THE DEBATES

OF THE

SENATE OF CANADA

IN THE

FOURTH SESSION OF THE NINTH PARLIAMENT OF CANADA, APPOINTED TO MEET FOR THE DESPATCH OF BUSINESS ON THURSDAY, THE TENTH DAY OF MARCH, IN THE FOURTH YEAR OF THE REIGN OF

HIS MAJESTY KING EDWARD VII.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, March 10, 1904

The Senate met at 2.30 p.m.

PRAYERS.

USHER OF THE BLACK ROD.

The Speaker informed the Senate that he had received an extract from a report of the Committee of the Honourable, the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency on March 1, 1904, showing that Captain Ernest J. Chambers had been appointed Usher of the Black Rod.

NEW SENATOR.

Hon. William Mitchell, of Drummondville, Ont., for the Electoral Division of Wellington.

THE OPENING.

The Chief Justice of Canada, Deputy Governor General, being seated at the foot of the Throne.

The Speaker commanded the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod to proceed to the House of Commons and acquaint that House that :—

It is the Deputy Governor's desire that they attend him immediately in the Senate.

Who being come,

The Speaker said,

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I have it in command to let you know that His Excellency the Governor General does not see fit to declare the causes of his summoning the present parliament of Canada until the Speaker of the House of Commons shall have been chosen according to law ; but, to-morrow, at the hour of three o'clock in the afternoon, His Excellency will declare the causes of the calling of this parliament.

The Honourable the Deputy Governor was pleased to retire and the House of Commons withdrew.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Friday, March 11, 1904.

The Speaker took the chair at 2.30 p.m.

PRAYERS.

THE SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

This day, at Three o'clock p.m., His Excellency the Governor General proceeded in state to the Senate Chamber, in the Parliament Buildings, and took his seat upon the Throne. The Senators being assembled, His Excellency was pleased to command the attendance of the House of Commons. The Members of that body, preceded by their Speaker, the Honourable Napoléon Antoine Belcourt, appeared at the Bar. The Honourable Napoléon Antoine Belcourt, then informed His Excellency that the choice of the House of Commons had fallen upon him to be their Speaker.

After which His Excellency was pleased to open the Fourth Session of the Ninth Parliament of the Dominion of Canada, with the following Speech :—

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

In again meeting you in parliament, it is our first duty to express our heartfelt thanks to a beneficient Providence for the abundant harvest with which the country has been favoured during the past year, and for the general prosperity that prevails in all parts of the Dominion.

It is very gratifying to note that the yearly increasing trade of Canada, which has been so marked a feature of the past six years, gives no indication of any abatement, while the number of settlers seeking homes in Manitoba and the Territories is without a parallel in the history of the country. These two very important facts lead irresistibly to the conclusion that long before the Transcontinental Railway, authorized by parliament at its last session, can possibly be completed, its urgent necessity as a medium for carrying the products of the west to our own Atlantic ports will have become apparent independently of the many benefits that will follow from the opening up for colonization and for various enterprises of the northern part of Quebec and Ontario.

The agreement made with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company regarding a new transcontinental railway, contained certain stipulations which in effect required the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada to become a party to that agreement and to assume heavy obligations in respect thereof.

Further consideration of the agreement by the representatives of the Grand Trunk Railway Company and my government has resulted in showing the desirability of certain amendments to the contract which, having been approved by my government and subsequently by the board of directors and the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, will be submitted to you for ratification.

The sum of $5,000,000 in cash has been deposited in the Bank of Montreal in accordance with the provisions contained in the original and supplemental agreements with the company.

A Militia Bill will be introduced containing several important amendments to the present law rendered necessary by the growth of the force and calculated to promote its efficiency.

A copy of the award defining the boundary between the Dominion and Alaska, and other papers connected with the controversy, will be laid before you.

In view of the widely extended settlements now forming in the Territories, it will become necessary to increase the strength of the Northwest Mounted Police force, and authority will be asked for that purpose.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

The accounts of the past year will be laid before you. I am glad to say that the revenue will exceed the expenditure, leaving a balance to be applied in reduction of the public debt.

The estimates for the coming year will be laid before you at an early date.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

After the long protracted session of the last year, when so many important matters were dealt with, it is not probable that your duties will involve your being detained on the present occasion for any lengthened period. I commend, however, to your best consideration the subjects to which I have referred and I invoke the Divine Blessing on your deliberations.

His Excellency was pleased to retire and the House of Commons withdrew.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Monday, March 14, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THE ADDRESS.

The Order of the Day being called,

Consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech on the opening of the fourth session of the ninth parliament.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Hon. gentlemen, in assuming the duty which has been assigned to me to-day, I will not make the appeal which is so generally made that it may almost be said to be customary on such occasions as this, because I know that it has been the invariable practice of the Senate to extend to any of its members who may be called upon for the first time to assume a position of responsibility the most generous measure of its kindest indulgence, and, although I feel satisfied that I may stand to-day in as much need of that indulgence as any one, I am re-assured when I recall the consideration and the uniform courtesy which has been extended to me by the members of this honourable House since I have had the honour of having a seat in it.

In his gracious speech from the Throne His Excellency acknowledges the gratitude which the people of Canada should feel for the blessings which, under the dispensation of Divine Providence we have enjoyed during the past year. God has indeed been good to us ! The abundant harvest has done much for the industrious husbandman who tilled the fields, and it has been a boon and a blessing to all our people.

The increase in the trade of Canada during some years past is indeed remarkable and it is, to most of us, I would like to think it will be to all of us, gratifying to notice that a great stride in the trade of this country was made immediately after the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier assumed office. That growth was not ephemeral, but has continued over a period of six or seven years, and it is already apparent that the returns for the current year when brought down will show a still further marked advance. The immigration policy which was inaugurated by the government shortly after it came into office has been successful in attracting the experienced farmers of the middle and western states of this continent to the rich prairie lands of Manitoba and the Northwest Territories of Canada, where millions of acres bear testimony to the superior productiveness of the soil as compared with anything heretofore known.

It has been the great opportunity and privilege of Sir Wilfrid Laurier more than of any other Canadian to direct the attention of Britain and the British empire, and through them, the other countries of Europe to the growing importance of Canada and its natural resources. We will recall that at the diamond jubilee of 1897 he was a distinguished figure. At the various meetings which he was invited to address throughout England and Scotland he was able to bring before the people of the old land the important progress which this country was making. Later by the adoption of the tariff providing for British preference, again at the Coronation of His Most Gracious Majesty the King, and at the colonial conference which followed subsequently, he was enabled to emphasize the importance of our preferential tariff to British trade and also to call attention to the advantage to be gained by greater community of interest in colonial as well as imperial interests for the sake of, and the benefit and advantage of the whole empire. The natural effect has been to bring Canada, its resources, its products and its manufacturers to the notice of the whole civilized world, to enhance the importance of the country, to present its advantages and to make known more widely its attractiveness as a home for millions in the older countries who are looking for one in which their condition would be improved.

The present means of access to much the largest and perhaps most valuable part of our Northwest is not sufficient to provide for the incoming thousands of settlers. Nor do they afford anything like sufficient transportation facilities for the grain and other products of the vast areas now being opened up and settled. This makes it imperatively necessary that further avenues of transportation should be opened up with all possible speed, for the purpose of bringing to the markets of the world through our own seaports the products of the west as well as for the development and settlement of large tracts of the older provinces.

To judge of a country, its condition and progress, it is not enough to look at its statesmen, its educational or scientific institutions, its situation and natural advantages, but we should also look at the means of communication it possesses, at the means afforded the people to exchange commodities, to export their surplus products and to interchange thoughts and ideas. The railway is an essential requisite to a thrifty, peaceful and prosperous country such as ours. It is the forerunner of population. It is the pioneer of enterprise ; enterprise provides employment, and employment begets prosperity.

The Canadian people believe in their country. They have faith in themselves and in their ability to develop the resources of their country, and they have confidence in the government securing for the people the full benefit to be gained by the early construction and completion of the new Transcontinental Railway.

The Canadian people therefore will be glad to know that there is no longer any obstacle to the immediate prosecution of that work, and they will welcome the assurance of the work being done to meet the pressing necessity which will each year be more and more felt for the development and progress of the country.

Seward, the great American statesman, on one occasion, speaking of Canada, said :

I see in British America a region vast enough to contain an empire. Its immense wheatfields. Chains of mountains. Great waterways. Inexhaustible forests. The richest of the north. Its priceless fisheries. Its mineral deposits are great elements of national wealth.

I might venture to say that he could have added great elements of national strength. Seward was able to appreciate our opportunities and yet to him the half had not been told. As Canadians we recognize that we have entered upon a new and distinct stage in our history. Our country occupies a distinct place on the map of the world. It is no longer the country of ice palaces or of 'Our Lady of the Snow.' It is recognized as the granary which makes the British empire independent of all foreign nations for its food supplies. Here the world now sees a happy home for millions wheresoever they may come from over the face of the habitable globe. We welcome to our shores all who come in to possess the land, to till the soil, to reap the harvest and to enjoy the benefits, the prosperity and happiness which attend an industrious and thrifty life.

The militia force has rendered great service to Canada, not only as the expression of a healthy national sentiment but in repelling invasions, in suppressing rebellions, and in maintaining order and good government on various occasions, and the part which our Canadian militia took in fighting the battles of the empire in South Africa, brought honour and distinction to themselves, added lustre to the great achievements of British arms, directed attention to and reflected much credit upon Canada in the eyes of the onlooking powers of the world. Any measure calculated to promote the efficiency of the militia is entitled to the most favourable consideration of parliament.

The award defining the boundary between Alaska and Canada and the papers connected with the controversy will receive the consideration which their importance to this country demands, and it is to be hoped that apart from the merits of the differences which are to be found in the conclusions of the arbitrators, the fact that such differences arose may secure for Canada, greater independence of action hereafter in relation to international questions which may arise involving the interests of this country. I beg to move :—

That the following address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, to offer the humble thanks of this House to His Excellency for the gracious speech which he has been pleased to make to both Houses of Parliament ; namely :

To His Excellency the Right Honourable Sir Gilbert John Elliot, Earl of Minto and Viscount Melgund of Melgund, County of Forfar, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom, Baron Minto of Minto, County of Roxburgh, in the Peerage of Great Britain, Baronet of Nova Scotia, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of St. Michael and St. George, &c., &c., Governor General of Canada.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY :—

We, His Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate of Canada in parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both Houses of parliament.

Hon. Mr. TESSIER—(In French.) Invited at the last moment to take the place of the Hon. Mr. David, who is confined to his home by sickness, to second this motion, I rise to say a few words, requesting this honourable House to accord me all its indulgence. My colleagues will understand that it is quite natural that I should use my mother tongue, that beautiful French language, the use of which is guaranteed to us by law and by treaty, and which we, the first settlers in this country, love to preserve as an inheritance from our ancestors.

The first paragraph of the speech from the Throne reminds us that we should be animated by a pious sentiment of thankfulness towards Providence for the abundant harvest and the prosperity which reigns throughout the country. This sentiment of gratitude, hon. gentlemen, I am sure we all deeply feel. There is no doubt that the people of Canada are happy, and we rejoice from the bottom of our hearts.

After this tribute to Divine Providence, we discharge an agreeable duty in rendering thanks to the right hon. Premier, who has been charged by the people with the duty of directing our policy, and justice to the Minister of Agriculture, who has practised the axiom, 'God helps those who help themselves,' and whose enlightened and persevering work has enabled his fellow-country-men to profit largely by the advantageous conditions that nature offers them. Our agriculture has made astonishing progress. The export of butter has increased in an extraordinary manner, and we may say the same also of the export of Canadian cheese. We have found a means of transporting these products, by which they preserve a great deal of their value in a strange market. This system of transportation will be still further improved. It will be important to instruct our farmers as to the necessity of being more careful in the making of these products, and in the details which contribute to their perfection in a manner to enable them to compete with Russia, Denmark and other producing countries.

The general trade of the country has increased in enormous proportions. Whereas in 1896 the total amount of imports reached the sum of $118,011,508, in 1903 it rose to the sum of $241,214,961, an increase of $123,203,293. In 1896 our exports were $121,013,852; in 1903 they were $225,849,724, an increase of $104,835,872. In 1896 our exports of Canadian products rose to the sum of $109,915,337; in 1903 to the sum of $214,401,674, an increase of $104,486,337. In 1896 our exports of products of the farm were $55,378,407; in 1903 we exported $114,441,863, an increase of $59,063,456.

In 1896, when the Liberal patry came into power, the debt of Canada was $50.96 per head. In 1903, under the administration of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, it was $47.37, a decrease of $3.59 per head. The debt of Canada has been diminished by $9,885,811. It is not astonishing that this progress of our affairs has attracted general attention to Canada, and that a considerable flow of immigrants should be directed towards our country. The announcement of the construction of a new transcontinental railway cannot fail to stimulate this movement of immigration and the desire of a great number of strangers to become a part of the Canadian nation. Let us hope that our immigration agents will be careful to choose these new settlers among the healthiest of the populations of Europe and of the United States, in order that their presence here may be a gain and an aid in the development of the country.

It is useless to make a long speech on the policy of the government concerning railways, especially the Grand Trunk Pacific, of which so much was said last session. The government has appointed a railway commission, and if we may judge by what we see in the press, it appears certain that it will render great services.

As to the Grand Trunk Pacific, we learn with pleasure that the deposit of $5,000,000 has been made in conformity with the conditions of the contract with the company. This is calculated to reassure the public, whose confidence may have been shaken by the pessimism of certain newspapers. There is nothing extraordniary, in a matter of this magnitude, where a company like the Grand Trunk is called upon to assume so heavy a responsibility, to find objections raised and demands that some modifications of the contract shall be sanctioned by parliament. These modifications will no doubt be explained without delay by the government. It is necessary that this enterprise, which has been received with so much favour, should be commenced soon in all its parts from the Pacific ocean to Moncton, passing through the rich valley of Peace river, near Lake Manitoba, to the north of Lake Nipigon and Lake Abitibi, through the north of the province of Ontario and Quebec, opening up vast and fertile regions to cultivation and industrial development. Prof. Bell, head of Geological Survey, in a speech recently in Quebec demonstrated that these regions of the west, which he had himself explored with care, are fertile and easy of access. This new transcontinental railway is, therefore, a great national work which the legislators are presenting to the country.

A word on the subject of the militia, as to which we are told a Bill will be presented to parliament to increase its effectiveness and efficiency. Military science progresses in common with all the sciences. Parliament will readily consent to improve our militia, though the spectre of war may be far from us and though, in view of its geographical position, Canada, as a country has no reason to fear such a contingency. We have good military schools, but I am told that in some of them there is a marked tendency to bestow the best positions to young officers coming as strangers, who often have neither the knowledge nor the experience of officers in the Canadian army. I hope that when occasion arises to choose between an outsider and a Canadian officer, the rule will be adopted to give the preference to a fellow-countryman provided he has equal qualifications.

The government tell us that they will communicate to us the decision determining the boundary between the Dominion and Alaska. I hope that all the documents relating to this question will be produced without reserve. It has been said that instead of a judicial decision such as our government desired, the award has been the result of diplomatic necessity. It is said also that the British ambassador proceeded with undue haste. One thing is certain, the Canadian commissioners refused to sign the award. I hope that within a few days we will be furnished with the true reasons for their refusal and their dissatisfaction, which dissatisfaction has spread through all the provinces of Canada, for that award has been far from giving satisfaction to the Canadian public. If it is true that the interests of Canada have been sacrificed for diplomatic reasons which do not directly concern us, let us hope that such incidents will not be repeated in the future.

Hon. gentlemen, I believe I have commented on the principal points of the speech of His Excellency. The speech is brief; let us hope that the same may be said of the present session. That is the view that His Excellency has expressed, and let us try to justify it in presenting him our thanks.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It is a matter of very great regret to myself and my friends around me on this side of the House, as I am sure it is to hon. gentlemen sitting opposite, that our esteemed leader, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, has been prevented by very urgent private business from being present with us to-day. I have a telegram from him stating that such is the fact, and expressing a desire that the debate should be proceeded with. We regret exceedingly that he is not present with us, but we have the great satisfaction of knowing that he is in the best of health, and that we will have his presence here day by day during this session, God permitting, as we have had in previous years, giving his untiring industry and conscientious attention to the public business of the country. I am sure that is a feeling in which hon. gentlemen opposite me will concur. I have great pleasure in joining in the gratification expressed by the seconder of the address that the health of the Premier has also improved, and I am sure it is a matter of gratification for both sides of the House that such is the case. It is generally considered the duty and the pleasure of the gentleman who rises, as I do just now, after the address has been presented to the House, to refer to the manner in which the gentlemen who have been entrusted by the government with the duty of presenting their programme to the Senate at the opening of the session have discharged their duty. It was not a matter of surprise to me to find that the hon. gentleman from Toronto performed that duty with a great deal of skill and ability. I am not able to offer criticism of any kind with regard to the speech of my hon. friend who seconded the motion. He spoke in a beautiful language with which I am not acquainted, but from my knowledge of the hon. gentleman I have not the slightest doubt that his task was also performed with skill and with prudence. My hon. friend from Toronto, in taking up the first paragraph of the speech, referred in terms of satisfaction to the prosperity which Canada enjoys at the present moment, a feeling in which we will all agree. But he was not content with merely expressing that satisfaction and he went on very ingeniously to point out that the prosperity came in simultaneously with the advent of the Laurier government to power——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, Hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And he proceeded in a very quiet, and, as I thought, not very effective way to connect that prosperity in some way with the doings of this administration. As he intimated, prosperity in Canada had commenced simultaneously with the advent of the Laurier government to power. I expected, if he really believed that the government had done anything towards bringing about that prosperity, that he would have pointed out effectively in what way that work had been done and how the government had influenced that prosperity. The first reference was to the effective immigration policy which had been inaugurated by the present government. I am sorry to say that I cannot agree with my hon. friend in his reasoning that the government is entitled to credit for the increase of immigration, if that was what he intended to imply. For my own part

I think all the work had been done; the foundation had been laid for the filling of the Northwest with settlers by the administration that preceded the present one, and the matter had been made very much easier for the present administration from the fact that just about that time all Canadians began to believe in their country. My hon. friend said that Canadians believed in their country. Well, it seems to me, that a very large proportion of them only began to believe in their country about the time their party came into power. During the whole of the time the present opposition were in power, the then opposition were almost unanimous in decrying the country.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—No, no.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend must think we have very short memories. We have a distinct recollection of the course that they pursued at that time. Canada was represented as a country perfectly helpless in itself and our only salvation from poverty and all other evils was the opening of the American market to us. That was the policy they pursued; they said there was no future for Canada unless unrestricted reciprocity with the United States could be attained. It was a very great point for the present government when they came into power, and immediately became faithful to their country to a certain extent, that they had this advantage that the whole Liberal-Conservative party from one end of the country to the other remained true to the Dominion, and were never found to utter one pessimistic word with regard to Canada although they were in opposition. When the government put forward any efforts to bring immigration to the country they did not hear the opposition say that Canada was going to the dogs because we could not get reciprocity with the United States. On the contrary, the opposition added their tribute to that of the government and their friends that the country was prosperous and offered an excellent home for immigrants.

Another reference was made by my hon. friend in moving the address, to the conduct of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the important service which he rendered in the Jubilee celebration as leading up to the development of British trade and our receiving immigration from the mother country. I suppose that was the connection in which he brought in that remark about the services rendered by Sir Wilfrid Laurier during the Jubilee year in Great Britain. I may have something to say a little later in regard to that question of preferential trade, but I want to put in this remark as I pass, that if the Premier of Canada had, during the Jubilee year in Great Britain carried out the promises he had made to the electors of Canada before he went to England to the effect that he would, if he got into power, make strenuous efforts to obtain a preference for the products of our farmers and other producers in the British market—had he put in a plea of that kind when he was there, I might be disposed to admit that he was entitled to some degree of credit on account of any development which has occurred in the British trade since that time. But my hon. friend must remember that when the Premier went to England he stated publicly that we did not want any preference for our products in the British market, and if a friendly feeling for Canada has been developed, and a market found for our products there since that time, I think it would be very far-fetched indeed to connect anything which the Prime Minister did when he was there in 1897 with that result. When we look over the entire situation, we cannot forget that the changes which were made in the tariff in 1897 by the present government were not very many or very important, and that wherever they did make changes they were detrimental to the manufacturing interests of Canada in almost every respect. A better instance cannot be referred to than the iron and steel industry. That industry is at the present time in a languishing condition, I will not say entirely due to lack of protection, although that is one strong reason, but the bounty system which the government took up as their method has been proved by experience to be a mistaken policy. It was a mistake to reduce the iron duties, and if the government does not rectify that mistake, the duty will be entrusted to some other government and not only in that matter but others as well. You cannot point to one manufacturing industry that has been bettered by the policy of this government. You cannot look to one single market that has been obtained for the products of the farm by this government. The late Conservative government put forward strenuous efforts to get our people to look towards the British market instead of the United States, while the Liberal party as a whole, including the members of the present government and their followers were pointing the people to the United States. The British market has been developed, and an important trade has been established there. We sell the great bulk of our farming products in Britain at the present time, but I fail to see where the present government have done anything to bring about that result. Then, in the settlement of the west, the Canadian Pacific Railway was built and every facility was provided for the influx of settlers in that country under the Conservative government. Experience was gained and a foundation was made which resulted in a larger number of settlers going in there in the years that have intervened since the present government has come into power, and I have no doubt that the influx of settlers from the United States and from European countries will increase in the future. Looking at the whole situation I cannot see that the present government is entitled to credit for any of these features of prosperity which the country enjoys at the present time. It would be just as reasonable to my mind if the old bachelors of Canada claimed credit for the increased population as it is for the government to claim any credit whatever for the prosperity which has come to this country during the term they have been in power.

The speech from the Throne refers in terms of gratification to the increase of trade.

It is very gratifying to note that the yearly increasing trade of Canada which has been so marked a feature of the past six years, gives no indication of any abatement, while the number of settlers seeking homes in Manitoba and the Territories is without a parallel in the history of the country.

Now, I have been looking at the Trade and Navigation Returns of last year, and I do not find in them everything to be pleased with. It is true that the volume of our trade is increasing ; it is true that as compared with the eight months of the previous year the volume of our trade is greater, but there is also another aspect of this question, which is equally true and which is not so encouraging. I find that for the first eight months of 1903, our imports were $139,199,618. In the same period of the present financial year our imports have increased to $158,171,447. In other words, there is an increase of nearly nineteen millions in the imports of the country in the first eight months of the present year as compared with the imports for the corresponding months of last year. Now, that must be what gentlemen in the government must have meant when they found so much that was encouraging in the trade of the country. But I turn to our exports, and what do I find ? I find that in the first eight months of the present year our exports of domestic produce amounted to $144,599,291 against $152,084,622 in the first eight months of the preceding year. There has been a falling off in the exports of Canadian produce in that period amounting to nearly $7,500,000. To my mind, neither one or the other of these sets of figures is satisfactory or encouraging. The importation of such a large quantity of goods beyond what we have exported and beyond the importations of the previous year is to my mind evidence of over-trading, the evil effects of which we are sure to find in the years that are to come. The introduction of such a large quantity of foreign goods into Canada also leads to the supplanting of our own productions to a certain extent, and indicates that there is something wrong with our tariff, as we on this side of the House have been telling the country all along. It indicates that our purchasing power has been diminishing. Putting these figures together, I am very far from agreeing with the language of the speech from the Throne, that our trade at the present time is in a satisfactory condition.

We now pass on to some observations of the speech with regard to the Transcontinental Railway question.

These two very important facts lead irresistibly to the conclusion that long before the Transcontinental Railway, authorized by parliament at its last session, can possibly be completed, its urgent necessity as a medium for carrying the products of our west to our own Atlantic ports will have become apparent.

I notice that this language is not by any means as sanguine as the utterances of the Prime Minister and his colleagues when this measure was submitted to parliament last year. It appears now they are speaking with rather bated breath. They prophesy that long before a certain event will happen —that is the completion of the Transcontinental Railway from Moncton to Port Simpson, which is an event we all know that is very far in the future—it will have become apparent that this Transcontinental Railway was urgently needed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That was not the way parliament was approached last year. We were told then that this enterprise would not wait—that it was urgently needed. I will just read the words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier when he introduced the Bill in the House of Commons last year :

> We consider that it is the duty of all those who sit within these walls by the will of the people, to provide immediate means, whereby the products of these new settlers may find an exit to the ocean at the least possible cost; and whereby likewise a market may be found in this new region for those who toil in the forest, in the fields, in the mines, in the shops of the older provinces. Such is our duty, it is immediate and imperative. It is not for to-morrow, but of this day, of this hour, of this minute. Heaven grant that it is not already too late. Heaven grant that whilst we tarry and dispute the trade of Canada is not deviated to other channels.

Now, hon. gentlemen come to parliament and venture to prophesy that before this railway is completed its urgent necessity will have become apparent. It is not apparent to-day, according to their own admission, and hence all this hysterical talk of the Premier last year, about time not waiting, evaporates into thin air. We are told that modifications of this contract are to be submitted to parliament. I do not propose to discuss those modifications now. The contract is already before us, and we will have ample opportunity to discuss the changes in detail at a later stage in this session. I do not propose to discuss them now; it would be only anticipating what will be more appropriately said later on; but I have to point out to the House in connection with the extract I have read from the speech that one of the modifications of this contract is to extend the time for the completion of the road from five to eight years—that is the completion of the western division from Winnipeg to the Pacific ocean. Notwithstanding all those hysterical utterances of last session, about time not waiting, about the danger of our not taking time at the flood and losing all the fortune that would accrue to us, and the immediate necessity of going forward at the earliest possible moment to obtain this new means of transport between the east and the west—in the face of all that, one of the modifications of the contract which is now proposed is to give another three years for the completion of that western division—not the entire line. It is clearly set forth in this contract that the eastern division need not be completed as soon as the western division. The Canadian Pacific Railway was completed from Callendar to Vancouver, an accomplishment much greater than the building of this entire Transcontinental Railway, and infinitely more so than the building of a road from Winnipeg over the prairies and through the comparatively easy mountain passes of the Peace river. The Canadian Pacific Railway was a much heavier undertaking than the whole line of the Transcontinental Railway considering the difficulties of access to the country at that time and the other great difficulties that pioneer railways had to encounter which will be unknown to those who now build, yet here we have the government of Canada deliberately extending the time to this company for the building of the prairie section, and the comparatively easy mountain section, giving them eight years to accomplish the work, or three years more than the Canadian Pacific Railway required for the construction of their whole line from Callendar to the Pacific ocean. This is not very consistent with the hysterical observations of the Premier last year, about time not waiting and the responsibility which would rest upon the parliament of Canada if we did not proceed immediately and provide this outlet for the people of Western Canada. The eulogy which the government bestow in the speech on this Transcontinental Railway scheme of theirs and which my hon. friend the mover of the address reiterated in his observations to-day, and which were so warmly and strongly applauded by hon. gentlemen opposite, are I think entirely beyond the mark, and furthermore they are inconsistent, and very inconsistent, with some other doings of the government since parliament rose. I refer to the action of the government in appointing as their chief railway expert the Hon. A. G. Blair, at a salary of $10,000 per annum, and it is known that Mr. Blair holds very different opinions with regard to the value of the Transcontinental

Railway from those which are expressed in the speech from the Throne. Let me remind hon. gentlemen of the utterances of this expert, their chief railway commissioner, whom they appointed since the last session of parliament after he had placed himself on record in the matter as follows :—

> You have a total of $139,000,000 representing the direct and indirect liabilities which the government assumed in connection with this enterprise. You could have taken a portion of that money to the harbours of Halifax and St. John and could have equipped those harbours so that they could have handled the traffic coming there for ocean shipment. You would have done some good with the money in that way. You will do no good with it now, except the temporary good that may be done while the money is in the course of expenditure. . . .
> Put this question how you will, turn it over, turn it back, examine it right and left, inside and outside, it fails to present a single redeeming feature in any phase of it from begininng to end.

The action of the government with regard to the Hon. Mr. Blair I think calls for some serious explanation. They have regarded Mr. Blair's opinion as a railway expert as of some value or they would not have appointed him as commissioner. What becomes then of his opinion of this great railway enterprise of theirs ? If they did not so respect his opinion as a railway man why did they appoint him as a commissioner ? Let them answer that question ! I should be glad to have that matter explained to the House. If the government did not come round to Mr. Blair's opinion, he did not come round to their opinion, at all events his opinion remains not retracted in any respect. It is before the country with regard to that railway enterprise and still the government appoint him at a very high salary as the chief railway expert, showing, at least, to the country that they have the most profound respect for his opinion on railway matters. I have given you the opinions of Mr. Blair, and we have the opinion of the government as given in the speech. A very strong complaint was made during the last session of parliament on behalf of the people of this country that such a sweeping measure as that, which was not discussed at the elections, which was not in any way put before the electors before the last session of parliament, was put through without obtaining the opinion of the people at the polls upon it. No such opinion was obtained. The opposition continually pointed out to the government that it was a project of such magnitude that it should not be proceeded with without a mandate from the people with regard to it. That mandate was not obtained by the government ; an appeal to the people was not made, but since the last meeting of parliament some appeals have been made to the people of Canada and this question has come up primarily as the principal one for discussion. On the 16th of last month there were eight by-elections, and as I know in one of them, where I took some small part, this question of the Transcontinental Railway was made the principal topic of discussion. I hope the hon. gentleman has taken a note of the elections and of the popular vote recorded.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am glad the hon. gentleman has done so. But should my hon. friend not have looked at these returns as closely as they deserve to be looked at, let me just present to him a few of the figures which are revealed by the returns of these eight by-elections. They were held in constituencies in which the government candidates polled in 1900 at the general election, 22,097 against 17,000 by the opposition, showing a majority of 5,097 votes in favour of the government candidates. The other day in by-elections where the fate of the government was not at stake at all, where the local governments were in sympathy with the government at Ottawa, with the government firmly entrenched in power, we find that a majority of 5,097 was cut down to a majority of 848, a difference of 4,243 votes in the popular result in these eight constituencies. If my hon. friend who gives me to understand that he has looked at the result of these elections cannot find in these figures a great change of opinion on the part of the people with regard to the government and their Transcontinental Railway proposition, I cannot see how he can arrive at any other conclusion.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Does the hon. gentleman count the votes of those candidates returned by acclamation ? Does he give the whole number of the votes to the candidate ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend may find the opposition made the mistake of not knowing the very full extent of their own strength, or they might have made it quite as uncomfortable in the constituencies where they allowed the government to return their candidates by acclamation as in the constituencies where the change was brought about. I know that in West Queen's we seriously considered the advisability of allowing the seat to go by acclamation. That was our conclusion until a week after the by-election was called on. It was, however, determined that another course should be pursued, and the result compared with the general election, was a falling away of the government majority by 453 votes, and that in a constituency where it was not expected from the start to the finish by the opposition that they could elect their man, in consequence of the powerful patronage of the two governments in the city of Charlottetown, which controlled a very large vote. I find that the change in the feeling in these eight constituencies is 530 votes on an average, and I find by applying just simply the change that occurred in West Queen's, in Prince Edward Island, to the other four ridings, supposing a similar result was to occur in the other four ridings of the province, that the majority against the government in these ridings would have reached from 213 to 678 votes. The result of these elections is a clear indication, to my mind, that the policy of the government upon the Transcontinental Railway question which was the great issue before the electors, was disapproved by the people at the polls. It was not merely in one province. Elections were held in four provinces. In the extreme west of Ontario two elections were held. There was a bunch of elections in the province of Quebec. Another was held in the city of St. John and one was held in West Queen's, P.E.I., and it so happened that nearly all of these constituencies, or all of them that were held by the government before, were held by such large majorities that it would seem almost like presumption to attempt to overthrow the government in these places. In one case, in St. Hyacinthe, where the government majority amounted to 1,111 votes; the majority was reduced to 185. Take the city of St. John, where such a complete overturn was made, and East Lambton, we find important results. It is not confined to one place, but it extended over a large breadth of the country. Last year, when this Bill was before the House, we complained from this side of the House, as was done also in the House of Commons, that the proposition was very indefinite, and more particularly as to the question of route. As far as the Bill itself was concerned, it seems that there was nothing very definite in regard to the route to be traversed between the main points, Moncton, Quebec and Winnipeg and the Pacific coast, but the government came down to parliament with what they called mountains of information on the subject. A report was got up under the instructions of the Minister of the Interior, by Dr. Ami, of the Geological Survey, with regard to the country that was to be traversed between the city of Quebec and the city of Winnipeg, and a map was submitted to parliament, showing the line of the proposed railway.

Hon. gentlemen will remember very distinctly all the things that were said in this House and elsewhere with regard to the route. We were told that for 700 miles west of Quebec it was absolutely a piece of tableland, a country so smooth, that there was no depression in the whole length greater than 200 feet, and that there would be no difficulty in obtaining absolutely level grades, so much so that one of the enthusiasts, a supporter of the railway in the press, said that all it would be necessary to do would be to start a car at Winnipeg and it would carry itself right along almost the whole distance eastward by its own momentum till it reached Quebec. All that was told to us last session of parliament. They told us that the government had made the wonderful discovery that along this height of land in a direct line between Quebec and Winnipeg there was a piece of tableland over which a route could be located that would afford such easy grades as would put all other railways in the shade, not only in this country but in every other country. That was the statement made in this House and elsewhere, and that is the substance of the official document that was laid before parliament. Now we have another story. Honourable gentlemen will remember that almost the very last words I uttered on this question last session were to the effect that the route was a very unfortunate one, that a more northerly route would be better with respect to the quality of the country. I did not know anything beyond that, but I had information which I had collected from geological surveys, and from a map prepared by Dr. Bell many years ago, and which was not prepared for the purpose of bolstering up any particular policy, that the route proposed in Dr. Ami's pamphlet and announced by the government as the route—in other words, the direct route from Quebec to Winnipeg—was not a practical route at all, and that the country through which it would pass was not valuable either as agricultural lands or for lumbering purposes. It appears that the government have changed their minds with regard to that subject. It seems that they have gone back on this map that was submitted to us with so much assurance during the last session of parliament. I am sorry my hon. friend from Delorimier is not present because he became particularly responsible for the authenticity of that map and talked in the most glowing terms to this House about that route, and advanced some personal assurances in order to strengthen the claims that were put forward for this route. But the Minister of Justice has been talking and he states that that will not be the route; that the government find that a more northerly route is a much better one, and that that will be the route which the government will adopt. Hon. gentlemen who will remember all that took place in this House last year, the submission of this report, the statements that were made backing it by members of the government and supporters of the government, will hardly be prepared for the announcement made by the Minister of Justice the other day. But the announcement has been made, and almost simultaneously with that announcement by the Minister of Justice, another geologist is heard from. It is a strange way I must admit of finding routes for a railway to go to geologists. We always used to think that the proper course was to set engineers to work and get the opinions of engineers. But this government appears to be relying on the opinions of geologists. Mr. Bell, the director of the Geological Survey, gave a lecture in Quebec the other day. We can readily understand at whose instance he is heard from at this very moment, and he says among other things the following:—

> Again the actual difference would be greatly increased along the generally straight route by the numerous minor departures from a straight line, which would be rendered necessary by the uneven character of the country, as compared with the northern route. A comparison with the existing section of the Canadian Pacific Railway between Mattawa and Rat Portage, shows this amounts to nearly 30 per cent increase in the mileage, as compared with the straight line between these points, and there would be a corresponding disadvantage on the proposed southern route, to say nothing of the innumerable steep grades both eastward and westward. The nominally straight line between the head of Lake Nipegon and Quebec, on this standard of comparison, would really be one thousand and fifty-three miles.

Dr. Bell, the geological expert of the government, who tells us that this route between Quebec and Winnipeg, the direct route that was eulogized so highly in parliament last year would compare with the Canadian Pacific line from Mattawa to Rat Portage where the distance was increased owing to curvature and owing to deviations in order to get anything like decent grades, by 30 per cent of the entire distance, and states the same results would be reached if it was attempted to run a direct route from Winnipeg to Quebec. The distance would be increased by 30 per cent and would make it really longer than a more northerly line, though it took a long swoop to the north in order to reach Winnipeg. It is necessary only to give the matter a little consideration to see how ill-digested this scheme was, and how uninformed the government were with regard to this scheme when after six months the director of the Geological Survey is put forward to make adverse statements with regard to the route which the government eulogized so highly during the last session of parliament. This is another evidence that the government have gone into this question without any proper inquiry or preparation and the result is as might be expected, that they made very great and serious errors and that they were entirely wrong with regard to the feasibility of the route which they decided last year to be the route of this railway. Other matters connected with the location of the road might be referred to which were incidents of the election in St. John. I will refer to one or two of them, showing the plunging which this government and the Grand Trunk Railway have indulged in in regard to this question. The Hon. Mr. Emmerson made a speech in St. John on the 11th February, four or five days before the election. I have the speech here and can refer to it. He made the statement that Mr. Wainwright of the Grand Trunk Railway had become a director in the company that owns the road from Chipman to Norton, and he added that he was prepared to say authoritatively that the Grand Trunk Railway had taken a hand in the road, and that it was the intention of the Grand Trunk Railway and the government to bring the road from Chipman to Norton and to the eastern side of the harbour of St. John, and that that was the settled policy of the government and the company. Mr. Emmerson made that statement and Mr. Pugsley also made the same statement when presenting the views of the government immediately before the election. Just about the same time Mr. Hays, the manager of the Grand Trunk Railway, also took a hand in the discussion that was going on, and he wrote a letter to the mayor of St. John asking that a reservation of frontage on the harbour of St. John should be made by the city in favour of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. Mr. Hays was evidently ignorant, when he wrote that letter, of the fact that the city of St. John does not own a frontage on the eastern side of the harbour, and whilst Mr. Emmerson was declaring to the people of St. John that they were going to come down on the eastern side from Chipman to Norton and by the Intercolonial Railway, Mr. Hays was asking for frontage on the western side of the harbour, indicating that they were going to bring it in that way. They were determined to catch votes by whatever method. But unfortunately for them, the letter of Mr. Hays to the mayor told a very different story from the speech which Mr. Emmerson made in the Opera House just at the same time. Then we have another phase of the question. My hon. friend from Queen's, N.B., can follow this matter I have no doubt very closely, and he is better acquainted with it than I am. But only a day or two ago Mr. Tweedie, in discussing railway matters in the legislature of New Brunswick, made this statement: that it was not the intention of the provincial government to provide any subsidy for the railway from Fredericton to Chipman, because it was almost certain to become a part of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway plan and that there would be no subsidy necessary to be paid by the government of New Brunswick in connection with it. It is quite easy to learn from these things, from Mr. Emmerson's speech, from Mr. Hays' letter, from Mr. Tweedie's utterances, what use is being made of the Grand Trunk Pacific scheme down there, in order to make almost every man in New Brunswick believe it is going to run near his own door. It is going to be a forked lightning business in New Brunswick. It will dart from one side of the province to the other, but its terminus will be at Moncton, for the government say above and beyond all the statements of their friends that there is no change made in the route of the road, and, therefore, it goes to Moncton in the end. In the address the government proceed to speak of the Grand Trunk Pacific contract and of the modifications proposed. To these things I have already referred.

The speech from the Throne says that the Grand Trunk Railway assumed heavy obligations in connection with this matter. I confess I am not able to agree with that statement, because that is a matter that we looked into very closely last session of parliament, and I never was able to learn from the strongest supporters of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, that any obligation was assumed by them in connection with the construction of that line except the guarantee of bonds to cover twenty-five per cent of the cost of the prairie and the mountain sections of the railway. It is true that the president of the Grand Trunk Railway had made a statement to his English shareholders that the Grand Trunk Railway Company was not going to put one penny in the enterprise or become involved to any extent whatever. I have never been able to find that the Grand Trunk Railway assumed any obligation in connection with this scheme, except the one, and that was to guarantee the bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific to the extent of twenty-five per cent of the cost of the prairie and mountain sections. I am not going to enter into any discussion with regard to the modifications; that we will reach later on.

We come now to the reference in the speech to the Alaskan boundary question. That is certainly a very important subject and one which will demand very earnest consideration on the part of this House and the people of Canada. I feel it my duty to deprecate the heated language used by the Premier of Canada on this subject towards the close of the last session of parliament, and since that time, with regard to the action of the British government in reference to this matter, and his advocacy of a policy that Canada should have the right to negotiate its own treaties with foreign countries independently of the mother country. A little later the right hon. gentleman modified that opinion in some degree by declaring that in his judgment it would be sufficient that the British government should possess a veto over such treaties negotiated by the colonies; but I must say I consider the observations of the Premier and of other gentlemen who have spoken for the government in regard to this subject as being uncalled for and unfair towards the mother country. In fact, I think that the government of Canada have themselves been quite as much to blame for any unfortunate incident in the formation of the Alaskan trbunal as was the government of Great Britain. I recall to mind that in 1898 the Marquis of Lansdowne called the attention of the government of Canada to the demand of the United States for the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. The answer of our government that Canada had no interest in the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was a most extraordinary one, because we seemed to have as much interest in the question as any country outside of the United States itself; and an opportunity was not taken advantage of which might have been used by the government at that time to obtain some reasonable means of settling this Alaskan boundary question in connection with the concession proposed to be given the United States in the abrogation of that treaty. But I hold, and I wish to make my observations as emphatic as I can, that the government of Canada are very much to blame for having agreed to submit the Alaskan boundary question to a packed jury, for that is practically what it was. I was in California at the time the Senate of the United States ratified the treaty to refer the Alaskan boundary question to a judicial tribunal, and I read despatches from Washington in the California papers next morning that Senator Turner and Senator Lodge had agreed to allow the arbitration to take place on the understanding with the President that they were to form members of the Tribunal themselves and that they were irrevocably opposed to any concession of the claims of Canada and never would consent to give up what they called one inch of American territory. Notwithstanding the fact that these gentlemen had prejudged our case and were not impartial jurists, the government of Canada very weakly consented to go on with the case with Messrs. Lodge and Turner on the tribunal, men who had been placed there on a distinct understanding with the government of the United States that they were to stand firmly against the claims of Canada no matter what evidence might be submitted. But still more serious is the complaint we have to make against the government on this subject, that they furnished to the government and counsel of the United States the very strongest evidence they urged before the tribunal in London. Hon. gentlemen who will take the trouble to read those papers will find that Mr. Taylor, one of the United States counsel, read to the arbitrators the following extract from a speech made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier in the House of Commons on March 7, 1898, in support of the Teslin Lake Railway proposition which the government were then pressing through the House. On that occasion Sir Wilfrid Laurier said:—

> We have either to take the route by the Lynn canal and Dyea, or the route by the Stikine river. The advantages of the one had to be set against the disadvantages of the other, and vice versa. The advantages of the route by the Lynn canal were that it was shorter and more direct than the route by the Stikine river. But if we had adopted the route by the Lynn canal, that is to say, had chosen to build a railway from Dyea by the Chilkat Pass up to the waters of the Yukon, we should have had to place the ocean terminus of the railway upon what is now American territory. I agree with the statement which has been made on the floor of this House on more than one occasion that Dyea, if the treaty is correctly interpreted, is in Canadian territory. It ought to be; but the fact is, as my hon. friends know very well, even those who do not belong to the legal profession, that possession is nine points of the law; and even though by the letter of the treaty, Dyea is in Canadian territory, the fact remains that from time immemorial Dyea was in the possession of the Russians, and in 1867 it passed into the hands of the Americans, and it has been held in their hands ever since. Now, I will not recriminate here; this is not the time nor the occasion for doing so; but so far as I am aware no protest has ever been entered against the occupation of Dyea by the American authorities; and when the American authorities are in possesison of that strip of territory on the sea which has Dyea as its harbour, succeeding the possession by Russians from time immemorial, it becomes manifest to everybody that this moment we cannot dispute their possession, and that before their possession can be disputed the question must be determined by a settlement of the questions involved in the treaty. Under such circumstances, Dyea was practically in American territory—at all events, in possession of the Americans; and, therefore, if we had undertaken to build a railway from Dyea to the Yukon country, we would have been placed at the mercy of the American authorities with regard to the bonding privilege. We would have been in this position, that though we had built a railway, the ocean terminus of that railway was not in our own country, and we could not send a ton or a pound of goods over that railway unless we had the permission of the American authorities. If we had built the railway by Dyea, when we came to Dyea we would have come to an American port, and, according to the law of nations, we could not have entered a ton of merchandise or a pound of food without subjecting ourselves to the necessity of paying duty, if the Americans refused to bond the goods.

Commenting on this Mr. Taylor said:

I shall make no allusion to the American occupation or to the Russian occupation, which my able colleague will handle, but I simply want to refer to the fact that down as late as the making of the speech of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, from which I have just read——

Sir Edwin Carson—That is 1898.

Mr. Taylor—I will not trouble to read the speech again, but down to 1898, the Prime Minister of Canada standing in the parliament of his nation, with all the responsibility of his great office, declared to his own people that from time immemorial the Russians and then the Americans had been in possession, that no protest had been made, and that, however, much it might be regretted, there was the fact of this unbroken and continuous—he seemed to be enamoured of the use of this word 'immemorial,' for he used it three or four times, as you may have noticed in the extract—that this possession of the United States, and of Russia and the United States had continued * * * * But what is singularly valuable in Sir Wilfrid Laurier's statement as to the notice of to the United States' government, is that in 1898, ten years after this time, when it is so innocently claimed that we have the notice, the Prime Minister of Canada declares that we had not. It is very regrettable, he said, but he made the public declaration in parliament of his nation that we had not.

Hon. gentlemen will understand that the British counsel had shown by documents that Canada had made a protest in 1888 that a solemn protest had been made by the Dominion through the Imperial government to Washington. In order to detract from the weight of that evidence which had been submitted, the United States counsel quoted the ill-advised, hasty and incorrect words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier that no protest had been made and that Russia had held this piece of land where Dyea is built from time immemorial, whereas it is known that there was not a settler in Dyea up to the time gold was discovered on the Yukon.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—The hon. gentleman is quite wrong. There was an Indian school there—it may not be on the spot where Dyea is built, but up the Lynn canal and opposite Dyea.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON.—I think I shall be able to point out, in the words of Lord Lansdowne, that there were no settlers on the Lynn canal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—Not at Dyea, but immediately opposite on the Lynn canal.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON.—I can turn up the quotation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—It is not an issue now.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON. The hon. minister admits there were no settlers except, possibly, a school, but my authority is the Earl of Lansdowne, that there was no continued settlement of any kind at the head of the Lynn canal, up to the discovery of gold in the Yukon, sometime towards the close of 1896. However, the point I am desirous of making is that the Prime Minister of Canada is blamable by making an incorrect statement in the parliament of Canada on this subject in the hysterical effort that was made at that time to carry through parliament a very wild proposal for the building of a tramway from Telegraph creek to Teslin lake. That measure was pressed on parliament in the same way as the Transcontinental Railway was pressed last year, as if time could not wait and matters were so urgent that something had to be done even though it was not a well considered measure. When the leader of the government was in that mood he made the statement which I have quoted, and I find that the Hon. Clifford Sifton, Minister of the Interior, made a precisely similar statement in the House of Commons with regard to it, at the same time. Further, the late Hon. David Mills, when he was leading this House, made a statement to the same effect. I called him to task for doing so, and I will read the words which I used. They will be found in the Senate Debates of 1898, at page 722. They are as follows :—

My hon. friend said a little while ago that there was a question in dispute between the two countries, but the whole line of the hon. gentleman's argument was that they (Dyea and Skagway) were on United States territory. If not, why is he so alarmed at this Bill building up Dyea and Skagway. This is a very extraordinary course for the government to put themselves on record making arguments for the United States to use in discussions on this very question when that boundary comes to be determined, and all of this comes from hon. gentlemen who claim to take such an eminently patriotic view of this whole question.

In my own humble way I pointed out at that time that the course that the hon. gentleman was pursuing was a dangerous one and that the argument he was addressing to this House would be used against Canada in determining our rights in this territory. It turned out as I predicted. I have not found yet that the United States counsel had taken notice of Mr. Mills' speech here or Mr. Sifton's speech in the House of Commons, but they took that of the leader of the government which they perhaps considered to be more important than any of the others, and they were able to quote that in their favour, and no doubt it made a strong impression on the minds of the commissioners.

There is an omission in this speech from the Throne that is quite noteworthy.

The accounts of the past year will be laid before you. I am glad to say that the revenue will exceed the expenditure, leaving a balance to be applied in reduction of the public debt
The estimates for the coming year will be laid before you at an early date.

Taking first the matter of the debt, it would be very satisfactory to the House to feel that that would be the effect of the surplus which we are promised for the present year, but if we turn to the documents we will find that that has not been the case with regard to the surpluses of previous years. I find that the debt of Canada in 1896 was $258,497,432.77, while the debt at the close of the last year for which we have the accounts, the year ending the thirtieth of June, 1902, was $271,829,000, an increase in the debt of the country in six years of $13,331,656.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman is taking the net debt in the one case and the actual debt in the other.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am making no such mistake. I am taking the net debt in both cases.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Take the last year.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have not the figures for the last year.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They have been distributed.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No, I made every effort to get possession of the accounts for 1903 and could not procure them, and the hon. gentleman has no right to use documents in the debate in advance of their distribution to members. I am giving the latest figures supplied to the public, and they show that the debt has been increased over $13,000,000 during the six years the present government has been in power, and I venture the further statement after the extraordinary votes of last session and the previous session of this parliament pledging the resources of this country for years to come, that even though the buoyancy of the revenue may continue there will be no permanent reduction of the net debt. Indeed it will be all the other way, because the capital expenditures authorized by this government are of such a nature that they will go on exceeding the increase of revenue, even though the country should continue to be prosperous. At all events, no reduction of the debt is shown yet. There may be some at the close of this financial year, but I am very confident that the general result, judging from the figures furnished us, will not be any substantial reduction, but on the contrary, in consequence of the enormous obligations imposed on the country mortgaging our future by parliament last year and the immediate preceding years, the debt will be increased notwithstanding the surplus. There is one important omission in the paragraph with reference to the estimates. It has been customary, to use the words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier with reference to the occupation of the Lynn canal, from time immemorial, for governments to assure parliament that the estimates had been prepared with due regard to economy. But these gentlemen appear to have lost this word economy; they cannot find it in their vocabulary to-day, and consequently they do not make the old assurance to parliament that the estimates are prepared with due regard to economy. In fact it is just as well that they did not put in that word, because from what we know of the hon. gentlemen we have no hope that there will be any evidence of economy in anything that comes from their hands. I turned to some figures with regard to the expenditure during the first eight months of the present year, and they tell the same story, as we have been reading in these returns for years back—increased revenue and an almost corresponding increase of expenditure. That is what is going on during the current year just as in previous years, and this government show no tendency or disposition to economize in the management of public affairs. I would say this to them—possibly they will not be very thankful for advice given from this side of the House—that they will be overtaken one day. The Finance Minister spoke of the crest of the wave a year ago, showing that he had himself some feeling that that point had been almost if not altogether reached. At all events it is not unsafe to say that the crest of the wave will be reached some time, and that the buoyancy of the revenue and the general propsperity of the country, like that of every other country, will be affected by depressions world wide in their nature, and will reach us as well as other countries, and they would do well in their own interest as well as the interest of the country, if they would take in a little sail, because there is scarcely any doubt—we hope it may be a remote time—stringency will come and the system of expenditure which they have been pursuing, mortgaging the resources of the country for years to come, will prove to be a very dangerous policy and will hamper themselves, or their successors. When a more economical government come into power their difficulties will be enhanced by the obligations created by this government in the extravagant frame of mind in which they have been acting ever since they came into office.

The matter of the surplus is also referred to by gentlemen in the government on every occasion as a matter of the highest of gratification. We who have been in the public life of Canada for some years remember very well that when a surplus occurred when the Liberal Conservative party were in power, we were told by leading men in this government that we had no right to have a surplus, that we were robbing the people, taking money from them which was not needed for the public service, and consequently were pursuing a bad course. We were told that we should only tax the people for the public necessity and when the revenues exceeded that, the tax should be reduced. Now, I have been turning back within the last few days to remarks made on the subject of taxation and I find that Sir Richard Cartwright, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce speaking about twenty years ago, laid down this proposition :—

> Now, I admit that abstract propositions cannot always be depended on. But I say that in matters financial you can almost with safety lay down this proposition: that whenever, without war or some other extraordinary cause, like that, you find the taxes of a country increasing very rapidly; increasing out of all proportion of its population, you can rest assured, that the government has been grossly extravagant, and in all probability grossly corrupt. And when you find the taxation remain stationary for a term of years, you may feel equally assured that the government has been honestly and economically conducted.

Now, in line with the proposition so confidently laid down by Sir Richard Cartwright, let me point to the taxation of the people of Canada during the six years the present government has been in power, and compare it with the taxation of the people of Canada during the last ten years of the Conservative administration. Taking the latter it was :—

1888	28,177,413 18
1889	30,613,522 51
1890	31,587,071 73
1891	30,314,151 15
1892	28,446,157 31
1893	29,321,367 42
1894	27,579,203 09
1895	25,446,198 71
1896	27,759,285 42
Average for 10 years	$ 28,793,137 25

It was barely $100,000 greater in the last year of the ten than it was in 1887. Now, I turn to the six years during which the present government, and for which we have the figures, have been in power and I find the following :—

1897..	$ 28,648,626 11
1899..	34,958,069 21
1900..	38,242,222 99
1901..	38,743,550 28
1902..	43,389,111 87
	$ 213,558,036 10
Average for 6 years ..	$ 35,709,672 00

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Rising every day—increasing every day.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Yes, increasing very rapidly. The average during the ten years was $35,709,672. Now, according to Sir Richard Cartwright's doctrine, when the taxation increased out of all proportion to the population of the country, it afforded the most convincing evidence that the government was grossly extravagant and probably grossly corrupt.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And he says that when you can show that taxation remains stationary for a number of years, you may be equally assured that the government is economically conducted. That was the state of affairs the last ten years the Conservatives were in power. The taxation remained stationary practically during the ten years, and, according to Sir Richard Cartwright, that is the best evidence in the world that the government was economically conducted. On the other hand, the extraordinary increase of taxation during the time the Grit government has been in power shows that they have been extravagant and also probably corrupt. That is the dictum of Sir Richard Cartwright. The remedy for this would be, if the government have taken more than they need from the people, to reduce taxation so that they would not be bringing themselves within the condemnation laid down by Sir Richard Cartwright in 1884. There are some other matters not referred to in this speech, one of which is the singular omission of all reference to provincial autonomy for the Territories. There is no reference made to the giving of provincial powers to the Territories. I am surprised that such is the case. It is well known that there is a desire that they should be given provincial autonomy. The demand is made on behalf of the Territories that they should have autonomy, but the government ignore those claims. They come down to parliament with a reference so far as the mounted police are concerned, but no reference to the important question of giving the Territories provincial autonomy. I think it is high time that question should be dealt with. It is not well in this country that we should keep the large number of people residing in the Territories at the present time under a system of tutelage, people who are well able to govern themselves. It is time we started them in housekeeping, giving them full power, and starting them in a just manner, and I think the policy of the government in not making a reference to this question shows their inability to deal with it, because there seems to be some difficulty which they are afraid to tackle, or otherwise they would have taken up this question before now. There is also another omission in the speech, a remarkable one, and that is the omission of any reference to the preferential trade campaign which is now going on in Great Britain under the leadership of Mr. Chamberlain. I must say that I looked over the speech with some degree of surprise at this omission. I have noticed that the government have not been dealing courageously with that question. In fact they have not dealt consistently with it, nor courageously at any time from the beginning of the discussion of the question in Canada up to the present time; and that lack of courage which the government have shown with regard to the subject is a plain manifest from the fact that there has been no reference in the speech to that question, which is one of the most important subjects affecting the interests of Canadians of all the questions that are inside of the political horizon at the present moment. My hon. friend the mover of the address referred in the beginning of his observations to the part which Sir Wilfrid Laurier took in England during the Jubilee year. As I intimated, I am far from agreeing with my hon. friend as to the value of the services then rendered by the premier in Great Britain. In fact I lay to his charge, as the people of Canada lay to his charge, that he failed to perform a duty that he had solemnly pledged himself to the people of Canada he would perform, before the elections of 1896. I will just read an extract from Sir Wilfrid Laurier's speech in London, Ont., in 1896, immediately before the elections, and then hon. gentlemen will remember the solemn character of the promise which he made on that occasion. He said :

We would have for our goods a preference which would not be given to the goods of another nation. That practical statesman Mr. Chamberlain has come to the conclusion that the time has come when it is possible within the bounds of the empire for another step to be taken which will give to the colonies in England a preference for their product over the products of other nations. What would be the possibilities of such a step if it were taken? We sell our goods in England. We sell our wheat, our butter, our cheese, all our natural products. But there we have to compete with similar products from the United States, from Russia and from other nations. Just see what a great advantage it would be to Canada if the wheat and cheese and butter which we send to England be met with a preference over similar products of other nations. The possibilities are immense.

Speaking again in Montreal a little later—all before the elections of 1896— he said :

My hope is, nay, my conviction is, that on the 23rd of June the Liberal party will be at the head of the polls, and that it will be the Liberal party with its policy of a revenue tariff that will send commissioners to London to arrange for a basis of preferential trade.

Here was a promise. Commissioners would be sent to London by the Liberal party to arrange a preference. The hon. gentleman went to England in the Jubilee year and was met by English statesmen on landing and a speech of welcome was made by the Duke of Devonshire, and in reply to that Sir Wilfrid Laurier said :—

What we give you by our tariff we give you in gratitude for the splendid freedom under which we have prospered. It is a free gift. We ask no compensation. Protection has been the curse of Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Does the hon. gentleman say hear, hear ? Mr. Préfontaine and Mr. Brodeur say that there are no free traders in Canada that we are all protectionists. Did I understand the hon. Secretary of State to say 'hear, hear' to the language of the premier that protection is a curse in Canada?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Does the hon. gentleman contend and maintain that the hon. Minister of Marine and the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue stated in their speeches in the province of Quebec that all are protectionists and that there are no free traders in the sense the hon. gentleman is putting it?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—They made that statement.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I attended all the meetings and did not hear it. It was not stated in my hearing.

Hon. Mr FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman is not ubiquitous. He simply did not hear it and that is all he can say.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I attended all his meetings and did not hear him make that statement.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman is deaf.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Mr. Brodeur is reported as having made the statement that there are no free traders in Canada, that all are protectionists, and Mr. Préfontaine declared his own support of protection and that he had always said so. They have both been reported in that way, and they have not contradicted it as far as I know. In fact it is well known that Mr. Préfontaine has been placing himself on record as a protectionist on a great many occasions, and he is most anxious that he should be so regarded in the province of Quebec. In the face of that we hear the hon. Secretary of State saying 'hear, hear,' when the words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier are quoted where he states that protection has been the curse of Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am speaking entirely satirically. The hon. gentleman's argument is so extremely funny in some points—it is pure satire.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman has put himself right ; it was in an ironical sense that my hon. friend applauded the language of the premier of Canada. It is not what I am saying just now that seems funny to the hon. gentleman but it was the funny language of the premier which attracted his attention and caused him to say 'hear, hear.' It was not on account of anything I said but he saw something funny in the premier's saying that protection was the curse of Canada and his 'hear, hear' is to be understood in an ironical sense. Then Sir Wilfrid goes on to say :

We would not see you come under the baneful influence, for what weakens you must weaken us.

The point I am making—hon. gentlemen can see it very well—is that the language which the Prime Minister used when in England in 1897 was in direct contradiction to the promise which he made to the people of Canada in his speeches in London, Ont., and in Montreal, before the elections of 1896, that he would endeavour to obtain a preference for our products in the British markets, and I claim that by the course which the premier pursued at that time, by his having gone back on his promise to Canada, and gone back on the interests of the people of Canada, that a very severe blow was struck at the proposition of preferential trade for Canada. And that is the way Mr. Chamberlain regarded it. What did he say? He spoke as follows:—

> It would have been hard enough to carry through the idea had all the colonies been persistent and enthusiastic advocates of it, but Canada does not favour it and New South Wales opposes it. These are the leading colonies and with them in practical opposition it becomes impossible, and I would not now touch it with a pair of tongs.

This was Chamberlain's declaration after the premier of Canada had warned the people of England not to do anything, that Canada did not want it, that protection had been a curse to Canada and he did not want the people of England led back to protection. But after he returned to Canada and after he had heard something about Canadian opinion with regard to his action in England, the premier made another statement. He said:

> Certainly if I thought I could have obtained for my country, for the products of Canada, a preferential treatment with markets of Great Britain, I would not only have been wanting, but I would have been wanting in reason—I simply would have been an idiot—if I had failed to obtain such preference.

This was a most extraordinary statement for the premier to make after he had solemnly warned the people of England not to give Canada a preference because Canada did not want it. Now, what do we find in the speech? Any reference to this subject? None whatever, notwithstanding the fact that a few days ago the question was discussed in the House of Lords and a prominent member of that body, Lord Beauchamp, attacked the Chamberlain proposition and pointed out that it had not the support of the colonies. He pointed to the fact that out of twenty-one colonial parliaments only one parliament in the whole of the British colonies had passed a resolution in favour of the preferential scheme which Mr. Chamberlain had been advocating, and that was the province of Manitoba, and the silence on the part of all the other parliaments was construed by Lord Beauchamp, as, I am sure it was by many others, that there was either opposition to or a great lack of interest in this question on the part of the people of the colonies, otherwise their parliaments would have been heard from with regard to it. We know that the leader of the opposition in the other branch of this parliament last session made an overture to Sir Wilfrid Laurier as premier that they should agree upon a resolution in favour of preferential trade and that it could be submitted to the House and carried by a unanimous vote. Sir Wilfrid did not agree; he would not accept the proposition, although Mr. Borden offered him the support of every member of the opposition to such a resolution if it were introduced. But for reasons which are best known to himself parliament preserved a silence, and that silence is being used in England to-day by the opponents of preferential trade, the opponents of Chamberlain and the opponents of the colonies to show that the parliament of Canada is indifferent. It may be said, why did not the opposition bring up the matter last session? The question was too dear to their hearts to do that from the fact that the government refused to allow it to pass unanimously. They felt that it would be accepted as a vote of want of confidence, and it would have the opposite effect to what was desired, which was to strengthen Mr. Chamberlain's hands and secure preferential treatment of the colonies. The opposition would have strengthened themselves in the House and in the country by proposing a resolution of that kind and supporting it in parliament, but they felt the danger they incurred from the fact that the leader of the government would not allow a unanimous resolution to be passed, and a great deal of damage would be done to the cause in that way, even though it would enure to the benefit of the opposition party in Canada.

Many subjects referred to in the speech will be discussed at the later stages of the session, and the main question of the Transcontinental Railway is one which I know will engage the most serious consideration of gentlemen in both Houses of parliament. In the speech from the Throne we find the following paragraph :—

After the long protracted session of the last year, when so many important matters were dealt with, it is not probable that your duties will involve your being detained on the present occasion for any lengthened period.

I do not think it is very usual for gentlemen in the government to indicate in the speech from the Throne to parliament that it is not necessary to give a very protracted consideration to the questions coming up, but I may say that if the government do as they did last year, bring down some very important measures after the House is three or four months in session, a Bill for instance, differing altogether from the indications given in the speech with regard to the same subject, the session is not likely to be a short one. Last year the government promised a transportation commission to investigate the question of communication between the east and west within our own country. That was the promise in the speech ; but after the House was nearly six months in session they brought down a Bill to build a Transcontinental Railway from Moncton to the Pacific, and thereby greatly increased the length of the session. If on the present occasion a similar course be pursued—it is not within the knowledge of anybody how long the session may be protracted. At any rate a due and fair and proper discussion of questions which are already indicated, and of which we have outlines or details already in our possession, will take up a very considerable amount of time, and I feel sure the members of the opposition in this House, as well as in the other branch of parliament, will do their duty by fairly, fully and fearlessly discussing the questions which will be submitted by the government or which will in any other way come before parliament.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I join with my hon. friend opposite in regretting the absence of the hon. leader of the opposition on the present occasion. We are all very glad to know that it is not in any sense due to ill-health or any other weakness of that kind, but rather to important matters of business which require his attention in the city of Toronto. We hope, however, to see him here within the next few days, when he will have the opportunity possibly of giving his views on the speech now before us. I also join with the hon. gentleman in offering congratulations to the hon. mover and seconder. All will admit that they performed the task with great tact and ability, and that these gentlemen have given evidence, not only on this occasion but on all others, that they are a very great acquisition to this chamber. One of them, the mover of the address, is a gentleman who has been long familiar with the public questions of the day, and although not elected a member of parliament, has had large experience in parliamentary matters, in addressing committees of the House, and is quite familiar with parliamentary routine. The seconder of the address is also a gentleman who has had very considerable experience in the local legislature of his own province, having, in fact, been Speaker of the Quebec legislature for a term of, I think, four years, and therefore is a good parliamentarian. It was a pleasure indeed to listen to the observations which he made, which were quite pertinent to the subject in hand. A speech from the Throne is usually drawn in the least aggressive form. It is always on the lines of least resistance. But my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Ferguson), with a good deal of ingenuity, has managed to point out a great many defects, both of omission and commission. I question, however, whether the deductions he has drawn from it will meet with the approval of fair-minded men. In the first place, he doubted that the prosperity of this country was due in any degree to the present administration. We properly and very naturally thank Providence for the bountiful harvest that He has given us, and for the general prosperity of to day. It is a very old adage that Providence helps those who help themselves, and this government has been helping itself very materially since it came into office. I do not think it requires any figures to demonstrate it. I have them under my hand. There is the most ample evidence that the policy of this government largely contributed to the wealth and prosperity that prevail to-day. It ought not to require figures. The Conservative papers admit it. Take any individual not only among members of parliament, but any individual on the street, and ask him whether he ever experienced such prosperity as exists to-day in Canada, and he will tell you no, and to say that this government did not largely contribute to that prosperity is rather a misstatement of the facts. I was very much amused indeed at my hon. friend charging this government with increasing the taxation. What he calls taxation is the revenue derived from the purchases that the people of this country made out of the superabundance of their wealth in buying goods abroad. It is pretty hard for a government to say what to do. We wanted to bring down the tariff, but our friends opposite, the opposition, and probably some from our own side, say, 'Don't do that, you will ruin us, you will destroy the industries of this country. Put it up, put it up,' and that is the attack that is made on us to-day from all directions, that we are destroying the industries of this country by the tariff we have at present. I noticed in the election campaign in St. James and Hochelaga that this government was charged with ruining the industries of the country because we have not put up the tariff higher. We have to strike a medium between the two. We now have a tariff that does not oppress the people. Through the policy pursued by the government the people have accumulated a great deal of wealth in this country. You can see that. Attend any of our fairs and you will notice that in no part of this world are farmers in a better condition than the farmers of Canada. That is the case with everybody. I say the facts will show very conclusively that this government, by the tariff, have adopted a medium line, which has increased the prosperity of Canada very largely. They have not destroyed the interests of this country, and whatever views I or others may have held on protection or free trade when the change of government took place in 1896, it was absolutely impossible for Sir Richard Cartwright or any other free trader to go back to his old views. I do not propose now to discuss that question, but I do think that it can be shown that had free trade always existed in Canada, as it does in England, this country would be prosperous to-day. It is an agricultural country, and its wealth is due to the products of the soil, but there is no use discussing that. This government did not come in to ruin people who had large sums of money invested in manufactures. They wanted to save them, and at the same time open avenues of trade. In order to make that perfectly clear, Mr. Foster the other day, speaking in Montreal, admitted that there was very great prosperity, and he said that it was because the present government had followed in the footsteps of their predecessors. They had made no change in the tariff; there was only a difference of 1 per cent in the customs duty, and it was entirely due to the fact that they had followed in the footsteps of their predecessors that the country is prosperous. Now, let us see what Sir Charles Tupper, the leader of the opposition at that time, said about the new tariff in 1897. He first alluded to the fact that Sir Wifrid Laurier and other members of the government assured the manufacturers that they would not be ruined, that we were not going to introduce any drastic legislation that was going to destroy the industries of the country; and Sir Charles and the opposition, when that tariff was going through parliament, denounced the government because they had not kept their promise, because they were ruining the industries of this country. Sir Charles says :

> What is the result ? The result is, that this tariff goes into operation and the hon. gentleman knows that the industries of this country are already paralyzed in consequence. While hon. gentlemen gloat, vindictively gloat over the destruction of Canadian industries, I was reading the wail, the sorrowful wail of those industries in the Montreal 'Gazette,' where one manufacturer after another declares that their industries were ruined, that their mills must close and that they saw staring them in the face a return to the deplorable state of things that existed when the hon. gentleman who last addressed the House was in charge of the fiscal policy of this country. I say that a deeper wrong was never inflicted upon Canada. It would have been bad enough if the hon. gentlemen had gone to the country with a frank avowal that they were in favour of what they had declared to be their policy for long years previously. It would have been bad enough if they had been able to get a majority pledged to sweep these industries and to destroy a policy that had achieved so much for Canada, but to obtain power by the solemn declaration made publicly and privately all over this country that no harm would come to the manufacturing industries, that not a hair of their heads should be touched, that in fact their rights would be protected and their position would be improved because they were going to have their raw material free.

That was the view that the Conservative party had of this tariff, and ask any fair-minded manufacturer to compare the last seven years with the preceding seven years: the industries of this country have nearly doubled, having been unable to meet the demands. Are there not demands now for Canadian products all over the world, South Australia and the West Indies and Mexico and every other country? Our agents who are abroad in South Africa report, 'Why cannot your manufacturers take advantage of it.' The fact of the matter is they cannot supply the home demand, and the people must buy abroad. What has been the effect? It has been to bring United States manufacturers into the country. See the enormous concern recently started at Hamilton, covering a number of acres, for the manufacture of agricultural implements. They came from across the line; also large manufacturers of locomotives came from the United States and bought a concern in this country. They said, 'You do not seem able to supply the needs of the country, and we will come over and establish an industry here that will meet the demands.' I might go on and enumerate several cases.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Will the hon. gentleman explain why they came over?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because they say this is a good market and our manufacturers here are not equal to the demand.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Why do they not continue to manufacture in the United States and send the goods over?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because the protection keeps them out. The hon. gentleman's speech was one mass of absolute inconsistencies from beginning to end. In the eighteen years that the hon. gentlemen had charge of the Treasury benches the trade of this country absolutely stagnated, there is not a manufacturer in Canada who will deny that his business has been more than doubled or trebled since the change of government. They are now beginning to send abroad. I think before 1897 the whole manufactures of this country sold abroad were $6,000,000. Last year the export was $20,000,000, but the demand in Canada has been so great that our people must buy. One question is, why do people buy goods coming from the United States? The answer is because the people find they can buy things cheaper there, because it suits them to buy. Are we going to muzzle the people of this country absolutely and say you must buy so and so? No, they at least have the freedom of the world. We have protected our manufactures to a very great degree. I should like to point to a few figures in confirmation of the statement I make that the whole business of this country was paralyzed from the time the late government came into power in 1879, until they were turned out in 1896. I take a couple of years after the national policy was established, when it was in fairly good working order. The imports then were $105,000,000 and the exports $108,000,000. My hon. friend attempted to make a point because last year our imports were larger than our exports; but we find that from 1881, when the national policy was introduced for the very purpose of keeping out imports, the imports exceeded the exports. The theory of the government of that day was to send your exports abroad but to buy all you want at home, but the very first year I quote here the figures were as I have given them, and it was the same in every year after that for fourteen years, the imports exceeded the exports. It was an absolute reversal of the policy they were preaching and of the way they expected it to work out. Their exports languished. The farmers were kept down—they were too poor to do business. The trade in 1881 was $203,000,000, and in 1896 it had risen to $239,000,000. In all that time, fifteen years, the trade of this country had gained only $36,000,000. In 1903 the trade of this country was $466,000,000 that is, in our seven years we had gained $227,000,000 against their $36,000,000 between 1881 and 1896. These figures have elicited remarks from all parts of the world. I read a day or two ago an article in the 'Bankers Magazine' pointing to the extraordinary prosperity of Canada in the last few years. It has been noted in Great Britain over and over again. In fact it was almost incredible. Finally, a distinguished statistician proved that, per capita, our people are the richest in the world; he showed our trade per capita was greater than that of any other people. He took our savings banks showing deposits running up to nearly $500,000,000, and that has all been within the last seven years, and yet enormous sums in that period have been invested in various enterprises. If hon. gentlemen would watch the number of companies incorporated, not alone at Ottawa, but in all the provinces, it is perfectly amazing where the money comes from. It is evidence of the wealth of Canada. Only last year we incorporated a company to do business in Mexico. It was a company which started in Nova Scotia. When I asked what their capital was I was told it was $17,000,000. I said, will the government of Mexico recognize a Canadian charter, and they said 'Oh, yes, all we want is a charter' That company—I think Mr. Ross is at the head of it—is doing a good business in Mexico developing the country and making money. According to the hon. gentleman's theory, the exports furnish evidence of the wealth of the country, although the government of which he was a member was never able to carry out that theory, their imports always exceeding their exports for fourteen consecutive years. Now, taking the whole exports of produce from 1890 to 1896—and I give them the benefit of the best seven years they had—the whole export of home products, embracing the products of the farm, forest, and fisheries, was $694,000,000. In our seven years we sold abroad of products under the same heads $1,162,000,000. There is just that difference. Something must have been done. It was not that the sun shone more warmly on us, but some impulse must have been given. It is not possible to conceive that that could be the mere effect of accident, without the government in some way or other directing it. My hon. friend smiles; I will take one article as an illustration. When I was in the government before, we endeavoured to develop a butter trade with Great Britain, and we brought our exports up to $3,000,000. The hon. gentlemen who succeeded us did not exercise the same paternal influence towards it and the export fell to about $800,000 during the last year they were in office. We took it up again and favoured it by various means with which you are all familiar and brought the export up to $6,000,000. The exports of butter alone will probably during the next ten years be double or treble that.

I have here under my hand the 'Canada Gazette'. I thought the Public Accounts were distributed; they were to have been laid on the table the day the House opened, because they were printed, but I have the 'Canada Gazette' to which every hon. gentleman has access. I find that our trade for the eight months of the year up to the end of last month is greater by $55,000,000 than the highest year of the late government. That is pretty strong evidence that some impetus must have been given to the trade of Canada. Whether it was Sir Wilfred Laurier's speech, or the preferential tariff, or calling attention to Canada as we have done, advertising it and sending trade agents abroad, and encouraging trade in every direction, which in my judgment has had a great deal to do with it, there is the fact. The hon. gentleman gave some figures about the net debt. He was quite correct as far as he went. In 1879 the debt was $142,000,000. In 1896 it was $258,000,000. That was an increase of $116,000,000. In 1893—I do not know whether my hon. friend gave those figures correctly—it was $261,000,000.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I gave the figures at the close of 1896 and last year.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In 1893 it was $3,000,000 higher than when this government took office. In the 'Canada Gazette' the net debt is put down at $251,000,000.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—What date is that?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Up to the end of February last.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend knows that the state of the debt at any particular period of the year is no indication.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is published under the authority of the Finance Department, at all events.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—No doubt it is right, but it does not give evidence whether the debt is falling or rising for the whole year.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It will be a good deal less at the end of the year. In the meantime I may quote the 'Canada Gazette.' The statement appears over the signature of the Deputy Minister of Finance, and it shows that the net debt at the end of February was $251,000,000. That was $7,000,- 000 less than when this government took office, and at the same time this government has spent on capital account, $46,000,000. The hon. gentleman claims considerable credit for the expenditure on the Canadian Pacific Railway. He seems to ignore entirely the fact that the preceding government, the Mackenzie administration, had taken up the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1874. I was a member of that government, and had the honour of introducing the Bill in this chamber in 1874. The hon. gentleman compared the building of that railway in five years with the time given for the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific, eight years. But the Canadian Pacific Railway was not built in eight years; it took more than ten years to build it. It was first launched in 1871. The Canadian government, however, failed to vitalize it, and the Mackenzie administration took it up in 1874, and went on with it as a government work, gave out the contracts, and nearly completed the line between Lake Superior and Winnipeg. The contracts were given out for the line in British Columbia, and very large sums of money were spent for sections which were handed over in 1881 to the present company. After the change of government in 1878, the administration of Sir John Macdonald continued the same policy for three years—went on building the road; so the hon. gentleman is entirely wrong in assuming that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company built their road in five years. There is the fact that we have reduced the public debt by seven million dollars, and we have spent on capital account, on canals, Dominion lands, railways, and other public works, $46,000,000.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the hon. gentleman assert that the government has reduced the debt by seven million dollars up to last February ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What was it last June ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was $3,000,000 the other way, in excess of what it had been in 1896, but hon. gentlemen know very well that the revenue has been largely increased during the last eight months.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I wanted to know what it was on June 30, 1903 ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was $261,000,000, that is $3,000,000 more than it had been in 1896. Now, I think the evidences of prosperity are apparent, and I have briefly adverted to them, giving the figures and showing that the statement is sustained by the facts.

The hon. gentleman made some comments in his opening about our desiring to have trade with the United States. For the last 50 or 60 years it has been the aim of the people of Canada to have trade relations with the United States. In 1856 Lord Elgin succeeded in securing a reciprocity treaty which was very beneficial to the people on both sides. I need not point out why that was annulled. It was due entirely to action taken by the United States on the assumption that Canada had rather favoured the southerners during the American rebellion. Since that time the Conservative party held office for very much longer periods than the Liberal party, and they always endeavoured to obtain reciprocity with the United States. Sir John Macdonald's argument, when introducing the tariff in 1879, was that we should have either reciprocity of trade or reciprocity of tariffs, and one reason for raising our tariff was to coerce the United States into reciprocity. Over and over again that was asserted. It is no new statement from me. It was one justification for having a high tariff.

The hon. gentleman made some references which have been answered on other occasions over and over again, to the position which Sir Wilfrid Laurier took in England at the time the preferential tariff was offered to Great Britain. If the Liberal party are entitled to credit for any one thing above all others, it is for the present feeling of imperialism and closer connection with the mother country. They have at all events made that mark, and the hon. gentleman says that Sir Wilfrid Laurier refused to accept a 'quid pro quo.' He talked as if it rested with Mr. Chamberlain to hand over to Canada a policy of reciprocity allowing our natural products to enter the British market at a preference and taxing those of all other countries. Now, surely, the hon. gentleman could not in a sane mind make such a statement when he finds Mr. Chamberlain going out of office because he could make no headway with his colleagues ! The Duke of Devonshire is quoted as being ready to grant a preference to Canada, when the Duke has taken the bold stand that on no terms would he consent to the food of the people being taxed.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend will bear in mind that I made no statement of what Mr. Chamberlain could do or what he had the power to do. What I did was to read Sir Wilfrid Laurier's own words, in which he warned the people of England not to give Canada any preference.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Did Sir Wilfrid Laurier know how to pay a compliment? If Sir Wilfrid Laurier had gone there and said, We will do this if you will do that, would they have looked upon us with any degree of favour ? No, they would have said, 'You are a pack of speculators ; you want to make something out of the unfortunate operatives of England, who are underpaid, and to whom the difference of a halfpenny on the price of a loaf means a great deal. You want a preference which will increase the poverty of the starving millions.' Sir Wilfrid Laurier acted the part of a diplomat, and made a virtue of necessity. It would have been idle for him to have taken any other stand, when men like the Duke of Devonshire and Mr. Chamberlain have left the government because the government would not consent to the taxation of the food of the people, and when Mr. Balfour has recently made the announcement, in speaking of the withdrawal of the Duke of Devonshire and Mr. Chamberlain from his cabinet, 'I am not in favour of taxing the people's food; it cannot be done now what ever may be done in the future. Whether the people can be educated up to that in the future I cannot say, but they are not in a position to accept such a policy.' It is idle for any one who pretends to know what is going on in the mother country to make those absurd statements about Canada being able to get a preference in the British market. Had Sir Wilfrid Laurier attempted to make a bargain, where would we have been to-day ? Would we have been able to sell this large volume of exports ? I think not. All over England they say, give us Canadian products and goods. In purchasing we will give them the preference. Is not that evident from the fact that we have exported double, treble the amount that the former government exported ? Is it not due to the good feeling we have excited in England in offering to help the mother country by admitting her goods at one-third less than the goods of other countries? They naturally respond to that and send their agents to Canada and purchase Canadian goods. That is a fact well known; it does not need proof. Sir Wilfrid Laurier got ten times the value for Canada that he would have got had he attempted to make a bargain. He could not have carried his policy, Mr. Chamberlain could not, the Duke of Devonshire could not. Every one will admit that imperialism has made great strides since 1896, and yet to-day leading members of the government resign on that issue, and even Mr. Balfour had to say the other day in the House, 'I will never consent to tax the food of the people. We are not in a position to do it, whatever we may do in the future.'

As it is near six o'clock, I move an adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Tuesday, March 15, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock p.m.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—I rise to a question of privilege. In this morning's 'Citizen' there is an article reflecting upon certain hon. gentlemen in this House, and as they are present I think it only right that we should receive an explanation from them. The article reads as follows :—

Judges were ignored—

Did not receive any invitation to the opening—Chief Justice was assured by Speaker Power that the Woolsack would not be restored to the Senate—Who is responsible ?

Unless prevailing conditions are satisfactorily adjusted, the elaborate official and social ceremonial connected with the opening of parliament is not likely to be hereafter graced with the presence of the learned judges of the Supreme Court of Canada. The absence from last Friday's opening of their lordships and their wives and daughters caused a decided ripple of excitement and continues to be a fruitful theme of discussion in the upper social strata. This is not the first year that complications have arisen affecting the attendance of the judges at the opening. Last year without any notification being sent the judges, the woolsack or official seat of the judges was removed and that caused a considerable dissatisfaction inasmnch as in the absence thereof the judges, if attending, would not wear their robes of office. Their attendance would therefore assume a social rather than an official significance.

To prevent a recurrence of the unpleasantness of last year, Sir Elzear Taschereau, chief justice, wired last week to Mr. Speaker Power of the Senate inquiring if the woolsack was to be in position for the judges at the opening on last Friday. The answer came back that the same regulations would prevail as last year, and that in place of occupying the woolsack the judges would sit with the archbishops. Notwithstanding this assurance by Speaker Power, who, as head of the Senate, is responsible for the arrangements within the chamber at the opening, the woolsack was this year in its usual place, though no notice to that effect was sent to the judges.

But where the particularly indelicate point of the whole matter comes in is that though the accustomed seat was provided for their lordships they were ignored in the matter of being invited to the opening. On the authority of one of the judges, the 'Citizen' is in a position to state that their lordships received no official notification to attend or invitation to be present, either in an official or private capacity. It has been customary for them to receive what was more of an official notification than an invitation, but this year there was an entire omission of any form of invitation. As before stated, it appears that from the official list of those to be invited, the judges of the Supreme Court were entirely omitted, but Captain Chambers, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, saw that the wives and daughters of their lordships were sent cards even though, in so doing, he was perhaps exceeding the instructions of the official list provided for his guidance. The judges are not disposed to blame the Usher of the Black Rod, but rather hold responsible his superior officer, Mr. Speaker Power.

In the latter connection that gentleman is regarded by some of the interested parties in this case as being rather weak and the real man behind the gun in arranging things is said to be the Secretary of State.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman did not finish reading the article.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—Yes, I know that there is some more of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Better read the rest of the article.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—The article continues :—

Action was concerted.

It is learned that in staying away from the opening last Friday the judges acted in concert. 'We received no invitations to be present,' said one of the number yesterday, 'and in consequence we didn't go. We did not like the idea of being considered as intruders.'

Last year the judges' wives were denied precedence after the wives of cabinet ministers, and this caused considerable irritation.

It is now announced that the woolsack is to be consigned to oblivion and the statement has been made that the judges approved of this. That is denied, however, 'It is not absolutely necessary that it should be there,' stated one of their lordships, 'but if it is not there the judges will not attend the opening in their robes of office.'

In reply to a question as to the probable reason for the judges being omitted from the official list, one of the number stated that it was regarded as an error more than anything else. 'Next year,' he said, 'it is presumed we will have a new Speaker, and we are expecting that the grievance will be satisfactorily adjusted. Until something is done, however, different from this year, it is safe to predict that the judges will not attend the opening ceremony.'

The occurrence of Friday has been widely discussed at the social functions occurring since then, and it is well known that the Prime Minister is much annoyed over the situation.

The SPEAKER—If it is the wish of the House I shall try to explain my connection with this rather unfortunate occurrence. I think it was on the 2nd March I received a despatch from the Hon. Sir H. Elzear Taschereau, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, in which he asked whether the practice adopted last year would be followed this year. That is all of the despatch that I consider is relevant. He asked some question also as to the places for the wives of the judges. I replied to Sir Elzear's telegram on the 23rd March, as follows :—

'My impression is that the committee to direct Black Rod recommended abolishment of woolsack and that judges sit with archbishops, &c.'

I simply gave the chief justice my recollection of what had taken place and I did not, as Speaker, assume any authority in the matter whatever. I simply spoke as a member of the Senate, and as any other member of the Senate would have had a perfect right to speak, giving his recollection of what had taken place. Nothing further occurred until Thursday last, when his lordship, the chief justice, attended here as deputy governor for the purpose of opening parliament; and I noticed then that the woolsack was in its usual place between the clerk's table and the throne. His lordship, who, naturally, would be interested in the fact, must also have observed the woolsack, because it was directly in front of him. On the same evening, at a ceremonial function which took place near the city, I met one of the judges of the Supreme Court, who spoke to me about the matter and seemed to think that I was responsible for the fact that the judges had not been invited to take the places which they had occupied up to last session. I told the judge in question that I had nothing to do with the matter, but, I added, that I noticed the woolsack was in its usual place, and this judge then said that the judges had received no notice to that effect and that he thought they should receive an official notice. Well, hon. gentlemen, the judge was right, but I did not feel that I had either the right or the duty to send any official notice to the judges. I had nothing to do with the removal of the woolsack nor with its being replaced, and I thought probably if I undertook to give any orders with respect to the judges my action might be resented as an impertinence by the gentleman who had dealt with the woolsack. I remember that the hon. the Secretary of State was at this same gathering and was close by, and the substance of what I further said to the judge was that the Secretary of State if spoken to would probably see that the required notice was sent. The judge, as far as I can gather, did not speak to the hon. Secretary of State on the matter, and no formal notice was sent and that is about all I have to say. There is this further fact, that the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod prepared a list of the ladies and gentlemen who were to be invited to seats on the floor of the House, and on that list he had the names of the Supreme Court judges, their wives and daughters. It appears that this list was handed to a clerk to fill up the cards which were to be sent in accordance with the list, and the clerk probably being very much hurried or not familiar with the work, sent the cards to the wives and daughters of the judges but did not inclose cards for the judges themselves. I do not see that the Usher of the Black Rod or myself is to blame in the matter. It is unfortunate that a misunderstanding should have occurred, but I do not think that we are to blame, and as far as I am aware there does not seem to be any one to blame. I assume that the Secretary of State thought, as I did, that a proper notice had been sent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I took the precaution to ask whether the invitations had gone to the judges the day before, and was informed that they had. I presumed invitations had been sent because their names were on the notices intended to be sent. I think it is purely an accidental inadvertence. The Usher of the Black Rod has only very recently been appointed, and everything had to be done in a very great hurry and perhaps he was not acquainted with the work. He showed every desire to discharge the duties incidental to the meeting of the House, and I saw him once or twice in his room working hard with a clerk. It appears to be a matter of inadvertence that those notices were not sent. I do not see that any further remark can be made about it. If cards were sent to the judges' wives and daughters, they might have assumed that they were included with the members of the government and the Senate who were not invited.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a matter of regret that almost at every meeting of parliament there is some little hitch in connection with precedence. It is very unfortunate that it should be so. I never knew or could understand why the woolsack was removed from the chamber last year. There was no recommendation to that effect from the committee to whom this question was referred. There is one point, however, which might justify the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod in not sending the invitations, the fact that the judges of the Supreme Court are not specially mentioned in the report which was made by that committee to the Senate. The Usher of the Black Rod, as I understand it, took it for granted that the judges of the Supreme Court had certain rights and privileges on the floor of the Senate, and, therefore, may have omitted to send invitations, but on inquiry I find that he placed the names, as has been mentioned by Mr. Speaker, on the list of those to whom invitations were to be sent, but through some inadvertence, I presume on the part of the clerk, while he sent the invitations to the wives and daughters of the Supreme Court judges, he omitted to send them to the judges themselves. What the practice has been in the past in reference to sending invitations to the judges, I am not prepared to say. Perhaps the Speaker can give us information on that point.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The Speaker has nothing to do with it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am aware of that. The present Speaker indicated very clearly that he took the same view, that he had nothing to do with it; and that if he interfered it might be considered a piece of impertinence on his part either by the members of the Senate or by the judges themselves, therefore he declined giving any instruction in the matter. The point in which the Speaker was, innocently, I presume, in error, was in his reference to the report of the committee which had been appointed to consider this question, as to who should be invited to positions and seats on the floor of the House. From the fact that the woolsack, as it is termed, was removed from the floor of the Senate last year, the Speaker might, no doubt, be led to the conclusion at which he arrived, that a recommendation had been made for its removal. I was on that committee, and I have no recollection of that question having been discussed, but there certainly was no intention, speaking for myself, and I think I may add for those with whom I was associated on that committee, that any slight should have been cast on the judges of the highest court of the Dominion, and if they did omit the names of the judges in their report which was adopted and from which the invitations were issued by the late Usher of the Black Rod, it was purely unintentional, and I can only hope that in future these difficulties may not arise. They are matters of very little consequence to the community generally, but in the light of what I might term courtesy and proper treatment of those in high positions we should try to avoid them as much as possible. Many people will say the woolsack is a relic of old times. Well, supposing it is, there are certain dignities pertaining to it, and these old forms and formalities add much, I think, to the solemnity of the ceremonies of the opening of parliament, and I for one should very much dislike to see them abolished.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am glad the hon. Secretary of State agrees with me upon this. I know that in this democratic age these things are looked upon with contempt by some. I think they have a certain bearing on the dignity and solemnity of an assembling of parliament and until we see good reasons for changing them they should be continued.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—There might be a question why the woolsack is here at all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is just what I say.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I think I was on the committee with my hon. friend and other members, but I do not remember that the question about the woolsack was raised. I see no reason why the woolsack should be in this House. The woolsack is the seat of the Lord Chancellor of the House in England, but the House of Lords declared that he sat there not as a judge but as chairman of the House of Lords' and really I do not think any harm would be done by removing it except that my hon. friend does not like to see an old custom abolished.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I understand the committee last year decided to abolish the woolsack.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I do not remember that.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That ought to be understood. I certainly thought it would be kindness to the judges themselves to abolish the very uncomfortable seat they had in this chamber. I thought they would be much more comfortable in the ordinary chairs of the House than on that very uncomfortable bench where they have no rest for their backs. If the committee reported last year to abolish the woolsack, whatever my personal opinion might be on the question, I would think that if the judges had the slightest desire that it should be retained we should accede to their wishes. I am sure there is no feeling in this House excepting one, with regard to the judges of the highest court in the land, that is, to treat them with all the respect and consideration befitting the dignity of their high office. Therefore if the committee reported to abolish the woolsack and the judges would prefer to have it remain, I think the Usher of the Black Rod should make inquiries and have the matter put right. But I cannot see that the dignity of the court would not be just as well preserved by having chairs for the judges on the floor of the House abreast of the bishops and archbishops who are personages of much higher rank according to the Royal regulations regarding precedence—in fact who take precedence over the cabinet ministers. The puisne judges of any court in the land do not take precedence even over senators. Therefore, I thought it would not be an infraction of the dignity of the judges and would add greatly to their comfort if they had comfortable chairs like we provide the high dignitaries of the churches on the floor of this House on the occasion of these important functions. Some people think, perhaps, that we overdo these functions. Perhaps I am old-fashioned, but I am not altogether of that opinion, and I agree with my hon. friend beside me that our institutions are sustained by a good deal of form and ceremony, which come down to us with the hoary attribute of time, and which we are almost as much attached to as we are to the institutions which we enjoy.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Perhaps the hon. gentleman did not hear me. I stated distinctly that that committee did not report in favour of the abolition of the woolsack. I have the report in my hand.

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER—As one of the members of the committee appointed to regulate invitations, I regret to contradict my predecessor in the chair, that there was no order from the committee to remove the woolsack from the usual place. I am sure there was no question about it. As to what was done last year I do not know. I do not remember that any question was put to the committee as to retaining the woolsack. I know that during the time I had the honour to be in the chair there was never any mention made of invitations to the judges of the Supreme Court: in fact I thought that really they did not want an invitation, that like the ministers they had a right to be on the floor of the House. I did not know what was the custom about these invitations, but my impression was that they were always supposed to be present without any invitation. I am very sorry that the difficulty has occurred, and I am sure that for next session, and for prorogation this session, the difficulty will be settled for ever.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—The woolsack was removed by some one giving orders last year that it should be removed. What I should like to know is, who gave the order to the chief messenger last year—because I suppose it was he—to remove them. That might throw some light on this question, unimportant as it is, but still that fact has some importance. I should like to know who gives orders in contravention of the old usages that have prevailed in this House since confederation?

The SPEAKER—I wish to call the attention of the leader of the opposition to the fact that my telegram did not state positively—I only gave my impression.

Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think when the hon. Speaker reads the report of what I said he will find that I did not attribute it to him. I said I could readily understand the hon. Speaker might have come to that conclusion from the fact that the woolsack had been removed last year. I was rather giving that as an illustration or reason why he might have come to that conclusion.

PRINTING OF THE SENATE DEBATES.

Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is another matter I wish to bring to the attention of the House. I notice that the reports of our debates are very late in reaching the members of the Senate. I have in my hand the debate of last night in the Commons. The reason I bring up this question is to see if the Committee on Printing the Debates cannot make some suggestion by which, when an important debate takes place, the members of the Senate can have in their hands the next day what has taken place the day before, in order that they may be enabled to deal with it. The reason I call attention to that is that I had not the pleasure or advantage of listening to the debate yesterday, owing to my absence. I was very anxious to read what the hon. Secretary of State had said on one or two points as to which there might be some little difference of opinion. I read the newspapers but I must confess that they do not contain anything in reference to the point to which I refer. What I would suggest is this. The reports of the debates in the House of Commons are distributed in what is called the unrevised edition, to be corrected afterwards. Would there be any objection to handing the proof sheets, of the debates in the Senate in galley form, which would be the unrevised speeches of members similar to the sheets just handed to my hon. friend on my right, the next morning after the debate? They would then be able to read what had taken place, and if there was any inaccuracy it could be corrected. I see some practical men sitting before me who understand this question. The course I suggest would not add to the expense, having 50 or 60 proof sheets struck off and pinned together. We could use it in that form. We all know that when the first edition comes to the Commons in this form, there are additions and alterations made, necessitating very often a rearrangement perhaps of 50 or 60 pages of the report and adds very materially to the expense. I hope the committee will consider this matter. I think advantages may arise from it, and we may avoid a good deal of misrepresentation that some of us perhaps are led to make as to what has been said by senators from the fact of not having the proof sheets of the reports before us.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I happened to be a member of the Debates Committee when some change took place in the publishing of the debates. They used to be published in an unrevised edition, in pamphlet form, and it turned out that these unrevised editions were scattered abroad in the country in a condition which was not a credit for those who took part in the discussion. Certainly, it is not pleasant for members to have reports of the debates spread over the country possibly full of defects and mistakes. Sometimes the very reverse of what an hon. senator had said was printed. So that the Committee on Debates thought it would be better not to have those unrevised editions issued, and they then ordered the system as it exists to-day; but of course such a system takes time. It takes four days before we can get the debates. We might, perhaps, remedy that by having debates of the previous day distributed among the members in galley form.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That was my suggestion.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—We would know exactly, especially if we were present, what an hon. gentleman might have said. I think that is the only way to remedy it. Our staff is not large enough to have those debates printed as quickly as they are in the House of Commons; it would cost too much for the Senate to have such a staff and I do not think it is necessary. But if we had these proofs distributed the next day, that would answer the purpose.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In place of distributing these galleys perhaps it might be preferable to have say a dozen of them on fyle at the reporters' room, so that anybody who wanted to see them could call there and see them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is a matter of detail for the committee.

THE ADDRESS.

DEBATE CONTINUED.

The Order of the Day being called:

Resuming the ajourned debate on the consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech on the opening of the fourth session of the ninth parliament.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said: The hon. gentleman from Marshfield who led the opposition yesterday, in the absence of the hon. leader, was very severe in his comments on the policy and administration of the government. They had failed in all the purposes that the government ought to have succeeded in. He would give them no credit for the increase in the trade of the country nor for the improved condition of things generally. I think I invited investigation of the line that I had taken, that the government were entitled to very considerable credit for the business interest that they exhibited in the development and prosperity of the country.

I come now to one of the departments of the government with which, practically, the whole people have to deal. It will show, I think, most clearly and demonstrate beyond any possibility of a doubt that some extraordinary change of policy must have taken place with the change of government in 1896. I am alluding now to the administration of the Post Office Department. Mr. Foster, who was the Finance Minister of the former administration, in his budget speech in 1896, which will be found at pages 971 and 972 of the 'Hansard,' vol. 2, made these observations :

DEBATE RESUMED.

'In the post office we have an increased estimate of $240,780, which is a large increase. The demands for the opening up of new lines and for greater frequency and greater thoroughness in the delivery and despatch of mails are continually pressing upon the Post Office Department, and a large expenditure has necessarily to be made if we are to keep at all even with requirements of the times which we are bound to do. There is now a deficit of somewhere near $800,000 between the total receipts and the total expenditure of our post office service and this, I fear, makes the time somewhat distant when what otherwise might be fairly asked for can be granted, that is a reduction upon the rates of postage in this country.

