spectacle presented to us—I should not say to us, but to the Secretary of State, of having his action repudiated by his leader, and by the cabinet. I might use another word, but I do not know that any other would convey the meaning I intend to impress upon the House, when giving expression to this opinion. We find a commission solemnly appointed after a great deal of agitation, and many complaints from the Yukon Territory, and a discussion in the House of Commons for days. The charges were of such a grave character that the government were compelled to appoint a commission to inquire into the allegations made by members of their own party, as well as by opponents of the government, as to the effect of their legislation and Orders in Council upon that territory. Then there was appointed a judge who had given an opinion in the House of Commons upon the question, and defended the government on this point, and an independent gentleman outside, an expert in mining questions, to go to the Yukon and make a personal examination under oath, as to the effect which this Treadgold concession had had upon the country, and to ascertain whether the complaints against it had been justified. What that commission has cost, I do not know. Probably the hon. Secretary of State may be able to tell us; but this we do know, that these two gentlemen proceeded to the Yukon Territory, and there made an investigation. I shall not at this moment criticise the manner in which that investigation was conducted further than to say that if the reports in the public press are at all credited, there can be no question but that they limited the investigation to the smallest possible compass, and I might say further that the instructions given to the commissioners were not as broad as they should have been to elicit all the facts necessary to ascertain what effect the Treadgold concession had upon that country, or was likely to have upon it in the future. Therefore it is no more than just and fair to this House and to the country that all the correspondence between the government and Judge Britton, or between the hon. Secretary of State or any other member of the government in reference to the question of a report being made, should be laid before the Senate. Judging from the position which one of the commissioners took in the House of Commons, I should not suppose for a moment that the hon. Secretary of State would be under the impression when he gave the instruction to Judge Britton not to make a report, that it would not be as favourable as it could possibly be made. I do not wish to cast any reflection upon that gentleman, but when a man goes on a jury to try a case, on which he has already expressed very strong opinions, we might naturally suppose what the verdict would be, and for that reason, I suppose, the hon. Secretary of State in his youthful simplicity thought it was necessary, after what had been done by the government, to ask this gentleman not to make a report. Under our system of government, I think his action in that respect was inexcusable. He assumed a responsibility which he had no right to assume. It was a grave breach of the privileges of parliament; not only that, but a direct reflection upon his colleagues, to assume the responsibility, without first consulting the premier at least. During the seventeen years I was in the government, no member of the cabinet would have dared to take such a step without the consent of his colleagues, and I can only marvel, and I think the country will marvel, at the position assumed by the Secretary of State. I must compliment him on the humility he has displayed under the little snub he received from the premier. The hon. gentleman has been told that he assumed a responsibility which he had no right to assume, and must take a back seat, and remain there until told what he should do; yet he accepts the position and retains his portfolio. When I saw in a Toronto paper that the hon. gentleman had taken umbrage at the action of his premier and resigned his portfolio, I must say I had grave doubts, and I thought if he did, he was making a comfortable place for his friend alongside him without portfolio. I have great respect for the leader of this House, and I should be sorry to see him retire from his present position, but I had hoped that he would be succeeded by the hon. gentleman without portfolio, (Hon. Mr. Templeman) and as a brother journalist, I felt inclined to congratulate him. If there is to be a vacancy, I hope to see the hon. gentleman take that position. I hope the hon. Secretary of State will bring down these papers, in order that we may see the extent of the responsibility which a member of the cabinet assumes without the sanction of his colleagues.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not propose to discuss the large and constitutional question that my hon. friend has touched upon—that is as to whether the present members of the cabinet assume larger responsibilities than is proper and correct. At the time of my hon. friend's experience in the cabinet, the business of the country was not in the expanded condition it is to-day. Canada had not become a nation and so every small matter was brought to council. I can tell my hon. friend to-day it would be absolutely impossible to carry on the government if individual members did not assume some responsibility. I say with perfect confidence and in all sincerity, that it would be absolutely impossible to carry on the government of the country to-day if the smaller matters that come before the administration had all to be brought before council. There are a great many matters that come before a department that the individual head must deal with. Coming more particularly to the subject on which my hon. friend has called for papers, when agitation and excitement were aroused as to the improvidence of the government in granting what is called a concession to the Treadgold syndicate, the government very properly decided to issue a commission for the purpose of ascertaining whether there was really any ground for the charges of fraud. There were charges of fraud and improvidence, and charges that the syndicate were authorized to encroach on vested interests there, and the only way to get at the facts was to issue a commission, and that commission consisted of a judge of the court and an expert. The judge of a court would be quite unable to make a satisfactory report unless aided by an expert. It is a question purely of hydraulic engineering, a very intricate question, one in which even very few engineers can be found who have the necessary experience. It is only in parts of California that conditions exist such as existed up in the Yukon that would give any engineer a knowledge of the ultimate effect of elevating a large body of water. There were two points to consider. There were a number of bench claims on high ground that were very valuable, but could not be worked because there was no water. There were the claims that were already vested in the miners along the streams. They became alarmed at the possible diminution of their water supply. The problem was, would the miners having existing claims have still sufficient water to work these claims, if a body of water was brought up to a higher elevation in order to make the bench claims valuable. It was not a judicial point. A judge was appointed for the purpose of guiding the mode of inquiry, with seeing that the evidence was relevant and that proper evidence was taken down, that evidence not bearing on the question was rejected. There was an expert chosen, a gentleman from Montreal, Hardman I think was his name. After the commission was issued to him he declined to go. Then an inquiry was made as to who was the next best man. He ought to be a representative of the mining interests, and so the secretary of the Mining Institute of Canada, the late Mr. Bell, who edited the 'Mining Review,' was thought to be the most fit person, and he and Judge Britton went out to the Yukon and took a mass of evidence. My hon. friend thinks the inquiry was not exhaustive enough. I think myself it erred in the direction of being too exhaustive. I believe there are six volumes of 500 pages each to be boiled down. Before the evidence was extended, unfortunately, Mr. Bell, the mining engineer, met with an accident on his return to Ottawa, which ended fatally. Judge Britton was left alone without the aid of an expert, and the point was what was best to be done: so Judge Britton was then directed to make the report himself. It was to be presumed he had, at all events, gathered some views from the expert. He may or may not have done so, but as the inquiry had been very much extended he was directed to make his own individual report. In the month of June, the syndicate sent a communication to the Department of the Interior, stating that they wished to withdraw from the concession, that they were no longer prepared to take up the enterprise. The minister reported that to council and council passed the minute accepting the surrender unconditionally. There were no compensations. My hon. friend has rather strained a word I used the other day in reference to rights they might have acquired. My language might have been stronger than it should have been. I cannot, of course, tell what the rights are, but I presume while the grant was in existence they had certain rights. They probably went on certain lands. They might have been guilty of trespass if such a provision had not been made in cancelling the Order in Council, because the concession is now as if it had never existed. It might be a question for the courts to say that 'The Order in Council having been cancelled, they had no right to proceed in the manner they had done.' Of course that would be preposterous. While they had the authority to carry out the enterprise they ought to be protected in anything they had done under it. When the Order in Council was passed, in the exercise of my judgment, the correspondence had been carried on with Judge Britton through me, I considered that there was no occasion for a report on something that did not exist. The subject-matter had ceased to exist. The important member of the commission, the expert, was dead. Now, I ask hon. gentlemen what would be the value of any report Judge Britton could make? He is a judge of law, and the points involved are those which could only be within the knowledge of a hydraulic engineer. We, unfortunately, have not the benefit of any opinions that Mr. Bell may have formed. The evidence was taken down in shorthand, and had to be all written out. The work of extending the evidence had not been completed before Mr. Bell's death. In view of all the facts I see no object in a report—I suppose I am wrong, there are few cases on which His Majesty's opposition and His Majesty's government agree, and when they do agree I must be very wrong. But I am like the man 'who convinced against his will is of the same opinion still.' I think that is the common sense view to take of it. What can you inquire into? Into what might have been? Even the report of a hydraulic engineer could only have possible weight, because the conditions of the topography of the country differ so much from hydraulic works elsewhere. I may say en passant that the miners' interests were absolutely protected in the concession under the circumstances. Any report seemed to me to be futile. I thought so when I wrote to Judge Britton, and I think so now. He was to return the evidence, leaving it to everybody to judge; there are many hon. gentlemen in this chamber who think their conclusion on the evidence would be as valuable as Judge Britton's. Mr. Britton is a judge of law, but not of hydraulics, and it is rather an unfair thing to ask Mr. Britton to make a report, the subject-matter of which he has no possible knowledge. It is a very special subject. There are very few men who are capable of passing an opinion of the effect of hydraulic engineering..

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is that the last letter?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, the first letter. I sent for the papers while the hon. gentleman was speaking. I will read the guilty communication. It reads as follows:

Secretary of State, Canada.

In view of the surrender of the rights, powers and privileges granted by Order in Council of the 21st April, 1902, to Malcolm H. Orr-Ewing, A. N. C. Treadgold, and Walter Barwick, which surrender has been accepted by His Excellency the Governor General in Council on the 22nd inst., there is no occasion for proceeding further with the investigation into the affairs of what is commonly known as the 'Treadgold Concession.'

I have to ask that you would kindly transmit to me the evidence which you have gathered referring to that part of the inquiry, without, however, drawing any conclusion therefrom.

Your report will, therefore, be confined to other subjects specifically set forth in your commission which you were directed to inquire into and investigate.

I am, sir, yours truly,
(Sd.) R. W. SCOTT,
Secretary of State.

Then Mr. Justice Britton acknowledges that :

I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your favour of the 27th inst., informing me that, in view of the surrender of the rights, powers and privileges granted by Order in Council of 21st April, 1902, to Malcolm H. Orr-Ewing, A. N. C. Treadgold, and Walter Barwick, there is no occasion for proceeding further with the investigation into the affairs of what is commonly known as the 'Treadgold Concession.'

You ask me to transmit the evidence referring to that part of the inquiry.

The evidence in reference to the various subjects embraced in the inquiry of the commissioners is bound together, making in all six volumes of about 550 pages each. Persons who presented themselves as witnesses in many cases came to speak of some particular concession or to present something supposed to be of use not in any way connected with Treadgold, when a statement would be volunteered, or an answer given to a question put by some persons in the room, and then followed further statements and discussion about the Treadgold concessions. If this has to be separated, the labour will be great and it will take some time.

The evidence specifically given in reference to the Treadgold concessions can be taken out of these books and bound separately, and can be transmitted almost at once.

Waiting your reply,
Your obedient servant,
B. M. BRITTON.

In the meantime my hon. friend had started the ball rolling and said that Senator Scott was suppressing Judge Britton's report and so the Secretary of State sent this telegram when he found the opposition and the government both concurred in the impropriety of the position he was taking :

Referring to my letter of 27th June advising you of surrender of powers and privileges granted to the Treadgold syndicate of the acceptance of the surrender by His Excellency in Council, I added that there was now no occasion of proceeding further with the investigation into the affairs of the Treadgold concession. Before writing that letter the Privy Council had not been consulted and, attention having been called to the subject, council did not approve of my action. I therefore cancel the letter of the 27th June and you will please proceed as if that letter had not been written.

R. W. SCOTT.

I next day confirmed that telegram by letter. All the correspondence is here from the first, from the time of the granting of the concession to the present time. It was not asked for, but I thought it better that all the information should go. There is the Order in Council and the concession and the various commissions that were granted. First to the engineer at Montreal and then to Mr. Justice Britton, and subsequently to the late Mr. Bell.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Is the Order in Council condemning the hon. Secretary of State among these papers ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There was no order in Council condemning the Secretary of State. When I found my colleagues did not concur, I simply telegraphed to Judge Britton to cancel my letter and regard it as never having been written, so that no special harm has been done. I therefore have much pleasure in laying on the table the papers. I might say a good deal more, but it is a dead subject now and I do not think the public will take so much stock in the six volumes of 550 pages each, as they would have if the concession had been carried on. We have none too much time to deal with living subjects, and I see no object in taking up a dead subject. The judge cannot satisfactorily pass on a hydraulic question. My view was that every gentleman who took any interest in the subject could read the evidence and draw his own deduction from it. Supposing Judge Britton stated it was not an improvident concession, what good would result ? Would it convert the people who had criticised the action of the government ? Those who thought the concession was a wise and prudent one would not be disturbed if Judge Britton condemned it. They would say : 'There is the evidence, I presume I am quite as capable of construing it as Judge Britton.' If it were a question of law I would bow to him, but he must feel embarrassed in being called upon to make a report on a subject-matter not within his purview. His colleague who could advise him is, unfortunately, dead. I think it is a misfortune that Judge Britton should be called upon to make a report, because it must be obvious to every gentleman that where a judge is called upon to make a report upon something entirely outside of questions of law, he is a layman as far as that particular subject is concerned. He should not be expected to express opinions on outside matters.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The arguments that have been advanced by my hon. friend if such they may be designated, simply mean that no matter what maladministration of the affairs of the country may take place and a commission appointed to investigate them, and something occurs in the meantime which leads a member of the cabinet to think it unnecessary to make a report, therefore we shall have no report. That is the trend of my hon. friend's argument. The object of the appointment of that commission was simply to ascertain whether the conduct of the government in the granting of these concessions was of such a character as to impede the progress of the mining interests of that country. The miners and others interested in that country declared that the administration of the government of Canada had been detrimental to the interests of the miners and the progress of that country, and the judge and his colleague were appointed to investigate that complaint. The only man who would have a knowledge of the hydraulic mining, to which the hon. gentleman referred and which has very little to do with the question, is, unfortunately, dead; but the government appointed a commission for a certain purpose. That commission went to the Yukon Territory; they made certain investigations under their instructions. They came back with the evidence, and the Secretary of State tells the chief of that commission that because the government have cancelled the concession that they made, that it is not necessary for him to make any report, so that the country is not to know whether the effect of the granting of the concession was detrimental to the interests of that country or not. That was the principal reason. I am not going to follow the hon. gentleman through the whole of his statement. He referred to the bench claims. I suppose he knows that there are bench claims worked to-day, and I suppose he does know, if not he should not have referred to it, that these bench claims have water sufficient to enable them to be worked successfully. I am speaking from a little experience just now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Are there no bench claims where water is not available?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Certainly. But the water is brought there. We all know you cannot work any of these claims without water. We know further that even with quartz claims you require water to wash the debris from the gold after the rocks are crushed; but they do work many of the bench claims at the present moment, and there are certain lines by which it is done. I myself walked into a tunnel of over 600 feet into one of the mountains, three, four or five hundred feet above the level, where the washing takes place, and it was 125 feet—an interesting point—I do not know if it has anything to do with this —125 feet into the tunnel and there the earth was frozen as hard as a brick, and it had to be melted or thawed by means of the exhaust steam that was carried into the tunnel, and then brought out and washed at the bottom of the hill. What I object to more particularly in the hon. gentleman's theory of government is the fact that he said we are a nation, and, being a nation therefore, each head of a department must govern without the consent and knowledge of, or consultation with his colleagues.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I never said that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know the hon. gentleman did not, but that is the inference. The hon. gentleman said that Canada had grown to be a nation and that being a nation the government of the country must be carried on in the manner in which the hon. gentleman has carried it on. I take exception to the expression in every sense of the word, and I say that we are no more a nation now than we were twenty years ago. We are an integral part of the British nation and nothing more or less. We are growing, it is true, and we are becoming a more important part of the empire than we were twenty, thirty or forty years ago, and I trust that the improvement in our prosperity, wealth and importance will continue; but to rise and tell us, as the premier told the country on one occasion, that he went to bed one night and woke up next morning and found that he had created a nation, or that we were a nation, is not the fact. I contend we are no more a nation to-day than we were thirty years ago. We are part of a nation, and I am glad to know that we are becoming a more important part of it every day that we live —so important that they recognize the fact now in the mother country that Canada is an intregal part of the British empire. The inference to be drawn from the expression which is constantly used, that we are a nation would lead the younger people to suppose that we are gradually drifting from Britain, and that we are ultimately to raise our own flag and become independent of the mother country.

I have no feeling of that kind, and I trust the day will never come when we shall hear, even inferentially, expressions of that kind, to lead the younger portion of the Canadian people to believe that we are to be anything more than a part of the British empire—I do not mean to say a dependency, as it is understood by many people—but I mean to say that we are a part and parcel of the whole, and that a Canadian has the same rights and privileges in any part of the British empire as though he lived in the mother country. I want no prouder boast and inheritance to hand down to my children than the fact that they are citizens of the British empire. What clap-trap to speak of Canada as a nation, as though we are now any more a nation than we were sixty or seventy years ago, when I came to this country. I repudiate the inference drawn from remarks of that kind. If we were an independent nation, and still continued to govern the country under the system that prevails in England and in Canada to-day, the principle laid down by the hon. gentleman never could be carried out unless we had ministers like himself, who are prepared to assume responsibility, and when they are repudiated, as he himself says he was, by his own colleagues and by the opposition, quietly takes a snub like a well-whipped child. I can understand what he means by Canada being a nation. I believe the views to which I have given expression are the views of any man who knows anything of the system of responsible government. When we have the copies of the documents before us, if I find anything in them that is worthy of referring to hereafter, I shall take the liberty of doing so. Might I ask the hon. gentleman whether he will, without a motion made by myself, bring down a statement of the cost to the country of that commission? If the hon. gentleman says yes, I shall not put a notice on the paper. If he thinks it necessary that I should put a notice on the paper, I shall do so.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not in a position to say what it has cost the country. I do not think any account has been sent in, and I do not know whether any money has been advanced. Until we get the final account we cannot tell what the cost will be.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Will the hon. gentleman from Belleville (Sir Mackenzie Bowell) state if he repudiates the opinion expressed some time ago in London by the Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, that the empire should be considered a sisterhood of nations? The hon. gentleman does not answer. It is not proper to challenge the word used by the hon. leader of the House in regard to the destiny of Canada when it is used by an imperial statesman. It is a noble ambition for a young country to look forward to the time when it shall be a nation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They say Canada now is a nation.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am criticising the hon. gentleman's denunciation of the use of that word. He will not allow the Secretary of State to speak of Canada as a nation, though a British statesman says we are, and the leader of our own government stated before the King, and before the statesmen of the empire, that Canada is a nation, and he was not called to time.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—That does not make Canada a nation.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No; but I do not wish the remarks of the leader of the opposition to go on record as being the unanimous opinion of the people of Canada, that we are not entitled to look forward to the day when we shall be a nation. We have the best authority to look for that development. We have the statement made by the leader of this government, in a notable gathering in Great Britain and elsewhere, without being challenged for it, as the Secretary of State is being challenged here to-day by the leader of the opposition. I do not think the simple word dropped by the Secretary of State called for such fierce denunciation on the part of the leader of the opposition.

The SPEAKER—Inasmuch as the correspondence moved for has already been laid on the table, I ask the opinion of the House as to the order that this address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General by such members of this House as are members of the Privy Council.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a question whether such a form of motion should be used and whether it should not be simply an order of the House. I notice the question was discussed once in the House of Commons, and it puzzles me as to where the distinction should be drawn. It is a matter of form.

The SPEAKER—The distinction has been observed in the House of Commons, and I think it is a pity we do not observe it here, but we never have done so. With the permission of the House, I shall consider that question as not having been put, and the motion is that the hon. member from Belleville be permitted to withdraw his motion.

The motion was withdrawn.

THE STEAMER 'GAUSS.'

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

Is it the intention of the government to grant the commander of the 'Gauss' complete liberty in the choice to be made of the men who are to compose the crew of the said vessel?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The commander of the 'Arctic,' formerly the 'Gauss,' will be provided with a proper crew found qualified by the department for the expedition.

WHARF AT ST. ALPHONSE OF HA! HA! BAY.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House a statement indicating, year by year, from the year 1901, inclusive, up to this day, the detail of the expense incurred in the construction of the wharf at St. Alphonse of Ha! Ha! Bay.

The motion was agreed to.

THE WHARF AT POINTE AUX TREMBLES.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

1. Did the government ask for tenders for the construction of a wharf at Pointe aux Trembles, in the county of Portneuf ?
2. Was the contract for the construction of such wharf granted to the lowest tenderer ?
3. If not, to whom.
4. For what price ?
5. When are the works to be commenced ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The replies are as follows :

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. See above.
4. $33,775.
5. Contractors are supposed to start work as soon as possible, there being no fixed date for commencement.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is the name of the contractor given ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, they did not give me the name. He is the lowest tenderer, however, whoever he was.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (M) An Act respecting the Pacific Bank of Canada.—(Hon. Mr. Templeman.)

Bill (121) An Act respecting the Century Life Insurance Company.—(Hon. Mr. Perley.)

PILOTAGE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (100) An Act to amend the Pilotage Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Where has this great change been found necessary ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is by representations from the shipping interests. Last year a change was made so far as Montreal and Saguenay were concerned. There had been some friction in both places, and the department had to take it over, and representations were made, from the shipping interests and boards of trade in other places, that they would like to have the supreme authority here, if they so desired it. It must emanate from the local body, however.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported the Bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

SHIPPING CASUALTIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (102) An Act to amend the Shipping Casualties Act, 1901.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I have just received a telegram from the president of the pilots in Quebec, saying he is coming up with a deputation, and asking that the Bill be postponed until Monday.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—This Bill has been delayed on two or three occasions on account of similar requests having been made, to permit pilots to come here and be heard. I understand that there are two or three amendments to be made to the Bill, which probably will be in a line with what my hon. friend wants. There is some object in having the Bill passed to-day and assented to along with other Bills to-morrow or Monday. There are pending some cases which require to be investigated, and probably tried, under the provisions of this Marine Casualties Bill, as at present being amended, and which are now being deferred, owing to the fact that machinery is not quite ready. Unless the reasons are very strong for a postponement, I should prefer to have the Bill passed to-day.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not know what the reasons are; I have simply received the telegram to which I have referred. The hon. gentleman says a similar telegram was sent some time ago. It was not from this body. This is from the pilots below Quebec; the previous demand was from the pilots between Montreal and Quebec.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Would it not serve the hon. gentleman's purpose if he passed the Bill, and let the pilots be heard in the House of Commons when it goes back there? I know it is the desire of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that this Bill should pass to-day or to-morrow, in order to receive the Royal Assent.

The motion was agreed to.

In committee, on the first clause,

1. Section 2 of the Shipping Casualties Act, 1901, is amended by the addition of the following paragraph .—

(g.) The expression 'pilot' means any person not belonging to a ship who has the conduct thereof.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is the law now? Cannot a man on the ship be a pilot?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—The Act does not provide for inquiring into the conduct of a pilot. It is bringing the officer, known as a pilot, under the jurisdiction of the Shipping Casualties Act, so that under that Act an inquiry can be made when an accident takes place, so that the responsibility can be fixed, and a penalty imposed, under that Act. This clause defines the meaning of the word 'pilot.'

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—This clause would not apply to all the pilots, because a ship might have one of its officers employed as a pilot, and he would not be amenable under the law as it stands, because it only applies to a pilot when he is a person not belonging to the ship who has the conduct of a vessel.

Hon. Mr. POWER—In that case the pilot would be one of the officers of the ship, and would come under the Act, anyway.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would he be subject to the law governing pilots?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Under the law as it stands, the expression 'master' includes every person having charge of a vessel, excepting the pilot.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You would still eliminate from the Act an officer of a ship acting in the capacity of a pilot. Section 2 of the present Act does not extend to an officer of a ship acting in the capacity of a pilot, so it would not reach an officer of a ship acting as a pilot.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman is slightly in error. Paragraph (b) of section 2 of the Shipping Casualties Act says:

> The expression 'master' includes every person except a pilot having command or charge of any vessel.

So any seaman or other man on board of a ship, having charge of a ship, is a master, excepting a pilot. If you leave it that way, it will include a pilot belonging to the ship, because this paragraph, which we propose to add now, says: 'Any person not belonging to a ship.' Even if he is a pilot, and belongs to the ship, he will not come under the term 'pilot,' but come under the term 'master.'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Let us assume an officer of a ship under the Act as it now stands is acting as a pilot, does the Act reach him ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—It does not.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Under the present law, it is conceded that the pilot, although an officer of the ship, acting in the capacity of a pilot, cannot be reached by the Act. Now, the amendment does not cover that, because it only refers to that class of pilot who does not belong to the ship.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It takes the pilot who is in the ship and belongs to the ship out of the class of pilots altogether and leave him in the class of master.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do the penalties which are imposed for neglected duty apply to the master who is declared not to be a pilot under this clause ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There are certain penalties attached to a neglect of duty by a pilot.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The penalties are mentioned later on in the Act. I wish to move an additional subsection to this section, as subsection two of section one, providing for the insertion of the word 'pilot' after the word 'mate' wherever the words 'master,' 'mate' or 'engineer' occur. These words occur in a great many places, and in order to prevent any doubt as to whether the law applies to the pilot, I propose to submit this sub-clause.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Does that cover the case of a captain, mate or pilot of his own vessel ? The captain acts as pilot sometimes. He would be master and would be liable.

The amendment was adopted.

The clause as amended was adopted.

On clause 2,

Hon. Mr. POWER—It would not be quite clear from the wording of this sub-clause whether there is to be one officer appointed for the whole of Canada, or whether the intention is that there shall be officers appointed for each district, or that there shall be an officer appointed for each case, and I propose to add for the first subsection after clause 4, the following :—

And may define the territorial jurisdiction of any such officer or person.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—That is reasonable.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Then in line 17 after the word 'default' it is necessary to add some words. The clause reads :

2. If, upon a preliminary inquiry, the officer holding it is of opinion that any loss, or damage, or the stranding of any ship, or any loss of life, has been caused by the wrongful act or default——

There is another cause from which accidents sometimes happen, that is, the incapacity of the pilot through old age or ignorance or any other cause, and the court which investigates should have the right to deal with incapacity as well as defaults, and I propose to add 'or by the incapacity.'

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—There should be no incapacity in pilots. They are licensed every year.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am informed by the officer who conducts these inquiries that there are cases of incapacity. If there is no incapacity this clause will not operate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does it not strike the minister that this is a singular clause, it says :

4. The minister may appoint a principal officer of customs or any officer of the government of Canada, or any person to make preliminary inquiries respecting such shipping casualties.

You first say the minister may appoint the officer of customs. Then he may appoint an officer of the government of Canada or any person. Why is there not a simple declaration that he may appoint any person.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—At present the law reads as follows :

The minister may direct.

And this is substituted. It will be observed that the minister cannot, under the law as it stands at present, name any person until an accident occurs, and then he appoints the nearest custom-house officer or any other officer to make the inquiry. It is now proposed that the minister shall appoint certain shipping masters, other officers of the government at certain places on the coast, to be officers to make inquiries when any accident occurs, so that the officer appointed can make the inquiry just as soon as he knows an accident has taken place, without any instruction or new appointment from the minister. The whole object of this is to expedite inquiries into marine accidents.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is not the point I raised. Under the present law, power is conferred upon the minister to appoint a customs official. The amendment proposed is that he appoint a customs officer or he may appoint an officer of the government or any other person.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—As the law is at present he may appoint any officer of customs residing at or near the place where such shipping casualty occurs, or he may appoint an officer of the government of Canada, or he may appoint any person. The minister cannot act until an accident takes place.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He can appoint a government officer or any one else.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He could appoint a barber.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think there is a little misapprehension with respect to this change. The law as it stands now provides that there shall be a special appointment made in each case. That has been found inconvenient in working, and involves delay. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries may not be very easily accessible, and it has been felt by the officers who have to do the work in the department that it is desirable that there should be a permanent officer; and the clause which is now under consideration provides for the appointment of officers of a quasi permanent character. The minister may appoint any person to make the preliminary inquiries respecting such shipping casualties. That means shipping casualties in general and not any one in particular.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I move that the words 'principal officers of customs or any officer of the government of Canada or' be struck out, so that it will read:

The minister may appoint any person to make preliminary inquiries.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. leader of the opposition is trying to find out why they adopt there the words 'any person.'

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is in the existing law.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Hon. gentlemen will see that he will appoint an officer of customs if there is one in that vicinity. If there is no officer of customs he may appoint some other person.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The government want the power to appoint some of their friends to do the work which has heretofore been done by other officials.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. leader of the opposition is labouring under a misapprehension. Section 4 of the present Act reads:

Or any other person appointed by the minister.

But the object of this Bill is to have a permanent officer, so that there will be no delay making inquiries.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a pity that the responsible minister in charge could not make that explanation himself. It is very fortunate he has some one beside him who can make the explanation.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 3,

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I propose to strike out the words in the 33rd line after the word 'exceeding.' The amount of the fine is very indefinite under this clause; it would not be known what the income of the pilot was, and there might be some little difficulty in ascertaining the actual amount of the fine and I propose to insert the words:

Not exceeding $400 and not less than $50.

That will make the fine a definite amount.

The amendment was adopted, and the clause as amended was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS, from the committee, reported the Bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN moved the suspension of rule 41.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I object

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Then I shall move that the Bill be read the third time to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

ALLIANCE BANK OF CANADA BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE moved the second reading of Bill (140) An Act respecting the Alliance Bank of Canada.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is no petition for this Bill.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The Bill was reported by the Standing Orders Committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But there was no motion to suspend the rule.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Yes.

The SPEAKER—As I understand, the chairman of the Committee on Standing Orders reported in favour of suspending the rule in connection with this Bill, and he then moved that the report be adopted and the report was adopted and there is no necessity for anything further.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Rule 17 reads :

No motion to suspend, modify or amend any rule or part thereof shall be in order except on one day's notice in writing, specifying precisely the rule proposed to be suspended, modified or amended and the purpose of such suspension.

That has not been done. The rule proceeds :—

But any rules may be suspended without notice by the unanimous consent of the Senate, and the rule proposed to be suspended shall be precisely and distinctly stated, and no motion for the suspension of the rules upon any petition for a private Bill shall be in order unless the same shall have been recommended by the Committee on Standing Orders.

The committee has recommended that, but the motion has not been made and the rule says :

No motion for the suspension of the rule shall be made unless it shall be recommended by committee. The recommendation was given, but the motion was not made and the rules were not suspended.

The SPEAKER—The Committee on Standing Orders reported yesterday as follows.

Your committee have examined the following Bill (140), from the House of Commons, referred to them under the 59th rule, intituled : 'An Act respecting the Alliance Bank of Canada.'

Satisfactory reasons being given why no petition was presented, your committee recommend the suspension of the 54th rule, as it will be competent for the committee to whom the Bill shall be referred to provide that no injury shall arise therefrom.

All which is respectfully submitted.

FINLAY M. YOUNG,
Chairman.

On motion of the Honourable Mr. Young, seconded by the Honourable Mr. Béique, it was Ordered, that the said report be adopted.

And it was ordered without any dissent and the rule has been suspended.

Hon Mr. LANDRY—I beg to differ from that ruling completely. Rule 17 says that no motion for the suspension of the rules shall be made unless it is recommended. That supposes two things. That supposes the motion to be made, and made in accordance with the recommendation and by the committee. That recommendation has been made, but the motion has not.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—The hon. gentleman, in my judgment, is quite right. The recommendation has been made but no motion has been made.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am willing to withdraw the objection if it be well understood that a recommendation of the committee is not sufficient and that a motion must be made.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—For my part I have not examined the point, but at first sight I would be under the impression that the rule does not apply in a case of this kind, when, impliedly, the report of the committee and the adoption of the report of the committee implies the suspension of the rule. I do not think that the point is well taken.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. gentleman takes that view of it I maintain my objection and ask the ruling of the chair.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry is willing to waive the point for the present.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

SHIPPING CASUALTIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I beg to withdraw my objection to the second reading of Bill (102) An Act to amend the Shipping Casualties Act, 1902.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Then I move that the order of the House fixing the third reading of this Bill for to-morrow be rescinded.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I move that the Bill be read a third time.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

AN ADJOURNMENT.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As there is nothing on the order paper for to-morrow, and several hon. gentlemen have expressed a desire to be absent to-morrow, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it do stand adjourned until Monday, at 3 o'clock, and a resolution may be adopted permitting any committee that desire to meet to-morrow may do so.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I do not rise to object, but I wish to say that this is done through lobbying. It is too apparent altogether, and it is not the right thing to do.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—There is a call for the Railway Committee to meet to-morrow.

The SPEAKER—Does the hon. gentleman from British Columbia object?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—No.

MUTUAL RESERVE COMMITTEE.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I beg to give notice that I will at the next meeting of the House move that the chairman of the select committee on the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association be requested to make his report on the matter on which I am appealing to the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In the absence of the hon. chairman of the committee I may tell the hon. gentleman that the report was prepared, but had not reached him.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It might be filed and put on the order paper.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—The hon. gentleman has not given his notice.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am giving it for the next sitting of the House.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I should like to know in what position the senators who are members of the Joint Committee on Printing will be in? There will be a meeting to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Certainly a committee of the Senate may always sit during an adjournment.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until 3 p.m. on Monday.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Monday, July 18, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

MUTUAL RESERVE LIFE ASSOCIATION COMMITTEE.

SEVENTH REPORT.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN, from the select committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York, presented their seventh report. The report was read by the Clerk as follows:

The Senate,
Committee Room No. 2,
Thursday, July 14th, 1904.

The Select Committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York, beg leave to make their Seventh report as follows:

1. At a meeting of your committee held on 12th July instant, a certain document was produced and admitted in evidence as Exhibit No. 36, a copy of which is contained in the copy of the evidence herewith submitted.

2. At a meeting of your committee held on the 13th July instant, it was moved by the hon. Mr. Lougheed:

That the committee reconsider its action of the 12th instant, in admitting Exhibit No. 36.

In amendment thereto it was moved by the Honourable Mr. Landry :

That all the words after 'that' be struck out and the following substituted :

The Exhibit No. 36 accepted yesterday the 12th instant by this committee be considered as tending to prove the consideration for which a sum of $5,000 has been paid by the Mutual Reserve Company to one Patterson, and not as a proof of the truth of the charges which such document contains.

3. It was objected, by the Honourable Mr. Béique, that the amendment was out of order, on the ground that Exhibit No. 36, having been offered for evidence and received as such, could not now be qualified as sought to be done by the amendment; that, moreover, the said amendment was not in accordance with the facts.

4. The chairman thereupon ruled that it was in the power of this committee to qualify its previous action in accepting Exhibit No. 36, and that, inasmuch as the amendment offered was not a flat contradiction of such action nor of the main motion, the amendment was in order.

5. The question being then put upon the amendment, the committee divided thereon :

Yeas : The Honourable Messieurs Cloran, Domville, Landry, McMullen, McSweeney, Sullivan, Wilson—7.

Nays : The Honourable Messieurs Béique, Gibson, Lougheed, Sir Alphonse Pelletier, Watson—5.

So it was Resolved in the affirmative.

6. The Honourable Mr. Béique having appealed from the decision of the chairman, it was

Resolved that the chairman do report the facts to the Senate.

7. The motion of the Honourable Mr. Lougheed, as so amended was then carried on the same division reversed.

8. At a meeting of your committee held this day Thursday, July 14th, it was

Resolved that together with the report to be made by the chairman as to the action of the committee with respect to Exhibit No. 36, there be submitted to the Senate a copy of all the evidence adduced before the committee up to and including the 13th July instant.

9. A copy of the said evidence is herewith submitted.

All which is respectfully submitted.

(Signed) H. J. CLORAN,
Chairman.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN said : In connection with this report I am under the necessity of making a short explanation, in view of the fact that I find on the Orders of the Day, under the heading of 'Notices of Motion,' a motion made by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry to the following effect :

That he will move, that the Chairman of the Select Committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York be ordered to report to the House that part of the proceedings of said committee had on the 13th instant, relative to an appeal made by Senator Béique from the chairman's ruling on a point of order raised on a motion in amendment, made by Senator Landry, to a motion moved by Senator Lougheed; and that he will appeal to the House from said ruling of said chairman.

I may at once say in regard to the latter portion of this notice of motion, I have not the slightest objection that he should make any appeal whatever : but what I find very strange is that the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry should ask this House to order me to present the report. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that the report was in my possession, and that I had refused to present it to the Senate ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The report was in the possession of the hon. gentleman during part of the sitting of the House last Thursday, and the hon. member, after having signed the report, absented himself from the House, and therefore I deemed it my duty to give the notice of motion which appears on the order paper, in case the hon. member should not make the report, as he has done to-day.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The explanation is rather lame to justify the hon. gentleman for putting on the orders a notice to 'order' the chairman of the committee to make a report to the House. Had the hon. gentleman had the courtesy or discretion to ask where the report was at the time, he would not have allowed himself to fall into such an error.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to deny that he signed the report while the House was in session on Thursday and afterwards absented himself for the rest of the sitting ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman is making a statement which cannot bear out this attitude.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Is it true ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I will come to the consideration of that later on.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is altogether irregular to have this discussion when a report is laid on the table. The hon. gentleman is speaking to the report. I myself, and other gentlemen here have learned of this now for the first time. We are not in a position to pronounce any sensible opinion on the report and it seems irregular to enter upon a discussion of it without notice. We can have all the explanations to-morrow when the report appears in the minutes.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I quite concur in the remarks of the Hon. Secretary of State. If I were discussing the merits of the report, I would not be in order, but I am discussing the attitude of a member of this House who has put a notice on the paper.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That will be better considered to-morrow when we shall have the papers before us.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The sooner the explanation is given the better for both parties. I can discuss this question when we come to the notice of motion placed on the orders. I can wait until then.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The hon. gentleman should move that the report be taken into consideration.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN moved that the report be taken into consideration to-morrow. He said: I will now avail myself of the opportunity and my right——

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman has already spoken.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I made no speech. I made the motion on the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Killarney.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman spoke and wound up his speech with a motion.

The motion was agreed to.

A SUPPLY BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (No. 156) An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending June 30, 1905.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The fiscal year terminated on the 30th June and, therefore, it is quite impossible to pay any more moneys until the Supply Bill has been adopted by parliament, and approved by His Excellency the Governor General. The main reason for pressing it forward at the present time, is that the civil service cannot be paid. They are usually paid the middle of the month, and by consent, in the other chamber, the Bill was allowed to go through for one-fifth of the amount contained in the Supply Bill laid on the table. That is the first estimate. It has no reference to the supplemental estimates of last year or the supplemental estimates of the present year. It refers only to those items in the Supply Bill first brought down that have passed the House of Commons, and to one-fifth of the balance. The Supply Bill as presented, contains items to the amount of $62,800,000 as against $68,300,000 in the preceding year. It would be one-fifth of the latter amount less those particular items that have already received the approval of the House of Commons. Those are the amounts to which the consent of the Senate is asked. I move the suspension of rule 41 so far as it relates to this Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is there a motion for the suspension of the rule?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A motion is not necessary, as I understand. I have never heard that the rule should be suspended as far as the Supply Bill is concerned.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. gentleman never heard that a motion was necessary to suspend the rule, I do not know why he makes it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was suggested to me to make it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Because it was the proper thing.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second and third time and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (80) An Act respecting the West Canadian Collieries, Limited.—Hon. Mr. McHugh.)

Bill (144) An Act to amend the Act of the present session respecting the Temiscouata Railway Company.—Hon. Sir Alphonse Pelletier.)

Bill (150) An Act to amend the Act of the present session entitled An Act to incorporate the Thorold and Lake Erie Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Domville.)

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (73) An Act to amend the Railway Act, 1903.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that the Bill be read the second time on Wednesday next. It is a Bill consisting of two clauses. It provides that no agreement with employees shall relieve the company from liability for personal injury. It is to prevent operatives contracting out, as it is called.

The motion was agreed to.

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (154) An Act to amend chapter 61 of the Statutes of 1903 respecting the Revised Statutes of Canada.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read a second time on Wednesday next. He said: This is a very short Bill. It refers to some typographical or clerical errors that appeared in the Bill passed in 1903, substituting the word 'are' for 'were,' and after the word 'all' by striking out the word 'such.' I shall be glad to give an explanation of the Bill on the second reading.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

BILLS ASSENTED TO.

After some time the Senate was resumed.

The Honourable Mr. Justice Sedgewick, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, being seated at the foot of the Throne,

The Honourable the Speaker commanded the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod to proceed to the House of Commons and acquaint that House: 'It is the Deputy Governor's desire that they attend him immediately in this House.'

Who being come with their Speaker,

THE MUTUAL RESERVE FUND ASSOCIATION COMMITTEE.

EIGHTH REPORT.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN from the Select Committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, presented their eighth report, which was read at the table as follows :

The Senate,
Committee Room No 2,
Tuesday, 19th July, 1904.

The Select Committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York, beg leave to make their Eighth Report as follows :—

Your committee find that printed copies of the evidence adduced before them are not furnished as speedily as required. The last printed copy supplied contains the evidence of the 30th June only. The evidence taken since the Senate reassembled on the 11th July has not yet been printed for the committee.

Your committee are informed that this delay is due to the printing being held back, but by whose orders is unknown, no such order having been given by the Senate or by this committee.

All which is respectfully submitted.

H. J. CLORAN,
Chairman.

He said : The report simply states that no orders were given by the Senate or by the committee. I believe that is true. I may add that if this evidence is being held up in the Printing Bureau, it is without my knowledge and consent, especially in view of the fact that the counsel before the committee are daily asking for copies of the evidence and it is not in my power to give it to them, as I would like to do. Why this evidence is held up in the printing office is more than I can explain, and I think both the Senate and the committee are entitled to an explanation, if any body can give an explanation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall inquire at the Printing Bureau. In the sense the hon. gentleman speaks of, a great deal of printing is held up. The Bureau is absolutely unequal to the demand upon it. Members of both Houses are complaining constantly. Four or five years ago I represented that the Printing Bureau was not in a position to do the work demanded of it, and suggested an addition to it, but I have never been able to obtain authority to have an addition made. There is a great deal more printing than this report held back as a consequence.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Would the hon. gentleman be kind enough to inquire of the Printing Bureau, and give them an order to explain it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The members of the House of Commons are pressing for the printing of their lists. Every day I receive letters inquiring. I am unable to answer them. The most pressing matters are printed first. This is not considered one of the most pressing.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Are the elections more important?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A good deal of the work has to be given out.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is it because the Printing Bureau is overcrowded, or because an order was given?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is overcrowded.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—An order was given?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If an order was given, we ought to know who gave it.

THE ARCTIC VESSEL 'GAUSS.'

MOTION.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that he will cause to be laid on the table of the Senate a copy of the instructions given to Capt. Spain, of the Marine and Fisheries Department, to investigate and report upon the charges reported in the public press to have been made by Capt. Bernier, of the Arctic vessel 'Gauss,' in relation to the fitness and conduct of the men which he alleged were 'foisted' upon him at Montreal by the Dominion government, together with a copy of the report of Capt. Spain thereon.

He said: In moving this address, I might call attention to the report of an investigation made by a reporter connected with 'La Presse' of Montreal, in which he points out that some ten or twelve, or a large number of kegs or barrels of meat were found buried in the sand which had been placed in the steamer 'Gauss' as ballast, and from all indications, and particularly the marks the barrels bore upon them, would lead one to suppose that it was meat that was put on the vessel just prior to her entering upon her last Arctic expedition. If so, that meat must have been a number of years old. The result was when it was taken out of the vessel and sent to some person to inspect it, the stench was such that they had to send it to some persons to be 're-salted,' it is said. The report proceeded to say that the meat was sent to some butcher with instructions to re-salt it, but that it was found to be of such a character, and so putrid and offensive, that it would have to be destroyed. There are other things connected with it. I shall not weary the House reading an article sent me in connection with it, but it is a matter in which the government should make investigation as to whether that character of food was placed on the vessel, when it was placed on the vessel, and whether it was as bad as the men complained of. If it was, they certainly had good cause for complaint. There evidently has been mismanagement somewhere and the probabilities are that this will be continued, from the answers given by the Secretary of State, to the question put by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona the other day, that the captain of the vessel and those really responsible are to have no word to say as to the qualifications and capacity of the crew who are to man this vessel. After what has taken place, one would think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries would be somewhat particular in the selection of men for this expedition, and that there would be no person appointed on this vessel to teach gunnery, in order to provide a pleasant voyage to the Arctic regions when there are no guns on the 'Gauss' to be used in the work of exploration. Perhaps the hon. Secretary of State has read this article. It is a very serious charge made against the provisioning of the vessel. Somebody is responsible, and the government ought to know at the earliest possible moment who is responsible.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no objection to the address going, and shall call the attention of the minister to the observations made by the hon. gentleman and the papers shall be brought down as soon as they can be prepared.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think we should not let this occasion pass without saying a few words on this question of the steamer 'Gauss'. We were told the other day by the hon. minister that the selection of the crew would depend entirely upon the Department of Marine and Fisheries. There is no objection to that, but in the face of those charges brought against the government by 'La Presse' the captain should be allowed to have a first class outfit for the expedition. It was not the case when he crossed from Bremen to Quebec. People were imposed on him, men that never saw the ocean. Employees in some office here were sent to Germany as members of the the crew. I was told, and have every reason to believe that the publication of the facts of that expedition when it arrived here was due to that gunner called Laferrière, who was more a reporter of 'La Presse' than a mariner. On going on board the vessel he found some photographs that were left behind by the expedition that went to the south pole. I suppose some body on board had secured those photographs in some town on the way to the south pole. Those photographs were taken by the man Laferrière and shown to everybody, causing a great scandal because the photographs were obscene. They were confiscated by the captain who said they did not belong to the man Laferrière, but were the property of the government itself, so that the government is now in the possession of those valuable pictures, the confiscation of which so roused the anger of Laferrière that as soon as he arrived in Quebec he called in another reporter of 'La Presse' in Quebec, Cinq Mars, and they framed that charge against Captain Bernier which was published in the paper. I do not know if the charge was sent to the government. I know that Captain Spain was sent to investigate, and we are anxious to see his report.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Had the hon. gentleman not better wait until he gets the report before making these statements ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Shall we get the report ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am very glad to know that. It indicates that there is a report. It was denied in another place that there was a report.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentlemen govern by departments, hence he does not know ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I remember in 1878, when I ran in the county of Montmagny, I was opposed on every platform by a man employed at Grosse Isle, a quarantine station. He appeared at every meeting in his uniform. I complained to the government but never accomplished anything, because the minister of the day, Mr. Pope, having referred the matter to Dr. Montizambert received a reply that the doctor was putting his life in the hands of the sailors who conveyed him from Grosse Isle to the mainland, and therefore he should have the choice of his men. It might have been a sound principle at that time; I should like it to be regarded as a sound principle now. Whoever is to have charge of that expedition to Hudson Bay should have under him men on whom he could rely, and if the government undertake to employ the crew, the first thing they should exact from those they select is a thorough knowledge of how to work a ship. I think that is essential to the success of the expedition.

THE BERNE CONVENTION.

INQUIRY AND MOTION.

Hon. Mr. DAVID rose to Ask the government whether the imperial statute on copyright which enacts that the Berne Convention must be applied to colonies, is in force in Canada ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—From the best information I can get, we are still in the Berne Convention. Sir John Thompson, when a member of the late government, made strong representations and a year's notice was given, but the imperial government never acted upon it, so we are still in the Berne Convention.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—May I supplement the question by asking if the Canadian statute of 1889 is still in force ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot answer offhand.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand that the government has taken no action since the notice was given by Sir John Thompson?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There has been repeated correspondence. There was a long report some years ago, but the imperial government pointed out that they objected to it—they thought Canada ought to continue in the Berne Convention. We have had a good deal of correspondence on the subject. We have passed Acts and some of them have been held up in Great Britain. It has been a disputed question.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has the present government pressed its objections?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes, repeatedly.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I have put this question in order to be able to discuss the following motion when it comes up :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General ; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate copies of all correspondence, petitions and documents in the hands of the government, being connected with the copyright question, and the law on the subject ; also, for a statement of the number of foreign books which have been reprinted in Canada in accordance with our laws on copyright.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Will the hon. gentleman let the motion stand.

The motion was allowed to stand until tomorrow

PROTECTION OF HERRINGS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

1. Did the government, in the spring of the year 1903, receive petitions from the fishermen of Gaspé and Bonaventure asking for the protection of herrings as fish-bait and otherwise ?
2. What was the reply of the government ?
3. When and to whom was it given ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answers are as follows :

1. Yes.

2. The department, after fully considering the matter, has reached the conclusion that sufficient grounds do not exist for taking action on the lines of the petitions.

3. May 2, 1903 ; to Hon. Mr. Lemieux.

DALHOUSIE AND GASPE MAIL SERVICE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired of the government :

Has the government entered into arrangements with the company owning the 'Admiral' for the carriage of mails from Dalhousie to the port of Gaspé and to intermediate ports ?
What is the date of such contract ?
What is the duration of it ?
What is the annual amount paid for such carriage ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No permanent arrangement has been made for the carriage of the mails by the steamer 'Admiral' between Dalhousie and the port of Gaspé and intermediate ports. The mails are being carried temporarily by this steamer at the present time pending arrangements being concluded having for their object the substitution of a better vessel.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION.

MOTION POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called :

That the chairman of the Select Committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York be ordered to report to the House that part of the proceedings of said committee had on the 13th instant, relative to an appeal made by Senator Béique from the chairman's ruling on a point of order raised on a motion in amendment, made by Senator Landry, to a motion moved by Senator Lougheed ; and that he will appeal to the House from said ruling of said chairman.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I ask that this stand until the report of the committee is taken up.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That may be next week.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It is connected with the report.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is to produce the report.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—That has been complied with, but the appeal has to be discussed yet.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The first part of the hon. gentleman's motion has been complied with without any interference on the part of the House. As to the second part, as I stated before, I have no objection to any appeal, and why the hon. gentleman does not proceed I cannot understand. It is my privilege now to explain the circumstances surrounding it.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—No.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Is it not ? Then, is the object to postpone it so that no explanation can be made ? I do not wish to impose my personality on the House, but last evening I was called to order when making a motion and was not allowed to speak to my motion. If I understand the position of the matter now I have a right to speak.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, there is no motion before the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Are we to understand that when an hon. member's motion is called, and he asks that it be allowed to stand it is not a motion ?

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Of course it is a motion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I want a ruling on that point to guide me in the future. If a member rises and asks to have a motion stand, is it not a motion ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It has never been so regarded. I know the common practice of the House has been that any member having a motion in charge has usually been allowed to let it stand until another day.

The SPEAKER—The point in this case is that the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry does not ask simply to have his motion stand, but that it stand to be taken up in connection with the report of the committee, which is on the Orders of the Day, to which it relates. I suppose we could take it up without any notice, but perhaps the hon. gentleman had better move a resolution now to let it stand until that stage.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Then I move that it be allowed to stand to be taken up when the report of the Select Committee of the Mutual Reserve is taken up.

Mr. CLORAN—Before taking a vote on this motion I have now an opportunity to explain the circumstances under which the report of the proceedings of the committee on Thursday morning was not laid on the table. I do not know what motive the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry had for his hasty action, or what benefit he expected the House was to receive from the notice he put on the orders. At three o'clock, when the House assembled, the Speaker called for the presentation of reports of committees but up to that time I had not received the report from the clerk of the committee. I waited for an hour and one-half before it came to me. It should have been placed in my hands in time to be ready for presentation when the Speaker called for reports of committees. It was brought here by the clerk after I had sent messengers for it at twenty minutes to five, and when it reached me, we were proceeding with the Orders of the Day. If the hon. gentleman knew those circumstances, I cannot understand why he took the action he did, and if he did not know the circumstances, it was his duty to inquire of me or of the clerk where the report was. There was no necessity for his action. The House should take action when a chairman of the committee refuses to present a report, but not when the chairman is not in a position to present it. I do not understand why the hon. gentleman should be so active and hasty in the matter when there was no need for it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have to compliment the hon. gentleman on being so thin-skinned on the present occasion. I readily accept, as no doubt the House does, the explanation he has given. As a matter of fact, I know how the incident occurred. The hon. gentleman was not responsible for the delay. But I saw the report brought to the Senate, when the second Order of the Day was taken up. I saw the hon. gentleman signing the report while the House was in session, and I expected that he would present it before the adjournment, which took place about an hour later. Before the House rose I called the attention of the House to the fact that I had expected the report would be filed, but that the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Cloran) was not in his place, and to prevent any delay I gave notice of motion. I was quite in order in doing so, and it was no reflection on the hon. gentleman. We are near the end of the session and it is important to prevent any delay. That is why I gave the notice of motion.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The explanation of the hon. senator obliges me to give a final explanation. I object very strongly to the word 'Order'; that is one point. Now how does the hon. gentleman know that I signed that report ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Because I saw the report brought in by Mr. Young, and handed by a messenger to the hon. member from Victoria, and I saw the hon. gentleman leaving his place, and going to the table and signing the report.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Did the hon. gentleman see me putting another sheet of paper on the report? The hon. gentleman has no personal knowledge of the affair, and therefore it is not legal evidence. The explanation which is due to the House is this; when the report came in I did sign it, and was ready to present it even at that late hour, but a senator said to me 'If you attempt to present that report now I shall object and block it.' Another senator said 'There is evidence wanting in that report and I want to verify it before it is presented. That is why the report did not go in even at a quarter to five o'clock, and I think I did what was right in respecting the objections raised, as we had gone past the time for presenting reports.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—One objection would have prevented it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I was not going to start a discussion at 5 o'clock, when everybody was preparing to leave. The House will see that I acted with perfect impartiality in the matter.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I know that a member of the House of Commons asked for twenty-four hours to answer one question; that question was, what was his name? I appreciate therefore the necessity of the hon. gentleman asking for twenty-four hours to decide whether he should present that report.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think we should not accept this motion. The motion of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry is :

That the chairman of the Select Committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York be ordered to report to the House that part of the proceedings of said committee had on the 13th instant, relative to an appeal made by Senator Béique from the chairman's ruling on a point of order raised on a motion in amendment, made by Senator Landry, to a motion moved by Senator Lougheed ; and that he will appeal to the House from said ruling of said chairman.

The hon. gentleman cannot ask that motion to be delayed until the report comes in because the report is already on the table and printed in the minutes at page 542. I think the better way for the hon. gentleman to get out of this difficulty is to ask permission to drop the motion, because he cannot ask this House to give an order to produce a report which is already before the House.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I generally have my own way of getting out of difficulties, and I am not prepared to get out of this one at the present time. The reason why I ask this motion to stand does not refer to the first part of it, which has been already complied with, but it is in regard to the appeal. I do not want to be open to the objection which might readily be raised by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona that I am not in order if I should have to ask that the decision be not sustained. It may not be necessary. It will depend upon the action of the hon. gentleman from Victoria, but as the notice of motion is connected with the report, and especially as this last portion refers on its face to an appeal which can be made only when the report is taken up, I think the motion is perfectly in order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then the hon. gentleman should strike out the first part of the motion.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It would not read right then.

The motion was agreed to.

MERCANTILE AGENCY REPORTS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN rose to Call the attention of parliament to the unsatisfactory and unreliable information which is given in the so-called yearly rating reports on the financial standing of business men and other persons in Canada, by the publishers of said reports.

That some means should be reached by which to prevent such liberties with people's names in financial matters without absolute and indisputable knowledge of the facts.

And that he will inquire if it is the intention of the government to introduce legislation on the lines above indicated.

He said : At this late stage of the session I do not expect an answer in the affirmative, and therefore the remarks that I have to make will be very very brief. The object is to bring this matter before parliament in order to get rid of the evil. It is a useless report and a publication which ought not to be allowed to circulate, for if it is of any value at all it ought to have authority to speak. I have consulted bankers and business men from different parts of Canada, and the invariable reply is that such reports are of little or no value, and even if there are names upon these commercial returns or reports that may possibly be correct. that the unreliable character of the reports generally renders them of little or no value. Hon. gentlemen know that these names are obtained in towns by parties who are supposed to mingle with people where the standing of different men is gossiped about, and that is the only source of information at present. For these reasons, and for the very important reason that authority on this subject ought to be of great value to business men, I think it is the duty of parliament to see that something in the way of legislation is procured for the purpose of furnishing reliable reports. It can be done. They could name officers in the different towns, cities, villages and other places, officers with whom they could report the standing of parties; such reports could be deposited by the party with an affidavit, and make them secret and confidential. If they could be secured they would be of some value. I do not know that it is necessary, to go into the matter more generally than this, as every hon. gentleman within my hearing knows exactly the situation ts well as I do and better. The prevailing opinion is that these reports are of no value at all and the sooner a good substantial one, having the authority of some responsible body will be procured and circulated amongst business men the better it will be. The matter is in the hands of the government, and if they think well of it at some future day they can devise some means to get rid of the existing evil.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. senator from Glengarry has called attention to what are known as commercial agencies. They have been established for considerably over half a century on this continent, and their ramifications extend to all parts of this continent and practically to the continent of Europe. They are sustained by the banks and business people, otherwise they could not exist. Whether the reports are in all cases reliable or not, one can give no opinion. Certain it is that they are made use of by every business man having any considerable business to do, and while not absolutely guided by them, they are always an assistance, so I have understood. In reference to the suggestion that the government should take charge of the commercial agency, I cannot agree with my hon. friend. That is a system of paternalism that no government would dare to undertake.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Revise the machinery.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh dear no—absolutely impossible for any government or corporation. It has only to be done by private enterprise and it is just worth so much as the parties attach value to it. Banks and commercial men all over the country use the commercial agencies, and adopt that as one of the means of finding out the credit of a customer.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—But they attach no value to the reports.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They may or may not. The subscriber to the agency pays a considerable sum annually for the information. If the information was of no value the concern would go down. I have always understood it is a profitable money-making industry. The concern in the United States has assumed gigantic proportions. The parties who established the principal agency in the United States have retired and are quite independent. I am not familiar with the agencies in Canada otherwise than simply knowing of their existence and knowing that at times when the credit of any man in business, whether in the banking business or commercial life or in any particular line is in question, those who desire to do business with him find it convenient to obtain the opinion of parties in the neighbourhood who have some knowledge of him as to his character and length of time in business, and whether he keeps his appointments, and so on. It is absolutely impossible for any government to take up a matter of that kind. No government could conduct an espionage into the private affairs of one of our citizens.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—That is what it is at present.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, no doubt about that. But it is not an official report. If I get a report of a man, and know him personally, and it does not agree with my personal view, I should reject the report; but to say that the government should interfere and create an organization that would do the work of a commercial agency would be assuming a piece of paternalism that I think no government would be justified in undertaking.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I would say in my opinion the question that the hon. gentleman from Glengarry has raised is an exceedingly important one. If any improvement could be made upon the manner in which information is furnished the commercial business men of this country, it would be a step in the right direction. I know in some cases favouritism is shown in these reports ; men are reported as being worth a certain amount in the way of property and assets, and when you come to make an investigation or these men become insolvent the reported assets dwindle into thin air. They never did exist at all in some cases. I quite sympathize with the views that have been expressed. I think some legislation could be had to prevent false representation and false reports being published, if it could be prevented. I certainly think that commercial agencies of the kind that we have had in existence in this country should at least be required to pay a certain sum annually for the privileges they enjoy, or that they assume to undertake themselves. I have known cases myself where commercial men have suffered very serious loss by the very unreliable reports sent in by agents. I know of a case in this very town not very long ago, that of a manufacturing institution in which I was interested myself, and the result was that when we came to probe the affairs of that institution to the bottom we found that the basis upon which the report of the commercial agency was issued was virtually nothing ; there were no justifiable grounds whatever upon which a report such as was issued should have been issued and which led the company into granting credit and shipping the goods. Now it is desirable in the interest of the business men of this country that a better condition of things should be secured. These people unquestionably have the power, in making the reports, to make or ruin a man. They employ agents in towns and cities and from those agents they obtain their reports. If that agent has a personal grudge against any business man in the village or town, he may, from personal spleen or bitterness make an adverse report with regard to that man's financial standing ; that he is as a man not worthy of credit.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Or not report him at all.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Or not report him at all. I say it is an unfortunate condition of affairs where that kind of thing occurs, and I have no doubt it does occur. I have followed these commercial agency reports for a great many years. I have no doubt that in many cases they do the best they can, but there should be some way of holding them responsible, where it is clear that absolutely false, erroneous and unreliable reports have been given. There should really be some way of correcting that kind of thing, because it is impossible for business men to travel from one town to another and gather information for themselves. They have to get it in some way and they get it from that agency and pay considerable fees for information, in some cases, absolutely and utterly unreliable. I admit that it largely depends upon the character, efficiency and energy of the agent in any state or town whether these reports are worth very much or very little; but I do think the government should introduce a Bill compelling these institutions to take out charters or pay an annual license, under an Act restricting or guiding them in the discharge of their duty; there should be some provision that when untruthful and unreliable returns are made and the public lose because of these unreliable reports, these organizations should be held responsible. Serious wrongs have occurred because of unreliable mercantile agency reports and it will be a good thing to have a change.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—It certainly would be highly desirable if each of us could guarantee the other and we would have absolute security for everything we do ; but just so long as this world lasts I am afraid we shall never arrive at that condition of things. Men who do business will meet with losses in the future as they have done in the past, and I do not see why the incorporation of a mercantile agency would have any beneficial influence at all. In our own dealings with individuals we are sometimes mistaken. We sometimes extend credit on our judgment when that credit should not be extended, and similarly these mercantile agencies in giving their opinions—and I am sure they get the best opinions they can—also make mistakes and they will continue to make mistakes to the end of time. As to the government taking up this matter, and interfering with it in any way whatever, it would be a very improper thing for any government to do. A mercantile agency is a purely commercial venture on the part of individuals who form an organization whereby they obtain the best information they can as to the credit of the various business men and bankers throughout the entire country. The business man, or the banker who is guided absolutely by the agency, is not a good business man. It is simply an assistance. The man who wisely conducts his affairs will himself perhaps be a better judge as to the credit he is giving than these mercantile agents can possibly be. They ought in time at least to know their customers better than any mercantile agency, but a man doing a large business, extending over a large country, finds these reports of considerable assistance. First there is the directory or whatever you may call it which assists him in doing his business, and extending his credit, but it is merely an assistance, and if he desires to insure stability it cannot be more than an assistance. We all know that a bank, or any business institution, may be worth a great deal of money today, though it may be worth a small amount of money a few days or weeks hence. The world speculates, and will always speculate; and just so long as the world does speculate the condition of business men will change from day to day, and just so long as this changing condition exists, there can be no assurance of stability. As far as I am concerned, as a business man, I do not rely upon the agency reports except merely as an assistance. I do not think any business man in the country relies on them thoroughly; they simply accept them as a guide and nothing more.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—In regard to this matter, I have this to say as a suggestion. A case came under our notice in Montreal. It was with reference to S. Carsley and Co., probably the largest merchants of their kind in Canada. The commercial agent made application to Carsley and Co. for a subscription, and they declined to subscribe. The result was that this firm was practically blackmailed: that is they were not put on the list, and one had to call at the office to find out who Carsley and Co. were—though they are one of the largest drygoods institutions in Canada. The only recourse Carsley had was to sue for libel. I think the hon. gentleman from Glengarry (Mr. McMillan) has done good service in drawing the attention of the government to this matter and instead of allowing a person who is thus attacked by a commercial agency a civil remedy only, the agency should be brought within the provisions of the Criminal Code. Under these circumstances the discussion raised by the hon. gentleman from Glengarry, and endorsed by the hon. gentleman from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) and also by Senator Edwards practically because he did not believe they were reliable, when a commercial agency publishes reports that are not reliable and thereby injuring the credit of a business man. that company should be brought not only within the reach of the civil law but also be rendered liable to criminal prosecution.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are they not now ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No.

SOLICITOR GENERAL'S UTTERANCES IN ENGLAND.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to a paragraph in an associated press despatch wired from London. It appears in the 'Globe' and other papers of yesterday, purporting to be a report of a speech made by the Solicitor General in England. and reads as follows :

> Hon. Mr. Lemieux, Solicitor-general of Canada, speaking at the Willesden Liberal Association, said that Canada had given the motherland a preference and was ready to continue it without asking any return, as Canadians were not going to put up their loyalty for sale. They should apply to the present position of the colonies and the empire the old axiom, 'Let well enough alone.' Quebec was loyal, happy and satisfied to live under the British flag, but if they wished to tighten the tie they would break it. The relations to-day between Canada and the motherland were very friendly, but if they tried to embalm such relations on the statute-books they might be found in the statute-books, but not in the heart.

I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State whether these are the sentiments of the government. and if the government justify speeches of this character by one who, though not of the cabinet, is certainly one of the government. The statement made that we intend to continue the preference without asking any return, does not comport with the statement made by the Finance Minister in his budget speech. He gave a very clear intimation then, that unless some concessions were made the preference would be withdrawn. Then I should like to know why we should have this constant reference to the loyalty of Quebec ? Who doubts the loyalty of Quebec ? Is it necessary for a member of the government to go to England and proclaim the loyalty of any particular section of this country ? I have yet to learn that any one has doubted the loyalty to the Crown of Quebec or of any other portion of this Dominion. There may be a few individuals who would like to sever the tie that binds us to the mother country, but they are very few, in my opinion, and very far between. He goes on to say :

> Quebec was loyal, happy and satisfied to live under the British flag, but if they wished to tighten the tie they would break it.

He says that if you attempt to tighten that tie or bring the interests of the mother country more in unison with those of her children at a distance, that you will break that tie. I should like to know from the hon. Secretary of State whether the whole power of breaking that tie rests with him and his colleagues, or whether all his colleagues think alike on this question ? There are many in this country, and in Quebec, who do not entertain the views Mr. Lemieux holds in this matter, and when he speaks for any one particular province on a great question of this kind I do not think questions of such vast importance should be confined to any particular province. I should consider that if an Ontario man went abroad and spoke in that manner about Ontario, ignoring the whole of the rest of the Dominion, that it would be a consummate piece of impertinence on his part, and would not be tolerated or justified by any one. He says further :

> But if they tried to embalm such relations on the statute-books they might be found in the statute-books, but not in the heart.

There might be a few individuals who hold that view, but I take it that the vast majority of the people of this country hold entirely different views, and this gentleman had no right, being a member of the government, to utter such sentiments at any meeting in England or anywhere else. If he had spoken for himself individually I do not know that I should have any complaint to make, but he speaks for the whole province of Quebec, and I may express very grave doubts whether the whole of the province of Quebec hold such views. There may be individuals in Quebec and there may be individuals in other provinces who would agree with these sentiments, but my impression is that the vast majority of the people of Quebec, like the vast majority of the people of the Dominion, entertain no such views as have been uttered by this gentleman. I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State whether he considers this gentleman justified in uttering sentiments of this character at a public meeting ? If the hon. gentleman will read the reports and articles in other journals from a special correspondent he will see that such expressions as these will be seized upon by those who are opposing the extension of preferential trade to this country as an evidence that the people of Canada—and particularly the people of Quebec—are opposed altogether to any further action being taken in England, upon this very important question. Surely our loyalty is not to be impugned if we ask the British government to give us better concessions in the market of England than we have to-day, in consideration that we give them certain concessions. The hon. premier we know, before the elections, gave utterance to very strong sentiments upon this question.

He spoke of the great advantages that were to accrue to this country from the concessions which are not now enjoyed by the Canadian people and by other colonies in the home market. It is only a few months ago since the Finance Minister declared in the House of Commons what the English people might expect unless they were prepared to extend better trade relations in the future than they have done in the past. Such sentiments are vicious and likely to lead to a great deal of harm. They are diametrically opposed to the sentiments uttered by members of the government of which he is a member. I do not know whether the attention of the government has been called to this or not, but as long as the government govern by departments we may take it for granted that the hon. Secretary of State will only speak for himself, as he did when he ordered that no report should be made on the subject of the Treadgold concession. If he has received the same castigation from his chief, he will have to accept it, and I shall be very glad to know that the premier and Minister of Justice repudiate the sentiments such as those that have been uttered by one of their colleagues. Such sentiments are likely to lead the people of Great Britain who are anti-colonial to take the view that while we were gracious enough to give them a preference without any return for it, if we insist upon asking them to concede any rights for ourselves the tie which binds us together is to be broken. I thought it well to give expression to views which are my own, and which I believe are the views of the great majority of the people of Canada, on the impropriety of a member of the government giving utterance to sentiments such as those which I have read.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no intention to discuss or express any opinion on the short cablegram that has been quoted. I am quite sure if we had the whole of Mr. Lemieux's address—because it was not limited to a dozen lines—we would find that it produced an echo in the breast of every Englishman who heard it and he would be reminded that it was to the people of lower Canada they were indebted for having to-day Canada the brightest gem in the empire. It is due to the people of lower Canada that the Dominion is now a part of the empire, and has stood by the empire when others were slow to show their feelings of loyalty. This government has given greater evidence of its attachment to the empire than the government of my hon. friend ever did. My hon. friend even now questions the value of the preference we have given to Great Britain: but Great Britain fully appreciates the action taken by this government. There was a time within the memory of many hon. gentlemen here when a high protective tariff kept out English goods. When the government of that day was remonstrated with, what was the answer? If they are not pleased with it so much the worse for British connection. That was the text of the Toronto 'Mail,' which was the organ of the hon. gentleman, and it comes with a very bad grace from the hon. gentleman to make the statements he has made with regard to the Liberal party. This government sent to South Africa 7,000 or 8,000 men at the public expense. When the hon. gentleman and his friends were in power, what reply did they make to the Foreign Minister of the day when a Canadian contingent was called for? If you pay the expenses of raising a volunteer force in Canada, we will send a detachment. That was the answer I got in full once in this chamber, and I remind my hon. friend that the history of those events is not forgotten by the Canadian people. The Liberal party have shown their desire to cement the empire much more earnestly and effectually than the governments that preceded them.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I am very glad to hear the sentiments expressed by the hon. Secretary of State with regard to the report which my hon. friend has drawn attention to. I earnestly hope that when the full report of Mr. Lemieux's speech is published in this country, some of the sentiments attributed to him will disappear. I confess I was amazed when I read the report in the 'Globe' and I am very glad that the government repudiate the assertions in that report because I have always had confidence in our friends in the province of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I repudiate nothing. I was quite satisfied that Mr. Lemieux spoke loyally and truthfully.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The Hon. Mr. Lemieux has again spoken in London, and I am surprised that the leader of the opposition did not ask the Secretary of State to answer that also. He made another speech yesterday which is reported in the press.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Read it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is in French. The hon. Secretary of State has told a historical truth, which this Dominion should not forget, of the loyalty of the French Canadian race, and he has stated a simple fact, that if Canada is a part of the empire to-day it is due to the province of Quebec. The hon. leader of the opposition has quoted the brief and garbled report which appears in the newspapers and has asked the government 'Does that represent their sentiments?' There is no need for such a question. Until the Liberal party shows a tendency to disloyalty to the empire, there is no necessity to raise such a question. It is creating a bad impression throughout the country. What is the opposition trying to do? Trying to discredit the government on account of the recall of Lord Dundonald? Why not take the British press and see what views are held in the mother country? The Westminster 'Gazette,' probably one of the strongest organs of public opinion in the empire, says: 'It is time the imperial government should recall Lord Dundonald by cablegram.' The St. James 'Gazette,' another important organ, says: 'They are making political capital out of his action,' and that this demonstration of adieu is done in the most inexcusable way and without tact. The Manchester 'Guardian' says that Lord Dundonald has forgotten——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. I want to know if we will be allowed to answer all this when there is nothing before the chair?

The SPEAKER—Attention having been called to the fact there is nothing before the chair, the discussion must end.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to ask a question of the leader of the opposition. I see that the Grand Master of the Orange Association has stated in Montreal that all the Orange lodges are Tory committees. I should like to know if they were organized under the directorship af the hon. gentleman when he was Grand Master.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Will the hon. gentleman ask that question of Mr. Emmerson?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Probably the Hon. Mr. Emmerson could answer the hon. gentleman, but I may tell him that the Grand Master of the Orange Association, Mr. Sproule, never made such a statement.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I saw it in the Montreal 'Gazette.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I saw it and read it two or three times, because I thought it an extraordinary statement. What Mr. Sproule did say was that they had been charged with being a political organization, and if such were the case he would like to introduce the order into the province of Quebec in order to reform political opinion, but he never made the statements attributed to him. The statements made by the hon. Secretary of State would leave the impression that I had attacked the loyalty of the province of Quebec. Now I made special provision for that; I said there was no necessity for a man constantly prating of that which nobody disputed, and yet the hon. gentleman, followed by a very humble follower in the rear benches, took occasion to say that Quebec was exceedingly loyal and the brightest gem in the British Crown. Who said it was not? The hon. gentleman gave the impression that I had made a statement which questioned the loyalty of the people of Quebec. I had made special reference to the fact that nobody in the Dominion, so far as I was aware, doubted the loyalty of the province of Quebec, and for that reason there was no necessity for continually prating about it any more than if the loyalty of the province of Ontario were being discussed. I will not go into the question of the dismissal of Lord Dundonald. I shall be quite ready to discuss that when it comes up, even with the talented gentleman who introduced the subject. But referring to the question about the Orange order, the hon. gentleman should read the speech thoroughly, and then apply to one of the ministers for information and he will tell him all about it.

SECOND READING.

Bill (80) An Act respecting the West Canadian Collieries, Limited.—(Hon. Mr. McHugh).

Bill (144) An Act to amend the Act of the present session respecting the Temiscouata Railway Company.—(Hon. Sir Alphonse Pelletier).

Bill (150) An Act to amend the Act of the present session intituled: An Act to incorporate the Thorold and Lake Erie Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Domville).

INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

The Order of the Day being called:

Consideration of the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to (Bill H) An Act further to amend the Insurance Act.—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Toronto.)

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the question is put—because last year we had a decision that points of order should be taken before a question is put—I want to raise a point of order on this Bill. Rule 66 provides as follows :

The committee to which a private Bill may have been referred shall report the same to the Senate in every case ; and when any material alteration has been made in the preamble of the Bill, such alteration and the reasons for the same are to be stated in the report.

The Bill which we have now before us has been changed in the title. When it was referred to the committee it was Bill (H) An Act further to amend the Insurance Act. It has been changed by the committee into a Bill called 'An Act respecting Canadian assessment policy-holders in the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company.' And the preamble also is different from the preamble of the Bill as read here the second time. I claim, therefore, that under rule 66, the Bill is not in order and should be referred back to committee so that the reasons could be stated for changing the preamble and title of the Bill.

The SPEAKER—This Bill was not referred as a private Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But it is a private Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is amending a public Act.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is certainly a private Bill.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I understand the Speaker has ruled that the motion is in order.

The SPEAKER—The Bill was referred to the committee as a public Bill ; it has been reported back with amendments, and the House can deal with it as it pleases.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY — The committee changed it to a private Bill.

The SPEAKER—The committee recommended changes in it which the House can deal with as it pleases.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—When this Bill was before the House on the second reading, I said it was my intention, with the leave of the House and with a view of meeting the wishes of members of the House, to move, on the Bill being read the second time, that it should be referred to the standing committee on Banking and Commerce, in order that all persons interested in the provisions of the proposed Bill might have an opportunity of being heard, and, in that way, full justice being done in the matter. The Bill accordingly was read the second time, was referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, and received from that committee the fullest consideration. We have the assurance on record here in our debates, from the chairman of the committee, of the ample, full and careful attention which the Bill received, not only at the hands of the Banking and Commerce Committee, but of the sub-committee to whom it had been referred. Further, the committee having reported the amendments which appeared in their reprint of the Bill, it is now before the House for consideration. I am aware that there are different views to be expressed by some members of the Senate with reference to the Bill and I feel that it is important that the discussion should not be in any way restricted. I have no interest whatever in seeing that the Bill takes this or any other special form, and I am exceedingly anxious that every view which it is desirable should be submitted may be presented. With that object in view I propose to ask that the Bill should now be referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and in that way every amendment that has been offered can be considered in detail. I therefore move :

That the order of the day be discharged and that the House immediately resolve itself into a committee of the whole for a consideration of Bill (H) An Act further to amend the Insurance Act' and the amendments reported by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, as set forth in the said Bill as reprinted by the said standing committee.