That deficit, hon. gentlemen, had been a chronic one, and Mr. Foster put it down as one that, in his judgment, at all events at that time, he saw no prospects of removing. Now, I would just like to give a retrospect of what occurred in the administration of the department after the change of government, and compare it with the practice before. The net revenue of the Post Office Department for the year 1878, when the change of government took place, was $1,224,000. In 1896 it had risen to $2,964,000, being an increase in eighteen years of $1,740,000. That was the whole increase in the net revenue of the eighteen years of the national policy, under which that government was said to be flourishing. Hon. gentlemen have the Post Office Report in their possession for 1903, and they will see that the net revenue was $4,360,000, being a net increase of $2,226,000 in seven years—an increase of nearly double in seven years. Here it may be as well to mention that the Postmaster General, by a bold stroke of policy, reduced the postage through Canada from three to two cents. He also, after a great deal of difficulty with the imperial authorities, succeeded in reducing the Canadian postage to all parts of the empire from five to two cents. After a very prolonged discussion, in which there was a great deal of opposition on the part of the imperial post office authorities, he succeeded in reducing the postage on newspapers between this country and Great Britain. Complaints had been made that this country was being flooded with United States literature. English literature was expensive and hard to obtain, and the postage charge was one cause which prevented its circulation in the Dominion; yet the authorities connected with the imperial post office were so slow to recognize the importance of having British news disseminated through Canada that they obstinately refused to reduce the postage in order to meet the objection of this country that the Dominion was being flooded with United States literature. Now I turn to the business part. The money orders are supposed to be an index of the business done in this country. I take first the seven years preceding the change of government, 1890 to 1896; they show an actual decrease in the money orders issued. The value of money orders issued in 1890 was $1,471,946, and in 1896 it actually had fallen to $1,365,827. Last year the value of money orders issued was $3,682,312. So that hon. gentlemen will see that something must have stirred the business of this country, because there is no better standard of the state of business than the ordinary post office orders which pass between the people for comparatively small amounts. I need not quote here the increase of business in the banks. Every banker who has spoken on the subject has pointed out the extraordinary extension of the business of the country in the last few years. I particularly call the attention of hon. gentlemen to the remarks of the manager of the Bank of Montreal, the largest monetary institution we have, in which he went very definitely into the whole subject, and pointed out that there was not a branch of industry in Canada that did not show an extraordinary and successful expansion in business, and it was quite unprecedented in its history. The number of letters posted through the mails may also be taken as some standard of the activity of the people. The increase in eighteen years under the late administration of the number of letters sent through the post office was 73,000,000. In the seven years ending with 1903 it was 119,000,000. Hon. gentlemen will see there the enormous increase in those seven years as compared with the whole eighteen years of the former period. Since July, 1896, the number of post offices through the country has increased considerably over 1,000. The expenditure of the department has necessarily increased just as the general expenditure of the government has increased. My hon. friend pointed out yesterday that we were extravagant and were going to ruin the country, but it was very clear there was a large credit balance to meet the expenditure. My hon. friend ought to recollect that the management of government affairs is not unlike that of an ordinary business establishment. If a merchant finds his trade increasing he is not slow to avail himself of the opportunity to extend his business. No better standards of the development of the country can be quoted than those I have given in conjunction with an admission made by a Finance Minister so recently as 1896. He looked upon the deficit of the post office as a necessity. He did not see how he was to get over it, and yet that deficit has not only disappeared, but this year there is a large surplus in the face of a reduction of the rate of postage. I should like to call attention also to the marked business ability exhibited in the Department of the Interior. I shall only refer to one particular instance there, showing the extraordinary immigration that has gone into Manitoba and the Northwest owing to the business methods adopted in advertising Canada and spending some money for the purpose. Government business is like any other business, more particularly in a young country like Canada, where we have so many resources to be made known to the public. We are not like an older country, and therefore money invested in advertising comes back one hundred-fold. Take the ten years in which the late government held office, from 1881 to 1891. The census returns, which I suppose are correct, because they were taken under the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite, show that the increase of population in Manitoba was from 62,000 to 152,000, an increase in ten years of 90,000. The increase in the same period in the Territories was 41,284, a total increase in ten years in Manitoba and the Northwest of 131,530. It must be recollected that during half that time at least the Canadian Pacific Railway was in operation, and therefore it cannot be maintained that there were not opportunities to send settlers into that country had the proper policy been adopted. It is an ascertained fact that the increase last year alone was 139,000, which is more in one year than the whole increase from 1881 to 1891 under the former government. The hon. gentleman had a fling at the government in connection with recent by-elections, and claimed that the majorities of the government were dwindling, and that it was an indication that the people condemned the Grand Trunk Pacific project and the policy of the government generally. It seemed to afford him great consolation. We do not grudge him the consolation so long as we get the members. We are satisfied to have them even though the majorities are not in four figures. We do not always ask our friends to come out and vote when it is absolutely unnecessary. Since the election in 1900 there have been forty-two by-elections; of these the Liberals carried thirty-four, a pretty good evidence that the country is with them yet; and of the thirty-four, four were gains, and if you count the Yukon, it would make five gains. The Yukon was neutral territory for both parties, but apart from that there were four gains.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Will the hon. gentleman name the four.

Hon Mr. SCOTT—There was Lisgar.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Oh!

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A straight Liberal ran against Richardson who was supported by the Conservative party.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—He was a Liberal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, like the Huntington 'Gleaner'—that kind of a Liberal. The 'Gleaner' is always quoted as a Liberal organ. So long as my hon. friend takes consolation from it we have no objection.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When Richardson went back for re-election after being unseated, a Conservative opposed him.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, a Liberal.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And a Conservative also.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then in North Ontario, we recovered that constituency—Foster was beaten by Grant. In the city of Victoria, B.C., Mr. Riley carried the constituency which Mr. Prior had represented before. In one of the Yorks, after the lamented death of Clark Wallace, Archibald Campbell carried the constituency, and then, as I have said, there is the Yukon. On the other side the Conservatives took three seats from the government. In Bruce they succeeded in having a Conservative elected. In East Lambton the same, a Conservative was elected, although there it was not a question of the policy of the government at all, but of whether crude oil should be admitted into the country free or not. Our candidate was in the refining business and wanted crude oil admitted free. The successful candidate was opposed to it, and the majority of the people, who had wells and wanted to keep out the crude oil, voted for the Conservative candidate.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Was the oil question in Hochelaga and St. John too ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am just coming to those. In Grey, on the death of Mr. Horsey, the Conservatives carried that seat. In Laval, on Mr. Fortier's being elevated to the bench, a Conservative was elected. In St. John city a Conservative was elected. A little incident in connection with that election may be recited. My hon. friend omitted it when he stated the way in which the opposition carried St. John. He said it was a slap at the government and at the transcontinental railway. It is very well known by those who have studied the situation there that the present member, Mr. Daniel, was elected by reason of a very large body of Liberals declining to vote. I have the figures before me. The total voted in 1900 was 8,043. The vote of St. John had not certainly decreased. There is no doubt it had increased somewhat in the three years following. Yet the total vote in the recent election was 7,749, nearly 900 less than the former vote. The vote for the Liberal candidate was 3,523, and Mr. Daniel polled 186 more than Mr. Foster. Those 186 probably were added to the Conservative vote, owing to the increased population, but there is the fact that as compared with the former election about 900 votes were not recorded at all.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It would be exceedingly unkind on our part to deny my hon. friends any comfort they derive from the fact that the Liberals refused to vote for this government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They did not refuse to vote for the government. It was because a very considerable element of the population in St. John thought that the man they supposed should have been the choice of the convention had been turned down before the convention met ; they took this mode of resenting. The election turned on the question of the personality of the two Liberal candidates, so that it cannot be said that St. John has gone into the Conservative lines.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—How can it be ascertained that those who abstained from voting were Liberals ? Might there not have been some Conservatives among them ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We know that the Conservative vote was whipped in pretty actively, and the Liberal vote was nearly 1,000 less than it had been at the former election, and we know there was a very considerable element there of dissatisfied and disgruntled voters by reason of the incident to which I have referred.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—How do the two lists compare, the list of 1900 and the list of 1904 ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know ; I did not examine the lists.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman cannot draw any conclusions then.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The number of votes did not diminish.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It shows that the people were dissatisfied with the government.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON— There is a greater change in St. Hyacinthe. How does the hon. gentleman account for that ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the Liberals know that their man is going to be elected anyway they do not go to the polls. I thought the hon. senator from Marshfield went out of his way to pass a number of strictures on the premier and on Mr. Sifton in connection with the Alaska boundary and one or two other points. He had a slap at Sir Wilfrid in connection with his views on the subject of the treaty power. He said, among other things :

I feel it my duty to deprecate the heated language of the premier with regard to the policy of the British government on this matter.

That is the Alaska boundary commission. This government had given expression to a good deal of feeling because they were not satisfied with the manner in which they were treated by the imperial government. The hon. gentleman said further :

> And his advocacy of the policy that Canada should claim the right to negotiate her own treaties, was wholly undesirable.

He said further :

> I think the government have themselves to blame quite as much for any unfortunate incident in the formation of the tribunal.

He blamed this government for the formation of the tribunal, although he must have seen in the papers, the British papers particularly, that though they did not get all the correspondence, enough was made public to show that this government had protested just as strongly as the English language afforded words, against permitting Senator Lodge and Senator Turner to sit on that tribunal, but their protest was simply overruled, turned down, and the treaty was signed in defiance of their opposition. Not only that, but in the formation of the tribunal he blamed us actually for the result. He said :

> I make this observation as emphatic as I can : the government are very much to blame for agreeing to submit the Alaska boundary to a packed jury.

Then he also censured the premier because he said he had admitted that Dyea was in United States territory.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Did he say that ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, he said that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—From what is the hon. gentleman quoting ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—From the speech of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield yesterday. He condemned the premier and Mr. Sifton because they had made speeches in which they had said that there was no doubt about Dyea being in United States territory. When the hon. senator made the statement that the premier had no right to make that admission, I said the fact was patent, and that it ought to be admitted if it was true, and I said I knew it was true, because a school house had been built on the Lynn canal in the neighbourhood of Dyea, about 1882. I might with very much greater propriety have turned on the hon. gentleman and said ' your government made no protest when the United States built a school house there. I did not do that because public attention was not turned towards it at that time, but there is no doubt about it, that it was not in depriving us of the use of the Lynn canal that the principal injury was done to Canada. It was in not taking the headlands for the outer limit. If they had given us the line for which we contended we would have had the use of the head of Lynn canal, and every one would have been satisfied, but as a matter of fact, after delimiting the boundary for a certain distance along the coast, the board stopped and there is now a gap of about 200 miles of the Alaska boundary that has not yet been settled. They were afraid that if they took certain headlands then visible on the plan, it might possibly give us a line too near the coast, and so they postponed the consideration of this large gap and deputed certain experts to report on the topography of the country. I may tell hon. gentlemen that when such matters come up it is the best policy always to admit established facts. Lawyers are probably as controversial as other people, and, as a rule, in the profession where there is a fact known it is always wise to admit it. It rather weakens a case to deny it, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier knowing it was easily capable of proof that Dyea had been in possession of the United States, and that possession is nine points of the law, admitted the fact. What he said had not the weight of a straw on the ultimate decision.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend will kindly note that my remark was that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had made an admission in this parliament which was used by the United States counsel against our contention. He admitted that the Russians and the Americans had from time immemorial occupied this part of the country and that there never had been a protest against it. I said that neither statement was correct. That the occupation had not been from time immemorial and that there had been a protest in 1888.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have the evidence of what I stated before me. Alaska was ceded to the United States in 1867. In that year a United States revenue cutter sailed up the Lynn canal and hoisted the flag of the United States at Chilkat and formally took possession of the country in the name of the United States.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Where is that statement from ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have it here in a book which was published in 1871.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Was that evidence submitted to the tribunal ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes. It will be seen there was no doubt about the fact. In 1868 the United States army officers visited the head of Lynn canal and assumed control, visited the Indians there and received their submission and exercised authority over them. This was repeated in 1870 and subsequent years.

Hon Mr FERGUSON—That is from a United States authority.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—At a much later date they hoisted a flag beyond the height of land.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I know. We never recognized that, but they took possession of the head of Lynn canal in 1867 and we made no protest against it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You did when they crossed the height of land.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, both governments did. This report says a school was established near Dyea. In 1885 another school was established under the United States bureau at the same place, and later the United States government established post offices at Pyramid Harbour and other places, so Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in making the statement that they had had possession of it, did not in any way weaken the Canadian case, because it was an undoubted fact.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—He denied that there was any protest.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Why would you protest a matter where the proof against your protest was so clear and undeniable.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It was the matter of his veracity in denying that there was a protest. As a matter of fact, a protest was made in 1888.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Suppressing a fact may be very close to lying. and I do not think it is wise policy, particularly in diplomacy, ever to be a party to suppressing a fact which the other party must be aware of. You weaken your case. The hon. gentleman says we were to blame for agreeing to submit this question of the Alaska boundary to a packed jury. I am quite aware of the fact that the Americans were allowed to name officials who were entirely outside the qualifications that were understood to be attached to them. They were to be impartial jurists of repute. When we agreed to that, we naturally concluded that judges of the Supreme Court would have been selected. When we found that Senator Lodge and Senator Turner had been named we had their speeches, which appeared in the Canadian papers only a few months before that, and knew that they were committed to certain views, and we made a protest as strong as the English language is capable of affirming, but our protest was turned down just as former protests had been turned down before, and as the imperial government had shown themselves absolutely callous and indifferent when Canadian questions were affected having the United States for the claimant on the other side. I think I pointed out in a former debate in this House that owing to just that feeling, a desire to conciliate the United States and through having a very slight appreciation of the value of Canadian territory we lost Oregon and Wisconsin and a good part of Illinois which were given away without a protest. They formed no part of the thirteen colonies at the time of the rebellion in '76. In recent years we lost a large portion of New Brunswick just in the same way. There is a tongue of United States territory running up between New Brunswick and Quebec all through English diplomacy sacrificing Canada on the altar of friendship to the United States. But that that has been the feeling of other statesmen than Sir Wilfrid Laurier I shall be able to show. I think Sir John Macdonald shared that feeling:

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What feeling?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That Canadian interests were invariably sacrificed when United States interests conflicted with them, and that is why Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Mr. Blake and Mr. Mills spoke out boldly and said that in all matters affecting Canadian interests negotiations should be carried on by the Canadian government and Canadians alone should sit on the tribunal representing Canada, that if you had Englishmen on it they were sure to yield to the United States. I have here before me letters written by Sir John Macdonald, from Washington, in 1871, at the time of the treaty of Washington, addressed to Sir Charles Tupper. In one of these letters in March of that year he says :

I am greatly disappointed at the course taken by the British commissioners. They seem to have only one thing in their minds, that is to go home to England with a treaty in their pockets settling everything, no matter at what cost to Canada.

That is pretty strong language. He continues :—

The effect which must be produced upon the public mind in Canada by a declaration from both parties in the imperial parliament against our course will greatly prejudice the idea of British connection, as British protection will have proved itself a farce.

That is the opinion of the leader of the Conservative government after a good many years' experience. Again he says :

I do not like to look at the consequence, but we are so clearly in the right that we must throw the responsibility on England.

Sir John Macdonald said that Canadian interests were entirely neglected in the Washington treaty. We spent $60,000,000 on the St. Lawrence canals and we gave the free use of those canals to the United States and they gave us no equivalent. They promised us the equivalent, but we never obtained it. Specifically they named the canal at the Sault. We had not one then ourselves. That was the purpose. When we wanted to send the volunteers to the Northwest they refused to allow them to pass through the canal, and our predecessors had to construct a canal in order that Canada might be independent of them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We did not have the Sault canal at that time. The building of the Sault canal was the result of their action in refusing to give us the use of their canal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is exactly what I said.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. The hon. gentleman misunderstood me. What I said was that they were to give us the use of their canal, but afterwards when we had to send volunteers to the Northwest they refused to allow them to pass through the Sault canal, and we had to build one for ourselves.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But they gave us the use of the canal which belonged to the United States for all commercial purposes. That was considered quite different. They might be justified in that case, although it was unfriendly.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Showing the drift of Sir John Macdonald's mind, I quote from another part of the letter which makes it clear that he had no confidence whatever in any British statesman forming one of the commission on any subject in which the United States and Canada were interested. He refers to Sir Edward Thornton, and thinks we would have done very well with two Canadians. He said :

I may say that acquaintance with Sir Edward Thornton has raised him a good deal in my opinion; he is not a strong man, but he is a straightforward painstaking person who desires to do his duty, and who with two Canadians at his elbow instead of an English cabinet minister and a foreign office man like Lord Tenterden, would do good service for the Dominion.

He singles him out as a man who could be trusted, and he says he could not trust an English cabinet minister or a foreign office man. I think that all this confirms the wise attitude Sir Wilfrid Laurier has taken, and the government behind him, and the attitude taken by Mr. Blake and Mr. Mills that where Canadian interests are concerned we should have charge of the negotiation and should have the appointment of those who represent Canada on the commission. I want to revert now to the unfortunate scene that took place in England when our two commissioners were obliged to turn down the Lord Chief Justice of England and show that he had betrayed—perhaps that is a strong word—that he had left them. He surrendered his view, because his view had over and over again been expressed, that where the line of division was, the four islands referred to were either on one side or the other, and it was perfectly clear they were on the south side of the canal. Instead of deciding that way, without any consultation with his colleagues he divides the islands giving two to each country. The point I make is that my hon. friend had no right to censure the government for their action where they were absolutely powerless, and where they had made such a determined protest as they did in objecting to the two United States gentlemen that were named on that commission.

I do not propose to make any comments on the changes that have been decided on in connection with the agreement with the Grand Trunk Railway. My hon. friend said he would reserve his remarks till another time, when hon. gentlemen become familiar with the details of the agreement; but I will just refer to the observations he made on the paragraph of the speech from the Throne, in which he animadverted upon what he thought was a different policy last session from what it is during the present session. He said last year that we were in a great hurry to have the road built, and that this year we seemed to be taking it more leisurely. I do not know that there is any difference in the views or feelings of the government this year or last year. We are anxious to see the railway built. We know that it is an utter impossibility for it to be built in less than a given number of years—certainly not less than six or seven years. The prairie section will be built no doubt.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And the mountain section.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know. The Grand Trunk Railway will build it as soon as they can, but the country between the prairie section and Moncton has to be thoroughly surveyed, and it must take a very considerable time to make the surveys to ascertain exactly where the line should be located.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The extension of time has no reference to the eastern section, but to the western section.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am quite aware of that, but my hon. friend called attention to the fact that last year we seemed to be in a hurry to build the whole line, and this year we were going to take it leisurely. The latin motto festina lente will have to apply in this case. We would like to proceed as rapidly as possible. It is impossible to go rapidly in a terra incognita. We must have first a survey. Our desire is to find the easiest grade and the best country in which to locate, and it is idle to talk about opinions given by this man and that man as to where the line will be located until final surveys are made and approved of.

A very large section of the country has to be surveyed. We know in a general way that a good line can be found. But we want the best line, and what that paragraph of the speech pointed to was that long before we could build the road, the necessity for it would have been apparent to the people of Canada and that therefore despatch was an important element. I should like just to call attention to that. Look forward to the next eight years before the road will be completed. It will scarcely be in good running order before that time. What will be the conditions in that western country? As Sir Sandford Fleming has pointed out, we are dependent altogether at the present time for our connection with the great west upon one through line of railway; that line of railway is along the frontier, and skirts Lake Superior for some considerable distance, liable at any time to be destroyed. As a director of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Sir Sandford's opinion ought to be worth a good deal. His view was that it was an absolute necessity that another transcontinental road should be built, and built just as soon as possible. Look forward to the time when that road will be completed! What population will there be in that western country? There will be two millions of people at least in Manitoba and the Territories. According to Mr. Roblin's statement, or the statement attributed to him, the grain produced in six years from this district would be equal to six hundred or seven hundred million bushels. Cut it in two and it is still a very large quantity and it will be an absolute impossibility to move it with the ordinary facilities in use to-day. It could not possibly be brought down by Lake Superior and be carried east within the six or eight weeks of navigation in the fall of the year, and therefore it is of the highest importance that there should be a railway with easy grades running from the prairie country to our own ports; otherwise, unless that is done, the probability is that long before that road is finished we will see one half the grain of Manitoba and the Territories passing through the United States to American ports, simply because there will not be the facilities for getting that grain out through our own ports. Therefore the undertaking is not commenced an hour too soon, and it should be hurried to completion just as rapidly as possible. The hon. gentleman commented a good deal on the extravagance of the government and what we were coming too, but I think he will have the satisfaction of knowing when the fiscal year terminates, instead of applying $7,000,000 in reduction of the present debt, that the amount so applied will be at least double and that the public debt will be reduced by at least $14,000,000; he will find that while that road is being built the revenue of this country will be swelling up. Before the eight years have expired instead of being $60,000,000 it will be $85,000,000, and, therefore, the resources of the country will in no degree be taxed by the construction of the road. That condition will probably be realized and I think the universal feeling in the country is that that road should be pushed to completion as rapidly as possible.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have to regret that I was not able to be present yesterday when the debate upon the motion to adopt the address took place, not because I could have added anything to the remarks made by my hon. friend from Marshfield. On the contrary I am quite willing to concede that he could deal with the important public questions much better than I could. We all know the assiduity with which he applies himself to every question affecting the interests of this country, and the readiness with which he can express his opinions upon all occasions. My only regret was that I had not the advantage of listening to the whole of the remarks of the hon. Secretary of State. I must compliment him however on what I have heard him state to-day, the moderate tone that he has adopted and the ingenious manner in which he has met the charges made by the hon. senator from Marshfield. The deductions that he has drawn from many points to which he referred will strike members of the Senate who have given any attention to these questions not only as peculiar but of rather an extraordinary character. Now, before saying more, referring to the speech from the Throne itself not having my hon. friend's remarks before me, I do not know how far he dealt with what he considered the omissions. I remember hearing my old leader Sir John A. Macdonald say upon one occasion that the speech from the Throne which was presented was of a very lenten character. If such were the fact in those days I do not know what he would say were he here to comment upon the present speech which has been presented to us. There is nothing in it except two or three points, to lay certain papers before parliament and to deal with an amended agreement that has been entered into with the Grand Trunk Railway, and a Militia Bill. I intend to adopt the course that has suggested itself as being the best in reference to the Grand Trunk agreement on the present occasion; that is, not to discuss it until the terms of that agreement are fully before us, although we know sufficient of it to understand that great concessions have been made both as to the time of construction and also from a monetary standpoint to the Grand Trunk Pacific operations and to the Grand Trunk Railway itself. We remember how vociferously and how earnestly an appeal for the adoption or the ratification of the first agreement was made, not only by the premier but by the Secretary of State, and by other gentlemen who supported the proposition at the last session of parliament. It does not appear, however that the terms of that agreement met with the approval of the shareholders and those who are most deeply interested in the Grand Trunk Railway itself, though their manager in Canada, Mr. Hays, may have been more sanguine of what the result of the adoption of that scheme would be to the Grand Trunk Railway itself, other than and outside of the interests which were to accrue to the Grand Trunk Pacific Company. The fact is that when you look at the whole scheme you will find that though there were ostensibly two companies, the responsibility rested upon the Grand Trunk Railway itself, and that they were to be the security to the country for the building and maintenance of this railway. I think that upon a close investigation and reading of the amended scheme that the Grand Trunk Railway Company are to a very great extent relieved from the responsibility; and they are relieved, from it in a manner which, from a pecuniary standpoint, will be in their interest and not in the interest of the country. However this is a point which can be established very well when the matter is thoroughly investigated and the figures are laid before parliament and the people, for their ratification.

It does seem to me, however, as the government had prepared themselves for a general election, that it would have been well for them and in the interests of the country had they submitted this great question to the people before the modifications were made. Why they did not pursue what I think they intended to pursue, and it was generally understood that they would pursue, is quite evident and apparent to the most obtuse intellect in the country. They saw that if they appealed to the electorate they would have to meet the charge that they had entered into arrangements with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway which the Grand Trunk Railway shareholders would not ratify, and that consequently the matter would remain open and subject to any amendments which might be forced upon them by that company in case they were returned to power. Now, notwithstanding the fact that we were told that they had such an admirable bargain, and that the country was perfectly secure and safe in the arrangement which had been entered into with the Grand Trunk Pacific Company and with the Grand Trunk Railway as their endorsers, for such they really were, they have been forced—I think I may use the expression without prejudice at all—they have been forced by the Grand Trunk Railway shareholders and the Grand Trunk Pacific Company to recede from the position which they had taken and have lessened the security which they claimed the country had for the fulfilment of the agreement on the part of the Grand Trunk Railway, and that the country at the present moment has less security for the prosecution of and the building of the road. They told us before that urgency was absolutely necessary. The premier told the parliament that they could not wait. The country was being subjected to a loss of trade which should accrue to Canada itself by the trade being diverted to the United States. The hon. gentleman tells us to-night that we have only one outlet. It is true we may have one outlet by railway but we have two great corporations now in full operation to bring out the output of the Northwest, that is the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian Northern, and the latter road is proving itself to be of as great benefit to the people of the Northwest and the rest of Canada in sending to market the output of Manitoba and the great Northwest as even the Canadian Pacific Railway itself. It has as easy grades from Manitoba to the head of Lake Superior as the Canadian Pacific. It has another advantage; it is running at the present moment into the very heart of that grain growing portion of the Northwest and Manitoba. It supplies the eastern portion of Manitoba which was not supplied in the past with transportation facilities, and in addition to that, it will be the outlet of a large portion of the produce of Northern Dakota and of Northern Minnesota through the corner of which it runs. You may say that that is not our object in building a road to facilitate the output of the northern states of the Republic. While that is true, it is none the less important for the carrying trade of this country and none the less important for the interest of our shippers that in the making of the great lakes and the St. Lawrence to Quebec the highway of the great west that we secure as much of the United States traffic as it is possible to secure. Every bushel of grain that is diverted from the southern ports of the United States to the St. Lawrence adds just so much to the wealth of our carrying trade and country. Why is it we are fighting for it? It is to prevent the trade of Canada as a whole going to the southern ports and to divert that which has been in the habit of going there, to the northern ports of the St. Lawrence. I shall not deal with that question just now further than to say, I hope in the new arrangement which has been made, that the ideas which suggested themselves to the Grand Trunk Railway people when they first asked for a charter may be adopted and carried out. That is, instead of running their road to Winnipeg and through the fertile portion of Manitoba and that portion of the Northwest that is now served by the Canadian Pacific Railway and by the Canadian Northern, that they will go still further to the north and open up that vast territory which has been described by the then Sir Donald Smith, at present Lord Strathcona, and more especially by a gentleman who has some knowledge of the matter, to whom my hon. friend referred a few minutes ago, Sir Sandford Fleming. His treatise upon the character of that country lays down this important fact, that north of the Saskatchewan is the real fertile belt of the Northwest Territories and not that which lies to the south which is now being served by the two railways. I repeat what I stated when discussing this question at the last session of parliament; I should like to give my hearty support to any scheme—and mind you the scheme to which I am referring was the scheme which Mr. Hays first inaugurated and which he desired to have adopted—to build from North Bay, running to the north of Lake Winnipeg, thence north of the north Saskatchewan, west to Edmonton and thence to the Pacific. Remember, hon. gentlemen, I am speaking of a matter of which I have some knowledge personally. I do not say it boastingly, but I think I have seen as much of that Northwest Territory as most white men outside of the Hudson Bay people themselves. I have driven by wagons and buckboards on the southern frontier from Deloraine to Fort McLeod and rode on horse back to the Columbia river, and I have gone to Edmonton and driven from Edmonton all the way down for five or six hundred miles north of the Saskatchewan and south of the Saskatchewan until we reach Prince Albert, and that was in the fall of the year, when one had a very good opportunity of forming an opinion and coming to a correct conclusion as to what the effect of a railway through that portion of the country might be. I am not finding fault with the amount of money that the government proposes to guarantee for the construction of that section of road. I think my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie who is now listening to me, will confirm what I say, that that portion of the country is not so level that a railway can be built as easily or as cheaply as in the northern portion of the Northwest Territories. It is what may be called a rolling prairie, rather than a flat prairie most of the way. There are portions of it, however, which are quite flat and which are of a similar character to the country lying south of it. What I should like to see would be a road built as I have indicated, which was the original intention of the Grand Trunk Railway until they were forced, either by the government, and the government forced by the maritime people, to adopt another system. If that road can be secured, if the country is of such a character as to justify the building of a road to Quebec, so much the better. I have always advocated that, speaking for myself, and I should liked to have seen that plan adopted rather than the scheme which has been propounded, assisting the company who have a road to St. John and to Roberval, in going on and constructing that road until they reached the prairie province. Instead of doing that, the government have taken upon themselves the enormous responsibility of building the road themselves, and at the same time guaranteeing and giving bonuses of millions of money to this same company to which I have referred to extend their road almost in the same direction. This is a question which will come up in the future, and whatever may be the result—I have no doubt that the result will be the ratification of the new terms into which they have entered—whatever the result, I do hope provision will be made for opening up a portion of the country which is not to be served by the scheme at present proposed by the government. The result will be that by the time this road is built and open for traffic, if the predictions of the hon. Secretary of State are fulfilled, they will have to build another road north of the Saskatchewan, which would not be necessary if the proposed route was to the north of the north Saskatchewan. The two present transcontinental roads, one of which is built, and the other being built—and I have no doubt the Canadian Northern will be completed at a very early period, and, with the branches that are being constructed through every portion of that country, as they become settled and developed, they will be quite sufficient for some years to come—at least for those portions of the country, and then you would have the other, which would supply what is necessary now in view of settlement and to bring out the great products that will result from the construction of that road. There are many other thoughts connected with this point which will deserve some consideration at our hands when the question comes before us in the future. One idea suggests another, and I must, before leaving this matter, congratulate my hon. friend upon the optimistic views which have been expressed by him. I cannot help contrasting them with the pessimistic views with which he and his friends regarded the action of the late government when they determined to build the Canadian Pacific Railway. Who does not remember the sneering and the condemnations which were hurled at Sir Charles Tupper when he made predictions similar to those which my hon. friend has made to-day ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Times have changed. Good times now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have heard that expression before, and if my hon. friend had added to that not only the condemnations that were hurled at Sir Charles Tupper for his predictions, if his memory is good—and I think it is tolerably good—he will remember that at that period times were good ; he will also remember that a similar era of prosperity followed the advent of the Conservative party in 1878, although I admit not to so great a volume as it has followed the advent of the present government, and consequently there were good times then. What we had to meet was the utterances of the friends of those with whom my hon. friend opposite is associated, in not only condemning the country, but declaring that it was inferior to Kansas and the other western states of the United States. They were told that it was a barren, unproductive country, and that the tide of immigration was going to Kansas and to the Dakotas, and so it was to a great extent. People were induced in a great measure to go to the neighbouring country by the utterances of the hon. gentleman's leaders. He knows as well as I do that in the land advertising sheets issued by the Northern Pacific Railway Company and other United States railway companies who had lands for settlement, extracts from the speeches of Mr. Blake and other Liberal leaders in this country, accompanied by their photos, were distributed to show European immigrants and people in the United States, who were not permanently settled in that country, that the western states were infinitely superior to our Northwest.

That is what we had to contend with at that time, and unfortunately there happened at the same time two or three years of severe drought. In some years the harvest did not yield as much grain as was used for seed, and that did much to discourage settlement and lead hundreds of our people to cross the border to Dakota. I am surprised when I hear hon. gentlemen compare the present prosperity of that country with its condition during the period to which I have referred. For the last three or four years there have been magnificent crops in the Northwest. Was the hon. gentleman's government the cause of that ? Had not Providence something to do with it ? And did not the great yield of grain induce people to leave the over-crowded portions of Europe and make their homes in our fertile prairies ? Had there been droughts instead of good harvests ; had the yield been small during the last few years would there have been any of that prosperity to which the attention of the House has been called ? There are reasons which I could give why the effects resulting from these droughts are not as likely to occur again, but I shall not occupy the time of the House in stating them. The hon. gentleman's remarks were intended, as they usually are, to be a side wind to divert the speaker from his subject and lead one, myself in particular, who has had some responsibility for what was done at that period, to make some little digression in order to explain why these things have occurred. The government had just as much to do with the prosperity of that country as the man in the moon. The mover of the address (Mr. Kerr) referred in very glowing terms, if I am to take a short report of his speech in the newspapers, to the prosperity of the country and the causes which have led to it. These he said were the Diamond jubilee, the coronation ceremonies, and the aid given by Canada in the late war in South Africa, the credit for which he gave to the leader of the government. I frankly admit that circumstances in the history of the country have led to a recognition of Canada that she might not otherwise and would not for many years have obtained. The personality of the premier, I must confess, would have much to do in making an impression in England. But when the hon. gentleman talks about that adding to the immigration, I repeat the results which have followed the good harvests rather than the appearance of our handsome premier and his oily tongue——

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—And eloquent tongue.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, his oily and eloquent tongue had very much more to do with it. I am not prepared to admit that the government is entitled to the slightest credit for the action of the Canadian people in connection with the war in South Africa. Not a step was taken—and no one knows it better than the hon. gentlemen who are listening to me—by the government until they were forced by public opinion to do so. Take the interview with Sir Wilfrid Laurier in the 'Globe' and look at the dates at which every colony of the empire offered to assist, and you will find that Canada, though the most important portion of the British empire outside of the United Kingdom, was the very last to offer aid in the South African struggle. This seems to have been forgotten. But there can be no question as to the policy pursued by the Conservative party, because, before any movement was made by the government, Sir Charles Tupper who was then leader of the Conservative party, wired from Nova Scotia to Sir Wilfrid Laurier his assurance of the support of the whole party in any action that the government might take to raise a force to aid the British arms in that unfortunate struggle. That is a matter of history, and yet we are constantly told the contrary by intelligent men, like my hon. friend opposite who should know better, but who seems to give utterance to sentences of that kind for party purposes. If he will look at the facts he will find that Queensland made its offer to the British government on the 11th July, 1899. Victoria followed the next day, the Malay States on the 17th; Lagos on the 18th; New South Wales on the 21st; Hong Kong on the 21st; New Zealand on the 22nd of July; West Australia on the 5th October, Tasmania on the 9th, South Australia on the 13th and Canada, poor Canada, comes last on the list, on the 14th of October.

Hon. Mr. KERR—The last shall be first.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have heard it said that a certain old gentleman, who is supposed to have horns, was in the habit, when he wanted to accomplish anything, to quote scripture. I would not like to say that of my hon. friend, but I will say this, that though Canada was the last to make an offer, no colony did more after the offer was accepted, than Canada did to maintain her credit in the battle field and bring victory to the British arms. It is a matter of which, as a Canadian, I am proud. It has done more to cement a kindly feeling between the old country and the new than any Laurier government that ever existed. I have taken my information about these offers from the correspondence between Canada and the colonial office.

The hon. Secretary of State made an extraordinary statement, if he is correctly reported in the press, that he believed that if this country had never adopted a protective policy, that is, had free trade existed in 1878 and continued until this time, the country would be more prosperous than it is to-day. That is a most extraordinary statement to make. How many industries would we have had in this country had that policy been pursued? To prove his argument the hon. gentleman referred to the immense works now being conducted in Hamilton by a United States combination. Does any one suppose that the twenty-eight acres of land would have been purchased, and works to employ 1,000 men established at Hamilton had there been no protective policy? I am speaking of what I know, because I rented the building to the McCormicks, one of the largest manufacturing companies in the United States, in my own town, and I said to the agent: 'Why do you not come to Canada and manufacture?' He replied: 'As long as you have only a 20 per cent duty we can compete with you,' but they find now that it is necessary to come and manufacture here to be in a position to compete with our manufacturers. The hon. gentleman gives that as evidence of the prosperity of the country. So it is, but it is also evidence of the correctness of the policy of the Conservative party in which respect they dare not interfere with it. Had they interfered with it our own manufactures would have been closed up and that industry would not have been established in Canada. In connection with this, the hon. gentleman objected to a statement made by my hon. friend here that there was an enormous increase in the public expenditure, and how did he explain that? According to the published report of his speech he said, what nonsense that is; that money was a surplus which we had over the ordinary expenditure. It would be exceedingly interesting to ask how he could have that surplus except by taxation, and if they got that surplus by taxation, then the people paid the money, and they were 'fleeced,' to use their own expression, to the extent of that surplus. If there had been no surplus they could not have spent it but would have run in debt. The illustration the hon. Secretary of State has given is the best justification of the Conservative policy that has ever been uttered in this chamber. Let me tell the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. Kerr) who moved the adoption of the address and who eulogized the premier and the government and their policy as the cause of the good feeling in England to-day towards Canada, that the inauguration of all that, was the colonial conference which was held here. That conference drew the attention of the empire and of the whole world to Canada as it had never been drawn previous to that. There was an extraordinary historic event connected with that which is unparalleled in the history of colonial governments, and that is the fact that Canada suggested that conference. Canada invited the imperial government to send a delegate to this country and become a party to that conference, a conference which had in view closer union between the colonial and the mother country, and the development of trade not only with the colonies but of a preferential character with England herself. All the former conferences that had been held were suggested by the British government and they invited the colonies to participate in them. In this case Canada took the initiative. I remember well when the suggestion was made to extend an invitation to the colonial office to send a representative the late Sir John Thompson, who was then premier, had grave doubts as to the results, and he almost laughed at the idea of their accepting it; but notwithstanding it was an unprecedented request on the part of a colony, the late Secretary of State for the colonies, who was, I hesitate not to say, the best that ever held the office in England, and, who took more interest in the development of the colonies and in the attempt to draw together the outlying portions of the empire to the mother country, creating a feeling of unity that we were one instead of being separate, than any other man who ever ruled the destiny of the colonies through the colonial office, at once accepted the proposition which had been made. What followed I hesitate not to say since that period are the results which the government in its simplicity, and, shall I say egotism, lay claim to. History will, when we have passed away, mention these facts and convey the correct conclusions to which I believe I have called your attention.

My hon. friend who has seconded the motion said very little and what he did say was very nicely and courteously stated. He supported the railway, as we might expect him to do. He did not refer to preferential trade nor did he refer to other very important matters which I think should have had a place in the speech from the Throne, but on which perhaps the hon. Secretary of State could give us a little information. I noticed in reading the reports of the debate in the lower House that the premier stated that measures are to be introduced in reference to the granting of further powers and concessions in the way of provincial autonomy to the Northwest Territories. Whether that scheme has been devised yet or not I do not know. There is a slight intimation also about the tariff. These are important matters; why were they not referred to in the speech? Have the government come to the conclusion that they must accede to the demand of the Northwest Territories, growing rapidly as they are, and that they fear the results which will follow another election, and that they are going back on their record in the past and granting self-government to the Territories. What is to be done? Are we to have this information, or are we to be treated as we were at the last session of parliament—nothing of any consequence promised in the address and then, after five or six months battling on the floors of the two Houses have measures brought down involving the expenditure of millions of dollars, and the humble followers of the government asked to swallow them, as they did before, as readily as a child would a sugar plum. This is what we may expect. The government are in hopes that we are to have a very short session. In the speech, His Excellency is made to say that we ought to have one. In that respect I am with the government entirely; but if they are to pursue the same policy this year that they followed last year we may anticipate anything but a short session and have the pleasure of remaining here from snow-fall to snow-fall. Let us hope, however, that such will not be the case. There is little or nothing said either about the railway commission or about the fast Atlantic service.

The railway commission is studiously avoided as far as I could learn by the hon. Secretary of State in his remarks. Whether my hon. friend referred to it or not, I am not prepared to say, but I do think that this country has never been more astonished than it was on learning of the composition of the commission. That Mr. Blair is fitted for the position from talent, ability and experience I do not think any one will dispute—at least I am not prepared to dispute it, although his position is a very peculiar one. He left the government condemning its railway scheme as an outrageous one that should not be accepted by the country, and he denounced it in the most virulent—well perhaps that is too strong a word, but he denounced it in the strongest language that he could employ. Immediately after that he turned round and accepted the chairmanship of the commission, from whom? From those with whom he had been associated, from whom he had separated on a great question of the expenditure of public money, and of the construction of a railway, and then he accepts $10,000 a year and becomes their humble and obedient servant. The next thing we have is two gentlemen appointed as his associates who, as far as the world knows, have as little knowledge of the transportation question, of railway policy and railway traffic, as children unborn. Was it necessary in order to provide a place for the Speaker of the House of Commons that Mr. Bernier, the Minister of Inland Revenue, was selected commissioner? Is he a man that would be selected by the country to take a seat upon a railway commission? What knowledge has he about railway enterprises or of transportation that he should have been selected? We can understand why he was selected. It was very well known that when Mr. Préfontaine was taken into the cabinet, his rival for that position was Mr. Brodeur, and that he, not being able to secure it, the pressure being too great, and notwithstanding the statement of the 'Witness' which said that the Liberals looked with surprise at the fact of Mr. Préfontaine being called to the cabinet, he was taken in and Mr. Brodeur accepted the Speakership, and it was necessary to mollify that portion of the population, hence the Minister of Inland Revenue was asked to vacate his seat in order to make a vacancy for the Speaker of the Commons though as I have already said no one knows of any qualification which the ex-Minister of Inland Revenue had for the position which he occupies.

Then we have a very amiable gentleman, a man who has been a quiet agricultural success in the province of Ontario selected to fill this important position. What he knows about transportation, and what he knows of railway working, the difficulties in connection with railway traffic and steamboat traffic, would be a question that would puzzle a Philadelphia lawyer. Yet we have this commission that is to cost this country forty or fifty or $60,000 a year composed of one man who I think understands the duties he has to perform, with two others who have had no experience, and so far as the world knows know nothing about railways. The people of my own province, and I think the people of the other provinces, have marvelled at the course which has been pursued in connection with this commission, and can only look upon it as the result of political necessities and political exigencies. May I ask my hon. friend, what has come of the fast Atlantic service? I remember—and history repeats itself in different ways—that when Sir Wilfrid Laurier was addressing the board of trade some years ago in the city of Toronto, with a great flourish of trumpets, he read to the commercial people of the western capital of Ontario a telegram just received by him, that $50,000 had been deposited by a company in England as a guarantee for carrying out the contract which they had made for the establishment of a fast line. That was received with eclat; cheers followed cheers. We all know what followed. I think last year or the year before we were asked to pay back that $50,000 and nothing more was ever done. We had an illustration of this same political dodging, given by my hon. friend last night, but from another direction. Just on the verge of the election in St. John, Mr. Hays—whom I would advise in the future to study Canadian politics a little more before he rushes into print or into politics—wired or wrote down to the mayor of St. John to secure him wharf accommodation for this road which is to be completed eight years hence. Is it not a marvellous thing that that should be done just on the eve of an election, and is it not equally marvellous that he should ask the mayor of St. John by telegraph or by letter, to secure him wharf accommodation in a portion of the city where the city owned no frontage?

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—The hon. gentleman from Marshfield made that statement, but it is quite incorrect, if the hon. gentleman will excuse me. The city of St. John owns quite a large frontage on the harbour on the east side, half a mile at the very least in a straight line from where my office is to a point below. Then they own 3,200 feet on the straight shore above.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—They own two new berths on the east side.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I do not refer to that at all. I am referring to the statement of the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island that the city of St. John owns no wharf property on the east side of the harbour. They own a large amount of property.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I made the statement on the strength of an article published in the St. John 'Sun,' that the city had no control of the frontage on the east side of the harbour.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—They ran their railroad round it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And that statement could not have been made without some authority. There may be an explanation that I do not know of, but that statement was made by the St. John 'Sun' in its comments on Mr. Hay's letter. I have not seen any contradiction of it.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—The city of St. John owns 2,900 feet of wharfage in a straight line. That is more than half a mile, and it owns 3,200 feet on the straight shore, not so well built up perhaps as the others.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am glad the hon. gentleman has made that explanation. That is only a question of fact as to the strip of land. It does not affect the point in the least to which I desire to call the attention of the House. So much the worse if they have land and frontage on the river and wharf accommodation to dispose of—so much the worse for the political effect which it was intended to produce by Mr. Hays in sending a telegram or letter at that particular time. What object could he have except to influence the electors of St. John, in sending a telegram or letter to the owners of property that they wanted to select certain portions of the property which they owned for their harbour and frontage accommodation. People are not in the habit of asking for concessions of that kind eight or ten years before they are required.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—The Canadian Pacific Railway was making a demand for land at that time; it was just the time for the Grand Trunk also to make a demand.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, but the Canadian Pacific Railway was built at that time, and the Canadian Pacific Railway acquired the properties on the west side of the river for certain purposes and acquired the right for the purpose of utilizing that frontage with the elevators which they erected at the time.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—They have not half the frontage.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not say they have. Supposing they only have ten feet of frontage, we are talking about what really exists and what they ask for, not how much they have got. Sir Wilfrid Laurier read a telegram at a certain time which was misleading because the deposit was made at the time for the purpose of showing the people of Toronto and the community that that which they were demanding was to be carried out, and as an evidence of that fact that deposit was made; and here, at the moment when voters are required in the city of St. John, Mr. Hays, the head of a great system like the Grand Trunk Railway, finds it convenient to write to them in order to assure them that they were to be the terminus of another outlet for the grain of the Northwest. It does not make a bit of difference from a political standpoint whether the city owns the land or not. If they did not have the land and Mr. Hays knew that, so much the worse; but if they owned the land he might have taken some other time to do it. The result of the election in St. John shows that the electors were not to be bought or influenced by tricks of that kind. My hon. friend gave as one of the reasons why the government candidate was beaten that the people of St. John did not vote. My hon. friend should know how far that is correct. If the friends of the Hon. Mr. Blair, who gave him between 900 and 1,000 majority a few years ago, refused to vote for their candidate to-day, it only shows that they had no confidence in the government. It is just possible that, like others I have known, while they would not for fear of being called turn-coats vote against the party they have been in the habit of supporting, they remained at home, but that is just as great a condemnation of the government as if they had gone and recorded their votes. The hon. gentleman is a little facetious upon that point. I give him credit for the manner in which he dealt with it. He says they carried many of the elections and we only carried four, but he forgot to tell the House that which they know, that they held those constituencies before and it was not a gain, that it was only a continuance of support in the same constituency that they had before with a reduced majority. He turns up his nose at the result of the election. Let him look at the result! The Conservative majority in those eight constituencies in 1900, when the elections took place did not reach three figures, while the majorities that elected the supporters of the government went over 1,000. If we look at the figures in this election we find that the difference between the voting is over 1,000 and the majority secured by the Liberals is reduced by 4,000. If that is a matter of congratulation for the hon. gentleman he is welcome to it, but I can easily understand the last expression to which he gave utterance, and that was, that he did not care particularly how much the majorities were reduced so long as they got their vote and continued in power, on the principle that one is as good as a thousand so far as the election is concerned. But it is not an evidence of the feeling of the people in the country, and if that kind of majority is to be reduced we will soon find after the elections that they may be in the same position as the Ontario government to-day. They have three of a majority in the House, with a majority of the vote polled in the province of nearly 7,000 in favour of the Conservatives. After the general elections it was between five and six thousand; now it is seven thousand. It is a position in which I do not think any government desires to be placed. I wish to refer later on to the position the hon. Secretary of State has taken in connection with the Alaskan boundary line and the attitude assumed by the premier upon that question, which is somewhat important, because I think my hon. friend is somewhat mistaken on one or two points. I wish to call his attention to the fact that if Dyea was in the possession of the United States for a number of years for the reasons which he has given, Skagway was equally in the same position because Skagway is just on the opposite side of the little peninsula that runs out into the Lynn canal. I move the adjournment of the debate.

It being 6 o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I should like to move the appointment of the Striking Committee.

The SPEAKER—I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that such a motion would be irregular before the adoption of the address.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I know in former years it has been done with the consent of the House. However, I will let it stand until to-morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the Speaker is quite correct in the position he has taken, but the House will remember that I moved, seconded by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, that the debate be adjourned. After some little discussion, the Speaker suggested that he would call it six o'clock, no one objected to that and he did call it six o'clock, and that left the proceedings of the Senate in the position of having a motion before it for the adjournment of the debate, which is the first motion to be taken up now. I desire respectfully that course be followed, and that my motion, made before six o'clock and not put from the Chair, be now put. I do not desire to go on now with the discussion, for the reason which I explained to the hon. gentleman a moment ago. I desire to refer briefly to the position taken by the Secretary of State with reference to the course pursued by the government in the matter of the appointments to the Alaska boundary commission, not to controvert what he said in reference to the protest which was made by the government against the selection of the United States commissioners, but to show that they acquiesced in other respects in the appointment of the commissioners when they might have objected. I would ask the Speaker, with the consent of my hon. friend, to put the motion to adjourn the debate.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If my hon. friend does not desire to go on this evening, I am sure the House will be quite willing to consent to an adjournment.

The motion was agreed to.

THE STRIKING COMMITTEE.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved :

That, pursuant to Rule 79, the following senators be appointed a Committee of Selection to nominate the senators to serve on the several standing committees during the present session, namely :—The Honourable Sir Mackenzie Bowell, Honourable Messieurs Templeman, Ferguson, Dandurand, Miller, Watson, Lougheed, Gibson, and the mover, and to report with all convenient speed the names of the senators so nominated.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the question is put, I would ask the hon. leader of this House if he would kindly change one of the names in the motion. I would suggest that the name of Sir Alphonse Pelletier be substituted for that of Senator Gibson.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—What right has the hon. gentleman to ask me to withdraw from the committee ? I am not afraid to do my share of the work. I have just arrived, and it is the first time my name has been mentioned in connection with the committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I was just asking as a matter of courtesy, because there are three members from the province of Ontario on the committee, and I would ask for the province of Quebec a fair share. I have made my request as a matter of courtesy, in order that Quebec may be placed on a fair footing.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—How many have you now ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We have only one.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—One Frenchman is as good as three Englishmen.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—On a former occasion, when a controversy arose with respect to this committee, I stepped aside and asked my hon. friend to take my position, and he did so. I am quite ready on the present occasion to do the same. I have no doubt Sir Alphonse Pelletier will act instead of me.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I would not like the leader of the House to be set aside for anybody. I think one representative from Ontario should step aside and let Quebec have one more on the Committee, but the government should have at least one member on the committee.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Senator Templeman is on that committee.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Is there any cast-iron rule as to the number of members on the committtee? Why not add Sir Alphonse Pelletier's name? I have no desire that Quebec should be deprived of any representation she is entitled to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Unless the rule interferes I have no objection.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The rule says that the committee shall consist of nine members.

The motion was amended by substituting Sir Alphonse Pelletier for the Secretary of State.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I thank the hon. Secretary of State.

The motion was agreetd to.

A PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE gave notice of a motion to adjourn until April fifth.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know it is irregular to discuss a notice of motion but I should like to know if the government acquiesce in this motion? I have expressed my own views on the subject before. It is the government that should take the responsibility of motions of this kind. When I occupied the position now held by my hon. friend I always assumed that responsibility, and when motions were made by supporters of the government at the time I objected very strongly and told them that I would consult my colleagues, to ascertain if adjournments of that character could be acquiesced in without detriment to the public service, and I would so inform them. However, the government can pursue their own course in the matter. I desire to give expression to my own opinion. I think it is the duty of the government to assume the responsibility and to propose these adjournments when they deem them in the interest of the country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The policy of the Senate in early years, before the advent of my hon. friend, was, in this chamber, an adjournment was usually proposed by a private member, but the government expressed its opinion on the subject. Of course, if they dissented the proposition dropped. When the motion comes up I shall be prepared to express an opinion. I am not prepared to say how I shall treat the motion when it comes up. I expect to be in a better position to express an opinion later on.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUEI gave notice in that spirit at the request of the hon. gentlemen from Delorimier.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Minister for Adjournments.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—And also because I appreciate it as a notice of motion. The government may not be prepared to take the position now of declaring whether it will suit their purpose or not, and therefore it can be done more freely as a notice of motion. If the hon. Secretary of State were to give the notice himself he might consider himself committed to it. I have expressed to the hon. Secretary of State my intention to give this notice of motion and I shall be guided by the desire of the government.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The Senate should act very carefully and prudently in the matter of adjournments. Last year we abused the power vested in us in this respect and made frequent and long adjournments. If you want to produce a feeling in the country that the Senate is not required and should be abolished—and that feeling has some existence already—continue making long adjournments and it will persuade the people that the Senate is rendering no service for what it costs the country.

The SPEAKER—I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that he is out of order. This is only a notice of motion.

THE TERMINUS OF THE GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC AT ST. JOHN.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I wish to make a personal explanation with regard to a statement which I made yesterday in the House, and which was referred to by the leader of the opposition in his remarks this afternoon, and which has called forth a statement from my hon. friend from St. John (Hon. Mr. Ellis) which challenged the accuracy of the assertion which I made yesterday. Hon. gentlemen will remember that I mentioned two statements which had been made in St. John, one by Hon. Mr. Emmerson, that the Grand Trunk Pacific was to approach the harbour of St. John from the eastern side, coming via Chipman, following the Intercolonial Railway into St. John at the eastern side of the harbour, and another statement from Mr. Hays who had almost simultaneously written a letter to the mayor of St. John that he wanted a proportion of the harbour frontage assigned to the Grand Trunk Railway, indicating that they were also going to St. John. The main point which my hon. friend referred to was that I had said that the city of St. John had no frontage on the east side of the harbour at its disposal and therefore Mr. Hays letter must have meant that it was the intention of the Grand Trunk Railway to come in on the west side of the harbour which altogether contradicted Hon. Mr. Emmerson's statement that they were to come in from Chipman and Norton and then run on the Intercolonial and come in on the east side of the harbour. I have Mr. Hays letter before me, which I will read. It is addressed to Mayor White, dated Montreal, February 8th, 1904, and reads as follows :—

My Dear Sir,—Having regard to the plans of this company in connection with our Grand Trunk Pacific project, may I ask that in the contemplated arrangement between the city and the Canadian Pacific Railway company for utilizing property owned by the City of St. John, that provision shall be made in such arrangement reserving to the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway company the right of usage on the same terms ? You will agree with me that such reservation would only be fair and to the mutual advantage of both the city and the Railway company, that may hereafter desire the use of your terminals. It has doubtless already occurred to yourself and the council to safeguard in this matter any agreement entered into in behalf of the city, but in the protection of the interests I represent, I thought it only proper that I should address you on the subject, and I shall be pleased to learn of your concurrence in the propriety of making the reservation referred to.

My statement was, as I have just indicated, that this letter of Mr. Hays must have referred to obtaining frontage rights on the west side of the harbour because the city had no frontage at its disposal on the east side. My hon. friend says that statement is not correct, that they have frontage at their disposal on the east side of the harbour as well as on the west side. I find that statement is one that is open to some controversy. It will depend on what you will regard as city frontage on the east side. What is really the proper frontage on the east side, I am told on very good authority—I think my hon. friend really knows all about it—is held by large steamship companies under what are regarded as perpetual leases, and not always available. However the accuracy of my statement does not depend upon whether the city of St. John has frontage at its disposal on the east side, because it is plain from Mr. Hays letter that he was seeking to secure frontage privilege on the west side of the harbour. He says so practically in the letter, because he says in the arrangements that are going on with the Canadian Pacific Railway, which everybody knows has its terminals on the west side, and who were asking at that time for increased facilities on that side, that reservation should be made for the Grand Trunk Pacific. Therefore it is perfectly plain that Mr. Hays requested by this letter a reservation of space on the western side of the harbour just at the same time that Mr. Emmerson in his speech in the opera house said the Grand Trunk Pacific Company intended to come in altogether in another way and get access to the harbour on the eastern side.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I did not enter, nor do I now enter upon the discussion of what Mr. Emmerson said or did not say, but the statement of the hon. gentleman as it came to me was that the city owned no wharf property on the east side of the harbour, and I felt it my duty to obtain information, and to state to the House that the statement of the hon. gentleman was not correct. A portion of the property may be under lease for a short time, but it is not all under lease. A great deal of the McLeod property, as my hon. friend who goes to St. John occasionally must know, is not leased at all, and I think some of the leases are from year to year ; but I might say, so that the hon. gentleman may understand the matter just for a moment, that the Canadian Pacific Railway has considerable property there now or considerable rights.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—On the west side.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Yes. The Canadian Pacific Railway was demanding an extension of its rights and it was perhaps a natural thing for Mr. Hays to make the request for his road also. I do not know what motive moved Mr. Hays. I do not intend to speak of his motives, but in view of all the discussion which was going on in St. John it would be the most natural thing for any man largely interested in railways to address such a letter as Mr. Hays addressed to the council. Now with regard to the east side and west side of the harbour there is a bridge across, and no man can make the statement absolutely, as the hon. gentleman makes it, that the Grand Trunk Pacific will not desire land on the west side of the harbour as well as on the east side. He would be an imprudent man who would rise and make such a statement as that. It is undoubtedly more convenient to get space on the east side, but there is a bridge across the harbour and it is no more trouble to get over there.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We are only trying to get at the facts.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My statement was that I thought from Mr. Hay's letter it was inferential that we could arrive at the conclusion that Mr. Hays was seeking to get harbour frontage on the west side; but I find his own letter shows it was on the west side he tried to get it.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Yes. Thre is a tremendous amount of space on the west side of the harbour. If the country develops as we expect it to do the Grand Trunk Railway will do well to get on both sides.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I was speaking—

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Order, order.

Hon Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman calls order when I am trying to say a word, but he did not call order when the hon. gentleman from St. John rose to speak in interruption just now.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—He spoke in reply to the hon. gentleman from Marshfield.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman from St. John interrupted me when I was on my feet and the moment I commenced to reply to his interruption, I was called to order by the hon. gentleman from St. Catharines. There is nothing to be gained by this line of conduct; we do not usually treat each other in that way in this chamber. I simply wish to point out to the House that my statement that Mr. Hays' letter flew directly in the face of Mr. Emmerson's speech is proved, not by inference, but it is proved by Mr. Hays' own letter.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I think it is hardly right to have such a discussion as this by men who do not understand the situation. With reference to Mr. Hays' letter, I do not suppose the House knows very accurately the harbour of St. John, and it is very reasonable to suppose that as the Canadian Pacific Railway were trying to acquire eight acres more land on the western side, Mr. Hays would say 'We do not know where we are going to land and I do not know where we will have to go. It is possible we may have to go to the west side, but to go to the west side because we have not room on the east side is all humbug. We have room for perhaps fifty ships on the east side in case the government will nationalize the harbour and make repairs and alterations. I will go further and point out that it is not fair to take the statements of opposition papers. The hon. gentleman quoted the St. John 'Sun.' We know that that paper cannot see anything right on the government side.

Hon. Mr. FURGUSON—I am quoting Mr. Hays' letter.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—The hon. gentleman quoted the St. John 'Sun' and I may say with reference to Mr. Emmerson that if you take all his statements you will be wholly astray, because at Moncton he said the road was going to terminate there, and at St. John he made another statement.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—As to the election the people of St. John are determined to have their rights. They acted according to their judgment, and they intend to do so, and I am satisfied, as long as we have such a man as Sir Wilfrid Laurier at the head of affairs, we will get our rights.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Wednesday, March 16, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

NEW SENATOR.

Hon. Dr. John Henry Wilson, of St. Thomas, was introduced and took his seat.

THE ADDRESS.

DEBATE RESUMED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Resuming the further adjourned debate on the consideration of His Excellency the Governor General's speech on the opening of the fourth session of the ninth parliament.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL said : At the time I moved the adjournment of the debate last night I was referring to some omissions which I thought I found in the address from the Throne, and I was led to refer to them from the fact that the premier, in the speech which he made in answer to the remarks of the hon. leader of the opposition in the House of Commons, intimated that it was the intention of the government to deal with the question of provincial autonomy, or in other words, to grant the Northwest Territories a government somewhat similar, as I understand it, to that enjoyed by the other provinces. There was another very important reference made by the hon. premier, and that was to the negotiations which had taken place and the probabilities of the introduction of some measure tending towards the bringing of Newfoundland into the Dominion. It struck me, as I think it did most members who have given their attention to this question, that two such important measures as these would have been referred to in the speech from the Throne. However, it appears that in the drafting of the address they referred to as few topics as possible, mentioning only two, leaving the country in ignorance, and the House, who should be taken into their confidence in matters of this kind, also in ignorance of what they proposed to do. Since the statement made by the premier I notice in to-day's paper two very important and somewhat significant paragraphs. In the items of news in the papers of yesterday and to-day we find the following statement :

The London 'Standard's' Paris correspondent writes that he is assured from authoritative sources that a solution of the Newfoundland question has been accepted in principle by both parties.

Another paragraph gives the following information :

Negotiations are proceeding actively between London and Paris for a settlement of outstanding differences between France and Great Britain, including the Newfoundland French shore fisheries.

Now, whether the fact of these negotiations having been proceeding between the British government and the French government led to the statement which was made by the premier I know not, but I presume the statement made by the premier was based upon facts alluded to in these paragraphs. I need scarcely say to the Senate that, providing terms can be arrived at, at all equitably, every one will rejoice to see the Dominion rounded off by the addition to the confederation of Newfoundland. I remember very well when this question was discussed when I was on the other side of the House. The Secretary of State at that time leading the opposition, somewhat dissented from the views which I then expressed. He was not an ardent admirer of the views which I then advanced, which are similar to those to which I have since given utterance. He then had grave doubts as to the advisability of bringing Newfoundland into the confederation. His opinion then might have been based—I do not know, because he did not give expression to the views—upon a fear that the difficulties which were constantly presenting themselves arising out of the French shore question might lead us into trouble and give us a good deal of vexation. These views were entertained by my late colleague Sir Adolphe Caron, for when he was one of a committee that waited upon a deputation from Newfoundland some years ago in Halifax, he gave expression to the same views I have mentioned now, and these may have been the reason why the hon. Secretary of State took the view he did on that occasion. Every one will rejoice if terms can be arranged between the British and the French governments to remove that constant source of irritation that has so long existed. I should like to see it go further. I should like to see not only Newfoundland brought into the confederacy, but also some arrangement by which either by exchange or purchase, the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon should be incorporated in the Dominion. These islands are a constant menace to the trade of this country, and also to the United States. It is the very nest and home of the smuggling trade between the older countries of Europe and the colonies and the United States. Those who have been behind the customs door, if I may so term it, who have had experience not only in this country, but in the United States, know the difficulties which are constantly presenting themselves, and if these islands could be acquired from France, a large amount of the cost would soon be repaid. I refer to this matter because of its great importance, and I reiterate it ought to have been a subject of sufficient importance to be mentioned in the speech from the Throne.

I understand that at the beginning of this debate my hon. friend from Marshfield, speaking of the extension of time to be granted for the construction of the western portion of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, called attention to the fact that the Grand Trunk Pacific Company were to be given eight years to do that which had been accomplished by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in five years. To that statement the hon. Secretary of State took exception. If I understand the position taken by the hon. Senator from Marshfield, it was that from the time of the signing of the contract between the then government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to the completion of the road was five years, and not that all the work had been done within that time. On referring to the records upon that point, I find that there had been expended up to the time of the signing of the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, a sum of $13,580,000 on various works which had been in course of construction for some years before that. A large proportion, hundreds of thousands of dollars, had been squandered on what was called 'water stretches.' The opening up of a route by means of railways and water, rivers and lakes,—in other words the amphibious scheme which was attempted to be carried out by the Mackenzie government, of which my hon. friend opposite was a shining light. The actual expenditure upon the main line of the Pacific Railway up to the period of the signing of that contract was just $5,825,296. And the only portion of the work that was going on under the Mackenzie administration when Sir John Macdonald's government came into power in 1878, was that portion of the road from Port Arthur leading on to English Bay. The reports of the engineers, which I have under my hand, show this to be the fact. I myself travelled over that portion of the road in 1879 in a box car and on a hand car as far as English Bay, and that was the full extent of work that had been done, when the question was considered by the government in 1878, under the regime of Sir John Macdonald, they found the road in the state to which I have called the attention of the House. At that time the distance from Fort William to English River, was 113 miles, and the rails had been laid a portion of the way, but only about sixty miles of that section had been at all graded. The balance was not even graded, but the rails were laid as far as Cross Lake. I need not enter further into this question than to show that the statement made by my hon. friend from Marshfield was literally true. Now, if the Canadian Pacific Railway Company could enter into a contract at the time they did, though they were given ten years in which to complete the road, and could build it within five years from the time of the signing of the contract, surely there is no necessity under the present scheme of giving to the Grand Trunk Railway Company eight years to build a road, not from Moncton to the Pacific, but from Winnipeg via the Peace River Pass, or some other Northern pass, to the Pacific coast. That portion of the road is the easiest of construction. Many people suppose that the extension of time applies to the whole road; that is not correct. It is given for the construction of the road on the prairie section and through the mountain section, and if we are to take the report of the engineers there is no difficulty in going through the Peace River Pass and those other passes north of the Kicking Horse Pass, through which the Canadian Pacific Railway runs. Consequently, we may infer that there being no such engineering difficulties as were found on the Canadian Pacific Railway route, there is no reason why the Grand Trunk Pacific Company should not complete the work in the same length of time. Of course, it is for the government to explain and defend it when the question comes before the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend entirely ignores all the surveys going on between 1871 and 1881.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman must have been reading his newspaper and failed to catch what I said. I commenced my remarks by saying that the expenditure up to the time of signing the contract was thirteen millions, and that it consisted of surveys and other works, before the government of 1878 took office, and in the expenditures on the Pembina branch which had been built by the hon. gentleman's government.

The hon. gentleman said in my hearing, replying to a statement made by my hon. friend from Marshfield, that the government had reduced the debt of the country seven million dollars. Might I ask the hon. gentleman where he obtained those figures ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the 'Canada Gazette, I gave my authority.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The only documents we have laid upon the Table to which we can refer, is the report of the Finance Minister.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—And the last 'Canada Gazette.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The 'Canada Gazette' is an unrevised issue. It does not attempt to give the debt as wholly correct. However, turning to the last official document that we have before us, we find that the government have increased the debt of this country since they came into power by $13,331,647. Supposing the statement in the 'Gazette' to which he refers to be correct, is that seven million dollars a reduction of the debt as it stood in 1896 when they came into power, or is it a reduction of the increased debt to which I have referred ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not the Public Accounts before me now, but I understand it was a reduction of the debt as it stood when we came into office. Last year there was a considerable surplus, and I think ten millions was applied to the debt. If my recollection serves me correctly, the increased debt at the end of the last financial year was three million dollars. There was a reduction then by the application of the surplus last year, of ten million dollars, bringing the debt down to $251,000,000. That would be seven million dollars less than the debt at the time we came into office.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend is professing to give us a statement which has not been brought here in a proper way.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am in order. I have risen to a point of order. I say the Secretary of State is doing wrong when he is quoting from the public accounts to June last.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was asked a question, and I have given the explanation. The hon. gentleman can take it or not just as he pleases. It just goes for what it is worth.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Should not the hon. gentleman from Marshfield be very happy to know that there is a reduction of seven millions in the debt?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That should not be introduced in the discussion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The question asked by the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat, the hon. minister of adjournments, has nothing whatever to do with the subject, and I protest against this attempt to draw a red herring across the trail. If any one can possibly understand the explanation of the hon. Secretary of State, he has a much brighter intellect than I have. He has told us something about a reduction last year and he has told us about a reduction this year. Now, the Public Accounts published under the authority of the government show us what the net public debt of the country was every year since 1896, and that is the basis upon which my remarks are being made. What I do require to know from the Secretary of State is, whether the seven millions to which he refers was a reduction of the debt as the present government found it when they came into power, or whether it was a reduction of the debt to the extent of seven millions of dollars at the end of last year ? That is the question I asked. The answer made was something about three millions last year and three millions for the year before. What do the figures show ? They show that in 1896 the debt of the country was $258,497,-432, and, to be very accurate, 77 cents. It shows on the 13th June, 1902—which is the last we have before us—that it was $271,-829,098.62. Supposing the hon. gentleman's statement should be correct—and of course not having the figures before me I am not going to dispute it—then the increase in the debt was over $13,000,000. Take the seven millions from that and it still leaves an increase of debt by the present government as it existed in 1896 of about six and a half millions. There are the figures. Any one can look at them for himself, and no amount of equivocation or muddling up the figures between the 'Canada Gazette' and last years deficit and this years deficit or surplus can change the fact or mislead the people. We know there have been large surpluses during the past few years, and what we have contended in this House is that that surplus, instead of being spent as it has been over and above the ordinary estimates, thus increasing the expenditure three, four or five millions per annum over the estimates, and which had to be revoted at the then coming parliament, that it should have been used in the reduction of the debt instead of spending it in the manner in which it was spent. We will be better able to deal with that question when we see the Finance Minister's report. There was another point to which my hon. friend called the attention of the House in which he eulogized the management of the post office and the management of the Department of the Interior, and as an evidence of the benefit of the policy of the government he instanced the immigration into the Northwest. What has the present Minister of the Interior done as far as policy was concerned, more than was done by the late government? I will tell you the difference. The great influx of population from the United States, the result of the magnificent harvests that were grown, and of drawing the attention of the people of the United States by agents from this country to the Northwest Territories, was not inaugurated by Mr. Sifton. That principle was not only adopted under the administration of Sir John Macdonal, but also Sir Charles Tupper's government and the government of which I was head. We had agents all through the western section of the United States, and we were condemned from Dan to Beersheba by those very gentlemen and by that very party for inaugurating a system of that kind. Now, if advertising of the good harvests will result in inducing British subjects who left the Northwest Teritories and had gone into the United States to return, bringing others of European extraction into our country, I rejoice at it as much as the government or any one possibly can; but it is somewhat amusing to hear gentlemen take credit to themselves for the result which followed the policy inaugurated by the late government. Then we are told that the post office has been a magnificent success. It is true the postage was reduced. In a country like ours I am not prepared to say that that was at all necessary. It was a bold stroke, I admit, and the fact that the country has grown, the development of the Northwest the discovery of gold in the Yukon Territory and the population which has flown into that country, have all given an impetus to correspondence that would not otherwise have taken place. But what do we learn when we investigate the accounts as they are presented to parliament and laid before the people? When Sir Adolphe Caron was Postmaster General, and when he had the large deficit to which the hon. Secretary of State called attention last night in his remarks, he was opening up the whole of that vast territory of Manitoba and the Northwest, hundreds, thousands and tens of thousands of miles. The expenditure had to be incurred, but the people were not there to give that return which is obtained at the present moment. But Sir Adolphe Caron, nor any member of his staff, nor the government, never thought of making a separate charge against the Northwest Territories for the expenditure which was incurred in extending the postal service through that vast section of the country. What did Mr. Mulock do? Just as soon as the heavy expense had to be incurred—I find no fault with it—in establishing postal communication with the mining district of British Columbia, and in the Yukon, he charged the cost up to the mounted police instead of to the post office, and the result was that while he showed a very small deficit at the time, if you add the expenditure which was incurred, and which was charged to the mounted police, paid for by the government, you will find that his deficit ran up to very large figures. You may go further than that, and as he has brought that matter up I shall take a little time to point out how the accounts were made. Turn to the Postmaster General's account for 1902.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Last year's report is distributed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know, but I am dealing with the whole question. I will come to that point later on. Hon. gentlemen will find that the Postmaster General's Report gives one sum, the Finance Department Report gives another sum, and the Auditor General gives still another sum, so that how we are to arrive at a conclusion as to the correct expenditure is somewhat difficult to ascertain. In making this comparison you will find if you turn to page 5, appendix A, a statement representing the expenditure to be $3,665,011 and revenue $2,964,014, showing a deficit of $700,997, while the Postmaster General's Report showed a deficit of only $501,000. Take another example. The Postmaster General represents that the deficit in 1898 was $47,602, but the Auditor General, on pages N—2 and N—60 of his report, gives these figures, as follows: expenditure, $3,826,496, and revenue, $3,527,809, or a deficit of $298,686 instead of $47,000. These would be called in ordinary parlance, in dealing with ordinary documents, a manipulation of figures. Then take 1900. The Postmaster General's Report shows a deficit of $461,661; the Auditor General, on pages F—2 and S—56 of his report, presents these figures, as follows: expenditure, $4,006,125; revenue, $3,204,772, a deficit of $801,353 instead of $461,000 as represented by the Postmaster General's Report. How that is to be explained I leave the hon. gentleman to tell us. In the next year the Postmaster General's Report shows a deficit of $416,184. Turning to the Auditor General's Report again we find the following figures: expenditure, $4,197,512, revenue $3,442,267, giving an actual deficit of $755,245, as against the reported deficit by the Postmaster General of $416,184. The same thing occurs precisely as in the other years, and in another year we have this startling statement: the Postmaster General's Report shows an expenditure of $4,000,790, while the revenue is $3,918,415, or a deficit of $182,375, against what was termed at that time to be a surplus of $5,000. Then the Public Accounts for the same time give these figures: expenditure, $4,023,636, and revenue, $3,918,481, or a deficit of $105,221 instead of a surplus of $5,000. The figures I am giving are for the same year by the Postmaster General, by the Finance Minister and by the Auditor General. Here is the Auditor General's Report: expenditure, $4,298,657; revenue, $3,918,415, or an actual deficit of $380,242. I leave the House and the country to judge how far and what dependence they can put upon the statement of the Postmaster General which enables my hon. friend the Secretary of State to eulogize him to the extent to which he does. We find that the three accounts do not agree, that while the Postmaster General claims a very small deficit or a small surplus, the Auditor General tells us that the deficit for the same year amounted to over $361,000. I leave these facts with the people to judge for themselves. I am not prepared to dispute what the hon. Secretary of State says about the report for the present year. I am not dealing with that at all—that is the year ending 30th of June last—for the simple reason that I have not taken the trouble to investigate, or, in other words, I have not had time. Having been from home some time, I was not prepared to meet this question, but the other figures have been proven to be correct in the past, and I have given them as an answer to the statement which has been made by the Secretary of State.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We have not the Auditor's Report yet?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, and consequently we could not make the same comparisons that have been made in the past, and which I have laid before the Senate.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The difference is due to the Yukon and Atlin districts which were specially not included in the figures that I gave.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is a point to which the hon. Secretary of State will remember I called attention. What I desire to impress upon the House, and what I think is a very important point, is that while the large deficit existed under the administration of the late Postmaster General, Sir Adolphe Caron, he made no distinction as to charging the expenditure of the Northwest Territories or the opening up of postal communication in British Columbia and in Manitoba. He charged it to the general expenditure of the Post Office Department, while the present Postmaster General, Sir Wm. Mulock, divided the accounts and then claimed a small deficit or a small surplus by excluding what he termed all the extraordinary expenditure of the opening up of the Yukon Territory and that portion of British Columbia which lies in the mining district. I called attention to that in my opening remarks upon this question. My hon. friend the Secretary of State made, to my mind, a most extraordinary statement and laid down an extraordinary principle in his remarks last night to which I shall call the attention of the House for a very short time. In replying to the statement made by the hon. senator from Marshfield that the declaration had been made by the Premier and by his colleagues that no protest had ever been made by a former government against the occupation of certain portions of the disputed territory which the United States government claimed to be part of Alaska and their territory, and what we hold to be Canadian territory if we receive justice, he said in answer to the complaint of the hon. senator from Marshfield that no protest was made, that he thought it was a good stroke of diplomacy—I think that was the word he used—for the Premier and his colleagues not to make a protest under the circumstances. The effect of a protest he said would be to create a feeling of suspicion in the minds of the United States government, and it would do more harm than good. I think if he applies that principle to himself and his own neighbour he may take a different view. If his neighbour was encroaching upon a portion of his farm, he might consider that a protest would be very proper under the circumstances. I think if his neighbour was taking a portion of his land or fencing in a part of his property he would not only protest, but he would probably send the bailiff to resent it, but certainly the first act would be to make a protest. Then my hon. friend says that he, the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, was not correct in making the statement which he made. Let us look at the facts as they appear upon the record, and we will see how far the hon. gentleman was correct in the statement which he had made in reference particularly to that protest. We not only have the protest made by Sir John Macdonald upon that occasion, but we have the protest made subsequently —the protest signed by Lord Lansdowne, giving the opinion of Lord Salisbury, to the United States government protesting in the strongest terms against the occupation of that portion of the territory which we claim to be ours, and they go further and say that they do not consider it possible that the government is taking the position that it was represented they were taking in reference to that question. Then the Secretary of State poohpoohed the statement made by my hon. friend from Marshfield as to the admissions which had been made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and by the Minister of the Interior, in reference to the occupancy of that territory which we claimed to be ours. He said those admissions had no effect upon the commission appointed to consider the Alaskan boundary question. Now, I propose to place upon record shortly the utterances of these two gentlemen, and the position taken by Lord Salisbury in reference to the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—By Lord Lansdowne.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It was concurred in by Lord Salisbury and that is why I mention his name. The facts are these as they appear upon the record :—

> Shortly after Lord Herschell intimated that the difficulties with regard to the question of the Alaskan boundry seemed insuperable, and he feared it might be necessary to break off the negotiations of which he hitherto had the charge. Upon this Lord Salisbury informed Mr. White that he did not see how His Majesty's government could sanction any convention for amending the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, as the opinion of this country would hardly support them in making a concession which would be wholly to the benefit of the United States at a time when they appeared to be so little inclined to a satisfactory settlement in regard to the Alaskan frontier.'

Reading between the lines as one would understand that despatch from the British government to Canada, and come to the conclusion that it was an intimation to our government to protest in the strongest possible manner, against the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty until the United States had consented to deal fairly and squarely with the Alaska Boundary Question. But what did Sir Wilfrid Laurier, as premier of this country, say in discussing this question ? He said that the abrogation of that treaty was a matter of no consequence to Canada. But that was not the opinion of all his colleagues. The late Minister of Justice, the Hon. David Mills, made a distinct and positive statement that we in Canada were interested to a very great extent in that treaty because of the trade which was growing between Canada and those portions of the world which necessitated the maintenance of our right in that particular section of America. But whether it did or not, it was a lever which could have been used at the time for the purpose of enforcing a fair settlement of the Alaska Boundary Question from the United States. On the eleventh day of February, 1898, Mr. Sifton is reported in the 'Hansard' of the House of Commons as having made the following statements :

'Difficulties also arose in the White Pass behind the village of Skagway and at Chilkat Pass behind Dyea. I believe our contention is that Skagway and Dyea are really in Canadian territory, but as the United States have had undisputed possession of them for some time past, we are precluded from attempting to take possession of that Territory.

Seeing the effect which that might have upon any attempt to settle the question, Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper at once rose, and made this remark :

'May I be excused for saying that I do not think the hon. minister meant to say 'undisputed possession.

The Minister of the Interior replied :

There have been no protests made. It must be taken as undisputed when there has been no protest made against the occupation of that territory by the United States.

Many hon. gentlemen may remember that almost the same statement was made by the Minister of Justice, the late Hon. David Mills, in this House, and my hon. friend beside me (Hon. Mr. Ferguson) and myself, called the attention of the hon. gentleman to the admissions which he had made, and said we feared that it might have an effect in the final settlement of the question. But they were then defending themselves against the charge that they had made no protest, and in doing so, they sacrificed the interests of this country by declaring that no protest had ever been made. Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper again rose, in the Commons, and made this remark :

'A claim I suppose was made, and adhered to.'

The Minister of the Interior replied :

'There is nothing in the records to show that any protest has been made, an unfortunate thing for us, but it is a fact.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

Now, the Minister of the Interior, admits that from his standpoint, as a protest had not been made, it was singularly unfortunate for Canada. However, the hon. Secretary of State thinks that that is a matter of no consequence whatever, and consequently could have no bearing upon the subject. You will find in 'Hansard,' pages 1277 and 1278 that iSr Wilfrid Laurier made the following statement on March 7th, 1899 :

'We had either to take the route by the Lynn canal and Dyea, or the route by the Stikeen river.

The advantages of the one had to be set against the disadvantages of the other, and vice versa. The advantages of the route by the Lynn canal, were that it was shorter and more direct than the route by the Stikeen river. But if he had adopted the route by the Lynn canal that is to say had chosen to build a railway from Dyea by the Chitka Pass up to the waters of the Yukon, we should have had to place the ocean terminus of the railway upon what is now American territory.'

That is Dyea which we have been claiming as belonging to us, and here is an actual admission by the premier of this country, that that portion of the country to which we were laying claim actually belonged to the United States. Then he says :

'I agree with the statement which has been made on the floor of this House in more than one occasion that Dyea, if the treaty is correctly interpreted is in Canadian Territory. It ought to be ; but the fact is, as my hon. friends know very well, even those who do not belong to the leading profession, that possession is nine points of the law.

Here is another important admission. He continues :

'and even though by the letter of the treaty Dyea is in Canadian Territory the fact remains that from time immemorial Dyea was in possession of the Russians, and in 1887 it passed into the hands of the Americans and it has been held in their hands ever since.'

Now I should like to know if a clearer admission could possibly be made by any person than was here made, that a portion of that country which we claimed, belonged to the United States and not to Canada. He goes on to say :

Now, I will not recriminate here ; this is not the time nor the occasion for doing so ; but so far as I am aware no protest has ever been entered against the occupation of Dyea by the American authorities ; and when the American authorities are in possession of that strip of territory on the sea which has Dyea as its harbour, succeeding the possession by the Russians from time immemorial, it becomes manifest to everybody that this moment we cannot dispute their possession, and that before their possession can be disputed the question must be determined by a settlement of the questions involved in the treaty. Under such circumstances, Dyea was practically in American territory—at all events, in possession of the Americans ; and, therefore, we had undertaken to build a railway from Dyea to the Yukon country, we would have been placed at the mercy of the American authorities with regard to the bonding privilege. We would have been in this position, that though we had built a railway, the ocean terminus of that railway was not in our country, and we could not send a ton or a pound of goods over that railway unless we had the permission of the American authorities. * * * If we had built the railway by Dyea, when we came to Dyea we would have come to an American port, and according to the law of nations, we could not have entered a ton of merchandise or a pound of food without subjecting ourselves to the necessity of paying duty, if the Americans refused to bond the goods.'

That, I think, is a pretty clear corroboration of the statement made by my hon. friend from Marshfield, when he said that the Premier and the Minister of the Interior had virtually given away our case in the discussion which had been made in the House of Commons. If my hon. friend opposite were arguing this question from another standpoint, he would take a very different view from that which he has expressed in this debate. Was there a protest made ? Mr. Sifton says there was not, Sir Wilfrid Laurier says he had no knowledge of a protest having been made, and if there was no protest, Mr. Sifton adds, it was a sad calamity for this country, because by not entering the protest we tacitly admitted the right of the United States to take possession of the head of Lynn canal, hoist their flag and establish schools there. Now, let us look at the record and see how far the hon. gentleman's statement is correct on that point. On the 19th of June, 1888, Sir John Macdonald, then Premier of Canada, made this report :

Certain persons are about to receive a charter from the Alaskan authorities to construct a trail from Lynn canal by way of White Pass to the interior of Alaska. If our view of the case is correct, the entire route of this trail, as well as the trail by the Chilkoot Pass, is in Canadian territory. In view of the well-based contention on our part, that the heads of the larger inlets which penetrate that portion of Alaska which consists of the coast line from Mount St. Elias to Portland channel, and more particularly the head of Lynn canal, are within our territory, it would appear to be important to protest against the granting of any rights by the United States or Alaskan government at the heads of these inlets.

2. That I, as High Commissioner, transmitted this communication on August 1st, 1888, to the Colonial Office, and added a memorandum prepared by Major General D. R. Cameron. In concluding my letter of August 1st, 1888, to the Colonial Office, referring to this memorandum, I said :

I entirely concur in the great importance of protesting against the United States contention.

3. That Lord Salisbury, on August 1, 1888, transmitted to Sir L. West, a copy of all these papers, styling them, 'Relative to a rumour that a charter is about to be granted by the Alaskan authorities of the United States for certain privileges in that part of Alaska which is claimed by this country.

He concluded :

'I have to request that you will inform Mr. Bayard that this report has reached Her Majesty's government and that it is presumed to be unfounded as the territory in question is part of Her Majesty's domain.

4. That Sir L. West, on September 10, 1888, addressed Mr. Bayard as follows :—

'I have the honour to inform you that the Marquis of Salisbury has requested me to bring to your notice a rumour which has reached Her Majesty's government that a charter is about to be granted by the authorities of Alaska for certain privileges in a part of that country which is claimed by Great Britain.

'Her Majesty's government presume that this rumour is unfounded, as the territory in question is part of Her Majesty's dominions.'

In view of this fact and this record, is it not somewhat astonishing that the Premier of this country, backed by the Minister of the Interior, declared that no protest had ever been made ? In addition to this we find in the return which has been laid before parliament respecting the Alaskan boundary, that Lord Lansdowne used this language in a dispatch to Mr. Paikes, on the 18th of August, 1902 :

Attention must also be given to the message of the President of the United States transmitting these reports and maps of Dr. Dawson to Congress, and to the memorandum of his Secretary of State, which accompany them, in which Mr. Bayard expresses the opinion that these documents are 'of value as bearing upon a subject of great international importance, and should be put in shape for public information.'

It appears to His Majesty's government that the President thus publicly acquainted the people of the United States of Canada's claim to the heads of the inlets more than eight years before anything in the nature of settlement was begun at the head of the Lynn canal, for beyond a few trifling acts of occupation on the part of private individuals, at periods separated by considerable intervals of time, no settlement was attempted in those localities until the mining rush to the Klondike in the spring of 1897.'

In the face of these official documents, which were in the hands of the government at the time the declaration was made by the Premier and his colleague, and endorsed by the Secretary of State, yesterday, we have evidence that a protest was made by Canada against the occupation by the United States of territory at the head of Lynn canal. I apologize to the House for having taken so much time in laying these facts before them, presuming that, no doubt, many of the hon. gentlemen are just as familiar with the question as I am myself, but in view of the position taken by the Secretary of State in his reply to my hon. friend from Marshfield, I thought it proper to put these quotations on record, in order to show that the government, of which I was a member, when Sir John Macdonald was Premier, and those who followed him took an active interest in the maintenance of Canada's right to that portion of territory at the head of Lynn canal. I do not know that it is necessary that I should enter into any discussion upon the award which was rendered by the commission. I agree with the Secretary of State in regretting exceedingly that Lord Alverstone took the course he did in that award, and I also share his regret that the whole question was not finally disposed of so that hereafter there may be no more trouble on the Alaskan boundary. My hon. friend says there are still 200 miles of the boundary in dispute, and in case rich mineral deposits should be discovered in that disputed territory, there may be a good deal of friction and unpleasantness. But when he talks of Canada making her own treaties, I lay down this principle, which I think every man in this country will accept, that so long as we are a part of the British empire, it is incompatible with our status as an integral part of the empire to claim the right to make our own treaties independent of the imperial authorities.

It is incompatible with the position that we occupy, and I do not think it at all necessary that we should have that power. The British government have given us the fullest possible rights in connection with that matter. Sir John Macdonald acted on behalf of Canada in the famous Washington treaty. My hon. friend read a letter from Sir John Macdonald making statements in which we all fully concur, and from what took place we would draw the same deductions, but whenever people do not get what they want they are sure to blame somebody else. Sir Charles Tupper, with the aid of Sir John Thompson represented Canada in the negotiations at a later period in Washington, when they came to a decision as to the terms of another treaty which was recommended by the President of the United States (Mr. Cleveland) to Congress for its adoption as being fair and equitable for both parties, but it was rejected by the United States Senate. Sir Charles Tupper on behalf of Canada did negotiate a commercial treaty with France in connection with the French ministry, but I am not prepared to say that that has been of any particular benefit to us. I never thought it was, and looking at the trade returns I am convinced that it was not the benefit to us that Sir Charles thought at the time it would be, and that many Canadians thought it would be, but whether it was to our advantage or not does not change the fact that the British government recognized the necessity for the appointment of a Canadian in the negotiation of any treaty which affects this country. The New York 'Sun' I think put the whole thing in a nutshell. In discussing the proposition for the right to negotiate our own treaties by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, it puts it in about half a dozen lines in this way: 'Supposing Canada had the right independent of Britain to effect a treaty what would follow? They would refuse to recognize the right of the United States to that portion of the Alaskan territory which we claim belongs to the United States.' All the United States would do would be to hoist the stars and stripes upon that territory and then would the Canadians come and knock it down or take it away from them; and if they did what would be their position? It seems to me the answer to that whole question is just in a nutshell, and yet that is really our position.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—We would follow Mr. Gourley.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend does not quite fairly state the case. The King would still make the treaty, but the persons who negotiated would be all Canadians.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If my hon. friend had permitted me to continue, I was just going to refer to that position taken by the Premier. I have his own words under my hand, but I am not going to read them. He says, as has been repeated by the hon. Secretary of State, that he did not ask for the right, independent of Great Britain to negotiate our own treaties, but that we should negotiate treaties subject to ratification or disallowance by the British government. I should like to know what better position we would be in if we entered into negotiations with the United States in reference to this question and we had arranged a treaty which the British government considered to be detrimental to the interests of the empire, and then vetoed it, what would be our position then ? Would we go to war with England to enforce it ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Growl and grumble as we are doing now ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Submit.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Just as the government are doing now. We had better submit, and with good grace, and we are more apt to get what is desired from the representative of the British government for the Canadian people. Twenty years ago Canada had no such right. During the administration of Sir John Macdonald's government, and during the time I had the honour of occupying a seat at the council, the British government made the concession that they would never negotiate any treaty which affected the colonies without the cooperation of the colonies either directly or indirectly, and where a treaty was entered into by the imperial authorities and the colonials, if I may so term them, or rather the British subjects living in Canada, or in any other portion of the empire, did not take a part, the whole treaty was submitted to them with a full year to declare whether they would accept the terms of that treaty and become a party to it or not. So that we were left in the fullest possible enjoyment of that autonomy which exists in the management of the affairs of this country. I think I am quite right in saying that a large number of treaties were effected with the minor powers both on the Pacific and in other portions of the world, and whilst I was Minister of Customs I always recommended the Council not to become a party to any of these treaties, and for this reason: if we became a party to those treaties it would debar us, if the necessity arose of negotiating with that country or any other country, as the favoured nation clauses did in the German and Belgian treaties, from acting upon our own responsibility, and in no case, in my recollection, except one, which was a very minor matter, did the Canadian government consent to become a party to the treaty. They had notified the imperial authorities that they declined to do so, and I think, if I remember correctly, the Secretary of State made the same statement last year or a year or two ago, when discussing this same question. Then he says we ought to have the appointment of the arbitrators. Well I should like to know if in this unfortunate commission, the Alaskan boundary, we did not have the selection of the arbitrators for Canada who considered this question ? Now, on urging upon the government not to reject the overtures, if such they may be called, to the terms of the United States in connection with what I think, and every Canadian and every public man in this country must think, the most unfair proposition which was made, to refuse to have a seventh man in connection with those treaties, so as to make a final settlement of the whole question, the imperial government urged upon the Canadian government to accept the terms and Lord Minto in reply to that said :—

'My ministers while still regretting that proposed tribunal will not be constituted so as to ensure certainty of a final decision being reached on the reference, will agree to accept the Treaty as contained in the draft submitted to them.'

I have already expressed the opinion that I regretted that they did that, that they did not reject it at once ; and I believe that is the opinion of ninety-nine out of every hundred Canadians. Then, in reference to the appointment of Canadian commissioners, we find this statement in the same despatch of Lord Minto, the present Governor General. The imperial government cabled to Lord Minto as follows :

'It is important that British half of Court, also appointment of British agent should be settled without delay. Hope therefore your responsible advisers will favour us with their views on these appointments as early as possible.'

What is Lord Minto's reply to this ? It reads as follows :

'As to the composition of tribunal, my ministers suggest Chief Justice of England and two Canadian judges, names to be telegraphed hereafter.'

Now, if anybody is responsible for Lord Alverstone being upon that commission it is the Canadian government, because they suggested his name along with two Canadians. The British government accepted their suggestion, and what more could we ask, I should like to know, than to have the very men appointed whom we named ? I frankly admit, with the Secretary of State, that the Canadian people and any one who had been asked the question : 'Have you any objection to the selection of the Chief Justice of England, a man occupying the highest position, from a legal standpoint, in the country. I think every one would have said no ; but we have no right, in the face of the record, to complain of the appointment of Lord Alverstone as one of the commissioners. We may complain of his decision, and we do complain ; and I say it here publicly, that no satisfactory explanation has been yet given to the Canadian people or to the English people, so far as I have been able to read, or to ascertain, as to the change of opinion and position taken by Lord Alverstone in reference to the allotment of those four islands at the mouth of the Portland canal. We have it upon record that he agreed with the Canadian contention, that if that was to have been the point of entrance to the Alaskan territories that the channel north of these four islands was the channel taken by Vancouver when he first visited that portion of the world, and that leads us to this conclusion, that the contention which has since been made that the channel was too shallow to be used is but a fallacy, used as a defence put up in order to justify the position taken by Lord Alverstone. But it appears he wanted to compromise this whole matter and make it as easy as possible, and without even consulting the Canadian portion of that commission—Hon. Mr. Jette, the Lieutenant Governor of Quebec, and Mr. Aylesworth, of Toronto—he simply changes his opinion, lays the document before these commissioners and asks them to sign it, without giving them any reason, or even arguing the question with them, as to why they should sign it, or why he had changed his opinion. That, I think, we have a right to complain of, and as it is the right of every Englishman and every British subject to grumble when he thinks he is badly treated, I think he has no right to complain if the Canadian people take exception to the decision come to by that hon. gentleman. There are other points to which I should like to call attention, but I feel that I have occupied the time of the House altogether too long. My only excuse is that these are important questions, affecting the vital interests of this country, not merely of a party, but of the whole country, and dealing with questions of such Dominion and national importance, we may be excused if we take a little more time when we are not otherwise pressed for business in discussing them and laying them not only before this House, but before the people. I have had a good deal to do during the last twenty odd years with these questions, both in power and out of power, and if I express strong opinions, it is because I feel it is in the interests of my country that we should give expression to them ; and depend upon it, there is no better mode of reaching public sentiment and of affecting the statesmen of the mother country than by openly expressing the opinions which we hold, not only of them as politicians, but of their actions as statesmen ; and so long as we retain that right of British subjects, let me hope that no matter what party the man belongs to he will have the manliness to express his views openly and freely. With my hon. friend. I congratulate the country on its prosperous condition at the present moment. I deny, however, that the whole merit is to be laid at the door of my hon. friend.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The speech from the Throne spoke of Providence.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I wish the right hon. gentleman would not interrupt, though I like to hear his sweet voice. I do not give credit to the present government for the sunshine or the rainfalls which gave us such ample harvests in the great Northwest. I have this to say that in studying the history of the world and the history of the country, there are times of progress, there are times of success with individuals and times of prosperity in all countries, but the time will come just as sure as we are here to-day, when the reverse will be the case. When the Conservative government came into power in 1878, it was just at the turn of the tide. and we increased our surplus year after year for fifteen or sixteen years, and then it began to turn, and I advise my hon. friends if they are to remain in power much longer, that they begin to prepare during the time of the increase in surpluses for the coming day of depression, and if they do that they will show wise statesmanship as every other government ought to do. I should like at some other time to discuss the question of taxation, the promises of the hon. gentlemen in the past and how they have fulfilled them, particularly in reference to the taxation of the people. That, however, I shall leave for another occasion. I shall resume my seat in the hope that I may some time in the future have an opportunity of congratulating the country on another and a better government. I may be excused for not being here when the debate began. I have been in parliament for 37 years, and this is the first time that I have been absent from the opening of parliament and the opening of the discussion upon the address, and under those circumstances I have no doubt my hon. friend the Secretary of State and more particularly my hon. friend to my right who had to open the debate, will excuse me for being absent.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Cobourg)—I hope I may be excused for offering a few remarks upon the resolution now before this House. It is a resolution that an address be presented to His Excellency for the gracious speech with which he was pleased to open the 4th session of the 9th parliament of the Dominion of Canada, a privilege which I probably shall not again have during His Excellency's administration of the affairs of this Dominion. I need hardly say that when I came to this House I passed in my own mind a mental resolution that I would endeavour to do a maximum amount of work and a minimum amount of speaking. Hitherto I think I can congratulate myself upon having been fairly successful in maintaining that resolution.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I need hardly say that I will yield to no Senator in this Chamber or no man outside of it in listening attentively and respectfully and effectively to the debates, and especially to the speeches of hon. gentlemen who happen to differ from me, because it is by their speeches that perhaps I learn most, as their views do not coincide with mine in every particular. The speech from the Throne contains five or six topics, every one important in itself, sufficiently important to occupy, if one could do so, a speech of an hour on every topic. I shall travel rapidly over nearly of them, dwelling, in passing, on two or three of them to enlarge upon them to a limited extent. I cannot pass over the first paragraph of the Speech. It is to express our thankfulness for the abundant harvest of last year. A kind Providence has given us in succession several grand harvests, and the result of these harvests has been to augment in no small measure the great prosperity which we enjoy to-day. I do not give credit to the present government for all this prosperity. I give them credit for what they are entitled to and no more. I do give them credit for wise and honest administration of our public affairs since they came to office. I think they are entitled to that—as much entitled to it, if not more than any government this country has ever had. But while I do not give all credit to the government, I do not give all credit, if there is some credit due, as I must suppose there is, to the party who preceded them in power, in the policy they inaugurated. The previous government are entitled to whatever credit they have fairly earned by the policy which they inaugurated. I think that policy is sometimes called the National Policy. I am, I trust, from intelligent preferences, largely a free trader. I am, from necessity, a moderate protectionist, because in the present mode of deriving our revenue we must have moderate protection or a revenue tariff. I believe there are hon. gentlemen in this House who are very familiar with the operation of the tariff, and this question of protection, who would like to see the tariff raised and the system of higher protection inaugurated. I am not in favour of that. I am utterly opposed to it. We must not forget that this country is composed of several provinces, and that what might be applicable and suitable to one would not be applicable and suitable to another. Many of our provinces would like the tariff as low as possible, almost free trade. Other provinces desire a high protective tariff. How in the world can any government administer the affairs of this country if they make it entirely free trade or high protective tariff ? We must bear in mind that there must be concessions on the part of free traders, and concessions on the part of protectionists. Those who prefer free trade pure and simple must submit to moderate protection. Those who are in favour of high protection must come down and submit to more moderate protection. It will be impossible for any government, even if that government was composed of Solons, to administer the affairs of this country as they have been administered for the last six or seven years except by a compromise tariff—a compromise between an extreme tariff and too low a tariff. I am not going to give credit to high protection for the prosperity which this country enjoys. If it is entitled to some of the credit, I will give it cheerfully. Perhaps it is, but I shall give you a few of the reasons why I think neither this government nor their predecessors are entitled to all the credit for this prosperity. I will tell you what I think is the secret of our great prosperity. I have alluded to the good harvests of late years. I place them, under Providence, as the greatest factor in contributing to our prosperity. Then I give great credit to our educational system, to our public schools, our high schools and our colleges for the training of the human intellect, so that, to-day, every man, whether he is employed in manual labour, at the plough, or in the office, or at the bench, or in the factory, works with his intellect as he does with his hands, and better results follow his efforts. Another thing to which I shall allude is that there is greater sobriety in this country than there was in earlier stages of its history, and because of that greater degree of sobriety, many are able to accomplish more for the country. All these causes and a few more combined are the elements constituting our wonderful prosperity to-day.

Now, on the matter of immigration, no man of large intelligence can withhold his expression of appreciation and even of wonder, at the great influx of population into the Northwest within the last year or two. What is the cause of that? Immigration will always flow to a prosperous country. And although immigration to Manitoba and the Northwest is great now, I believe it is only yet in its infancy, and that within the next few years we shall see within those regions a settlement in numbers and character, such as we have not hitherto dreamed of.

There is a question of amendments to the Militia Act rendered necessary by the greatly increased militia force of Canada. Time was when I thought our expenditure, if not unnecessary, should be very moderate in that direction. I am bound to say, looking around me and seeing what is transpiring in the world, that my views on that question have very much changed. I shall be glad, as a humble member of this House, to give the most careful consideration to any measure that will come before us for increasing the efficiency of our militia force. It may never be necessary to call out the militia for the defence of the country, but I believe it would be following the dictates of prudence to have a thoroughly organized, equipped and efficient militia force in this country.

The Alaskan Boundary award has been referred to by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield and by the leader of the opposition in this House. I agree with them that it is a very important question, although it is very briefly mentioned in the speech from the Throne. According to my view, those few words embody a question quite as important as any other referred to in the speech. When the time comes and the papers are before us, I shall crave the liberty of saying something upon that subject. I may speak pretty plainly. I would not like to offend any one intentionally. I am sorry that the leader of the opposition is so ungenerous as to blame the government for the failure of our case. How could any man foresee that any one occupying the standing and mountain peak position of Chief Justice of England, would take the course which he saw fit to pursue in that matter ? I want to say now, and I should like if I could have every resident of Great Britain hear what I say—I am a Canadian through and through, and to use a phrase that the late right hon. Sir John Macdonald was wont to quote, 'A Canadian I was born, a Canadian I hope to die,' and it is because of my intense love for British institutions and for our connection with the empire that I say what I do—we must have no more Alaskan boundary disasters. The sooner the authorities of Great Britain learn this lesson, which they seem not yet to have learned, that their policy should be to stand by their colonies, who are their true friends, rather than to try and conciliate doubtful friends, the better. There is an element across the line, not native to the country, but which controls affairs over there, that is not friendly to Great Britain, and we must not allow ourselves to be sacrificed whenever our friends across the border think they are entitled to a piece of our territory. There is nothing that I regard as more sacred than the protection of our territory. I do not complain of the loss of two little islands on our Pacific coast, but I do complain of the manner in which they were, without any reason, given to the United States. One of the speakers who has preceded me said that those islands fairly belonged to us. I have no doubt about that, and I agree with the gallant knight who said that he has not seen and cannot find any good reason for the course which the Lord Chief Justice of England took on that matter. Neither have I, for the very good reason I believe that there is no justification or excuse for it, and the less explanation they attempt the better. According to my view, the policy of Great Britain is to draw the veil over that transaction and try to better guard our interests in the future. I do not intend to offer any opinion—it would be presumptuous—as to how far we may or may not have power, or how far it would be judicious for us to claim power, to negotiate or initiate our own treaties. So long as our present relation to the empire continues—and I trust it will remain long after my day and for ever—it will be a difficult question to solve. The only way that we can solve it is by showing the British people, whom we love, that their true policy is to see that whatever has taken place in the past, Canadian interests shall be guarded in the future and not sacrificed.