I hope this will meet with the approval of the House. Instead of being restricted to a consideration of the amendments, hon. gentlemen will be enabled to deal with the whole Bill, as they would with an ordinary public Bill in Committee of the Whole House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to another point of order. The Order of the Day is for the consideration of amendments made to this Bill by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. Now the hon. gentleman asks to put that order aside and wants us to go into a Committee of the Whole House. I do not think that is regular.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—The motion of the hon. member from Toronto is to refer to a Committee of the Whole House a Bill which was sent to the committee on Banking and Commerce, as a public Bill entitled, an Act further to amend the Insurance Act. The report is not an Act to amend the Insurance Act; the title of the Bill has been changed. It is now reported as an Act concerning policy-holders in the Mutual Reserve Fund Insurance Company of New York. That is a private Bill and there are certain rules which must be followed, but which have not been followed in this case. Can we pass a Bill which is now declared to be a private Bill when the rules applying to private Bills have not been complied with?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—How could a committee amend either the title to the Bill or any of the provisions? They have not done so. They have reported certain propositions for the consideration of this House. These propositions may or may not be entertained. They may be dealt with as this House thinks proper, but the Bill is certainly the same Bill (H) and with the same old title, and it is not until this House takes action upon it that either the title of the Bill can be changed or any of the amendments suggested can be incorporated in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If an hon. gentleman moves for the second reading of a Bill will he be entitled to ask that the Order of the Day be discharged, and that the Bill he read the third time? That is virtually what he is doing now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman from Toronto, in order to give greater freedom in debate, thought there would be a better opportunity for gentlemen to express themselves if the House was in committee. That is the only object he has, as I understand it. If I remember correctly, this Bill passed the second reading some time ago and was referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. It comes back to this House and it is for the House to say whether they accept the suggestions of the committee on Banking and Commerce, it is always within the control of the House, and it is merely a question whether it would be more convenient to have the discussion of the Bill in committee or before the House.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It was understood when this Bill got its second reading that the House was not at all committed to its principle. The promoter of the Bill asked that it should be sent to the committee for the purpose of being recast and given careful consideration. And the House in taking that action did not commit itself to the principle of the Bill at all. Now, if the House take the course that is proposed by the resolution, they virtually commit themselves to the principle of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The hon. Secretary of State may say 'no,' but I claim that if we consent to refer the Bill to a Committee of the Whole, we virtually concede the principle of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You can vote against it as often as you like.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—We are unquestionably dealing with one of the most important measures ever brought before the Senate. I would be safe within the mark if I said that seventy-five families out of every hundred in this country have some member or members of their household paying into some life insurance company. It is most desirable therefore that we should guard most carefully and zealously the interest of the public in all life insurance enactments. We should see that every company is required to live religiously up to the terms of its charter, and keep good faith with the public; and any company failing to do so, and resorting to means that cannot be commended or endorsed, which comes back to parliament for the purpose of getting new legislation, should have its record carefully scanned when asking for such legislation. By doing that we would read a lesson which would be useful to every life insurance company in Canada, whether a stock or an assessment company. We want to make the impression on all people who form these companies that they must live up to their contracts with the public and keep good faith with parliament. That they must operate within their legitimate sphere, if they seek more legislation. Now what is the fact with regard to this company? We have had a committee of this House sitting for three or four weeks investigating the condition of this company in Canada. That committee has not yet finished its work. It is gathering and compiling very valuable information, which every member of the Senate should read. If, after a careful perusal of the evidence taken by that committee, any one comes to the conclusion that it is his duty to support this Bill, I shall certainly concede to him the right that I claim for myself; but I do believe that if hon. gentlemen will carefully read that evidence, a majority of them will say that this company deserves to be treated by this House with a great deal of suspicion, and that if any legislation at all is granted, we should be exceedingly careful what liberties we grant them. I hold it is not courteous to this committee to proceed with the Bill until that investigation is completed. We are ignoring the work of a committee appointed by this chamber. Are we going in advance of the work the committee is doing to proceed with the consideration of this Bill without a final report of the committee? I earnestly hope that this chamber will not discredit itself by taking a course of that kind.

Give that committee full and fair opportunity to complete their work, and after they have done that, the whole information and all the evidence that has been adduced, will be before the House, and they can then proceed intelligently, after a thorough perusal of that evidence which has been placed before that committee from both sides. I think that would be the proper course. There is another point to which I wish to draw attention. I have sent out several copies of this Bill to experts throughout the Dominion, members of insurance companies, asking them to give it their personal consideration, and make such amendment or improvement in the clauses of the Bill as they would consider desirable in the interests of the policy-holders, and to return the Bill when they are through with it. I have not had time yet, to receive from the experts any of those returns, which I hope soon to get. I should like to have in my possession the opinion of experts of this country with regard to the provisions of this Bill. I should like to know whether the views that they entertain with regard to its peculiarities are in accordance with the views I myself hold, or whether they differ from me. I shall be very glad indeed if they should come to the conclusion that the Bill is one in the interest of the policy-holders—that it is a good Bill. We only want here—at least that is my opinion, and I am sure it is the opinion of every senator in this room—to guard the best interests of the policy-holders. That is what we should do above everything else. The officers of the company can take care of themselves. They have been through the mill pretty severely. They have gone through an investigation in the state of New York, and in several other states, and through all those investigations there has been a considerable amount of discreditable conduct proved against those officers: still they appear to hold on to office, and to remain at the head of that institution. I have in my hand a report that is published by the state of New York, that was taken before Cyrus F. Payn, the insurance inspector of that state. I have read it over carefully, and I would recommend every member of this House to read that publication. It can be obtained in the Library. In that state after carefully holding an investigation into the conduct, transactions and manœuvres of that particular company, he comes out and condemns in very pointed terms some of their methods. He points out very clearly that some methods adopted by that company cannot possibly be defended. That is their record in the state in which they had their head office, and we know that throughout other states they have been precluded from doing business altogether, yet they come to Canada, promoting a Bill now before this House for the purpose of clothing them in a new garb, giving them virtually a new license, putting them in a position that they can go back to the people of Canada and say 'We have turned over a new leaf; we will bury the past. We will let what is bad go, and begin now anew.' The question is whether it is wise, with all the evidence that was taken before the committee of this House, with all the evidence that has been taken before the state inspector of New York, and with other evidence at the back of that, of the unsavory record of this insurance company, that we should clothe these people in a new garb, and permit them to continue in business in Canada. Some senators might ask me—and it would be a very reasonable question, what would you do with the interests of the poor policy-holders? Well, I would say that in my humble opinion, after a careful study of this Bill, it would be very much better to allow the New York Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association to go into liquidation, and pay the policy-holders in Canada their percentage of the fund that is yet in the hands of the government, for if it is only a mite it is better than nothing at all later on. I contend that the basis laid down by this Bill, and under which they propose to go on and do business, is a fallacious basis. They cannot possibly succeed upon it, and cannot put up a reserve of that substantial character that would warrant the people of this country in believing that they could meet their obligations; and apart from that, it is not desirable in the interests of the policy-holders. What has been the position of the policy-holders in this case? First take the class that has a right to continue the assessments. That is the first class dealt with in the provisions of the Bill. They are allowed, if they choose, to still continue the assessment system. The company take the assessments they are paid since the commencement of their policy up to the present time. They calculate what amount of insurance that would insure for them in an old line company, and they continue them for that amount of insurance, with a proportionate yearly payment, for the remainder of their lives. They are allowed to keep on paying a yearly sum, and, on their death, they promise them that they will pay the amount fixed as the amount they are entitled to hold, as an insurance policy. In addition to that, they have to submit to a loading of five per cent to cover expenses, and, in addition to that, they have to submit to an assessment to enable the company to put up its reserve so that they can get their license from the Dominion government under the new system. What would be the position of a policy-holder—say that he is a man 45 to 50 years old, in a healthy condition? He can go before any doctor, and pass an examination and in doing so, he gets a certificate of health, and he can step across the road to a responsible company which has a respectable surplus, a good responsible rest, and he can secure a policy for the amount that is there stipulated that he has to pay in year by year for the remainder of his life. He can do that, and he is not subjected to any five per cent for expenses, and not subjected to the sum that is charged for the purpose of producing the rest, to enable them to make the deposit of their reserve. Take the second class, the man who has been a policy-holder, say for a number of years. Assume that it is a $2,000 policy. He has been paying on it, perhaps for 10 years. At the end of the 10 years, which is to say now, the company come to him, and say 'We have been carrying insurance too cheap for you. You have been getting it for less than what you should have paid, and would pay to ordinary life companies. Now we ask you to do one of two things. You will either consent to an impairment of your policy to a sum for which you could have got insurance in an old line company, and to pay annually, a sum equal to the proportion of what you paid during the 10 years in which you held that policy, for the remainder of your life, and five per cent for expenses; and in addition to that, we will ask you to consent to a sum being charged up against your policy, proportionate to your fair share of what is necessary to produce the reserve that we are required to hold under the Insurance Act, in order to obtain our license to do business. That is the second class. The third class is composed of the men who hold say a policy of $2,000. The policy holder has paid for 10 years, and he decides to continue his policy at the same amount at which it has existed for the last 10 years. In order to enable him to do that, they say 'we have been carrying you for 10 years, for less than we should have carried you. We now ask you to contribute a sum in addition to the monthly assessment to which you were subjected for the last 10 years to bring you up to what you would have to pay in an ordinary standard life association, and in addition to that we want your policy made subject to a charge proportionate to the amount of your policy, in proportion to the entire amount of insurance out, so as to produce the necessary reserve, after giving you credit for your share of the $132,000, that is in the hands of the Dominion government. Now you have to comply with that, and after that, your yearly payment will be up to the sum that you would have to pay if you had entered an ordinary life company. That is the third class.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—At what age ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The sum is according to the age. There is another class they propose to revive, those that have held policies in the New York Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association that have not expired for more than 10 years. That would be looked upon at first glance, as a most magnanimous offer, the company purposing to revive all policies that have not lapsed for more than 10 years. I think when I get through I shall be able to show the hon. gentleman that they might have invited a revival of all policies from the day they started to do business down to the present day just as well. What are the terms upon which they revive lapsed policies ? First the man has to pay the years assessments he would have paid on that policy, with interest added for every year of the 10 years. He has got up now to the condition of things that as this includes policy-holders that have met their assessment, then he has to consent to an impairment of his policy to bring him in unison with the other company's. If he is not going to pay an increased amount, his policy has to be impaired so as to bring it down to a sum equal to the other policies, and if he wants to continue at the high rate he has to pay more.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I think the hon. gentleman is altogether mistaken.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I do not think there is any object in discussing a straw man. The question is, what this Bill is, and it is not at all what my hon. friend states.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I have put my own interpretation upon the Bill, and if I am in error, I shall be only too glad to be corrected, but my impression is that they will have to submit to an impairment, and will have to continue the annual payment after they have paid up the arrears for ten years, for the remainder of their lives, in order to secure the insurance that they have contracted for.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Please point that out in the Bill?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—We are not discussing the Bill. We are discussing whether we should go into committee.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The whole of the provisions of the Bill are before the House, I appeal to the chair, whether the motion to refer the matter to the Committee of the Whole involves a free discussion on the merits of the Bill ?

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—I beg to call attention to the point of order raised by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, and I should like to have a ruling on that question. Has the hon. gentleman the right to withdraw his motion and substitute a different motion ?

The SPEAKER—Which point of order raised by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona does the hon. gentleman refer to ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I shall deal with it now.

The SPEAKER—I propose to deal with it at present.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—My point was raised first.

The SPEAKER—I prefer to deal with it now.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—As the hon. Speaker prefers this course, I bow to his will.

The SPEAKER—I was just going to say that while it is unfortunate that a discussion of the principle of the Bill should come up on the motion to go into committee, still I do not think I should be justified in ruling the speech out of order. The hon. gentleman may now state his other point.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman has placed on the Orders of the Day a motion for the consideration of the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to this Bill. Without any notice at all, he sets aside that motion, and moves, that the House go into Committee of the Whole on the Bill. He has no right to do that. The Orders of the Day give us the routine of the business of this House, and we are bound by the Orders of the Day. I read from Bourinot on page 422 as follows :

It has been decided in the English Commons that a motion, even in reference to divisions of the House, can be taken out of its order only by universal consent.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I had no idea at all of inconveniencing members, and thought I was doing something that would probably meet their views, better than the other course, but if the hon. gentleman objects, there is no necessity to raise the point or order. If there is any objection, I am quite willing to withdraw the motion and proceed with the Bill as it appears in the order paper.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I may say that I am somewhat responsible for the course pursued in this matter.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I thought so.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Because I intimated that I proposed to suggest amendments to that Bill, but I can take the other course; I can give notice of motion for amendments on the third reading.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I ask leave to withdraw the motion I made a few minutes ago.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—An hon. gentleman of this House has spoken for some time upon this motion, and we were told definitely that when the 2nd reading was moved, so as to send the Bill to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, that it would not commit us to the principle of the Bill, and that the freest discussion could be had.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I think we should have an understanding in this matter, so that we shall know what we are doing. The hon. gentleman explained that it was for the convenience of the House that he suggested the Committee of the Whole, so that hon. members could discuss the Bill clause by clause. It was not for his own particular convenience, but for the convenience of every hon. member of this House, it being a more convenient way to discuss it than the course he suggests now of moving the adoption of the report of the Committee on Banking and Commerce. With all due regard to my hon. friend, I do think it will afford a very much better opportunity for the House to discuss a Bill of a highly technical character, in regard to which information may be desired by individual members in regard to several of the clauses, in Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—That is not adopting the principle of the Bill. The Bill might be rejected, if we had not proceeded to that stage.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—If the principle of the Bill is not adopted in the Committee of the Whole, we can move that the committee rise, and that kills the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Those who are opposed to the principle of the Bill, instead of voting concurrence in the amendment, could move that the amendments be concurred in this day six months, and if that were carried, it would kill the Bill.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER—If the House is against the principle of the Bill, it ought to decide against it now, and not waste time. The principle of the Bill is discussed on the second reading and not in Committee of the Whole. The Bill goes to Committee of the Whole to discuss the different clauses of it. But what is the use of sending it to the Committee of the Whole, where members may speak six times on every clause, and you can have a long discussion, where you are against the principle of the Bill. I think the hon. gentleman from Wellington is quite right.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I have no desire to interrupt the very able discussion which has been proceeding. It is all pertinent to the question before the House, but as objection has been taken, and the hon. gentleman claims I have no right to make this motion except by unanimous consent, I therefore ask to withdraw it, and will proceed with the motion on the order paper.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman cannot withdraw his motion.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I suggest that the point of order of the hon. gentleman cannot be maintained.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He may withdraw with the unanimous consent of the House.

The SPEAKER—If the hon. gentleman's objection is maintained, that disposes of the original motion.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Let us get right to the question of order. I beg to withdraw my motion.

The SPEAKER—I am disposed to agree with the hon. gentleman from Stadacona. In fact I said to the hon. gentleman from Toronto that I thought possibly he should have given notice of this motion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I have no objection, if the House is willing to allow it, to withdraw my objection, so as to permit the Bill to go to committee.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—There are other gentlemen who have taken the same objection.

The SPEAKER—Is it the pleasure of the House to go into committee on this measure or take up the motion as it appears on the order paper? The hon. gentleman from Stadacona raised a question of order; he now withdraws that, and says he is willing that the House should go into Committee of the Whole on it. Is that the feeling of the House?

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—He cannot withdraw.

The SPEAKER—An hon. gentleman who makes a technical objection has a right to withdraw.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Several hon. gentlemen persist in the objection.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Then I move concurrence in the report of the committee.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I am very sorry that I was interrupted in the remarks I was making with regard to the Bill, but I hope that the change which is being made in the report before the House will give me greater latitude than I had before, because the amendments suggested by the committee are fully under discussion. Now, with regard to the point which I was drawing the attention of the House to, as to the matter of those who had held policies up to ten years before, the terms on which they would be taken back. I tried to the best of my ability to point out the conditions on which those people would be reinstated, and if, in my remarks, I have overdrawn any points, I should be very glad to be shown where I am wrong; but I contend the terms on which they purpose taking back those policyholders are from a policy-holders' standpoint, no temptation whatever. There is nothing in it that would induce any intelligent man to ask reinstatement in a company whose record has been so unsavory, and whose irresponsibility has been exposed. It is the old story, 'Will you walk into my parlour.' They come under the terms laid down by the company, they will be subjected to conditions and extortions and impairments of policies, and the result will be, that they could have secured life insurance in straight line companies for less, or at least as little as in this company with the record of their not being responsible as the old line companies are. If the committee had pressed upon Mr. Eldridge to go back to the date when the company first started business and reinstate every man that ever held a policy on the same terms, I have not the slightest doubt he would do it, simply because they would have to pay up first the arrears with interest on all arrears until the time they are reinstated, then consent to a reduction proportionate to the reduction in the other classes, and pay an annual payment for all time proportionate to what they would have to pay in an old line company. What particular temptation is it to any man to seek to be reinstated in a company of that kind? The declared object of the Bill is to give the company power to issue old line business, that is, the same as an old line company. Now if you read over the preamble of that Bill you will come to the conclusion that is what the company is seeking. If it is not so, I should like the hon. senator from Montreal to point out where I am wrong. But the company already have that power, and have enjoyed it since 1899. They can put every policy-holder into that position without any legislation whatever. Why not put in the preamble of the Bill that that is what they are seeking? That statement cannot be challenged. They have tried to get all the policy-holders to go into that business, but although they have urged, pressed and coaxed them, they have got only twenty-five per cent agree to the change. What will this Bill do with the remaining seventy-five per cent? This Bill will present the matter in a different light, in this way—you have either to consent, by the provisions of this Bill, to the impairment of your policy and payment in addition to what you have paid during the years it has been in existence, and a payment proportionate to the sum to be paid for the balance of your life, or if you want to maintain your policy at what it was originally, you have first to pay up an increased assessment, until you come up to the present date, and then you have to pay a proportionate sum for the years to come to what you paid in assessments during the years past, and what you have paid in a lump sum to make the sum up to the price you would have to pay if you went to an old line company. In addition to that, you have to subject your policy to assume your proportionate share of what is necessary for the company to hold their reserve, and you have to pay five per cent of your yearly payment for the purpose of meeting expenses. When that proposition is presented to a policy-holder, if he is a man that can pass a doctor's examination, it is better for him to take insurance elsewhere. It is no relief, no advantage to the policy-holder. Not only that, he does not get any share of the $152,000 that is now in the Dominion treasury. He is simply promised credit on his policy for that amount of money. He is simply promised that they will give him credit for a certain amount, and then his policy will be carried on for the balance of the amount until such time as he dies; but if the company have no money to pay the policy when it has matured, he not only loses his proportion of the $152,000 which he is entitled to get now, he loses all he pays in addition to that, to keep it in force during the years of his life, and when he dies the whole is gone, his percentage of the $152,000 is gone and also the money he pays. There is nothing in it at all for the policy-holders. If you were dealing with a company that had a respectable record, and had met financial disaster through fire or loss of property and not by extravagance, and they came to parliament for relief for their policy-holders, I would be disposed to do the very best I could for them; but here is a company that has in the most extravagant manner squandered the resources of that company. It is proved to-day that in one case, through the reckless conduct of an agent called Moss, the company lost a sum amounting to $999,000, money of the policy-holders which should be in the hands of the company now to meet maturing covenants.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—When the hon. gentleman talks of $999,000 having been squandered, he is under a misapprehension. That is the amount which has been spent in Canada for the nineteen years that the company has been carrying on business in the Dominion. It is the total amount of agents' expenses in Canada.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—My hon. friend undertook to correct me a few moments ago. I will attempt, in my simplicity, to read him a lesson now. He was paying very poor attention to the evidence given before the committee to-day if he has come to the conclusion which he has expressed; because the evidence goes clearly to prove that Mr. Moss, who was general agent over all the other agents of the company in the United States, eventually wound up with a sum of $999,000, virtually that he had received and was supposed to have scattered among agents, but it had never been returned to the company or accounted for. More than that they say that those agents, amongst whom the money was scattered, will have to submit to reductions year after year, until such time as that money is refunded. Does anybody who knows anything about insurance agents believe that if their account is covered by a blanket debt which will keep them from getting commissions for fifteen to twenty years, that they will earn very large commissions? An agent, under such circumstances, is working for a dead dog, and above all men in the world insurance agents do not like to do that. I say it shows recklessness in the manner in which that company has handled its affairs. Another thing is the course pursued by Mr. Burnham, the president of the company last year. In the interest of the company an effort was made to remove him from his place. A number of shareholders took action. They met in New York and gathered such force and influence that they demanded from Mr. Burnham, if they did not impeach him as president of that company and have him arrested or prosecuted for malfeasance in office that he would resign at the close of the year. He agreed to do that. He entered into a covenant that if they would drop the prosecution he would not only resign at the end of the year, but would pay all costs incurred in connection with the investigation. He paid $15,000 costs out of the reserve of the policy-holders to get rid of that action, and to hold his place peaceably to the 1st of January; but he did not resign. He secured his re-election, and he is president to-day, notwithstanding the fact that the New York Inspector of Insurance has pronounced in the plainest terms on the recklessness and extravagance of this particular company. I would commend his report to the hon. gentleman from Montreal for his perusal, because I believe him to be a conscientious, honourable man. If he comes to the conclusion, after reading the report of that investigation, that the company is entitled to any consideration at the hands of this House, I will consent to go on with this Bill, otherwise I shall not consent until we have threshed out the whole merits of this company and the committee has completed its work.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—What report does the hon. member refer to?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The report of the Inspector of Insurance for the state of New York, published in 1899. The hon. gentleman will get it in the library. There are some very innocent-looking clauses in this Bill. One of them provides that the passage of this Bill shall in no way interfere with any action pending at the present time. We all know that there is an action pending before the Privy Council. That action was brought for the purpose of compelling the company to return to a gentleman named Foster the amount of money he has paid in, which he claims was got from him under false pretenses. He said the terms, conditions and representations made at the time he had agreed to become a policy-holder in the company were false and misleading, and he has brought an action to secure the return of his money. He succeeded in the first court; the company appealed and he succeeded again, and the case is now before the Lords in the Privy Council. If he succeeds there they will have to return him his money. If this Bill passes in its present shape, it will shut out every man from bringing an action of the same kind, because it provides that it shall only affect cases that are now pending. I contend that is an exceedingly important provision. We have the statement from Mr. Eldridge that the assessment business in Canada does not stand alone, that all the assessment business in the United States and Canada is virtually put into one fund, and out of that the policies are paid. If under the provision that is now proposed to be made, the amount of money that is held in the New York end of the business is not available, under the new system all the assets that the company will have in the hands of the government here will be $152,000, and that will apply to both classes. Under the present condition, we have, as has been stated, a deposit in Canada of something like $228,000. Of that $152,000 is proposed to be appropriated as a sum to be contributed towards the reserve that is to be kept on behalf of the two classes that I have referred to, that is the class that consents to the impairment of the policy and the class that consents to pay up an increased sum to maintain the policy as it is. The $152,000 is there, and cannot be removed, at least under present conditions, but you will notice another very simple clause in this Bill, which I also think is worthy of attention. That clause is that as long as the company continues to do no new business, that money cannot be withdrawn. When they cease to do new business in Canada, what then? I would conclude, they would have a right to withdraw the money. If this Bill goes through at all, we want to see it amended, so that that money must remain as long as there is a policy in Canada standing against the company, up to the amount deposited with the government.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—The hon. gentleman should adjourn the debate.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, we must proceed with it now, because it must go to the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Out of respect for itself, this House should demand that the evidence be submitted in order that we may proceed intelligently. While the committee is sitting, and eliciting valuable evidence, we should postpone action in this House. The clauses of the Bill should not be proceeded with until that committee has had an opportunity of reporting, and it is unfair for the hon. Secretary of State to try and shackle the investigation. He took the stand in the first place, of opposing the appointment of a committee. He said it was a shame.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—He said it would do no good.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I appeal to the country to say whether it is doing good or not. I am willing that every policy-holder should read the evidence and decide for himself. I am willing to be judged by the people of Canada to say whether the money spent on that committee, has not been well spent in the interest of the policy-holders.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The hon. Secretary of State has not done credit to himself in the stand he has taken.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not propose to be lectured by the hon. gentleman. If I had done my duty, I would have had that committee dismissed long ago, as a disgrace to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I say, when the House decided by a majority to appoint that committee, it should have an opportunity to perform its work decently, and report to the House. With the evidence before the House, they could go on with the Bill or not as they please. I move the adjournment of the debate.

The SPEAKER—It being six o'clock, I now leave the chair.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—But the adjournment of the debate has been moved.

The SPEAKER—It is six o'clock, I leave the chair.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—When the House rose at six o'clock, I was endeavouring to present some criticisms regarding the Bill which is now under consideration. I was pointing out the effect of some of the clauses which will be brought into force by the passage of the Bill. I have shown that if the Bill becomes law, as it is now drawn, at least two things will be accomplished on the part of the company: First, the moment they give the government notice that they are not undertaking new business in Canada, as provided in clause 5, they will be able to draw from the Receiver General all the money in his hands, except what is held under their license for straight line business, that they have taken since 1899. They will be able to draw at least $100,000 of that money. The clause reads as follows:

5. After the date of the said license the company shall be subject to make deposit only as provided in sections 7 to 11, both inclusive, of The Insurance Act, and all the assets in Canada of the company in respect of the said assessment policies shall be applicable to all the insurance liabilities of the company in Canada; provided that the deposits of the company with the Receiver General of Canada shall not be reduced below the amount at the date of the said license so long as the company is undertaking in Canada new contracts of insurance.

Now, the very moment that they cancel the undertaking of new contracts, they notify the government that they have ceased and ask the Receiver General to hand over a cheque for every dollar except the money that is held under the provisions of their charter of 1899. That is one feature of the Bill that is decidedly objectionable. Now, the last clause of the Bill to which I drew attention is as follows:

Nothing in this Act shall affect any suit, action, or other proceeding now pending in respect of any assessment policy.

What will be the interpretation of that clause? I have referred to the case of Mr. Foster. He has brought action for a return of the moneys paid upon his policy on the ground that it was through misrepresentation and fraud that he was coaxed into insuring with the Mutual Reserve Fund Association. He has succeeded in the first court and in appeal, and the case is now before the Lords of the Privy Council in England. The witness Eldridge, who is before the committee, stated that he had his passage taken to go home to London to fight that case.

He told us in the committee that President Burnham had to go and take his place. That appeal is now coming up, and if it should go against them, what is going to be the result? What will be the effect of that decision? The effect of that decision will be that every man that has been led into effecting insurance fraudulently by representations that are untrue, and cannot be substantiated in court, who brings an action to recover his money on the ground that it was taken from him by misrepresentation, will be likely to succeed. There is a decision of the Privy Council in the Foster case, that he has a right to succeed. Now, what is this innocent little clause No. 7? It has been read half a dozen times, but I shall read it again. It is as follows:

> Nothing in this Act shall affect any suit, action, or other proceeding now pending in respect of any assessment policy.

That is the clause. It says, 'now pending.' If it is not commenced, it is out of court. Everything is out of court except Mr. Foster's action. I said a moment ago that the object of this Bill is not to give the company power to do business on old policy lines in Canada. They have that power now. They have had it since 1899. It does not give them one tittle of power more than they had. They can place every assessment policy-holder on the old line business in accordance with the system adopted by old line companies. Of course, they have tried to force policy-holders into taking that course. They have only succeeded with 25 per cent. There is 75 per cent that they have not been able to get in. If this Bill is passed they will be able to take them all in. What will be the choice? The choice by the Bill is that if you want to participate in any of the advantages, if you want to get a percentage of the $152,000 which is left in the hands of the Receiver General, if you want to participate in the division of that money, you have to take either one or the other of the alternatives. You have to submit to have your policy impaired, or you have to contribute an additional sum from year to year, to bring your contributions to the point that you would have had to pay on the old line company. When you have done that, this Bill provides that the company can load up the policies with a percentage of the money necessary to enable them to point out to the department, that they have reserved a sufficient fund to enable them to obtain their license. How are they going to do that? They ask for their license, and they say: 'We have $152,000 in cash in the hands of the Receiver General.' In addition to that, say that the business under the system they had in Canada would require the deposit to be $600,000, they would require $540,000. Well, they say to the Receiver General, 'We have not got it in money; we have not a dollar to deposit with you, but we will tell you what we are going to do. We are going to charge up to each policy-holder his percentage of that $450,000 as a mortgage against his policy for a specific purpose. What is it? In order to stand there as an asset of the company so that we can swear that we have a sufficient reserve, including the amount that is charged to each policy with the $150,000 deposited with you, to secure our license.' That is what they ask to do by this Bill. They do not put in a dollar themselves. Notwithstanding the enormous plundering that has taken place, they do not appear to have any money. If they have, they are not willing to put it in. They want the policy-holders to find the means of putting the institution on its feet, and in a position that it can do business over again. That is the position they ask the policy-holders to take. I have referred to the peculiar character of this company. I have no personal animosity against the New York Mutual Reserve; I simply have a feeling of disgust for a company that have extracted from the pockets of the people of this country the large amount of money that they have taken in nineteen years, and in the face of the record that they have got, in the face of the evidence of mismanagement and squandering, that is proved not merely here, but in the investigation in their own state, to have existed—in the face of all that, they have the brass to come to Canada and ask us to give them a new lease of life by the passage of this Bill. They have as much brass as one of the statues out here on Parliament Hill, or they would not dare to ask for a new lease of life. If this Bill is passed they will go over to the United States and say 'Gentlemen, you challenged the responsibility and the standing and the honesty and the business character of the New York Mutual Reserve. You tried to criticise us and injure us. We went to Canada. What did we do there? The Houses of parliament in Canada passed an Act placing the company in a position not only to continue business, but to extend their business with the people of that country. We have a new license from the Dominion of Canada, notwithstanding all the evidence of corruption, debauchery, and extravagance, that you claim to produce in the city of New York. The state of New York says it has characterized the history of this company. But the company will say, 'Look at what we have got from the parliament of Canada,' and they will herald it from one end of the state to the other, to show that the Canadians at least had confidence in it.' Well, I know that a great many policy-holders in Canada are sick and sorry they ever invested their money in that company. I have never met one who has not expressed to me his regret that he had cast his lot in with a company like the New York Mutual Reserve Life. I did say in the commencement of my address to-day, that we ought to be very careful of the legislation we give to life insurance companies. I care not whether they are assessment companies or stock companies, that come here, who are not able to present a clean sheet and a clean record. You should exact from these people proper conduct, if they are not in a position to present before a committee of this House, evidence that disasters have overtaken them for which they are not responsible, if they have come to them in a manner that they could not possibly avoid. Under those conditions we have a right to listen to them, and consider seriously what we should do in that case; but here is a company that has been most extravagantly handled. They have squandered $999,000 of the policy-holders' money. It is not my word I am giving to the House. When the committee which is now sitting presents their report, it will not only be proved by those that were criticising the company, that that money has actually been lost, but that admission will appear on oath by Mr. Eldridge himself. He admitted this afternoon, that Mr. Moss had drawn the money, that the company had handed it over to him, and the only way that they ever expected to obtain the return of that money, was through the commission that the agents will earn in years to come, and if the agents dwindle down in number, we may reach the last days of the world's history before that money is all returned. I know there is a feeling that if this Bill does not pass the policy-holders will get nothing. Just let me deal with that question shortly. What is there for the policy-holders now? There is $152,000 at least, in the hands of the Receiver General. What is there in the hands of the company outside of this? Simply the money that the policy-holders contribute themselves. If they go on, and put the money into the institution, judging from the past history of the company for nineteen years, they may expect to get 60 cents out of every dollar that they put into the company. That is all they have got for the last nineteen years—about 60 cents for every dollar they put in. What good is this remedy going to do the policy-holders? It is better for the policy-holders to take their dividends out of the $152,000 now, a mere mite, a mere nothing. Is it better to take that now and put the company into insolvency, or go on for ten or fifteen years more and only get 60 cents for every dollar which they put in? There is no money there except what is contributed by the policy-holders. It has no financial backbone. Mr. Eldridge says the policies have no surrender value at all. There is no money to the credit of the company. Unless the policy-holders provide the money themselves there is nothing for them. What is the limit for the policy-holders? There might be something in it for the man who has the positive assurance of his physician that he cannot live more than two or three years. His policy might mature, and the company might pay that risk in order to maintain their status and get the money from the rest; but there is no encouragement for the rest. No man of common sense will, after mature consideration, contribute one dollar to the company with the hope that he is going to get anything more out of it. There is a passage in sacred writ which comes to my mind very forcibly in considering this whole business, and it is that passage about a certain individual who started to travel from Jerusalem to Jericho. We know what was the result of his undertaking that journey. We know that he fell amongst thieves. We know that they stripped and wounded him. Now, are we going to render to the policy-holder of the Mutual Reserve the services of the good Samaritan? Are we going to heal up his wounds and clothe him? No, we are not. What are we doing by this Bill? We are clothing the man who did the robbing with a new suit of clothing—putting him in new robes. What are we saying to the man who got robbed? We say to him, 'We cannot do anything for you; go back to Jerusalem and when your sores are healed, start the journey to Jericho over again in the hope that the robbers won't treat you as badly next time as they did before.' This is virtually what we are saying to these people. We are saying to the policy-holders, 'Judging from the evidence before the committee, it is plain that they have robbed you; it is claimed they have taken your money; it is claimed they have bled you for insurance purposes, and they have paid you nothing. We are sorry, but we cannot do anything for you. The only thing we can do is, we are going to clothe the company in a new garb. We are going to dress them in better clothes than they wore before. Perhaps if you try them over again your last experience will not be as bad as the first.' That is virtually what we are saying by this Bill. I have stated that a very important investigation is going on in regard to this matter, and I hold that we should wait until the close of that investigation before we proceed further with this Bill. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. Mr. Bolduc, that the further consideration of this Bill be deferred until the committee of investigation have completed their inquiry and presented their final report.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE — I should have thought the hon. gentleman would have made another motion—a motion that before passing judgment upon the company we would wait until the evidence had been produced in defence. We have been sitting in committee for the last three or four weeks hearing evidence charging the company with all kinds of crimes, and it is only on Monday of this week that the company has been afforded an opportunity of entering on their defence, and as a member of the committee, who has followed the proceedings with the utmost care and attention, I must say that I am amazed at what I have heard from the hon. gentleman from Wellington. I am amazed at his appreciation of the Bill which is now before us, and I am amazed at the aspersions which he has undertaken to cast on the company, especially at this stage. I think it would be more becoming on the part of members of the Senate to give fair-play to these parties, whoever they may be; give them a chance of putting in their defence before passing judgment upon them. I will be able to show from the very evidence which has been brought up by the hon. gentleman from Wellington that he is mistaken with reference to the charges which have been made before the committee. But before calling attention to that branch of the question, I ask hon. gentlemen to bear with me for a few minutes while dealing with the Bill in a very summary way, and I call special attention to this very important fact which the hon. gentleman from Wellington has evidently lost sight of: Under our Canadian law it is the duty of the government to exact from any foreign company doing business in this country under the level premium system—that is, under a regular system—a deposit at all times with the government of Canada of an amount sufficient to cover fully the risks which have been taken, in order, should the company fail, that this money may be used for reinsuring every policy-holder with a solvent company. This has to be borne in mind, and starting from that consideration, if it was true that this company was not to be trusted, it would be an additional reason for me to facilitate their being brought under the regular system of insurance, in order to better protect the interests of all policy-holders. There are two classes of policy-holders, one under the assessment system to the amount of $8,000,000, which is still covered by policies in force, and to an amount of maybe $20,000,000 of lapsed policies, or more than $20,000,000; and the other class is the class of policy-holders under the regular system, or the level premium policy, which has been obtaining only since 1899.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Will the hon. gentleman answer this question? He said the amount of money in the hands of the government now is to be used for reinsurance in some other good company. Will he kindly explain what that means? I am at a loss to know. There are only $228,000 now in the hands of the government, and there are $8,000,000 of insurance in force against the company. The $228,000 will not go very far towards meeting the demand to be made of the company in regard to the $8,000,000. How is the $228,000 to be used in order to reinsure the policy-holders with some solvent company ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am thankful to the hon. gentleman for having interrupted me, because it will give me an opportunity of making myself better understood. What I have stated is, that under the insurance law it is the duty of the insurance inspector to see that all foreign companies doing business in Canada under the regular system of insurance—the level premium system—not the assessment premium system, but the level premium system, the system of insurance which this company, the Mutual Reserve, has been carrying on from 1899 to this date, be made to deposit with the government a guarantee to all policy-holders under that system. If the company was put in liquidation all the insurance effected from the 7th August, 1899, under the level premium system, would be fully protected, because the government would have in their hands in the $80,000 deposited, an amount sufficient to reinsure the policy-holders in a solvent company. But there is the other class of insurance which is not on the level premium insurance, but on the assessment plan. It is the system which was carried on by this company from 1885 to 1899, and under that system there is in the hands of the government an amount of $228,000, an amount which would be far from sufficient to reinsure that class of policy-holders with a solvent company, and therefore it is important to pass the Bill, even if it is not perfect—and for my part I do not believe it is perfect—and I propose to suggest four or five amendments. By all means let us put our heads together and try to provide relief for this class of policy-holders, representing $8,000,000 now outstanding and $20,000,000 of lapsed policies, because their assessments became prohibitive, by putting that class of policy-holders also under the level premium system, so that the company will have to deposit with the Canadian government an amount sufficient to fully guarantee them in the future against all possible contingencies, or mismanagement on the part of the company. I repeat that our law in Canada is such that all Canadian policy-holders in a United States company have the double guarantee. They have their recourse against all the assets of the company, if it is a United States company or a British company, concurrently with all policy-holders in the United States or in England, or in any foreign country, but they have besides a special deposit which is a special guarantee to them alone, which by itself is a complete and sufficient guarantee to cover entirely the whole risk of those Canadian policy-holders ; therefore I say whatever may be the management of that company, if they are placed under the level premium system, the moment the deposit is made we have fully protected all Canadian policy-holders against all possible bad management. If the hon. gentleman chose to read the Insurance Act that provision will be found in section 10 of the Act. Our law is excellent in that respect. I regret to have to take issue with the hon. gentleman from Wellington on this question. I have no doubt he is in perfect good faith, and I regret it the more because he is an old parliamentarian, and I know of his experience, I know of his industry, of his intelligence, and it would be much more agreeable to me if, instead of having to take issue with him, I could take the same course he does ; but I cannot do so after the attention I have given to both the Bill and the investigation. Let us see what the Bill with which we have to do is. The Bill is for this object : Instead of having two classes of policy-holders in this company as there are now, the class under the assessment system and the class under the level premium system since 1899, it is proposed to transfer them all to one class, the level premium system class, and it is proposed to do it on a basis fair to both themselves and the company, and in such a way as to guard against all future contingencies. For the purpose, three different options are given in the Bill as reported by the Committee on Banking and Commerce. Under these three different options, the policy-holders will not be called upon to pay any arrears, as the hon. gentleman from Wellington has stated in his remarks. Nothing of the kind. The hon. gentleman from Wellington will not find anything of the kind in the Bill if he pays serious attention to it.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—What class is my hon. friend dealing with ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The Bill is dealing only with one class. I repeat it. That insurance company has been carrying on business with two classes under two different systems, the level premium system since 1899, and prior to 1899 under the assessment plan, and the Bill is dealing, not with the level premium policy-holders from 1899 to this date; they are fully protected by the law to which I have called attention. The Bill is dealing exclusively with the one class of policy-holders under the assessment plan.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I made no reference whatever to the class that have come in since 1899.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The Bill is dealing only with that class of policy-holders under the assessment plan, and proposes to transfer them from the assessment plan to the level premium plan, and how is it to be done? It is to be done on the basis of the British insurance tables. Given an amount of $5,000 on the basis of these British tables it will have to be ascertained what amount of insurance the insured will be entitled to. He will have the option, either at the age to which he has attained at the time the license will be issued or pratically at the passing of the Bill, or, if he chooses at the age at which he entered the company. If he selects the age when he entered the company, then his policy will be subject to a lien, and he will have to pay on the amount of that lien interest at 4½ per cent, while he is insured with this company. That is the second option. Then if he chooses the first option he will not be charged with any lien of the kind, but his premium will be based on his attained age at the time of the issue of the license. He has a third option, that of the regular level premium as he would have in any other company. I will be asked what are the advantages that he is getting. The advantages are these; as far as these policy-holders who have protected their policies to this day are concerned, the main advantages that they will receive will be to have their share in $152,000 of the deposit in the hands of the Canadian government being applied either to the premium, in reduction of the lien, if he chooses that option, or in reduction of the premium, if he chooses the other option, and they will have the much more valuable privilege of remaining insured with a solvent company under the regular system after they have attained an age which might be prohibitive for a great number of them, when their health is impaired to such an extent that they would not be received, a large number of them, in any other company. It is perfectly evident that with the proportion of lapses that there has been in this company, reducing the business from some $40,000,000 to $8,000,000 that the cream of their business has disappeared and has gone to other companies; therefore there remains with this company only the bad risks. There remain parties who would not be accepted in any other company on the level premium system, and it is an immense advantage, in my opinion, to be fully protected under the level premium system, guaranteed by a proper deposit, without even having to furnish the usual medical certificates. When this Bill came before the House for the first time hon. gentlemen will remember that I suggested that the Senate could protect, and that it would be the duty of the Senate to protect, not only the policy-holders who have paid their insurance up to this date, but that we should devise means of protecting the $20,000,000 of policy-holders who have allowed their policies to lapse, because they were not able to respond to the high assessments which have been made from 1895 to this date. I was glad to see that when the Banking and Commerce Committee brought in this Bill, they had found means to protect them, and that this very Bill provides for the revival of those policies that lapsed during the ten years previous to the passing of this legislation. Now, hon. gentlemen, will it not be a great advantage for these policy-holders? The hon. member from Wellington (Hon. Mr. McMullen) laughs.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Yes, and I shall show why I laugh.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I know why the hon. gentleman laughs. He laughs because he understands the Bill as obliging these policy-holders to pay the arrears. That is what he has been arguing. If the hon. member was not mistaken in that, I would side with him, because it would be no advantage at all. But there is nothing of the kind, and the hon. gentleman cannot find a word in the Bill to that effect. They will be exactly on a par with the other policy-holders who have protected their policies, with the single exception, that they will not participate in the $152,000 which is in the hands of the government, and which is appropriated exclusively by the Bill for those who have protected their policies to this day. It is very proper, because those who have allowed their policies to lapse have no right to that deposit, and it is fair that those who have protected their policies should have the full benefit of that amount; otherwise, in every respect, they will have the same three options as the others, and as I propose, when the time comes, possibly an additional option.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Would the hon. gentleman kindly explain what will be the position of these reinstated policy-holders as to the amount that they will be entitled to get in the way of insurance?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Their position will be the same exactly as those who have protected their policies, with the single difference in clause (h) of the Bill, which reads as follows:

(h.) The company shall revive, for the amount to be computed as in this section provided, any assessment policy which has lapsed for non-payment of premium within the ten years immediately preceding the passing of this Act, upon the holder making application therefor within ninety days after the date of the said license and within the said time delivering to the company a certificate signed by such holder in the form required by the company of his continued good health: Provided that such policy-holder shall not be entitled to share in the dividend provided by paragraph (d) of this section.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—My hon. friend does not mean to convey to this House the idea that no special consideration will be given to those who have paid the annual assessments on their policies for the last ten years, when compared with those who allowed their policies to lapse, ten years ago? Now, he says they will be put on the same ground: does my hon. friend intend to convey that idea?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If the hon. member had taken the trouble to follow my reading he would have found the answer in the last words I read: 'Provided that such policy-holders shall not be entitled to share in the dividend provided by paragraph (d) of this section. Paragraph (d) of this section deals with the $152,000. I have stated twice at least that the only difference between those policy-holders who have allowed their policies to lapse, and the others, is, that they will not be allowed to participate in the $152,000, which will enure to the exclusive benefit of those who have protected their policies, and which is but fair.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Suppose a man had taken out a policy, and it was in existence for five years, upon which he paid an assessment of twenty dollars a year: that would be one hundred dollars. He allowed that policy to drop ten years ago. Now, all he paid was one hundred dollars. Another man took out a policy the same date, and he has paid his assessments, twenty dollars a year, for fifteen years: that would be three hundred dollars. The one man has only paid one hundred dollars, while the other has paid three hundred dollars; are they both to be placed on the same basis, as to the amount that they will receive in the way of insurance, save and except that the man who has continued to pay his assessments will participate in the $152,000, and the man that has not paid will not. Will both get a policy now, or will it be maintained at $1,000?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If they are of the same age, they will be entitled to have the same policy, paying the same premium. The thing is obvious? The one who has continued paying his policy, has had the benefit of being insured. If he had died during the ten years, he, having protected his policy by paying the assessment, his heirs would have been entitled to recover, whereas the one who discontinued paying his premiums, having allowed his policy to lapse, his heirs would not have been entitled to recover, and therefore not having continued to pay his premiums, he has not contributed any part of the $152,000, now in the hands of the government, and he should not be entitled to participate in that. Any one who takes the trouble to study the Bill, will see that it is a measure that should command the serious attention of this House, and I say it without any hesitation.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman has not answered the question of the hon. senator from Wellington as I understand it. That question is: two men insure with the company in the year 1890, say for $1,000 each. One pays for five years and drops out. He has paid in $100. The other continues paying for fifteen years, and pays $300. What the hon senator wanted to know, is this: I am the man who has dropped at the end of five years. Under clause (h) of this Bill I am entitled, on certain conditions, to have my policy revived. Though I paid $200 in ten years, would I have any claim on the deposit?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Not a cent. Let it be well understood. I take A and B who have been insured at the same age. One has allowed his policy to lapse three months after the insurance; the other has protected his insurance to this date. A who has allowed his policy to lapse, will be put exactly on the same footing by this Bill. as B, except that he will have to furnish a medical certificate, that his health is not impaired, and that he will not participate in the $152,000 which has been accumulated through the assessments of those who have protected their policies. Otherwise, they are exactly on the same footing.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Then after these two men have agreed, the one to renew his policy that has been lapsed for ten years, and the other that has continually paid his assessment, my hon. friend says they will be placed exactly on an equal footing, save and except that one man will be entitled to participate in the $152,000, and the other will not.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—And they will pay the same premiums, cent for cent?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Do I understand my hon. friend to say, that the premium that will be paid by each man, if they are of an equal age, will be the same?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Exactly, cent for cent.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Well, where is the benefit to the first man who has paid his assessment continually, in the $152,000, if his premium yearly is exactly the same as the premium of the man that allowed his policy to lapse, and has paid nothing for ten years? He is placed exactly on the same footing. What particular advantage is there in participating in the $152,000?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman has put the same question, and I have to repeat that his benefit has been in being insured during those years, and his heirs being able to recover the amount of his policy in case of his death; whereas, A, who has not paid his premiums, would not have been able to recover. The policy-holder will also have this advantage: he will not be required to furnish a medical certificate, and although he may be a dying man, he is entitled to have his policy continued, and will participate in the $152.000, through the assessments.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Then the amount that each of those men will be called upon to pay annually into the company, will be up to the standard of the ordinary sum that is paid for life insurance in any old line company, that is along with the rate that is collected by any old line company?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Nothing more, and nothing less.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—He pays an amount in accordance with what he would have to pay, if he went into an old line company. Well now, what is his position? Here is a company that has squandered and scattered its resources until there is nothing left. Now they say to this man, we will take you in again, and we shall charge you the same rate you would be charged if you were going to another company across the street.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman is a fair man, and I do not complain of his asking questions, but I do not think that it would be fair for him to interrupt my speech as he is trying to do. I must correct the last answer I have given. The hon. member asked me if it will be cent for cent; it will be cent for cent, as I have stated, but the loading on the policy-holders with whom we are dealing is only 5 per cent, whereas the loading on ordinary insurance exceeds 5 per cent considerably. My desire would have been that we should have dealt with this Bill in Committee of the Whole. I was prepared to offer several amendments, some in the direction of covering the points to which the hon. member for Wellington has called attention, but as objection has been taken to that course, I shall have to put them on the order paper, so that they will be taken into consideration when we come to the third reading, if, as I hope, the Bill is to pass this House. Now, I call special attention to another point. The reference which was made to the committee was to inquire as to the position of the Mutual Reserve in Canada. To my mind, if the investigation had been limited to that, we could have in the course of two or three days, been perfectly informed as to that position, and it would have been the proper course. However, the majority of the committee have deemed it advisable to proceed in another way, and we have gone into a mass of evidence, during which the witnesses who have been called, especially two or three of the witnesses, have cast a great many aspersions on the company. The point to which I desire to call your special attention is, as to the condition of the company in Canada, as regards the Canadian policy-holders. As soon as I was appointed a member of that committee, I directed my efforts towards procuring this information. I got the company to produce a statement showing from year to year during the nineteen years they have done business in this country the amount of premiums they received, the total income in Canada and in the United States—the total amount which they paid to policy-holders from year to year in Canada, and the United States, the expenses from year to year in Canada and in the United States separately, and the expenses from year to year, to officers and employees at the general offices in the United States, the amount of assets from year to year, and the amount of reserves from year to year, in the hands of the government. Now, what is the result of these figures? In round figures, the company has collected a total in Canada, from Canadian policy-holders during nineteen years, under the assessment plan, of $5,060,000. They have paid to policy-holders during the same period $3,060,000. It has cost the company, in expenses, during the nineteen years, the amount of $999,000, to which my hon friend has referred.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I did not refer to it at all.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If the hon. member reads his speech he will find that he referred to that very figure at least twice, and he referred to it not as representing the expenses of the company, but as the amount which had been squandered, and the amount which had been paid to Moss.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Will the hon. gentleman allow me——

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I rose to correct the hon. gentleman on that, but he persisted in his statement.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I was not referring at all to the expenses in Canada, connected with their business. I was referring to the $999,000 squandered by Chief Superintendent Moss, and charged to him as money that he had drawn to distribute amongst agents, and that up to the present time it had never been returned or accounted for, and no vouchers presented. That was the money I was referring to.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman is quite right; the statement he made is the very statement he repeats, and it is exactly what I want to correct, in two very important respects. I want to quote to him, from the report of his own examination. A day or two after I had elicited the information to which I have referred, the hon. gentleman covered the same ground, and he will find it on page 80 of part III. of the printed evidence, which is now before the House. It is as follows:—

By the Hon. Mr. McMullen:

Q. The condition of the account at the present moment is virtually this: in 1886 you commenced the Mutual Life Reserve system in Canada?—A. 1885.

Q. In nineteen years you have collected on assessments out of those people that took policies with you something over $5,000,000. During that time you have paid them back on matured policies under their covenants $3,000,000, or nearly $3,000,000?—A. $3,060,000.

Q. That leaves a balance of $2,100,000?—A. I make it $1,972,502.

Q. $2,100,000?—A. That is not correct, because that carries into the legal reserve business——

Q. Out of that you claim to have paid in Canada altogether for expenses, $1,067,000?—A. No, $999,000, confining it to assessment.

It is perfectly clear that the confusion in the mind of the hon. gentleman is, that he takes this $999,000, which is the total of the figures from year to year for the nineteen years, which I had obtained from the company, as covering 'the Moss defalcation,' as he calls it, instead of covering the regular expenses of the company in Canada.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Did my hon. friend ever hear in the course of the investigation, of the name of a person called 'Moss'?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Yes.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It was in connection with the money that was lost through him——

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I shall come to that presently, but I should like to be permitted to make a connected argument, and deal with one point, before having to deal with another. I was calling attention to a very important fact, to the total amount which had been paid by Canadian policy-holders into that company, and the total amount which the company had paid back, to Canadian policy-holders, or their representatives. The difference, as hon. gentlemen will see, is $1,972,502. Of this, the company has expended in Canada $999,000, leaving, therefore, in regular expenses, an amount to be accounted for of $972,625. I have asked the vice-president of the company how they accounted for that amount, and his answer was, that $228,000 of it was deposited in the hands of the government. Besides, there was an amount of some fifty odd thousand dollars, in the agencies in Canada, and in banks, on the 31st December, 1903. That left an amount of $728,000 to be accounted for, and this he accounts for by saying they had to pay in most cases, five per cent on the collection of the assessment, and also that it is the proportion of the general expenses, for officers and employees at the head office, which has to be borne by the Canadian business, and possibly also an excess which they have had to pay, on death claims. I asked some further questions, as a member of the committee, and I hope to have a closer answer than the one I have received. The committee has been promised further information on the matter, but let us deal with those figures. Let us suppose that the greater part of this $700,000 would be unaccounted for, and let us ask ourselves if the Canadian policy-holders have not received a benefit equivalent to that amount. It is in evidence, and not contradicted, that the policy-holders, Canadian as well as Americans, in that company, have paid an average of only fifty to sixty-six per cent, of the rates which they would have paid in other companies. The source of their trouble, lies mainly in that they insured their policy-holders at too low a rate until 1895, and of course, the policy-holders have had the benefit of it. It represents about forty per cent of the amount they have saved on the rates; therefore it represents about forty per cent of the five millions paid in premiums. As far as I am concerned, I am forced to the conclusion therefore that the Canadian policy-holders cannot have been victims to the extent we are told they have been.

I am asked to deal with the Moss matter. It is true that at one stage of the inquiry, there was evidence adduced before the committee to the effect that in 1897, the company had entered into a contract with this man Moss, appointing him manager of the agencies throughout the United States, and that under that contract which had been signed by Mr. Wells, and of which contract Mr. Wells accepts the full responsibility, Moss was entitled to 85 per cent as commissions on the first year's premiums. Of this, sixty-five per cent was supposed to go to the agents appointed by Moss as manager, and the balance, called an overriding commission of twenty per cent, was to remain to Moss. This was not taken exception to. As I say, Wells accepted the full responsibility of the contract, and did not claim that it was a bad contract, or an unusual contract for a company of that kind. But Mr. Patterson specially charged the company with having paid not the $999,000, but an amount of $240,000 or $250,000 beyond the eighty-five per cent to Moss. That is, that the company had given Moss a bonus to the extent of $240,000 or $250,000. When that evidence was introduced, the hon. gentleman from Wellington, if he was at the time in the committee—and I am quite sure he was—will bear me out when I say that I told the manager of the company that for my part, as a member of the committee, I would expect that the company would be able to answer that charge, as well as a couple of other charges which I mentioned, but which were insignificant as compared with that one, and that if they failed to answer that charge to my satisfaction that I would, for one, very reluctantly—because in my opinion it would be damaging to the Canadian policy-holders as well as to others—join in a report condemning the management of the company; but where I take issue with the hon. gentleman is, as to his statement of what passed to-day in the committee. What occurred to-day in the committee was, not that this charge was supported, but, as the hon. gentleman will remember if he gave any attention to the evidence produced, a statement by Mr. Eldridge which we were told under the responsibility of the legal adviser of the company would be verified by the accountant of the company, who is here waiting to be examined, a statement showing that instead of paying 85 per cent to Moss, and $250,000 beyond that, that the only amount that had been paid to Moss by the company was 82 per cent and a fraction, not even 85 per cent. Mr. Eldridge did not claim he had verified all the items of the statement, but he took upon himself to say that he was satisfied it was correct. If this statement is verified in the proper way by the employees of the company, I say that the charge is altogether disproved, and I contend that it is unbecoming on the part of any hon. member of that committee, at this stage, to throw aspersions on the management.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I would ask the hon. gentleman if that report to which he refers is now before the House?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Then the hon. gentleman has no right to refer to it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. member from Stadacona should have objected to the statement of the hon. gentleman from Wellington. I am answering his charge. The hon. gentleman from Wellington has referred to the proceedings of the committee, and referred to that very item, and surely I am allowed to answer his charge and question.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Two blacks do not make a white.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I hope I shall not be suspected of being interested in covering up any misdeeds on the part of the company. I am here to do my duty as a senator, my full duty, irrespective of what may be the consequence. I am not here to be carried away by all kinds of accusations against the company, especially before the company have had full opportunity to answer the charges.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Who is doing that? I do not think that is a fair insinuation.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman was evidently not in the House when the address to which I am replying was made.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Most forcible accusations and remarks were made by the hon. gentleman from Wellington.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I deny that. I can prove everything I said when we go into committee.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I appeal to the hon. gentleman for British fair-play, it is a big word, and I ask is it fair, when the company has not had an opportunity of producing all their evidence, when the evidence against them has taken three or four weeks, because it was only Monday that they commenced to answer it, to pass judgment upon them in advance of their defence? I say that he has not that right, and it is unfair on his part. Whatever may be the position, the committee will have to make a report on the investigation. The evidence is already very voluminous. It is before the Senate except the proceedings of to-day, I think, and every member of this House will be able to form his own judgment upon the evidence. I do not contend that nothing remains to be answered, as far as the company are concerned, but I am able to say that the main points which troubled my mind have been answered, especially if the accountant is examined and proves that the account of Mr. Moss occupies the position which Mr. Eldridge has stated. Whatever may be the issue, it is an issue which concerns the company, and in concerning the company, it concerns the policy-holders, who are the company. In the experience of every hon. member of this House, I would ask if there are any insurance company who have not enemies from the fact that they have had, in the regular course of their business, to compromise death claims which have been made against them ? They have enemies more or less, and will it be pretended that if a loose investigation—when I say a loose investigation I mean investigation in which the rules of evidence are not followed, I do not say it by way of criticism, but where all kinds of evidence are produced, if an investigation lasting three or four weeks was made, concerning any company, especially if that company has any enemies, as this company has, will it be pretended that it would not be certain that a number of matters condemning the company, on the surface at least, would be produced ? Therefore, I say it is our bounden duty, when dealing with a matter of this kind, to be exceedingly discreet and careful before passing judgment upon it, and give the fullest opportunity to the accused to defend themselves.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Before taking part in this discussion. I should like to have a ruling in regard to the matter suggested by the hon. gentleman from Montarville. It is not clear in my mind yet whether this Bill is properly before the House for discussion. It is properly before the House, but whether for discussion or not I am not clear. I accept the statement that the Bill was introduced as a public Bill and it was then intituled 'An Act further to amend the Insurance Act.' The Bill has since changed its title, or rather, it has two titles. When it goes into the statutes I do not know by which name it will be known, whether it is an Act further to amend the Insurance Act or whether it shall be known as 'An Act respecting the Canadian policy-holders in the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association,' and in regard to this I raise a point on which it is necessary to have a ruling. If this Bill is not a public Bill it is not properly before the House.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I raise a point of order that it is not open to the hon. gentleman to raise the point of order he suggests. We have a distinct ruling that the point of order which he has mentioned is not well taken.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Should not the Speaker decide this ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The Speaker did not decide it. It was an hon. member on the other side who decided it was a public Bill. The ejaculation came from the other side of the House that it was a public Bill. I have been thinking over the matter, and I quite agree with the hon. gentleman from Montarville who has had parliamentary experience extending over a great many years, that this is not a public Bill, but a private Bill. I ask for a ruling on this point.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I ask whether this point is open to discussion or not ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED (from the Speaker's Chair)—The Speaker this afternoon did hold it was a public Bill, and, there having been no appeal, the decision of the chair stands.

His Honour The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The question is whether this is a public or private Bill. Has the Speaker ruled on that ? If he did, I did not hear it.

The SPEAKER—I ruled that the Bill before the House was a public Bill.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Speaking to the motion made by the hon. senator from Wellington, to have the consideration of this Bill postponed until the committee of investigation has closed its evidence and has made its report, I have no stronger proof of the validity of that contention than the last words of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry. He charged that the hon. senator had made accusations against the company in the absence of the evidence. I think the hon. gentleman from Wellington has put the question very well. It seems strange that this honourable House should be asked to stultify itself before the country. It seems strange that this honourable House should be asked to take action to nullify what it agreed and consented to five or six weeks ago. This honourable House, if members will recollect, passed a resolution authorizing the formation of a committee to investigate into the position in Canada of the affairs of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York. At the same time that motion was carried—another motion was made in regard to this Bill—this emasculated Bill. It is not even emasculated : The old Bill has disappeared entirely and this is a fresh one. At that time a demand was made in this House that this Bill should not be proceeded with until the committee had investigated and reported on the affairs of the company. So much was that course deemed advisable that they wanted to refer this Bill to the investigating committee. That was the desire and demand of the hon. members of this House that the consideration of the two should go together.

Well, there was a compromise made. It was felt that the committee could not deal with the two questions at the one time, and a compromise was made on the floor of the Senate whereby this Bill was referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee, with the understanding that no definite action would be taken in regard to the affairs of this company until the committee reported. That has been the position of affairs for the past five or six weeks. I think we have been sitting over six weeks. To-night we are confronted with a demand that all the action by this honourable House for the past five weeks shall go for nothing, that the investigation is a sham, a disgrace, and a discredit. These are very hard words to be hurled at the committee, and on behalf of that committee, composed of hon. senators of this House, amongst them the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique), the hon. gentleman from Montarville (Hon. Mr. de Boucherville), the hon. senator from Killarney (Hon. Mr. Young), and others, as chairman of that committee, I decline to accept such a characterization of our work. I do not think it is proper or right that the committee, and its work should be denounced as a sham, disgrace and discredit. I am not going to discuss the merits of the question to-day, but I am satisfied that if this agitation had not been started, if this committee had not commenced its investigation, there would not have been a demand by the Mutual Reserve Life Association to bring in a Bill for the relief of the Canadian policy-holders. At least we have obtained that advantage. The company has come before parliament seeking for what? For a measure? I think it will have a double purpose, one, giving relief to the policy-holders in a sense, and the other result gaining a new name before the Canadian policy-holders, and before the Canadian insurance public of this country. If the first result can be attained I shall be most happy, but if this Bill is a public Bill it is going to interfere with the constitution and organization of all insurance companies. If this Bill is a public Bill and is going to be accounted as part of the Insurance Act you open the door for all kind of machinations amongst insurance men. I know lots of people who entered into insurance companies at the age of twenty paying premiums on policies varying from $10,000 to $20,000, who will be quite willing, under this new state of insurance, to allow their policies to lapse for ten or fifteen years and come in later and repay their premium. It is a false principle of insurance to put into any public Act. You open the door to all kinds of fraud in regard to these matters, but as far as Canadian policy-holders of the Mutual Reserve Life are concerned, if this Bill will have the effect pointed out by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, I say it will be a great relief. There is not a man in Canada who will not thank the Senate and particularly the hon. senator from Rothesay, for having agitated the question and brought the company to this honourable House asking to be allowed to reinstate this class of policy-holders who were obliged to allow their policies to lapse owing to increased premiums, or as they call it extortionate assessments. I say we have accomplished a great thing for this class, but that is not the point at this present moment. We have to deal with a motion made by the hon. senator from Toronto, the effect of which practically is asking us to stultify ourselves and annul all our action in the past. I do not think, when hon. members consider the motion carefully that they will endorse the action, or approve of the action of the hon. senator from Toronto.

The action taken by the hon. gentleman from Wellington is well taken. It is taken in the interest of justice, in the interest of the policy-holders of this country, and in the interest of honesty in the administration of public affairs. The accusations brought by the hon. senator from Wellington against the company may be well founded or may not be well founded. I shall not undertake to say whether they are or not, and that is one more reason why this House should not be asked to pass on a Bill to rehabilitate this company until they know whether the accusations are true or not true. I do not think the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry is right in taking the position he did. On the other hand, the hon. gentleman from Wellington (Hon. Mr. McMullen) felt that this Bill should not receive consideration until all the facts were placed before the House, and all the facts that were at his command and were contained in the evidence adduced, and he was forced to level his accusations against the company on account of the hasty action of the hon. senator from Toronto. These accusations would never have been levelled at the company if the committee had been allowed to conclude its investigation and to make its report. Who can say what the report of that committee will be? It may be a report declaring that the company has been honest and faithful in the discharge of its duties towards the Canadian policy-holders, or the policy-holders of the company. To assume what that report will be and base an argument on that assumption is not in harmony with right and justice. If this motion is to be pressed, it will force the members of the committee who do not consider it a sham, or disgrace, or discredit, to stand up for the honour of the committee to say to this honourable House that before this motion passes all the evidence, so far as we have it in our possession, will have to come before the Senate. That will be a strange position to force us to place ourselves in. I for one do not want to do that; but it is not right to force members of the committee who think they are doing their duty conscientiously into that position. It is not right to assume that they are doing an unworthy work, and it is not right to characterize us before the country as a sham, a disgrace, and a discredit. It is not right that such language should be hurled across the floor of this House, and, as a member of the committee, I decline respectfully to accept these epithets. I wish to say before the country that this committee has done its duty honestly, fearlessly and conscientiously, and, under these circumstances, if forced to do so, I shall be obliged to put before the House to-night evidence of the most damning character. We are not attacking the company; we are not investigating the deeds of the policy-holders. We are told the company are the policy-holders. That is hair-splitting and quibbling with the question. We are not appointed to investigate the company's deeds, but we are appointed to investigate the deeds of the members of the company who are elected on the directorate every year. It is their administration we are investigating, and it does not cover much ground. It covers merely the personality of three or four officers of the company, and we want to ascertain and establish whether that administration is honest and in the interest of the policy-holders. If that administration is honest, and has been in the interest of the policy-holders, then let this honourable House give them every power that is possible to maintain the business of the company in this country; but if the committee find evidence to show that the administration of this company by its president, by its vice-president, by its officers, or by ex-officers, has been and is dishonest, then it is for the Senate to tell the public what the real condition of affairs is, and not to hide the truth, no matter what the consequence may be. Let the truth be known. Let this be a lesson to all companies of this kind who dare to trifle with the funds of widows and orphans.

If hon. gentlemen could see the letters that come to the members of this committee, from widows and orphans, and from policy-holders calling the company names that I would not dare repeat on the floor of this House. If you heard the expression of opinion against the company by members of this Senate who were policy-holders of that company, and who were obliged to allow their policies to lapse, owing to what they call the extortion by the company; if you heard the statement of members of parliament, responsible before the country, that the company was run on the line of rascality—the House would pause before rehabilitating this company until the evidence and report are before the Senate. These statements are very hard to prove before the committee on a legal technical basis, but there are the sobs of the widows and orphans dribbling into the Senate and into this committee from all parts of the Dominion telling how they had been driven to the poor-house owing to the extortion of this company. I have seen young ladies on the floor of this House whose mother had been deprived of the face value of the policy of her husband, and it was scaled down from $10,000 to $2,500.

We cannot go into the particulars of these things, but we know that the members of that committee are doing here to-day a noble work on behalf of the policy-holders. We are not ashamed of the taunts that we have heard on the floor of this House, or in the corridors, from senators who ought to know better. I for one am not. I stand here to do my duty fearlessly, honestly and impartially. Some hon. senators may talk as they will about this committee—we are doing a work that will prove the usefulness of the Senate to the community at large, because the companies doing business on the same lines, as the Mutual Reserve, will not be tempted to be unjust or dishonest in transactions with policy-holders, when they know that their methods can be investigated ? I shall not, at present, go into the evidence that I hold, evidence of the most damaging character, evidence that the president of the company stated to his officers that he wanted $100,000 to buy out the insurance department of New York. I will not go into the evidence where he stated to his officers that he had compromised for $65,000 ; I will not go into the evidence where he at last said that all he had to pay was $40,000 to the insurance department for a favourable report, when Mr. Payne wanted to bring in a report that would damn the company for ever. I will not go into the evidence where each of the directors had to contribute his share to pay that amount of the insurance money to the department. I will not go into the charges which have been proved before this committee, that this company has paid money to officers of the company to have charges of bribery——

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Will the hon. gentleman not say that the very witness he said had heard a thing of that kind, admitted that he did not believe a single word of it ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have here in my possession the brief of Moss.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Was not the witness asked whether he had anything to say against the report of the insurance department of New York, and he said No ? He was invited to criticise it and he said he had nothing to say against it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am not alluding to the evidence before the committee, so much as to what I have in my hand.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman has no right to discuss such evidence.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am not discussing the evidence before the committee, but I hold in my hand documents which the company had to pay fifteen thousand dollars to have withdrawn—is not that evidence ? There is a most damaging document which the company paid to have withdrawn. There is another one on the table, which the hon. gentleman objected to admitting as evidence. I decided that it should be admitted. The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry has appealed from my decision, and wants to have it struck out of the record—a document charging the company with all kinds of maladministration, a record of the courts of New York, charging, not the company, because the policy-holders are a part of the company, but charging the administration of the company ; that the officers of the company paid a man five thousand dollars to allow a criminal libel suit to drop, and yet we are told that that record should not form part of the evidence. When a majority of the committee decided that it should be evidence, the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Beique) comes to the House for a special order, to order me to produce the report, and appealing from my decision. He can appeal from my decision, but any fair minded man who will read that document, which the company paid $5,000 to have dropped will say that it is evidence which should be on the record. That is the position of affairs. I say it is not right or fair to the committee. It is not dealing honestly by the policy-holders of this country, not even fair to the company, to ask to have a Bill considered in their behalf, and in behalf of the policy-holders without having all the evidence taken during this investigation before the Senate. That is the position I take, and if things go any further, I shall have to produce evidence, without it being brought out before the committee.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—I have not been able to follow the discussion. This Bill was before the Committee on Banking and Commerce, of which I have the honour to be a member, and I expect to support it when it goes to Committee of the Whole House. At the same time, I thought the amendment moved by the hon. senator from Wellington, ought to have been accepted. It was my intention in the first place, to have supported the amendment, and I suggested to the promoter of the Bill, that it would be better to wait. I cannot see, however, even when the report comes in, that anything is to be gained by it. Supposing this company, has been as bad as has been charged, I do not see what relief that will give to the policy-holders. At the same time I would have preferred, if possible, to have waited for the report of the committee; but we are all looking to an early adjournment, and this Bill has to go to the House of Commons if it is to pass this session. There is not time to lose; otherwise, I would gladly have supported the amendment. Not that it will change my opinion. However bad the company may be, I do not see how the exposing of their methods will give relief to the policy-holders.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—On this question I think it proper to say a few words, because I am myself interested. At the beginning of this discussion, I was disposed to be hostile to the company, having been one of their victims. I was rather inclined to think that everything proposed by them would be necessarily bad, but, on reflection, I thought that vengeance would in this case, be not only unchristian, but not practical, and it would be even perhaps a very dangerous feeling. Having thought over the matter, I came to the conclusion that the best we could do in the interests of the policy-holders was to take advantage of the company coming before parliament for legislation, to get from them as much as possible, in the interests of the policy-holders. I thought it was a most practical policy, and that it was better, before rejecting all their proposals, to wait for the Bill, and see what it would contain, and judge it on its merits. That Bill has been prepared by very competent men—Mr. Eldridge, Mr. Fitzgerald, the Inspector of the Insurance Department, and Mr. Bradshaw, representing the Canadian companies, and I was surprised to see such a good Bill presented. I did not expect that it could contain all the clauses which the policy-holders wanted. I was not satisfied with my own opinion merely, but obtained the opinion of policy-holders in Montreal who, I thought, were better informed than myself, and I came to the conclusion that it would be a mistake to reject such a Bill, that it would be against the interests of the policy-holders, and that those who were influenced by a feeling of revenge would do a great wrong, if not to themselves to the policy-holders. I consider the Bill is good for the following reasons, which I sum up in a few words: First, because it is the only remedy which can be provided for the policy-holders who have suffered and who are exposed to suffer in the future. It is their only chance to get something from the company. The more those who have spoken against the company have said against the company, the more have they convinced me that this Bill is in the interest of the policy-holders, and that if nothing is done the old as well as the new policy-holders will lose everything. Take my own case as an example, and when I speak I represent the feeling and opinions of the majority of the policy-holders: If no legislation is granted, the best I can do would be to drop the remaining $2,000 insurance I have in the company. I dropped $10,000 in 1898 and 1899, and I shall be forced to drop the other $2,000. The Bill is advantageous to those who have continued to pay their premiums, because they prefer the certain to the uncertain, the definite to the indefinite. They want to know in what position they are; they do not know what will occur if there is no Bill. The fact is, the premiums will be increased, and the time will come when policy-holders will be unable to meet their payments; that must necessarily happen. Secondly, the Bill is advantageous to the old policy-holders who have been obliged to drop their policies, because they could not pay the increased premiums. Their policies have been dead, and are now to be raised from the dead. I congratulate those who are raising us from the dead. After having made certain calculations, which have been revised and corrected by some competent persons, I come to the conclusion that the clause in the Bill about the revival of lapsed policies is in the interest of those people. But what will happen if the Bill does not pass ? Evidently it is the only chance which will be given to them. For a great number of us there will be no chance, because we have attained an age at which we cannot be insured in another company. This is the only company which will consent to insure such men on the conditions mentioned in the Bill. I call the attention of hon. members to this point.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Will they have to undergo a medical examination ?

Hon. Mr. DAVID—They only have to produce a medical certificate that they are in good health.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—That is very broad.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—But we have not to complain of that.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I apprehend that more than 50 per cent will be excluded from the benefit of this clause—75 per cent. It seems to me a delusion and a fraud.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—That is a matter of opinion, and the policy-holders are not of the hon. gentleman's opinion, and their opinion is worth something. I am surprised to see that those who have displayed so much activity and energy in connection with this question are not more inclined to take into consideration the opinion of the policy-holders. I thought everything they were doing was being done in the interest of the policy-holders. I begin to have doubts. I commenced to suspect that our interests were not exactly what they intended to favour. To finish what I have to say, I should like every hon. member to consider what can be offered in lieu of this Bill if it should not pass. If you have something to give the policy-holders, the new as well as the old, please tell us what it is, and if it is better than this Bill we shall accept it willingly; but if you have nothing to offer to the new or to the old policy-holders, this is something which is worthy of consideration. We have an offer which we are disposed to accept. If the Bill is not perfect—and there is nothing perfect in this world, even investigations are not considered perfect——

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The investigation gave you the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—The hon. member from Victoria said a moment ago he was proud to say they had contributed to have this Bill brought before the Senate Then the conclusion is that the hon. gentleman and his colleagues ought to support the Bill and give the policy-holders the advantage of what they have done apparently in their interest.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—So we shall when it is ready.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—To be consistent, the hon. member ought to give us a chance and adopt this Bill unless they have another Bill. The object of the amendment is to postpone the consideration of this Bill until after the investigation is closed. Is that wise ? We are very near the end of the session, and we do not know what will happen in that committee. We do not know how long the investigation may be continued. Parliament will prorogue and will the committee continue sitting ? I thought perhaps a motion might be made to have the investigation continued during the recess, but that would be very dangerous. Those who are in favour of the Bill and have confidence that it is in the interest of the policy-holders, all who want to do justice to those who have suffered, ought to vote for the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I have listened with considerable attention to the elaborate address, I might say defence of the company by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry. It certainly was not a defence of the committee, but an attack on the committee at every vulnerable point, if there was any, and at the same time saying all that could be said in defence of the company. Like all special pleaders he tried to influence somebody else to do something he was not going to do himself as is the custom in court. I am quite prepared to make some allowance for the hon. Secretary of State. People say things sometimes on the spur of the moment which they regret afterwards. If one statement he made is correct then the hon. member for de Salaberry, as well as every other member of the committee, stands charged with being a 'sham' a 'disgrace' and 'discreditable.' I took those words down. That language is applied to every one of the nineteen members of the committee. The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry says this Bill did not suit him :

I do not see how it could suit him. I turn to Webster's unabridged dictionary and I find the definition of the word discreditable. It is 'tending to injure credit, not creditable, injurious to reputation, disgraceful, disreputable.' Therefore there are nineteen members of the committee charged by the Secretary of State with being disreputable.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I say yes. I took the hon. gentleman's words down. He also said that it was a 'sham.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend says hear, hear. The public will be pleased to hear that he has designated a committee appointed by a majority of this House to investigate charges made against the Mutual Reserve Company by the policy-holders, as a 'sham.' I am for the policy-holders; I am not for the management of the company. I am neither trying to uphold nor to discredit the management. I am only trying to show what has been done for and against the interest of the policy-holders, and it will be for the public to say whether the evidence sustains one side or the other. If this evidence which has been taken is permitted to be brought down and not stifled, shows that the policy-holders have not been properly treated, then what will be thought of parliament if a majority of its members should array themselves on the side of the managers of the company and against the policy-holders? My hon. friend says this committee is a sham. Webster defines 'sham' as:

> That which deceives expectation, any trick, fraud, or device that deludes and disappoints, delusion, mystery, fake, humbug. Believe who will solemn sham, not I—Addison.
> To deceive expectation, to trick, to cheat, delude with false pretenses.