Reference is made to an omission from the speech about the outlying province of Newfoundland. A government cannot put everything in the speech from the Throne, but I am free to confess that for years I have longed to see the time when that outlying province would join the union and form one of the happy family of provinces. What has transpired in connection with the Alaskan boundary award has increased my desire to see Newfoundland brought into the confederation. I want to see all our provinces united and welded together by that strongest of all ties—mutual interest and mutual affection.

I come now to the question of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway scheme. I did not suppose that that question would be enlarged upon to the extent that it has been, because an opportunity will be afforded when the Bill comes before us for a full discussion of its merits; but as I felt it prudent to remain silent when that question was discussed at great length last session, and I may exercise similar prudence this session, I may say now what I have to say, although briefly and rapidly. As a member of this Senate and a Canadian anxious to see the highest results reached in our country, I am in thorough sympathy with that project. I do not intend to cast any reflection on those who hold a different view, but I should be sorry if in future years any of my sons, turning up the debates or the votes and proceedings of to-day should see that my vote was recorded against that measure. The money part of it is, to my mind, quite of secondary importance. It may be built for the amount mentioned by those who favour the scheme. I shall be surprised if it can be kept within those limits. The cost may go as high as the amount mentioned by the opponents of the scheme.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Mr. Blair, for instance.

Hon. Mr. KERR—The estimate of Mr. Blair, for whose judgment I have profound respect, but if it reaches the maximum figure mentioned in the debate, I am in favour of that expenditure to build the Transcontinental Railway. I just want, in these few remarks, to emphasize this fact; I have thought in listening to the debate here and elsewhere, that enough was not made of this point, that that road is intended to develop the northern zone of this country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I have heard a good deal of talk about a rival scheme. I have not thought it necessary to form an opinion about that rival scheme, however good or wise it may be. I listened attentively to it as propounded by the leader of the opposition in another place, but after all it would not accomplish the purpose, because it would be a railway composed of existing railways largely, and that is not the idea at all. My notion of this railway is to send it back three, four, or, if the territory permit, five hundred miles north of any existing railway. I have long known this fact, as other hon. gentlemen have, that the Dominion of Canada has length; I have long thought and believed, and do believe to-day, that Canada has breadth as well as length, and I hope to see that road built, in order that the known area of this Dominion may be duplicated. I read in a prominent journal in the city of Toronto on my way down here a great objection urged against that road, that it was to be five hundred miles north of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, according to my mind, that was the best argument that could be used in favour of the construction of that road. When that road is built it is in the very nature of things that it will throw out its Briarean arms and gather in the riches from the north and the south, and not only carry the grain from Manitoba and the Northwest to the sea-board, but carry freights from the east to the west; and I look forward in imagination to the time when that road shall have been built and a line of ocean steamships traversing the ocean in connection with it, when, in fact, the earth will be girdled by the trade and commerce of this country by means of that new road, and the use of steam which will follow as a matter of course. I am sorry to hear so much stress laid upon the fact that it is to cost so much, because I can recollect the opposition that was offered on that ground to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Happily, I never did oppose the construction of that railway, but I thought it was costing this country too much. I do not argue that question now. All I say is that it is worth all it has cost, because of the way it has developed this country and increased its prosperity; but it is only fair that attention should be called, when the present government are censured for undertaking a large expenditure in connection with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, to the fact that the same hon. gentlemen—perhaps some of them are here, though I have no one in my mind in particular—voted for that very large expenditure, even to the extent of appropriating enough land and money to build the railway and then give it to a company to operate it. I am in favour of companies operating railways, because I think governments have enough other matters to attend to without undertaking the management of railways. We have not yet reached that stage in our civilization, when I think it would be safe for the government to build and operate railroads. I am only sorry that it is necessary for the government to build a part of this railway. They propose, as I understand it, to build and rent it to the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, and to forego the interest on the cost for a few years. I am not finding fault with the government who were responsible for the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I would not have the Canadian Pacific Railway authorities think that I am anything but friendly to that great work. I am thoroughly friendly. I wish it, from the bottom of my heart, a reverent and hearty God-speed, but I do believe that with the construction of this road where it is proposed to put it, seeing our immense resources and our vast undeveloped, rich and arable territory, that we would be culpable and derelict in our duty, if we did not use all our means to push that project through. I have said about as much as I intend to say on this subject, but there are a good many in doubt as to that scheme. Well, it is not to be wondered at. It is a big scheme. I like that conservative disposition—caution. Perhaps it is owing to my early influences that I am so conservative, but while I say that, I am bound to add that according to the way I see it, both Liberals and Conservatives ought to make common cause and treat this great project as a national question and not a party question. I have heard it said—I would not like to impute it to any man—that some objection arises from the fact that it is introduced by a Liberal government and that, forsooth, a Liberal government may get some benefit from it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I hope that is not the case, but whether it is or not I would vote for that scheme if I were the sole member of this chamber when that position is taken, my faith in it is so strong. I cannot help it. Every great enterprise has had its doubting Thomases. I dare say there are doubting Thomases in this chamber. They are not confined, as we know from the history of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to any one political party. Doubting Thomases are to be found in all political parties, and every project has to meet with a certain amount of that doubt. When Columbus turned his prow towards the setting sun all Europe jeered at him and said he was a madman, and yet he unveiled to the old world this new world in which millions are now working out their social regeneration. I am bound to acknowledge there were doubting Thomases when the Canadian Pacific Railway project was before the House of Commons of which I was a humble member at the time; but the Canadian Pacific Railway was pushed through in spite of these doubting Thomases, and what is more, my faith is so strong that I verily believe this Grand Trunk Pacific scheme will be pushed through notwithstanding the non-support or opposition of doubting Thomases. We must have that railway. You ask me why I have such faith in that project?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, we never asked that.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I will tell you why, if you do not ask it. Because I have faith in Canada. I have faith in her institutions. I have faith in her people, and I believe that in our brightest day-dream we have not yet seen or imagined the grand future that is before this country. I look back for some grounds of my faith. I will not go back farther than the union of Upper and Lower Canada, about which I will just read a line or two. I think it was in 1841 the first great step was taken towards consolidating this country. On that occasion the Governor General, Lord Sydenham, used these words :—

> Inhabitants of the province of Canada,—Henceforward may you be united in sentiment, as you are from this day in name. A part of the mighty empire of England, protected by her arms, admitted to all the benefits of trade as her citizens, your freedom guaranteed by her laws, and your rights supported by the sympathy of your fellow-subjects there, Canada enjoys a position unsurpassed by any country in the world. It is the first wish of the Queen to rule in the hearts of her subjects, and to feel that they are contented and prosperous under her mild and just sway. In your hands rests now your own fate. May the All-wise Disposer of events so ordain your acts that they may tend to the promotion of peace and happiness among you, and may He pour His blessing upon that union of which it is my pleasing duty this day to announce to you the completion.

That has been a union fraught with good, and with good results to the country, and as a lad at the time, and since, I have always felt that that was one of the bulwarks of our strength, and it has been my privilege as well as my duty from that hour to the present to do everything in my power to intensify and weld together that happy union which Lord Sydenham proclaimed. Another ground for my hope is that when the few far-seeing men, men who stood upon the mountain top and saw the view, proposed a federation of the four provinces, even they in their march of progress, met with doubting Thomases yet we all know to-day what a grand thing confederation has proved. In speaking upon one of these occasions, that peerless orator Thos. D'Arcy McGee, who was an advocate of that measure, spoke to the doubting Thomases as follows :—

> Now what needs this country—with a lake and river and seaward system sufficient to accommodate all its own and all its neighbour's commerce—what needs such a country for its future ? It needs a population sufficient in number, in spirit, and in capacity to become its masters : and this population need, as all civilized men, need, religious and civil liberty, unity, authority, free intercourse, commerce, security and law.. .. .. .. Analyse our aggregate population: we have more Saxons than Alfred had when he founded the English realm ; we have more Celts than Brien had when he put his heel on the neck of Odin. We have more Normans than William had when he marshalled his invading host along the strand of Fabaise. We speak the speeches of Shakespeare and Bossuet. We copy the constitution which Burke and Somers and Sidney and Sir Thomas More lived, or died to secure or save.. .. .. .. I see in the not remote distance one great nationality——

We have it to-day. The article continues :—

> —bound like the shield of Achilles by the blue rim of ocean. I see it quartered into many communities, each disposing of its internal affairs, but all bound together by free institutions, free intercourse and free commerce. I see within the round of that shield the peaks of the western mountains and the crests of the eastern waves, the winding Assiniboine, the five-fold lakes, the St. Lawrence, the Ottawa, the Saguenay, and the Bay of Minas. By all these flowing waters in all the valleys they fertilize, in all the cities they visit in their courses I see a generation of industrious, contented, moral men, men free in name and in fact—men capable of maintaining in peace and in war a constitution worthy of such a country.

We are realizing the truth of that to-day, and before resuming my seat I feel more than I can express by a mere formal expression. I am sure that His Excellency the Governor General, when he returns to his home in England, will carry away a magnificent opinion of Canada. I am reminded that he will be in the position of an ambassador whom an eastern king, mentioned in ancient story, sent to imperial Rome in the days of her imperial splendour to report to his royal master, and on his return he reported that he had visited a city of kings where every man had as much happiness as he could contain. His Excellency will be able to make just as proud to report to our royal sovereign and he will be able to say that he has for six or seven years presided over the destinies of a country, a part of the British empire, where not only every man is a king, but every woman is a queen. And as an addendum to that report, His Excellency may be pleased to say that during the time of his administration he had the benefit and the advantage of constitutional advisers, statesmen who knew the seasons, when to take occasion by the hand and make the bounds of freedom wider yet.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I will detain the House for only two or three minutes. It is not with the view of discussing the various subjects mentioned in the speech from the Throne. This has been done by previous speakers. For years it has been my painful and somewhat ungrateful duty to call your attention to a question about which the present government is particularly at fault. I know very well it would be useless for me at the present moment to raise a debate on the Manitoba school question. The government has on many occasions, inside and outside of parliament, declared their absolute unwillingness to initiate any measure with a view to relieving the minority in Manitoba from the severe grievances which have been declared to be theirs by the proper authority in the land. Circumstances being so, I will say again that my intention is not to raise now a debate upon this subject. But useless as it may seem to be at the present time to raise my voice again with regard to this question, I am bound to put on record my yearly protest against the violation of the constitution, and against the spoliation which has been practiced at our expense in matters of education. The law is with us ; the tribunals of the empire and of Canada are with us ; justice is with us, and most assuredly it will not be to the credit of Canada fifty years hence, and it is not to-day to the credit of Canada, that an important and loyal section of the population of Canada have been so long deprived of their most cherished liberties. However, at this stage of the session, I merely desire to enter my protest once more against the existing circumstances, so that public opinion may not be misled, and in order also that in future years no one might be inclined to argue from our silence that the question is no more an issue in this country. It is fully alive yet, and we are still looking for redress.

COMMITTEE ON DEBATES AND REPORTING.

The Hon. Messrs. Béique, Coffey, Bernier, Ellis, Mitchell, Poirier, Robertson, Tessier, Vidal. —9.

COMMITTEE ON DIVORCE.

The Hon. Messrs. Baker, Gowan, C.M.G., Kerr (Cobourg), Kirchhoffer, Lougheed, McMullen, Templeman, Wilson, Wood.—9.

COMMITTEE ON RESTAURANT.

The Hon. the Speaker, the Hon. Messrs. Bolduc, McKay (Truro), McMillan, McSweeney, Miller, Robertson.—7.

Your Committee beg leave to ask further instructions as to the Committee on Legislation referred to in the Order of the Senate made September 3, 1903, adopting a report of the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours presented on August 27, 1903.

He said: I think that it is important that this report should be adopted to-day, in order that the committees should meet to-morrow morning to appoint the chairmen and organize before the House adjourns. I think there will be no objection to that course being taken now. The attention of the House might be directed to the last clause of the report, which some hon. gentlemen are more familiar with than I am. It will probably provoke some discussion, in order to finally settle this point, not necessarily to-day but it may be taken up after the adjournment. The committee are asking for further instructions as to the appointment of a committee on legislation, as referred to in the report of the Committee on Railways, recommending that such a course should be taken; that is that a committee on legislation should be appointed. It is within the recollection of the House that last year the question of the jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament in respect of legislation which was entirely or partially provincinal in its character, was raised in this House in the Railway Committee of this House and a sub-committee of the Railway Committee was appointed to consider that question. I think that my hon. friend from Montreal was chairman of that committee, and the report recommended the consideration of legislation of the character referred to, that is, legislation of a provincial character by a committee on legislation. That report was presented and adopted in this House. The clerk of the striking committee this morning called our attention to it, and some hon. members in the committee took the ground that the action in this House had not been altogether complete, that there were some informalities, and the instructions were that we were not just in a position to appoint a committee on legislation. The matter has been referred back for instruction. If this report is adopted as a whole, I presume this point will be taken up again and determined at a future sitting of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I should like to understand the object of the recommendation with regard to the committee on legislation. I did not receive much consideration in the striking committee, and I hardly think it is a recommendation that should have been made to the House. I know when the subject was brought up in the striking committee, of naming a committee on legislation, I took occasion to say that I thought such a committee was a very extraordinary one, and that I did not believe a precedent could be found for it in any British legislature or in any legislature whatever with parliamentary institutions such as ours, and I am still of that opinion. I should like to see some precedent for such a committee connected with a legislative body. Why, every committee of parliament nearly is a committee on legislation. There is hardly a committee of parliament whose work may not at some time or other have reference to legislation, and most of them are chiefly for the purpose of initiating and regulating legislation. I can undertand that a large municipal or railway corporation might require a committee on legislation, because they have not legislative powers themselves, and may require a committee to initiate and look after legislation, but a legislative body having a committee on legislation appears to be an absurdity in terms. I was not present last session when this proposal was initiated in the railway committee, and carried through, I think, very irregularly, for when an important change is to be made in the rules of the House, rule sixteen prescribes the method by which it should be carried through. That rule was not complied with in this instance. A sub-committee of the Railway Committee made a report, and that report the Railway Committee recommended to the House and the recommendation was adopted, and on these two reports, as I understand it, it was presumed this committee on legislation,—so called, had been brought into existence. We all know, all who have had experience in the House at all events, that no change can be made in the standing orders of the House unless the senators are specially summoned for that purpose. When I found this extraordinary report on the minutes, I was somewhat surprised. A much more simple means can be adopted than by adding another standing committee to the committees of the House. It is not desirable to have more committees than the business of the House absolutely demands, and the fewer committees we can get along with the better. When I saw this report on the minutes, last session, I asked if it had gone through, and in what stage it was, and I found then that it had been simply reported from the Railway Committee and adopted by the House, but that rule 16 had not been complied with. When I found that that was the case, I intended to take an opportunity to make some remarks when the subject came up, and told one of the clerks that if it was moved further to let me know, because it amounted to nothing unless it was adopted under the 16th standing order of the House, which provides that a special meeting of the Senate must be summoned for any addition or alteration of our rules.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman from Richmond has started a discussion somewhat irregularly because the motion for the adoption of the report was carried.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The rule says :—

16. No motion for making any order of the Senate a standing order can be adopted unless the senators in attendance on the session shall have been previously summoned to consider the same.

That important procedure was not attended to, and of course the action of last session drops to the ground. My hon. friend will perhaps proceed to carry out the object he has in view this session. He is perfectly at liberty to do so, and I have no doubt that object, in which I sympathize with him to a large extent, may be accomplished in some other way, without creating an additional committee.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have not had occasion to refer this session to the Journals of the House, but my recollection is perfectly distinct to the effect that the members of the Senate were especially summoned to make it a permanent rule, and a discussion took place on the subject last session. I am perfectly sure it was made a permanent rule of this honourable House. The senators were specially summoned for the purpose. Now the hon. gentleman from Richmond has taken the ground that this rule is absurd and without precedent. I could cite precedents for it. For instance, in the Quebec legislature there is a committee on legislation, and I think I could cite other instances. It is merely a question of name. This honourable House has the same power to deal with all legislation, a railway Bill, a bank Bill or any other Bill. It is always legislation and the House refers the Bills, to special committees merely for the purpose of having the preliminary work done by a committee and reported before the House as a matter of convenience, in order that the matter may be considered with more thorough information. If the hon. member will read the report of the discussion which took place last session on the subject he will see that the rule of the House was amended for the purpose of providing for a committee on legislation. It was for a special purpose, to deal with Bills which contain a declaration that the work is to be a work for the general advantage of Canada, and the committee is instructed to inquire specially as to whether the declaration made is within the spirit of the constitution.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Of course the records will speak for themselves. I was told by the clerk that the senators were not summoned.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not quite recollect what occurred last year. Certainly this is new to me. I should think that the last paragraph of the report is not necessary in view of the public notice we now give. The public notice should state whether it was intended that those words should be included, so that the attention of the committee is called to it. The rule provides :

When the application is for an Act of incorporation the name of the proposed company shall be stated, and if the works of any company incorporated or to be incorporated are to be declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, such intention shall be specifically mentioned in the notice, and the applicant shall cause a copy of such notice to be sent in a registered letter to the clerk of the municipality which may be specially affected by the construction or operation of such works, &c.

So I think attention having been called to it, that it is quite unnecessary we should further deal with it. I therefore move that that clause be dropped from the report.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. Secretary of State could not dispense with a permanent rule in that way. I am perfectly willing, if he desires, to enter into the discussion, but the reason which influenced the Senate last session in making this a permanent rule of the House still remains.

The SPEAKER—I may say there is nothing before the House, inasmuch as I declared the report adopted.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK IN CANADA.

MOTION.

Notice of motion by the Hon. Mr. Domville being called :

That he will move for the appointment of a Select Committee of five to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada, with power to send for papers, persons, telegrams and records, to employ clerical services, and with leave to report from time to time, the Committee to be composed of the honourable messieurs :—

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I would request the hon. gentleman to let that motion stand.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I would prefer to proceed with it now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would be better to let it stand until after the adjournment.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I prefer to go on now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This deals with one of the large insurance companies doing business in this country, and it is not fair to take up the matter now without giving the company an opportunity to be heard.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—If I am within my rights I propose to go on with my motion now. It deals with what is claimed to be a strong company, and I should be only too willing to oblige the hon. Secretary of State in anything if it was to sink the opposition or hold up the government, but this is a matter that I brought up in the Senate last year. It was too late in the session to do anything then, and it is not right that this motion should stand over now. It is not right that we should trifle with the widows and orphans who are interested in twelve million dollars of insurance. I cannot see why the hon. Secretary of State should advocate the rights of a company who have been so prominently before the public.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not advocating their rights, but the hon. gentleman should know that no progress whatever can be made with his inquiry to-day. I am not blocking it in the slightest degree ; no progress whatever will be made by proceeding to-day.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—As the representative of the widows and orphans in Canada and not a representative of a United States company, I want this to go on without delay. I am anxious to deal with it, because this is a serious matter. That company has very long arms it is said : they reach out everywhere, and I shall be able to show before I am through with this investigation that they have strong influence in Canada which has upheld them in their wrong-doing. If it is the judgment of the House, that this motion should not be made to-day, I shall very much regret it. As regards the names of the members who shall form the committee, that is unimportant to me ; I am willing to accept any gentlemen the House may choose.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but in a matter of this great importance affecting, as the hon. Secretary of State says it does, a very important corporation, my hon. friend will accomplish more by accepting the suggestion of the leader of the House. Because the government, to a very great extent, must be responsible for the status of this company in Canada. They have to make thorough and full investigations and while I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that a matter of this kind should receive the fullest possible consideration, I think it would be better if he would accept the suggestion of the hon. Secretary of State, and let it stand until we meet after the adjournment, for the reason that he cannot obtain any advantage by moving this resolution till we meet again.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I am willing to accede to the request, but I want to say to this honourable House that there are more persons outside of it than there are in it. There are many looking to my action. I am not fighting for a company in the United States ; I am fighting for the rights of the people, and I have in my hand a copy of the letter which I wrote to the department here four months ago, and which they did not answer. I wrote a second time and a third time and no reply was sent to me in accordance with my request for information as to the state of affairs connected with this company. I want to be in a position so that I can fairly write to them, and ask them to postpone action, because I can then define their position and have their rights defined. Out of deference to the wishes of the hon. Secretary of State and the leader of the opposition, I shall be pleased to allow the motion to stand for the present.

The motion was allowed to stand.

SALARY OF THE USHER OF THE BLACK ROD.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I wish to move, seconded by Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell, that in view of the extended adjournment, that the clerk of the Senate be authorized to pay Capt. E. B. Chambers, Usher of the Black Rod, a salary of $1,800 per annum. The salary is fixed by the appointment, but the pay of course comes out of the Senate funds and unless it is passed the salary could not be paid until after the adjournment.

The motion was agreed to.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not often that I call the attention of this House to any remarks that may be made by public speakers in reference to myself, and, I only do it now for fear that silence might lead others to the conclusion that the statements made by Capt. Read, a member of the Prince Edward Island legislature, in a speech made by him at a meeting during the St. Peter's election which has just closed, were true. It appears that in that province some action has been taken against two of the members of the local legislature for a violation of the Independence of Parliament Act. That is a matter of which I know nothing. They can settle it among themselves. But it is quite evident that Capt. Read has a very vivid imagination, and might possibly have been reading Baron Munchausen when he made the statement which I am about to read. He referred to the action of the House of Commons in 1875 and 1876, when he said that more than forty members of the Dominion House of Commons had been charged with a violation of the Independence of Parliament Act, including Sir Mackenzie Bowell and the great Sir John A. Macdonald. I was in parliament during that time and during the periods that I have had the honour of holding a seat in the House I have never had a charge of that kind made against me. I think it is just as well for the information of the people of Prince Edward Island, provided always they read what is stated in this House, to give that statement a flat denial and an uncompromising and unmitigated contradiction, both as far as it refers to myself and also to the late Sir John A. Macdonald. I need scarcely say to the House, because they are all acquainted with what was done in 1875 and 1876, that so far as the late Sir John Macdonald and myself are concerned there is no truth in the statement.

CHRISTMAN DIVORCE BILL.

PETITION PRESENTED.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto) presented the application of Annie Christman for a Bill of divorce. He said : This application was presented to the Senate on the first or second day after the session opened. On reference to all the newspapers it was found that at that time the notice was not complete. The notice is now complete, and it seems to me it is necessary to present the due proofs of the notice that was given. The fees were paid, and the receipt and certificate of the Clerk of the House have been read.

The application was laid on the table.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto) presented a petition for the relief of Annie Christman.

APPOINTMENT OF J. B. JACKSON.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL inquired :

Whether a man by the name of J. B. Jackson, of Ingersoll, Ontario, has been appointed to any position in England or elsewhere, by the government of Canada, or any member of said government ?

If so, what are the duties assigned to him, and what salary or remuneration is he to receive for the performance of such services ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—J. B. Jackson, of Ingersoll, Ont., was appointed by Order in Council of date October 31st, 1903 (appointment to date from 1st November, 1903) commercial agent to Leeds and Hull, England.

His duties are to report monthly, or more frequently, if necessary, to the Department of Trade and Commerce upon all trade matters which may be of interest to Canadian exporters, and to use his best endeavour to further Canada's market in the district to which he is assigned. These reports are published weekly and are sent to any business men in Canada desiring them.

Mr. Jackson's salary is $3,000 per annum, and office and contingent expenses.

Bill (D) An Act for the relief of Annie Christman.—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Toronto.)

KING'S SHILLING LEGAL TENDER BILL.

FIRST READING.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE introduced Bill (E) An Act to make the King's Shilling Legal Tender. He said :

I do not think it is necessary to say very much about this Bill. I will briefly state my case. In the province of New Brunswick —and I suppose it is the same in the other provinces—five or six thousand immigrants are landing every week, and the first thing they want when they get on shore, is to buy something. They have English shillings in their pockets and our people will not accept them except at a discount of 20 per cent. What kind of impressions will they form of this country ? They are told that this is a great British colony with imperial ideas and that we are going to make a great nation ; but the first thing that happens when they land here is that they are charged 20 per cent discount on their silver coin. They see King Edward's head staring them in the face and yet our people will not take his money. We are living under the flag of imperialism and boasting of what we are going to do to fight for the empire and yet we will not take British money. We should compel our people when they sell a British immigrant a glass of whisky, or perhaps, if it is a woman, a glass of gin, to accept their shilling at par. I desire that these immigrants shall feel that they are at home in Canada, as we are part of the British empire, and I want King Edward's money to pass at its face value.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I wonder if this motion is in order ? Have we the right to initiate such legislation here ? Is this not a money Bill which should be initiated in the other House ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is a money Bill.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE moved that the Bill be read the second time 28th April next.

The motion was agreed to.

MUTUAL RESERVE LIFE ASSOCIATION.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE rose to—Move for the appointment of a select committee of five to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada, with power to send for papers, persons, telegrams and records, to employ clerical services, and with leave to report evidence from time to time.

He said: The motion is one which I am satisfied, will commend itself to every member of this House. Hon. gentlemen have passed through the early stages of being interested by outsiders and being interested in other ways, but I am satisfied from my own small experience in the Senate that there is not one of them who is not desirous of doing justice to the public at large. Last year, I moved to bring up this question, but it was very late in the session and I was asked to postpone the matter until this session, and I consented. I have no desire to press it unduly. I wanted to bury Caesar, not to praise him, and I was willing that the matter should stand over until this year. In the meanwhile I secured all the information I could get from the Finance Department. I dare say there are in this House some hon. gentlemen conversant with insurance who know better, perhaps, than I do, the merits of the case which I am about to present. I charge that the returns of this company have not been in accordance with the facts. That is a grave charge ; I know the responsibility I take in making it. It is a strong company having plenty of means to attack those who incur its displeasure. I knew that I had placed myself in a position to be attacked by the whole press of Canada, but I had such unbounded confidence in the members of this House that I felt I could depend upon them to investigate the subject and, if I could make out my case, that they would do justice, not to myself merely, but to the widows and orphans of this country, whose interests are involved. We have nothing to do with whether this company is a Canadian or a foreign company ; it is doing business in Canada and the law of the Dominion affords it every protection and should also protect those who are in the hands of the company and subject to whatever policy they may adopt. I have a good many papers to read ; I do not want to trespass on the patience of the House unduly. I want to prove first of all that in England the Court of Appeal has decided that the company must make restitution—must pay back to the insured principal and interest at 4 per cent, and at the same time pay all charges. It may be argued that they have appealed to the House of Lords. We shall see what the decision is. There is a case to come before the Supreme Court on the twenty-seventh of this month. If the court of Appeal can give a similar decision as the judgment which I have here in my hands, then there certainly must be some grounds for my demand that parliament shall protect the policy-holders in this company who are interested to the extent of $12,000,000. After making these few remarks, I propose to ask the House to let me adjourn the debate until I procure necessary information for which I am moving to-day to prove my case. My charges are, first of all, that the report which this company has rendered to the government is not correct. I find from the return of the superintendent of insurance for last year, which I have in my hand, that they are doing business under license and have as deposit :

The Mutual Reserve Life (formerly the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association), F. R. Harvey, chief agent, Toronto, amount of deposit with receiver general, par value, $265,067, accepted value, $242,922. Description of insurance business for which licensed, life, on the assessment plan, as to business prior to Aug. 11, 1899.

Then there is a note at the end of this government return to the following effect :

Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company : In the case of this company the notice prescribed by section 42 A of the Insurance Act as amended having been filed in this office, the date named therein being Aug. 11, 1899, the insurance business carried on by the said company is subject to and regulated by the provisions of said section, provided the company shall not assure any annuity or endowment.

I shall prove to the House that this company is doing business in Canada and those are the terms on which they are doing it. In my complaint I say that their statement is not right. An eminent counsel in New York, General Tracy, ex-Secretary of State for the Navy, says, and I have it here over his own signature, that the whole course of the company is fraudulent ; that they have committed perjury and fraud and are indictable criminally. That is a pretty good authority. I hold in my hand his remonstrance. He says, 'they are doing wrong. and should be prosecuted criminally.' He says, 'Mr. Burnham, the president, is guilty of the crime of larceny, and both Mr. Morse and Mr. Moss and Mr. Burnham are guilty of conspiracy to defraud the company.' This is a celebrated case, and we should have the facts before us so that we can make up our minds without prejudice. I have the auditor's report where he resigned saying, 'I cannot stay with you.' The treasurer says, 'You are taking the company's money and putting it into the hands of Mr. Moss who is to make no returns except in his own time and way, and he can do what he likes.' He is taking the money of poor widows and orphans. This is a cheap company and the policy-holders are mostly people who could not afford to go into other more expensive companies, and when the insured die what happens ? This company will scale them. I know of a case, that of Mr. Pigeon, who was insured for $2,000. When he died they offered his widow $400. Finally they offered $1,600 to close it up, and I advised her to take it quickly, or she would get nothing, because Mr. Cameron, one of their leading men, so advised the public if they wanted to get anything. That is sufficient to show that the management in New York are taking our money for the purposes of a new company. The law says that the money obtained by assessments shall be used only for paying claims; yet they run a new company in New York and appropriate our money for the purposes of that company and what satisfaction can our people get? I can understand that there are legal men who will argue 'You can go to the law courts.' But what can we do in our courts with a company whose head office is in the United States? They may say, 'Well you can drive them out of Canada.' They want nothing better.

It is a freeze out game right along. I shall produce all the compromised claims here. I have volumes of them—enough to keep the committee engaged for months. They will show that from start to finish it has been a case of—I won't use the word fraud, because it is not parliamentary, but I will say they have acted unwisely, and they injured every one connected with them in the past. Where are they to-day? They say they are a new company doing a new line of business. Who owns those assets, supposing their returns are complete, supposing they are correct, supposing there is nothing wrong with them? To whom does that money belong? Does it belong to the new men coming in? Does it belong to Mr. Moss who has $150,000 out of it? Does it belong to Mr. Burnham, who has the contract which he succeeded to when Mr. Harper died, by which he was to have a large amount of money out of it? What was that company instituted for? Was it instituted to make salaries out of it for these men? I am going to ask the government for this information. They are paying out millions of dollars to manage a company who have paid $2,200,000 in losses last year. Is that right? Canada must take its share of the responsibility. The Finance Department has licensed them to do business it is true. This company has long arms. I think last year they spent $70,000 for State inspections and other purposes. What for? In various states of the union the company are not allowed to do business. They are confined to a very few states. They are not allowed to conduct operations in the state of California. There is a report from the Insurance Department at San Francisco, dated 8th April, signed E. Marion Wolfe, which says:

> I do not allow them to do business. I have declined to issue license, they are sueing to compel me to grant them a certificate.

And what does the commissioner of Kentucky say? He says:

> It is no longer wise to allow the company to do business here. Their dealings were such as to impress the insurance commissioner that it was no longer wise to permit them to do business here.

I have reports also from the states where the company are doing business, and also the states where they are not doing business. There are in Canada a large number of people from whom they are drawing a large amount of money in the shape of premiums. They assess the policy-holders as they see fit. One policy, I think, had five extra assessments in a year, and one of these assessments was 50 per cent, and they take that money from Canada down to New York and vote it to themselves, and we suckers in Canada—yes, I say 'suckers' because that is the word—have no redress except to go to the law courts and what redress have we there? I do not propose to go into details. I want to place before the House sufficient, merely to show that I am not moving to persecute this company, but am acting solely in the interests of the people. I have letters from a number of people, and many members in this House have received letters showing that the time has arrived when parliament, higher than any court there is in Canada, should step in and say what shall be done to remedy this grievance. I think the facts I have advanced here will justify the committee being formed. In order to substantiate what I have said I shall bring before the committee gentlemen from New York to prove my case, and I shall bring men who are in the employ of the company who will place the facts before the committee. The Hon. Mr. Vrooman has stated 'Supposing the inspector came round and ascertained the state of affairs, what would he say? The figures will not hold water'. I have a letter showing that one of the officials was compelled at the point of a pistol to sign the report. He was their agent and had to do it. I will ask this honourable body to give me a small committee to go into the details. A large committee would not be of any use, because what is everybody's business is nobody's business, but I think if we can get some legal talent in the committee we can put a recommendation in proper shape so that this honourable body can take action on it. I have to obtain some papers from the government which cannot be had to-day, and if it is in order I will move the adjournment of this debate.

Company—Mutual Reserve Life Association, formerly known as the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association.

Also, for the last return made by this company to the Insurance Department at Ottawa in the year 1904.

The motion was agreed to.

MUTUAL RESERVE LIFE ASSOCIATION.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General ; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate a copy of all correspondence between the Department of Insurance at Ottawa and any of the policy-holders of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, formerly the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association.

Also, between this company and the Insurance Department at Ottawa, and any other correspondence relative to the affairs of this company.

For the years 1901, 1902, 1903, 1904.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no objection to this motion going but there is very voluminous correspondence and my learned friend asks for four years of it. I doubt if we will be able to get this return within some months, because I sent down to the Finance Department and inquired from Mr. Fitzgerald about both these returns and he says that it will take considerable time to prepare them. The details asked are very voluminous indeed and there must be a very great deal of material in the second one that can be of no earthly use. If the hon. gentleman could pick out what he wants, it would facilitate matters, because there must be a large amount of correspondence that really would have no value or bearing on the object he has in view ; therefore if he wants to obtain the return within a reasonable time I think that he had better see Mr. Fitzgerald and let him know what is wanted so as to hasten the work.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I accept the suggestion of the hon. Secretary of State. No doubt there is a lot I do not need and I will be only too glad to go down and pick out what I want.

The motion was agreed to.

PREFERENTIAL TRADE WITHIN THE EMPIRE.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I wish to call the attention of the House and the members of the government to a newspaper report of the speech delivered in London on the eighth of the present month by Mr. Preston, immigration commissioner for Canada in Great Britain. In reference to the question of preferential tariff within the empire I find that in the Ottawa 'Free Press' of that date, Mr. Preston is reported to have spoken as follows :

Mr. W. T. R. Preston, Canadian Immigration Commissioner, who was also present at the banquet, said he was not satisfied that preferential tariffs to the colonies and empire would result in Great Britain maintaining her commercial supremacy.

John Bull, continued Mr. Preston, was not sentimental and would not pay additional price for colonial products under the inspiration of patriotism of British products.

I call attention to these observations by an official of the government of Canada for the purpose of eliciting from my hon. friend the Secretary of State this information, whether Mr. Preston is speaking with the authority of the government of Canada in thus assailing the foundation of the campaign that Mr. Chamberlain is prosecuting in England on the question of preferential treatment of the colonies. Mr. Preston advises the British taxpayers against granting it because, he tells them, very wisely as he thinks, that it is doubtful whether England's commercial supremacy can be maintained if this preferential treatment is accorded to the colonies. I must say, awaiting any observation my hon. friend may make on the conduct of this government official in London, that, to my mind, it seems very strange indeed that Mr. Preston should take up the side of English free traders or the opponents of preference in the way in which he has done. I think it is very improper for him to do so, and supporting my opinion as to the impropriety of his conduct I will just read a few observations which I find in the same paper, the Ottawa 'Free Press' of to-day dealing with some remarks that Mr. Ames, of Montreal, has made on different public occasions in England when discussing this very same question. As is well known, Mr. Ames is taking the other side of the question and is trying to persuade the British public that it is in their interest to give the preference to the colonies. He says :

It is absolutely impossible for Canada to grant Great Britain any further preference in return to a free market for her grain in the United Kingdom while a tariff is raised against other nations. Mr. Ames, of course, holds no mandate to talk in this fashion, and it may be set down to some constitutional or mental defect that he is unable to see how unbecoming it is of him to indulge in rhetorical flights of such a character while he is in a measure vouched for by officials of the Canadian Immigration Department in London.

That is the opinion the 'Free Press' has of the conduct of Mr. Ames in taking what, I think I am safe in saying is the universal view held by the people of Canada with regard to this question ; but I find the government commissioner—and I suppose that he is one of those vouching for Mr. Ames' character and position—that is Mr. Preston, and I suppose Mr. Jackson also—these very high functionaries are responsible for Mr. Ames' bona fides, and that they are the persons herein referred to ; but that one of them has taken the other view and is urging in England a ground which I think will be held to be altogether at variance with the general opinion of the people of Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I know nothing of the correctness of the observations made by Mr. Preston at some banquet, and I do not think anybody will be misled into assuming that the government of this country was in any degree responsible for the utterances reported in the press—not in the slightest degree. It is a subject that, no doubt, individuals have their opinions upon, and my hon. friend now refers to Mr. Ames as a champion going in opposition to Mr. Preston. Mr. Ames' championship amounts to this, according to the last report I saw, that Mr. Chamberlain's policy was not going to interfere with the fiscal arrangements in Canada ; in other words that they were going to look after the manufactures of Canada notwithstanding, so that my hon. friend will see how utterly absurd and inconsistent it is with one breath to favour British preference and in another breath to say that we shall not lower our tariff so far as Canadian manufactures are concerned.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But I thought we had given a preference.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have. I am not going to be led into a discussion of this subject. It is a wide one. My hon. friend knows the kick there is from the manufacturing industries against a British preference. Mr. Ames represents that preference.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think my hon. friend puts too wide a construction on the utterances of Mr. Ames.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have read his statement.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no doubt the hon. gentleman has read it or he would not have referred to it, but I think the interpretation put upon his language is a good deal broader than that gentleman intended to convey ; that is if I read his remarks correctly. But apart from that altogether, Mr. Ames is there as a private individual, and is speaking on behalf of himself and what he believes to be the opinion of many of the people in Canada. The other gentleman is a government official and his utterances carry with them a certain weight and a certain responsibility that a private individual, no matter whether he advocates the cause of the manufacturers or the extreme free traders, cannot possibly have. That is the object I think my hon. friend had in view, namely, to ascertain whether Mr. Preston was speaking on behalf of the government or whether he had any authority to make such a statement. That, I take it, would be the object of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, and not the other as suggested by my hon. friend. I do not propose to be led into a discussion of this question at the present moment, but it must not be forgotten that the government has already given a preference, and a very large preference. A 33⅓ per cent difference in the duties on an article coming from the mother country having the benefit of the preferential tariff, is no small matter when compared with the full tariff rate upon the same article coming from a foreign country, and Mr. Ames' language may very properly be construed into meaning that he thought we had gone quite far enough until we got something in return. My own view upon that question in a very few words is that if we ever expect to obtain preferential trade between the mother country and the colonies we must be prepared to make certain concessions, perhaps in some respects further than we have made.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I might elaborate that idea but I do not propose to do so now. Every one knows that ever since I have been in public life I have been a very strong advocate of what is termed a protective policy. Whether right or wrong, the older I get the more I am convinced of the correctness of that policy in a country like this ; but, for the sake of knitting together and creating a stronger bond between the home government and ourselves I would be quite prepared to go a certain distance further, provided it did not destroy the industries of Canada. That is a problem, however, that might be found somewhat difficult to solve. It is a very serious question, and the more it is advocated and considered, the more it will be found to be necessary in order to accomplish the object to which I have referred and which the great mass of the people of this country desire. I should not have risen on this occasion, as the debate is a little out of order, had not my hon. friend placed a rather forced construction on the language uttered by Mr. Ames.

A PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I notice that the Orders of the Day indicate no work before us now and hardly any work for tomorrow, Friday, and nothing for several days. The suggestion was made when we last adjourned that if no material progress had been made by the House of Commons, we should not allow our people from the far east or far west to congregate here to attend a sitting at which we would adjourn for another period. I now give notice that when this House adjourns to-morrow it stand adjourned till Tuesday evening, the 3rd May, at 8 p.m.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not usual to discuss a notice of motion, but if I read correctly the reports of the proceedings in the House of Commons, a large number of Bills have passed there, and I should have thought in all probability they would be in the hands of the Speaker of this House now. I hold in my hands no less than twenty-four Bills which have passed the third reading in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Those Bills only represent three or four days work, and the session will last till the middle of June.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—There are eight Bills expected up to-day. They may not come this evening, but they will be here to-morrow, I do not see why the hon. gentleman undertakes to control the business of the House. It should be left to the Secretary of State and not to the hon. gentleman who is continually moving adjournments. It is open to him, if he likes, to go where he pleases at any time. But why should he try to control the whole Senate ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman from Victoria may vote as he did on the last occasion, and he may put a notice on the paper and go away and leave the notice standing there till the close of the session.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)— I will explain that at some future time.

Hon. Mr. CHURCH—I am opposed to the adjournment. It is not proper to discuss it, but it is due to the House that the hon. Secretary of State should be in a position to-morrow to let us know what work will be brought before us. If the necessary work has been done in the Commons and is ready to be put through the Senate, why should we have an adjournment, particularly as we have just met after a very long adjournment ? Let us do the work before us and do it well, and if nothing more is sent us from the Commons we can discuss the question of a short adjournment.

The Senate adjourned.

AN ADJOURNMENT.

MOTION.

The order of the day being called :

That when the Senate adjourns to-day, the 15th instant, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, the 3rd day of May next, at eight o'clock in the evening.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I wish to amend this motion and I beg to move that for the remainder of the session when the Senate adjourns on Friday it do stand adjourned till the Monday evening following at 8 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I am not opposed to night sittings when there is any justification for them or when we have anything to do, but I am opposed to night sessions as the result of our having nothing to do. I do not think we should be compelled to come here at night when there is no business to be done. If the hon. gentleman would make the adjournment till 3 o'clock on Tuesday I would have no objection.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—This is not an amendment ; it is a new motion and cannot be put.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There is only the objection that we from a distance always offer to adjourning over Monday. I think that we should devote ourselves to the work of the House and put it through thoroughly and when we have completed our work that we should take a reasonably long adjournment so that we will all be benefited. We may find ourselves confronted with a lot of work on some Monday when we meet and will not be able to do it, and that will prevent a long adjournment. I am sorry the hon. gentleman from Richmond objects to meeting on Monday next at 8 o'clock. I would not see that serious objection to meeting on Monday at 8 o'clock because we could advance Bills a stage and push the work along just about as well as if we had met at 3 o'clock. I should have no objection to have this motion apply to the first Monday or to any particular Monday when we have no work to do. But I object to this general motion.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The expression until otherwise ordered should satisfy the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The question is are we here for our own convenience or to do the public work. If we are here for the convenience of senators and the public business is subordinate to that, then we can adjourn if we like, but it is illegal in my opinion and highly improper to adjourn over one whole day. We are letting in the thin end of the wedge by adjourning till Monday night. We would later on perhaps make it Tuesday night, then Wednesday night and finally we would be adjourning for the whole week. I do not know about its legality but it will have a monstrous effect outside. It will be said the senators are studying their own convenience and that the public business is being subordinated to our own comfort.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I suggest that the motion be made to apply only to Monday next, as there is nothing for Monday.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I have no objection to make it apply to Monday.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The motion on the order paper is that when the Senate adjourns to-day it do stand adjourned till the third day of May. The motion made by the hon. gentleman is not an amendment; it is entirely a new motion, and therefore cannot be put but for the purposes of this discussion. I do not care whether it is carried or not, but, as I suggested yesterday, all these matters should be taken in hand by the Secretary of State who leads this House. I cannot see why the hon. gentleman from DeLorimier continually makes these motions. What right has he to presume on the good nature of some of the hon. gentlemen in this House to carry these adjournments? Yesterday the hon. gentleman, when giving the notice of motion, threw across the floor of the House the statement that I had last session placed a motion on the order paper and had gone away without moving it. I did so, I admit. The remarks made by my hon. friend on the Transcontinental Railway Bill, I will not refer to now because it would be out of order, but when that measure comes before us I shall call attention to the language used by that hon. gentleman towards myself.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—At present I merely ask the hon. gentleman what is the analogy between my going away without moving my resolution and the hon. gentleman moving the adjournments continually. I did not move an adjournment. I would not be mean enough to move an adjournment to put a few dollars in my own pocket. I have never on the floor of this House moved an adjournment yet and never will move an adjournment to put a few dollars in my pocket. The old members of this House never move adjournments. They have too much respect for themselves; too much respect for this branch of parliament; too much respect for the members of this House to impose on their good nature by doing anything of that kind to benefit their own pocket. Did the hon. gentleman follow my example at any time? Did he move adjournments without some personal cause? He knows the cause. Every member of this House knows why he moved an adjournment—from sordid motives nothing else—because it is open to him to absent himself whenever he likes without moving for an adjournment of the House. The hon. gentleman is acting from sordid motives nothing else.

Hon. GENTLEMEN—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I am perfectly in order. That is the object, because any member of this House can go to his business whenever he likes without requiring an adjournment of the Senate. If the hon. gentleman could give valid reasons for his motion, I am sure we would all agree with him. If he could say he had some personal matters to attend to, and that he could not afford to lose a day we would all help him as well as we could. If he were to say that little Napoleon was going to school and needed new boots or a coat, or that Maria required the services of a better governess, we would sympathize with him, but it is an imposition on the House to ask for an adjournment without some valid reason and as long as I am a member of the Senate I shall oppose such motions. The leader of the House is the proper member to say when an adjournment should take place. As the hon. gentleman does not propose to move the motion of which he gave notice, I shall not detain the House. I came prepared with ten volumes of the Debates and was ready to give the hon. gentlemen some information on what has been said about adjournments in the Senate at different times, but as the notice on the paper is not to be put, I shall not inflict it on the House now. If there is nothing else to be done here at present but to hear prayers read, it may be just what the hon. gentleman from DeLorimier needs. They would elevate his views and give him a better idea as to his duties to the public. He could then tell the Senate that he did not move for an adjournment from sordid motives but solely in the public interest. The amendment proposed is a substantive motion and I shall vote against it.

Hon. Mr. CHURCH—Like my hon. friend from Victoria I am opposed to adjournments. If we are called upon to vote on the motion as it appears on the notice paper I shall vote against it. I agree with the hon. member from Victoria that the leader of the Senate should be in a position to submit to the House, a few days in advance, what we may expect to have brought before us for our consideration, but I can say this much in defence of the Secretary of State. He is often charged with remissness, as if he was not carrying on the public business of this country effectually. Last year when one of these adjournments was moved, the Secretary of State opposed it and had the support of the leader of the opposition, but in defiance of their expressed wishes the adjournment was carried by a majority of two.

In that case they were over-ruled. We have heard a great deal about reforming the Senate. When I was appointed to this House I supposed my duty was to come here at the opening of parliament and remain until prorogation. What has been my experience ? I come here at the opening, and after the debate on the address and the appointment of the committees there is nothing before the House. No Bills of importance are introduced here. Then there is an adjournment for three or four weeks. I do not impute motives to anybody, but actions speak louder than words. They show what the man means. Many members of this body live a long distance from Ottawa and a short adjournment is a mockery to them. They have scarcely time to get home before they have to prepare to return to the capital. The Senate was instituted in 1867. The government of that day was led by a great and honoured gentleman, Sir John Macdonald, a man who with all his faults did a good deal for his country, At that time the Senate was simply a registering body, to register the decrees of the House of Commons. When the Reform party came in, a large majority of the upper chamber was against them, and it was useless to attempt any reform then, but now the government have a working majority of their friends in the Senate and I, as a Liberal, and a supporter of this government say it is their duty to provide work for the Upper House early in the session. It is their duty to propound some reform in this regard. Many of the members of this chamber are still in the prime of life and quite competent to deal with any measures of importance which may be brought before them. Since I have had the honour of a seat in the Senate, I have seen many such measures dealt with in this chamber in a non-partisan way. I see no reason why we should not continue to work along in this way. I would ask the Secretary of State to consult with his colleagues and see if the public business cannot be divided more equally between the two chambers. Last year the Railway Bill containing three hundred and sixteen clauses came up here at the very last stage of the session. We laboured with that Bill conscientiously and made a good many amendments to it—all I believe in the interest of the public. We had conferences with the other body and the measure was finally passed. Did that Bill receive the full discussion in this House that its importance merited ? I think not ; there was not time for it. Other important measures came up near the end of the session. Now, while the main responsibility rests with the members of the House of Commons who will have to defend their course here on the public platform, a certain measure of responsibility rests upon us. In reference to the question of adjournment pure and simple, when I go to Halifax, where I reside at present, I am asked : 'What good are you senators up there ?' What are you appointed for.' What can I say ? I reply that unless another system is devised, which will give us a fair amount of work early in the session, we have to adjourn. This subject comes up session after session, and it does not enhance the dignity of the Senate or increase its prestige in the country. Many people begin to believe that there is really no need for a second chamber. I have been long enough in politics in Nova Scotia and in the Dominion to know that there is a necessity for a second chamber if it is given an opportunity to do its share of work.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I understand the point of order is well taken, and that I cannot present the motion as I have read it to the House. But in order to conform to the general wish expressed by my hon. colleagues I shall begin de novo and move the motion of which I have given notice, allowing a colleague to move an amendment changing the date of adjournment to Monday or Tuesday next as the House may desire. I therefore move my motion. I desire to say, not in answer to the hon. gentleman from Victoria, but to my hon. colleagues that they surely do not expect me to answer the childish talk that has fallen from the lips of the hon. gentleman from British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE moved in amendment :

That when this House adjourns to-day it do stand adjourned until Monday next at 8 o'clock p.m.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I rise to a question of order. I would oppose any motion for a night's sitting when there is no necessity for it, and when there is no urgency of public business. It is simply to accommodate a few gentlemen who wish to go to their homes and leave the majority of senators here to do nothing and then oblige them to come here at night when there is nothing to be done. I say that there is not sufficient notice of this motion. There should be one intermediate day's notice.

The SPEAKER—I speak with a little hesitation ; but the rule with respect to notice is that when a resolution proposes to initiate a subject for a discussion, an intermediate day's notice is required ; but it has never been the practice to require an intermediate day's notice with respect to the ordinary business of the House, and the question whether the House shall adjourn till Monday at 3 o'clock or till a later day is not, to my mind, of such a character as to require an intermediate day's notice. So that with respect to the first motion, I do not think the point of order is well taken. Then the first motion being in order, the amendment is also in order.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I take exception to the Speaker's ruling. I do not say that I should take the sense of the House upon it, but the first motion is one which I have always understood would require a clear day's notice. We have not a clear day's notice, because notice was only given yesterday, and it should have been given the day before in order to bring it within the rules of the House to-day. The matter is not of sufficient importance for me to appeal to the House against the decision of the chair. On the contrary, I would rather submit to an injustice than ask the ruling of the House against the chair. However, I am strongly of the opinion that I am right, and if the first motion is not in order, the amendment cannot be in order.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I wish to call the attention of the hon. Speaker to the fact that the hon. gentleman from DeLorimier has dropped his first motion.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)— I think this is trifling with the House. I do not see how the motion can be fairly put.

The amendment was declared carried.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION.

MOTION POSTPONED.

The order of the day being called :

That he will move for the appointment of a select committee of five to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada, with power to send for papers, persons, telegrams and records, to employ clerical services, and with leave to report from time to time, the committee to be composed of the honourable messieurs. —(Hon. Mr. Domville.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The department are preparing a Bill to submit to parliament making some changes in the insurance law. I suggest that my hon. friend should wait till he knows the provisions of this measure.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I have made up my mind to show up this company in the interests of the public. The government should have brought in that Bill long ago ; I wrote to them two years ago about it. I am not here to find fault with the government nor with the department, but I have been pressing this matter for two years. A gentleman from New York has been around Ottawa buttonholing the whole place. One would think we were here to be told what to do and not to act for ourselves ; but as the hon. Secretary of State desires me to postpone the motion till Tuesday, I shall do so.

The order of the day was allowed to stand till Tuesday.

NOTICES OF MOTION.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The rule governing notice of motion is very clear as I read it. It states that one intermediate day's notice in writing must be given of all motions deemed special, and any motion is deemed special which initiates a subject of discussion. Has the motion on which His Honour the Speaker ruled not initiated discussion ? In fact have we not been debating it for half an hour. I never knew of a contrary ruling in my parliamentary experience. I appeal to the leader of the government of this House, and to the leader in the other House, where they are frequently called upon and are more particular with regard to usages than we are. There the leader of the government never makes a motion for an adjournment without giving a day's notice. You can search in vain for a case where the Prime Minister did not give the intermediate day's notice in moving for an adjournment. There are gentlemen in this House who have been members of the House of Commons and they will know whether I am right or not. In this House Sir A. Campbell always gave an intermediate day's notice and my hon. friend the Secretary of State always gave an intermediate day's notice, and it has always been with the permission of the House that a shorter notice has been allowed. I cannot submit to the ruling of the chair, although I should like to do so. I shall move against the ruling of the chair. I am anxious on all occasions to support the chair because if there is one thing more than another which distinguishes British legislative bodies from those of other countries, it is the respect that is paid to the rulings and decisions of the chair. Now that respect is not for the individual who may happen to occupy the chair, but it is for the principle of authority which he represents in the chair, which is so necessary to the maintenance and preservation of proper decorum in a deliberative assembly. That is why so much respect is paid to the rulings of the Speaker, and it is one of the reasons why I would hesitate a long while before I would move against the ruling of the chair even when I thought it was wrong ; but here I think it is clear that the Speaker, if he follows precedents, will tell the House that his ruling is not according to parliamentary usage.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—We have had a ruling from the chair on that question and in my estimation it was a proper ruling. The rules of the House mention the word ' motion ' but not amendments to motions. If the construction placed by my hon. friend from Richmond was the right one, then it would be virtually impossible to make any amendments to these principal motions which require a day's notice. It is distinctly clear that an amendment can be moved to any motion that is regularly before the House. This main motion is regularly made after due notice and any amendment can be put to it, otherwise it would be impossible to proceed, because no amendment could be put. At all events the rules of our House speak of main motions but not at all of amendments. Therefore I take it that the ruling of the hon. Speaker is the correct one, and the only ruling that is compatible with proceedings in this House or any other House.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I should like to say one word with regard to what has been discussed for the last half hour, and that is simply this; that all this unnecessary discussion which has taken place would be obviated if the leader of the House would move the adjournments from time to time.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We have settled this question long ago. There is nothing before the House.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I am perfectly in order. I am not going to be dictated to by my hon. friend who always has a desire when I rise to make a point of order. I think it is much better for the leader of the House to move adjournments.

PRIVATE BILLS IN THE SENATE.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Very frequently in this House hon. members move the second reading of Bills, in the absence of other hon. members who have charge of them. It would be much more convenient that the name of the senator who has charge of a Bill should afterwards appear on the order paper. In order that there may be no confusion, if it is the wish of the House, the officers of the Senate might take it for granted that that is a rule of the House, and act accordingly.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I hope that that rule will be observed in future. I know a number of hon. gentlemen have felt aggrieved when, on account of their being absent from the chamber for a moment, other names have been substituted for theirs on the order paper.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I moved the second reading of Bills to-day, in the absence of the hon. gentleman from Calgary, but I have no desire at all that my name should appear on the order paper; and for that reason I remarked that I was making the motion in the absence of the hon. gentleman from Calgary. I think if the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman from Killarney can be carried out consistently with the rules of the House, it should be done.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I should ask that the same course should be taken in reference to the motions for second reading which I made to-day in absence of the hon. gentleman from Bedford (Hon. Mr. Baker).

HOUSING OF IMMIGRANTS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.) inquired:

What provision is made for immigrants arriving in Canada from Europe during the inclement seasons of winter and early spring—

1. As to housing until they acquire houses of their own?
2. As to food supply—for how long a time is food supplied?
3. Is provision made for placing them on suitable lands?
4. Is there an inspection of immigrants in Europe before embarking, as to age, health, and the possession of means to build houses, purchase farm implements, cattle and horses?
5. Generally, what steps are taken to prevent dangerous exposure and a scarcity of food, and to assist those without means to commence farming?

He said: In asking these questions I do not wish to invade the rights of other hon. gentlemen coming from the Northwest, but I am induced to ask these questions for reasons well known to the government and the House, as there are thousands of immigrants coming to our shores, many of them old men, women and children, and unless they have means of shelter found for them they will be in a very bad position indeed.

Along the Canadian Pacific Railway, all the way from Medicine Hat to Winnipeg, you see hundreds of men and women at the stations not knowing what to do or where to go, many of them foreigners who cannot speak our language. No doubt many of these people have some money, but others, I suppose, have very little if any at all, and at this time of the year, owing to the inclemency of the winter and the ground being covered with snow, it would be quite impossible for them to go on their land. Even after they get on their land it will be almost eighteen months before they can derive any benefit or sustenance from the soil. They have to provide good shelter. They have to get implements and they have to get cattle to plough their land ; and it has to be done before the early spring. We do not know of course what instructions, or what advice the agents in Europe give to the immigrants leaving home, but if they have advised them to leave at any time, they should be told by the government not to do so because it is downright cruelty to get immigrants out here who have to endure months and months of cold weather with scanty food and poor shelter. They should be advised to leave for Canada not earlier than the 15th of April. I think hon. gentlemen from the Northwest will admit that that would be early enough to place immigrants on the soil. Steamship companies will take immigrants whenever they want to come. It is a business matter with them, and they will take them but there should be some means of restricting steamship companies from bringing immigrants to this country in inclement weather. Why not adopt the same system that has been adopted with regard to Chinese immigration—limit the number of people to the tonnage of the vessel. Something of the kind might have a salutary effect and it would reduce the number of immigrants coming out so early. I hope the government will be able to tell me that care is taken of these people on their arrival.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In answer to the hon. gentleman's question I am advised by the Department of the Interior that the following are proper replies to be given to his questions :—

1. Provision is made for immigrants arriving in Canada from Europe during the inclement seasons of winter and early spring by the maintenance by the government of halls and shelter, properly warmed, and with sleeping, cooking and other accommodations, at the ports of landing and at the chief distributing centres inland, such as Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary, Edmonton and various smaller places in the Northwest.
2. Immigrants are expected to furnish their own food, but in cases of necessity the departmental officers get authority to act as the circumstances may require in each case, in regard to supplying food.
3. Yes.
4. No.
5. As above. Employment is found for those desiring it, whereby they can earn the means to commence farming.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is there any inspection of the immigrants before they embark ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I am glad to learn that the government take care of these poor people on their arrival in this country.

A CORRECTION.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Before the House rises I should like to make a correction of a statement which appeared in the papers of Saturday morning, in the answer given by me in response to the appeal made by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay (Hon. Mr. Domville) who is not in his place at present. I requested the hon. gentleman to postpone his motion for the appointment of a committee, as the department were preparing a Bill to make some changes in the insurance law. I got my information, not from the department, but from some parties who saw Mr. Fitzgerald on the subject, and from the information furnished them I thought something of the kind was to be done. I was not authorized officially to make the announcement, and I desire to make that correction in case anybody should be misled by what I said, more particularly the hon. gentleman from Rothesay. I understood that parties who were interested in the matter were here and had submitted a Bill and that it had been approved of, and I naturally supposed, if it was approved of, it would be introduced. I was told by the department that it had not been, and that it would not be introduced, and therefore my statement was not authorized.

A QUESTION OF ORDER.

The SPEAKER—It will be remembered by hon. gentlemen that on Friday afternoon I gave a ruling with respect to a motion made by the hon. gentleman from DeLorimier. My conclusion was that the motion made by the hon. gentleman was in order. Exception was taken to my ruling by the hon. gentleman from Richmond; and I rather got the impression from what he said that he was anxious that I should look into the authorities, so that I might correct my mistake. I have since looked into the authorities to some little extent, and if it be the pleasure of the House I shall state briefly the result of my inquiry. The question is not a very difficult one; but, as a rule, questions of order do not come up very often in this House, and perhaps hon. gentlemen do not study our rules as much as the members of the other House study their rules. We are not very rigorous in the enforcement of rules here; hon. gentlemen are moderate and do not need to be controlled by rules. Although this question is not a very difficult one, it may be just as well to state the result of my inquiry. The rule which it was held put the motion of the hon. gentleman from DeLorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) out of order was rule 13 of the Senate which reads as follows :—

One intermediate day's notice in writing must be given of all motions deemed special; and any motion is deemed special which initiates a subject of discussion.

Now there are numbers of motions connected with the business of the House which do sometimes lead to discussions, but these motions do not introduce new matter to the House. What my understanding of this rule has always been is that a motion deemed special was something which brought in a new subject for discussion, and I did not think that the rule applied to such matters as the time to which the House should stand adjourned. The hon. gentleman's opinion was different and he referred to the practice of the other House as sustaining his view. In that House the rules are more rigorously enforced than they are here; but even if we were governed by just the same rule as that which they have in the House of Commons his reference to the House of Commons was not justified. Rule 31 of the other House is as follows :—

Two day's notice shall be given of a motion for leave to present a Bill, resolution, or address, for the appointment of any committee or for the putting of a question.

But the rule goes on :—

But this rule shall not apply to Bills after their introduction or to private Bills or to the times of meeting or adjournment of the House.

So that on that particular point the hon. gentleman is not borne out by the rules of the other House. In the House of Commons, the motion made by the hon. gentleman from DeLorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) would not have fallen under the 31st rule of that House, nor does it any more fall under the 13th rule of this House. I think we can find just what rule the motion made by the hon. gentleman from DeLorimier is governed by. Rule 3 of our House is as follows :—

The time for the ordinary meeting of the Senate is at three o'clock in the afternoon, unless some other time shall have previously been ordered.

And rule 7 says—and it is more to the point :—

When the Senate adjourns on Friday, unless otherwise ordered, it stands adjourned until the Monday following.

So that the motion of the hon. gentleman from DeLorimier was to modify and suspend rules 3 and 7. Now we have a rule of our House which deals with these motions, and that is rule 17 which provides:—

No motion to suspend, modify, or amend any rule, or part thereof——

Which was the motion of the hon. gentleman from DeLorimier.

—shall be in order except on one day's notice in writing specifying precisely the rule proposed to be suspended, modified or amended.

So, hon. gentlemen, the little study which I made of this subject has served to confirm me in the opinion which I expressed on Friday.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I very much regret that I am not able to follow as accurately as I desired to do the remarks which have been made by His Honour the Speaker, and not with sufficient accuracy certainly to attempt on the spur of the moment to reply. I really thought under the circumstances however—and I think it would be no more than courtesy to me that the Speaker when he intended to select the present occasion, the first meeting of the Senate, to give his decision, should have given some notice of it in order that I might be prepared to sus-tain the position I took before the House at our last meeting. As I have not been able to follow as accurately as it is necessary for me to do to answer opinions such as those expressed to the House, there is only one course open to me, which I will certainly adopt, and it is this ;—if the same motion is made again in the House, a motion similar to the one made by the hon. gentleman from Montreal, giving but one day's notice for an adjournment, I shall then raise the question in the House formally in order to have a decision upon it, and I think I shall be prepared to show that the position I took at the last meeting of the House is one sustained by the practice both of this House and of the House of Commons. I caught, however, one observation made by the hon. Speaker, which was that I was not correct in my quotation of the rule of the House of Commons. I quoted no rule of the House of Commons but I quoted the practice of the House of Commons—a very different thing. I referred to the invariable practice of the House of Commons, under the rules of that House, of giving an intermediate day's notice in all cases of an adjournment of that body, and I think I should be prepared to show, if that is disputed, that it is the case, and if the rule is not as strong in the House of Commons with regard to the intermediate day's notice as it is in this House, I think, that notwithstanding the practice has always been to give an intermediate day's notice, it makes my position even stronger than it was, as I did not, I repeat, quote any rule. Under the circumstances I will not detain the House now, but I give notice in order that hon. gentlemen may be prepared and may look into the question and may consult any authorities upon it if they desire to do so, that if a similar motion is at any time made of an adjournment without an intermediate day's notice I shall raise the question and have it decided by the House and the House must take the responsibility of altering the practice on this important matter. That is the only way for me to do. I did not do it on the last occasion for several reasons, some of which I did not state. In the first place I am very reluctant indeed to move against a decision of the chair. I think we are all interested in maintaining the principle of authority, which is represented by the chair as much as possible. And during the long period I have occupied a seat in this House, though frequently urged to do so, I have never once moved against the ruling of the chair, and I am reluctant to do it now. I was reluctant on the last occasion for several reasons. I doubted very much that the leader of the House would have been prepared to sustain the chair. It would have been an unpleasant thing for him to be compelled to vote against the ruling, and I doubt very much if the hon. gentleman to his right (Sir Alphonse Pelletier) who was himself at one time Speaker of the House, would sustain it, because my hon. friend had given a decision in accord with the view taken upon the occasion alluded to by His Honour the Speaker, but even apart from these things I should sooner submit to an injustice, if it was not a serious matter, or to an error in the ruling, than attempt to question the authority of the chair which is so important. We should all feel disposed to treat it with proper consideration and deference. As I remarked the other day, it is a principle which distinguished British legislative bodies from all foreign bodies—the respect which is invariably paid to the principle of authority represented by the chair in both Houses of parliament, and it is one of the reasons which governed me throughout a long political career, where I was not able to sustain the chair, at any rate not attempting to controvert its decisions when really no public good was to be subserved by doing so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think we should try and arrive at some distinctive decision, if I may so term it, as to what the rule really means. The whole difficulty has arisen in the past in reference to what constitutes an 'intervening day.' Though not a lawyer, I understand that in the courts of law—my hon. friend the Secretary of State will be able to correct me if I am wrong, an intervening day means a whole day between the day of notice and the day upon which you are to take the matter into consideration ; that is if we give notice in court today that you will proceed with a certain motion, and if there is to be an intervening day that would mean the day after the notice was given. I am under the impression that that is the interpretation given by the judges to the words, 'an intervening day.' Now, in looking at these different rules—and I do not take this position for the purpose of combating the position taken by the hon. Speaker, but rather for the purpose of elucidating the meaning of the rules by which we are governed—I have upon many occasions acted upon the principle suggested to my hon. friend to the left. There have been some rulings of the Senate in which I did not concur. Perhaps I was wrong. I do not say I was right, but I certainly had strong convictions that the ruling of the chair was not in accordance with the rules of the House, but on the the principle laid down by my hon. friend, of having very great respect for the chair and from a long experience, I have come to the conclusion that the position occupied by the presiding officer either in this chamber or the House of Commons should be respected to the fullest possible extent. I find that rule 7, to which the hon. Speaker has referred, says :

> The Senate adjourns on Friday, unless otherwise ordered it stands adjourned until the Monday following.

What constitutes 'otherwise ordered ?' Would it be a motion of the Senate or would it be a motion in accordance with the rules laid down by the Senate. Rule 13 declares that if you desire to amend a rule—and that would be virtually amending rule 7—you must give a day's notice, and other proceedings must be taken in order to justify or modify that rule. I know the practice, as the hon. Speaker very properly says, has been otherwise. Rule 13 distinctly says that one intermediate day's notice in writing must be given of all motions deemed special. Is a motion to adjourn not a special motion ? One senator may rise and desire an adjournment of the House for a week or a month or two or three days as the case may be. Other members may not have had any intimation of what was to be proposed, and they may be decidedly opposed to it and consequently it must under those circumstances, to my mind, be considered special, and it certainly, being special, initiates a subject for discussion. The fact that we nearly always discuss these questions when a motion to adjourn is made, is evidence that a motion to adjourn for any length of time will, of necessity, create a discussion on the part of members who may be present, some of whom desire the adjournment for special reasons or for reasons which they think justify them in making the motion, and others may take a different view altogether. I must confess that I had not considered these rules very closely, but in looking at these three rules of the House we find that one rule provides that when we adjourn on Friday we stand adjourned to a certain date. If we change that we change the rule.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It is a special rule.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a special rule laid down, and there are several rules which provide for the changing, altering or amending those rules. No. 17 provides how these rules may be changed. Then, if you refer to the 13th rule, it declares distinctly and positively how long a time shall elapse between the giving of a notice and the time for considering it, and if we can arrive at any positive decision as to what constitutes an intermediate day, then the difficulty is removed at once and would prevent the differences of opinion which have occurred in the past. I have no doubt differences will continue to occur until some authoritative decision is made upon this question, and as a Senator I should like very much when an opinion is given, the Speaker's decision should be put in writing and form part of the record of the proceedings of the House. I know last year that I made a special request that that should be done. Well it was not done. I find no particular fault with that, but I think in the interest of the proper government of the House, and in the interests of the Speaker himself, whoever he may be, that when his views are given—I take it for granted they are given after due and deliberate consideration—that there should be no objection on his part, and to my mind there cannot be any valid objection that the ruling should be placed on record, so that we may, when the question arises in the future, if it should arise, refer to the decision and the reasons which he has given. I am quite satisfied when occasions of that kind would arise that the Senate as a whole would acquiesce at once unless there was some flagrant abuse of the rules, and that I take it for granted could not occur with any hon. gentleman occupying so important a position. I can only repeat, that I should urge that we come to a positive decision upon this question of an intermediate day, and from what I have learned in the courts of law I am very much inclined to agree with the hon. gentleman from Richmond that there must be a full day's notice in order to make the motion legal and proper.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I rise with considerable diffidence to express my opinion on this question, especially as I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman from Richmond nor with the hon. leader of the opposition. It seems to me that it is not a special motion in the sense of the rule which has been read by the hon. Speaker of the House and for that reason no intermediate day is required, and I doubt very much if any notice is required. When the House rises every day it is the practice, and I take it, it has been the regular practice to move the adjournment of the House. Would it not be in order for any hon. gentleman in this House to then move in amendment that the House instead of adjourning till the following day to stand adjourned till a later day. And it seems to me that the best proof that no intermediate day's notice is required for a motion of that kind is that it is always open in the House of Commons as well as in this House for any hon. gentleman to move the adjournment of the House, it is a practice that is followed for allowing hon. gentlemen to bring up and discuss questions which could not be discussed otherwise. In the House of Commons is there any notice required for the adjournment of the House? Cannot we here move the adjournment of the House as well as they can in the Commons? Then, if I can move the adjournment of the House instead of moving that the House adjourns till to-morrow cannot I move that the House adjourn till a later date?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I do not see any rule which bears on one question more than on the other—that is on the adjournment of the House till to-morrow nor on the adjournment of the House to a subsequent day. I think that the only rule which applied to this question is this rule which says that when the Senate adjourns it do stand adjourned till the following day at 3 o'clock, unless otherwise ordered by the House; and I think that when the adjournment is moved at the end of the sitting that it is open to any member of this House to move an amendment that the adjournment be had to a future day if it is deemed advisable and that no notice would be required.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—With reference to the question raised, I have simply to say that this Senate has been in existence now for the past 37 years and if it takes 37 years to decide a question of adjournment I will have to live a long time before it decides very important questions. The rule for me in a matter of this kind is very simple. It is a matter of procedure and where opinions are divided on either side or among members on either side I am prepared to leave myself in the hands of the Speaker of the House. His interpretation of the rules ought to be accepted when there is a division of opinion among the members of the House. Why fight this out on Friday then adjourn till Monday and fight it out again perhaps to-morrow. I think the hon. Speaker ought to be supported in his decision in this chamber, and I have simply to say that as far as I am concerned in a small matter of this kind, it is a waste of time to be discussing here for an hour whether we should adjourn or should not adjourn, or whether we have a right to adjourn or a right not to adjourn. When the Speaker of this House has given his decision I think it ought to be accepted.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I could quite understand that if the rule that we had to abide by stated that there would be an intervening day, that that would settle it. I do not suppose there could be two interpretations of the meaning of this section, but the question which presents perhaps a little more difficulty is, that one day's notice, which the hon. the Speaker states, is the rule which should apply to the decision of the question raised. We have the simple words, 'a day's notice shall be given.' When a member of this House gives notice at three or half past three, that he will move the next day a certain motion, twenty-four hours must lapse, between the notice of motion and the motion which he makes, and if it is not a special matter, which is dealt with under another section, have we not there the day's notice that is meant by the rule ?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The word 'day' may mean a sitting of the House. If it means twenty-four hours the hon. gentleman is right, but I belive it means an intervening sitting.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Then if we had two or three separate sittings of the House on the same day, we could move it within twelve hours, if the interpretation of the hon. gentleman from Kingston prevailed. The only argument I would bring in favour of a day being of one sitting to another, is that twenty-four hours would elapse and that the Senate would have received twenty-four hours' notice before the motion is put.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I want to take the opportunity to congratulate my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Cloran) on his change of opinion. I am very glad to know that he has at last come to the conclusion that the Speaker's decision should be conclusive, and ought not for a moment be questioned. Last session my hon. friend opposite objected to a ruling of the Speaker, and appealed to the House to annul it. My hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Cloran) on that occasion held a very different view from that which he has expressed to-night.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That was on a matter of national importance.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It was a matter on which the hon. gentleman dissented from a ruling of the Speaker. I had the same respect for the Speaker then that I have now, and consequently, voted to sustain him. My hon. friend voted against him, and now he reads us a lecture as to the propriety of obeying the ruling of the Speaker, I did not object to the ruling ; I only stated what I thought the rule was. Let us define what an intervening day is, and the whole question is settled.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—While I concur in the statement that the time spent in discussing this question is wasted, and does us no honour in the estimation of the country, I do take a different view from that expressed by the hon. gentleman from Richmond. I am quite aware that it is a very presumptuous thing for me to do such a thing. Having such perfect confidence in his judgment generally I could almost doubt my own judgment, but I do not think it requires a lawyer to interpret the rule. My opinion is that it is very plain and simple, and interpreting it by ordinary reasoning I come to a different conclusion. I dissent from the opinion of the hon. gentleman from Belleville (Sir Mackenzie Bowell) as to the 16th rule. He thinks that this alteration with reference to the adjournment would be an interference with the rule and that it would require a formal notice giving intimation of a desire to alter a rule of the House. Now this proposed alteration is not altering a rule of the House. The reference here to the rule of the House is making a change in a permanent order. This would not be making a change in a permanent order, because the very rule which prescribes it says : 'Except in a case where the House has ordered otherwise.' There is a provision in the very rule itself for an alteration being made and consequently it would not require a notice to be given making the formal statement that it was intended to make a permanent change in a standing rule of the House.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—What about a day intervening ?

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—That is another matter altogether. That is the way I dispose of the argument which is founded on that 16th rule. Then, with reference to the 13th rule, that relates to motions deemed special. Who is to pass judgment whether a motion is special or not ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Read the whole of the rule.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—It is as follows :

> One intermediate day's notice in writing must be given of all motions deemed special ; and any motion deemed special which initiates a subject of discussion.

This House has been thirty-seven years in existence, and I suppose every session it has had this question up and never before has it been the subject of such a discussion.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I recollect it occurring several times.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I raised it last year, and it was decided against me.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—You cannot find any case where exception was taken, and any attempt to insist on the rule being enforced. For thirty-seven years such notices have been given without objection being taken. Who is to decide whether a notice is special ? Is not the Speaker of the House the only person who can give a decision ? He is the person in whose judgment it lies to determine whether a motion of this nature is special or not. I think the Speaker was quite right in exercising his judgment as he did, and if I had been in his place I would have been guided as he was, by what the House has been doing regularly all these years, and consequently I should have deemed this not to have been a special motion. I think the Speaker's view is quite correct, that the meaning of a special motion is where some new and important subject is going to be introduced.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—All motions are subject to discussion.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I think the Speaker was quite right in deciding that the motion was in order, and the amendment was in order, and consequently that the whole procedure was in order, and I doubt if anything can be done to alter it unless a special alteration is made in the standing rule to say very distinctly that there must be an intervening day, or something of that kind. But we have got along very well for thirty seven years here, without finding it necessary to alter the rules and we may safely go on in the same way for the future.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I think a motion is special when it is a departure from anything that is ordinary. This motion to adjourn over until Tuesday, was an extraordinary one, and therefore it was special.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Suppose it was proposed to adjourn for a month.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Now as to the interpretation of 'an intervening day' being an interval of twenty-four hours ; supposing it occurred in an early hour of a sitting which was prolonged until midnight, shall we count the twenty-four hours from the time of opening the session, or from the hour of midnight ? It must be an intervening day because there might be cases where the interval would not be twenty-four hours.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I look upon this as an exceedingly important question. We should understand where we are. I was many years a member of the House of Commons, and in answer to my hon. friend from Montreal, I would say that a motion that this House do now adjourn always means that it shall adjourn to a fixed hour specified by the rules of the House. We have certain cast iron rules in the House of Commons as I presume we have here. You cannot override those rules without taking the steps which are specified in the rules. If you could, on a resolution, without due notice, move that this House adjourn for a week or a month, you might take a great many members of the House at a serious disadvantage, and it is not the intention of the rule that any member should be permitted to do that. If it is desired to move an adjournment longer than the rules of the House make provision for, then it is certainly necessary that notice should be given unless you get unanimous consent of the House. But where the House is not unanimous and an amendment is offered to the notice to adjourn, then you override a rule of the House and in order to do that you must follow the procedure provided for in the rules, and you cannot do it by a mere amendment to a motion.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Supposing the leader made a motion to adjourn to the following day, as is daily done, and an amendment was offered to that motion to adjourn to a different date, would it be necessary to give notice of that amendment?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—In that case notice is given of the intention to depart from the rule, and when that notice has been given, you can take advantage of it to move an amendment, but if the notice of the original motion has not been given you cannot do it.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The question of whether notice should be given of an amendment to such a motion as that made by the hon. gentleman from DeLorimier was decided in a very able decision by Speaker Lacoste, now Chief Justice of Quebec, that such a notice was not requisite, that an amendment could be made to the original motion without any notice whatever.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The question now under consideration is precisely the one that my hon. friend from Richmond has mentioned. Then I say if it can be done in the one form it certainly is only logical and reasonable that it can be done in the other without notice. For instance it would be idle for the leader of the House to move day by day that the Senate shall adjourn to the following day if an amendment cannot be made to that motion? Consequently it must be the logical sequence, in my judgment at any rate, entirely irrespective of those rules, that if the leader of the House can move the adjournment say until the following day that it would be perfectly in order for some hon. members to move in amendment to that motion that the House do not adjourn to the following day, but adjourn to a more distant time. Consequently, it dispenses, in my judgment, entirely with the necessity of giving a notice of motion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I desire to give the House the benefit of a quotation from Bourinot on motions for adjournment. At page 445 Bourinot says :—

> When any question is under the consideration of either House a motion to adjourn is always in order.

The rule says that a motion to adjourn shall always be in order, but a second motion to the same effect shall not be made until some intermediate proceeding shall have been had. On that point Bourinot says :—

> A motion on this point when made to supersede the question should be simply that the House do now adjourn, and it is not allowable to move an adjournment to a future day, or to propose an amendment to the question of adjournment.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is a different question.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am answering my hon. friend's observation that on a motion to adjourn an amendment may be made proposing a longer adjournment.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No, I said it was not clear to my mind that the motion instead of being merely a motion that the House do now adjourn, is that the House adjourns to a further date.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is a special rule which permits the moving of the adjournment of the House without fixing a date, and if that motion is carried the House adjourns till the next day, but here you have a fixed day intervening with the regular business of the House, because if the adjournment takes place on a motion to adjourn it stands adjourned till the following Monday; but if you fix another date I think we should have an intervening day's notice.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—To my mind the whole subject is in a nutshell. The question is whether a motion to adjourn is a special motion. I do not think it can be called a special motion. This House certainly exercises that privilege fifteen, twenty or thirty times during a single session. You cannot call that a special motion which is exercised so freely by the House and is a motion for the convenience of the members of the House. It seems to me it would be perfectly idle to tie ourselves up, so long as this House has a day's notice that a motion would be brought forward. There was a notice yesterday that a motion would be placed on the order paper for to-day. It is not a subject which requires any gentleman to give a serious consideration to, whether it would be convenient for the members to adjourn at that particular time, and it seems to me to be tieing the House up unduly and unnecessarily. If the feeling is that if the House on Friday should adjourn until Monday evening, a day's notice of a motion of that kind should be given on the preceding Wednesday. I do not think it is ever done. I think the practice has been not to insist on the intermediate day's notice. I certainly could not regard a notice of adjournment as a special motion, particularly where they are given so frequently as they are in this chamber.

The Senate adjourned.

PROHIBITION OF IMPORTATION OF IMMORAL LITERATURE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. DAVID inquired :—

What practical means are taken by the customs authorities to prevent the introduction in this country of indecent and immoral literature, pictures and designs, and whether the government intend to amend the law on this subject ?

He said : The reason why I make this request is that I think we should protect our country against the introduction of immoral and indecent literature and pictures. I have seen in certain stores in Montreal, books and newspapers and pictures which I do not dare to describe. I would be ashamed to give simply an idea of what I have seen and read in Montreal in some of those depots where books and newspapers are sold, and I need not endeavour to show that such immoral books and pictures are a danger to the future of our country. I need not try to show how they attack the vitality and strength of a nation, a young nation which has a great future in store. We have the right to hope that we will become a great nation, but we need to conserve all our strength and all our vitality. I think the worst enemy of a young nation is immorality. If the announcement should be made that a foreign enemy threatened to invade our country, there would be a decisive movement throughout Canada to go to the frontier and defend our border. Well, I consider that one of the worst and most dangerous enemies of this country is immoral literature and pictures, and I wish to know what means the government is taking to prevent the importation of such books and pictures into our country ? There is no doubt the municipal authorities are specially charged with protecting society against that evil, but there is also no doubt that the government of a country is in the position, and it is its duty I am sure, to do its share in that good work, because no foreign literature of that nature can enter into the country without passing through the customs, and I want to know what means are taken by the customs authorities to seize such books at the frontier and prevent their importation into this country.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I rise to endorse the sentiments which have been expressed by the hon. gentleman from Montreal. This question deserves the very serious and careful consideration of the government of this country. If there is any one thing more than another that is a standing disgrace to the United States, our close neighbour, it is the license that is given there for the sale of obscene literature and advertisements of all kinds. It is highly desirable that the Dominion should be protected from the overflow of these publications from the neighbouring country and the consequent demoralization of our people. I earnestly hope that the government will take some interest in this inquiry, and, if necessary they will amend the law to prevent the overflowing of pernicious literature and pictures into this country from the United States.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I warmly sympathize in the sentiments expressed by the hon. gentleman from Montreal, as I am quite sure every hon. gentleman in this chamber does ; but the difficulty in interpreting the law is to find a standard. All persons have not the same high moral standard of what is proper, right, decent and pure. The law has been made sufficiently strong to meet all cases. In giving an answer I will just refer to the law which, I think, was amended in some degree last session. The importation of the following articles is prohibited under item 636 of the customs tariff 1897, viz.:—

Schedule C.—Prohibited Goods.

636. 'Books, printed paper, drawings, paintings, prints, photographs or representations of any kind of a treasonable or seditious, or of an immoral or indecent character.'

Articles covered by the above provisions are subject to the usual examination by the customs appraiser at the port of entry, and if found to be prohibited are liable to seizure by any officer of customs and they may be forfeited or otherwise disposed of.

The question as to the amendment of the law on this subject is under consideration of the government.

It is very difficult indeed to impress the employees of a large department at every port of the country as to what should come within the purview of the language in the statute. I am quite sure that the Minister of Customs is at all times quite willing, where his attention is called to it, to impress on the officers that they have failed in their duty if they have permitted the introduction of literature and pictures that could be classed as immoral, impure and indecent. After all, it rests with the appraiser who makes the examination. It is often very difficult, where you have such a vast number of people to deal with, to impress them with the standard we ourselves may have. I am quite sure that the Minister of Customs, will be quite willing to assist in anyway within his power in minimizing or prohibiting altogether the importation of immoral literature and pictures into this country.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I know the law, but how is the law to be put into operation ? The hon. Secretary of State speaks of the appraiser. I know what is going on in the great centres, especially in Montreal, and I ask myself would it not be practicable to have a proper officer in each of the large centres who would be the judge whether a book or a picture should be admitted into the country. If I am to judge by what I have seen in Montreal I have not a very high opinion of the appraisers who admit books, newspapers and pictures into this country which should be kept out of it. Would it not be possible to employ an officer capable of deciding what books and pictures should be admitted through the customs.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Of course it is impossible at the head office here to discover publications that ought to be forfeited and not allowed to go into circulation. The proper course for those who want to protect the public to pursue is to complain of any official who in their opinion has neglected his duty. Has any one in Montreal written to Mr. Paterson to say that so and so, whose duty it was to exclude impure literature, has allowed such literature to pass into the country ? To make general charges is no way to deal with the case. You must bring some individual case to the notice of the minister. The proper course would be to show that some officer has so small a sense of what his duty is, that he should be dismissed, but you cannot deal with such a complaint on a general allegation. It is quite impossible to do anything unless the evidence is produced before the department. I shall call the attention of Mr. Paterson to my hon. friend's observations.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It would be hard for the purchaser of a book or periodical to denounce any special officer, because the purchaser of the book can have no idea at what port of entry the book was admitted. I agree with the hon. Secretary of State that there should be some of those exhibits sent to Ottawa to show that somebody has been remiss in his duty.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—We have a law, but practically it is not enforced. We cannot attach too much importance to the question which has been brought up to-day. We have here petitions for temperance legislation. Ontario, good as it is, is still endeavouring to become more sober. We have had petitions from all parts of the Dominion to prohibit the sale of cigarettes. The use of cigarettes and of alcohol may be evils, but neither liquor, nor especially cigarettes can have as evil an effect on national character as immoral literature. We have a law on our statute-books now, but there is practically no application of it. Would it be possible for the government to do what is done in other countries, establish a bureau of censors, not only for literature but for theatricals ? I am not strict on those questions, but I believe that the youth of this country ought to be safe-guarded in every way and especially on questions of morality. There are officers in the land who probably would act as censors without remuneration. Would it not be possible to have such officers in the different provinces, whose duty it would be to send to the department any books or pictures which, in their judgment, should not be admitted into the country in order that they might be examined by the department ? If the department should decide that the publication should be excluded, then the government might take action on it. I unite my voice with that of the hon. gentleman from Montreal in urging the government to look into this question, and, if possible, to take some action in the matter because it is more important to exclude such publications than to prohibit cigarette smoking or even the sale of intoxicating liquors.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE rose to move :

For the appointment of a select committee of five to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada, with power to send for papers, persons, telegrams and records, to employ clerical services, and with leave to report from time to time.

He said : The government, no doubt, have looked into this matter thoroughly, and I never doubted in my own mind that they would attempt in any way to defend the company, and I am pleased to see that the government have really abandoned them to the fate they deserve. I started with proving that the company was doing business in Canada, that they were licensed by the government and had made certain deposits and that they had done business to a certain extent. To what extent I am not able to show until the returns that I asked for come down, and I have no doubt I will get them very shortly, because I have a letter from the department saying they will prepare them. I will start by reading what must, I think, to all legal men in this house, be a document of some value. I want to show what the Supreme Court of England says in 'Foster vs. The Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association.' I need not give the date of the report here. It is in the Supreme Court of Judicature, Court of Appeal, before the Master of the Rolls, Lord Chief Justice Romer and Lord Justice Cozens-Hardy. I will not weary the House with reading all the case, but will simply quote a portion with the decision contained in the last few lines.

The suit was brought by a Mr. Foster, who claimed there had been misrepresentation and deceit on the part of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, in their dealings with him, and excessive demands for premiums not warranted by their contract.

The plaintiff brought this action, claiming a declaration that the defendants are not entitled to make any mortuary call upon him exceeding the maximum rate payable according to his age at the date of entry. And, in the event of the court holding that his contention on this point is not correct, the plaintiff claimed to have the policy set aside on the ground of misrepresentation, and repayment, with interest, of all moneys paid under the policy. The defendants by their defence asserted that the assessments made on the new footing were authorized and denied the misrepresentation alleged. The plaintiff was the only witness called. He gave evidence to the effect we have stated as to what passed at the interview with Bridgman, and in the office, when the proposal was signed, and there was no cross-examination addressed to this part of his evidence. Mr. Justice Kekewich held in favour of the plaintiff that the defendants were not entitled to make any mortuary call upon the plaintiff exceeding the maximum rate payable at the date of entry. That being so, the case for the alternative relief sought by the plaintiff necessarily failed, and the action so far as it claimed recission was dismissed. Against this judgment both parties have appealed. During the course of the argument we felt grave doubt whether under this policy the 'maximum rate' is fixed once and for all by reference to the age at entry, or whether it increases from year to year by reference to the actual age at the date of assessment. Upon the whole, we have arrived at the conclusion that the latter view is correct, and that there is not sufficient in the policy, which in effect incorporates the constitution, to deprive the directors as against the plaintiff of the power which, as already stated they possess under the constitution. It follows that the judgment so far as it deals with the construction of the policy must be discharged. But this does not dispose of the case. We are clearly of opinion that the documents circulated by the company are tricky and misleading. 'Life insurance at about half the usual rates' was, to say the least, an inaccurate statement. Even if true in the first year, it would not be true in subsequent years, and the time would arrive when the rate would become so excessive that no sane man would care to keep the policy up. The policy granted to the plaintiff was not such a policy as was held out to him. It is wholly inconsistent with Bridgman's letter, which was supported by the accompanying documents. It differs essentially from the representations made to the plaintiff before and at the time when the proposal was signed, and upon which he acted.

This is not an action of deceit in which fraud on the part of the company's agents would have to be alleged and proved, but an action of recission, in which such fraud need not be alleged or proved. The result is that, in our opinion, the plaintiff is entitled to a judgment for a recision of the policy, and for a return of all moneys paid thereunder with interest at four per cent from the dates of payment respectively. The defendants must pay the costs of the action and of the appeal.

Now, nobody can say that I am seeking to injure people by the course I am taking, and I will show the House that all Canada is carefully watching this affair. I received a great many letters and one to-day from a lady—and we all respect the ladies highly—in which she says they are watching the Senate with the greatest anxiety as the only tribunal they can get any justice from, because they cannot get it as the law stands in the courts of justice. It is an unfortunate law. I do not suppose when it was framed that it was ever anticipated cases of this kind would turn up, and they have but one remedy; they have written me many letters, too voluminous to read to this House, that they are depending on the hon. gentlemen of the Senate to do justice to the widows and orphans. With that before us I think we have a very serious task, something to which we will have to give a great deal of consideration before we get through. Having shown you what the decision in England was, I will now show you what an officer of their own company says where they remonstrate with the president. They say to the president: 'You are dragging this company into the gutter, defrauding the people.' And they placed their case before Gen. Tracey. I shall read you what he says presently, but before they had gone even that distance they wrote over the signature of their vice president, a gentleman whom most of you in this House know, Mr. Wells, brother of the late Speaker of the legislature in Ontario, and another brother a minister of the Crown in British Columbia, and what does he say to the people? Under date September 20, 1898, he says:—

To the president of the company, Mr. Burnham.

It is perfectly obvious that a serious crisis is impending in the affairs of the Mutual Reserve Association, and I deem it my duty to fully and frankly explain my position to you and the public.

I will not read all the letter. I will take a portion of it. The letter proceeds:—

You were elected president in 1895. The business was then in a healthy condition, and it increased steadily from year to year. The insurance in force at the end of that year amounted to over $308,000,000 and the new business of the year ran approximately $60,000,000; to-day the insurance in force is less than $200,000,000—

And I shall be able when we get the papers from the government to show that the business is very little over $100,000,000 on the last return.

The letter proceeds:

—and the new business of the current year will be about one-half that of last year. There has also been a serious decrease in assets and surplus, and a large increase in the cost of management.

But ominous as are these figures and ominous the fact that while everything else has gone down the cost of management has gone up, they are overshadowed by lapses which during the last eight months exceeded $100,000,000. For this disastrous result you (Mr. Moss and Mr. Eldridge) are personally responsible.

Mr. Eldridge is an officer of the company, I think vice-president, I am not sure. Mr. Moss was a man to whom they gave a roving commission. He was to find them so much business and he was to have all the money he wanted, and in fact to do as he liked. Mr. Moss came from London to New York. He belongs to the Hebrew denomination. He was made the metropolitan agent and I am sure the new business he obtained as the metropolitan agent was neither profitable nor permanent, but he made it profitable to himself, and when the metropolitan contract was cancelled in 1897, he owed the association over $29,000, besides large sums due by him to his sub-agents earned by them, for which they are making demands on the association. I give you that quotation to show where Mr. Moss came in. The letter proceeds:—

Mr. Moss came from London to New York in 1895, and he was shortly afterward our metropolitan agent. I am quite sure that the new business which he obtained as metropolitan agent was neither profitable nor permanent. but he made it very profitable for himself, and when his metropolitan contract was cancelled in January, 1897, he owed the association over $29,000, apart from large sums due by him to his sub-agents for commissions earned by them and for which they are now making demands upon the association.

In June, 1896, you went to London and were informed, probably for the first time, that Mr. Moss had left that city for New York, heavily in debt and under a cloud, and that amongst other things our medical director, Dr. Strode, had lost through business transactions with him several thousand pounds. Whether Mr. Moss exposed himself to a criminal prosecution I express no opinion, but in September, 1896, I believe that a legal firm in New York was consulted as to extradition proceedings. I have this information recently from your brother, Mr. George Burnham, who probably gave it to you also. All this you kept to yourself and you proceeded with your eyes open to cultivate his acquaintance.

In September, 1896, you returned to London from the continent, and, having learned that Mr. Moss's difficulties could be compromised, you cabled him to go over, and shortly after his arrival you cabled the head office to honour his draft for £1,500, ($7,260.) Before closing this letter I will detail the circumstances under which you subsequently managed to make Mr. Moss a present of this $7,260 at the expense of the association.

You and Mr. Moss arrived together in New York on the 10th of October, 1896, and early in January following, as a result of your new and intimate relations, you devised a scheme, the principal features of which were: 1. That I should be sent to London, out of the way. 2. That Mr. Moss should be appointed general manager of the agency department in my place. 3. That Mr. Moss should have a contract extending over the United States, giving him an overriding commission of 20 per cent upon the entire United States business, and a salary of $100 per week, ($5,200 per annum), and, 4, that he should receive weekly payments of $3,500 for the purpose of making advances to sub-agents. The contract also provided that the weekly payments should be paid to Mr. Moss personally, and remain so charged until they should be repaid by the commissions earned by him and his sub-agents, which together amounted to 85 per cent of the first year's premiums. For this contract Mr. Moss promised you a business for the first year of one hundred million dollars.

Now the premiums upon new business average about $20 per $1,000 of insurance. Upon one hundred millions of business, therefore, Moss's commission at 20 per cent would approximate $400,000. Upon this basis he could well afford to pay out of his commissions all the advances to sub-agents, say $158,000, and still have a surplus of $242,000.

I have said that the contract provided that Mr. Moss should be personally charged with the weekly advances of $3,500, which for the year would amount to $182,000. It is true that the personal liability of Mr. Moss for this sum was of no value per se, for he was as poor as a rat from a London dock and deeply in debt to the association already. But it was a check upon a careless expenditure of the trust fund, and the provision for deducting the advances from the commissions is a usual condition in such cases, and if honestly observed would have saved the association from serious loss. But within a few weeks after the execution of this contract you deliberately discharged Mr. Moss from his personal liability and you left him absolutely free to make ducks and drakes of and enormous sum of money, and this he proceeded to do in characteristic style, for at the end of the year the sub-agents owed the association $158,000, and Mr. Moss had his commissions in his pocket. In proof of this I will say that, in February, 1897, Mr. Cooper, the bookkeeper, as I am informed, in charge of Mr. Moss's account, drew up and presented to you for approval a statement charging, Mr. Moss with the weekly payments made to him during the preceding months, and also with the sub-agents' commissions, (amounting to about 65 per cent, which had been retained by them), and crediting him with 85 per cent. This statement was not only in strict conformity with the contract, but it was made according to the personal instructions given to Mr. Cooper by Mr. Moss himself, who, at that time, seemed to be satisfied with the contract as it stood.

It did not, however, suit you, and accordingly, for the offence of doing his plain and simple duty, you placed the Moss account in other hands and you transferred Mr. Cooper to another position where he would have no opportunity of repeating the offence of doing his duty. From that time to the termination of the contract in January, 1898, the weekly payments were charged to Mr. Moss and the advances to sub-agents were credited to him merely upon his memoranda, and as I am informed by the auditor, without a single voucher.

This unauthorized variation of the contract could only have one result. It not only relieved Mr. Moss from personal liability, but it permitted him to handle, as if it were his own, the trust fund which was deposited to his credit every week in the Chase National Bank, and he frequently drew cheques upon it for his own private purposes. In fact, the handling of this fund was so loose, so irregular, and so unbusinesslike, that the auditor remonstrated, and this is the only reply which he received from you through Mr. Underhill, your confidential secretary: 'Mr. Moss is not to be embarrassed by having his account checked up. He will account for the money received in his own way and in his own time.'

One cannot conceive a company's funds to the extent of $182,000 annually being placed in a bank to the sole credit of any person, no matter how respectable, with instructions to the auditor not to require vouchers or check his account, or 'embarrass' him in any way, but imagine a bank manager handing the combinations of his safe to a tramp and instructing his watchman not to 'embarrass' him or be otherwise too particular.

My daughters! But the revel was superb. Horses and carriages! Diamonds and pearls! Opera boxes and opera omnibuses! Spike driving in Central Park and all the pride and circumstances of extravagances.

The handling of this enormous fund by Mr. Moss took almost every form of irregularity. For instance, on the list of agents appeared the name of one George Joseph, to whom advances had been made by Mr. Moss amounting to $4,600. There was no contract on file with Mr. Joseph, and no applications for insurance were ever received from him. There was, in fact, no such agent. You now allege that the money was paid to Mr. Joseph for the purpose of compromising a claim by Lieut. Farrow against the association and for whom Mr. Joseph was acting as attorney. If this be true, it not only shows the vicious working of the Moss contract and its flexibility for improper purposes, but it shows on your own admission that you, the president, at least concurred in a falsification of the records.

The transfer of what are called the fifteen-year policies to a five-year plan not only cheated the mortuary fund of about $300,000, being one year's premiums on about $25,000,000, but it put approximately $60,000 into Mr. Moss's pocket. What right had you to treat the transfer business as new business under Mr. Moss's contract, and practically abstract this large amount out of the mortuary funds for the benefit of Mr. Moss? There seems to be no limit to his rapacity and to your pliability.

In this same category of irregularities is the Moss loan of £1,500 ($7,260), to which I have already alluded. This sum appeared on the books at Mr. Moss's debit for several months, and he frequently assured me that he had paid it back to you, and he claimed that the account should be rectified by you and that you had promised to do so. But, however, that may be, you disposed of the matter by simply ordering the amount to be charged to agency expenses 'for special services in agency department, outside of and apart from the metropolitan department in the last half of 1896.' You afterward explained to me that the services you referred to were rendered in London in September, 1896, and being interrogated by me as to the character of the services, you stated that he had introduced you to a Mr. Craig, whom he represented as a strong insurance writer, but you admitted that nothing came of this introduction. In fact, Mr. Moss was only a few days in London and was exclusively occupied with his own affairs. Subsequently, however, forgetting your own written order, and particularly the words 'outside and apart from the metropolitan department,' you changed your base, and now allege that the payment of $7,260 was a bonus for Mr. Moss's metropolitan business. Inasmuch as Mr. Moss received under his metropolitan contract a salary of $100 per week and a commission of 75 per cent, or 10 per cent in excess of that allowed to any other agent, and that he was in debt to the association under this contract $29,000, and inasumch as the association is still paying his sub-agents large sums which he owed them for commissions earned by them at that time, it is somewhat strange that a year or two after the cancellation of this contract it should occur to you in the face of your written order to justify this credit by calling it a bonus of exactly the same amount as his London draft of £1,500 turned into dollars and cents.