Are those words to be used by an hon. gentleman, leading the government in this House, who should be here to give fatherly advice, to be applied to a committee appointed by this House? The hon. gentleman should express his approval of the course we are pursuing, and if those poor people have been wrongfully treated, should help us to see them righted. He should be the champion in this House, having a majority behind him, to help to right the policy-holders, not help to sustain those who have deliberately wrecked them. My hon. friend the Secretary of State takes the position that everybody is a sham, everybody is a fraud. 'Honi soit qui mal y pense' is a motto on the Royal Arms—evil be to him who evil thinks. I hold in my hands a letter sent to me from the Commons, by the Hon. Mr. Ross. Is he a fraud or a sham? He writes me on the 18th July, 1904, as follows:—

> I take the liberty of inclosing you a letter from J. B. Patton in connection with the Canadian Life Insurance Company. Mr. Patton being an agent for some Canadian office has had considerable experience in that business. So what he says may be considered reliable.
> Yours very truly,
> WM. ROSS.

If hon. gentlemen are going to take the view that the policy-holders are saying nothing, then we must read a mass of letters here that would load up the debates to a very great extent, but it is not necessary to do that. If you can show by one or two or three letters with a hundred or two behind them that is sufficient, and, added to that we have the report of the committee and the evidence taken. Every hon. gentleman can read it over and form his own conclusion. The letter which I am about to read to show that all the policy-holders do not take the same view as my hon. friend, is something I think will cause the hon. members of this House to consider for a moment. It reads as follows:

> Halifax, July 2, 1904.
> Hon. Wm. Ross, M.P.,
> Ottawa, Canada.
> Dear Sir,—I beg to draw your attention to the inclosed leaflet. I hope you will give the matter your best consideration in the interest of the public generally. Permit me to call your attention briefly to the fact that the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association did an extensive business in Nova Scotia some years ago, and without exception every man and woman who joined the society, with whom I came in contact, and I met many in Halifax and throughout the province, were sadly misled and outrageously imposed upon. They were assured that its assessments were 'stipulated premiums,' fixed sums for fixed amounts of assurance, and not liable to be increased. Not only that, but that the reserve fund would in fifteen years from date of joining yield sufficient revenue to enable it to reduce the assessments materially. Indeed many were led to believe that at the end of fifteen years their policies would become 'paid-up life insurance,' and that they would receive dividends in addition thereto. You can imagine their astonishment and consternation when their assessments were increased, and steadily went up to double and treble the original amounts.

In the Halifax 'Chronicle' some years ago I gave facts, figures and cases in exposure of the fraud, and in connection therewith there cropped up a number of sad cases. Allow me to cite only one of them as an example: A Mr. McDonald had during a number of years paid into this so-called Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York all his surplus earnings - then when unable himself to satisfy its rapacious maw—he called upon his daughter, then working near Boston, to come to his assistance, which she did, but unfortunately the assessments still kept rising higher and higher until poor McDonald and his daughter, slave as they would, could not meet them. The poor old man at last appealed to his nephew, a farm labourer, to come to his rescue which he generously did, but still the monster's jaws opened wider and wider, and all three—father, daughter and nephew—combined could not raise enough to satisfy its insatiable lust. At last accounts the old man's eyesight failed him. Unable to work, disappointed and broken hearted, he and his poor old wife were driven to the poor house. The hundreds of dollars taken from this old unsophisticated Nova Scotian through the misrepresentations and deliberate falsehoods of the Mutual Reserve would no doubt have saved him and his wife this humiliation and torment. Under these circumstances and for the reasons set forth in the leaflet, I trust and feel confident that you will not allow the General Insurance Act to become an instrument to enable the Mutual Reserve, or any society or company, to unload its liabilities so easily, and to further impose upon the people. Instead of amending the Act so that the public may be more easily deceived, something should be done to make it more difficult. The people look to the government to protect them in insurance matters against deception and fraud.

Apologizing for my extended remarks, I am,

Yours respectfully,

J. B. PATON.

P.S.—Hope you are well.

THE CANADIAN LIFE INSURANCE OFFICERS ASSOCIATION.

Re Bill introduced into the Senate by Hon. J. K. Kerr, Toronto, entitled 'An Act further to amend the Insurance Act.'

The Canadian Life Insurance Officers Association, comprising in its membership practically all the Canadian and British Life companies, has given this Bill careful consideration and unanimously concluded that the proposed legislation, in its present form, is extremely prejudicial to the interests of sound life assurance in the Dominion of Canada.

The following reasons are given—

1. The Bill is introduced on behalf of, and can apply to the business of only one institution, the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company of New York, formerly known as the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York; yet it has been framed in such a way as to give the impression that it is of general import. This association considers that the introduction into the General Insurance Act of provisions such as are contained in the Bill in question, giving power to change the amount of the policy, alter the premium, and entirely reform the contract, would convey an erroneous impression to the Canadian insuring public, and to the insuring public of other countries where our Canadian companies are seeking business, in regard to the stability and standing of our regular companies, and of life assurance in general in Canada.

2. The association is also of the opinion that the General Insurance Act should not be made the vehicle to give relief to any one institution in particular. If this be allowed to be done in the case under consideration, it would appear that it may form a dangerous precedent.

3. The members of the Canadian Life Insurance Officers Association would respectfully express their regret that there has been included in the General Insurance Act legislation dealing with assessment assurance, inasmuch as it has afforded an opportunity for those who advocate assessment assurance to urge that that class of assurance and regular life assurance, being legalized by the same Act, were in fact the same and, as a consequence, many people have been deceived thereby. Should further legislation on the subject of assessment assurance be introduced into the General Insurance Act as proposed, it appears to this association that it will have the effect of aggravating this impropriety.

4. The association ventures to suggest that whatever legislation parliament deems it advisable to grant in the premises, such legislation should be in the nature of a private Bill, so that it will be unmistakably known to apply only to the society seeking it—the Mutual Reserve, and thus, that sound life assurance shall not be injured or prejudiced thereby.

The Hon. Wm. Ross, late minister of the Crown, in the Liberal party, certifies to this gentleman. Is that not a hard case? Yet when we try to do something that would put these people on a proper basis we are accused of being 'shams' and 'a disgrace' and 'discreditable.' Our desks are loaded with such letters as these. I do not propose now to answer the argument on the other side at any great length unless this motion is going to be defeated. With reference to what has been stated by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, when we go into the matter of the evidence we shall brush aside all that he has said to-night as something wiped off the slate, because it is of very little consequence, and has little bearing on the subject-matter. The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry said 'Let in evidence not proved.' Evidence which my hon. friend seeks to cut out of the report because it is damaging the company is conclusive. Were it not damaging to the company what object can there be in cutting it out? I can easily see that this report going everywhere will have its moral effect. I got a letter from Holland only yesterday on the subject, and letters are coming in from everywhere. I might refer to pages of newspapers which have very little bearing on the subject. If the reading of a newspaper is in any way going to improve the position what object in cutting it out, and. vice versa, if any evidence put in there and proved as damaging to them, why should it be cut out ? Of course it is in the judgment of the House.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Why did the hon. gentleman not summon the King's Printer before the committee, and ask why it was cut out ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Well, we might do that too. I suppose we can hardly discuss the Bill now, but it put me in mind of an advertisement read in the newspaper about a find of diamonds in Galway, but when I got to the bottom I found it was an ad. for St. Jacob's Oil. The first Bill comes in, and then a second Bill comes in with the names on the back reprinted as redrafted, June 30th, 1904, by Messrs. Fitzgerald, Superintendent of Insurance, Thomas Bradshaw, &c. The people in Holland, Denmark or France will not know what has been going on in its entirety, but they will have the fact before them, that the Senate of Canada had employed these gentlemen to draft a Bill, and on the back of that Bill which they have drafted is the name of the vice-president of the Mutual Reserve Fund Company—asked by parliament to draft a Bill, while a committee is sitting in another room of the same building investigating charges against the president and management of that company.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that the Bill from which he is quoting is not the Bill before the House.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I am not going to dwell on it any more than to say that this draft Bill could be made a very valuable factor in the hands of an agent canvassing for insurance business, and as a substantiation of the sound position of the company, whether right or wrong. The next Bill brought in has not this endorsement on its back, but it has a great many clauses which I cannot approve of, and if we are to go into the matter to-night I shall have to deal with them very fully. As to whether this Bill should be treated as a private or a public Bill I shall say nothing this afternoon ; but if we had gone into committee on the Bill where was concurrence to come from for the report of the committee ? It was concurrence we had to deal with on their report, and then to go into committee afterwards, but not to put the cart before the horse. The present Bill is not robbed of its sting. It is along the lines of the first Bill introduced by the hon. gentleman from Toronto. The Bill now before us has been shuffled about a good deal. All that appears in the debates about it is not worth dealing with now, but there is really nothing in this measure which can be enticing to the public. The Bill is very misleading. An hon. senator said to me today : 'You are not by this Bill cutting away the right of action on the part of the policy-holders?' He had not fully grasped the fact that this seventh clause cuts away all chances of action, because it says :

> Nothing in this Act, shall affect any suit action or other proceeding now pending in respect of any assessment policy.

They still have the right to go on with any existing suit, and I can readily understand that without an explanation such as the committee would give, hardly any man would detect that the policy-holders are being legislated out of right of action. There is the sting. There is where the St. Jacob's oil comes in. Something to stop somebody from doing something. If this Bill became law and the House prorogued on the 1st of August, the public would only know that the Government had come down and given his assent to the Bill, and they would wake up to the fact that no one could bring an action against the company. Nine days from now they should learn for the first time the fact that they should enter suit at once. They must get a lawyer to ascertain the expense, get all the particulars. Failing that, they are driven to accept any terms laid down to them by the company, and they have no redress. My hon. friend from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. David) said he was at first against the company. Now he is with the company the Bill is so good, and he is surprised at it being so good. I have not formed the same opinion as he has.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Is the hon. member a shareholder ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Yes, I am a policy-holder.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—For how much ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I am a policy-holder and I am seeking just as my hon. friend from Mille Isles is to see where others and myself can be placed in the best position. I am not here to ruin the company.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Is the hon. gentleman paying his premium ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Yes, under protest right along. I have some correspondence from the company which I shall read presently to the House to show what opinion I formed then. The policy-holders will wake up to the fact that the only people who can obtain any remedy against the company are those who have already commenced action. If we could send a warning note through the country in such a shape that people could understand it, then with this Bill before them they would enter suits at law, and what position would the company be in, and what position would the Senate be in, for allowing a Bill to go which in itself ruins the company ? It ruins the company through this very clause warning the policy-holders to bring action at once. Every policy-holder included in the $8,000,000 must bring suit at once in order to recover against the company. I may say that very clause is fatal and must damage the company, and if it had been introduced by myself or any member of that committee I would consider that I was open to the censure of every policy-holder in Canada because I was placing them in a position that company must be ruined. Per contra if they do not enter suit then they must fall back on the Bill and make the best terms they can. Let us take the Bill and consider the details. Look at clause 3 and we find, 'Amount of policy computed B. First option, then second option and then the third option, which is C.' The first and second options are virtually one and the same, because they have asserted in their evidence and we have the circulars issued by them to the policy-holders that they have to adopt drastic measures of this kind to meet their liabilities. I shall read presently of the calls made. Not being able to meet their liabilities they put extra calls on and they give the reason that they wanted to wipe off indebtedness. While this great expense was going on, the company was falling behind some $5,000 a year, and they say to the policy-holders—and that is what this Bill says—You have got to get out in some shape. Get out you must. If you propose to hold on to No. 1 you must pay according to the Hm. Mortuary table of the institute of actuaries of Great Britain a rate of interest of 3½ per cent per annum. The Hm. means healthy male. It says nothing about female, but I suppose it all comes under the same category. I am advised that this would reduce the policies down to one-half. A policy-holder having $10,000 insurance would have to consent to being reduced to five thousand. Therefore the five thousand that he paid for and that he believed when he went into the company was to protect him, right or wrong has disappeared, and he is compelled to accept their compromise. If you take option No. 2 it is the very same thing. They say you can remain in the company but your policy must be loaded up. No. 2 reads :

> Provided that the full reserve or reinsurance value for the amount of such policy at the date of the said license computed from the date of the issue of such policy on the basis aforesaid, shall be a lien or charge upon the said policy, bearing interest to be compounded annually at the rate of four and one-half per centum per annum until paid, or until the policy becomes a claim, and the amount of such lien or charge, unless sooner paid, shall be deducted from the amount of such policy when the policy becomes a claim.; and provided also that insured may at any time pay off the said lien or charge or any part thereof.

On the one hand they make a clean cut and divide the amount of the policy. On the other hand there is the sophistry of saying 'We load your policy down and if you can pay it off at 4½ per cent all right.' What possible difference can there be between the two, if you take less for your policy or if you hold the policy for the same amount loaded down with a lien it will balance exactly, there are five on each side. Then subsection (c) reads :

> (c.) The holder of any such assessment policy shall have the right to continue his said policy for the full amount thereof as a yearly renewable term policy upon which the premiums shall not exceed the net yearly natural premiums for the attained age of the insured calculated upon the basis of the mortality table and rate of interest aforesaid with a loading of five per cent for expenses.

There are two classes of insurance in one the premium remains level through life, and in the other the rate increases each year according to the mortuary table. As the hour is late and I have a large number of notes to which I must refer, I move that the debate be adjourned.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I fancy there is nothing to be gained by discussion as every member of the House has probably made up his mind as to how he will vote on the motion.

The question being put :

The SPEAKER—I think the non-contents have it.

Some hon. MEMBERS—Yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER—Those hon. gentlemen who are now entering the chamber of course cannot vote.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When the yeas and nays were demanded, the hon. members should have been called in.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The shorter way is to call in the members.

The SPEAKER—No hon. member who is not present when the question is put is entitled to vote.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I believe the rule reads 'Inside the bar.' I was outside the bar and the question was sprung so quickly I had not time to pass the bar.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Which bar ?

The SPEAKER—If there is no objection I shall call in the members.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Speaker is quite right in saying, if a member is not in the House when the motion is read he cannot vote, but the motion is read after the members have been called in and after the Serjeant at Arms has appeared at the bar indicating that the members are in.

The House divided on the motion to adjourn the debate which was lost on the following division :—Yeas 18 ; Nays 21.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Might I be allowed to ask a question ? This motion was by way of amendment. I never saw a motion for adjournment put as an amendment to a main motion. The whole matter appears very strange and it strikes me we are proceeding on an unusual line.

The SPEAKER—I stated the position of matters. I stated the motion before the House and put the question on the motion to adjourn. I am not proposing any other question now.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—How will that be entered in the proceedings ?

The SPEAKER—The motion to adjourn will be entered as lost.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Will it be entered as an amendment ?

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—I call attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman from Moncton (Hon. Mr. McSweeney) did not vote.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—I paired with Mr. Edwards, the hon. gentleman from Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I place before the House the fact that there were two classes of insurance, one to load up and the other to reduce, and that the rate increases each year according to the mortality table, and is called the natural premium plan because it is the natural course of insurance. Section 7 of the by-laws governs the charging of these premiums . Under the company's by-laws, article 7 section 2, any policy-holder accepting either the first or second option has to pay what they in their discretion may wish to put on him by way of a premium rate. Their decision is law. Under their articles the policy-holder has to pay whatever they may choose to charge him with or he looses the value of his property. If he does not pay up, his policy goes. I shall be prepared presently to show that the first claim, according to the document I have here, against the moneys of the company is for expenses, whereas the first claim should have been for death losses, but the expenses go first and the death losses come afterwards and then there is nothing to pay the death losses. If our contention is right, and the evidence is correct, all mismanagement and all the money that is thrown away has to come out of the premium, and what is left goes to pay death losses and therefore the policyholders are forced into one of those two options, equivalent in a way, and they must pay the premiums as laid down by this company.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. When an hon. gentleman speaks every member of the Senate must be seated.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—Will the hon. gentleman point to the rule?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes, I shall. The rule is as follows:

Senators may not pass between the chair and the table. When entering or crossing the Senate chamber they bow to the chairman and if they have occasion, when the Sena[illegible]ng to speak together they go below the bar, otherwise the Speaker stops the business under discussion.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The bar below?

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from Stadacona has stated the rule correctly.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Is it endorsed by the Speaker?

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman read the rule and hon. gentlemen understand it.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Article 7 section 2 of the by-law which reads as follows:

Article 7, Section 2.—By-Laws.

If the net value of the funds which any class, existing at the date of reincorporation of this company under Sec. 52 of the Insurance Laws, shall be determined by the actuary of the company to be less in amount at any time than the reserve required by these by-laws and the policy contracts of said class, of which the same (by-laws) form a part, or by law, each certificate or policy of said class shall be chargeable with an amount limited to its equitable share of such deficiency, to be determined by the actuary of the company, which amount may stand as an interest-bearing loan upon the security of such reserve, as provided in section 5 of this article constituting a lien against the insurance under each such certificate or policy and any dividends or surplus accruing thereon, which lien may, however, at the election of the member or policy-holder, be paid in cash and cancelled.

That gives the company unlimited power to fix what rate the policy-holders shall pay. They have no redress. Their money paid in, as we find as far as we have gone, is largely fritted away for all sorts of expenses, to put it in a very mild way, without giving it a harsh term more than to state that the money has gone wrongly. They then come under that class, and the company keep chartering them all the time as much as they like, and they have no redress because the expenses come first and the mortality afterwards. That is the very condition of to-day and these two clauses allow them to melt down a risk into a lesser policy, or, on the other hand, load it up, with interest on the loading, and having compromised that for 50 cents on the dollar or thereabouts then they can go on with the very same arrangements they had before, and every time they find them not having money enough to meet the expenses, they assess the policy-holders until they drop out one by one, just like the case I have read to you about the poor old man MacDonald who had to go with his wife to the poor house in Halifax; yet my hon. friend says this is a just Bill and commends itself to him. What difference is there between this Bill and the first Bill? There is very little difference, except they have changed their name, a thing I have never before seen done with a Bill in my experience. They have a Bill with two names. If it had been a government Bill it should have gone in the first place to the committee. If it is a private Bill it should take its stages. It must be one or the other. In either case it is wrong, but that is not a very material point to the policy-holder. The policy-holder will want to know the effect of this Bill from first to last as it is presented to this honourable House, and I put it down here so as to be very careful that no slip of mine shall create any false impression, and that it shall go on the records of the House for those interested to see word for word, as I am advised, the position that Bill places the policy-holder in. It is Bill (H) entitled 'An Act further to amend the Insurance Act.' The avowed purpose of the Bill is not to provide relief for policy holders, but to give the Mutual Reserve a new lease of life and a certificate of health and of good conduct from the Parliament of Canada.

That this is the real purpose of the Bill is evident, because any assessment policy-holder can, as the Insurance Act now stands, obtain an ordinary policy of life insurance. The Insurance Act, chapter 124, section 42a, bearing on this point reads as follows:

> If any company licensed or registered under this Act to carry on the business of life insurance on the assessment system, files in the office of the superintendent any notice of its intention after the date of the mailing of the said notice in detail in respect of all policies issued after the said date in the case of Canadian companies, or in respect of all policies issued in Canada after a said date, maintained for the security of the policy-holders of the said policies the said reserve and comply with all other provisions of this Act applicable thereto as if it were licensed under section 4 of this Act.

If this Bill did not go into operation to-day, let us look at the position of the policy-holder of the past year and up to the present day as if no Bill were passed. He has all these options that you put in this Bill. Why send out these circulars advising people to take a level premium. They get very few who desire to do it. Under this reincorporation as they called it in New York, they took the power to do this level premium business, but the policy-holders would not accept it and in this Bill, to-day it is worse for the policy-holder than before, because he could then take it or not. He could make up his mind to take one of two options or to remain as he is. What more is he getting now? Where is the sugar plum that the company are going to give them? I will show you in a moment how entirely wrong the impression is that they are going to get money. The Mutual Reserve filed a notice, August 11th, 1899, and on so doing obtained the right to write business on the legal reserve plan but was not stopped from writing new business or taking care of its old business on the assessment plan. That is just what I have stated here. The deposit must be made. The Insurance Act, section 42a, subsection 2 reads:

> The deposit of any such company in the hands of the minister at the date mentioned in the notice of the preceding subsection referred to shall be applicable to the policies issued prior to the said Act and shall be dealt with in regard to such policies as if the said notice had not been given, and that the provisions of this Act applicable to assessment insurance companies other than the provisions contained in this section shall be applicable to the policies of the company issued prior to the said date in the same manner and to the same extent as if this section had not been passed.

Therefore the right of the policy-holders under the assessment plan was preserved in so far as the $220,000 or $230,000 referred to here deposited in the hands of the department or the government, let them do what they might with the rest of the policy-holders, whether they took the level premium or whether they did not. This Bill will cut that right away. We are told that some $157,000 is to be divided among them. The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry said that this money was not going to be taken out of the hands of the government but is to remain at Ottawa. The Bill states that they should have a bonus addition of this amount, either applicable to the policy to increase so much insurance, or on the other hand to reduce their premiums by so much. Now they get no money out of that; they are still hived where they were before with a policy promised, and from the general appearance of [illegible] must be compromised again and continue to be compromised. My hon. friend said—and I am quite sure he said it in all sincerity—that this money was going to be divided among them. If you take $150,000 and divide it among $8,000,000 you know what that amount will do in the way of payment or reduction of the claims, just a reduction of $20 for every thousand dollars of insurance. So that any policy-holder having taken out a policy for $1,000, and having paid four or five or six hundred dollars premiums on it, under this lovely sugar plum, coated all over with gold he will get $20, either have the benefit of it or he will get $20 added to his policy by way of additional value or $20 allowed him to reduce the premium, one reduction of $20 on a premium, and while they are taking twenty off with one hand they are jumping up a hundred on another, and the money disappears. My hon. friend said that three different classes of policy disappeared and that there was to be only one class of policy hereafter—that is the level premium. On that one policy, if the level premium policy-holders of to-day have to accept an arrangement by which these other people come in and pay a lower premium than they do, they are not going to submit to it. It is an injustice to the level premium man. If the assessment system policy-holders are allowed to come in at a low rate, it would be manifestly unfair to the straight life policy-holders. They would not accept it. Therefore to be equitable all policies must stand on the same basis.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman moved the adjournment of the debate and having moved the adjournment of the debate he cannot speak again on his own motion ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I had not finished speaking.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Bourinot lays down the rule as follows :

A member who has already spoken to a question has no right to rise again and propose an amendment or the adjournment of the House or of the debate, though he may speak again to those new questions when they are moved by other members. For the same reason, a member who has moved the adjournment of a debate cannot speak to the original question.

Therefore I take it the hon. gentleman is entirely out of order.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Will the hon. gentleman from Toronto agree to an adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I have nothing to say about it.

The SPEAKER—The point of order is well taken.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I cannot move the adjournment of the debate, but I may speak to the question.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The hon. gentleman seconded the motion to adjourn.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY. I did not speak.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Bourinot says :

A member who has moved or seconded the adjournment of the debate cannot afterwards rise to move the adjournment of the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I shall discuss that point. I claim that in the Senate there is no need of a seconder. A motion can be put by the member who proposes it and a seconder is not needed. Therefore the point cannot apply.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—But the hon. gentleman, nevertheless, seconded the motion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—This rule only applies in debates where a seconder is required. It does not apply in the House of Lords or in the Senate. The authority says :

In the upper House any Lord may submit a motion for the decision of their Lordships without a seconder. The only motion requiring a seconder by usage being that of the address in answer to the Queen's speech, but in the Commons, after a motion has been made, it must be seconded by another member, otherwise it must be immediately dropped and further debate must be discontinued when no question is before the House.

The SPEAKER—I do not think there is anything in that point ? The hon. gentleman could have made his motion without a seconder, but as there is a seconder the effect follows. My impression is that the hon. gentleman from Stadacona did not rise to second the motion and the hon. gentleman from Rothesay simply said 'Seconded by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, and I do not think the hon. gentleman can be considered as having spoken.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Bourinot says :

A member who has moved or seconded the adjournment of a debate cannot afterwards rise to move the adjournment of the House, and as a member who moved an amendment cannot speak again, so a member who speaks in seconding an amendment is equally unable to speak again upon the original question.

So the hon. gentleman is in order.

An hon. GENTLEMAN—Move an adjournment !

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I have no right to move the adjournment of the debate, because an adjournment has already been moved, without a subsequent motion, and had I a right I would forfeit my opportunity to speak on the amendment, should my proposition be negatived.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—The hon. gentleman will have the right to the floor to-morrow if he desires to speak.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—There might be an understanding that the third reading of this Bill shall take place to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That would depend upon the absent members.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I move the adjournment of the debate, and that it be the first order after third readings to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—This is sanctioned by a majority who a short time ago declined a reasonable proposition to adjourn the debate. I do not think they should be allowed to do it. It will not hurt them to have to proceed a little further with this matter. I think it would refresh the minds of hon. gentlemen if they heard the Bill read from beginning to end and perhaps they would not be so cruel about it again.

The SPEAKER—There should not be a discussion on a motion to adjourn.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It was not carried. If the House promised to be considerate I shall let them go home and sleep. I want to show the House what can be done, so that they will see that they must be more considerate than they have been.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

GOLD MINING CONCESSIONS IN THE YUKON DISTRICT.

INQUIRY.

The Order of the Day being called,

By the Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.):

That he will call the attention of the government to some of the concessions made of gold-bearing ground in the Yukon district to different persons, such as—

The Boyle concession.—Commencing near the mouth of Bonanza creek and extending up the Klondike river a distance of six miles, and embracing, according to Treadgold's own sworn statement before the Royal Commission (Judge Britton's), 40·5 square miles, 25,600 acres.

Bronson & Ray concession (Ottawa men).—According to sworn evidence at the Royal Commission, eight to nine square miles, on both limits of Bonanza creek, 5,120 acres.

Matson & Doyle concession.—Contains over three square miles of proven hillside placer ground, 1,920 acres.

Quartz creek concession (Joe Boyle again).—Contains three square miles of the best part of Quartz creek, 1,920 acres.

Hermann concession.—Embraces six square miles of territory on Gold Bottom creek, 3,840 acres.

Anderson concession.—Containing four square miles on the best part of Hunker creek, 2,560 acres.

And will ask the government have the above-named concessions been made?

If so, on what conditions?

Have the concessionnaires carried out the terms on which the concessions were made?

If so, how much has been contributed to the revenue of the Dominion by them?

If the conditions have not been complied with, will the government in all cases of non-compliance declare these concessions forfeited to the Crown, and open to the free miner under the ordinary mining regulations?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD—Is the hon. Secretary of State prepared to furnish this information?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I sent to the Department of the Interior for answers, and they tell me that all the papers were sent to the commissioner, Judge Britton, and have not been returned yet. They could not give me the information yet. They expect his report very shortly, and I shall be glad to have it brought down.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—They ought to have copies of the documents I moved for.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I thought so, but all the papers have been handed over. They were among the subjects that the commission was directed to inquire into, as to whether the concessions have been providently issued or not, or whether fraudulent representations had been made at the time of the issue.

The motion was allowed to stand until Wednesday next.

SALE OF LANDS IN THE NORTHWEST TERRITORIES.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY inquired:

For a statement showing the amount of money received by the Dominion government during the past fiscal year from the Northwest Territories:

1. For lands sold.

2. For homestead entries.
3. For hay permits and pasture lands.
4. For wood and lumber sold.
5. For registrar fees, and any other sources from which money has been received.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The following is the reply :

1. For lands sold..	$144,753 72
2. For homestead entries.. ..	199,610 00
3. For hay and grazing lands ..	17,339 20
4. For timber dues..	107,736 95
5. For registration fees..	95,335 13
5a. Miscellaneous..	17,998 00
	$582,773 00

As the revenue returns for June have not yet reached the department, it is impossible to give a statement showing the money received by the Dominion government during the past fiscal year from the Northwest Territories. The above figures represent the eleven months ended 31st May, 1904.

The answer to the question as to the amount that has been expended is, that the amount is very much larger than the total receipts, for bringing in people who made homestead entries and took up the land.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Expended for what?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Expended for immigration to the Northwest. That is in connection with the other expenditures in the Northwest.

AN INCOMPLETE RETURN.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to say, in reference to a return moved for by the hon. senator from Stadacona, that I laid the return on the table but he said there was a communication which was not included, that was a report by Dr. Potvin. I cannot find that any such report was sent in. I have inquired of the different departments and they have no record of it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would direct the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to the return I asked for some time ago respecting the steamship Neptune, which was sent last year from Halifax to Hudson Bay. I asked for a return of the names of the crew and the officers of the ship, and I should like to have the information furnished.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT— I shall make the inquiry at once.

INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

DEBATE CONTINUED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Resuming the adjourned debate on the consideration of the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to (Bill H) An Act further to amend the Insurance Act and the motion of the Honourable Mr. McMullen in amendment thereto.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I moved the adjournment of the debate with the object of facilitating the business of the House, if possible, for I believed the temperature last night was neither conducive to the health of the members nor was it of that serene nature so far as the addresses were concerned that would lead us to expect it would reach a very reasonable conclusion. This matter has now been before the Senate for quite a length of time. It was introduced by the hon. member from Rothesay, who called the attention of parliament to certain allegations made against the Mutual Reserve Fund Insurance Company of New York. It would appear from the charges which he made, and which he substantiated so far as he was concerned with letters which had been addressed to him, describing transactions the writers had had with the company, showing that they had not received that fair treatment which they had reason to expect would be accorded them by any company disposed to act fairly with its clients. Judging from the communications which he read to the House it appeared as if it were very necessary that the government of Canada should inquire into that subject. A committee was appointed at that time, and it has been in session nearly three months from time to time until now. The members of that committee have given earnest, close and serious attention to the matter before them, and though we may not see eye to eye with them in the views which they have taken of the subjects and the inquiries which they have made into the business of that company, still I believe that the motion of the hon. gentleman from Rothesay has had some good results. I am quite satisfied that it will in the end result advantageously to those people who have had reason to find fault with the management of their affairs by that company, but I do not agree at all with the Bill which was first submitted for our consideration. I looked upon it as one entirely in favour of the company and of no benefit to those who have reason to complain of their treatment by the company. The charges brought to our attention by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay were of a very serious nature, and, when the investigation had proceeded a certain distance, it appeared to me as if he had hardly said all he would have been justified in saying if those charges were established as they appeared at the outset of this investigation to have been to some extent. But I must say my view of the business of that company has been somewhat modified by the more recent evidence given respecting its transactions with its constituents. If the affairs of any insurance company doing business in Canada were to be closely investigated by a committee of parliament we would find in many of them something which would not meet with our approval. We know that they are not guided in their transactions with the public by the precept which should guide one man in his intercourse with another, to do unto others as they would that others should do unto them. We know that companies one and all are apt to take advantage of any little slip there may be on the part of the policy-holders in regard to the terms on which they pay their premiums. In many instances these people are not a class who would be acquainted with the strictness with which these companies require their business to be transacted, and we know that if they make any slip the company is very apt to take advantage of it and cancel their policies if it can be done. I have known many instances of that kind, and as we have heard a good deal during this debate of the hardships which have been incurred by widows and orphans of those who held policies in this company, and I have no doubt they are many and numerous that have suffered that way, we must bear in mind it is not in that company alone but it is the case with almost every insurance company doing business that if the policy-holder allows his premiums to lapse he is very apt to lose the insurance which his family would be entitled to at his death. The charges made by the hon. member from Rothesay showed us that this company had carried on its business in a very expensive way, that it was not to be expected, therefore, that it could succeed under the assessment plan. I have looked into the expenses and commissions paid by various companies within the Dominion, and I must say that the comparison is not so very unfavourable to the Mutual Reserve Company as we were led to believe it would be. It would occupy too much time if I referred to a number of those companies, but I will take one company within the Dominion. Take the returns as set forth in the report of Superintendent of Insurance to parliament. Every company has to make a return of its business standing at the end of the year, and that return must be sworn to, and it is published in the blue-book. Take the Connecticut Mutual Life, which is doing business in Canada to a rather limited extent. They have in the hands of the Receiver General, $111,500 which is supposed to be a sufficient guarantee for the small business they are doing in Canada. The income derived in 1900 from their general business was $8,046,743. The disbursements of that company besides death losses, endowments and surrenders, which are of course matters that they have to pay under the terms of their policies, I find were as follows :

Bonuses and commissions to agents ..	$	390,479
Salary and allowances to agents		25,249
Salaries of officers and expenses.. ..		158,588
	$	574,316
Other payments and expenditures		404,170
Taxes and fees		400,795
[illegible]		1,[illegible],285

I took this hap-hazard, in the first report of the Insurance Department I found, and the first company that met my eye. These figures show that about 17 per cent of the total income of the company was paid for bonuses, commission to agents' allowances and other expenditures for that year. Now, looking at this by itself it seems an enormous amount for a company to pay out in that way, and it is referred to in the evidence before the committee, that the Mutual Reserve Life had paid 85 per cent commission on new business obtained by their agents. We could scarcely credit that if we did not know something about insurance business generally. When we make inquiries on the subject we find that it is not an extravagant amount compared with what is paid by other companies for obtaining business throughout the Dominion. Seventy-five per cent of the first premium is a very common rate to pay for new insurance, and in some cases a good deal more is paid—I do not know but the whole of the first year's premium goes to the agent for obtaining the business. We know what those agents are doing in the different cities of the Dominion where they are seeking business. We find them located in the best and most sumptuous offices with numerous clerks. It is not to be wondered at that the insurance companies pay such very large amounts for current expenses. Looking at these facts it appears to me that some of the statements made by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay, when compared with similar charges made in other companies, are not so outrageous as they certainly seemed to be at first sight. When this Bill was first under consideration, I was not disposed to look favourably upon its provisions, but after it was referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and discussed there at considerable length and amended, I regarded it more favourably. We appointed a sub-committee, who brought in the Bill which is now before us. That Bill is somewhat abstruse perhaps, and a little difficult for laymen to understand thoroughly, but I must say that the discussion which it has elicited has done much to inform us more thoroughly as to its provisions. The hon. member for Wellington (Hon. Mr. McMullen) in discussing this matter yesterday, was so very wide apart in his remarks from what the Bill really sets out for the policy-holders, that it would appear almost to us as if he had not studied the Bill in its entirety. He spoke of certain provisions being in the Bill which it does not contain at all. He must have taken his idea of it from some other authority than the Bill itself, and I was very glad to hear the criticism of the different clauses of the Bill by the hon. member from de Salaberry. I had myself taken precisely the same view of its provisions, but he gave his statement of it in such a clear way that it was impossible for any one to misunderstand the application of the Bill. When the Senate comes to a conclusion on this matter the probability is that the Bill will be accepted without a division. I must congratulate the chairman of the committee on one statement he made last night during the discussion. A good deal was said that was not becoming to the Senate, and was different in many respects from what we have been in the habit of hearing in this chamber. I refer to the sound and fury and the lurid language in which his address was given; but there was no conclusion that the hon. gentleman came to in which I cordially concur. That was that this Bill was probably the best that could be devised, had resulted from the appointment of this committee. Entertaining that opinion, how can the chairman of the committee do otherwise than support the Bill. There are certain other amendments which were referred to by the hon. member from de Salaberry, which I believe will, if brought forward in the way I expect will certainly further improve the Bill and be a benefit to the people who have held policies in the company. It was, in the first instance, a very difficult matter for the parliament of Canada to deal with a subject of this kind, where a company was chartered with certain rights and privileges, and where, within the limits of that charter, they had made contracts both under the assessment and under the fixed premium plan. Finding some years ago that the assessment plan would lead them into bankruptcy, they took the only course open to them at that time, and increased the premiums of the policy-holders who held their policies under the assessment plan. This Bill will now be a great advantage to those who, under the strain of increased assessments allowed their policies to lapse. It will enable them to come in, if they are still in ordinary good health, and receive the equivalent of the insurance beyond what they could receive by going into any other company. It will enable others to renew the policies which had lapsed and give them advantages which I thought at one time we would not be able to secure for them under any legislation that parliament could devise. I hope this Bill will pass and that it will have the effect which we anticipate, and give relief to those poor people who have been suffering, and whose case was so ably presented by the hon. member from Rothesay, and investigated by the committee to whom the matter was referred. They have certainly given time and attention to it, perhaps much more time than necessary, much more than I think it required. They might have brought before us as witnesses a number of people who had complaints against this company, whose policies had elapsed, or who were forced out by having their premiums increased, as they supposed, unduly ; but they did not take that course.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is not too late yet.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—This session is drawing to a close, and if we expect these people to receive any benefit from legislation this Bill must be sent to the other House without delay. If this report had come in at an earlier date of this session, say five or six weeks from the time the question was first brought up, I should have been disposed to let the matter stand until the investigation was finished and we had a report from the committee ; but we are near the end of the session, and it is very important that the Bill should pass, and be sent to the other House for its approval. The investigation took a turn which, perhaps, was intended, that is to show the extravagance of the Mutual Reserve Company. That may be all very true but no matter how clearly that may be proved, what is the object of going any further with the investigation for that purpose ? Is it going to benefit the policy-holders in any way ? It is not. I believe our best course is to pass the Bill at once and let it go to the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—It was admitted yesterday by Hon. Mr. David that the Bill was prepared by Mr. Eldridge. Was there any petition presented by the policy-holders asking for the passing of that Bill ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Not one.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I believe there was no petition presented asking for the Bill, but there are policy-holders of the company in this chamber, and they ought to be better able to judge than those who are not policy-holders what is in their own interest.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Just as the hon. member for Rothesay is a policy-holder.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I am quite satisfied to take the statement of the hon. gentleman from Mille Isle (Hon. Mr. David). There are other gentlemen besides the hon. member for Rothesay who have policies in that company, and who have not said anything on the subject, one way or the other. They have left it to be dealt with by the committee and by the Senate. I may say, in reply to the hon. gentleman who asked the question, that the Bill which was presented to the House was framed by gentlemen who are supposed to be able to draft a Bill impartially, the Superintendent of Insurance and Mr. Bradshaw, a member of the Actuarial Association of Toronto. These two gentlemen, I presume, were quite able to draw up a Bill which would meet the case.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—The hon. gentleman should not leave out Mr. Eldridge.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I have not forgotten Mr. Eldridge. I was just about to allude to that gentleman, who has been before the committee of investigation for, I think, some weeks past, and who, so far as I could see, was ready to give them all the information within his power, everything they could expect to get from an officer of any company that is under investigation by a committee of the Senate. They not only had Mr. Eldridge before them, they had several gentlemen who had during the past years made serious charges against the Mutual Reserve Company of New York, and I do not know that it was very necessary that we should go away back five or ten years to hunt up charges which had been made against a company still in existence, and which, within a year or so, has had certificates from the Insurance Department of New York itself. I just happened to turn up one [illegible] dated the 15th February, 1902, and signed by Isaac Vanderpoel, chief examiner, and this same man has sworn to the statements with respect to the assets and liabilities of the company. That is just as I understand it, the assets and liabilities for that year under the assessment plan. The total assets, according to this statement, were $5,790,400, and the liabilities, that is the net present value at the time of all the policies which were running, was $5,323,515, the excess of assets, including policy liens over liabilities being $466,885.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—That takes in unpaid claims.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—That is the net amount up to that time. A man might have a policy of $10,000, but at that time it would not be worth more than fifty per cent perhaps of its face value. I know some hon. members feel that in asking these policy-holders to be reinstated by the company, the company will never pay them anything, that it is not worth anything. I have had some experience in business myself, and I know something about men who conduct business on a large scale, and I think the majority of people will agree with me, that when men have been in business for the length of time this company has been in existence, the probability is that they will continue to go on while they have such assets and have the number of policies running that has been stated and proved before the committee, to furnish them with funds for some time to come. I have no doubt at all but these policy-holders who are seeking for some relief will receive it under the Bill which is now before us. Having come to that conclusion, I shall have much pleasure in giving it my support.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—I shall give a few reasons why I am opposed to this Bill. The hon. gentleman from Charlottetown gave us an instance of the cost of insurance, by stating the case of the Connecticut Mutual. That is one of the companies that is not doing business in Canada at the present time.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—It was in 1900, the year to which the report from which I quoted related.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—They have gone out of business. I find in the report for last year, there were no new policies taken up, so they did no business here, last year. On the other hand, take the Mutual Reserve Life of New York: that company had $86,650 of unsettled claims, for the year 1903, four times as many claims as any other insurance company carrying three times the amount of insurance. I do not think that speaks very well for the Mutual Reserve. I will give some good solid facts why we should not pass this Bill (H) as it stands.

The avowed purpose of the Bill is to enable assessment policy-holders 'to obtain ordinary policies of life insurance with fixed and definite premiums and upon which the said company shall have no right to levy assessments but shall be bound to maintain the said reserve.'

That this is not the real purpose of the Bill is evident: Because any assessment policy-holder can, as the Insurance Act now stands, obtain an ordinary policy of life insurance in the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Insurance Company on which it would 'have no right to levy assessments' and 'be bound to maintain the said reserve.' The Insurance Act, chapter 124, section 42a, bearing on this point reads as follows:

> If any company licensed or registered under this Act to carry on the business of life insurance on the assessment system, files in the office of the superintendent notice of its intention after the date mentioned in the said notice to maintain, . . . the reserve required by sections 25 and 35 of this Act to be maintained by ordinary life insurance with fixed and definite premiums, such company shall with respect to all policies issued after the said date . . . . maintain for the security of the holders of the said policies the said reserve, and comply with all other provisions of this Act applicable thereto, as if it were licensed under section 4 of this Act.

The Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association filed the notice August 11, 1899, and in so doing obtained the right to write business on the legal reserve plan, but was not estopped from writing new business or taking care of its old business on the assessment plan.

The Insurance Act, section 42a, subsection 2, as it now stands provides that:

> The deposit of any such company in the hands of the minister, at the date mentioned in the notice in the preceding subsection referred to, shall be applicable to the policies issued prior to the said date and shall be dealt with in regard to such policies as if the said notice had not been given, and the provisions of this Act applicable to assessment life insurance companies (other than the provisions contained in this section) shall be applicable to the policies of the company issued prior to the said date in the same manner and to the same extent as if this section had not been passed.

Subsection 3 reads:

> Any such company shall at the time of the filing of such notice make with the minister such deposit, if any, in respect to the policies to be issued in pursuance of such notice as the Treasury Board may fix and determine.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I think we are entitled to know what the hon. gentleman is reading from.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Common sense and truth.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Is he reading from notes prepared by somebody else?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—What difference does it make ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It is against the rules of the House.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If the hon. gentleman says they are his notes, what right have we to interfere ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If the hon. gentleman would read the rules of the Senate, he would not make an assertion such as he is making, and I am within my right in making the inquiry.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman says they are his notes.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am not addressing the hon. gentleman from Victoria Division.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—It is against the rules of the House to read a speech, but politeness between hon. members should prevail.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I did not wish to raise any question about it, but simply asked for information.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I should like to ask the hon. gentleman are these his own deductions or are they from some other authority ?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The hon. gentleman has no right to ask that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Will the hon. gentleman from Toronto answer this question, is it he that prepared Bill H or Mr. Eldridge ?

Hon. Mr. KERR—I am quite prepared to answer that when the opportunity is given. I have a right to ask this question now. The hon. gentleman is reading from a statement of deductions. Are they his own deductions or somebody else's ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Some members are treated in a very privileged way, because I observe some of my hon. colleagues with copies following line for line the speech of the hon. gentleman. Why have we not also been furnished with copies ?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The hon. gentleman can read these opinions, whether they are his own thoughts or somebody else's. The hon. gentleman does not trouble the House often and he is not a trained speaker, therefore a little allowance should be made for him. I am sorry to see the most skilful debaters in the House endeavouring to stop the hon. gentleman who is speaking for the first time.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—In answer to the hon. gentleman from Toronto, I assume the full responsibility for these notes.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—That is not an answer. The question is, are these the hon. gentleman's own deductions ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman has no right to ask the question.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I am rising to a point of order which I think I have a perfect right to do. The hon. gentleman is reading from something prepared by somebody else, which he has no right to read here.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I would ask the ruling of the chair on the point of order raised by the hon. gentleman from Toronto.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—In order that the hon. gentleman of whom I am speaking may understand what my point is, I wish to say that I do not want in any sense to be understood as objecting to the hon. gentleman in reading his own composition. The rule is quite plain and reads as follows :

> The reading of written speeches which has been allowed in other deliberative assemblies has never been recognized in either House of parliament.

That is not the branch I am objecting to. If the hon. gentleman says it is his own composition I have nothing more to say about it. The rule proceeds :

> A member may read extracts from documents, but his own language must be delivered bona fide in the form of his own composition.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman did not follow the rule in replying to the speech from the Throne.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I object to the hon. gentleman reading a compilation of deductions which he has not made himself, unless he gives his own authority.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—How can the hon. gentleman state that he did not make it himself ? I do not think any hon. gentleman has the right to say the hon. gentleman is not reading his own sentiments. It is nobody's business whether remarks I am making are prepared by my historian, as long as I accept responsibility for them. and he has no right to challenge the sentiments of any hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—Strictly, according to parliamentary decorum, it was perfectly right to refer to the matter of a gentleman reading his speech, but it is done sometimes under the name of having copious notes. It is a rule that is trespassed upon. If I am allowed to express my opinion on it, I think it is a little unfortunate to make any reference to it.

Hon. Mr. KERR—That is not the question I am talking about. He is entitled to read his own speech.

The SPEAKER—I think I understand the question of order raised. The authority cited is May, a recognized authority here, and I think that the point of order is well taken. It is not a question as to whether the hon. gentleman shall be allowed to read his speech but whether he shall be allowed to read something compiled by somebody else. There are cases cited here at page 295 of May, which are really stronger than the case now before us, and if the hon. gentleman from Moncton is reading something that has been prepared by somebody else he is violating the rules of the House.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—I understand the Speaker has decided against me.

The SPEAKER—If the hon. gentleman from Moncton will state what he is reading, perhaps the hon. member from Toronto will withdraw his objection.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I have no objection to his reading, but we want the authority.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—I have some more matter. I have a letter here dated Moncton, N.B., 1904, written by a man formerly an agent of the Mutual Reserve Life Association, which reads as follows :—

Moncton, April 6, 1904.

To Senator McSweeney.

Dear Sir,—Referring to a discussion that took place in the Senate in re Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Association of New York, I may say I was one of the agents for that association and was agent also for the following associations, viz., Dominion Safety Fund Life of St. John, Mutual Relief of Yarmouth, N.S., Massachusetts Benefit of Hartford, Conn., Covenant Mutual of Galesburg, Illinois. All the above associations had the necessary deposits with the Dominion government and were licensed to do business in Canada. In taking applications, all agents explained that policy-holders were fully protected by the deposit, and that the Insurance Department at Ottawa inspected the insurance business each year, consequently there was no chance for fraud, in fact that the Insurance Department was created expressly to protect policy-holders against being defrauded. Now the facts are that the Dominion Safety Fund Life of St. John went out of business by transferring a few policy-holders to the Great West at much higher rates—the rest all lost their insurance.

The Mutual Relief of Yarmouth, N.S., went out of business, transferring what they could to the Massachusetts Benefit of Hartford, Conn., U.S.A.—the rest, those that did not transfer, lost their insurance. The Massachusetts in turn soon became insolvent and all policy-holders lost insurance. The Covenant Mutual of Galesburg, Illinois, U.S.A., went into insolvency and transferred their policy-holders to another American association that had no deposit with the Dominion government or license to do business in Canada. Canadian policy-holders would not transfer to such an association. This association sent out notices to policy-holders asking remittances after they were aware they were insolvent. The remittances sent them they say they handed over to the association they transferred to (I forget the name). I called attention of Minister of Insurance to the matter and asked if Canadian policy-holders were protected by the government deposit. He sent me the Insurance Act, but I was not sufficiently posted in law to understand it. My daughter was carrying a policy and sent them a remittance after they knew they were insolvent. She got a notice of insolvency from them the next day after sending, and they wrote her, some time after, they had handed her remittance to the American association referred to above.

You know the history of the Mutual Reserve of New York.

I held a policy in the Dominion Safety Fund Life Association of St. John when it ceased doing business, and as I would not transfer to the Great West at greatly increased rates, consequently lost insurance. I was also a policy-holder in the Yarmouth Mutual when it transferred to the Massachusetts Benefit. I refused to be transferred as they charged double rates, consequently lost insurance.

Conductor Hughes of Moncton took insurance from me for $5,000 and paid premiums regularly for seven or eight years in the Mutual Reserve of New York, and lost all.

Mrs. Benjamin Tombs also took insurance in same association and both paid till association squeezed them out. There are many others I could mention. The names of all policy-holders in each of the associations I have named can be got, if wanted, from the Insurance Department at Ottawa.

I was very glad to see this matter brought up by the Senate and will be glad to see it pursued and the insuring public informed about what protection the deposit of $50,000 and license to do business in Canada is to policy-holders. In all the cases I have mentioned it has been a positive injury, the insurance companies all publish the fact that they have made the deposit and are licensed by the Dominion government to do business, that all insurance business is audited and inspected once a year and it is impossible for insurance companies to do any loose or tricky business. Still we find they have all stopped doing business when they found it most convenient for themselves.

It is well understood that there is very little risk on lives who will pass a good medical examination for the first five years, consequently if associations can be formed and deposit made and license obtained, and run the five years until the membership is large and then stop and withdraw the government deposit, as appears to have been done in all these cases mentioned. It seems to open a door for rascality in the insurance business that should not exist.

All these associations collected about twice as much for insurance from their members as would have been necessary to carry the same amount of insurance in any of the mutual societies. These societies are not protected by the government in any way. Neither are they under the supervision of the Superintendent of Insurance. Still these societies all exist, pay claims promptly and do business honourably, and a vast amount of good. The knowledge I have about the insurance associations referred to and the way they went out of business, has caused me to think it doubtful if any policyholders of the old line companies are any better protected, or even those carrying fire insurance risks, are any better protected than were those in the associations that went out of business

I consider this an important matter and have written you very fully. (Perhaps you have noticed this.) However, there must have been millions of dollars taken out of the workingpeople of Canada by these associations, and a very large part of it went to the United States of America. Not only this, but the people of Canada have been taxed to pay salaries of a department of insurance for protection, and being confident they would be protected, took insurance and lost the amounts paid as well as insurance, and in many cases found on account of failing health they could not get insurance even if they were not too much disgusted to take chances of being pulled again.

Yours, &c.,

JOHN L. STEVENS.

As we were coming out of the committee room this morning I met Mr. Dalton, Clerk of Private Bills in the House of Commons He stated to me that he had paid $2,000 into the Mutual Reserve Fund Life in the last eight years. The assessments had increased so much that he was compelled to drop out. Since this investigation opened, I have met people who say they were squeezed out on one pretext and another, and I think it would be a great calamity for the policyholders insured now, as well as the people who might possibly take insurance, if this company were allowed to conduct the insurance business again under any license. We have enough evidence before the committee. We have been sitting for weeks past, and after what has transpired before the committee I do not think there is a province in Canada or a state in the United States that would allow that company to do business. Their record in Canada alone is that $44,000,000 of insurance has been dropped in four years. What worse record can you find than that? The Moss contract is a most outrageous contract. And Moss received $197,000 over and above what he paid out.

Subsection 4 reads:

For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section, separate and distinct registers and books of account shall be opened and kept, showing respectively all policies issued and business transacted by such company after the date mentioned in the said notice, and all policies issued and business transacted before said date; and such books and registers shall show all assets, liabilities, moneys and securities belonging or appertaining to the said respective portions of such company's business; and the assets and entire business of the said respective portions shall be kept absolutely separate and distinct; and the reserves or assets applicable to the policies issued by such company after the date mentioned in the said notice shall not be available in any way for any liability of such company arising out of any policy issued by it on the assessment plan.

Another reason why I think the Senate should not pass this Bill is because they should wait for the report of the committee appointed to investigate the affairs of the company in Canada. I think there must be something radically wrong when they want to push this Bill through. The least they could do would be to wait and let the committee report. We want to be treated fairly in that way. I am one of the committee, and at first I was not prejudiced against the company, but I am now. I have seen enough to convince me that they should not get a license in Canada. Their record is bad. I have received a letter from Andrew Snider, of Bradford, in which he says:

You may exchange your certificate, however, for a whole life non-participating policy, without medical examination, which rate will be in excess of the amount you are now being asked to pay, but it will give you a contract with an absolutely fixed rate under which the reserve will be deposited with the Dominion government, and your contract will contain cash surrender and paid-up insurance values, and you will then know definitely what amount you will be called upon to pay from year to year, instead of continuing along with the expectation of securing insurance at less than cost, with the prospect of certain increases, which might impair your future insurance, or perhaps forfeit it.

There can be no need for new legislation if this is the case. The insurance companies are not in favour of this Bill; they consider this is a Bill framed expressly for the purpose of helping the Mutual Reserve, and not for the benefit of the old line companies; and even in its amended form, I am satisfied they do not require it, and I question very much whether it would be any benefit to the policy-holders of the Mutual Reserve if they renewed their insurance. Therefore, I certainly think it would be radically wrong to pass Bill H and grant them a license. The net value (reserve) of the regular life or old line business in Canada, December 31, 1903, was $124,765, of which $84,576.63 was made up of premium notes or liens, leaving only $40,188.37 of actual cash assets deposited in Canada for the protection of the regular life or old line business, and which would be about all that would be left secure if Bill H becomes law, it being a fact that the new contracts, option 1, would have no reserve at date of issue, and the new contracts, option 2, would have a reserve made up of liens on paper and of no value as an asset. If Bill H passes as it now stands it will deprive policy-holders of their right to begin suits against the company for the recovery of damages for any cause.

This section should be amended to read: 'Nothing in this Act shall affect any suit, action or other proceedings now pending,' or that may hereafter be brought 'in respect of any assessment policy' in force prior to to the passage of this amendment.

Canadian assessment business does not stand alone. More than two-thirds of the business of the Mutual Reserve Fund Association is in exactly the same position as is its assessment business in Canada, and is all treated and valued in the same way by the Insurance Department of the State of New York without regard to the country in which it exists.

Q. Hon. Mr. WOOD. "This makes no difference between the Assessment Insurance and Legal Reserve?"

'A. We do not keep accounts separately as with any State or with any Country, excepting as far as the expenditures in that country are concerned, and the balance of the contributions subject to the general funds of the Company towards the general expenses, and the meeting of the general expenses, and the meeting of the general expenditures, and towards the accumulation for the general protection of all the business of the Company." Geo. D. Eldridge, vice-president and actuary, No. 4, p. 22.

"The Canadian policy holders have the protection of every other dollar of the company's assets no matter where situated." Geo. D. Eldridge, vice-president and actuary, No. 3, p. 80.

The fact that the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association reincorporated and is an 'old line' company did not alter the relationship of the assessment business in Canada any more than it did the assessment business in any other country. It has advantages now which it will not have if 'Bill H' becomes law. The company has made every effort within its power to induce assessment policy-holders to change their insurance to the regular life plan, and at the end of five years about 75 per cent of the total insurance in force is on the assessment plan still.

The annual mortuary premiums on this certificate, or policy of insurance, after the same has been in force for fifteen years from its date, shall not include any further contributions to the reserve or emergency fund, nor shall the net amount of such annual mortuary premiums thereafter exceed the pro rata annual mortuary premiums required by the actual mortuary experience of the association, or the amount called for by the Actuaries' Tables of Mortality. Provision 7, page 2, Mutual Reserve Policy, issued 1888.

'Death claims shall be a first charge on all moneys realized from assessments, and no deduction shall be made from any such death on any account whatsoever. Insurance Act, section 39, subsection 4.

The Mutual Reserve Fund Life Insurance Company now has the right to do business as an old line and as an assessment company in Canada. The members and the company are free to transfer from the one plan to the other.

The cost is limited by contract to an amount not to exceed the Actuaries' Table of Mortality or the actual mortality experience of the association as a whole.

All approved claims must be paid in full.

The deposits for the protection of Canadian policy-holders cannot be withdrawn.

The Canadian assessment policy-holders do not stand alone now any more than they ever did, and 'have the protection of every dollar of the company's assets no matter where situated.' The Canadian assessment policy-holders are in a much better position under the law as it now stands than they will be if the proposed amendment to the Insurance Act passes.

The real purpose of 'Bill H' is, not to provide 'relief' for policy-holders, but to give the Mutual Reserve a new lease of life and a certificate of health and of good conduct from the parliament of Canada.

That it is the company and not the policy-holders that will be benefited by the proposed amendment to the Insurance Act appears :

(a.) It will authorize the company to put a lien on all assessment policies in Canada without the consent of the insured, the authority for doing so being 'Bill H' and article 7, sec. 2, of its by-laws.

This will reduce the amount actually insured by hundreds of thousands of dollars insurance without actually reducing the cost to the insured a single dollar.

(b.) If 'Bill H' becomes law, as it now stands it will release the whole of the deposit now held for the protection of Canadian assessment policy-holders and hand it over to the company. The policy-holders will get no part of it in cash under any of the options. The so-called 'dividend' is not to be paid to the insured in cash but in 'paid-up insurance' to 'be deducted from the amount of the lien,' or to be 'applied to reduce the yearly renewable term premiums.' See paragraph (d), page 3, 'Bill H.'

Having obtained the release of the deposit now held for the protection of assessment policy-holders in Canada the company, by continuing to write new business, however small, until the so-called 'dividend' was paid, as it can be, without the insured receiving a single dollar in cash, could cease doing new business in Canada and withdraw the whole deposit in Canada other than the amount held for the protection of its regular life or old line business. See section 5, page 4. 'So long as the company is undertaking in Canada new contracts of insurance,' &c.

If 'Bill H' becomes law it will at once transform the whole assessment policies in Canada into new contracts and reduce the amount insured by hundreds of thousands of dollars in 'liens' provided for under article 7, section 2, of the by-laws of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Insurance Company. Under the contract, so changed, no policy-holder can ever be certain of the amount payable under his policy when it becomes a claim.

Article 7, section 2.—By-Laws.

'If the net value of the funds which any class existing at the date of reincorporation of this Company under Sec. 52 of the Insurance Laws * * * shall be determined by the actuary of the Company to be less in amount at any time than the reserve required by these By-Laws and the policy contracts of said class, of which the same (By-Laws) form a part, or by-law, each certificate or policy of said class shall be chargeable with an amount limited to its equitable share of such deficiency, to be determined by the actuary of the Company, which amount may stand as an interest-bearing loan upon the security of such reserve, as provided in section 5 of this article, constituting a lien against the insurance under each such certificate or policy, and any dividends or surplus accruing thereon, which lien may, however, at the election of the member of policy holder, be paid in cash and cancelled.'

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If the hon. gentleman is reading from a document which is not his own, I shall rise to a point of order and I do it with considerable diffidence. I appreciate the right of free speech in the Senate as much as any hon. gentleman, but the reading of it will appeal to any hon. gentleman in this Senate, if it is permitted with reference to the proceedings before the House. If hon. gentlemen can rise in their places and read documents either in favour of or against legislation which we may be considering, it is the same as importing into this House any outsider and permitting him to address the House. The point of order is stated at page 460 of Bourinot as follows :—

Nor is it in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or other communications, whether printed or written, emanating from persons outside of the House and referring to or commenting on or denying anything said by a member, or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the House.

That is to say no document can be read from any person outside of the House referring to proceedings within the House and, on the ground which I have mentioned, the reason of the rule is quite logical. The reason I raise the point of order at this juncture is not so much to suppress what my hon. friend has said, as to suppress anonymous letters which have been read in very great numbers.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Has the hon. gentleman a right to make a speech on the point of order ?

Hon Mr. LOUGHEED—I am speaking to it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Will the hon. gentleman state the anonymous letters which have been read ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I heard letters read without knowing from whom they came.

The SPEAKER—Let the hon. gentleman state his point of order. This is the House and not the special committee.

Hon. Mr LOUGHEED—This House is composed of some eighty odd members, and while eighty of them are willing to accord to an hon. gentleman a reasonable degree of time to address this House, yet they do humbly implore that a reasonable time should be given to them to express themselves on any questions which are properly before the House, and while I appreciate the wisdom that may fall from the hon. gentleman from Victoria division, yet I do claim to have the right to express my own opinions, notwithstanding the adverse opinions he may have upon the same subject. I do say that the dignity of this House should assert itself in suppressing the reading of numerous letters from all parts of this Dominion, dealing with the subject which we are investigating, and which is on inquiry before the House, and when we cannot possibly examine the persons who have written the letters. For instance no one in any deliberative body would dream of permitting anonymous letters to be read with impunity without having the opportunity of examining the parties who have written them.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—I do not think I read any anonymous letters

Hon. Mr LOUGHEED—I acquit my hon. friend from Moncton of having read any anonymous letters. What I had reference to was a number of letters that in the earlier stages of this discussion were read before the House, and have appeared upon the debates. I do appeal to hon. gentlemen if it is not inconsistent with the dignity of this House that letters should be read which do not come from any responsible source, or sources of which we know nothing. I appeal to hon. gentlemen who are supporting the inquiry asked for by my hon. friend from Rothesay, if it is not in keeping with the dignity of this House that only documentary evidence should come before it as will permit the House to make a close examination into the source from which it has come and weighing its value either before the committee of investigation or otherwise; but I would point out again that the reading of such articles referring to proceedings before this House is entirely out of order.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The hon. gentleman who has just spoken knows the custom in this House, and knows that hon. members continuously read extracts from papers and nobody ever believes them. It was only yesterday the leader of the opposition read a report of some speech made in England. It is continually done, and a great deal of allowance is made to the hon. gentlemen making their speeches. They quote from books and former speeches to make up their argument. and no one knows that better than my hon. friend. They never express their own opinion. They express the opinion of jurists of two or three hundred years ago; they form their diagnosis on the opinions given by other people, and it is not exactly the fair thing that young members of this House should be stopped by an objection of that kind, because this has been the practice for years and hon. members have been allowed the greatest liberty. The hon. Speaker knows that as well as I do.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The point the hon. gentleman has mentioned is well taken, but he did not appreciate the point which I raised. The point of order is that no document written by an outsider referring to a debate before the House can be read by a member in the House. An hon. member is at liberty to read a newspaper article and ask for an explanation.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—If my hon. friend saw an article in the newspaper with reference to himself he would read it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am referring to a debate before the House.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—The hon. Speaker has not given his decision on the point of order. I think that matter should be decided so that we may know what position we are in.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER—It strikes me that the first question to be decided would be whether the speech the hon. gentleman is making had been prepared by himself.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Or his secretary.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER—We have nothing to show that. There is nothing to show that it has not been prepared by the hon. gentleman himself. We take it that the speech has been prepared, and he ought to be allowed by the House to read a speech on such a difficult technical question as this. I do not see why the House would not allow him to do so. The rule is that a member cannot read his speech. We find the following in Bourinot:

> Members may, however, make use of notes in delivering speeches.

That is the rule, and it has always been done, and I do not know why we should be so strict to-day. Since I have been here I have seen it done many a time. At any rate the hon. gentleman said when interrupted that he was reading from copious notes. You have to take his word for it, and if he is reading copious notes he is following the true doctrine and should be allowed to do it.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—When this question was first raised by the hon. member from de Salaberry, my question to the hon. gentleman from Moncton was as to whether these deductions had been compiled by himself or by some one else.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—No, the hon. gentleman is entirely wrong.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I should like the statement of the hon. gentleman himself on that point. It was suggested to me, and I knew nothing about the matter before, and I only make the inquiry now because it will enable the hon. gentleman to put the matter right himself. It was suggested to me afterwards that this document was being read in violation of the rules, a prepared statement, made up partly of deductions and partly of statements of fact and partly supposed argument, prepared by a witness who has been examined before the committee——

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—And whose statement would not be received in this House at all, although it was received before the committee. I put the matter to the hon. gentleman, and I know whatever statement he makes about it the House will accept.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Who is the hon. gentleman's informant?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I quite admit that, as a general rule, it is not desirable that members should read their speeches closely from notes, though I have a distinct recollection of such noted men as the Hon. Edward Blake reading his entire speech in the House of Commons in the opening of parliament from beginning to end, never taking his eye off the manuscript. I have a distinct recollection of Mr. Chapleau reading his speech from beginning to end—a speech that lasted for four hours—in the House of Commons. It was a courtesy that was extended to him as a prominent member of the House. Nobody ever challenged him. As a rule, there is always a certain latitude allowed to new men in the House of Commons and the Senate, and it should be so. My hon. friend has not had a parliamentary experience, and I think this is his second or third speech. As a matter of courtesy to him we might have overlooked this question. We know the point raised by my hon. friend. He may be right or wrong. My hon. friend from Moncton stated that he assumed the responsibility for what he is reading, and even if it was prepared with his assistance and under his eye, and with his sanction, I should like to know what member of the House has not received assistance in preparing his speech. I should like to know who prepares all the speeches he makes himself? He quotes from speeches delivered before, and obtains extracts, puts them together, and makes speeches himself. Owing to the fact that my hon. friend from Moncton is not accustomed to addressing the House, he may be compelled to keep his eye more closely on the manuscript than he would if he had more extended experience, and I think that the latitude which is usually accorded to young members should be extended to him.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not a question of courtesy at the present moment. The question before the chair is simply whether the hon. gentleman from Moncton is in order or not, and the appeal on behalf of the hon. member from Wellington is not a question that the Speaker could consider for a moment. If the question be raised that a member of the Senate is not in order, the Speaker has but one duty to perform, and that is to decide whether he is in order or not. The side issue raised, as to the experience or inexperience of members, has nothing whatever to do with it. What the hon. gentleman from Wellington says is quite true. I remember when I occupied a seat on that side of the House I introduced a Bill consolidating the whole of the bankruptcy law, and I read the whole of it, and I did it for this reason : When I rose I stated that the character of the Bill was such that I could not commit all the facts to memory, and I asked the indulgence of the House to do so, which was granted. The question of order was not raised. Had it been raised, all the Speaker could have said would be that the hon. gentleman must deliver his speech, and not read it. I need not say that the hon. gentleman—I heard him make the remark—took the responsibility for his speech himself. That is very fair, but had he rose and said he had a statement in his hand, of which a number of hon. gentlemen have copies, (I have it in my desk, and read it very carefully, a couple of days ago), it would have been different. We know very well by whom it was prepared. Had the hon. gentleman said that he was in a position to lay certain facts before the House, and asked the indulgence of the House, I do not suppose the question would have been raised ; but, under the circumstances, there is but one duty for the Speaker to perform, to decide the point of order and abide by it, and not waste the time of the House in continually pleading for concessions which have not been asked.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I was the party who raised this discussion by asking the hon. member from Moncton from what source he was reading, and if the hon. gentleman had answered that he was reading from a speech prepared by himself, I am sure nobody would have dreamed of objecting, but there is an impression, which has been confirmed by the hon. leader of the opposition, that this document which the hon. gentleman has been reading, is a statement copies of which had been distributed, amongst a number of the members of this House, and is a statement prepared by one of the witnesses who has been in attendance before the committee, and who has had any amount of quarrel and litigation with the Mutual Reserve company. Surely we are entitled to know whether this is so or not? If it is so, surely nobody will pretend that it would be proper for us to listen to any document of the kind, or to import any such documents into the discussion. Are we to understand that I would be at liberty at the evening session, or to-morrow, to have an answer prepared by Mr. Eldridge, and read such a document to the House ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman has already had one prepared by him. He read one in the committee prepared for him.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon——

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman said so.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman is not speaking in accordance with the fact. I affirm here, as a member of this House, that I had no communication whatever with Mr. Eldridge outside of the committee, and that I never asked Mr. Eldridge to prepare any document or statement of any kind, except what I asked him in the committee room, and I ask the hon. gentleman to take back his assertion, which is not according to the facts.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I state it fairly and distinctly, and my confreres in the committee I know will support me.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman must not refer to what has taken place in the committee.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I say the hon. member had a paper prepared for him by Mr. Eldridge which was read in committee to-day. His answer is, that there was nothing prepared for him by Mr. Eldridge, except what he asked before everybody else. That exception may cover it. I simply state what took place in the committee, and I will be borne out by the members of the committee who were present to-day.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman has said that there was a document prepared by Mr. Eldridge and read by me in the committee. I say it is not in accordance with the fact, and I repeat the statement that I have never had any communication with

Mr. Eldridge outside of the committee room, and that all documents which have been prepared, have been prepared when I asked him as a member of the committee to prepare such a document. It was in the committee and never outside of it, and I ask the hon. member to withdraw his assertion.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I will not withdraw one word of it, because I can prove it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I appeal to the Speaker of the House, and ask that the hon. member be ordered to take back the assertion which he has made. He is bound to accept my statement.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I think there is a little misunderstanding——

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have raised a question of order.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The document to which the hon. member from Rothesay evidently refers, was a document that Mr. Eldridge swore that he had prepared at the suggestion of Senator Béique, and he handed the document over to him to look at. The senator took it and looked over the columns one after another, and handed the paper back to Mr. Eldridge. The committee understood it had been prepared under the direction, or at the request of Mr. Béique, and he read from it. Now, I suppose, that is the document my hon. friend has referred to, and when the hon. gentleman understands that is what was referred to, it modifies the position.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have made my statement to the Senate, and in the face of that statement the hon. member from Rothesay has risen in his seat and repeated the assertion, challenging the statement I made, and I say he is not in order in stating anything of the kind. He is bound to accept my statement and withdraw his.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I do not know what to make of my hon. friend. It seems to me, when you get in with so many lawyers there is so much hair-splitting you do not know where you are. The statement which I made, and which I stand by, is what the member from Wellington has just explained in his way, and which is my way also, and which I tell the House will be corroborated by the rest of the committee.

If there is anything to be taken back, I do not know what it is.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—I am sorry I stirred up all this tempest.

The SPEAKER—Two questions of order have been raised. Due regard to the dignity of the House would require that these questions of order, which have been raised in a formal way, should not be allowed to slide out of sight. It is a matter for the House to say whether I should decide or not.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Chair ! Chair !

The SPEAKER—There was a question raised, I think, by the hon. member from Calgary. There is no doubt about the rule. The hon. gentleman from Toronto has read an authority on the same point from May. Bourinot lays down just the same doctrine at page 458, that there should be no written speeches, and for the reason, as stated by Fox, that if the practice of reading written speeches should prevail, members might read speeches which were written by other people, and the time of the House be taken up considering the arguments of persons who are not deserving of attention. The hon. gentleman cannot read a speech. In the present instance, it was stated expressly by the hon. gentleman who raised the question of order, that he would not object to the hon. gentleman from Moncton reading his own speech, but he did object to his reading a statement prepared by somebody else, and that it is clearly out of order. In May, the Speaker said if that were allowed, people outside would be able to make speeches by proxy, and it would lead to a great abuse. With respect to the other point raised just now by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, there was a difference between the statement made by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay, and the statement made by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry. I understood the hon. gentleman from Rothesay to say that the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry had, in the committee, this morning read a statement prepared for him by one of the witnesses. The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry stated it was never prepared for him, and that what had been prepared was prepared at the instance of the committee.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE. No, not at the instance of the committee.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry said he had had no conversation or intercourse with the witness, except at the meeting of the committee, and whatever was asked for by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry at the meeting of the committee was practically asked for by the committee.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—No.

The SPEAKER—The statement of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, apart altogether from his personal character, must be received by the House, and of course by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay. It is for the House to deal with the refusal of the hon. gentleman to withdraw his assertion.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I could show from the records—

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The statement of facts, so far as the committee is concerned, is this—

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—State the point of order.

The SPEAKER—The incident as to the remarks in the committee is closed, unless the House wishes to reopen it.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The leader of the opposition raised a point of order which, I think, is of as much importance as any raised today, and that is making reference to proceedings in committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to have that point of order settled. The violation of the rule that guides debating has led to all this difficulty, and if I might be allowed to refer to the debate of last night, the whole night was taken up in discussing something that we should not have discussed at all, that is, the proceedings in the committee. We had not the report here, and yet the speeches until 11 or 12 o'clock at night, were devoted almost exclusively to what took place in the committee. My point is, and I hope that members in future will take the responsibility of calling attention to the fact when the rule is broken, that a member has no right to refer to proceedings in committee, in debates in this House, until all the documents are before the House.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman has stated the rule correctly.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I regret exceedingly the hard sayings and disorder which have originated in the discussion of this important question. I feel that it is a question far-reaching in its effects. If we carry this Bill in its present form, we must more or less weaken the position in which many other of the important insurance companies occupy at the present time. Our desire should be at least to govern ourselves that no reflection may go forth to the country, in reference to our insurance institutions. Many people look upon life insurance as a very important part of the provisions made for themselves and for their families after them, and that being the case we should do nothing to reflect upon the insurance companies. One hon. gentleman this afternoon stated, that if the business of any insurance company had been investigated as closely as that of the Mutual Reserve it would be found to have been doing wrong. Is that a fair insinuation to spread broadcast through the country? Is the House in a position to say that such is the case? People ought to be careful as to the statements they make here. They go not only to the House but over the whole country, and produce effects injurious or beneficial, according to the character of the statements made. I feel, therefore, that if I attempt to make statements in this House they should be strictly in accordance with the evidence that has been produced. We have been told that we have no right to mention what has occurred in the committee, until the committee has reported. No doubt that is the proper course, but who is to blame for the violation of the rule? We are perfectly prepared to go on, and do our utmost to carry on the investigation, so that we might be in a position to act intelligently and prudently in the consideration of the Bill now before the House. Had we that opportunity? Did we have it when we desired to have this Bill delayed, so that we might have the report of the committee before us? What were we told? They said they were anxious to get the Bill before the Banking and Commerce Committee. Those who are opposed to the Bill, for the sake of assisting them, withdrew their opposition and allowed it to go before the Banking and Commerce Committee. After it had been before them, and was reported back to this House, we supposed we would be permitted to discuss the Bill, in accordance with the usages which govern the second reading of any Bill. Were we permitted ? No. It was moved by the promoter of the Bill, with all haste, for the purpose of getting it before the committee of the whole House. Had it gone to committee, we would have been held down closely to the rules, that we had no right to discuss anything but the clauses under consideration. Was that fair to those who were opposed to the principle of the Bill ? Was it proper to try and put us in that position so that we would be compelled to discuss the Bill clause by clause, and after all the clauses were passed we might endorse the preamble ? I appeal to the House, that we have not been properly treated. Let us get the report of the Select Committee. I am prepared to do my utmost to make this Bill as efficient as possible, in the interest of the policy-holders. We know that many of the policy-holders have not been treated fairly by that company. We have a sworn statement to that effect before the committee, and that evidence has been reported. The reports that we have had also, show that if there has not been actual wrong-doing, there has been reckless extravagance, imprudence and waste of the money of the policy-holders on the part of the management. That being so, what is our duty ? To give the company a new lease of life ? To let them go before the public and say : We went to parliament, we had a searching investigation, all the evidence that could be brought against us was elicited, every act of ours since we became an insurance company was examined, and here we are with a clean character, and we ask you to do what the Senate of Canada has done for us, give us a clean Bill and let us go and see whether we will do any better in the future than we have in the past.' Is there a single member of the committee who can contend that extravagance has not been proved before the committee ? Every one must admit that the directors of the company have transacted their business in a way to reflect discredit upon them. Further than that they are holding forth the necessity of passing this Bill, for what ? Do they pretend to say that they could not, if they had so desired, after the Bill was passed in 1899, carry into effect the various policies they had issued before that ? They are perfectly well aware that all the advantages the Bill would give them could be carried into effect under the charter they received at that time. Why, then, should it be necessary that we should be fighting these battles when they have every opportunity to accomplish that which they are now, under this new Bill, asking us to endorse ? It would seem to me there must be something behind the scene ; that it is merely a desire to so frame the Bill that they could carry on the old line business, instead of the new line business. If it be true that they could have carried on the business under the charter which they received in 1899, why are they here ? I have heard some say, ' Oh, it was not their doing, the member for Rothesay raised a question in the House here and they had to defend themselves.' That may or may not be true. but if it was his doing, bringing the matter before the House, will any of you tell me that there was not ample justification for the course he has pursued ? Instead of being accused of doing this, that and the other, the country will say he did a noble, honourable and straightforward act. Can you pretend to say that the people that insured under this provision with the Mutual Reserve, have not just reason to feel that they have been badly treated, and therefore ought to have some redress ? The hon. gentleman, instead of being open to the charge of being meddlesome, will be congratulated by widows and orphans throughout Canada and even in the United States for having on the floor of this House striven to the best of his ability, to protect them. The question arises, if that be so, what ought we to do in the matter ? Under the assessment system, amended in 1899, this company could enter into the various lines of insurance . They went to the people and asked them to transfer from the old to the new system. They tell us that they succeeded in getting about twenty-five per cent of the total amount of their insurance to transfer. The remainder refused. Can you blame them ? If you were placed in their position would you deserve blame for refusing to transfer ? Would you be able to say that you had confidence in them, after the experience of the past ? If twenty-five per cent, under various representations and inducements, and a great amount of sophistry, were induced to enter the fold with the wolves, what became of the seventy-five per cent ? Will any one say that seventy-five per cent of the policy-holders did not know their own business, and that they must, perforce, be compelled to enter into this insurance company, when by their own free-will, they refuse to do so? Are you prepared to vote away the rights and liberties of seventy-five per cent of the policy-holders? Are you prepared to say that they shall not continue the old assessment policy in the future as in the past ? Do you think it is a good thing that there should be retroactive legislation ? We know that ex post facto legislation is dangerous. We all know that to attempt to coerce people to enter into an obligation that they do not feel a desire to accept is not a principle of free British institutions.

Are we by our legislation to deprive those seventy-five per cent of the rights that they may have under their contract with this company ? I say that that is a wrong principle. I do not believe there is an hon. member in this House who will vote to deprive these people of the liberty of acting in this matter in the way they desire to act. Again, what right have we to legislate in the manner we are asked to do ? We have no right to do it. People's liberties are more important to us. Because somebody had insured in a company, and because somebody, forsooth, was not able to keep up his payments on his policy, and is therefore liable to lose a little money, should we turn round and injure seventy-five per cent for the benefit of the minority of those who have insured in the company ? I heard my hon. friend saying that unless we passed this Bill there would be nothing left for the policy-holders. He has no right to say to one out of seventy-five per cent that he should have legislation in his individual interest, while the others are deprived of the same privilege. Let us for the moment consider the Bill as it is presented to us. Wherein is the advantage of that Bill ? Why is that Bill forced upon this House in the manner in which it is being forced upon this House ? Why should it be considered so important that that Bill should be rushed through in the manner in which it is being rushed through ? Is there a reason for it ? Is there any justification on the part of the promoters of the Bill that such should be the case ? If the majority of those who were insured were petitioning parliament here, and asking for legislation whereby they could get some relief, then I could understand members introducing a Bill and trying to carry it into effect, but where is the appeal from the country ? Now and then, perhaps, we may have a member of parliament who is asking for some legislation, but where is the appeal from the great mass of the people and the policy-holders—those who are most interested, and perhaps many of them more interested than some of the members of this House—where is the appeal from them ? Where is the mandate from those who are affected by this legislation ? I cannot feel that there is any justification in an act of this kind. If there had been such a desire that they should be changed and become part and parcel of an insurance company such as the New York Mutual Reserve is trying to impose upon us now, the facts have gone forth to every portion of the Dominion of Canada that the company are asking for legislation of that nature, and where are the appeals from the people for it ? We are asked to interfere with private contracts and private rights that have been existing for ten or fifteen years. Have we a right to do it without the people asking for it ? Many of them say they want to continue their assessment policies in the future as they have in the past. Are we to turn around and say : 'No, you cannot do it. We are going to legislate you out of your rights, and deprive you of the liberties you had, when you entered into a contract with this company.' Is that the course that this Senate, in the 20th century, is going to adopt ? Is that the course they are going to establish as a precedent to govern them in the future ? Are we to have members from different parts of the country, introducing legislation here and forcing seventy-five per cent of the people to do something to which they object ? I do not believe that that is the feeling of hon. members of this House. I do not believe that that is the feeling that we ought on this occasion to be governed by, and I must again ask, why this haste? My hon. friend last evening said that there was a statement made by my hon. friend from Wellington that was not borne out by facts, and he said he had no right to introduce it, unless the select committee had reported upon it. Who was to blame for it? Was it my hon. friend? Did he introduce this Bill? Did he try to hurry it through, and without discussion send it to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, so as to get ahead of the endorsation or disapproval of the select committee? No. It was not he. It was the promoter of this Bill, the one who was the father of Bill H, who comes here and tries to deprive the people of this country, or 75 per cent of them, from having this kind of policy that they so desire. I congratulate him, I congratulate this House, that they should feel that it was necessary that a thing of this kind should be done. Now, sir, let us consider for a moment what this Mutual Reserve Society is. You remember perhaps some years ago—and it is a matter of history—that they entered into negotiations with another society that was doing a similar business here in Canada, a society called the P. P. I. Insurance Company of St. Thomas. Some hon. senators will know full well what that society was. Ultimately the trustees of that society, through some means or other, entered into negotiations for the carrying of the business that they had been doing. In the committee, it was sworn to by the third vice-president of the Mutual Reserve that they had agreed, provided certain things were done by the P. P. I. Society, that they would give to the P. P. I. Society 10 per cent of the whole amount of insurance on their policies. The P. P. I. at that time had about twelve millions of life insurance. They were doing business upon the assessment principle, the same as the New York Mutual Reserve was. They had about twelve million dollars of business, which, if the New York Mutual Reserve had carried out their part of the contract, would have given to the trustees of the P.P.I. $120,000. In the committee, Mr. Eldridge stated that he had negotiated this agreement between the P. P. I., and the Mutual Reserve. He said that seven sharper men he had never met in his life, in his transaction of business, than the Canadians with whom he negotiated the deal. I, in my simplicity asked him what amount he had paid the P. P. I. for the transference of the business. He stated that if they had carried out what they agreed to carry out, they would have paid ten per cent on the amount of policies transferred to the New York Mutual Reserve. 'Well,' I said, 'That is hardly an answer. Did you or did you not pay them?' He refused to answer me. Now this is sworn testimony in the committee. I ask you in all fairness, was it not a proper question to ask him? Was it not a matter that the people in the locality where the P.P.I. were carrying on business should have known? I urged upon him the necessity of letting us know what they paid or whether they gave anything or not. I have the document here, and I can read the agreement whereby they entered into the contract with the people, but what did they get? They got twelve million of business. According to their own statement, they did not pay one single dollar for the business that they received, or the expenses of working up the twelve million of insurance. Although they accepted the insurance as right and proper insurance, they refused to pay a single dollar. While they were paying Mr. Moss $350 a week, they did not pay the people of St. Thomas or in that locality one single cent, because they did not carry out the terms of the agreement. What were the terms of the agreement? The terms were that they should pay the P.P.I. to transfer this amount of business, twelve million dollars, and that they were to give them as assessment eight dollars per thousand, and two dollars for expenses. You can easily understand that they made a pretty good bargain. If on the part of the P. P. I., and if on the part of the New York Mutual Reserve a villainous transaction suggested at that time, had been agreed upon and entered into, and ratified, and the money paid over, what would have been the result? The result would have been, as Mr. Eldridge admitted, and as his lawyer told him, that he would have been placed behind the bars. Well, the bars had holy terrors for them, but their consciences did not prevent the transaction. They were more elastic, and more easily gotten over, than the fear of going behind the bars, and they said they did not carry out the agreement for fear they would be indicted according to the laws of New York. Now, this was a transaction with this insurance company that my hon. friends are desirous to give a new habiliment, a new make-up, so that they can go on and transact business in the future. I congratulate them highly indeed upon all advantages they may be able to draw out of that society, if their actions in the future should be anything like they have been in the past, and I can sympathize with them that their prospects will be very poor indeed, to carry out these agreements. If they failed to fulfil their agreements in the past, are you to expect them to do any better in the future? If we read the Bill carefully, and I suppose, hon. gentlemen, I shall be permitted to read some of the clauses of the Bill without a point of order being raised by any hon. gentleman, we shall find that it is a very different Bill from what it was when introduced by the hon. gentleman from Toronto, and if you look carefully at the various clauses of the Bill, you will conclude that the Bill is something very unusual. It says that the company may obtain a license under the Insurance Act. Have they not now a license under the Insurance Act? Were they not licensed before? Was it necessary that this Bill should be passed for the purpose of giving them a license under the Insurance Act? If you look at the Insurance Act, and at this Bill as amended, you will find that they had that right in 1899, and the Bill upon the face of it is a fraud.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—My hon. friend says 'hear, hear.' They say it is a public Bill, and yet from first to last, every line, every clause, every arrangement, every principle, if it has any principle at all, is in the direction of the New York Mutual Reserve Fund Insurance Company. What other company is affected by it? What other insurance society is affected by it? Any of the fraternal societies? Any other society than the New York Mutual Reserve; and if it be the New York Mutual Reserve alone, then it should have been introduced as a private Bill, subject to the ordinary fees, and let it go through the House under the rules governing all private Bills. We know what this company have been in the past, and we have heard what they propose to be under this Bill. It refers to the rights of the existing assessment policy-holders. Now, what are you going to do with the rights of the existing policy-holders? You are asked to pass a Bill whereby they may be deprived of those important rights. Instead of giving them rights, you are seeking to take away the rights which they are entitled to, therefore I say that the Bill which my hon. friend has introduced is a fraud, as it does not carry out that which it is intended to carry out. A great deal of stress has been placed upon the fact that policies which have lapsed for ten years may possibly be revived. What is the meaning of that? How revived? Could they not take the same amount of money and go to any line insurance company and have a life policy issued with a less amount payable annually, than would be payable under this Bill? Then they say that policy-holders will not have any of the dividends. Where are the dividends to come from? They say they take $152,000 of the deposit. But how are they going to get it until they place the reinsured under the Act? They dare not touch a single dollar of it so long as the assessment policies remain in force, and is there not a reason why they are coming to this legislature? And what is the purpose? It is to get control of the $152,000 out of which they say they are going to pay dividends to the different plans of insurance as brought forward in this Bill. Then they say furthey: 'You do not need to have an examination by a medical man in the future. All you have to do is to certify yourself upon the form presented to you by the company.' What is that form to be? Do any of you know what that form will be? You will find that the form will be made so stringent and so severe that you might better go before the crankiest doctor in creation and be examined rather than submit to the plans they will propose to you, and further, if you certify that you have been in good health, they will search from one end of the country to the other to find if you have not been sick with influenza or something, and they will thereby refuse to pay your insurance if you should happen to die.

My idea of this is that if you have to certify, that certificate has to be approved by the society before you could possibly be allowed to come back into the fold. Not only that, but you are to get no dividends, and, as the hon. gentleman from Wellington stated when making his remarks upon this Bill, it matters not if some of the policy-holders had been paying for ten years, and others not paying at all, all that the latter would be deficient in would be just the dividends? What is the dividend? Fifteen or twenty per cent upon the thousand dollars—the wonderful dividend—and I want to know further, and I should like the promoter of the Bill to show where the $152,000 is to come from? They say they will take it out of the $228,000 deposit now in the hands of the government, and the balance of the $228,000 is to remain on deposit. Who furnishes the $152,000, what is to become of it? They say it is to go in dividends. Will the society in New York furnish it, or must it be taken out of the Receiver General's hands and used? If it is taken out of the Receiver General's hands what will be the effect? There will be that much less security for the policy-holders than you have to-day. It will be much better to put the company in liquidation and let them pay up their claims, and satisfy as far as they can, those they have wronged, than to come to their rescue, and grant relief for the wrongs they have committed. It seems to me our duty is perfectly plain. We know full well that these policy-holders have been robbed. We know full well that they are not at the door of the Senate asking for this Bill. Many of the insurance companies and many of those who look upon life insurance as the only means of making provision for their old age, will be deterred from doing so, and you will be doing a lasting injury to those people. Therefore I have no hesitation in saying that the present Bill is not in the interest of the people, and ought not to be passed. How can we conscientiously enact a retroactive law, whereby you are depriving people of their rights and privileges. I say it is wrong. I say that no judge upon the bench will sanction such a course as hon. gentlemen are pursuing here, and if these people are not willing to come in to this new scheme of their own accord, I say you have no right to coerce them and bring them in against their will.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I should like to say to the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry that whatever I might have said in the heat of the moment I had no desire to say anything offensive.

The SPEAKER. It being six o'clock I leave the chair.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—When the House rose for recess, I was endeavouring to point out some reasons why I felt it was not in the best interests of the policy-holders of the New York Mutual Reserve to be reinstated under and through the management of that association. I was trying to show that their dealings in the past would not guarantee the confidence that was necessary to place in an insurance company in the future to transact business in Canada. I may have failed to make that very clear. Nevertheless I felt sincerely that the course I was taking was in the best interests and for the welfare of the people of the Dominion of Canada, and that their actions, adverse to what they had agreed upon in the past, were such that we, as citizens, could no longer have any confidence in them, and I hope I shall be able to show later on, that that confidence was misplaced and that the company were to blame for the manner in which the people were treated. I also tried to show that the Bill as now prepared, whether prepared by Mr. Eldridge or by somebody else, does not secure those who had been paying into the New York Mutual Reserve for a number of years, as they ought to be protected. It certainly was a very unseemly thing, that a member of the Senate, who introduced this Bill, should have recourse to the officers of the very company whose affairs are being investigated, to manipulate the various clauses of that Bill, perhaps more in the interest of the company than in the interest of the poor long-suffering and burdened policy-holders. If you analyse the Bill carefully, I think you will agree with me, that it is not such a measure as ought to receive the approval of the Senate. The facts in connection with the Bill, and the whole Bill itself, if you read it carefully, clause by clause, indicates that it is not likely to accomplish the object that they pretended they had in view, and it would almost seem to me that the object of Mr. Eldridge was realized in the Bill rather than the object of the hon. gentleman who is to father the Bill. Clause 3 reads as follows :—

3. From and after the date of the said license, the rights of the holders of the assessment policies of the company and the liability of the company thereunder shall be as follows :—

(a.) Every such assessment policy shall be deemed to be a non-participating policy of life insurance with fixed and definite premiums for the amount ascertained as provided in paragraph (b) of this section, payable only on the death of the insured and upon the performance of the policy conditions, except in so far as such conditions are modified by the provisions of this section, and subject to the provisions of paragraph (c) of this section, upon payment from time to time of the new premium from and after the date of the said license, at the time stipulated in the said policy, together with an amount equal to five per cent of such new premium as a loading for expenses.

Now, why if the company are insuring them, do they not insure for a definite and reasonable sum, whatever it may be, without loading these policies up in the manner provided for under this clause ? It says :—

(b.) The amount of such policy shall, at the option of the insured, be either,—

(i) The amount which the said new premium, taken as a net annual premium (without any allowance for expenses) for the age of the insured at his birthday nearest the date of the said license would purchase according to the Hm. mortality table of the Institute of Actuaries of Great Britain and a rate of interest of three and one-half per centum per annum ; or,—

What is the object of this ? Why is it necessary ? Are other insurance policies loaded up as this is ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Does not the hon. gentleman know that that is the table adopted by the department, on which all insurance policies are charged ?

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I understand that part of it, but I understand this to be a very different thing.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—No, there is not a particle of difference.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—My hon. friend will have an opportunity to state his views. I say it is not the manner of all insurance companies, and it is not the manner of loading those policies existing at the time the Mutual Reserve first became an insurance company. There was no such thing as loading up with three and a half or four or five per cent.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—On the contrary, when this company was started the rate was four per cent.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I know perfectly well that where the insurance was taken in St. Thomas on the Mutual Reserve principle no such rate was added at all. If he is positive in his opinion I am equally positive in mine. It is all very well to make me believe it for the sake of what ? Convincing this hon. body that this is the proper insurance to pursue ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It is calculated at that rate.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—There is too much calculating.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—It is a good thing my hon. friend is able to calculate at that rate. I wish he could calculate to make a reasonable Bill, a Bill that this hon. body will accept, and the policy-holders be benefited by.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—If the hon. gentleman will refer to the Insurance Act, he will find the basis on which they are bound to put up their legal reserve, and he will find that in former years, it was four per cent, and that it has been reduced, and it is in the returns for every insurance company.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I suppose my hon. friend obtained a good amount of information from the actuary who was engaged in the framing of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I obtained no information from him at all on the subject, and I shall not allow that kind of statement to be made here.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Then I will say, that on account of not having that information from him, and having no information of his own, the Bill is defective, and as the hon. gentleman is the father of the Bill, he will often regret having taken it in charge. The clause continues :

The amount (subject to the amount of lien hereinafter provided) which the said new premium taken as a net premium (without any allowance for expenses) for the age of the insured at his birthday nearest the date of the issue of the policy, would purchase, according to the basis set forth in the first option aforesaid.

My hon. friend said last evening there would be only one option. Here we find there are three.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I stated three.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I accept the hon. gentleman's statement; I did not so understand it. Then it says :

Provided that the full reserve or reinsurance value for the amount of such policy at the date of the said license computed from the date of the issue of such policy on the basis aforesaid, shall be a lien or charge upon the said policy, bearing interest to be compounded annually at the rate of four and one-half per centum per annum until paid.

What is the object of this ? A person gets insured. He is to have a certain amount for which the insured will become responsible on account of the reinsurance, and that amount is to be charged up to him at 4½ per cent. Now, is that a reasonable proposition to make in the insurance ? I say it is not, and therefore when a family come to realize upon a policy, they find it is loaded up, and perhaps the 4½ per cent compounded from year to year will equal the amount of the insurance. Then it says:

(c.) The holder of any such assessment policy shall have the right to continue his said policy for the full amount thereof as a yearly renewable term policy upon which the premiums shall not exceed the net yearly natural premiums for the attained age of the insured calculated upon the basis of the mortality table and rate of interest aforesaid with a loading of five per cent for expenses.

That is the last option. They have two chances ; they can have the first chance, or they can have the second chance, loaded up with this heavy lien upon their policy, or they can pay a large amount annually. Why is it any better to load up a policy in this way than to have a policy on the assessment plan ? Later on I shall be able to show that this company declared that they were the strongest company in the country. That no other company was equal to them, not only in Canada and the United States, but in the whole world, and therefore when they entered into contracts they would be able to guarantee the full payment of all these policies. We have the statement of the father of this Bill, Mr. Eldridge, to that effect. Of course he knows how to frame a Bill, and as this has been framed in the interest of the Mutual Reserve, he certainly ought to get credit for it. I referred also to the statement about lapsed policies being renewable, and the manner in which they were renewable. Now you all know as well as I do that these renewal policies are very fictitious. It says if an individual makes the assertion that he has been so and so, that he has lived a straight life, has not exposed himself, has not been guilty of dissipation, drunkenness or anything of that kind—he makes his report, because the forms will demand it, to the insurance company——

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is a kind of confession, is it not ?

Hon. Mr. WILSON—It is accepted by the company for the time being ; but when the question of paying the claim comes, it is perfectly easy for the company to say the man misrepresented his condition, and if the case went to court they would appeal it from one court to another, and the chances are that the poor widow and orphans would not receive a cent. Then take another item; they are to have in the first place a certain dividend to be declared to those who take the first option. I asked before, I ask again where is that dividend coming from ? How is the company to pay the dividends unless it goes to the Receiver General and withdraws the money ? I understand, though I do not know whether it be true, that when this company changes their assessment policy and adopts a straight line policy they will contend that they have a right to withdraw their deposit. Later on, as the hon. member from Wellington showed very plainly the other day, when they have gone on for a certain time, doing a certain amount of business they can go to the Receiver General and say 'We are through with the business here; we are getting no new business and we want to withdraw the deposit in the Receiver General's hands.' What protection will you have for the unfortunate policy-holders? That will be the upshot if this Bill is carried into effect as we find it here. They talk about revival of lapsed policies. It looks like an attempt to induce people to come into permanent insurance instead of remaining in the Mutual Reserve. Every line of the Bill goes to show that the desire is to induce the policy-holders to become insured on this straight line plan, and I could understand, if they could give such insurance at moderate rates that it would be desirable; but it is not fair now to try to coerce or influence or attack men who are already insured to come in and accept terms which they would not accept under ordinary conditions. Have we any right to pass this Bill and legislate against the rights of those who have been insured? Millions of dollars of insurance has been entered into by Canadian policy-holders, and we are now asked to adopt a Bill that will compel all those interested in that insurance to change the system under which they were insured and to take out another kind of policy. Is that just? Is it right? If it was right you would not find men from the various parts of Canada, and even from the United States, appealing to parliament not to pass this measure. Every letter we get from these unfortunate people is to the effect: 'Protect our interest and do not allow a Bill to pass whereby we shall be coerced into taking straight life insurance under the Mutual Reserve Company.' If they had a reputation that would secure the confidence of the people it would be a different thing, but they have not that reputation: therefore I say it is a gross injustice that they should be coerced into becoming part and parcel of such an institution under this Bill. Put yourself in their place: If you had insured your life to provide for your family, and the time came when the insurance company through reckless and improvident management had squandered their money, and they came and asked you to forgive them and let them have a new lease of power to go on and do as they had been doing before—what would you say? If the managers of this institution came here today, asking to be incorporated as an insurance company, would you feel justified in giving them incorporation, knowing that they had already violated the trust that they had received from parliament? I do not believe this House would feel they were doing their duty if they granted a charter under such circumstances. I am not going through this Bill any further. In my opinion it will not accomplish that which its promoters pretend to say it will. But what will it do? It will benefit the management of the New York Mutual Reserve and enable them to take the last drop of blood out of the unfortunate people insured in their association and give them an opportunity to prey upon the people of this country for another twelve or fifteen years. Some hon. gentlemen insinuated to me some time ago that I was perhaps interested against this insurance Bill, that I had a pique or a spite or ill-will towards the New York Mutual Reserve. They may call it pique or spite or what they will; I have no pique or spite against any men, or any set of men, who will not deal justly, honestly and fairly with the citizens of Canada. I hope I am honourable enough to do my utmost to protect the rights of our people, and I am at the same time cautious to do no harm to others, while trying to serve my country. The truly loyal man is the one who will guard and protect the rights of his fellow citizens; if he does not do that he is not a loyal or true citizen of Canada. I had no interest, directly or indirectly, in this insurance company or any other mutual insurance company in the Dominion, and while I have fought not only in this House but in the committee, for the rights of the people interested in the P.P.I., I never had sixpence interest in that society. If I could by any possibility enable every individual in that society to be placed in a fair and just position I would do my utmost to accomplish that end, but I believe this Bill will accomplish the very reverse.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—As it stands.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We will change it a good deal before it passes.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I referred a few moments ago to the P.P.I. It was started as an assessment company under the Ontario Act and was known as a provident and benevolent society.

Hon. Mr. COFFEY—A fraternal society.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Yes. It was called a provident society under which all classes could insure. The business of the company was carried on in the city of St. Thomas, and was doing, as has been represented here, and as the Mutual Reserve was doing, a fair amount of business. Many people became insured under it. Many thought there had been a heaven-born system of insurance introduced whereby they could get their lives insured at a very low rate. We all know the tendency of people : if they think they can get things for less than their value they are disposed to invest. This was, I suppose, the case with the P.P.I. in St. Thomas. The society went on for a number of years, and issued assessment policies to the amount of somewhere about $13,000,000. They had paid all their claims, and had met every obligation. When a death claim was presented they paid it without haggling or going to the courts. They asked for nothing but the medical certificate showing that the applicant was entitled to the insurance. I suppose Mr. Eldridge, of the New York Mutual Reserve had discovered there was another mutual insurance company somewhere doing a considerable business, and as his own company were not perhaps as prosperous as they would like to be, he opened negotiations with the trustees of the county of Elgin P. P. I. Company. The P. P. I. trustees were invited to New York and taken around and had a jolly good time of it, no doubt at the expense of the policy-holders of the New York Mutual and of the P.P.I. It is very nice to have a good time at the expense of others. Later on, when they returned to St. Thomas, a rumour came out that the trustees of the P.P.I. had made a splendid bargain, and there was going to be an amalgamation of the $13,000,000 of the P.P.I. with the many, many other millions of the Mutual Reserve. We had it going from one end of the county to the other, and I have no doubt my hon. friend from London heard it, because the P.P. I. was transacting business there. This report went abroad, that they had received or were going to receive a very large amount of money. The companies amalgamated, and I have here the agreement that was entered into between the managers of the two institutions. By this document one was transferred to the other, just like so much stock, and the amount involved is represented to have been '$1.' There was a nigger in the fence, and a big nigger too, and they had to cover him up to keep him from the gaze of the policy-holders in the P.P.I. For the sake of placing it on record, I crave the indulgence of the House while I read the agreement :

This agreement, made this 27th day of June, in the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety-six, by and between the Provincial Provident Institution, a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the Province of Ontario, of the first part, and the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of New York, of the second part, witnesseth,

Whereas, the parties hereto are engaged in business of life insurance on the assessment and co-operative plan, and

Whereas the party of the first part is desirous of amalgamating with the party of the second part and of transferring its members to the said party of the second part,

Now, therefore, for and in consideratior of the premises and of the covenants and stipulations hereinafter contained, and of the sum of one dollar, lawful money, in hand paid by the said party of the first part, the receipt of which, before the signing of these presents, is hereby acknowledged, by the said party of the second part, this agreement witnesseth as follows :—

First. That the said party of the first part shall on the 15th day of July, 1896, as the agent of the party of the second part, issue to its members a notice of an assessment in accordance with the terms of the certificate of membership held by each of the members of said party of the first part, which said assessment shall be known as the 'transferring assessment,' which said notice shall contain a statement embodying the substance of this agreement and shall be prepared by the party of the second part and be approved by a committee of trustees of the party of the first part.

Second. That the said party of the second part shall assume all the outstanding risks of the party of the first part and shall become responsible for all losses and claims accruing to members or policy-holders of the said party of the first part from and after the date of the notice of the transferring assessment, as provided in the first clause thereof, the amount of which assessment, together with eight dollars per one thousand of business actually paying said transferring assessment as a first payment or admission fee, and two dollars per one thousand of business so paying said assessment on account of the general expense fund, shall be paid to the party of the second part.

Third. The payment of the transferring assessment by any member of the party of the first part, in accordance with said notice and the terms and condition thereof, shall constitute such member a member of the party of the second part, with all the rights and privileges of such, but subject to all the obligations of such membership in the party of the second part, including the provisions of the constitution or by-laws and the rules and the regulations of the said party of the second part as they now exist or as the same may be hereafter amended, The members of the party of the first part so becoming members of the parties of the second part shall not be called upon to pay assessments in excess of those charged members of the party of the second part entering said party of the second part at the same dates and ages as said members so transferred from the party of the first part entered said party of the first part respectively, except as by change of policies or certicates of membership this agreement may be modified.

Fourth. That members of the party of the first part so becoming members of the party of the second part shall not be required to exchange their policies or certificates of membership for those of said party of the second part unless they may elect to do so, their insurance will be continued under the policies or certificates issued by said party of the first part as hereinbefore provided, subject to the terms thereof as to forfeiture for non-payment of dues or assessments.

Fifth. The said party of the first part shall pay all claims to policy-holders or otherwise outstanding or incurred up to the date of said transferring assessment, and shall immediately on the issuing of the notice of said transferring assessment pay over to said party of the second part the fund known as the annuity fund of the said party of the first part, and upon the completion of said transferring assessment ten dollars per one thousand of all transferred business where the attained age of the member at the time of such transfer exceeds sixty years.

Sixth. All papers, notices, assessment circulars, and all other documents or papers whatever to be sent out to carry into effect the provisions of this agreement, shall be prepared by the party of the second part and approved by a committee of the trustees of the party of the first part.

Seventh. It is covenanted by the party of the first part that its officers and trustees shall and will give its and their utmost moral aid in aiding the transfer of its membership to said party of the second part, the exchange of policies or certificates of membership to those issued by the party of the second part and the complete performance of all the conditions and provisions of this agreement.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Sell them over, body and bones.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Yes, and all the money which they had, and I will be able to show they had some. Here we find there was an amendment. They had signed the amendment and struck out clause 2 of the agreement made 27th June, 1896, that bound the Mutual Reserve Fund Association to apply the several funds, reserve fund, emergency fund, annuity fund and mortuary fund received from P. P. I.,

In the manner and for the purposes prescribed by the by-laws now existing of the said Institution subject to the third provision of the agreement of June 27, 1896.

Eight dollars per thousand, plus two dollars more per thousand. This association later on repudiated the debt, and did not give them what they agreed to give, although they took over thirteen million of insurance, for which they stated that they did not pay a dollar. The P. P. I. had worked up an insurance of some thirteen million dollars; they transferred the whole of these policies over, and not one single dollar was paid to the trustees of the P. P. I. for the large business they had worked up. I appeal to hon. gentlemen, if the Mutual Reserve failed to carry out an agreement of that kind, can you rely upon them to act any more fairly with their policy-holders under this Bill, which certainly will not accomplish the object which they contend it will, but almost the very reverse.

There were a number of people insured in the P. P. I. who happened to be over 60 years, and the P. P. I. had to give this generous whole-souled Mutual Reserve Association $10 for taking over the policy of a man who happened to get to the age of 65 before this deal occurred. Generous they were, and good they were, but they looked out for themselves and they were protected. Two parties transacting the business in St. Thomas, the solicitor from St. Thomas and the solicitor from New York, stated that if they had completed the transaction as at first contemplated they would have been promptly put behind the bars. I told one of them it was the place he should be. Was or was not the agreement carried out? The Mutual Reserve treated the P. P. I. policy-holders in the same manner they used the assessment policy-holders in their own company, so that they forced the P. P. I. business from $13,000,000 down to $8,000,000.

Clauses 8, 9 and 10 of the agreement are as follows:

8. That all moneys received by the party of the second part on account of the business transferred or from members of the party of the first part shall be used and applied by the said party of the second part to the same uses and purposes as moneys received from new members of said party of the second part admitted at the date of such transfer.

9. That if any member or members of the party of the first part declare his or their unwillingness to assent to the transfer of membership herein provided and insist on remaining members of the party of the first part, said party of the second part hereby covenants and agrees that, in consideration of the payment to it of said member or members' dues and assessments by the said party of the first part, to reinsure the risk on such member or members until he or they can be seen and a personal adjustment made with such member or members, and the party of the second part agrees to protect said party of the first part against all expense involved in such adjustment.

10. That the said party of the first part shall immediately on the day of the date of the said transferring assessment turn over to said party of the second part all original applications for membership heretofore at any time received by it, and any and all books, records, accounts, documents and vouchers in any way relating to any policy or certificate of membership outstanding on the day of the date of the notice of said transferring assessment.

As I said before, they got thirteen millions in policies. They got all the books and certificates. They got everything, and I suppose all the furniture in possession of the P. P. I., and they agreed to give them ten per centum of the thirteen million, or somewhere about $130,000, and they confess now that they did not pay them one single cent, because Mr. Eldridge stated in committee that had their agreement been carried out, they would have been placed behind the bars. This is the company that my hon. friend from Toronto is so desirous to incorporate that they may go forth like wolves in sheep's clothing to seek whom they may devour, as they have done in the past.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B. C.)—Why did the party of the first part go into the contract? What were they to gain by it? It looked like a foolish contract, handing over everything.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—The agreement was made with the trustees of the Provincial Provident Society in St. Thomas, that the Mutual Reserve should do what? After this transferring clause, and the premium of eight dollars, plus two dollars per $1,000 that they should pay to the trustees of the P. P. I., ten per centum or $130,000, to the trustees of the P. P. I. It was the $130,000 that looked so large in their eyes, and for which they were ready to transact the business; but the lawyer in St. Thomas, Colin McDougall, told them: 'If you carry into effect that contract, it will mean a criminal prosecution.' The lawyer in New York told that immaculate individual my friend Mr. Eldridge, that if he transferred this money, it would be the cause of his going behind the bars.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Was the $130,000 to be given to the trustees to divide among the members, or for themselves?

Hon. Mr. WILSON—For the trustees; I do not think the policy-holders would have seen a cent of it. The pockets of the trustees would have been large enough to hold the whole amount.

An hon. MEMBER—Did they get it?

Hon. Mr. WILSON—No, that is where the difficulty came in. Mr. Eldridge says that a sharper lot of men than the seven men from St. Thomas he never did business with in his life, and that if he could deceive, defraud, and cheat them, he was doing a great stroke of business.

An hon. MEMBER—Were you one of them?

Hon. Mr. WILSON—No, I was not. I had no interest, directly or indirectly, in this association. I was not a member or attorney or examining physician, or in any way interested in the affairs of the company. The agreement concludes:—

In witness whereof the parties hereto have caused their corporate seal to be hereunto affixed and these presents to be signed, on the part of the party of the first part of its President and Secretary and on the part of the party of the second part by its third Vice-President in duplicate, the day, month and year first above written.

GEO. K. MORTON.
President.
E. S. MILLER.
Secretary.

Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association,
GEO. ELDRIDGE, third Vice-President.

Now, look at the signatures? who are these men? The very men that my hon. friend from Toronto is desirous of handing over this Bill to, so that he can get some more members, I suppose, transacting business of this kind. George K. Morton was president, an individual in St. Thomas, E.

S. Miller, who then had the chief secretaryship of the P.P.I., and now in Montreal, and whom do you suppose signed it on the part of the Mutual Reserve, other than our dear friend George D. Eldridge, third vice-president of the New York Mutual Reserve.

Hon. Mr. COFFEY—I believe they had a very large amount of money as a reserve fund, in the Provincial Provident. Do you know what became of it ?

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I was going to read it. The P.P.I. acting economically, paying the president, vice-president, and other members of the organization, reasonable salaries, not such as the New York Mutual Reserve paid to their officials, salaries so large that they dare not state them in detail though willing to give us the lump sum, because they do not want it go abroad that while the policy-holders are paying extortionate assessments, the officials down at head-quarters are luxuriating upon twenty-five, thirty, fifty, and a hundred thousand dollars salaries. They do not want such information to go abroad. Our society was acting economically. They would have a meeting when necessary and the directors would charge up against the policy-holders twenty dollars for each and every meeting they held for each and every director. They had accumulated a large amount of money and had deposited that money in the bank. Not only was this but business to the amount of thirteen million dollars transferred to the hands of these men with large salaries down in New York, so that they could employ Mr. Moss at fifty or a hundred thousand dollars a year. (I would not say that they did give him that but they gave the money over to the New York Mutual, and it amounted, as I am credibly informed and verily believe, to a hundred thousand dollars. I appeal to hon. gentlemen here, and I appeal to parliament to pause before it places upon the statute-books an Act to rehabilitate men with such a record.—for they have a past record very unsavoury in the transaction of insurance business. You may ask me, why did the people of our town do as I say they did ? You can easily understand that if those trustees thought they were going to get $100,000, and that money to the extent of $100,000 was going to be refunded to the policy-holders in St. Thomas, they readily entered into this arrangement and the transfer was drawn. The Mutual Reserve continued to carry the policies issued by the P.P.I., and very shortly commenced to increase the calls from two dollars to five dollars and eight dollars, until they froze the poor Canadians out. The funds had to go down to New York to satisfy that greediness of the officials down there. They raised the fees and the assessments so high, that not only in St. Thomas but in other places those who were insured had to withdraw. Hon. gentlemen may ask me justly, how was it that the certificate holders, or policy-holders, how they were satisfied with being treated in the manner in which they were. I have a document here which will show to some extent the means that were adopted whereby the P.P.I. were induced to keep quiet. It is by E. S. Miller, the secretary of the Provincial Provident of St. Thomas. It reads :

> You will be informed by the inclosed circular to members of the Provincial Provident Institution of the terms of consolidation agreed by the management, on behalf of said institution, and the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association.

'Consolidation' ? I could apply a word that would be more appropriate than consolidation. I could say the robbery of the P. P. I. by the action of the Mutual Reserve. The letter continues :

> After perusal, you will observe that the plan is an amalgamation of the business of this, the most prominent Canadian organization, with that institution, the most prominent, not only in America, but in the world. By this agreement, assessment insurance will become the foremost life insurance interest in the country, and the combined business in Canada of the two institutions will be exceeded by that of only one company of any kind. By such a combination of strength that has been divided, there will certainly result a yet more rapid growth in membership and sound financial condition, than would otherwise be possible.
> It is impossible to do justice in a communication of this character to the merits of the arrangements, either from the standpoint of the membership or of the agents, but we simply ask you to inform yourself on the subject and to refrain from committing yourself to any engagement, until you are in possession of all the facts, which will be communicated to you within a few days, together with proposals for continuing your allegiance under the new arrangement, upon terms that will be found both liberal and attractive.
> Thanking you for your loyalty in the past to this institution, and bespeaking from you the same quality of service to the Mutual Reserve Fund Life, where I hope still to be associated with you in the work of life insurance, I am,

Very truly yours,

E. S. MILLER,
Secretary.

That is not all. We have some more. Another circular reads :

The most prominent examples of the advantages derived by the people of Canada from the system of assessment life insurance are the Provincial Provident Institution, the largest home company, and the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, which not only has the largest business in force in the Dominion, but is also the largest institution of the kind in the world.

It has seemed to the managements of these two organizations that still greater possibilities for good would accrue, were the efforts now directed to the upbuilding of two competing offices united in a single purpose, especially in view of the marked tendency at the present time, seen both in the Dominion and in the United States, towards a reduction in the number of institutions in the various branches of industry, with a resultant increase in the bulk of transactions of each.

Did they realize it ? Has there been an increase in the transactions of the unfortunate P. P. I., or is it an increase of the transactions with the unfortunate policyholders who have been loaded up and loaded down, and liens placed upon their policies, so that the company can carry them with a diminished valuation ? The circular continues :

Recognizing, therefore, the advantages of a wider business, both because it gives increased security and greater economy, the management of the Provincial Provident Institution is glad to be able to lay before its members a matured plan for the consolidation of the two largest masses of assessment life insurance in Canada. By the amalgamation of the business of this institution (amounting to over $13,000,000) with that of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association (amounting to over $23,000,000 in Canada of its total of $310,000,000), an aggregate of over $36,000,000 of Canadian business will result. This exceeds in amount that carried by any life insurance company (with a single exception) doing business in the Dominion on any plan ; is more than one-tenth of all the life insurance business of all kinds reported in the blue-book, and exceeds by $1,500,000 that of all other assessment companies combined reporting to the Canadian Insurance Department.

The basis of the consolidation of the business is most fair and equitable to both parties, and it has been possible to bring it about because of the high quality of the business of the Provincial Provident Institution, which renders feasible an amalgamation presenting none of the objections which attach to a mere reinsurance of risks. That the plan is one of especial benefit to the members, and therefore one upon which the management can present to them its sincere congratulations, the following details show conclusively :—

1. The arrangement includes every member. No member's insurance is disturbed. Every risk is carried on without interruption. There is simply placed behind each, as further security, the broad resources and large membership of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life, giving to the insurance the protection of that association's strength and vast resources.

It says that no member's insurance is disturbed. I do not think they are disturbed now by getting any of the payments when life is extinct. They will carry the claim from one court to the other, and finally, if they cannot succeed here, they go to the law lords in England to plead their case, and send the ablest lawyer of Canada over there to argue their case. My hon. friend says they have one there now. I stated that the Mutual Reserve took over thirteen millions of business of the P. P. I. I forgot to say that they have by death and letting their policies lapse less than eight millions of that business now. The circular continues :

2. There need be no change of policies. The simple act of paying the regular assessment, to the same official, at the same address and in the same manner as former assessments of the Provincial Provident have been paid, is all that is required to constitute the present member of the Provincial Provident Institution a member of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, with all the rights, privileges and obligations of such membership.

Of course, they discovered by this time, that they had not very many rights—only the right to pay double, treble the call, almost every month The circular continues :

The strength of the Mutual Reserve. Its annual income is nearly $6,000,000.

If they have $6,000,000 why do they not continue on the assessment plan and pay off the claims against them. Why should they ask for better terms from the Senate, when they might adopt some other course ? If they are getting six millions of an annual income, is that not a pretty good reserve ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—What date is that ?

Hon. Mr. WILSON—1896. Will that suit the hon. gentleman ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It is a good while ago.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Yes, they could not wrong so many of the P.P.I. people without having some time to do it. They would require time to do it in a way that they would not lay themselves open to charges of fraud and corrupt acts. It is a good while ago. True, there are many of those poor unfortunate ones to-day who have not a dollar, and could not keep their policies paid. My hon. friend says it is a good while ago.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The reason I asked was that the hon. gentleman stated it was a good while ago and asked why could they not go on now and pay up the claims. The hon. gentleman knows it.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Is it on account of their having dealt fairly, justly and honestly with the policy-holders, or is it because they have robbed the people, that they ask for this change ? If the public had the same degree of confidence in this company as it had in 1896, there would be a different story to tell, and this Bill would not be required. The circular continues :

Its assets exceed $5,000,000. Its surplus funds amount to $3,672,526 or $12.52 per each one thousand dollars of insurance against $9.23 per each $1,000 in the Provincial Provident. Its membership is 110,000. Its outstanding insurance reaches $310,000,000. It has paid death claims over $26,500,000. The peculiar hold the association has in Canada ; it has on its staff a number of Canadians, including its 2nd Vice-President and Chairman of the Executive Committee. It has in force, the largest Canadian business of any assessment company. Its business to number of population is as large in Canada as in the United States. It wrote more new business in Canada in 1885 than any other assessment company, and with two exceptions than any other company of any kind. It gained in business in force in Canada in 1885 more than a million dollars. It has paid death claims in Canada more than $1,250,000. It has a deposit with the Canadian government in Canada, securities having a present value of over $108,-000. Its assets in Canada at the date of its last report, exceeded a quarter of a million dollars. After congratulating the members of the P.P.I., upon the many advantages afforded them by this amalgamation with the business of the largest and strongest assessment life insurance organization in the world, we remain,

Faithfully yours,
GEORGE K. MORTON, President.
JOHN BAIRD, Treasurer.
E. S. MILLER, Secretary.

Now, I have other papers here.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Read them.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Perhaps some hon. gentlemen might feel desirous of having them read, but if the House will consider them as read. I shall hand them in to the reporters.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—That is United States style ; it is not allowed here.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I would like to gratify hon. members, and I might just as well be reading these papers as sitting down. I shall read a letter dated July 15, 1896, from one of the members of the New York Mutual Reserve Association. At that time he was in good standing, but when a certain class of men disagree, then a certain other class will get justice. That is the mildest way I can put it. The letter is as follows :—

305, 307, 309 Broadway, New York,
July 15, 1896.

Confirming the statement made by the management of the Provincial Provident Institution of St. Thomas, Ont., of the arrangement for the consolidation of the business of that institution with the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, the management of the latter association extends its congratulations over the advantages resulting therefrom. The insurance of every policy-holder is protected and preserved ; the guaranties and security of the large membership and large accumulations of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life are given to the members of the Provincial Provident, who become members of the former company on equal terms of rights and duties with those members who entered that association at the same dates and ages, respectively, as the members of the Provincial Provident entered that institution. The arrangement will disturb in the least possible degree the relations of the members of the Provincial Provident, while it will strengthen their insurance and give them better guaranties and security.

The payment of the current assessment—which is to be paid to Mr. E. S. Miller at St. Thomas, as all preceding assessments have been paid—gives to your policy the guarantee of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life, with its millions of assets, its more than one hundred thousand members and its three hundred millions of insurance. It pledges to you the same fair dealing, prompt payment of claims and earnest regard for your every right and for the soundness of the insurance you are purchasing, which have characterized its dealings during the past fifteen years, in which it has paid over twenty-seven million dollars of death-claims. The association has been proud in the past of its Canadian business, and it welcomes with pride this addition, which gives to that business a magnitude second to that of only one of the many life insurance companies that are operating in the Dominion.

By order of the Executive Committee,
J. D. WELLS, Chairman.

By order of the Board of Directors,
C. W. CAMP, Secretary.

I suppose those officials of the New York Mutual will not deny that he had a right to make that proposition at that time. I might read another from a man called Frederick A. Burnham, of whom some of you may have heard. If not, possibly members of the select committee will remember hearing his name mentioned in connection with the name of J. D. Wells. The letter is as follows :—

Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association.

New York, Sept. 15, 1896.

We are glad of this opportunity to congratulate you upon the complete success which has attended the consolidation of the Provincial Provident Institution with the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association. That consolidation was undertaken on sound business lines, and in a way that could but appeal to sound business judgment. The membership of the Provincial Provident proved its ability to deal intelligently with a matter of this character by the practical unanimity of its assent. No transaction of a similar nature has ever been carried through with the smoothness and the success that has attended this.

Why should it not be smooth, if they were going to take advantage of the insured in New York and the unfortunates in St. Thomas. It should be transacted with smoothness; otherwise the people would have resented it, and would not have become a party to it. The letter continues :

There has been no interruption of any man's insurance, but, on the contrary, every man had at once placed behind him the protection and guarantee of our millions of business and assets. That this was appreciated, the event has proved. The number who failed to make payment was no greater than the average under calls levied in the past by the Provincial Provident, and even these are paying up and reinstating their membership. The losses that occurred are being met by the Mutual Reserve Fund Life and in all senses the former membership of the Provincial Provident, who have accepted the terms of consolidation, hold the same relation to our association as members originally admitted.

In congratulating you upon the success of this transaction, we want to bespeak from you loyalty to, and trust in, the Mutual Reserve Fund Life. It is strong ; it is honest ; it is able to carry out its every contract ; its plans and methods are right. Twenty-seven and a-half million of death-claims promptly and honestly paid prove this, if there were no other proof. Remember, you are a part of this great company. Its offices exist for you ; its affairs are conducted that your dependents may have protection. If you want to know anything of its affairs, write and ask. Its officers are ready to give you information that is exact and trustworthy. With the means of obtaining information at first hand, do not place reliance in the rumours or tales that come to you from other sources. Your insurance is a part of your estate. It is worth protecting ; it is worth the trouble of securing trustworthy information. You have joined with us ; give us your loyalty and support, and this association, which is yours, will never disappoint you.

FREDERICK A. BURNHAM,
President.

J. D. WELLS,
Chairman Executive Committee.

Hon. Mr. WILSON.

Have they ever disappointed any of the policy-holders ? Are there not to-day hundreds of them crying out against the treatment they have received ? A worse record, a more deceptive transaction, than that which took place between the P. P. I. and the Mutual Reserve, never took place anywhere. We have to-day in that section of Canada widows and orphans crying for bread, who depended for support in their declining years on insurance in the P. P. I.—people who had no other means, and who stinted and pinched themselves day in and day out, in order that they might be able to meet the calls upon them. Many with two thousand dollars or five thousand dollars insurance are having their insurance assessments almost doubled. Many of them are to-day without a single dollar of insurance, because they could not earn sufficient in a place like St. Thomas, where there is a large number of labour employees, to keep up their assessments, and had to let their policies lapse. They have been sadly disappointed by the glowing tongues and false statements of the management of those insurance companies. What parliament ought to do is to protect those who have been deceived by this company, and I believe that the Bill brought in by my hon. friend from Toronto will not accomplish that object, for it is going to clothe these wolves in sheep's clothing, and send them forth again. The result will be the same. Are we prepared to enact retroactive legislation for the sake of licensing this class of men to do business in Canada ? Those who have been guilty of such transactions in the past should not have the confidence of parliament, and I hope this House will, in the future, raise its hands and say, 'We will have no more of you ; we will not grant the privilege you are asking.' I have tried to place before this House and country the absolute necessity of acting cautiously, prudently and wisely before granting legislation of this kind.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—I do not desire to prolong this debate, but I want to explain my position. When the hon. member from Rothesay made his charges against the Mutual Reserve Company in this honourable House, I took the stand then, that a committee should be appointed to investigate their affairs. At the time I felt that the company might have an answer to rebut those charges. I had an open mind, and was ready to hear both sides of the question. That the appointment of the committee has been productive of good is clear from the remarks of hon. gentlemen, who have stated that the Bill is the outcome of its work. I believe that that Bill is an advantage to the policy-holders of the Mutual Reserve Association. It is a very important Bill. It has been very severely criticised by some hon. members. I do not think the Bill is perfect, but an opportunity was given yesterday, when the motion was made to go into committee, to amend the Bill, and make it satisfactory, if any one desired to do so. That course would have been a better one than taking up the time of the House for two days, finding fault with the Bill as it stands.

The hon. member from Wellington asked yesterday, what are the advantages to be gained by this Bill? You are taking in those who have allowed their policies to lapse, on the same terms as those who have kept their policies alive, he said; but the hon. member from de Salaberry showed that they were doing nothing of the kind. The hon. member from Wellington is a good business man. He knows that if two men living near each other had properties of equal value, which they wanted to insure in the London Mutual, and one after the first year, discontinued his insurance, while the other continued his insurance, the rate being twenty dollars a year ; if at the end of ten years, the one who had discontinued his insurance, wanted to renew, what right would the other have to say to the company: 'I have paid you during these ten years, $180 more than my neighbour, and I should get better terms than you are giving him. He has only paid you twenty dollars while I have paid you two hundred dollars ? The company would be justified in saying you had a good business transaction. If your property had been destroyed by fire, you would have had the benefit of the insurance ; your neighbour's property was not insured; he was carrying the risk himself. The man who has kept his policy alive in the Mutual Reserve Company has had the advantage of knowing that he has had provision made for his family, in the event of his death; those who allowed their policies to lapse, had no such protection. I have heard the statement made in this debate, that no good could be found in this Bill simply because a gentleman named Eldridge had something to do with the preparation of it. When the House deals with the Bill, it is not going to be the Bill of Mr. Eldridge or of Mr. Fitzgerald, or of the expert from Toronto. It is going to be the Bill of this House, and for the benefit of the policy-holders of the company in Canada. The hon. member from St. Thomas found great fault with the Bill, and said 75 per cent of the policy-holders were going to be coerced into adopting the straight life plan. Before the Bill leaves this House, I want to see them protected against coercion; I want to see that they are left under the assessment plan, if they want it. The Bill can be so framed as to give the policy-holders the option to continue the assessment plan or change to the straight life plan. I think it would be to their advantage to exercise the option given in this Bill ; but if they think otherwise, this honourable House is not going to legislate to allow the company break their contracts with the policy-holders. The hon. gentleman asks what form of certificate would be required to enable a member to get reinstated, after his policy had lapsed. It is an easy matter to put that in the hands of the Superintendent of Insurance, and to see that he is the man to frame the certificate under which these lapsed policy-holders are to be reinstated. Just a word as to that committee : I voted for the appointment of it, feeling that they would enter upon the investigation with an open mind. They stated to this House that they were going to act in a semi-judicial capacity. I, in my simplicity, believed that statement to be true. If a judge of this country was to act in the manner that hon. members of that committee have acted——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has no right to use the language he is using now. He is referring to a committee of this House.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman has not referred to the committee. He has not referred to the proceedings of the committee at all yet.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I beg the Speaker's pardon, he is referring to the committee.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I rise to a point of order; the hon. gentleman has had the ruling of the Chair, and has no right to comment upon it.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—I do not often speak in this House, and I do not want to violate the rules when I do speak, but it is time for this House, and I can say that without reflection on the committee, to say that they know what the report of that committee is going to be.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—We know pretty well. I say no person would want to be before a committee or any judicial body, that before having heard the evidence would pronounce the company to be corrupt and dishonest. One hon. member of the committee who did so, was honest enough to make the statement here to-day that he had his mind made up in that respect. If they have their minds made up and know the report they are to bring in, it is a waste of money to continue the investigation any longer.

Hon. Mr .CLORAN—As chairman of that committee, I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that he is stating what is absolutely not correct with regard to the committee.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—We heard the chairman of the committee yesterday expressing his opinion.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—The hon. gentleman told us that the position he was going to occupy was of a semi-judicial character, and when he came as chairman of the committee, before this honourable body, and asked for counsel, he made the statement that the inquiry was to be a semi-judicial one. I ask the judgment of the House if they have shown that it was a semi-judicial one? They have expressed a great deal of sympathy for the widows and orphans of policyholders. If they wanted to do anything for the widows and orphans they would endeavour to give their best judgment to framing a Bill that would be of some service to them. The widows and orphans they are lamenting so much over, if this opposition is continued much longer, will have cause to say 'Save us from our friends'. I do not wish to prolong the debate, but I did want to point out how I felt on the subject. I supported the appointment of that committee, and if no other good has come from it but this Bill, I am satisfied with my action. I should like to see the committee conduct the investigation in the semi-judicial manner they promised. When all the evidence is in, let them come before the House with a report, giving their conclusions, but they should not give out to the country that they have found the verdict before the evidence is in.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Where is that verdict?

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—It is in the expressions of members of the committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I deny that.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Some hon. gentlemen have spoken of amendments that they propose to offer to this Bill. If they would disclose the amendments now, it might save a great deal of time and discussion. It might be better to postpone the further consideration of the Bill to-night, and let the amendments be put on the minutes for to-morrow. I want to ask the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Kerr) why it is necessary that a gentleman who has been under examination here by this committee, and a stranger in the country, should have anything to do with the framing of this Bill? Is there not enough talent in Canada, without calling in a stranger to do the work? He has not been charged with crime, but he has been charged with gross extravagance, and I would prefer to have had a Bill drafted by somebody else.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I shall explain. Hon. gentlemen will remember that when I introduced this Bill, I explained the circumstances under which the Bill was framed. I stated in a general way, which was afterwards confirmed by the hon. Secretary of State, that the Bill had been drawn at his instance and request by Mr. McMurchy; that it had been brought to me with the intimation that the Superintendent of Insurance had approved of it; that I said I would see the Superintendent of Insurance before I would undertake to say whether I would introduce the Bill or not; that I saw him and had a conference with him in the presence of other gentlemen, and was informed that it had his approval; that I then made some suggestions to him as to further advantages which I thought the policy-holders should get; that having made that statement to him, he further amended the Bill; that that Bill was presented to me, and I was asked to introduce it; that I, further, saw Mr. Fitzgerald before I did so, and learned of him personally that he approved of the Bill, that he thought now it was in the best shape it could be put, and that there was no reason why it should not be introduced, in fact that the department wished it to be introduced. I thereupon introduced the Bill, and gave that explanation at one of the subsequent stages. All of that has been confirmed. I stated definitely then, that I was not introducing it as a Bill on behalf of the company, but as a public Bill, and in my capacity as a senator, that I had no connection of any kind with the company, and was doing it solely with a view to protect the interests of the policy-holders, so far as, in my limited judgment and with my limited ability—which does not seem to equal that of other members of the Senate who have been speaking on the subject—I could devise. There were imperfections in it, no doubt. Others could see them. I invited discussion, and with a view of getting the best discussion we could have, I was going to ask, if the Bill was accepted by the House, that it should be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee. Accordingly, when the time came, I was fortunate enough to secure from this House, the vote which sent it to the Banking and Commerce Committee. When the committee met, notice was given, so that all parties interested might be heard, and there was a large representation before that committee. Life companies, policy-holders of St. Thomas (represented not by an hon. member, but by others representing them there), and policy-holders from other parts, were heard before that committee. The unanimous verdict of all the companies and all the representatives before that committee, in general terms was that they were in favour of the proposals of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—What committee?

Hon. Mr KERR (Toronto)—The Banking and Commerce Committee. I am explaining how the proposition is, and I am coming to the answer. They were all in favour of the provisions of the Bill. They, no more than I, felt bound by the limitations of each particular clause or phrase. They, as well as I, desired if possible to make it better, and the only objection ever urged was on the part of life insurance companies, who wanted it put in the form of a private Bill instead of a Bill to amend the Insurance Act.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes, a private Bill.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Upon that, a sub-committee was appointed by the Banking and Commerce Committee. I was not a member of that committee, and I was not a member of the Banking and Commerce Committee. I was entitled to appear before the Banking and Commerce Committee, although not entitled to vote. I did speak on behalf of the Bill, and was rather sharply taken to task. That is all at an end now. But after that, when I attended the sub-committee, I had no part in its deliberations, I was not consulted about it. I took the liberty of making one or two suggestions. I had no opportunity of suggesting in any way any amendment with any feeling that I could present it there. That sub-committee, and not I—and I was no party to it—referred that Bill to the Superintendent of Insurance, with instructions to associate with him one gentleman who had been named on behalf of the life insurance underwriters, and the other gentleman who was supposed to represent those who would be interested on behalf of the company. It was the sub-committee who named them—not from any suggestions from me in any way whatever—and those three, and the whole of the sub-committee agreed to it. The chairman of that committee supported it. No one has any higher opinion as to the judgment, fair-mindedness, honesty, integrity, high spirit, and public interest and desire to protect the rights of the people, than the hon. chairman of the committee, and the hon. chairman of the sub-committee. The hon. chairman of the committee, I may mention, was the hon. gentleman from Montreal (Hon.

Mr. Drummond), who has received such distinction lately, of which we are all glad to hear, and the chairman of the sub-committee was the hon. gentleman who leads the opposition (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell). The part I was permitted to take in the committee was a humble one, but I was not on the committee, nor consulted. Neither the Superintendent of Insurance nor Mr. Bradshaw, whose name has been mentioned, nor Mr. Eldridge, ever consulted me or spoke to me, with reference to what was done with that Bill, from the time it was handed over to them until afterwards, when I heard their report adopted in the committee. They passed it to the Banking and Commerce Committee, and the Banking and Commerce Committee passed it on here, unanimously, after a good deal of consideration and scrutinizing, line by line, and I should like to know from the hon. gentleman where my opportunity for amendments came, until the Bill was presented to this House? It had passed to a committee of which I was not a member, and it passed to the sub-committee who did not associate with me, and it was not till it got on the floor of the House that I had a right to say anything as to its provisions. I had the sense to know that, and I held my tongue until I had a right to speak. The moment the opportunity occurred, in order that the amendments might be made, and in order that other hon. gentlemen might have an equal chance, I asked that instead of the report being adopted it should be referred to a Committee of the Whole House, where I could have an opportunity of suggesting my amendments. I propose, when the opportunity occurs, to say what those amendments are, but I do not propose to do it until the proper time. I do not propose to be told that I have no right to suggest it, and have it criticised before we are in committee.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I made no charge against the hon. gentleman. I freely acknowledge he has nothing to do with the Bill any more than I have. The Secretary of State is the father of the Bill, and my hon. friend is the godfather, and between them they have the responsibility. I did not charge them in that case, but I wanted to know how Mr. Eldridge came to be associated with this Bill. My hon. friend knew how he was associated with it, but I did not, and whether anybody is guilty of having asked that gentleman (Mr. Eldridge) to participate I do not know, but it should not have been done, and I condemn in the strongest language the fact that a man who has been under examination for extravagance with other people's money should have anything at all to do with that Bill. These are my opinions. I want to ask the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill if he will let the Bill stand until the report of the committee is brought in? That is a reasonable request. The committee have a great deal to consider in this matter, though possibly their report will not influence one way or another the present Bill, but it would be a common-sense transaction to postpone consideration of the Bill until the report comes in.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Permit me to answer the question the hon. gentleman has asked. I would very gladly do it. If will be borne in mind that this Bill came back from the sub-committee more than a week ago. It will be borne in mind that I moved for the immediate consideration of these clauses. It was suggested to let it stand over. I suggested on Friday last the consideration of this matter. It was then stated that the committee would be able to make its report by the beginning of the week. Upon that I suggested either Monday or Tuesday, and accordingly Monday was named by other members of the House, not by myself, and so the Bill stood for consideration on Monday. No report was brought in on Monday, and we were no further advanced than we were the previous week; but we were very much further advanced in another way. We are now one week nearer prorogation. We are now on the border of possibilities, and while I would most gladly wait for any length of time that would suit the convenience, or that would possibly serve to help any kind of suggestion to improve this Bill; while I would most gladly accede to anything of the kind, I felt that any further postponement of the stage we are now at would imperil the Bill being passed into law this session. Let me suggest the adoption of my motion, which is the adoption of the report, coupled as it is with the fact that this Bill has not received its third reading, coupled with the fact I have announced already, that amendments are to be proposed, some of which will meet the very points that have been considered, though they are not of consequence in this debate at all, but were drawn up before the debate began, and would meet most of the points raised here. It is proposed to put them in writing, so that hon. members can consider them at the third reading. If I gave it now, I would be out of order, until the motion has been made for the third reading. I would be at liberty on the motion for third reading to move my amendments, and, therefore, last night, when this debate was proceeding, I asked whether we could not arrive at a conclusion to take this stage now, in order that the motion might be made for third reading to-day, and in that event notice could be given to-day; but hon. gentlemen would not accept it; nothing could be done, but they should take their own course, and therefore hon. gentlemen will see, as far as I am concerned, I am desirous of seeing the Bill pass, as I think it is now a good Bill. It has been pronounced by the Superintendent of Insurance, as the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Commerce announced here, to be as good a Bill as it is possible to make, and largely and entirely in the interests of the policy-holders.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is that the opinion of Mr. Eldridge?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I have not consulted him on that point, and have not been asked to do so, but that is what Sir George Drummond stated here, an opinion in which he said he concurred.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—So far as he knew.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Very well. I have no doubt whatever that with the enlightenment of members of this House, the concurrence of the hon. gentleman himself may be invoked.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes. Number 7 will have to go out.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—And I would suggest that if there is a sincere desire on the part of those who have been protesting in the name of the widows and orphans, to do something, and that can only be done by the Bill, if we should now adopt this motion as the course, towards the third reading, and it will be then in order to give notice of amendments.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I think the hon. gentleman is labouring under a serious mistake as to the question which is really before the House.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Although my hon. friend declines to postpone this measure, I want to rejoice his heart, by telling him that I am not going to make a long speech. I am too old for that, and there are two hon. gentlemen who have taken the wind out of my sails, the hon. gentleman from Wellington, and the hon. gentleman from Elgin. I fully endorse what they have said. If I had to make a speech I should prepare a similar speech, as I endorse every word they have said. I do not like the Bill. I do not like the loading of the premiums—the five per cent. I do not like taking the securities out of the hands of the government, to do anything; I should leave it there. I do not like the last clause, which bars any action against the company hereafter. On account of these features which I do not like, I shall adopt the opinions expressed by the hon. members from Wellington and Elgin.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I had no idea of saying anything at this stage of the sitting of the House, but I thought before the discussion was closed I might say a few words. I am stimulated to do so by the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Victoria. I thought he was rather severe on the committee—that semi-judicial body which he thinks ought to have acted in a semi-judicial manner. I think they acted very well, considering the material under consideration, and the way the members themselves acted. In fact they were all sinning, and if you want to know who are the chief sinners, I will tell you that they were the lawyers, the men who ought to keep order.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—What about the doctors?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I sinned a little, but nothing at all equal to the other gentlemen. The trouble was there were a great many abstract questions of insurance taken up, which did not come within the scope of the investigation. I thought there would be simple frauds brought forward, and that this investigation would be confined to that. However, this discussion will do a great deal of good. There is no more important matter, after the food we eat, the water we drink, and the clothes we wear, than insurance; none which affects the people so generally, and none the discussion of which will be listened to or considered with more attention and care. I am sure every hon. gentleman who has spoken here, has spoken from his heart. He has spoken not under the influence of any company or from any motive whatever beyond the desire which every one ought to have, namely, to benefit himself and the public, because whatever benefits the public necessarily benefits himself. I am happy to think that is the case, although a singular feature in connection with this matter, which I may mention to the House is that the whole of the legal fraternity are on one side in this discussion, beginning with the great experienced, learned, astute, and eminent counsel from Calgary and coming down to the fullest limit of the maritime provinces, and they are among the ablest men of the Dominion. That is a singular fact, and another curious fact, so far as I can make out, is that the doctors are all on the other side. This is merely a matter of curiosity. The reason why I think that this Bill should not go through is not so much on account of the provisions of it, though it has great defects, and I shall vote against it, but because by adopting it now you supplant a committee appointed by this House and stamped with the order of this House to conduct a certain investigation. It may be very well for the hon. gentleman from Lindsay (Hon. Mr. McHugh) to show his feelings against the Bill now. He should have objected when he was in the committee room, and he should have taken the precaution to check all the errors he saw, as I did. Whatever may have been the result I think the investigation was conducted honestly.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—I was not in the committee room. I did not happen to be a member of the committee.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto).

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The moment this Bill is passed by this House the committee drops to pieces. Whether it resigns or not it is of no further use, and the effect of its investigation is counteracted. There is a good deal of principle at stake. If you do this now it may be done again, and even if you have a majority, it is not right to wipe out a committee just because you have the greater number. They have a mandate from the Senate, and so long as they have it they ought to be respected. You are not insulting them, but you are insulting the honour and dignity of the Senate by putting the committee out of business, and causing them to resign. They must resign. How can they go on investigating a matter which is already settled by the Senate? If the House wants them to resign, why not send a polite note by some influential member of the Senate to the chairman, saying, 'We will not wait any longer for the report of the investigation. If it is not concluded by to-morrow we shall take it up and discuss it in the House.' So far as I am concerned, it has been delayed too long. I have always urged that there should be all possible despatch, and I was bad enough to think that some members of that committee, by their actions, wished the whole thing would end in smoke and confusion, and they would be then able to say that the committee was no use. We have one gentleman making one assertion before the committee, and we have another contradicting it. If any hon. gentleman reads that report in 1899 of the Inspector of Insurance for the state of New York, which is in evidence, and can support this company afterwards, I am satisfied. I could not do so. Coming to the subject of debate, I contend that the Mutual Reserve is not qualified for, and should not be intrusted with the duty of taking care of these policy-holders. It has been weighed in the balance and found wanting. It has nothing to show to its credit in the whole of its career. It was founded in deceit and fraud, and its career has been characterized by fraud. There is no bright spot in its history, and if that is the case why do you throw these people back into their hands again? Hon. gentlemen speak of getting something out of the company. It would take me a week to understand the Bill thoroughly, and if I were to hand it to a policy-holder he would say that I might as well hand him a stone when he asked for bread. Why are they putting in all those conditions ? An hon. gentleman says, and that is his great argument, that is the best they can do. It occurs to me, if that is the best they can do, permit the company to go on and do in the future as they have done in the past, it is a very poor way of assisting those people who have been plundered. I know that simultaneously with the charges made by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay, there suddenly appeared in this city the chief officer of that company, with a cohort of people behind him, who immediately set to work to supplant and destroy the work of the committee. I hope his machinations have not been successful. I hope the poison he has put into the ears of hon. members has not taken effect. My duty and your duty is as it would be for our own families. Consider yourself as one of the policy-holders, and just simply do as you would do for yourself. That is the way I intend to act. I confess I should like more light. I confess it would be much better if the hon. gentleman had waited a little while. There is no use sitting up late at night endangering the health of hon. gentlemen advanced in years who may catch cold. There is no necessity for rushing this Bill to-night. There is plenty of time to discuss it, and plenty of time for every hon. gentleman to inform himself on the subject. I listened with satisfaction to the speeches made during this debate, and was much pleased with them. I never saw such an exhibition of the eloquence, skill and energy of the Senate in debate during the time I have been here. It is not necessary for me to go into the clauses of the Bill at all. On principle, it is bad, and in it there is no relief offered. It is worse than none. It only upsets men's minds, and makes them confused. Who is going to support the company in their lavish and extravagant dealings ? It is all very well to write certain instructions. There is a clause there to which the hon. gentleman referred, by which the holder of a lapsed policy applying for reinstatement can make a statement of his own case. I know what that amounts to. Some of you, in the innocence of your heart, may think an insurance company has a soul ; that a feeling of humanity runs through it ; that there is a fibre of anything but selfishness in the woof of its structure ; but any one who thinks so is mistaken.

I know something of insurance companies. I have examined for this company, and I think all the parties I examined are living yet. I tried to do them justice, but the history of this company is that they have worked on the principle of robbing Peter to pay Paul. Their business principles is collect in all you can, and as long as you keep that up you can show a successful table every year and you get on swimmingly ; but the moment the stream of new clients is stopped we see the result. We see it here. Do hon. members think this company will secure any business in this country after this investigation ? Do you think their agent could successfully canvass, even if he received the whole premium of the commission ? I know in the part of Ontario where I live—which of course is more intelligent than the rest of the country—he could not get any business. I do not say this to slander the company. I think it is wrong to slander any company. If they were disposed to be honest and lived up to their promises and pledges and to the conditions of the charter by which they were first called into existence, they would act differently. Do hon. gentlemen think any respectable company represented in the person of its chief officer would appear before parliament and go on in the miserable way in which they have done in this investigation ? A man who was conscious of his own innocence and conscious that the company had done its duty would say 'I defy you in the Senate. Here are my books. Examine them. I challenge investigation.' But this has not been the case. To get safe, reliable information of the condition of this company could not be done if the committee sat for a year. It could only be done by the investigation being caried on diligently from day to day at the headquarters of this company. I could allude to a great many wrongs perpetrated by the company, but I cannot see a bright spot in their existence. I think it is monstrous to lay down the doctrine that you cannot get anything better than this Bill. I am only a homœpathic part of this Senate, but I have a plan which I think will be better than this Bill, and I hope all the policy-holders will accept it. In the excitement of this discussion I certainly tried to avoid hurting the feelings of any one and I regret that I am in opposition to the wisdom—and I say it in all sincerity and because I believe it—to the wisdom of so many hon. gentlemen. It makes me think my position is not right, but I have examined the Bill again and again and I feel that I have no other course than to oppose with all my might and main the passage of this Bill, and on my honour I shall do it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It seems to me we have wandered altogether from the subject before the House, and we have been discussing the merits and demerits of the New York Mutual Reserve Company instead of drawing the attention of the House to the merits of the Bill before the House. We have had general denunciation of the Bill, and every kind of charge brought against the company itself. I desire to say that the explanation given by the hon. gentleman from Toronto in reference to the introduction of the Bill, and the actions of the committee upon the Bill, are correct. He omitted one point, however, and that was, when the Committee on Banking and Commerce selected a sub-committee to consider the merits of the Bill, that the Banking Committee instructed the sub-committee to call to their aid the Superintendent of Insurance, Mr. Fitzgerald, some gentleman connected with the actuarial association of Toronto, and some gentleman who was interested in the Bill itself or connected with the Bill. It was but justice that Mr. Fitzgerald, Superintendent of Insurance, and Mr. Bradshaw, who was the secretary of the Actuarial Association, and Mr. Eldridge, if he would consent to act, who had large experience and was interested in the Bill itself, should be asked to consider the Bill, and the sub-committee should call them to their aid. The sub-committee acted strictly in accordance with their instruction, and invited Mr. Eldridge, if he would consent, to meet these other gentlemen, and frame such a Bill as the Senate thought should be enacted in the interests of the policyholders. That was the action of the committee itself. That committee, after a consultation with these gentlemen, drafted a Bill, which was presented to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and was accepted by them. Now, if my hon. friend from Kingston has a scheme which would meet all the requirements of the policy-holders, I ask him why he, as a member of the Banking and Commerce Committee, did not make those suggestions to the committee, in order that, if they were at all practicable, they could be utilized and placed in this Bill?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The reason is that I was not asked. It would have been impertinent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman was a member of that committee for a special purpose, and that was to deal with every question which came before it, and if he has any proposition or any suggestion to make by which this Bill could be perfected, he neglected his duty in not informing the committee of it. I am not speaking of the special committee. I admit he was not on the special committee, but if he had any suggestions to make, they would have been received courteously as all suggestions would coming from a gentleman of his ability and knowledge of insurance; but having failed to do that, he owes it to this House now to admit that he neglected his duty as a member of the Banking and Commerce Committee in not making the suggestion, which he says he could have made, and has in his own mind, by which the policy-holders can be protected. I have very great respect for the hon. gentleman. He knows that. My long acquaintance with him is of the most amiable and confidential character, but I could not help pointing out to him this dereliction of duty on his part. As to the merits of that company or its conduct in the past, all I have to say is that if the company is as bad as it is represented to be, there is greater necessity for this House to adopt such measures as will protect the policy-holders against mismanagement in the future.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Hear, hear. That is the point.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is our position at the present moment ? Here was a company carrying on a system of insurance, based upon the assessment principle. Experience has taught all those who have had anything to do with insurance, that for a time that system can be successful, but after some years, there are circumstances which I am not going to discuss now, that render it impracticable to carry it on successfully. This company has been carrying on business in Canada, and has had a large amount of insurance. In a certain year, the Insurance Act was amended, and this company withdrew from the assessment class of business, and having withdrawn from that branch of the business, there was no longer new blood introduced, and they did not receive enough in the way of assessments to continue the business successfully. As the members dropped off, the company were obliged to levy higher assessments each year, with the result that many of the policy-holders ceased to pay their assessment, and from a business of over thirty millions, it has dropped down to eight or ten millions. The assessments on the remaining policy-holders had to be raised at every death, and the assessments became so large that people could no longer afford to pay them, and they dropped out. Now, what has this House to do? Has any suggestion been made by those who have condemned the actions of the company in the past by which the policy-holders can be placed in a better position than they are at the present moment, if this Bill should be rejected ? If this Bill should be rejected, how are you going to benefit those policy-holders who have continued to pay their assessments up to the present time ? If the Bill is not passed, certainly you give no relief whatever to the policy-holders who have ceased to pay their premiums, and are no longer entitled to any benefit from the association. This Bill provides first, to allow those who have continued the payment of their assessments to change to another system, by which they would be relieved by paying a certain amount annually, of any further assessments. Whether the provisions and the details of the Bill, are of such a character as to accomplish that, will be for the House to decide.