I feel a difficulty, moreover, in reconciling Mr. Moss's statement to me with your statement to me and with your present statement, all of which contradict each other.

One of the most distinguished lawyers of New York calls this transaction larceny.

The truth is, Sir, that for about two years Mr. Moss was the real president, and you were only a piece of mechanism in his hands. To suit his caprices you have violated rules, regulations, and by-laws. By way of illustration, I will remind you that upon one occasion Mr. Stevenson, having been furnished by you and the executive committee with certain rules and regulations for his guidance, and having been met by counter instructions from Mr. Moss, laid the case before you as to which he should obey. You replied: 'Obey Mr. Moss's orders whether they conflict with your instructions or not.'

In April, 1898, the auditor, Mr. J. S. Hoffecker, wrote you the following letter:

April 22, 1898.

F. A. Burnham, President:

Dear Sir,—I cannot conscientiously make the adjustments called for by the inclosed orders while the accounts involved are in their present condition. If such protest should terminate my connection with this association this letter will serve as my resignation.

I have always endeavoured to follow your early instructions to me, to 'act without fear or favour,' and in this instance feel that I am but strictly adhering to my duty. Yours truly,

(Signed) J. S. HOFFECKER,
Auditor of Accounts.

The 'adjustment' referred to arose out of a transaction with a Mr. Halsey, one of Mr. Moss's sub-agents under the metropolitan contract, who it appears owed the association $8,000 for advances, but claimed a credit of $3,000 for commissions earned by him, received by the association and paid to Mr. Moss. You directed the auditor to credit Mr. Halsey with $3,000 and charge it to Mr. Moss, and the auditor refused to do so, believing it to be a fraud on the association. You reiterated your order, and the above letter was the result, and instead of accepting his resignation you furnished Mr. Halsey with an unaudited account and carried out in this irregular way your purpose of practically making Mr. Moss a present of $3,000.

But so numerous were your violations of the rules and regulations, usually for Mr. Moss's benefit, and so flagrant were your dealings with him that the auditor could stand it no longer, and in July, 1898, wrote you the following letter:

F. A. Burnham, Esq., President:

Dear Sir,—I hereby tender my resignation, to take effect at once.

Our ideas of common honesty and integrity of management, which pledge us to the members of this association, are so radically different that, possessed as I am with the personal and positive knowledge of so many questionable transactions which have been approved by you, I cannot and will not be further connected with this association under your management. Yours truly,

(Signed) J. S. HOFFECKER,
Auditor of Accounts.

I am informed upon the best authority that no regular or complete account was ever kept in the books, as is kept with other agents, showing the commissions earned by Mr. Moss. They were paid upon his memoranda and verbal requisitions, and so your mandate to Mr. Stevenson was literally carried out, viz.: 'Obey Mr. Moss's orders whether they conflict with your instructions or not.'

I have recently seen copies of three cheques paid in this way and which are a mere indication of the magnitude of these irregular transactions. One, dated 13th April, 1897, for $15,000; one dated 13th July, 1897, for $15,000, and one dated 13th October, 1897, for $20,000. There were other similar cheques amounting to $32,000, aggregating altogether $82,000.

I am informed that if Mr. Moss's transactions with the association were honestly adjusted it would be found that $200,000 would not cover his indebtedness.

In writing this letter I am performing the most disagreeable task that I have ever performed. I have a mass of information before me from which I have selected only a few items as to which Mr. Moss and you are more or less connected. But there are other very serious matters which apparently concern yourself alone.

Up to the date of Mr. Harper's death he had a claim upon the association of $60,000 per annum for renewals under certain contracts made between himself and the association in its earlier days, and by his last will he released the association of one-third of this claim upon the condition that you should be elected his successor. You were accordingly elected, and of course the claim to the extent of one-third, or $20,000, per annum was thereby extinguished. Ordinarily an extinguished claim has no great marketable value, but you turned this one into gold by merely having your name placed upon the pay-roll for the required amount. You, therefore, got the presidency for which the legacy was given, and you got the legacy also. I respectfully suggest that you call this fund a secret service fund, and persuade Mr. Moss to come back and take charge of it.

This pay-roll must be a remarkable document, for no one is allowed to see it except the paymaster and yourself. On the 18th of July last I wrote you as follows:

'As I desire in my official capacity, as chairman of the executive committee, to inspect and verify the pay-roll each week, kindly instruct Mr. Butts to submit it to me. He informs me that his instructions are not to allow any one to see it without your order.'

Although I have been a director for several years and chairman of the executive committee, I am denied the right to see this document. I am now informed that it is used for all sorts of irregular purposes, and that under cover of regular salaries large payments are being made constantly which have not been properly authorized. I had a glimpse of its working upon one occasion when you and Mr. Eldridge and I met a few months ago to discuss a percentage reduction of our salaries, which was carried out. [This was a farce reduction of salaries, as it only lasted three weeks, except in the cases of Mr. Wells and Mr. Stevenson, who would not accept the increase.—Ed. Interview.] I supposed at the time, and you both led me to believe, that Mr. Eldridge's salary was $200 per week, and it was reduced on that basis, but afterward I learned that he was on the pay-roll in two places and that the reduction only affected about half of his salary.

Amongst others, as I am reliably informed, the name of one of your outside directors appears on the roll for a salary of $300 per week, although he has no duties to perform and no work to do, other than attend the weekly meetings of the board, for which he receives the usual allowance. The purpose for which this large salary, amounting to $15,000 per annum, is paid, has, I understand, never been communicated to the board or the executive committee, and has only recently been divulged by accident.

I do not know whether Mr. Miller's name is on the pay-roll or not, but I have reason to believe that he has been paid a salary of $500 per month for doing absolutely nothing.

By all accounts the pay-roll is an amusing document, but it is unfair to the rest of the directors that you should have all the fun to yourself.

If the pay-roll is fair and square it ought to be open for inspection by the chairman of the executive committee at all events.

Early in July, 1898, with the unanimous approval of the board, the executive committee met and resolved upon a general reduction in the salaries, my own salary being reduced by one-third. I do not know exactly how this plan was worked out, nor whether the reduced scale has been adhered to, and not having access to the pay-rolls do I know whether there were other incidents similar to that which occurred in the case of Mr. Eldridge, to which I have referred, but within a few weeks after the reductions were made the executive committee proposed against my protest to reinstate my salary to the extent of $50 per week. I then deemed it expedient to put my protest upon record, and wrote you the following letter:

New York, July 18, 1898.

F. A. Burnham, Esq., President.

My Dear Mr. Burnham :

Appreciating the action of the executive committee in increasing my remuneration by $50 per week, I cannot, in view of the present financial condition of the association, consistently accept of this increase.

The duty of the management is now plain. Every expenditure should be carefully weighed and where practicable cut down with a view of creating as large a surplus as possible from dues—income, and adding the same to our morturay funds, for the payment of death losses.

You will, therefore, if instructions have been given to the paymaster to add $50 per week to my salary, please countermand the same, as I cannot under any circumstances receive it.

I desire in my official capacity as chairman of the executive committee to inspect and verify the pay-roll each week, kindly instruct Mr. Butts to submit it to me. He informs me that his instructions are not to allow any one to see it without your order.

Yours respectfully,

J. D. WELLS,
Chairman Executive Committee.

During my absence in London, in July, 1897, to April, 1898, you conceived and put into force a plan nearly doubling the mortuary assessments of our older policy-holders. It was reported in London that this was done for the purpose of driving them out and selling the business to another corporation, but this was such a monstrous proposition that I declined to believe it. Apart from this, it was, in my judgment, a wanton, cruel, and unnecessary procedure. It made bitter enemies of our policy-holders. It utterly demoralized the agency staff. It strangled the new business, and it caused an avalanche of lapses.

Shortly after my return I interrogated you as to a circular which at the time of the last reapportionment of rates you had caused to be sent to the fifteen-year policy-holders, and which notified them that their rates would be further increased each year, and specified their future increasing rates up to the age of eighty years. I characterized this circular as ill-advised and idiotic from a business point of view. Its certain effect would be and has been to drive out the healthy and keep the unhealthy policy-holders. It was alarming, unnecessary, and, I believe, unconstitutional. It was a departure from our well-established principles as advocated and fought for by our late president, E. B. Harper, and it was exactly what our enemies wanted.

I stated my views to you and asked for an explanation, and you replied: 'We had an object in issuing that circular.'

I did not then understand the full significance of your reply, but I do now.

Upon the cancellation of Mr. Moss's contract and making of a new contract in January, 1898, it was agreed that all commissions on deferred or unpaid premiums on business secured under the cancelled contract should belong to the association. Mr. Vrooman, in his letter to you of June 25th, puts this matter clearly and forcibly, and refers to a menorandum indorsed at the time upon a voucher by Mr. Underhill, who in all cases represented you, in these words : 'All credits upon 1897 business revert to the association, and we assumed the agents' accounts.' However, in February, March, April and May, 1898, Mr. Moss presented claims for commissions on business secured under his cancelled contract of 1897, the premiums on which became due and were paid to the association in 1898, subsequent to such cancellation, and you paid him $7,421.88 in cash, although you assumed his sub-agents' accounts, for which he was personally liable, to the extent of $158,000, and although he was indebted to the association on other accounts to the extent of at least $40,000. Was this larceny or hypnotism?

I do not charge you with having been Mr. Moss's partner in the cash matters to which I have referred, but you are probably not aware of the extent to which public opinion is against you upon this question, nor how pronounced it is among the employees of the association who surround you. This is caused partly by your extraordinary intimacy with Mr. Moss, whom you cannot even respect, partly by the sudden display of extravagance and swagger in which you both indulged, but mainly because you have submitted in silence for a year to the most persistent and specific charges of fraud that I ever saw in a newspaper. This newspaper boldly defies you to take legal proceedings, which I submit is your duty to do officially if not personally. It is widely distributed among our policy-holders, not only directly by the publishers, but by the agents of rival insurance companies, and has done incalculable injury to the association. Mr. Harper would not have delayed criminal proceedings one single hour.

Under your instructions Mr. Eldridge recently prepared and submitted to the board for adoption a plan for reducing the annual expenditure by $500,000, and it is obvious that the adoption of Mr. Eldridge's report by the board is an official admission that no increase of the assessment was necessary. If this reduction is possible now it was always possible.

Had you adopted the plan of economical management, which you now recommend, even two years ago ; had you not by your transfer plan cheated the mortuary fund of $300,000, and squandered at least much more upon Mr. Moss, you would have saved over $1,000,000, which was more than enough, saying nothing of the reserve fund, to meet all demands without resorting to the expedient of increasing the assessments.

If the association is to be saved it will not be under your administration. Nothing that you can do, nothing that you can say will restore public confidence. No one will believe that you have submitted to the humiliation that I have described ; that you have deliberately ignored the rules and regulations of the association ; that you have permitted with open eyes the demoralization of the agency department ; that you have compelled thousands of our policy-holders to abandon their policies, and that you have insulted the name and memory of your friend and benefactor all for the sake of your friend Mr. Moss.

Mr. Moss is an excellent confidant in many respects, but he lacks one indispensable qualification—he cannot keep his mouth shut.

While I firmly believe in the solvency of the association I am convinced that public confidence can only be restored by your resignation and by the election in your stead of a man with stainless name and a national reputation. I prefer Gen. James because, having resigned the first vice-presidency, his acceptance of the position of president would have a practical significance and do more to restore public confidence than the election of any other man. If under his administration a circular were issued promising reduced expenses, an honest organization I believe that confidence would be restored, and that some atonement would be made for the maladministration of the past three years.

You have doubtless been informed that criminal proceedings are imminent and have been temporarily delayed. Personally, I am averse to such extreme measures, although others insist upon them. My only desire is to save the association, and if that can be accomplished by your resignation I am, so far as I am concerned, willing to let by-gones be by-gones. But, inasmuch as I regard your remaining in office to mean the dissolution of the association sooner or later, I shall do my duty no matter what may be the consequences.

As to the general management, you have placed yourself in the hands of an able but unsuccessful actuary ; as to the management of details you placed yourself in the hands of a scheming adventurer ; in fact, you handicapped yourself right and left. You assumed toward almost everybody who approached you, particularly the agents, an arrogant manner, and you often personally insulted them. On one of those occasions you declared to Mr. Page of Baltimore, one of our oldest, most respectable, intelligent, and successful agents, that to be an agent of President Harper's time was detrimental to his future success, and this sentiment, controlled all your movements.

You and Mr. Moss forced several of our very best agents to give up their contracts, such men as Mr. Page, of Baltimore, Mr. Robison, of Omaha, Mr. Easton, of Cincinnati, Mr. Ludwig, of Erie, and Mr. Hay, of Charlestown, and I have had numerous letters from several other prominent agents who tell me that they only remain at their posts because they feel confident that there would soon be a change in the management. On the other hand, many of the agents employed by Mr. Moss, particularly in the transfer business, were unscrupulous, and most of the transfers were obtained by fraud and misrepresentation. He preferred agents of the Zucker type—Zucker, the great manufacturer of San Francisco, and the controller of the western coast, according to Mr. Moss, and to whom he gave a salary of $200 per week, ($10,000 per annum.) Mr. Zucker sent in no business, of course, but it was not until Mr. Cameron went to San Francisco and found him occupying a single small room in a back street and engaged in making puff balls for killing moths that his contract was cancelled. Nevertheless, Mr. Zucker, although expensive, was harmless and preferable to many of Mr. Moss's agents.

You have been tried and found wanting ; you have disorganized the whole agency organization ; you have squandered our resources ; you have needlessly and cruelly driven out thousands of the older members and terrified the rest ; you have depleted the mortuary fund to the extent of at least $300,000 in one transaction, and while you have diminished the surplus, the assets, the business in force, and the new business, by millions of dollars, you increased the cost of management last year by nearly a quarter of a million ; you have made the association a by-word and a laughing stock all over this continent ; you have had enough of it, and so have the policy-holders, and in the name of those who are left I ask you to resign.

Yours truly,

(Signed) J. D. WELLS.

Is not that a terrible indictment from one of their own men ? They submitted this question to General B. F. Tracy, I think he was secretary of the United States Navy and he is recognized to be one of the greatest lawyers in America. This is what he writes to the auditor :—

My Deas Sir,—In answer to the first question submitted in writing by you to me—namely, is there a prima facie case for a criminal prosecution against Mr. Burnham or Mr. Moss or both of them, I have no hesitation in saying that, upon the facts submitted by you to me, both Mr. Burnham and Mr. Moss have committed acts which submit them to criminal prosecution.

The contract in 1897, referred to, must under the constitution and by-laws of the association be executed by the executive committee, and could not be made by the president alone. Any secret material change or modification of that contract after its execution by the proper officers of the association, as made by the substitution of, the middle sheet of that contract would amount to the crime of forgery committed by all parties participating in a fraudulent substitution of the sheet.

Referring to the bequest of E. B. Harper to the company and to the subsequent resolution by the board placing this request at the disposal of the president. 'To be used by him in the interest of the association,' if it shall appear that this money has been drawn by the president and appropriated for his own private use he is guilty of the crime of larceny.

Referring to the draft of 1,500 pounds drawn in favour of Moss's account and the subsequent direction of the president to have the amount of this draft credited to Moss and charged to 'Agency Expenses' for special services rendered by Mr. Moss during the last half of 1896, and if it shall appear as you state that Moss rendered no services and that no vouchers were ever presented for such services, and that this was but a fraudulent device to transfer to Moss the moneys of the corporation for which he had rendered no services, Mr. Burnham is guilty of the crime of larceny and both Burnham and Moss are guilty of conspiracy to defraud the company.

Upon the facts stated by you there is, in my judgment, abundant cause to petition the attorney general to institute a suit in the name of the people for the removal of Burnham on the ground of official misconduct, from office, both as trustee and as president of the association.

Yours very truly,

B. F. TRACY.

Now that is a pretty sweeping opinion to give and publish in the newspapers far and wide, yet we in Canada, with all the checks we have know nothing about it. I have been four years trying to prevent this company from robbing the people in Canada, but somehow our Lady of the Snows freezes up sometimes. Mr. Cameron of Toronto says that if anybody wants to take action he should do so at once before all the assets of the company are gone. Mr. Cameron was taken down there from Toronto, where he had been under secretary of the treasury. He was taken there at a large salary. He writes in one of those papers to the company that if the men that are interested want to get their money they cannot be too quick in sueing. But how are poor widows and orphans to successfully sue a company like that ? Take the case of a man who has saved year after year, hoping at his death to leave something for his widow and orphans. What position are such people in to sue a company ? Our law courts are all right and loyal men, and they will act as long as you have money to keep a law suit going, but no longer. I remember a case in Rothesay where two brothers Mickey and Billy Bradley quarrelled and resorted to litigation. When the trial took place Mickey turned up but Billy did not. The lawyers bowed to the judge and to one another, went into a room and came back and said the case was settled. The result was they got $300 from Billy. To raise it he had to mortgage his farm, and they finally got the whole of Billy's farm from Mickey. There was no money to go on with the suit, and so they settled the case. I will give you the statements of the Insurance Commissioner of the United States. He was asked to put the company into liquidation, but he says in his report, I cannot do it under the law ; it is not a stock company. If there are a hundred men who are willing to assess themselves all the time, how can you prevent them doing so ? So long as they can get assessments from the people we are not able to put them into insolvency. I wrote to the various commissioners in the United States asking them what they had to say about it, and I received this from the Hon. E. H. Dearth, insurance commissioner of the state of Minnesota. He says—and this will meet my case :

Of the regular ordinary assessment class of associations, which apparently is now undergoing a life and death struggle, is the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York City. Its sworn statement filed with this department, covering its business and financial affairs as of December 31, 1900, shows accumulated and unpaid death claims of an amount exceeding $1,800,000, which exceeds by more than one-half the total amount of claims paid during the entire year of 1900.

While they were assessing all those unfortunate people under the plea that they required the money, they were leaving those claims unpaid. How could any of the insured know what was going on in that office, when Mr. Burnham and vice-president Eldridge do not know what is going on ? There is nobody to tell the public that the company are not paying claims as they mature, but they scale all the policies they can by representing that something was wrong with the risk and they have a clause in their articles of association which says that they are not bound to pay anybody until sixty days after they have accepted proof of claim. But they take a long time to accept proof of claim. They put up a contention that a man was not a good risk, or some other such contention, until claimants are glad to take anything they can get, and they scale them down to whatever they can force them to take for their claim. Having done that they require them to sign a letter saying how honourably they have been treated by the company, and this letter is published. The commissioner continues:—

In addition to this enormous accumulation of claims there were many thousands of dollars due for accrued and unpaid indebtedness, on account of expense, &c. As a result of this showing, and numerous ugly rumours concerning its management, which had persistently come to the attention of the department, I deemed it my duty, as a matter of safeguarding the interests of the present and prospective Minnesota policyholders to make a thorough investigation of its affairs previous to issuing its renewal license and the officers of the association were accordingly advised by the following letter, under date of March 20, 1901 :

Gentlemen,—In checking over your annual statement it is clear to be seen that your financial condition is anything but satisfactory. A company that has on its books accrued and unpaid losses in the sum of nearly $2,000,000—to be exact, $1,825,119—which amount is but little less, comparatively speaking than its total available cash assets, certainly has reason to feel very doubtful as to its future. In addition to this it appears that there is due for salaries, rents, and other incidental expenses nearly $61,-000.

I am frank to state that I am inclined to hesitate very much about granting a renewal license to your company for the transaction of business in Minnesota during the present year. Taking into consideration the actual financial showing as set forth in your sworn statement, together with the numerous ugly rumours that have come to this department as to the exact status of your financial affairs, it seems best in order that the interests of the policy-holders of this state should be fully protected that the renewal license of your company be held pending an investigation which I have under consideration of your company's affairs. I shall endeavour to visit the office of your company some time during the month of April for the purpose of entering upon the proposed investigation.

Yours very truly,

ELMER H. DEARTH,
Insurance Commissioner.

I have also a letter in my hand written by Lloyd Wilkinson, State Insurance Commissioner at Baltimore, which is as follows :—

Dear Sir,—For many months past this department has been receiving numerous complaints and inquiries as to the way and manner of your conducting business and as to the financial standing of your company. Some of these complaints we have thoroughly investigated, and the facts either admitted on your part or proved on the part of the complainants show such a state of affairs as renders it absolutely necessary, if we desire to protect the interest of policy-holders in this state, that I should notify you of my intention to refuse to issue a license to your company to do business in this state for the next year, unless your action in laying liens against the old policy-holders shall be reversed. Out of the numerous complaints made against your company I made a thorough investigation of the Buckman case.

In my effort to learn all the facts that could bear upon the question and make the best showing possible for the company, I visited you in New York, talked freely with your counsel in this city and sought information in all directions. The report of the New York department is anything but a compliment to the company. From the beginning to the end it is simply a series of criticism upon its management. I did not order an examination of the company, because there were sufficient facts admitted to be true to justify me in refusing to renew your license.

I send you this notice in ample time for you to take any legal steps that you may deem desirable.

Very truly yours,
LLOYD WILKINSON,
State Insurance Commissioner.

Here is a paper which was placed in my hands this morning, sent from New York. It is called the 'Life Insurance Independent.' In it I find the following.

THE MUTUAL RESERVE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

Marshall, Minn., Oct. 6, 1903.

To the Editor,—I have a prospect who carries a $2,000 policy in the Mutual Reserve Life of New York. He is 61 years old and pays about $60 a year. Would you consider it in any degree safe, or would you advise him to drop it at once and buy regular life insurance ?

————Dist. Agt.

We are in constant receipt of such inquiries as yours. As responding by mail is becoming wearisome, we trust that the following answer may serve for some time to come :

Judging from the premium paid, your client probably holds one of the old assessment policies which comprise the bulk of the company's business. If so, it is also probable that there is a reserve lien against the policy for a large amount, and that a further lien for extra mortality will be asserted after his death, leaving the beneficiary but a fraction of the face amount. In most cases such policies have been settled for from 35 to 50 per cent of the sum to which the beneficiaries supposed themselves entitled.

If your client is now insurable, we are constrained to advise him to seek protection in a sound and safe company without delay. If he is unable to secure insurance elsewhere, he must judge for himself whether it is advisable to hold on to what he has in this company, after considering the following facts :

OF DOUBTFUL SOLVENCY.

The financial condition of the company is such as to inspire little confidence in its solvency or permanence. Its last annual statement (Rhode Island Insurance Report, 1903, page 112) shows total admitted assets of $5,741,678.70, with net liabilities of $4,226,658.28, leaving a possible margin of $545,020.42. A brief glance at the character of some of those assets will indicate the precarious and doubtful nature of that surplus or margin of $515,020.

In the first place, the claim of over five millions of gross assets is essentially deceptive in that over two millions of this sum consists of reserve lien. These liens represent the amount which the policies against which they are charged will be scaled down at death. They are not genuine loans, do not represent a dollar of money ever held by the company or received by the policy-holder.

These liens, however, bear interest at 5 per cent, and the foregoing assets include interest due and accrued thereon to the amount of $90,-835. This makes almost one year's interest on the whole amount, and means that much of it is past due. This overdue interest is largely on policies that the holders have determined to abandon, and will therefore never be collected.

The book value company's estimate of the real estate included in the assets is put at $682,-448.04. Of this amount $483,660.50 is the company's valuation of what is known as the 'Mutual Reserve Building.' The company does not own this building nor the ground upon which it stands nor any part of either, this property belonging to the Wild Estate of Boston, Mass. It has simply a lease of the building (with about 30 years yet to run) upon which it pays a rental to the owners of $60,000 a year, and is held also for all taxes, repairs, insurance, &c. It is expected to recoup itself from rents by sub-letting, but so far there has been a deficit in nearly every year. It is extremely doubtful whether a level-headed business man could be found who would be willing to take the lease-hold off the company's hands as a gift, if he were obliged at the same time to become personally responsible for the ground rent, taxes, &c. This item was disallowed by the Massachusetts insurance department to the amount of $250,000.

Included in the assets also is the alleged 'market value of real estate over book values, $59,382.38.' As over 70 per cent of the alleged real estate consists of the said lease-hold, and as any valuation of real estate is at best only an estimate, you may judge for yourself as to the probable value of that item of $59,382.38.

A further item of assets consists of first year's premium notes, $40,114.79. Every insurance man knows that first year premium notes are not on the average worth 50 cents on the dollar, and they are rarely allowed as assets, even when a corresponding reserve is charged against them. As the Mutual Reserve is on a preliminary term basis, there is no reserve in the first year, so that this item of $40,114.79 simply represents the unsecured notes of Tom, Dick and Harry, generally irresponsible and who are pretty sure to become dissatisfied with their contracts before the notes come due, and to repudiate them accordingly.

Included in the list of assets is the sum of $832,594 'uncollected and deferred premiums.' This item is remarkbly large for a company with a total premium income of only $4,579,808.82, and indicates that a large part of these 'uncollected' premiums never will be collected. To illustrate the extraordinary disproportion of this item, compare it with other companies. Then New York Life for example, with a premium income more than 14 times that of the Mutual Reserve, had only 5½ times as much in deferred and uncollected premiums. The New England Mutual had a total premium income of $4,562,-764, or practically the same as that of the Mutual Reserve, while its deferred and uncollected premiums were only $558,491.32, a difference of $274,103. In addition to this the Mutual Reserve claims 'net premiums in transit' $137,-260, an item of extremely doubtful character and not found in the report of any other company so far as we have been able to discover. If allowed at all, it should be added to 'uncollected and deferred premiums,' making that item $969,854.

Look now at the list of assets of doubtful character as referred to above :

Interest on liens	$ 90,835 00
Valuation of leasehold	483,660 50
Alleged market value of real estate over book value	59,382 38
First year premium notes	40,114,79
Uncollected and deferred premiums	832,594 00
Net premiums in transit	137,260 00

It is impossible to escape the conviction that a considerable part of each of the above items is worthless, and that an honest examination of the company would throw out much more than enough to sweep away its supposed surplus of $515,020.42.

DILATORY SETTLEMENT OF DEATH CLAIMS.

It cannot be denied by the company or its friends that it is extremely given to delaying and resisting payment of death claims—far more so than any other company in the field. This charge we make without fear of even an attempt at refutation. The company's last annual statement shows total unpaid claims of $1,088,147.57, although the total amount paid for losses during the year was only $2,878,068.88. And it must not be overlooked that the unpaid claims do not include the face amount of the policies, as in the case of other companies, but the net amount after deducting liens. To illustrate : A policy of $1,000 having become a claim, with liens of say $350, the claim will be listed as an unpaid loss of only $650 ; yet that same claim when once settled will be entered in 'losses paid,' for the full face amount of $1,000. This is another respect in which the reserve lien system is a constant source of deception to the public. Unpaid or contested claims are reported at the net amount—the face of the policy less liens. Once the claim is settled it is reported at its face amount.

RAPID DECLINE OF THE COMPANY.

Nothing shows more clearly the dissatisfaction of those insured in the company and their want of confidence in the good faith of its management, and nothing indicates more forcibly the early dissolution of the organization than its rapid loss of membership. On December 31, 1896, the company had insurance in force to the amount of $325,026,061. Since that date and up to December 31, 1902, it has written $211,068,976 more, making a total of $536,095,037. On December 31, 1902, it had in force $127,960,188, indicating a loss in six years of $408,135,849. In other words, it has lost over 74 per cent of the business which it had in force six years ago and what it has since written. The following table indicates the rapid disintegration that is taking place :

Year. Dec. 31,	New insurance written.	Insurance in force,	Loss from prev's. year.
1897..	$56,234,785	$301,567,101	$23,458,960
1898..	32,027,390	205,841,936	95,725,165
1899..	22,931,580	173,714,683	32,127,253
1900..	55,880,616	180,646,239	.....
1901..	21,648,365	155,358,627	25,287,612
1902..	22,346,240	127,960,188	27,398,439

In 1900, as per above table, there was an apparent gain of nearly $7,000,000 owing to the absorption in that year of the deteriorated risks of the defunct Northwestern Life Insurance Company, an insolvent assessment organization of Chicago. The business thus secured was stated by the company at the time to be about $60,000,000, but as much of it lapsed without paying another assessment, the net amount acquired was less than that, the whole business written during the year being placed at $55,880,616.

YOUR PLAIN DUTY.

Let me ask you now, does it seem to you that you would be justified in advising any man who is struggling to make provision for his wife and children to hazard all upon a company which gives so little promise of permanence, whose present solvency is a matter of such grave doubt, whose management is so remiss in settling with the widows and orphans of deceased members ? Why should a trust so sacred be placed in such hands when the man can have his choice of a number of old well established companies concerning whose permanence there cannot be the shadow of a doubt ?

UNDER THE OFFICIAL BAN.

No man can afford to take any chance in placing interests of such vast importance. A life insurance company which is in general disrepute with its own members, and which is condemned by even a single insurance department because of its financial condition or its failure to keep faith with its policy-holders, should not be trusted for a moment. State insurance departments are proverbially lenient in their treatment of concerns of doubtful solvency. Many department officials are merely subservient politicians, some have little latitude under the law beyond requiring the filing of an annual statement, some shirk their duty under cloak of 'courtesy' to the home department of the offending company, and some alas! are notoriously corrupt. Under such conditions, the refusal of a single state to license a company on account of its financial condition or its failure to keep faith with policy-holders should be a sufficient warning to any man to give that company a wide berth. Of some legal reserve organizations in the United States, many of them reorganized assessment companies like the Mutual Reserve, we know of but one that has been refused a license in any state for reasons stated above, and that one is the Mutual Reserve. Insolvent and illegal assessment companies are frequently under the ban, but only one legal reserve organization rests to-day under official condemnation.

The Mutual Reserve is at this time excluded for cause from the eight states of Minnesota, California, Colorado, Tennessee, Kentucky, New Hampshire, Vermont and Connecticut, and from the district of Columbia. It has at times in the recent past, for reasons affecting its financial condition or the integrity and good faith of its management—its failure to pay death claims in accordance with contract, &c.—been temporarily excluded from such states as Maryland, Nebraska, Wisconsin, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa and others. Its business in Kentucky is to-day in the hands of a receiver, and in Canada it is to be called upon to defend itself in a senatorial investigation against the charge of having made false returns to the government.

Is not the presumption clear that it would be unwise for any man to entrust the welfare of wife and children to this organization, when he can have the choice of so many that are above suspicion and beyond reproach? Is it not equally clear that you and I shall be remiss in our duty to others if we fail to warn those looking to us for advice, not to place their trust in such an institution as this?

Through the courtesy of some members of this House, I am allowed to proceed with this motion to-day. I was anxious earlier in the session to have placed this matter before the House in order that we might have time to think it over and that nothing unfair might be done. Out of deference to the hon. Secretary of State, I stayed my hand for the moment, but after his declaration yesterday the course is clear. The government, I am pleased to see, have abandoned the company because had the government been able to satisfy me, I should of course have bowed with deference to the ministers of the Crown who have had such large experience in the affairs of this country, and I should have considered what I would do.

Here we are protecting them, and there is only one term applicable to the assured ; they are a parcel of suckers. These men are getting our money and at the same time they are in the hands of a receiver in the state of Kentucky. Here is what the Hon. J. Martin, Q.C., wrote :—

George T. Eldridge,
Vice-president of the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company, New York.

Dear Sir,—Yours of the 17th inst. to hand. It seems to me that in connection with my policy I have been the victim of a deliberate swindle on your part. Your last letter admits that the deduction of $1,508.90 which you caused to be made in the face value of my policy as of the 23rd January, 1901, was made in pursuance of section 3, article 7 of your by-laws, which said section was amended at the meeting which took place on the 23rd of January, 1901. When I received notice of the proposed amendment I wrote you on the 21st of January, 1901, and I received your reply dated the 30th of January, 1901, in which you state in the clearest language that the proposed amendment could not in any way effect my policy.

The company write and say they could not affect his policy but put it on him nevertheless. The letter continues :—

I then received a letter from you stating that two days after I had written my said letter, and seven days before you had sent me said reply, my policy was charged up with said sum of $1,508.90. In your letter received to-day, dated February 17th, 1903, you state that notice was sent to the several policy-holders affected by the amount of the existing deficiency. No such notice was ever sent to me.

They got the money first before they let him know they were putting it on him. The letter continues :—

Since receiving your letter of January 30th, 1901, I have continued to pay the by-monthly assessments and also paid three additional assessments on the clear and distinct understanding and agreement that I had a policy good for $10,000 in case of my death. You now come along and inform me that if I had died at any time subsequent to the 23rd day of January, 1901, the said sum of $1,508.90 would have been deducted from my said policy.

The poor people do not know what these officials in New York will do to them. The letter proceeds :—

If you can give me any plainer instance of deliberate fraud and of obtaining money under false pretenses I would like to receive it from you.

If you or any of the other officers of this company who have been guilty of this plain deception upon me, will come into Canada I will prosecute you under our criminal laws, for obtaining money under false pretenses, and you will have the pleasure of putting in a considerable period of time in one of our jails or penitentiary.

If you had sent me notice of the proposed change or if in answer to my letter of the 21st of January, 1901, you had replied that the matter would be taken up later, and that I was liable to be charged with that sum or some other sum, I could then have had the option of continuing my payments, but you deliberately kept me in the dark and in fact expressly lied to me in your letter of January 30th, 1901, for the purpose, as far as I can see, of inducing me to continue my payments to your company on the assumption that my policy was intact.

I may say that I took this insurance from Mr. A. R. McNichol, a gentleman in whom I have always had the greatest of confidence as an honourable man. I am sending him to-day copies of your letters of January 30th, 1901, December 22nd, 1902, February 17th, 1903, and a copy of this letter.

I am well aware that the statements I am making in this letter charging you with deliberate crime are actionable, if not true, and in fact would subject me to a charge of criminal libel. I should be very much pleased indeed if you would take proceedings of that kind against me, so that I may be able to show to the public at large and more especially to your deluded policy-holders, the manner in which I have been treated.

What kind of a letter was that for a company to get ? There is a letter from James R. Young, insurance commissioner, dated April 12, 1904, in which he states :—

This company is not now doing business in this state. They left the state June 1st, 1899. They were not ruled out of the state, except that they were not willing to comply with the requirements of our law. Since that time they have not been licensed to do business in this state and have done no business legally; but have furnished over three-fourths of all the suits in this state commenced and prosecuted against insurance companies and associations. Their record in this state is not good.

Then a letter from E. Myron Wolfe, commissioner, San Francisco, reads as follows :

The Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company applied for a certificate of authority as a legal reserve company, and I have declined to issue same. Suit has been brought by them against me, praying for a writ of mandate to be issued to compel me to grant them a certificate of authority, and also for $50,000 damages. This is now pending in the court.

Then a letter from the state of Kentucky reads as follows :—

The reason of the non-license of this company is on account of its existing conditions at the time of its changing from an assessment to a legal reserve life insurance company, and its treatment of its policy-holders in Kentucky and elsewhere was such as to impress the insurance commissioner of this state with the opinion that it was no longer wise for him to permit this concern to do business here.

In reading this I want to show the House that the statement in the newspaper is correct. It is not all balderdash. I am proving what is in the newspaper by letters received by me during this session of parliament from Lincoln, Nebraska. Mr. Pierce, insurance deputy there writes :—

Replying to your letter, will state that this company has been doing business in this state, but at the present time license is withheld on account of a protest which has been filed with this department against the company. The protest charges that the company has not dealt fairly with certain of its members in regard to their assessment. I cannot say when this protest will be heard.

Then the state commissioner of Louisiana writes :—

This company withdrew after controversy because of ruling of department requiring all patents to be stamped 'assessment plan.'

This will show that the question I am bringing up now is not at all new. It is a matter that is known to all the insurance people in the world. Yet we in Canada are compelled to submit to the treatment we are receiving, and we can get no redress. I am not charging the government with making the law. I am not charging that the government can help the law. I am only saying the law exists on the statute-book in such a way that it is hard to get redress. Now, with all these statements, can hon. gentlemen be surprised at my taking the matter up ? These letters are written from different sections of the Dominion. Can hon. gentlemen be surprised at my taking up the case and coming to this House of Peers, as it is called, the head law makers of the country, to men of experience who are here to inquire into such matters ? Can it be said that I have no case, that I was simply trying to make a personal attack on these people, that there was nothing in it ? I have only started to place before hon. gentlemen enough evidence to justify the course I am taking and I have a good deal more to bring before the House. Having justified the line of action I have taken I will ask the House to adjourn the debate until the government brings down the information I have asked for, and which when placed in the hands of hon. gentlemen will show whether what I have said has any bearing on the question.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—How far would the deposit which the company has made with the government go in paying the policies issued in this country ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—A very short distance, but I propose to suggest to this honourable House a remedy when we get down to that. I think I will be able to show we are paying $350,000 a year into the hands of this company. I am speaking in round figures. I think only $200,000 or $250,000 went to New York last year to the head office. I would suggest to the poor bleeding policy-holders that they put all the assessments in a bag here, and not send it over there to be spent in diamonds and brooches and such things.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I noticed in the commencement of the hon. gentleman's statement he said a case had been tried in England which led to a decision by the judges of the court there for the return of all the premiums and four per cent. He did not tell us the cause of action. We should know that.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—It was an action for breach of contract. Foster had taken out a policy under certain terms, and there was gross misrepresentation on the part of the company, and the Court of Appeal so ruled, and ordered the company to pay back all the money they had received with four per cent, which is the legal rate of interest. I will move the adjournment of the debate until we get the return I have asked for.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—We should not have this debate going on from day to day.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—It is very important.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Yes, and that is just the reason why it should not be allowed to stand from day to day. Statements have been made which ought to be answered.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I should be very willing to fix Friday, so that there will be time to obtain the return. It is all important for the people of this country. There are twelve million dollars belonging to widows and orphans at stake.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I submit there should be a definite adjournment till a particular day, so that we would know when the matter was to come up ; otherwise the motion may never be reached.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I am informed the papers will be brought down by Friday.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—If my hon. friend will consent to its standing till next week I would have no objection. Otherwise I should wish to say something on the motion to adjourn.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Then I will fix it for Monday.

The SPEAKER—Then it is understood that the debate will be adjourned till Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (G) An Act for the relief of Jennie Davison Moore.—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Cobourg.)

INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto) introduced Bill (H) An Act to amend the Insurance Act. He said: In moving the first reading of this Bill, perhaps it would be convenient that I should say a word or two by way of explanation. Under our law, as it stood at the time of the General Insurance Act, insurance companies were authorized to organize and were authorized to do business on what is known as the assessment plan, the plan about which we heard something yesterday. In 1885 one company, doing a large business on the other side of the line, took advantage of the provisions of the Act and became licensed by the then government to do business on the assessment plan. This assessment plan is after the fashion of the Mutual Insurance business. It means that assessments are to be made in proportion as holders of policies hold policies in amount and in proportion as the calls are payable in respect of their policies. Premiums are required for the maintenance of them and they shall contribute such sums as may be necessary to provide for losses arising through the death of members. It was supposed that by determining upon a certain proportion of calls that these sums would cover the amount of the death losses or would approximate it, and that so the amount which would be required, and which would be paid according to the systems that were adopted by all the companies on their obligations in respect of death losses, would be made. It will be apparent to hon. members that the efficiency of such a system would be dependent entirely upon the amount of assessments required in such cases, and if the amounts which were required to be paid were not sufficient, new assessments would have to be made. Under this plan the company which was referred to yesterday in another debate, to which I do not intend to refer, but which I mention now for the sake of convenience to impress it on the members' minds, made application and became licensed to carry on business on the assessment plan. In their case it appears that their expectation was that by doing a large volume of business, the percentage of cost and the percentage of losses would be less in proportion than they would be in the case of a small business, and so with a determination to push the company they succeeded in building up a very large business. So long as that business was increasing and growing it was not apparent that the estimates and plans on which they were working were fallacious. It was assumed, in other words, that as the business grew and assumed sufficient proportions the interest upon the investments and the small margin there might be and the reduction of the proportion of cost—these things combined would enable the company to charge less premiums than under the ordinary system of life insurance which it is well known to everybody would be required. Now, acting on that, they established this business, which grew to very large proportions, some $360,000,000 was stated yesterday to be the amount of business they had at one time obtained. That continued until, unfortunately, differences arose in the management. These became accentuated so that one side of the management, if you may use that expression, was so antagonistic that the other had to give way. One of the gentlemen whose names were mentioned yesterday was vice-president of this particular company and a director. When the election came on he was dropped and ceased to be either a director or vice-president. As might naturally be expected, differences arose, and when those differences became public, the business of the company no longer increased. There was a stop, so to speak, in the growth of the volume of business, and it became apparent, as the business dropped, as specialists in life insurance had anticipated, that the system was not going to work without increased assessments. Large assessments would have been called for but for one reason or another they were not made. Ultimately assessments were called for, and these were so large in excess of what was anticipated that there was a great outcry about it, and so the business fell from $360,000,000 down to the figures which have been mentioned. I state this for the purpose of illustrating what is sought to be accomplished by this Bill. Under the provisions of the insurance law, as I say, the assessment plan was recognized. Then in 1899 an amendment was made in the law, at the request of the very company that was spoken of yesterday, to provide that such a company as that —but it was not special—could enter into what might be called the old line insurance business, and that it could, by serving a notice, start that new business, which was the old legitimate line business of life insurance, with fixed premiums of a standard called for, and required by the Act in cases of companies incorporated and licensed by the government of Canada to do business in that way. Then inasmuch as under the previous business that had been done by the company, reserves or sums representing reserve funds had been deposited with the government in amendment to the general law it was provided that in case a company would elect to go into the general business, the deposits which had been made with the government forming a reserve in respect to the assessment plan, should be kept separate and distinct from those which were paid in necessarily under the provisions of the law with reference to what I may call the level premium rate. So that in that way, under that provision, in the case of such a company as I am speaking of there would be two separate funds in the hands of the government; one applicable to and kept separate for and in respect of the assessment plan, and another kept separate and distinct for those that were in on the level premium plan—practically two companies carrying on business in that way so far as the deposits were concerned, but one company in its management.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Does that mean that a deposit was made?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Yes. Under that plan the company has carried on in this country the level premium system, has made its deposit in the regular way with the government and left its deposit made under the assessment plan with the government. Under these circumstances the company having determined to abandon the assessment plan, the inevitable followed, which was that people who were insured dropped paying their assessments, and insured in other companies or insured on the other plan, and the result was that the assessment business fell down so that it represents, as was stated yesterday, somewhere in the neighbourhood of $8,000,000 on the assessment plan.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In Canada?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Yes, and a much larger sum in the United States, although the great bulk of the business has been transferred to the other plan. Then the question arose, as will be apparent to anybody, if that was so, this being the residuum, so to speak, of the insurance business, the people who were remaining, the lives remaining, being less valuable from an insurance point of view, and more valuable as regards the parties themselves, because their life was more uncertain, probably could not get insurance in other companies, and so paid their assessments, and these sums have been represented by deposits which have been made and which amount to some $228,000. But that business of course is of a different character from the new life insurance business. It is a residuum of the business on that plan. Under these circumstances, what is to be done? Because as these lives in the natural course would fall in, the residuum of funds would be resorted to in the ordinary course of business and the longer lives of the insured would have no provision—the funds would be absorbed and there would be no provision made in the shape of a reserve for them, so that the man who died soon in that case, might be the lucky one, as far as his heirs were concerned. It is the result, however, of a principle adopted, not by the company alone, but by different assessment companies, of trying to do business below cost.

Some people seem to think that insurance business is different from everything else, that it can be done below cost, so as a result of that this large business grew up, encouraged by the idea I spoke of before, encouraged by apparent success, and as long as the business was growing it looked as if it could be done at a profit, but the moment depression came it became apparent you could not do insurance business below cost at all. The idea was that of the old lady who represented she was selling everything she had in her establishment below cost, and when asked about it, she said yes, she made money, and when requested to explain how, she said 'Thank God I sells a great deal;' although she was selling below cost, by selling a great deal she fancied she was making money. That was the delusion under which many people insured in these assessment companies in the way I speak of. One other thing I wish to say and that is that only one company had availed itself of the provisions of the law of 1899 ; that is of giving notice of closing, so to speak, the assessment plan as to new business, and going into the new insurance on the level premium plan.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Which company is that?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—That is the company referred to yesterday, the Mutual Reserve. That company, however, has gone into the level premium business, and is doing considerable insurance in Canada, and a very large business in the United States. Under the circumstances the question that is before us is, what is to be done with reference to the policies that still remain—the $8,000,000 of insurance still remaining on the assessment plan? It will be apparent that if the company is to continue this on its present system that there will require to be assessments made from time to time amounting to very large sums in order to provide for the residuum of business and the risks that are attending upon it; whereas on the other hand it might be that by making some change in the system and converting it from an assessment plan into a level premium business each one would bear his own share and contribute towards the amount of premium which ought to be payable in respect to the benefit which he would get. That benefit might be less than it was on its face supposed to be, but really be more than ever could be paid, because the assessments would so crowd people out that the business would absolutely come to an end in that way and loss to every one would be involved.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Have they abandoned the assessment system in the United States as well as in Canada?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Yes, their business very largely has been converted into the level premium business, as I am instructed. In this case the $8,000,000 of insurance which is remaining in Canada is the only part of the business which is entitled to resort to or get the benefit of the reserves in the hands of the government. It is the continuing policy-holders who are entitled to resort to that under any circumstances. Now, what is proposed as a means of dealing with this matter equitably and fairly is to convert all the present assessment business into a level premium business on some equitable plan that will not bear too hardly on those who are in it, and at the same time will at a minimum of cost give them the largest amount of insurance possibly available. With that object in view it is proposed that the law shall be amended, so as to provide that in the case of such a company—and there is only one company I may say at once, but the law being a general law, must be amended in a general way—the holders of policies on the reserve plan shall have the option of coming in and taking a policy for an amount proportioned to either one plan or the other. The two plans which are suggested and the two options which are open to every policy-holder, are, first, that the policy-holder shall be entitled to a level premium plan policy for as large an amount as the average amount of assessment which he has paid over the course of time his policy has been running would now purchase for him on the level premium plan based on a table approved of by the government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would that system be based upon his age at the time of his insurance?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Not his present age, but his age at the time of entering the insurance company?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—What it would now purchase for him, giving him credit in the respect of the reserve which is now in the hands of the government for him for his due share of what that would be as ascertained by actuarial tables, deducting only such a proportion as would be the minimum cost of carrying the business in respect of that.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—It does not mean a paid-up policy?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It does not mean a paid-up policy. In order to illustrate what I mean; if a man went in on the plan by which he agreed to pay assessments and had paid on an average one hundred dollars a year on assessments, he got a certain policy for that amount. He ought really to have paid in $150, say half as much more as he did pay on the level premium plan. Therefore, it was supposed he was carrying business on so much reduced rate. Now this would give him just the proportion of a policy instead of giving him one for the policy he supposed he was buying; he would get a policy assured on the level premium basis for the reduced amount, and he would be entitled to get in the shape of a bonus in addition added to his policy such a sum as his proportion of the present deposit in the hands of the government would give him. He would get, therefore, the full benefit of all that he has contributed towards that deposit and something more, and he would get the full benefit in the shape of a level premium policy for all the premiums which he had on the average paid. That is one of the options. The other option is that he should be entitled to keep his policy exactly as it is. Instead of reducing the amount of the policy which he would get, he would be entitled to keep his policy exactly as it is, and he should get credit for all the premiums which he has paid in the past in the shape of assessments, and that, as to the margin of difference between that which he has actually paid in the form of assessments and what he ought to have paid on the level premium plan, he should get credit for it and it should stand as a lien against his policy payable by him when the policy would mature—in that way deducted. Of course it is a charge on the policy, but it still gives him the benefit of keeping up the amount of insurance which he wanted to effect and carry in the first place, and he would require to pay no more premium in respect to the past, but it would be a charge—what he ought to have paid and has not paid would be a charge on his policy.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And would interest be payable on that?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Yes, at a low rate, and so in the future as to premiums, he would not be required to increase the premiums beyond what he has been paying, but he would be entitled to give credit in the same way. The option would be also given to him of paying up the premiums, if he did not want to take the new policy; he would have the option to do it, although it would not be compulsory either as to arrears in respect of the past or in respect to payments in the future. So that in this way he has two options; one of getting a level premium policy, a policy upon a sound basis, representing all the premiums that he has paid in the past and having no charge or obligation against his policy at all and only bound to pay in the future what he would have paid if he had insured on the level premium principle at the time he effected the insurance. The other plan is one by which he is entitled, if he chooses, rather than do that, and some prefer it no doubt for other reasons—he can maintain the policy at the full amount that it was, get credit for what he ought to have paid and not be bound to pay it until the policy matures. So that in that way he would get the full benefit. In both cases he would be entitled to get the full benefit of his proportionate share of the deposit in the hands of the government, all of which would have to be worked out on actuarial plans and on plans which would be approved of by the superintendent of insurance.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is there any provision to meet the case of an insurer who has failed to make the payments on account of the high assessments which had been imposed and he did not feel able to carry them on ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It is impossible to do that by any plan yet suggested. It has been thought of and considered but no plan can be worked out.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Could we not get it in the paid-up policy ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—How could he get in the paid-up policy something he has never earned ? He has gone into a bad speculation and the money is gone.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—He could be reinstated by paying up the arrears.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—No doubt that could be done. There are practically the three choices. While I have placed them under two groups there are really three choices, the choice of taking a policy for the amount represented by the premiums he has actually paid : there is the choice of maintaining his policy at the same rate as it stood when he made his application, and continuing a debtor to the company, only charged with the assessments which he ought to have paid, which have not been made against it and the third by paying up what those assessments would amount to and getting the insurance stipulated for on a sound and safe basis.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the proposition a very good one. I had in mind a case of this kind : a gentleman may have an insurance for $10,000. He had paid some three thousand cash to the company, and he found the assessments afterwards were so high that his means would not justify his continuing it. I think some provision, whether the hon. gentleman has made it or not, might be made to meet a case of that kind, either by giving the assured a paid-up policy equal to the amount he had paid, payable at his death, or any other time, or allowing it to continue on by making the payments.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—One statement will show how impossible and fallacious such a thing would be, and that is this: There were $300,000,000 of insurance in this company, and all have been dropped but $80,000,000. In Canada there were $20,000,000 of insurance and $14,000,000, had been dropped. It is impossible to make $80,000,000 carry twenty, and therefore it is out of the question. The same thing occurs in every insurance company. There are many people who insure on the ordinary level premium plan, pay their premiums for a long number of years to tide them over some particular event, or intending to carry it on. A change of circumstances or other things intervene which prevent them or do not require them to continue the insurance and they drop it, and they drop every benefit there is arising from it. It must be borne in mind that this residuum of insurance is of a character that cannot be disturbed in any other way than some such plan as this, and it is this insurance which is entitled to the benefit of the whole of the deposit in the hands of the government, if they have continued and met their assessments. So that it is their money we are dealing with, and the only plan is to reserve to them their position to enable them to get something and to know exactly what it is that they are getting. Of course, if such a plan as has been suggested could be adopted, it would be a very good thing and would enable the company to revive all their old policies. It must be borne in mind that with reference to all the policies which have been dropped by the parties who hold them, because they do not pay their premium, that assessments were made and were understood to be made year by year to meet death losses, and these death losses having been paid, all their premiums have gone to pay past losses and they have really no money or no interest. Their interest has ceased in the case of those who have dropped their policies in that way.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—But they remain insured as long as they pay their premiums.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Yes, they get the benefit of it during that time certainly. I do not intend in anyway to intervene in the discussion or debate which was commenced and which is yet unfinished, but it is only fair to say, as I am dealing with the amendment of an Act, and which Act is one which will apply only to that company, that something should be said with reference to its right to come here and ask for legislation at your hands, or ask that the law should be so amended as to enable them to deal justly by the policies which are outstanding issued by that company ; and with that view it is that I wanted to say a word or two by way of reassuring the hon. members of this House. It is true, as I have pointed out before, that the trouble in this company arose through differences in the management. It is true some of those interested in that company at the time ceased to be connected with the company or to have a voice in its control, and these differences having arisen, the whole matter has been the subject of very large inquiry. As I have pointed out to you, the company carried on a very extensive business, not in every state of the union, but in most of the states of the union, in Great Britain and in other countries as well as in Canada. The charges which were made has been the subject of inquiry. They were referred to the insurance department. They were inquired into by the insurance department of the state of New York under the direction of the attorney general and the insurance commissioner, and after a full investigation of the matter there they were dealt with in a very short way by the Attorney General of the state in whose——

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Might I rise to a point of order ? Yesterday afternoon this debate was adjourned to accommodate my hon. friend who is going away to New York or somewhere else. To-day, without any notice, without even extending to me the courtesy of telling me what he was going to do, he brings in a Bill and places his side of the story before the House before my side of the story has been heard by hon. gentlemen of this chamber. I ask the House if it is in order that I should be shut out of the debate and that my hon. friend should place the other side of the question before hon. members before I have completed mine ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I might be permitted to say that I have no idea at all of intervening in that debate. When it comes on it will have to be spoken to. I was in perfect good faith in making the statement that I was intending to leave this afternoon, if my personal affairs are of any concern at all ; but the fire in Toronto has changed the plans of those who were going to meet me there and I am awaiting a telegram to know what to do. I have no desire to do anything improper in the matter, and I do not know that I am doing so in introducing a Bill to amend the law generally. I may add further, that this Bill has been submitted to the superintendent of insurance, and the whole principle of the Bill has his entire approval. It has been the subject of consideration with me and I took the trouble before I introduced the Bill to go and see him.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Did the hon. gentleman say he had no idea yesterday of bringing in the Bill ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—What did the hon. gentleman say?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I said that before I introduced this Bill I took the trouble to see the superintendent of insurance personally, and ascertained that the principle of this measure met with his entire approval.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I am in the judgment of the House on the point of order.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Inasmuch as this is dealing with a particular case, without discussing the merits of the question under discussion in any way, I was simply going to read a short paragraph from the report——

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I ask that the point of order be decided. Have I right to raise the point of order and be heard, or has the hon. gentleman from Toronto a right to override me as he is now doing?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I was under the impression that we were both anxious to do the best we could for the policy-holders.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—We are not in the same boat. As the hon. gentleman from Rothesay had not the courtesy to tell me what he was going to do, I will return him his letter in reference to the matter of the Mutual Reserve, so that they shall not say I kept it in my possession, or that it was stolen. I ask the hon. gentleman why he had not the courtesy to tell me what he proposed doing, and why he should have taken advantage of me in this way by introducing a Bill when the House has not heard my story, and cutting me off in that way? I say that he is acting for that company here.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think the hon. Senator from Toronto is quite within his right. He is introducing a Bill in the chamber and is giving an explanation of the various clauses. The hon. gentlemen will have ample opportunity, not only to discuss this Bill, but to put himself right in reference to any transactions he may have had with the company, or any transactions they may have had with him.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If I understood the hon. gentleman from Rothesay, the point of order raised by him is not as the Hon. Secretary of State understands it. The hon. gentleman who introduced the Bill is quite correct, and I think it is a very proper course to pursue to explain the object of the Bill and its provisions in introducing it. But the objection of the hon. gentleman from Rothesay was that the hon. Senator from Toronto was about entering into a discussion in reply to the remarks made by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay yesterday, and that that would be opening up the debate on the motion which he made for a committee. That is the point, and not that he objected to the explanation of the hon. gentleman as to the provisions of his Bill. It was simply that he should not enter into a discussion in reply, either directly or indirectly, to the debate which took place yesterday. That is my interpretation of it.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That is exactly the objection I take.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I have no idea whatever of entering into the merits or demerits of the motion of the hon. gentleman who is asking to inquire into the affairs of this company. But, inasmuch as I felt it my duty to be candid to the House that my explanation of this Bill would apply, so far as I knew, to that company and that company alone, although it is in the form of an amendment to the general law, I thought it was fair and right that I should state something here in view of the inquiries which have been made on both sides of me with reference to the company. I wish to show how it stood in the eyes of those states where the company have changed from one plan to the other. That was all that was in my mind. If there is an idea that I am transgressing the rules I would rather abandon the statement than proceed; but because it happens to be incident to something which will come from that motion hereafter, I do not think I should be debarred from stating something pertinent to the present question. As to the memorandum handed me, I never saw the memo. before. I think it is from Mr. McMurchy, who is acting for the Mutual Reserve Company, and it seems to have been written yesterday. It states 'Mr. Domville was reading from a letter from Mr. Wells which never was delivered.' That is all that is in it. I am prepared to bow to the decision of the chair if I am out of order; if not, I simply wish to say I have in my hands a certified copy——

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—May I have the ruling of the Speaker?

The SPEAKER—If my ruling is asked for, I think the hon. gentleman from Toronto is within his right. He is simply making what he considers a necessary explanation at the first reading of a Bill. As a general thing such explanations are not made at the first reading. The second reading is the time when a long explanation takes place, but I do not think that the hon. gentleman from Toronto is out of order.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—All I was going to trouble the House with was to read a report from the Attorney General of the state of New York, made in 1899, on an inquiry into charges preferred against this company. He refers to the report of the superintendent of insurance regarding his visitation and inspection of insurance companies:—

> Under date of May 31st, in giving to the policy-holders of the association the result of the examination of its condition and affairs then just completed, in the closing paragraph of my report, I stated, 'The result of the examinations shows that the association is solvent.' A study of the accompanying report of the chief examiner compels me now to make the same statement.
> The result of your examination demonstrating the solvency of the corporation, makes the question of determining whether or not the corporation has offended against any of the other provisions of the statute a most important and delicate one. I can conceive of no graver injury that could be done by the Attorney General to the members of a solvent corporation than that which would result from an action brought by the Attorney General against such corporation, unless it was perfectly manifest that the public interests involved could be protected in no other manner.

Then the state of Nebraska——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is now discussing the merits of a company in the United States which has nothing to do with the Bill before the House. He has explained his Bill. If there are any other paragraphs in the Bill which he desires to explain, he is at liberty to do so, but he is now discussing a question which has nothing to do with the Bill and does not explain any of its paragraphs. I ask for the ruling of the chair.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I do not wish to introduce anything into this debate that can possibly be regarded as an interference with the order of discussion as we ought to carry it on, and although I do not agree with the objection, I shall refrain from saying anything further on the subject.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I think we are altering the usage of this House in discussing the Bill on the first reading.

The SPEAKER—In view of the question raised by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona (Hon. Mr. Landry), the hon. member from Toronto has decided not to proceed any further with the discussion. He simply asks that the Bill be read the first time.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto) moved that the Bill be read the second time on Tuesday next.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I desire to say a word on the subject.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman will have an opportunity on the second reading. There is no question before the House to be discussed.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I think we should be permitted to reply to the statements which have been made. The hon. gentleman has taken the opportunity of presenting certain statements to the House on the introduction of this Bill, and it is but right that some of those statements should be answered here and now. He has said that these people found that the law of Canada was in such condition that they were at liberty to come and do business in the Dominion. Now that is not an accurate statement. They came to Canada and asked that the insurance law of this country should be altered to enable them to come and do business here, and they were opposed on that occasion by every old line company in Canada. Their application was fought in committee most bitterly and determinedly, the old line companies claiming that the charges made under the assessment system then proposed to be introduced were not sufficient to carry on the business lately, and the history of this company has proved that the arguments used by the old line companies were well founded. This company came first in 1884, and its application was refused. It came back in 1885 and the matter was fought out on the floors of the committee. After a very determined fight, the committee came to the conclusion they did —and I am sorry they did, because the condition of the things in Canada shows that it was a mistake to amend the insurance law, and enable the company to do business in Canada. They amended the law because they thought the old line companies had united to keep this company out of Canada. They thought the old line companies believed they had such a good thing that they did not want this company to come in and meet the demands of those who were anxious to be insured at lower rates. These were the conditions under which this company was allowed to come into Canada.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I rise to a point of order. In my humble opinion, at the introduction of a Bill the utmost that can take place in the way of discussion is to give an explanation of its provisions. I am doubtful whether even that much can be permitted, but, certainly, no discussion can be entered into at the first reading of a Bill, yet my hon. friend is discussing it instead of waiting until the second reading. With the permission of the House I shall read from the new edition of Bourinot a reference to the subject :

> Introduction of Bills.—it is the right of every senator to bring in a Bill. Immediately after the Bill is presented it is read a first time and ordered to be printed.

In the House of Commons they do not discuss Bills at the first reading, but they can discuss the nature of a Bill in the two days' notice they have to give for the introduction of a Bill. At that stage they do, sometimes, although seldom, discuss the nature of a Bill to be proposed, but while the Bill is being read the first time it is very seldom if ever discussed. In this House no seconder is required at the introduction of a Bill. It is not a regular motion ; it is a matter of right. The introduction of the Bill does not involve a discussion ; it is immediately ordered to be printed, and prepared for the second reading. Therefore, I believe that a Bill should not be even explained at the first reading. I certainly take the stand that it may not be discussed at length as it is being discussed now. I shall read further from Bourinot—this has reference to the House of Commons :—

> When any Bill is presented by a member in pursuance of an order of the House, or shall be brought from the Senate, the question shall this Bill be read the first time, shall be decided without amendment or debate.
>
> When the Bill is presented it is not debatable or amendable.
>
> The general debate on the Bill takes place at the second reading, the printed Bill being then in the hands of all the members.

I therefore hold that the Bill cannot be discussed now.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I do not intend to discuss now the contention of my hon. friend that we cannot debate a Bill that is introduced with certain explanatory remarks; but the first reading of this Bill has taken place, and we have now before us a motion to fix the date for the second reading. Last year this same question arose, and I wonder if at this stage we cannot enter into a discussion of the merits of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman in introducing the Bill was perfectly right in making his explanation, and up to the time the Bill was read the first time it was open to any member to take part in the discussion. I took great pains to look up the references last year ; and I found instances where long discussions had taken place on the first reading of a Bill, and instances where a Bill had been defeated on the first reading. Such cases are not numerous, but they are to be found. It would have been quite competent for the hon. gentleman from Wellington to have risen at that stage and spoken, but a Bill having been read the first time, the motion before us is a formal one and is not open for discussion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have not the last edition of Bourinot in my hand, but he lays down the principle that I indicated a few moments ago. He says:

> It is usual on the introduction of a Bill on the motion for leave, to explain clearly and succinctly its main provisions.

That is just what my hon. friend did, and he was perfectly within his right if he had not gone beyond it. Bourinot continues:

> But it is not the practice to debate it.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—On the motion to present the Bill, but not when the Bill is presented itself. That refers to the House of Commons.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I will read it again:

> It is usual on the introduction of a Bill on the motion for leave—

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I explained that it applied to the House of Commons, but otherwise it is precisely the practice of this House.

—to explain clearly and succinctly its main provisions, but it is not the practice to debate it at length.

But as my hon. friend says I have known instances in the House of Commons where Bills have not only been discussed on the first reading, but defeated. I have seen the six months hoist moved, and the Bill defeated at the first reading.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I have no desire to further discuss the principles of this Bill or anything connected with it until the second reading, but in view of the statements made by the hon. gentleman who introduced the Bill, I thought it was hardly right to allow them to go unanswered or unchallenged. Therefore, on the motion to fix the second reading of the Bill I took the opportunity of saying what I have said. I shall reserve anything further I have to say until the second reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to.

THE FUEL QUESTION IN CANADA.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General ; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate a return of copies of geological or other reports in the hands of the government, bearing upon the question of coal or other fuel supply in the provinces of Quebec, Ontario or Manitoba, with the view of devising some measure of relief from our present position, that of absolute dependence on our American neighbours for our daily supply of fuel.

He said: I have considered it my duty to bring before this House a question of very great importance. Those who reside in Ontario and Quebec have during the last two years realized the great inconvenience we are suffering owing to the scarcity of fuel. For many years, from the settlement of our country down to a few years ago, our forests supplied ample fuel for our people. But the forests have been cleared away for the purpose of bringing the soil under cultivation, and for other reasons, and within the last two or three years our people have awakened to the fact that in depleting the forests they have deprived themselves very largely of a source from which they could draw supplies of fuel, and it has become absolutely necessary that the government and the people of Canada should seriously consider the whole situation. In the province of Ontario we are almost entirely dependent upon the coal mines of the United States, and as a result of the unfortunate strikes and combinations of the last few years the price of fuel, it is one of the great necessities of life, has been increasing from year to year, until in some cases in my own knowledge the people of Toronto, and some places west have been called upon to pay as high as $20 per ton for coal. We all remember the unfortunate strike in the United States that brought about that condition. Such strikes may again take place. Is there any possibility of making provision to protect the people of this country from the extortions to which they are subject from these strikes and combinations. We know that the eastern provinces of Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island are supplied from the great coal mines of Nova Scotia. These mines have been largely developed and their output is increasing every year. They will undoubtedly furnish a fairly all-round yearly supply as far west as Quebec and Montreal, but I do not know that the coal of Nova Scotia comes any further west than Montreal. From that point to, you may say, Winnipeg, the whole district has to be supplied with coal for all purposes from the United States. Now, under those circumstances the question of providing something to take the place of imported coal is exceedingly an important one. There has been very considerable investigation in Ontario and Quebec to ascertain if there are any coal deposits in those provinces that could be utilized. I understand lignite has been found in the neighbourhood of James' Bay. I do not know anything as to the quality of it, but a thorough and exhaustive investigation of these mines should be made to ascertain whether lignite is suitable for fuel or not. I earnestly hope that the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific through the country north of us may develop some coal beds. It is unfortunate that we are in such a position that we are at any time liable to suffer extortion from combinations in the United States in the future as we have been in the past. Now there are four ways in which we can provide ourselves with the supply of fuel, in Ontario, Quebec and Manitoba, especially in Ontario. We could reforest a large section of our country, but that is a slow process, and it would be years before relief could be obtained in that way. We could secure very cheap transportation rates for coal from Nova Scotia to Ontario points. We can continue to be dependent, as we are now, upon mines in the United States for our supplies of fuel. But there is a fourth source; we have extensive peat beds in Quebec and Ontario from which admirable fuel could be produced if the government were to offer some encouragement to the industry. Attempts have been made in Ontario and Quebec to produce peat, but so far without much success. In European countries peat is largely produced even where coal mines exist. If it can be done in Germany, Sweden, Russia and other countries, why can it not be done in Ontario and Quebec, if the government will furnish a little encouragement to the industry in its infancy. The use of fuel in this country is increasing steadily. Last year Canada consumed 5,226,000 tons of coal mined in Canada, 17,500 tons of anthracite produced in the Northwest; imported bituminous coal 2,516,293 tons and anthracite 1,933,263 tons, and of coke 608,763 tons, making in all 10,301,943 tons. Out of that we exported 1,888,508 tons, which left a net consumption of coal in Canada of 8,413,405 tons. At $3 a ton it amounted to $25,240,265. The estimated consumption of wood in Canada during the same year was 8,846,000 cords, which at $1.75 per cord, represents a value of $14,548,528, or in all coal and wood used in Canada in one year amounted to $39,788,743.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—How does the hon. gentleman arrive at his estimate of the quantity of wood used for fuel?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It is an estimate based on information gathered from sources which we believe to be the most reliable that could be found. The value of fuel imported from the United States amounted to about $20,000,000 for the coal and the cartage of it into the country. It is very unfortunate that in the settlement of the difficulty between Britain and the United States at the close of the war for independence when the boundaries were fixed that the whole country from the Ohio to the Mississippi which should properly have belonged to Canada and which to-day any commissioner who would give it reasonable consideration would admit should be a part of Canada was by the action of the British commissioner given away because he knew no better. I have no doubt it was done through sheer ignorance, but the result of it is that Ontario is left without any coal lands. Had we fortunately retained that portion which should belong to us, there is ample coal there for the purpose of supplying all the wants of the province and of the Dominion for hundreds of years, but we were deprived of it by that unfortunate decision. Now, then, to deal with the question of peat, there has been an estimate made as to the possible amount of peat that might be manufactured in this country. In Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Cape Breton there is supposed to be 400,000,000 tons that could be produced. In Newfoundland there is also the same amount, 400,000,000 tons. In Quebec, it is supposed that there is material enough to produce 500,000,000 tons. In New Brunswick there is supposed to be material enough to produce 300,000,000 tons. In Ontario, the peat beds are estimated to contain 2,000,000,000 tons peat that could be turned into fuel. There is supposed to be the same quantity in Manitoba, and in British Columbia there are 200,000,000 tons. That is altogether 500,000,000,000 tons of peat which could be produced if the material was utilized, and the question is why should it not be utilized?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—What is the cost of producing it?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I do not know. It is supposed that it could be produced for $2.50 or $3 a ton.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Two dollars.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I have not been in communication with any gentlemen in the business, but I understand that is the estimate of the cost. That would be altogether about 13,500,000,000 tons of peat for which we have the material that could be produced if there was only some encouragement given to establish factories. I think we ought to do it. If this business could be put in a shape that it could make money and produce the fuel that is required, I think it would be an admirably good purpose to which to turn the surplus revenue of this Dominion, if the government could do it, and in that way provide for the relief, to at least a limited extent, of the consumers in the province from which I come, instead of leaving them in the unfortunate condition in which they are to-day, relying absolutely and entirely upon the miners of the United States. That peat could be turned to admirable use for house fuel. When properly made, you could get no better fuel for domestic purposes. It is also admirable fuel for the factory, where it is well and properly made. It could be used in large quantities as coke for the smelters, for which purpose it is well adapted. I said before that Germany produced large amounts of peat. I repeat again that the year before last she produced 2,000,000 tons. Russia, Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Holland consume a very large amount of peat. They are all manufacturers and producers of peat. It is also largely used in Ireland. Why not in Canada. Nine companies in Ontario have struggled heroically in an effort to produce peat fuel for the public. One at Beaverton operates on a small scale. One at Newington, under a process similar to that used in Germany, represented by Dr. Spencer of Ottawa, bids to be a success if capital is forthcoming. Capitalists are afraid of investment owing to past failures ; hence the need of government aid for a period of years under the direction of a peat commissioner.

Capital is needed, and if assistance were given by the government—and I think it should be given—possibly this business might be put in proper shape. To give hon. gentlemen an idea of the enormous consumption of coal in this country, I will give the House the figures from the public record of what we have been doing. In 1898 we imported $3,510,000 of dutiable coal and $6,500,000 of free coal. In 1889 we imported $3,647,369 of dutiable coal, and $7,000,000 worth of free coal. In 1900 we imported $4,500,000 of dutiable coal, and $7,250,000 of free coal. In 1901 we imported $9,445,674 worth of dutiable coal, and $8,500,000 worth of free coal. In 1902, we imported $6,229,000 worth of dutiable coal and $7,800,000 of free coal. This shows that our dependence upon the coal mines of the United States is growing intensely. In these five years we have increased our coal importation from the United States over $4,000,000 ; that was the increase last year as compared with five years ago. So that hon. gentlemen will easily see that this is an exceedingly important question. The demand upon the United States to supply the wants of our people is increasing enormously, and if any method could be adopted whereby part at least of that demand could be made up by using peat for fuel in houses, factories or smelters it would be a very great advantage. It would give employment to a great many of our people. It would also give us some little feeling of independence that when the cold winters come upon us we had something that we might fall back upon. If coal should be made a contraband of war what would be the condition of the people of Ontario ? Where are they going to get their fuel supply from ? We might be frozen to death before we could get a supply from Nova Scotia or before we could get a supply from British Columbia and very serous disaster might overtake us. During the last winter from my own personal knowledge I know that some people in a town of Ontario were forced to chop down their shade trees and turn them into fuel in order to supply the immediate needs for the moment until they could get supplies of wood or coal. That was the condition of things during the stormy portion of last winter. I think this is a subject worthy of some serious consideration, and it is to be hoped that something will be done at once. Of course the United States has an unlimited supply of coal. I wish we had some of it. England has an enormous supply. Coal deposits are mined in England to a depth of four thousand feet. Within that depth there is supposed to be an enormous quantity of coal. In 1871 there was a commission appointed for the purpose of investigating the resources of England in the matter of coal. That commission, after sitting for a very long time, after gathering information from all sources from which they could obtain it, brought in a report that all England had yet unmined within 4,000 feet of the surface sufficient coal to do her for something like 1,117 years. Her consumption of coal at that time was about 125,000,000 tons. That was in 1871. Last year England's mining coal was 217,000,000 tons. Of that she exported about 25,000,000 tons and used the rest herself; but her mining has enormously increased so that she is drawing very seriously upon her resources. Now the United States are the largest miners of coal in the world. The last year for which we can obtain returns, they mined 295,000,000 tons of coal. England mined 217,000,000. There is no other country in the world that produces anything like these enormous quantities of coal, and the demand upon the coal mines of course in the United States is rapidly increasing. I have here a statement of all the states in which coal is mined. The following table shows the amount mined in each of the states.

	Tons.
Maryland	4,350,954
Ohio	22,000,000
Missouri	4,200,000
California	172,000
Utah	1,641,436
Colorado	7,522,923
Washington	2,690,789
Tennessee	4,300,000
Virginia	3,500,000
Iowa	6,000,000
Illinois	30,000,000
Indian Territory	2,735,365
Michigan	1,241,241
Arkansas	2,125,730
Oregon	750,000
New Mexico	1,500,000
West Virginia	25,500,000
Kansas	5,230,433
Wyoming	4,760,000
Alabama	10,327,713
Kentucky	6,421,266
Georgia	375,000
Texas	700,000
North Dakota	200,000
Indiana	6,918,225
Montana	1,500,000
Pennsylvania	96,643,904
In all	295,124,798

The coal produced in 49 counties in British isles was as follows:—

	Tons.
England	158,604,069
Wales	34,303,240
Scotland	23,162,099
Ireland	108,757

The total coal mined in British isles, 1901, was 227,179,240. The anthracite coal produced in Nova Scotia in 1891 was 59,905,951 tons.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Perhaps it is 5,000,000.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is that anthracite coal?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—No, it is soft coal. I fancy my hon. friend is right and it must be 5,000,000 instead of 59,000,000. The average wages for coal miners in the United States is $2.56 for a day of eight hours.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is that for the day or by the ton?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—For a day of eight hours they receive $2.56, that is the averge wage paid in the United States to miners per day. Of course it is a very dangerous occupation. There is no doubt about that. In England over 1,000 men lose their lives every year in coal mining. Under the combination that I have already referred to that exists in the United States, we do not know what price we may be called upon to pay for coal. In the first place, the mine-owners, the mine operators and the railways have formed combinations. They are all partners in the output of coal. Whenever coal goes up, the miner gets a certain percentage of the price and the mine owners get a percentage also. The result is that that combination has been formed in order to operate in the interest one of the other and take advantage of that combination to increase the price to the consumer of coal. Now, in the face of that combination on the other side, in the face of the conditions that we in Ontario have to meet, I say it is no wonder that the people are beginning to realize that the condition that we now occupy with regard to fuel is an exceedingly undesirable one, and if any method can be devised to help the people out of that condition, it is the duty of the government to advance in that direction, and if the production of peat can be encouraged, so that it can be used as a fuel it would be a most desirable thing. I am not prepared to challenge the reports that have been brought down by geologists with regard to what is to be found within the limits of our own country, but it does appear that we have not a supply of coal within a reasonable distance of the surface, so far as our investigations have gone. If that is the case, and if we can use our peat beds in the way that it is proposed to use them, I think it would be a most desirable thing to encourage that industry and I think the government would do well to look into the whole question. I understand there are at present in Germany two men from Canada investigating the processes in use for the manufacture of peat in that country, where it is produced very largely, and into the machinery and methods they adopt. I hope that on their return they may be able to devise a scheme or line of action that may result in making the production of peat in Canada a success. I considered this question so important that I thought it my duty to bring it before this House, and I hope that my effort will not be altogether in vain. My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island asked me where I got my figures from. If he will look he will find those figures are given in the return.

Hon. Mr. CHURCH—I have no objection to the motion proposed by the hon. Senator from Wellington, but I think it ought to go a little further. If some criticisms of his speech are not made, he would inadvertently be misstating the facts as regards the coal production of the Dominion. Nobody reading the first part of the hon. gentleman's speech would suppose that the maritime provinces, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island were not dependent on the United States for the supply of any portion of the coal consumed in those provinces. The fact is that we have no hard coal in those provinces at all. A few years ago I believe our friends in the province of New Brunswick thought there was some anthracite coal there, and they spent considerable money in testing it in the county of Albert, but the article found there, while not of a very bituminous nature, I believe not a fair quality of hard coal. The people of the province of Nova Scotia and the people of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island were subjected to as much inconvenience, owing to the unfortunate strike in the United States, to which my hon. friend has referred, as the people of Ontario. If it costs less to transport hard coal from the state of Pennsylvania to Ontario than it does to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, then we were greater sufferers than they were, because we have no hard coal there. The only kind of coal produced in Nova Scotia is the bituminous coal, and consequently we have the same reason to be anxious to ascertain whether we can produce peat or whether we can find anthracite coal in these provinces as the people of the province of Ontario have. I have not the slightest objection if the government see fit that the hon. gentleman's request may be granted, but it should go further and apply to the whole Dominion. The hon. gentleman was very much mistaken about the coal products of Nova Scotia because I think it is in the neighbourhood of 6,000,000 tons of bituminous coal, and for a small province like ours I think that is doing very well. The product of bituminous coal from Nova Scotia has quadrupled in the last fifteen or twenty years, and if it goes on increasing in that ratio for the next fifteen or twenty years we will produce perhaps about 25,000,000 tons of bituminous coal. In the matter of consumption of coal, I doubt very much if there are figures in the returns showing the consumption of bituminous coal in Nova Scotia. We buy no coal except the hard coal. Coal mining is a great industry with us, next to the great fishery industry, and the coal industry is rapidly approaching in importance that of the fisheries. In a few years more it may even exceed that. It is a great blessing to us, because under the system the British North America Act, the local authorities of Nova Scotia have a right to handle the coal, and by putting a royalty on it we are able to implement the revenue and carry on public works in Nova Scotia without direct taxation. I am in sympathy with and in favour of the motion of the hon. gentleman as far as it goes, but I think it should go further. He says that we send our coal up as far as Montreal. That I believe is correct. A good deal of Nova Scotia coal does go to Montreal, and I am happy also to state here that a certain quantity of bituminous coal from Nova Scotia goes to the eastern portion of the United States in spite of the duty. I hope that the United States will yet get tired of building high tariff walls against a free and independent people. The time might come when that duty should be lowered, and I hope the time may soon arrive when the relations between the two nations will be such that these tariff walls may be removed. I do not advocate it now. I do not believe in one-sided reciprocity. If we are to have reciprocity with our neighbours, we must have it on fair and square principles and not on a jug-handled principle. In the abstract I am a free trader, but I recognize that in this country we must have a revenue tariff policy. That was the policy of Nova Scotia before confederation, and I do not know that I would be justified in saying it is the policy of the Dominion now. But we are not arguing that point at present. I think it would be a great thing if we could discover anthracite coal in this Dominion. From the fact that we have never discovered it, we are dependent on the United States for our supply, but all parts of the Dominion are dependent alike when circumstances arise to which my hon. friend from Wellington has alluded. I think that in making surveys and looking into the matter of peat it might be well also to endeavour to find out whether we have any anthracite coal. It does appear to me that if in Pennsylvania, which does not lie so far south of Ontario, conditions are existing there to produce it which conditions are not to be found in Ontario, I believe that the nations have the complement of each other, in natural products and under a fair system of trade they can assist each other in the matter of natural products for the benefit of these countries. I have made these remarks in order that there might not be a misapprehension in regard to the maritime provinces and their supply of coal.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not desire to go into a discussion as to the coal resources of Canada, except to say that very serious misapprehensions might exist in the public mind should the statements of my hon. friend from Wellington and the remarks of my hon. friend from Nova Scotia go forth to the country entirely unexplained. To hear my hon. friend from Wellington deal with the subject of the coal measures of Canada, one would fancy that such a mineral as coal was not to be found in the Dominion. When my hon. friend talks of developing the peat fields of Nova Scotia and British Columbia, I fancy he would not intentionally overlook the peat fields of the Northwest Territories. One is reminded seriously of the old adage about carrying coals to Newcastle. To talk of developing the peat beds of Nova Scotia leaves an impression on the public mind that there is no coal in that province whereas, on the contrary, some of the finest fields on the continent are to be found in Nova Scotia. The same remark applies to Vancouver Island in British Columbia. That province is a very large exporter of the very best quality of coal. The British admiralty, as well as consumers along the Pacific coast of the United States draw very largely from the coal fields of British Columbia and no finer coal fields are to be found on the continent. I doubt if you will find in North America a larger area of coal than exists in the Northwest Territories. Commencing at the Saskatchewan river, where the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway crosses it as the eastern boundary of the coal areas and going as far south at the international boundary line, 150 miles south of the Canadian Pacific Railway; travelling north to the main Saskatchewan river, which will be within the immediate vicinity of the Canadian Northern Railway and extending to the boundary of the Rocky Mountains, a distance of nearly 400 miles, I venture to say that you would scarcely travel any fifty miles of that very large area without finding excellent coal. We have very large coal mines in operation not only within the area to which I have alluded, but south and west of that, in what I may term, the southeasterly corner of British Columbia. We of the Northwest Territories have the coal mines of Lethbridge, which have a very large output, shipping coal all through the territories and as far east as Manitoba, reaching the Winnipeg market, and competing with United States coal. That is bituminous coal and of a first-class character. Then at the Crow's Nest Pass the mines supply coke to the great smelters of Montana, a class of coke that is not equalled by anything produced in the United States. It is claimed that the output of the Crow's Nest coal companies is within the vicinity of 2,000 tons a day. We have then a very large and important French company developing coal fields at Blairmore and at Frank—in that particular part of the southwestern corner of the Northwest Territories. The company is largely composed of French capitalists and these mines will, I have no doubt, in the near future, have an output quite as large as the Crow's Nest Company. We then find the Canadian Pacific Railway developing upon a very large scale the hard coal mines at Banff. My hon. friend from Nova Scotia expresses his regret that we have no hard coal in Canada. I would not be safe in saying that we have some of the largest hard coal deposits on the continent, but I can assure the hon. gentleman that there are hard coal deposits within the district of Alberta of such an extent as would really startle him. They are not being developed to any extent. The Canadian Pacific Railway has lately invested considerable capital in exploratory work with very satisfactory results. The development of coal mining in the territories, and in British Columbia, particularly the eastern part of British Columbia, is yet in its infancy, and we are relying to a very large extent upon foreign capital and enterprise for its development. The trouble with the people of Canada is that they have no faith in their own resources and very frequently prefer to invest their money in foreign countries rather than in the country to which they belong and in which they have made their money. We find for instance the coal resources of British Columbia and the territories very largely being developed by foreign capital. We have that large French company to which I have alluded having their head office in Lille, France. They have spent a large amount of money in developing the Frank coal mines. We have a large United States company working coal mines at Canmore and Anthracite. The Crow's Nest is very largely a Canadian company. We have coal resources within the Dominion which as I say, if fully developed, would doubtless, at an early day, if transportation facilities be provided, be equal to the demands of the people of Canada. I mention these facts so that people will not run away with the idea that Canada is destitute of coal resources.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I wish to say a word with reference to peat fuel and the work done to produce a merchantable article. I know personally that for the last fifteen or twenty years considerable amounts of money have been spent towards perfecting a pressing machine for producing peat fuel, and the results up to very recently have been anything but satisfactory. I have a friend who has invested thousands and thousands of dollars for years in this way. Works have been going on not very far from the residence of my hon. friend from Bedford (Hon. Mr. Baker), in Farnham, towards perfecting a machine to press peat in such a way as to be able to produce it and put it on the market at a reasonable price. I hear that lately his efforts have been crowned with success. I do not think there will be any need for bonusing the industry once the proper machine has been found. We all know that peat is abundant in Canada. Lately a Swedish machine has been put on the market and its operation has been attended with satisfactory results. I am told by a gentleman who has formed a company and intends to operate in the near future, that the Canadian machine, which has recently been invented, is much superior to anything which exists to-day in Europe, and they hope very soon to put on the market peat which will be welcome by all. The question is at what price can it be sold. I suppose, like all other articles, it will find its own level. The figure mentioned to me was about three dollars. I thought that was a little high, but when the industry is fairly started, very likely it will be sold at a lower price.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not rise for the purpose of discussing the main subject of my hon. friend's motion, but incidentally it brings up another subject, and that is the value of peat moss for litter and as a fertilizer. The late Mr. Edward Jack, of New Brunswick, made some very extensive investigations and experiments, and the result was to settle the fact that in the province of New Brunswick, at all events, and probably also in Prince Edward Island, and possibly in all our other provinces, there is a very great value indeed in our peat bogs, not merely for the supply of fuel, but also for litter and fertilizers. Mr. Jack's reports on this subject have appeared in some publications in the Department of Agriculture within the last half dozen years, and in them it is stated that samples of New Brunswick peat were sent to Germany for the purpose of analysis and comparison with the valuable peat moss of that country, which formed a very important article of commerce, and the New Brunswick moss was found to be even more valuable than the best to be obtained in Germany. When thoroughly dried, as the German moss was, it was found that the New Brunswick moss was capable of retaining thirty times its own weight of water. The advantage of that sort of litter in stables and such places for the purpose of taking up moisture is very great indeed. In the city of Christiania, in Norway, peat moss is used for the purpose of absorbing the contents of water closets for the whole city. If Mr. Jack is right in the result of his investigations—and Mr. Macfarlane, of the Inland Revenue Department, fully and completely sustains his view—there is a very great value in our peat bogs in another direction altogether, and that is for fertilizers and absorbents. It is found that this peat moss, when used as litter, is capable of absorbing the liquid around stables and such places and being converted into a very valuable fertilizer. With regard to the use of peat for fuel, I confess I know very little about it. I do not doubt that in the great central part of our country, where there are no coal mines, and where the forests have been depleted, it may be, and perhaps ought to be, that the peat should be developed and turned to account for the production of fuel. That is not at all likely to occur in the eastern provinces, where the coal beds of Nova Scotia furnish such an ample supply of fuel nor are the peat beds likely to be utilized in the west, which is well supplied with coal, but there is no doubt that the extensive peat deposits in Ontario and Quebec, in the absence of coal, might prove of great value if developed, and my hon. friend from Wellington is entitled to credit for having brought this subject before the House. In a climate such as ours the fuel supply is one of the most important that can be brought before the public.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I agree with the hon. member from Marshfield in saying that the hon. gentleman from Wellington is to be complimented for having brought to the attention of this honourable House, a question of such importance. I am sure we are all in accord with the effort he is making to have this question properly studied, but I would suggest the advisability of leaving out of the motion these concluding words :—

That of absolute dependence on our American neighbours for our daily supply of fuel.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The suggestion of my hon. friend is a good one, and I am quite willing to leave out those words which he has quoted.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I happened to be a party to some experiments which were made comparing peat fuel with hard coal. The experiment was made in Quebec, in the presence of the different professors of Laval University. Some six or seven pounds of hard coal were put into one of those tortoise stoves, very narrow and high, and a kettle containing about four inches of water was placed upon top of the stove. The necessary wood and a small quantity of soft coal were used to produce immediate combustion. It took thirty-one minutes to bring the water to the boiling point, and the boiling lasted fifteen minutes and it took fifteen minutes more before all the coal was consumed. The next day, when the stove was quite cold the peat was tested. The same quantity was put in the stove, and in fourteen minutes after it was ignited the water began to boil. It continued boiling for thirty-one minutes and the whole of the fuel was consumed in ten minutes afterwards, making the duration of the fire fifty-five minutes, as compared with sixty-one minutes with the hard coal. With peat the boiling point was reached much sooner than with the coal, and it continued to boil a great deal longer, thirty-one minutes, compared with fifteen minutes. I may say that when the peat was burning it was necessary to turn the key and close the damper of the stove and to open the windows. The experiments were made in the fall, and the heat in the room was so great that it was necessary to open the windows while the peat was burning ; nothing of the kind occurred when the anthracite coal was tested. There is no doubt that for locomotives peat would furnish an excellent fuel. It would generate steam quicker in this climate, and the railway companies would gain largely in maintaining the speed of their trains. They would not be delayed by frost, as sometimes happens with coal. There remains always the economic question—the cost of producing the fuel. When the experiments, to which I refer were made, we were told that the peat fuel was produced at two dollars per ton. In fact the fuel that was used on that occasion cost $1.70 or $1.75, but the estimate of the cost was $2, and it was thought they could sell it at one dollar per ton less than hard coal. At that rate they estimated the government would save about one million dollars a year in expense of running the government railways as they use about one million tons a year. I mention these facts in order that the government may be induced to try experiments with those two fuels, to ascertain whether peat fuel would be suitable for use on the government railways, and if found to be as good as it is claimed for it, to foster the industry and thus save a great deal of money to the country.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—While the hon. gentleman from Wellington has given us a great deal of valuable information, and made an excellent suggestion, he stopped short of one suggestion which he ought to have made to the government, and that is to take the duty off soft coal. I live in a province where very little coal is mined, and we are obliged to pay a higher price for the soft coal we use, for the benefit of the miners of Nova Scotia, and we do not like it. I believe the people of New Brunswick are in favour of removing the duty on soft coal. We would then pay less for our coal, and with the duty off, English coal could be brought in, and it surprises me that the people of the province of Quebec do not see that English coal could be landed at Montreal more cheaply than Nova Scotia coal. I hope the government, when it takes this matter into consideration, will also bear in mind that there are provinces in the Dominion which do not produce a great deal of coal, and it is unfair to tax them for the benefit of the coal mines of other provinces. I will take another opportunity to show the injustice of taxing us for the benefit of the flour producers of the west. When we have to pay a duty on our fuel and on our flour it is a pretty hard case.

The motion was amended by striking out the words—

That of absolute dependence on our American neighbours for our daily supply of fuel.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman has introduced a very important subject and elicited an interesting debate. It has taken perhaps a wider range than he contemplated, but next to our food supply our fuel supply is the most important subject. For six months of the year we all require a great deal of extra heat, and I doubt if any six million people in any other country require and use as much fuel as the people of Canada and naturally the subject is a very important one in this country. The object which the hon. gentleman apparently had in view was to prompt the government to stimulate the production of peat by granting a bounty. I doubt whether my friends from the Pacific slope or the Atlantic coast would see the propriety of that. In British Columbia and in Nova Scotia, the provincial governments get a pretty large revenue from the royalties they exact from the producers of coal, and it would seem rather inconsistent that we should give a bounty to a rival industry. It seems rather unfair that we should pay a bounty to parties producing peat fuel when the coal miners in the east and the west of the Dominion are paying a royalty on the coal they mine. However, that is merely an incident which occurred to my mind during the debate and which would naturally evoke a good deal of opposition from that cause. The discussion, however, has brought out a great many interesting points, and I shall be glad to call the attention of my colleagues to the subject to ascertain what can be done. In the meantime there is no objection to the order going. I presume when the hon. gentleman prepared his motion, he had in view the limitation of his last words to Ontario, Quebec and Manitoba, but it is made to apply to the whole Dominion. So far as the three provinces I have mentioned are concerned—and they embrace over three-fourths of the population of Canada—there is no doubt he is right in his assertion, that they are dependent on the United States for that most important article fuel, and year by year they are becoming more dependent on the United States. Although the motion as prepared applies generally, no doubt he has in his mind, the serious effect it had on the people of Ontario, Quebec and Manitoba, as they are the principal sufferers in consequence of there being absolutely no coal mined in those sections of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I should like to add one word to what the Hon. Secretary of State has said. He has suggested that a bounty on peat fuel might be looked upon as bonusing an industry in competition with the coal industry. The soft coal of Nova Scotia does not come any further west than Montreal, the soft coal of British Columbia does not come any further east than Winnipeg, and there it is sold at a high price. I was in Winnipeg the other day and was told that hard coal sells in that city at something like $11.50 per ton. Under those conditions a bounty on peat to foster industry will not bring it in competition with any coal mined in Canada. If the coal of Nova Scotia was supplying the section of country between Montreal and Winnipeg then there might be some ground for objection, but it is United States coal that supplies the Canadian people who live west of Montreal and east of Winnipeg. I do not ask the government to subsidize peat that would come in competition with Canadian coal, but every one ought to be glad if we can produce fuel which will keep the money in our own country which now goes abroad to purchase fuel in the United States. In reply to my hon. friend from Calgary, I would say that I had no intention to belittle the resources of our coal areas in Canada. I was not discussing that question ; my remarks were as to the advisability of fostering the production of some kind of fuel that would supply the people's wants instead of the coal which we now have to import from United States in the centre of the Dominion.

I am glad and I entirely endorse what my hon. friend has said. We have a right to feel proud of the enormous coal area in Canada but unfortunately they are at the extreme east or west. In the centre of our country we have no deposits of that kind at all, and we are just left to depend on what we can get from the United States, or pay the enormous charges for freight which necessarily must be paid if we obtain our supply from British Columbia or Nova Scotia. We all wish the coal miners of Nova Scotia every success. The country has contributed very largely to their success. When I had the pleasure of sitting in the Commons, I heard the answer made by the Minister of Railways that we were carrying coal over the Intercolonial Railway for three-tenths of a cent per ton per mile in order to enable the Nova Scotia coal miners to deliver their coal in Quebec and Montreal. We were not receiving in that charge sufficient to pay for the running of the cars. The lowest the Grand Trunk Railway charges is seven-tenths of a cent to seven and one-half of a cent per mile. We were then carrying it for three-tenths of a cent per mile, which would not be running expenses. In addition to that the people in Ontario, who suffer under the conditions I have mentioned this afternoon and who have been suffering from that condition for the last two years, have peaceably submitted to a duty of 40 cents a ton in addition to the high price for the coal they send us from the United States. We would be glad to get rid of the duty on coal. We would be rejoiced if the government would do that, and we regret that when the United States government took the duty off coal that our government did not respond and take the duty off coal also. They did not see fit to do it, and I suppose they considered their own interests in the course they adopted. I have no desire to belittle our coal resources, but I wish we would bring our Dominion closer together, so that we could get a supply from the east or west in place of carrying it twelve or fifteen hundred miles.

The motion agreed to.

REPRINTING OF GEOGRAPHICAL MAPS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN, inquired :

Whether it is the intention of the government to have reprinted the geographical maps of the counties which have been redistributed by Act of parliament of last year ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The subject has never been considered by the government. It has not been discussed. I presume when the necessity arises for it, something will have to be done in that direction.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a very good suggestion, and I think the hon. gentleman might bring it under the attention of the department. There is a book containing the geographical maps of each of the constituencies and it would be well if it could be produced in an amended form.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (16) An Act respecting the French River Boom Company, Limited.—(Hon. Mr. McMullen.)

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, April 21, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THIRD READING.

Bill (9) An Act to revive and amend the Acts respecting the St. Clair and Erie Ship Canal Company.—(Hon. Mr. Lougheed.)

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I rise to a question of privilege. I have had a document placed in my hands but I am not a legal man and know nothing of the intricacies of law. However, it is called by some a brief. I propose to do as is usually done in public or private life when any lost or stolen article is found, to put in the papers a notice that anybody making application can have the brief by proving property. But the privilege which causes me to rise is that this document announces what the Senate is going to do. It says a Bill has been drafted and will be introduced into the Senate at once, and that it will be sent to a committee with my motion, in the interests of the company. Well, I do not object to that if they carry it in the House ; but what I do object to is that this petition says 'Re Senator Domville's motion for an investigation into the affairs of the Mutual Reserve.' It says that my action is due to a desire to levy blackmail. That is the queston I bring up I shall later have to deal with it. These papers are a defence of the company and I have no right to retain them. I propose to lay these papers on the table of the House that they may be reclaimed by the owner. I may be asked where I get these papers from. They were handed to me by some one who found them on the floor of the House, and thought they were my papers and they were brought straight to me.

NOTICES OF MOTION.

Hon. Mr. MILLER gave notice of motion for Tuesday next :—

That every motion for an adjournment of the Senate inconsistent with rules three and seven of the standing orders of this House, shall, under rule thirteen, be deemed special and require one intermediate day's notice of such motion.

He said : With the permission of the House I would like to offer a few remarks in explanation of this motion. When a question of adjournment was before the House the other day I raised the point of order that under rule thirteen there should have been an intermediate day's notice of the motion. That point of order was decided adversely to me by the chair, and I did not think proper at the time—in fact I was not prepared, having no books with me—to controvert the ruling of the chair. I said I would, whenever another opportunity presented itself, bring the question up for the formal consideration and decision of the Senate. There is no more important rule among our standing orders than rule thirteen, and the House should decide one way or the other with regard to it, so that there should be no further doubt on the subject. I intended to move, should such another motion be made, by raising the point of order, and then have it decided by the House; but on consideration I found two reasons why I should not take that course. The first reason was that if I attempted to controvert the decision of the Speaker upon a pending motion to adjourn, I would not get a decision pure and simple upon my point of order, because it might happen that some gentleman who desired an adjournment would support the Speaker's decision without giving it the careful consideration it ought to receive. In the second place I think it would be a more delicate way of getting the decision of the House on this rule by not raising it formally on a decision of the Speaker. I thought it would be a more friendly way all round of doing it. There can be nothing unfriendly in a desire to get a satisfactory and certain decision on a point of such importance to the House, and there can be nothing of a party character in it. We are all, on both sides of the House, desirous that our proceedings should be governed by rules, and that those rules should be properly construed. The importance of the question is this : if the Speaker's ruling is correct there is no rule among our standing orders to prevent any member—as was stated by the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry, and I perfectly agree with that portion of his remarks—from rising here at any moment in a thin House, perhaps with a bare quorum present, and moving that the House adjourn for a day, a week, or a month.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would be clearly contrary to the well established practice.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—There is no well established practice here ; we want well understood rules. As the hon. gentleman has ventured to use the term ' well established practice.' I will make one or two remarks on that. Last session, frequent motions of this kind were made. Supposing they had not to give the intermediate day's notice, the point of order was not raised, and no one objected, and therefore the question could not be considered decided. If any one had raised a point of order and a decision by the House had been rendered and a practice established, that would be different. Supposing the universal practice had been to make such a motion without notice at all, that would not establish a rule. So far as I can find, there is no rule among our standing orders that would prevent a member from moving without notice that the House adjourn for a week, a fortnight, or a month. Rule seventeen, quoted by his hon. the Speaker, does not in my opinion at all refer, to such a motion, and if it does not there is no rule. Now, my object is to get a discussion and decision by the House on this important question. I wish hon. gentlemen would take the trouble to look into the point, because it is very important, and I want to get the decision of the House in the most agreeable manner to all concerned, and without personal or party irritation, or inconvenience to gentlemen who on a pending motion for adjournment would be likely to oppose me on the point of order.

THE APPOINTMENT OF J. B. JACKSON.

MOTION.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid upon the table of the Senate copies of all correspondence and recommendations which led to the appointment of J. B. Jackson to the position of commercial agent to Leeds and Hull England, at a salary of three thousand dollars per annum, and office and contingent expenses.

He said : It is needless for me to say that when the announcement was made in the newspapers that a gentleman by the name of Jackson had been appointed commercial agent to represent Canada in England, it was received with a very great deal of surprise by those who have paid any attention to the political character of this gentlemen and his actions at the different elections which have taken place in the province of Ontario. I made up my mind then, after reading an explanation that had been made by the hon. Minister of Public Works, the Hon. James Sutherland, at a by-election which was held in the county of Oxford, that I would endeavour to ascertain when the House met the facts in connection with the appointment, and for that reason I placed upon the notice paper the following inquiry :—

Whether a man by the name of J. B. Jackson, of Ingersoll, Ontario, has been appointed to any position in England or elsewhere, by the government of Canada, or any member of said government?