Then another misapprehension has arisen. A question put by the hon. senator from Acadie (Hon. Mr. Poirier), while the hon. gentleman from Mille Iles, (Hon. Mr. David) was speaking, was misunderstood. He asked whether the person who had been paying his assessment continuously, would have to get a doctor's certificate, in order to be transferred from one branch to another. The hon. gentleman from Mille Iles, I am quite satisfied, did not catch the question, and he answered 'yes,' because he appeared to be under the impression that the question referred to those whose policies had lapsed. Now, those who have continued their assessments have not to provide any certificate, but have the advantage of being transferred to the old line system, and the amount upon which they are to pay in the future, is to be in accordance with the value of their policy upon a basis fixed by the Superintendent of Insurance, who will base his decision on the actuarial principles that decide all these questions. The applicant would require no medical certificate, because his heirs would be in a position at this moment, in case he should die, to claim the full amount of his policy ; but the man who has ceased to pay his assessments has no rights in the company at all. When I spoke on this question before, I thought that it was impracticable to carry out the suggestion, then made, but the company itself has consented, and the actuaries who have assisted in framing the clause have made provision that a person who has ceased to pay his assessments for ten years can, by producing a certificate of health, be reinstated, and reinstated upon the basis of the age at the time he first insured. Now it is said that that certificate may be of such a character that nobody can sign it.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The certificate is to be signed by the applicant himself.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand, I think, what I am talking about. I was going to point out that the objection taken to that class is of the character to which my hon. friend has called my attention. I was going to say further, that I thought the objection had a great deal of force in it, and one amendment which I know is to be proposed, is that that certificate is to be framed by, or at least accepted by the Superintendent of Insurance.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—That is new information to us.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL — I know it is, and if my hon. friend had not interrupted I would have told him.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—But it is not in the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL — I know it is not in the Bill. I was calling attention to the objection taken, and in doing so, I intended to say precisely what I have said, that one of the amendments was to meet that objection. But there are many objections that one does not think of in framing a measure of this very great importance. I may mention as a case in point, that the hon. member from St. Thomas, while he criticised the Bill—I thought he was making a good argument—took objection to a clause to which the hon. gentleman from Toronto intends to propose amendments. That objection, which my hon. friend dwelt upon at some length, is to the legislating away the rights of seventy-five per cent of the policy-holders from whom they have not heard. I think it will strike any one as being ex post facto legislation, as he has said. One of the amendments I know will be proposed at the third reading——

Hon. Mr. WILSON—In criticising that, I had no knowledge of these amendments.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL — I know that, and that is why I am referring to it.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—We should have had a knowledge of them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Hon. gentlemen could not have a knowledge of them until an opportunity presented itself to submit them to the House. When we came to consider the question again, and the defects in the Bill were pointed out, we said these defects ought to be amended. The intention is to propose at the third reading a provision by which the seventy-five per cent can remain in the assessment plan, as they are to-day, and further an amendment will be proposed by which any arrangement with the company upon the basis of commutation or otherwise, shall be carried out. I know also that the suggestion by my hon. friend from Wellington, that the latter clause of the Act should leave it optional with those who think they have right of action against the company hereafter, arising out of what they have done during the time they held the policy, should be protected, or in other words, that the cases which are now before the courts shall not be interfered with by this Bill, nor shall the right of any one who would have cause of action against the company for the reasons which have induced two of the policy-holders to enter the courts and test the question to-day, be interfered with.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Then the hon. gentleman is opposed to all clauses of the Bill, where there is any retroactive legislation?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am opposed to retroactive legislation of any kind, and, consequently, when that amendment of the Bill is proposed, it will have my support and my vote. I quite agree with my hon. friend in that respect, because it is a delicate question to interfere with what we call vested rights, and these people have vested rights, to a certain extent. If people remain in the company, as they are under the present plan, they take the responsibility. We do not desire to remove them from that class, if they wish to remain there. There were one or two other suggestions made that I know.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That changes the Bill altogether.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, it does not change it altogether. It is changed now from the character that it had when it was first introduced. My hon. friend from Toronto said to-night, that when he introduced the Bill, and after considering it, there were certain clauses in it which he did not approve of, and he intended to suggest changes. The sub-committee, with the aid of the Superintendent of Insurance and the secretary of the Actuarial Association of Canada, and of those who are interested in the Bill, made certain suggestions which they thought covered it, and which the Superintendent of Insurance stated before the Banking and Commerce Committee, he considered in the interests of the Canadian policy-holders, and the best that could be done under the circumstances, and he added 'I commend it to the hon. gentlemen of the committee.' In considering this question, we ought to try and divest ourselves of prejudice, if such we have, against the company itself. I have no confidence in that system of insurance. Years ago when a company was organized in connection with a society in which I held a very prominent position on this principle, I opposed it from the beginning, and never would have anything to do with it from that day to this. The results of the policy in other companies have proved the wisdom of the course I took on that occasion. I am under the impression that it would be much better to allow these amendments to be adopted, and then, if the amendments which it is proposed to make to the Bill do not meet the approval of the Senate, reject it at its third reading. I frankly confess that if a motion had been made for the six months' hoist, when the Bill was introduced, it would have met my hearty support; but when I consider the pains, the trouble, and the thought given to this question by gentlemen who have some knowledge of insurance, and that it is likely to be a benefit not only to the present policy-holders, but also to those whose policies have lapsed, I think it is the duty of the Senate to try and make some provision for the protection of those who are in this company, bad though it may be, and bad as it has been represented to be. I am rather inclined to think, that the statements of my hon. friend from St. Thomas, reflect more upon his own townsmen, than on the Mutual Reserve. The latter made the best bargain they could. If my hon. friend from St. Thomas was making a bargain with a friend, some other physician—to hand him over his business I do not think he would do it, because he has sufficient confidence in himself to believe he can do all the doctoring necessary—but even supposing he did, I do not think it would be any great reflection upon his honesty, his ability, or his business habits, if he made the best bargain he could.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—And not carry out my promises?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think my hon. friend would carry out his promise.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—But they did not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then the people of St. Thomas were the bigger fools for having anything to do with them.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—They think so now, probably.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There are many other points I should like to touch upon, but I shall confine myself to the Bill before us without referring to the character of the company at all. I want to impress this upon the members who are about to vote: what is to be gained by the rejection of this Bill? Has any other suggestion been made by which the policy-holders can be better secured than by the provisions of this Bill, and the suggestions which have been thrown out for its amendment? Reject the Bill, and you leave the company precisely where it is now, and as the deaths take place, so in proportion must the rates be increased to meet the assessment. It is true, there is a sum deposited with the government to assist in meeting these claims, which can be drawn upon to that extent, but beyond that I see no object in rejecting the Bill. I was very much impressed with the remarks made by the hon. gentleman from New Glasgow. He held the same views that I hold myself upon this question; that is, he had no confidence in it in the first place; but finding that no better proposition could be made, he thought it better to vote for the Bill, than to throw it out and leave the policy-holders in the uncertain position that they hold to-day. I am firmly of the opinion, and I think those who have given the question the slightest thought will come to the same conclusion, if this Bill is not passed after what has taken place, that eight million dollars of insurance that they now have, will soon drop to a very small amount, because the policy-holders will say to themselves what my hon. friend from Mille Isles has said over and over again—I cannot afford to meet these large assessments, and consequently I shall drop out. Who will benefit by that? The company, for the greater the number of this class of policy-holders who drop out, the more the company will gain. Pass this Bill, and the company will be obliged, as long as they have any existence, and any assets. to meet the demands which will be made upon them, under the provisions of this Bill. It has been said it is loaded. That is a word that I confess, I had to make inquiry about, to know what it meant, but the loading of a policy of five per cent is to cover the expenses of carrying it on. We know in all insurance companies there is a large expense for management, and while they do not refer to it in their charter, they can load to any extent to cover the expense.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The loading is in the premium in the level plan.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You restrict the amount that this company can charge to the carrying on of this branch of the business to 5 per cent and if it costs them 10 per cent, they have to take it out of other funds, and not out of those of the policy-holders. The other companies do not do that; their reserve, as pointed out by the hon. member from Toronto, is based on the Insurance Act. It used to be 4 to 5 per cent, but as the interest upon money fell continually in the market, the government, in its wisdom, passed an Act to compel the insurance companies—those that begin business now—to base their reserve upon 3½ per cent instead of 4 or 5 per cent, and those of the old companies who have transacted their business upon 4 or 5 per cent in the past, have gradually to come down to the 3½ per cent. Some companies were given a certain number of years to accomplish that end. I am not going to pursue this subject any further. My only object, and the profession of every member of the Senate, who has spoken against the company and the provisions of the Bill, is that something should be done to benefit the policy-holders of this company in Canada. Will this Bill accomplish that object? As it stands, some say it will not. An hon. gentleman who spoke strongly against the company said it will. If there is any amendment which will accomplish what the committee had in view, let the suggestion be made at the third reading and my impression is that the feeling of the House is such that any reasonable proposition will be accepted to protect the policy-holders. When the Bill was introduced, those who listened to me knew that I made very serious objections to it on the general principle, but I have come to the same conclusion that the hon. member from New Glasgow (Hon. Mr. McGregor) came to after what has taken place, that we had better try at as early a period as possible to do something which will aid the present policy-holders who have put their money into this company, and who, if something be not done, will be wiped out of existence, and lose all that they have paid, and have no guarantee for the future. Admitting as true all that has been said against the company, for argument's sake, it strikes me there is a greater necessity under the circumstances for this House to adopt some means by which to remedy an evil that everybody admits to exist. I have no personal interest in it. I never would take a policy in any company conducted on the assessment principle, because I came to the conclusion long ago, that if you take such a policy unless you die very soon afterwards, your family will get no benefit from it. Let us consider the Bill on its merits, apart altogether from the company. I have one other suggestion to make. If you pass this Bill, it has been said by the hon. member from St. Thomas, you are giving this company a lease to do business in Canada for ten or fifteen years to come. That implies they are going to live that length of time. If so, it will be so much the better for the policy-holders, but if you reject the Bill, you leave them where they are to-day, to carry on the business on the old line system, and you place the present policy-holders who have continued to pay their assessments, in a position to have demands made upon them for increased assessments, upon every death that occurs. If you think that is good policy, then reject the Bill, and leave the policy-holders, and the unfortunate widows and orphans, of whom we have heard so much in this debate, in the same position they are in now.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—The hon. gentleman has intimated that certain amendments will be moved. If so, it would seem highly desirable that some one who is in possession of the amendments should place them before the House; it might assist us in disposing of this matter.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I am very glad that the message of peace was entrusted to the hon. member from Belleville. Like many members of the Senate, I felt disposed from the start to support any measure that had for its object the relief of the policy-holders of this unfortunate company. The charter that they got in 1899 gave them power to do business on the straight line principle, as well as upon the assessment principle. But only twenty-five per cent of those holders of policies in force at that time, have availed themselves of the opportunity of transferring to the straight line principle.

The other 75 per cent are out, and as my hon. friend from Elgin has forcibly stated this evening the other 75 per cent have not availed themselves of the opportunity presented to them. By this Bill as it is presented to the House you are obliging them to take either one of the two options, and if they will not accept either one of those two options they will have to take the third, which is in clause (g). I consider that that is a very unjust power, because they have some liberty under the Act of 1899, but there you deprive them of the only privilege that existed—that is of remaining as they are. My hon. friend from Belleville tells us now that that objection is going to be removed. There are hon. gentlemen in this House who are always anxious to put notices on the paper. Why did they not during the last two or three days inform the House that they were willing to make some amendments that would meet the objection that hon. gentlemen of this House have to this Bill. Why did they not give notice of these amendments? Why did they try to force this Bill through the House without amendment? If they had given us that notice; if they had intimated that they intended to improve the Bill so that it could be acceptable to hon. gentlemen of this House there is not an hon. member within my hearing who would not be willing to support the Bill or any Bill that would put the policy-holders upon a proper footing.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—When I had the honour to speak yesterday I announced that I intended to move other amendments, and that I would put them on the order paper. I had at the time prepared a certain amendment and made up my mind as to the others but I have finished them only this morning. I have them completed and I intend to put them on the notice paper to-day.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Why were not those amendments mentioned when the notices of motion were asked for?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Because I have been completing them during the session of the House.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—That makes my hon. friend all the more guilty, because he should have stated his amendments on the order paper and saved us a lot of debate.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—A notice of motion would have been absolutely out of order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I beg pardon, and the distinct statement was made that the opportunity would be availed of when the House went into Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Are we discussing here the principle of the Bill or are we discussing the principle of those amendments? What are we discussing? The acceptance of those amendments. Could we accept them and then turn around and say 'We want these amendments amended in that direction?' I have two policies in my pocket this very minute, issued by that insurance company, that were obtained by fraud, I am not going into that. Those parties are not willing to accept any amendments made by this Bill; they would rather remain as they are. Who is in possession of the facts? The hon. gentleman from Belleville alone is in possession of these facts. I am going to refer to two very objectionable clauses of the Bill, I refer to sub-clause 8.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have no objection to communicate to the House the amendment I propose to move.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I am glad we have brought these hon. gentlemen to time.

Some hon. MEMBERS—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I say we have been debating this Bill for the last two days, and hon. gentlemen stood on their high horse, and would not communicate to us the amendments which would have ended this discussion. Speaking for myself as one, I would be willing to accept the amendments.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Surely the hon. gentleman——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has no right to speak.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman who has the floor has given way.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I was going to ask the question, was it not the very proposal to go into a Committee of the Whole for the purpose of making the amendments? Was that not voted down as the only means by which——

Some hon. MEMBERS—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I understand that, but the only thing I am sorry for is that those amendments were not given to us. There is another clause and that is clause 8. That pretends to let in those who have allowed their policies to lapse. It is a clause that would extract money from these policy-holders as long as they live, and when death came their heirs would have to meet the company in court and fight the claim. The whole thing was left in this way, that they were to sign a certificate stating the condition of their health at that time. The easiest thing in the world for the company would be to procure evidence from a dozen people in the neighbourhood, stating the contrary to the facts recited in the certificate and when a death claim came to the office they would say we are in possession of such and such a fact; this man did not tell us the truth, and the consequence would be that the heirs would not get a single dollar. If there is anything at all to act as a safeguard for those who are to come in at present, it is to produce a certificate from another quarter, as my hon. friend from Belleville suggested. Let them produce the certificate of a medical man, and the certificate of half a dozen neighbours, but do not leave it entirely to themselves, because just as sure as you do that the claim will be disputed when the time comes. Now, the last clause is the most objectionable. We are told that that clause is to be amended so as to meet the wishes of hon. gentlemen. These are the only clauses in the Bill that are really worth anything. The whole thing is in these clauses. That is, to give those who hold policies at present the privilege of entering into a straight life policy, or to remain as they are and preserve right of action against the company for issuing policies on false representations and by false means. With these objections in the Bill I for one feel that until it is amended to that extent, I shall vote against it and will remain until the dog-days are over to oppose the Bill, because if there is any chance at all for the policy-holders, it is under the old Act and you are depriving them of that safeguard here.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—Right along this line I should like a little information. My opinion in reference to this matter was that this Bill should not be rushed through the House until we had a report from the committee. Now it seems the Bill is here, and we are likely to have to vote on it to-night. It has been announced both by the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry and the hon. gentleman from Toronto, that they have amendments prepared which they propose to add to the Bill. The hon. leader of the opposition has announced one or two more. But there are one or two matters I should like to have information on, and this is the time to get it. Under a clause of this Bill, page 3, I would gather that this company is to be permitted to withdraw the deposit that they have in the Dominion treasury.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—On this class of insurance.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—I want to know from the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry if one of his amendments is in the line of protecting this money and keeping it in the treasury for the protection of the policy-holders? If that is so, it will change my mind largely in reference to the Bill. Then, the last clause of this Bill if it goes through in its present shape will prevent policy-holders from entering any action against the company similar to the action that is proceeding in England now, and if that is so I want to know from the hon. gentleman from Toronto, and from the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry, if they have an amendment to protect the policy-holders in that regard ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—With reference to the question asked by the hon. gentleman I would simply say that the provision which is made in clause 5, with reference to the funds in the hands of the government, was understood by the expert and by the sub-committtee of the Banking and Commerce Committee, and, I suppose, by that committtee also to mean that the money should remain ; but my hon. friend from De Salaberry has been discussing this matter a good deal, and we have both come to the conclusion that that can be made more certain than it is, to provide that that money shall remain in the hands of the government and that shall be subject to the provisions of the thirty-third and thirty-fourth sections of the Insurance Act, so that so long as there are obligations of the company in existence the government can retain that money. Any one will see that the provision is there, not that the money shall remain on deposit for ever, because the company might provide for these obligations and withdraw from business ; but so long as there are obligations here, the government, under those sections, are entitled to protect all policy-holders, and it is intended to make that clear. With reference to the last clause of the Bill there is nothing there to bar an action.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It bears all actions.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The hon. gentleman is talking about a serious proposition, and I mean to say this—and I think the hon. gentleman will agree with me, there is nothing in that clause barring an action; on the contrary it provides that an action is not barred. I am talking of actions that have been brought.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Now pending ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It is our view that any action brought, based upon fraud, like the action in England, would not be barred at all. There is nothing barring any action at all, nor is there anything changing any person's right to bring an action, and if a policy-holder holding an old policy and determining to remain on the assessment plan, and not to change it, desires to litigate against any attempt to change his policy, his action will still be maintained. But if there is any doubt about it, there is no trouble about obtaining a legal opinion from the law officers of the Crown upon that point. The Minister of Justice can be consulted about it, if there is any question, and it can be made perfectly plain that where frauds are established the action cannot be barred. The idea is not to introduce into this Bill something which is not needed—something which is affirmative of the existing law. We are only putting in provisions which will prevent rights being taken away. There is no right taken away by the Bill as I understand it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Before passing from that point and giving a legal interpretation of that clause, allow me to put a question : Would it not be safer for the policy-holders to make the clause read in this way :

Nothing in this section shall affect any suit, action or other proceeding which has been taken or may be taken.

That would put it in black and white and would not leave the interpretation of the law in the hands of some officer.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The hon. gentleman will bear in mind that there is provision being made here for the policy-holder to change his position if he elects to do so. It is proposed, if he does not want to change his position, that that condition will be continued, so that against a man's will there will be no change made. He shall have the option to change or remain as he is. If he determines to remain as he is, then all his rights remain, and there is nothing in this Bill to change or affect it. If he does change his position ; if he does elect to change and take a policy of the other kind, he ought not also to have with it some right of action in respect of the policy he is giving up, and, therefore, such phraseology as the hon. gentleman suggests would be opening the door to first giving a changed and improved policy, and leaving a cause of action behind it ; but I think there is no trouble about either doing one or two things—either framing this Bill so as to accomplish the object, or obtaining the opinion of the law officers.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The best opinion is the opinion of the Senate, and the Senate has a right to make the law. The duty of a legislative body is to put as little power in the hands of the judges as regards the interpretation of the law as possible. We should make the law as clear as possible.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I would like to implement the answer to that question in this way: that it is proposed practically to say that, without the consent of the person, unless the person shall be offered the option and unless he consents to a change and desires a change in the contract, his contract shall continue. That is the first point. So that his rights are not going to be cut out in the ruthless manner we have heard talked about; consequently the option is to be even more extended by this proposal so as to cover the cases that may occur between the time of the passing of this Act, and the issuing of the license, because the clause that is here does not cover the gap there is there. Third, it is proposed to provide that all the assets shall remain subject to the provisions of the Insurance Act, which I have pointed out before, and in other respects it is intended to safeguard the rights of the policy-holders in various ways. I just want to say this for myself: I do not think that any self-respecting member of the Senate would, in view of the way in which this Bill has been dealt with since I have introduced it here, have thought of putting a notice on the order paper, until he was in a position to do it without a point of order being raised. We have had several points of order raised. It is not because I take any umbrage or stand on my diginity at all about it, but because I felt that in doing this I should have to stand on my right. When explanations were asked, I gave them.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—I understand now, from the opinion the hon. gentleman from Toronto has given, that the Bill, by the amendments to be introduced, will be safeguarded on those two points. I should like to hear the opinion of the hon. member from De Salaberry in addition to that of the hon. gentleman from Toronto.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have been pressing on members, to the knowledge of the leader of the opposition, that I would not vote in favour of the Bill unless these amendments were brought in. I have prepared the amendments accordingly, because I took the position that the rights of the policy-holders should not be interfered with, that if they choose to remain under the assessment plan it will be their own funeral, but they had that right, and I answer affirmatively the question that has been asked. It is but fair to myself to say that as regards the last clauses in the Bill, I am entirely in accord with the opinion that has been expressed by the hon. gentleman from Toronto. I am entirely of the opinion that suits for fraud, such as have been taken in England, are in no way debarred by this Bill. I propose to limit the notice of amendment virtually to this. I have been written to by the Hon. John S. Hall, lately of Montreal but now of Calgary, calling my attention to a class of policy-holders who had entered into agreements with the company, and whose agreements would be interfered with by the Bill, and I have drafted my amendments for the purpose of covering and making it clear that the Bill will not interfere at all with any such agreements, and that the company will be obliged to respect those agreements. But I declare that, as far as I am concerned if members of the Senate entertain any doubt on that point, I am willing to redraft it to make the point clear.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—Since we are satisfied on these two points, I should like to draw the attention of hon. gentlemen to a paragraph on page 4, in order to secure the policy-holders as much as possible. The object I have is to make the Bill as perfect as possible, on behalf of the policy-holders. In the latter part of that paragraph you will notice it says that the company shall revive policies that have lapsed for non-payment of premiums, but they are going to do this on a certificate of the policy-holder himself, as to the state of his health.

The point I want to make is this: we have had a committee sitting for a great length of time, investigating this company and we learn that the managers of this company are very astute gentlemen and take advantage of every circumstance to take money out of the pockets of the policy-holders and put it into their own.

If the company are allowed to take a man's own certificate as to the state of his health, after a little time they will begin to shout 'You gave us a false certificate' and on the strength of that objection they will refuse to pay his family when a death claim is presented. I should like to know from the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry and the hon. gentleman from Toronto, if they have an amendment prepared to meet this ? The only thing I can see to meet it—and I am not speaking for the doctors now—is that there should be a doctor's certificate as to the health of the man, and the company should be held bound by that.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have no more mission to prepare amendments than any other member of the Senate. I took the ground that the form required by the company would be liable to leave that class of policy-holders at the mercy of the company, and I propose to move that the following words be added 'And approved by the Superintendent of Insurance.' The certificate, such as it will be, will have to receive the approval of the Superientendent of Insurance. I can find no better authority than that.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—May I ask the hon. senator who has been a party to the drafting of this Bill, if the form of certificate required by the company, signed by the holder, is not the form required by the company ? Could we not have that form before us, when considering the amendment ? We do not know what the form may be ; it may be very strict. There is another point. There may be policy-holders away from this country, in Europe, or in South Africa among the Canadian soldiers, or in the Yukon. They cannot know that after ninety days, they will be debarred. That is another point to be taken into consideration.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—As far as the first question is concerned, I am agreed that a certificate as required by the company, would not answer the purpose ; but the company must be bound by the decision of the Superintendent of Insurance. He is the proper officer, the natural guardian of the interests of the policy-holders, and he must be taken as being a fair man, and the certificate must be approved by him and no other certificate. Now, I propose to suggest an amendment to that effect. As far as the second point is concerned, the hon. member will notice that under clause (e) it is provided :

(e.) The company shall, within thirty days from the date of the said license, send to each of the holders of its assessment policies, by registered letter postage prepaid to the last known address of such policy-holder, a statement showing in detail the amount of the policy and dividend under each of the foregoing options and the lien, if any, and of the premiums to be thereafter payable in respect of such policy and of the times when such premiums are payable ;

Therefore it will be within thirty days of obtaining the license, and I propose to suggest an amendment limiting it to two months for a company to apply for the license. Within thirty days, they shall be obliged to make it known to all policy-holders how they will stand, with the several options which shall be open to them under this Bill. Then every policy-holder will have ninety days to decide as to to his option.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is the very point I am making in favour of the policy-holders. For instance, men who are away in the Yukon or in South Africa.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Will the hon. gentleman suggest some amendment ? I think it is satisfactory as it is, but if hon. members prefer an amendment or suggest it, I am quite sure for my part I should be disposed to favour it.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—This will come up properly when the Bill is in committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Are we to understand that in accepting concurrence in the amendments, proposed by the main motion. that we may amend those amendments afterwards ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Of course.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, not of course. We cannot decide a matter to-day in a way different from the way it has already been decided. So those accepting the amendments to-day must bear in mind that they cannot change the amendments, except by adding to them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There are certain amendments made to the Bill, and there are portions of the Bill which are the same as when it was introduced. The hon. gentleman can give notice that at the third reading he will move to refer the Bill back to Committee of the Whole, or that the House adopt such amendments or additions to it, as may be deemed proper.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The only question that might arise, would be in the case of some amendment that has already been rejected by the House, but hon. gentlemen will bear in mind that the amendments suggested have not been rejected by the House, and therefore the position of the leader of the opposition is perfectly correct.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If they are accepted, they cannot afterwards be rejected ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto) moved that the Bill be read the third time to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order.

An hon. GENTLEMAN—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. Speaker decided last year that we should raise a point of order before the question was put.

The SPEAKER—I do not see how a question can be raised until the motion has been put by the chair.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I did not see it last year myself.

The question being put by His Honour the Speaker.

Hon Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. I refer to clause 124 of our rules, which reads as follows :

In all unprovided cases the rules, usages, forms and proceedings of the House of Lords are to be followed.

I refer to page 444, of the 10th addition of May, second paragraph. which is headed 'Public Bills,' and this is declared to be a public Bill. That paragraph reads as follows :

Public Bills which affect private rights thus combining the characteristics of a public and a private Bill are termed and practiced hybrid Bills, and are subject as also are petitioners against the Bill to the payment of fees in respect of a private Bill.

This House has just adopted the amendments proposed by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. This Bill is no more a public Bill. It is a private Bill. It has become a private Bill by the decisions just given by this House. The Bill is no more an Act to amend the Insurance Act. It is a Bill as it reads now, as reported by the committee, a Bill which comes into this House with a preamble quite different from the first preamble, with provisions quite different from the provisions in the first Bill.

It is no more the same Bill. It is a private Bill, but if the hon. Speaker chooses to declare it a public Bill I shall accept his declaration for the moment and refer him to page 444 of May, where it is said :

> Public Bills which affect private rights thus combining the characteristics of a public and private Bill are termed in practice hybrid Bills and are subject to the regulations which are imposed upon private Bills.

There must be a petition, there must be a payment of fees. All those things must accompany the public Bills, which affect private rights. The other quotation to which I refer is from Bourinot, last edition, page 684. The point is that alterations have been made in this Bill so that it cannot be accepted. Bourinot says :

> While a Bill is in progress in the Commons no alteration whatever can be made in its provision except by the authority of the House. If it should be found a Bill has been materially altered since its introduction it would have to be withdrawn. A clerical alteration however is admissible. If it be necessary to make any changes in the Bill before the second reading the member in charge of it will ask leave to withdraw the Bill and present another instead thereof. In the Canadian House, 1864, an order for the second reading of the Bill relative to usury was discharged and the Bill withdrawn. On the following day the member interested in the Bill was given leave to bring in another, on the same subject but with amended title. In the session of 1862, the attention of the Speaker was directed to the fact that the representation Bill had been materially altered since its introduction, and that it was not, in consequence of such alteration, the same Bill that was presented a few days before to the House. Mr. Speaker Blanchet at once decided that the Bill could not be allowed to proceed, and that it was necessary to follow strictly thereafter the practice of the English parliament, and not permit any changes except mere clerical alterations in a Bill once before this House. The Bill was accordingly withdrawn and another immediately presented.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—What is the point with reference to this Bill ? That it has been materially altered.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Might I say a word with reference to this point of order. It was held yesterday that this was a public Bill. There having been no appeal from the ruling of the chair, my hon. friend cannot from his place say that it is a hybrid Bill or a private Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—When the Speaker gave his decision yesterday it was on a Bill that was not yet amended. It was on a Bill as presented in this House. It was on Bill (H), 'An Act to amend the Insurance Act'. That was a Bill to amend a public Act. The amendments brought before this House have been accepted. That Bill has been entirely wiped out now, and we have a private Bill in place of the public Bill which was before the House yesterday. I claim that this private Bill has been substituted for the public Bill and that the exigencies of the regulations must be complied with. If we say that it is a public Bill I have this other argument. If it is a public Bill it affects private interest and that is the scope of the Bill itself. If it affects private interests it is a hybrid Bill and it must follow the regulations laid down by the authorities, and in that case a fee must be exacted and the different rules of a private Bill must be complied with. A petition must be presented to this House also, and I say that none of those rules have been complied with and the Bill is not in order.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—All I can say in answer to the hon. gentleman is that it has been held that this is a public Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Not this one.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It was held by the chair that it was a public Bill. No action of the committee could have changed it. So far as Bill H is concerned it is a public Bill. My hon. friend from Stadacona has no right to assume that it has assumed any other phase than that of a public Bill. And it has to be assumed that it is a public Bill. I am not dealing with the question as to hybrid Bills. If the hon. gentleman will look into the authorities he will see that is a rule common only to the House of Commons in England and is not at all applicable here.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The question should be decided without any discussion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the House will permit me, we might decide the first point and then consider the second point.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—As it is an important matter, I assume the Speaker will not render a decision to-night. I shall call the attention of the hon. members to this fact; although the hon. gentleman who has spoken before me says this is still a public Bill and the hon. gentleman from Stadacona said it was a public Bill yesterday but not a public Bill to-day. When the Speaker gave his decision we had a Bill before us to amend the insurance Act. That has been struck out by the committee, and no title has been put on it, and the whole of the clause in the Bill as brought up by the report pertaining entirely to a private Bill. I do not propose to discuss the Bill, I have not the right to do so, but I think every one of us, whether Liberal or Conservative, must attach the greatest importance to the good name of the Senate. Supposing this Bill is passed and sent to the House of Commons, and a member of the Commons should say 'Here is a private Bill, where is the petition for it? There is none. Where is the money to pay for the printing? None.' Then where would we be? We would be in a perfectly ridiculous position. I hope hon. members will consider this matter. The good name of the Senate must be conserved with the greatest caution, and we should not vote on the spur of the moment. I think the matter should not be decided to-night.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—With reference to the first point of order—as to the alteration of the Bill—the hon. gentleman from Stadacona answered his own question when he read the statement that while a Bill is in progress in the Commons, no alteration whatever can be made in its provisions except by the authority of the House. We have been doing that by the authority of the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—How does the hon. member reconcile his position with the position taken by Speaker Blanchet?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I was referring to the hon. gentleman's first question.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Read the extract, and see how Speaker Blanchet decided in reference to the question of the Franchise Bill.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I have no objection to read it, because it bears out still more clearly the point I am making, which is that when an hon. gentleman introduces a Bill in the House and it is no longer in his private possession, but in the possession of the House, he has no right to make any changes in that Bill whatever. The House then takes that responsibility, and it rests upon the House to deal with it, and the Speaker, on the occasion to which the hon. gentleman refers, having discovered that a Bill had been altered without the authority of the House immediately ordered that it be withdrawn, which was certainly a proper course to follow, maintaining the procedure which I had suggested the House had authority to follow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is another point. If the original Bill was introduced as a public Bill and declared to be a public Bill, though as many of us contended it dealt with private matters, would the amending of that Bill change its character and make it a private Bill? It having been decided that is was a public Bill it was sent to committee for what purpose? To consider its provisions. While it is amended, the character of the Bill has not been interfered with. The principle involved in the Bill has not been interfered with, and if it were a public Bill then, it must be a public Bill now, although these changes have been made. If the doctrine laid down by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona be correct, then you could not change any Bill and you could not amend any Bill. But when the Bill is amended it passes from the hands of the introducer and becomes the property of the House as indicated by the hon. gentleman from Killarney, and the Bill now is precisely the same in principle as the Bill which was introduced by the hon. gentleman from Toronto. The only difference being that the title is changed.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. The Bill introduced by the hon. gentleman from Toronto was a Bill affecting all the insurance companies of the country—amending the Insurance Act. That was the scope of the Bill, and the principle of the Bill. This Bill applies only to one company.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The same principle.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is not the same principle. It is a difference between a public Bill and a private Bill. There is nothing like a definition. When we want to discuss questions, I think the best thing is to define them first. What is a private Bill? I suppose the authority of May might be accepted on that question, page 226——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A private Bill must necessarily be supported by the parties interested. This is not a Bill advocating or supported by the insurance companies. It is a Bill forced on them.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is not the definition given by the authorities. It might be the definition of the hon. Secretary of State.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think I am right.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the hon. gentleman is wrong.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No change could be made in the law if the hon. gentleman's view is carried out. The Mutual Reserve Company comes under a certain Bill. It is found there are provisions in it affecting individuals outside of the company and those individuals have certain rights which parliament is bound to respect, whether the company accepts it or not, and it is in that respect I say it is not a private Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Page 706 of Bourinot—and in all humility I confess the definition given by Bourinot is different from the one given by the hon. minister and May—reads as follows :

Private Bills are distinguished from public Bills in that they directly relate to the affairs of private individuals or to corporate bodies, or to the community in general. They must pass through the same stages as public Bills.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That does not accord with the definition here because this Bill is advocated by many thousand persons against the will of the company.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I should like to see the petitions presented by those people advocating a private Bill against the company. It is a private Bill.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I wonder if the committee which has just been appointed to investigate but not to frame a Bill had been granted power to frame a relief Bill, and if that committee had reported proposing a relief for the large class of policy-holders in one special company and had brought it to the House. I wonder if it would not be a public Bill as completely as if it related to all the insurance companies ? It could not be a private Bill in the ordinary sense of the word, promoted by certain corporations for the advantage of a corporation. It may be an invasion of the right of that corporation, and this Bill is an invasion of the right of a corporation.

I doubt whether we have within our past experience met with a similar Bill. We are imposing special legislation, special laws, special enactments with reference to a company that is not incorporated in Canada which holds no charter from the Dominion of Canada, a charter which could not be amended or could not be modified. We are dealing with a foreign company that has simply obtained a license from the government of Canada to do business in Canada, and we are now enacting legislation which will fit the special class of business done by that company under which we may bring other companies if it pleases us at the following session ; but I contend this is the act not of a private corporation but of the parliament of Canada. It is not a private Bill, I contend it is the nature of a public Bill. The government would itself bring such a measure for the relief of the citizens of Canada who would be suffering from certain hardships. Instead of the government of Canada proposing and promoting the Bill, it is practically the work of the Senate of Canada which has the stamp of this chamber. I do not see that this Bill can, under the present circumstances, be classified as a hybrid or private Bill.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Is it not done at the request of the Speaker ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—When the Bill——

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is the hon. gentleman going to speak two or three times ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes. When the Bill came before committee it was changed, and it was made a private Bill.

The SPEAKER—I do not think the two points of order are well taken. In the first place, as the hon. gentleman from Calgary says, a hybrid Bill is not known to our parliamentary system ; and, further, supposing that this Bill were by the adoption of the report transformed from a public Bill into a private Bill, if it should be held that that had happened and that this Bill being a private Bill was subject to the rules which govern private Bills, it is not too late to pay the fees on it, and, as I understand, the fees are only paid after the second reading. I think the hon. gentleman from Killarney, and the hon. leader of the opposition place the matter in the proper light. The reference in Bourinot is to a case where the Bill is altered, not by the House itself as is the case of this Bill, but by the promoter or some other person. Bourinot says :

> While the Bill is in progress in the Commons no alteration whatever can be made in its provisions except by the authority of the House.

We all know that. Bourinot proceeds :

> If it be necessary to make any changes in the Bill before the second reading the member in charge will ask leave to withdraw the Bill and present another instead thereof. In the Canadian House, 1864, an order for the second reading of the Bill relative to usury was authorized and the Bill withdrawn.

But if that rule were to be enforced literally as has been stated by one hon. gentleman, we could not amend a Bill at all. Our work is largely altering Bills. Then these rules with respect to private Bills are intended for the protection of parliament. They are intended to provide that the persons who wish to get Bills through for their own interest, shall go through certain forms and shall give notice to the parties interested. This Bill came as a public Bill. This House became seised of the Bill. It became the property of the House, and the House has the utmost freedom of action in dealing with the Bill. The committee, while they did not in so many words say we recommend that this Bill shall be transformed from a public Bill into a private Bill, substantially recommended that the operation of this Bill should be limited to the parties who are interested either as policy-holders or as a company in the business of the Mutual Reserve Assurance Company. That was the recommendation of the committee. The House has acted on that recommendation, and I do not think any case has ever occurred which would say that this House has not the power to limit the operation of a Bill in any way which it thinks proper. I rule that these points of order are not well taken.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—If I remember correctly, and I think I do, it was specially provided that the Bill might go to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce on account of the discussion that was necessary, and that when it came back to the House, the fullest latitude should be granted to discuss every clause of the Bill, and if it be a private Bill, as is contended, that it should go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER—The House decided the other way yesterday.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, the Speaker decided on a question of order.

The SPEAKER—The question is on the motion for third reading of the Bill at the next sitting of the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I want to speak on that motion. Yesterday, the hon. member from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Kerr) moved, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Young, that the Order of the Day be discharged, and that the House immediately resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of Bill (H) intituled 'An Act to amend the Insurance Act.' That was the public Bill.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The hon. gentleman is out of order; he is referring to a past debate.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am not referring to a past debate. I am referring to the Minutes of Proceedings, where I find the following entry :—

> That the Order of the Day be discharged, and that the House immediately resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the Bill (H) intituled : 'An Act further to amend the Insurance Act,' and the amendments reported by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, as set forth in the said Bill as reported by the said standing committee.
> After Debate.
> With leave of the Senate, the said motion was withdrawn.
>
> Then the Honourable Mr. Kerr (Toronto) moved, seconded by the Honourable Mr. Young,
> That the said amendments be now agreed to.

Then the Hon. Mr. McMullen came with an amendment. What I contend is, the first motion of the hon. gentleman from Toronto was not withdrawn by leave of the Senate, but was ruled out of order. It was ruled out on demand of Hon. Mr. Bolduc. Further, we see that Hon. Mr. Domville moved, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Landry, that further debate on the said motion be adjourned, and the question of concurrence being put on the amendment—where is the amendment ? The only amendment spoken of there, is the amendment brought in by Mr. McMullen. The Senate divided, and the names were taken down. It was the motion to adjourn the debate, on which the House divided. I call attention to these irregularities.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I beg to give notice of two amendments that I purpose making to the Bill—

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry has the floor.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not think the Speaker has a right to say the hon. member from de Salaberry has the floor.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As a matter of fact he had, because he was on the floor first.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But it is not for the Speaker to decide that.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman is quite right; I made a mistake.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I give notice of amendment which I shall move at the third reading of the Bill. I have already called attention to the nature of these amendments, except one, which is, this: with the Bill as it is printed on default of parties electing, they are to be deemed to have chosen the third option. As I am at present informed, the best of the three options is the first one, and I give notice of that change, but I invite hon. gentlemen to ascertain for themselves whether I am correctly informed or not.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is that in the notice of motion.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Will the hon. gentleman amend his motion, so that these may be discussed in Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I will move them separately.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If it is a public Bill it must go to Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The amendments can be discussed fully in the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I will press my objection.

The Senate ajourned until three o'clock this afternoon.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, July 21, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (144) An Act to amend the Act of the present session respecting the Temiscouata Railway Company.—(Hon. Sir Alphonse Pelletier.)

Bill (150) An Act to amend the Act of the present session intituled an Act to incorporate the Thorold and Lake Erie Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Domville.)

Bill (58) An Act respecting the Imperial Loan and Investment Company of Canada.—(Hon. Mr. Domville.)

Bill (140) An Act respecting the Alliance Bank of Canada.—(Hon. Mr. Beique.)

THE SUPPLY OF RIFLES.

NOTICE OF INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY gave notice :

That he will ask the government for a statement showing the military strength of the government of Canada in so far as it relates to ammunition, rifles and other weapons of warfare, where and in what proportions are such stored ?

He said : I am induced to make this inquiry, because when I was first elected to the House of Commons a large number of people made application to me to get rifles to form rifle clubs. It took me two years to find out that I could not get them. Every year since then, I have been requested to get rifles for rifle clubs, and I have not been able to get any. That is why I propose to inquire if there are any rifles in the country, so as to get them for the boys of the Northwest who want to form clubs to become expert in rifle shooting.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman is already aware that a contract has been made with Sir Charles Ross for the delivery of, I think, one thousand rifles a month. In this age of peace, there is an extraordinary demand for rifles, and it appears that the demand cannot be met in any country. The rage is for militarism rather than for ploughshares.

THE TREADGOLD COMMISSION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL inquired :

What has been the cost of the Treadgold Commission to the country up to the present date, and what is the probable amount yet to be paid ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The cost of the Treadgold Commission to the present date is $8,915.66. I am unable to say what amount may yet have to be paid.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The balance of the accounts are not in yet ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The living commissioner has not made his report yet, and we have not completed the accounts yet.

NOTICES OF MOTION.

A POINT OF ORDER.

The SPEAKER—Orders of the Day.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is a motion standing in the name of the Hon. Mr. Beique. that has not been called :

By the Hon. Mr. Béique :

That he will move, That the chairman of the Select Committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York be ordered to report to the House that part of the proceedings of said committee had on the 13th instant, relative to an appeal made by Senator Béique from the chairman's ruling on a point of order raised on a motion in amendment, made by Senator Landry, to a motion moved by Senator Lougheed ; and that he will appeal to the House from said ruling of said chairman.

The SPEAKER—When this order was called yesterday, or the day before, it was allowed to stand over until the report of the committee with which it deals was taken up ; and, consequently, being guided by the previous action of the House, I did not call it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is nothing on record to that effect. Bourinot, at page 328, says :—

Calling of questions and orders—Until the session of 1876, when the rules were amended, questions and notices of motion were constantly allowed to stand, in case members were absent or were not prepared at the moment to proceed with them ; but great inconvenience and loss of time resulted from so irregular a procedure, and the consequence was the adoption of the following rule :

Questions put by members, notices of motion, and orders (other than government notices of motions and orders), not taken up when called, shall be dropped. Dropped orders shall be set down in the order book after the orders of the day for the next day on which the House shall sit.

This rule is now rigidly enforced.

If a member is not ready to go on with his motion, or if he gave his notice of motion in such an irregular form that it cannot come in its regular place, the only thing to do is to drop it. Therefore it is not in order to pass over this motion.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—When this motion was called the day before yesterday, I made the motion that it stand to be taken up with the seventh report of the special committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Where is that motion ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The motion was made verbally, and there was a discussion on the point, and that was the understanding. The motion was carried, if I recollect, on a division. I have not verified whether it appears that way on the Order paper, but that was the order of the House, and I declared that the first portion of the notice, the report having been made, had nothing to do with it any more except for the purpose of making the last portion regarding the appeal read intelligently. It is intimately and necessarily connected with the report, and cannot be taken up except with the report : if we are to proceed with any common sense it cannot be taken up separately from the report. The most that the hon. member should ask is that I should renew the notice of motion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If we want to proceed, as the hon. gentleman says, with common sense, that motion should drop immediately. It is against the rules and against common sense. In the name of common sense, we cannot order the chairman to produce a document which is now before the House. Under the rules of this House I ask that this notice of motion be dropped.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If it is not dropped, I shall have to move that it be proceeded with. This notice of motion has been on the minutes for some days and is a standing farce. I ask the hon. gentleman to proceed now with his motion or I shall move that it be dropped.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—When the hon. gentleman has a motion before the House we will deal with it. For the present I ask that the order of the House stand unchanged.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I move that the notice of motion be struck out.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has no right to make any motion of which no notice has been given.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Where is the notice of the motion the hon. gentleman has just made ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—This thing has to be settled one way or the other. The hon. senator has not even asked the chair to have the motion stand.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am standing on the decision of the Senate the day before yesterday.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am taking the hon. gentleman's word for it, but there is nothing to show it on the record. There is a notice of motion here to order the chairman of the committee to produce a report, and no demand has been made to have the motion stand, and I am at a loss to know why the Speaker says 'Stand' when no request has been made to have the motion stand. I was waiting for the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry to ask that his motion stand, and then I would have spoken, but the Speaker said everything was clear until the hon. gentleman from Stadacona raised his point of order. In the face of this notice of motion I ask that it be dropped or moved, because it is important that we should know whether a certain portion of the evidence relating to this Mutual Reserve Company should go into the records or not. That should be settled at once. The hon. gentleman is holding up the decision of this House in regard to that matter, and it is important that the committee should know whether the charges against the company are to go into the record or not. We should have an immediate decision. I do not care whether the evidence goes in or not, but as chairman of that committee, I do not want my decision, sustained as it was by a majority of the committee, held up here for a week or two while the investigation is going on. If we get an order from the Senate that the documents charging the company with forgery and other offences cannot be admitted as evidence, then we can proceed with the examination of the witnesses on these lines, but as long as the document is held up by the Senate on the demand of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry we cannot do anything.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I do not think there is any point of order. I was not here when the discussion commenced, but my recollection of the proceedings the other day is this : When that notice was called by the Speaker the hon. senator in whose name it stands, moved that it be taken into consideration at the same time as the report of the special committee. The House acquiesced in that, whether the records show it or not. I have a distinct recollection that that was done. The Speaker therefore has nothing to do but assert the authority of the House and order the motion to stand until the report of the select committee is taken up. There is no point of order to bring before the Speaker, because the House has placed itself in possession of the motion and has ordered it to be considered in the way the jugdment of the House has been pronounced. It is not the fault of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry that this motion has not been dealt with; it is because other business has occupied the time of the House and the order has not been reached. Had the report of the select committee been reached, the complaint of the hon. gentleman from Victoria would have had no basis ; but by order of the House certain business has precedence over other business, and our time has been taken up with orders which stood on the order paper before this one.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I quite concur in what the hon. gentleman says, but it is no fault of mine if there is no record of the incident in the Minutes of Proceedings.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I have not looked over the minutes.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have, and there is nothing of it there. I have stood under this impeachment for four sittings of the House. The course pursued by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry shows either that he has no confidence in his appeal, or I am right. I do not want this notice to be dragged from day to day on the minutes of the House, reflecting on me as chairman of the committee, and on the majority of the committee who sustain my decision. It is but right and proper that the decision of the committee should be vindicated by this House, no matter what motion the hon. gentleman may have made to connect it with another order with which it has nothing to do. I hold that this Senate should give the committee the benefit of its decision, so that the committee will be able to go on and examine the witnesses on this document if it is admitted. It is an interference with the proceedings of the committee. On behalf of the committee, I ask that the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry either proceed with this motion or drop it.

The SPEAKER—I think it only right that the House should know what has taken place. It is true that this resolution of which I spoke does not appear in the printed minutes, but I have the original minutes of Tuesday under my hand.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have not seen that.

The SPEAKER—I cannot help that. When I called the notice of motion, the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry moved, seconded by the Hon. Mr. David, that the notice of motion standing in his name for that day be allowed to stand until the item on the Orders of the Day for the consideration of the seventh report of the select committee to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York was called. The officer at the table did not put that in the printed Minutes, but it is part of the action of the House; and at any rate there is involved an ordinary courtesy which I have never known to be refused. Further, hon. gentlemen will bear in mind there are half a dozen notices on the Orders of the Day of motions which cannot be moved until we reach the third reading of the Bill to amend the Insurance Act.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Those notices of motion relate to that Bill directly. If that memorandum which the hon. Speaker has read had been on record I would not have had a word to say.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I want to know if it was only by error that this entry was not made in the Minutes?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN.

The SPEAKER—I assume it was, and I have been so informed by the clerk. Surely the clerks at the table had no reason to omit it.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Our officers have been worked early and late during the last few days.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Not only the officers.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—That is true,—ourselves as well.

INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The Order of the Day being called:

Third Reading (Bill H) An Act further to amend the Insurance Act as amended—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Toronto.)

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The Bill is described on our order paper as Bill (H) an Act to amend the Insurance Act, but it has lost that title. The amendments which were carried yesterday contained one which changes the title to 'An Act respecting Canadian Assessment policy-holders in the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company'. By the adoption of these amendments the House erased the old title and substituted for it a new title. The Order of the Day now proposes the third reading of a Bill which no longer exists. I do not see how we can proceed that way. The hon. gentleman should make a motion that the title of the Bill should appear correctly in the Orders of the Day to-morrow.

The SPEAKER—I find in Bourinot, page 673, the following under the heading 'motion that the Bill do pass'—

The next question put by the Speaker is that this Bill do pass and that the title be, &c.

Then, at the end of that paragraph, Mr. Bourinot says:

Any amendment to the title may now be made.

That is, on motion for the final passing.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is, provided the change has not already been made.

The SPEAKER—It has not been made yet.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes, it has been made by adopting the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER—Will the hon. gentleman just wait for a moment. Let him turn to page 781 of Bourinot, and he will find, dealing with reports of committees :

When the committee have found it advisable to alter the title of the Bill they will report the fact to the House, and it will be amended on the motion of the final passage.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But it has been amended already.

The SPEAKER—No, the committee reported in favour of altering it, and the title is to be altered on the final passing. At page 788, I find the following :

The member in charge of the Bill will move that the Bill be now read a third time ; and, when that motion has been agreed to, the final motion will be made, that the Bill do pass and that the title be, &c ; and now is the usual time to amend the title.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes, that is the proper time.

The SPEAKER—We are adopting the usual course; there is nothing in the point of order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is nothing—hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto) moved the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this Bill is not printed in French and English.

The SPEAKER—I understand the original Bill was printed in French.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—We never had it distributed in French and English.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I doubt if the hon. gentleman would be very much benefited by having it in French.

The SPEAKER—I have in my hand now the Bill as it appears before the House, printed in French.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I am speaking of the Bill as it appears since the amendments were made to it by the committee.

The SPEAKER—That is the Bill which I have before me.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. If we turn to page 657 of Bourinot, we find this :

It is becoming a frequent practice to send important Bills requiring very careful and deliberate inquiry to a special or select standing committee, before referring them to a committee of the whole.

And again, I find at page 660 :

When Bills are reported from select committees after their second reading in the House, they go upon the orders of the day for consideration in committee of the whole in pursuance of the following rule.

And then Rule 22 is quoted. I find again at page 670 the following :

It has not been uncommon in the Canadian House to pass Bills without reference to a committee of the whole. This has been done in the case of the Appropriation or Supply Bill and not unfrequently in the case of other Bills, also founded on resolutions passed in the committee of the whole. Supply and Customs Bills, on the other hand, have been considered only at times in committee, whenever it has been found necessary to amend them. This proceeding is at variance with the general practice of the Canadian House of Commons and is not sustained by the modern usage of the English House, where Bills generally (except those reported from standing committees) are considered in committee of the whole. The correct usage of considering all Bills in committee of the whole is now invariably followed. In the Senate, public Bills are also sometimes considered without reference to a committee of the whole, and invariably so in the case of the Supply Bill.

Now if we consult May, at page 443 we find a reference to just this case of a public Bill which affects private rights, thus combining the characteristics of a public and a private Bill. What does May say ? In England they have examiners who examine and classify those Bills—

If the examiners report that the standing orders have been complied with, or the select committee on standing orders report that the Bill may be proceeded with, the Bill is read a second time, and committed to a select committee, nominated partly by the House and partly by the committee of selection ; and the committee may be empowered to hear suitors, their agents, and counsel for and against the Bill ; and the Bill, when reported from the select committee is recommitted to a committee of the whole House and is subsequently treated as a public Bill.

With these authorities I claim that this Bill should now be recommended to a Committee of the Whole House. The hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill made a mistake in putting it on the Orders for third reading.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—If I remember aright, the hon. gentleman himself the day before yesterday took the exception that this Bill could not go to a Committee of the Whole House, having gone to a special committee, and that there was a ruling on that point to that effect.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is not correct. The point of order that I raised was this. The Orders of the Day indicated the procedure that the hon. gentleman wanted to take, that was, the consideration of the amendments reported by the select committee. When it came to that phase, he changed his motion, and the point of order that I raised was this, that he had no right to change his motion without giving notice, and that was the point which was decided. Further, if you will look at our own rules and forms of proceedings, you will see at page 100, clause 82, that when a Bill has been read a second time the following question is thenput, 'that this Bill be committed to a Committee of the Whole House :

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It went to a special committee instead.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes, and the hon. gentleman knows why. It was because there were private interests in the case, but as the Bill is now declared a public Bill, I want to follow the course applicable to a public Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The House ordered the third reading and we cannot go back on that now.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The time to have taken this objection was yesterday.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. Secretary of State is wrong in saying that the House ordered it.

The SPEAKER—There is nothing in the authority which the hon. gentleman first cited, page 657 of Bourinot, to bear out his contention. It simply says that it is becoming a frequent practice to send important Bills to a select committee before referring them to a Committee of the Whole. The citation at page 670 was with respect to Bills in the House of Commons. At page 671, the quotation is :

> In the Senate public Bills are also sometimes considered without reference to a committee of the whole, and invariably so in the case of the Supply Bill.

It seems to me that leaves the whole matter in the hands of the House where it really is. A Bill has to be read three times, but there is no rule which requires a Bill to go to Committee of the Whole. That rests with the House. In this case the House decided to dispense with that stage. Whether the House was wise in doing so or not, it so decided, and, under the orders of the House, the Bill is up now for the third reading.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—The hon. senator from Rothesay has objected because the Bill was not printed in French.

The SPEAKER—That was decided half an hour ago—that the Bill was printed in French.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—This is a very important matter, affecting the rights of the French speaking minority. His Honour the Speaker has expressed the opinion that because the Bill has been printed once in French, therefore every requirement has been complied with. I cite the section 133, of the British North America Act :

> Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debate of the Houses of the parliament of Canada and of the House of legislature of Quebec ; and both those languages shall be used in the respective records and journals of the Houses.

I call attention to the words 'shall be used' ; to comply with this, every Bill should not only be printed and distributed in French, but should be reprinted in both languages when changes are made. I would also call attention to the fact that the minutes, containing these important amendments, have not yet been distributed in French.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have received a copy of this Bill in French, and I want a ruling whether we can proceed with the Bill until it is printed and distributed in both languages. The constitution entitles us to the possession of these documents in both languages, and I ask for the Speaker's ruling.

The SPEAKER—I am informed that the Bill has been distributed in French and it is probable that the hon. gentleman being looked upon as an English speaking member has not got a copy, but if he wants one it will be supplied to him.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is not a question whether I want it or not, but I claim that the position taken by the hon. gentleman from Montarville, should be respected. I do not want his point of order to be treated as it has been. He is entitled to a fair decision as to whether he should be supplied with a copy of these documents printed in the language which he speaks.

The SPEAKER—As I understand the point taken by the hon. gentleman from Montarville, it is not that this Bill has not been printed in French but that the French edition of the minutes has not been distributed.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—The report of the committee and the Bill as changed must be printed in French and distributed. I am surprised that those who are always speaking of the rights of the French population are the first to let them go without saying a word on their behalf.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I furthermore have this to say on the question of French translation.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is a question of privilege and I have a right to speak. How are we to ascertain the value of the French translation unless we are furnished every twenty-four hours with the documents of the day ? I would demand a week to examine the technical terms of this Bill. How do we know what will be the effect of the translation of this Bill ? I quite agree with the hon. gentleman from Montarville that this House is entitled to have the French edition of every Bill which comes before us for discussion. Here is a Bill that is sure to produce abundance of litigation. How do we know that the French version of this Bill is correct ? It is not wise to proceed with so important a measure as this without giving each member of the House an opportunity to verify the correctness of the translation. I stand with the hon. gentleman from Montarville in demanding this right.

The SPEAKER—The only right is that the Bill shall be distributed in both languages, and that has been done.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It has only been distributed now.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Cloran) has spoken at least half a dozen times. I am quite willing to let him occupy half the time of the House, but I must draw the line somewhere.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am only asking for a ruling of the chair, whether we should have the French translation of these documents.

The SPEAKER—The chair has ruled three times.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That it is not necessary ?

The SPEAKER—Nothing of the kind, but that the Bill has been distributed in French. I can furnish the hon. gentleman information, but I cannot furnish him understanding.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE moved :

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be amended as follows :—
1st. By the insertion of the words ' on making application therefor within two months from the passing of this Act ' after the word ' entitled ' in the second line of clause 2.

The object of this amendment is quite plain. It is for the purpose of limiting it to two months instead of leaving it optional with the company to defer for a year, if they like, making the application for a license.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I would suggest that the time should be made three months ; two months is a very short time in which to procure all the information needed to present to the department.

The amendment was changed as suggested and adopted.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE moved to amend :

By adding the words ' except as provided in subsection (dd) hereof ' at the beginning of clause 3, before the words ' from and after.'

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I move that the Bill be further amended by adding after paragraph (d) of clause 3, the following :

(dd.) The holder of any such assessment policy, except any of those mentioned in subsection (h) hereof, shall have the right to continue his policy under the assessment plan, as provided in the policy, upon giving notice in writing to the company within ninety days after the date of the said license electing to continue his policy on the assessment plan; and in default of such notice, such policy-holder shall be deemed to continue his policy as set forth in subsection (h) hereof.

The object of this amendment is quite apparent. If any of the assessment policy-holders should desire to remain under the assessment plan they can do so.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—In regard to that I shall ask the hon. gentleman to accept a suggestion. I gave notice last evening that I would move that the words 'ninety days' be changed to the words 'six months,' but I find on the notice of motion it is not entered, so I have to ask you to accept the suggestion or I shall move an amendment. I was prepared yesterday to accept six months in this amendment. In reference to the second amendment that it be three months instead of two, I am under the necessity of asking a further delay in behalf of the policy-holders, simply after the end of three months, then the policy-holders of the company should have an extended delay not only of ninety days, but of the increased time given to the company to get their license. It would be unfair to the policy-holders, who are not around the immediate vicinity of the home office or of its principal agencies, to be given only ninety days. There are probably many policy-holders who are away in Europe, who are away in the far west, who will never hear of this Bill for several months to come. If we are going to limit their time to ninety days to secure the rights which this Bill gives them, you simply keep them away from the benefits of this Bill. Under these circumstances I would ask the hon. fathers of this Bill to accept the suggestion that that delay of ninety days be increased so as to provide time for those absent members to make their demand on the company to be reinstated.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I would suggest that for the present the clause be adopted as it is, but with the understanding that the hon. gentleman who is promoting the Bill will ascertain as to whether the six months could not be granted and then it will necessitate changing six months in other clauses of the Bill, but we can come back to it for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Who is to be the judge of the necessity of the provision for six months' time? Is it this honourable House or an officer of the company?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—This House.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We should be in a position to pass on that question at once.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I think the hon. gentleman will acknowledge that we must deal fairly with all parties, and the only thing that I suggest is that the promoter of the Bill should have an opportunity to ascertain whether there is any serious objection, as far as the company is concerned, whether it would be oppressing the company by extending the time limit from three to six months. I fail to see any objection. Unless they can show that there is serious objection, I think the House might make it six months.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Of course it would be apparent to everybody that once the Bill passes into law it is a matter of importance that at as early a date consistent with due protection to the interests of all, the business of the company, as readjusted, should be put into definite shape. Everybody will be interested in that, and the shorter the time in which that can be safely done the better for all concerned. It was thought that a shorter time than three months would be satisfactory, but there are cases of absentees, though there are few places in the world which cannot be reached in three months and an answer received, and probably none at all where three months would not be more than ample; but to guard against a person being ill when he received his notice, it was advisable to give as long time as possible. I would suggest as a reasonable time, and more than reasonable, that four months be accepted.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I do not care whether it is ten days or thirty days, if we give the policy-holder the option of proving to the company that he was not aware of this Bill. A man may be up in the shanties for a year, and we should give him an opportunity of proving that he was only aware of the passing of this Bill within ninety days. Take our shantymen who go up to the woods and do not come back in twelve months. They find the Bill has been passed on the 1st of August, and they return here the 1st of July following. Give that man the opportunity to prove that he had no knowledge of the Bill. I simply want to protect the policy-holder.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman does not suggest that seriously.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—This Bill is supposed to be in the interest of the policy-holder. We have been charged on the floor of this House, and in the corridors, with being opposed to the policy-holders. I ask for the protection of the policy-holders who are not able to protect themselves, who are away from sources of information and who will have no voice in the matter. Those policy-holders who are able to prove that they had no knowledge of the passing of this Bill should have an opportunity of being reinstated. It does not interfere with the principle of the Bill. I have no interest in the matter. I do not know the men that are up in the shanties, nor the men down in South Africa. I think that the promotors of the Bill could easily draft a clause whereby such policy-holders could be protected.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I wish to say——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The hon. gentleman does not want to vote on this question. This Bill provides three months for the obtaining of a license, and four months after that is the least a policy-holder would have if my suggestion was adopted. Practically there would be seven months for policy-holders to inform themselves about this.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Supposing a man comes in at the end of three months. The time he has got is only four months, not seven.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Practically he has seven months to learn about the Bill and he would appreciate as a lawyer as well as anybody the importance of having in the Bill some definite date, not an uncertain date requiring external evidence, but a definite date named in the Bill, and I ask him to accept the suggestion of four months, which gives ample time for everything.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I admit a definite date should be stated in the Bill, but if policy-holders are out of the country, and are able to make proof that they have no knowledge of this Bill they should be protected.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I hope the Speaker will enforce the rules of the House and confine each hon. member to one speech on this motion.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I do not quite understand this amendment. This proposed amendment read as follows :

(dd.) The holder of such assessment policy, except any of those mentioned in subsection (h) hereof, shall have the right to continue his policy under the assessment.

Take the case of John Brown. He says : 'No, you have broken my contract.' We might refer to the Angers case, or the case in England, and their answer is 'Yes, but you have been guilty of laches by not paying your premium under protest.' John Brown has been paying his premium under protest up to that date. He accepts that while he is in the court. He has kept his policy alive by paying his premium each time. Will that clause not be a tacit admission of his that he comes in under it and that all his premiums are wiped out when he comes into court ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No, I think the hon. gentleman will be fully satisfied when we come to the saving clause.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I would suggest otherwise that it might be amended by adding 'Unless suit has already been commenced.' I want to provide that the policy-holder cannot be held under that clause as having given tacit admission and accepted the change of policy.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—It strikes me that this clause should be amended. We are supposed to be protecting the policy-holders. There may be those who are policy-holders who are advanced in life, who would not desire to change from the one form to the other, and who would prefer continuing on the same plan. If they do not give notice within, say, four months, whether they will accept one or the other, are you to remove them from the assessment plan and place them in one of the other propositions ? I think the duty too should devolve upon the company, if they are going to force those who have entered into an agreement on the assessment plan and that agreement has been going on, and they have been paying assessments under that agreement, to see that those men are notified. If you say four months, perhaps they may get their notices, and perhaps they may not. If they do not get their notices they are driven out of the assessment class into the other class. We should provide for a registered letter to notify these people.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—In clause (e) it is provided for. It is incumbent upon the company to notify every one by registered letter.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—We must have some means by which these men shall be notified. My hon. friend said we were going to cover it in the last clause, but we did not do it. Let those people remain in on the assessment policies as long as they desire to remain. That being the case, I think a registered letter or some positive means should be adopted.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I may say the hon. senator from Wellington has given notice of an amendment to the last clause of the Bill, and we propose to accept his amendment which is very wise. It is in these words :

7. Nothing in this Act shall affect any suit, action or other proceeding now pending or which hereafter may be brought in respect of any policy or claim against the company.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—That does not cover it. It is the question of forcing a man who wishes to remain in the assessment plan, into another plan at the will of this company, provided he did not give notice in four months.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The clause reads :

(d.) The company shall, within thirty days from the date of the said license, send to each of the holders of its assessment policies, by registered letter postage prepaid to the last known address of such policy-holder, a statement showing in detail the amount of the policy under each of the foregoing options and the lien, if any, and of the premiums to be thereafter payable in respect of such policy and of the times when such premiums are payable.

It is incumbent upon the company to send to each of the policy-holders within thirty days after the obtaining of the license, the full information, and it will leave them three months out of the four to decide which option they prefer, and it is only in default of their so deciding, that we provide that they shall remain under such option.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—That does not cover the point that I raised. My point is this, that even if these men get a notice and do not send back a letter stating that they accept the one or the other, they are put in a different class from that which they were in before. Many of these old men who have been paying assessments year after year aggregating a large amount would desire to remain where they are. If they were not prepared to write a letter saying they will accept one or the other of the options, this will force them out of the assessment plan and make them accept one or the other propositions. I say it is the bounden duty of this House to decide that they shall remain under the assessment plan unless they take a different course themselves. Why force them out of that class ? Are we to force out 75 per cent of those assessment policy-holders and drive them into one of the other classes without giving them ample opportunity of saying whether they desire to remain as they are ? Make it incumbent upon the company to notify these people. and let them send a document to the company stating they are willing to change their policy, but do not give the company power to force them out. If you do not do that then you oblige these policy-holders to say which of the options they are going to accept. I say you are doing an injustice to them, and are not acting fairly by those who desire to continue under the assessment system.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I understand now the objection which is made, and it has not escaped my mind. I prepared an amendment in that direction, and I shall state the reason why. We are all satisfied that it would be to the detriment of policy-holders to remain under the assessment plan. It would be against their interest.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—They have the right to select.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—We are satisfied they should be given an opportunity of making a selection, but what I want to do is to protect a portion, whether large or small, of policy-holders who may not know of the passing of the Bill, who are neglecting their own interests, and to be sure that their interests will be properly protected by getting the benefit of the best option under the Bill I have drawn it that way so that it will be open to them to accept the option, and if they neglect to do so, we protect their interests to the best of our ability and judgment.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—All I ask is that those who are assured on the assessment plan shall give to the company notice requesting that they should be placed under one or the other system before any change of their policy is made by the company.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I understood that we were to allow those gentlemen to continue under the assessment plan if they chose to do so. If they send no notice it is understood they continue in the same way. I understood that was a feature of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—No.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—It should be made one.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—We are face to face with this difficulty: We all know the immediate cause of the raising of the assessment—the stopping of new-comers into that system. What will be the effect of this Bill upon the members remaining under the assessment system? As soon as the Bill is passed, or within the next six months, it is to be presumed that a considerable number under the assessment plan will adopt one of those three options. If the present system is so harsh that there is a general outcry throughout the country against the heavy assessments to which those people will have to submit, what will it be when a considerable portion of those policy-holders shall have abandoned the assessment plan and have passed to the premium plan? What load will the remaining assessment policy-holders have to carry? It will strike every one that the load that they will have to carry will be such that they shall break down. So we are now providing by this amendment for the vacillating ones, those who do not know, who cannot judge for themselves of the superiority of this present plan, who will hesitate between one of those three options and will let the time pass for three or four months, for everybody knows that inaction is far easier than action. This amendment will have the effect of giving the vacillating ones, the ignorant ones who do not know exactly what option to accept, the option that will be most favourable to them. My hon. friend from Elgin says that we make them slaves. We are coming to their rescue or making our best endeavour to come to their rescue. We know that a considerable number of them who have but a primary education will be confronted with this statement which is difficult to understand, and they cannot always get advice and will be nonplussed in many instances. It is for those who do not know better, and who will hesitate and not themselves decide what system they should adopt, that we declare that if within three or four months they do not make up their minds to remain on the assessment principle, which we all know would be one that would be ruinous to them, that they shall come under one of these options. It seems to me under those considerations that it is just that we shoud decide for them that they shall be classed under one option rather than be kept under the assessment plan. When you have transferred from the assessment plan a considerable portion of those who are at present under that system, in what position will the others be? There are people who believe that their position will be made still more difficult by the passage of the Bill, that by cutting off fifty per cent of the assessment policy-holders, the remaining ones will see their assessments rising yearly, and the parliament of Canada is deciding to put them under one of the options and not leave them in that class, because we all know when the two last policy-holders under the assessment system survive that the one who will die first will see his heir enriched by the full amount paid by the other under the policy. I think we are doing a just and equitable act in deciding for the ignorant and vacillating ones by taking them out of the assessment plan and giving them one of these options.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Just a word or two.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I have not spoken on the amendment.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, he did speak.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—If we are not allowed latitude in this discussion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I should like to ask the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry if it is so very important that assessment policy-holders should accept one of the first two options, why confine them to a limited time because the number is decreasing down to perhaps 50 or 25 per cent ?

Hon. Mr. KERR—Because the assessments have to make up the losses.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order : the hon. gentleman has no right to speak.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—He has the right to answer a question.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY. No, we are not in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER—The question is on the third amendment, substituting 90 days for 60 days and substituting F. for D.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I move—

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has no right to move an amendment.

The SPEAKER—He is putting the amendments of which he has given notice.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I want the ruling of the chair.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—When the hon. gentleman rose to move his amendment en bloc, it was suggested—and the House acquiesced as far as I could see—that the best way was to move each separately.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That does not give the right.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—So as to discuss each amendment separately.

The SPEAKER—The House so decided.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I want the ruling of the chair.

The SPEAKER—The ruling of the chair is that, as it was understood, without any dissent expressed, that these amendments should be taken up one by one, the hon. gentleman is within his right.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman may move his amendment separately.

The SPEAKER—He may move the amendments of which he has given notice, separately.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I move that the Bill be further amended by substituting for the letter E in line 55 of paragraph F of clause 3 the letter I. On referring to Mr. Bradshaw for the purpose of confirming the opinion which has already been given by experts, I find that the best option is the first one, and therefore, I think it is our duty to give the policy-holders the very best option. They have a right to choose any one of them, but under the Bill as drafted if they do not make a choice they are assumed to have chosen the third one, and I want it understood that they will be taken to have chosen the first one.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I beg to move the fifth amendment of which I have given notice, which reads as follows :

5th. By inserting after the word 'lapsed' in line 20 in clause 3, paragraph (h) the following : 'or what may lapse after the passing of this Act and prior to the date of the said license' ; and by adding after the word 'company' in line 30 of the said paragraph (h) the following: 'and approved by the Superintendent of Insurance.'

This is to cover such policies as may lapse from the time of the passing of the Act until the license is issued, and it is to give them the right to revive their policy the same as those whose policies have lapsed ten years previous to the passing of the Act. It is extending the date to which the holders of policies who have allowed their policies to lapse shall be entitled to be reinstated. The second amendment has reference to the certificate. Hon. gentlemen will bear in mind that they are given the opportunity of having their policy revived providing they furnish a certificate of good health. I suggest the addition of these words, which have been approved by the Superintendent of Insurance, so that they will not be left to the mercy of the company, but that the Superintendent of Insurance, who is the natural guardian of the right and interests of policy-holders in insurance companies, shall be the judge.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—My hon. friend does not meet the objection we raised to this clause. What we did object to was that they would have to submit to the terms dictated by the company. If they cannot comply with that, they have nothing to refer to the Superintendent of Insurance. They cannot possibly submit the case to him at all, because the company may exact such answers from them as will prevent them from availing themselves of the privilege they have under that clause. What we really want is to make the Superintendent of Insurance take the holders of the lapsed policies into the company under the terms set forth in the Act, but to take no advantage of the fact that a man may not be in a healthful condition, take him as he stands in regard to his health and not submit him to a medical examination, the question that the Inspector of Insurance is expected to answer is the question whether he has told the truth or not. Has he told that he is subject to a cough or attacks of influenza every now and then, or that he was affected once or twice a year with an attack of rheumatism ? All these questions can be put in the certificate that he is compelled to furnish. He is supposed to tell the truth in that certificate ; he is supposed to tell all these things, and he is supposed to answer all these questions. The question that the Superintendent of Insurance is to answer is the question as to whether he has told the truth or not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In our sympathy for the unfortunate man who has allowed his policy to lapse, we must not lose sight of the fact that this association is a mutual one, and that if it favours one class unduly we are injuring another class. We have no right to do that.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Not in these lapsed cases, because they do not participate in the reserve.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Their claims on the company are absolutely forfeited under the rule. The moneys they had paid in already are an asset remaining to the holders of policies who continue in good standing ; therefore, I say any undue advantage you give to the policy-holders who have ceased to have a legal interest in the company is given at the expense and to the detriment of those who have remained in the company, and therefore we may be doing an injury to them in our desire to help those who are now being admitted into the company again as a matter of grace. We have to draw the line carefully. If a man who has forfeited his policy is in the last stages of consumption, it is quite apparent he is no longer a fair risk, and it would be unjust to those who have paid up their policies regularly to allow him to come in and be classed with the other policy-holders. It is a delicate matter how far you could fairly go in allowing persons who have forfeited their policies to be reinstated.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—This clause opens the gate ; where do you propose to stop ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You cannot open the gate unqualifiedly.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—That is what is done.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I think it is apparent that if a man was not a fair risk it would not be just to allow him in to make a claim on the funds. We are giving the lapsed policy-holder some advantage ; we cannot give him the entire advantage. We cannot reinstate a man who is near his end, and say he shall be a charge on the funds of the company, when he has forfeited his policy.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I attach importance to each clause being fully understood by every member and I cannot agree with the position indicated by the hon. Secretary of State. The point has been properly raised by the hon. gentleman from Glengarry, and let it be well understood that the other classes of policy-holders here will not be affected at all by this class, because they will be fully protected by the deposit which will have to be maintained with the government. These policies that have to be revived are not to participate in the deposit. The question that the hon. member from Glengarry suggests is that the Bill should go to the extent of reviving policies without any certificate of good health. Is that a fair obligation to impose on the company ? We are endangering the whole Bill if we go to that extent. The company might decline to take advantage of the Bill, and, therefore, the policy-holders would lose the benefit of it. I have done all I could to get the greatest benefit for the policy-holders by way of amendments and I should be very glad if it was possible to induce the company to go to the extent indicated by the hon. gentleman from Glengarry ; but I must confess that I think it would be unreasonable. These policies have lapsed for ten years, and it would not be reasonable to ask that this whole mass of twenty odd million dollars would be thus revived en bloc without each policy-holder furnishing a certificate of good health. It is going a great way to do what is done. With the Bill as drafted, and as I propose to have it amended, the certificate is furnished by the insured himself, and the Superintendent of Insurance will decide as to the form.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—A certificate as required by the company.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—As required by the company, but approved by the Insurance Superintendent.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—You must get some certificate. The certificate of the gentleman who wishes to be reinstated should be supported by the certificate of his physician, or, if you like, by somebody else. It is a point we might consider whether it would not be better to have a physician give a certificate than the man himself, but it might be from both.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I consider this is a very important point, and we might settle it in this way. The man who seeks to have his policy revived has to furnish a certificate. After he does so, the company should have twelve months in which to challenge the accuracy of that certificate, and if they do not do so within that time, they should forfeit their right to do it after the man is dead and gone.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—But if the policy-holder dies in the meantime ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It is good for twelve months, because it is approved by the Superintendent of Insurance. Within the twelve months the company must challenge the accuracy of that certificate, and set forth the grounds on which they do so, otherwise they should not be allowed to do it afterwards.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—We all have sympathy with those whose policies have lapsed. Now let us see where this clause reaches. The hon. Secretary of State I think was right in what he said ; there must be fairness displayed towards the policy-holders, who have maintained their policies. We will assume that ten years ago a man at the age of 55 took out a policy and allowed it to lapse. If that policy is revived now he will be 65. Assuming that a large number will in the future do as they have done in the past, elect to stand by the contract they made when they got an assessment certificate, are you going to put these lives right on to them ? Are you going to make them pay not only for each other but for all these old lives that are to be brought in now ? In the committee this morning it was shown that the rates are not high enough at present, and that as each policy-holder dies, it is a question how much will be paid to his heirs, and the last man to survive will have nothing left. It is bad enough to be in that position, but are we going to load up these policy-holders with these old lives, and make it doubly burdensome ? Take the case that I have mentioned of a man who to-day is 65 ; if he is reinstated, in five years more he will have reached the three score years and ten, and that is considered an advanced age everywhere, outside of the Senate. The clause should be considered further to see how it really affects the interests of the policy-holders. Remember, the reinstated policy-holder must furnish a certificate of his continued good health. A man may be in good health at fifty-five ; how many men can say that their good health has continued up to sixty-five ? The man who gives a certificate of his good health gives a warranty, but nobody owns anything in this company but the managers. The policy-holders have nothing to say. Two or three gentlemen who control the company can do just as they please. They are the Czars of this company. Supposing they did their duty—if I could force myself to think they would—would they perpetrate such an injustice on the policy-holders left under the assessment system ? They could not.