If so, what are the duties assigned to him, and what salary or remuneration is he to receive for the performance of such services?

That inquiry stood upon the motion paper for a number of days, and the hon. Secretary of State brought down his answer in writing, so that there might be no mistake whatever as to the language which he used in explaining the appointment. The hon. Secretary of State in answer to my inquiry said :—

J. B. Jackson, of Ingersoll, Ontario, was appointed by Order in Council of date October 31st, 1903 (appointment to date from 1st November, 1903) commercial agent to Leeds and Hull, England.

His duties are to report monthly, or more frequently, if necessary, to the Department of Trade and Commerce upon all trade matters which may be of interest to Canadian exporters, and to use his best endeavour to further Canada's market in the district to which he is assigned. These reports are published weekly and are sent to any business men in Canada desiring them.

Mr. Jackson's salary is $3,000 per annum, and office and contingent expenses.

The explanation given of the appointment by the hon. Minister of Public Works is in direct contradiction to that given in the answer by the hon. Secretary of State the other day. During a by-election in the west the question was asked Mr. Sutherland whether Jackson had been appointed to any position. Mr. Sutherland the Minister of Public Works gave the following answer :—

I have heard since I came home——

Hon. gentlemen will understand that that is the hon. gentleman's home and constituency. He said :

I have heard since I came home something in reference to acts of Mr. Jackson that were not creditable to him, but his appointment was a departmental matter under the minister, Sir Richard Cartwright, and I have no doubt that he had no idea there was anything wrong.

Upon reading this explanation I exclaimed 'Innocent, simple Jim.'

When he is called to account at a public meeting for the appointment of a man who had committed acts which should land him in the penitentiary, (as I think I will be able to prove before I conclude, by the evidence which was given in the trial of the contested election which was then going on), we find the Minister of Public Works telling the people that he had heard since he came home that certain acts had been committed by Jackson which were not creditable to him, thereby inferring that he had not read the report of the election trial, for if he had he could not truthfully have made that statement. And then he says, throwing the responsibility upon one of his colleagues, that the appointment was a departmental one, and that Jackson had been appointed by Sir Richard Cartwright. The hon. Secretary of State, on the contrary, tells this House that Jackson was solemnly appointed by Order in Council in November of last year, and that the duties that he had to perform were fully detailed in that Order in Council, and that he was to have a salary of $3,000 a year. I must leave the question with these two ministers of the same cabinet, to explain to the public and to the House if they can, how it is that one minister could deliberately tell a public audience that it was a departmental appointment ; that he knew nothing whatever of the wrongs which had been committed and the attitude taken by Mr. Jackson at the election, when the fact was that he as a member of the executive council, must have known that an Order in Council had been passed appointing this man to the position of commercial agent at a salary of $3,000 per annum. Who is this Mr. Jackson ? Let us look at his history, as most public men do if they wish to keep abreast of events as they are transpiring. I find that at the general election, when the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright, was about seeking election in Oxford, that there was a gentleman living in Toronto by the name of Janes, who was also a candidate, and it was a doubtful question at that time as to whether Mr. Janes would not, being a leading Liberal, secure the nomination at the convention which was to be held to select a candidate. At that time the premier, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, wrote to this same Mr. Jackson in favour of Sir Richard Cartwright, using the expression that he hoped everything would be done to secure the nomination for Sir Richard Cartwright, who had, to use his own language, done so much for the welfare of Canada. We can understand the premier of the country sending a letter of that kind to one of the manipulators of the party in any constituency. I do not pretend to say, nor even to insinuate, because I have no knowledge of it, that Sir Wilfrid Laurier had any knowledge whatever of the character of this man, and consequently might look upon it as an ordinary event in the conduct of parliamentary elections, using the influence which he would necessarily possess in writing to one of his friends asking him to do what he could to secure the nomination for a colleague. Then, in addition to that, there was another gentleman who has been well provided for of late. That is a Mr. Preston, of whom I have no doubt many hon. gentlemen have heard. He also wrote a letter to this same Mr. Jackson urging him to secure the nomination of Sir Richard Cartwright at the convention, and one reason which he gave was that Mr. Janes must not be selected because he is unworthy. On what account? Because he had refused to subscribe to the election fund. That is the language of Mr. Preston —and that when he, Janes, was asked for money he said he had no money for party purposes. I need scarcely tell the hon. gentlemen who are listening to me the result of these two letters, first the influence of the premier and the letter of the author of 'Hug the machine', telling him that Mr. Janes was not a suitable candidate for the party because he had refused to subscribe and because he had the audacity to tell him that he had no money for party purposes. Well it has been stated—(I am not saying it upon my own authority)—that Mr. Janes has been looking very anxiously towards a seat in this House, and it was generally understood that that was to be his reward for getting out of the way. My hon. friend sitting before me smiling (Hon. Mr. Kerr) got the inside track and has the position, and Janes was left out in the cold, and it may possibly be because he did not subscribe to the party fund that he did not get the appointment. It is not necessary for me to describe who Mr. Preston is, as every one who has followed his career politically, knows very well what his antecedents have been. I do not know whether it is so, but it was generally intimated that in order to get him out of this country to prevent his being put in the witness box, he received a very lucrative position, from this government, in England, where he now is. So much by way of introduction. Now who is this Mr. Jackson, and what position does he hold in the estimation of the people of Ontario? I refer to that portion of the people who have the slightest regard for political morality. I do not pretend to say that all the crimes of impropriety at elections have been committed by one particular party. I believe there has been altogether too much of it. It has arrived at that stage in which political morality is completely demoralized; people have forgotten to even consider what it is, or what principle should guide them in the conduct of elections, and when we know that men of this character are appointed to the important positions to which I have called the attention of the Senate, and when we know also that Mr. Preston, who was the prime mover in all the machine operations that took place in Ontario, was rewarded by the government, how could you expect the electors of the country to have any regard for what, I repeat, is political morality. At the trial to contest the validity and correctness of the election of Mr. Sutherland, in North Oxford, this same Mr. Jackson was one of the witnesses. I shall read a little of the evidence that I may sustain the position which I have taken in reference to this gentleman. The evidence reads as follows:

Chas. Parker, of Woodstock was put in the box and he declared that he had been approached by George Fornier, the Liberal trusty man, who had been employed to 'bust' the election. Incidentally Fornier was the hero of a police court record.

The Toronto 'Globe' of the 17th reports him as follows:

Chas. Parker, of Woodstock swore Fornier had approached him and asked him to say he had received money from Joseph Clark for his vote. Fornier promised him he would receive ten dollars if he did so, and said he would corroborate his statement. He, Parker, had received five dollars from Jackson.

That is the gentleman who has been appointed to this important position. The witness continues:

He received the money by mail, and produced the envelope. He had also received five dollars direct from Jackson. He, Parker, presumed this was paid him to get him to swear to this. Fornier had told him there was $100 to divide between Parker, Fornier and Keeler if they gave the evidence.

The 'Mail' reports him as follows:

The witness understood it was to be for this false story. There was nothing else for which he could get it. . . . He had been in J. B. Jackson's law office when a man named Sutherland or Sullivan had told him that if he would stick to his story he would give him two ten-dollar bills in an envelope.

Of course it was not Sutherland, but Sullivan, the famous Cap. Sullivan, of whom most of you who have kept track of these election trials and election villany—I think that is not too strong an expression to use—it was Cap. Sullivan and not Sutherland, have heard although the witness was not sure whether his name was Sullivan or Sutherland.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Is that the same Cap. Sullivan who figured in the Gamey charges?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes the same, and he has been one of the trusted organizers of the Ontario government for years past.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—What is the date of the paper the hon. gentleman is reading from ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not know the date. I am reading extracts from the evidence given at that trial.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The trial to unseat Donald Sutherland.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It was tried before Mr. Justice Street and Mr. Justice Britton. The petition was to unseat Donald Sutherland who was elected in Oxford.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The hon. gentleman gave the date the 17th.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Perhaps I did ; if so, I must have read it. Mr. Blake conducting the case for the defence put the question 'was that true ? Were you paid this five dollars ?' He said 'no.' Then he is asked :

And was Fornier present when that money was paid? A. There was no money paid by Jackson.

What money did you receive up to that time? A. $6.75 from Fick (a Liberal worker) and two $5-bills from Jackson and five more from him a few nights ago, which he sent me by Fornier.

Then the next man put in the box was a man named Chambers, who, I very much regret to say, was the former Conservative candidate in the same constituency on behalf of the Conservative party at the local elections, but who sold himself to Jackson and the others for the consideration which I will read to you. Another portion of the report from the 'Globe' of October 17, reads as follows :—

Mr. Jackson was under examination by Mr. Blake as follows:—

He (Jackson) had also paid Edward Chambers for getting evidence. Chambers was a machine agent, and was paid $375 last Monday morning. Mr. Chambers was the Conservative nominee in the last election. He wanted $1,500.

Did he ever ask for more? A. I rather think he asked for $2,000.

Didn't he ask for $5,000? A. Five thousand dollars may have been mentioned; I am not certain.

How much did you promise to give him? A. I gave him $375 and promised him $375 if he gave evidence to substantiate eight charges he gave me.

He got $375, and was to have $375 more provided he supplied sufficient evidence to substantiate the charges which he had made. It will be seen that he admitted he had paid him money but denied that he had promised him a government position if he upset the election. Jackson then said :

Several government positions had been in his mind for years. It was perfectly natural for him, Jackson, to say:

I want the House to pay particular attention to this.

To say that he told Chambers it did not matter to him whether the evidence was true or false, so long as it upset the election.

This is the man that the government have taken to their bosom and appointed to an important position in England at $3,000 per year, to look after our commercial interests in that country. It was generally understood at that time that Mr. Jackson, being a lawyer, was looking for a judgeship, but after his trial and his acknowledging that it was a matter of no consequence to him whether the evidence in court was true or false, so long as it accomplished the object of unseating Mr. Sutherland. Then in the report in the 'Globe'——

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Of what year ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman must know when that trial took place.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The 'Globe' of October 18, 1902.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am reading from the 'Globe's' report of the evidence. I have taken the reports in the 'Globe' and the 'Mail', when they are dealing with the same points, in order that the House and the country may understand that the reports are not from one party alone. I might say, however, that in one or two instances the 'Globe' has not put the points as clearly and pointedly as the 'Mail' did, but it has given it not only sufficient prominence, but with sufficient clearness, to stamp this man Jackson, as one who certainly should not be recognized or countenanced by any government. I will read again from the report of the 'Globe':

In the cross-examination by Mr. Blake the witness, Mr. Avery, said Jackson told him to swear he got nothing for signing the declaration. Mr. Jackson said to him that if he was asked if he made the declaration he should say he did. If he was asked if he received any money for making the declaration he should say he did not.

There was not only subornation of perjury, but suggesting to this witness that he should deny having received money when he had received it, and that he should make the denial under oath. Mr. Blake, in commenting upon this evidence, used the following language:

In all my experience I have never known such a decided attempt to pervert and obstruct justice. . . These men have been paid to make declarations, and then told that they must swear to them in court to protect themselves. When we see one criminal after another brought into court with fabricated evidence, are we not justified in assuming that some of this $600 was used for that purpose?

That is the $600 which had been paid, referred to in another part of the evidence. Amongst a number of witnesses brought into court were men who had been either in jail, in penitentiary, or convicted of some crime or other, ranging from the negro down to the lowest pot-house frequenter that could be found in the city. All that transpired in the cross-examination, and is shown to be the fact. The Liberal senior counsel, Mr. G. H. Watson, Q.C., protested against Mr. Blake's language. Of course Mr. Blake was putting it as strongly as he could in defence of his client. He was pointing out to the court, in the strong language which those who know him understand he is capable of using as well as any man at the bar, if not better, the conduct of Jackson. The 'Globe' report says that his language was so pointed that:

The Liberal senior counsel, Mr. G. H. Watson, K.C., protests against Mr. Blake's language, and suggested that it was due to chagrin over his change of political allegiance.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

I might say to those who have kept abreast of the times that Mr. Samuel Blake, known to be a life-long Liberal, has taken a stand against the Ross government on account of their acts, and particularly on account of the election frauds which have been exposed in the courts of Ontario. 'Mr. Blake pungently reiterated,' says the report 'pointing to Mr. Jackson, one of the reasons of it (that is what is termed the change of political opinion) 'is that there are such men as he in the Liberal party.' In reply to the objection taken by Mr. Watson, and the language used by Mr. Blake the judge gave the following opinion:

In reply to Mr. Watson's protest, Mr. Justice Street pronounced one of the most severe rebukes upon the methods adopted by Mr. Jackson in conducting this case that have ever been recorded in Canadian legal annals. His Lordship spoke as follows:

His report is given by the 'Mail' verbatim:

I do not agree with you at all. I must call attention to the improper, reprehensible means which have been proved here to have been devoted to an absolutely improper purpose. We cannot; it is impossible to follow ramifications of such extent. I feel that in this case I cannot get out of my mind, certainly the possibility of the course of justice having been affected by this expenditure of money. I consider counsel in a case of this kind is certainly justified in referring to that fact. Here is a man of the lowest possible character——

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Who said that?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Justice Street.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not surprised that the hon. minister without portfolio (Hon. Mr. Templeman) laughs. When the government of which he is a member are responsible for appointing such a character as Jackson to an important office, I am not surprised that he should try to turn the subject into ridicule. It is what I would expect from hon. gentlemen who would make such an appointment.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Cobourg)—It is only due to the hon. gentleman to say that the language used by the judge was not applied to Jackson, but to a person who had given evidence there. I think the hon. gentleman misunderstands the report.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman can put what interpretation he likes upon it. However, much the hon. gentleman may be disposed to defend the government for appointing Jackson, one thing is certain, Jackson admitted under oath that he had told these parties, it mattered not whether they told the truth or not, so long as the object for which they were paid was accomplished. I will read the remarks of the judge again:

> I consider counsel in a case of this kind is certainly justified in referring to that fact. Here is a man of the lowest possible character —Mr. Jackson, of Ingersoll, has associated with men of the lowest possible character. It is evident he must have desired to have been made to procure the proving of charges in this petition. There is no doubt of it. I have seen nothing like it in my experience before. How is it possible for me to trust it?

I do not propose to pursue this matter further than to make one or two more quotations from the 'Globe' in its lucid moments. I suppose it must have been on a Monday, because we find that the 'Globe's' editorial articles on Mondays display some little compunctions of conscience in dealing with matters which it defends. The 'Globe', on the 21st of November, 1903, uses this language, and it is language I think that would be approved of by every honest man in the country:

> The Liberal journals that disapprove of any such use of patronage as would seem to reward discreditable election workers and attempt the first resort to tactics such as would compromise the good name of the Liberal party in any constituency give the government the best evidence of the truest and most useful friendship.

I approve of that language as made applicable to both parties. When the government rewards scoundrels of this character it is the duty of their supporters to call attention to it and show their disapprobation of it. If there was more of that done in the country we would have less of such rascality. The 'Globe' in commenting on this evidence, quotes the following language editorially:

> Mr. Jackson, of Ingersoll, has associated with men of the lowest possible character. It is evident he must have desired evidence to have been made to procure the proving of charges in this petition. There is no doubt of it. I have seen nothing like it in court in my experience before.

That is the language used by the judge in his reply to Mr. Watson's objection. Further on in the same article the 'Globe' quotes from its own reports:

> Mr. Jackson, solicitor for the petitioners, admitted that he had paid Mr. Chambers, Conservative nominee in the last election, $375, and had promised him $375 more if six out of eight charges, of which particulars were furnished by Chambers, were proven.

Now, without pursuing this evidence any further I ask any honest man, I care not to which party he may belong, what he thinks of the appointing of a man of this character to so important a position as that which has been given to Jackson in England? This is but a title of what might be proved against this man in connection with the organization of the party in the west, in association with others who organized the party. It has been the practice in the past—and I think I am saying nothing but what is quite correct—that in many trials in which the grossest bribery had been committed and which could be proved, the important witnesses were sent out of the country. I could occupy your time for an hour giving the names of parties who have been sent out of the country under the pay of the party to prevent them being examined as witnesses. The premier of Ontario and his colleagues down to those who have operated the machine have been parties to transactions of that kind. We all know of the case of Bole—his name is not spelled like mine—a man of the kidney which my hon. friend from Toronto, judging by his remarks and actions, would admire. It is known that Bole who manipulated ballot boxes in the west and committed acts for which, if properly punished, he should be in the penitentiary, left the country, and could not be found, and when he was discovered he was found to be in the pay of a life insurance company of which the premier of Ontario is the president. Now, I can understand the explanation given by Mr. Ross—and I have stated privately in conversation with those who have discussed this question—that as president of that company, Mr. Ross may have known nothing whatever of the appointment of Bole to a position under the company, or his continuing to hold it in the association. I can understand that he truthfully denied that he had any knowledge of Mr. Bole being employed in that company; but Mr. Bole came back, and the 'Globe' with its usual tactics taunted the Conservatives, for not having arrested him and put him on trial, knowing at the same time that the time had elapsed within which he could be arrested for any action taken in connection with that contest. Notwithstanding that fact having been discussed at the time, Bole is still in the employment of that company in Trinidad, and the premier, as president of the company, cannot give the same excuse that he gave before. Summing up the whole thing we have Preston, the machinist of the party sent to England as government emigration agent, for which position he receives a good round salary. We have now Jackson who has committed the acts I have mentioned, and has admitted his guilt in connection with that election, also rewarded by the government. I am quite satisfied that the thinking portion of the Liberal party condemn this action of the government just as strongly as I have done. I know in private conversation with some of them they have told me that there is no justification for it, and it is for the country to pronounce a verdict upon the conduct of the government for acting as they have done in connection with these election frauds. I regretted very much when I saw that the Minister of Justice had pardoned Bruneau, the man who committed so many frauds, including perjury, in connection with elections in Montreal. The reason given for that reprieve is laughable. They got a doctor's report that it was necessary that Bruneau should walk about in the fresh air in order to recover his health. Is that a sufficient reason for releasing a man convicted of political crimes, such as Bruneau had committed in Montreal ? I hesitate not to condemn it in the strongest possible way, and I rejoice to know that the judges in the city of Toronto have sent to jail for one and two years returning officers and poll clerks who manipulated the ballots and committed election frauds at the municipal elections in that city. It is true some of them belonged to the Conservative party, but it is time that this country should put down such frauds with a strong hand by whomsoever committed if we ever expect to have honest elections in Canada. Here is another instance in which the Liberal authorities favoured a political friend. McGuire, the Liberal who committed the fraud at these same elections was spirited off to the United States and he is there to-day. His bonds have been estreated and I am quite satisfied that if the judge who condemned those who were convicted of fraud can by any means insist upon the payment of the amount for which the bonds-man became bail he will do it. He has displayed in these trials—and I say it to his credit—a spirit which will tend to clear the atmosphere in the future and which will cause people to hesitate before committing frauds to secure the election of friends of their party. I express no hope in the matter, because I have very little confidence in what the government will do as far as their party ends are concerned, but in justice to themselves and to the people of this country such frauds should be punished ; they certainly should not be rewarded as they have been in the cases to which I have referred, and which I fear very much will be repeated unless the people utter a strong condemnation of the practice. I trust if there is any such correspondence and recommendations as my motion calls for that we shall have them in order that we may know who the parties are who took the responsibility of making the recommendation. We know now who appointed him ; let us know who the parties are who recommended him.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I should like to say a word or two with reference to this matter, because I think it is only fair to those who are not here and not in the country that a word or two should be said lest any wrong conclusion should be arrived at with reference to them, although they are not the subjects probably of the inquiry here or the motion here. The hon. member who submitted this matter, based the imputations that he has made against Mr. Jackson upon the proceedings at the trial, and in particular read statements and comments that were made in the press with reference to the action of Mr. Jackson in procuring evidence through one Chambers for use at that trial. The petition, let it be understood, was a petition in a local provincial election case. The Conservative candidate had been elected. Chambers had been a nominee at the convention for the candidature, and had been a Conservative candidate in that constituency when the case came on for trial. Particulars had been delivered as to parties bribed. Names of witnesses were given and a number of persons were named as having been bribed by the Conservative party. The result of the election trial was that bribery was proven to such an extent as to affect the election and to unseat the Conservative candidate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What does the hon. gentleman say?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The result was a new election.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, there was no new election. Mr. Sutherland was not unseated.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Yes, a new election.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The result was that in procuring the evidence for use at that trial Mr. Jackson having named a number of persons as being bribed, subpœnaed Mr. Chambers, the Conservative nominee and candidate that I have referred to before, as a witness to give evidence, and when he served him with a subpœna, Chambers stated to him—and that is what the evidence is—that he could furnish sufficient evidence to unseat the candidate. I will read it so that there may be no mistake about what that was.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not deny that.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Chambers was the Conservative nominee in the last election. He (Jackson) saw Chambers in Woodstock last week, having gone to subpœna him. Chambers said he knew a sufficient amount of evidence to unseat Mr. Sutherland.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—What is the hon. gentleman reading from?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The report of the evidence at the trial.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Who is the witness?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Jackson. 'Chambers, when he was subpœnaed by Jackson, told him that he knew a sufficient amount of evidence to unseat Mr. Sutherland, and said he did not want to be called himself, but he would like to know what Mr. Jackson would say about getting that evidence, on the understanding that he (Chambers) would not be called to give evidence at all, and he asked for $1,500.' Now we all know perfectly well—those who are familiar with election trials—the great trouble and difficulty there is in proving the payment of the bribe, and how the man who has received the money will very frequently deny it, and deny it until you can confront him with the evidence of the man who bribed him. Unfortunately it is the case. In one case where a Conservative candidate was unseated, thirty witnesses in succession denied that they had received the bribe, and after one man was proved to have been bribed, the man who had paid the money went into the box and testified that the whole thirty had been bribed. That is an illustration.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What case was that?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The Prescott election case, when George Hamilton was unseated.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—How many years ago?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—A great many years ago. It is an old practice in the Conservative camp, and I am sorry to say, it appears to have been brought down to date. When this proposal was made by Mr. Chambers, the Conservative nominee, to Mr. Jackson, the result was that a negotiation was entered into between them with the view on Chambers part of getting some money out of the matter, and at the same time giving away his party for the consideration he was to get, and giving the names of persons who could prove bribery without his being put in the box, and without its being known that he was the one that had given information. That being so, the result was that the judge found afterwards that a sum of $375 had been paid and a further sum of $375 was to be paid. That was not to be paid to Chambers for giving his testimony. It was not subornation of perjury. It was to be paid for information which would enable Jackson to call the witnesses who were to depose to the act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is not the evidence.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Pardon me, that is exactly what the evidence was. And let me say, if the hon. gentleman would procure a copy of the evidence taken in shorthand at the trial, he would find the evidence did not at all warrant the quotations from the newspapers as the remarks of the judge. I do not mean to say the judge did not disapprove of these acts. I do not mean to say the judge did not think that as a matter of professional ethics it was probably beyond the boarder line, but there was no imputation made what ever that Jackson had committed anything in the shape of a crime which, as the hon. gentleman said a few moments ago, would place him within the pale of the penitentiary. What was done was that Chambers had stipulated that for a given sum he would furnish the names of parties who would prove the bribery sufficiently to unseat the election without Chambers being called as a witness and exposed as the person who was giving the information. That is exactly what the point was. Hon. gentleman know what the difficulties are in proving bribery. You have all had experience more or less in observing these cases, if not being further concerned in them.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not personally.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Not personally, of course, but we have all had the opportunity of seeing it, and the question is whether all that was proven—and that is what was proven—and the payment of $375 under those circumstances warrants the statement that Mr. Jackson was unfit for any position in the employ of the government.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—What about the statement that it did not matter whether the evidence to be paid for was true or false ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Jackson denied that he said it made no difference whether the evidence was true or not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is reported that he admitted it.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—No, he denied that. It was simply the same thing as the employment of Chambers who, coming from the opponent's camp, was in a position to know how the moneys had been used corruptly in that county for the purpose of carrying the election, and it was employing him as the agent to give the names, times and particulars when the bribery had in fact been committed. It is perfectly plain that was not an offence against any law. The question would be whether that could have been accomplished in another way. Perhaps it could. Those who are familiar with the circumstances of election trials would know how difficult it has been sometimes to get that done the other way when it has been tried. Under these circumstances it seems to me that the language which was used by the hon. gentleman in speaking to this motion, in which he declared that Mr. Jackson in consequence of what he had done and was proven to have done had proven himself to be unfit for any kind of position at all.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Did he not pay money to Chambers ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—He did.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—That is enough to condemn him.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Paid for services.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—For being a traitor.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—For telling what these people had done, for showing how much money had been spent corruptly by the Tory party.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It was bribery on Jackson's part.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Chambers telling on his own party. He did not want to go into the box and state it himself.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The hon. gentleman cannot whitewash Jackson.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Can the hon. gentleman whitewash Chambers ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He is just as bad as the other man.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—That was the kind of man employed by the Conservative party in that election. He spent the money, or knew of its distribution. He was giving the thing away, and giving his services in that respect. I am not saying that I would have done it, or I am not saying the hon. gentleman would have done it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C)—I am not justifying the Conservative. Both are equally guilty.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—In reference to the statement as to what Jackson did in the payment of that money for the information which enabled the other side to prove the corruption practiced by the opposite party in that particular election, I leave it to the House to say whether that was such conduct as disentitled Jackson to an appointment. I am sorry the names of other parties have been dragged into this discussion. Of course Mr. Preston's name has been used, and the hon. gentleman seems to know a great deal more than anybody else of the extent to which Preston had figured in connection with the Liberal party in elections. He knows more than I do with reference to what he has done, but Mr. Preston is not here. He is doing a great service for Canada. He is the most efficient immigration agent Canada has ever sent to England, and has produced greater results.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—He is making speeches against preferential trade.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—He may or he may not be making speeches. That is a matter of judgment as to whether he is right or not. That is a question on which he is entitled to have his own opinion as well as anybody else, but he is producing greater results than had been produced by any representative or agent sent over before him, and I think it is a pity this reflection on his character should be dragged into a discussion of this kind, which has no reference to him as to his acts.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have one word to say in reply to what the hon. gentleman read. He said the Conservative candidate was unseated. In that he is in error. He was not unseated. Neither was there another election. The only point upon which the judges differed at all in that case was as to a dollar which Mr. Sutherland had paid to a hostler, who had taken care of his horse. That is the only thing that was proved against Mr. Sutherland, and Mr. Justice Street did not consider it of sufficient importance to unseat him, and send him back to his constituency. The hon. gentleman's memory in that respect is in error, and if he will permit me to say it—and I say it very respectfully—it is equally at fault in reference to the other points to which he has called the attention of the House. The 'tu quoque' argument does not meet this case at all. I stated in my remarks that I deprecated this kind of thing as much as any one could, and I agreed that the necessity that existed in the country at the present moment was that both parties should set their faces against it. Now, he is defending it, and I question whether there is another senator in the House who would justify the actions of Mr. Jackson in this matter, as well as in other matters. I am not going to refer to the remarks which the hon. gentleman has made in reference to what has taken place in the party to which I belong. One thing is certain, and that is that Mr. Chambers was disreputable enough to enter into an alliance with this respectable Mr. Jackson, who has had a certificate of character from the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, to sell himself. He appears to know more about the matter than anybody else. I do not arrogate to myself such a knowledge, but I do claim to be a tolerably close student of political events as they occur, reading the newspapers pro and con, and having a tolerably good memory, I am glad to say that I remember the principal incidents connected with all of these trials. The hon. gentleman has by a piece of—I was going to say forensic eloquence—no, forensic sophistry—I do not want it to be understood disrespectfully, but I can think of no other word to convey my meaning, in reference to Jackson—taken precious good care not to refer to the admission which Jackson made under oath, and which I am quoting now from the 'Globe.' His morality was of such a character that he said 'I considered it natural to say that I told Chambers it did not matter whether the evidence was true or false, so long as it upset the election.' There is the statement of the man himself. His ideas of right and wrong, and his ideas of the course that he thought he was justified in taking in order to unseat Mr. Sutherland, was that he cared not whether the evidence was true or false, so long as it accomplished the object.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Instigation to subornation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It was an instigation of subornation to perjury. He says : 'Here, is your money. You will have so much if you accomplish such an object.' What was the object ? To prove six of the eight charges which Chambers said he could bring forward. So long as he could unseat the man he did not care whether the sworn evidence was true or not. That is the character of the man the hon. gentleman defends, and whom the government have rewarded for his endeavours to purchase men to swear to lies.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Did Jackson admit having made that statement ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The 'Globe' so reports him.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I do not care what the 'Globe' reports. Did Jackson admit in his evidence that he made that statement to Chambers ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I understood the hon. gentleman to say he denied it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, he did say that he denied it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—He made a denial in court.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He did not deny it in court. He denied it afterwards.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—The government have no objection to the motion of my hon. friend, and if there are any papers in connection with this matter they will be brought down. Fortunately for me, or unfortunately, as the case may be, I come from a province where these things do not occur, either on the Conservative or Liberal side. We have a very pure election out in British Columbia, and I think our good friends from the east on both sides of politics might take pattern from the manner in which the western districts conduct elections. Personally I know nothing about these matters, or I should be very happy to say something on the question raised by my hon. friend. He had no doubt only one object in view, which was not to get papers, but to make a political partisan speech in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—No question about it. Well, he has achieved the object he had in view. If there are any papers, as I said before, there will be no objection whatever to their production.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think that the hon. gentleman has no right to impute motives to anybody.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I am imputing no motive whatever. I am stating my hon. friend's object. I have said nothing about motive.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no objection to that, but I object to the hon. gentleman judging others by himself.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I do not think that taunt is justifiable at all. However, there is no objection to bringing down the papers. I cannot discuss this matter. I must say frankly I do not understand the subject. However, if there are any papers they will be presented to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MUTUAL RESERVE LIFE ASSOCIATION POLICIES.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE inquired of the government :

What amount of assessment policies of the Mutual Reserve Life Association exist in Canada at present, and how many policies of the old line business now being adopted are in force, and for what amount ; also, what funds are held by the government for each system of insurance in Canada ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answer to the hon. gentleman's inquiry is as follows : Of the assessment business of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, now the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company, issued prior to 11th August, 1899, there was outstanding at the 31st December, 1903, policies to the number of 4,028, and to the amount of $7,929,700; and of the business issued since the said 11th August, 1899, upon the legal reserve basis, there was then outstanding 566 policies, to the amount of $1,412,820. Of the amount now on deposit with the Receiver General there is applicable to the assessment policy-holders of the date prior to 11th August, 1899, $238,460 par value, the present accepted value being $218,938; and to holders of legal reserve policies $41,607 par value (including the amount now in the hands of the company's trustees), the capital value whereof is $38,984.

INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE inquired of the government:

If a draft of an Insurance Bill to amend the present Act has been submitted to the Insurance Department? If so, when, and by whom? If the Insurance Department prepared any such Bill, and if so, at whose suggestion, and at what date, and in whose hands it was placed in after having been so prepared?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A draft of a proposed Bill to amend the Insurance Act was submitted to the department on the 13th April, 1904, and an amended draft on the 20th April, 1904, both by Mr. Angus MacMurchy.

The Insurance department has not prepared any Bill on the subject.

INSURANCE RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I beg to lay on the table of the House a return to an address dated October, 1903, for a statement showing the amount of premiums of insurance against fire which have been paid each year in the city of Montreal during the last ten years, up to the 1st July last, and also showing the amounts paid each year at Montreal during the same period by insurance companies to holders of policies. The companies are not bound to furnish this information, and in a circular letter they decline to furnish it, except in the cases of the Anglo-American Fire Insurance Company, the Connecticut Fire Insurance Company, the Law Union and Crown Insurance Company, and the London Fire Insurance Company. These are the only companies who have made any returns.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION.

MOTION.

The Order of the Day being called :

For the appointment of a Select Committee of five to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada, with power to send for papers, persons, telegrams and records, to employ clerical services, and with leave to report from time to time.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE said : In speaking to this motion, which was adjourned a short time ago, I am taking the position that I have proved certain things with reference to the company's business here and elsewhere, and various other matters in connection therewith, I will read some letters from those asking us to do them justice. I will only read a few, because if one, or two, or three hold good, we may infer that all the letters which have been sent to me are based on good grounds and we may fairly assume that we are not asked to deal simply with an individual case. The first letter I read is from Archibald Alcom of Blackville, N. B.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Does the hon. gentleman intend to move for his committee to-day ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I do not think it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Because the hon. gentleman from Toronto asked me to suggest that if the hon. member was not to move for his committee he should adjourn his remarks until the hon. gentleman from Toronto is present. I simply make the suggestion as requested.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I shall be only too glad to meet the views of my hon. friend, but I will put in to-day a few of the letters which will serve to guide the hon. gentleman and others, so that they will have before them material which they might not gather from my imperfect handling of the subject. With a copy of the 'Debates' before them, they will be able to judge of the case in better shape. In a short time I shall ask the House to allow me to adjourn the debate till to-morrow until such time as the hon. gentleman may be present. Mr. Alcom writes as follows:

I am glad to see by the reports of the House that you have taken up the case of the Mutual Reserve Association of New York, U.S., and which I sincerely hope you will be able to prove to the satisfaction of both Houses of parliament and to the country at large that they are a complete set of swindlers. I am one of these victims which have been duped. Paid into their society for fifteen years, complied with every condition of the contract, and yet notwithstanding all that was deliberately told, there was nothing coming to my policy.

Another case of a poor widow woman which lives near by here which insured about the same time that I did was served exactly the same way. Now if there is anything that I can do to assist you in having these swindlers put out of the business or make them pay up, I will be only too glad to do it. I have a lot of these correspondence and I also have my policy if any of them is any benefit they are simply at your disposal, also the widow woman that I have already referred to is prepared to give over all her papers also her testimony if needed if any evidence from me is needed, could I not give it before a justice of the peace. I am sorry that at this time of the year it is impossible for me to get away or I would only be to willing to come to Ottawa or any place to give evidence against them. Hoping that you will leave no stone unturned to mete out to them the punishment they so justly deserve.

The next letter I come to is from John M. Kerr, Toronto. I do not think it is from one of our colleagues here, whose name I believe is J. K. Kerr This letter is dated 18th April and is as follows:

I take this means of thanking you, for your action in calling the attention of the Senate of Canada, to the doings of the Mutual Reserve Life Association of New York, towards their Canadian policy-holders. In 1891, by the persuasive convasser, I was induced to insure for $1,000. I was led to believe that the annual premium would not exceed $26 or $27 and that the Dominion government held securities for the protection of Canadian policy-holders, I paid this amount for eight years. The ninth year the assessment was doubled on me, and on the tenth year I was notified that the assessment would remain at this double amount for the ensuing ten years. I am a house painter, about four years ago I had a fall receiving a componud fracture at my left ankle, this and my advancing years have weakened my earning capacity, making it a hard struggle for me to meet this increased expense.

Should you be the means of our government compelling this company to act fair and honest by their Canadian policy-holders, you will deserve the everlasting gratitude of many.

The next letter which I shall read is from Mary M. Casserby, of Tottenham, Ont. She says:

Hon. Sir,—In last weeks' parliamentary report I notice you are taking some interest in the management of the Mutual Reserve Life Association of New York.

Some twelve years ago I took a $3,000 policy in the Provincial Provident Insurance Company of St. Thomas, which afterwards amalgamated with the Mutual Reserve.

My payment for some time after amalgamation were about $40 per annum. About two years ago the payments were suddenly increased to about $100 annually, which I consider very exorbitant and not according to my original contract.

She goes on to say she is thankful to the Senate that they are looking after this matter. The next is from F. M. Hall, of Barrie, Ont., who says:

I am glad there is a man in the government willing to interest himself in behalf of the widows and orphans who are being called upon to suffer a cruel imposition at the hands of the scoundrels composing the Mutual Reserve Insurance Company and under the cognizance of our own government. You, of course, appreciate the situation. In the case of a widow who was expecting to get the amount of the face of the policy and then to be proferred less than the half of it, and in the case like our own when our father had paid more premiums than the face of the policy. I understand that this company was allowed by the government to take a lien on the policies, but these liens were drawn in such a way that it would take a clever lawyer to interpret them, so that it does not seem to me that a Supreme Court would hold these liens valid, as it can be proven that the parties signing were misled. Then again the lien bears interest to the company, which is simply absurd, as if a policy-holder lived long enough, the interests would eat up the whole policy, and in fact the policy-holder besides not having anything coming to himself or his beneficiaries, would be debiting himself to the company besides losing all of the thousands of dollars he had already paid in. Now I am no lawyer or scholar, but am sure that unless the laws of this country are founded on absurdities, there must be redress for the great number of widows who happened to be beneficiaries on the policies of this company. Is not the government responsible for the proper conducting of such institutions? If not there are a great number of misled people carrying insurance. Now, in regard to these liens if they were drawn with the intention of defrauding surely in the case of insurance the law cannot sanction or allow it as it would necessarily be a national contention and demand that the government shall not allow such a crime to be perpetrated on the most defenceless of its charges. I was overjoyed to know that you had taken up the attack and that you intend to follow it up. I hope you will if it is for principle alone, and if there is any chance for us we are anxious to hear. There are some, my mother for one who are trying to get a satisfactory settlement and are in a great quandry whether to accept their miserable offer, not knowing where to look for the proper advice. Any ordinary lawyer advises her to take what they offer, but your advice on the matter should be the most valuable.

The next is from H. J. Gibson, of Elmira. It is a long letter, very much to the same effect, that he belonged to the Provincial Provident Institution which was taken over by the Mutual Reserve who got their money, $100,000 then on deposit, and treated their policy-holders in the same way with regard to what they would give them. The next one is from James Johnston, of Mildmay, Ont., dated April 15th. He makes the same complaint very much, but he goes on to say, talking of one policy referred to made by the Provincial Provident Company of St. Thomas, Ont., which was absorbed by the Mutual Reserve:

The insured at first paid a total of $24.40 per annum on an insurance of $1,000, and now he has to pay a total of $49.90 per annum. As there is no value in these policies if any default is made in payment of assessment, the parties here are anxious to know if they are being honestly dealt with by the company, in being asked to pay such assessments. And they fear that they may not have yet reached their maximum assessment.

The next is from S. Alfred Jones, of Toronto. He says:

Hundreds of people in this province are watching with interest your splendid fight against The Mutual Reserve concern. I know of no instance which calls more loudly for legislative interference, than the one which you have brought to the attention of the Senate. People in Ontario are watching your movement with intense interest.

The next is from F. Warren, Toronto. He says:

As a policy-holder in the Mutual Reserve Life Association, I am pleased to see you are asking for a committee to inquire into the position of that company. I have held a policy in that company for over ten years and when I took out the policy I was lead to believe that the premium would not exceed the then stated amount, but at the expiration of the ten years I am now asked to double my former premium. I agreed to do so provided I got a statement from the company that my risk up to that time held good which they refused to give me, but stated they believed it was.

The next is from Wm. Wilkinson:

Dear Sir,—I am pleased to see you are dealing with the Mutual Reserve Company. I insured in this company in May, 1903, on the 10-year distribution plan—paying $5.78 bi-monthly—and extra calls. In May, 1903, the notice came for $10.46. As the policy stated that the reserve or emergency fund was to be apportioned annually after ten years, and in case of the death of the member the sum so apportioned shall be paid in addition to the face of the policy I wrote to the head office inquiring what the amount was, also asking the number of members in Canada in 1903 as compared with 1902. To none of those questions did I receive answers in the least degree satisfactory.

In addition to the increased rate came extra assessments, so that finding that no explanations were forthcoming, and that there was no certainty as to the amount I might be called upon to pay I ceased paying.

You have, no doubt, seen policies like mine. They plainly read that after the expiration of ten years the share of the contributions of lapses may be used toward the payment of dues, &c. There is not the least indication that the rates will be increased. The agent understood it, as I did, that these profits would go to the reduction of the premiums.

The company is certainly in a moribund condition. The public has lost faith in it. and as I said in a communication to the inspector of insurance, Mr. Fitzgerald, the government ought to close them up.

I do hope that in the interests of the public whose guardians the members of parliament are, you will succeed in stopping this company from doing business in Canada.

I call attention here to the fact that these people were led to believe that they were only to pay so much and at the end of so many years they were to get a dividend, and I hope to be able to show that some of them did get dividends while others were being assessed in an extraordinary manner such as I have been reading about. No. 10 is from J. Geeson, of Tottenham, who complains in the same way. Mr. Pullen, of Halifax, makes the very same statement. Mr. Swam, of Toronto, writes in a similar strain and asks for relief and protection for Canadian policy-holders. He says:

It is certainly a crying shame that insurance companies are allowed to swindle the people the way they have been doing. This company for instance has been squeezing out policy-holders for years by raising the rates, numbers of cases to my own knowledge who could ill afford to lose their insurance after paying their premiums for ten or fifteen years. There is surely something radically wrong with Canadian legislation when such barefaced swindlers with such contemptible audacity are allowed to do business in Canada apparently protected by the laws of the land.

Mr. Hughes of Orangeville, Ont., writes and says:

My mother died last year. She held a policy in the Mutual Reserve for two thousand dollars. They jewed me down to $500. It is a dirty company, I wish you luck.

His mother died and all they would give him on a policy of $2,000 was $500. I have a letter from Mr. Chas. Jones, of Moncton, and I should like to hand this letter to my hon. friend from Moncton, but I must keep the papers together. Chas. Jones, a well known man in Moncton, says:

My call about the first of the year was $27, an addition of $16.90 which I paid. I now have another call for $20.56 with a large ten-year dividend of $2.18 clearly not deducted from the amount at call which I herewith inclose for your inspection. I have written Mr. W. H. White but he advises me he cannot give any explanation on the matter. I then asked him to refer my letter to headquarters and from there I have received nothing since. They claim if amount is not paid my insurance is forfeited and all I have paid in is lost amounting in all nearly one thousand dollars. I asked them if my policy had any cash value to which question I can gain no information; therefore, Sir, I trust you may be successful in probing it to the bottom.

What he complains of here is that they took his policy and agreed, after ten years, that he was to pay no more, and they were to give him a dividend, but when the dividend came due he did not get it. Here is the slip and I should like to have it appear in the 'Debates', although it is not worth while to read it at all. This call is headed 'New York, April 1, 1904.' When they are pleading their inability to pay the policyholders, they are arguing that they have to assess them, and even if they assess them until nothing is left, it is within their right and they must submit to it at the same time they are paying dividends to some. They bought a pig in a poke and it is their lookout and not the company's. On April 1, 1894, signed Chas. W. Camp, Secretary, this notice reads as follows:

Ten Years Distribution Deposit Plan.
Premium call, 133.
Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company.
Frederick A. Burnham, President.
Mutual Reserve Building, 305, 307, 309 Broadway, New York.

New York, April 1, 1904.

Charles Jones, 157207
Moncton, N.B.

Amount of call..	$20 56
Less dividend..	2 18
Net amount payable..	$18 38

Paying one class of people dividends while they are telling others that they have nothing to pay at all, and that they must be assessed. It appears there are half a dozen different classes in this company, not by law, because we have their charter here and we have the law of Canada, but they arrogate for themselves that they have full control and charge of the company and the power to say what they will do to one and what they will do to the other. Some hon. gentleman in the House stated that they were pleading in forma pauperis and should be given relief, but while they were in forma pauperis they were paying Jones a dividend. Why should he get a dividend unless we all got a dividend? Are we to be assessed to pay dividends to some persons and others get none? I think that is one of the most important pieces of paper I have here as will be seen later on. Now we have another letter from Chas. W. Camp, Secretary, dated New York, April 1, 1904—that was a happy day to date it—and addressed to Mr. Jones. It reads as follows:—

We desire to call your attention to the fact that your policy, which is a ten-year renewable term contract, provides for the apportionment of a dividend at the expiration of ten years, applicable to the reduction of the cost of the assurance for the eleven and succeeding years.

He is to have dividends for eleven years after the ten years though we are told the company cannot pay its liabilities under the contract, that the contract was an unfortunate one, that when they made it they had miscalculated their tables and that parliament must pass their Bill. The Bill is before us, I have it on my file. We are asked to give them a remedy because they cannot pay up, and here is a letter dated only twenty-four days ago, in which they tell this gentleman that he will have the cost of the insurance reduced in the eleven succeeding years, such cost being based upon his attained age and calculated to remain ten years without further increase. The ten years have now expired and the first dividend is now due and may be deducted from the amount of the current premiums as per the terms of the contract and as set forth in the inclosed notice.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—What is the date?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—First of April, 1904. From the Mutual Reserve Life Association, signed by Camp, Secretary.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—Is the dividend in cash?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—He did not get his dividend. The point I make to the House is that while we are told they have to make extra assessments, they are declaring a dividend. Now I will read a letter which comes a litte nearer home perhaps, from a gentleman who thoroughly knows what he is writing about—Wm. M. German, M.P., for Welland, in the House of Commons. They write him as follows:

In compliance with the request made by you during our conversation yesterday morning, viz., that I personally gave you by letter the particulars concerning your policy No. 181745 for five thousand dollars. I beg leave to state as follows:

This policy was issued in February, 1895, on the ten-year distribution deposit plan, it being a contract providing for ten years renewable term insurance, that is, the premium rate is calculated to remain uniform for ten years, there being a dividend apportioned at the expiration of that time applicable to the deduction of the cost of the eleventh and succeeding years insurance, such cost being based upon the assured's attained age and calculated to remain level for another period of ten years.

Now while they tell him it is uniform for ten years they are putting extra assessments on the people all the time contrary to what they claim they would do and contrary to what they say in their letter they are doing. The letter continues:

Of all the policies issued by this or any other company none has been put out which provided for a greater amount of protection at the same cost. In other words, no cheaper or better policy could be procured anywhere. I would say further that policies on practically this same plan are being written to-day by a majority of the old line or legal reserve which recommends them highly.

No more assessments and yet a Bill is brought into this House to allow them to go into such a scheme as they choose, and wipe them out by assessments. The letter proceeds:

However, as I stated during our conversation, we permit our members under entirely equitable conditions to exchange their policies to the legal reserve or old line basis, the plan being so formulated as to permit their premiums under the new policy to be based, if they choose, upon their age at entry under their original contract. Should you desire further particulars concerning this exchange, I will see to it that the same are promptly forwarded.

The cynicism of this thing!

It affords me pleasure to inform you that my statements not only as to the solvency, but also as to the prosperity and excellent progress of the company are most easily proven.

And yet we have a statement laid on the table showing that they are going from bad to worse every day and assessing the people. He further says:

I inclose herein a printed copy of the report made by the New York Insurance Department last year. This examination was made at our request and was most stringent and thorough.

And then he goes on to make a lot of statements which I do not think I shall read just now. Then a letter written by Mr. A. Manley of Halifax, on the 4th January, 1904, as follows:

Mr. James Adams, an old shipmate and particular friend has just returned from visiting his home at Hampton.

He goes on to say he had seen him and talked the matter over about what I was doing here in Ottawa. The letter continues:

In 1897 I was the general agent here for an old line company with a good salary, a renewal income worth $1,100 per annum, and well satisfied from a financial point of view. But I had, after several conversations with a representative of the Mutual Reserve, certain misgivings as to the old line companies being able to fulfil their estimates regarding profits.

They sent him a statement of what purported to be their business for the provinces, that is the maritime provinces, which he was asked to sign. He was asked to swear to the statement and forward it to the authorities at Ottawa. He continued:

I found this report absolutely incorrect, both as to the business in force, expense money paid here, and death claims paid. In fact, the names of parties were given as having died of whom I never heard, not only so, but even the names of places at which they died I coult not locate, as there was no such place in the province. I at once sent the report back setting forth the facts as here stated. They replied that with one or two small items the report was correct, and that although the parties had not died here, 'the business formerly belonged here,' ignoring the fact as stated by me that there was no such place. They concluded that the report should be completed by me at once, as I was subject to a heavy fine if the report was not received at Ottawa at a certain date.

I replied that the threat of a fine was not going to induce me to subscribe to a document which I knew to be false, and tendered my resignation at the same time. This document was I believe subsequently sworn to and forwarded. However, before returning it to them, I took the precaution of having it carefully copied by an independent party and have preserved it to the present time.

My health became affected afterwards, so that I could not get insurance in the Mutual Reserve as worthless I allowed it to lapse.

Now it goes without saying that owing to the representations they made I allowed my insurance elsewhere to lapse. These representations they must have known to be false and I should be entitled to damages from them.

That man is in Halifax to-day and is willing to come before any committee. The next is from a Mr. Porter, of St. Stephens, a policy-holder to the extent of $5,000, but he thinks he will have to let his policy go; he cannot pay the assessments. He took the policy believing it was on the basis I have mentioned, and he presumed he had made himself safe for life and that his income would allow him to keep up his premiums and make this provision for his family. To-day he finds that he cannot meet their extravagant assessments. He is an old man, and is in no position to insure in another company. I have here a letter from J. A. Brackenridge, of Nottaway, Ont., to the same effect. I have other letters by the score of the same character. I have not had time to analyse the report brought down here the other day. It covers eleven years, but I should like to quote a few of the figures from it. I take up the Canadian part of it first and I want to show how this company drove the people to compromise their claims.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Would not that properly come before the committee?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I think it would be as well to give the fact to the House. I shall only mention a few items. They took policies in this country from the year 1898 to 1903, to the amount of $33,874,840. By deaths in that time, by surrender and by expiry, which really means lapse, they got rid of $45,000,000 of policies, while according to their statement they never had more than $33,000,000. How do they account for the difference? This shows the unfortunate condition of the company in Canada. They ran down from thirty-three to twenty-nine, and twenty-three millions, and to-day they have only nine million dollars in force. While the policies have been disappearing in this way the cost of doing business has been going on steadily.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Are the premiums reducing proportionately?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—No, the premiums are doubling. In the last four years they received in Canada an income of $1,489,407.54, and paid out $1,200,000. Deducting the expenditure from the income collected in Canada, there was a surplus of $334,360.38. The assessments that had been made covered everything and allowed them this amount which they took to New York. Now let us go into the items of their accounts. They paid in that time to their agents in Canada $145,832.09. Had these unfortunate policy-holders been assessing themselves in a little assessment company of their own, they would have had in that time $490,000 in their treasury, which with the $250,000 held by the government to-day on behalf of that company, would give $740,000 lying here to-day. What right had this money to go to the United States? Perhaps a portion of it might, if they had paid all their expenses here. Why should the Canadian policy-holders be called upon to put up for New York? The people in New York are assessed to produce what they require among themselves, and we will presently have before us the figures showing the extremely wild and reckless expenditure of money there. I would not like to say myself what the company as been charged with; I will read it from actual statements. They have received as income from all sources in the twelve years I speak of $78,634,208.09 in premiums. How much did they pay to policy-holders? They paid a little over $49,000,000. The amount was made up in this way, $40,000,000 in expenses: commissions to agents, $5,000,000; salaries, and all expenses connected with the agency, $1,319,000; medical examiners, $624,000; salaries of officers and home office employees, $3,649,517.66; commissions paid for collections, $1,206,369.58; cost of adjusting claims, $941,534.06. These were claims they had employed lawyers all over the country to scale down. People not being able to sue and get justice, took anything they could get, and this large amount, nearly one million dollars, was paid to these gentlemen who went around the country to frighten people out of their policies. Then there is renewal commissions $99,000 besides. That is how the $40,000,000 is made up, and the company should have a balance to the credit of the insurance people, because it is not a company, but a few gentlemen managing it, and the public cannot get it out of their hands. They hold the proxies and that accounts for this extraordinary state of affairs in the company to-day.

I will read just a few short extracts from reports of the insurance commissioners of different states. The first I come to is from the Insurance Commissioner of Lincoln, Neb. He says:

> Replying to your letter will state that this company has been doing business in this state but at the present time, license is withheld on account of a protest which has been filed with this department against the company. The protest charges that the company has not dealt fairly with certain of its members in regard to their assessment.
> I cannot say when this protest will be heard.

The next is from the Commissioner of Life Insurance of the state of Louisiana. He says:

> The company has withdrawn after controversy because of ruling of department requiring all policies to be stamped 'Assessment plan.'

Then I received the following from the Insurance Commissioner of the state of Ohio:

> They are not licensed in this state to transact business in Ohio.

All the replies to my letters are to the same effect, that they are not permitting them to do business except in a very few states.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Has the hon. gentleman a list of the amounts paid by the company in Canada on death claims?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—They paid death claims in Canada for those years, or paid under the head of death claims—I do not know whether they were scalped or not—$1,880,552.65, and they collected in that time $4,653,519.65.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—When they should have paid $4,000,000? How much is the amount of the policies they should have paid?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I do not know. I have given notice of an inquiry for that information now. We have nothing before us now to show what deductions were made from the policy-holders. The insurance accounts show how much they have paid: how much they scalped I do not know. I have a letter from Murray and McLatchie, lawyers, of Campbellton, asking whether, if they should apply to the Attorney General here, there is any chance of getting the Crown to take up a case in Canada. They are of opinion apparently that it has got so far advanced that the case should be taken up by the Attorney General. Judge Hall, in the case of Caldwell vs. the Mutual Reserve, a case in which Caldwell recovered over $56,000, says:

> Burnham's evidence shows distinctly that it was not consistent and therefore unreliable.

I think, perhaps, hon. gentlemen are getting tired of this subject to-day but in order to give a chance to some hon. gentlemen who are not here to-day to deal with the question, I will show the enormity of the scaling process. You will remember that I mentioned the other day that they had paid on an average only 30 or 40 per cent of the face value of the claims, and had never paid 100 per cent. They had contested claims to such an extent that people compromised and accepted the best they could get. I see in the statement that I laid on the table the other day—that brief which came into my possession—the assertion is made that they do not scale any of their policies. Let me give you some facts to show that they have done so. The claims of one group of men total $368,995. That is to say, they should have been paid that amount for their policies. They received $149,295.56, a little over 40 per cent. These are all facts and figures which have been made public—matters of public notoriety. Take another group; the policies amounted to $410,880; they were scaled down to $128,494.47.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—What year was that?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That was in 1899. I have another statement here of the scaling down of policies amounting to $230,714. That was reduced to $81,366.50. That was in October, 1899. I think hon. gentlemen will accept what I say just now without going too far, because they will see it in committee, that they scale these people down, and as I showed you by the account, they only pay forty millions where they received some seventy-nine millions. I will now quote from the 'Interview,' of New York as follows:

> Many suits against the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association are in prospect. Benjamin F. Washer, who has secured judgment of $20,000 against the company, will try and collect this amount. Suits will be instituted by policy-holders to have returned premiums they have paid into the association, upon the ground that there was fraud practiced by the company. A decision favourable to the policy-holders, made by the Supreme Court in the Phelps case a few days ago, will also be cited in these cases.

And here is another extract from the same document:

> The filing on February 25 of the twelve judgments was not 'the first news' in these actions, nor in many other similar suits. The New York 'Law Journal' of January 22 contained a long and able decision by Mr. Justice Seabury, in the Johnston cases, a part of which was republished in the January issue of 'The Interview.' Besides, similar victories have been won by policy-holders. And that proves that justice is not dead yet, and it also proves that at least a part of the Mutual Reserve victims will not meekly submit to bearing the numerous burdens imposed upon them by the Bowery collection agent and his co-faker, Eldridge, the assesment-company-gravedigger.

I have another paper which could be read from if necessary where it says that they have their assets in such a state that no judgment could be collected. Here is the Belgium deposit in London. They have a million dollars cash assets which they were compelled, when they first went into business, to deposit in countries where they were licensed to operate, but as it is there and held for that purpose so long as any assessment policies exist in those countries, they cannot touch that money. When, therefore, by their process of scaling down the policies they having reduced their business from three hundred million, to one hundred and two million, and have ground it down in Canada from $36,000,000 to something like $9,000,000—with such a showing and levying assessments such as the poor people cannot afford to pay, they come up with a new company, a line company, on a different principle, and there they have all those deposits in various places, their own property. The assessment people have passed away in Canada and elsewhere. They can get nothing out of it and have no further claim. They are like people whose policies have lapsed. They have been driven out and it says that it is clearly intended to freeze out the people and get the money and they can do it with so much power because when Mr. Harper died he left the proxies to Mr. Burnham and he uses these proxies and nobody can get possession of that institution. They can do what they like. They can take what they like, as I will show you by and by. They can put what they like in their own pockets and what redress can you have? Mr. German goes to them and they tell him a cock and bull story, and they write to another man telling him he is getting a dividend, as they had agreed to pay, but he does not get it. They credit it on his premium. They can come to this honourable body and ask to get legislation to allow them to go on, and I think it is one of the boldest things that ever was done, with these papers published all over the world against them, and the judges of the courts giving judgments against them everywhere. They come to parliament and say 'put us on our legs,' and to the Canadian policy-holders they say 'come unto us, done with the old love, on with the new, get what you can out of us but get parliament to make good our position in the eyes of the world.' Here is the case of a man who was arrested, Mr. Burnham and Mr. Eldridge arrested this man in the afternoon and sent him to jail. The point is, that while the judges have made all the comments about them from various places as to their want of integrity, they challenge this man to meet them in the law courts, and they are afraid to go to them on criminal grounds. I will go further into this question when my hon. friend from Toronto is here. I now move that the debate stand adjourned until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Allow me to suggest to the hon. gentleman that as we are all interested, and can only be interested in the policy-holders and in their future welfare, that he should lay before this House at as early a date as possible his scheme of rectification, or whatever he may have in his mind, that we can examine the suggestion he wants to make. We have from the hon. gentleman from Toronto a projected draft of a Bill which he has laid before this chamber. If the hon. gentleman who states that he wants to place before us some matter in order that we may cogitate over it could, as quickly as possible, give us the conclusions that he wants to reach, or the suggestions he wants to make, we could at the same time give some thought to the proposition that he wishes to lay before the chamber. I see in his motion that he speaks of a committee, but possibly he has already in his mind some suggestion for the relief of the policy-holders who have gone into this Mutual Assessment, for whom he speaks, I have no doubt, or for a certain number. It appears to me if the hon. gentleman has framed some relief Bill he should give us the advantage of it in order that we may examine it side by side with the other suggestion which has come from the hon. gentleman from Toronto. I do not know if he will be here to-morrow. Perhaps the hon. gentleman could adjourn a continuation of the exposition of the grievances that may be put in his hands against that company, because it is a somewhat peculiar situation of having a complaint on the instalment plan, when there are considerable interests to be examined and safeguarded in this connection.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—In reply to my hon. friend, I think it would be rather presumptuous for me to go and tell them now that I have a plan cut and dried to guide them and tell them what they have to do. They are judges here. I lay the complaint of the public before them. I am complaining for Canada and laying the complaint before this honourable body, and I ask them to investigate it with the committee. When that committee is formed the hon. gentlemen on it will investigate the matter and will report to the House and the House will debate their finding. Then is the time to say what relief shall be afforded. How can I talk about giving relief to them when there is a Bill brought in to give them relief, when the ground is cut from under me? I ask this House to consider it, to adjourn the debate till to-morrow. I am only too willing to do anything to accommodate any hon. gentleman. I am not here to put impediments in anybody's way ; I am here to try and do my duty pleasantly. It was a very poor result when that Bill was snapped in after my debate was adjourned. If I adjourn till later than to-morrow, I cannot tell what the future may bring forth.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Do I understand my hon. friend to say the introduction of a Bill purporting to give relief to Canadian policy-holders in this country cuts the ground from under his feet ? I would imagine if relief was granted that that should be our object and that only.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—This is what I complain of : when I told the House last year and this year that I proposed to bring in a Bill if the evidence supported my statement, then they ask me to adjourn the debate and bring in a Bill ahead of anything I could introduce, and before the committee could hear it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If their Bill is not right assist them to make it better.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That is a question we must consider on the examination. There is no doubt relief must be given in some way to these people. What is the best mode of dealing with it is what we should consider. I stayed here to attend to my business and I think hon. gentlemen should do the same. If we adjourn till Friday, then we are going to adjourn till the 25th of May. It reminds me of the story about the darkey down south who was accused of stealing melons: he said that it could not be true because at that time he was in Jackson's fowl roost stealing chickens. I am serious in the matter. I am not a lawyer and do not know the intricacies of the law. Having made my motion, I propose to stand or fall by it, and unless under the very greatest pressure, I would be unable to adjourn it to a later day.

The motion was agreed to.

THE PACIFIC CABLE.

MOTION.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL moved.

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid upon the table of the Senate, a return showing the earnings and expenses of operating the Pacific cable since its opening for business:—

1. The number of words transmitted each way, distinguishing ordinary messages from government messages.
2. The gross earnings each month.
3. The total expenses incurred each month—
(a.) In repairs.
(b.) In maintenance.
(c.) In interest.
(d.) In sinking fund.
(e.) In salaries.

Together with copies of all correspondence relating to any difficulties which may have arisen in Australia in connection with the working and operating of said Pacific cable.

He said: My reason for making this motion arises from the fact that Mr. D. H. Ross, commercial agent for Victoria, South Australia, Western Australia and Tasmania, makes a report dated December, 1903, in which he uses the following language under the head of the Pacific cable:

After nearly four months spent in Australia and New Zealand, Mr. C. H. Reynolds, the London manager of the Pacific cable, sailed for England this week. Upon inquiring at the Chamber of Commerce yesterday, I was told that they had no intention of a canvasser having been appointed for the city. Nothing could be more unsatisfactory than the existing condition of things, and page after page could be written illustrating that the state-owned cable is being run on anything but business principles. Melbourne merchants would gladly avail themselves of the Pacific cable if the service was made popular.

To show that a conference of the co-partners is a matter of urgency, I quote herewith an extract of a letter, dated September 25, from a London office to their head office in Melbourne:

'Telegrams via the American lines continue unsatisfactory, badly written, no duplicate unless specially sent for, and principally turning up during the day instead of first thing in the morning before our buyers go out. We should be glad, therefore, if you would revert back to the "Eastern."'

I think my hon. friend the hon. Secretary of State, who has given some attention to this matter in the past, will be somewhat surprised at the action of those who are managing this state cable, of which we are part owners and to which we have to contribute annually a certain amount of the expenses, whatever they may be. When referring to this subject during the last session of parliament, I called attention to the unsatisfactory manner in which this cable business was transacted, I pointed out that the deficit during the year had amounted to a very large sum. Now, if that deficit is increasing, as this statement of Mr. Ross would indicate it will increase, we shall have to pay an amount proportionate to our ownership of the cable and consequently will become a heavy burden upon the people of Canada. We, being partners and joint owners, I think it is but right and fair that the people of Canada should know how this business is managed, what expenses are incurred in conducting it and what the receipts are, and then to take such action as may be deemed necessary in order to avoid the deficits which must necessarily arise from bad management. I have never had but one opinion upon the manner in which this company is managed, and that is, that it is managed to a very great extent, if not directly, in the interest of the Eastern Extension Company, at least in a manner to prevent our cable becoming a paying concern. I am quite satisfied that the government has not the full information at its command, and it may be just possible that they may not be able to get a return giving the information which I have asked for during the present session of parliament. It will be necessary to communicate with the Colonial Secretary, in order to procure from the committee that is managing this cable the information which I asked for in the motion which I am making, and which I have not the slightest doubt the hon. Secretary of State will be glad to furnish as soon as it can be had. I have often expressed my opinion in the Senate upon what I thought of the manner in which the Australian people and also the imperial authorities have conducted business in the past, and expressed the opinion that the government of Canada should take active and decisive measures in order, not only to obtain the information I have asked for, but to insist on the management in future being based on business principles. That is the view I hold, and I think any man who has any practical knowledge of the working of a Pacific cable will agree with me. I am equally convinced the hon. Secretary of State will concur, and that he holds just as strong views upon this question as I do. There is no reason why a state cable owned by Great Britain. Australia and Canada should not be made a paying concern. The Eastern Extension has earned enormous profits and declared enormous dividends, while professing all the time not to earn more than is necessary to carry on the business. An investigation of the accounts and an investigation of the whole proceedings will show that it has been one of the most profitable undertakings in existence to-day in the shape of a cable company, and under the circumstances, and knowing what business there is to transact between these colonies and England and Canada, there is no reason why that business should not be done over our cable. You will see by this report of Mr. Ross that the business men in England are cabling out to their firms and business men in Australia do their cabling by the Eastern Extension and not by the American company. The American company is the company owned by Great Britain, Australia and Canada. Why should that be? Why should there be such mismanagement? Why should gentlemen in London who are doing business rendering it necessary that they should have their cables early in the morning before the market opens not receive them earlier? This gentleman says they do not receive them until the business day is over, and their transactions in stocks and in other matters are concluded. And the result is that it delays the whole operation of business till next morning.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is very natural to have brought this motion before the Senate and to ask for the papers. It is within the memory of most of us that the hon. gentleman has for nearly ten years taken a very deep interest in the Pacific cable. He presided at the meeting in this chamber when the first movement was made for the establishment of a cable between Canada and the Australian colonies. It was to be expected, no doubt, that in the first year of the cable there would be a deficit. It had a powerful rival in the Eastern Extension. The Eastern Extension had succeeded in making arrangements with parties who were to use the cable service between Europe and Australia, and therefore one would look for a deficit, perhaps larger than they anticipated. Speaking from memory, I think about $125,000 was our share of it, altogether too large, of course, if the concern had fair-play. There is just one redeeming feature about it, and that is that the Pacific cable is a superior cable. The Construction Company, as it is called, that worked for the Eastern Extension was really honest in giving us a good cable, and it is a matter of notoriety that messages pass over that cable, perhaps more readily than over many other cables. The chief disadvantage that the cable rests under is, as my hon. friend knows very well, that the Eastern Extension Company has all the advantage of connections throughout Australia and that just before the confederation of the Australian colonies the most important colony, probably, that used the cable, New South Wales, made a very unfair arrangement to give the Eastern Extension the right to use the government lines and the government poles. They practically used the government offices. This contract was made after confederation was entered into, but in the terms of confederation the railways and the cables remained with the individual states, pending the time when they would be transferred. Taking advantage of that, New South Wales made a side agreement with the Eastern Extension Company which is to our very serious detriment. Fortunately there were some men of honour and integrity in the parliament of Australia. The Bill was allowed to go through the lower House without being challenged. When it came to the Senate there were some gentlemen there who remembered that they had been here in 1894. They remembered the associations of gentlemen with whom they were brought in contact and the manner in which this cable construction was contemplated. It was to be a partnership affair. Naturally Canada expected that any business New South Wales could throw in with the general partnership without being injurious to herself would be carried out. That of course has not been fulfilled, and I am glad to say, therefore, that the bargain made with the Eastern Extension Company has not yet been ratified. It was thrown out in the Senate and so it stands to-day. I do not know what the position of it is in the new Houses, but certainly it will be in no worse position than it was before. In regard to the comments made by the gentleman to whom my hon. friend referred, Mr. Ross, I had not seen them, although I had seen similar remarks made, that there had been some want of business management in looking after the transmission of messages. On further inquiry into that I do not find that it prevailed to any extent, but that the real cause of the deficit in the Pacific cable was the fact that the Eastern Extension had the advantage in the Australian colonies. Of course the largest number of messages that would pass over the Pacific cable would originate either in Australia or by business houses in England having correspondents in Australia, and that gives the Eastern Extension the advantage. It ought, however, to be remembered by our friends in Australia that it was only when the Pacific cable was made a success that the rates were brought down by the Eastern Extension. I think they were reduced by about one-half. A very substantial gain has been obtained by Australia in the laying of the Pacific cable. Although they may not use it, they have gained because the Eastern Extension Company was obliged to come down in its rates, giving Australia a lower tariff than before. I do not trust myself to say how that matter arose, because it reflects on men whose integrity I do not wish to call in question, but there is no doubt whatever that the defeat of the Pacific cable was an accomplished fact long before the order for its construction was given. It was the action, I venture to say, of those whose duty it was to have favoured it, and the checks and delays in the construction of the cable enabled the Eastern Extension to come in and obtain substantial advantages over the Pacific cable, having connections with South Africa and Hong Kong and other points on the eastern coast of Asia. It is a very long story but I think there is a brighter future now, inasmuch as the upper House in Australia by a very decided vote expressed the opinion that it was bad faith on the part of the Australian government to make this agreement with the Eastern Extension Company. The point was raised chiefly by those gentlemen who had been associated in the early history of the enterprise. They naturally felt it was a matter of honour to Canada at all events. The government of Great Britain perhaps did not take so much stock in the fact that Australia would have no difficulty in diverting a reasonable portion at all events of the business that passed between there and Great Britain over the Pacific cable. I hope before another year goes over that the Pacific cable will be in a much more satisfactory position than it is to-day, due entirely to our friends in the Senate of Australia taking the bold stand they did in defeating a government measure because it ignored entirely the fair position Canada had a right to assume in connection with the volume of messages that passed between Australia and Great Britain.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The remarks of the hon. Secretary of State only confirm the remarks I made. The Pacific cable is more direct for the business of Canada and England than the Eastern Extension, and therefore the advantages to be derived from a proper working of it would be much greater than on the other line. I shall not enter into the history of it. I have done that in the past—mentioned all the difficulties that presented themselves. My only reason for making this motion is to endeavour to get the business of the cable placed on a better foundation in order that the receipts may be greater than before. I have no desire to discuss the other question to which my hon. friend has alluded, because we have discussed that on former occasions. My recollection is, however, that the upper House in Australia rejected the agreement entered into with the Eastern Extension Company altogether. The first government formed entered into the arrangement to which my hon. friend has referred, but the succeeding government refused to ratify it so that the matter stands as it did when the cable was first built. All I want to impress upon the government is the necessity of their insisting upon the cable being conducted on business principles so that we will not be taxed to pay money we have no right to pay.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Does the motion include the total cost paid for the construction of the cable ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think not. My reason for not putting that in was that I thought that information was already before the House—that is, the total sum paid for the construction of the cable. I had it included in my motion in the first place, but remembering that it had been laid before parliament I omitted it.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (24) An Act respecting the Canadian Fire Insurance Company.—(Hon. Mr. Lougheed.)

Bill (27) An Act respecting the Real Estate Title Guarantee and Trust Company. —(Hon. Mr. Casgrain, de Lanaudière.)

Bill (38) An Act to amend the Petition of Right Act.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

THIRD READING.

Bill (B) An Act for the relief of Robert James McDuff Rodger.—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Cobourg.)

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Tuesday, April 26, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

PORTRAIT OF SENATOR WARK.

Hon. Mr. WATSON presented the second report of the Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts, recommending payment of the cost of the portrait of Senator Wark. He said: We all know that last session it was decided unanimously to provide for the payment of the cost of this portrait. I thought it was done with open doors, but there is no record on the Journals with reference to it. The committee met this morning and the report is being printed. It has been suggested that we ought to make the presentation or the unveiling of that portrait before the adjournment, if an adjournment takes place, and it has been suggested that we might have the ceremony take place in this chamber at 2.30 o'clock on Thursday afternoon, when we might make it known to our friends in the Commons who might desire to be present. If there is no objection to it the committee can see that that programme is carried out.

The motion was agreed to.

AN ADJOURNMENT.

The order of the day being called:

By the Honourable Mr. Miller.—That every motion for an adjournment of the Senate, inconsistent with rules 3 and 7 of the Standing Orders of the House shall, under rule 13 be deemed special, and require one intermediate day's notice of such motion.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—My hon. friend from Richmond (Hon. Mr. Miller) has kindly consented to permit my motion to be taken up before his motion, which is the first on the order paper.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—As the hon. gentleman has asked permission to take his motion out of its order, I think as a matter of fact, and a matter of right, that this motion should come first, and I cite as a precedent——

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—His motion is to be taken first as the hon. member states.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I want it understood that when a motion to adjourn is on the order paper, it should take precedence of all other motions.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It is all right; that is what is going to be done.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I quote a decision given by the Hon. Mr. Speaker of the House of Commons of England. It reads as follows:

PARLIAMENT THE DERBY DAY, ADJOURNMENT OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. Chaplin asked Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer, whether he intends to move the adjournment of the House from Tuesday next till Thursday, as Wednesday next is the Derby Day ?

The Chancellor of the Exchequer.—Sir, I observe that prior to the year 1860, it was the habit of the House to adjourn over the Derby Day ; but the motion for adjournment was not undertaken by the government of the time being. In the year 1860, Lord Palmerston, then the leader of the House, moved the adjournment for the Derby Day himself, and from that time till the year 1871 the motion was regularly made by the leader of the House and acquiesced in without observation. Since 1871, however, the motion has been opposed and divisions taken upon it, so that the position of the question appears to have changed. In these circumstances I do not think it would be desirable that the leader of the House or the government should make the motion for adjournment ; but of course, it will be open to my hon. friend (Mr. Chaplin) or any hon. member who thinks proper to do so.

Mr. Chaplin gave notice, that in consequence of the answer of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, he would himself move to-morrow that the House should, at its rising, adjourn till Thursday. He wished to ask Mr. Speaker whether he was right in supposing that in accordance with all former precedents this motion, though moved by a private member, would take precedence of other motions ?

Mr. Speaker.—I have referred to the precedents, and I find that it has been the general practice that a motion for the adjournment of the House should take precedence of other business. In accordance with that practice, the motion of the hon. member will take precedence of the public business to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That is the practice of the House of Commons in England?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—In the House of Lords the rules are silent, but there can be no dispute here, because I waived my right to proceed with my motion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am not discussing that part of the question. The hon. member having waived his right, I am not discussing that point, but I want, in future, when nothing in our rules touches that point, to follow the precedents of parliament.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Not of the House of Lords. The hon. gentleman has quoted a precedent from the House of Commons. We do not take our precedents from the House of Commons when our own rules are silent. We take our precedents from the House of Lords. I am not raising the point as to whether he is right or not with regard to precedents in the case of ordinary motions of adjournment or not. There is no dispute of that kind before the House, and therefore it will be quite unnecessary to raise a discussion upon it.

The SPEAKER—I understand it to be the wish of the House that the motion of the hon. gentleman from Wolseley shall be taken up first.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY moved:

That when the Senate adjourns on Thursday, the 28th instant, it do stand adjourned until Wednesday, the 25th of May next.

He said: When this motion was placed in my hands, I understood it had the support and approval of the hon. Secretary of State, the leader of the House, and with that understanding I have moved this adjournment. I quite concur in his good judgment in that respect, because I know there will be very little to do at the end of this week, and I am advised by members of the other branch of parliament, that the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill will not be here until the last of May. Between now and the 25th there will be very little to do. The public business has never been delayed by any of our previous adjournments, and I am sure that no delay will occur on this occasion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is quite true that I was asked whether it would be convenient to adjourn this week for some two or three weeks, and that I said I saw no objection to it. I thought the public business would quite admit of the Senate having this adjournment, but my view is that the adjournment should not go beyond Wednesday, the 18th. That will give hon. gentlemen an opportunity to reach their homes and remain there some little time, and when they return they will find the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill ready for us. I am quite sure this House would not care to adjourn any longer than it is perfectly apparent there will be no business before it. The important Bills likely to go through in the near future are the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Militia Bill. I feel a good deal of certainty in saying they will be ready by the 18th of May for the consideration of the Senate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What do I understand the hon. gentleman to say will be ready by the 18th of May?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Grand Trunk Pacific Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And when will the other be ready?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If they proceed day by day with the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill, I presume they will complete it before that, and certainly the Militia Bill will not take long to go through.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Does the hon. gentleman from Wolseley accept the suggestion of the Secretary of State?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Yes, I will have to do that. My seconder, however, says not.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I should like to know definitely whether the hon. gentleman accepts it, because there has been a conspiracy on both sides in this case, and Conservatives have been the promoters of this conspiracy.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. gentleman kindly exempt me from that remark?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I certainly, in as strong language as I can command, condemn the motion to adjourn, but if the 18th is accepted by the hon. gentleman from Wolseley, I have nothing further to say.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—This motion was carefully prepared by the hon. member from Marshfield (Hon. Mr. Ferguson), who is also very careful in preserving the dignity of the Senate. It appears to me if we are to have an adjournment with the object of letting members who reside some distance from the capital have a few days at home, you might as well extend it to the 25th, because if we return on Wednesday the 18th, there will be only three working days—Thursday, Friday and Monday—before the 24th of May, and if you adjourn on the 25th you lose only these three days, while members will get a week additional time at their homes. We might as well adopt the original motion. If my suggestion is acceptable to the House, we should sit on Friday next, and have all the reports of the committees adopted and the work cleaned up. I simply throw out the suggestion. There is no conspiracy, nothing more than those who wish to move in that direction have thought it well to consult their colleagues before taking action. It is well always to do so before presenting such a motion as this to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend from British Columbia (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), has thought proper to speak of the consultation of members with one another on the question of an adjournment as a conspiracy. I think he did not seriously consider the meaning of the term, and in my opinion it is quite out of place. If the doing so on the part of gentlemen who desire an adjournment is a conspiracy, then my hon. friend is a conspirator himself, because I happen to know that he has been interviewing members of the House with a view to bringing about a different decision. My part in connection with this motion has been referred to by the hon. gentleman from Marquette. Several conversations have taken place between senators as to the propriety of taking a long adjournment in the early part of May. Not seeing the hon. gentleman from Montreal (Hon. Mr. Dandurand), who generally, like myself, takes some interest in this matter, in his place, I went over, just after the House met, and conversed with some members with regard to this motion. I had a draft of it in my hand, and they suggested that I should show it to the members of the government. I handed it to my hon. friend from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Templeman) who passed it over to the hon. Secretary of State, just as he entered the House. It was handed back to me with the remark that he did not see why the House should continue sitting when we had little or no business to do. There appears to be very little difference of opinion as to this adjournment. It is generally accepted that we can take a reasonable adjournment at this time. Even my hon. friend from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Macdonald), was willing to assent to this adjournment, provided it was shortened one week.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I did not say so.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend gave us to understand that he would not oppose it if the suggestion of the Secretary of State was accepted. I do not wish to set my view up in opposition to that of the Secretary of State, but I think when he considers the statement made by the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson), he will be convinced that we can adjourn to the 25th without any disadvantage, and no interest will be prejudiced by adopting the motion as it stands. When we reassemble, we will be able to continue working until the finish.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I have been a number of years in this House and I fail to see how members can base a motion of this kind on personal grounds. They come here to attend the business of the country and should remain here until it is finished. There is no doubt my hon. friend from Marshfield (Hon. Mr. Ferguson), is the chief sinner in this matter. He managed the whole thing. What does a conspiracy mean? People conspire when they come together to do a certain thing against others. I believe my remark was quite proper. I did not mean it offensively, but there was collusion. The hon. gentleman can take whatever horn of the dilemma he pleases. I am quite willing to leave the decision of the matter to the Secretary of State, who leads the House. If he says the adjournment can be had without injury to the public business, I accept his decision. I move that the motion be amended by striking out '25th,' and substituting for it '18th,' in the second line.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman having already spoken on the main motion, he has no right to move an amendment now.

Hon. Mr. CHURCH—I am opposed to all adjournments. I am not going to speak to the point of order——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the question before the House now. It must be decided before the motion can be discussed.

The SPEAKER—I think the point of order is well taken.

Sir. MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not going to prolong this discussion further than to say that I am very much in accord with the sentiments expressed by the hon. senator from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Macdonald). While I am not prepared, perhaps, to use quite as strong language as he has used in reference to it, I differ in toto from my hon. friend to my right (Hon. Mr. Ferguson)—and it is not very often that I do—when he declares the action of the hon. member from Victoria or anybody else, that of a conspirator, because he objects to a motion which it has been proposed to make upon any question. The hon. gentleman from Wolseley, put a notice upon the paper after a consultation, as I understand it, with certain members of the House. I wish my hon. friend from Victoria to understand distinctly that the expression used with reference to all the Conservatives of the House was not correct, and I conclude the reason I was not approached upon the subject, was that they knew very well that I had expressed strong opinions against long adjournments, and for that reason I do not feel myself at all slighted because they did not consult me upon the question. Had they done so, they knew very well what answer they would have received. When I noticed the motion on the paper, I objected, and said to one or two that we should not have so long an adjournment during the session, but I repudiate the idea of my hon. friend, that I was a conspirator, because I expressed an opinion.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I did not say that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That hon. gentleman said if one was the other was. Now, I differ entirely from him. However, we will allow that to remain in abeyance. It is not at all creditable that we should have a month's adjournment in the early part of the session, and then another in the middle of the session, or past the middle of the session, because, as has been indicated by the hon. Secretary of State, I think a few days ago, there are only two important measures, namely, the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill and the Militia Bill to come before us. I think most of us—perhaps the better way would be to speak for myself—will agree with the principal provisions of that measure. One or two involving very important principles, we may take exception to, but it is not a Bill that is going to take any length of time to pass this House after it has gone through the other House. It is not before the House just yet, but the reason I think, for that is that, I know it contains many provisions to which both parties will give their adherence and concurrence, and there are other provisions with reference to which we will have different opinions. We have had one month's adjournment already, and now we propose to have another month. I understand the difficulties and the inconveniences to which some of the senators are put upon occasions of this kind. My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson) will occupy half the time in coming and going, and my hon. friend to my right (Hon. Mr. Ferguson) is in the same position, but we are not appointed to this House, as has been indicated by my hon. friend from Victoria, for our own immediate convenience, nor to make our duties as public men subservients to our own private interests. That is the position I take, and I think that we should avoid as much as possible doing anything as senators to bring this House into disrepute in the country. These long adjournments to which we are asked to consent, will have that tendency. In view of the opinions expressed by the public press, both Conservative and Liberal, in a sneering way, in their references to the Senate, we are only adding fuel to the fire, until they will look upon this House as an utterly useless body.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—My own opinion with regard to adjournments such as the one now under consideration has been fully expressed for many years past. I entertain precisely the same opinion as my hon. friend the leader of the opposition has given forcible expression to. I think they should be as rare as possible, and it is to be greatly regretted that within the last few years, and especially since my hon. friend the present leader of the House has got control, these adjournments have become unusually frequent. Going back to the early days of confederation, it was a rare thing to have more than one adjournment during the whole session, and for years we never had more than one of two during the whole session, and short adjournments at all.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—But we had short sessions then.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Some of them were quite long enough, but the custom during the old days was better than it is now. We had, during the greater part of the time the Conservative party were in power, a respected leader in this House for many years without interruption, the late Sir Alexander Campbell, and it was the invariable practice in this House in those days, while he was leader, for none of his supporters to move for an adjournment of the House without his consent. If he was prepared to say that the business of the country would not suffer by the adjournment, then one of his supporters would move, and there would be no opposition to the adjournment, and all forms would very often be waived in order to carry out the wish of the House. What I regret is that the control of the House, with regard to adjournments, is taken altogether out of the hands of the leader of the House. It was humiliating on one occasion to see the position in which the leader of the House was placed by his followers in regard to one of these adjournments. I say it was a humiliation to the hon. gentleman, such a humiliation as we never inflicted on our leader when we had control of the House. But I should be very sorry now that the leader of the House should agree to every suggestion for an adjournment made to him, because it would look as if he were submitting to intimidation, and even humiliation would be better on his part than the suspicion of being subject to intimidation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He said he was humiliated.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—With regard to adjournments now I think we should have a clear understanding that any one moving the adjournment of the House for any length of time should have the approval of the leader of the House, who best knows what business is to come before us and what time it may take, which private members cannot be aware of. At the same time, while I am opposed to adjournments, I do not like to deny to others what I cannot enjoy myself, unless I have good reason. When the business of the House does not interfere, and the leader of the House certifies to that fact, I should be very sorry to play the part of the dog in the manger—and I never did it—by preventing hon. gentlemen going home for a few days, or a week, or a fortnight, or perhaps a month if necessary, when it might be a convenience to them. With regard to the present vote, I may remark that I was approached by one of the so-called conspirators and told that the leader of the House had consented to an adjournment until the 25th, and I was given to understand—and there I must have misunderstood my informant—that the leader of the opposition had given his consent also to the long adjournment. I said 'if that is the case then opposition is useless' and I considered if both these hon. gentlemen agreed that a long adjournment might be taken by the House, that they were pretty safe in doing so, because they knew whether or not such a long adjournment would likely interfere with the business of the country, which should be our first concern. I therefore promised to vote for this adjournment. I do not think we are likely to have any business for two or three weeks to demand our attention, and therefore, as the large majority of the House would like to have the long adjournment and it would be a matter of convenience to them, I do not propose keeping them for two or three weeks when we will certainly have no business to do, and I would therefore vote for the motion as suggested by the hon. Secretary of State, if anybody will move that when the House adjourns on Thursday it do stand adjourned till 18th May.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I look upon this as an exceedingly important question. I consider the reputation and the dignity of the Senate is before this country and is on trial and more so during this session than it has ever been before while I have had the privilege of a seat in this House. Years ago we used to criticise the utility of the Senate by pointing out how little it did for the enormous expense it put the country to. We are having now very evident proofs that we were right in that criticism. The fact is that if the Senate has not business to do in the country's interest, and if we are not here and have no work to do and make a return for the indemnity we draw, we had better be honest with the country. If the government cannot give the Senate business to do so as to keep us here and engaged we had better abolish the Senate. During this session we have already had a long adjournment, and here is a proposition for another adjournment. We have only been back here a very short time before another proposition to adjourn is made. It will very soon be that the hon. gentleman from Assiniboia (Hon. Mr. Perley) will adjourn the House whenever he wants to build a new fence or when threshing comes around. Last year he secured an adjournment in order to go home to harvest, and now he wants an adjournment to get home to seeding. What is the cause of these adjournments? Simply and solely to save members of this House from suffering a deduction of $7 or $8 a day from their indemnity when they come to draw their money.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—If that is the case, we ought to be honest. Any man can go away from this chamber and attend to his private affairs. He is allowed to be absent fifteen days. No man has a right to ask that this Senate shall adjourn to enable him to go home and attend to his private business and draw $9 a day for that time. It is not creditable and not dealing with the country honestly. I should like to add to the amendment the following :

And that $8 per day for every day the Senate fails to meet on which the Commons meets be deducted from each senator's indemnity.

I will make that motion if I can get a seconder, and I hope the hon. leader of the opposition will second my resolution. I think we had better be honest.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That motion was once put on the order paper, but was never pressed.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—If we are going to adjourn a month and then come back and work a week and then adjourn a month again, we are doing business in a way that is not creditable and dignified. If we want to pocket the country's money without earning it, it is not creditable. I know that there is some business to come before the Senate. There are two or three divorce Bills that have to be dealt with. There is also a motion coming up that will take a week to discuss in the Senate—the matter of the trade relations with the United States. I think we can well and properly discuss that question at some length. It is a question of vital interest to us, and one on which there has been considerable agitation on the other side of the line. Then again here is my hon. friend from Rothesay (Hon. Mr. Domville), who has a very important question before this Senate. He asks for the appointment of a committee for the purpose of investigating and reporting upon the career of a certain insurance company which obtained a license from this House to do business in 1885. That company was doing business as a mutual company for years. It has got into deep water. Its transactions are injurious to its policy-holders. Some fourteen million dollars' insurance has lapsed.

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS—Question.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I am dealing with the question. The hon. gentleman has a motion asking for a committee to be granted and an investigation held into the condition of that company, in order that we may deal with them in a way that would be equitable to the people of this country who were led to understand that they were safe in insuring in that company. We have other important business, one motion dealing with the same company, and I say that we should give our attention to these matters. There are Bills to come before us and business that properly belongs to us, and that we have a right to deal with, and we should stay here and deal with it. Not only that, but I was speaking to a prominent Conservative, a man who is well up in the Conservative party, last night at the Union station, and he told me that he could not see that there could be any possible grounds upon which the present session could last longer than about the 15th June or, at latest, the 1st July. If we propose to adjourn till the 25th of May and the House rises about the middle or the end of June, we will have an experience the same as we had the last two sessions, suspending rules to get Bills through, with the result that at the end of every session of the Senate we rush measures through the same as we drive sheaves through a threshing machine. There is no consideration. We virtually confirm what is done in the other House without any investigation at all. Is that what we are here for? Is that the only duty the Senate has to perform? If it is we should know it. If that is all the service we are going to render in return for the enormous amount the Senate costs this country, we had better frankly confess that the Senate shall be abolished. If we do not render the country service, let every man be honest and say, let us get out of this and have no Senate; or if we are going to have any at all, let it be based on a more democratic system. Certainly we should not adjourn to the 25th May. I think the country will take notice of these facts. I know they will in the province of Ontario. I am positive of that. They will ask: 'What is the good of the Senate after all? The government promised to reform the Senate when they came in power, and in place of that, it appears to be getting more useless.' This will be the argument. Hon. gentlemen will go on the stump and repeat it. I should be glad to see the Senate utilized and turned to account and keep up its dignity as a respectable, dignified portion of the legislative body of this Dominion, in place of meeting and adjourning for two or three weeks, then meeting again for a week and adjourning for a month. I do not think it is creditable to do business in that way. I am opposed to these long adjournments. I must say that I regret that the hon. Secretary of State gives his sanction to an adjournment till the 25th of May.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The 18th I said.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Well, as far as I am concerned, seeing the Secretary of State has consented to the 18th and led the House to understand there is to be that adjournment, I shall not object and shall acquiesce.

Hon. MEMBERS—Oh, oh.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Where is the honesty?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I would not consent to an adjournment to the 25th, because I think it is altogether too long. I am sorry I cannot get a seconder to my amendment. I am honest, and I am prepared to vote for it. If any man in this chamber will second it, I will put it in the Speaker's hands.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Questions of adjournment are accompanied with some advantage when discussed in this House, because they afford an opportunity for homilies on public duty. Now my hon. friend from Wellington starts to outline the duties of public men not only in this parliament, but to their common country. It is refreshing indeed, and yet one always feels a very great sense of regret that the burdens of state lie so heavily upon his shoulders. If this $8 per day is pressing upon my hon. friend very heavily, his conscience might be relieved by his not accepting the $8 a day which is paid to members during the adjournment. The Auditor General will raise no serious objection to the refusal of my hon. friend to accept the full share of his indemnity, so that in this way, if any hon. gentleman is oppressed by the remissness on the part of this Senate in performing the duties which pertain to it, I apprehend it would be a very easy matter to relieve his conscience. One has to listen very often to lectures of this kind when the subject of an adjournment is discussed, but I take exception to being lectured on all occasions by four or five hon. gentlemen as to what constitutes the public duty of a Senator with reference to his attendance in this House. I take it that this is a revising body. Perhaps not according to our constitution, but certainly according to our practice very little legislation originates in this House. It is peculiarly a revising body, and the time occupied is very small indeed in comparison with the time occupied in the Commons, on account of the fact that nearly all the legislation originates in that body. I do object, as a member of this Senate, to the hypocritical idea which is promulgated so often by some hon. gentlemen, as to leading the public to believe that from the beginning of the session till prorogation we must be kept here by public business. I heard my hon. friend from Wellington, I think it was when the subject of the last adjournment was before the House, suggesting that the impression should be left upon the public mind, through the press and otherwise, that we were practically continuously engaged here, otherwise we could not occupy the position in the public mind to which we should aspire. If this House has not public business to occupy its time sufficiently, why should the public not know it? Is there anything to conceal? Have the members of this body been remiss in the proper performance of their duty? Has any business ever suffered by reason of the adjournments from time to time? I challenge any hon. gentleman to point to any piece of legislation which has ever suffered by the adjournment which took place in the earlier part of the session, and I furthermore make the statement that no deliberative body gives closer attention and better scrutiny to the legislation which may come before it from time to time, than the Senate of Canada. I challenge the hon. gentleman to point to any statement which has been made in the public press or elsewhere in which the Senate has been accused of not giving proper attention to business. If that be the case, if this Senate is attending to its duties properly, and is giving that scrutiny to the public business which it demands, and to which the public assents by its silence is being done, why should we meet day after day without performing any business? Is it candid? Is it fair to leave the impression on the public mind that we are engaged from first to last of the session with business, when such is not the case? Let us face the facts, as they present themselves, with proper candour and not leave an impression upon the public mind that we are doing something when there is nothing to be done. I do object to hon. gentlemen saying that a few members of this House from time to time suggest these adjournments for the purpose of furthering their own convenience. My observation—and I think the observation of every hon. gentleman here will bear me out in this statement—is that those gentlemen who have been in favour of adjournments, those possibly who may have championed adjournments, have been just as attentive to the public business and have given as close attention to every matter of legislation that has come up, as hon. gentlemen who have played the part of censors, who have been our critics, who have abused us for sacrificing the public interest for the sake of our own private interests. I am satisfied that the contrast which has been pointed out by some of our censors will scarcely bear a very close scrutiny, and I am satisfied that hon. gentlemen who have supported those adjournments from time to time have been as anxious to promote the public business and have paid as close attention to the duties which devolved upon them as hon. gentlemen who have accused us of being remiss in that particular. I further say that the reputation and the dignity of the Senate, as my hon. friend from Wellington has chosen to designate it, will not suffer in the least by our being candid in the way that we propose, namely, when there is no business to be done to adjourn the House till business is ready. Furthermore, I think it will be a very salutary way of impressing upon the government of the day the fact that the Senate has very little to do and that they should, by an exercise of their discretion, introduce more important business in this chamber than has been done in the past. My hon. friend from Richmond has said that in the olden days, when the Conservative party, my own party, was in power, we sat almost continuously, the adjournments were not very frequent. There was a pretension, perhaps, that we were attending more closely to business, yet it no way stemmed the agitation which was made throughout the country for the abolition of the Senate. But since the hon. gentlemen opposite came into power, and the adjournments have been very frequent, we have heard less of the abolition of the Senate than previously.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The Senate has been reformed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—And the lengthy adjournments seem to have commended themselves to the public as one of the best reasons why the Senate should be continued.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Are we discussing the main motion or the amendment?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no amendment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I do not intend to repeat the remarks I made a year or two ago on the question of adjournments, I will simply touch upon one phase of the question. I take it for granted that we have an average session of four months. It may be tending towards a longer session. But we have had a four months session for a few years. I think I have established that there are two months out of the four which are occupied by the House of Commons with work which is special with that House and with which we have nothing to do. I think we have established beyond contradiction that for six to eight weeks the House of Commons goes into supply and discusses each item of the Supply Bill, which we pass in three minutes; so that during these six or eight weeks no one has the right to force us to remain here and wait for the Supply Bill from the Commons. Besides there is always a long discussion on the budget speech. Then, in addition to that, there are 214 members in the House of Commons who have to speak, who feel the necessity of speaking to their electors, of being heard once in a while. We know the long speeches that are being made in the other House. In this House we address ourselves to the questions. We have no electors to whom to speak, or to court. We simply discuss questions, as the hon. gentleman from Calgary says, as a court of review. We take the Bills that come before us. My hon. friend from Calgary said it was not in the constitution but in the practice to sit here as a court of review. If my hon. friend will refer to the discussion which took place at the confederation, he will find there that the fathers of confederation all declared that the proper function of the Senate was to act as a check and court of review over the hasty legislation of the House of Commons. We have besides another very important role to play in the constitution. I will not deliver a lecture on the duties which devolve on this House, but I will ask: have we ever been remiss in accomplising them? We have not, and I contend that in a four months' session there are two months when we must necessarily be idle unless it pleases us to remain here and listen to the hon. gentleman from Wellington discoursing on some question which he would bring before us. But we decline, when there is no business pressing, when we can cope with the business on our return, to remain here simply to listen to academic questions being discussed before this chamber, or to keep company with the hon. gentleman from British Columbia. The hon. gentleman from Wellington (Hon. Mr. McMullen) and the hon. gentleman from British Columbia (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) have spoken of the reasons which actuate some members in moving adjournments of this House. I only beg to say this, that those gentlemen are actuated by a sense of public duty. They want to be here when there is work to be done, but they feel when there is nothing to be done they have duties to discharge elsewhere. I, for one, decline to remain here, to pass one or two Bills a week. I prefer the honest way of attending to my business when there is nothing to be done here, rather than leading people to believe we are working as hard as the House of Commons, when there is practically nothing to be done. Under the old system we would sit for half an hour three or four days a week and adjourn. The hon. gentleman from British Columbia (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) when throwing stones at his neighbours should remember that some of the members who ask for adjournments never take the fifteen days they are allowed to take. I have not taken on an average five days of my fifteen during the last three or four years. I decided when I came to this House that when a majority could be found to favour it, we would try and abandon the old method, represented by some hon. gentlemen, to object to adjournment when there is no work to be done. Those hon. gentlemen might as well be here as anywhere. They think because they have thrown off the harness that we, a majority here, who are still in the prime of life and have business of our own to look after should remain here because it pleases them to remain. I do not want to class myself with the hon. gentleman from Victoria, who does not seem to know the value of expressions which he uses against his colleagues, but I think it more honest and less hypocritical to adjourn when there is no work to be done and come back when we have work to do. We are surprised at the attendance in the Senate ; it is because we are not required to be here when there is no business to be done. We are not kept here marking time, while the House of Commons is debating a question that will occupy three or four weeks that can be disposed of in this House in three or four days when it reaches us.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—After the burst of indignation from the hon. gentleman, I want to tell him that quite a number of members here do not know three-fourths of the legislation that goes through the Senate. Many Bills are not read at all.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—How does the hon. gentleman know it ?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I will give the hon. gentleman an examination of one that he does not know anything about. There is a large amount of work to be done in studying measures, and I should be glad to have the mighty intellect of my hon. friends here to consult in going over those Bills. Speaking largely for myself, I cannot study up all the Bills that are brought here, and I do not happen to be a member of that sublimated intellect of the Senate, the Committee of Railways.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—So the hon. gentleman is himself the one who does not know what is going on.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I put myself in the same category with the hon. gentleman. If there is less said about adjournments in the Senate now, it is because a great power that used to call in question every movement of the Senate is now hushed, but I know what the feeling of the people is, and I know I have been again and again twitted by people I met about our frequent adjournments. I do not think any one in this House objects to one adjournment. It is the repeated short adjournments that give the Senate a bad reputation. Would it not be better to bring in a resolution providing that all motions for adjournments shall have the sanction of the leaders on both sides ? We know that we are doing our business well and thoroughly, but the public do not ; they do not take enough interest in this House to understand what we accomplish. I do not see much difference between adjourning to the 25th and adjourning to the 18th ; the only difference is that one sin is a little bigger than the other. If I should be a member of this House next session I propose to bring in a resolution that no adjournments shall take place without the sanction of the leader of the government and the leader of the opposition of this House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Will the hon. gentleman from Wolseley accept my suggestion to make the adjournment to Wednesday, the 18th of May ?

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—When the motion was placed in my hands I understood that it had the concurrence of the hon. Secretary of State. Last session I did not move an adjournment at all, and when the hon. gentleman from Wellington says I moved an adjournment in order to get home to look after the harvest, he states what is positively and absolutely incorrect. I have interests at home it is true ; I pity the man who has not. As there is nothing to be done here, we shall adjourn and attend to our own business. Since 1887 when I was first elected to the House of Commons I have every session been present at the opening and the closing, and have hardly ever lost a day. Even last year I lost only four days out of the fifteen that I was entitled to. I have never failed to attend committee meetings. The hon. gentleman from Wellington has raised a howl here, as he did in the House of Commons, and if he ever stultified himself, it was when he accepted a position in the Senate which he decried. I accept the suggestion of the hon. Secretary of State, but my seconder has not seen fit to do so. I think we had better act on the suggestion. If we do not, then let us adjourn from Friday instead of Thursday. Personally, I am quite willing to have the motion amended. I do not want to show disrespect to the government of the country. I accept the view of the Secretary of State, but my seconder has not withdrawn his right, and I must leave the matter to the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that Wednesday the eighteenth, be substituted for Wednesday the twenty-fifth, in the motion.

The SPEAKER—Does the hon. gentleman from De Lorimier accept the amendment ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I seconded the motion because I thought a majority favoured the 25th, and more especially to suit those who live in the extreme east and the extreme west. The suggestion of the hon. Secretary of State suits me perfectly.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The hon. Secretary of State has no right to move an amendment, having already spoken.

The SPEAKER—It seems to be the opinion of the House that the motion should be amended.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I object to the amendment proposed by the hon. Secretary of State.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I made the statement to my friends in this House that the hon. Secretary of State had agreed to this motion. The hon. gentleman's action to-day would imply that he did not agree to it. I repeat, however, that he had a copy of my motion in his hand and looked over it and said he had no objection to it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend is quite right in saying that a copy of his motion was handed to me. I did not read it. I knew it was a proposal to adjourn for some weeks ; I did not know whether it was to the 18th or to the 25th, and I consented to the adjournment under the impression that it was a shorter date.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—Like my hon. friend from De Lorimier, I cannot be accused of selfishness in supporting a motion to suit the convenience of our friends who live far from the capital, and I object to the attacks which have been made upon the hon. member from Wolseley who is accused of being actuated by selfish motives. He has been charged with moving an adjournment to enable him to go home and attend to his harvest last year. This comes with a bad grace from hon. gentlemen who last session, when work was pressing, were absent from the Senate. I refer especially to the hon. gentleman from Wellington and Victoria.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I did not move an adjournment though.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—No, but the hon. gentleman waited until the fifteen days had elapsed and then he left. Where was the hon. gentleman at the opening of this session ? He never came in until after the first adjournment of the Senate, and the same remark applies to the course pursued by these hon. gentlemen who rise now and censure their colleagues who really do attend the meetings of this House, when there is business to be done. My object in rising is to settle the question. I therefore move:

That when the House adjourns on Thursday it stand adjourned until the 18th of May at three o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

MOTIONS DEEMED SPECIAL.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. MILLER moved :

That every motion for an adjournment of the Senate, inconsistent with rules 3 and 7 of the Standing Orders of thie House, shall, under rule 13, be deemed special, and require one intermediate day's notice of such motion.

He said : Rule 3 of the House, referred to in my motion, reads as follows :

The time for the ordinary meeting of the Senate is at three o'clock in the afternoon, unless some other time have previously been ordered.

That rule regulates the time for the meeting of the House. Rule 7 is as follows :

When the Senate adjourns on Friday, unless otherwise ordered, it stands adjourned until the Monday following.

These are the two rules which regulate the times of the meeting and adjournment of the Senate. For an adjournment of the Senate, inconsistent with these rules, we have, as I contend, rule 13, which says :

One intermediate day's notice in writing must be given of all motions deemed special ; and any motion is deemed special which initiates a subject of discussion.

Now, if we want an adjournment of the House inconsistent with rule 3 and rule 7, I contend that there is only one means by which it can be obtained, and that is by a motion with an intermediate day's notice under rule 13. There is no other rule on our standing orders under which such a motion can be made, and therefore if this rule is not applicable, if motions for an adjournment of the House say for a week or month do not come under this rule, there is then no rule upon the standing orders, under which such a motion could be made. It is true his hon. the Speaker contends that under rule 17 such an adjournment could be obtained. Now, rule 17 reads as follows :

No motion to suspend, modify or amend any rule or part thereof shall be in order except on one day's notice in writing specifying precisely the rule proposed to be suspended, modified or amended, and the purpose of such suspension. But any rule may be suspended without notice by the unanimous consent of the Senate ; and the rule proposed to be suspended shall be precisely and distinctly stated.

I call attention to the phraseology : 'precisely and distinctly stated and no motion for the suspension of the rules upon any petition for a private Bill shall be in order unless the same shall have been recommended by the Committee on Standing Orders.'

I contend that rule 17 is not, and never was, intended to have any application to general motions before the House, such as special motions, or motions which in the ordinary transaction of the business of the Senate come under rule 13 of the House. I want hon. gentlemen to understand that unless such motions as the one which has just been decided come under rule 13, there is no rule under which the motion can be got before the House, except rule 17. How are we to proceed to get an adjournment of the House under rule 17 ? We would have to ask by a motion to suspend these two rules, and would have to set them out fully in doing so. That is, he would have to give notice on a certain day that he would move to suspend rule 3 and rule 7, and would have to state in his notice what rule 3 is, and would have to include in his notice of motion rule 7, because, as I say, this rule sets out that the rule proposed to be suspended shall be 'precisely and distinctly stated in the motion.' Therefore, you must give the notice to suspend these two rules and must set them out in your notice. Having got these two rules suspended, then you would have to make another motion for the adjournment of the House. Now, I ask hon. gentlemen if it is consistent with reason or common sense that that roundabout process should have to be adopted in order to get an adjournment of the House for any time whatever. I do not think that any one who considers—and I say it with all due respect to the chair—the absurdity of the position which it would logically involve us in would say for a moment that the rule was right. That rule was never intended to apply to motions such as the one which we have just disposed of. It was to apply to motions in connection with Bills, and there were two ways of getting rid of any irregularity in the passage of a Bill in consequence thereof. One was to get a report from the Standing Orders Committee when no notice at all was required ; the other was to give notice under that rule for a suspension of the rule, for instance, with regard to the time for presenting a petition to the House with regard to the publication in the 'Official Gazette' or anything of that kind. It was intended to apply to irregularities of that kind, which required a special intervention of the House in order to allow the business of the House to proced. That is my construction.

I will now proceed to place before the House the precedents upon which I found that opinion. I may say that I would hardly venture to do what I am going to do, read precedent after precedent from the Journals of the Senate, if our time was of more importance than it is just now, but unfortunately we have nothing to do and can take plenty of time to discuss this important matter. I contend further that the construction I place upon rule 13 is precisely the purport and intent of rule 31 of the House of Commons, that the two rules in operation and intent are precisely similar, although in phraseology they are dissimilar. If you take two rules and find them thoroughly dissimilar in phraseology, while in intent and operation they are perfectly consistent and in conformity, is it not a strong inference that the interpretation which brings about that affect of conformity must be the right one? And when you attempt to construe one of these two rules by reducing yourself to an absurdity, and more than that, an absurdity in the other House, can there be any doubt at all with regard to the construction of these rules? The rules of the Senate were framed upon the rules of the old legislative council, at the commencement of confederation. Rule No. 13 was as follows:

One intermediate day's notice in writing must be given of all motions deemed special.

That rule was adopted in our first standing orders in 1868, and continued the rule until the additional clause was added. In the eighties, I think, the revision took place, and the alteration was made. How, and why was it made? It was because frequently when a motion was before the House difference arose as to whether it was a special motion or not. I need hardly say that it is not an unusual thing for members to come to this House who never belonged to any legislative body before, and not therefore as conversant with parliamentary rules, as those who had had that experience in the more popular branch. It was not at all a matter of wonder that very often clear-headed men would think that rule very vague and indefinite, and therefore it should have some qualification in order to show what was its real meaning; although I do not think anything could be more special than a motion in this House which would involve the suspension of two of our standing orders. That is not a motion to be classed with motions made in routine business. A motion of adjournment involves the suspension of two standing orders of the House. If anything would be a special motion that would be one, but there were laymen who thought the rule should be made clear and put beyond doubt, and therefore the rule was qualified by defining what was a special motion, which was as follows:

And any motion is deemed special which initiates a subject of discussion.

Any motion which initiates a subject of discussion is a special motion under rule 13. We had a motion just now before the House under a proper notice and I leave it to hon. gentlemen to say whether that motion did not initiate a subject of discussion. We had over an hour's discussion upon the motion of my hon. friend. Well if my construction of this rule is right, that motion was perfectly in order. Any one could get up when that motion was before the House and speak, and was exercising his undoubted right to speak on it. No one could say it was not regular, and it was initiated by just such a motion as I am referring to. This was the reason I allowed the discussion to precede my motion. I wanted that debate to precede mine so that I would have an instance in the minds of hon. gentlemen present, a proof of my point of what must be considered an intermediate day's notice under rule 13 of the House. I say again that that motion was a proper one under rule 13, but if the ruling is correct and it does not come under rule 13, then the whole discussion we had here this afternoon was irregular and out of order. But that discussion was not irregular and was not out of order. It was perfectly in order. It was initiated by the motion of the hon. gentleman from Wolseley. I do not think it ought to be necessary for me, so far as this House is concerned, to utter another word or offer a precedent in support of my contention, but as time is not of importance to us, I have asked the clerk of routine of the House to go through the records and see how the motions and precedents in the Journals stand in reference to my contention, and he has done so and has given me quite a number. I told the House just now that we borrowed that rule from the old legislative council. I take up the minutes of proceedings of the legislative council of Canada when that rule had not the qualification which it has now. I take up that rule as it stood on the standing orders of the old legislative council of Canada, 'one intermediate day's notice shall be deemed necessary for every motion deemed special.' I really do not want more precedents than one or two in each session, and I feel like a teacher going through the first lesson to juveniles, trying to make them understand that the letters b-a-t spell bat, and under other circumstances I would apologize to the House for attempting to support a construction so clear and self-evident as that by precedent. In the old legislative council the Hon. Mr. Simpson on the 22nd of the month gave notice that on Monday, the 25th, he would move 'that when the House adjourns on Thursday next it do stand adjourned until the following Wednesday.' That motion was according to rule, with an intermediate day's notice—moved on the 22nd and down on the Orders of the Day for the 25th; that was before confederation. That is the light in which it was considered the rule was to be interpreted before confederation in the old legislative council of Canada. Now, after the rule was adopted by the Senate we have other precedents, as follows: 'Moved by the Hon. Mr. Wilson, on May 3, that when this House adjourns on Wednesday, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday the 11th inst.'

Notice was given on the 3rd that on the 5th he would make this motion. Then I take up a case in 1877. Here I find a motion on February 27, for March 1, by the Hon. Mr. Guévremont, an old member of the legislative council of Canada, that when this House adjourns on Friday next it do stand adjourned, &c., giving notice which I contend is necessary in this case. Then again, here is a motion of the same character by the Hon. Mr. Bellerose, also a member of the old legislative council of Canada, a notice on the 19th February, 1878, for a motion on the 21st February. Then in 1879 there is a notice by the Hon. Mr. Penny for the 20th. The notice is given on the 19th and it is moved on the 24th, certainly over the time. Then I come to 1870. The Hon. J. Ross gave notice on the 11th April that when the House adjourns it do stand adjourned until Wednesday the 20th at 7.30 in the evening. I may say to hon. gentlemen here, perhaps, there is no one within the sound of my voice excepting the leader of the House and the leader of the opposition who recollected the Hon. J. Ross. He was a very distinguished member of the old legislative council of Canada and an able lawyer, was Speaker of the old legislative council of Canada, was a member of the ministry before confederation, and was one of the ornaments of the Senate that came in here at the date of confederation. He was a precise man in business matters and in connection with the business of the House. He gave the two days' notice required by my construction of the rule in the old legislative council of Canada. There is another notice on the 15th for the 17th March by Mr. Bellerose. Hon. gentlemen who were not in the House when Mr. Bellerose occupied a seat here will not be aware of the proficiency as a parliamentarian of that hon. gentleman who had a long training in the House of Commons, a man of great natural ability, and he was particularly well versed in the rules of the House. He gives a notice on the 15th for Wednesday the 17th March. I come now to 1885 on the 6th May, Mr. Bellerose gives another notice, a similar motion with one intermediate day's notice, for an adjournment of the House. I pass over some years to come to the period when the Hon. Sir J. Abbott was leader of this House. I need not say to hon. gentlemen who knew Sir John Abbott, and especially to gentlemen from Montreal, that he was one of the ablest men that ever led this House, a profound lawyer and an exceedingly well-versed parliamentarian, and I think that any precedent that he set would have very great weight indeed with any one who knew him. On the 4th May, 1891, the Hon. Sir J. Abbott gave notice of an adjournment of the House to be made on Wednesday, 6th May. Here is another motion very shortly afterwards, and I think it ought to have weight with the House, by Sir J. Abbott. These two motions of Sir J. Abbott's following each other in the same session and each with an intermediate day's notice show that he must have considered that that intermediate day's notice is indispensably necessary for a motion of that kind—that is if it were opposed. On the 24th June, he gives notice of a motion for adjournment the 26th. The only two motions I am told that there are in the books in the name of Sir J. Abbott are consistent with each other, and consistent with what I contend to be the true construction of that rule. In the session of 1896 there is a motion by my hon. friend the Hon. Mr. Landry.

Hon. gentlemen need not be told that that hon. senator is perhaps one of the few men in the House that give a great deal of attention to matters of procedure and parliamentary usage. At any rate, I think you will all admit he has had practice enough in giving notices of motion to be quite an authority on the subject. Now, Mr. Landry gives an intermediate day's notice. The last I am going to quote occurred in 1898 under the present regime; there is a motion by my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Casgrain) to the same effect. So that I think I ought to have quite satisfied the House that so far as the established practice set up by my hon. friend the Secretary of State is concerned, it is all the other way. I wish to point out to hon. gentlemen that if this rule 13 does not apply, the conclusion arrived at by the hon. gentleman from DeSalaberry that there is no other rule and that any member of this House can get up at any time without notice—watch, for instance, for a thin House such as we have just now, and by conspiracy—I cannot imagine such a thing possible—but he can get up with a bare quorum present and snatch a judgment of the House for an adjournment, not for a week only, but for a month. Can it be possible that we have been going on for the past thirty years with our rules in that condition? But if the construction placed by the chair upon rule 13 is correct, that is the inevitable conclusion we are forced to. As far as this House is concerned, there cannot be any question as to what the practice has been, and I do not think, after the discussion to-day, that any gentleman who is present will say that a motion of adjournment is not one that will initiate a subject of discussion. But my hon. friend the Speaker said the other day that I was certainly quite wrong in regard to the House of Commons. Now, hon. gentlemen, I think I have shown I am right in construing the rule in the Senate, but I am prepared to show that I was right with regard to the Commons, and fortunately with regard to the House of Commons I am in a position to show it more conclusively than I am in regard to the Senate, although I do not think it requires anything further than what I have said in regard to the Senate, but it so happens in the House of Commons that questions of order are more frequent and therefore decisions on points of order are more frequent, and the text-books teem with decisions in the House of Commons more than in the Senate. For that reason there will be no difficulty whatever in showing that my construction of the two rules, the rule of the Senate and the rule of the House of Commons, are in exact conformity with each other. For instance, in the House of Commons they give notice to-day of a motion for the day after to-morrow, two days' notice, and in the Senate it is an intermediate day. To-morrow is an intermediate day in the House of Commons, and in the Senate you have an intermediate day expressly indicated. His Honour the Speaker thinks I am quite wrong in regard to the House of Commons. He said :

> What my understanding of this rule has always been is that a motion deemed special was something which brought in a new subject for discussion, and I did not think that the rule applied to such matters as the time which the House should stand adjourned. The hon. gentleman's opinion was different and he referred to the practice of the other House as sustaining his view. In that House the rules are more rigorously enforced than they are here ; but even if we were governed by just the same rule as that which they have in the House of Commons his reference to the House of Commons was not justified. Rule 31 of the other House is as follows :—
> Two days' notice shall be given of a motion for leave to present a Bill, resolution, or address, for the appointment of any committee or for the putting of a question.
>
> But the rule goes on :—
> But this rule shall not apply to Bills after their introduction or to private Bills or to the times of meeting or adjournment of the House.

Now what is meant there is not a motion for adjournment of the House such as we are discussing to-day, but it means meetings or adjournments consistent with the standing orders of the House. The standing orders reads as follows :

> The time for the ordinary meeting of the House is 3 o'clock in the afternoon for each day, and if at that hour there be not a quorum, Mr. Speaker may take the chair and adjourn. When the House rises on the following day it stands adjourned, unless otherwise ordered, until the following Monday.

Now, that rule fixes the time for the meetings and adjournments of the House of Commons. It is in connection with these meetings or adjournments that no notice is required. They are an exception to the general rule requiring two days' notice ; otherwise it would be impossible to carry on the business of the House. But allow me to direct the attention of this House to Bourinot. I have several quotations, but I do not feel that I am doing right in trespassing too far upon the House. I refer to page 423. We have statutory holidays. These statutory holidays are indicated by the law upon our statute-book. They say such and such a day is a holiday, and one would suppose that that would be notice to all the world, the House of parliament included, that these statutory days were days on which the House should adjourn, but the House cannot adjourn over these statutory holidays without a special notice for adjournment. It has been the practice in regard to such adjournments of the House of Commons and here to class them under the head of unopposed motions. When they are not opposed, no established precedent arises, but according to the strict rules of our House, according to rule 13 of the Senate, and according to rule 31 of the House of Commons, these motions for adjournments over statutory holidays must have, in one case an intermediate day's notice and in the other case the regular two days' notice. If that be the case—and there cannot be any doubt about it, I have the authority under my hand —can there be a question at all that when we want to adjourn the House over a week or a fortnight that they also come under the rule? Bourinot says: 'Many motions known as unopposed are frequently made without notice, in accordance with rule 32 of the House, which provides that a motion may be made by unanimous consent of the House without previous notice.' These motions refer to the adjournment of the House over a holiday or a festival, to leave of absence for members, to the addition of members to the committees and to other matters connected with the business of the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Without any notice at all ?

Hon. Mr. MILLER—But, as already shown, if any member objects to such motions being made without notice, they cannot be pressed. I do not think there need be another word said with regard to the rules in the House of Commons, and I have here two instances of the present premier in moving the adjournment of the House, where in both cases he gives the intermediate day's notice. I am sorry I found it necessary to place this matter so verbosely before the House. I do it with the simple desire that we may have a clear understanding on so important a matter. It is of the highest importance that we should have certainty, that the matter should not be doubtful, and I think it is just as well that it should be decided in the direction of uniformity in the rules of the House of Commons and in the rules of the Senate. I prefer to move it this way, in order that I would not create any personal irritation in moving against the opinion of the chair, or moving against the convenience of members at any time when they might desire an adjournment to enable them to get home, on a pending motion, or any party ground. I wish to get clear of all these considerations, the decision of the House, and I do not doubt for a moment what the decision will be. It must be the adoption of my motion. A friend of mine told me he had heard some one say he intended to vote against Senator Miller's motion. He said: 'These adjournments are very convenient, and I like to go home, and want to have as little trouble as possible in getting the adjournment.' If many members of the House will vote upon such a ground as that, and not on the true construction of the rules, my motion may be rejected, but if the motion is taken on its merits, apart from extraneous circumstances, any gentlemen who have followed me cannot have the slightest hesitation in voting to adopt the ruling which I suggest.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are all indebted to the hon. gentleman from Richmond for bringing this subject under the notice of the Senate. It is desirable that it should be disposed of and not an open question in the future. Whether we agree with him or not, I think we are very much indebted to him for the exhaustive manner in which he deals with the subject. He very correctly remarks that rule 3 does not affect it at all ; rule 7 certainly does not affect it, because that is the rule providing for the adjournment from Friday till Monday. The argument is based on the assumption that it comes under rule 13, as being a special motion. There is where I differ from my hon. friend. I cannot regard a motion for adjournment, which is constantly made in this chamber, as in any way partaking of a special character. I do not think, in the framing of the rule, that that was in view at all. My hon. friend has quoted a very large number of instances where one or two, and perhaps, three days' notice has been given. That really proves nothing. With the same care, I could find an equal number of cases where a motion was made on one day to be taken into consideration the next day. I have in my hand here two motions made last session of that character. For instance, on the 29th July, Mr. Perley, who seems to have forgotten that he ever made a motion of the kind, gave notice that on the following day he would move——

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It was not opposed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then on another day, August 13th, a motion was made by Mr. McMullen——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the hon. gentleman assert that Mr. McMullen made a motion for an adjournment ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, on the 13th August.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Oh, shame !

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I look upon this question as being altogether subordinate to the convenience of the Senate and we should be tieing ourselves up unduly if we required one intermediate day's notice. Now when a Thursday comes, it is often very evident that there will be no work on Friday or on the following Monday.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—What rule have you for confining yourself to one day's notice ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Only the practice of the chamber, I quite admit that, but I feel considerable repugnance to having the Senate tied up by requiring an intermediate day's notice. If we were now framing a rule, I do not think a majority in this House would adopt one requiring a notice of an adjournment to be special where it occurs frequently. The books are full of such motions. The notice for to-morrow is an exception, because no one objected, but I noticed some cases where objection was taken. I do not agree with my hon. friend as to the procedure in the House of Commons as I read their rule, it does not require any intermediate day's notice. For instance, a notice given to-day for consideration the day after to-morrow, does not appear on the paper until the following morning. There is no intermediate day's notice there.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It does not appear on the order paper until the day before it is moved.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It counts from the time it is put on the table. The notice is given for consideration the day after to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is handed to the clerk and not a single member of the House of Commons is aware of it until it appears in the votes and proceedings.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Nevertheless the notice to the House is what the member says when he reads the notice.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He need not make the announcement from his place in the Houses : he hands it in to the clerk. The notice is given in time to be printed in the votes and proceedings of the following day. In every instance we require that it shall appear in the orders the day before it is proposed to move the motion. My hon. friend will admit that.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It only need be on the paper two days, and to-morrow would be an intermediate day. For instance, I give notice to-day ; it may not go on the orders to-morrow, but it appears the next day, and that is an intermediate day's notice.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are only fighting shadows. If the notice appears on the orders it certainly ought to be ample ; every hon. member can make up his mind when he sees the notice on the paper how he is going to decide the question. What I object to is the proposal that there shall be an intermediate day—that is, if you wanted to adjourn on Friday, you would want to give notice on the preceding Wednesday.

Hon Mr. MILLER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That would be very inconvenient.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Alter the rule then.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman is quite right. I think the rule ought to be changed and made clear, because it was not intended to apply to motions for adjournment. I do not think it comes under the class of special motions because it is a motion made so frequently—almost every two or three weeks.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—What is the meaning of the clause added to the rule :

> And any motion is deemed special which initiates a subject of discussion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It initiates a debate.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Have we not had a debate to-day ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it should not embrace such an ordinary common motion as a motion to adjourn. I find it laid down in May :

> When it is intended the House should adjourn to a day beyond the next sitting day, a motion is made by a member of the government with or without notice, that the House at its rising to adjourn to a specified day.

As far as I can gather from the practice of the House of Commons only one day's notice would have to be given, but there is a much wider latitude there inasmuch as a member of the government is always present to move an adjournment. I do not know of the rule of the House of Lords. I have not had an opportunity of looking it up, but we know that the House of Lords are constantly adjourning. They do not sit constantly like the House of Commons. Nor does the upper house anywhere in any country where there are two chambers. I think our discussing this question of adjournment, speaking generally, is rather unnecessary, inasmuch as all upper chambers adjourn more freely than the lower houses which do the ordinary business. It must be remembered in our House of Commons there are twelve ministers at the head of important departments, and necessarily the business connected with those departments must be initiated there. Apart from that, all financial questions must be considered there first, and there is nothing extraordinary, therefore, in the Senate adjourning from time to time, according to the state of business. The Senate of Canada has never been accused of not performing the duties allotted to it. On the contrary, I think it has on many occasions got a good deal of prestige from the great care and attention given to the subjects under discussion. I need not go further back than last session, when, it is readily admitted, on the important Bill relating to the Railway Commission, very material improvements were made during the time it was in this chamber, and it would have been very much better to-day had the views of the Senate been maintained on one or two points over which there had been a good deal of discussion. I hope in the near future, when revising our rules, this point will be made clear, but for the present we ought to act as we have been acting in the past. In my judgment, the greater number of instances favour the practice of giving one day's notice.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Then alter the rule.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think the rule ought to be altered. My hon. friend has the advantage in that respect, though I do not agree with him that it comes under that special rule.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is to be regretted that the Secretary of State has not attempted to meet the arguments advanced by the hon. gentleman from Richmond. He has instanced a number of cases in which this rule has been violated. No one disputes that, but when the question arose as to what the rule really means, then it is for the chair and the House to decide whether the point of order is well taken or not. The Secretary of State in his remarks said he could not consider the question of adjournment a special motion. If the rule were allowed to remain as it was prior to its change, as instanced by the hon. gentleman from Richmond, then there might be some reason and force in the argument advanced by the hon. Secretary of State, but it is quite evident that the same disagreement existed as to the meaning of the old rule as has been quoted by the hon. gentleman from Richmond, and consequently, in order to avoid any future difficulty, when the rules were revised, these words were added :—

> And any motion is deemed a special motion which initiates a subject of discussion.

It is simply a question for the Senate to decide whether the motion for an adjournment is one that initiates a subject of discussion, long or short. I venture to make this statement, that there is scarcely a motion that has been made for an adjournment for any length of time in the last two or three years that has not created a discussion, and I remember upon two or three occasions my hon. friend from Stadacona (Hon. Mr. Landry), when the question was put as it was the other day, objected on the ground that an intermediate day's notice was not given, but it was not pressed any further than the objection being raised. The reference to May can have no effect so far as this question is concerned, unless the hon. Secretary of State can show that there is a rule in the House of Lords which gives power to the Lords to adjourn upon a day's notice, or without notice at all. The principle laid down in the section read by the hon. gentleman is very clear, that a member of the government can move an adjournment at any time, with or without notice, but are they governed by a rule similar to that in our rules and regulations? If they are, then the argument of the hon. gentleman would have some force, but as we have no evidence that either the Lords or the Commons are restricted by a rule to pursue a certain course, the argument is without force. In this case we do not argue whether it is convenient or not; it is not a question of convenience. As the honourable mover of the resolution put it, there might arise an occasion when a very few members present might take advantage—I would not say intentionally—to make a motion for a long adjournment, to the great inconvenience of large number of members, and for that reason alone, in order to prevent the Senate being taken by surprise, one day's intermediate notice ought to be given, particularly if it is for a long adjournment. The argument of the hon. Secretary of State leads one to this conclusion, that there being a difference of opinion, and if his reasoning be correct that it is inconvenient to give an intermediate day's notice, then a committee should revise the rules, and make them such as there can be no misinterpretation of their meaning.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But as the hon. gentleman from Richmond says, that is not the question before the House. The question is what is the meaning of this rule. I think he has given sufficient evidence from the practice of the House in the past, alone, to show that, however, much we may have deviated from the rules of the House, his resolution is correct. The Speaker in giving his decision the other day made a statement which was not only useful, but strictly correct. We have been in the habit, unfortunately, for some time past of paying very little attention to the rules. We have gone on in a slip-shod, haphazard way, and the Speaker called the attention of the House to that fact that he was justified in giving the decision he rendered at the moment, by the violation of the rules which had been so constant that he did not think it was proper under the circumstances to rule against the hon. gentleman's motion. If the rules are not right, let us amend them, but in the meantime I cannot conceive how any body who reads that rule can put any other construction upon it than that stated by the hon. gentleman from Richmond.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman from Richmond has discussed rule 13 and come to the conclusion that a motion for adjournment is one which initiates a subject of discussion, and consequently falls under that rule. It apparently has not been the consensus of opinion in this chamber for a number of years, and I wonder if, when it was framed, and even when it was amended, it was in the minds of those who had anything to do with it, that questions of adjournment, which are questions of daily routine, should fall under this class. The hon. gentleman has read quite a number of instances when apparently two days' notice has been given. He has cited some cases where a notice was given on Friday for the following Monday, which would not sustain his own contention, because if the notice was given on Friday it would only appear on the orders the following Monday.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The member may have conceived that he was giving an intermediate day's notice.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I would draw the hon. gentleman's attention to this fact, that even if there had been in the early years of confederation an intermediate day's notice given, the Senate was not in the spirit of the procedure better informed than it has been lately, because notices, up to a few years ago, were laid on the table of the House during the sitting, and only appeared on the orders the next day. This was following the practice of the House of Commons, but I contend with the hon. Secretary of State, that the members of either House under that practice were no better or longer informed than they are now under the present practice. I know that on a question raised by the hon. member from Stadacona (Hon. Mr. Landry), the House decreed that henceforth notices should no more be handed in to the Clerk of the House to be printed the next day, but should be read aloud to the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That was good for a session only.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—That may be. I was not quite sure as to the procedure followed up to then, but during that session, and the following sessions as well, the practice prevailed of giving oral notice in order that the House should be seized with the matter contained in that notice, and, therefore, the members have been receiving twenty-four hours' notice just as heretofore under the other system. I contend, therefore, that under the present system, the Senate has longer notice than was given under the old practice, because then they had only twenty-four hours' notice—from the time of the publication of the notice on the order paper. In the House of Commons members are informed just one day before—when they see the notice in the Votes and Proceedings. It seems to me we might go on under the same practice that prevails to-day. I admit, however, with the hon. gentleman from Richmond, that no snap motion should be adopted without notice. I am not interested one way or the other, except to maintain the prevailing practice, and if this meets with the views of a certain number of my hon. colleagues I will move the following amendment:

That all the words in the said motion after 'House' in the second line be stricken out and the following substituted therefor:—'Shall require a notice to be given not later than the sitting day next following that on which the motion was made.'

That would be continuing the same practice which has prevailed for a number of years.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I am afraid that motion would not be in order, because it is a motion to amend the rules. We have a very formal process to go through to amend a rule. The House must be summoned.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I was simply proposing to amend the hon. gentleman's motion.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—My motion is declaring the meaning of rule 13.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I had no other intention myself but to make that rule clear. It is practically declaring that we have understood up to this day that questions of adjournments did not fall under rule 13. Of course it does not mean an alteration of the rules. It would be for this session only, and we could later on have a special sitting for the alteration of the rule.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved the adjournment of the debate.

Som hon. GENTLEMEN—Six o'clock.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We have three minutes yet.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I believe my hon. friends from Delorimier and Richmond have mutually agreed to withdraw their motions and we can at some future day, not far distant, make the rule clear.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—With the permission of the House, I wish to withdraw my amendment.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Then I have no objection to withdraw my motion. My simple desire was, in the most unobjectionable way, to get the opinion of the House on the rule, and if there is an understanding that steps will be taken at some future day to revise the rules. I certainly have no objection, but that will be a matter for the consideration of the House, and I will not be bound to vote for any such motion when it comes up.

The SPEAKER—Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion and amendment be withdrawn?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose those two motions can only be withdrawn with the unanimous consent of the House. Before giving my consent I want to know if there is any rule which prevents the Speaker putting a motion to adjourn the debate before six o'clock.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The leader of the opposition insisted on calling it six o'clock when the hon. gentleman made his motion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The leader of the opposition may call six o'clock when it is three minutes to six, but when I put a motion before six o'clock it is my right to have it put before the House, and in future when I propose to adjourn a debate, even if it is as late as two minutes before six, I shall insist upon my right. I suppose the withdrawal of these two motions means that something will be done to make our rules clear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman is very lucky that his motion to adjourn the debate was not put, because he could not speak now during the same sitting.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But I am in order.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—With regard to my motion, before I came into the House, I stated to a friend the course I intended to adopt, and it is this: If the amendment had been pressed it was my intention to ask for the ruling of the chair on that amendment. If the ruling of the chair had been against me, my intention was to ask leave to withdraw my motion with a view to raising a point of order, and question the ruling of the chair on another occasion. I withdraw my motion and accept the suggestion of the hon. Secretary of State to avoid that unpleasant way of having the matter settled, and with a view, if considered necessary, to a subsequent amendment of the rule.

The motion and the amendment were withdrawn.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. DAVID inquired :

Whether the amount deposited by the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association is still retained as a guarantee for the Canadian policy-holders only, under the old system, and whether another deposit has been made for the benefit of those who are insured under the new system ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The amount deposited by the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, now the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company, is still retained for the benefit of Canadian policy-holders exclusively. A portion thereof was deposited since the giving of the notice prescribed by section 42A of the Insurance Act.

MOTION.

The Order of the Day being called for resuming the adjourned debate on the order

By the Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE :

That he will move for the appointment of a Select Committee of five to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada, with power to send for papers, persons, telegrams and records, to employ clerical services, and with leave to report from time to time, the committee to be composed of the honourable messieurs :—

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE said : I do not propose to tax your good nature nor to dwell too long on what I have to say, because I think I have placed sufficient before the House to justify the request for the appointment of a committee. I propose to read two short letters and make a few remarks and I am done. I have a letter from Messrs. Russell and Winslow, barristers, 253 Broadway, N.Y. They had evidently seen a report of this debate, and as they were interested —I do not know who they are—they write me :

Over a year ago we instituted a suit against the said company, wherein thirteen Tennessee policy-holders were the complainants. This suit was brought in the United States Circuit Court in equity. Mismanagement, insolvency and fraud were alleged in the bill, and it was also alleged that the attempted reincorporation was illegal. The prayer for relief is a general administration of the assets for the benefit of the policy-holders, the company being a mutual one.

I will show you how it is illegal, and I will show that they are not doing business according to law. The letter continues :

The prayer for relief is a general administration of assets for the benefit of policy-holders, the company being a mutual one. They joined the association as respondent and they jointly demurred to our bill of complaint, &c.

There they are in the Supreme Court charging this company with mismanagement, insolvency and fraud and that the attempted reincorporation was illegal. I have a letter from J. D. Wells, dated 5th April. He was vice-president of the company, and I read his affidavit and his statement to this House. He says he will be only too glad to come up here and substantiate all the charges that he has made, and that he will bring further evidence in support of what I have said. Those two letters I think cover all that I want to say on this subject. There are more letters from the policy-holders, but I think one or two good letters will substantiate the case and it is not necessary to read any more of them. From papers in my possession, that I have read, it is evident that the whole of their business has been dead, that they have made away with the funds of the company, that they have played ducks and drakes, so to speak, with the assets, as I showed the House yesterday, that while paying dividends they had an apologist on the floor of this House saying they were not doing very well. I read to you yesterday their own document proving my case in that matter. I wish to read two clauses from the Insurance Act. That Act is made to cover straight life, or old line life as they call it, and mutual and assessment life insurance companies. There is a section of the letter that deals solely with mutual companies. It says if they are Canadian they must come under certain regulations, but if they are foreign companies, they must make a deposit of $50,000 and as much more as the department may ask for, and it says what they can do and what they cannot do. That, I think, is what this honourable body has to do with in my complaint. It was enacted some years ago as law, so I do not hold any government responsible. I have not read the debate on this question which took place in 1885, but no doubt they had in their mind that many people were willing to pay so much a year, as calculated by an actuary, to the friends of one another, their heirs or successors, the sums they were assured for, and that the management in New York, or whoever it might be, was simply a committee of that company to carry out this business, that the committee was not there to exceed their powers and not there to make anything except what the law gave them, and therefore the argument I have heard given, not in this House, was: 'Why did you go into this company? You knew what you were doing and you must take the consequences.' My answer to that is, we have the Insurance Act. That Act declared what they could do, and they violated the Insurance Act and acted illegally. I will read you two clauses to prove my contention. Having stated to you that the intention of the law was that we should assess one another through a committee and pay one another, I will read two clauses of that Insurance Act to this House. I refer to section 3, subsection 4, which reads as follows:—

> Death claims shall be a first charge on all moneys realized from assessments, and no deduction shall be made from any such death claim on any account whatsoever.

That is the law of the land. How could they pay dividends? How could they make a contract as they did with Mr. Harper? They entered into a contract, as I showed you, by which they were to give him and his heirs forever 20 per cent on all the business this company did. It was then an assessment company, not as it is to-day, an old line company. He there, in defiance of this law, made a contract with himself. As the president of the company, he and his officers passed it at a board meeting, made a contract with him, giving him a deed of 20 per cent of all the receipts of the company whenever he died, and when he died, as I have shown the House, from the affidavit of Mr. Wells, he assigned this claim against the company to his widow and gave Mr. Burnham, the present manager of the company, 25 per cent of it. Now, here Mr. Burnham succeeds the present president, succeeds to that bargain made in violation of this law, and he is receiving 20 per cent of the assets. I think it is about $20,000 a year that I read you as his share when the law says they shall not take our money for anything but to pay just claims. Is that not clearly a violation of the law? Now it goes further. Subsection 5 reads:

> No portion of any moneys received from assessments for death claims shall be used for any expense whatever, and every notice of every assessment shall truly specify the cause and purpose thereof.

That is to say, when the committee come together, say there are twenty, or thirty, or fifty, or one hundred men dead, it is absolutely necessary we should raise this money, and they notify all those concerns that they have made assessment No. 91, or whatever it may be, for the purpose of paying off the death claims which had just matured, but not to pay dividends, not to take bonuses for themselves, and not to be able to tax us to pay this contract which they had made with their president. That is a matter which anybody who runs may read. With the law of the land before us, I suppose somebody knew something about it, we throw in the teeth of the insured the statement that they should know what they are doing, and they might fairly throw back at us and say, 'there is the law, we should be protected.' Every man that goes into the company is not supposed to have to use the law to fight a great corporation when there are others who should do it. It is not the duty of a policyholder, perhaps a widow or an orphan with a guardian, to go into law courts and say, 'this company is not carrying out the law.' It should devolve on somebody else. I am very much surprised to think that after very nearly three years during which I have been attacking these people on behalf of the public, they are still doing business, and everybody knows from the press of America that they have violated the laws of Canada. Therefore, we cannot charge the people insured with having been negligent, but they must find some reason why they should have taken the millions of the public and placed the money in their pockets to pay dividends, or to make contracts with the president of the company. Is it right that he should take $60,000 a year out of the people of Canada, insured in the company, and put it into his own pocket? Could such a thing be believed? How was it known? Who was to know inside their closed doors what they were doing? What is there in the public returns to the government to show it? There was nothing in their sworn statement to disclose it. When they get into court, it leaked out through Mr. Wells, Mr. Vrooman and others, that they were doing away with the funds of this company, and taxing the people to pay themselves. On those two clauses, I would almost risk my case, without going any further into the matter, but as a member of it, I made this charge, with the trust imposed upon me, feeling my responsibility to this House and to the country for any statements I make, because if my statements were scandalous, and I had no ground for what I am putting before the Senate, there would be only one thing for me to do, and that would be to make my bow to the Speaker, and leave the Senate for ever. How could I sit with hon. gentlemen whom I see now surrounding me, having appealed to them in behalf of poor people, if when the matter was threshed out it was discovered that I had submitted a case that had no foundation either in facts or figures. I could no longer sit in this House, because every motion I made afterwards or anything I attempted to do, I would have thrown in my teeth all the time the statement, 'You took advantage of us in the past; we cannot trust you in the future.' Therefore, I would be discredited in this House. With reference to the company, why should they object to having their affairs investigated before a committee? If they are right, would it not reinstate them before the whole world? Would they not be able, through the press, to say that these charges were not true and that they come out of the investigation like a dove with unsoiled wings. They should be the very last people to object, because if the motion for this committee were defeated and the papers did not go to a select committee of this House, they would have cast up to them far and wide the charge that they dare not face an investigation of parliament. Why should they not rather come and say, 'Gentlemen, we think our case is right, we think perhaps you would be lenient with us and would do anything you could to assist us in every way to put this association in proper shape.' That is their duty; it was not their duty to spring a Bill on this House, and ask us to pass the measure, as I showed the House, by the brief which I produced, where it was laid down what parliament was to do. The Bill was to go to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and we were to be sent there, and were to have a committee of our own, and our papers were to go to them. They were going to burk this committee and block us for the session. That is the course they propose. I complain that advantage has been taken in this way, and I do not for one moment believe that the Senate will ever allow the Bill to go a stage further until this matter is threshed out. When these charges are made good, it will be time enough for us to say what should be done, and what is the best step to take. I do not think we should pass a Bill to whitewash them and have these charges hanging over them. If an attempt is made to force the Bill through, I shall have something to say on that question. I therefore move, seconded by Hon. Mr. Landry :

For the appointment of a select committee of five to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada, with power to send for papers, persons, telegrams and records, to employ clerical services, and with leave to report from time to time, the committee to be composed of the Honourable Messieurs Legris, Baker, Cloran, with the mover and the seconder.

My reason for making this committee a small one is that I know from past experience in the Commons that it is impossible to do anything with a large committee. It is difficult to get them together. For instance, with this adjournment we members will be spread all over from Dan to Beersheba. I have limited it to a small committee of hon. gentlemen who, I feel sure, will do their duty. It is not necessary to say that they would do their duty, because they must do it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think as the hon. senator from Toronto has charge, with the approval of the Finance Department, of a Bill which was intended to remedy any wrongs so far as they could be remedied, and at all events to make an offer to the people who are so unfortunate as to have been members of this association on the assessment plan, that my hon. friend might let this matter stand until the hon. gentleman from Toronto is present. My hon. friend from Rothesay found the House very tolerant. They indulged him to a great extent. He has taken up a great deal of time unnecessarily, as I think, because this is not a court of law ; it is utterly impossible for us to grant him any relief. If this association has done wrong, the courts of the country are open to him and to any other policy-holder. But parliament is not the place to obtain redress. The Mutual Association have complied with the insurance law as it now stands on our statute-book. If they had failed in doing it, and the attention of the Finance Department were called to the fact, they would be compelled to make good their deposit or to stop doing business. But is parliament going to override the law of the land by directing some proceeding which it is absolutely impossible to carry out ? I am surprised the hon. gentleman did not foresee that parliament cannot do any more than expose the business of the company. If they have complied with the law of the land, and if their deposit has been kept up, as I apprehend it has been from the answer I gave the senator from Mille Isle (Hon. Mr. David) a few moments ago, which was furnished me by the Finance Department, how is parliament going to intervene ? They might condemn the methods of the company ; I daresay they should be condemned, and it is a great pity they should not have been condemned a great many years ago, and the people who have been so unfortunate as to hold policies could have got out of the company. But why the time of parliament should be taken up with this inquiry is a matter I do not understand. In the course of thirty odd years' experience, this is the first time I have known any proceedings of this kind to be undertaken by parliament. No good that I can see can arise out of it other than exposing the affairs of the company. If it is going to benefit my hon. friend, let it go on, but at the same time where an hon. member of this body has charge of a Bill in the direction, at all events, of offering him some opportunity to escape from this unfortunate disaster, I think this committee ought not to be struck until that hon. gentleman is present. I do not think it is consistent with the equity which usually prevails in the House. No progress can be made because the House will adjourn in a very short time, and therefore under the circumstances, I suggest that we allow the motion to lie on the table until the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Kerr) is present.

The SPEAKER—On the whole, the most convenient way is for some hon. gentleman to move that the debate be adjourned. This motion has been standing now for several days. The hon. gentleman has not made his motion till to-day. This is his third address, and the hon. Secretary of State wishes the motion should stand again. The better way is for some hon. gentleman to move the adjournment of the debate.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudiere)—I move that the debate be adjourned until the 19th May.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I have not made the motion three times.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman has been making speeches without any point.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That is not fair. The hon. gentleman knows I was choked off day after day. The hon. gentleman himself said he was bringing in a government Bill, and then the hon. gentleman said, no, that he was mistaken about the whole thing. He must not blame me, therefore, when I put it off for that reason. Then the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Kerr) asked me to put it off until Friday. I did so, of course, being willing to oblige him, because I was not taking up this matter in any haphazard way, and to my surprise a Bill was introduced. Why did it not emanate from the Insurance Department? Can any one from New York come and draw a Bill, such as I have in this brief, and ask parliament to put that Bill through? Why did the Insurance Department not take hold of it? They were the people to bring it in if there was anything wrong. If there was nothing wrong, why bring in the Bill? My hon. friend, I think, was rather sarcastic to me. I tried to keep in bounds. I have not asked to override parliament and it is rather sarcastic for him to say that I have. It is the gentlemen from New York who are trying, in the corridors of this House every day, lobbying the senators, to override parliament. You cannot do anything in the law courts. If you go to the law courts, what will they say? What charge are you going to make against this company? What are you going to do? If they have been misappropriating funds in New York, what have the law courts here to do with it? You will be told to go to New York. It would be a nice job for us to go to New York where they have 36,000 cases in the courts not yet heard. We would be bankrupt and not able to come back on our uppers. The hon. gentleman is further sarcastic—I do not think he could be serious. He says they have complied with the law? What have they complied with? That is with reference to the deposit, but that does not go everywhere. I can show him the clause where it says that their books shall be open for inspection by the department, and if they were open for inspection by the department, why did not the department ascertain the facts and then, as the hon. gentleman says, give them a chance to escape? That is just what I propose not to do. I propose to bring their noses to the ring-bolt in this country, and ask parliament to decide whether the people are to be robbed as they have been robbed, or whether they are to be protected by the laws.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—How are we going to help them? I can see no possible way of doing it. I see no possible avenue by which parliament can assist them.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I am very sorry indeed that my hon. friend from Rothesay is not within his right in dealing with this question here. We all know very well—at least those who have had anything to do with this company know—that a mistake was made in 1885 when a law was passed permitting that company to enter upon the business of life insurance simply by making a deposit of some $50,000 with the government of the country. There are large numbers of people in this Dominion who are deeply interested in what is going to be done in regard to this company. I admit that there is a Bill before the House for the purpose of amending the law, to put them in shape that they can still carry on business, but before we proceed to pass that Bill, we should certainly have a very clear and distinct understanding with regard to the pernicious manner in which they conducted business in this country ever since they obtained their license in 1885.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudiere)—I rise to a question of order. The hon. gentleman can only speak on the question of adjournment.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Before the motion for adjournment was made at all, I rose to speak on the main motion, and I hardly think it is right to confine me simply to the question of adjournment. We are discussing a very important matter, and I think we have a right to be heard. If I am not right, I am prepared to sit down. I rose when the Speaker was about to put the question, but gave way for the hon. Secretary of State. There are a great many people who are deeply interested in this matter. As I stated to this House, they carried some $22,000,000 insurance which has been reduced to some $8,000,000. That leaves some $14,000,000 in policies held by the people of this country that have actually lapsed. These people must have collected from five to six hundred thousand dollars a year out of the people of this country for a great many years. Now we admit that a mistake was made in 1885, and we must be exceedingly careful that the mistake is not repeated, and the best way we will ever come to a conclusion of what is best to do with the company is to probe the transactions that have taken place to the bottom, before we start to legislate anew. We want to find out what these people were guilty of and what has come of the money that was contributed by the people of this country for the last fifteen or twenty years. What have they done with it? What has been their course of conduct, and what is the standing of the company to-day? We cannot ascertain that unless we grant the committee asked for. I do not at all challenge the position taken by the hon. Secretary of State. Perhaps it is an unusual proceeding, but it was an exceedingly unusual proceeding in 1885 to give them a license to do business in Canada at all. I say the best thing we can do is to guard against such evils in the future. The company has been a curse to this country. It came in and did business, taking an enormous amount of money out of the people's pocket, and the people are anxious about it. When I was home recently half a dozen people inquired of me 'What is going to be done with the company? Is there any hope of getting anything out of it? Is there anything left for us at all? What have they done with all the money?' We cannot answer all those questions unless we get the committee for which my hon. friend has asked. With regard to the adjournment of the debate, I do not htink it right, if we intend to grant the committee at all, to postpone action. We may as well grant it now as at any future day. What harm can come of it? What is the object of the adjournment? The Bill introduced by the hon. gentleman from Toronto will come before us, and we are willing to give it consideration. I have no personal antipathy to the New York Reserve Company. I am desirous, by the legislation that will be enacted under this proposed Bill, to put the policyholders in the very best shape we can put them. I sympathize with them and am willing to do the very best I can for them, but I want to find out how the means of that company were squandered and scattered, and let the public see and know what has been done with their money, and let us try in the legislation that we enact under that Bill to guard against the perpetration of any such disaster again. Now, let us have the investigation. It may be something unusual, but I say by all means let us have it. We were saying to-day that we have no business before us: here is a matter that will give us something to do, a matter of vital interest to people of this country. There are hundreds of thousands of policy-holders who have their eyes on the Senate to see what we are going to do with this matter. Are we going to adjourn and refuse the committee and say nothing about it? I do not think we should adopt that course.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It seems to me we should hesitate and ponder before agreeing to give the committee which is sought for by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay. We have heard him on different occasions explaining the diverse reasons which he has laid before us. He said at a certain stage of his speeches that we were the judges to whom he would apply for a remedy, if there was a remedy to come out of the proposed investigation. If we are the judges, I think it is quite an important move he is making in asking for a committee to be appointed with the right to send for persons and papers. We know where we begin, but we never know where we end. We do not know how much money it may cost and it seems to me that if we were judges in this matter, we should not appoint a committee on an exparte statement. We should hear both sides of the story. My hon. friend read a number of letters from abroad received from parties he does not know, and parties he never heard of. He received letters from people throughout Canada and some from the States. He did not need to tell me that when there was a shrinkage in the amount of insured from $22,000,000 to $8,000,000, that very many policies must have lapsed. I have some of the policy-holders around me here in the Senate. I know exactly the plan that was followed by this company. They were doing business on the assessment plan, and the assessed paid less than they should have paid for the legal reserve. They kept the reserve in their pocket, and now they have to get young men in, bring in new blood, or new money to pay the claims. The older generation of policy-holders have now to pay the piper, and tax themselves each month to pay the death claims. It will go on increasing till the moment when there will be but two policy-holders living, and the one to die first will be the lucky one, because his heirs will collect the money from the other.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is the hon. gentleman speaking for or against the adjournment of the debate ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I apologize to the hon. gentleman and to this House for having digressed from the point I wished to make. This is a very important matter which should receive the attention of this chamber, but I beg leave to differ from the hon. gentleman from Rothesay (Hon. Mr. Domville) when he asks now that we should appoint a committee when there is a gentleman who has been good enough to go into the matter and examine the documents so as to lay before us a brief from the insurance company and state their side of the case. I do not know the facts in regard to the matter except what I gather from conversations with insured people whose policies have lapsed and those who are carrying the burden. It seems to me reasonable that the request of the hon. Secretary of State should be acceded to. It may be that there is a perfectly clear defence to the motion of the hon. gentleman. As to the Bill which is proposed, and the measure of relief it will afford should it be amended, or should another means of relief be found, will all come before the committee. There is matter for reflection in that measure, and if we can better the condition we will.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In what way will the Bill meet the case put by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Supposing the hon. gentleman from Rothesay had not moved for a committee and this Bill came and was referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce—I suppose that is where it should go unless it be referred to a special committee—I am quite sure, as it is a Bill of such importance that it alters contracts, that all the parties interested, who held contracts and were insured, could appear and be represented by attorneys and could state the facts, but I do not say now I will not vote for the committee, but it seems to me that on the ex-parte statement we should not plunge into this investigation before hearing the other side.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But the Bill only applies to the present policy-holders who stand right before the company. It only affects the man who has paid his premiums and assessments up to the present time. These are the only persons interested in the proposed Bill. My own view is that it is a very good Bill, so far as I have been able to look at it, but it does not deal at all with the charges made.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Allow me to say a few words as to the manner in which this question strikes an uninterested member.

The SPEAKER—Is the hon. gentleman speaking on the motion to adjourn ?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Yes, I say that it is a most extraordinary mode of action, to my mind. The hon. gentleman moving an adjournment did not appear to me to be anxious about any other matter than postponing the debate. Here is an hon. gentleman who is within his right in bringing a matter before this House, assuming he does it from proper motives, and he deserves the highest encouragement and the support of every hon. gentleman of this House, if we assume his motives to be good and true. Did he cause the delays ? The delays, as I understand them, were caused by the government, and in other ways, but not by himself. He had necessarily to delay it. He brings the matter up and he comes at length to what he hopes is the fruition of his labours for so many days. The great amount of labour he has gone through and the figures he has waded through and the correspondence he has read and the books he has studied, I have some idea of, and now the man is to be snuffed out in a most ungenerous manner, and in a matter not according to the rules of the Senate. If the hon.

gentleman (Hon. Mr. Casgrain, de Lanaudière) wanted to adjourn the debate to speak on it, of course it should have been arranged before, but the idea of a man going on with the debate and then having an hon. member rise up and move an adjournment is most extraordinary, and I do not see that it should have any support. I have no interest in this matter, yet I think it is a fact patent to every one here that there is not an hon. gentleman of the Senate who will stand up and say that any one of these statements is not correct. Then, if they are not challenged, if they are true, what reason should there be to hesitate in granting the motion? you want to prescribe a remedy before you ascertain the disease. Examine the case first, find out the disease, and then prescribe a remedy. What is this Bill? It does not require any astuteness in politics to see it. It is a Bill brought in here evidently to possibly divert the action of the hon. gentleman from Rothesay. I give him credit for the honesty of purpose which he is showing. No hon. gentleman entering this Senate has since his advent here brought up measures of more importance and benefit than that hon. gentleman has. They are within the range of good, better and best. The first measure, I remember, that he introduced was one to raise the value of the British shilling. Was not that good, positively good? The next was to encourage the production of one of the most beautiful and interesting and useful metals ever discovered in this world, aluminum, which will be used in all cases where copper and tin could be possibly used.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON.—Have we a prisoner at the bar?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—No, but I may tell you I have seen you wade through a mighty mass of literature and no one ever said a word to you. You should not laugh at anybody. I can recall where I tolerated your conduct because I had mercy on your own feelings. I, who seldom trouble this House in the heat of debate, not being thoroughly acquainted with the mode of procedure, indulged in a little excess of excitement, which is pardonable; it lies very badly with you, Sir, an old and experienced parliamentarian, to come and throw the shafts of ridicule and try to make humour out of me. You should be unworthy of such a thing.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Allow me——

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—No, I won't allow you. You can get up when I am through.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I rise to a point of order.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Well, you don't rise to a point of order. But what is it?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I rise to a point of order——

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—No—well, state it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My point of order is that the hon. gentleman has been addressing me personally for the last five minutes.

The SPEAKER—I think the point of order is well taken.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I do not know what other way to address the hon. gentleman. I will call him the hon. member from Prince Edward Island or Marshfield. We will take Marshfield. When I spoke of the hon. gentleman I meant the hon. member from Marshfield. All I wish to say is that the hon. gentleman from Rothesay introduced this measure in good faith, and he has a right to consideration. None of the delays were caused by him, and it ill-becomes any hon. gentleman in this House to treat this matter with any degree of levity. If this complaint exists in a matter so intimately connected with the welfare and well-being, and even the lives of the people of this country, surely something should be done at once. It will have an effect, not for this particular company, but will be a warning for all insurance companies that they must do what they undertake to do, and that they must guard the funds of the people. I remember when this company started that I did not think they were on a proper basis. I thought they were giving insurance at too cheap a rate. I examined some cases for them, but that has nothing to do with it. I think the company is conducted on a bad basis, and mismanaged. The Department of Insurance does not amount to a great deal to allow such flagitious conduct to go on, and I think the hon. gentleman from Rothesay in bringing the matter before us, and endeavouring to obtain as good a remedy as he can, deserves the thanks of every hon. gentleman in this House, and every honest man in the world.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The motion of adjournment is a very proper one at this stage of the discussion of this question. Time should be allowed to intervene, and a Bill that has been introduced as a remedy for the evil that the hon. gentleman has been pointing out to the House so eloquently and at very great length should be considered, and when we reach that stage it will be found, after we enter upon a discussion of a remedy, whether there is a necessity for probing the matter any further by way of investigation. For my own part, I think such a committee as the hon. gentleman is proposing to strike for this purpose will not be effective or useful, while it will be attended with a vast amount of expense. I may change my opinion, however, after the subject is ventilated still further. As to these gentlemen in New York, to whom my hon. friend has given such an unenviable reputation, I think there is nothing they would like better than a free trip to Ottawa at the expense of Canada, and that is the only way they could be brought here, and the expense would be great. However, if any object could be attained, I am quite ready to support the motion for the committee proposed by the hon. gentleman, but we ought to take up the Bill which has been proposed, and consider it very carefully, and in connection with the discussing of it we would find out what the real difficulty is, and ascertain whether an adequate remedy would be furnished by that Bill; and if that remedy was not sufficient, we could make it adequate. Possibly we can, and perhaps we cannot; but I think it likely that we can. With reference to my interruption of the hon. gentleman from Kingston, a few moments ago, inquiring whether there was a prisoner at the bar, I saw the humorous position my hon. friend took in defending the hon. gentleman from Rothesay, and giving him such a good reputation generally. I wanted to know if the hon. gentleman from Rothesay was on trial. I did not think he was aspersed in such a way as called for defence. I made the interruption in a pleasant way, and did not intend to give offence. I just called attention to the kind of defence my hon. friend was putting up for the hon. gentleman from Rothesay. To my mind, the great difficulty in this matter lies not so much in any mismanagement of the affairs of this particular company, not so much in dishonest conduct on the part of officials of that company, as in the fallacious system of insurance that has been carried on by that company.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—When we licensed assessment companies from the United States or assessment companies in our own country to do business in Canada, I believe we made a very great mistake, and the trouble that has arisen has been in consequence of licensing and recommending to the people, as the government and parliament of Canada did, a fallacious system of life insurance. The premiums have not been adequate. In fact, the lapses, about which we have heard ever so much, occurred in this way: that the assured had died and default was made in paying his family the amount insured. Of course that was very bad, but where a person allowed his insurance to lapse, under the assessment principle, assuming the company were up to the time of their lapsing, meeting all their death claims, I do not see that there was any great loss incurred by the policy-holders. They were insured up to that time, and all the assessment company professed to do was to provide for the actual cost of insurance with a small amount to cover expenses. When insurance has lapsed, I believe the advocates of assessment claim that all they had been taking out of the insured was the cost of carrying the risk, and therefore they had not any permanent interest, and any time they dropped out it was a square account. As my hon. friend from Montreal said, they never contributed anything to a reserve fund. This Bill tries to provide a reserve amount for these people in various ways. If they come under the regular plan they will have a reserve provided for them, a scheme by which they would get an interest in the reserve from the time they first insured under the assessment plan, as that plan did not contemplate a reserve at all. No hon. gentleman in this House has a greater dislike to the assessment principle of insurance than I have. I have watched its operation and I know many people who have been disappointed in regard to it, and I have seen those schemes of insurance dropping to pieces. That happened all over the United States and where Canadians were involved, they also lost their interest in that way, by the winding up of the companies or by their own action in allowing their policies to lapse. The whole principle is wrong and vicious, and has created the difficulties my hon. friend has been describing. That is the main cause of the trouble. Under the assessment principle, as soon as confidence goes, the whole thing disappears like snow in April, and when these gentlemen commenced to quarrel amongst themselves, and to indulge in the recriminations the hon. gentleman has been presenting to the House, confidence was withdrawn and those people who were insured withheld their assessments, and lapses were the consequences. Perhaps I may change my mind after we advance further in the consideration of this question, but I am afraid we cannot do much good by attempting to investigate the quarrels between these gentlemen in New York. I know it will cost a great deal to do it, and I am afraid you will find that we have entered upon a task which is greater than we anticipate at this stage, and that the results would not be satisfactory; while, on the other hand, the Bill which has been proposed by the hon. gentleman from Toronto attempts to deal with the situation of our own Canadian policy-holders, and to do the best we can for them under the circumstances in which we are placed. That is our prime duty. That is what I conceive to be almost our only duty. If we were to attempt to investigate the affairs of every foreign company that does business in Canada and bring their head officials before committees of this House, we would find we had a difficult and interminable task before us which would not be likely to result satisfactorily. Of course I may change my mind and agree to the investigation, but I think at this stage it is as well to agree to the motion for adjournment to allow matters to develop, and after they have so developed we may see our course clear.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—The question of adjournment embarrasses me. I fear it may be the means of getting rid of any investigation.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—And that it may, perhaps, put us in a bad position, and render ineffective the noble efforts by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay on behalf of those who, like myself, have lost money in the Mutual Reserve Fund Association. That association ought to change their name; they should be called the Mutual Life Association without reserve. I speak in the name of all those who, like me, after having for fourteen or fifteen years paid premiums on insurance from five to ten or twelve thousand dollars to that society, who have been obliged to drop their policies because they could not pay more than they had paid, because their premiums were doubled. It took a good part of my revenue to pay my premiums. I belong to the old class of those who have dropped their policies, and to a new class of those who have retained something of their policies. I have kept $2,000 which I had from 1892, so I am interested with those considered as dead, those who have dropped their policies, and I belong to those who are still living, but kicking and paying, and perhaps who are expected to die also the same death. I am interested for both classes, and wish to do everything in my power in their behalf. Self-interest naturally forces me to take that position, and at the same time, the interest of my fellow-countrymen in the same way. Now I am inclined to think that if we want to know whether the present debate is good or not, and for the benefit of those who are living and kicking and paying as I have been during twelve or fourteen years, if we are to know whether that Bill contains the clauses it ought to contain in order to make it beneficial and efficient, then I think that an investigation would have a good effect, and it is the only way to pass a good judgment on that Bill. The company come before parliament. They apply to us to have a new lease of power. They are not satisfied with having drained our money for the past fifteen years; they have taken millions out of our pockets, and they want to take more money; and I think it is now time to make our conditions. We should limit their power—give them what they want, but on certain conditions. The mass of facts and information which the hon. gentleman has put before this House should help the government to do what is required. We will have ascertained what they have done with the millions which was put in their hands, and it will explain the surpluses which they have been boasting for years, what they have done with the $1,500,000 which they claim to have had in their possession in 1895. How is it they have paid dividends when they were on the eve of doubling the premiums? We will have the right to ask them what they intend to do to protect those who have paid for fifteen or twenty years, and what they are supposed to do for those who are still paying, and what they will do with regard to their new mode of doing business. What guarantee will the people have that they will conduct their business better in the future than in the past? We know their statements and declarations for the past fifteen years. We know those statements were not true; what guarantee have we that their statements now are true? I think an investigation is necessary, and if that investigation could be made at the same time as the Bill is considered before the Committee on Banking and Commerce, I would have no objection. I am not familiar with the procedure of this House and I do not know that it is possible, but if the debate is adjourned, I think the Bill will pass, and there will be no investigation.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, no.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I appeal to the members who know the procedure. I have no objection to consent to an investigation being made by the Committee on Banking and Commerce, provided that we have a guarantee that there will be a thorough investigation.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I have several letters of complaint with regard to this company, and have been quietly remaining in my place in the House to see what offer would be made by some one in behalf of the company. Their solicitor promised me on more than one occasion to come and explain what the company propose to do, and I fail to see how we can get the company to guarantee anything unless they are brought before a regular committee of the House, or before a special committee, as moved by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay. As far as I understand the matter, we would not have heard from this company at all, because they were not asking for legislation, and nothing was heard from the company until the hon. gentleman from Rothesay made his complaint in the House. Then the company bestirred themselves, and how do we know that this Bill which is before the House, although not before the committee yet, is making sufficient provision for those who have claims against this company? In my judgment, the only way that that matter can be fairly arrived at would be to hear the complaints that have been made against the company and let the company refute those complaints if it is in their power to do so. And then the committee, and the House will be prepared not only to accept the Bill of the hon. gentleman from Toronto, but to improve it along the lines suggested so that the people of Canada will be protected, not only in regard to the past, but for the future. It seems to me that the committee may be too small, or if the matter goes to the Committee on Banking and Commerce that committee should have special powers so that it would be dealt with by a committee with the power sought for the special committee, to send for persons and papers, and so on, and have the whole matter threshed out on its merits. There is no use saying we should accept this Bill because it has been proposed by the hon. gentleman from Toronto, and shown by him to the officials of the Department of Insurance. It is not for this House to accept a dictum of that kind. We must deal with it on its own merits. I have suspended my judgment until I have heard both sides. I have not made known the complaints I have on my desk. We must be fair to the company and at the same time fair to those who claim to have been wronged. I agree that a thorough investigation by a committee should be made, and that the whole matter should be sifted from beginning to end, and if it is in the province of this parliament, sufficient provision should be made to prevent a repetition of that wrong-doing. Statements have been made on the floor of this House on the responsibility of one of its members, and hon. gentlemen should pause before bringing to light any legislation until both sides have been heard. Under these considerations I think, if the hon. gentleman would withdraw his request for a committee, and trust to the regular committee of this House and ask the committee to be given the same powers as he seeks for the special committee, we will get at the whole matter and this company would be summoned before parliament. If they were here and the matter investigated before the Standing Committee, we would see what provision they propose to make. They have asked for no legislation and in order that a compromise may be effected, the hon. gentleman is bringing in a Bill. Whether that covers the case fully as set forth by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay, I am not sufficiently acquainted with the law to say, but I think those interested in the company, like the hon. gentleman from Rothesay and the hon. gentleman from Mille Iles, would be in a fair position to say what we were called upon to do. It is not the duty of the House to suspend action until the Bill comes down. We should be in full possession of all information.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—We all sympathize with the two classes to which my hon. friend referred, the dead and the living. From the attention which I have been able to give the Bill presented to this House by the hon. gentleman from Toronto, I am under the impression that the Bill can be amended so as to afford relief to the policy-holders who have allowed their policies to lapse as well as to those who are still insured in the company. I speak advisedly, because I have consulted with a party, without naming the authority, and he saw no objection to the suggestion which I made. I may say also that from the attention I have given the debate, and from the examination I have been able to make of the reports of this company, I am very strongly under the impression that an investigation is necessary, and that a proper investigation should be made, but I believe that it would be premature to strike the committee, which has been named in the motion, and that the better way is to adjourn the matter until the 19th May. The Bill which is now before the House is a Bill to amend the insurance law. It cannot pass during the present week. It has been decided that this House adjourn on Thursday until the 18th May, and therefore it will be only when we re-assemble that this Bill will be seriously considered, and then I think both matters should be considered together by the same committee. It not only is a matter affecting this insurance company. It is quite plain that our insurance law is defective. It is liable to abuse, and it has been abused and thousands of our countrymen have been made the victims of the systems which have been carried on by this company. Now it is for us to give all our attention to the matter, and devise the best means of amending the general law and also of coming to the rescue of the unfortunate people who have dealt with this company. It would be the best way to appoint this committee, but in my humble judgment the proper course is to adjourn the debate, so that when we take action in this matter we will deal at the same time with the Bill.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Out of deference to the leader of the opposition and courtesy for the hon. gentleman from Toronto, who has introduced a Bill to amend the Insurance Act, I shall vote for the adjournment of the debate, but without binding myself any further in the matter. This is one of the most important questions that have come before this House. The hon. leader of the government says there was no precedents for a special committee. It may be we have no precedent for an exactly similar investigation, but we have had special committees to investigate political scandals. This, hon. gentlemen, stands pretty close to a political scandal. In this matter we have hundreds and thousands of suffering people who are to-day looking to us for redress, or at least for some vindication, and for having this matter thoroughly sifted. One thing surprises me, and that is that it should have been necessary for my hon. friend from Rothesay to bring the question before the government and the public. Have we not a Finance Department? Have we not a bureau charged expressly with the duty of looking into insurance questions? Are not those officials highly paid to do their duty, to be guardians of the public money? How is it that no cry has been raised by them? Certainly there is something rotten in this matter beyond the realms of Denmark. There is something rotten, apparently, in our laws concerning insurance. I will not say that the rottenness extends any further, but I will maintain that this whole question should be investigated, and investigated thoroughly. It is our duty to the public, our duty to ourselves. If, as is almost apparent, this Bill introduced by my hon. friend from Toronto, is brought in to burk any further inquiry, I shall certainly take as strong an attitude as I can against it, but I will not condemn the Bill further before the promoter of it is present. In the meantime, I shall vote for the adjournment. My future actions will be to have the fullest possible investigations in this matter.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—As I seconded the motion, I merely did so in an informal way. I have an open mind on the whole question, but it did appear to me not unreasonable, as the Senate will adjourn the day after tomorrow and nothing can be done until we re-assemble, to adjourn the debate, as nothing can be lost by the postponement. I am very much impressed with the facts stated by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay. They certainly require investigation, and if it were a finality of the matter, I would vote for the investigation, but there is time enough, and nothing can be done in the meantime.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I have not spoken to the motion, so I suppose I may say a few words.

The SPEAKER—I was under the impression that the hon. gentleman had spoken.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—No. I do not think my hon. friend from Marshfield was quite correct. He might have taken up the matter in a very different way. While he was defending the association, he refuted nothing. I had charged fraud and mismanagement in the way they did business. Every hon. gentleman in this House knows my position. I understand the responsibility of the move I am making. I asked for a committee because I wanted to show fraud and mismanagement, and what objection can there be to that? I am not working for myself; I am working for the widows and orphans, but in deference to the wishes of the House, I am willing to consent to the adjournment, on condition that the Insurance Bill is not permitted to override in any way my motion for a committee. I do not want it understood that by my consenting to adjourn the debate until May 18, that the Bill will be proceeded with before my motion, or be permitted to take precedence, or be used as a method of burking my committee. If that is understood, I am quite willing to accept.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

The motion was agreed to.

DELAYED RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask my hon. friend the Secretary of State if he would kindly inquire why papers that were ordered by this House in an address carried early last session in reference to the affairs of the Anglo-American Telegraph Company have not been brought down. My hon. friend will remember that I once or twice asked about these papers before the termination of last session of parliament, and I had one kind of an answer or another furnished by his colleagues.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not remember at this moment, but I will have the matter looked up and see if information can be obtained. Is the information available?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Certainly, the correspondence between the government and the Anglo-American Telegraph Company. I am aware that there is a great deal of it.

JURISDICTION OF EXCHEQUER COURT ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE introduced Bill (I) An Act to amend the Act respecting the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court as to Railway Debts. He said: Last year there was an Act passed by this House and the House of Commons, intituled an Act to amend the Acts respecting the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court as to Railway Debts. It provided for the appointment of receivers to railway companies, and the Bill which I am now presenting is for the purpose of reproducing two sections of the Winding-up Act, one for the purpose of preventing suits, unless with the permission of the court, and the other for the purpose of suspending the action of the directors unless with the sanction of the court.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Will the government take charge of that Bill?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The Bill has been approved by the Minister of Railways.

The Bill was read the first time.

CAMPBELLFORD, LAKE ONTARIO AND WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. WATSON, in the absence of Hon. Mr. Kerr (Cobourg) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 10) An Act to incorporate the Campbellford, Lake Ontario and Western Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My attention has been directed to this Bill as being the first that has been introduced this session in view of the order made last year, wherein a local Bill, a Bill in the province of Ontario, a clause was inserted that it is a work for the general advantage of Canada, and special directions are given as to what is to be observed where that clause is introduced. I simply call the attention of the committee to this fact, so that they will bear in mind when the Bill comes before them, that there is a proposal to give to the federal parliament power over local railways.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—It would be for the Striking Committee to appoint a committee to deal with it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No decision was arrived at upon the point raised by the hon. gentleman. It was discussed very often as to how far the federal authorities could grant charters for the construction of roads exclusively within one province, but that has always been overcome by inserting the words as provided in the constitution 'for the general benefit of Canada,' and this would be precisely in the same position. There is a committee suggested by the hon. gentleman from De Salaberry.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—One of the rules of the House was amended last year by unanimous consent to provide that all those Bills would stand referred to a committee on legislation composed of nine members, but that committee has not been appointed yet.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It was not appointed, because when we discussed it in the Striking Committee, it was represented that the procedure at the preceding session had not been regular, so we asked leave to sit again to examine into this question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think one element to be observed was that the municipality through which the road passed should be advised, and it seems to me the six weeks accompanying notice the proposal to ask parliament for a Bill of the kind should contain a notice sent to all the municipalities through which the railway was to run.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, that was only so far as it interfered with municipal right.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (18) An Act respecting the Manitoba and Northwestern Railway Company of Canada.—(Hon. Mr. Young.)

Bill (25) An Act to incorporate the Whitehorse and Alsek Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Young.)

Bill (33) An Act respecting the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway and Navigation Company.—(Hon. Mr. Templeman.)

THIRD READING.

Bill (A) An Act for the relief of James E. Taylor, together with the evidence.—(Hon. Mr. Lougheed.)

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Wednesday, April 27, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

MUTUAL RESERVE LIFE ASSOCIATION.

INQUIRIES.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE inquired of the government re Mutual Reserve Life Association, so-called, formerly called the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association:

1. How much was paid in by the Canadian policy-holders on the policies noted in the return brought down to the Senate from the Insurance Department as lapsed or surrendered?
2. State amount lapsed and surrendered for years 1890-1904, inclusive.
3. State amount paid on such policies previous to the time they lapsed or were surrendered, as premiums or special assessments.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answers are as follows :

1. The returns made to the department do not contain the information asked for.

2. Particulars are given in the following schedule :

Year.	Surrendered.	Expired.	Lapsed.	Total.
1890		*1,637,250		1,637,250
1891		2,027,000		2,027,000
1892		2,377,500		2,377,500
1893		2,297,000		2,297,000
1894		2,733,250		2,733,250
1895		2,458,500		2,458,500
1896		2,749,500		2,749,500
1897		3,218,000		3,218,000
1898		5,861,500		5,861,500
1899		7,533,500		7,533,500
1900		5,655,427		5,655,427
1901	51,500		4,998,750	5,050,250
1902	221,000		2,305,601	2,526,601
1903	40,303		1,094,933	1,135,236
	312,803	38,548,427	8,399,284	47,260,514
			38,548,427
Total			46,947,711

* Including $28,000 not taken.

NOTE.—So far as the department is aware, there is no difference between the policies returned as expired prior to 1901 and those returned as lapsed since that date.

In reference to the third question, I may say that the returns made to the department do not furnish the information asked.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE inquired of the government :

1. Is there anything to show in the Insurance Department why the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company, for the years 1900, 1901, 1902, 1903, did not collect, under the policies issued prior to the changing of the corporate name from the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Insurance Association :—

Membership fees ;

Annual dues ;

Medical examiners' fees ;

Assessments—mortuary ?

2. In returns made by the company to the Insurance Department for the years 1900, 1901, 1902, 1903, under the head of Income in Canada, Premiums, is it in lieu of, or equivalent to, the question asked in No. 1 ?

3. If so, under what rule, system or calculation was the amount of $1,254,538.18 collected as premiums, in the years 1900, 1901, 1902, 1903, in Canada ?

4. In the years above named there appears, from the insurance reports of the department, total collected as liens in payment of premiums $173,935.32. Does this amount still remain as liens taken against policies ?

5. If so, are such liens bearing interest, and are policies loaded down with this lien and annual interest thereon ?

6. How is such interest calculated ?

(a.) Is it calculated every two months, when the assessment is made, or annually on the four premiums, or in one sum ?

(b.) If so, how is the interest account on such policies kept ?

(c.) Or is it compounded ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answers to the questions are as follows :

1. The department is not aware that the company did not collect in 1900, 1901, 1902 and 1903, membership fees, annual dues, medical examiners fees and mortuary assessments under such of its policies as provide therefor.

2. The source of revenue referred to in No. 1 is included under the heading premiums' in the years mentioned.

3. The amount of $1,254,538.18 reported as collected in premiums for the years named is the total amount in respect of its policies of all classes. The statements made to the department do not show how such premiums have been calculated or arrived at.

4. The amount of liens in force at the 31st December, 1903, as given by the company's return of Canadian business is $84,576.63.

5 and 6. Without having positive information inasmuch as the returns to the department do not contain it, it is presumed that the liens in force bear interest and that the amount thereof if not paid when due is added to the principal.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.) inquired of :

The government, more particularly the honourable member of the cabinet from Victoria, if any effort was made, or suggestion offered, to the promoters of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway to include in the contract now before parliament a stipulation that construction work should be commenced on the Pacific coast simultaneous with the commencement of construction at Winnipeg, before the contract was signed ?

He said : Whatever differences of opinion there may be about this Grand Trunk Pacific Railway scheme, the Bill is bound to become law, and, as my hon. friend from Victoria knows, there is a great deal of anxiety among people that construction on the Pacific coast should be commenced simultaneously with that at Winnipeg, or the east, and I think they will be gratified if the hon. gentleman could tell us that an effort has been made to have the contract contain a clause to compel the commencement of construction on the Pacific at the same time as at Winnipeg, and whether the company would not accept a suggestion of that kind

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I am afraid I cannot quite satisfy the curiosity of my hon. friend in respect to the question as to whether any effort has been made, or suggestion offered, in regard to the commencement of construction of the railway on the Pacific coast simultaneously with the commencement of construction at Winnipeg. The agreement made with the Grand Trunk Pacific for the building of another transcontinental line has been printed and must speak for itself. In that agreement there is no stipulation that the Grand Trunk Pacific shall begin construction on the Pacific coast or for that matter shall begin construction at Winnipeg. It is left entirely to the company to determine where construction shall begin. As in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway, as my hon. friend will remember, there was no stipulation that construction was to begin on the Pacific slope, yet notwithstanding that omission, the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway did begin and was prosecuted for many years in the province of British Columbia within a few miles of the coast, and at other points on the line. The contract made with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company includes many onerous conditions. The railway has to be completed in seven years, and necessarily the company will have to commence construction on the Pacific coast if they intend to complete the railway within the specified time. The railway company have evinced every inclination to commence work in the west by having for the last year surveying parties in the mountains of British Columbia. As a matter of course, it will take the company much longer to locate the line through the province of British Columbia than on the prairies of the Northwest and for my part I have no doubt whatever that, as a purely economical proposition, the Grand Trunk Pacific must commence construction on the Pacific coast. I am not a railway expert, but I think it would be perfectly absurd for the railway company to assume that they could complete that great railway in seven years unless they commenced work on the Pacific coast. It will be made more economical for them to carry their supplies to Port Simpson, or whatever port is ultimately selected as the terminus on the Pacific coast, and commence construction from that point. As I have said, there is no condition in the contract. The government have not thought it necessary to tie down the company as to where they shall begin construction. They are not required to commence construction at Winnipeg. They begin at any point on the line they like. All we require is that they shall begin the road and complete it within a given time.

STEAMSHIP SERVICE BETWEEN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND BRITISH PORTS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON inquired :

Whether it is arranged to have direct sailings of steamships from Charlottetown to British ports during the present season of navigation ; and if so, when will these sailings begin, and how many will there be ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In answer to my inquiry the Trade and Commerce Department say that no arrangement has been made up to the present time. If I get any further information later on I shall be very glad to communicate it to my hon. friend.

TELEGRAPHIC COMMUNICATION WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT presented a return to an address of the Senate, dated 6th October, 1903, for all communications between the government of Canada or any member thereof and the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, any other telegraph company, the provincial government of Prince Edward Island, any board of trade in Prince Edward Island, or any other province, and any representative of Prince Edward Island in the House of Commons respecting the improvement of the telegraphic service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland of the Dominion. He said : The only papers I have so far found are correspondence which began during the early part of last year, March, and continued for some time, which I will bring down now. If I find anything further later on, I shall be glad to bring it down also.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I might assist the hon. gentleman in his search. I had the advantage of seeing a mass of correspondence conducted by Sir Louis Davies, when he was Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I am not sure whether they were in the department or not, but they throw a great deal of light on the subject. That correspondence is quite voluminous, at least twenty times as large as this. I have no doubt Sir Louis Davies will assist my hon. friend in getting the correspondence in complete form.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (22) An Act to incorporate the Brantford and Hamilton Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. McHugh.)

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (21) An Act to incorporate the Pontiac and Interprovincial Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Edwards.)

Bill (20) An Act to incorporate the Cascapedia Manufacturing and Trading Company. —(Hon. Mr. Gibson.)

Bill (23) An Act respecting the Collingwood General and Marine Hospital.—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Cobourg.)

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (24) An Act respecting the Canadian Fire Insurance Company.—(Hon. Mr. Loughеed.)

Bill (27) An Act respecting the Real Estate Title Guarantee and Trust Company.—(Hon. Mr. Casgrain, de Lanaudière.)

PETITION OF RIGHT ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (38) An Act to amend the Petition of Right Act. He said : The Department of Justice have found that after a fiat had been granted to file a petition of right, the solicitors have, in some cases, made changes altering its character, and in order to prevent any change of that kind, which is highly improper, the present Bill proposes that when a fiat has been once granted, the Secretary of State shall file a petition in court and thereafter no change can be made. It will be the duty of the solicitors to observe that.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

PORTRAIT OF SENATOR WARK.

The SPEAKER—The portrait of the hon. Mr. Wark will be unveiled to-morrow afternoon at 2.30, and I trust there will be a large attendance in the Senate. The ceremony will take place in this chamber.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, April 28, 1904.

The Senators met at 2.30 P. M.

Senator Wark was introduced, escorted by the Hon. R. W. Scott, Secretary of State, and the Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell, and took the Speaker's chair, the members and visitors present standing and applauding.

Hon. Mr. POWER, Speaker of the Senate, read the following address, the senators and visitors standing :—

To the Honourable David Wark.

Dear and honoured Sir,—We, your colleagues in the Senate of Canada, have thought that your reaching, while an active member of our body, the great age of one hundred years should not be allowed to pass unnoticed and have resolved that the event be signalized by placing in our gallery a painting which will enable future generations to look upon the countenance with which we are happily familiar.

We may be permitted to call attention to some points which show over how wide a historical field your life's journey has extended. Born when William Pitt, worn out in the struggle with the great Napoleon, was drawing near the close of his career, your memory can distinctly recall the battle in which the principles for which the British statesman contended finally triumphed: You left your native Ireland for New Brunswick in early manhood, before the days of Catholic Emancipation and long before the passing of the Reform Bill of 1832.

You settled in the home of your adoption when the province was still practically a Crown colony and took a part in the prolonged but bloodless campaign which replaced an irresponsible administration by one controlled by the wishes of the people. During the latter part of the contest, you, in the prime of life, fought for popular rights as a member of the elective branch of the provincial legislature; and, after the battle was finally won, you passed, fifty-four years ago, to the Upper House. This, it may be observed, was four years before the Crimean war.

Called to the Senate at a mature age, you are now, with a single exception, the only survivor of those appointed by Her late Majesty in 1867.

In both Houses of the provincial legislature and in our own body you always devoted your talents and energy to parliamentary work with a single eye to the good of the people, and—particularly with respect to education and interprovincial trade—took effective action in New Brunswick which anticipated what has since been done throughout the Dominion.

Speaking of you as a senator, we may be allowed to say that, while you have been energetic and persistent in your efforts to bring about what you have deemed to be for the public good, you have never been impatient or intolerant towards those whose opinions differed from your own, while your courtesy and your kindliness of disposition have been proverbial among your colleagues. As a result, the present action of the House is unanimous and gives expression to the sincere sentiments of your colleagues of all shades of opinion; and we all unite in the hope that the Almighty may be pleased to prolong for years a life which has throughout been lived with a continued consciousness of His Divine over-sight.

L. G. POWER,
Speaker,

On behalf of the members of the Senate.

The Senate, April 28, 1904.

Hon. Mr. WARK, on rising to speak, was greeted with prolonged cheering. He said: I thank you for this very flattering address. I never expected anything of the kind, nor do I think I deserve it, but at the same time I feel deeply grateful to you and to those whom you represent for such an expression of kindness and friendship. There is no part of it with which I agree so heartily as the last sentence. I join with you most cordially in the belief that God exercises a wise Providence over the affairs of this world, and especially over the affairs of this empire, that he intends to make it a powerful, populous and prosperous empire, united under our Gracious Sovereign in a policy of peace, and that it will be greatly blessed under His guidance in bringing about the happy time when the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea. I thank you again for your kindness and for the kindness of the whole House. (Cheers).

Hon. Mr. POWER—Strictly speaking, I suppose I should call first upon the representatives of the Senate, but inasmuch as the other House is about to meet, it would be perhaps better if I should change the order of proceeding a little. I therefore call upon the Honourable the First Minister to say a few words. (Applause.)

Right Hon. Sir WILFRID LAURIER—Senator Wark: It is my pleasure as well as my privilege, to-day to join my friend, Mr. Borden, the Leader of His Majesty's opposition in the House of Commons, in presenting you on this occasion the congratulations of the body to which we both belong, the House of Commons of Canada. We are taught in Scripture that he who honours his father and mother shall be rewarded with long life. I am sure, therefore, Sir, that going back almost one hundred years, you must have been a very good boy, for you have been rewarded not only with long life, but rewarded also with all the blessings of life in your family and, if I may say so, in the respect, the esteem, the veneration and the affection of all your fellow-countrymen. Going back through the course of your long life, you have passed through a most remarkable period in the world's history. You go back not only to the battle of Waterloo, but you were born even before the battle of Trafalgar. You have seen the long struggle which was waged in those years for supremacy and which ended in a manner which, although it might be disappointing to many, was perhaps the best solution for the world's liberty. You have seen the long reign of Her Majesty, and at last you see the first days of the reign of King Edward VII., who perhaps will live in history in a manner which will be most acceptable to you, that is to say, as Edward the Peace Maker. We all rejoice that you have seen these long days and hope your good wishes will be realized, and we pray God that He may still prolong your life for many years to enjoy the respect and affection of your fellow-countrymen. (Cheers).

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have the honour to call upon the leader of the opposition.

Mr. BORDEN—Mr. Wark : I desire on behalf of those who sit to the left of the Speaker in the House of Commons to add our hearty and most sincere congratulations to you upon this memorable occasion. Let me say it is an occasion on which Sir Wilfrid Laurier and I are happy to sit on the same side of the House and join in doing honour to you. Your life has been a most eventful one. For more than a generation you have lived beyond the limit assigned by the Psalmist to the age of man. During all that time you have devoted yourself without stint to the public service, and in that regard it seems to me that you have set a very high and a very worthy example to all your fellow-countrymen throughout Canada. Indeed, even at your advanced age your efforts have sometimes been too strenuous for us in the House of Commons. If I mistake not it was two years ago that you objected strongly that the Senate should be kept waiting for legislation, because you desired to leave Ottawa and go to your home and attend to your own business, a very worthy aspiration on your part and one, I am sure, in which all of us in the House of Commons join heartily at the present time. Let me once more on behalf of those, who like myself, sit on the left of the Speaker, extend to you our good wishes for all health, happiness and prosperity in the future. (Cheers.)

Hon. Mr. POWER—I now call on the Honourable Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My dear colleague : It has been my good fortune to be associated with you now for over thirty years in this chamber, and during that time I have had very many opportunities for knowing those elements in your character that have endeared you so deeply to the members of the Senate on both sides. As has been observed in the address which was presented to you, your course in the Senate has been one we all could admire. While adhering strongly and decidedly to your own political views, you have always been forbearing and considerate to those who have differed from you. In fact, one of the special elements of your character has been the tolerant spirit to which reference has been made, and the breadth of view which has marked your expressions on all occasions. The singular equanimity of your disposition has been the peculiar feature in your successful career. Among the many instances that might be quoted of the value of your life, I might cite one which I think is worth being remembered. It is, that the first impulse given to the expansion of our present Dominion was due to you, when in 1847 you moved a resolution in the provincial legislature of New Brunswick, expressing the hope that the sister provinces would abolish the custom-houses that then divided them. That certainly was the forerunner of the confederation of this Dominion. I join in the hope also that is expressed in the address that has been presented to you, that you may be long spared to be a member of this chamber. The beautiful language used by you a few moments ago in answering the address gives us the best assurance that you retain in your old age that wisdom which is so valuable to a legislator. (Cheers.)

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have now the honour to call upon the leader of the opposition in the Senate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Mr. Wark : In the many years I have been associated with you on committees and in this chamber, our intercourse has been of the most pleasant character. It is true that we have not always agreed upon the questions which were under discussion, but that never affected the personal relations which existed between yourself and myself. I do not know of any event in my thirty-four years of parliamentary life of which I felt prouder than when, at the opening of this session, I had the honour of introducing you in the chamber after you had served your country for so long a period, and arrived at such a ripe age. It is not necessary that I should enter into the events of the last hundred years. Reference has been made by the premier and also by the leader of the opposition of the other House to very important events which have transpired during your long life, to which I need not refer, I heartily concur in the personal tribute awarded you by the Secretary of State. I express the sincere hope that we may all live to see you sitting here, if not as Speaker, at least as an honoured member of this House for many years to come. The Secretary of State and myself had the great honour of introducing you to the Speaker's chair to-day. I only hope that the younger members by whom we are surrounded to-day, may have a like honour with some other senator after he has attained the advanced age which you have reached. (Cheers.)

The premier and several members of both Houses then congratulated Mr. Wark personally.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills, reported from committee, without amendment, were read the third time and passed under a suspension of the rules.

Bill (F) An Act to incorporate the Cedar Rapids Manufacturing and Power Company. —(Hon. Mr. Domville.)

Bill (10) An Act to incorporate the Campbellford, Lake Ontario and North Western Railway Company of Canada.—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Cobourg.)

Bill (18) An Act respecting the Manitoba and North-western Railway Company of Canada.—(Hon. Mr. Young.)

WHITEHORSE AND ALSEK RAILWAY COMPANY.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, reported Bill (25) An Act to incorporate the Whitehorse and Alsek Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I move the suspension of rule 70 so far as the same relates to this Bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG moved the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Where is Alsek ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—The Whitehorse is in the Yukon Territory, just some little distance north of the boundary line of British Columbia. The Alsek mining district is 50 to 100 miles from Whitehorse, and still east of the Alaska boundary.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Fifty miles ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Something of that kind. There is very valuable and rich gold there.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The intention is to make connection from the Pacific in Alaska to tap the Yukon. I fancy that is the object of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

PRINTING OF MINUTES OF PROCEEDINGS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I want information from the government or from this House. I do not know who is in charge of the business, or what procedure is to be taken to have a few copies of the Minutes of Proceedings, when we want to get them. I applied at the post office. We cannot get any there. I went to the distribution office, and I was told there were none. There were only two or three copies, and we could not get them there. I sent to the Printing Bureau, asking to buy some, I was ready to pay any amount, and they refused. We cannot get them for our money there.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman's money is not good.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I hope the King's shilling will come into force very soon, so that we may have a chance at that time, but I want a remedy for this kind of business. I hope when an hon. gentleman wants to obtain a few copies that he will be able to do so. I asked for the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons. I want to get a few copies to send away, offering to pay for them, and they would not give them to me.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not suppose they have any for sale there. They do not keep them. They send them all up to the Distribution Office. The number is regulated by the Printing Committee. They fix the number that is printed, which I think is one for each member, with a certain number over, I do not know how many. I shall be glad to make inquiry. It cannot cost much to print a few extra copies. There should be enough printed, so that if a gentleman wants a few extra copies, he can get them.

I do not know the regulation, but it depends on the number fixed by the Printing Committee—the joint committee of the two Houses.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I have the honour of being chairman of the Printing Committee, and I may say that there is a limited number distributed in the House of Commons, and I do not think they ever contemplated any hon. member of this House asking for twenty-five extra copies. I dare say there would be no trouble in getting them, if they had them, but hon. gentlemen will understand that if twenty-five extra copies were printed every day, it would mean an additional expense, and the committee have been trying to cut down expenses. In spite of the economy exercised by the committee year by year, the Printing Committee have hard work to keep within the appropriation, and these matters are regulated by a joint committee of both Houses, but if at any time the hon. gentleman wishes a few extra copies and asks for them in advance, he can get them from the King's Printer. The number requisite for the use of the members only is sent to the Distribution Office.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am ready to point out the number I want in advance, and willing to pay for them.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—There should not be any trouble about that. If the hon. gentleman would notify the King's Printer in advance that he wanted twenty-five extra copies he would be able to get them.

UNVEILING OF SENATOR WARK'S PORTRAIT.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the House adjourns I should like to make a suggestion that as the events of to-day are not very likely to occur very often, and as they are of a somewhat important character, the proceedings of to-day be made a record of the Senate by placing them in the official report of the debates as an appendix. I spoke to the hon. Secretary of State and he fully approves of it and with the consent of the Senate I move that the proceedings of to-day in the unveiling of the portrait of the Hon. D. Wark be made a record of the Senate by inserting it as an appendix to the official reports of Debates.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I suggest before the motion is concluded that there should be added to that a provision that the address be engrossed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We might make that a separate motion. The suggestion is a very good one. The address presented to the hon. gentleman should be engrossed and handed to him, but that is a separate matter altogether.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—While it is all very well to have it in the Debates I think it should be reported in the Journals of the House as well. We should have an entry on the Journals to which we often refer.

The SPEAKER—It might be inserted as an appendix.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I think hon. members of the Senate who are not now present and who were present to-day at the ceremony, might be recorded as being present to-day. Hon. gentlemen who were present at the ceremony would like it recorded that they were in attendance, which otherwise our record would not show.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that there be an entry of the proceedings also in the Journal together with the names of the senators who were then present. It may be added to the motion of the hon. leader of the opposition.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It is a very unsual thing to do. I do not think it at all in order. I do not raise any objection but we are going quite far enough when we adopt the motion of the hon. leader of the opposition.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved that the address be engrossed and framed and presented to the Hon. Senator Wark by His Honour the Speaker.

The motion was agreed to.

THIRD READING.

Bill (17) An Act to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of the Honourable Charles Algernon Parsons.—(Hon. Mr. Gibson.)

KING'S SHILLING LEGAL TENDER BILL.

ORDER OF THE DAY POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Second reading (Bill E) An Act to make the King's shilling a legal tender in Canada.—(Hon. Mr. Domville.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said : As this Bill interferes with the Currency Act, and I have not had the opportunity of consulting the Finance Minister on the subject, I would ask my hon. friend to let it stand. It interferes with our own currency and I ought to consult the Finance Department before any action is taken. I move that the order of the day be discharged and placed on the order paper for the 25th May.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was under the impression that there was a law regulating the value of an English shilling ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have not looked it up.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is a law which distinctly declares that no other than the silver currency which has been coined for circulation in Canada shall be legal. That means of course our silver as well as our gold and copper coins, and our statute is very positive that no other coins than those that are specially coined for Canada can be received in circulation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend will remember that during the time Sir Francis Hincks was Finance Minister a Bill was introduced establishing the value of United States silver. Has my hon. friend any recollection as to whether that Bill was ever repealed?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I recollect the occasion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The country was flooded with United States silver just after the war and it became a nuisance. Sir Francis Hincks introduced a Bill establishing the rate as 20 cents for a 25 cent silver coin of the United States. The United States half dollar which is now passing in Canada is taken at its face value, 50 cents, when if that law is enforced it is worth only 40 cents. My own view of the matter is that if that law is still in existence it ought to be enforced, because the country is becoming flooded with Yankee silver all through, particularly on the Pacific coast, and you can never travel on the railways without having United States quarters and half dollars put into your hands. We should have our own silver. I am not in favour of what they call a retaliatory policy, believing we should do that for ourselves which we think is right, but I do know that if you cross the line and present a ten cent Canada coin they will not take it without a discount or they will probably refuse it altogether. In New York, if you present a Dominion bill, issued by the government, they will demand a discount.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Now, treat them precisely in the same way. I hope that some step may be taken in the matter. If our banks were to declare that they would not take it on deposit that would put a stop to it, but we must have a much larger issue of our own silver and smaller bills in order to meet the demands of the trade of the country without having to take United States currency.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—As the publisher of a very excellent newspaper, no doubt the hon. leader of the opposition has numerous subscribers from the United States who remit him money. It is a question whether he would not be bothered if such a law were in force. The banks of St. John have adopted a plan which seems to me an easy one. They take United States currency and remove it from circulation. It costs very little to send it by express to the United States, and both the silver and the paper money is sent out of the Dominion. Let the banks of the leading cities get rid of it in that way.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My hon. friend would do precisely as all newspaper men do, give a discount, and when a Yankee sends a dollar allow him the difference between the value and that at which he receives it.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I think the hon. gentleman has recollected the circumstances so far as the currency is concerned accurately, but my impression is that certain banks do not take United States silver at par. Some banks receive it at a discount. My object in saying a few words at the present moment is to call attention to another circumstance in connection with our silver, and that is the striking resemblance there is between the $4 Dominion bill and the $1 bill, which leads to a great many mistakes being made in making the change in the country, and while we are discussing currency I should like to suggest to the government that they would be doing a very necessary act if they would so change the plates that the $4 bill would have some mark distinguishing it at a glance from the $1 bill. Much inconvenience is felt owing to the fact that there is such a strong resemblance between the two.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—There was a movement three years ago in the direction mentioned by the hon. leader of the opposition. The banks adopted a practice of sending out of the country all the United States money they received instead of keeping it in circulation, and merchants and companies, amongst others the Montreal Street Railway Company, issued orders to their employees not to receive United States money, but this practice was discontinued. Many tourists from the United States come to Montreal and spend a large amount of money, and if their currency was not accepted they would not buy the goods. Of course our people are not obliged to accept United States money, but they do so because they feel that it is in their own interest. Every one is free to accept or refuse United States currency, or put such value on it as he chooses, but it is accepted in the way of business.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—With regard to the first point touched upon by the leader of the opposition, I may say that at the close of the civil war in the United States an Act was introduced in this country under which the Receiver General was authorized to purchase United States silver at twenty per cent discount, and re-cast it into Canada currency. With regard to the circulation of United States silver in Canada, I think it is wrong that it should be encouraged. I should like to see the banks positively refuse to take it except at a discount. I can testify to the fact that when you get beyond border states of the neighbouring country, Canadian currency will not be accepted at any figure. You could not get a bed or breakfast on a ten dollar Canadian bill or Canadian silver. We ought certainly to limit and, if possible, put out of circulation any United States currency that is circulating here. If you come down to the intrinsic value of United States silver, you find that the half-dollar is not worth forty cents. That fact is recognized by the people of the United States. In 1896 when Bryan was running for the presidency on the issue of monetizing silver at 20 to 1, the banks were in a panic. They said 'if Bryan is elected we will have to take the silver dollar, which is not worth intrinsically 60 cents, at its face value as if it were gold,' and the result was financial embarrassment everywhere simply because the silver dollar is worth very little more than half its face value. If it is not worth what it is represented to be, why should we take it in Canada ? If our law is in such a shape as to permit its circulation here at its face value, it should be amended so that our banks would take it at a discount. That would drive it out of circulation and our own silver would take its place. I hope when the Bill which the Secretary of State has asked to be postponed comes up again, that question will also be taken up and that we may have some finding on the part of the government that will cover the whole subject.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It is a very great misfortune that our people so readily take United States currency. For my own part I do not accept it. I have come to that conclusion in consequence of my experience in Boston two or three years ago. I took a street car, and when the conductor came for my fare, having only Canadian currency, I offered him a five cent coin. He refused it. I offered him ten cents, which he also refused. I then offered him a quarter ; I had a small satchel in my hand, and being a stranger on the car, I thought perhaps he might try to appropriate my satchel. He very reluctantly took the Canadian quarter for my five cent fare. I presume he was a dishonest man, and if his employers had known what he had done, they would have censured or dismissed him. Shortly afterwards having some bank of Montreal bills which I wanted to exchange for gold, I found I could not get gold for them. I could only get silver certificates, worth at the time fifty-five cents, and I had to take those in exchange for my good Canadian notes, worth their face value in gold. Ever since that time I have invariably refused to take United States silver, or silver certificates, even though it gave inconvenience to people, and I always explain why. All our people should do the same thing. If our neighbours will not take our money we should not take theirs. Very serious loss may occur in connection with this United States silver. We know the silver difficulty we had in the early days of confederation, and what stringent measures had to be resorted to in order to get rid of it. It is possible that a very large number of United States silver certificates may be circulating at present in Canada. At any time the United States government may undertake to redeem those silver certificates far below the face value, entailing very heavy loss upon the holders. There is another practice to which I wish to refer in connection with this subject; in travelling on our railway trains if you give the porter a five dollar bill to change he will in all probability give you back a couple of United States silver certificates, instead of Canadian currency. Something should be done to stop the circulation of United States currency, especially silver certificates, in Canada, because at any time, as I say, the United States government may call them in, giving only their value in gold for them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The remedy is in the hands of the people. If they would follow the example of the hon. gentleman from Richmond, those silver certificates would soon go out of circulation. United States currency is not legal tender in Canada. It has no right to be offered and no man should accept it; but unfortunately people who live along the border and spend some of their money on the other side, take it and it goes into circulation; but of course our banks should not accept it. If the banks could only be induced to refuse absolutely to take United States silver, that is the only channel through which it could be suppressed, because there are always people in Canada who will say 'I can get rid of it with somebody else.' The law is plain and clear; you can refuse United States silver. It does not pay a debt, but of course British silver stands on an entirely different plane, although it is not, under our law, a legal tender either. Our Currency Act decrees that the only silver currency in Canada shall be silver coined in the British mint for Canada. When my hon. friend's Bill comes up, I shall be very glad to further discuss this subject.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Does the hon. gentleman intend to oppose the Bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It stands until I get the opinion of the Finance Department.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—When it was before the House before, I heard the objection made that it was a money Bill, but I do not think it is open to that objection.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no doubt the reasons which have prompted the hon. gentleman to introduce the Bill are sound. It is very inconvenient for British immigrants arriving at Halifax or St. John to find they cannot get a loaf of bread for a British shilling, and therefore it might be wise to make some concessions to meet the case of people arriving in this country from the British islands. However, when the Bill comes up later on we can more fully discuss it and I can furnish the view then entertained by the government. I shall be glad to call the attention of the Finance Minister to the four dollar bill which, it is said, is confused with the one dollar bill. There are not many of them being printed. Most of the small bills are ones and twos. The demand for circulation has increased so enormously the last year that it has been found impossible to print them fast enough to meet the demand. The Finance Minister took an extra amount in last year's estimates for the very purpose of printing those bills, and I have not yet heard if they have supplied the demand.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I think a good deal of that United States silver is taken in this country for the want of Canadian silver.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot say how that is. Last year we received a pretty large consignment of Canadian coin, but it is absorbed very readily. It is very difficult indeed to supply the demand.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I have no objection to the Bill standing over, because I see the Secretary of State thoroughly appreciates and has spoken in favour of what I want to do. It must stand, because really it is a public, not a private Bill. As the hon. gentleman has not had time to look into the matter, I think it is perfectly right that the Bill should stand. What I desired to point out was that King Edward's shilling must pass for twenty-four cents in Canada. That is two cents to the penny.