On the other hand if they did, the assessments would have to be raised, because the old lives would be tumbling in, and the younger lives would be forced to meet the claims. It seems to me these reinstated policy-holders should be made a separate class, and furnish the grease for their own frying-pan. I think it is well their policies should be revived, but they should be a separate class by themselves. Look at the position this will put the Superintendent of Insurance in ? Is he to make a certificate, as against the company, and have we got to accept his decision ? We know how he has endorsed all that the managers of this company have done at the home office in New York. He has never been able to see what has been going on, or hear of the charges against them, and to-day we are asked to take his dictum as against the policy-holders. This certificate of good health becomes a warranty. The managers have sent around to all the policy-holders slips to sign, saying that they are in good health or think they are. Time and again I have had them sent to me. Suppose you signed and returned one of these, and by some accident dropped dead next day, what would be the charge—breach of warranty; that man was in bad health when he gave that warranty; there was no doctor's certificate; he took the responsibility. We know what the result will be. If this was a doctor's certificate it would be different. Unless a doctor's certificate is furnished, the heirs of the policy-holder will have to take whatever the company is willing to give them, because the certificate of good health was furnished by the policy-holder himself, and the heirs would not be able to prove that he had acted in good faith in giving that certificate. I say it is wrong morally, and this clause should be recast and these reinstated policy-holders put in a special class by themselves. I have heard a good deal said in the lobbies, but my only desire since I took this matter up two years ago has been if possible to help out these unfortunate policy-holders, and any Bill which will be really in their interest has my approval. But I shall not stultify myself by accepting everything which is presented by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry and the hon. gentleman from Toronto. I ask them therefore to leave this section over until to-morrow, and to think over the suggestion of putting these reinstated policy-holders in a class by themselves.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—They are put in a class by themselves, because they do not participate in the deposit already made; but the company will be liable. It will be incumbent on the company the next day after these policies are revived to place a very large deposit in the hands of the Dominion government to provide the proper reserve for these policies.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—But that does not meet my objection, because taking the money that is here to-day in Ottawa with the government it is only $20 per thousand added to the policy, twenty dollars towards meeting one premium. What other value is there reserved here? The only object in having the reserve here is that they must have something at stake in this country in case actions should be brought against them or judgments recorded against them, but I do not think any insurance man in Canada will attach any other value to that deposit as security for the insured.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The point the hon. gentleman has raised has no reference to the clause under discussion. It has reference more especially to clause 5 of the Bill, and I propose to make clause 5 read differently from the way it appears. As printed it provided only for a portion of the deposit in respect of the assessment policies. That is, there are on deposit with the Canadian government two different deposits, one of $228,000, which stands there as a guarantee for the assessment policies, and there is besides that a deposit of $80,000 which is for the new level premium business carried on by the company from the 7th of August, 1899. In the clause as printed, the policy-holders would not have the benefit of that $80,000, so I propose to strike out the words, 'In respect of the said assessment policy,' so that the policy-holders shall be secured by the two deposits in the hands of the government. Then I propose to add these words, 'The whole amount of the deposit shall remain in all respects subject to sections 33 and 34 of the Insurance Act.' The effect of the amendment is, that under these sections of the Insurance Act the deposit cannot be touched at all. It is to remain there, even if the company becomes insolvent and discontinues business, to be used to reinsure the risks.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I object to their coming in with that warranty with the approval of the Superintendent of Insurance. I say it is not fair to the other class of policy-holders. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to have explained that the deposit is going to be for all concerned, or are the assessment people under the old plan to have the money for themselves?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The present and the future except those who remain on the assessment plan, which I take it, will be very few. There will be but one deposit. The next day after the company takes its license, the deposit will consist of the $228,000 and the $80,000, and that will be for the guarantee of all the parties insured with the company, and it will be the duty of the Superintendent of Insurance to exact a much larger deposit before the company are allowed to continue their business, and it will be the consequence of the revival of the $20,000.000 of insurance.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That one deposit is what I object to. We never found out about that before.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—Am I to understand that the $228.000 now on deposit with the government is to remain as security for the policy-holders still living under the assessment principle? I understood that was the case, but now I understand that that money, and the additional deposit will be put into a lump sum for all the policy-holders.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The moment the Bill goes into operation the $228.000 which, at present, stands in the hands of the government merely as guarantee for policy-holders on the assessment plan, will remain there as guarantee for the others as well, and without depriving the policy-holders under the regular level premium plan of the benefit of the other deposit of $80.000. The deposit will have to be supplemented from time to time in order to protect fully all the insurance which will come under the level premium plan.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—There is one point in reference to the second amendment applying to the policy-holders who, through some accident, allow their policies to lapse; they are to be placed on the same footing as those who had allowed their policies to lapse for ten years. That would hardly be fair. For instance, there are many who know that this Bill is under consideration, and may be watching to see what sort of legislation will be enacted and what their position will be when it becomes law. They may allow one or two payments to lapse, and, if they do so, they are to be placed on the same footing as those whose policies lapsed ten years ago. They must not only be reinstated under that system but be deprived also of the very funds they have been contributing to for the last ten years.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The reason why they are made to occupy that position is this: otherwise we would be interfering with the rights of the other policy-holders. The deposit in the hands of the government is as a guarantee to the policy-holders who have continued to pay their premiums. If they chose to let their policies lapse, we have no right to say that they shall remain with a share in that deposit. They lose their share of that deposit if they do not pay their premiums.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—That is hardly fair to those who have been in the habit of paying their assessments and who may be in arrears only for one or two assessments. The hon. gentleman says it is not fair to those who have made their payments; is it fair that they should be deprived of the dividends they have been contributing to for the last ten years? Are they to be put on the same footing as the delinquents of ten years standing? I say it is unfair.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The line must be drawn somewhere. The hon. gentleman has a soft spot for those policy-holders who have allowed their policies to lapse, and says they should be treated in a better way than those who have been delinquents for ten years, but what difference will he make between a lapse of one year and a lapse of ten years? We take two large classes, those in good standing and those who are not in good standing. They are all labouring under the same difficulty. They decided to drop their policies. We are putting them all into one class.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—My hon. friend is putting the case very unfairly. He should state the case as I put it. I spoke of those who kept their policies up until the time this Bill passed the House, and he turns around and makes my statement appear absurd. I am here to protect those unfortunate policy-holders who, under some consideration, may think this Bill will place them in a different position, and may allow their policies to lapse for a short time. The hon. gentleman will hardly tell me that a man who has done that is a delinquent, and as bad as those who have not paid assessments for a year or ten years. I say it is unfair to them.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—The company is required to notify the different policy-holders of the position they hold under this Bill. It must be done within a limited time after the Bill becomes law. If a policy-holder is silly enough not to take advantage of that, he deserves to be placed in the position from which the hon. gentleman is so anxious to rescue him.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—What I said was that if they allowed the assessments to lapse from the time the Bill passed until they received the notice, they should not be put in the position which the delinquent class occupy. I say it is unfair and unreasonable, and it is treating these men harshly.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I should like on behalf of the policy-holders to call attention to clause (h) which, to my mind, is largely the substance of the Bill. Why not have representatives of the company and of the policy-holders meet together and draft a clause that will protect the interest of the company and of the policy-holders. We have provisions in clause (h) which no doubt are a tremendous advantage to the policy-holders, an advantage given by the only company in the world that would give it, to allow lapsed policies to be revived. When we are prepared on principle to give that advantage to the policy-holders, let us take the means to provide that the advantage shall be effective. I stated a few minutes ago that three months was not a sufficient time for a large number of lapsed policy-holders to be heard from. What I want is to give these policy-holders an opportunity to be reinstated. Those who live in or near the centres of population do not need to be told of this legislation, but it is different with many who live in such places as the Yukon or South Africa, and therefore I suggest that the company should be compelled to write each policy-holder whose policy has lapsed for the last ten years, that he is entited to have it revived; that a registered letter be sent to his last post office address. To meet the exigencies of the situation, where policy-holders have moved from one spot to another, it should be advertised in the public press that this legislation has been enacted, and that policy-holders who have allowed their policies to lapse for the last ten years will have a right to have them reinstated.

At six o'clock, the Speaker left the chair.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—As I understand the position now held by this honourable body in regard to this Bill from all sides and from all interests concerned, it appears to be a very friendly one, and I am glad that this situation has been attained after a very severe conflict of opinion in regard to this company, so that any suggestion that may be made in regard to amendments should be accepted in the best spirit and with the best will for the interests of the company, and in respect of the rights of the policy-holders. I am exceedingly pleased that this honourable body has reached that position in discussing this Bill. When the House rose at six o'clock clause (h) of section 3 was under consideration. To my mind, that clause is one of the most important in the Bill as presented to this House. Several amendments have been suggested to the different features contained in this clause. The amendments probably are not all acceptable in their entirety, but, certainly, they should be acceptable in some measure. For instance, the suggestion that the ninety days' delay should be extended to six months or more or less. So far there has been a compromise to four months—that is, in the time wherein a policy-holder who allowed his policy to lapse during the ten years would have a right to reinstate himself. There is no discussion on the principle. It is simply a question of adjusting the time. There is a matter which could be compromised, and amicably settled among members of this Honourable House, in the interests of the Bill, the interests of the company and the interests of the policy-holders. There is another suggestion made, in regard to the certificates of health, that would be held to be satisfactory to the company. The principle is admitted that a certificate of health is necessary before a man is reinstated. There is no question as to that, but where the friends of the company and the friends of the policy-holders may differ is what should be the form of that certificate and what should be the nature of that certificate. I humbly suggest that that matter can be better discussed between three, four or five members of this honourable House to more advantage than before the whole Senate. There is not the slightest doubt of that; it is an important matter that a policy-holder should know to what exigencies he shall be obliged to submit before being reinstated. If the letter of that form is left to the company it is only human nature that the company should make that form as exacting as possible. They would be very foolish if they did not do so. It would be the business of the officers of the company to make that form almost prohibitive to men who allow their policies to lapse for ten years and desire to be reinstated. That is one side. Then on the other side we have policy-holders who would say, 'I have a right to go in anyhow, no matter what condition my health is in.' The Senate should take a position between the two, and not allow the company to exact excessive conditions of health from the policy-holders, nor allow the policy-holder to insist on reinstatement when his health was such that he would not be accepted by any other company. That is a question which the committee I am suggesting could take into consideration and make provision for. It is suggested by the hon. gentleman from Belleville, and, I think, by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, that this form should be drafted by the Superintendent of Insurance, in regard to the financial and actuarial features of it; I do not know whether the superintendent is in a position to state what should be the condition of health required of a man to entitle him to reinstatement. That is a medical question, and I would be doubtful of exercising my duty here in putting that question of health which pertains to medical science into the hands of a mathematician. I would be doubtful whether I was performing my duty in consenting to that. Therefore, I would suggest to the hon. members who are in favour of this Bill and have accepted it, to put their heads together and nominate a small committee of four, five or six to study this question in the interests of the company and the policy-holders, and the interest of the Senate also, in proposing a fair and equitable method that will apply to all parties concerned. That is what I propose in regard to clause 8. I do not think there can be any difficulty in the matter. Even now I think this honourable body should allow all these clauses to go into the hands of hon. members such as the hon. senator who proposed the Bill, the hon. senator from Toronto, and the hon. member from de Salaberry, and the hon. gentleman who introduced this question into the Senate, the hon. gentleman from Rothesay. Name the members, whoever you please, who will do their work fairly and well—I need not say conscientiously—and five minutes after they present their report this honourable House will accept it without being obliged to go into interminable explanations on each clause of the Bill. That is what I propose, as I say, in the interest of not only the policy-holders, but of the company and of the Senate itself.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Does the hon. gentleman from Toronto object to a medical certificate being had ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I do not.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Immediately after the House rose, I communicated with the hon. promoter of the Bill and Mr. Eldridge, and they are willing to accept the medical certificate that the applicant is in good health. That is going as far as we can, but I have not had occasion to discuss the other question to cover the suggestion of the hon. member for Wellington, in the way of making the certificate conclusive. I would, therefore, ask that this clause be allowed to stand for a few minutes until we can settle that, and in the meantime take up another clause.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Why not postpone it until the morning ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I think in a few minutes I shall be able to announce to the House an amendment in such a shape as will be acceptable.

The clause was allowed to stand.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I move that the Bill be further amended, as follows :—

6th. By adding to paragraph (i) of said clause 3 the following : 'except upon policies continued under the provisions of paragraph (dd).

I suggest that we add the following to this clause :—

But on policies in existence on the date of said license the premiums shall be computed as from such date.

The premiums are settled in the three options under the first portion of clause 3. Of course it would not be fair to allow a period of seven months during which the company would have no right to levy assessments.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is all right.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I would like a little further information. First of all, are we to understand that if the assessment policy-holders discontinue and do not choose to move into that class, whether this company has any right to interfere with them ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—If the present policy-holders under the assessment contract do not choose to accept either of the other alternative that the company shall have no authority to make any excessive assessment, or rather that they stand as they are to-day—that the company are not interfering with their rights.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—That is right.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Then supposing they stand in that way. The hon. member has spoken about premiums being levied. How does he propose to levy the premiums on those ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The object of the Bill is to transfer all the Canadian business of the company from the assessment plan to the level premium, and the rate of the premium is determined by the first portion of clause 3 in accordance with the British tables. The clause now being dealt with is the clause declaring that the company shall not have the right, after the date of the license, to levy any assessment, but they will have the right to levy the premium from the time at which their right to levy the assessments ceases.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I do not think the hon. gentleman quite understands my question. Presuming a certain number of these policy-holders have contracts under the assessment system as they stand to-day ; if they do not choose to take advantage of the level premium policy, where are they going to stand ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—They will stand as they are to-day. They shall be liable to be assessed to the extent necessary to meet the death losses.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Will the hon. gentleman state when they are liable to be assessed ? Are they liable to be assessed in conjunction with all the other policy-holders of the company ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Yes. With all those who remain under the assessment plan.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Of that class ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Did Mr. Eldridge not state that the members of that class were not assessed alone, but that the losses would be assessed in conjunction with the other policy-holders ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—They will be assessed. The company has fifty millions to-day of business in the States under the same plan. They will be assessed as forming part of that.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then they will not be assessed as a part of the class here in Canada ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No.

The amendment was adopted.

On paragraph (h),

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have the satisfaction of announcing that a very strong objection has been removed in my mind. I had made up my mind to call the attention of hon. members of the Senate to all the objections which arose from the wording of clause (h.) Yesterday I obtained from the promoter of the Bill a form of the medical certificate, with the intention of suggesting that it be added as an appendix, but I found that the certificates which are the certificates in use by the company, and in use by other companies, go to this extent, that they call for warranty that the party has not suffered from any disease. They name all kinds of diseases, and it would practically shut out a large number of those parties whose policies we intend to revive. I then came to the conclusion that the best way to meet the difficulty was to leave it entirely to the Superintendent of Insurance, because I could not see any other way at the time ; but immediately after the House rose I met Mr. Eldridge, and he is willing to accept the following :

The company shall revive for the amount to be computed as in this section provided any assessment policy which has lapsed or which may lapse after the passing of this Act, and prior to the date of the said license, for non-payment within the ten years immediately preceding the passing of this Act upon the holder making application therefor within four months after the date of the said license, and within the said time delivering to the company a medical certificate of his being in good health, which certificate shall become conclusive at the expiration of one year, if not impeached in the meantime by action by the company, the company to have, however, the opportunity of having a person examined by its own medical officer for the purpose of testing the accuracy of the certificate.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I call attention to the fact that all that is required will be a certificate that the party is in good health at the time, irrespective of what may have been his condition during the five or ten years which have preceded the issuing of the license ; and I take it to be of very great consequence, because it will practically allow all parties who should be allowed to remain in the company to have their policies revived. The provision will remain that such policy-holder shall not be entitled to share in the dividend.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I admit that the medical certificate is necessary. Then the amendment speaks of the medical certificate and the examination by the medical officer of the company.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No. Under this wording the party insured is entitled to furnish the medical certificate of his own doctor, but the company within the twelve months intervening before the certificate becomes conclusive, has the right to have the person insured examined by his own medical officer to ascertain if that medical certificate has been given in good faith.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Once the officer of the company has impeached——

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—By action.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We are not going to put them in the law courts ; this thing must be settled in black and white. Here is a certificate by the medical officer of the company, and the company has twelve months to investigate whether it is true or not, and after that the report comes in and says 'That medical certificate was not well granted.' What happens ? We want it put in black and white. Do not allow the company to bring all cases into court. It is just as easy to put the matter in black and white now as to let the courts put interpretations upon it in the future. This company is prepared to admit that the medical certificate of the applicant for reinstatement is sufficient to reinstate him. Then they come in with the proviso :

On condition that that certificate is accepted by a doctor of the company.

If he does not accept that certificate, what is going to happen ? He is out of the race, and that is what I want to prevent. I want no slip in the law. Put it in black and white in the Bill that that certificate is conclusive, and if not conclusive, let the doctor of the company come in and say so, and if they disagree let them bring in a third party. It is all very well to laugh. I am a lawyer and know that the legislatures of the country give too much power to the judges to interpret the popular will. Everything should be put in black and white, and leave to the judges as little interpretation of the law as possible. As long as I occupy a seat in this House that is the principle that I shall support in all our legislation. You are providing that a man shall be reinstated on the certificate of his medical officer ; then you provide that if the doctor of the company finds that that certificate is not correct, then they must go to law. I want this honourable House to put them under the protection of the law, and not under the interpretation of the law by judges and lawyers.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If the hon. gentleman would make a practical suggestion instead of making speeches it would be better.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have to make a speech to induce the hon. gentleman to accept it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If the hon. gentleman's suggestions were followed, it would open the door to litigation, and I have suggested this wording to prevent litigation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The only question, it seems to me, is the length of time that is given to object to the certificate. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman who has just spoken has paid any attention to the mode followed by all insurance companies in relation to certificates. If you desire to obtain a policy in any well-regulated company you first have a certificate after an examination by a physician in the locality in which the applicant lives. This certificate is sent to the head office, and the medical officer of the company at the head office analyses the certificate, and in many cases they are rejected and are sent back to the local physician to report why he has not answered such and such questions. There would be no security at all for insurance companies if this were not done. The only objection I see is giving the twelve months. I see no reason why, in cases of that kind, the matter should not be submitted to the physician at the head office at once. Give the medical officer sufficient time to examine and report on the certificate to the head office, as to whether it is of a character to justify the taking of that policy. That would be time enough. That is what I suggest to my hon. friend. I see the absolute necessity, in the interest of the company itself and in the interest of other policy-holders, that there should be that supervision of the first certificate that is presented by the doctor who examines the applicant in the locality in which he lives.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Supposing there is a clash between the reports of the two doctors, what then?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The physician at the head office must be the judge.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is what I am against.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If we adopt such a provision as the hon. genetleman has suggested, policy-holders would be at the mercy of the company, and the only way that I can find is to merely require a medical certificate which will be furnished by the parties insured, from any medical man they choose, and allow a reasonable time within which the company will have an opportunity to verify that certificate. If they ascertain, by having the person examined by their own medical officer within the twelve months, which will only be done in exceptional cases, that the first certificate has not been given in good faith, then they may impeach the certificate, but if they do not, although their own medical officer had ascertained that the certificate had not been given in good faith, that the party was not in good health, if they do not enter the objection within the twelve months, then the medical certificate is to be held as conclusive.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Supposing he impeaches it, what is the remedy ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Then the courts have to decide.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I pity the policy-holders.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—You have to leave it to the courts or to the company.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No, leave it to a physician, do not send it to the courts, or the people will be ruined.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—It is always easier to criticise than to suggest something in place of that which is criticised. But I think there is something in what is said by the hon. gentleman from Victoria, and by the hon. member from Belleville, about the length of time. What will you do with the premiums which will be paid during that time ? If twelve months are allowed the company to impeach a certificate, what will you do with the premiums which have been paid by the applicant ? Will he continue to pay them ? And if after that time the application is rejected, will the premium be remitted to the applicant ?

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—He is insured in the meantime.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—If he died during the time allowed the company to reject or accept the certificate, would he recover ?

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The question put by the hon. gentleman from Mille Iles is easy of solution. We are speaking now of lapsed policy-holders who present certificates and deposit the premiums. He is simply an applicant for insurance. If his application is rejected he stands as if he had never been insured. I am speaking of general principles. I want to answer the objection that the delay of twelve months is too long. Speaking generally, the delay would be too long if we were with the general business of an insurance company on ordinary lines, but I contend that the delay should be longer in this instance, and for this reason, that the company will not open its offices and send out its agents to get risks in the ordinary course of business, getting them so many per day or week or month. Those applications will come in a rush by thousands from the holders of these lapsed policies, covering an immense area, and it will take a considerable time for the company to supervise all those applications, and examine those parties whose reports are not absolutely good. They will need to cover the whole of Canada with agents so as to have reports upon all those cases, before they decide to send their own medical officer to make a verification of the certificates which they have received, so that while in the ordinary course of business twelve months would be perhaps too long, we should give sufficient latitude to the company to protect them against fraud and negligence. My hon. friend from Victoria is somewhat afraid of the court intervening and deciding as between the company and the assured. I would draw his attention to what prevails to-day. In this House eight out of ten, and perhaps the whole of the eighty-one members hold policies in various companies. What risk are we carrying to-day? We have made our application. We have answered a great many questions. We have been examined by the physician, and what is the threat over our heads? We may live twenty-five years or fifty years, and the hon. gentleman from Victoria should know that after we die our applications can be tested in the courts, and if our declarations in our applications are proved to have been unfounded our policy is cancelled. That is the general law. Those who are insured in any company run the risk, after death, when we are not here to explain the situation as it was when we made the application, of having this application tested by the courts. In this Bill we provide that within twelve months a test may be had, and the parties, who are still living, can meet in the courts, and the judges of the land will decide between man and man, and will pronounce between the contentions of both parties.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—With reference to the delay, I want to call the attention of hon. gentlemen to this: for my part I expected that the company would insist on a longer delay. The company cannot be expected to have this second examination made except in exceptional cases. Otherwise it would throw on them a very large expense which they could not afford to pay, because they are not getting anything for it. The second medical examination will have to be done at their own expense; therefore it is but reasonable to give them the twelve months in order that they may save expense and avoid the necessity of having the second examination made. I have prepared the clause carefully and I am satisfied that it is reasonable in every respect. I am afraid hon. gentlemen do not appreciate the great importance that is involved in the clause. I think the hon. gentleman for de Lorimier has pretty well answered the point. I am asked by the hon. gentleman from Mille Iles, supposing that the applicant dies during the twelve months before the examination becomes conclusive. If he dies within twelve months he stands in exactly the same position that any insured stands with any ordinary company. If the certificate which he has given to the company is impeached within the twelve months and it is found to be false, then his heirs cannot recover the amount of the policy; but he has this advantage over ordinary policy-holders, that he does not lose the premium paid. There is no forfeiture of the premium that he may have paid. His heirs will be entitled to get the premium back.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It does not say so. He would have to sue for it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—But it follows. It is the effect of the clause as it stands. To ask that the certificate which the applicant furnishes be conclusive against the company, is unreasonable; we cannot go any further than we have gone. The company must be given a reasonable time during which it will have the right to impeach the certificate, if there is any occasion to do so.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I think this honourable House ought to be thankful to the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry for the pains he has taken to meet this objection, for it was a very objectionable clause, particularly the idea of leaving the decision with the inspector of insurance ; still there is something lacking in it, to my mind. There are different kinds of medical examinations. With some companies they are very severe, while with others they are more liberal.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That depends on the position.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—No. There are series of questions in the certificate which we have to answer. Are the examinations going to be so severe that it will be a matter of impossibility almost for men at a certain age to take insurance ? People have bladder trouble. We know that examinations of urine are required by almost every company in the land.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—That is the part that has been avoided. A party might be in good health at the time of the examination, but the fact that he had troubles four or five years before would enable the company to reject the certificate. To close the door against such a thing I have adopted this wording—a mere medical certificate of his being in good health. You cannot exact less than that.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—In good health until when ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—A certificate of his being in good health at the time the certificate was given shall be conclusive at the expiration of one year, if not impeached in the meantime.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I would further suggest to the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry that the company would appoint their own men, as far as they can, to give this blanket certificate, and then it would be less subject to criticism at the head office.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The company would be very glad to appoint their own men. I am sure the company would be very glad to have it that way.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Supposing I reinstate myself, and I am in perfect good health, and have my medical certificate, and the doctor of the company only comes round to examine me at the end of the eleventh or twelfth month. In the meantime, I fall into consumption or contract some serious disease, would my heirs suffer?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—No, that would not affect the policy.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Is that in black and white ? My doctor has given me a medical certificate of a condition of health that has continued for twelve months until the doctor of the company comes and says that certificate is no good. According to the hon. gentleman's statement, my heirs or myself will have to go into court and prove that my doctor's certificate is better than the certificate of the company's medical officer.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We want it in black and white. No use leaving it to the courts. You say the doctor of the company can set aside the certificate of my doctor. What is the situation ? I have to go to court to assert my right, and I do not want that.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It is open to the company to impeach the certificate. That can only be done by asking the court to pass upon it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is the company that is to take action ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am quite willing.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—The amendment is one that we all ought to be disposed to accept. In the first place, the applicant gets a blank form of certificate, which covers a whole year, and if the company do not make their application within the year the insurance is permanent. I think the hon. gentleman from Victoria ought to be quite satisfied with the amendment.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am satisfied now, but I wanted the explanation.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I am satisfied, because I am interested in having the Bill passed ; but it is always well to make objections which we think are reasonable, and see if we cannot agree. Many things may happen in twelve months. Many a man has been obliged to drop his policy after having paid for twelve, fourteen or fifteen years, as I have done, and if he thinks proper to take advantage of the clause which allows him to have his policy reinstated, after having paid three or four or five thousand dollars previously, he will begin to pay again and continue paying for five or six months, possibly for twelve months a sum in addition to what he has paid before, and find in the end that his certificate may be rejected, and he will lose the money he has paid. I shall accept the Bill, if it cannot be helped, but would it not be better to shorten the time? The company should, within a few months, be in a position to have that examination made. Those who represent the company are so reasonable that I think they will see the objection is one that is to be met, and they will consent to shorten the period.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I do not think there is any reason to complain of the delay when you consider the number of persons admitted every month. It would be impossible for the company's surgeon to promptly examine all the cases. It is only where a doubt is expressed at the time the blanket certificate was given. You do not want to load this company down with any more expenses than are necessary. You would not want to load my hon. friend down by requiring him to have medical examination. Therefore it is in the interest of the insured and of the company that we accept the proposition of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry. It is fair and just, and the best you could devise to protect both the company and the parties interested.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have not changed my views, notwithstanding the explanations of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry. He makes a declaration that he desires to place the reinsured person in a position not to be at the mercy of the company, and yet he gives the company twelve months in which to take advantage of the certificate given by the local physician. The only good reason I have heard for a twelve months' limit is that advanced by the hon. gentleman from St. Thomas (Hon. Mr. Wilson), that is, the extent of the business being so great it would necessitate the employment of a number of physicians at the head office in order to make the examination. Now if you desire to place the reinsured in a position which makes his policy secure for the future, the sooner that is established by the company's physician examining the certificates which have been given by the local examiner, the better for the insured. When the local certificate of health of the applicant to be reinsured is received before a new policy is made, that certificate I take it is sent to the head office by the agent of the company. How is the medical officer of the company to examine that certificate to ascertain whether the answers will enable him to judge of the applicant's state of health? No one knows better than the hon. gentleman from St. Thomas that a larger number of questions may be answered by the local physician in such a manner that if the certificate were placed before the hon. gentleman as the examiner of the company he would reject it at once or would send it back for more detailed information. I am speaking of what I know takes place. How does the hon. gentleman propose to get over that difficulty? I think it is only just to the company that they should have a protection of that kind, but the question is, if the physician at the head office, after examining the certificate, rejects it, and says that the applicant cannot be reinstated on account of the state of his health, who is to judge then? Is that to be the final rejection of the applicant for reinsurance? I think it should be. I have not had that answered yet. I know generally if the certificate of the local physician appointed by the head office is rejected at the head office, the applicant does not get a policy. The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry says it would be the duty of the company to enter the action in the courts; what action is the company to take? If the local physician certifies the health of the applicant, and the physician at the head office rejects it, there is an end of it. Do you suppose the company are going into litigation to ascertain if their medical officer has put the correct interpretation on the certificate? I look upon that as utterly impracticable. I have a much higher opinion of judges than my hon. friend from Victoria appears to have ; I would be quite willing to take the decision of the judge without a jury at all. I think twelve months is a longer time than a man ought to be kept in suspense.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The hon. gentleman has been drawing a deduction from the ordinary course of life insurance business as carried on by companies. Bear in mind in that case what happens. A local agent solicits and gets an application, and takes the applicant to a doctor. What doctor ? The medical officer of the company. So that at the very initiation of the business, the company has the protection of an examination of the case by its own medical officer. More, that examination is, as has been explained by the hon. member from Glengarry, an exhaustive one, an examination for which the applicant is obliged to pay. He is catechised on every question which the medical officer of the company deems of importance to determine the state of his health at the time, and that is placed on record, and the answers given are all binding and conclusive on the person who gives the information. That kind of information which contains the history of the family, of the person himself who has been examined, of his life and habits, the respiration, the blood and other tests, all of which is taken by the officer of the company and forwarded to the head office. With a knowledge of who the medical man is, and the experience and care which that medical officer has devoted to examinations, the head medical officer can very quickly determine whether there should be further information obtained or not. But that is not the case here. The applicant for reinsurance is relieved from all that. The examination is the examination of a medical man of his own choosing, having no connection with the company in doing it. The nature of the examination which he makes is not disclosed, and the only thing he certifies to is the conclusion, not as to what the record of the applicant or his family has been, or anything else, but the certificate he gives is as to his then being in good health. That is the broad, simple certificate. That goes to the head medical officer of the company. What information does that give him ? Here is a certificate from a medical man in good standing no doubt. It goes to New York, and simply tells that the man is in good health. The point arises, is it an unreasonable time, considering you are taking his statement and that the certificate so given is to become conclusive after a certain time ; whether true or false is to bind the company, whether the medical officer who made it has been deceived or careless, or indifferent, or partial to the insured. Now in other companies that is not so. In other companies the certificate of their own officer and the statements of the man himself as to his state of health and history are not conclusive, and as a rule and it is only of late years that the practice has been introduced —the policy is only conclusive after a period of three years ; in fact in some policies five years, and in older policies it never was conclusive at all. All the policies I hold being old policies, there is nothing of the kind in them. So that the reports that are made as to the state of health at that time made by the person are binding on him, and the company could take advantage of them fifty years afterwards ; but in this case it is not so. Having regard to that, and the large amount of business that is being done by the company all over the United States, as well as in Canada, one year is a very short time to leave the certificate open and be subject to investigation by the company. Then some information may reach the company, or for some reason or other they think it is a case they had better examine. One year is a short time. The company will no doubt do it as quickly as they can. As long as they do it they take all the risk. When they do it they have the evidence of their medical officer, and it would be a hard thing to tie them down to a shorter period. Supposing their medical officer makes an examination, and discloses to the company from his examination the record of the person, and shows that during recent years the man has been afflicted with diseases which must have remained in his system, and from which he could not have been free on his previous examination, and which had perhaps escaped the attention of the officer altogether, or on which he might have been misled, the company should have a right to say,

'We impeach the certificate which was given,' and the onus would be on them to enter a suit to avoid the certificate and to avoid the policy which was based upon it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The onus you say is on the company ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The onus is on the company to impeach. The company are making a large concession in taking a blanket certificate of good health, and, in the second place, I think it is a very reasonable, in fact a rather short time indeed which is allowed to them during which to impeach a case of fraud. I think it is a reasonable time, having regard to the nature of the examinations they may think it necessary to make in order to satisfy themselves.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Is the examination of their own medical men likely to be as critical and severe as that made generally to-day in insurance ? If that is the case there are very few of these applicants who will pass.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The examination ought to be definite in all particulars. I am talking of the duty of the medical officer towards the company. I assume there is a case in which, six months before, a certificate of good health was given, and on which a policy was issued, and the company send their medical officer to investigate the case. It would be his duty to make such a searching inquiry to find out, not whether the man when he made the application then is in good health, but whether the statement that he was in good health, made by the medical officer before, was correct or not. The man may be in bad health at the end of the six months. That would not impeach the certificate, if the certificate was true at the time it was given. Unless the company is satisfied, and can show that it is justified in saying that was a case of fraud or misrepresentation, that the man was in bad health, that he was dying at the time, or otherwise impeach the truth of the statement that he was then in good health—unless that is done, the company would never be justified in impeaching him and could not do so because of the state of his health at the time the second examination took place, but on the state of his health at the time the medical officer gave the certificate.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto).

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Answer me this question : supposing a certificate of health has been sent to the head office, and it remains there six or eight months, and after a second examination has been made through a medical officer, or any other person, and they find they would be justified in impeaching the first certificate, whom would they notify ? Would they notify the person who made the application ? Does the hon. gentleman tell us that the company would go into court to verify the position that they are taking ? Would it not devolve upon the applicant to go into court to show that the original certificate was bad ? I understood the hon. gentleman to say that once the certificate is impeached, the company would have to go into court to sustain that impeachment ? Is that the position ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Yes, it is done now in ordinary life insurance business. A fraudulent statement is made and the company find it out, at any time, it may be ten years afterwards, and they take proceedings to impeach that policy.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Supposing I am an old policy-holder, and I want to be reinstated. I get a certificate from Dr. Sullivan or Dr. Wilson that I am not troubled with cancer, and I present that to the company. Subsequently should I be attacked by cancer, am I responsible for the certificate given by the doctor? It is not the doctor the company will take action against, but against me.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The case the hon. gentleman suggests cannot occur at all. No such certificate is to be given. It simply certifies that the party is in good health at the time he is examined—nothing more or less. It is either true or false. If it is true, then the party is fully protected. If it is false, and the company can show in the court that it is false, and not given in good faith, they are not liable.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Let us make it plain now for a thousand years to come. Let us suppose that I have a certificate from my doctor, who certifies that I am not afflicted with any disease on the 1st August.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—That you are in good health ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—And the medical officer of the company has no time to come and examine me, until twelve months afterwards. In the meantime cancer has developed and the company's doctor finds it out. What is going to be my position ? My doctor has given a certificate in good faith, but the company's doctor finds my condition somewhat different twelve months afterwards. Where am I ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—You are protected.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—How ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—By this law.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is all I want to know. I do not want to be protected by the courts. I wish to be protected by the law.

The question being put by the Speaker,

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Would this amended section be subject to revision ?

The SPEAKER—This has been discussed.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have right to speak.

The SPEAKER—Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to sit down.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I shall, but I have a right to speak.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman has no right to speak after I have put the question.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The question has not been put. I think the Speaker should not be in any haste. He can furnish me information if he cannot give me understanding. I find the hon. gentleman from Toronto and the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, quite willing to give me information, and I do not see why hon. senators should object to information being furnished now.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I think the hon. gentleman should assist in maintaining proper decorum in this House. Where is the Senate to stand in the estimation of the public, if we adopt this practice, which seems to be inaugurated, of insisting on speaking when called to order. The hon. Speaker has declared this motion carried.

The SPEAKER—No.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—He has put the motion.

The SPEAKER—I had asked the House if they were ready for the question and I had read the question but had not taken the voices.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The voices were not taken.

The SPEAKER—No.

The amendment was carried.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I move that the Bill be further amended, as follows :—

7th. By striking out the words 'in respect to the said assessment policies' in clause 5, and adding at the end of said clause the following :—'and shall in all respects be subject to sections 33 and 34 of the Insurance Act.'

I have already explained the object of the amendment. These words are struck out for the purpose of covering the whole deposit in the hands of the government, instead of covering only part of the deposit, $228,000, which was applicable to assessment policies only, so that it will have the effect of binding the whole deposit in the hands of the government, and the addition to the clause, though for my part I think it is unnecessary to remove the objection which is—and in fact I had myself prepared it before, because I expected that the objection would be made, that any portion of that deposit may be removed. It is to make it plain that the deposit shall remain subject to the operation of sections 33 and 34, which sections provide that the money thus deposited remains in the hands of the government, and cannot be paid back to the company ; and that if the company is unable to carry out its obligations towards its policy-holders, it may be used in satisfaction of judgments obtained against the company, and if the company failed then the money is used by the Superintendent of Insurance, in reinsuring all the risks with solvent companies.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—I think you will find under the present Act, that the policy-holders have greater security than under this. If you read all of Mr. Eldridge's testimony in part No. 3 of the Select Committee's report, you will find that it is stated that the Canadian policy-holders have the protection of every other dollar of the company's assets, no matter where situated. Under this they would not have that protection.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Yes, exactly. This is a special guarantee, over and above the recourse against all the assets of the company elsewhere, here or in the United States. It is not limited at all. It is dealing with the deposits ; the company is liable on all its assets.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I move that the Bill be further amended by substituting the proposed amendments which stand in the name of the hon. Senator McMullen, and adding paragraph 8 of my amendments. It would read as follows :—

7. Nothing in this Act shall affect any suit, action or other proceeding now pending or which hereafter may be brought in respect of any policy or claim against the company.

Nor shall this Act apply to policies in respect to which any contract or agreement may have been made by the company with holders of certificates for commutation of their assessments and the payment of uniform rates, without the consent of the holders of such certificates.

This addition is necessary, because certain parties might not be covered by the clause as suggested by the hon. gentleman from Wellington. It is to protect the parties who have dealt with the company, and who claim that they have entered into an agreement with the company whereby their assessments were commuted to fixed rates.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I would put it in a shorter way, to read thus :

Nor shall it affect any right which a policy-holder had previous to this Act.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the hon. Speaker has a mode which is a little too hasty. When an hon. member suggests an amendment it is not taken notice of.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I just suggested it as being more comprehensive and more to the point, and did not consider the phraseology, but I do not care.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I should like to know if the hon. member from de Salaberry accepts the amendment.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I think the clause is properly worded.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The amendment has been carried, and the hon. gentleman is out of order.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I simply suggested it as being comprehensive and brief.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have no further suggestion to make, except to ask that paragraph E of section 3 be struck out, and that the following words be added after the word 'policies.'

Including those entitled to be revived under the provisions of this Act.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Hear, hear. I will second that.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think that that notice should be of such a character that it will give the policy-holder who had a right to come in, some intelligent idea of what he would have to comply with under the Act, and I would suggest that the circular, which is signed by the company, should be approved of by the Superintendent of Insurance, which would give the insured an idea as to what he would have to do to comply with this Act.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Better leave it as it is. It would complicate matters.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The company had better be kept responsible for furnishing the details. The clause is very simple, I think.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It does not cover the policy-holders under clause H.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The amendment is exactly to cover that.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is all right. The senator wants to protect the policy-holder. That protection will be given to those who receive the registered letter, and where will those who do not receive the letter receive their protection ? I would suggest to have them announce it in the public press.

Some hon. MEMBERS—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Letters sent to where I lived ten years ago would never reach me. I am anxious in the interests of the policy-holders, and I think it is better to make the matter perfect now than to let the law courts settle it later on.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—This Bill has been the subject of a great deal of inquiry, and I doubt whether there is a policy-holder who does not understand what has been going on here. He will know all about it, but this is a supplementary matter. Every one entitled to it will have a notice sent to him.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—And the issuing of the license has to be published in the 'Official Gazette,' and it will be well known.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am not sure if there is not a clause in the Bill in which the words 'three months' occur, where it should be made 'four.'

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—How will clause 7 affect the assessment policy-holders, who may remain in that class ?

Hon. Mr. WILSON—It gives them an open door.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The amendments are all right.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto) moved the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—In regard to the notice of motion which I placed on the order paper, that the deposit made at Ottawa should not be withdrawn, but should remain for the benefit of the policy-holders——

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—That is fully covered.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I wish to suggest that as the alterations which have been made in this Bill are so numerous, and contain matter which requires consideration. that the third reading should be postponed until the Bill has been reprinted.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I think it is all right. There is no obstruction offered.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Allow me to say that I feel the responsibility I have taken in interfering to the extent that I have in this Bill, and if I had any hesitation I would very gladly suggest that it be deferred, but I have given such close attention to the clauses that I am satisfied there can be no objection. Otherwise I would not like to take that responsibility, because I feel that I would be open to reproach, but the Bill has to go to the Commons, and the end of the session may come very soon, I think we should not run any risk, and pass the Bill as soon as possible. I suggest that, because I attached a great deal of importance to the measure in the interest of the policy-holders.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I make the regular motion in amendment, that the Bill be reprinted, with all the alterations, before it be read a third time.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I think it is well hon. senators should express their opinion in the matter. I understand the necessity of passing this measure, in view of the approaching end of the session, but the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, as well as myself, will understand that senators, who should vote with their eyes open, after reading every clause of that Bill, should be entitled to at least twenty-four hours before casting a vote, and I think the hon. gentleman from Sarnia has made a very wise and prudent request. I admit it is exceedingly necessary, in view of the approaching close of the session, that the Bill should be passed at once, but it is a dangerous precedent to establish. This is a Bill which will give rise to a great deal of litigation, and I do not see that there is any objection to postponing it till four o'clock tomorrow, when we can get the reprinted Bill. As far as I am concerned, I know enough of the Bill to cast a vote now, but I know there are senators who have not been able to follow the Bill as assiduously as many of us have done, and on these grounds I coincide with the views put forward by the hon. member from Sarnia.

The amendment was declared lost.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the motion for the third reading is put, I wish to ask the hon. Speaker if we are in order.

The SPEAKER—I think so.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Amendments were reported from the Senate committee which were read once. I think they should be read twice.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It has never been the practice on third readings.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—An amendment to a public Bill is read twice.

The SPEAKER—I have never known it during the time I have been in the Senate. The motion is carried.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is my point carried ? Did the hon. Speaker decide that my point was carried ?

Hon. Mr. WILSON—He said there was nothing in the point of order.

The SPEAKER—The uniform practice has been that these amendments are read and concurred in.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am speaking of the first amendment made by the Select Committee.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They were adopted long ago.

The SPEAKER—Those amendments were concurred in when the report was adopted. The question is on the third reading of the Bill. I do not think the point of order is well taken.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time.

The CLERK—Bill (H) An Act to amend the Insurance Act—this Bill is read a third——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. That is not the Bill we have been discussing.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman raised that question at an earlier stage to-day, and I then read the rule from Bourinot, that the title was to be changed at the final motion for the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER—The Bill has to be read a third time at any rate. Read the Bill.

The Bill was then read the third time.

The SPEAKER—This Bill has been read a third time, and it is moved by the hon. gentleman from Toronto that the title be changed——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I observe that this is an Act to amend the Insurance Act. If I understand the point, it is that the title of the Bill shall be as amended.

The SPEAKER—Yes, the House has already decided that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The motion now before the chair is that the title of the Bill should be amended. I contend that that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER—The Bill has been read the third time and the motion is superfluous. the House having already decided.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The motion is to change the title, and I am raising the point of order on that.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER—The motion has been withdrawn.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What motion was withdrawn ?

The SPEAKER—The motion that the title be so-and-so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then I understand the title is 'An Act respecting the Canadian assessment policy-holders in the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company,' and not 'An Act further to amend the Insurance Act.' The recommendation of the committee makes this change; now is it necessary to have a motion ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I hold here one of the most recent works on the subject, and the rule is, after the third reading of the Bill the title may, if necessary, be amended for the purpose of making it conform to the contents of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But it was amended before.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was recommended by the committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And adopted by the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I beg my hon. friend's pardon. When the recommendation came from the committee, it was considered by the House, and it was understood by myself and by others who expressed an opinion on it, that the proper time to fix the correct title was after the third reading, and before the Bill passed.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. gentleman will look at the proceedings of the House, he will find that the report of the committee changing the title was adopted by the Senate. When an amendment is adopted I do not know of any authority that will say that a thing that has already been adopted shall be adopted at another time.

The SPEAKER—The question is that this Bill do now pass, and that the title be 'An Act respecting the Canadian assessment policy-holders in the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company.'

The Bill passed.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow.

THE SENATE.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION COMMITTEE SEVENTH REPORT.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN moved the adoption of the Seventh Report of the Select Standing Committee appointed to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserrve Fund Life Association of New York.

Mr. BEIQUE—The report of the Select Committee now before this honourable House contains the following information:—

1. At a meeting of your committee held on 12th July instant, a certain document was produced and admitted in evidence as Exhibit No. 36, a copy of which is contained in the copy of the evidence herewith submitted.

2. At a meeting of your committee held on the 13th July instant, it was moved by the Hon. Mr. Lougheed :

That the committee reconsider its action of the 12th instant in admitting Exhibit No. 36.

In amendment thereto, it was moved by the Hon. Mr. Landry :

That all the words after 'That' be struck out and the following substituted : the Exhibit No. 36, accepted yesterday, the 12th instant, by this committee, be considered as tending to prove the consideration for which a sum of $5,000 has been paid by the Mutual Reserve Company to one Patterson and not as a proof of the truth of the charges which such document contains.

3. It was objected, by the Hon. Mr. Béique, that the amendment was out of order, on the ground that Exhibit No. 36, having been offered for evidence and received as such, could not now be qualified as sought to be done by the amendment ; that, moreover, the said amendment was not in accordance with the facts.

Exhibit No. 36 contains a libel which was published by a witness who was examined before the committee—one Patterson.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is appealing to this House from a decision given by the chairman of the select committee. He has no right to do so. He cannot point out in any of our rules anything which gives permission to make such an appeal. Committees are of two kinds, Committees of the Whole and select or standing committees. An appeal is given in the House of Commons from a decision of the chairman of a Committee of the Whole, where all the members are in the chamber, and where everybody knows what is going on. Such an appeal from the decision of the chairman to the House, is permitted under a special rule of the House of Commons, but in cases of standing or select committees there is no appeal at all, and in the Senate there is no appeal in any case. In this case the rules of the House of Lords apply to the Senate, and if the hon. gentleman will look at page 375 of May he will find this :

Following the principles which govern procedure in Committee of the Whole House—no appeal can be made to the Speaker regarding the decisions and rulings of a chairman of a standing committee.

That settles the question.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The authority cited by the hon. gentleman does not sustain his proposition. It is not an appeal to the Speaker, that I am intending to make, it is an appeal to the House. I must say first of all that the hon. member has changed his opinion, because in the committee he suggested himself that it was to the House the appeal should be made.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has no right to refer to what has taken place in the committee, or to any statement I may or I may not have made there.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am willing to withdraw the statement if I have no right to make it, but I have an impression that I have the right, from the fact that the evidence is before the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Take only what is in the evidence.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am not sure if that appears in the evidence or not.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am sure it does not.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have no objection to withdraw the statement; I do not attach much importance to that. What I desire to say is, that this House has absolute jurisdiction over all the business which comes before it, and before its committees, whether standing or select committees, and this jurisdiction can only be limited by special rules adopted by the House. If the hon. member can cite any such special rule, then his point of order might be well taken, but in the absence of any such rule, I claim that the jurisdiction of the House is absolute and entire, and that the House has complete control over its committees. Will it be contended that it would not be in the power of this House to say that any grievance which may arise in a select committee shall be remedied? Will it be contended that the hands of this House are tied up in that manner, and that it would not be entitled to act if a wrong decision is given by the chairman of a select committee and he would have allowed any amount of libels to go on the record?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I rise to a point of order. I want the hon. gentleman to prove that the chairman of the committee has allowed libels to go in the evidence. He has no right to make such an assertion.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I did not make that statement.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman said that the chairman of the committee allowed any amount of libel to go on the evidence.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am arguing in a general way, and I ask whether the House would not have a right to say that libellous evidence which might be admitted under the ruling of the chairman of a select committee, should remain on the records of the committee or of the House? The proposition cannot be seriously discussed, unless the hon. member is able to show that the House has divested itself of control over its committees.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I have not studied this question in its detail, but it strikes me the whole discussion is out of order. I believe on general principles we have no right to take cognizance of anything that has transpired in committee, select or standing, except that which comes regularly before us through the chairman, and this discussion partakes of the nature of things that may have taken place in committee and which, if referred to in this House, such reference is not allowable. On the general principle I am of opinion that the discussion of a question like this is entirely out of order, that we can only discuss what comes to us regularly through the ordinary and proper channel.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I ask for the ruling of the chair.

The SPEAKER—As I understand, the question which I am asked to decide is whether an appeal by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry is in order. The seventh report of the committee is before the House. The circumstances which have led the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry to appeal are set forth in the report of committee which is now in possession of the House; and unless some very strong, positive authority can be found to the contrary, there must be an appeal to the House. A member who thinks himself unjustly treated by the chairman or by a majority of the committee, must have a right to seek a remedy somewhere, and the remedy is in the House. The authority cited by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona is not entirely in point. May at page 375 says:

> Following principle governing procedure in Committee of the Whole House—no appeal can be made to the Speaker regarding decisions and rulings of a chairman of a standing committee.

This is not an appeal to the Speaker; it is an appeal to the Senate. The authority which is given by May is that in 1889 the Speaker said that he would not allow an appeal to be made to him on a point of order arising in a standing committee. Then Bourinot on page 519 says:

> In case of an appeal to the House it is the duty of the chairman of the committee to report in writing on the point of order which he has decided.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is for the House of Commons. There are special rules for the House.

The SPEAKER—I assume that in a case of this kind the Speaker must submit the matter to the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is not the point at all.

The SPEAKER—The only case—I think it is referred to in Bourinot—is given in Speaker Peel's decisions, by Blackmore, where Mr. Sexton appealed to the Speaker from the decision of the chairman of the Committee of the Whole. It was held there that the appeal should not be made to the Speaker but to the House. Clearly the committees of this House are under the control of the House, and if a committee is acting in an improper way, or if any member thinks so, he has a perfect right to bring the matter to the notice of the House, and particularly in a case of this sort, where the evidence and the transactions in connection with the committee whence the appeal is taken have been reported to the House and are now on the table of the House ; so, in my opinion, the question of order has not been well raised.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I raise another point of order. I contend that this question of appeal is not in order.

The SPEAKER—I have just decided that it was.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Well, I have another point to make. It is on the same subject. I suppose I have the liberty to do so.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is on another point.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If it is the same point——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If it is another point it is not the same point.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It is the same question I understand, but what the hon. gentleman desires is to give additional reasons ; and, therefore, it amounts to an appeal from the decision of the chair, for reasons which have not been stated, and I say that the hon. member is bringing up the same question.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I have a right to state my point of order, and the hon. gentleman has not right to interfere. Taking the ruling of the Speaker and accepting it, I say that in the present instance an appeal cannot be made, because in committee when the hon. member raised his point of order he allowed the question to be decided. The document he was opposing and the introduction of which he was trying to prevent by his question of order, was produced and the question decided, and we have had five or six sittings since then. If the precedents of the House of Commons are to be followed, what was the duty of the hon. member ? His duty was to see that the proceedings of the committee be immediately suspended and that a special report be made to this House for its immediate decision.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—That is the practice in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It does not apply here, but the wisdom of the Speaker, having decided it could be done in this House. I claim that if it is done it must be done according to the rules of the House of Commons, and in that light it is not in order.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—What should have been done, may I ask ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. member wants a professor he should pay for it. I am not going to instruct him.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—If I were going to pay a professor I would not select the hon. member.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I did not catch the point of the hon. gentleman, but I rise to call attention to this portion of the report—

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. If the hon. gentleman does not see the point he cannot discuss it. He has no right to enter into the merits of the question. He must discuss the point of order.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am discussing the point of order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman says he does not understand it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The report contains the following :—

6. The Hon. Mr. Béique having appealed from the decision of the chairman, it was

Resolved, that the chairman do report the facts to the Senate.

7. The motion of the Hon. Mr. Lougheed, as so amended, was then carried on the same division reversed.

8. At a meeting of your committee held this day, Thursday, July 14th, it was

Resolved, that together with the report to be made by the chairman as to the action of the committee with respect to Exhibit No. 36, there be submitted to the Senate a copy of all the evidence adduced before the committee up to and including the 13th July instant.

9. A copy of the said evidence is herewith submitted.

It therefore appears from that very report that the committee has acquiesced in the appeal being submitted to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Never.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No, never.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman has read the report, and he will see that the point of order was disposed of by a vote. The document was accepted by a vote of the committee, and it was only after that the hon. gentleman asked that the point of order be referred to the House. He should have asked before a vote was taken. He should have asked as soon as the chairman decided the question. He should have immediately appealed and suspended the proceedings in the committee, so that the question could be decided in the House. He did not do so, and he has lost his right of appeal. Brand has been quoted; he says this:

Order in committee is settled by the chairman at once, and cannot be raised subsequently. Questions of order in committee are settled by the chairman.—Are settled by the chairman, and further—The Speaker has no authority to interfere in a matter that has occurred in committee and which the committee has settled for itself.

Objection must be taken before the question has been settled, and there is no right of appeal.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I ask the chairman of the committee, if the appeal was not taken immediately after his decision? I am not responsible for the action of the chairman of the committee in interverting the order as he did. Whether it was inverted or not, it appears that the committee itself has invited the action of this honourable House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I deny that.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—This is quite a serious charge to bring up at the eleventh hour. The hon. gentleman says the chairman of the committee has inverted the order of proceedings of that committee.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I do not say it was done purposely.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Purposely or not, this has been before the House for nearly two weeks, and the hon. gentleman has declined to take action on it until the eleventh hour, and now he asks me, as chairman, if I have not inverted the order of the proceedings.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I ask, as a matter of fact, if it is true that I appealed from the decision of the chairman immediately after the decision was rendered and before a vote was taken?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That was the only time the hon. gentleman could have appealed. He appealed after the vote was taken. He did not appeal from my decision, but allowed the committee to confirm my decision and then appealed, which, as the hon. member from Stadacona says, debars him from appealing now. It was stated to me at the time, if he was going to appeal his appeal was lost. His right to appeal existed when I decided that the document was admissible; and once the committee confirmed my decision by a majority of votes there was no further appeal. Evidently the hon. gentleman from Stadacona knew the procedure in this matter, because he stated it. A question has been put by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, and I state in reply that his appeal was made not only after my ruling that the evidence was admissible, but after the committee by a majority of votes had confirmed my decision.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that I did not make the statement immediately before the vote was taken—immediately after the chairman's decision? Did I not state 'I appeal from the decision,' and did not the hon. member from Stadacona then say it is not an appeal to the committee, the appeal has to be made to the House? Did not this occur before the vote was taken?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—When I gave my ruling the hon. gentleman intimated a desire to appeal, but he made no appeal, and there is not the slightest doubt that the hon. member from Stadacona stated in my hearing that the appeal should be to the House. It was for the hon. member from de Salaberry to accept or refuse to accept his advice. Unfortunately for himself he accepted the advice, and thereby debarred himself from his right to appeal to the House. Whether the hon. member from Stadacona deliberately led the hon. gentleman off the track, or did it unwittingly, is more than I can say, but if he did it deliberately he evidently succeeded. I do not know what his motive was. The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry took his appeal after the decision of the chairman was confirmed by a majority of the committee, and, therefore, according to authorities, this honourable House cannot well intervene now and say the majority of the committee were wrong. It might say that the chairman was wrong, but not that a majority of a body created by the House was wrong. The Senate is asked to reverse a decision made by a body created by themselves, that is to stultify their own action, as they have been asked during nearly two weeks to do.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It appears to me there is a little misapprehension about this matter, and it is owing to that misapprehension that this question about an appeal arises at all. When certain evidence was offered in the committee, objection was taken to its admissibility. The chairman ruled that it was admissible. On that a desire to appeal, according to the way the hon. gentleman from Victoria states it, was expressed by the hon. member for De Salaberry. According to his statement, the chairman said you must wait until the committee decides.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No, I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—At all events. he did wait. Objection was taken to the decision, and on that the committee was called upon to decide, and the chairman's view of the matter was sustained. Until that was done, there could not be an appeal to the Senate. There could not be an appeal until there was a decision sustained by the committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Who is the hon. gentleman's professor ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—On the committee so deciding, the question is, was there an appeal ? What was the decision of the committee ? The decision of the committee was that the subject should be referred to the Senate. They sustained the chairman's ruling at the time ; but, in order that the matter might come up here and be disposed of, it was :

Resolved, that together with the report to be made by the chairman as to the action of the committee with respect to Exhibit No. 36, there be submitted to the Senate a copy of all the evidence adduced before the committee up to and including the 13th July instant.

In other words, the committee, whilst giving a decision to sustain the chairman's ruling, decided that the opinion of the Senate might be taken on the matter, and for that purpose this evidence should be reported. That is the logical conclusion of what occurred. Under those circumstances, it appears to me it may be interpreted two ways, either that there was a ruling subject to a subsequent decision of the Senate, or that what passed, although in the form of a decision, was not to be treated as one, but that the Senate itself was to decide. That is the logical conclusion from that report.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is not the actual one.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It seems to me, therefore, that all that the Senate can do is to deal with it in that spirit, and to entertain the appeal.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—There seems to be a misapprehension. The vote of the committee was not taken on the decision given by the chairman.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Nobody said it was.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The vote was taken on the amendment which I asked to be ruled out of order, and which the chairman of the committee ruled was in order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And the appeal being made on that decision, and the committee having voted on the motion, the committee decided the motion itself, and the motion was carried and the document produced. That occurred seven or eight days ago, and different proceedings have taken place since, and the appeal was never brought before this House.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—That does not make any difference.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It does. We have more than one decision by Speakers that an appeal may come too late.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Perhaps the whole difficulty in this case arises on a question whether the Speaker in this case shall guide the House or the House the Speaker. The hon. gentleman from Toronto is clearly in error in the opinion which he has expressed in reference to the question of appealing against a decision of the chair. He has laid down the principle that no appeal from his decision can be taken until it has been acted upon, confirmed or disallowed by the committee. That is a proposition which I must confess I never heard of before. An objection to a ruling, whether it be by the chairman of a committee or the Speaker of the House, must be taken immediately after the decision is given.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It seems to me that I cannot conceive a more illogical position to be taken than to say you are to appeal after the committee or House has decided in favour of the chairman or in the House in favour of the Speaker. I think a moment's reflection will show the hon. member from Toronto that that position is not only illogical, but contrary to all practice. The point which has been raised just now is quite clear. If you are to draw the distinction between the Speaker and the House to whom the appeal is made, you may have a peg upon which to hang your argument. In Blackmore's Speakers' decisions, I think he lays that down pretty well in one or two places. He says :

> An appeal was made to the Speaker on a question of order arising in the committee and the Speaker, when appealed to, reminded the House the other evening that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means is the judge of the questions of order which may arise in committee. I cannot say that a reference to myself of this kind is strictly in order. I could hardly, perhaps, with propriety, answer the question unless it was the wish of the House that I should do so, and then only in general terms.

Another reason was given in 1867 by the Speaker upon the question. An hon. member put a question to the Speaker with reference to what was heard in committee, and the Speaker's ruling was :

> The matter in question occurred in committee. A point of order such as that to which the Speaker refers should be addressed at once to the chairman and cannot be questioned at a subsequent meeting.

That seems to settle the question so far as the action of the committee is concerned. The appeal should be made at once ; there is no doubt about that, and in this case the objection was taken to the ruling of the chairman, and, if I am not correct, I wish somebody would set me right—an appeal was made and the chairman gave a ruling or decision. An appeal was made from that. Objection was taken to his ruling and the correctness of the ruling or the decision was put to the committee and the committee confirmed the ruling of the chair.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No, no.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is right.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was not one of the committee, and consequently I guarded my statement by saying if I were not correct in my understanding of the fact that I could be corrected, and the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry says I am wrong. The hon. chairman of the committee and the hon. gentleman from Rothesay say that I am right. I am not going to enter into a controversy on that point. I do not think it makes much difference. The chairman of the committee did rule. The objection was taken to it, and it must have been decided in some way, and I take it for granted that the chairman was sustained.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No. I was under the impression at the moment that I had the right to appeal to the committee, and the hon. gentleman from Stadacona stated that I could not—denied me the right of appealing to the committee and said I would have to appeal to the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I deny that.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is not in the record. I refer hon. gentlemen to the record.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think it is exceedingly unfortunate that we should have such direct contradictions from gentleman on this question because I think we are lowering the dignity of the House very rapidly by that mode of procedure. If I may be excused for digressing a little. I do hope in future that when an hon. gentleman rises to address the House he will not be interrupted until he has completed his case, and I give notice that I shall commence raising the question of order, after an hon. gentleman has spoken if he rises to speak the second time.

I shall call him to order unless he rises merely for the purpose of explaining his position ; because if we consider for a moment the preceedings of last night, every hon. gentleman present will come to the conclusion that they ought not to be repeated, and the closer we adhere to the rules the better. While it is on my mind, I am going to say something else. I propose if I live until the next meeting of parliament to introduce a resolution asking for a special committee consisting of the Speaker and the older members of the House to revise our rules so that certain powers may be given to the Speaker to maintain order. I know that would be a departure from the rules of the House of Lords, but we have forgotten to act on their rules—myself among the number—and I think it is about time we put a stop to it. The extract I was referring to reads as follows :

> The matter in question occurred in committee. The point of order such as that to which the hon. gentleman referred should be referred at once to the chairman and cannot be questioned at a subsequent meeting.

That decision was given when a question of order was raised from the committee, on The Established Church of Ireland Bill. On May 7th edition, 1867, I find the following heading :

> Questions of order in committee are settled by the chairman.

And the Speaker adds :

> Mr. Speaker has no authority to interfere in a matter which has occurred in committee, and which the committee has settled for itself.

I have taken the liberty of calling attention to it and, perhaps, the Speaker is better acquainted with it than I am. I have done this to put my own views on record, and I do not think there is anything to be gained by pressing the motion. On the contrary, the sooner we get rid of all discussion in reference to the New York Mutual Reserve Bill the better for the House and for ourselves.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—This discussion goes to show how wise the rule is that forbids references to discussions that take place in committee. If these appeals were allowed, there would be no end of discussion. No such questions should be taken up, because the discussions and the doings in detail in committee would be recited and repeated here, the whole thing showing, from my point of view, that the question is out of order.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think that it is rather an attempt to check what is a reasonable proposition. It is alleged by a member of the committee that there was certain evidence that was inadmissible. The ruling was against him, and he made the announcement that he would appeal to the Senate. That is the point now as I understand. It appears to me there was a good deal of difference amongst the members of the committee themselves, and I therefore suggest that this question stand until the whole report comes in. Then we shall have a wide opportuntiy of giving what consideration we like to the report, which will be based on the mode in which the evidence was taken and other facts. It will not be this matter alone, but every subject matter before that committee will be open to criticism and the fair expression of opinion of every hon. gentleman of this chamber, and this matter can then be settled with the other questions.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have no objection to acquiesce in the suggestion to defer this matter until we are dealing with the official report.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What becomes of the Order of the Day ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It will be taken up in the final report.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It will remain on the order paper.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It will be taken up in the final report.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I move that the further consideration of this report be deferred until the final report of the committee is presented.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—Has it not already been adopted ?

The SPEAKER—No.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—It most assuredly has.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It has been under consideration, and it has not been completed, and I move the further consideration of it be postponed until the final report of that committee be presented to the House.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I hold that we have already passed the report.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, no.

The SPEAKER—The seventh report of the committee is the first item on the Orders of the Day. It is the item which is now before the House, and in connection with that the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry has brought up this question of appeal.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then I shall include in my motion both my report and the hon gentleman's appeal.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—I am entirely under a misapprehension. I understood when the hon. gentleman from Rothesay moved for a committee to investigate the affairs of a certain company, that after that investigation a Bill would be introduced to assist the policy-holders. That committee has employed counsel and has been sitting for several weeks taking evidence, and a Bill has been introduced in this House and has become law. Now, what is the object of the committee ? I think it is a piece of child's play. The council of a backwoods municipality ought to do business better than that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not second a motion recognizing the appeal of the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think a date should be named for the consideration of the report.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Say Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (73) An Act to amend the Railway Act. He said: Railway companies enter into agreements with their employees to accept a certain amount out of a fund contributed by the men and the company. In many cases it is thought undue pressure is brought on the men, and this Bill provides that notwithstanding this agreement that any man injured may still have a case against the company. In legal parlance it is called contracting-out—that no man can contract himself out of any benefit he may be entitled to. That is the first clause in the Bill. There is a question whether the parliament of Canada have a right to pass such legislation. It is rather a matter for the province, and therefore there is a provision added that the Act shall not go into force in the event of the Bill being declared ultra vires.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Might I ask the hon. Secretary of State if there has not been a decision in some of the courts on this question ! If my recollection serves me right, I have read something in the newspapers to the effect that a railway employee could not contract himself out of his rights, or out of the rights which his family would have. There is no objection to the Bill, and I am merely asking for information. The second clause provides for referring the question to the Supreme Court of Canada for decision as to whether it is ultra vires on the part of the Dominion parliament to pass such legislation, which I think is a very good precaution.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The question has come up before individual judges and I really cannot tell whether the majority of decisions have been one way or the other. They have never been followed up. There has been a compromise without going to the higher courts, and the subject is still open. There has been no final appeal to the Supreme Court or to the Privy Council and this Bill is for the purpose of settling that question.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second and third time under suspension of the rules.

REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of :

Bill (154) An Act to amend chapter 61 of the Statutes of 1903 respecting the Revised Statutes of Canada.

He said : Hon. gentlemen are aware that the statutes of Canada are being revised, no revision having taken place since 1886, and an unusual course is being adopted in this case to do away with the precedent which has heretofore prevailed. The commissioners have authority under the Act on our statute-book, as soon as their revision is complete, to bring the Act into force without submitting it again to parliament, and therefore it is important that all errors must be eradicated from it. This Bill simply deals with a few typographical or clerical errors, such as substituting the word 'are' for 'were,' &c.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second and third time and passed under suspension of the rules.

THOMPSON RIVER IMPROVEMENT COMPANY'S BILL.

CONSIDERATION OF AMENDMENTS POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Consideration of the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours to (Bill 79) An Act to incorporate the Thompson River Improvement Company.—(Hon. Mr. McHugh.)

Hon. Mr. McHUGH moved that the amendments be concurred in.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I have been asked to make a request that this order be allowed to stand over until Tuesday.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What object is there in keeping this order standing ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I speak at the request of some hon. members who are absent to-day. I know nothing about it myself. I do not think that the Bill will be delayed by the postponement.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—I do not like to take advantage of any one who is interested in the Bill and for some reason cannot be present to-day. The Bill was before the standing committee and a sub-committee, and was thoroughly discussed and dealt with, and I do not think anything is to be gained by postponing it.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—This Bill has been thoroughly discussed in committee. Those who held conflicting views have yielded more or less to each other, until finally there was a complete agreement, and I can see no good to be gained by postponing the concurrence in these amendments.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—It is really a move to defeat the Bill. It was before us sometime ago, and the consideration of it was postponed from time to time to permit witnesses to come from British Columbia, and I can see no object to be served by putting off this Bill any longer. Unless some good and substantial reasons are given by the hon. gentleman from Toronto, I think we should proceed with the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—This Bill has been before the House for two months. At the instance of some hon. gentlemen it has been held over to procure information from British Columbia. That information was obtained ; the Committee on Railways met and thoroughly discussed the Bill. There was some yielding on both sides, and it was finally agreed that the Bill should go through without further opposition, and the gentlemen interested went away feeling satisfied that there would be no further trouble. I can see no good in postponing the Bill, except to try and defeat it at this late stage of the session.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—All that has been said about this Bill is correct, but the Bill has been amended in a great many particulars and not unanimously amended. In the committee there was about an even break. The hon. gentleman from Killarney, who had to leave this afternoon for Montreal, I know would like to be here when this Bill is considered, and if the gentleman in charge of the Bill is willing to allow it to stand until Tuesday I do not think any harm will be done, and it will give those who are absent an opportunity to be here when it comes up again for discussion. The hon. gentleman from Killarney is seldom absent from his place in the House, but he had to be away to-day, and, in view of his request that it should be postponed until Tuesday, I do not think the Bill should be pressed in his absence.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—If these amendments were before the House for the next sixty days nobody would look at them. I doubt if any one who is here to-day has read them ; I know I have not. It is usual when concurrence in amendments is put off to enable hon. gentlemen to look at them that they never do look at them, and when the motion is made for concurrence they pass without further discussion. This measure has been fully discussed. A lawyer came from British Columbia to represent some of the opposing interests, and the Bill was amended, and it was finally agreed that it should be passed in its present shape.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—No injury can result from concurring in the amendments to-day. As has been stated, it has been before parliament for a long time, and no valid reason has been offered why concurrence should be any longer delayed. I do not think it is right to defer measures of this kind unless somebody can show there is material information to be supplied. It is usual to accommodate members who feel that they cannot be in attendance, but it is a bad principle to establish. If the hon. senator from Toronto can give any substantial reason why further amendments should be offered, I can understand his appeal to the House to postpone the concurrence. Otherwise it should be proceeded with.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I am sorry that reference has been made to me as though I had been asking something for myself.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I did not refer to the hon. gentleman in that way.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I do not think there is any harm in letting this Bill stand until Tuesday. If the Bill is passed then, there will be plenty of time for concurrence in the amendments by the other House. It has already gone through the House of Commons and there will be no difficulty about it. Let me say a word about the Bill and amendments. The Bill as presented to us was one of the worst Bills ever brought before this House. There was a great objection to enlarging it at all to enable people to come from British Columbia who had opposing interests, but an opportunity was given for that. When they came and presented their case, a sub-committee was appointed to deal with the important rights that were involved. That sub-committee did deal with them and heard all parties. I do not think there are any, or at all events many provisions of the Bill as settled by that sub-committee that were agreed to unanimously, but they were carried, and I believe carried rightly and greatly improved the Bill.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Why postpone the Bill ?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—There may be some point which has been overlooked. We have endeavoured to bring this Bill within the scope of this parliament. Perhaps we have not succeeded. As a matter of courtesy to absent members who wanted to be here when the Bill is considered, it might fairly be allowed to stand. I understand the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill has no objection to postponing it until Tuesday next.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—This Bill has been placed in my hands by the promoter of it in the other House. He has gone away, and I do not feel that I can take upon myself the responsibility of jeopardizing its passage. The Bill is before the House. It has been before the standing committee and before a sub-committee. The opposing interests in British Columbia were represented there and I thought every amendment went into the Bill that they had agreed to include in it. It was amended, as I thought, to the satisfaction of both parties. After that attention was called to an objectionable clause, and the promoters of the Bill very generously said, notwithstanding they had a majority of the committee, we are willing to strike it out. I thought the rights of all were preserved—the lumbermen and the riparian land owners. Amendments were put in to protect their rights. The Bill is before the House and I leave it in their hands.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The third reading might be put off and then any amendments could be proposed.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I do not think any harm can result from letting the order stand until Tuesday.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—What good can result ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—As has been stated by some hon. gentlemen, a sub-committee of the Railway Committee went over this Bill and made several amendments. Representatives of the interests opposing the Bill were there and concurred in those amendments. I was informed that at a subsequent meeting of the Railway Committee, at which I was not present, a very material amendment was changed considerably on the casting vote of the chairman of the committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman has no right to say that.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—It was changed after the parties had agreed to it. I was a member of the sub-committee, but was not present at the meeting of the Railway Committee. I was not fully seized myself with the amendment made by the Railway Committee to the amendments proposed by the sub-committee. I want to understand it. I believe that amendment has a reference to the free navigation of the Thompson river by others than those in the company, by the loggers and millmen on the river. I do not think there is any attempt whatever to defeat the Bill. It will pass in some form, and as one interested in the important legislation of the province of British Columbia, I think my hon. friend will advance the cause of the Bill by postponing it until Tuesday next.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—On the understanding that those gentlemen will have something to say on the Bill and assist in passing it through on Tuesday I have no objection to postponing it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the Bill is defeated the hon. gentleman may thank himself for it, because it must go back to the House of Commons and be considered there.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—I do not like to be discourteous to hon. members who cannot be present to-day.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The Bill must go back to the House of Commons. The hon. member who said that there was no danger, felt that there was a good deal of danger with his own Bill last night. He was anxious to have it go to the House of Commons. If he was in such a hurry yesterday, there is no reason why he should be so indifferent to-day.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—That is an imputation that I was acting unfairly. The case yesterday was entirely different from this. That Bill was one which originated in this House and had to go through all its stages in the House of Commons, while this Bill comes to us from the House of Commons.

The order was allowed to stand until Tuesday next.

CANADIAN CREDIT INDEMNITY COMPANY'S BILL.

ORDER POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Consideration of the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to (Bill 29) An Act to incorporate the Canadian Credit Indemnity Company.—(Hon. Mr. Young.)

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved that the Order of the Day be discharged, and that it be placed on the orders for Tuesday next.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is the reason ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Mr. Ferguson, the solicitor in charge of this Bill, appeared before the Banking and Commerce Committee. The people who are interested have not had an opportunity of considering the amendments made to the Bill by the Banking and Commerce Committee, and he asked me today to let it stand over until Tuesday, until he can hear from the people who are interested in the Bill. I make the request at the instance of the promoter of the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is no reason that I know of for postponing the Bill, except that it would be to oppose the amendment which was made in reference to giving power to the provisional directors to substitute other names for those which are contained in the Bill. If that be the only reason for it I have no objection to let it stand over, but I do not think it is a good reason.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I must say I do not know anything about the reasons or the Bill, but the solicitor for the people interested in the Bill asked to have it stand over until Tuesday, as he wished to consult them with regard to the changes made by the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The order was allowed to stand.

Bill (80) An Act respecting the West Canadian Colliers, Limited.—(Hon. Mr. McHugh.)

ORDERS IN COUNCIL FOR YUKON TERRITORY.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the House approve of the Orders in Council passed since last session, submitted for the approval of parliament, respecting the Yukon Territory. He said: Under several statutes, Orders in Council relating to the Yukon require to be submitted to parliament at the next session to be approved. I will give the House a brief resumé of the terms of them:

Order in Council 6th July, 1903.—Amending section 12 regulations governing placer mining by prefixing the words 'the rear boundary of.' Purely formal.

Order in Council 13th August, 1903.—Approving of the recommendation of Mr. William Ogilvie. The minister recommends that as Mr. Henderson was the first discoverer of gold in Klondike river that he be granted a frontage of two thousand feet of available placer mining ground.

Order in Council 8th September, 1903.—Recommending that mere membership in the Dawson Rifle Company does not disqualify from holding a mining claim in the Yukon Territory.

Order in Council 17th November, 1903.—Reviving the free miners certificate in favour of Mr. E. A. Dixon which had expired.

Order in Council 26th November, 1903.—Making a fee for the free miners certificate in all cases $7.50 instead of $10.

Order in Council 28th November, 1903.—Making a royalty uniform 2½ per cent of the sales of the products of the location.

Order in Council 28th November, 1903.—Permitting that Messrs. Reeves, Lanoir and Patton be granted renewal of entry for their respective claims, notwithstanding that work to the value of $200 had not been expended, as they had been stopped in their operations by order of the Gold Commissioner.

Order in Council 7th December, 1903.—Recommending that the grantees of claim No. 93 below lower discovery on Dominion creek be relieved from the payment of $200 prescribed by the regulations.

Order in Council 3rd January, 1904.—Recommending that on the approval of the commissioner surplus water on Bonanza and Eldorado creeks may be impounded and held for periods of scarcity.

Order in Council 2nd February, 1904.—Rescinding of certain regulations for the disposal of mining locations to be worked by hydraulic mining process.

All of the above have been published in the 'Canada Gazette.'

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not want to object to the approval of these orders, but is it not possible, when they are laid on the table for the approval of this House, to distribute printed copies of them, or have them printed in the Minutes of Proceedings, so that members can read them and know what they are asked to approve?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would load up the proceedings very much. Some of them are very long.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We are asked to approve of something we do not know anything about.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I submitted it ten days ago for the information of hon. gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But they are not in print.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Only a few copies are issued.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It would be very easy to strike off a few more copies for the use of members.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Have they not all been printed in the 'Canada Gazette'?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, they have all been published there.

The motion was agreed to.