The motion was agreed to.

JURISDICTION OF EXCHEQUER COURT AS TO RAILWAY DEBTS.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE moved the second reading of Bill (I) An Act to amend the Act respecting the Jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court as to Railway Debts. He said: Last year an Act was passed providing for the appointment of receivers to railway companies which were practically insolvent, and in the operation of that law it was found that it would be a great improvement to incorporate the provisions which are to be found in sections sixteen and thirty-four of the Winding Up Act. Section sixteen provides that when the winding up order is made, no such action or other proceeding shall be commenced against the company except with the leave of the court and subject to such terms as the said court imposes. It will be seen that subsection (b) of the Bill is to the same effect. Section thirty-four of the Winding Up Act says:

> Upon the appointment of the liquidator all the powers of the directors shall cease, excepting so far as the said court or the liquidator sanctions the continuance of such powers.

This section is sought to be incorporated as section 5A.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are the provisions of the Bill the same as the one introduced last year?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The law was enacted last year, and this is to amend it by incorporating those provisions which should have been included last year.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

SECOND READING.

Bill (22) An Act to incorporate the Brantford and Hamilton Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. McHugh.)

PETITION OF RIGHT ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (38) An Act to amend the Petition of Right Act.

(In the committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The object of this Bill, as I explained on the second reading, is that the original petition shall be the petition filed. As the law stands now, the petition is handed back to the solicitor who files it in court, but it has been found that some solicitors have taken the liberty to change it before filing, which is highly improper. The amendment is that after the petition is granted the Secretary of State shall file it in court, so the solicitor will be bound to follow up his proceedings on a petition such as he asked for.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is an extraordinary thing for a lawyer to do—to change the petition after the fiat is issued—and the one who does it should be stripped of his gown. It is simply forgery to change a petition in that manner. The change might materially alter the petition and change the whole nature of the suit.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I suppose when the hon. gentleman makes the statement he must know that such a thing has been done, and that is why the change in the law is suggested.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, that is the explanation given by the Minister of Justice. He found changes had been made which were very improper.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He was very remiss in his duty if he did not punish the solicitor.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Under this Bill the petition does not go back to the solicitor; it is filed by the Secretary of State.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is on the principle of not leading us into temptation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, it is a better way.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time, and passed.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Wednesday, May 18, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THE LATE SENATORS DEVER AND REID.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I think I am but performing my duty in calling the attention of the House to the demise of two of the members of this honourable body since the House last met. It is within the knowledge, I have no doubt, of every hon. gentleman that the Hon. James Dever, a senator of many years standing, who was first appointed to this House I think the year after confederation, and consequently one of the oldest members of this House, died on the 7th day of the present month. It will also be within the knowledge of hon. gentlemen that another member of this chamber, the Hon. James Reid, died in the city of Vancouver on the 3rd of the present month. He had also been for many years a member of this Senate. Our deceased friend, the Hon. Senator Dever, had been a member of the Senate for fully thirty-six years. He was in early life, I understand, a very active business man, a man who made his name and reputation largely in the province of New Brunswick, in which he settled after coming from Ireland. Having made a name as a successful merchant, and having retired from active business fully twenty-five years ago, he was called to the Senate, as I have said, in the year 1868 and consequently was a very old member of this body. I believe he had the respect and confidence of all who knew him. He was an active member of this House, attending very regularly to his duties. He had strong convictions on all public questions, which he held very tenaciously, to which he was not afraid to give expression in this House, whether those convictions were in accord with public opinion or not. Our deceased friend Mr. James Reid was born, I believe, within the sound of the bells of the city of Ottawa in the valley of the Gatineau. He was an early emigrant to the western province of British Columbia in the days of the gold excitement in 1862, ever since which time he has been engaged in active business in the whole district of Cariboo. Up to the time of his death he was an active merchant. I can speak personally from a considerable acquaintance with the late Mr. Reid, and say that I know he had the confidence and respect of every man in the province of British Columbia. He represented the Cariboo district in the House of Commons for many years and was appointed to this body, I think in 1888. Thus since the House last met two of our members have departed for their long home, or, as one of them would express it if he were here, they have crossed the great divide. To the relatives and friends of both I am sure it will be a consolation to know that they discharged their duty to the country during their occupancy of seats in this House and they will long be remembered as honourable, upright and faithful public servants. I think I am speaking the sentiments of every one in this House when I say that the Senate extends to the relatives of the deceased its sympathy in their afflictions which they are fully entitled to. I have only to express the hope that they may rest in peace.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not know that I could add much to that which has already fallen from the hon. senator from Victoria. It is sad to reflect how rapidly the members of this House are passing away. Within the last eight years we have seen from 40 to 50 changes in this chamber, and we must be forcibly reminded that we are approaching that end which comes to all of us sooner of later. It will be a matter of deep regret to those who have known the two gentlemen, who have been called from us, to miss the kindly smile and reception with which they always met their colleagues especially the older senators. Mr. Reid was a man of very retiring disposition. He was an enterprising man, a Canadian by birth, of Irish parentage, born, as my hon. friend has stated, within a few miles of the city of Ottawa. He was one of the earlier pioneers of British Columbia, having gone into the wilds of the Cariboo district, where he made not only a home for himself but a competency. I believe he held the respect of all parties whatever their religious or political views may have been. He was kindly in his disposition, an affectionate husband, and father, and a faithful and devoted citizen of his country. Personally I shall miss very much his smile and cheerful welcome. As to my hon. friend from St. John, he was one of the successful men of his adopted province. He occupied a prominent position among the mercantile community and succeeded in obtaining a competency. Whatever his eccentricities may have been, no one ever credited him with anything but honesty of purpose, and sincerity when he addressed this House. His views were not always in accord with those of the majority, but they were his honest convictions and were advocated fearlessly and with a vim that always met with respect and consideration. I am sure we shall all miss him for his many good qualities—qualities which very few of us possess. Ever since I have been in the Senate it has been my good fortune, although politically opposed to each other, to have been on the most kindly and friendly terms with Mr. Dever personally. While I lead the House on the other side I never found him unreasonable in his opposition to any measures proposed by the government of that day. I say that of Mr. Dever in all sincerity. With the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, I think we express the views of every member of this House in saying that we extend our deepest sympathies to the families of both departed senators. I can only hope for the rest of us that when our end comes we may be held in as high estimation by our fellow senators, as were the two honourable gentlemen we shall in the future miss when we meet to consider the great and important questions which are constantly being brought before the country.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Cobourg)—I feel that I am unable to allow the matter before the Senate to pass in silence. I look upon incidents of this kind as occasions of sad significance. I cannot hope to add anything to the beautiful tributes paid by the hon. senator who leads this House to-day in the absence of the Secretary of State, and the hon. knight who leads His Majesty's loyal opposition. I recognize the fact that since we last met in this chamber two of our colleagues have left this world forever. I shall not presume to speak of the late hon. senator from British Columbia with whom my acquaintance was only too brief, but I was glad to hear the strong testimony to their worth and character spoken by the hon. gentlemen who have addressed the House. Perhaps it would not be presumptuous in me, however, to say that from my short acquaintance with the late senator from British Columbia, I formed a very high opinion of his character and his work. I believe he was an upright and thoroughly loyal Canadian and we shall surely miss him in the Senate, and I need hardly say, if it will not be presumptuous—and I trust it may not be considered so—that our deepest sympathy goes out to his bereaved and afflicted family, and that he will long be remembered in this chamber, in fact that the images of the two recently departed senators will never fade from our memories. Of Senator Dever I perhaps may be allowed to speak with a little more freedom. I became acquainted with the hon. senator from St. John over thirty years ago, when I happened to be a member of the other House, and we formed a very intimate acquaintance at that time, an acquaintance which subsequently ripened into warm friendship which I am now only too happy to say strengthened with the increasing years. The late senator from St. John was a warm blooded Irishman, and like many another man from that green isle, like all true patriots, he was very proud of his native country, and he did not think his pride in his native land was inconsistent with his patriotism and with his loyalty to the land of his adoption. The late senator from St. John was well born, and he was well bred, as most of you know. He came to seek his fortune in this western world, free from the trammels of the old, in order that he might work out his social regeneration in peace. During a somewhat lengthened business career I understand he was very successful and accumulated a fair portion of this world's goods, and it was his great pride, a just pride, that he was blessed with a large and most interesting family, a family in which he took a special pride, and a family that is to be congratulated, while we sympathize with them deeply to-day, on having had a father so loyal and loving as the late senator from St. John. He was a kindly man as well as a manly man. It is true he was sometimes impulsive, like many Irishmen ; at the same time while he had the courage of his convictions, and spoke out fearlessly, he felt he was always in the right or at any rate we could give him credit for being always upright. Those perhaps who have not known him so long as I have had the honour of knowing him would not, perhaps, fully appreciate the depth of that kindness. He seemed to be imbued with the spirit of those lines which say :

Have you had a kindness shown you,
Pass it on
'Twas not meant for you alone
Pass it on,
Let it travel down the years,
Let it wipe another's tears,
Till in heaven the deed appears,
Pass it on.

Senator Dever has fulfilled his mission on earth, and he has passed, together with his colleague, the late senator from British Columbia to that bourne whence no traveller returns, and we are left to carry on the great work of administering and attending to the affairs of this Dominion. The late senator Dever was very hopeful of the future of this Dominion. He had great faith in its institutions. He had great faith in its people, and he looked forward to the time when Canada would stand, as she almost stands to-day, not only the pride of the world but the brightest gem in the British Crown. It has been said by the great dramatist that the evil that men do lives after them, that the good is often interred with their bones. If that be true, the other is equally true, that the good that men do in this world lives after them and I trust that the influence of the good deeds of the late senators who have recently departed will live after them and be long remembered. We cannot get a message from them. We cannot look beyond that bourne, but we can all adopt the spirit of the lines of Kingsley who said :

Let us all be good
And let who will be clever,
Do noble deeds, not dream them all day long,
And so make life, death and the vast forever,
One grand sweet song.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION.

DEBATE FURTHER POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Resuming the abjourned debate on the motion of the Hon. Mr. Domville : That he will move for the appointment of a Select Committee of five to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada, with power to send for papers, persons. telegrams and records, to employ clerical services, and with leave to report from time to time, the committee to be composed of the hon. Messieurs Legris, Baker, Cloran and the mover. —(Hon. Mr. Casgrain, de Lanaudière.)

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to have this motion stand until to-morrow. I have received, as no doubt other members of the Senate have received, an answer to the statements made by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay (Hon. Mr. Domville), covering some forty-three pages and I should like to have some time to peruse this document before the debate is resumed. After this is disposed of, I understand my hon. friend from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Kerr) will move the second reading of his Bill, to change the mode of settling matters in connection with many of those who hold policies in this company. After reading this document we shall be in a much better position to discuss the merits of the Bill than we are at present. I believe there are gentlemen who are not present to-day, and who cannot well be here, who would like to take part in the discussion. If my hon. friend has no objections, and the Senate concur, I should like to have the matter stand until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—While I should be very glad to meet the views of my hon. friend I do not want to have it thrown in my teeth, as has been done before, that I am merely keeping this before the public, and am not going on with it. I want to point out that the official report of the debates, page 201, does not give a correct statement of what took place the last day we met. A motion was made to adjourn the debate, and I said to the Minister of the Crown, that if I had an assurance from the government that the Bill brought in by the hon. senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Kerr) was not to be proceeded with until my business was gone through with, I would consent to the postponement. He most distinctly said, yes, it will be all right, that he guaranteed it. I see in the official report it says simply 'Hon. Mr. Scott—Hear, hear.' Now I was not asking for hear, hear ; I asked for a pledge from the government, which I distinctly got. I am willing to allow this motion to stand over to meet the views of my hon. friend, on condition that that promise is carried out in its entirety. Otherwise I should have gone on.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière), moved that the order be discharged and placed on the Orders of the Day for to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION.

DEBATE POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Hon. Mr. Domville : That he will move for the appointment of a select committee of five to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada, with power to send for papers, persons, telegrams and records, to employ clerical services, and with leave to report from time to time, the committee to be composed of the hon. Messieurs Legris, Baker, Cloran, Landry, and the mover.—(Hon. Mr. Casgrain, de Lanaudière.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Perhaps it might not be wise to proceed with such an important matter with such a thin House. It is one involving the expenditure of a large amount of money, if the inquiry is to be exhaustive, and up to the present time I have failed to see that any possible good will follow from it. Under those circumstances the hon. gentleman is assuming a very grave responsibility in asking this chamber to give him a committee for purposes which none of us at present are advised about, because parliament is not proposing to recoup, nor can it be expected to recoup the unfortunate parties who hold these policies. I am very sorry indeed for them. They have my full sympathy, but mistakes will occur with all of us. If my hon. friend could point out any substantial benefit to flow from it, I am quite sure we would all cheerfully acquiesce in his proposition, but, until we can see that some good result would flow from it, it does appear manifestly improper for any hon. gentleman to avail himself of his position and form a committee with power to send for parties from a distance, and have them examined at great length with no results whatever. The company has long since abolished the plan of issuing policies of this particular class. Therefore no notice to the public would be of any avail. All who can drop out of that unfortunate class are doing so. It is a very peculiar position. Unless we can aid them in some way or other it does seem improper to take up the time of parliament and especially to incur a large expenditure with no results whatever, because it is absolutely positive that no result can flow from this inquiry other than possibly showing up the company. That may be very well for those who wish to exhibit the improprieties of the company, but these personal matters are not subjects for parliamentary inquiry. We cannot change the position. We are not going to take money out of the public treasury to recoup those people who, unfortunately, have lost their money. It cannot be done, and therefore I see no possible good that can arise from it one way or the other. I would very much rather, if my hon. friend had consented, let the Bill which is before the Senate go to the Banking and Commerce Committee, and allow that committee to exercise its discretion in sending for witnesses, if they think it necessary to do so. They will make a full inquiry. I think my hon. friend is making a very great mistake in assuming the responsibility for a very large expenditure, because the inquiry will be barren of any consequences whatever.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I have the greatest deference for the views of my hon. friend. I have known him a great many years, and I am very proud to be under his leadership here and to see him occupying the important position which he holds ; but he is laying himself open to public criticism. Public opinion to-day is against this company, and why should this company be supported in this House by any one who is here as a judge simply, to say on a statement made by an hon. member whether the company shall be sustained or not sustained. I would not make the remark that my hon. friend is attempting to cover up the company, but the public would say so. I hope I am speaking now inside of the rules of parliamentary debate. He says the government cannot undertake to recoup the victims of this company ; the government do not recoup the unfortunate. This is a private corporation. Its victims have insured in it under certain statements made to them, and if they have been deceived is it for this honourable body to say that they shall not be protected, but that the people who have wronged them are to be protected ? Am I to be told, when I ask for this inquiry, that those who have suffered by this company have no rights, and that I am taking up the time of the House in advocating their cause ? I am not taking up the time of the House. When I wanted to proceed I was stopped from day to day, and now my hon. friend tells the Senate that the inquiry for which I ask can be of no benefit. No benefit for what ? Are these people to be bled by pirates ? It is a strong word to use, but no stronger than is justified by the documentary evidence which I have submitted to the House, and I do not think it is quite fair that my hon. friend should oppose this inquiry. He is not treating me with respect. I entered parliament in 1872, and there are many hon. members in this House who sat with me in the House of Commons, and to attempt to make the implication that I am taking up something that is prejudicial to this company in my own interest, when I have the whole of the policy-holders of the company in Canada with me, is to make a statement which is not justified, and I do not think my hon. friend can have carefully weighed his language in making that statement. Furthermore he says that the policy-holders are dropping out. That is a poor satisfaction. They are dropping out, the hon. gentleman says. He proves my case when he makes the assertion. Why are they dropping out ? Because this company is in such a wretched state that it is absolutely bankrupt. They have broken the laws of Canada and failed to fulfil their contracts. My hon. friend says the policy-holders are dropping out. I admit they are ; but if they all drop out, then this company in New York will be able to take our million dollars that they had to put up and use it for their own purposes, and in doing so will be protected by the Senate of Canada. It is a very unfortunate position to take, and I very much regret it. Are we to be told that this company is to be permitted to go on ruining the people ? There are hon. gentlemen in this House and outside of it who have paid their money into this company when they had hard work to meet their payments. They thought they were protecting their families, and in doing so they spent their last dollar in meeting the calls. Will it be any satisfaction to them to be told that policy-holders are dropping out, and that nothing will be left for them. Now as to the responsibility ; I take the full responsibility of the motion I am making. I am an old man—we are all getting near the time when we must drop out—and I take my responsibility before the people of Canada and before my Maker ; and I can take my hat and walk out of this Senate and say that I have failed to get justice for the people and therefore am no longer fit to represent them here. I take it that every senator is appointed because of his intelligence and fitness to discharge his public duties, and it is very unfair to say that I am taking any undue advantage of a United States company that seems to be protected in a way that is objectionable. I say protect the people of Canada, not a company that has committed all those enormities. Before I am done I shall be prepared to say, when that Bill comes up, that the Senate is not going to stand by gentlemen, who are forgetting the interests of the people, and looking after the interests of a private corporation. Now as to the expense, my hon. friend has said it is going to be an expense to Canada ; that it is taking up the time of the Senate. My hon. friend must have been joking when he said it was taking up the time of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said the expense of bringing witnesses.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman spoke of taking up the time of the Senate. The Senate has nothing to do and has done nothing.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I withdraw that.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman started with saying that the government was going to take up the Bill, and then he apologized to the House and said no, he was mistaken.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The government declined.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The government were right in declining.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because the company has complied with the law. There is the law on our statute-book.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—No, excuse me, they have not. They have broken the law of Canada because the law of Canada says they shall not use their money for any purposes save and accept in payment of just claims, and for no other purpose whatsoever, and the law also says the company shall pay everybody in full, and they are not paying everybody in full.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They have their deposits untouched in the Finance Department.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend, perhaps, has not the law before him. It says all assessments shall be used for paying death claims and nothing else whatever. It has not been done that way. The company have used these moneys elsewhere. They have made away with all their mortuary.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Sue the company and get a judgment against them. An execution will reach them.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Will my hon. friend tell me that that deposit in the hands of the government of Canada can be reached by a judgment? Will he not tell me that if this company went into insolvency to-morrow that these deposits would be for the general credit of the whole company? The company has been incorporated in the United States. Is their capital to be divided all over the world? I do not think that if we incorporated a company in Canada and they had assets here that we could hold them as against United States creditors. I am not a lawyer. I find that there are a great many legal men against me, and I regret it very much. I think this chamber should be relieved of all legal business and should deal with every question on its merits as it is brought up.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Will my hon. friend tell me—and I beg his pardon if he has already done so—if there are any judgments in Canada against the company which they failed to meet? Are there any judgments rendered against them for a claim which they have failed to meet in Canada?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I am not a lawyer and could not tell the hon. gentleman, but I know there are judgments against this company all over the world.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—We are speaking of Canadian affairs.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Does the hon. gentleman want to run two companies or one?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Is there any claim against the company that can be collected that they have failed to pay in Canada? It is a simple fact. If the hon. gentleman does not know——

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I know what I am talking about. Will my hon. friend show me where they could execute it if there was a judgment?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Is there any judgment?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That is not the question.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I know nothing of the affairs of this company.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—How would a creditor execute a judgment?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If there was a judgment against them, and they were doing business in Canada, I would try and execute it or put them in liquidation. Has there been any attempt made to put them in liquidation?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend is wrong as a lawyer. He has taken up the case for this company, and I regret to see it, because he is fighting his own countrymen.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I have an absolutely open mind, and if this question goes to a committee I have reports of people who are in the company and men who have asked me to see that there interests are not jeopardized by anything the committee would do and I would take good care that their views are set before the committee. We are here to do justice to the best of our ability. I want to know if there are any claims against the company that are unpaid?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend says he has an open mind. I have no open mind. My mind is made up. A man that has an open mind might be changed right and left. I do not propose to have an open mind.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Then my hon. friend is debarred from sitting on a committee where he will be a judge.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—No, because I am here as a representative man taking this matter up and I have made up my mind.

My hon. friend says he has an open mind. What does an open mind mean ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It is one who is free to accept light on the subject and give a free judgment.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That is the way in court. Two men come in ; one man wants to hang the prisoner and one man wants to let him off. I have not an open mind. My hon. friend knows what I mean. I am trying to speak in parliamentary language.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I did not catch the purport of the remarks of the hon. gentleman. I invite him to make it more clear for an obtuse, though open mind.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Does the hon. gentleman understand it now?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Well, the other members do. As to the expense of this inquiry, I am sure the hon. minister of the Crown, the leader of the government in this House, will not say that Canada cannot pay one dollar to protect these poor unfortunates ? If he does say so then I will pay it out of my own pocket. I have not very much money. I have not been with the government very long, but I will pay it out of my own pocket, and I am in earnest. I have letters from all parts of the country to sustain the position I am taking, but I do not want to weary the House. I thought I had made a good enough case. I thought the thing was so patent that any member of this House who considers his duty to the country and recognized his position in this House, would not be found championing any company against the interests of the public. I thought, and I still think, that any hon. gentleman in this House remembering his position would say there are two things to consider : one is, is the hon. gentleman who proposes this in earnest or should his motion be entertained ? Then I think he should consider his duty whether he should stand up to protect the people of this country or whether he should throw every obstacle in the way, take advantage of every technicality to prevent the people of this country getting satisfaction. Now, if that is their course let them take it ; I am prepared to allow them to take it. I beg to assure this House that I have no intention of abandoning this matter. I have no brief. I am not employed. I am not a lawyer. I am not here to take fees or anything else. I am fighting for the poor unfortunates and with that object before the House, hon. gentlemen may or may not accept my statement and do as they please. I have every reverence and every respect for our friend the hon. leader of the government and the hon. leader of the opposition too, but I have this to say that I think the hon. leader of the government really cannot have calculated public opinion, cannot have taken into consideration what I wanted to do when he asked me to abandon this motion. It is something that he has not well considered and with every deference to him I shall throw myself on the judgment of this honourable body and refuse to abandon the motion which I have made.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—When the discussion of this question came before this House a few days ago I stated my position, and I showed to this House that I was one of the parties interested—interested as one of those who were obliged to drop their policies after carrying them for twelve to fifteen years, and one of the actual parties interested as being at present and continuing to be a policy-holder for a certain amount ; but I thought that the hon. member who has just spoken, and who has undertaken such a campaign and a glorious campaign so far, in my opinion, against the Mutual Reserve Fund Association, appreciated the suggestion which I made when the question came up a few days ago, that perhaps instead of appointing a special committee, he might secure the same result, and perhaps a better result, by taking into consideration what the Secretary of State has justly said, by referring all the documents and the facts which have been put so forcibly before this House by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay, to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, with instructions—because we have a right, no doubt, to give instructions to that committee as well as to any other committee—to take into consideration all those facts and documents which have been laid before this House by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay, to inquire into all the circumstances connected with the working and operations of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, and to report on the best means to protect the Canadian policy-holders. I have just come from Montreal, and have not had time to properly word my amendment, but I have drafted an amendment and it will be very easy to put it in proper form. I think this would be a means of reconciling matters.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I wish to say from my experience of thirty-two years, that sending such a matter before a big committee like that means nothing.

An hon. MEMBER—Appoint a sub-committee.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I understand a sub-committee. I know what it means going into a committee and a sub-committee; but I want to point out to my hon. friend that to send it before a big committee like the Banking and Commerce Committee we do not know where it is going to end. Where is the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Commerce?

Hon. Mr. THIBAUDEAU (Rigaud)—He was here to-day.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—How long is he going to be here? He will go away and how are we going to get along. I thought if we could get five hon. members in this House that would work on the committee that would be the best way to hold this investigation. I know some hon. gentleman has said that we did not have the right men on it. I think when hon. gentlemen are appointed to a committee they are good enough to sit on it. Sending it before the Banking and Commerce Committee means burking the whole matter.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I have great confidence in the Committee on Banking and Commerce. I have gone over the list of the members, and I think they are in a position to give judgment if we put before them the facts as they ought to be put, and I think they are men of conscience who will do what is necessary to give satisfaction to a great number of the members of this House. I think if the Bill and the motion of the hon. member and the facts and documents were placed before the Committee on Banking and Commerce at the same time they should do the work more efficiently, and we would have a report sooner than if we appoint this special committee. My hon. friend is afraid of the delay. I am afraid if the Bill goes before the committee he has named, the proceedings before that special committee will take a great deal of time and the Bill will have passed the Senate before the investigation is concluded, I am under the impression that with the instructions given to the Banking and Commerce Committee to take into consideration all the facts and documents and to report at the same time we are sure to have a result. I am a little ashamed to oppose the hon. gentleman who has presented his case to this House with so much strength, and I am not of the opinion of the hon. Secretary of State on this point, although I admit there is a great deal of reason in what he has stated, that an investigation by a special committee would be more expensive and take a great deal of time. In this case, as in many other matters, sometimes the safest course is the middle course, to reconcile the different avenues and to adopt a course which would be acceptable to those interested.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend says that the documents are to go before the Committee on Banking and Commerce. What documents are to go before them? I propose to examine these men. There are no documents to go before them.

Hon Mr. DAVID—I have no special interest in this question, and I do not think you will make much out of it; but I am speaking in a general way and I would suggest that all the facts and documents which have been laid before this House by the hon. member be referred with the Bill to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and that this committee receive instructions to inquire into the financial condition of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, and to examine witnesses if necessary and to report on the best means of protecting the Canadian policy-holders. That may be amended, if desired, but I would be inclined to think that there is enough there to give that committee power to do something which would be acceptable and practicable. But in answer to the hon. Secretary of State, I may say that it is not because I am opposed to the investigation, but it is because I think the Banking and Commerce Committee could hold a better investigation and produce a better result which would come sooner than the investigation made by special committee. I think an investigation is necessary. I think the argument of the hon. gentleman from Rothesay must have convinced us that this House must do something to satisfy public opinion, and that since the company comes before us asking for a new lease of power, considering that the company has caused millions of dollars worth of policies to lapse, that we have enough before us to induce us to take necessary means to protect the policy-holders. It is those who are in the company now that should be protected. A few days ago, when this question came before the House, the hon. gentleman from DeSalaberry, who has had great experience in those matters connected with companies, expressed the opinion that he thought it was possible to introduce some clause in the Bill which would be satisfactory to the Canadian policy-holders and satisfactory to this company. I hope the hon. member for Rothesay will think proper to accept this. At all events I will wait and make my amendment, if necessary, at another sitting of the House.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I would ask the hon. member why that committee of the Senate can do better than the committee for which I ask ? Are the hon. gentlemen that I have named as a committee not satisfactory to this House ? If not, we might pick out some other senators ; say who would be satisfactory ? I would ask the hon. member why should not the charge I made go to this select committee instead of to another ?

Hon. Mr. DAVID—For the simple reason I think it will pass, when the other would not.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—With the greatest deference to the hon. gentleman, I cannot submit to it. I have submitted day by day to adjournments of this matter. There have been lots of visits or promised visits to New York and all sorts of things, but I shall stand by my motion and allow this honourable body to take the responsibility of their action before the public. I shall press my motion if my seconder stands by me.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I have no personal feeling against the New York Mutual Reserve Company ; they never got a dollar from me. I have no insurance with them. In 1885 the parliament of Canada recognized that company, and by granting them certain specific privileges they had never before granted to a mutual company, placed them in a position to do business with the people of Canada. That company has run a business for eighteen or nineteen years. That business, I believe, has been most recklessly handled. Now, I do think, in face of the very large amount of insurance that is carried by the people of Canada in the different companies, and the fact that those companies operate under Dominion charters, that when parliament gave a status to that institution from New York and enabled them to do business in Canada, and it has now got into a financial condition by which the people of Canada are losing a very large amount of money, any reasonable sum that could be expended by parliament in ascertaining why that company is financially embarrassed would be well spent. If we refuse this inquiry, what are we saying to the other life insurance companies in Canada ? We are saying : 'Gentlemen, do your business as you please ; squander the money of those who hold policies from you ; handle your affairs as you please, the Senate of Canada has refused to grant a committee to investigate the action of any company doing an insurance business under a Dominion charter.' On the recommendation of the Secretary of State, it is proposed to refuse to grant even an investigation into the causes that have led to the embarrassed condition of the Mutual Reserve Company. That is the example we are setting to all other life insurance companies throughout this country, if we take that course. It was a very unfortunate thing that this company ever got the status it has enjoyed in Canada. I fought personally very bitterly against it at the time they applied for admission. I can say, on behalf of the inspector of insurance, Mr. Cherriman, that he was very bitterly opposed to granting the request of that company. Why did they get it ? Because they represented to parliament that the old line companies were robbing the people of Canada by charging rates far beyond what life insurance could be carried at in Canada, and if they got the opportunity of doing business in the Dominion, they would furnish insurance for one-third less, and they cited the fact that the Canada Life and many other companies had heaped up colossal fortunes by the extortion to which they subjected people who insured with them. On the strength of that, parliament said: 'There may be truth in this. Why should we prevent this company doing business with the people of Canada if they want to? They have shown a fairly decent record so far; they want to give the people of Canada cheap insurance.' Parliament took the bit in their teeth and carried that Bill, and the result was that the New York Mutual Reserve got a standing in Canada by that measure that they could not otherwise have secured. What has been the result? They come along now and say: 'We have failed; the financial basis on which we started was not sufficient to carry us through, and we ask for relief.' My hon. friend here (Hon. Mr. Domville), on behalf of a very large number of policy-holders, representing insurance amounting to $22,000,000, which has dropped down to $8,000,000, asks for an investigation. These policy-holders contributed their money because parliament gave a standing to the company that warranted the public in believing that the company was safe. They were justified in believing that parliament would not have given them that standing if they had not come to that conclusion. Now, are we going to turn around and say: 'No; we will not investigate?' What shall we say to the men who insured with that company? Will they not, in a certain sense, hold the parliament of Canada responsible for having given that company the status they have occupied for eighteen years? They will say: 'You put on the statutes of Canada an Act giving that company power to do business with us, and then when the crisis came and the company failed to meet their obligations, and we asked by a representative in parliament that an investigation be held into the management of that company to find out what became of the money they collected from us, why has the Senate refused our request?' What are we saying to all the other life insurance companies? We are saying parliament will not investigate the management of any life insurance company under any circumstances. We are treading on very dangerous ground if we take that stand. I repeat I have no antipathy to this company, but I want to see its affairs investigated. My hon. friend was asked if there was any unpaid execution against that company—if they had been sued and had been unable to pay their debts. I answer there are policies due in Canada to-day that have not been paid, and in some cases they have compromised claims by giving four or five hundred dollars for a policy of two thousand dollars. Is that a company that should be permitted to do business in Canada? I say it is not. Another thing struck me; I have no desire to make an insinuation or reflection on any member of this chamber, but it is singular that a company of this kind, which is rotten to the core, can secure in this House the best legal talent it contains to take up their cause and fight it against an humble individual like my hon. friend from Rothesay. It may be right; I am not challenging what they are doing, but it is, to my mind, a very peculiar condition of things. For my part, I think we should investigate the conduct of this company. It is due to the policy-holders in Canada and to ourselves. We placed this company in a position to do business with the people, and we ought to afford my hon. friend an opportunity of proving whether their affairs have been properly conducted or not.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—I moved the adjournment of the debate in the absence of the Hon. Mr. Kerr, of Toronto. I see that he is here to-day, and I understand he has given special study to this question; therefore, I give way to him, and will let him defend them.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I do not hear very well in this large chamber. Did my hon. friend say that the hon. member from Toronto was here to defend this company?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—I will correct that statement. I may say I understood the hon. senator from Toronto had given a great deal of study to this question, and he would be in a better position than I am, probably, to expose this thing as it should be before this honourable House.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I am not a very old member of the Senate, and if a member who conscientiously undertakes to say what he thinks in this House, happens to give offence or umbrage to a member here, not because of anything which he has said offensive in its nature, but because it is opposing some particular view or proposition that is propounded here, I shall not have that great pleasure in being a member of this Senate that I thought I was entitled to take. Personally, and on behalf of my hon. friend beside me, who spoke before, I desire to resent in the strongest terms that the English language will permit, and at the same time be parliamentary, the insinuations which have been made here with reference to the position of two of us —who happen to be professional men——

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I made no insinuation.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—If you did not make any insinuations the cap does not fit you. If the cap fits you can wear it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has no right to address the hon. member.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I answered a question put by the hon. member.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I wish to know who was referred to.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I was a little surprised to hear another hon. member speak about the ability of this company to command the services of professional men. I am not here in a professional capacity personally. I have nothing to do with this company professionally ; I have never had anything to do with this company professionally ; I have never been asked to do so. I have never acted, so far as this company is concerned, during my whole professional career except against it, I have held briefs against it when I was at the bar years ago. That is the whole connection I have had with this company. I have been asked to insure in this company and declined, because I did not approve of the principle on which its business was conducted. I did not think the assessment plan was a sound one.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—You think so now.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I do not.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—You are defending them.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—That is not what I am saying at all. When I saw this motion, it appeared to me a very novel one to be brought before the Senate. It appeared to me to be a serious and important one. It appeared to me that if this Senate undertook the investigation of every company which has had shortcomings, whether incorporated by this parliament or not, it would have its hands full. The company in question has not been incorporated in this country ; it has been licensed by the Department of Insurance since 1885, under the authority of an Act of parliament, and the department have from time to time renewed that license. That is the position it is in ; but if the Senate is going to undertake to investigate every company which has been unsuccessful, which has not been able to carry out fully the purpose that was intended, which has not been able to show a beneficial result from the investments which have been made in it, whether of a financial character or in the nature of insurance—if this Senate is going to investigate the affairs of every insurance company, fire or life, it has got a great deal of work on hand. Unfortunately, in this country, life insurance has not always been a prosperous business. Some companies have not succeeded on the ordinary life plan for one reason or another ; fire insurance companies have failed and the management has been, in some cases, to blame for the failure. Disaster has overtaken companies both with regard to their investments and the character of the business they were doing, and if this Senate is going to undertake to investigate every case of that kind when grievances are brought forward, it is a very serious and important step they are taking. This, it appears to me, is a precedent. I am not an old member of the Senate, but I know of no similar case in which an investigation has been allowed by this House. Perhaps some of the older members can give examples of it if such cases exist. I would appeal to them to state the circumstances under which that has been done, if it has been done. The hon. senator from Mount Forest (Hon. Mr. McMullen) surprises me when he makes imputations against the leading members who have been so far saying anything with reference to this matter. When the motion was made, and when I heard the charges last session and again this session, with reference to this company, I took the trouble to make some little inquiry as to what the position of the company was, conceiving it to be my duty to do so in order that I might be able to come to an intelligent conclusion whether anything could be done and what was the best to be done. I do not know that I have arrived at a result, but I have reached this conclusion in the case of this particular company, which is a company that procured from the late government the power to do business in this country by an amendment of the law in 1885—to do business on the assessment plan by reason of amendments affected in the Insurance Act. I say that this company having done business in that way has continued from year to year to be licensed and to make returns, and to make the deposits which the law requires to be made with the government of Canada, and under those circumstances it is important that we should see whether it becomes necessary for the company which is so licensed under the authority of our law, to be exposed to this kind of investigation. Up to this date I have never heard of any kind of implication against either the ability or the integrity of the insurance department. I have never yet heard complaint made that the superintendent of insurance was not capable of discharging his whole duty; nor have I heard that he neglected it in any way. I have always understood that if there was a department of the government which met with acceptance generally, not only by the public and parliament, but by those with whom they were actually doing business, the Department of Insurance was one that could be spoken of in those terms. The law having been amended in 1885, this company, coming within the amended law, having applied for and obtained a license, was authorized and has continued year by year to be authorized by renewal of license, by the superintendent of insurance under the General Insurance Act. Let us look and see whether in doing so the superintendent of insurance assumed a responsibility, or was bound to assume a responsibility with regard to this company. Let me refer to the law on the subject. One would infer from some remarks made in this House that it is rather disparaging to a man to be supposed to know the law, but it is convenient that we should in a matter of this kind, see what the law is. Now, what are the duties and how is this authority of licensing carried out? Section 25 says:—

> The Governor in Council may appoint an officer to be called the Superintendent of Insurance, who shall act under the instructions of the minister and shall examine and report to the minister from time to time upon all matters connected with insurance as carried on by the several companies licensed to do business in Canada or required by this Act to make any returns.

The Act goes on to provide that in each case, before the issue of any new license or the renewal of a license, he is to make a report to the minister that the requirements of the law have been complied with, and from the statements of the affairs of the company it is in a condition to meet its liabilities. That license is to be issued year by year. If the superintendent after a careful examination into the condition of the business of any company licensed to transact business in Canada, from the annual statements furnished to the minister, or from any other cause, deems it expedient to make a further examination of the company and so reports to the minister, the minister may require him to visit the office of the company and to thoroughly examine into its affairs, and to make all such inquiries as may be necessary to test its ability to meet its engagements, &c. Now, that is what our law says as to the manner in which the business of insurance companies and their relations are to be towards the government of this country. Therefore, there is all that the hon. member seeks here provided by the machinery of our Act of parliament. It is prescribed that a person shall be appointed with the power and the duty to make these investigations, and have we any authority here to say that those have not been made? Have we any authority here, or has anybody authority to say that the superintendent has not wholly and fully discharged his duty? Has any case been made out by anything that has been said to show that the superintendent has been wanting in any respect with regard to the discharge of his duty and that he has not done his whole duty, and made that investigation, and does not, and has not satisfied himself that he was justified in granting year by year the license under which this business has been carried on? I say, therefore, when there is machinery already provided by Act of parliament affording proper protection, not merely to the parliament, and the people of Canada, but also proper protection to the companies which have relations with the people of Canada—both have their rights in that respect—when that has been provided why should we say now that this Senate thinks it necessary that there should be some other investigation which cannot be conducted in the manner in which a full, thorough and complete investigation could be made by and under the superintendent of insurance himself ? But there is more than that to be said with reference to the matter. We have heard statements read and made here. We were informed that they came from Mr. J. D. Wells, who had been an official of the company. A letter was read as evidence to the House that there was substantial ground for making these charges. Now, on inquiry, it turns out that Mr. Wells has been for years an officer in high position in that company ; that he ceased to be that sometime late in the nineties; that at the time he ceased there were differences between him and other officers of the company ; that in consequence of that he made certain charges against the company. When I used the word 'charges' I mean it in both senses—he claimed money from the company, and he claimed money for his good opinion of the company, and he made in addition vague charges.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I think it is only fair to this House that the hon. gentleman should read that letter in which Mr. Wells made a demand for money. I have read my letters. My hon. friend should not get up and defend the company as he would in a small court—he should read that letter demanding money, if he has such a letter.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—If the hon. member will bear with me a minute I will give him all he wants, and perhaps a little more. I will give him what the statements were and what the answer was. I was about to say that this difference having occurred between the officers of the Mutual Reserve Company and Mr. Wells, finding himself left out when re-election came, he was no longer a director and no longer vice-president. There were differences to be adjusted as Mr. Wells thought, and so a claim was preferred by him against the company. The company took proceedings for an investigation of that. An investigation was held. The company did not accede to his demands, and that was followed by charges being preferred in the insurance department of the state of New York, in which state this company is incorporated, and where it has its head office. I hold in my hand a copy of a report which was made on those charges. In the course of that report the evidence is given as to what occurred and is exhibit No. two on pages 48 and 49.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—What is my hon. friend reading from.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I am reading from the report of the Insurance Department of the state of New York, dated the 20th July, 1899. There is a memo. of disbursements by Mr. J. D. Wells, and a series of items which I will not trouble the Senate with at present, amounting to a very considerable sum. That was the claim, and the evidence which is reported is, that that claim was referred for investigation, and I have here the account that was given of the investigation and of the interview with Mr. Wells respecting that. It is reported by the insurance department in their report as follows :

> After the ordinary salutations of the meeting, I stated to Mr. Wells that as an officer of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association I had been asked to go over with him the items of the memorandum, holding the same in my hand, which he had submitted against the association. Mr. Wells said that he did not present the memorandum as an account collectable or enforcible against the association ; that he did not claim that the association owes him the sums of money stated therein, but that he had had negotiations with counsel for the association regarding his relations to it, and that inasmuch as his employment and official relations with the association had been terminated he thought that in the interest of a continuance of his friendly relations with the association and in the interest of peace and harmony, some sum of money should be paid to him and that this memorandum was presented as a basis upon which the association could audit the amount and pay the same to him. He said that there were a good many sums that he had spent for the association for its benefit, for which he had not been repaid, and these formed the basis of the memorandum submitted.

Then passing on

> We went over the several items contained in the memorandum and once or twice he produced from his pocket book notes or orders from some agent against whom he had a charge for money advanced or paid.

Then there was an item discussed. Then he speaks as to commissions on Canadian business. He says he made more advances out of his own pocket. He says :

I called his attention to the final item in the memorandum, F. A. Buenham, $5,575, and asked him what this meant. He replied that I knew as much about that as he did. I said that I knew nothing about it. I than asked him what the items of this memorandum, exhibit A, amounted to, and he replied, about $12,000. I asked if this was the amount that he thought ought to be paid to him. He replied, 'Yes,' that he did, together with a year's salary in addition, making about $25,000 in all. I said to him, 'Do you think a year's salary in addition to these amounts should be paid to you, that is, do you ask the amount of these items in this memorandum and a year's salary,' to which he replied that he did, that while he made no threat against the association, nor did he intend to make any blackmailing demand upon it, that the association had better pay him this sum of $25,000, or it would have to take the consequences, that he had been turned out without warning and without being a dollar, and that he did not intend to remain in that position without a fight. Then I said, 'What you ask is that the association pay you $25,000' ? He replied that it would amount to somewhere between $20,000 and $25,000.

He says later :

I then took up the memorandum and said to him again : 'Now, this is what you want paid, the amounts contained in this memorandum, together with an equivalent to a year's salary, and the association is to thereafter have your good will,' to which he replied 'Yes, but that he would not make anything out of it, that he had spent lots of money that was not contained in the memorandum, that he had paid all the costs of the legislation in Canada that passed the law by which the association procured its license to do business in the Dominion, for which he had never been repaid. That there had been good round sums paid out ; that there were members of parliament of the committee and of the government that had to have good sums, that it cost him over $10,000, that he had found all the money excepting for the last bill for a small amount.'

This referred to the legislation procured in 1885.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I do not think my hon. friend should read here about members of parliament getting money.

Hon. Mr. KERR—That is the gentleman who made the charges and they were investigated. That was in the year 1885.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Who writes this report ?

Hon. Mr. KERR—I will give you the report afterwards. It is the report dated 26th July 1899, to the Insurance Department of the state of New York. This report was signed by two members of the committee, and it was held for some time to obtain the signature of the other man. It was afterwards signed by him. That is the statement which was made by Mr. Wells, which was reported to the department, which the department had before them and the other evidence which I am not going into now. But the same charges which are made here now substantially and on his statement—because it was his letter that was being read making these charges—were made at that time. Those charges which he made against the company were declared to be unfounded, and the company was declared by the officers to be in a solvent condition, and a comparison was given of the expense connected with the carrying on of that business and other businesses, and that comparison was made on many items giving percentages of increases and decreases. I submit then that when that has been the subject of investigation by the Insurance Department of the state of New York and other states of the Union where this charge has been brought under the notice of other states, and where they have determined as to the solvency of the company, and when we have here the Superintendent of Insurance charged with the duty of satisfying himself in his responsible position as superintendent before he issues a license, while the license is extant, by making such investigations, getting such information and otherwise going into the circumstances and affairs of the company—when we have all that, it appears to me that it is quite unnecessary to discuss the matter of making an investigation by the Senate : that in other words this Senate would be departing from the policy which has been prescribed and the plan which has been provided by parliament, and the Senate was a party to the enacting of that law. I therefore state that in that respect it is a mistake to talk about an investigation by a parliamentary committee of the affairs of the company. I think it would be an untoward thing to make such an investigation in reference to any company, and when we find it has already been investigated by competent authorities in a state where all the books and records are, where the parties are known, where it has been investigated over and over again, to take it up here and go over the same work, would be lending ourselves to a system almost I might say of persecution which the Senate should hesitate about undertaking.

But there is another view of the matter, and that is, by holding this investigation you are establishing a precedent. Now, in a great many of our companies there are dissatisfied shareholders. One of the largest and most successful companies in this country, one of the most creditable institutions in this country a short time ago, in consequence of various proceedings within the company, was the subject of a great deal of criticism. We know perfectly well that that company, the oldest Canadian company, some few years ago revised its rates in order to provide for its reserves and we know perfectly well that there was a great deal of discontent about it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman knows why that was done, parliament insisted on the reserve being increased.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Yes, there was a great deal of dissatisfaction about it, but on investigation of the matter, it was found necessary to change the scale on which the reserve should be provided, and parliament enacted that it should be done, and a recast of the policies had to be made and so on. But more than that, the same company, for many years, issued a policy providing for a premium, but that premium was only like the assessments which are provided in these policies and merely a tentative premium. In other words, on the minimum plan. Under that plan an annual premium was exacted for life, and at the end of the life, when the policy was called for, it was provided that if it was determined that the cost of carrying that insurance on that plan in that class was greater than the amount which had been paid in premiums, the balance that ought to have been paid in order to carry should be a charge on the policy, and deducted from the amount of it. That plan was carried on for many years. It came to a large amount. The company foresaw that it was going to get them into very much the same trouble as they are in at present, and they abandoned the policy.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are you speaking of assessment companies ?

Hon. Mr. KERR—No, the leading Canadian life insurance company, the Canada Life. The minimum plan was abandonned and so far as they could do it, as far as it was available, they called in the policies that were outstanding on that plan and converted them into other policies. If parliament had lent itself, if this Senate had lent itself to a public investigation at the instance of the many men who at that time complained of the management because they were dissatisfied and made various complaints as to its business, what an injustice would have been done; how unfair to everybody interested in that company, not only every shareholder, because there were shareholders in that company, but to every officer and to every policy-holder. Everybody knows the preeminent position the Canada Life holds, and everybody now has the utmost confidence in it. We are proud of it as a Canadian institution. I cite that to show the danger there is in starting this investigation on a complaint. A charge that might have been made against the company was that the reserves which were being provided and the premiums that were being collected would not be sufficient to meet their obligation if the minimum plan were continued, and it would have been an enormous one, and would have been according to this charge, sufficien to justify parliamentary investigation if it justified it in this case.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There never was any charge of fraud or impropriety on the part of the members.

Hon. Mr. KERR—No, certainly not. I am not saying there was impropriety on the part of that company. In this case there is no company except the policy-holders. It is a mutual institution. I heard the expression 'with the company' that means with the policy-holders, and if the policy-holders hit the company they hit themselves. That is what I was confronted with when I came to consider the matter, and it seemed to me that instead of an investigation, the proper thing to do was to try and find some kind of remedy. The foundation of the trouble was that they undertook to carry policies, collecting only as annual assessments a sum which was found to be insufficient. That made it necessary for them afterwards to make assessments if they wanted to carry on their business. They have succeeded in carrying on the business, and so far they have a surplus and, according to the present surplus, it is ample to provide for everything which a mutual insurance company should be called upon to provide. Now it has to be borne in mind that this company has complied, so far as shown, with every requirement of the insurance department. It has furnished all the information that has been sought. There is no evidence of there being anything wanting on its part in that respect. It has provided all the reserve which the law requires them to do, and which the department required them to do, and it has made these deposits. Therefore, when you talk about this company going on and wrecking families I think it is an entire misconception of the case. The fact of the matter is that so far as this company has been able to pay, and has had the ability it has paid all its obligations. The hon. senator from Wellington says that they have insisted on making compromises on certain claims of $2,000 for $400, or $500. I should like the hon. gentleman to say, with his experience as a business man, and with his knowledge as a director of an insurance company, whether every fire and life insurance company in this country has not made compromises of claims upon it. The circumstances of each case have to be considered. We do not know anything of the cases spoken of here. None but the company and the people connected with it know. You heard the story that so-and-so had been obliged to take a compromise. It may be that there was no claim that was enforceable. It may be the policy had been forfeited by reason of representations which had been made at the time it was effected as to age and conditions of health, as to circumstances of the family and a variety of things which would avoid the policy; or it may be it would be avoided by engaging in some dangerous trade to change the character of the risk. There are hundreds of conditions by which these policies are avoided, and it may be under these circumstances when the company was called upon to pay, feeling it was a hardship, they paid something which they were not liable for at all, although they had received some premiums; while on the other hand, the other people having paid premiums thought they had some claim. Therefore, when my hon. friend talks about that I would venture to say that the hon. gentleman was talking rather wide of the mark. If he had been as accurate in that as in other insinuations he made, I think it would have been a little more in accordance with his duties not only to this company but to the members of the Senate to have taken a different view from what he has. Then he spoke about financial embarrassments of the company. The hon. gentleman does not know what he is talking about. The company has no financial embarrassments. They have a surplus. No company which has a surplus and has the cash and has in the treasury $268,000 available in addition to its reserves for this very class of insurance can be said to be embarrassed. Its embarrassment is that in order to make provision for all these policies they will be obliged to make larger assessments and compel the policy-holders to pay up their assessments, or forfeit their policies, because the fact is that every man who has been insured up to this time has been paying less than he ought to have paid—paying less than the cost of carrying, and, that being so, those assessments ought to have been increased. I am not going into a general review of the business of the company. A statement has been furnished by the company to me and to all hon. gentlemen which shows the manner in which their business has been conducted, and it shows that although the charges for management, when you see them bulked appear to be large, they are actually smaller in proportion than those of the large companies in the United States. It shows that the cost of doing each thousand dollars worth of business is less in percentage than in the leading companies, and it shows it is less than in the Canadian companies. The figures are given and hon. gentlemen can see for themselves without my taking up time with it. Under these circumstances it appears to me it would be a mistake to have a reference and it would be a violation of the provisions of the Act to have a reference without first knowing what the superintendent has done, and how far he has taken the very steps which are essential. Let me say one word further. The report to which I have referred, which was made to the state of New York by an actuary who made the examination, was begun on the 12th of May, and it was not completed until a date late in August, I think, and he had no less than twelve assistants at that work the whole time. That is the kind of investigation that they made. That was a valuable investigation if made in that way. This investigation, in order to be of any value, must be equally exhaustive and how could that be done practically by a committee of this Senate whether a special committee or a general committee? I am not going to speak with reference to the Bill which is next on the Order Paper, further than to say that being confronted with this situation I take the responsibility of presenting to the House a Bill which has already been approved of by the superintendent of insurrance. I went to see the superintendent about it and he personally approved of the course taken by me as being the only suggestion he could make which was likely to benefit the policy-holders.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. Secretary of State said they had nothing to do with it.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I am showing what was done by the superintendent of insurance. I discussed this Bill with him, because I did not want to go to the Senate and present a Bill which did not have the confidence of the department, and did not have the approval of the superintendent. I felt that he was a safe man to direct one in connection with the matter. So that in that way, and to that extent, I have introduced that Bill as a means, and I think is a better means of providing for the interests of the policy-holders than the proposal which is being made here. When I have an opportunity to speak on that Bill again, I intend to ask this House to pass the second reading without being committed to the principle of the Bill, beyond the fact that some remedy should be worked out, and I intend to ask that instead of it being referred to a committee of the whole House. it shall be referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, who are charged with the business of insurance as well as other branches of commerce, and the superintendent of insurance can be heard before that committee. We can hear what he has done and learn what investigation he has made and what information he has had with reference to the affairs of this company, and we can have whatever other evidence it may be thought necessary in order to satisfy this House that the department of insurance is discharging its whole duty under the statute and so far as that department is concerned, that there is nothing wanting with regard to its duty towards the policy-holders or the public of this country. I think that in that way everything that the hon. member would seek could be worked out. If it was found advisable then that there should be any special investigation it could be directed. If it is necessary, or advisable or proper that there should be experts examined. either under the direction of the committee or the superintendent of insurance, there is the opportunity of doing it. It is a sensible way of dealing with the matter. It does not commit the House to something they would afterwards regret being committed to, and it is in that view I am opposed to the motion.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—If I might be permitted to say one word further upon the subject, in reply to my hon. friend. If in the heat of the debate on this question in my closing remarks a few moments ago, I cast any reflection upon any member of this House, I withdraw any such insinuations and I should regret it very much indeed. I did remark that it seemed singular that the company were able to secure the best legal talent in this chamber, and if that carried with it any insinuation, I desire to withdraw the statement, and I desire to add further that there is not an hon. member in this House with whom I have a greater desire to be in unison than my hon. friend who has just spoken. But, after all, I feel so strongly with regard to this Bill and with regard to this company, that I could not refrain from expressing in the very terms I did my desire that a thorough and exhaustive investigation should be made to see if parliament could ferret out what was the cause that led up to the unfortunate condition of things that now exists. My hon. friend says that it was because they started upon too low a scale in charging for insurance. That may be so. I have reason to believe that there were very large amounts of money extravagantly spent, salaries of enormous amounts paid, rents beyond all the ordinary sums paid by other companies for magnificent offices in New York that swallowed a large amount of money.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman speaks of large amounts that have been squandered.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—He should have said stolen.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Can the hon. gentleman tell us how in a mutual reserve association he could get back at the moneys that have been squandered, because all the policy-holders are the partners ? Is it not by assessing the present policy-holders that you will get back an amount equivalent to what has been squandered.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I would say in reply to my hon. friend that it is a matter of vital interest to the policy-holders in that company to ascertain whether the money they contributed for the support and sustenance of that company and to keep up its funds has been squandered or has not been squandered. Is that not a matter of vital importance to every policy-holder ? We have not got it under any investigation that has taken place. My hon. friend, a moment ago, drew attention to the fact that the Insurance Association of the state of New York found that the company's affairs were in such a condition as warranted them holding an investigation with regard to the condition of the New York Mutual Reserve. Is that not so ? Yes it is so. They not only held one investigation, but they held two investigations that cost the New York Mutual Reserve Company over $11,000 of the people's money squandered in the paying of witnesses. I admit it was spent. They had two investigations to know why the company was in an unsound financial condition and as to the complaints that were made against it. Now, if they have done that in the state of New York, where they obtained their existence, is it anything unreasonable that the Dominion of Canada should investigate the Canadian side of the business to see what is the reason that they are doubling and trebling the rates upon their patrons and asking enormous amounts of money from them, and on the other hand compromising responsibilities when they occur. I am not prepared to say that the insurance department has done everything they ought to do in order to thoroughly probe to the bottom the transactions of the company. I am not here to condemn them. They may have granted their license, but very pronounced complaints have appeared in the public press from several sources, showing that the New York Mutual Reserve Life Company have been doing a business by which they have been extracting and extorting out of the policy-holders enormously increased assessments. I know people that are paying three and four times as much perhaps as they paid in the first place. I think it would have been well if the insurance department had investigated where the funds were going.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The assessments would increase every year if they did not get new blood into the company ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I think it would be well if some investigation could take place, and I think it would be well once in every half century, because I do not know that there has been an investigation of this kind into the affairs of any life company, to warn all the life companies that unless they keep within proper bounds and fulfil their promises to their policy-holders, that their affairs may be investigated. I say that it is a matter of vital importance to the people of this country that such a course should be adopted. I regard the Act under which the companies in this country conduct business and enter into covenants with the public, receive their money and promise to carry out certain provisions of every policy, as almost as sacred as the ten commandments. The people of this country are paying out their money and have a right to be assured both by the Department of Insurance and parliament, that their rights and interests will be protected and anything that we can do in that direction is justifiable, no matter what amount of money it will cost. I sympathize with the course my hon. friend has taken. I should like to see an investigation held because I think it would be a warning to other companies.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No new policies are being issued in that branch, and naturally, as they diminish the assessments must increase. Where a company is carried on on the assessment plan, unless you are bringing in new blood, the assessment must increase with the diminishing number.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—The policy-holders in Canada, like myself, have been accused in remarks which were not very flattering to us, that it is all our own fault—If you had opened your eyes you would not have lost so much money. It is through your ignorance that you have lost your money. Taking my own case as an example, I had a policy in 1885 for $5,000. In 1890 I took another policy for $5,000. That made $10,000. Why did I take a second policy of $5,000. It was because of the statements which were published by the company, and which were similar to those published by the government, through the Insurance Inspector from 1885 to 1890, that the income of the company was increased from $1,669,000 to $3,027,000. It was a fine statement, enough to induce people like myself and many others to think the affairs of the company were very prosperous, and that it was very wise and proper to take additional policies in such a company. From 1885 to 1890 it had increased its business by $1,358,000. With that increase of income you will admit these statements which were in accordance with the statements published by the inspector, were of a nature tempting enough to induce us to have confidence in that company. In 1892 I took another policy of $2,000. Why? Because I was seduced by these statements which were approved, as I have just said, by the government or by the officer representing the government. Under such conditions who can be blamed? Those who had confidence in the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company have been deceived. Was it not natural for those that were in that company to think that its affairs were in a good condition? If there is an investigation, would it not be proper to obtain from Mr. Fitzgerald, the insurance inspector, the reports of the company, so as to know how it is that such statements were published, and how it is that in 1892 there was a surplus big enough to induce us to increase our policies and two or three years afterwards that they were obliged to raise our assessments to such an extent that we were compelled to drop our policies because we were unable to pay.

When I commenced to pay, I paid $14 for each $5,000 per month, and consequently $28 every two months. In 1897 or 1898, I am not very sure which, the assessment was raised to $68, and even $70, every two months, and I was told that I could not hope it would remain there, that the probability was I would have to pay a still larger amount, so that in reality it was impossible for me to meet the increased assessment. In view of these facts the policy-holders of this company have a right to come before parliament and ask for some protection for those who are still in that company, and who naturally expect that when this Bill is passed, it will make their position stronger. They have learned a lesson, and if for that alone it will do good. It is this, that in future we will be more inclined to insure in Canadian companies, and put our money into Canadian institutions which are sounder and which offer us more protection than United States institutions. It will teach us in the future to be more patriotic and to put our money into British or Canadian companies.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Cobourg)—It was not my purpose to make any remarks on the question now before this House, but the debate has taken such a turn that I feel I ought to give the reasons for the vote which I may be called upon shortly to give, and in order to clearly make up my mind what vote I shall give I must first settle to my own satisfaction what is the real question before the House. As I understand it, it is not a question whether the insurance company has been guilty of the high crimes and misdemeanours which have been charged against them. I have no sympathy in this matter one way of the other. I have tried to preserve an open mind, and no man must impugn my motives for the vote which I shall give, because I shall give it from thoroughly conscientious convictions of duty. Strong statements and allegations have been made during the course of this discussion, and one would be almost more than human to listen to the statements that have been made without being more or less biased and influenced by them. But I shall try not to be influenced. I always listen to a statement, having in mind before deciding that there is another side; but I am not called upon now to take that view. The question is, shall there be a reference of this question to a committee. The question I want to answer is what we in the legal profession say cui bono—for what good. Suppose all these allegations and strong statements are proven right up to the hilt, would it better what has been done ? That is the point. I do not object to the length of time nor the expense of a long inquiry, but I do regard as vital and a pivotal point, in my judgment, that after a long and expensive inquiry has been made, even supposing the allegations and statements made here are established in fact and so reported, cui bono still comes up.

Hon Mr. LANDRY—Could the license be suspended ?

Hon. Mr. KERR—What good would it do ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Could the license be suspended ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Cobourg)—I suppose it might be, but that is not the way to work out the remedy here. In saying that, I want to add that there is no gentleman in this chamber or out of it whom I feel so pained to differ from as the hon. gentleman who has presented this case before us. We are old friends and acquaintances, and I like him as a good fellow, and he is no doubt discharging what he believes to be a public duty. He has certainly made out a very strong ex parte case, but after all, according to my view, this is not the better way to get at the bottom of this matter. The better way is provided by the Bill which will be presented to us for our consideration. I do not know anything about that Bill. I will try to know a good deal about it before voting for it or against it, but I will deal with that when it comes up. I do not see that any great public benefit would result from our having a committee and these allegations and statements inquired into by that committee. The question will just resolve itself in the end to this cui bono—what good is it. It will not undo the past, and it will not punish the wrong-doers. We must not forget that we are here as a parliamentary body, not as a court of law. The courts of our country have abundant jurisdiction to inquire into and punish fraud, perjury and iniquities. The functions of this body are of a wholly different character. I shall feel the greatest possible reluctance in voting against this motion for the reasons I have given. I have to vote one way or the other, and I shall vote fearlessly, believing that the vote I will give is the one I ought to record as a senator, and it will be in the direction indicated by the hon. Secretary of State, who has given his reasons. My mind was made up long before I heard his statement, but I was glad to have my view confirmed by the position the government take in this matter.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—Like the senator from Cobourg, I have an open mind in this matter, and one or two things would help me to decide how I should vote. The hon. Secretary of State has said that no good could come of this investigation, that no relief could be afforded the parties who have been policy-holders in this company. If the company were to act in their own best interests ; if they believe they are above suspicion, they would court investigation into this question ; but they are not taking that course. If no good is to come out of the investigation, then I would feel like saying that the investigation should not be made. It is clear that the company do not want an exposure of how its business has been managed, and the public could protect themselves by having no business relations with the company. If no good can come out of the investigation, then I would not like to have the expense of an investigation incurred. The government have a fund deposited with them and if that fund could be divided amongst the policy-holders it would be some help. Strong allegations have been made here and sent broadcast over the country. If the company could by an investigation prove that these charges were without foundation, then an investigation would be in their interest. The hon. gentleman from De Lanaudière asked the hon. member who introduced this motion if there was any judgment pending against this company in Canada, emphasizing the word Canada. He raised the suspicion in my mind that there might be judgments against the company outside of Canada.

Hon. Mr. DUNDURAND—No, there are not.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—If he knows that there are judgments any where against this company, the hon. member who introduced the motion should tell us. I do not belong to the legal profession, but I know what a short time it would take to have a transcript of that judgment sent to this country, and if there were any assets of the company in Canada how easily they could be reached. We should know this before we are called upon to vote. If the hon. gentleman who introduced the motion knows of any judgment against this company in Canada or elsewhere he should let us know. I should like to know from the Secretary of State if the deposit in the hands of the government could not be divided amongst those who have been taking out insurance policies believing the company to be on a sound and substantial basis, when they find now that it is insolvent, if it is insolvent. The hon. senator from Toronto quoted the statute to show that it is the duty of the superintendent of insurance to investigate the affairs of these companies and ascertain if they are insolvent or not. If this company is not solvent, has Mr. Fitzgerald done his duty ? I should like to know these things. If we are not to have an investigation we should at least have this information.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is a very great misconception as to the position of the several parties. The assessment class in this company do not share in the profits of the company. They are a class separate to themselves. The clause of the Act provides that for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the section separate and distinct registers and books of account shall be opened and kept, showing respectively all policies issued and business transacted by such company after the date mentioned in the notice, and all policies and business transacted before such date, and such books and registers shall show the moneys, assets and securities pertaining to the said respective portions of such business, and the assets and business shall be kept absolutely separate and distinct and shall not be available for any policy of the company issued on the assessment plan. The policies on the assessment plan paid a very small premium, and in that way there was an inducement held out to people to insure. Years ago people saw the failure of that principle, so no new members joined, and for years the company have not been issuing policies, and the unfortunate policyholders coming in get no benefit from the assessment plan or from the issue of the ordinary policies. The company are making money ; they have a surplus, but it is not for the benefit of this unfortunate class. Parliament said that the classes should be kept distinct, and the assessed class are a body by themselves. I see no way by which we can help them except by an offer, as I understand the object of this proposed legislation is, to value their present policies and give them a straight policy in the company.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is the Bill before the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, the proposed Bill. That is the only way I see they can be helped. We would be all very anxious to help them.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—You are all helping the company.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The company may be making money and the people in this particular class get no benefit whatever from it, because they are a class by themselves. As each member dies there is an assessment on that class to which they belong, and, as no new blood is coming in, naturally the assessment must become higher and higher each year. That must be the effect of it. It is a failure unfortunately. There is one company that has made a success of it, but it is simply because there have been energetic men at the head of it, and they are constantly bringing in new capital. If a thousand die in the year, and two thousand are added, the assessment plan is a success ; but if a thousand die and their places are not taken by others, it is clear that those remaining must be heavily assessed. There are fewer to share in the loss, and consequently it must be very heavy and ruinous.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The assessment plan provides, as you all know, for mutual assessments to cover the death losses of the year. It was assumed when a policy is issued for the purpose of collecting a present premium that that sum was sufficient, and it was supposed that that would continue to be sufficient. If it was not sufficient it is perfectly plain there must be more money contributed somewhere. Now in this case, so far as Canada is concerned, there have been insurances to a large amount, but the volume has been reduced and there is now about $8,000,000 of insurance on the assessment plan in Canada. There are deposits made with the government to the amount of $268,000—there was $228,000 when the matter was discussed before. That has been increased to the extent of $40,000 since.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That is not correct. The minister here said himself there was only part of that for the assessment class.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It was $228,000 that was stated before. That is security for the payment of policies on the assessment plan, to keep them alive—that is to say, where the holder of an assessment policy dies, his representatives have the security of that deposit in the hands of the government that they will get the insurance. Now, just work that out on a business like this, a diminishing business. Unless some change is made and security given that the policy can be kept alive at a living rate, the result will be policies will drop out from death or from lapses, and gradually that will go down, and as it goes down and deaths are more frequent on that list the assessments will have to be larger. Further work that out and it goes down, to put it into a concrete case there are at last two men, and when the last man is left alive he has to pay the whole sum that is due for the former member's insurance. I am pointing that out to show how it works down gradually as the numbers are reduced the assessments must be increased. Gradually, as the deaths occur, the amounts must be raised larger and larger so that the present members will be forced out, and when they are forced out what becomes of the deposit? By the law it continues the property of those who are continuing, as their security, and after all the continuing members have been paid, the balance goes to the company on the other side of the line that is entitled to it. That is what the law is on that, so that you will see while there is a large deposit here, and while there are a large number of members in, it is important that a change should be made to secure the continuance to those people of the largest proportion of that insurance deposit. The question is asked, are there any judgments against the company, I have made that inquiry and I am assured—I think it appears in the statement before us—that there are no unsatisfied judgments against the company.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That is not correct.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—There may be in England.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—There are in Tennesse and Kentucky.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The company has withdrawn from doing business in some of those states, but the statement is that there are no unsatisfied judgments. This much I know from the report of the department in New York, that there is in the hands of the company over and above their obligations—I do not say their policy obligations—a surplus of $454,000.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is that a reserve fund?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—You can call it what you please. It is a surplus, and therefore the company is not insolvent. There is no bankruptcy where there is a surplus.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—Does that refer to the assessment plan?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Yes, it is on the assessment plan. On the level plan in this country where the policies have been changed to the level plan, the government reserve is put up and that amounted to $40,000 at the time we were discussing it before and that has been increased, from the statements made here to-day, by a considerable sum. So long as there are Canadian liabilities these policies are kept alive by the companies assessment payment, and so long as that is so, this reserve fund in the hands of the government cannot be withdrawn or used for liabilities in the United States.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There may be no unsettled judgments, but there are cases pending against the company not only in England but in Canada. There was one argued not many days ago in the Supreme Court, and we should be careful how we pass a law to wipe out those cases.

However, we can discuss that later when the Bill comes before us.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière) moved :

That all the words after 'that' be struck out and that the following words be substituted therefore :—The position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York, in Canada, be considered by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, with full powers to send for persons and papers and to take evidence under oath and to report as they think proper as to the best means of protecting Canadian policy-holders.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order ; the hon. gentleman has moved the adjournment of the debate and he has spoken on the subject. He has no right to move an amendment.

Hon Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—I am sorry to contradict the hon. gentleman, but I did not speak on the question ; I simply gave way to the hon. member from Toronto.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In moving that the debate be resumed the hon. gentleman did the same thing as if he had made a speech.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—If the Secretary of State had not risen to speak I should have risen myself. I gave way to the Secretary of State and then when it came to my turn I gave way to the hon. gentleman from Toronto.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman should remember that it was himself that moved the adjournment of the debate the other day, and the debate was adjourned on a motion put by him.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—In order that the matter may be thoroughly put before the House I will move the amendment. It is in accordance with what I said in this House when the subject was under discussion. I took the ground that in the interests of the company and of this House, the subject should be dealt with by the general committee, and if it is out of order for my hon. friend from de Lanaudière to move the amendment, I take the liberty to move it myself, feeling satisfied that those who complain against the company, and those who support the company, will get just as much consideration as if the investigation were conducted by the proposed select committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman I believe has already spoken on this motion.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I have not spoken on this question since the motion was put to the House. I advised my hon. friend from Rothesay against referring the matter to a special committee, believing that the matter will be fairly dealt with by the Committee on Banking and Commerce. I see no reason why it should be dealt with in a special manner any more than other business brought before this House. I think I am within my rights in moving the amendment.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman admits that he has already spoken on the question.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Not on this question.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—This question has been before the House from the beginning of the session and has been postponed from day to day.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I have a right to move an amendment to the motion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No.

The SPEAKER—As a question of order has been raised, the hon. gentleman from St. Catharines (Hon. Mr. Gibson) has not spoken since the motion was made by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay. It will be remembered there was a very irregular discussion. The hon. gentleman for Rothesay spoke three or four times before he put his motion, and it was at that time that the hon. gentleman who moves the amendment spoke, but he has not spoken since the motion was put. The question is therefore, on the amendment of the hon. gentleman from St. Catharines.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I am not prepared to accept the dictation of the hon. gentleman from Toronto.

At six o'clock, the Speaker left the chair.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the hon. gentleman from Rothesay makes his speech in reply I wish to raise a point of order. I want to call the attention of the House to a point of order that I raised at six o'clock, with reference to the fact that the amendment put into the hands of the chair was presented by my hon. friend the member for Lincoln. We were told at the time by the hon. Speaker that he was in order because he had made his remarks previous to the question being put. If I refer to the Senate Debates No. 17, page 192, I find the following :

The SPEAKER—On the whole, the most convenient way is for some hon. gentleman to move that the debate be adjourned. This motion has been standing now for several days. The hon. gentleman has not made his motion till to-day. This is his third address, and the hon. Secretary of State wishes the motion should stand again. The better way is for some hon. gentleman to move the adjournment of the debate.

After that, after the Speaker declared that the motion had been put by my hon. friend the hon. gentleman from De Lorimier spoke and then I find that Mr. Gibson made his speech. He spoke as follows :

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I have several letters of complaint with regard to this company, and have been quietly remaining in my place in the House to see what offer would be made by some one in behalf of the company.

The statement by my hon. friend from Lincoln is on page 199 of the Debates. So, as a matter of fact, the speech of the hon. gentleman from Lincoln was made after the motion had been put, and I maintain my point of order that he has no right to move an amendment now.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—But my hon. friend will find that immediately after the Speaker made the observations at page 199, Mr. Casgrain moved that the debate be adjourned until the 19th May, and then the discussion proceeded on the motion for adjournment. That is not what is before us now. It is the main motion we are dealing with now.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not think the hon. gentleman is very serious in his objections. He must know what the meaning of a motion for an adjournment of the debate is.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When a point of order is once settled, even if settled irregularly and the House has acquiesced in it, I think it is unusual to raise it again. It is very embarrassing. As a mere matter of convenience to members I would ask whether it would not be better, in a matter of this kind, that there should be an opportunity of voting on the question. My hon. friend can scarcely raise a point of order after a decision has been given and the House has acquiesced. I do not think he can well go back and say the Speaker was wrong.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. leader of this House will permit me I will tell him that I raised the objection because I was told the hon. gentleman from Lincoln had not spoken when the motion was before the House. I want to put myself right before this House and to prove that I was correct in raising that point of order, but I have no objection and I now withdraw the point of order.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The House has to face a charge that I have made from my seat in this chamber against the New York Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company, and I would ask the House what there is in the defence that has been presented. A defence has been urged by two or three hon. gentlemen with great ability, who do not hold the same views as myself. My hon. friend from Toronto stated that he would deal with me. Well, I am able to deal with him. I like to hear the hon. gentleman and I hope that he may deal with me. It was not a very nice suggestion to make, because I am here placed before the high court of parliament with so many legal gentlemen against me.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No, I am not against the hon. gentleman at all.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I did not mention the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman indicated me with his eye-glasses.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My eye-glasses go all round. I am a layman fighting for the poor people who have lost their money. The government have nothing to do with it. Why should they ? It would imply otherwise that the government were interested in holding them up and God knows I do not wish to say so. I have every confidence in the hon. Secretary of State, but why all this fight to hold up a rotten institution ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not defending the company in any way.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. Secretary of State is quite right, but I desire to have the matter referred to a committee of this House, and I suppose any committee we would form would be composed of men of intelligence. Certainly that committee must be trusted by the country, and must be trusted by both political parties or they should not be here. However, there should not be any politics in this House. I thought the speech of the hon. gentleman from Toronto was a kaleidoscope. He first of all said this matter should not go to a committee, and then said it should go to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and with what object? Did he distrust the men I named? Is it because of the question of wealth, and that wealth is to govern? Not so for me. I see hon. gentlemen around me who were in the Commons with me thirty years ago. They may not agree with my principles or with my procedure.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We agree every time.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—We do and we have made a great country, and we are not too prejudiced to allow somebody else to build on it. I thought my hon. friend had made a case. He has the reputation of being an able lawyer, but he has a hard fight. He said this should not be sent to my committee. Why? Because the committee I named are not responsible? Frenchmen, Irishmen, Englishmen, Catholic or Protestant, whatever you choose to call them, but he says to send it to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto).—I do not think I said to send this resolution to that committee. I said that when the Bill which I was introducing came before the House I proposed to move that it be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I accept what my hon. friend says, but I say send it to a committee and if the hon. gentlemen I name are not satisfactory, then send it to another five members, but do not send it to the Banking and Commerce Committee. My hon. friend said that there was danger. Danger to whom? Danger to the company? I think there is. Danger to the poor policy-holder in Canada? I think there is. I have made a specific charge which has not been denied. My hon. friend stated that Mr. Wells had bought up the House of Commons with $10,000.

Hon. Mr. KERR—No, I said Mr. Wells said that in 1885 he had bought them up.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman said furthermore, that he had paid a member of the government.

Hon. Mr. KERR—No, I said that Mr. Wells stated so.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Is that not a serious charge to make?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Nobody believes him.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman said that Mr. Wells had bought them up.

Hon. Mr. KERR—No, I do not wish that to go on record. I read the statement that Mr. Wells had said that he spent the money in a certain way.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman from Toronto is placing himself in a special position of pleader and defender for them?

Hon. Mr. KERR—No, no.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—What is the hon. gentleman?

Hon. Mr. KERR—A member of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman from Toronto has advocated ideas and put forth statements sufficient to plead their case. Is that what we want to do here? Who would have thought we would have hon. gentlemen standing up and advocating the rights of this company when we find so many people in Canada complaining of ill-treatment. We should be able to say that the Senate has done what they could for them. My hon. friend from Toronto says that we should not send this matter to a special committee, that they are no good.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I have not said that.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—It means that.

Hon. Mr. KERR—No. I do not wish words put in my mouth.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I take it there are no politics in this House. We are here to serve the public, and we should deal with questions that come before us on their merits. Why does the hon. gentleman want to send this matter to the Committee on Banking and Commerce? Is it a high court tribunal? I cannot understand the opposition to my proposal. My hon. friend said there were no judgments against the company. I have a letter, received since he spoke, from North Carolina, which reads as follows:

I have referred your letter to some attorneys in this state who have a number of judgments against this company.

My hon. friend asked me in a very clever way, 'Where are they in Canada?' They are all over the states; they are in liquidation in Kentucky, and they have judgments against them all round. My hon. friend said that the government required the company to make certain legal deposits. He did not tell you these deposits were only for a certificate to do business. He did not tell you they might require them to put up more, but what was it put up for? It was put up simply to give them a license to do business. Perhaps my hon. friend would not like to answer the question as a legal gentleman, if that company went into insolvency to-morrow where would the deposit be?

Hon. Mr. KERR—It would remain in Canada.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—For what?

Hon. Mr. KERR—Security for Canadian policy-holders. It has been so held in our courts.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—What have the Committee on Banking and Commerce to do with this matter? If the argument of the hon. gentleman is right, there should be no committee at all. The hon. gentleman has told the House that it is a matter for the department—that the department have good men who are thoroughly responsible. If so, why should the hon. gentleman seek to send it to another committee instead of the committee I have named?

Hon. Mr. KERR—I have not said anything about this motion going to any committee at all.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I took down what the hon. gentleman said.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I said that I proposed to move that the Bill I have introduced should be sent to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and that committee could then deal with the matter.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman's Bill is another matter, and I do not think it should be introduced into this debate, because it should be dealt with on its merits. When that Bill is under consideration I shall be prepared to meet it. The question now before the House is whether we shall investigate or not. The hon. gentleman said this association were able to meet their liabilities. Does he tell us now that they are able to meet their liabilities and are doing it?

Hon. Mr. KERR—I will say, from the investigation I have made I believe they are able to meet all their liabilities and have a surplus over.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Then the hon. gentleman is standing in the light of an advocate here. What was he doing investigating their liabilities?

Hon. Mr. KERR—I do not know whether this discussion is quite in order, but I will simply say that this is a matter before the House, and I think it behooves every member to investigate and learn as much as he can about matters which come before us.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That is very good in theory, but we do not often find lawyers out looking for outside business. Then I ask my hon. friend why did he bring in the Bill? I am not bringing in Bills for everybody. How did he get that Bill? Who drew it? I knew who drew it.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I did not.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I will prove it before I am through. The hon. gentleman said the company were able to meet all their liabilities. Where did the hon. gentleman get that statement? Who told him they could meet their liabilities? Can my hon. friend tell me that? My hon. friend will not answer that; but he said that Mr. Wells' statements were wrong. Mr. Wells is favourably known in Canada. I will produce Mr. Wells' letter from the company by which they offered to buy him off if he would accept, but he would not take it. My hon. friend has made a very poor defence, I think. He said there were differences between Mr. Wells and the other officers of the company. Well, that is only special pleading. I have made specific charges in this honourable House and arguments are being advanced to defeat the object I have in view. If my motion is lost, the House must take the responsibility. What have the government to do with this? The government are leaders of this great country and I think they are doing everything that is right. I believe they are trying at any rate to do what is right, but why should they bolster up this institution unless there are some interests behind it of which I know nothing. I am endeavouring to do my duty towards the people of Canada, honestly at least if not intelligently. I have been seeking for deliverance from distress, for protection and justice against the despoilers of widows and orphans of Canada and their homes. If this honourable Senate refuses my request for a special committee the responsibility is with them. The Committee on Banking and Commerce may be all right, but I ask for a small committee to deal with the matter. The responsibility of rejecting this motion must rest more particularly upon those who are opposing my motion and, whatever they may do, I must stand or fall by it. I am fighting the battle for a lot of defenceless people, and if my hon. friend and those who are with him undertake to accept the responsibility of burking this inquiry, well and good. I am one against eight or ten lawyers—I do not hesitate to say it—employed against me.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Employed against you?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Yes. The hon. gentleman does not want me to say too much. There are eight or ten lawyers fighting against me. If my feeble voice in favour of the widows and orphans of the country is to be smothered by hon. gentlemen who have no interest at all, legal men, great legal minds who would not accept a retainer from anybody, if the House is going to turn down the people of Canada, all the millions that are in it, let them take the responsibility; I am out of it. I believe that I have the country and the people behind me and the House must do what they consider fit. If the House is prepared to accept the responsibility of turning down the people who are crying out for us to help them, then I can say nothing more.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—After listening to the declaration by the hon. Secretary of State as to the result of the appointment of a committee, I do not well see how the hon. gentleman could support the amendment to the main motion. As I understood him correctly, the Secretary of State declared that no possible good could result from any report which might be made from a select committee to be appointed to inquire into the character, conduct and standing of the New York Mutual Reserve Life Association. Now, if that be correct, does it not suggest itself to the hon. gentleman that he should also oppose the motion which has been made by the hon. gentleman from Lincoln, because if no good can result from the investigation of a special committee, certainly no good can result from any report which may be made after the question has been considered by the Banking and Commerce Committee. Then, if the House recognizes the propriety of an investigation at all, it would be much better that that investigation should be held by a select committee. If the House do not approve of the names suggested by the mover of the resolution, then they might suggest others. The Banking and Commerce Committee consists of thirty members. Supposing they are all present how long is it going to take to make the investigation which is suggested? There can be but one result that would follow by reference to the Bankng and Commerce Committee, and that would be the appointment by them of a sub-committee to make the inquiry and the investigation into the matters which would be referred to it. I am sure my hon. friend knows enough of parliamentary practice and of the workings of committees to fully know that no thirty gentlemen of this House would devote the time necessary to an investigation of that character. If the statement made by the hon. Secretary of State is to be accepted as correct, then there should be no investigation by a committee at all. You should take either one course or the other. But serious charges have been made by an hon. gentleman upon his own responsibility as a member of this House, and the question for the Senate to decide is whether those charges should be investigated. I have read with a very good deal of interest the defence that has been circulated by the company. It is a very able document, and it contains a very great deal of information, but I venture the assertion that any hon. gentleman would have to devote a great deal of time to the study of that document before he would thoroughly understand it. I believe it took some two or three weeks to prepare it, and although I spent an hour or two last night and some portion of this morning to a study of it, I must frankly confess that I felt convinced that I should have to read it again very carefully before I should be able to thoroughly and completely understand the different points which have been brought forward. There is a general denial in that document of nearly all the charges which have been made. There are a large number of figures given which would be utterly useless to the uninitiated until he had had an opportunity of investigating the books of the company or getting some expert to go through the books and make a report. The hon. gentleman from Toronto said in the remarks which he made to-night, that it took the inspector of the insurance companies in the state of New York and twelve assistants three long months to investigate the charges which had been made against this company, and their report was very strongly in favour of the company, and against the gentleman who made the charges. However, many facts have come to light since the inauguration of this discussion, and in the interest of the company itself, it does seem to me that they should seek a full investigation into the matter. It has been intimated to me by those who are promoting the Bill and those who are interested in the company, that they should be heard before the investigation takes place. I assured that gentleman that from my knowledge of the conduct and procedure of the Banking and Commerce Committee, that if it should go there they would be asked before anything further was done to make their statement. That would be the only fair and equitable position to take, because when charges are made against an individual, under our law and our ideas of right and wrong, that party should have an opportunity of defending himself before he is condemned, and the company need have no apprehension of being deprived of the opportunity of placing their case fully before the special committee or before the Banking Committee. I should be very much surprised, if that special committee, if appointed, were to refuse that right, and I would be one of the first in the Senate to direct that committee as to what they should do, in case they should take any arbitrary position of that kind. I do not desire at this moment to enter into the discussion of my hon. friend's Bill. We will deal with that when the second reading is moved and there is a reference of it to a committee; but, I do wish to point out to the Secretary of State, and I repeat it again with due respect, that if his position is right in one case it also applies to the other, and if he calls upon his supporters to vote down the motion for a special committee, I take it for granted he would do the same with the other. There is one remark made by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay in which I heartily concur. This is a matter in which politics should not enter for a moment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a question affecting the vital interest of every man and woman in Canada who holds a policy in that company and we should deal with it as far as our means will permit, upon a fair and equitable basis. If that can be done best by committee let us have the committee. If the House says the Banking and Commerce Committee is the proper place to send it, let it go there and then the chairman and the members of the committee will have to take such means as are thought best in order to bring out the facts with as little expense and as little trouble as possible. If the committee is to be appointed I certainly would favour the special committee for the reasons I have given rather than a reference to the Banking and Commerce Committee or a sub-committee of that body.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In answer to the hon. gentleman's inquiry, there are now two propositions before the chamber. One is to appoint a special committee with instructions to do certain things. Their duty, when appointed, would be to make full inquiry into the subject referred to them. The other is a very much more modified proposition, which I will read for the information of my hon. friend so that he will see the marked difference between the two:

The position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada to be considered by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

They are not specially directed to take any proceedings, unless their judgment leads them in that direction. I had in view, as we all necessarily have in view, the proposed Bill that will be referred to that committee, and it will be quite proper that the House should express its clear opinion, if they thought it proper and consistent with the evidence before them, to hold a fuller inquiry than is usually made on Bills of that kind, they are empowered to do so, and they are to send for persons and papers. I see no inconsistency in my supporting the amendment rather than the proposition. One is a very great modification of the other. I can assure my hon. friend I have not asked a single member of this chamber to coincide with my view. I have simply expressed frankly and honestly the opinion I hold.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is quite sufficient.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have expressed the opinion that it was entirely foreign to any inquiry which ought to be taken up by this Senate and, therefore, my course was to support the amendment.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman says modified—why modified ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I expressed my willingness to do so if I saw any possible way of helping the unfortunate people who are in this trouble, but seeing that we have no possible power to help them ourselves we cannot supply money from the treasury of this country to assist them——

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Nobody asks that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is utterly preposterous. They have chosen their position themselves. They were tempted to go into this company because it had an attraction for them. It was a pure piece of gambling. You might just as well come to the rescue of persons who have lost money on the stock exchange. It was pure gambling their going into insurance on that principle. They were attracted by the small premium they had to pay, and the hope that they would not be assessed for any considerable sums.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Why have so many defended it ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No doubt there are many who would like to escape from the consequences of their mistake.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Why are there so many advocates on the floor of this House in favour of the company and against the public ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no regard whatever for the company. I would not insure or advise anybody to insure with them.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Why back them up now ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not backing them up. I am simply defending the interests of the people and the honour of parliament.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The original motion says 'a select committee to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association in Canada.' The amended motion substitutes the words 'consider the standing' instead of 'investigate the standing.' I think that the hon. gentleman will find the amendment is just as broad as the original motion, because it goes to this full extent 'considered by the standing committee on Banking and Commerce, with full powers to send for persons, papers, &c., to investigate and report as they think proper as to the best means'—

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are not directed or instructed to do it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, they are directed to consider and do what they think proper, and to send for persons and papers and take evidence under oath and to report. I must confess I see very little difference between the two motions. One is to 'investigate,' the other is to 'consider and investigate.'

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Not necessarily.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It was not my intention to take part in this debate. I had decided to leave that to the older heads of this honourable body, and especially those who have suffered at the hands of the company, but I find that the hands of the company are becoming a little stronger than the hands of their victims in this House, and as a senator and a man representing public feeling and public interest in this country, I cannot tolerate anything of that kind. My name was mentioned in connection with this special committee and I decided to remain absolutely independent and impartial, notwithstanding friendly relations with certain members who are making a fight against the company. My determination was made to see that justice should be done both to the company and to the policy-holders, but for certain reasons that I cannot fathom or explain, hon. senators in this House are so inconsistent and so contradictory that it is an astonishing thing to me, a young senator. There are hon. members of this House who have protested against the investigation before a special committee who are willing now to swallow an investigation before a general committee. What is the difference? Is it that the special committee are unworthy to have the interests of this investigation confided to them? If so, I am prepared to withdraw my name from the committee, but in doing so I lodge my protest before this honourable House in regard to this matter. Either the company is right or the company is wrong. Either the hon. senator from Rothesay is right or he is wrong in his charges against the company. If the company is right it is their duty to second the motion of the hon. senator from Rothesay and demand an investigation. If the company is wrong it is their privilege and within their power to try and cover their tracks. I do not know in what position they stand to-day, I have heard arguments for and declarations against. I am not prepared to say who is right. I am still, notwithstanding the statement of my hon. friend from Rothesay to-night, with an open mind. I am here on the floor of this House to render justice to whom justice is due. I cannot understand, and I wish an explanation of the fact, why hon. senators of this House wish to take the investigation out of the hands of five hon. live senators and put it into the hands of a committee of dead senators. The investigation is right or it is wrong. If it is right and necessary, leave it in the hands of the special committee, because I agree with the hon. senator from Rothesay in thinking it is the only means whereby you can get at the facts. If you hand this investigation over to the general committee it will lie dormant, and on these grounds, as one of the special committee named, I am prepared to withdraw my name and ask the mover to substitute for it the name of any other senator. But I have this to say; I find it very strange when an hon. member of this House rises in his place and makes certain accusations against a company which is chartered under our law, that all of a sudden there are several members who rise and defend the accused. What is their duty in defending the accused at this stage of affairs, based upon? An hon. senator stakes his character and reputation upon the charges he is making. The duty of this honourable House is to give him an opportunity to prove his allegations, and if he is not able to do so, then it is time for the Senate to take action in regard to him, but not to refuse him an opportunity to prove what he has charged against the company. Under the circumstances, if it is right to send this matter for investigation before the general committee, it is also right to send it before a special committee, and I shall vote for the special committee with a request that the hon. member from Rothesay will move to withdraw my name from that committee.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I wish to give my reasons for the vote I am about to record. I cannot agree in many respects with the statement made by the leader of this House. If the one committee involves an expense which ought not to be borne by this House, then I think the other committee will be equally expensive and no more efficient than the one that was first spoken of. Again, it strikes me that if you are going to have a committee, you ought to have a committee subject to and under the control of the House where they can report frequently and have orders issued by the House to the committee. I understand that if that first committee spoken of is to act, it is their bounden duty to report from time to time to this House and receive instructions what they are to do, and therefore this enormous expense spoken of as unbearable by the country, would be obviated and prevented. A remark made by the hon. leader of this House was that if people were such fools as to insure with a company of this kind they ought to suffer. Hon. gentlemen, I understand this, that in 1885 they came to parliament and asked for an amendment to the General Insurance Act to give them a standing in the country, whereby they could do a certain line of business. Are farmers and farmers' wives to be stigmatized to-day as being ignorant when parliament deliberately and with intent placed that company in a position where, through its agents, it could mislead these people ? Are its victims to be told to-day that there is no redress, that nothing can be done to relieve them ? I say it is a travesty on justice and we here are bound under obligations to do that which will as far as possible remedy the evil perpetrated by the agents of this company. It is said that no good can arise from the investigation. Is it not a reason why, if there be wrong-doing, we should endeavour to get at the wrong-doers and expose them, so that they will not continue their wrong-doing any longer. If we allow it to pass on an occasion like this what is there to prevent them still continuing it ? If this company have entered into obligations and have failed to keep them, they should be punished either by putting them into insolvency or in some other way. They should not be allowed to come to parliament and ask for new powers, so that after scuttling one or two companies they may scuttle others under authority from this House. We are here under obligations to do something on behalf of people who have suffered. It seems rather a reflection on the members of this select committee, that they should be told they are not competent to investigate this matter, and then to say that it must be placed in the hands of the Committee on Banking and Commerce. Have we heard one word derogatory to the standing of the members of this House named on the select committee ? We have not, and until I am shown that that committee is not entitled to the confidence of the House, I would be reflecting upon them if I in any way supported a motion to substitute for them another committee. Feeling thus and looking at the matter from every standpoint, I believe that the select committee will do the work far better and more efficiently, and report more regularly to this House, than the general committee and we may be able to get at justice in a proper manner. Is it right that hundreds of people from one end of Canada to the other should be appealing to this parliament for relief, and that we should turn a deaf ear to them ? True, the Secretary of State says nothing can be done by parliament for them. But the Secretary of State and the government of the day ought to do something, as they have led the people to believe by incorporating the company, and by accepting the security deposited with the government, that there would be a guarantee.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—My hon. friend shakes his head. Why did they give them a new clothing to go on and do business ? The hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. Kerr) is introducing a Bill for that purpose. You may put new clothes on them, but it will be the old stuff still—the Mutual Reserve Association. I therefore believe it would be doing wrong on the present occasion to transfer this investigation to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and feeling that way, I shall vote against the amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I rise to explain ; I thought I had made myself perfectly clear. I said one committee was appointed specifically to do certain work. The Bill introduced by my hon. friend from Toronto will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce and they could consider whether they should go on with the inquiry. I had not the most remote idea that the Committee on Banking and Commerce would undertake it, because I think, on reflection, they would come to the conclusion that it was not within their province and not a proper inquiry to make.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Then the hon. gentleman wished to lead the House to believe that the Banking and Commerce Committee would get rid of it ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is my opinion.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Then you send it to the Banking and Commerce Committee to get rid of it ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I felt that when the matter was more coolly and calmly discussed they would reject the idea of making an inquiry, because it is foreign to this Senate. The parties who took out policies knew what they were doing. They chose to make a gamble of it. There was no deception or fraud about it. Persons chose to enter into a foolish contract, under a belief that they were getting cheap insurance and as years went on they found they were mistaken. As one hon. gentleman explained to me, he was tempted to take $10,000 because the premiums at first were $200 a year, but as deaths occurred his assessments were increased to $400 and up to $800, so he dropped out. I have endeavoured to explain that this company is no longer taking policies of that kind. They have long since abandoned the assessment system. Nobody asks now for anything but a straight policy from this company. The assessment system has been abandoned, and it is because it has been abandoned that the unfortunate people who hold policies under the assessment plan are squeezed for such high amounts. Parliament cannot help them. You cannot get the government of this country to take money out of the treasury to pay them. It is a contract between the individual policy-holder and the company.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend is resorting to special pleading about assessments. That has nothing to do with the question. What we have to confine ourselves to this evening is whether this honourable body will allow the inquiry to be made by a special committee or by some other committee ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I intend to vote for the amendment and I shall give my reasons for doing so. The hon. gentleman from Rothesay has in five or six speeches stated his grievances against the company, and has based his whole demand for this committee upon the fact that there are Canadian policy-holders who are suffering, who have either been obliged to drop their policies or submit to extortionate assessments. He says we should come to their rescue. I claim that this motion does not go far enough. He wants to find out where the money has gone, and whether the expenditure has been wise or unwise ; how much was paid for salaries, &c. I am not so much interested to find where the money has gone as to know what we can do to help the present policy-holders and perhaps the lapsed policy-holders. We have a Bill before this House which proposes to cure the evil which the hon. gentleman from Rothesay complained of. He wants to probe into the administration of the Mutual Reserve Life Association, while the hon. gentleman from Toronto brings in a Bill by which he proposes to help the policy-holders. I say let us investigate with this one end in view, curing the evil and coming to the rescue of those unfortunate people. If the proposal of the hon. gentleman from Toronto, which we will discuss to-morrow, is not satisfactory, it can be amended or set aside. It is a public Bill, but it can be sent to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and then we will meet not only the Bill but the company itself and take whatever course we deem proper to investigate the whole affairs of the company and apply a remedy. We will demand certified statements which will be satisfactory to us to be acted upon. We will get all the necessary information for the purpose of framing a Bill which will relieve these people. The stand which I take is the result of an ordinary process of reasoning. It is needless to say I am not interested to the extent of being either a policy-holder, live or lapsed, because it is not necessary for a member of this House to say he is not interested in any measure before the Senate. It is always taken for granted that we are here as impartial legislators, applying our best judgment to the questions submitted to us, but there is a gentleman who is interested in this matter, who is paying a heavy tax to this company and has been obliged to drop his policy; I refer to the hon. gentleman from Mille Iles (Hon. Mr. David). He has seconded the amendment, and is satisfied that the matter should go into the Banking and Commerce Committee. I wonder if we are not entitled to our own opinions in declaring that fact, that by examining at the same time the affairs of the company to the extent that we judge proper in the committee and the remedy we need to apply, if it is not better than appointing a special committee that will investigate on lines that may not be at all satisfactory to the majority of the Senate, and at the same time allow the Banking and Commerce Committee to be seized of this Bill and attend to its own investigation in order to bring out from that committee a perfect Bill.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It may not go to that committee.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—As I said it is a public Bill, but the Banking and Commerce Committee is the only one to which it should go. The Bill cannot be referred to a special committee.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The Bill is not before us now; it is the resolution which I have submitted.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It is because there is a Bill which I intended to vote to send to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend should not prejudice himself by deciding in advance how he will vote.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I give my reasons why I intend to vote to have this matter investigated by the Committee on Banking and Commerce. The investigation should be held by the same committee that will have to deal with the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman tells us how he is going to vote on a measure which is not before us. It was only a moment ago he said he had an open mind. What conclusion are we to draw from the two statements ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—When we come to vote we must close our minds and come to a conclusion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I wish to draw attention to this fact; the hon. gentleman votes for this amendment because the other Bill, he says, will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I shall vote for that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The Bill has not been referred to that committee and we do not know whether it will be or not. If the regular course is followed, it will be referred to a committee of the whole House, because it is a public Bill, and not to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, so the reason given by the hon. member for voting for this amendment is not valid. I call the attention of the hon. leader of the Senate to this other fact, that the Mutual Reserve Association is not like other Mutual companies, and it is because it boasted not to be on the same footing that the people have been deceived. Contrary to other Mutual companies, this particular one organized a reserve fund which, in the opinion of those people, would obviate the necessity of increased assessments. A reserve fund was created for that purpose and the policy-holders were told that they would never have to suffer by the increase of the death calls, because a special reserve fund had been created to meet any such increase and in that way the present company was in a different position. The reason then given by the leader of the government for the defence of the company is not one that should commend itself to the consideration of the Senate. I wonder why the hon. gentleman from DeLorimier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand) praises his own independence so highly and his principles regarding public legislation. We must not forget that there are always very notable exceptions, and one of them was last year when the hon. member voted to set aside all those principles to prevent a political opponent from reaping the advantages created by a measure brought down by the government. So I suppose those exceptions prove a general rule.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I want to add a word to what I have said about this matter. I was very strongly inclined to vote for the amendment to send the matter to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, but now in the face of the explanation given by the Secretary of State that amendment is a mere myth. It is nothing at all. In voting to send it to the Banking and Commerce Committee I vote to stifle all investigation, because the hon. Secretary of State has told us that the Banking and Commerce Committee would not think of undertaking an investigation. I coaxed my friend here (Hon. Mr. Domville) very strongly to consent to the reference of the matter to the Committee on Banking and Commerce and I am very glad now that he did not consent. The Secretary of State asked what good can come of an investigation of this kind ? Let us extend that idea just a little. If a man burned my house and I appealed for redress to the authorities, what would I think if they replied ' What is the good of trying to find out who was the incendiary ; it will not build your house again.' If a man secretly enters your house and steals your purse and you go to the police for redress, what would you think if they replied : ' What is the good? You will never get the money back. What advantage will it be to you to hold an investigation?' We put this company in a position to do business in Canada. If, as the hon. Secretary of State says, it was a gambling concern, we were responsible for clothing the company with authority to do such a business in Canada. We should consent to give the investigation and ascertain who is responsible.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I suggested that amendment because I was sincerely convinced there would be an investigation, and I was not here when the hon. Secretary of State spoke. If I am convinced that there will be no investigation by the Committee on Banking and Commerce, I ask leave to withdraw my name from the amendment. I want to be sincere, I want to be faithful to the opinion I expressed, so that unless I have a guarantee, that an investigation will be made by the Committee on Banking and Commerce, I shall vote against the amendment.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Personally, my vote would be against both the amendment and the resolution. I am opposed to an investigation, but if the House approve of an investigation of some character I shall support the amendment instead of the resolution, not because I wish it understood in any way that I am discriminating against the personnel of the committees, for I have not analysed them at all, and I am not a member of either of them, but because I think that the hand of the one committee is tied to a definite investigation of the affairs of the company, and this House is committed to an investigation without any qualification whatever; whereas, on the other hand, the reference which is made by the amendment is to the Banking and Commerce Committee, who are to consider the position of the company in Canada and who, with regard to the position of the company in Canada are to be clothed with authority to make such investigation as may be deemed advisable, necessary and useful.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—What is the difference?