Bill (120) An Act respecting the Montreal Terminal Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Casgrain, de Lanaudière.)

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I should like to ask the hon. leader of the Senate if we could get the report of Dr. Potvin which has been sent to the medical superintendent of the Immigration Hospital in Quebec at Savard Park?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Is the Doctor here or in Quebec?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is Dr. Boyce. The report was sent by him to the Department of the Interior.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman does not know where he is.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think he is a public officer, in the Immigration Department at Quebec. I also ask the hon. gentleman if he can explain why the French copies of the debates of the Senate have not been sent to the members of this House since the end of April. I understand the work at the Printing Bureau is done now ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no more control over that matter than the hon. gentleman and know less about it. The matter is controlled by the committee of the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I thought it was in the Department of the Secretary of State.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow.

COMPANIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT introduced Bill (N) An Act to amend the Companies Act, 1902.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read the second time to-morrow.

He said : When the Companies Act was before parliament, there was a clause in the Bill which prevented the Secretary of State from incorporating or chartering telegraph, telephone or railway companies ; but it was not intended that a construction company should be debarred from supplying ties for instance, or from taking a contract for the construction of a road. It was intended to prevent a charter being granted except by parliament, for either building or constructing a telegraph, telephone or railway line. Now it has been pointed out that the courts have decided that a contracting company cannot take a contract for building any part of a railway because they are without the statutes. That was not the intention of parliament, and I do not know whether the courts are correct. The mere supplying of ties by a company, or a company supplying steel rails or building a section of the road was not intended to be prohibited. It was not intended that they should be debarred from performing such work as that by their charter, and there has been before the House of Commons a Bill amending the Act. It is, however, on the public Bill list and it is not likely to pass this session ; but if the Bill were passed here it would probably have a chance of going through. It would be an addition to clause 5 and would read as follows :

> Nothing in this section or any charter or letters patent heretofore or hereafter issued shall be deemed to prevent any company to which this Act applies from acting as a contractor in the railway, telegraph or telephone construction.

The other clause is allowing the companies that have capital shares for less than $100 to raise the shares to $100.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose that must be with the unanimous consent of the House, as the Bill is already in the other chamber.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Perhaps so. I am not aware that there is any rule about that. However, I should ask the consent of the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has it been withdrawn in the other House ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not really know. It is so low down on the order paper that it will not be reached at all events. It will be struck off the list in the other House if this Bill is read the first time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should suggest to the hon. Secretary of State the propriety of ascertaining whether the Bill in the other House has been withdrawn. It would be an unusual proceeding if we were to deal with this Bill while the Bill was in the other House at the same time.

The motion was agreed to.

COPYRIGHT QUESTION.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. DAVID moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate copies of all correspondence, petitions and documents in the hands of the government, being connected with the copyright question, and the law on the subject; also, for a statement of the number of foreign books which have been reprinted in Canada in accordance with our laws on copyright.

He said : In order that hon. members shall discuss this question intelligently it will be necessary to have before us certain documents which I have asked for, especially petitions which may have been presented to the government by associations of French or English writers. Not knowing whether those documents are in the possession of the government, or whether the Secretary of State is able to produce them, I shall delay the remarks which I had intended to make. There is no doubt the question is more complicated than I thought, and if it is true, as I suppose it must be true, as alleged by the hon. Secretary of State, that the Berne treaty is still in force, I do not know that the provisions of that treaty can be consistent with the Canadian statutes. Perhaps I will be better able to present my views to the House when the documents asked for are placed before us.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understood the department communicated to my hon. friend the nature of the correspondence. That it would be quite impossible this session to prepare copies of all the documents asked for. They are very voluminous. Correspondence has been going on for fifteen or twenty years, and unless my hon. friend can point out something that can be got ready in two days, it would be useless to leave the notice on the paper. He asks if Canada is in the Berne convention ? I may say it is, although a protest has been entered. The imperial government have refused to allow Canad to go out, and, as hon. gentlemen know, the Bill on the subject passed under the supervision of the late Sir John Thompson was not allowed to go into effect. It has been held up ever since, and although repeated communications have been had with the imperial authorities, they still decline to recognize that we have the sovereign control. Under the British North America Act it is quite clear the question of copyright is relegated to the parliament of Canada, but the British authorities do not seem to be willing to carry out the British North America Act in that particular.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the Berne treaty was too voluminous. I suppose it is not more than two or three pages ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Berne treaty enabled authors included in that treaty to obtain copyright in the several countries mentioned in the treaty, and the British government have pointed out that it would be a serious blow if Canada withdrew. Canadian writers have availed themselves of the privileges that flow from being in the Berne convention, but in consequence of the very many discussions we have had with the imperial government on the subject of copyright, the late government, as I thought wisely, passed an Order in Council expressing their desire to retire from the Berne convention, so that the people of Canada would be perfectly independent and free to do as they pleased in regard to the question of copyright. However, the British government did not acquiesce in our views. They thought it was a mistake ; that it would be rather injurious than otherwise, and so they declined to carry out the request made by the late government, and they have withheld their assent. I do not know whether Sir John Thompson was Minister of Justice or not at the time, but at all events he did not concur in the view taken by the imperial government. It was left in a very unsatisfactory condition.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not think it will be at all necessary to go back so far to produce the correspondence, as my hon. friend the Secretary of State says it will. I am quite sure that we have had all the papers brought down to comparatively recent dates. I remember very well that at the time of Sir John Thompson's death in England, he was engaged in the discussion of this very question. A very extensive correspondence conducted by him just up to that time will be found in one of Hodgins' volumes on Dominion Legislation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—His long report on the subject is printed in the appendices of the 'Journals.'

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It will not be at all necessary to produce correspondence as far back as has been indicated by the hon. Secretary of State, because returns to a comparatively recent date are available. My view is that since the death of Sir John Thompson, this question has not been taken up by Canada in the way he was dealing with it. It was one of the losses which Canada sustained in the death of Sir John Thompson at that particular time, on account of the earnest and extremely able manner in which he was dealing with this copyright question, and I am under the impression that since his death no one has taken up the matter in the way he was dealing with it.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I might indicate the documents which I require specially. I would be happy to get all the complaints which have been made for many years by French or English writers against the application of the British copyright laws in this country. If the hon. Secretary of State would produce those documents, for my part, I would be satisfied, because as the hon. senator from Marshfield has just said, I think we can find in Hodgins' work the papers which would be sufficient for the discussion, and especially the correspondence exchanged between Sir John Thompson and the British government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I may say that the strongest arguments against the copyright question were brought by the publishers of Canada, because it practically gives priority to United States publishers where English authors print contemporaneously in the United States with taking out copyright in England, because they have eighty odd million people there. Having taken out copyright in the United States they are able to print and send their publication into Canada, and Canadian publishers are superseded entirely.

The motion was allowed to stand.

MILITARY STRENGTH OF CANADA.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY inquired for :

A statement showing the military strength of the government of Canada in so far as it relates to ammunition, rifles and other weapons of warfare, where and in what proportions are such stored ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am unable to give the hon. gentleman as complete an answer as he probably would like. The question was brought up three or four years ago in the House of Commons, and the minister in giving an answer to the question, while stating the number of rifles under construction and those that had been distributed, thought it was not proper to give the quantity of powder and the number of cartridges that had been already made, and where they were deposited.

There are 38,000 Lee-Enfield rifles issued to corps of the active militia and rifle associations, and there are, in addition, 4,568 Lee-Enfield rifles and 810 Lee-Enfield carbines at the various stations.

As regards ammunition, it is considered inadvisable that this information should be given out publicly.

MINING CONCESSION IN THE YUKON TERRITORY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.) rose to :

Call the attention of the government to some of the concessions made of gold-bearing ground in the Yukon district to different persons, such as—

The Boyle Concession.—Commencing near the mouth of Bonanza creek and extending up the Klondike river a distance of six miles, and embracing, according to Treadgold's own sworn statement before the Royal Commission (Judge Britton's), 40·5 square miles, 25,600 acres.

Bronson and Ray Concession (Ottawa men).—According to sworn evidence at the Royal Commission, eight to nine square miles, on both limits of Bonanza creek, 5,120 acres.

Matson and Doyle Concession.—Contains over three square miles of proven hillside placer ground, 1,920 acres.

Quartz creek Concession (Joe. Boyle again).—Contains three square miles of the best part of Quartz creek, 1,920 acres.

Hermann Concession.—Embraces six square miles of territory on Gold Bottom creek, 3,840 acres.

Anderson Concession.—Containing four square miles on the best part of Hunker creek, 2,560 acres.

And will ask the government have the above-named concessions been made ?

If so, on what conditions ?

Have the concessionnaires carried out the terms on which the concessions were made ?

If so, how much has been contributed to the revenue of the Dominion by them ?

If the conditions have not been complied with, will the government in all cases of non-compliance declare these concessions forfeited to the Crown, and open to the free miner under the ordinary mining regulations ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think I can answer some of the questions, in reference to the concessions. As to the first, the answer is, yes, they have been made. As to the second, on what conditions, leases for hydraulic mining purposes have been issued in favour of the persons mentioned for locations situated in the localities referred to. Then, the next question is on what conditions. They are issued under the provisions of regulations in force at the time the applications were made, and under the terms and conditions of the leases issued. A printed copy of the regulations, and a printed form of the lease is attached. Then, in reply to the third question, have the concessionnaires carried out the terms on which the concessions were made ; the subject is now being inquired into by Judge Britton. His report has not yet been received.

4. If so, how much has been contributed to the revenue of the Dominion by them ? The following amount has been collected for rent and royalty, namely, $24,359.14.

5. If the conditions have not been complied with, will the government in all cases of non-compliance declare these concessions forfeited to the Crown and open to the free miner under the ordinary mining regulations ?

The reply is : If the conditions under which a lease has been issued are not complied with to the satisfaction of the Minister of the Interior, such lease may be cancelled and the ground included therein is thrown open to entry by free miners under the provisions of the regulations.

A fuller explanation of the third question has been handed to me. The lease issued in favour of the persons mentioned in the return, provides that the lessee shall have machinery in operation on his location within one year from the date of the lease, and that if, during any year of the said term, the lessee shall fail to expend in mining operations in, about or upon the location the sum of $5,000, of the fact of which failure the minister shall be the sole and final judge, the lease shall become and be utterly and absolutely null and void, unless the minister shall otherwise decide.

At the present time Mr. Justice Britton is preparing a report for submission to the Secretary of State with respect to each of the hydraulic mining locations referred to in this return.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I suppose the very fact of the matter being referred to a commissioner shows that the terms of the concession were not carried out, that there was default either in providing machinery or in paying rents which the concessionnaires were to have paid. Of course I cannot tell from the amount stated who has paid and who has not paid, but I do hope that the Secretary of State will be able to say this will be the last of these concessions. It must be obvious that they were not for the benefit of the country. It is throwing a fortune into the hands of a few people, I do not know and do not care whether they are Conservatives or Liberals or where they come from. No miner should be allowed to get more than an ordinary mining claim, or to take up timber limits, water-powers and large tracts of lands to be controlled by four or five people. I am sure the hon. Secretary of State will agree with me that something ought to be done to prevent a young minister from throwing away the heritage of the country in this way. Who benefits by it ? Not the country. It injures the mining industry, and I do hope that this is the last of this kind of thing, and that the country will be kept for miners on equal terms. A wise administration of the Yukon territory is most important. In the early history of it, young men were sent up there under small salaries, and they had to steal to keep themselves alive. The consequence was, we had all sorts of evil reports that those young officials had favourites, and others who desired to secure mining claims could not get them. Claims could only be got through favourites, lewd women sometimes, and it was because the officials were poorly paid and had to get a living some way or other. I hope the concessions are ended, and that there will be nothing more of the kind.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not propose to discuss the policy of granting concessions just now, but one of the important questions was whether those concessions had been given on misrepresentation, or whether any fraud had been perpetrated. Of course, where a department is administering a territory four or five thousand miles away, it is exceedingly difficult to supervise. Representations come from there which seem to be in the best interests of the people, and they are accepted as honestly given. Mistakes will sometimes arise, but one of the important questions submitted to Judge Britton was whether any misrepresentation had been made when the parties were obtaining those claims, whether any of the reasons given were not honest and correct. That is the most important element in the inquiry. We ought to know whether fraud was practised by individuals or officials, and we cannot, of course, know the truth of that until we get Judge Britton's report, which I hope will be presented shortly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I suppose we are to understand, from the statement made by the hon. Secretary of State, that these concessions, which are mentioned in detail by the hon. gentleman from Victoria, have been granted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume so. I presume all that part of it is correct.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is not aware whether any of the parties who obtained these concessions are working them ? I know when I was in that country, some of the concessions referred to in this list on the notice paper were pointed out to me, and at that time, they were not being worked. They seemed to be large areas of five or six thousand acres each, and the result was, that while claims had been taken up, adjoining these concessions that were being worked successfully, particularly the bench claims, these large areas were lying idle. Nothing was being done by the parties holding them. I know that one of the parties in that country, with whom I had conversation, had one of those claims, and on making an inquiry I found that the holders of these concessions were not working them, nor was there any prospect that they would, and I agree with the suggestion that they should be cancelled the same as the Treadgold concession was cancelled. In answer to a question put by myself a few days ago, the hon. Secretary of State said that the Treadgold concession had been cancelled on the application of the parties holding the concessions, on the ground that they had been unable to complete their financial arrangements, and that the fault lay with, as the hon. gentleman said, my friends. I find on reading the letter of Mr. Ewing, signed by him and by Mr. Treadgold, he winds up in this way :

> Regretting that after having secured sound financial support for this enterprise, and havfinancial arrangements for a large sum of money upon it, we have been prevented by the attitude of the government (not of the opposition) from carrying it through to a successful termination, in the shape in which it was chartered.

I must, however, in justice to the hon. gentleman, say that in another part of the letter, they say that :

> When our enterprise was attacked in parliament, in May, 1903, we had completed our financial arrangements for a large sum of money required for our work, and no doubt existed as to the carrying out of the obligation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is rather inconsistent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I admit that they attribute the failure afterwards, to a certain extent, to the attack which had been made upon them, and then he says that arising out of that attack, it threw doubt upon the validity of their charter, and imposed upon them a complete suspension of operation until the report of the commission appointed by the government should be received, and had completely paralysed their efforts, and undermined the confidence of their financial backers, and made it impossible for them to proceed, and for that reason, they felt compelled to ask the consent of the government to their withdrawal from the concession. Of course, he attributes the action of the government to their not having had stamina enough to resist the attacks which had been made upon them. That being the case, it would lead one to suppose that the Treadgold people were under the impression that Judge Britton's report would be of an unfavourable character, and before that report was made, they would withdraw from the enterprise. In order to assist them, perhaps unintentionally, the hon. Secretary of State instructed the commissioner not to make a report, so that we have been in the dark, as to the real effect which these concessions had upon the country. When we get the report, probably we may learn whether the concessions made to other parties are in the same position as the Treadgold concession, although they were of a different character altogether. Still the impression with the miners, and with those interested in the Klondike in all those enterprises, as well as upon every person who has given any study to the question, could be of but one character, and that is that these concessions are detrimental to the mining industries of that country. As has been pointed out in this notice, some forty or fifty thousand acres of land covered by these concessions, is held by less than a dozen people, and the result has been to close out the free miners. The sooner the system is abandoned, and only the proper area of a mining claim granted to each individual, the better it will be for the country and for those engaged in the mining industry.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentlemen of the opposition have been so steadily opposed to the Treadgold concession, that I thought it would be a matter of congratulation to them when it was cancelled. It is hard to please my hon. friend. When I found that it had been withdrawn, I thought then, and think still, that it was perfectly idle to ask for a report on something which no longer existed. It would not affect my hon. friend's opinion one way or the other. I pointed out to the judge that he had better send the evidence without comment, and we could form our own opinion upon it. He is not an expert in hydraulic engineering, and his fellow-commissioner, who was an expert, is no longer able to give him assistance, and I think the proper course would have been to simply report the evidence.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman's opinion, that no one would read the 5,000 or 6,000 pages of evidence, may be correct; for that reason we ought to have the judge's finding in the form of a report.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION.

MOTION POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called:

By the Hon. Mr. BEIQUE:

That he will move, that the chairman of the Select Committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York be instructed to report forthwith to the Senate all proceedings of said committee in connection with the examination of the two witnesses, Messrs. D. E. Cameron and R. B. Cannon, as per resolution of the Senate of the 12th instant.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE said: I wish to state very briefly my reasons for making this motion——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order before the hon. gentleman goes any further. The hon. gentleman gave notice of this motion only yesterday, and I call his attention to rule 13, which provides that:

One intermediate day's notice must be given of all matters deemed special, and any motion is deemed special which initiates a subject of discussion.

I think this motion will initiate a subject of discussion.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In commenting on that rule, Bourinot, page 414, says:

When a member proposes to bring any matter before either House with a view of obtaining an expression of opinion thereon, he must make a motion. Of this he must give due notice, unless it be one of those questions of privilege or urgency which may be immediately considered.

That is not the case now, so that rule 13 of the Senate applies.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—To avoid troubling the hon. gentleman, I ask that this notice be allowed to stand until to-morrow.

The motion was allowed to stand.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (132) An Act to amend the Railway Act, 1903.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the Railway Act, as hon. gentlemen probably recollect, the Railway Committee was removed altogether from considering questions—it was abolished. A number of questions had been heard by the Railway Committee, under which there would have been, under ordinary conditions, had the Railway Committee continued its jurisdiction, some that could have been appealed to the Privy Council. After the Bill was passed it was found that, the Railway Committee having been abolished, practically the appeals could not be heard, and the first clause of this Bill applies to appeals then standing, and provides that the Privy Council should still continue to hear appeals of cases heard before the Railway Committee was abolished, and that those intending to appeal to the Privy Council should still be heard. The other clause is recognizing the Sunday legislation in the provinces in regard to railway companies that have come here and obtained charters, in which that clause has been introduced that they were 'for the general benefit of Canada.' Hon. gentlemen will remember there are certain provincial Acts incorporating railways which have been incorporated by the federal parliament, those words having been added. They are practically local companies, but, for reasons which I need not now explain, they obtained federal powers. Now, in so far as those powers are concerned, the clause of this Bill provides they shall come under whatever legislation the provinces may enact in regard to the observance of the Sabbath.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does that apply to railways which are exclusively local in their character, and do not connect one province with another ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If so it would paralyze the operations of the railways altogether.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The words we put in gave jurisdiction to this parliament in those cases, though they were clearly local acts. It has been pointed out over and over again that it was legislation which we should not have interfered with, but we have interfered with it, and this clause provides that in so far as the Sunday legislation is concerned, the fact of our assuming sovereignty over those roads shall not interfere with any Sunday legislation with regard to the operation of such railways, that may be adopted by local legislatures. The provincial legislation cannot affect federal charters, like those of the Grand Trunk Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway and other roads, which pass from one province to another. It will apply only to those companies, which are local in their character, but have obtained federal recognition.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How will it apply to local roads which may hereafter be extended so as to pass into another province ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume then it would be a fair subject for federal control, because the federal parliament would have jurisdiction over a road passing from one province into another.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is this a Bill to amend the Railway Act ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I would suggest an amendment of a very practical character. Every member of parliament has, I suppose, a couple of dozen passes in his pocket giving him a right to travel on the railways. I think we might amend the Bill to provide that on presentation of a certificate of the Clerk of the House, to which the member belongs, he would be entitled to a free pass.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I may state that the conductors on trains have spoken in regard to the matter, and have expressed their desire that parliament should make some such provision. Under the law to-day, members of parliament have a right to free transportation, and, as a matter of fact, the railway companies now extend passes to members which they are not entitled to accept, so the suggestion of the hon. member from Stadacona is in order. It will facilitate travel on the trains. The conductors ask for a simple card of identification, certified by the clerk, and that will be amply sufficient to entitle members to travel on the railways.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That suggestion was made last year. It does not require legislation to carry it out. A member of parliament is absolutely free on the trains.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The point is to identify him.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The clerk can do it without legislation. It does not need an Act of parliament.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is very desirable that some document should be issued which would extend to all railways. Some of the railway companies have substituted a new pass for the one they gave at the beginning of the year, but all the passes which I have seen contain conditions on the back, of them, which have no right to be placed there, when they are issued to members of parliament. It is very undesirable that we should be compelled to use passes which contain such conditions. That is one of the reasons, in addition to those that have been pointed out by other hon. gentlemen, that we should be furnished with one document and not be under the necessity of carrying around with us twenty or thirty of these different passes in our wallets, which, if we happen to lose would create a difficulty. We are not obliged to present a pass at all, but it would be boorish on the part of members of parliament to take that ground, because conductors might not be able to identify them, and it might under certain circumstances put the conductors in an awkward position. Therefore, to facilitate the railway companies in their work, we do use the passes, but I do not think we should use a pass with such a condition on the back of it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Might I ask the hon. Secretary of State if it would be necessary to give instructions to the clerk to issue cards of identification, or can he do it without those instructions ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A formal motion might be made.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes. The clerk might not want to take it upon himself.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The easiest way to avoid the difficulty would be to repeal the clause altogether.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There has been no notice for that.

The motion was agreed to.

NATURALIZATION AND ALIENS ACTS AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (147) An Act to amend the acts relating to Naturalization and Aliens.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read the second time to-morrow. He said : This Bill is simply for the purpose of amending the tribunal before which naturalization may be proved. It provides that section 11 of chapter 113 is amended, in Quebec, to any circuit court within the territorial limits of the jurisdiction of which the alien resides. It is simply altering the particular court in Manitoba to the county court having jurisdiction where the alien resides.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—How about the Territories ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The circuit courts in and for the territorial division and districts and counties in the province of Quebec are hereby declared to have jurisdiction under the Naturalization Act so amended. There is nothing in regard to the Territories. So I presume that is correct. It only relates to Quebec and Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does it affect the civil condition of aliens, or only the tribunal ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Simply the court to which the naturalization papers will be referred.

The motion was agreed to.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSURANCE COMMITTEE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Before the House adjourns, I should like to ask the hon. chairman of the select committee appointed to inquire into the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, when he intends to make his report ? Is it intended to make it to-day ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No. I see that the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry has a motion with reference to this matter which will come up to-morrow. Our report is held over.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But the report will be made by the chairman, as to the motion that the committee report the evidence to the House.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The report is now being made up and it is to be submitted to the committee before I can present it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I scarcely comprehend what my hon. friend means by being prepared. The evidence is all printed is it not ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the hon. gentleman has no right to question the chairman like that. He is not a minister.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I simply asked, as one of the committee, for information as to what my hon. friend means by preparation. The resolution was simply that the committee would report the evidence.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No, that the committee do now rise and report.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Report the evidence—that is the way it is recorded.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is recorded wrongly.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does my hon. friend intend to present it to-morrow?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I hope to have it to-morrow. I have just got a copy of the evidence.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Does my hon. friend mean to call another meeting to submit the evidence?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—What does he mean?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I suppose it will be necessary, as has been the practice in the past, to submit the final report to the members of the committee, but not at a formal committee meeting. Members have been notified as to the contents of reports before they have been submitted to the House, and the final report will be ready to-morrow. I do not intend to run round to nineteen members, call a meeting and say: 'Here is our report,' and then have the committee pass on it, whatever it may be, which I do not know yet.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The motion was stated in the report, that the committee rise and report the evidence.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I took the trouble to ascertain what the motion was in regard to it. I went to the reporter, and the reporter informed me that his notes read 'to rise and report.' There is some conflict between the reporter and the clerk as to that, but I have a distinct recollection of putting the motion that the committee rise and report.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Was it not the intention to close the evidence?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The committee adjourned.

551

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The committee were instructed to make an examination into the affairs of the New York Mutual Reserve, and report the evidence to the House.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It does not say so. Such were not the instructions from the House.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The order of the House was to report the evidence to the House.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Report from time to time.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—And that is all they have to do. It was asked at the last meeting that two other witnesses be examined, and the hon. member from Stadacona objected and moved that the committee rise and report the evidence and close the investigation, but the committee refused to allow these witnesses to be examined.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCITION COMMITTEE REPORT.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have an explanation to make to this honourable House. Yesterday I stated that the report from the Select Committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York would be ready this afternoon. I regret to say that it is not yet ready; that a meeting of the committee has been called for a quarter past eight this evening, when the matter will be finally dealt with there. I have also another explanation to make. A question was put by the hon. gentleman from Calgary as to what kind of a report the committee was to bring in, that our powers and rights were limited. I find that according to May, page 397, under regulations 75, a committee is entitled, and it is practically its duty to bring in a report with opinions and recommendations and all such matters.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the committee have not yet got through with their labours?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The committee have yet to deal with the report. They have got through with the evidence.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I understand it was moved at the last meeting of the committee, that the committee rise and report the evidence.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The minutes of the stenographer are wrong in that respect.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to deny that that motion was moved and carried ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The motion made by the hon. member from Stadacona, in the first instance, was that the committee do now rise and report the evidence. There was a discussion on the motion. I called his attention to the fact that if such a motion was carried it would close the committee and end its work altogether, leaving it in a disabled and emasculated condition, and then the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry moved an amendment which took some further time, and a final motion put to the committee, was that the committee do now rise and report.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is the hon. gentleman submitting a report of the committee.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am giving an explanation in answer to the question of the hon. gentleman from Calgary, who is not now in his seat.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I should like to say——

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—There is nothing before the House.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think I can say a word on the point of order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is no point of order.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I will rise to a point of order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What is it ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The point of order is that the hon. gentleman has stated that he intends to call a meeting of the committee——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is nothing before the chair, and there is nothing before the House. The hon. gentleman cannot speak.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—If hon. gentlemen will not permit me to make a statement I shall have to sit down, but I want to say——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I ask the ruling of the Speaker.

The SPEAKER—There is nothing before the House.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I wish to say——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I say the question of the veracity of the report, is before this House, and the chairman of that committee has risen to make a statement which I say is not in accordance——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Is not in accordance with the minutes of that committee meeting.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I think I am in a position to raise a point of order now, if the hon. gentleman will allow me. The hon. gentleman has no right to criticise any action which is not before the House.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I am criticising the statement of the chairman of the committee.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I ask for a ruling. The hon. gentleman has no right to criticise anything which is not before the House.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The hon. gentleman is criticising the statement made by the chairman as to the accuracy of the record of the committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Order, order.

NOXIOUS PATENT MEDICINES.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN gave notice that he would, on Tuesday, move the following motion :—

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General ; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid upon the Table of the Senate a statement showing the names of all liquid mixtures known as patent or proprietary medicines purporting to remove the most varied forms of diseases occurring in the human body, and when weakened by such disease or by any indulgence, habit or accident, to restore it to its former strength and vigour. Showing also the amount of money, if any, paid by importer, maker, mixer or vendor, to the government as special tax or license, and to whom paid. Showing likewise if the government has any knowledge of the ingredients which are employed to make these compounds:—

1. Has such knowledge been acquired from the statements of the parties who have the formula ?

2. Has it been acquired by qualitative and quantative analysis of the Dominion Analyst, or by any other practical chemist. if so, what quantities are contained in a determinate, say one fluid ounce, of the following named ingredients :—

1. Water, quantity in a determinate measure, say one fluid ounce, of the preparations examined.

2. Alcohol in any form other than absolute ; methylated or proof spirit or any other form; essences, ethers or any other solvent ; colouring or flavouring substances, and, lastly, the solid ingredients in said preparations, the quantity and names of each.

He said : I give notice of this motion simply to induce the House to take some action to prevent the sale and use of noxious medicine compounds, many of which are injurious instead of being beneficial to the body, and which, moreover, cultivate an appetite for alcohol, opium and other injurious drugs. I know of cases where men using for insomnia a specific that is sold openly in the drug store, of which the ingredients are not known, in that way acquire the habit of using injurious drugs. There are cases where the habit has been engendered by the use of one patent medicine which I may mention, Peruna. The Board of Health of Massachusetts reports that it contains more than 40 per cent of alcohol, and not the best kind of alcohol either. I have a report here also from the Medical Council of the province of Ontario, which shows that sarsaparillas, bitters, and other such preparations consist in great part of alcohol.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Does the hon. gentleman include in that also the whiskey habit ?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I meant it to include the alcohol habit. There is no question the extent to which those preparations are used is due to advertising. A more rapacious or degrading practice was never indulged in by anybody than the compounding and sale of those preparations. There is not one of them that can possibly do what is claimed for it in the advertisements. I have seen it advertised that a patent medicine has gone to the very doors of death and rescued a man who was in the hands of the undertakers, assertions which are untrue, that these preparations can cure diseases at any stage. The sale of such preparations can only be effected by an enormous amount of advertising, and the reckless way in which it is done—portraits of nuns and distinguished senators of the United States are published in Canadian papers, and I suppose they publish portraits of distinguished Canadian senators in the papers of the United States. The statements published are a mass of untruths from beginning to end. These frauds and iniquities are practised on the most helpless and unfortunate invalids, persons to whom doctors have given no hope, and who are willing to try almost anything, and seeing those lying advertisements and fraudulent assertions in the newspapers, published day after day, are tempted to spend their last shilling in purchasing preparations which only hasten death. Although this notice of motion looks very complex, it is only for the purpose of obtaining information. Vendors of patent medicines have an extraordinary indulgence in this country. They are allowed to vend their wares in the most sacred places, and with the cognizance of the authorities. The government should exercise strict supervision over this business and test the amount of alcohol, opium and other agents in those compounds. I suppose it is difficult to get at it. I have been told that the formulæ of such medicines are in the hands of some official of the government. It is partly to ascertain if that is the case, that I am asking for this return. It is not so difficult to tell one ingredient as to tell all, and it is essential that some one with the authority of the government, some chemist of repute should make an analysis of patent medicines and show the public the terrible agents employed for the purpose of poisoning rather than giving relief. The government should order such an analysis. They have the Dominion analyst and the laboratory, and it is no difficult matter to test these preparations. The analyst can acquire a knowledge of the ingredients of some of them by the smell or taste of the preparation. I have no animosity towards these people, but I do not know of any agent which they sell in their preparations that has any qualities that cannot be got of a purer quality and for less money than in the form in which they sell it. It is no wonder they acquire fortunes and are able to indulge in all the luxuries that money can purchase. I would not mind if they sold only bread pills, and sweetened water, but I do protest when they use agents which are not only of no use to sufferers, but have a tendency to cultivate degrading habits. The government ought not knowingly to allow those preparations, purporting to be medicines, to be sold. It would be well if the quantity and nature of the medicine were plainly stated, giving the percentage of alcohol, strychnia, hydrate of chloral, or other drugs. If the label stated that opium was an ingredient. people might shrink from using the preparation, but when some other name is used, no danger is apprehended, and people are induced by skilful advertising to purchase and use these dangerous medicines. The evil is widespread. These men make money by their rapacity, mendacity, and utter disregard of all that is moral, and so flaunt their riches in the presence of poor, honest men, who make their living by the sweat of their brow, that no one would say it was arbitrary or class legislation, to make them give a share of their ill-gotten wealth towards the maintenance of hospitals and the eleemosynary institutions. I wonder that the temperance people have not taken this matter up long ago, and endeavoured to repress the evil. Perhaps they have ; if so I am not aware of it. It would greatly redound to their credit, and there is no field in which they could work with greater success.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Did I understand from the hon. gentleman that his motion applies only to liquid preparations ?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—That is all.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Why confine himself to that ? Why are the solid preparations excluded ?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The number is not so great, and I thought if we got the fluids first, the others could be got at afterwards. I am more after the preparations containing alcohol and opium.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—One is just as noxious as the other.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—But there is not so much poison, as a rule, in solid preparations as in liquid preparations. The liquid ones are the more dangerous, containing as they do the most destructive agents.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH THE UNITED STATES.

MOTION DROPPED.

The Order of the Day being called.

To resolve, that the Senate of Canada is of opinion that any further effort to secure closer trade relations with the United States by a meeting of the Joint High Commissioners, or otherwise, under present tariff conditions on the part of the United States, and in view of the satisfactory conditions of Canada's trade, is inadvisable and inopportune. If the United States desire better trade relations with Canada, or even a continuation of the advantageous relations they enjoy in our market at present, a substantial reduction in their tariff in favour of Canadian products is the only course that would be regarded by Canada as a favourable indication on their part of a desire to treat Canada fairly on the lines of trade intercourse. And, in the absence of such evidence on the part of the United States, our tariff should be adjusted in order to encourage inter-imperial trade as fast as possible.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Before asking permission of the House to withdraw this resolution, I beg to make a short statement. At the time I placed the resolution on the notice paper, the Finance Minister had not delivered his budget speech. In the budget speech, certain changes were made, particularly with the intention of counteracting the effects of slaughtering goods from the United States in the Canadian market. I am strongly urged to permit the application of that clause to have a fair trial, before discussing the question of which I have given notice. I am also desirous of avoiding anything that might possibly interfere in any way with the Chamberlain movement in England. It might possibly be construed as an interference with that movement, with which I personally am in full sympathy, and, therefore, for these reasons I think it better to drop the resolution for this session, allow the clauses in the amended Customs Act to have their full application, with the hope that they will meet the conditions, and if not, we can bring up the subject next session and discuss it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think there is no objection to the hon. gentleman withdrawing the motion under the circumstances, for the reasons which he has given. I understand him to say, that he will be prepared at the next session of parliament, if it should be deemed necessary, to revive this subject, and move his resolution, either in its present form, or in some other form, in order to show that certain portions of the people of Canada are in accord with the movement that is now going on in England, so far as it affects our trade relations with the mother country. That I take to be his position. I notice also that the hon. gentleman referred to the clause adopted by the House of Commons known as the dumping clause in the tariff resolutions. It is not my intention at the present moment to discuss that question, because it will, of necessity, be brought before the House, and in a proper form, when the tariff resolutions are before us. Then we shall be in a position to discuss that slaughtering or dumping clause, as it has been termed. I may, however state, that so far as the dumping clause is concerned I look upon it as, well I scarcely know how to designate it —I would say a farce, utterly impracticable in its working, and I think I will be able to show that, when the question comes up. Hence that reason given by the hon. gentleman does not suggest itself to me as being a good one for withdrawing his resolutions. I think at this period of the session, most of the hon. senators will agree with him, as to a portion of his statement, and I only hope that when we meet again we may take up this question and discuss it upon its merits. I think there is plenty of evidence to show that it would be in the interests of the whole Dominion if we could secure preferential treatment in the markets of Great Britain which we have not at present. I believe that it would be of infinitely greater advantage to the people of Canada than any reciprocity treaty which we might effect with our neighbours south of the line.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When an hon. member drops a resolution of this kind, it is scarcely proper to open any discussion, still as this resolution has been standing before us for a great part of the session, and is now being dropped a few days before prorogation, some of us would desire to put ourselves on record. I am not going to object to the dropping of the resolution at all, because if it had been proceeded with, I should have objected quite strongly to the last paragraph of it. I look upon that paragraph which seems to regard reciprocity with the United States as being more desirable to the people of Canada, than preferential trade within the empire, as being objectionable, and on that account I would oppose it. I do not object to the dropping of the resolution, because I could not support that part of it. I am entirely in accord with the first portion of it. I simply regret the dropping of the subject more than the mere resolution at this stage, for the reason that we appear to be parting without putting on record any expression of the opinion of this parliament with regard to preferential trade within the empire. I looked upon this motion as likely to bring up that question, and expected that some valuable opinions would be expressed, and possibly some resolutions arrived at in this House which would strengthen Mr. Chamberlain's hand as showing what the opinions of the people of Canada are in regard to preferential trade within the empire.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I did not intend to say anything in regard to the matter, but after hearing what has been said by the hon. gentleman with reference to Mr. Chamberlain and his proposals, it occurred to me, that as this matter is to come up at another session it would be interesting to hear from the hon. leader of the opposition with reference to what he has specially spoken of here lately, and that is the expression to which he objected so much, calling Canada a nation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman will have it as fully as I can possibly express it.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It might not be amiss for me to call his attention to the great statesman's views with reference to this matter. Speaking on this question of the trade relations between the colonies and the mother country recently, I see in the Toronto 'World' of yesterday, and I suppose it is to be found in the other journals of the country, that in speaking on this question Mr. Chamberlain is reported to have said :

> The colonies are not ours in any sense whatever by possession. They are absolutely independent states, and nothing could prevent them from separating from us to-morrow. We would not and could not attempt to hold them by force. The bond was a voluntary one and had never been ratified.

It appeared to me that was an instructive paragraph for some persons who have been discussing this subject, and who are great admirers of Mr. Chamberlain.

The motion was dropped.

CARDS OF IDENTIFICATION FOR SENATORS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN moved :

> That the Clerk of the Senate be instructed to give to the members of the Senate cards of identification for railway transportation.

He said : I make this motion in view of the explanations given yesterday in regard to the matter. The clause governing transportation is very clear, as far as it goes ; but it left the senators in this position ; that when they were confronted by the conductors on the trains, or rather officers of transportation companies, the difficulty of identification arose. I have known senators and members of parliament who were allowed to have their transportation on identification. It is not always feasible, or possible, to have people on trains to identify senators, in fact it should not be left to chance; so that I think the proper plan is the one which I have embodied in this motion. The House of Commons can take care of itself, but as far as the Senate is concerned, we should have this means of identification, to carry out the intention of the law passed last year giving us free transportation.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto).

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The hon. gentleman will see that the conductors on the trains do not take their instructions from the clerk of this House. They have them from the railway companies, and the railway companies say : 'You must produce your ticket or pass.' I do not think this certificate would be of any use at all. The conductor would say : 'I do not know anything about this, I do not take my orders from the clerk of the Senate or any other official of the government.' I think it is a most oppressive thing to compel the railway companies to give free passes.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That was settled last year.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Every man in the country is just as much entitled to a railway pass as members of the House of Commons and the Senate.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I think the hon. Secretary of State pointed out that difficulty yesterday. The law is very clear. The matter of being compelled or not compelled was settled last year.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has spoken to this question.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I quite agree that under certain circumstances some difficulty might arise in a case where, for instance, a member had lost his pass. That is no reason why he should be deprived of travelling upon a railway under the Act, because under the Act members and senators are entitled to ride free within the Dominion, and they are not supposed to be called upon to present a pass at all. At the same time, I can easily see that the suggestion made might be easily abused. Supposing the Speaker issues a certificate to each member of the Senate, and the Speaker of the Commons does the same thing, the railway company, for their own guidance, will in all probability continue the pass that is issued. Now, if any member were disposed to hand over that certificate to some other person, some other person might travel upon the certificate, as a member of the Senate when he was not ; or if a senator happened to lose his certificate of identification, some other person might find it and travel upon it for hundreds of miles before it would be discovered.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—They could do the same thing with a pass.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—But as a rule members take pretty good care of their passes, and the probabilities are that railways will continue to issue passes if certificates are given, or if they choose to withdraw the pass, when the certificate is lost there might be trouble. I do not think members and senators have much to complain of, I think they are recognized as a rule, as being entitled to ride free, and a difficulty such as I have outlined might arise, whereby these privileges might be abused by certificates falling into the hands of those who should not have them at all, and in that way, a very great injustice might be done the railway company. Under present conditions I think we are very well served.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—It does not appear to me that the Senate ought to take any action whatever to have the law carried out. It is the duty of the railway companies to carry out the law. It is no hardship to show a pass, if that be the way, but I am quite satisfied, where gentlemen are known on lines of railway, they are not required to show passes. The motion might be dropped, and His Honour the Speaker might write a line to the Railway Commissioners who could devise some plan by which the law could be carried into effect. I do not think we should take the initial step.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Talking about a conductor knowing you, I had to pay my fare after this Bill was passed last year, when travelling between here and Brockville. There ought to be some means taken to carry out the law. I think the better way would be to notify the Railway Commissioners. A great many conductors have no instructions whatever about members, and if you had not your pass to show when it was demanded, or the money for your fare, you would be ejected. In a multitude of counsel there is wisdom, and perhaps I might strike the wisdom point. My suggestion is, that if the Railway Commissioners were notified to make some arrangement they could do it. I think it would be infra dignitatem for the Senate to take action.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The law is plain and clear. Members of parliament have the right to travel free on a railway. It is for the railway companies to recognize who are members of parliament. That is quite clear. A railway company forcing payment would do so at its peril, and would have to recoup the passenger. If the motion was wisely considered by the Senate, I should say that the clerk of the Senate should give such certificates to those members who desire them —only those who wish it—not to make it a rule. If any hon. gentleman wishes it, it is his own affair. We would be taking the responsibility, practically, if we adopt this motion, which I think would be very unwise and very foolish.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—How would a brand on the forehand 'M.P.' do ?

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I think this question should be settled, according to the law that is passed. On one of my travels, I myself, although holding a pass last year, tried to travel free under the authority of the Act. Had I insisted on my right I would have run the risk of being put off the train. If we have the right by law, I think we should enjoy the privilege, and not be liable to predicaments that might turn out very unsavory and very disagreeable. There are many countries in which the same privilege is given—a certificate issues to each member without his demanding it. If a member is not willing to use it, he need not do so ; but those desirous of using such a certificate have it at their disposal, and it is very useful, preventing misunderstanding. It is according to the law. I think therefore that such certificates should issue to members of this House. Let the other House care for itself. I had an idea that those certificates might, perhaps, more properly, issue from the Railway Commission. They have the authority to deal directly with the roads, and they could see that the certificates are delivered to us. It would simplify the matter, and it would, in my humble estimation, make it more practicable, and to all intents and purposes more desirable. This is merely a suggestion which I lay before the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not see how the securing of a certificate would be any greater advantage, or put a traveller to less trouble, than a pass.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—We have not a pass on all the railways. I do not care for a pass. I do not want it. I would rather have no pass, although I use it.

An hon. MEMBER—Some companies have not issued passes yet.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—An hon. member says that some of the railways have not issued passes. It seems to me that the law imposes a duty on the railways to furnish free transportation, and it is their duty to do it. They do it by sending each member a pass. If they do not send the pass, I suppose it would be within the province of the member who is entitled, under this clause, to ask for it, I do not know that the law imposes the duty upon the railway company, to ascertain who the members are. Whose duty is it to furnish that information to the railway companies? But apart from that I think it would be rather undignified for us to pass such a resolution. I am fully in accord with the sentiments uttered by the hon. gentleman from St. John. The clause of the Act reads as follows:—

> The company shall furnish free transportation upon any of its trains, for members of the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada, with their baggage, &c.

By sending a pass to each senator, or to each member of the House, they do furnish the free transportation. It will be just as much trouble, whether that certificate was issued by the clerk of the Senate or by the Railway Commission, to take it out of your pocket as it would be to take out your pass. In Australia the railways are government railways, and the moment a man is elected to the legislature he is entitled to free transportation, and he is handed by some official, I do not know just now who, a small article like a little locket, which he attaches to his watch chain, or carries somewhere on his person, so that when he enters a railway carriage it is seen by the conductor, and that passes him. Of course, that privilege could be abused just as well as any other. The privilege of passes has been abused, and even this little locket could be handed to somebody else. A pass or a certificate could be handed to somebody else, but the person so misusing the pass, should be subjected to some penalty. It seems to me that the railway companies, so far as I have had any experience, have done all that they can do under the circumstances, and I should hope that after this discussion the hon. gentleman will not press the motion.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend the leader of the opposition says that the railway companies have done all that is required of them under the law. I contend that some of them have not done so. As an illustration of my meaning, I refer to the Grand Trunk Railway Company. We were formerly given a pass on the Grand Trunk Railway with some limitations. We received the usual passes at the beginning of this year. This Act came into operation after three or four months of the year had passed over, and then another pass was given, which conformed with the law respecting the right of using their railway; but in another respect it did not, because it carried on the back of it a condition which is not in accordance with the Act, and which should not be found on any pass furnished to a member of parliament. While other companies furnished passes at the beginning of the year, which complied with the requirements of the law, with the exception of this condition on the back, they have not withdrawn that condition. It remains in force, but the assumption is that at the beginning of the next year, they will furnish a pass that will not have this condition on the back of it. The Grand Trunk Railway—I mention it as one—substituted for a pass which only gave us the right on certain trains, a pass which gave us a right to use all their trains in Canada, but the substituted pass still contains the conditions on the back which I contend should not be there. The present condition is not entirely satisfactory in another respect. Some roads in Canada have never given free transportation to members. I refer to the Dominion Atlantic Railway in Nova Scotia, which has not furnished any pass or any document which would entitle members of parliament to pass on its lines.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—That is a provincial railway.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No, it is not. It is a public railway, built almost entirely at the expense of the people of Canada. Now, in order to bring about uniformity I think it would be the duty of the Railway Commission, which is carrying out this Act, to take this matter up, and issue such certificates to members of parliament as would carry them over all Canadian railways under the terms of the law. I hope my hon. friend will withdraw his motion.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Because it would be only a partial remedy, and would only apply to members of this House, and the Commons, would have to be considered in this matter. I think it would be much better if my hon. friend the Secretary of State would call the attention of the government to the matter, and cause the Railway Commission to issue passes which would carry members and senators over all railways. It would be very much more satisfactory to the officials of the railway and to members themselves than to be carrying about a dozen or so of passes and taking up the time of conductors searching for the right one, if a document could be furnished which would answer the purpose on all our railways. I hope my hon. friend will withdraw his motion; the remedy will properly come from the Railway Commission.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—On the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield I am only too happy to withdraw the motion, so long as the convenience of senators in travelling will be consulted. The hon. gentleman from Belleville says it makes no difference whether one has a certificate or a pass. It is not very convenient however to carry forty or fifty passes in your pocket, and the railway officials would prefer the certificate. If the hon. Secretary of State will call the attention of the Railway Commission to this matter and have it settled, I beg leave to withdraw my motion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not feel that I can give any assurance to the House that the Railway Commission will consider it their duty to deal with the matter. In my judgment the law is perfectly plain. All railways which come under the provisions of the Railway Act are bound to carry members of parliament, and whether a member has a pass or certificate is a matter of no consequence whatever. Our laws are supposed to be known to everybody who is bound to obey them. The railway company would have no excuse whatever for demanding the production of a certificate or a pass. If a man says I am a member of parliament and the conductor insists on his paying, and puts him off the train if he refuses to pay, the courts of the country would award heavy damages.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They are not obliged to show passes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The best way to overcome the difficulty would be if the clerk of the House would furnish a certificate of identification to be produced when necessary.

The motion was withdrawn.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION.

CONSIDERATION OF THE SEVENTH REPORT POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called:

Consideration of the seventh report of the Select Committee appointed to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York.—(Hon. Mr. Cloran.)

Hon. Mr. CLORAN said: This order has been on the minutes since the 18th instant. The report, as the House is aware, relates principally to a decision which was rendered by the chairman of the committee, during the taking of the evidence and maintained by a majority of the committee, and which has been appealed from.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I understood the other day that it was suggested by the hon. Secretary of State and the leader of the opposition that this matter be allowed to stand until the final report is brought in.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have no objection.

The order was allowed to stand.

NATURALIZATION OF ALIENS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (147) An Act to amend the Acts relating to Naturalization and Aliens.

He said: As I explained yesterday, this Bill relates simply to the question of the jurisdiction of the courts, giving a proper description to the court that is charged with passing on the certificate. It affects only the court in Quebec. In Quebec, I notice, the manner in which it was described in the Act was: 'In Quebec to the Circuit Court in and for the district in which the alien resides.' It should have read 'In Quebec, to any Circuit Court within the territorial limits of the jurisdiction of which the alien resides.' In Manitoba, it read: 'In the Court of Queen's Bench, in the district in which the alien resides'; now it is proposed that it should be 'to the county court having jurisdiction where the alien resides.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There are no circuit courts there.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was thought simpler and easier to substitute the County Court for the Court of King's Bench.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The Bill then passed through its final stages under a suspension of the rules.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Has the hon. Secretary of State any news of that return relating to the Hudson Bay expedition—the names of the crew?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I sent it to the department that is charged with it, but they have not given the information.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Any news of Mr. Bryce?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, he is not in town. I sent a messenger to ascertain and he cannot get any information of Mr. Bryce.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He is not lost?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I suppose not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When may I expect that correspondence concerning the contract for the construction of ice-breakers, moved for some time ago?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall make further inquiry. I periodically make inquiry.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I shall very much like to have it before the end of the session.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They have always the excuse that they are overwhelmed with work. That is the excuse they give me.

THE PROROGATION.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the House adjourns, I desire to call the attention of the Secretary of State to a notice in the public press alleging that arrangements have been made for the prorogation of parliament for next Thursday. I should like to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that there are some Bills of an important character which have not yet reached this House. It may be the policy of the government and the opposition in the House of Commons to make arrangements for the prorogation of parliament without consulting the Secretary of State or this House. It seems to me if the measures which are before the House of Commons—among them is the Militia Bill, and I think one or two other important measures—were passed in the House of Commons and sent to the Senate, the House of Commons could proceed with the estimates and the Supply Bill while the other measures were under consideration here. We can discuss the Supply Bill here but we cannot amend it. The practice has been when the Supply Bill comes up to pass it after a very brief discussion. The opposition sometimes discuss the merits of the Supply Bill so far as the expenditure is concerned, but beyond that they never go, and the Bill passes through its three stages in about one-half hour, sometimes less. If we could have all the other Bills except the Supply Bill so that we could take ample time to consider them, it would facilitate business. It is just possible that if the government continue their present manner of conducting business in the House of Commons we shall have to take the Militia Bill, and other important measures and pass them without discussion in order that parliament may be prorogued when the Supply Bill is passed. I think it would be the duty of senators to consider these important measures upon their merits. In the past the Senate in its wisdom has made very important changes in such Bills. As evidence that sufficient attention has not been given to legislation at all times, I may point out that some two or three Bills passed this year have been amended by other Bills passed later in the session. If proper attention had been given to those Bills this might not have occurred. If these important Bills, which I have called attention to, come down at the very last moment, we must either pass them without consideration or delay prorogation. If senators would take my advice and keep the House of Commons two or three days—place them in the same position that they have placed us—that is let them remain two or three days doing nothing while we are considering important measures, The sooner the Senate assert its rights in that respect, the sooner it will teach the government—no matter what government is in power—to send us important measures in time. I make the suggestion in order that no friction of the character that I have described may occur this session or in the future.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I quite concur in the language of the hon. gentleman. For eighteen years, while I occupied the position which he occupies now, I had been in the habit of making a somewhat similar speech.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But not so pertinent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If my hon. friend will look back, he will find that the Senate has been treated better the last two or three sessions than it was in former years. If I were to turn up the record, I could show that forty or fifty Bills have been sent to us a few hours before prorogation. The House of Commons hang on to a few Bills, because some gentlemen are not ready with their estimates, and they want to keep a few Bills there. I have impressed on my colleagues how much better it would be to send Bills earlier to the Senate, and this session they have nearly all been sent up. With the exception of the Militia Bill, those that remain are not important, and I hope that the Militia Bill will come to-morrow. So far as the prorogation is concerned, I am not in the confidence of the opposition on that point, nor am I aware that the government have expressed any opinion as to the time. They are not masters of the situation as far as prorogation is concerned, as my hon. friend very well knows; but there is a feeling generally in the House or Commons that the time has come to wind up the business of the session. No particular advantage is to be gained by continuing debates on subjects which will be more interesting at a future day before the electors. It will not change any votes in the House of Commons, and therefore the debates do not amount to much except as literature for the elections. We all hope that the session will terminate some day next week.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Has the Militia Bill passed the House of Commons?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know. It was in the last stages this morning.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Now that Lord Dundonald has gone, it might go through.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We have heard of persons making a statement so often that they have come to believe it themselves. My hon. friend, having made this speech eighteen times, we will assume that he has got very sincere about it, and he will give all credit for sincerity to the leader of the opposition when he goes on making the same old speech. If my memory serves me right, the Militia Bill was reprinted as it passed the Committee of the Whole in the House of Commons more than a week ago.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I know it was reprinted after the committee stage.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I received a copy of it in Prince Edward Island last week, in the form in which it was reported from the Committee of the Whole. It seems strange that so important and voluminous a Bill should be held up in that way. It has been printed more than a week, and still it has not been sent to us.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Friday, July 29, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. MACKENZIE BOWELL, from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, presented their report as follows:—

The Senate,
Committee Room No. 2,
Friday, 29th July, 1904.

The Committee on Banking and Commerce beg leave to report as follows:—

By Order of your Honourable House, made 8th June, 1904, the Bill (H) then intituled:

'An Act further to amend the Insurance Act,' and subsequently passed by the Senate as 'An Act respecting the Canadian Assessment-policyholders in the Mutual Reserve Life Assurance Company,' was referred to this Committee.

In pursuance of the Order of reference your Committee referred the Bill to a Sub-Committee, with instruction to confer with the Insurance Department, with an actuary to be named by the Canadian Life Insurance Officers' Association, and with an actuary to be named by the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York.

The Superintendent of Insurance, whose services were placed at the disposal of the Sub-Committee by the Department of Finance, Mr. T. Bradshaw, an actuary representing the Canadian Life Officers' Association, and Mr. George D. Eldridge, an actuary representing the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, prepared for the Sub-Committee a redraft of the Bill.

Your Committee recommend that Mr. Bradshaw's travelling expenses incurred in connection with the services rendered by him, amounting to $18.75, be paid him.

All which is respectfully submitted.

MACKENZIE BOWELL,
Acting Chairman.

He said: I move concurrence in the report. The only charge made by the actuary representing the actuarial association of the Dominion is his expenses in coming from Toronto to Ottawa and remaining here and assisting in framing the amendments to Bill (H) which was subsequently submitted to this House and passed. It is a very small amount. Under ordinary circumstances gentlemen who render services of an expert nature are paid a fee, but in this case all he asks is his expenses.

The motion was agreed to.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION.

9th REPORT OF COMMITTEE PRESENTED.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—On behalf of the committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York, I beg leave to submit their ninth report. This report includes the copies of the evidence, together with all documents and a copy of the minutes and proceedings of your committee. It has been suggested to me that the chief headings might be read without the references.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—That would give us no idea of the contents.

The SPEAKER—What motion does the hon. gentleman propose to make with respect to this report?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I propose to move that the report be taken into consideration on Monday or Tuesday next. If the report is considered as read, we can take it up on Tuesday. I move that the ninth and final report of this committee be taken into consideration on Tuesday next, and that it be put as the first order of the day.

The SPEAKER—After third readings.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think we cannot give it precedence, because there will be Bills coming down from the other House which must have precedence. However, it will not make any difference.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I want to call the attention of the House to the position of this question, and to raise a point of order. If I understand the matter aright, it purports to be a report of a committee meeting held last evening which is now presented to the House. We have also a report of the evidence taken before the committee, circulated in pamphlet form, before the House, known as No. 8 of the 22nd July, a preceding meeting, in which there appears a resolution passed by the committee, and carried, that the committee rise and report the evidence to the House. That was carried; consequently the House had a right to expect that the chairman of that committee would have made that report. In making that motion, apparently, from the circustances which surrounded it, it was the intention and so understood by the committee that it was its final meeting, and inasmuch as the practice appears to bear out that contention, that when a committee rises and reports it terminates its existence by so doing. Apparently there was another meeting held last night for further consideration, and for further procedure in the committee, and the point that I wish to have established by the hon. Speaker is this: whether this meeting last night could be properly held, inasmuch as the committee had risen and reported the evidence and terminated their labours and ceased to exist after the last meeting. I think there can be no question that the order of reference only included the reporting to the House of the evidence. But that is a matter which can be discussed under another point of order. What I wish now to have a decision upon is, whether the committee terminated its existence upon the meeting of the 22nd. inasmuch as that was the clear intention. It was the clear understanding with the members of the committee that their work was finished, and they were making their final report in view of circumstances which surrounded the meeting on that date, and I think I am within the strict facts when I state, and hon. gentlemen who were in the room at that meeting will bear me out in stating that that was the intention, that was the decision and that was the clear understanding arrived at when that motion was carried, that the work of the committee was finished. Now we have an end of the report, and I ask the ruling of the Speaker on that point.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The committee was a special committee, and was not discharged by this House, and therefore it still stands as a committee.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—No motion is made for the discharge of a committee.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The functions of this committee have not ceased.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—A committee ceases to exist when it reports, according to the practice in other Houses. Of course I am not speaking of our standing committees, because our standing committees last as long as the House is in session. I am speaking now of a select committee whose authority and power extend only to hear evidence and report it to the House. The report of the committee, I contend, has not reached the House because, although the chairman was ordered by the committee to report, so far as I have been able to notice he had not carried out that order, and a subsequent meeting was held, the report of which is presented to-day. The other one has not been presented as far as I have been able to observe by the proceedings of the House.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Will the hon. gentleman point out where I was ordered to report and did not make a report ? The hon. gentleman should have the records under his eye before making a statement.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—A chairman presides over a committee, and if the committee pass a resolution ordering him to report to the House it is his duty to carry out the instructions of his committee. He owes that to his committee in the first place. He owes it to the House to place them in possession of whatever matter the committee have decided to report. It is not very often we have such an instance as this, I am glad to say ; still when these instances arise we have to deal with them, and if my hon. friend had done his duty, as in my humble judgment he should have done, he would have made his report to the House as he was ordered by his committee to do, and as it was his plain duty to do. Yesterday there was some suggestion that the record was not correct. I obtained a certified copy of the minutes which, for the benefit of the House, I shall read to show that the statement I have made is correct. It was moved by the Hon. Mr. Landry that 'this committee rise and report the evidence to the House'—not an adjournment but that the committee rise, the usual motion which is made in our Committee of the Whole or any other committee in which they have arrived at a termination of their duties. A committee is bound by its order of reference. Evidently the committee had come to the conclusion that they had completed their work under their order of reference, and Senator Landry moved that the committee rise and report the evidence to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is my hon. friend reading from the official minutes of the committee ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Exactly.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—By its clerk ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I am reading a copy of the official minutes of the committee, certified by the clerk. To this motion an amendment was moved by the hon. member from de Salaberry, but his amendment was lost. The main motion was carried, and therefore the report should have been made to the House in accordance with the order of the committee. My hon. friend points out that it may be made now, but they held a subsequent meeting, which is contrary to the rules of procedure. The committee had no more right to hold that meeting than any other group of members.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What is the point of order ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I stated it at the beginning.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What does the hon. gentleman want to have decided ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I shall state it again. I want the ruling of the chair as to whether this committee was in existence last night ? Having risen and reported and completed their labours on the 22nd of this month they had, therefore, no further duties to perform, they being a select committee within an order of reference of this House, and the order of reference only authorized them to report the evidence. Having done so and completed the taking of the evidence, then their duties ceased. They themselves acknowledged by the discussion before the committee, and by the motions that were carried, that they considered their duties were ended.

The SPEAKER—I wish to catch the exact point which the hon. gentleman from Killarney makes; is it that this document is not the report of the committee, and consequently is not before the House ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I desire to answer the observations made by the hon. member from Killarney. The hon. gentleman wanted the Speaker to first declare that the meeting held yesterday was irregular, and that at the last and final meeting the committee had no right to frame a report and submit it to the House. He says, first it was a select committee, and select committees have no right to report except under the order of reference. Well, what is the order of reference ? It is :

That a select committee of five be appointed to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada, with power to send for papers, persons, telegrams, and records, to employ clerical services, and with leave to report from time to time.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—But not to eternity.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, from time to time. The select committee has power to report from time to time—that is the first point. The hon. gentleman will admit that the rules governing select committees in England are the same as those which govern here; if there is no special rule in this House, the practice of the British House of Lords is to be followed. What is the practice ? I quote from May, page 394 :

Select committees formerly had no power to report either their opinion or the minutes of evidence taken before them without leave given by an order of the House, but by the standing order No. 75, committees empowered to send for persons, papers and records—

That is the case with this committee.

—can report their opinions and observations together with the minutes of evidence to the House, and also a special report of matters which they think fit to bring to the notice of the House.

I think that settles the question entirely.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—My hon. friend has misunderstood me. The question of the nature of the report I have not raised. I desire to present only one point of order at a time. I think it is more regular to get a decision on that, and then on the other point of order which my hon. friend is discussing now, as to whether the committee have power under the order of reference to present opinions to the House, will be discussed at a later date.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am not discussing that point. I am discussing the point raised by the hon. gentleman; but I want to show what the principles are. We know now by the rules of the House of Lords that a committee which has been empowered to send for persons, papers, and records has the power to express an opinion. We did not go so far. We have the power to report from time to time. With the reference that I have read, empowering the committee to report from time to time, does he claim that one report will be final, and another will not ? It is only the final report of the committee which puts an end to it. It is not a motion to adjourn or to report a certain portion or all of the evidence, it is the final report that puts an end to it. May goes on to say :

If a committee, at the conclusion of their inquiry, make a final report to the House, the sittings of the committee, are assumed to have been closed.

That is, when the final report is presented they are assumed to be closed. The hon. gentleman quoted No. 8 of the evidence. What does it say and what do the minutes say on that point.

The committee divided on the amendment proposed (by my hon. friend from de Salaberry), which was lost on the following division, contents 3, non-contents 7.

And it goes on to say :

The motion to adjourn was carried on the same division reversed.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is the hon. gentleman reading from the minutes of the proceedings or from the report of the evidence?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am reading from the report of the evidence

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman from Killarney is reading from the minutes of the committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the contention of the hon. gentleman is sound, he cannot sustain it by reading from something which he claims is not before the House in a regular way.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I would suggest that the hon. member from Killarney should raise the two points he has mentioned, because they are connected together.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is a new procedure. Let the hon. gentleman go on with the first point; if it is not sustained he can try another afterwards; but to raise the two points at once would throw the first one in the shade. Let the Speaker decide the first point. I say the committee had a right to sit yesterday, because it had not made its final report. If a final report was made where is it? The only one that can be pointed to is the report presented to-day, and, therefore, it cannot be said that the committee ceased to exist until the report presented to-day was made. The committee therefore existed yesterday, and what right would my hon. friend have to claim another point of order on the existence of a report when he took part in the committee himself, proposed motions, and voted last evening. He is called on here to-day, to sustain a point of order which claims that the committee, whose meeting he attended yesterday, was not in existence. If it is decided that there is no report, let the hon. member show us the final report of the committee.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—As chairman of the committee I should be allowed to put the facts before the House and before the Speaker, whose judgment is invoked, and I think they will come with more force from a member of the committee than from one who is not a member of it, as I was obliged to remain there constantly and am thoroughly conversant with every incident which took place. The minutes, as originally drafted, and the report in No. 8, as printed, as I have stated on two or three occasions, are deemed correct; the statement in No. 8, that is the last number of the printed copy is not correct, according to the stenographer's notes. I made it my business to ask him to read his notes, and he found that they were to this effect, that the Hon. Mr. Landry made a motion to rise and report.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—And report the evidence.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—In the printed report the words 'The evidence' are added, but in his shorthand book those words do not appear. There is not the slightest doubt that when the taking of the evidence was finished, the hon. senator from Stadacona rose and moved that this commitee do now rise and report the evidence. That was his motion, and I said immediately 'If you make that motion it will prevent the committee from concluding its labours.'

While this discussion was going on between the chairman and the hon. member from Stadacona the Hon. Mr. Beique rose and proposed an amendment. The amendment was lost by seven to three, I believe. Then the main motion was put by me as follows: 'that this committee do now rise and report' and put so with the consent of the mover. These are the facts and these facts were not related originally in the minutes kept by the clerk, because he had no time to take them down in long hand. The minutes were made up after the committee had adjourned, and these are the facts. Now I am very much surprised that the hon. gentleman from Killarney, an old parliamentarian, a man knowing all the rules of discussion and the forms of procedure, should allege before this House that I was ordered by the committee to make a report. I was not ordered. The committee passed a motion to rise and report. It was in my judgment when to make the report. I could not make the report in a minute. I could not make it within ten hours, and only for the hard work that we have been doing for the past forty-eight hours I would not be able to report to-day, and I cannot understand why the hon. senator from Killarney should call upon the chairman of the committee to report, and hopes it will never happen again on evidence covering a thousand pages. We have put in a good deal of work in going over all that evidence and getting a report ready within a few days, and I was perfectly within my rights, as chairman of that committee, not to undertake to put before this honourable House any conclusions the committee would come to, or any form that the evidence might be in, or the minutes of that proceeding, without consulting my colleagues, and when the committee, on the 22nd July, moved to rise and report, I thought it was my duty to do so under their surveillance, and after they had considered what was to be the report ; so that the hon. senator from Killarney is asking the Speaker to rule on a point which is against common sense. The point is not well taken. There can be no question as to the existence of that committee until it has made its final report. If the committee became functus officio on the 22nd July, as the hon. gentleman contends ; if the committee then ceased to exist and had no further powers, did not the chairman share the demise of that committee ? Did he not become extinct, and if I became extinct how could I present a report from a committee that was extinct ? It does not stand to reason in the light of argument and justice. This committee has been hard at work for the past two months. We have a pile of evidence before this House that we cannot allow to be thrown out on a technicality, on a quibble, even if the hon. senator was right.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I have no desire to throw out the evidence at all. The evidence has been distributed right along.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I go further : I say that the country would not stand that this honourable Senate should, on a quibble even if it were technically right—and I do not admit that it is right—allow this committee to disband without producing before this honourable House the results of its work. The report of the committee is on the table of the House to-day, and not a word was said against it by any hon. member of the committee last night. It is true that a formal protest was entered by the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry that the committee had no right to sit. He evidently shares the opinion of the hon. senator from Killarney. Whether the hon. senator from Killarney has changed his ideas or not I do not know, but that is all which was done last night and why the efforts of nineteen members sitting in committee day and night, in the public interests, should be hampered, is really more than I can understand. I have absolutely no personal interest in the matter. We have been standing by the people's rights in this investigation, and the evidence will show that the work of the committee has not been without useful results. The evidence will show that a lesson has been taught to companies of this kind, how to administer the funds and the money, entrusted to them by policy-holders, and under these circumstances I hold that if the hon. Speaker is going to give a decision in the matter, he should take into consideration the facts as they transpired, the work of this committee, and also the fact that the committee is not dead, simply because on Friday night, the 22nd July, an hon. member rose and made a motion to rise and report. The committee will be dead when the report on the table is accepted or rejected by this honourable House.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Possibly, inasmuch as both points are being discussed and they cannot seemingly be separated, it may be just as well to bring both points of order before the House and the Speaker will deal with them as in his judgment he sees fit. The additional point of order which I desire to raise is that the committee——

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Take one point of order at a time.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—They are interlaced so that I find it is necessary for the information of the Speaker and the House to raise the other point and the Speaker will decide them in the order he deems best. The other point of order I wish to raise—

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman is out of order. The point of order has been raised, and the Speaker's decision should be given before the hon. gentleman deals with a second point.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Possibly they may both be included in the one decision.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman forces me to raise another point of order. He has no right to speak twice.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I have seen the hon. gentleman raise three or four points of order in succession, and not one decision given, but in this case the circumstances surrounding the whole matter as so interlaced that it would be seemingly only fair to the House that both points should be explained so that a decision could be arrived at more clearly and fairly. The other point was that, under the order of reference, the committee in question had no other authority than to present the evidence, taken before them under oath to the House without finding of any kind; and without taking up any time more than is necessary I refer to the motion which—

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I raise another point of order. That attacks the report which is to be considered on Tuesday next. It cannot come up now. It is premature.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I shall accept the hon. gentleman's argument right now.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Can these two motions be made at the same time?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—They are not motions.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman cannot cough all the time. The question has been brought before the chair, and I want the ruling of the chair on the question, whether he can raise two points at once ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I want a ruling, and I want to give the Speaker an opportunity of ruling in as fair and intelligent a manner as possible.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If the point of order is well taken, he will decide that way.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The order of reference of this committee —

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman has no right to raise a point of order on a question that is not before the House at all.

The SPEAKER—Although the course which the hon. gentleman from Killarney is now proposing to take is more convenient ; strictly speaking, I think the hon. gentleman having raised one point of order should let the other wait until that is decided.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I desire to call the attention of the House, not to what passed in the committee, as the hon. member from Victoria Division has stated, because we might not agree in the statement that he makes nor in the statement that I would make, but to call attention to the proceedings of the committee as they have been laid on the table by the hon. member.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The question before the chair is whether this committee is alive or dead.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am speaking to the point of order.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Never mind the report of the committee.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The point of order was raised by reason of the motion which is made. The motion is that the report be taken into consideration on Tuesday next. The point of order is raised that because this report, which is moved to be taken into consideration on Tuesday next, is a report made by a committee which had no existence yesterday, and therefore had no power to make the report which is now the object of the question of order. To deal intelligently with that question, it is necessary to read the minutes of the previous meeting, the minutes of the 22nd July as they appear from the proceedings which have been placed on the table by the hon. chairman of the committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. gentleman reads those minutes, he must admit that the committee is alive. If the committee is dead he has no right to read those minutes.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Of course if it is taken as read, I shall not read it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, but it is an argument against the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The point is not raised that the committee was dead on the 22nd July.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is the motion. That is the point of order raised by the hon. gentleman from Killarney.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—No, the hon. gentleman misunderstood me altogether. The committee was alive on the 22nd, but was dead last night.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That they died when they made the motion ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That report was made last night.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The report which is placed upon the table of the House is a report to which is attached a report of the proceedings of the 22nd July, and it is by reason of the proceedings of the 22nd July that the hon. member raises the point that the committee ceased to exist on the 22nd July, and, therefore, that the report as to its proceedings had last night should not be taken into consideration at all.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Leave it just there now.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am taking the point of order into consideration, and it is necessary to discuss the point of order to ascertain whether it should be sustained or not, and if the point of order is sustained then it will be held that the proceedings of last night were absolutely null. If, on the other hand, the point of order is overruled, it will be held that the proceedings were legal and therefore that the last report is a report which can be received before the House and considered. Therefore the point of order, as I understand it, is based on the resolution which was passed at the meeting of the 22nd July, and it is this resolution which was moved by the Hon. Mr. Landry that the committee rise and report the evidence to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—No.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is all right.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—For argument sake let him say it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Am I to understand that the hon. gentleman is denying the proceedings from which I am reading ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That statement is not correct. I was chairman of the committee, and authorized the clerk to correct his clerical errors. The motion made by the hon. gentleman as recorded was that the committee rise and report the evidence, so that that report is not correct, and I told the clerk to correct his clerical error.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I appeal to the House not to suppress the discussion, because hon. gentlemen who are listening to the debate desire to know the facts. Every hon. gentleman should be permitted to make his own statement, and it is unseemly to interrupt whoever is speaking.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I say it appears from the minutes—and the minutes are in accordance to the facts—that it was moved by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona that the committee rise and report the evidence to the Senate, and it was moved by the Hon. Senator Béique that before the committee report the evidence Messrs. Cannon and Cameron be heard in reference to the charge published in 'Part 1' of the evidence taken before this committee, the two witnesses being in attendance. The question being put upon the amendment, the committee divided thereon : Yeas, 3 ; Nays, 7. So it was resolved in the negative. The question being put on the main motion of the Hon. Mr. Landry which was on the same division reversed, resolved in the affirmative, and then the clerk has added 'the committee then adjourned.'

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It is no motion at all. It is the equivalent of rising. There was a motion which was carried, the main motion that the committee rise and report the evidence to the Senate, and the point of order which is raised is that it had the effect of dissolving the committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It cannot have that effect.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I shall cite May at page 394. It is a page to which the hon. gentleman has made reference but it is not the same portion. May is dealing with select committees and he says :—

When the evidence has been concluded, the chairman prepares resolutions, or a draft report, which it is customary to print and circulate among the members, before they are considered. Resolutions are open to discussion and amendment, subject to the same rules as in Committee of the Whole House. No resolution or amendment may be proposed, which is not within the order of reference ; and the chairman will decline to put it from the chair. When a resolution has been agreed to, the committee are unable to review and amend it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The resolution agreed to was that the committee rise and report the evidence. A select committee whether it is a select committee or otherwise, unless there are special rules to the contrary, is to be treated as a committee of the House. There is a special rule which says that in the absence of any other rule, the rules governing the House are to apply. It is an elementary rule that when the House sits as a committee of the whole if a motion is made and a resolution is adopted that the committee rise it dissolves the committee, and to prevent a dissolution of the committee it is necessary that these words be added. 'And ask leave to sit again.' Here we have to deal with a select committee; but applying the same rules which govern a committee of the whole, the moment that the committee decides that the committee rise that dissolves the committee, and to prevent a dissolution of the committee it is necessary that those words be added 'And ask leave to sit again.' Here we have to deal with a select committee; but applying the same rule as the rule which governs a committee of the whole, the moment that the committee decided that they rise and report the evidence, I say it was a finality which was, in the terms of May, not subject to be reviewed impliedly or expressly by the committee. It became a finality and it dissolved the committee. That is the procedure. It is on the page from which the hon. gentleman from Stadacona has read, 295, and reads as follows :—

It is the custom not to report the evidence until the inquiry has been completed, and the report is ready to be presented.

The committee could have made a special report, but it will not be argued that the committee was bound to make a special report. I mean by special report a report containing findings; whether it is a report that contains findings or not it is the report of the committee; and instead of deciding that the report would contain findings the committee decided, on the 22nd, that its report should simply consist in reporting the evidence. That is the resolution which was made by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona; and it is the resolution which was adopted by the committee, and I say, under the authority of May, and under the authority of the general rules of this honourable House that this had the effect of dissolving the committee, and that it was not susceptible of being revived expressly or impliedly, and that the committee had no right to sit again, as the committee attempted to do last night. Therefore, the question of order was well taken when the hon. gentleman moved that the report of the proceedings of last night be taken into consideration, it appearing that the committee sat without any power at all, and without any jurisdiction, the point of order should be maintained.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I am rather surprised at the view taken by my hon. friend from de Salaberry. I must express my amazement, because in all the committees of parliament that I have ever sat on, it is the customary resolution, that the committee rise and report. It is often done. It is usual to do it. Now, is the mere technical expression of the member that moves a resolution going to dissolve the committee ? That committee is a committee of this House, and I hold that that committee is in full possession of the powers conferred upon it until it has finally reported to the House, and the House has adopted or rejected that report, and by so doing relieved the committee from further duty. I think that is a proper view to take ; but, admitting that the contention of my hon. friend is correct, he holds to the words that the committee rise and report the evidence as being the resolution adopted. There was no evidence taken at the subsequent meeting. What was done at the subsequent meeting was simply that a synopsis of the evidence was submitted for the committee's approval, carrying out virtually the command of the previous meeting. The committee was ordered to rise and report the evidence. The clerk of the committee prepared a short, concise synopsis of the evidence presented, and that was presented for the adoption of the committee, and nothing more.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Does the hon. gentleman say that the clerk prepared the synopsis ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It was prepared. I do not know who prepared it

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It would take him two weeks to do it.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—That was prepared, and submitted by the chairman for adoption by the committee. That is all. Nobody was put on oath ; no evidence offered on either side. It was simply adopting the report that was prepared. I hold that it would be a very strained opinion to hold that once a committee had passed a resolution to report, that they were precluded from adopting their own report. That is what they met for last night. That was the very object of their meeting—to adopt their own report. It would be a strange thing if a committee, by a simple technical resolution, was precluded from adopting its own report. If they had reopened the whole matter and taken more evidence, after it was understood by the members of the committee that their duties were closed, it would be a different thing ; but it was simply adopting the report that was prepared. No evidence was taken and nothing more was done.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I, as one member of that committee, took exception to the committee sitting last night, inasmuch as I understood, along with other hon. gentlemen of that committee—and I think I am safe in saying that the chairman of that committee expressed the idea to me, that the proceedings were closed on the 22nd.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—As far as the evidence was concerned—nothing more.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I hold in my hand a certified copy of the minutes of the proceedings of that meeting on the 22nd, certified by the clerk, Mr. Young, and I am rather surprised that the chairman of that committee, who has practically placed the same report on the table, repudiates the report and says it is not correct. I have a recollection of how that motion was put, and I have a recollection of asking the secretary if he had that motion down correctly. He picked it up and read it, and we voted on it. The amendment was lost and the motion was carried on the same division, that the committee rise and report the evidence. Now as an evidence that the committee was not expected to make any finding on the evidence, I shall quote what has been said in this House by the chairman, because this matter was discussed in this chamber on a previous occasion, and the chairman, notwithstanding what he says to-day, made use of the following language at page 330 :

> The sole duty of the committee is to ascertain the facts, to ascertain the position of that company in Canada, and find out what they have done with the money paid to them by the Canadian policy-holders. That is our duty in relation to it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman further says :

> The committee of investigation are simply there to ascertain facts, and when they have ascertained them, they will report to this honourable House, and the Senate will take the course that ought to be taken.

That was the hon. gentleman's opinion.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Exactly.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Then I find the chairman of the committee, at page 352 of the Debates, making the following statement :—

> This committee was appointed for one sole purpose, simply to hear evidence on both sides and report the facts to the Senate. Does the hon. gentleman think, young and inexperienced as I am, that I would undertake to organize or be chairman of a committee called upon to frame a law ? Not at all. But I was quite capable of presiding over a committee appointed to hear evidence and report it. All I want is ears ; I do not want much brains to do that. The committee do not need to be experts or actuaries or presidents of railroads to report evidence. They have simply to sit there and call witnesses, and when the facts are placed before the committee to report them to the House.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Report to the House.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—That was the hon. gentleman's idea.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What were his words?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—When it was claimed that the committee who had pronounced themselves strongly on one side were not fair judges to hear the evidence, the hon. gentleman from Rothesay said :—

> Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Judge of what ? We are to report evidence.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Not simply to report.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I know nothing of how that report was prepared. It seemed to me, on reading it, and any other gentleman who has an opportunity of reading it will come to the conclusion I did, that it is a report prepared on the evidence of one side, by the prosecuting counsel.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a question of order. The hon. gentleman must confine himself to the point of order.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—It may not be refined language, but it is plain.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—A person should be plain and refined in discussing these questions.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Under circumstances, I would not expect anything else.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Under circumstances, I would have expected the hon. gentleman from Rothesay to have been very delicate about bringing this matter before the House, because when the time comes to discuss this evidence, probably we should bring out matters that ought to be worthy of discussion and which were not elicited before that committee and not discussed there, that will show the reasons why this insurance company is in as bad odor in Canada as it is to-day. I am not going to discuss that now.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I ask the hon. gentleman to confine himself to the point of order.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I will. But the hon. gentleman must keep his friend quiet, and not have him interrupting.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Oh, I am able to take care of myself.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I consider that while the chairman has a perfect right to move the adoption of the report of the evidence, which he should have done at an earlier date, as directed by the committee, he has no right to say that we should adopt the finding of that committee, on the evidence, as submitted to us now.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—It strikes me that it is hardly reasonable that my hon. friend should talk in the manner in which he did. What are the facts? Were they or were they not cognizant beforehand that that committee had an existence; that its functions had not ceased? And where do we find those hon. gentlemen last night? Not only at the committee, but taking part in the committee, voting upon various matters coming before the committee. If the committee had no existence why were they there? They knew full well that that committee was not dissolved.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman knows very well that the Hon. Mr. Béique, the Hon. Sir Alphonse Pelletier and myself protested, and are on record as having protested.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And voted.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—They protested against what appeared to them, and what they knew to be the decision of that committee—to report the evidence. The committee have reported the evidence, and that is the report before the House. I contend, therefore, that the hon. gentlemen who attended that meeting last night had no right to speak and vote if they believed the committee was dissolved. By speaking and voting they recognized that the committee had an existence, and I say the report presented to-day is the proper document, that is the report on the evidence taken—and is therefore in order.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—This is a matter of veracity between two hon. gentlemen and the remainder of the committee. I know, and other members of the committee know, that the motion which was made was to rise and report. The words 'the evidence' were not used and were not understood to have been used except by my hon. friend, who has got a certificate from the clerk of the committee to that effect.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Does the hon. gentleman say that the secretary falsified the report?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I ask the Speaker to keep the hon. gentleman from interrupting.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—What about the chairman's report?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have stated on behalf of the committee——

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Order.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The chairman's report is in now.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—He says that the report is wrong.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—There is a mistake in the report, which the clerk was instructed to correct, but he has not done so.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Why should a technicality have so many people advocating it when the committee is asked to submit its report ? I make every allowance for the hon. gentleman ; he threatens me that the time will come when they will have something to say to me.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I did not say anything about you.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman spoke of the senator from Rothesay.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes. The hon. gentleman introduced a new subject, and I said when the time came to discuss that I would have something to say.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—If the hon. gentleman has anything to say he must have got it from somebody; he did not get it from the committee. I shall be only too pleased to meet anything he brings before the House at the proper time. The hon. gentleman said that I had stated the evidence was wanted ; of course the evidence was wanted. What sane man would go to a committee and take evidence if it was not intended to bring it before the Senate ? Were not the committee to say that they had gone over the evidence and have expressed an opinion? This is one of the fairest reports ever made. It is only an index—a thousand pages boiled down without one word for or against the company, but simply laying the facts before the House. I am bound to believe that every member of this House is impartial, although at times some of them may get excited and convey the idea that they are not ; and I am sure that they will weigh the evidence, which speaks for itself. The chairman, by the direction of the committee, brings in the report. The hon. member from Portage la Prairie must remember that he made two or three speeches at the last meeting of the committee, and still wanted to examine Mr. Cameron and Mr. Cannon.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—When ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Last night.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—That is not true.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. I ask that the words of the hon. gentleman be taken down by the clerk.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—No, do not pay any attention to him.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I want a ruling whether such language is parliamentary or not.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Never mind. I assure my hon. friend that it is a compliment, coming from the hon. member, and I do not want him to take it back.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Withdraw !

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I move that the Clerk read the words.

The CLERK—The words, as I understood them, are 'That it is not true', applied to a statement made by the Hon. Mr. Domville.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the hon. member from Portage la Prairie persist in that expression ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—What expression ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The expression he used referring to a statement made by the hon. member from Rothesay, that it was not true.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—What did he say ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No matter what he said.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman stated that I asked to have additional evidence adduced last night before that committee, which I protested was not in existance; I say when he makes that statement it is not a true statement.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I ask whether that is parliamentary or not ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is exceedingly unfortunate that this debate has proceeded in the manner it has. It appears to be purely a matter of veracity.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He might say the hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Perhaps the language is not as mild as it should be, but the hon.

gentleman seems to be excited. My hon. friend is the one who is creating more trouble than anyone else. He is constantly getting on his feet. I made an appeal to the House that every hon. gentleman should be allowed to make any statement he wished and not be interrupted. That is the only way we can end it, because there is a question of veracity and it cannot be settled here.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. gentleman wants it settled he had better sit down.

The SPEAKER—I think that the words used by the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie with respect to the statement made by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay, can hardly be considered as parliamentary. He might have conveyed the same idea in parliamentary language. A direct assertion that a statement made by an hon. member is not true is hardly parliamentary.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—If it is unparliamentary, of course, I have to retract. I wanted the hon. gentleman to understand exactly what I meant.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I have nothing more to say with regard to the retraction; it is a matter with the House. I want to say, and to say it emphatically that this report is looked for by the public, and it will not be consistent with the dignity of the Senate or the expectations of the people if it be suppressed. With regard to the question of the motion made in committee, I most distinctly say, and it is in the recollection of several hon. gentlemen who hear me, that the motion as printed was never put to the committee, and that the words 'the evidence' crept into the report——

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Order.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Crept into the report by some mistake. Surely there is nothing out of order in saying that.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I wish to make a personal statement.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I ask the ruling of the Chair, whether I have not a right to make a personal statement.

The SPEAKER—What has the hon. gentleman to explain?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I wish to state that when the hon. member quotes from the minutes of the secretary, I gave instructions immediately before I saw it in print to change that motion.

The SPEAKER—This is a somewhat important question, and, although I have an impression as to the proper decision, I think that perhaps it would be more satisfactory to the House if I were to take a little time to decide it. I might be allowed to suggest if this paper, which has been presented as a report—I do not undertake to decide whether it is or not—were allowed to lie on the table until Monday, I should be prepared with a little more confidence to give a decision.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Do we understand that the report has been presented?

The SPEAKER—No; I do not now decide the question whether it is a report or not.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The question of order came on a motion, not on the presentation. The report was presented and read by the clerk, and the point of order was raised on the motion to fix a date for concurrence.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Inasmuch as the Speaker has taken this question of order into consideration, with his permission, I shall submit the other point so that he will have this matter settled once for all at the next meeting of the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If it is germane to the motion before the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I am raising a point of order.

The SPEAKER—It is understood that this document will lie on the table until Monday.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is a misunderstanding.

The SPEAKER—The point of order taken by the hon. gentleman from Killarney is that this document is not a report, and if the order is that 'the report' lie on the table, the House is, to a certain extent, deciding that question against the hon. gentleman from Killarney. I suggested that the 'document' lie on the table, because that does not commit the House one way or the other.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The question of order was raised on the motion to fix the time for the consideration of the report. We are willing to wait for the decision of the Speaker before that motion comes up.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That can easily be accomplished by a motion that the further consideration of this subject be postponed until Tuesday.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We do not need a motion of that kind. It is stopped by the request of the Speaker for time to decide the point of order.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If the Speaker should decide that the point of order is well taken, still the report would be on the table

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The report, as I understand, has been presented to the House. Then the point of order was raised by the hon. senator from Killarney, that the committee had no right to make a report, it having dissolved itself. Then the Speaker is asked to rule. He requests time to consider the question, and that would leave the matter just as it is. The question is a very important one, and requires a great deal of consideration as to whether the action of the committee dissolved the committee or not. It is only reasonable that the matter should be allowed to remain now just as it is, to be taken up again on Tuesday. Just let it stand as suggested by the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Can we take this up on Tuesday without a motion to that effect?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The Speaker has a right to give his decision whenever he wishes.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Will the report be before the House on Tuesday next? There is no motion that it stand until Tuesday, and no decision.

REPRESENTATION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (149) An Act to amend the Representation Act, 1903.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read the second time on Tuesday next. He said: The Bill refers to the dividing line between two parts of Algoma, that is, the electoral district of Rainy River and the electoral district of Thunder Bay. It is a defining line, slightly different from the line in the statute of last year. The change is very trifling; I shall endeavour to look it up and ascertain exactly what the difference is. Another clause makes it clear that Victoria and Madawaska are included in the one county of Victoria in New Brunswick. The Bill also defines the Yukon Territory a little more clearly than before.

The motion was agreed to.

BANK ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (160) An Act to amend the Bank Act.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read the second time on Tuesday next. He said: There are some banks in Canada which have established agencies in the West India Islands, where the currency is in pounds sterling, and not dollars and cents. This authorizes them to issue pound notes, and declares the equivalent to be $4.86\frac{2}{3}$. Under the Bank Act, as it stands, the issues are limited to $5 and upwards, but in those colonies where the decimal currency has not been adopted, they are permitted to issue notes in accordance with the ordinary sterling currency existing.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Bills of exchange or notes?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Notes. Instead of issuing $5 bills they would issue one pound notes.

Hon. Mr. McKAY (Truro)—Is it not a fact that they issue such notes now?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It may be; I have not heard so. Of course they would have no authority, strictly speaking, under the Bank Act to do so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It simply gives the authority to Canadian banks doing business in the West Indies to issue bills in the currency of the Islands in which they are doing business.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, sterling currency.

The motion was agreed to.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State if he has made inquiry for that report to which I called his attention yesterday—that is for the correspondence relating to inviting tenders for the ice-breakers ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have asked for, and sent over for it several times. It has been promised. They say they are inundated with work. All I can do is to inquire again.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to inquire about the dismissal of Mr. Painchaud from Crane Island ? I should also like to get the return about the crew of the steamer 'Neptune,' which I asked for at the begining of the session, and also with reference to the 'Gauss.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have made, as the hon. gentleman knows, a number of inquiries. It was only a few days ago he said he wanted some letter written to Dr. Bryce. I sent to the Department of Agriculture and they said Dr. Bryce was not here. They do not know where he is, and they have no record of the letter there at all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to call attention to the return asked for early last session in reference to appointments and recommendations of appointments of honorary colonels in the militia. In view of the discussion taking place now in another place, we should have that information.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Was it never brought down ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It never was brought down, and no attention was paid to the motion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall inquire about it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. gentleman ascertain whether we will ever get it ? I must confess I should like to see the principle on which these appointments have been made, and how the recommendations made by commanding officers have been dealt with, particularly those that were refused.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (132) An Act to amend the Railway Act, 1903. He said : I explained on the introduction of this Bill that the first clause relates to orders of the Railway Committee that had been appealed from before the abolition of the Railway Committee. This continues the right of the Governor in Council to hear any appeal that was filed before the Railway Committee was abolished. Hereafter, of course, the Privy Council will have nothing to say to them. The next clause is that which remits entirely to the provincial authority the power to pass legislation affecting the running of local railways where legislation of that kind was adopted in the province, and to include those particular railways that, for certain purposes, were especially brought under the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada by the addition of the words 'to the general advantage of Canada'—that those words alone being introduced in the statutes should not preclude a provincial authority from bringing them under the control of the laws of the province in so far as Sunday observance legislation is concerned. Then there is a clause for better defining and ascertaining the earnings of the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Grand Trunk Railway. The last clauses of the Bill provide that a majority of the directors of any company which has heretofore received, or hereafter receives from the government of Canada any railway subsidy shall be British subjects, and it is proposed to supplement that clause in committee, by adding 'Resident in Canada.'

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I shall call attention to clause six of the Bill which refers to the prohibition of running of trains on Sundays in provinces where they have Sunday observance legislation to that effect. In all provinces where they have no legislation of that kind, this Act would not apply, of course.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—And that is the great danger. In the provinces governments are guided, of course, by the opinion of the electors, and I know in my own province that the legislature have declined, in the matter of Sunday observance, to pass any Act. I also know, as a fact, that the committee of the Lord's Day Alliance waited upon the Dominion government this year, and the premier and the Minister of Justice both promised that an Act should be introduced dealing with the Sunday observance law ; that the Bill should be read the first time in the House of Commons and then referred to the Supreme Court for an opinion whether it is intra vires or ultra vires, so as not to conflict with the provincial authorities, and this is what they are getting to satisfy the commission that saw the premier. This, of course, is better than nothing. In Ontario they have a Sunday observance law, and this will confirm the legislation of the Ontario legislature and make that law effective ; but I should have liked to have gone further in reference to steamers, because steamers do as much harm on Sunday as railways do, and although this Bill cannot be amended in that way, I hope before another year passes over that if the provinces do not deal with that subject the Dominion will, because the premier gave express promise that a special Act should be brought in this year dealing with that matter and referred to the Supreme Court.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This Bill might very properly be called a conglomeration. It deals with half a dozen different subjects, and of a somewhat important character. First, it legalizes what may have been done or what has been done by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman whether any decisions have been arrived at by the Board of the Railway Commission which would be in contravention of the decisions which have been come to by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council ? If my recollection serves me rightly, some decision was come to by the Railway Commission in reference to a matter affecting the street railway in Toronto. The Railway Board of the Privy Council had given a decision which was set aside by the Railway Commission after its formation, and the Governor in Council subsequently reversed the decision of the Railway Commission and reaffirmed the decision which had been come to by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. Has the matter been finally settled, and which decision rules at the present time ?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think this Bill will give the power. As the law stands there was no power ; after the Railway Committee was abolished, all powers were conferred on the Commission. There was a gap between the two——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The right of appeal existed ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes ; and this is to legalize any appeal that might have been standing. The Railway Commission cannot deal with it, as the law stood at the time the decision was given by the Railway Commitee of the Privy Council. The appeal was to the Privy Council. Before any appeal was made the Railway Commission was brought into existence, and there was no provision for an appeal from the Railway Committee to the Railway Commission, because the Railway Committee disappeared. It could only affect one or two cases. I do not know what cases, but quite likely the case to which the hon. gentleman refers may be one particular case. I do not suppose there would be more than a couple of them.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—It seems to me that it is an extraordinary clause. It reads as follows :—

1. Notwithstanding anything contained in the Railway Act, 1903, the Governor in Council shall have, and shall be deemed to have had since the date upon which the said Act came into force, power, authority and jurisdiction to sanction, confirm, rescind, change or vary, or to take other action upon, any report, order or decision of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council.

How can we decide that he had that power ? This clause has a retroactive effect, and it is dangerous to pass a retroactive law unless the hon. gentleman tells us it will not affect any pending case.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh no. Before the Railway Commission was formed, there was a board known as the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. From that board there was an appeal to the Privy Council. When the Railway Commission was appointed the Railway Committee ceased to exist, but there was a considerable gap between the time the Act came into operation and the hearing of certain appeals that ought to have gone at once to the Privy Council. The Privy Council did not hear them at the time they should have heard them. For illustration, say a decision was given by the Railway Committee on the fifth of January, and the parties took exception to that decision and appealed to the Privy Council. The Privy Council did not hear the appeal, perhaps were not ready, and, in the meantime, a few weeks after the Railway Commission came into existence under proclamation of the Governor in Council. Hon. gentlemen can quite understand that there were one or two cases —I do not know if there are any more. I think the only case is the one to which the hon. leader of the opposition has alluded. I think that is probably a case which the Governor General would have no power to hear, nor could any other power hear it, because the Railway Commission was not in existence, and there was this hiatus or gap of a few weeks in which the power was taken from the Appellate Court. The Appellate Court is the Railway Commission which deals with all these questions. So that this Act is simply giving power to the Governor in Council to hear any appeals that might have been made between the time the Railway Commission ceased to exist and the formation of the Railway Commission.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not going to make many remarks at the present time, because we can discuss these questions better when we get into committee of the whole. The second clause is certainly somewhat of a peculiar character. While there is a doubt as to the power of the province to legislate in a certain direction on the question of Sunday observance, there is also a doubt as to how far the provinces can legislate to impose a penalty on a railway incorporated under a Dominion charter for an infraction of a provincial law. A decision has been arrived at by the Law Lords of the Privy Council in England declaring that the Act passed by the Ontario legislature, providing for a better observance of the Sabbath, or what is understood to be the Lord's Day, was ultra vires, because it imposed a penalty, while the Confederation Act relegates to the Dominion parliament alone, the right to impose penalties for breaches of the law. If I am not correct in that, I hope the Secretary of State will put me right. But that is my recollection. If I understand this clause, it validates the Acts of the different provinces and makes them intra vires, though they may have violated that provision of the Confederation Act for the imposition of penalties. Then it goes further, and legalizes the Acts of the provincial legislatures, including those provisions which they have a right to legislate upon, or, in other words, we are delegating powers to the local authorities which they have themselves now under the constitution. How far have we the right to declare in an Act of the Dominion parliament that a provincial Act is intra vires, in other words, how far are we justified in introducing a Bill legalizing and giving effect to an Act which the provincial legislature has the right to pass, because portions of these Acts are intra vires so far as they are dealt with by the provinces, while in other cases they are ultra vires, such as the case to which I have called attention, where the province of Ontario exceded its powers in imposing penalties for an infraction of the law by a railway holding a Dominion charter. This question is now before the Supreme Court, is it not ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is my recollection. I may be in error in that. Then that second clause requires to be considered very closely. That is the second subsection of clause two, and what we have to consider is how far these laws which are upon the statute-book in the provinces will affect the general trade of the country. In the second clause, there is a provision to legalize the local laws affecting tramways, when such tramways and railways are wholly and solely within the limits of the province. Then there is a provision that might be interpreted as not interfering with local roads that have been leased to a main line, the Canadian Pacific Railway for instance, though they may be of a purely local character, which would prevent the through traffic being continued on a Sunday. What struck me at first on reading the law was, that an exclusively local railway would be brought within the power and authority of the local legislature and would be governed by the local laws so far as they affect running and doing business on a Sunday. The moment such a railway becomes leased to the Grand Trunk Railway or any other general trunk line, how far would that affect the traffic between another province and the province of Ontario in which they had passed a law preventing the running of these roads on Sunday ? Could they continue to their ultimate destination ? For instance, take a road in a county like the county of my hon. friend from Victoria, where the railways are purely local lines. There is a connection made at Lindsay, at Bobcageon, and still further north. Whether this portion of the clause would affect that railway or not I am not prepared to say at the present moment, but I throw out the suggestion that hon. gentlemen can consider it when the Bill is in committee. Then there is a saving clause, which places the whole matter within the power of the government. After detailing what powers are relegated to the local legislature, it winds up with this provision :—

2. The Governor in Council may at any time and from time to time by proclamation confirm, for the purposes of this section, any Act of the legislature of any province passed after the passing of this Act.

So that if the difficulties to which I have called attention should arise, the Governor in Council, under this clause, would have the power to declare that that railway would not come within the provisions of this Act.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—There is another proviso about through lines.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then the third clause deals with the Transcontinental Railway and it also deals with the Grand Trunk Railway.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The divisions and the traffic ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, and gives power to determine any question as to the apportionment of any through rate or rates between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the other railways.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Railway Commission has that control.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is a point, if my recollection serves me rightly, that was discussed very fully in the House of Commons, when the question was brought up by some of the members of the opposition, but was rejected at that time. Now the government find it necessary to amend the law so as to settle the question. However, that is a point we will discuss more conveniently when we get into committee. The fourth section, as the hon. gentleman has indicated, is one declaring that the majority of the directors of any company which heretofore received or hereafter receives government aid shall be British subjects. The hon. gentleman intimated his intention to declare that the whole, or a majority. I think I understood him to say, of these directors should be not only British subjects but residents of Canada. What has suggested itself to my mind is this—and I throw out the suggestion to the hon. Secretary of State—how far will that affect investments by the people who live out of the country and particularly by British subjects living in Europe ? If it be provided that all directors must be residents of Canada, let me ask the question again, how far will that affect financial men and capitalists who are willing to invest their money in these enterprises, who are not residents of Canada ? The hon. Secretary of State suggested that amendment, and while, on the face of it it seems feasible, I had grave doubts as to the propriety of inserting a clause of that kind which may materially affect capitalists who are willing to invest their money in enterprises in Canada, if it is provided that they shall not be directors of a board for the carrying on of the enterprise. We go the length of saying that the majority of the directors shall be British subjects. I am not opposed to that. On the contrary I remember that was discussed a great many times, in the Commons years and years ago, and on a great many occasions it was rejected on the ground that capitalists living in the United States or Germany, Belgium or Holland, where a large proportion of the capital has been obtained to carry on an enterprise in this and in other countries, and it was always rejected. Now we have advanced to the position of saying that they shall be British subjects. The proposition is that they shall be residents of Canada as well. I doubt very much the propriety of a clause of that kind. I may just as well admit while I am on this subject, that great difficulties have arisen in the management of the Grand Trunk whose board is in London. Many difficulties have arisen in the management of that road. But if this provision had existed when British capital was invested in that road, the grave question is whether they would ever have got money to build it. I throw out these hints ; they are my own impressions, and I hope the Secretary of State will consider them before he consents to add that amendment to the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—When the hon. leader of the opposition rose to address the House, I was about to call the attention of hon. gentlemen to the first part of clause 2 which reads as follows :—

2. The Governor in Council may at any time and from time to time by proclamation confirm, for the purposes of this section, any Act of the legislature of any province passed after the passing of this Act.

It seems to me this legislation is of a very awkward and doubtful character. Either the province has a right to legislate, in which case our confirmation of such law is not necessary at all, or it has no right to legislate, and then we have not the right to confer on the Governor in Council the power of making good a law which is ultra vires. It seems to me it would be substituting the Governor in Council as a legislative agent for the provinces themselves. I contend that we have not the right to confer upon the Governor in Council the power of legislating for the provinces. This would be unconstitutional to my mind, and, if it were not, it seems to me the policy should not be adopted. I respectfully submit this consideration to the government and to the hon. members of the Senate. It seems to me a very important one. It is an invasion of the rights of provinces ; it is assuming a power that we have not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No ; on the contrary it is sustaining the principle. The idea is that when any province introduces Sunday legislation affecting a local railway, the Governor in Council may have power to confirm it under this Act. It is leaving to the province the control of the Sunday law. In each province the feeling is different. What is suited for one province is not suited for another. It depends on the public feeling in the province, and the idea is to carry out whatever the feeling in the province may be.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I desire to ascertain from the hon. Secretary of State in reference to a case which has been taken before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, and they made a finding upon the case as presented to them but before the term upon which they began giving their decision the Railway Committee of the Privy Council ceased to exist and the Railway Commission was appointed, I should like to know in what position those who made the application would be, whether they would be able to go on under the decision that was given, although they had not carried it into effect before the Railway Commission was formed, or whether they will have to commence a new proceeding as if no decision had been given by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. In other words, is this Bill retroactive in empowering the Governor in Council to give a decision which would apply to a case of that description ?

Hon. Mr WATSON—I wish to say a word with regard to clause 4. There might be something weak in the opinion given by the hon. leader of the opposition, but it will be observed that this clause is dealing with companies that have received aid from the Dominion of Canada, because it says :

4. The majority of the directors of any company which has heretofore received, or hereafter receives, from the government of Canada, under any Act of the parliament of Canada, aid towards the construction of its railway or undertaking, or any part thereof, shall be British subjects : Provided that this section shall not, until the thirty-first day of January, one thousand nine hundred and five, apply to any company the majority of whose directors are not British subjects when this Act comes into force.

It appears to me that with the experience the people of Canada have had with the management of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, the company who have undertaken to build the Grand Trunk Pacific, will have a large undertaking in Canada. They are getting a large guarantee for the purpose of constructing that road, and it would be well, in the interests of the people of Canada, that the majority of that board should be residents of Canada and not have to deal with a board in London. I can remember years ago, when the management of the Grand Trunk in Canada decided that they should build a branch railway, the matter having been referred to the board in London, to men who had no practical knowledge of the country where the proposed line was to be built, refused to sanction it, and I have no doubt that the line would have been completed if the board were residents of Canada and had some practical knowledge of the requirements of the country. It appears to me that with the large amount of railway that must be constructed in Canada in the future, and the importance of those to be built and operated in different localities, that we ought to have the board meetings of all companies receiving assistance from the Dominion of Canada in Canada; and for that reason I am very strongly in favour of the suggestion which has been made for the addition of the provision that the majority of the directors shall be residents in Canada. I think we have ten directors of the Grand Trunk Pacific Company in Canada and five in England. It was organized with that understanding, I believe, and that being the case, no misunderstanding can arise by placing in this Bill, a provision that on all railways which receive large aid from the Dominion of Canada the majority of directors shall de residents of Canada, so that the meetings of the directors shall be held in Canada.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Of course it would apply to all railroads, because they all receive public aid.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—With reference to the second clause of the Bill, I desire to say that I am quite in sympathy with the object to be attained; but I do not wish to be understood as being committed to this method of carrying out that object. I wish to make this statement now, so that on any future occasion I shall not feel estopped by permitting this legislation to go forward without saying that I have some doubts as to its being within the jurisdiction of parliament—at all events as to its being a sound system of legislation. I think where provinces have exclusive jurisdiction, they should exercise it without the sanction of parliament, and this parliament should exercise its full powers wherever the provinces have not exclusive jurisdiction.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THE MILITIA ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Has the hon. gentleman any information to give us as to when the Militia Bill will be brought down?

Hon. Mr. WATSON.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have made inquiries. We shall not be able to get it until Monday, if we get it then. I have been asking to have it hurried up as much as possible, but I do not see any prospect of its passing the House of Commons until Monday.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has it been read the third time?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is still in committee.

The Senate adjourned until Monday at Eight o'clock p.m.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Monday, August 1, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eight o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

SUPERVISION OF CONSTRUCTION OF GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY rose to :—

Ask how many commissioners are the government going to appoint to supervise the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway?
Who are they likely to be?
Have they had any experience in railway building?
What is their present occupation or business, and how much salary are they to receive?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The number authorized by the present statute is four. I cannot say what their experience is.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Can the hon. gentleman give us an idea how much salary they will receive?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Ten thousand dollars each.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know.

PULLING DOWN OF QUEBEC CITY WALLS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :—

Is it the intention of the government to allow the pulling down of any portion of the Quebec city walls to permit of a street being opened through the Cove Fields, parallel to Grande Allée, from the avenue 'intra muros' called Ste. Geneviève out west to the limits of the city?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

REPORT OF J. L. P. O'HANLY RE LACHINE CANAL BRIDGE.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN moved :—

That the clerk be instructed to return to J. L. P. O'Hanly, Esq., of Ottawa, his report on the railway bridge over the Lachine canal at Wellington street, Montreal, laid upon the table by the Honourable Mr. Scott on the 6th June, 1900.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is this document a paper belonging to parliament ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Would it not be proper that a copy should be retained ? If the document is given away, there will be no record.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It never was used. It was asked for in the usual way, by the late Hon. Mr. O'Donohoe, and after being laid on the table, and referred to the Committee on Printing, they declined to print it, as not having value, for information hereafter. I have recently learned that the object of pursuing this course, was that it might be printed at the public expense.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Was Mr. O'Hanly employed by the government to make this report to the government ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I really could not tell whether that is so or not. I do not think he was, but I could not say.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There can be no objection, I suppose, to having it returned to Mr. O'Hanly ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not see any.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know he has been trying for the last two or three years to have it returned. I tried myself for some time, and the decision was, that it was a paper belonging to parliament, and therefore could not be returned.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the answer I gave.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But if the motion is carried, then it can be given back to the gentleman, by the authority of parliament ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is no objection, I suppose, to having the report returned ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think so.

The motion was agreed to.

TRANSFER OF BAGGAGE FROM FERRY BOATS TO INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

INQUIRY POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called :

By the Hon. Mr. Landry—

That he will inquire of the government—

Is there a contract between the government and the person who actually transfers baggage from the Quebec and Lévis ferry-boats to the trains of the Intercolonial Railway, or from the trains of the Intercolonial Railway to the said ferry-boats ?

If there is a contract, what is the amount of it, its duration and who obtained it ?

If there is no contract, who at present makes this transfer, and on what conditions does he make it ?

In the latter case why have tenders not been asked for ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That information is not available here. They have to send to Moncton for it, and we will not receive it for some days. It had better be postponed till Thursday.

TRANSFER OF BAGGAGE TO INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

INQUIRY POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called :—

By the Hon. Mr. Landry—

That he will inquire of the government—

Did a person named Rouleau, of Lévis, once have the contract for the transfer of baggage from the trains of the Intercolonial Railway to the ferry-boats between Quebec and Lévis, and vice versa ?

Did the government afterwards give the contract to Messrs Halé & Marceau ?

In what year, and for what reasons, was this contract taken away from Mr. Rouleau ?

Have Messrs Halé & Marceau relinquished their contract to the government ?

Why ?—

Was it on the expiration or before the expiration of the said contract ?

Who succeeded Messrs. Halé & Marceau, and who is now doing the work for the execution of which they had the contract ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Let it stand until Thursday.

REPAIRS OF MILITARY FORTS AT LEVIS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY rose to inquire of the government :—

Does the government intend to ask tenders for the repairs which it may make to different military forts at Lévis, and to the cattle quarantine at the same place ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is not the intention.

REPLACING OF F. X. BEAULIEU.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY rose to inquire of the government :—

Has the government replaced in the Department of the Interior, outside service, immigration branch, a person named F. X. Beaulieu, a keeper, who died in the service ?
What is the name of the successor ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answer to the first is, yes. The name of the successor is John C. Blouin.

MUTUAL RESERVE LIFE FUND ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK.

SPEAKER'S DECISION.

The SPEAKER—I am prepared to submit my decision on the point of order raised by the hon. member from Killarney on Friday last.

When the document, purporting to be the ninth and final report of the select committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York, presented by the hon. chairman of the committee on Friday the twenty-ninth day of July last, was read by the clerk, objection was taken by the hon. gentleman from Killarney (Hon. Mr. Young) to its being further dealt with by the Senate, on the ground that the select committee, having at their meeting of the 22nd of July adopted a resolution that the committee rise and report the evidence, were precluded from further dealing with the matter referred to them, and that the said alleged ninth report was consequently a nullity and could not be considered by the House.

The question thus raised being an important one and one for the decision of which no precedent was as far as I knew to be found in the records of the Senate, I asked for time to consider my decision; and the House was pleased to comply with my request.

The facts of the case, as far as they seem necessary to be considered with a view to dealing with the objection taken by the hon. gentleman from Killarney, are as follows.

On Thursday the nineteenth of May last the Senate resolved, on motion of the Hon. Mr. Domville, 'That a select committee of five be appointed to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada, with power to send for papers, persons, telegrams and records, to employ clerical services, and with leave to report from time to time, the committee to be composed of the Hon. Messrs. Legris, Baker, Cloran, Landry and the mover.'

The membership of the committee was afterwards increased by the Senate to nineteen.

The committee held many meetings, examined several witnesses and reported from time to time. Their reports included the evidence taken and, in some cases the minutes of the meetings of the committee. In the minutes submitted as part of the final report, as printed, is to be found the following record of the proceedings at the close of the meeting held on the twenty-second of July :

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I move that the committee rise and report the evidence.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I move in amendment, that Messrs. Cannon and Cameron be heard before this committee, in reference to the charge published in part one of the evidence taken herein, the two witnesses being in attendance.

The committee divided on amendment, which was lost on the following division :—

Contents, 3.
Non-contents, 7.

The motion to adjourn was carried on the same division reversed.

A reference to the original minutes made by the clerk of the committee shows that there are two errors in this record, which is made from the stenographer's notes, namely, that the words 'to the Senate' are omitted after 'evidence' in the motion of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona and that the motion carried is described as 'the motion to adjourn' instead of 'the main motion.'

The record made by the clerk of the committee, who is the Clerk of Routine and Proceedings of the Senate, is prima facie correct, and after due inquiry I am satisfied that it is absolutely so.

The question, then, which I am called upon to decide is whether or not the adoption of the motion that the committee rise and report the evidence to the Senate finally exhausted the powers of the select committee and precluded their meeting again without the intervention of the House.

It is a well recognized principle of parliamentary law that, unless where otherwise expressly provided, the procedure in a committee follows that of the appointing body.

The last mentioned authority, using language almost identical with that of Bourinot, gives the rule as follows :—'Committees are regarded as portions of the House, limited in their inquiries by the extent of the authority given them ; but governed in their proceedings by the same rules which prevail in the House, and which continue in full operation in every select committee.'

A motion that 'the chairman do now leave the chair' or that 'the committee rise,' if put and carried, ends the life of the committee.

Bourinot, page 523, sq. At page 524, Bourinot speaks of this motion as being equivalent in its effect to a motion for the adjournment of the House, which puts an end to the business before the chair.

The motion made and carried in this case is equivalent to the motion made in Committee of the Whole, that the committee rise and report the Bill or whatever other document may have been referred to that committee, which when adopted terminates the existence of the committee.

My opinion is that according to the practice which governs select committees the adoption of the motion of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona that the committee should rise and report the evidence, put an end to the existence of the committee and to the powers of the chairman, who could do nothing beyond reporting the evidence to the Senate as directed at the meeting of the twenty-second of July. Had the motion been, as the hon. chairman at one time alleged that it was, that the committee rise and report, the effect would, in my judgment, have been the same. Had the committee merely adjourned without day, it could not re-assemble without a special order of the House, which was not given. Clearly, then, the meeting held on Thursday, the twenty-eighth of July was not a meeting of the select committee, and the document presented to the Senate on Friday last, purporting to give the committee's finding on the evidence, was not a report of that committee.

I, therefore, decide that the point of order of the hon. gentleman from Killarney is well taken, and that, while the evidence reported on the 29th July in pursuance of the committee's resolution of the 22nd, is before the Senate, the document purporting to give the committee's finding is not, and should not appear in the Journals of the House.

The House will perhaps allow me to add a few observations, which while not absolutely necessary to the decision of the question which I have been called upon to answer may not be deemed irrelevant.

One is that the motion made in the committee, by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona and voted for by the majority of the members present, does not appear to have been passed, as has been suggested, under a misapprehension. The hon. mover of the resolution is an experienced and astute parliamentarian and is to be presumed to have clearly understood the effect of his motion. I have gone over the minutes of the committee and have found that in all cases but that of the twenty-second of July the committee adjourned to some fixed time.

At the time the motion was carried there were, as has been stated in the Senate without contradiction, two witnesses in attendance, whom the House had directed the committee to examine.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The question of order has been decided, and this is another question which the Speaker is bringing before the House.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I want to state my point of order.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Speaker must finish his decision first.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He gave us his decision. He is proceeding now to give a few observations——

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I protest against that——

The SPEAKER—This is relevant to the question.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We had never any occasion to discuss that question.

The SPEAKER—Had the committee not supposed that their functions ceased upon their rising, they would naturally have made arrangements for an early meeting so that the order of the Senate should be obeyed and the witnesses examined with the least practicable delay. As a matter of fact, the witnesses in question, the representatives of the insurance company and the principal counsel for the company all left Ottawa under the impression, that the proceedings of the committee had closed; and it was only after the lapse of six days that the members were again called together. I venture to mention these facts for the purpose of removing any impression which might exist in the mind of any hon. gentleman that advantage was being taken of an accidental mistake in technical procedure to thwart the committee and to defeat the ends of substantial justice.

Another observation is that the impression, which seems to exist in the minds of some hon. gentlemen, that the committee are bound to make a finding, is not well founded. The order of reference does not call for any report beyond the evidence. I do not mean that the committee could not have reported their views as to the effect of the evidence, but that there was no necessity for their doing so. In the case of the Cook charges investigated during the session of 1901, the language of the reference to the committee was, as to reporting, the same as in the present case; but the committee charged with the inquiry refrained from reporting their opinion on the evidence, on the ground that they had not been directed to make a finding.

The document which I have felt obliged to regard as not being a report, is a kind of precis of the evidence, made from the point of view of one of the parties contending in this case; and as the document is printed in our minutes, hon. gentlemen will not be seriously inconvenienced by my decision, even though they do not care to read the evidence at length for themselves, which in my humble judgment is the best way to appreciate it correctly. The ruling out of the committee's finding does not prevent this House from expressing any opinion it may entertain as to the Mutual Reserve Life Association of New York.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I should like to ask are there precedents for this decision?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I appeal from the decision of the Speaker to this House.

The SPEAKER—There can be no discussion on my decision.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, but I can appeal. I am not discussing it at all.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Is there nothing to be said?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, we cannot discuss an appeal.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—What is the appeal from?

The SPEAKER—The appeal is from the decision I have just rendered.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—We are to vote on the decision only?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes, on the decision.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is one point of the decision which I do not thoroughly understand. I understood the Speaker to decide that a motion to rise and report the evidence killed the committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Comparing that to a motion in Committee of the Whole to rise, a totally different thing.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I understood the words were 'rise and report.'

The SPEAKER—The hon. member from Stadacona has appealed from the decision of the chair. Those who are in favour of the appeal will please rise.

The Senate divided on the question, which was resolved in the negative by the following vote.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION COMMITTEE.

SEVENTH REPORT DEBATED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Consideration of the seventh report of the Select Committee appointed to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York.—(Hon. Mr. Cloran.)

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Before discussing this question, it might be important to find out whether the committee has any further functions to perform towards this honourable House.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I desire to remind the hon. gentleman, that it was understood that this would stand until the final report was taken into consideration.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I do not think there is any question of a final report. The final report is dead.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is also report No. 8, but the committee, according to the decision of the chair, which has been supported by this honourable House is dead. On the 22nd July, the committee ceased to have any existence.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I pointed out at the last meeting of this Honourable House that if the committee died on the 22nd July, the chairman shared the demise of the committee and died with it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. chairman is dead as a mackerel.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—As a committee have been buried by a first-class funeral just now, so that really I am in a quandary to know what to do under the circumstances. The Senate has put itself in a very awkward position with regard to this matter. Here is a committee which was appointed by this honourable House some three months ago, and to-day one-third of the House does not know where the committee stands. Two-thirds of the House tell us it is dead. There is the position, yet the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry has just mentioned to me that this report was to be taken into consideration with the final report. I have to say to the hon. gentleman that when that arrangement was made, it was not made to have it taken into joint consideration with the final report, but with the eighth report. This seventh report was made on the 14th of July. We had no idea at that time, when the committee would adjourn. I really do not know whether to proceed with the consideration of this report. It has been on the minutes and on the Orders of the Day for nearly three weeks, two weeks at least, and it was a very important matter to have been decided by this honourable House. The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry objected to strong evidence against the management of the company going into the record. The decision was given against him, and the hon. gentleman appealed from the decision of the chairman to the committee, and the decision of the chairman was there upheld by a majority.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I rise to a point of order. We are here in this Senate a living body. We have no voice from the other side of the bar, and no defunct voice has a right to be heard here. If that committee is dead, we should not hear its voice speaking among the living. I therefore call upon the chair to kindly decide that the hon. gentleman is out of order, the committee being a defunct body, and having no existence in fact. The committee is non est, because they have to all intents and purposes passed to the other side; can their spirits be heard in this chamber ?

The SPEAKER—Although the committee is dead, the chairman is not dead, and the chairman was instructed by the committee, not exactly in their last will and testament, to report certain things to the House, and as he is here alive, as a member of the House, he is quite capable of reporting.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—If the committee is dead, I do not see where the chairman can be. He certainly must have a sort of double existence, if he can now address the House. We are told that the committee is dissolved; that the committee is dead. Yet we materialize the chairman and say that he can come here and make a report.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The chairman would remain as the executor of the committee, and he would have a right to carry out their last will and testament.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—He had authority from the committee before it expired, but as it became functus officio before he was clothed with that authority, he cannot come here now and exercise that authority.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If I am not mistaken, the report that is now on the order paper is the last report of the committee. It is not the report which was declared to be out of order. The eighth report was declared out of order, but the seventh report is all right.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman is discussing a report which is still quite alive.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Permit me to explain what I consider to be the position of this question now. The chairman of the committee reported on the 18th of July, this seventh report, and also the eighth report.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—No, on the 19th, they made the 8th report.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—These reports were taken possession of by the House, and the House decided that they would be set down for consideration at certain dates. Afterwards it was understood by the House that all the reports could be taken into consideration with the final report, but that is not what I wish to explain. It is the fact that whether the committee is dead or alive, the House being in possession of the reports have the right to deal with them as they see fit. As to the final report of the committee, according to the ruling of the Speaker, sustained by the House, it is the report which was ordered to be made on the 22nd, and that was, that the committee rise and report the evidence. That report should be and is, in the possession of the House. We have very frequently this experience. The committee may be dead, but the actions which arise from the result of its work being in possession of the House, the House deals with it as it thinks fit.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Perhaps the hon. gentleman wants to kill that report too.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—In answer to the point of order raised by the hon. gentleman from Acadie, the hon. Speaker stated that although the committee was defunct, the chairman was still alive, because the committee had instructed him to report the evidence. As chairman of that committee, I am obliged to state that when the motion was put by the chair on the 22nd of July, notwithstanding the incorrect report of the stenographer——

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I rise to a point of order. I should like to ask the hon. Speaker what is before the Senate?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am discussing the point of order. I am leading up to the subject.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I know of no point of order raised.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The point of order raised by the hon. gentleman from Acadie (Hon. Mr. Poirier).

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—And decided.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—And it has been decided.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—There is no room for discussion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The motion is, the consideration of the 7th report of the committee.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If the hon. gentleman from Toronto will take it easy, he will have a full explanation of the matter. The hon. Speaker stated in answer to the point of order raised by the hon. gentleman from Acadie, that although the committee was dead, the chairman was still alive, because the committee has instructed him to report the evidence to this House. Now, as a question of fact, the motion put to the committee, instructing the chairman to make the report, was that the committee do now rise and report. The hon. Speaker in his very careful and elaborate study of the point of order, said this to justify his opinion, because he could not pass an opinion upon this subject without going into the facts, and ascertaining the facts as they existed. The hon. Speaker said that 'after inquiry I find the report of the clerk of the committee absolutely correct.' Now that is a question of fact. Where was the inquiry made. Was it made among the majority of the senators who composed that committee ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is reflecting on the decision of the chair, and I hold he has no right to do that.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—There is no reflection.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—On the contrary I have eulogized the Speaker on his elaborate discussion of the matter.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—He has no right to comment on the decision.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—This is not a living person who is speaking, but it is one from the other world, and when such persons take the trouble to come back to the other world, they should have privileges which are not accorded to those who are living.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is a great deal of reverence due to a corpse.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I should like to get through with this matter. I have been bothered with points of order and objections of all kinds.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am quite prepared to close the matter. It it no pleasure to me to have to deal with it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—And in discussing this 7th report of the committee——

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—What is the order ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The point of order has been raised, that the hon. gentleman has no right to discuss the decision of the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. senator has not kept his ears open.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I have.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have abandoned that matter, out of courtesy to the hon. member from de Salaberry, and if the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie had listened, instead of filling his ears with points of order, he would have heard it.

As chairman of that committee, I say the committee has been hampered largely by objections. One of the most serious objections was to evidence necessary for the full comprehension of the merits of the company, and of the claims of the policy-holders, and that objection was raised by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry. He made a fierce protest against allowing that evidence to go in. No doubt he thought he was doing right, but the majority of the committee thought otherwise. I decided against the objection and my decision was sustained by the majority of the committee, and from that decision he has appealed to this House. What is this House going to do in the matter ? Have they the information necessary to enable them to give their best judgment on the action taken by the committee? This honourable House entrusted a very grave duty to that committee. and, notwithstanding the taunts and flaunts thrown at them, they have performed their duty fairly, fearlessly and honestly. We have been met with all kinds of legal talent from Toronto to New York. The best legal talent that Canada and United States can produce was put up against the single attorney of the committee, to prevent evidence damaging to the company from going on record. This seventh report deals specially with one of these great efforts made by the attorneys on that committee, who did not want the evidence to go in. I do not say that they were the attorneys of the company on these occasions, but, as a matter of fact, the best legal talent on that committee put obstructions at all times, in the way of technicalities, against admitting some of the evidence, just as if the majority of that committee were not as capable of judging as any individual member of the committee, what evidence should be taken. The majority did not want evidence that could be considered calumnious. We admitted evidence that would tend to show how the affairs of the company were administered. No man was standing there on trial for his life. I held before the committee, and have held here, the testimoney of credible witnesses should have been admitted. We know how difficult it is to get at the affairs of a company if you are to be blocked by legal technicalities. We could not get one line out of their books, because the man who entered the items in the book would not be there. Another clerk would be brought and asked if these items were in the book, and he would reply yes. Then the friends of the company would ask immediately 'did you write them yourself,' and on his replying in the negative, they would object to his evidence. If obstructions of that kind are to be thrown in the way of taking evidence there is no use in making an investigation. The members of the committee were quite capable of weighing and gauging evidence submitted to them. We could tell when a man was lying or not lying, and to interpose legal technicalities was to pervert the object for which the committee was appointed. No doubt it was the right of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry to object as he did, but when a majority of the committee decided against him, it was not proper on his part to appeal to this House against that decision, when the House is not in possession of all the details and points necessary to come to a conclusion. On these grounds, I ask that this seventh report be adopted as it is, and that the decision of the committee in regard to that branch of the evidence be maintained by this House.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The seventh report, which is now before the House has reference to a motion which was made by myself before the committee, that the resolution passed by this honourable Senate be carried out, to wit, that two witnesses, one Cameron and one Cannon be examined by the committee.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is not the question at all.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The evidence in part five is referred to.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is there in report number seven on that subject ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I was in error.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The motion before the Senate is for the adoption of the seventh report. I want to know what there is in number seven that we have to adopt ? The question the hon. gentleman is discussing is not referred to in this report at all.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Report number seven covers part five of the evidence. The objection that was taken, and the appeal is against receiving evidence to be found on pages 30 and 31, of part five.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That was not the appeal at all.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The point for which number seven of the evidence was held over was to consider whether the evidence objected to in part five should be received or not.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The appeal from the committee is against a decision of the chairman on an objection that my motion in the committee was not in order. The chairman decided that it was in order.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I should like to refer to page 772 of the Debates, where it will be found that when this matter came up, to wit, my appeal from the decision of the committee, I asked that it be allowed to stand until the report of the committee was taken up, and there ensued some discussion on my motion. On page 774 it will be found that the motion was agreed to, and therefore it was decided by the House that this question would be considered only when the matter of the final report was considered, that is when the evidence would be taken up, because it is connected with the evidence.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Where does the hon. gentleman find the word 'final' ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I ask that this motion be allowed to stand until the report of the committee was taken up.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman did not say the final report. There might be ten reports.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I think I would have to refer to another page which I cannot put my hands on at this moment, but I am perfectly sure the matter came up on a subsequent occasion, and on the suggestion of both the Secretary of State and the leader of the opposition the matter was deferred until the final report was taken up, and I hope both the Secretary of State and the leader of the opposition will bear me out in my statement.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I made the statement.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—According to the decision of the Speaker, the eighth report, which was presented the other day, was the last legal report printed. That is the one on which is to be discussed, not the seventh.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I thought if the point of order was maintained that it would entail another report from the chairman of the committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—That the chairman of the committee would have to report the evidence pursuant to the motion of the 22nd of July, but I understand that the ruling of the chair is that all that was rejected was the finding in the report of the 28th; but as the report of the 28th brought in the proceedings of the 22nd, that these proceedings would remain on the table, and therefore it amounts to a report of the proceedings of the 22nd.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Oh, no, I did not think that.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I should like to be corrected by the chair if my understanding is not correct?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I would certainly decline to bring in a report prepared by any one outside of the committee.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If I am in error, we would have to wait until the chairman of the committee formally reports, in accordance with the motion of the hon. member from Stadacona, to wit, that the evidence be reported to this honourable House; but, anyway, in one case as in the other, it is premature to take this seventh report into consideration, because it was agreed unanimously by this House that it was to be taken into consideration only when the evidence is taken up.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—The hon. gentleman from de Salaberry says that the chairman of the committee is to bring in a final report, and he is waiting until that final report is handed in. The hon. gentleman further says that with the exception of the chairman, the committee is dead. Will he explain to me on what authority the chairman remains a member of that committee? He says the chairman is to frame a report. In my simplicity, I understood that the chairman was to prepare a report, but that it must be submitted to the committee, and the committee should decide whether it was a report which should be brought before the Senate. How can the chairman do that? The chairman has no power any longer to call the committee together; therefore he cannot submit a report to the House. You may move a resolution or take a vote on the seventh report, but what you call the final report is an impossibility under existing circumstances. When we ceased to exist as a committee, the chairman no longer had power to prepare a report. I contend, therefore, that the course taken by the hon. gentleman is illogical, and I do not think on mature consideration he will continue to follow it any longer.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman has spoken already.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman has put a question, and I wish to answer it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman has already spoken.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—In answer to the question of the hon. senator from St. Thomas (Hon. Mr. Wilson) as to how the chairman of the committee can make a report, permit me to point out that the report that was ordered to be presented by the chairman is the evidence, and if the committee could meet they surely would not deal with the evidence otherwise than to report it in its entirety to the House. That is the report which the House will have to deal with—the whole of the evidence unimpaired presented to the House by the chairman, in obedience to the order of the committee of 22nd of July. There is no complication whatever, so far as I can see.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—As a matter of fact, as long as the seventh report is up for consideration, logically neither the committee, nor the chairman of the committee can present a final report. Suppose the House sustains the objection of the hon. gentleman from de Salabery and strikes out the evidence referred to, how can I bring in a report? The action to-night is illogical and uncalled for. Here is, as a matter of fact, the seventh report, and no committee can bring in their final report when it is still in the power of the House to order that a portion of the report be struck out.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The hon. gentleman is not logical. Any report of a committee may be amended. The House has full power to amend.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Suppose the House order the committee to strike out the evidence, the report would have to be referred back to the committee with instructions to that effect.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Not at all.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—To understand the question before the House, we had better see what is the last report of the committee which is struck out by the Speaker's decision. You will see it contains two things. The report is dated the 28th July and is as follows :

The Select Committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York, beg leave to make their ninth and final report, as follows :—

1. In obedience to the order of your honourable House made on the 19th May, 1904. your committee have investigated the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York.

2. Your committee find the following irregularities in the management of the affairs of the company :—

3. Fictitious payments of renewal and commuted commissions in sworn reports to Insurance Departments.

J. T. Paterson, No. 5, pp. 62, 63, 64, 65. Exhibit No. 42, No. 5, p. 59.

The only conclusion which can be drawn from Exhibit No. 42 (No. 5, p. 59), which is nowhere explained or contradicted in the evidence, is that from 1897 to 1903, both inclusive, renewal commissions alleged to have been paid, amounting to over $200,000, were fictitious.

The company also claim to have paid during the same years $311,166.67 in commuted commissions. Payment of commuted commissions should reduce the renewal commissions ; here, notwithstanding the large payment of commuted commissions the renewal commissions were increased, with a much smaller amount of insurance in force.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I rise to a point of order. This document which the hon. gentleman is reading from is no longer a report. By the ruling of the Speaker and the action of the House in sustaining that ruling. I submit it is no longer before the House and should not be read.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I never said it was before the House. I wanted to point out in reading the report, that it contains two suggestions quite different, and that we are discussing questions here which would be better discussed if we knew what the report was.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It has no reference to the report at all.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It has. Let me read from the report. It says :

4. Allowing one Moton D. Moss and other agents to misappropriate the funds of the company.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER—I do not think the hon. gentleman from Stadacona reads this as a report. He reads it as a document which was read in the House. I think the hon. gentleman is within his rights. He makes it part of his speech.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—This document proceeds :

J. M. Stevenson, No. 2, pp. 13, 14.

J. D. Wells, No. 4, pp. 72, 73, 74. (contracts pp. 75, 78). (No. 4, p. 80, Moss poor). (No. 5, pp. 80, 81. no vouchers). ($250,000 due by Moss, No. 4. p. 81, N.Y. Brockway, hotel-keeper, on pay-roll for $300 per week for $6,000 loaned Burnham by him, No. 4, pp. 99, 100.

No. 8, p. 26 (p. 20, Payn's Report, 1899). Chief examiner says : 'from 1881 to time when Moss contract was executed, in sixteen years, total agents' balances created amounted to $529,-459.93.'

In eighteen months during Moss contract, from January, 1897, to July, 1898, agents' balances of nominal value only were created amounting to $244,954.07.

Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 3, pp. 30, 31, Merriam, $211,000. ($482,421.50 agents' balances of no value, No. 3, pp. 31, 32, 33). (No. 4, pp. 41, 43. $50,000 profit on Moss). (No. 5, p. 134, assets decreased up to December 31st, 1901, $999,422.70). No. 5, pp. 132-134, total written off in six years, $1,-048,367.37. Brockway on pay-roll, No. 8, pp. 44, 45.

5. When serious charges were made against officers of company—making large payments out of company's funds rather than go into the charges.

(On General Tracy charges, $15,000 paid, No. 4, pp. 109, 110).

(J. D. Wells arrested for libel by company, No. 4, pp. 115, 116, all cost paid by company and suits discontinued).

5, p. 32). (Alleged libel, No. 5, p. 29, &c.) Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 3, p. 5.

6. Extravagance and overstating commissions paid agents.

Inter alia Geo. D. Eldridge, vice-president, reported that $500,000 per annum could be saved, but such savings were not made, No. 4, p. 97.

J. T. Paterson, No. 5, p. 51, increase in expenses with less business. (No. 5, pp. 52 to 58. Cost of new business in Mutual Reserve and comparative statements).

(No. 5, p. 59, exhibit 42. In 1899 and 1898, during Moss regime, $259,231 more paid in commissions, &c., than in the two previous years, while business written was $44,502,945 less, and insurance in force decreased $55,000,000). (Alleged payment of renewal commissions an impossibility, No. 5, pp. 62, 63, 64).

7. Contradictory statements.

J. M. Stevenson, No. 20, p. 6; E. Pendleton, No. 5, p. 110; both contradict Geo. D. Eldridge, who says he did not ask Stevenson to remain with company, nor agree to continue his salary while away. No. 3, p. 61.

(Statement to Senate, p. 12: 'Absolutely untrue as charged that the late president willed any proxies to Burnham'). (No. 2, p. 49, 'Harper will' assigns all proxies to Burnham).

J. T. Paterson.—Difference in sworn reports filed in Canada and in New York with Insurance Departments. (No. 5, pp. 39-42). By statute they should be alike, No. 5, p. 38. Scaled down claims all left out of Canadian report, 1901.

8. Overstatement of assets, &c., in sworn reports to Insurance Department and in circulars.

J. T. Paterson, No. 5, pp. 23-24, exhibit No. 34. Invested assets overstated by $13,150,124.23; insurance in force overstated by $35,732,626; new business overstated by $11,570,171, in circulars, as compared with reports to Insurance Department. Deferred premiums, No. 5, p. 80; Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 3, p. 57, $506,000 excess of liabilities Mutual Reserve Building, $483,000 of this, No. 3, p. 20. Deferred premiums and liens called assets as well, and are also very doubtful.

9. Overstating insurance in force in sworn reports to Insurance Departments—improperly ignoring liens on policies.

J. M. Stevenson, No. 2, p. 5. No. 2, pp. 7, 8, 9, 10.

J. D. Wells, No. 4, p. 71.

J. T. Paterson, No. 5, pp. 23, 24, 25.

Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 2, p. 60. No. 3, pp. 13, 14. case referred by Geo. D. Eldridge affords no support whatever to his contention). (No. 3, p. 15. No. 3, p. 72. Dennis vs. Mass., Benefit, 120 N.Y. vide No. 4, p. 69, &c.) No. 4, pp. 11, 12, 13, 15. (No. 4, p. 19, telegram sent by Eldridge months before he knew of the transaction to which it relates).

10 Mortuary funds improperly used for expenses.

'The Insurance Act, sec. 39, ss. 5, is as follows:—

'5. No portion of any moneys received from assessments for death claims shall be used for any expense whatever.'

J. M. Stevenson, No. 2, pp. 4, 5, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 33, 34.

J. D. Wells, No. 4, p. 104.

J. T. Paterson, No. 5, p. 52. Exhibit No 39, $4,658,555.62 of mortuary funds used for expenses.

Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 4, pp. 10, 11.

11. Liens placed on policies and called assets in sworn reports to Insurance Departments, when they were not assets.

J. T. Paterson, No. 5, pp. 44, 45. If liens paid in cash, company insolvent). Liens only bookkeeping, No. 5, p. 49. Notes referred to not negotiatable and not a liability of insured, No. 5, p. 48.

Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 2, pp. 60, 61, 62. ($2,500,000 without consent of assured, No. 2, p. 63). No. 5, pp. 126, 127.

12. Unfair treatment of fifteen-year class.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Dispense! Dispense!

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am arriving at the crucial point. The document proceeds:

J. T. Paterson, No. 5, pp. 16, 17, separate classes made with increased cost to fifteen-year members). No new business added to fifteen-year class after 1890, No. 5, p. 19). (And by selection against the company, No. 5, p. 69, cost of insurance to this class abnormally increased).

Edmund Pendleton, No. 5, pp. 107, 108, 109.

Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 5, p. 124. Not in separate class. By the table of rates of the Mutual Reserve now in force adopted 1889, the members of the fifteen-year class are now paying on an average 30 per cent more (Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 8, p. 39) than the rates provided for in Bill (H), sec. 3, ss. (c), which the company admit is sufficient to carry all classes.

'(c.) The holder of any such assessment policy shall have the right to continue his said policy for the full amount thereof as a yearly renewable term policy upon which the premiums shall not exceed the net yearly natural premiunms for the attained age of the insured calculated upon the basis of the mortality table and rate of interest aforesaid with a loading of 5 per cent for expenses.'

13. Change in Moss contract by Burnham. Neither explained nor contradicted in evidence.

J. D. Wells, No. 4, pp. 81, 82, 83.

The contract in 1897, referred to, must, under the constitution and by-laws of the association, be executed by the executive committee, and could not be made by the president alone. Any secret material change or modification of that contract after its execution by the proper officers of the association, as made by the substitution of the middle sheet of that contract, would amount to the crime of forgery committed by all parties participating in the fraudulent substitution of such sheet.

14. Payments to President Burnham of commissions under Harper contract and contingent fund.

J. M. Stevenson, No. 2, p. 15.

Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 2, p. 45, &c., (No. 4, p. 50, $60,000 salary to Burnham). (No. 4, p. 52, $200 per week paid extra).

15. Refusal to state salaries and other remuneration of officers and office employees in detail and misstating same.

Gross salaries in sworn reports every year. (Refusal to show chairman of the executive committee pay-rolls. No. 4, p. 5. No. 4, p. 144. Although it was the executive committee's duty to fix salaries). (No. 5, p. 50, actuarial expenses increased from $14,227, in 1896, to $31,449, in 1903, and not included in salaries to officers or employees).

Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 2, p. 67 ; No. 3, p. 3 ; Geo. D. Eldridge examined by Hon. Mr. Landry, No. 5, p. 60. (G. D. E., No. 4, p. 50, $60,000 per annum paid to Burnham not excessive). (No. 4, p. 68. No other compensation to officers and office employees). (No. 5, p. 129, actuarial expenses, No. 5, p. 130).

16. Transfers from class to class put in sworn report as new business, and full commissions paid twice.

J. M. Stevenson, No. 2, p. 5.

Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 4, p. 9.

17. Made a contract for purchase of Provincial Provident Institution, and after transfer made escaped payment of upwards of $100,000 by claiming that contract was illegal.

$12,000 paid on account. Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 8, p. 46 ; No. 3, pp. 50, 51, 52 ; No. 3, pp. 29, 30 ; No. 3, pp. 23, 24.

18. Rates charged amply sufficient with proper management.

J. T. Paterson, No. 5, p. 12. (Bankers' Life with less cost to insured had admitted assets in 1902 of $4,798,333.14. They were organized 1879, twenty-five years ago). (No. 5, p. 66, Mutual Reserve in 1901, only $2,611,790.19 admitted assets, with much higher cost). (No liens in Bankers' Life, No. 5, p. 13). (Low expenses in Bankers' Life, No. 5, pp. 12, 71). Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 2, p. 58 ; No. 5, p. 141. Attempt to explain low expenses Bankers' Life).

Thos. Bradshaw, No. 8, p. 47, &c., actuary Imperial Life ; John Culbert, No. 8, p. 58, manager Mutual Life of New York at Ottawa, both prove that the best old line companies furnish insurance at less cost than the Mutual Reserve charged in 1889.

19. Claims compromised or scaled down.

(J. T. Paterson, No. 5, pp. 72, 73, 1901. 324 polices about 50 per cent paid). Not included in Canadian report as by law required, No. 5, p. 73. (No. 5, p. 76. Reasons).

Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 4, p. 40 ; No. 5, pp. 136, 139. Canadian claims scaled down ; no names or numbers of policies given as promised, therefore exhibit is of no value.

20. Evidence uncontradicted of payments made to obtain the modification of a report of the Insurance Department of the state of New York.

($40,000, borrowed, No. 4, p. 107). (Brockway on pay-roll for $300 per week. No. 4, pp. 99, 100).

J. D. Wells lent $5,570, No. 4, p. 107.

21 Resignations of officers, &c., and reasons for same.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Dispense. The hon. gentleman is reading a report which has been declared out of order, and which is subsequent to the report that is now under discussion. By virtue of what rule can the hon. gentleman read a report which has been rejected by this House, as a part of the argument on the preceding report ? If it is simply for the purpose of having it appear in the debates, it seems to me that is out of order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I tell the hon. gentleman it is not out of order at all, because I am just coming to that portion of the report, which strikes at the objection made by the hon. gentleman who spoke before me.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The hon. gentleman has been coming to that point so often, that we are getting impatient. The question before the House is, the seventh report of the Select Committee that refers especially and specifically to a certain question, and I submit that the hon. gentleman in reading this charge, or whatever you like to call it—it is not a report of any committee, because that has been decided upon, and declared to be something else than a report, therefore he is reading extraneous matter, outside of the question before the House, and, at this hour of the night, I think it is only fair and reasonable that he should come to the question directly before the chair, that is the seventh report of the Mutual Reserve Committee. In all reason, our procedure here should be guided, to some extent, by the procedure which governs a deliberative body, and he should confine himself to the subject-matter of the seventh report of that committee, and that only, and I submit, Mr. Sepaker, the point of order is well taken.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The point raised is, that I cannot read this document because it is not germane to the discussion now proceeding. It was asserted here that the seventh report of the committee should be taken into consideration only when the final report would be taken into consideration. I am reading the final report to show——

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—No.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentlemen do not know what I am going to say, and they say 'no.'

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The hon. gentleman says it is the final report.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I said I was reading the final report.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—No, the hon. gentleman was not. The House decidedly pronounced upon that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Well, this document was read in this House. It was read at the table of the House the other day, and we have it in our minutes.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It is expunged.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It was received by the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The report proceeds :

J. T. Paterson, 1896, No. 5, p. 21. (Resignation.)
J. M. Stevenson, No. 2, pp. 1, 6, 15. (Burnham agreed to resign ; J. D. Wells, No. 4, pp. 90, 91, 110, 111). Letter J. D. Wells to Burnham, No. 4 p. 92, &c. (No. 4, p. 108, four resignations). (Wells' resignation, No. 4, p. 112.
(J. T. Paterson asked by President to make false statements, No. 5 p. 20).
Geo. D. Eldridge, No. 2, pp. 51, 52, 53, 54, 55. (Vrooman letter, No. 2, p. 66). Vrooman letter proved. No. 5 p. 3.
22. The notice to produce served on the company was not complied with.

Your committee submit herewith copies of the evidence.

Then the final clause of the report reads as follows :—

Your committee submit herewith copies of the evidence of each of the witnesses examined on oath before them, together with all documents and papers produced before your committee, and a copy of the minutes of the proceedings of your committee.
All of which is respectfully submitted.
H. J. CLORAN,
Chairman.

By the last clause of the report the chairman of the committee, in the report that has been ruled out of order——

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—That is not before the House now.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—On the point of order, it has been rejected ; but it is that report which was rejected, which contains the evidence.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The report says :—

The committee submit herewith copies of the evidence.

It is that report that was brought in with the part which I read that submitted also the evidence.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—My hon. friend will surely be reasonable. The discussion which is now raised in the House may be proper when the evidence is being discussed. I do not say that it is, but it would certainly be more proper then than now. We have only now before us the specific report made on a subject-matter which occurred in the committee, in which the committee came to the House and asked for a direction, and the report, by unanimous consent—at least by understanding—was to be taken into consideration with the final report, when the evidence was being considered by the House and the verdict of the House was to be given on the evidence.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The evidence is in.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Therefore this report which was ruled out and never received by the House, is not here.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the hon. gentleman say that the evidence is not before this House ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—No, I do not say that at all. It is not on the order paper for discussion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But it was this informal report that brought in the evidence, and this informal report was ruled out of order. Either we have the evidence here in the regular way or we have not. If we have the evidence here in an irregular way, it is time for us to discuss the seventh report because there was an understanding. By virtue of this understanding we were to discuss the seventh report when the evidence would be brought in, and an objection was made, asking me to delay the discussion another day, because, it was stated, it would come in properly at the final report. What is the final report ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—My hon. friend is too old a parliamentarian not to know that the House would have to set the time when the evidence would be considered. The House has not, so far as I have been able to observe the procedure, set down any time for a discussion of the evidence. If both my hon. friends will agree with me, that before the evidence could be discussed, a motion would have to be made that the House consider the matter, after due notice, and that is not before us to-day.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—When does the hon. gentleman want to discuss that question ?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It is set down for tomorrow. The hon. gentleman is anticipating.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I find it is not set down.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It might be set down now.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The motion was made on Friday that it be set down for Tuesday.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is not on the order paper.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—If it is the desire of the House to take up the question now, I am going to move an amendment to the motion of the hon. gentleman, but I thought it my duty to call the attention of the House to the understanding arrived at the other day, and I am in the hands of the House. I drew attention to the fact that it was understood the other day that this seventh report would be taken up when the evidence was taken up, but if it is the desire to dispose of this matter at once I am ready to move an amendment to the motion which has been offered by the hon. gentleman from Victoria division, so that we may proceed at once with the matter, and dispose of it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I think it is very desirable that we should for the credit of the House, try and complete this matter in some shape or form. My view is—taking into consideration the decision of the chair—that when that committee rose on the 22nd, and instructed the chairman to report the evidence to the House, that the chairman had that duty to discharge, and I find that he has discharged that duty, and also that he has done a good deal more than that, which he was not authorized to do, and my view is that that document—I think we must call it a document at present—has not been declared out of order. It is simply the findings in that document that have been declared to be out of order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman is changing the decision.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is my view of it. I do not know whether it will be sustained by the House or by the Speaker, but my view is that this report after the word 'New York,' on page 622, is all right, and it would read in this way :

The Select Committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York, beg leave to make their ninth and final report, as follows :—

1. In obedience to the order of your honourable House made on 19th May, 1904, your committee have investigated the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York.

Up to that point the report is carrying out the instructions to the committee. The chairman was not instructed to report upon all those findings, and they are expunged, under the ruling of the chair. Then page 625, after the line which reads :

The notice to produce served on the company.

The last paragraph is all right. It reads as follows :—

Your committee submit herewith copies of the evidence of each of the witnesses examined on oath before them, together with all documents and papers produced before your committee, and a copy of the minutes of the proceedings of your committee.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

H. J. CLORAN,
Chairman.

But the chairman has done something more than was proper, and it has been ruled out of order. That which I have read to the House should appear, and the rest of the report should be expunged.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The Speaker decided that the whole of the report should be struck out.

The SPEAKER—The conclusion I reached reads as follows :—

I therefore decide that the point of order of the hon. gentleman from Killarney is well taken, and that, while the evidence reported on the 29th July, in pursuance of the committee's resolution of the 22nd, is before the Senate, the document purporting to give the committee's finding is not, and should not appear in the journals of the House.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—That is clear.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I understand that it is the desire of this honourable House to dispose of this incident which is referred to in the seventh report of the Select Committee, and I have a few remarks to offer in support of a motion in amendment which I propose to make to the motion which was made a moment ago by the hon. gentleman from Victoria. The amendment reads as follows :—

That all the words after the word 'that' be struck out, and that the following words be substituted therefor :—'That the document exhibit No. 36 mentioned in said 7th report, is not admissible as evidence of any statement therein contained, and should be expunged from the evidence.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Too late.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I hope the hon. gentleman will allow me to address this honourable House. The document in question will be found in Part 5, page 29 to page 37 of the printed report of the evidence. This was produced when a witness named J. T. Paterson was examined. It is a libel which was published in 1900 by the witness against——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has already spoken once.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—He did, and when I made the objection just now, he sat down, because he had already spoken once.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Let me explain. I got up merely to call the attention of the House to the fact that this matter was to be taken up only when the evidence was being considered. I did not speak to the motion at all. I merely rose for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is speaking, and I ask the ruling of the chair.

The SPEAKER—I do not think that should be considered as speaking.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We shall show the hon. Speaker to the contrary to-morrow. If a man rises and seconds a motion it is speaking.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Is it conducive to the dignity of this honourable body to have hon. gentlemen make such assertions? It seems to me we should abide by the standing rules.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—J. T. Paterson was being examined, and he was asked by the counsel of the committee to offer in evidence the document which is printed on pages 29 to 37 of part five of the evidence before the House. This document was published in the 'Counselor' in 1900, an insurance paper which he then published in the city of New York, and the witness being under examination, it would have been proper for the committee, or the counsel of the committee, to prove all the charges that the witness was in a position to prove. If there was in that document any charge which he was in a position to prove, we have a right to expect that the counsel of the committee, or members of the committee, would have questioned the witness, and made him say that such and such things, such irregularity or such act of mismanagement had been committed by the officers of the company. If hon. gentlemen will refer to the evidence, I challenge any member of the committee to point to any portion of it where there was any attempt on the part of that witness to substantiate any part of that document. It was merely brought in because it had appeared in a paper published by that very witness, in the city of New York, and, surely, it cannot be treated as evidence. It is no evidence at all. If a document of that kind was allowed to be produced as evidence, any document could be produced as evidence, and surely it would be unbecoming on the part of this honourable House to allow anything of the kind to be done. We are part of the first legislative body of this country, and I think that when we make an investigation it is incumbent upon us, it is incumbent upon the committee to act, I do not say strictly according to the rules of evidence, but with some decorum, and with some sense of the responsibility of this honourable House, and of the committees appointed by this honourable House, and I say that the committee had no right to allow this document to be put on its minutes, and it would be unbecoming on the part of the Senate to countenance any document of the kind being placed on its minutes. Suppose that, instead of us having to deal with this company, we had to deal with any other company—take the Canada Life, the Sun Life Insurance Company, or any other company—suppose to-morrow I would rise in my place and move that an investigation be held against that company, would it be pretended that it would be open to me or to any member of the committee to place before the committee as evidence any newspaper article which had been published, possibly for the purpose of levying blackmail against the company. Surely not. The committee or the counsel of the committee was at liberty to prove the charges that he intended to prove, but he could not prove charges by merely filing a document of that kind without asking any questions to confirm the charges. I therefore move that this document, Exhibit 36, referred to in the seventh report, be not accepted as evidence of any statement therein contained, and that it should be expunged from the evidence.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has given a notice of motion, that when that question comes before this House, he would move such and such an amendment. Now he is making a flank movement. He is abandoning the position he took, and he is trying to take us by surprise, bringing in a new motion without any notice at all. I claim that this is not in order. The hon. gentleman having given a notice of motion must abide by the notice he gave, and not abandon it and come in with a new motion.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I submit the point of order is badly taken for two reasons: because this matter has been taken up by unanimous consent of the House, contrary to the understanding arrived at on a previous day, and my motion was allowed to stand because I expected that this matter would come up to-morrow as was intended, according to the motion which was made on Friday. While this is a reason which to my mind is sufficient, still there is a better reason than that. My notice of motion had merely reference to an appeal from the decision of the hon. member who acted as chairman of that committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Which is the subject of this report.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It is an appeal. The notice of motion has reference merely to a motion made by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, which I contend was not in order but has no reference to the matter now under consideration. Even if my appeal was sustained, it would not reject this Bill of complaints at all. The effect of the appeal of which I gave notice would not cause the document to be rejected. But we are not dealing with that appeal at all. We are dealing merely with the merits of the report. The subject matter is the report which the hon. member for Victoria has moved—the motion that the seventh report be adopted, and surely it is open to any hon. member of this House to move an amendment when such a motion is made that such and such a document, the document being the one referred to, be rejected from the evidence.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is anticipating a debate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is only a matter of ascertaining what position we are in. Is this an amendment to the motion which has been made by the hon. senator from Victoria? I understand his motion is for the adoption of the seventh report. The motion made by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken deals altogether with the fifth report.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is germane to the seventh report.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the seventh report refer to that document?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Page 524 of the minutes of proceedings.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am merely rising to ask for information, and I am interrupted first by the Secretary of State and then by the hon. gentleman from Victoria, and then somebody at this end of the chamber interrupts, so that we are really getting into such a disorderly state that we do not know what we are doing. What I want to know is this: the motion by the hon. senator from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Cloran) is for the adoption of the seventh report—am I correct?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The amendment of the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry (Hon. Mr. Béique) is to strike out a portion of the fifth part of the evidence. Is the amendment relevant to the motion to adopt the report?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If so, the amendment may be moved. Was this evidence, to which exception is taken, given before the committtee, and was it accepted as evidence? If so, then it is a part of the record of that committee, whether it is right or wrong. I can understand my hon. friend from de Salaberry taking objection to evidence before a court which would not be inadmissable if taken in a committee. If he will take the trouble to consult parliamentary authority he will find it laid down distinctly and positively that a committee