Hon. Mr. KERR—If the hon. gentleman does not see it, he will pardon me if I proceed with what I was desiring to say. I mean to say, therefore, that there is to be a definite investigation. It is to be for the Banking and Commerce Committee to consider the position, and it is for them to say how far they will go. In the other case there is no limit.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I call my hon. friend to order. He should not say there is no limit.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman has no right to interrupt.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I say the one having a definite instruction, without qualification in it at all, the other having a discretion as to the extent to which they will investigate, the latter I think is preferable, and the proper one here, because I think the end that can be attained is not what the hon. gentleman from Wellington is looking for. When a man burns down his barn and is prosecuted, convicted and sent to the penitentiary, there is nothing to be gained by the prosecution. That would be the position in this case, if the person who misappropriated the money had to be prosecuted, but if there has been misappropriation of money here, how can we send a man to the penitentiary in Canada when his head office is in New York?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Put him out of business in Canada.

Hon. Mr. KERR—Those who acted as agents in the past in this country—and there are some of them in the Senate—are not accused of having done anything that is improper in soliciting business, and representing the company here. The charges that are made here are that there has been a misappropriation of the funds in the United States by the company. But the point we have to consider now is, how far the Banking and Commerce Committee would think proper to go either with or without further instructions from this House though they are clothed with full power. The point is how far they would go, when their object would be to determine what is best for the policy-holders in Canada.

Hon. Mr. THIBAUDEAU (Rigaud)—I am very sorry that the principle of investigation has been accepted by the House apparently, because I think that the question should not be placed before the House in this way. I believe the question should be investigation or no investigation. Personally I would have voted not to have any investigation, but since the investigation principle has been accepted I think the mover is entitled to his own committee and I will vote for the motion. If the principle had not been accepted I would have voted for no investigation at all.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I want to know from the hon. Secretary of State if the Bill will be sent to the Committee on Banking and Commerce so that the committee will take into consideration the Bill and at the same time the motion which has been made by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think I mentioned very decidedly more than once that my idea in supporting the amendment was that the Bill would be sent to the Committee on Banking and Commerce and the extent of their inquiry would be in their discretion. In the other case, there was a positive direction, but if sent to the Banking and Commerce Committee it would be entirely in their discretion. My own conviction was that when they came to understand it they would only go just so far that they thought would be in the interests of the Canadian policy-holders.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Cobourg)—I crave the indulgence of the House for a few minutes to make one or two remarks. An hon. gentleman has said that those who opposed the original motion are defending the company. I deny that in toto. I am not here to defend the company or uphold anything that I think is wrong. I am here to advocate what I think is the proper course. It has been said here with great emphasis that it is a reflection upon members of this select committee not to send this inquiry to them. I deny that. I have the highest possible respect for the members suggested to act on that committee. But we have a committee which is quite competent and able to deal with the whole matter, and I shall vote to send it to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, to whom very likely the Bill now before the House will and should be sent, in order that that committee may have the whole question before it, and deal with the whole question. They will have the whole inquiry before them, and they will have the Bill before them and whatever may be the opinion of this House, so far as I am concerned as a member of the Committee on Banking and Commerce, anything that comes before that committee will be treated by me to the best of my ability with bona fides and downright earnestness. I regret to see the view that some of the hon. members take on this matter. I have heard it said: 'We might as well argue if a man burned your house down there was no use punishing him'. I do not consider that sound argument. As a lawyer having had considerable experience, I do not consider it any argument at all, and I say this with due respect. When a man commits an offence of that kind the law is enacted for the purpose of punishing him and he is tried by the machinery of the law and dealt with. This Senate has no such power, and in my view that argument is utterly no argument whatever. I want the inquiry referred with the Bill, to that large Committee on Banking and Commerce and one may be the complement of the other. I want to say that that Bill can be so framed and made so comprehensive as to deal with this whole question. That is a question this Senate can deal with, and deal with effectually, and it may be that one committee will effectually dispose of both branches of this question. I am not going to vote for no inquiry. I am going to vote to send it to the Banking and Commerce Committee, a large and intelligent committee, a committee that has a standing in this country, and a committee incapable of doing anything they do not consider as being right and in the best interest of the country.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—When the motion was placed in the Speaker's hands—and there seemed to be some difficulty as to the proper party in the House to move the amendment—I felt constrained to offer my name to the amendment, and in doing so I felt that that amendment, as I heard it read, was not for the purpose of stifling an investigation, but of sending it to the proper committee. To-night it has been expressed that the Bill which is about to be introduced by the hon. gentleman from Toronto may be treated as a public Bill. I want to say that it would not be fair, in the interest of the other insurance companies of Canada that are doing business in this country, to have this Bill declared a public Bill and discussed in this House without the other insurance companies being heard with regard to the special measure, and unless it is referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, then this Bill should not have come to this House at all, because I know that the insurance companies, through their presidents, have already written to the government with regard to this special Bill, which is running all through this discussion with the motion of my hon. friend from Rothesay

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The Bill is not running through my mind at all.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—This Bill has been discussed along with the complaints made by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay, and I think it would be a most unfortunate thing if the matter were dealt with by a special committee of the House, instead of by the Banking and Commerce Committee. I want to place myself fairly and squarely before this House and the country, and I will not offer my name to move or second a resolution of this kind for the purpose of stifling an investigation. I took that stand when the matter was first brought up, and I thought it was in the interest of the company, the interests of the country and in the interest of the honour of this House that no special committee be named for this special Bill or this special complaint, and that it should be sent to the regular committee. I have looked carefully over the wording of the motion and the amendment and the only difference I can see is in the use of the word 'consider', instead of the word 'direct', that certain things shall be done. I for one have sufficient confidence in the honour, integrity and ability of the gentlemen who comprise the Committee on Banking and Commerce to do what is right, not only with this matter but with everything else that comes before them.

The House divided on the amendment, which was rejected on the following division :

Contents :

The Hon. Messieurs

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK.

FIRST REPORT OF COMMITTEE ADOPTED.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN presented the first report of the select committee appointed to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada, recommending that power be given to the committee to examine witnesses under oath. He said : In regard to this recommendation, I may state that the committee has found it necessary to come before the Senate and ask for express authority, as the statute governing the procedure in matters of this kind is not very explicit or express—in fact there is a contradiction in two clauses of the statute with regard to this matter. The clause in the statute of 1886, 49 Victoria, chapter 2, says, in regard to this matter of examining witnesses, that whenever any witness or witnesses is or are to be examined by any committee of the Senate or House of Commons, and the Senate or the House of Commons has resolved that it is desirable that such witness or witnesses shall be examined upon oath, such witnesses or witness shall be examined upon oath or affirmation as allowed by law. In passing the resolution yesterday the Senate did not include the power and right for the committee to examine witnesses on oath, and the statute of 1886 says it is necessary that the House of Commons or Senate should so order. This statute was revised, or amended rather, in 1894, but the statute of 1894 is still not very clear. It is contradictory in that sense in the two clauses. Section 13 of chapter 16 of 57 and 58 Victoria, says :

Any committee of the Senate or the House of Commons may administer an oath to any witness examined before such committee.

Clause 4 reads :

The Senate or the House of Commons may at any time order witnesses to be examined on oath before any committee.

Well, in view of this want of clearness in the statute, and its express power given to the committee, the committee has deemed it necessary to come before the hon. Senate and ask for special express power to examine witnesses under oath. That is the object of the report. I move that the report be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

AN ADJOURNMENT.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN moved that when the Senate adjourns to-day it do stand adjourned until Wednesday, the 25th instant, at 3 p.m.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière) moved, in amendment, that when the Senate adjourns to-day it stand adjourned until Monday, the 30th of May, at 8 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON moved, in amendment to the amendment, that when the Senate adjourns this afternoon it stand adjourned until May 31st at 3 p.m.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—These amendments may possibly be in order. A number of senators left here to-day with the expectation that the House will meet next Wednesday, owing to the notice given by the minister to that effect. I should like to know whether these amendments are fully in order.

The SPEAKER—I understand the hon. gentleman who moved the amendment to adjourn until the 30th asks leave to withdraw his amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it was understood when we had the last long adjournment it was to be the final one this session, and that we were to attend hereafter regularly in our places here. Hon. gentlemen will see by the paper that there are a considerable number of important private Bills coming up, and it appears rather unseemly that we should adjourn for so long a time, having met only a few days ago after a long adjournment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I venture the prediction that before the session is through the hon. gentleman will himself ask for an adjournment of two or three weeks.

The amendment to adjourn to the 31st instant was agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (J) An Act for the relief of Eliza Robertson.—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Cobourg.)

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (46) An Act to incoporate the Boundary, Kamloops and Cariboo Central Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Watson.)

Bill (63) An Act respecting the Edmonton and Slave Lake Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Baird.)

Bill (C) An Act for the relief of Andrew William Mann.—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Cobourg.)

Bill (D) An Act for the relief of Annie Christman.—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Toronto.)

Bill (G) An Act for the relief of Jennie Davison Moore.—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Cobourg.)

The Senate adjourned till Tuesday, 31st May, at 3 p.m.

PRODUCTION OF PETROLEUM.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General ; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate a return of all geological and other expert reports in the hands of the government showing the existence, or the probabilities of existence of petroleum at Athabasca Landing and in adjoining districts.

Also the names of the districts in which crude oil has been discovered, with quantities produced in 1902 and 1903, by districts, together with the total quantity for Canada.

He said : We had not very long ago an important discussion in this House on a question moved by the hon. gentleman from Wellington. It related to the production of peat and the possibilities of coal supply within the Dominion. My question now is germane to the question we then discussed. It also concerns a staple article of every day use, the importance of which is admitted in all countries and by every one—petroleum oil. It is attracting the attention of many public men that Canada, which is the home of almost all known useful minerals, should have so few deposits of petroleum oil. To-day petroleum stands on an equal footing with coal in importance and, in fact, if the production of oil was larger, petroleum would be a substitute for coal in many places where coal to-day is employed, both for effect and economy. For example, to-day, nothing prevents petroleum from being the motive power in steamships and even in railroads except its scarcity. Canada has only so far developed one field of petroleum and that is in Petrolea, Ont. It is the opinion of scientists, of experts, of geologists, that there are several other important oil districts in the Dominion but they are still undeveloped. The production of oil with us is mostly confined to the county of Lambton, in Ontario. The first oil was found there just a few years after the great oil strikes in the United States, about 1862. The discovery was not due at all to scientists or geologists, but to the natural phenomenon being observed of oil oozing into a pool, and men of enterprise, not capitalists, began to bore for it. Though ridiculed by their neighbours, they stuck to the enterprise and finally found one of the largest oil pools ever found in America except the recent find in Beaumont, Texas. It is said that between the finding of the oil in Inniskillen, in 1862, when it was sold at ten cents a barrel and 1865, when it brought ten dollars a barrel, no less than five millions of gallons of oil were lost by people not knowing how to handle it or what to do with it. When the price began to rise, capitalists invested in the industry, and to-day there are no less than eleven thousand producing wells in the county of Lambton alone, and among them are wells still producing which were bored in 1862, showing the permanency of the flow in some places. Of course they are not all producing in large quantities, and many of them have been abandoned ; however, the average yield per well to-day is about a barrel a week, perhaps a little more. Other attempts have been made in Ontario to find oil. It has been found at Bothwell, and in the counties of Kent, Oxford and Elgin, and on the Pelee Islands, but the deposit seems to be concentrated in the county of Lambton. That field has not been prospected as thoroughly as the fields in the United States. There are also petroleum fields in New Brunswick and Gaspé, but the conditions of the three fields are different. I shall not use scientific terms to describe the difference. The circumstances that led to the finding of oil at Petrolea and the making of fortunes there, led to the spending of fortunes in Gaspé. Capitalists went in there and worked on appearances and not on scientific datas. The Gaspé oil field was started in the sixties by an English company, the Petroleum Oil Trust, which, after having spent several hundred thousand dollars was succeeded by a Canadian company, the Canadian Petroleum Company, which, after spending also many hundreds of thousands of dollars was succeeded by a United States company, the International Oil Company. Altogether not less than a million dollars—perhaps considerably more—have been spent there. The reason why those people have continued boring, is because petroleum exudes from the ground there as at Petrolea, but they have not succeeded to make it an economic success because the conditions are different. In Lambton the layers of rock are horizontal, the strata undisturbed, and the oil sands perfectly capped in such a manner that the oil that is formed there to-day has continued there for all ages until wells were bored, and it was allowed to rise to the surface. In Gaspé the strata are tilted, faulty and broken, and the oil that once existed has in the course of ages mostly escaped. The companies which have been sinking wells have found oil, but not in paying quantities. Some wells have been bored to a depth of 3,700 feet at very great cost. Altogether some sixty-seven wells have been bored in the Gaspé district and oil has been found in many of them, but not in remunerative quantities, and it is not probable that the industry will ever pay, for the reasons I have given. The investors have continued prospecting because oil is found in the same geological formation there as it is found in Pennsylvania, that is, just below the coal formation, and because wrong notions about the formation has led to those companies persevering and spending millions without much return. The province of Nova Scotia has also made some faint effort at boring for oil without any satisfactory results. There are one or two companies boring, with some prospects of finding oil, but nothing of a very encouraging nature. Many of you, hon. gentlemen, have heard of albertite. This mineral is found in New Brunswick solely. In New Brunswick attempts have also been made to bore for petroleum because the albertite which is condensed bitumen, was shown to be derived from oil. Two companies have successively attempted to work it within the last thirty years, but they abandoned it for diverse reasons, not much money having been expended. One of them was conducted by a Mr. Merrill, from Boston, whom I knew, a practical business man, but financial disaster prevented him from proceeding. Three years ago, the New Brunswick government having offered a prize to any company that would spend $80,000 within four years and privileges that are almost equal to a monopoly, a company was formed, which took the very same old wells that had been bored by the two successive companies I have already mentioned, bored new ones, and now they are in the way of making it a success. At the last report the company had thirty-five yielding wells not continuously pumped, because there is no refinery built there, but with all the tanks filled, and they are now building a refinery with good prospects of profit.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—In what locality ?

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—In Westmoreland county, where I hail from, and in Albert county. The formations there are about of the same age, a little later perhaps than the formation at Gaspé, and the rock there is also broken and faulty, but not to the same degree as it is in Gaspé; and, moreover, the company, following the advice of Prof. Shaler of Boston, have sunk a test well three thousand feet, and the third oil sand, which was predicted by the professor would be struck at 3,000 feet, was got at about 2,900 feet. At all events the professor was correct; they struck a third oil sand, and the prospects are fair for the New Brunswick Oil Company, although none of them are sanguine beyond what they should be in such a hazardous proposition. The province of Quebec, leaving Gaspé aside, has produced no oil so far. Some borings have been made at St. Grégoire, in Nicolet, but beyond finding gas in good quantities, no oil has been struck, though geologists of great eminence, and Dr. Selwyn among them, believe that if oil is to be got in the province of Quebec, it will be found along the Rochambeau anticlinal. Any gentleman familiar with oil fields knows what that means. In an oil field, if one can strike an anticlinal which is not broken he is sure to find the oil concentrated there. It is a dome uplifting from below, and as the tendency of gas and oil is to rise, both being lighter than water, then the oil concentrates along that dome, and if the other conditions are favourable among which is a capping—if that dome is capped, as a bottle would be with a proper cork—and if there is a loose sandstone formation or a porous calcarious matter allowing the oil to fill in the porosity below, then you will be sure to find oil in large quantities along that anticlinal. This is where the practical miner in the United States oil fields has been far ahead of the scientific man. The practical miner has succeeded in discovering new oil fields by boring where the best scientific authorities would have scorned to tread; and now new fields are in operation and new rules have been established for the guidance of prospectors, the honour of which is due to the miner and not the scientist. If we go more to the west we will, in my opinion, discover greater fields for oil. We have it recorded that the first oil found in Canada and possibly in America is that discovered in Great Manitoulin Island. It is recorded in the 'Relations des Jésuites.' At the time of the petroleum oil fever, the Jesuits were at Manitoulin Island, and had been there for a long time. They are still there, looking after the spiritual and, to a certain extent, the temporal interests of the natives. They reported to parties in Montreal that oil had been found in several places on the island; that oil springs are to be found there as they were in the United States when the first petroleum pools were struck; and that great probabilities for oil deposits existed. A company was formed in Montreal in 1865, composed of Mr. Baby, Mr. Berthelot and Delagrave to go and bore for oil on Manitoulin. They got there, but found themselves confronted with the fact that the country was possessed and owned exclusively by the Indians, who had no desire to allow the white man to step in. This was before confederation. They came back to the government of the Union asking for a privilege to bore. The government were willing enough if the Indians were. At first the Indians refused point blank, objecting to holes being made in the ground disturbing the placidity of the great spirit. Finally, the Jesuits possibly helping, the company, obtained leave from thirty-five or thirty-seven Indians to bore for six months as a test. That arrangement was confirmed by the government under very rigorous conditions. For example the company were not allowed—and that was all right—to bring any spirituous liquor to the island under forfeiture of all their rights and privileges: there were also other conditions for the protection of the morality of the Indians. The company set to work, as I said before, and at the same time the government being awake to the possibility of a great oil field, sent Mr. Bell, the gentleman who is now acting Superintendent of the Geological Department, to the island. He went there in 1865 and spent twelve months on the island, making a very thorough report of the geology and stratifications of the island. Returning home in 1866 he passed where the company was boring on the Indians reserve, in the month of May, and reports that from the wells they were boring they had gathered about sixty-seven barrels of oil with a sand pump, and when he left there the company were still working. Sterry Hunt, of whom all scientific men here know as being the foremost authority the United States have produced on these questions, equal to our Dawson or Logan—went there in the spring of 1866, passed where the company were boring, a couple of months later than the visit of Dr. Bell, and reports of oil having been struck in the well mentioned by Dr. Bell, and in a second well, where 120 barrels of excellent oil—he uses the word excellent and Sterry Hunt is perhaps the best analyst America has ever produced—obtained by the sand pump. Hon. gentlemen will remember that this was in the infancy of the oil business. Those gentlemen went there with good instruments, no doubt, but proceeding on no scientific basis as they do now. For instance, they did not shoot or torpedo any of those wells. Nitroglycerine was not known then. They set no power pump. It was just the oil they could secure with sand pumps. Now, hon. gentlemen ask me what has become of the company. Nobody knows. Dead silence covers their final proceedings, and the history of the company is lost after 1866. There is no report in the department here as to their findings and the cause of their abandoning work, although the previous correspondence is to be found. I am somewhat of a searcher after things antiquated, and being aware of these facts I set earnestly to work to see if I could discover a solution of the problem. I went to Manitoulin Island three times last summer and fall, and interrogated the old folks. At the period in question there were no white people there. Everybody knows of the oil being there. The wells are still there, and I was shown oil myself; but nobody knew even the name of the company that operated them. I went to the Jesuits, and they were perfectly well aware of the existence of oil. The Jesuit Fathers who lived at the time the wells were bored are dead, but it is notorious that the Indians, for many years, went to those wells, left open, and gathered oil and used it for lubricating purposes. Most of the old chiefs had died, but I found one who remembered perfectly all the circumstances, and he told me of having himself worked at the mine, and he came with me and located three wells in the woods. In one of them I found oil myself. The mystery still existed—why did the company leave those wells at a time when oil was selling at $10 a barrel? Why is it that a well equipped company as Dr. Bell affirms, they were, abandoned the business? After many inquiries and searches, I finally found that the man who made the boring was still alive. His name is John Ward. I hunted him up and asked him if the reports made by Sterry Hunt and Dr. Bell were true. He said of course they were true. I asked him to show me on a map where the wells he had bored stood. He pointed them out to me correctly. I asked him if it were true that 120 barrels of oil had been shipped from these wells, he said yes, and that there was an order for 500 empty barrels after that. I said why did you leave? Well, he did not care to tell me. I asked him what mystery existed. 'Well,' he said, using an expression that would be unparliamentory, 'the d—— Jesuits set the Indians at us and we had to run for our scalps,' It is easy to understand why they abandoned the wells under the circumstances. There was a restriction against bringing intoxicating liquor on the island, or doing any act prejudicial to the natives. It would appear that the company did not strictly abide by some of the rules in the decalogue. At any rate they had to quit the island. They left all their instruements behind, and never came back to claim anything, although by that time they had earned what would have given them a privilege to go on. The department offered them the privilege but they could not be found, and the whole enterprise was left as it is now. The geological conditions of the Manitoulin Island oil field are identical with the conditions that obtain in the state of Ohio to-day, and the state of Ohio is the largest producer of oil in the United States not excepting Pennsylvania. I gathered some of the oil myself and had it analysed here. It is excellent oil, as I was told by Sterry Hunt. The general conditions that obtain in the Grand Manitoulin Island are similar to those at Titusville, and at Oil Springs, in Ontario. That is, what oil was ever there is still there, entombed under impervious capping rocks, because there has been no disturbance whatever of the strata. The layers are perfectly horizontal undisturbed, unbroken, and there are all the conditions that are necessary for the existence of oil, the porosity of the underlying rock for example, which is highly magnesian. All the conditions are there, but on account of the failure forty years ago—and public opinion being rather sceptical in reference to petroleum speculation—the field has remained unprospected except upon two occasions. About twelve years ago a man from Toronto having gone there—that was before Gamey's time and the island was not so universally familiar to us as it is now—having found at Pike lake traces of oil, and having been told by inhabitants there that oil could be seen covering the little lake in winter, he put in three thousand dollars to bore a hole on the spot. He was not a miner, and he bored the hole exactly where the oil oozed from the soil. It happened that there is an exposure of quartzites within less than half a mile from it which is not a place where any one would seriously undertake to bore for oil. He went in, however, and struck oil at a depth of about sixty feet, in fair quantities, and the oil is still flowing there. You can get buckets full of it; but he insisted on deep boring. He spent his $3,000 and then his courage, and the patience of the borers in drilling through quartzite, became exhausted and he dropped it. In 1897 two parties, one from the United States and one from Canada, miners who had made a little money, put their heads and purses together and bored on the Indian reserve a few miles from where the company of 1865 had worked. They bored No. 1 well. I do not believe in oil and mining reports. I would not believe my brother or my best friend, unless he swore two or three times on the Bible to the truth of his statement. However, I have been told by no less than twelve persons, merchants, farmers and a doctor, that the first well over-flowed. I was assured by these men that samples of oil, which they showed me, came from there. Then they bored a second well. In 1898 a man named Bozelle came there representing himself to belong to the Standard Oil Company. He watched the operations until the two men who were boring got into altercations. I do not say that he brought up the two men—I do not believe it—the Standard Oil Company will not buy men—but after these two men had been working six or seven months he bought their outfit and leased some fifteen thousand acres from the farmers. Since 1866 a portion of the island has been reserved exclusively for the Indians, and the rest of it is open to white men. Bozelle having bought the outfit of the two men went to work and bored one well to a depth of 500 feet. He should have gone 600 feet to strike oil. He was a man who knew what he was about, and the calculations are easily made. He plugged the well before he got to the proper depth. He went to another place about two or three miles distance and got some oil there, and then he went away reporting there was no oil. So he released the fifteen thousand acres of land he had secured from the people, and thus the matter stands to-day. About the same time representatives of the Standard Oil Company are known to have interfered with propositions of a similar character in the United States, discouraging the prospectors. The same fields have been of late years taken up, and are to-day highly productive. It is sufficient, however, to show that there is a productive field of oil in Manitoulin which is yet undeveloped and which it might be worth while to test, because I am firmly convinced, having studied the field myself and read reports of experienced men, that we have on the Manitoulin Island, an oil field which before many years, if properly handled, will equal that of Petrolea. It yields a superior quality of oil, as has been shown by analysis—superior on the whole to the oil of Petrolea, which is the very best for lubricating purposes. Going further west, I now approach the subject of my motion, which is the western oil fields.

We know as yet very little of the possibilities of our western country. I believe we have in Canada all the possibilities of the world in the way of resources, either under or on the surface and especially in our Northwest. For many decades of years it has been known that out-croppings of sand tar exist north of Edmonton. Our geologists have reported over and over again on those deposits. In 1894, on the advice of Dr. Dawson, $7,000 were voted to test the oil fields of the Saskatchewan. A man named Fraser was engaged to do the boring. He thoroughly understood his business, and did his work honestly. About two hundred miles north of Edmonton there is a coal tar output. Of course, that was not the place to bore for oil. From calculations based on the dip of tar-sand layer, it was thought that, at Athabasca Landing, the continuation of the layer would be met at 1,800 feet, and that oil instead of tar would be struck. Not having facilities to take his rig up any further, where borings would not be required to be so deep, he, on instructions given him by the department, took his outfit to Athabasca Landing, and bored the first year ten hundred and eleven feet under great difficulty. A strong flow of gas interfered considerably with his work. During the winter he did not bore. In 1895 he continued boring, and reached a depth of 1,731 feet, being considerably obstructed all the time by the breaking of the rock, which is of an incoherant nature, and especially by the tremendous flow of gas, which would force his drill up. In 1896 he continued boring, but was only able to get down thirty-five feet further that season. Among the obstacles to be surmounted was the excessive flow of gas. It was necessary, according to calculations, to go down 1,800 feet to strike the oil bearing stratum, but in the three years he only succeeded in boring to a depth of 1,770 feet, having to use casing to the very bottom, the casing becoming smaller and smaller the deeper the boring went, and at last it was found to be unsafe and utterly impossible with a bore hole of the size he was drilling to go any deeper. On the advice of Dr. Dawson, the department decided the next year, 1897, to make two other borings, one of them half way between Athabasca Landing, and where the tar outcrops, at a point situated near the mouth of the Pellican river, where, by calculation, the oil should have been found at 800 feet, and also to start another well at Victoria, on the Saskatchewan. At this latter place the estimated depth to bore was placed at 2,000 feet. The boring at Pellican river was successful. They struck the stratum at 750 feet, instead of 800, and found the same tar sand that outcrops one hundred miles further up. Tar was not what they expected or could have expected. It was a continuation of the same wave of tar but no liquid oil was there. They decided to go deeper, but all they could do was to bore seventy more feet, when the glutting of the tar and especially the force of the gas rendered it impossible to go further, so they did not get through the layer of tar. At the other point, Victoria, they bored for three successive years, and could not get down to the desired stratum on account of the excessive flow of gas; all they could do was to go down 1,840 instead of 2,000. All this goes to show that those regions actually abound with economic gas. But there is something better; it is that tar sand, the value of which we all know. We get our asphalt from Trinidad and the Barbadoes to-day. We have along the Saskatchewan, and in the Athabasca valley, a visable supply, computed by Mr. Connell to be at least six cubic miles of tar—we have over one hundred thousand acres of that deposit. It runs in more than one hundred miles in one direction, varying in thickness from one hundred feet to two hundred and twenty-two feet by measurement. We have tar and bitumen there sufficient to supply the world for centuries to come. The prospects for oil all through that lower area do not appear to be glowing; the immense accumulations of petroleum having long ago made their escape from their natural reservoirs, through the denudation of the overlying capping strata, and become sand-tar, maltha or bitumen. But further north, at Great Slave lake, we find the pure tar in the very Devonian formation, which is thought by all scientists to be the reservoir of all that oil. The formation is thoroughly impregnated with oil and with the best quality of coal-tar, which the Hudson Bay Company have been using since they first explored the country—tar of great economic value, that extends up to the Rocky Mountains. There is an unlimited field of it. If liquid petroleum is to be found at all in those regions it will be found in immense quantities as it exists in Baku, Russia, or Beaumont, Texas. In fact, the indications of oil are greater along the Peace river and in the Great Slave lake district than anywhere else in the world. It will be interesting to all of us to learn that the proposed transcontinental railway will pass through those regions, bringing within reach of civilization those rich deposits that would otherwise remain untouched. We will have and hold the markets of the world in the supply of tar for all time to come and if, as is very probable, on the Peace river or further north, or certainly by the Rocky mountains, oil is found, and found, as it needs must be if at all, in immense quantities, Canada will be able to supply the world with petroleum for centuries to come. It is well known that along the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains range valuable oil areas exist. There is a company, the Western Coal and Oil Company, at present boring for oil at Lake Waterton, South Alberta. Oil has been found, not in excessive quantities, but apparently in paying quantities. They are also boring for oil at Crow's Nest Pass.

To resume, I believe that the attention of the government should be directed towards ascertaining the possibility of Canada becoming the greatest oil producing country of the world, not excepting the United States or Russia. I am of opinion that $7,000 is too small an appropriation to investigate the possibilities of our oil fields, and that the government should appropriate a larger amount and appoint a specialist to investigate that field. They should be very careful who the expert is, because one of the reasons why the development of oil fields was so retarded in the United States is because of the bad advice given to companies, and to the government, though given in good faith. United States geologists and ours are to-day at absolute variance as to the origin of oil with the geologists of some other countries, France and Russia, for example. According to the United States geologists, oil apparently could only be found in very few places, yet prospecting miners have found it where scientists deemed it impossible that it could exist. That is because their opinion as to the origin of oil was, I believe, erroneous. They believed, and to-day it is a belief shared by English and German geologists, that the origin of oil was animal and vegetable matter, while as a matter of fact it is shown that no organic matter remains is entombed in the ground. The shells which we find are totally denuded of flesh ; nothing was ever left from which oil could be derived. Inorganic matter, we know, has turned to peat bogs, lignite and coal, but it is not known in any instance that oil has been formed along the same line as coal, although it is found as in Pennsylvania, in proximity to it. The school of to-day, to which I adhere anyway, explains that oil is of volcanic origin, that it was formed by the heated waters carrying carbonic acid and coming in contact, under proper pressure, with alkali, thus forming, on a large scale, fields of petroleum. These are still in existence, provided they are sufficiently capped to prevent its escape. This is called the volcanic origin of petroleum, tar, and of mostly all the hydro-carbons found in the bowels of the earth. At all events, not longer ago than a few years, Berthelot and Moysan, of Paris, who stand foremost in chemistry, who are unsurpassed even by the great English chemists, have in their own laboratory made petroleum out of the elements I have mentioned, showing that nature could have produced petroleum in that way. I conclude by again calling the attention of the government to the possibilities of oil existing in Canada and to the advisability of taking some step towards finding the exact localities where deposits of oil could be developed and to make it easy for capital to be invested and thus add to the immense sources of wealth of our already rich Dominion. If the members of our geological staff are unavailable for having too much work to do elsewhere, and I believe they have,—the work they are called upon to perform every year is simply enormous, being paid therefor very inadequately, nay less than we pay here for the services of most of our employees,—then I would venture to suggest the name of some expert not in the service of the government, and the name now on my lips is Mr. Eugene Coste, of Toronto, whom I consider equal to the foremost expert in oil and gas questions in Canada, and indeed in all America.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—I am sure we are all much indebted to the hon. member from Shediac for the very valuable information he has placed before the House. He has even told us that he has gone to the trouble of visiting the Manitoulin Islands three times himself in order to get information about the flow of oil there. He might have got a lot of that information from this side of the House. I might refer him to the hon. senator from Granville (Sir Alphonse Pelletier) and the hon. senator from Windsor, Ont., (Hon. Mr. Casgrain), both of whom, I understand, were stockholders in the Manitoulin Island Company at that time. The hon. senator looked for reasons why they did not continue working those wells. The reason is very simple and convincing—the oil would not flow. It proved to be simply surface oil and, consequently, everything had to abandoned. That is all that took place at Manitoulin Island.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are very much indebted to the hon. senator from Shediac for his valuable and learned disquisition on the subject of oil, where it has been found and where evidence of it has been discovered in various parts in Canada. I doubt very much whether the papers we are able to bring down will furnish the hon. gentleman with any fuller information than he seems already to possess, because it appears he has given a large amount of time, and no doubt of money, to this question and we can all sincerely hope, to use a familiar expression that he has struck oil. I am sorry to say that some of our friends have not been equally successful ; but, joking apart, the oil industry is a very important one, and in many countries producing oil, particularly the United States and Russia, there is no doubt whatever in the minds of those who have given any attention or thought to the subject that oil will eventually be found in paying quantities in portions of Canada. As hon. gentlemen know, for over thirty years it has been a very important industry in sections of Ontario, the county of Lambton being the centre of it, and the adjoining counties sharing in some degree the prosperity derived from oil. There are no doubt, as the hon. gentleman has stated, very promising indications of oil in parts of Alberta and in the Mackenzie basin, in the Athabasca district and other sections of the Northwest, and also in British Columbia. I shall be very glad indeed to bring down all the information there is on the subject, and moreover will call the attention of the Minister of the Interior to the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman, to consider the propriety of naming a special expert who has given more thought and attention to the subject, perhaps than some of the gentlemen employed on the geological survey have, who probably discuss it more from the theoretical and scientific standpoint than from the practical view taken by those who are more familiar with the localities where oil is likely to be found.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Will the House permit me, not to join issue with my hon. friend from de Lanaudière, but to tell him that his reason is one of the many that were given for the company leaving so suddenly. As against hearsay and lay reports, will the House allow me to read just half a page from the report of Dr. Bell, who was there, and who was not interested ? He was not a shareholder, and had no special reason to conceal the cause of the company abandoning the project. Here is a report made in 1866 to Sir W. E. Logan by Mr. Robt. Bell, the acting President of the Geological Bureau here. At page 179 he says :

Springs of petroleum have been found on the south side of Wequemakong Bay, where three or four wells are now being sunk. One of these is now (7th May, 1866,) upwards of 500 feet deep. It starts upon the Hudson river rocks, probably about the middle of the formation, and passes through the Utica and Trenton strata. A hard quartz rock (probably Huronian) has now been reached. Oil accompanied by gas, was found at various levels, and up to the present time, it appears that seventy-two barrels of oil have been dipped up by the sand pump, during the process of boring. Surface oil is said to have been found at Bob's portage, on the east side of Manitowaning Bay, and also in She-guaan-dah Bay, and upon Strawberry Island. A petroleum spring, on one of the islands north of Maple Point, is referred to in our general report.

These springs issue from an undisturbed stratum. They issue only where the capping is very thin. I did not explain the geological formation of the Island of Manitoulin. There is a dip of about 50 feet to the mile ; and the oil bearing rock which is five hundred feet down, to the south, comes out to the north, where it is thinly covered by the Utica shale, and that is where the oil crops out, but all the oil that is found south of it, along the anticlinals—and Dr. Bell has located several anticlinals—all the oil that was there, if there ever was any, is still to be found there. I will read now from Sterry Hunt, who is an undisputed authority. He was not disputed in his native country, and as an authority, he is not disputed in the world to-day, unless my hon. friend disputes his statements. Sterry Hunt states as follows :

Borings have since been made in the lower Silurian strata at Manitoulin, with considerable success. One of the wells there sunk gave soil 10, shales 140, limestone 316-466 feet, at which depth the boring was suspended. A specimen from the bottom was a soft limestone, and portions of rock, from depths of 159, 189 and 210 feet, were nearly pure limestone. At 220 feet from the surface a vein of oil was encountered, and another six feet lower ; the well has yielded, in all, seven or eight barrels of oil, with much gas. This is designated by the Manitoulin Oil Company as well No. 2, about two miles from which is No. 1. This, after 32 feet of soil, and 100 feet of black shale, penetrated 340 feet of limestone, to which succeeded 52 feet of red silicious sandstone, the last 20 feet very hard. There the boring ceased. At 192 feet from the surface there was met a vein of saline water, whose analysis is given further on, and at 192, 248 and 270 feet, veins of oil. From this well 120 barrels of excellent petroleum have been obtained.

Is that surface oil hon. gentlemen ?

EXPENDITURE ON PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND RAILWAY.

MOTION.

The Order of the Day being called :

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General ; praying that His Excellency may be pleased to lay on the table of the Senate a return giving statements in details of the expenditures on Hillsborough bridge and Murray Harbour Branch Railway, Prince Edward Island, contained in an amount of $1,492,525.47, stated by the Minister of Finance in the House of Commons on the 30th of September, 1903, to have been expended on these two works up to the 30th of June, 1903. And also similar statements regarding any other expenditures, if any, up to the last-mentioned date, on these works, not included in the amount so stated by the Finance Minister :

1. Expenditure on Murray Harbour Branch Railway for—
   (a.) Surveys.
   (b.) Legal expenses, names of persons to whom paid, and amount to each.
   (c.) Land damages, names of persons to whom paid, and amount to each.

(d.) Grading and ballasting.
(e.) Track-laying.
(f.) Fencing.
(g.) Equipment.
(h.) Any other expenditure, if any, not included in these headings, to make up the total expenditure up to June 30, 1903.

2. Expenditure on Hillsborough bridge for—
(a.) Surveys.
(b.) Legal expenses, to whom paid, and amount to each.
(c.) Approaches, including land damages, to whom paid, and amount to each.
(d.) Substructures.
(e.) Superstructures.
(f.) Track-laying for railway and general traffic.
(g.) Any other expenditures, if any, for the same period, not included under above headings.

3. A detailed statement, as above, showing the expenditure, up to the date of the passing of this address, of the whole or part of the amount of $1,230,000 voted for the said bridge and railway for the current year.

4. A detailed statement, as in Nos. 1 and 2, showing the estimated application of any part of the said $1,230,000, voted last session for the said railway and bridge and unexpended at the date of the passing of this address.

Statements regarding railway and bridge to be given separately.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In the absence of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield I beg to make the motion which appears on the order paper in his name.

The motion was agreed to.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON RAILWAYS, TELEGRAPHS AND HARBOURS.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN moved :

That the name of the Honourable Mr. Thompson be substituted for that of the late Honourable Mr. Dever on the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours.

The motion was agreed to.

BEHRING SEA SEAL FISHERIES.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD, (B.C.) rose to Call the attention of the government to the purport of a resolution passed by the United States Senate, requesting the President of that country to take the necessary steps for reopening with Great Britain the question of the Pacific ocean and Behring sea seal fisheries, and for a readjustment of the award made on 15th day of August, 1893, at Paris, by the Arbitration Commission, composed of eminent men of France, Italy, Sweden and Norway, the United States, Great Britain and Canada, under the treaty of February 1, 1892, between Great Britain and the United States, providing for submission to arbitration of the fur seal question.

And will direct attention also to the highly important salient points decided and determined by the Arbitration Commission in support of the contention of Great Britain and Canada;

That Russia admitted that her jurisdiction in Behring sea should be restricted to the reach of a cannon shot from the shore, and from that time (1825) to the cession of Alaska, in 1867, never exercised any exclusive jurisdiction in Behring sea, or any rights in the seal fisheries outside territorial waters.

That Great Britain did not concede any claim on the part of Russia in Behring sea outside territorial waters.

That the tribunal considered Behring sea as a part of the Pacific ocean, therefore open to the fishing and commerce of the world.

That whatever jurisdiction and rights Russia had to the seal fisheries in Behring sea passed unimpaired to the United States under the cession of Alaska in 1867.

That the United States has not any right of protection or property in the fur seals frequenting the islands of the United States in Behring sea, when such seals are found outside the ordinary three-mile limit.

And will ask, if the government will resist the reopening of this question; but, in the event of the British government acquiescing in the request of the United States, will the Dominion government insist that a majority of the British commissioners shall be citizens of the Dominion, possessing a knowledge of the seal question, the arguments and contention which have arisen thereon, as well as the decisions arrived at by the Paris tribunal in August, 1893?

He said: When it came to my notice some time ago that the United States Senate had passed a resolution for the reopening of the Behring sea question, I thought it proper to bring the matter before the attention of the government and the House, although it is quite possible the government may know more about it than I do, and that they are as fully alive to the question as any one can be. I think it is a public question of great importance. It is known to all of us in this House that whenever we have come in contact with our United States friends in any arbitration we have always got the worst of it. I can only recollect one case where we received fair-play and justice, and that was in the treaty of Washington. In every other case we have got the worst of it, and I hope the government on this occasion will resist the reopening of the Behring sea question. It cannot be for the benefit of Canada, it must be entirely for the benefit of the United States that they propose anything of the kind. The hon. minister from Victoria knows perfectly well the advantage and benefit of the seal fisheries of the Pacific to the province of British Columbia as well as to the whole Dominion. There are a great number of active young men employed in that industry, and it has been a source of some wealth to the Pacific province and, consequently, indirectly to the whole of Canada. It will be known to the House, and any one who has taken the trouble to read the notice on the paper will see, that the tribunal which sat in Paris composed of very eminent European gentlemen decided five of the disputed points entirely in favour of the contention of Great Britain and Canada, and that the United States lost every point of this very important matter. The first is that the Russians disclaimed, after a time, all right beyond the three-mile limit, a cannon shot from the shore. Before then they had the audacity to claim the whole North Pacific as a closed sea, from the Columbia river to Behring sea, but the United States helped Great Britain to resist that contention and finally they came down to the three-mile limit from the shore. The tribunal fixed definitely that that was the only right conceded to them by Russia. The tribunal also decided that the United States had no right in the protection of seal fisheries beyond the three-mile limit. Every point was decided in favour of the British contention, yet instead of fixing the three-mile limit as the line outside of which the United States had no jurisdiction, in order to settle matters they decided upon a zone of sixty miles around the Pribyloff islands as the limit within which no British vessel could fish. That was a very important concession and the United States should have been satisfied with it. The tribunal also decided that there should be no seal fishing north of the 35th degree, that is about San Francisco, and within 200 miles of Japan, after the first of May ; but they left undone just what they ought to have done in this matter, and permitted a practice which goes far to destroy seal life. Our sealers leave British Columbia in the month of January, and sail south to meet the seals when they are with young, going north, and kill them without knowing whether they are male or female. The regulation was therefore very unwise. I remember speaking to a counsel on the Paris tribunal and asking him why they did such a thing. He said it was done at the last moment, just as they were closing up the proceedings. If that foolish regulation could be set aside I would not in the least object to the question being reopened. There is another matter of very great importance. There should be a close period of one year every three or five years in which no seal could be taken either by the United States or by British fishermen. That would give the seal herd a chance to recuperate and would do no injury to the revenue of the United States. The restrictions are very large, and amongst them is one providing for the issuing of licenses for the seal fisheries, and the regulations provide that the two governments shall take measures to control the fitness of the men engaged in the seal fisheries. That has never been carried out by either government. The sealers gather up such men as they can get. I think it is reasonable if the subject is to be reopened, that a majority of the commissioners should be Canadian, because the people of the mother country are not interested in the matter in any way, and we know their desire and tendency to maintain friendly relations with the United States might prejudice the interests of Canada. In this case I hope the government will stand out and see that the fair thing is done for the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Until an actual proposal is made to re-open the question it would be impossible and impolitic for the government of Canada to foreshadow what their policy would be under the circumstances. The Senate and the country may rely upon it, that the honour of Canada will be maintained by the government, and that the interests of the men engaged in the seal fisheries in British Columbia shall be considered paramount to every other consideration. As hon. gentlemen know, this question is one in which United States and Great Britain have mainly conducted the controversy. The regulations were made chiefly by English representatives. They had the control practically. The United States government have time and again pressed for a reopening of the question, but they have been resisted successfully. The arguments used by the United States have been, mainly, that further regulations are necessary for the preservation of the seal herd. It was alleged that the herd was being exterminated. In order to test the correctness of that statement, the British government, a few years ago, named Mr. Darcy Thompson and a Canadian to inquire into the statements made by the United States. They reported that the herd was not being exterminated, and therefore, that there was no pressing necessity for reopening the seal fisheries question. At the same time, it has been conceded that it would be well to have an intermediate year when the killing of seals should be absolutely prohibited. That probably would secure the continued life of the seal herd. The argument set forth by the United States from time to time are undoubtedly instigated by the parties who have the monopoly of that industry. Hon. gentlemen know, from reading the papers, that on one or two occasions they advised congress to exterminate the herd absolutely, because they maintained that it was being rapidly killed on by Canadian sealers. It was found, however, that there was no justification for the statement. My hon. friend may rely upon it, that if, under pressure, the question has to be reopened, the country will find that the government will remain firm and will not yield to the demands made by interested parties in the United States, that the killing of the seals should be more limited than it is to-day. There is one important point to which my hon. friend alluded, that is, the killing of seals on their way to the breeding grounds, because it may mean indiscriminate killing, and the killing of a female seal may mean killing more than one and the skin may be useless. There may be that point and other details that the experience of the last five or six years has shown would involve some change in the regulations for the preservation of the herd without reducing to any considerable extent the reasonable profits that the United States lessees are entitled to. They have already secured that zone of sixty miles around the Pribyloff islands, and they would necessarily desire to maintain that as a reserve; but it is quite likely that in future some changes may take place in the regulation. I think, speaking from memory, it was understood that every five years there might be a proposition to change the regulations as the result of the experience gathered in that interval.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—That was part of the tribunal's finding.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That might afford an argument and a justification for reopening the question, limiting it to the making of new regulations with a view to preserving the herd, and continuing the interest both of Canada and of the United States in the present industry.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. Secretary of State said it is impossible for the government to announce its policy until an application is made. Did that apply to the first portion of the question, that they would resist any application for reopening it, or to the latter portion of the question, in which my hon. friend asks if the government will insist upon a majority of the commissioners being Canadians? I can readily understand the answer to the first part of the question made by the hon. gentleman as being consistent with the general policy of all governments, but what I should like to know is whether his answer applied to both these questions. The hon. gentleman in his reply referred to the Behring sea arbitration and said, what was true that the majority of them were not Canadians, but I think every one in Canada admits that the presence of the late Minister of Justice, Sir John Thompson, and his talent and ability in dealing with the question was of very great value to Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—To his presence at the meetings of the tribunal we are indebted for even the concessions which were obtained. Had we not had a man of his eminent legal ability representing Canada at that time, the question would have been settled in a manner much more disadvantageous to us and advantageous to the United States. And not in him alone but to other able representatives are we indebted. Young Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper was present and displayed talent and ability, in dealing with the question, commendable to himself and of great value to Canada. Canada's representatives displayed ability in dealing with the question and a knowledge of the facts and legal points involved, much greater than was shown by the foreigner who was upon that commission, and they were in every respect quite equal to their competitors representing the United States. I felt that in justice to a late colleague I should give utterance to these sentiments. I think the hon. Secretary of State will concur in the remarks that I have made in reference to our representatives on the Behring sea arbitration to which attention has been called by the hon. gentleman from Victoria, I should like to ask him whether I understood his answer to the question to apply to both questions that were put.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cordially endorse all that the hon. gentlemen has said with reference to the ability with which Canada was represented on that occasion. No one for a moment can doubt the ability displayed by the late Sir John Thompson, and I think my hon. friend is quite right in making the statement that it is due probably to the ability exhibited by him and his colleagues that we obtained what we did. I felt that way and I think the experience of former arbitrations and subsequent ones confirms that conclusion. What I did say was that until the occasion arose it would be impossible to foreshadow what policy the government should adopt. We cannot, of course, anticipate the manner in which the subject may arise. It is liable to arise at any time. What I said was that I thought the people of Canada might rely upon the government to maintain the dignity of the country and preserve the interests of that special industry. That was what I intended to convey. In regard to making the stipulation that a majority of the British commissioners shall be citizens of Canada, I think that is pretty clearly established to be in line with our policy. We possibly may fail on some occasions, because, as hon. gentlemen know, we have not the final voice; but I think it is in evidence that during recent years we have taken a pretty firm stand in selecting the men who were to decide where the interests of Canada in this part of the empire were particularly and exclusively affected.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Has there been any communication from the Colonial Office on this subject yet?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think so. I do not remember.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I was told on pretty good authority, by a person whose name I cannot divulge, that Prof. Elliot, who was responsible for branding the seals on the islands, has come to the conclusion that pelagic sealing does not deplete the seal herd; that it is done by the practice on the rookeries. That has come to the ears of a gentleman high in authority who told me about it the other day.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not heard anything on the subject. I am not aware that there were any despatches.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I think there has been no despatch, but it might come out in some other way.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.

APPOINTMENT OF J. B. JACKSON.

MOTION.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid upon the table of the Senate, a copy of the recommendation made to the executive council upon which an order was passed appointing J. B. Jackson, a commercial agent, in England, together with a copy of said order authorizing said appointment.

He said: I was induced to draft this motion as soon as the return was laid on the table by the hon. Secretary of State, from the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce stating that there had been no correspondence in reference to the matter.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No outside recommendation I think it was.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, correspondence I think it was. I am desirous of ascertaining which minister it was that gave the recommendation—although I presume it was the Minister of Trade and Commerce—and also the Order in Council, so that we may learn the reason for Mr. Jackson's appointment, and the exact duties which he has to perform, together with the remuneration which he is to receive.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A copy of the Order in Council will be brought down, but at this moment I do not know whether it is usual to bring down the recommendation of the minister. If it is usual it will certainly be brought down. I am speaking now without an actual knowledge. The Order in Council will be brought down. It will show on whose recommendation the Order in Council was approved. I presume it was the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not desire that any rule governing the executive council should be varied. But I think the hon. gentleman will find that there can be no possible objection to giving the information asked for.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Possible not.

The motion was agreed to.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (50) An Act to incorporate the St. Maurice Valley Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Legris.)

Bill (52) An Act respecting the Manitoba and Keewatin Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Watson.)

Bill (55) An Act respecting the Canadian Northern Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Watson.)

Bill (62) An Act respecting the Welland and Grand Island Bridge Company.—(Hon. Mr. Edwards.)

Bill (71) An Act respecting the Ottawa, Brockville and St. Lawrence Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Mitchell.)

Bill (83) An Act respecting the Nipigon Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. McMullen.)

HOME BANK OF CANADA BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL moved the second reading of Bill (45) An Act respecting the Home Bank of Canada.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I move the suspension of the 60th rule in so far as the same relates to this Bill. The rule provides that a Bill must be posted for twenty-four hours before being considered by the committee. This is an ordinary Bill and as it is desirable that it should be proceeded with as early as possible I make this motion.

The motion was agreed to.

MONARCH LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Cobourg) moved the second reading of Bill (69) An Act to incorporate the Monarch Life Assurance Company.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Cobourg) moved the suspension of rule 60.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think when it is proposed to suspend the rule that the member who moves the suspension of the rule must state what the rule is. We do not want to be taken by surprise.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I explained the rule when I made the motion.

WESTERN ASSURANCE COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON (in the absence of Hon. Mr. Frost) moved the second reading of Bill (114) An Act respecting the Western Assurance Company.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the motion is put I rise to a question of order. This Bill has not been distributed nor has Bill (115) been distributed.

The SPEAKER—It is marked as having been printed in English and French.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Perhaps I might be permitted to make an explanation, with reference to the objections taken by my hon. friend with regard to this Bill. Hon. gentlemen are well aware that a very serious conflagration took place in the city of Toronto and also in Baltimore, by which one of these insurance companies capital to the extent of $1,000,000 was wiped out, and, in order that legislation may be put through as speedily as possible, we are asking for power to cut the capital in one-half and to issue new stock for another million in order that the company's business may not be disturbed. That is the whole purport of the Bill and the one following it. I move the suspension of the rule to obviate the necessity of posting of the Bill for twenty-four hours.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What is the 60th rule ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It relates to the posting.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—It does away with the necessity of posting of the Bill for twenty-four hours.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The only object of the motion is to enable the Bill to go to committee to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The 60th rule reads as follows :

No committee on any private Bill originating in the Senate (of which notice is required to be given) is to consider the same until one and after each notice of the sitting of such committee has been first posted up in the lobby, nor in the case of any such Bill originating in the House of Commons until after twenty-four hours like notice.

This Bill came from the House of Commons and the motion is made simply to expedite the passing of this measure.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

BRITISH AMERICA ASSURANCE COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON (in the absence of the Hon. Mr. Frost)—I beg to move the second reading of Bill (116) An Act respecting the British America Assurance Company.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I move that the 60th rule be suspended in so far as the same relates to this Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is there any difference between this Bill and the previous Bill ?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—They are both the same kind of companies, and both suffering in the same way.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not find it is the same thing at all. In one Bill I find a provision that the capital be reduced to 50 per cent once for all, and in the other there is a provision that it may be reduced from time to time whenever the directors see fit to do so. I should like to know the reason of such a difference ?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I know nothing about the internal arrangements of the different companies. I can speak with authority about the Western Assurance Company, but I fancy the British America Company was not hit as hard, to use a common expression, by the fire as the Western Assurance Company and consequently they do not require to wipe out their capital to the same extent as the other companies.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—What is the necessity for the wholesale suspension of rules. It is only in urgent cases that they should be suspended.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—This company is doing a large business, and perhaps the objection might be taken by the hon. gentleman himself, if an agent were to ask him for insurance on his property. He might say 'Well you are wiping out half of your capital without making any provision to replace it.' This company is going to wipe out half of its capital and issue another million of stock to take the place of the capital wiped out, in order that the business the company has in hand may be safeguarded, and the company may be in a position to pay the risks that may occur in the meantime.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If I am well informed the wiping out has taken place.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The minister says yes.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The meeting is to be held on the 19th of June, and they cannot carry out this arrangement until the legislation is passed ; but all provision has been made so that there shall be no interruption in the business of either company.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—And they want to confirm what has been done by the directors.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—What is suggested by the directors will be done on Thursday, 19th June, but they require the legislation first.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understand they desire that those Bills shall be assented to at an early date. They wish to get them through and get the consent of the Crown.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not want to make objection, but I wish to call attention to the fact that not one of the Bills on the order paper for to-day marked as printed in French has been distributed. I do not say they are not printed, because they are marked as printed but we have not one of them in our files. I went over all the Bills, and I find not one on the order paper which is printed in French. If they are printed we should have the benefit of them. However, I make no objection.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Thursday, June 2, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills, reported from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, were read the third time and passed under suspension of the rules :—

Bill (45) An Act respecting the Home Bank of Canada.—(Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell.)

Bill (114) An Act respecting the Western Assurance Company.—(Hon. Mr. Gibson.)

Bill (115) An Act respecting the British America Assurance Company.—(Hon. Mr. Gibson.)

INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto) moved the second reading of Bill (8) An Act further to amend the Insurance Act.

He said : When this Bill was first introduced, I felt, as it was one somewhat out of the ordinary line, that it was due to the House I should then make some explanation as to the Bill, and it will be remembered by hon. gentleman who were then present that its general scope was explained and the necessity for it was stated. I may, perhaps, state that in 1885 the Insurance Act was amended so as to enable companies doing business on the assessment plan instead of what is called the level premium plan, to transact business on the assessment plan in Canada, and pursuant to the provisions of that amendment one company, at all events, has undertaken to transact and has transacted a large amount of business. In 1899 the law was again amended, so that any assessment company so licensed to do business under the provisions of that Act as so amended, to be at liberty, upon giving notice of the intention to maintain the reserves required by the Insurance Act, to transact business on the level premium plan. Under that provision the same company which had taken advantage of the first amendment gave notice of its intention to transact business in that way, and it has been transacting business in that way, having made a deposit of the reserve, in conformity with the provisions of the Act. Circumstances have arisen, which are present to the minds of all here, which make it expedient that some provision should be made now for those who have been in the past insuring with that company. Although the reserves have been maintained, the deposits having been made with the government in compliance with the requirements of the Insurance Act on the assessment plan, and under that provision a considerable sum of money is now in the hands of the government as security for the policy-holders, the company has also been making necessary the level premium plan, on which they were enabled to carry on business under the last amendment of 1899. Although those deposits have all been made in conformity with the requirements of the Act, yet the business of the company which is a United States company doing a large business on the other side, has declined to a very considerable extent, and in consequence of the change in its position there, it has changed the character of a large part of its business to the level premium plan ; but in consequence of these and other circumstances the business in Canada has declined to one of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $8,000,000. Now, a business of this description on the decline, being a business that in point of fact had been carried on for some years actually below the cost of insurance, must more or less become worse and worse each year, and the position of those who are assured on the assessment plan must become more and more difficult. The result is that, in order to maintain the business, large assessments would have to be made in each year, increasing therefore the cost of maintaining those assessment policies. Of course any increase in the way of assessment premiums is not only an unpopular thing, but is looked upon as an unjust thing by those who are assured, and as a matter of fact the cost of insurance would be so much enhanced if something were not done for the relief of those insured on that plan, that it would be almost impossible, ultimately, for those insured to continue their payments. The assessments that would require to be made would be so heavy that many persons would be obliged, and others would elect to drop their insurance, and so the residuum of business which would continue might be fairly classed as being undesirable insurance, the amount of insurance which would be continued consisting chiefly of those who, by reason of their age, could not at any reasonable rate now secure insurance, or who by reason of the change in the conditions of their health would not be able to renew, or insure elsewhere. This leaves it a matter which must be one of considerable concern as to what should be done. The plan which has been thought out and the principle of which has been approved of by the superintendent of insurance, is that which is embodied in the Bill which I have presented to the House. By that plan each policy-holder on the assessment plan is allowed three options. He is allowed to change his policy into one on the fixed premium plan for the same amount as he has now on the assessment plan. In that case, however, he would be a debtor and would continue to be a debtor to the company for the difference between the average amount of what he has been paying on the assessment plan and the amount which he ought to pay upon the level premium or fixed premium plan, in order to provide for the cost of actually carrying his policy. The other plan would be one by which, instead of increasing the annual burden upon him, he might have a credit for that amount; in other words he would continue to pay the average amount of his assessments, the average amount, which he has been in years past paying per annum, and the difference between that and what he ought to pay as the cost of insurance I would remain as a charge against his policy. The third plan would be one by which he might reduce the amount of his policy to such a sum as the average amount of his assessments in past years would actually purchase and maintain for him. So that in these ways he would be enabled to maintain insurance for the remainder of his days—in other words maintain the policy which was accepted by this company, but which, however, under perhaps changed circumstances he could not secure in another company. These being the principles on which the Bill is introduced and that being the plan outlined in the Bill which contains as I take it the necessary provisions for carrying that into effect, all of the plans to be carried out would be carried out under the direction of the superintendent of insurance who would have the approval of the plans and the amounts which would become payable, so that the assured would have the protection of the superintendent of insurance, in respect of the amounts which they would be required to pay and the amounts of the policies which they would be entitled to receive. In this way it appears to me that the interests of those who are now insured in the company would be maintained. One other thing further is provided for, and that is also a protection of the assured; it is this, that the amount which is on deposit with the government now should be apportioned so that each policy-holder now a policy-holder would receive, in one form or another, in the shape of a bonus on his policy, payable when the policy would become payable, the proportion of that deposit now in the hands of the government to which he would justly and fairly become entitled under a proper and fair apportionment of that fund. So that the policy-holder would get all in the shape of an insurance policy that the premium which he has in the past been paying would entitle him to get. If he chose to take a credit he would get, for the payments which should have been made in the past but which would remain a charge on his policy in the future, the benefit of the increased insurance which, if those sums had been paid in the past, he would possess, but leaving the charge against his policy under the new policy.

Thus in whatever position he maintained his policy, he would get his due proportion of the funds which are now available in Canada. That is the extent and the only extent to which policy-holders in this company, a foreign company which has been licensed to do business in this country, under the law, as amended in 1883, could be protected—that is the only measure of protection, benefit or advantage, as far as I can see, that could be given to a policy-holder. There are many policy-holders whose policies have lapsed through not paying up their assessments in respect of some past years. There has seemed to me a great deal of difficulty in making provision for such cases. I admit the advisability of doing so. I concede the advisability, if it is possible to do so—to provide for the revival of any such policies—but at present I am unable to see exactly a plan for that which could be fairly worked out. With a view, however, of having the whole matter dealt with on its merits, dealt with for the protection solely of those who are interested as policy-holders in this company, I intend to ask the Senate, if it will allow the second reading, to permit the Bill to be referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, where all the matters connected with the Bill and the merits of the Bill, if it has merits—and I believe it has—where all the rights of the parties, both those who are at present in the company and who have been in the past insured in the company, who have ceased to keep up their payments, together with any other rights and interests there may be that should be represented, may be heard and discussed, and the merits of the matter disposed of in a way that could not conveniently be done if this Bill were referred to a Committee of the Whole House. I would appeal to hon. gentlemen present to allow the Bill, on that understanding, to pass the second reading, and then it would go before the committee of which I have spoken. In that way we could hear what those who are interested as policy-holders, and who have been connected with the company for many years, have to say with reference to the maintenance of their rights, how far the provisions of the Bill will meet their cases individually and collectively, and how far those who have in the last few years ceased to be interested in the company will be protected. In this way the merits of the whole proposition which is embodied in the Bill, or which should be embodied in the Bill, can be dealt with in a satisfactory way. I would just say one thing further with reference to the fund which is in the hands of the government as a deposit for the security of policy-holders. Of course it will be readily understood that, as matters are at present, all those who are continuing policy-holders are the only persons who are entitled to look to that fund for protection or entitled to resort to it for any advantage or benefit. However, a plan may be devised of meeting the cases of those who have in the past permitted their policies to lapse, or who have been obliged perforce to allow their policies to lapse; but this appears to me to be the only way in which the actual rights of the present policy-holders can be worked out and protected in the future. The only alternative, it appears to me, is that those who now are and continue to be policy-holders will be subjected to assessments, not merely to the amount which is needed for the purpose year by year of maintaining those policies and providing for the death claims which may, from time to time, arise, but they only are entitled who have maintained their contracts and kept up their rights as against the company. A person having a claim against a mutual company of this kind has practically no other remedy, because the company, not being a stock company, having no invested funds, except those which are the necessary reserves for the purpose year by year of providing for insurance, until the funds are replaced by new assessments, having no funds except those that are pledged in the hands of the company for the payment of the debts that may immediately fall in, there is no other practical remedy or provision that can be made so as to protect them in the future; and it seems to me, therefore, that there is only the alternative of higher assessments in the future, not only to cover the costs of maintaining those in the future, but also, perhaps, to provide for deficiencies with reference to it in the past. I do not know that I need say more in presenting the proposition submitted by this Bill than I have already said, but I do think that it is an occasion when we should look fairly and squarely at what is the interest of those at present in the company, in the first instance, and see what it is advisable to do for their protection as insured in a company which has been licensed by this government, under the authority of a law passed by this parliament, and which company has been continuing to do business on that system with the approval of the superintendent of insurance.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the question is put, I should like to raise a point of order. I think that the Bill introduced by my hon. friend should be a private Bill and not a public Bill. At all events, it might be placed in that class of Bills which are called hybrid Bills. I refer to page 732 of Bourinot.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Perhaps it will avoid discussion if I say a word to my hon. friend. The intention was to introduce a clause limiting this Bill entirely to this Mutual Reserve Company. The provisions of the law would stand as they are as far as all other companies are concerned.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That fortifies my position. I am glad my hon. friend made that declaration. It gives the Bill its true character. Bourinot says :

> In the session of 1875 the premier, Mr. Mackenzie, moved for leave to introduce a public Bill to rearrange the capital of the Northern Railway of Canada to enable the said company to change the gauge of its railway and to provide for the lease of the government line or the road on federal conditions. Objection having been taken that some of the provisions affected private interests and altered the powers of the company on very material points the Speaker decided that the Bill ought to be withdrawn.

Separate Bills were subsequently passed by the House.

On page 734, we find that a new rule was adopted in the Canadian House of Commons in 1883. Bourinot writes as follows :

> But a Bill proposing to amend a public Act in the interests of certain persons will not be allowed to proceed as a public Bill.

That is precisely the case of the Bill presented to-day. Therefore, I ask the ruling of the chair on this Bill. It should not be proposed as a public Bill, and should not be allowed to be proceeded with as a public Bill. The Bill itself is for a certain class of persons, only those affected by a certain insurance company, and the declaration just made by the government gives the Bill its proper character.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I only made the remark as a suggestion to remove the impression from the mind of my hon. friend that it was of that character. If he takes the objection, then I will stand by the Bill as it is. The Bill, on its face, is a public Bill which applies to all companies similarly situated.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I took the exception before the hon. minister made his declaration, and that proves that in my opinion the Bill in question was a private Bill. Subsequently we have the declaration of the hon. minister giving the same feature to the Bill, and fortifying the position I took.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Surely my hon. friend, the Secretary of State, does not intend to force this Bill through the House, when he knows that every insurance company in the Dominion of Canada, from one end of Canada to the other, have petitioned against this Bill going through, in its present state, making it a private Bill entirely. The other insurance companies will not recognize this Bill, as a public Bill, but a Bill in the interests of a company named in the Bill distinctly apart from all the other insurance companies. If the Bill is going through as a public Bill, surely the objections that have been sent to the government and to almost every member of this honourable body, should induce us to give them an opportunity of stating the opinions of insurance companies which are affected by the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That will come before the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The question is one of order.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—If the hon. gentleman would see his way to withdraw the poin of order I shall be glad, for I am not asking that the House should be committed to the principle of this Bill or to the method of its introduction as a public or private Bill ; the only object I have in view is that the rights and interests of those who are affected as policyholders in this country should be dealt with, not in a haphazard way, not merely as the result of a debate, which might become more or less heated according to the views of different members, but in a judicial way such as the Banking and Commerce Committee could deal with it. If that could be done, and he could see his way to withdraw his objection, I should be glad ; if not I should like to address a few words on the question of order. But I hope the hon. gentleman can see his way to accede to my request, in the interest of the people whom we are anxious to protect and serve. When the Bill goes to the Committee on Banking and Commerce they can come to the conclusion he now urges or they can determine the matter on its merits because, as my hon. friend will see by reference to Bourinot, at page 727 it is laid down as follows :

> Sometimes doubts may arise whether a Bill should be classed as public or private. Many cases of this kind occurred in the practice of the old Canadian legislature, but the House generally allowed themselves to be guided by the decision of the committee to whom the Bill might be referred.

So that this committee with whom we propose to place it, would be able to determine, apart from the merits of the matter, whether the Bill was in the right form or whether it was one that ought to be dealt with as a private Bill. It is possible if that view prevailed with them they might see their way to make such an amendment in the Bill as would meet the case spoken of. As to the question of the other insurance companies, I should like to say a word.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is not the point of order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman should stand to the point of order.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I think it is in perfect order, and that this is a public Bill. Let us see what the law is. The law is a general Act and deals with a branch of business. It is the Insurance Act which is being dealt with—a Bill to amend the Insurance Act. The nature of the amendment is another matter. That is one feature of it, but the Bill is one to amend the Insurance Act; it is to amend it with reference to what? With reference to a whole class of insurance, with reference to what companies? Not one company alone, but all companies who have, or might hereafter avail themselves of it. In dealing with this matter, in this particular way, a special enactment with reference to a company dealing with its affairs and its policies, would still leave the law in a form under which the same mistake might be repeated, and what is proposed here is that those who have taken advantage of the general provisions of the law shall be subject to the amending law which it is now proposed to enact. That has been done by one company. We know that it has been done by one, and it may have been availed of by other companies. I do not know whether it has or not, and, therefore, it seems to me that it is proper that it should be done by a general Bill. This is more or less a vexed question as to what is or what is not a private Bill—when a Bill ceases to be a public Bill and becomes one which is to be called a private Bill. There are a great many authorities which can be referred to on the subject. I have taken the trouble to look into them and it seems to me, in view of what I have just read, that the proper course is to leave it to the committee to whom the Bill may be referred to deal with it in this way. That is the plan adopted, as is stated here, in the old Houses of Canada before confederation. Bourinot states:

A committee has under such circumstances made some amendments to the Bill in order to obviate the difficulty and bring it under the category of a public or private Bill.

So that it would be open to the very committee to whom we propose to refer this measure hereafter to make such amendments as would deal with it in that way, and I have in my mind that if it be found that no other company has availed itself of the provisions of the Act of 1899, then an amendment could be made by the committee which would, in the words I have referred to, bring it within the category of a public or private Bill. So that in that way I think I may fairly claim that I am within my right in presenting this as a public Bill. At page 729 Bourinot states:

As a rule it may be stated that when Bills treat of matters of general policy.

And that is what we are dealing with here—we are dealing with all companies who may have taken advantage of the right given to them by the provisions of section 42a passed in 1899. Whenever a company has done that it is to be governed by this Act. Bourinot says that if it is a question of general policy, such as sanitary, police or commercial, then it may be considered of a public nature. In fact, all Bills affecting the general interest of the community—and what affects this community more than this question of insurance by one class of company or another, by one class of policy or another, so that the interests of the whole community are involved. Such measures are out of the category of private Bills dealing with the special interests of corporations or associations. I am not here dealing with the private interest of a corporation. I do not propose to be identified with anything of the kind. I am proposing to deal with interests at the other end of the business. I am proposing to deal with those who have in the past held policies and rights against companies, and who have therefore got the right to come to parliament, which has placed the company in a position to do that business, first, by the operation of the Act of 1885, and afterwards by the Act of 1899, and ask that this section of the Act be repealed, except as to companies which may have already availed themselves of it and the policy-holders who have acquired rights under it. Bourinot says :

It is unusual to repeal or amend a public Act by a private Bill.

The only way this could be dealt with by a private Bill is by dealing directly with the case of a special company, and declaring that notwithstanding the general Act, all that have done business under such Act might have certain rights. That is surely not what is intended. In this country we have only two classes of Bills, public and private Bills, and, classifying them in that way, this is fairly to be determined and dealt with as a public Bill. It is well known that in England they have 'hybrid' Bills—Bills which are more or less public, but still private in their operations ; on the other hand, Bills which are more or less private, but still public in their operations, and those are dealt with as 'hybrid' Bills, not as other classes of Bills under the other classification. Under the circumstances, it seems to me I am within my right in presenting this as a public Bill.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—When we come to deal with the motion which will be presented, if it is presented, I will have to express my objections to the Bill as it appears before this House ; but with reference to the question of order which is raised, it seems to me that there is no ground for it, with all deference to the hon. gentleman who has made the objection. This Bill is surely a public Bill on its face. When, in 1899, the Insurance Act was amended, and section 42a was added to the Act, surely it was done by public Bill, and the Bill which is now before the House is of the very same nature. It deals, as was very properly said, not with one company, not any more with this Mutual Reserve Association than with any other company. It is a Bill which is intended to apply to all companies doing business under the assessment system, and that will be one of my objections on the merits of the Bill ; because, if we pass this Bill, it would enable other mutual companies to violate or change their conditions with their policy-holders without the consent of the insured. So that it is surely a public Bill. It does not affect this company more than any other company ; it affects all such companies, and it is to be on the statute-book until repealed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not share the view taken by the two gentlemen who have just spoken, after reading the authorities laid down in the book. But, apart from that I would express my surprise at the statements made by the Secretary of State. If the government intend to amend this Bill, confining its provisions exclusively to this one company, then it becomes de facto a private Bill. That brings it at once within the meaning of Bourinot's declaration as to how public and private Bills shall be treated, and it confirms, to my mind, the correctness of the position taken by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona. Bourinot says :

A Bill proposing to amend a public Act——

Now this is to amend a public Act beyond a doubt.

A Bill proposing to amend a public Act in the interest of certain persons——

Now this is in the interest of a certain class of policy-holders. It does not say that it shall be confined to one particular company, but it is confined to assessment companies doing business, and, consequently, comes directly within the meaning of this language :

A Bill proposing to amend a public Act in the interest of certain persons shall not be allowed to proceed as a public Bill.

This Bill clearly is in the interest of certain persons, and the whole argument of my hon. friend who introduced the Bill, has been directed towards protecting a certain class of policy-holders in a certain assessment company. I admit that it is a Bill, which, upon the face of it, is for the purpose of amending a Bill which was introduced by the government, dealing with a question which the government alone should take the responsibility of dealing with. I intended to refer to that in any remarks which I should have made on the merits of the Bill itself, but at present I do not propose to do that. I do not know what the views of the Speaker may be, but what we have to deal with now is whether this Bill is really introduced as a public Bill in the interest of a certain class of persons. My impression is that there are but one or two companies of this kind in addition to the one with which we are now dealing, doing business in Canada. We all know that this Bill is introduced in the interest of one company and not in the interest of the others. It is made an amendment to the General Insurance Act for the purpose of meeting this particular case. Whether there are any other companies or not I am not aware, but if there are time will demonstrate the fact that they will find themselves in the position this company has got itself into.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The hon. gentleman from Belleville has misapprehended the difference between the case we are dealing with now, and what he speaks of as the interest of certain persons. This is a general Bill introduced in the public interest. There are those who are interested as policy-holders of this company as well as in other companies which may have taken advantage of the Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It does not affect any but policy-holders.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—On that same principle, no one could introduce as a public Bill, an amendment to the Joint Stock Companies Act, because people who are doing business under the Joint Stock Companies Act may have found it necessary that that Act should be amended. These are not the whole public, it is true, but people who are interested in joint stock companies are a very numerous portion of the public, and whatever affects them affects the public, just as whatever affects policy-holders interested in any insurance company interests the public. I would also remind him that only last session we had a Bill here introduced as a public measure to amend the Exchequer Court Act. That was done, not because the welfare of the people at large was concerned in it, except as they were interested in railways and other companies that were the subject of that special legislation. In determining the advisability of this law, I was illustrating the necessity of it by a case which is one that will be affected by it, and where there is a definite grievance to be redressed and a definite difficulty to be overcome ; but surely everybody is interested in the insurance law. Just consider for a moment ; supposing a private Bill were introduced with reference to a private company which has taken advantage of this Act and has applied to them the law as amended, the law would remain unamended as applied to other companies which took advantage of that Act, and we might go on getting into the same difficulty alleged in the particular case in question. What I propose to do is to amend the law here so as to provide in the case of every company which has taken advantage of the Act, or may take advantage of it—because it is still the law—that there shall be a definite remedy applied which shall secure to all policy-holders in any such company that which is fairly due to them. I illustrated this by reference to a special company, but I do not understand that the Bill is in any way limited to that particular company.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—There is no doubt that the Bill before us is a public Bill, because it is to amend a public Act. The statement made by the hon. Secretary of State cannot affect the nature of the Bill. Now, if a Bill which amends a public Act is a public Bill, it is not a private Bill merely because the amendment will affect a certain class. If you make an amendment to a public Act in the interest of the policy-holders, it generally affects a certain class of people, but that does not make it a private Bill. If the hon. member from Stadacona will allow me to make the remark ; what he does he must do in the interest of the policy-holders. Everything he has said and done so far shows his good feeling towards the policy-holders. If his objection was well taken, what would be the affect of the Speaker's decision ? Would it not be injurious to those in whom he takes such an interest ? If he succeeds in preventing this Bill from passing, what will be the affect ? Will not the policy-holders be deprived of the only chance they may have this session of a remedy for their grievances ? If a Bill is sent to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, I know that that committee which is a strong committee, will do what is necessary to make it as good as possible for the policy-holders. If the Bill, becomes a private Bill, what will be the consequence ? Will this House be in a position to pass it as a private Bill ? I think under the circumstances the hon. gentleman had better withdraw his objection if he is so deeply interested in the policy-holders.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I wish to show that this Bill is altogether germane to section 42a of the Insurance Act which was introduced in 1899. It is so germane that it would have been a proper provision to have added to that section as a subsection. The first clause of the Bill says :

> 42b. Any company to which section 42b of this Act applies and which has complied with the provisions of that section, shall be entitled to obtain a license under section 4 of this Act, which license shall enable the company to enter in Canada into contracts of life insurance with fixed and definite premiums, and shall, except as hereinafter provided, from the date of the said license, possess and enjoy all the rights and powers and be subject to all the liabilities enacted by this Act with respect to life insurance companies licensed under section 4 of this Act.

Then it goes on to say : 'For the purposes of this section the expression assessment premium means the average amount, &c.' There is nothing in this Bill which shows on the face of it that it applies to any particular company. It is merely by chance that the Bill may affect one company more than all other companies ; but, as a matter of fact, it would affect all insurance companies doing business on the assessment plan, and for my part when I saw the Bill I asked the superintendent of insurance : 'I understand you approve of the principle of this Bill, but are you taking into consideration that if passed in its present shape it will allow a number of other insurance companies who are doing business under the assessment plan to change their obligations towards their policy-holders ?' His answer was that he approved of the principle of the Bill, but that the Bill would have to be amended considerably before it would be in an acceptable form. As far as the question of order is concerned, it seems to me that this is a public Bill. Even if applied only to a company it can be considered as a public Bill. Subject to correction my present impression is that if the Bill had for its object to come to the rescue of an insurance company, whether the Mutual Reserve or any other, it would be a private Bill ; but, if it has for its object to come to the rescue of all policy-holders of that company who are not stockholders, it at once changes its character. This very company has been dealing with over $22,000,000 of insurance and a very large number of people are interested. It has been stated that they have been robbed right and left by the managers of this company, that their money has been taken to the United States and squandered without scruple. Will it be denied that under such circumstances it would be in the power of parliament to pass a Bill, which would be a public measure I think, for the purpose of coming to the rescue of this large class of the community, whose interests are at stake to a very large extent. It seems to me that it would still be a public Bill, because it would not have for its purpose the protection of the interest of a corporation, but the protection of the interest of many persons who have been connected with that corporation. But that is not the question before this honourable House. The question is whether the Bill should be regarded as a public Bill or a private Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I may say a word in addition to what has been stated by my hon. friend. The authority cited just now will be my answer. The hon. member who has just spoken, said that it must be a public Bill because it concerns a whole class, not only the policy-holders of the Mutual Reserve Life Association, but the whole class comprised in the assessment plan. If the hon. gentleman will look at Bourinot, page 728, he will find that in the session of 1865 a Bill was brought up from the legislative council, the object of which was to enable the church societies and the incorporated synods of the Church of England diocese in Canada, to sell all the rectoral land in that diocese. That was to deal with the whole of them. The objection was taken that the Bill was private in its character, and that it ought to have been introduced on petition. The Speaker decided against the Bill, and consequently no progress was made. The hon. gentleman from Toronto said that this Bill might be referred back, and he asked to have it referred back to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. Why ? If it is a public Bill there is no need of that, but he wants it to be referred to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce because there are private interests involved and he wants to hear from those people. He asserts himself, by that remark, that this Bill is of a private nature, and I say it ought to have come in as a private Bill. It may be a hybrid Bill, but if so it should go through all the stages of a private Bill.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—This House has signified its willingness to appoint a special committee to investigate the operations of an insurance company as they affect a great many people in Canada. The House having admitted that these grievances should be investigated, they should be reached by legislation. You could not deal with them by a private Bill because the company would object to changing their own regulations, and they would not do that I suppose. If you deal with them at all it must be by a public Bill which will interfere with the operations of that company under its charter. It appears to me the only way to reach that company, and redress the grievances of its policy-holders, is by the introduction of a public Bill which will reach this company doing business in Canada. I am informed that they are licensed to do business in Canada under a public Act, and this Bill is a public measure because it interferes with some of the privileges the company possess under that Act. It appears to me if they are to be brought before parliament at all, it must necessarily be under a public Bill, because these gentlemen are not going to apply for a private Bill and they are the only ones who could do so under their charter.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The further we go in the discussion on the point of order, the more clearly it appears that the objection of the hon. member from Stadacona is well taken. He has very plainly set out his ground. The hon. senator from Montreal says that if the Bill of 1899 was a public Bill this must also be a public Bill. The Bill of 1899 was general in its character, although it was introduced and passed at the urgent request of this very company. Still it was so framed that any assessment company could have taken advantage of it; but what is this Bill for? This Bill is to deal with a specific company.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—No.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Yes, it is in the form of a public Bill providing for all assessment companies, but the hon. Secretary of State has clearly indicated that it is to apply to a specific number of people in this country who hold policies in the Mutual Reserve Life Association. That is what the Bill is for, and therefore in its character, its application and effect it is a private Bill to deal with a certain number of individuals privately, and all other persons are excluded. No one will come under the operation of this Bill unless he holds a policy in the Mutual Reserve Life Association. The Bill is, therefore, private in its character. In my humble opinion the point is well taken, and I think the decision should be that the Bill ought to be introduced as a private measure.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I should like to ask the hon. member from Wellington how it could be possible to introduce a private Bill to interfere with the operations of this company.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is very easy to answer that. All they have to do is to introduce a private Bill and it will accomplish the same thing.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But the company will not introduce the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I admit that, but some member might introduce the Bill on behalf of the company.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, they could not do it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Parliament would not accept it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman said himself that he would amend this Bill so as to confine it to this company.

The SPEAKER—I have had no notice that this question was to be raised. If I had had notice I should be better prepared to deal with it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You can reserve your decision until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER—The first thing is to look at the Bill itself. The Bill is, on the face of it, a public Bill. It proposes to amend a public Act. The first clause says :

1. The Insurance Act, being chapter 124 of the revised statutes of Canada, is hereby amended by inserting therein immediately after section 42a the following section as section 42b.

Then the Bill goes on, not to deal with any particular company, but to deal with all companies which come under section 42a, so that on the face of the Bill it is a public Bill. Then is there any reason for thinking that it is not a public Bill ? I must confess that some reason has been given for thinking so. The statement made by the hon. Secretary of State did certainly indicate that the Bill, although apparently a public Bill, was not in fact a public Bill, but was intended to affect just one company. However, the Bill is not a government Bill; and, further, is not in charge of the Secretary of State and, consequently, his declaration would not bind the House. The hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill did not assume the same attitude as the hon. Secretary of State, so we have to deal with the Bill itself on its face, and on its face it is a public Bill. I may be allowed to say a word or two on some of the authorities which have been cited. I am quite prepared to recognize the fact that the hon. gentleman from Stadacona made a very good case on behalf of the point which he raised. One of the cases to which the hon. gentleman referred is to be found at page 728 of the last edition of Bourinot. That was a Bill with respect to certain churches, which came up in the legislative council of old Canada in 1865. It was an Act respecting certain church societies and the incorporated synods of the Church of England dioceses in Canada, to enable them to sell the rectorial lands in those dioceses. These church societies have always been dealt with as private corporations. Bourinot goes on to say :

All Bills respecting synods and religious corporations are considered private Bills since 1867.

I know in the province from which I come they were considered private Bills before that, and in old Canada they were apparently so regarded ; so that the case is not so strong as it might appear. Another case which the hon. gentleman cited was one referred to at page 734 of the same volume. It is as follows :—

But a Bill proposing to amend a public Act in the interest of certain persons will not be allowed to proceed as a public Bill.

When reading that it struck me as a rather broad statement, and I have referred to the case in question. That case came up in the session of 1883. It was with respect to claims to lands in Manitoba. The right hon. gentleman who led the government then, said the Bill was a private Bill, and the gentleman in charge of the measure in the House of Commons did not attempt to contest that statement. On referring to the Act which was proposed to be amended by that Bill, I find that the Bill was intended to confirm the titles to certain lands granted by the Hudson's Bay Company. That is a different case altogether from the one before us. The granting of lands by the Hudson's Bay Company was an Act of a much more private character than the one now before us. There is this about it, that technical rules are sometimes used to protect the public interest and private interests too, but I do not think they should be strained for the purpose of hindering parliament from granting relief to persons who suffer. I find at page 730 Bourinot says that in 1885 the government took charge of two Bills. One was a Bill referring to the Commercial Bank of Windsor, and the other to the Bank of British Columbia. This was applying a general Act to individual cases. They were referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce before consideration in Committee of the Whole and that I understand is the course proposed to be pursued in reference to this Bill. Bourinot says :

Whenever public Bills involve private interests which should be carefully guarded they are subjected to the same examination provided for private Bills.

I think I should be straining the technicalities too far to hold that this was not a public Bill, and then again I do not see that any harm can come of having the measure go to the committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is not a reason.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman will excuse me, it is a reason why the rule should not be strained. That should be considered —it always is. Other passages might be cited from Bourinot. It has been stated that the committee can deal with the matter so as to remove any objection. The committee may report that the Bill shall apply only to one company and then it will be for the Senate to decide whether or not they will act on the report of the committee. If I were to maintain this point of order I should take the whole question out of the power of the Senate, and unless a very clear case were made I should not be justified in doing that. I therefore rule that the question of order is not well raised.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have given some attention to this Bill because of the interest involved, and because I have been communicated with by quite a large number of interested parties both in Montreal and outside of Montreal, parties who hold or have held insurance with that company and whose policies have been allowed to lapse. As I had occasion to say a few minutes ago, if we consult the records of this company we find some $22,000,000 insurance involved in this enterprise, and I refer merely to the Canadian policy-holders. Therefore it shows at once that it is a question of very large interest, which should be examined with the utmost care by this honourable House. As I am at present advised, if the company, whether represented by its present management or by its old management, was coming to ask for relief, I do not think they would be entitled to any relief. But I think it is our duty to try to come to the relief of the Canadian policy-holders, and if we fail to find means to do it I am quite sure that their interests will be sacrificed. A large number have grown old enough to make it prohibitive for them to now take an insurance with other companies, and it is a very serious matter for them. A large number of them have allowed their policies to lapse, because the assessments became prohibitive, and they were unable, in reason, to respond to the assessments that were made against them. Our object, as I understand the question, should be three-fold. It should be first to devise the means, if possible, of recovering for the Canadian policy-holders all the money that they have paid, except a fair proportion to cover charges of expenses of administration. Our second object should be to revive, if possible, on fair terms, all policies which have been allowed to lapse for non-payment of assessments, because the assessment had become prohibitive ; and our third object would be to convert the policies from the assessment plan to the level premium plan. These I take to be the three objects of this Bill, and if they can be achieved we would safe-guard and we would protect the interests of all parties who have dealt with that company, and I think all means towards that end should be exhausted. I may be over sanguine, but I am under the impression that we can do that, and at any rate we can ascertain if the company cannot be made to accept those provisions to achieve these objects. The great trouble arose because that company carried their operations on the assessment plan. It is well known that United States companies doing insurance business on the level premium plan are affording as good, even better protection, to the parties dealing with them, than our Canadian companies, because United States companies are obliged to make a deposit sufficient to cover all the risks involved, sufficient to provide for all the insured being reinsured at a given moment if the company were to fail. This provision affects United States companies, and in the States they have a like provision affecting all Canadian companies doing business there. Therefore, it shows the advisability, if it is possible, of converting the policies issued on the old plan into the level premium plan or regular system of insurance. If a vote were to be taken on this Bill in its present shape, I declare that for my part I would vote against it. I would vote against the Bill, first because it would affect all companies which are doing business under the assessment plan and it would permit them to change the conditions of their contracts with the parties who have dealt with them. The second reason why I would vote against the Bill would be because it would not afford sufficient relief, because as the Bill, as framed, does not tend to redeem for the Canadian policy-holders the money that they have paid, and which has been taken to the States ; the third reason is, because the Bill, as framed, affords no relief to some fourteen millions of policies which have been allowed to lapse because the assessments had become prohibitive. One of the parties who have written to me is the Hon. J. Hall, a barrister of very high standing, lately of Montreal, but now residing in Calgary. I have been in possession of all the correspondence he has had with the company, and I can appreciate, from having read that correspondence, how it became unreasonable for the parties who were insured to continue to pay their assessments. They were told that if they paid the first assessment that it would be a final assessment, that no other assessment would be demanded, but a second assessment, which was prohibitive, was made against them, and a large number of the parties who were insured with that company had to allow their policies to lapse. Well, to my mind it amounts to confiscation, and it is our duty to use all the means at our disposal to obtain relief for the parties who have dealt with that company. I agree with the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Toronto that the best way would be to send the Bill to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. It should be accompanied with an expression of opinion in the direction that I have mentioned, especially for the purpose of preventing this Bill being made applicable to all the companies. I think that means will be found, when the Bill is in committee to amend it in such a way that it will remain a public Bill, and that nevertheless it will not affect other companies operating under the assessment system. I think that before this session comes to an end we should pass another Bill amending the Insurance Act applying to all companies, for the purpose of preventing the law being abused as it has been in this case. But this, to my mind, would have to be done by a separate Bill, while the object of the Bill in question should be directed as much as possible towards giving relief to all parties who have dealt with this particular company. Of course, in coming to the rescue of the several classes of persons who have dealt with the company, means would have to be found to do so on fair terms to all. This should be a matter of serious study in the committee to which the Bill is referred, and I have strong hopes that the object may be achieved. For these reasons, and without accepting the principle of the Bill, I would be in favour of the motion for the second reading and of its reference to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—To my mind the suggestions made by the hon. gentleman who has just spoken are altogether impracticable, and I think that a moment's reflection will show him that that is the fact. However, I will endeavour to deal with that question as shortly as possible after making some other remarks. In the first place I think it is a vicious principle—that may be a strong word, but not too strong for the occasion—to attach to a general Act upon the statute-book an amendment of this character, for the reason that it places, as the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry has just pointed out, all assessment companies in the same position, or rather places them in a position by which they can close that portion of their business whenever they think proper to do so. The Insurance Act, and particularly that Act which applies exclusively to life insurance, has been in the past under the sole control and responsibility of the government of the day.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And why the government should upon an important question of this kind allow a private individual to deal with the subject I cannot readily understand. We all know that the business of life insurance is based upon scientific principles, after mature consideration for centuries, I might almost say, certainly for many many decades, upon principles that have been arrived at as safe to the companies and to the individuals, by those who have devoted themselves to actuarial studies. The action of the government, I think, should be, if the House will permit me to say, instead of adding to the difficulties which at present arise, to repeal that clause which is now upon the statute-book permitting assessment companies to carry on business in the manner in which it has been carried on by this company with which we are now dealing. I have, like my hon. friend, received a great many letters from different parts of the country asking my opinion as to what they should do. They have sent me a circular which has been distributed by the vice-president of the company to policy-holders asking them whether they approve of the Bill itself and asking them to notify the company which class of the three they should accept. I frankly confess that in my answer to these friends who have written me I was unable to advise. I recommended one friend to write to the company and ask them what position he would be placed in by accepting any one of the policies. I put the case to him in this way : Supposing you are insured for $1,000, and you have been paying insurance for the last eight or ten years or longer, ask the company what position you would be in if you accept the first, second or third proposition, and when you get an answer to that you will be enabled to judge for yourself which course to pursue. It is only by placing before the policy-holder the results which would follow either one of the three propositions that he would be enabled to judge as to whether it would be advisable to drop his policy altogether or to continue paying his assessments upon it. The hon. Secretary of State, in his remarks upon this matter, when it was before the House on a previous occasion, made a most extraordinary statement. He said that the parties who accepted this mode of insurance adopted the gambling principle. Now, if there is any gambling principle about it, it must be upon the part of the company itself and not of the individual. How many widows are there, I know many—who have been inveigled into taking a policy of this character by the agents, on the pretense that it was a cheaper system than the regular system, and they pointed out hundreds and thousands of people who had taken insurance of this character because of the great advantages it offered. The parties who insured under this system never thought of entering into a gambling arrangement. If there were any gambling at all it must have been upon the part of the agent or the company, and not on the part of the party who paid his money and accepted the policy, and for that reason I think the remark of the hon. gentleman was altogether uncalled for, and not applicable at all to the parties who took out policies. My hon. friend who has just spoken suggested the idea that parties whose policies had lapsed should be protected, and that parliament should pass an Act compelling the association to recognize the rights of the individuals who have paid large amounts of money into the coffers of the company, but who on account of the excessive assessments which had been made, allowed their policies to lapse. How far would that be just to the company ? We are told that this company has had in Canada between $28,000,000 and $30,000,000 in policies.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—$46,000,000.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—How much is there now ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—$8,000,000.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—However, that makes no difference in my argument; it only makes my argument still stronger. Would this parliament be justified in passing an Act compelling the company to recognize the rights, if they have any—and I do not think they have—of those who have allowed their policies to lapse ? They took out an insurance policy under certain terms and certain regulations, and these terms and regulations were, in part, to pay each assessment to meet the death rates which might occur during the time their policy was in existence. Another rule and regulation under which they took the policy was that if they failed to pay the assessments which were made upon them then their policies would be null and void. Now, that is a fair bargain, and can any scheme be devised by which the company could, under the circumstances, be asked to recognize a claim on a policy that had been allowed to lapse ? The individual who took the policy might have been inveigled into it and innocently accepted the policy, and, under the regulations, subsequently found it was impossible for him to meet assessments which were made upon him and therefore, allowed his policy to drop. Under the regulations and rules governing the company his rights would cease when the payment was not met. The system itself was wrong, and all such companies should be compelled to wind up as soon as they could and as equitably as they could.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Does the hon. leader of the opposition say that the assessment system is wrong ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The assessment system, as practised, I believe to be wrong and has resulted in the past and will result in the future in the same difficulty as this company has. We are told that in 1885 the government of the day amended the Insurance Act, which is quite correct, and allowed this system to be carried on under certain circumstances and conditions. We have also been told that that law compels the assessment companies to cease doing business upon the assessment principle. That was the position taken by the representatives of the company, and was represented as being the fact. Now, if you examine the law you will find it is not correct. The law makes provision that if a company desires to retire from that class of business they can do so by giving certain notice to the government, and after having given that notice that character of business must cease. This company did that, and ceased to do business upon the assessment plan, and consequently it left all the people who held policies under that system in the position which has been strongly pointed out by the hon. gentleman who introduced this Bill. That is, failing to continue to accept new policies upon the assessment principle, it imposes on those who still continue in that class of insurance the onus of having to pay the enormous assessments which have been imposed upon them, and the longer that condition exists and the greater the number of deaths that occur, just so in proportion will the assessments have to be increased, and there is where I agree with the principle of the Bill, so far as it relates to that particular point. I asked the question of the representative of the company the other day, what is to be the effect of non-acceptance—providing the Bill becomes law—upon those who still hold their policies ? Well, he said they will have to pay an enormous sum and be wiped out of existence.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They say that boldly, and it must necessarily result in that. Hence I do not object to that principle of the Bill, providing for granting a new policy commensurate with the amount that they have paid in, and if that can be extended to those whose policies have lapsed so much the better.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—What would become of these policies ? Who would have to pay these extraordinary assessments ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have stated that already, and the hon. gentleman has not listened to me. I say the result would be that they would have to continue to pay enormous assessments or drop out altogether, and when they all died, except the last one, I suppose he would have to pay his own policy.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—We have dropped enough ; we do not want to drop any more.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I agree with that, but that will be the result of continuing the policy under the law as it is on the statute-book, but as this is to affect a private company alone, and only one, it would be a private Bill. The statement made by the hon. Secretary of State that they intended to confine its operation to one company takes this Bill at once from the category of public Bills and places it in the category of private Bills, and by allowing that—I do not desire to say it is an attempt at sharp practice, but we might continue to introduce Bills of that kind and thereby relieve parties affected by it of paying the fee necessary to obtain a private bill. That would really be the result of the suggestion of my hon. friend. I desire also to call attention to the statement made by the hon. gentleman from Toronto when he introduced the Bill, as to the statement alleged to have been made by Mr. Wells. I had never seen the report and I must confess I was somewhat staggered when he read a part of the report in which it is stated that Mr. Wells had spent $10,000 in purchasing—I suppose I may use that expression—or in influencing the members of parliament and the members of the government. Knowing that I was not only a member of parliament but a member of the government and also a member of the treasury board which has to deal with all these questions, I was naturally anxious to know what the facts were. I think any one who listened to the remarks of the hon. gentleman and who will read the official report as it appears upon what is termed the 'Hansard' must come to the conclusion, that he, I will not say intentionally, led the House to believe that Mr. Wells had made this statement in an affidavit which he had made during an investigation which took place by the Insurance Department in the State of New York. On looking at the report I find that is not the case.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I rise to a point of order. I made no statement about an affidavit and what I stated is reported definitely. I said :

It is reported by the Insurance Department in their report as follows——

And I stated exactly what it was and quoted the language.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know that and I intended to read it. I do not accuse the hon. gentleman of intentionally misleading the House, but I do say that if the hon. gentleman had been fair he would have said that that statement was in the affidavit made by the vice-president of the company in retailing a conversation that he says took place with Mr. Wells, and that it is not a part of the report as coming from the insurance department by Mr Vanderpoel. In making this report to the insurance department of the State of New York, Mr. Vanderpoel incorporates in his report an affidavit made by Mr. Eldridge, the vice-president of the company, in which he purports. I do not say he is telling the truth or he is not telling the truth—to retail a conversation which he had with Mr. Wells in connection with the claims he had against the company. Let us hear Wells' version of that matter—and that is why I was anxious this investigation should take place—when we will ascertain whether Mr. Wells confirms the statement made by Mr. Eldridge, and the interpretation which Mr. Eldridge puts upon his language if he ever used it. I place myself in the judgment of those who listened to the remarks of the hon. gentleman, whether any such impression as that which I have indicated was given by the hon. gentleman, when he made that statement ; the impression made upon the House was that Mr. Wells had made an affidavit stating that he had spent $10,000 in securing that legislation.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I made no statement of that kind and left no such impression.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not say that the hon. gentleman did. I am not complaining so much of what the hon. gentleman said, but what he left unsaid.

Hon. Mr. KERR—And I made no suggestion of anything of the kind. What I said appears in this report.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman states that he left no such impression. I am afraid he is as reckless in that, as he was unfair in the manner in which he made the statement before. I venture to say there are dozens in the House to-day who will rise and verify the statement I have made that the impression left upon their minds, whether intentionally or not, was that which I indicated.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Can the hon. gentleman have a better evidence of that than the conversation he had with the hon. member from DeLorimier when we discussed the question the other day, before I had seen this report, whether it was possible to get Mr. Wells' affidavit, and the hon. gentleman was present and we then said if it is possible to get that affidavit let us get it in order that we may investigate the charges which he has made. I think, in all fairness, the hon. gentleman might have said that 'that statement was made by Mr. Eldridge as having been made by Mr. Wells' and not have left the impression upon my mind and also on the mind of the hon. gentleman from DeLorimier, because we both took that view of it, and in conversation with the hon. gentleman himself we suggested the propriety of getting this document, if we could, in order to fasten upon Mr. Wells what I declare to be a slander not only upon the members of the government and the House but every member of the treasury board.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I do not think the hon. gentleman wants to do me any injustice about this matter. When I was asked about it, instead of making the statement, what I said was that I would put in your hands a copy of the report I read from.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Certainly. What I am explaining is that the hon. gentleman did not state who the party was that made this statement. That is what I am complaining of, and I said in making that complaint, that the hon. gentleman left the impression upon the House and those who listened to him that it was Mr. Wells that made this statement under oath during this investigation. I may have been in error, but I have spoken to one or two gentlemen since without calling their attention to it afterwards, and have asked them what they understood by the speech of the hon. gentleman, and they took the same view as I did.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I do not want to interrupt, but I do not want to be misunderstood or have any implication made about what I stated. I will read from the shorthand report of the debate and I will ask the hon. gentleman to do me the justice of saying that I am correct. The report of my remarks reads as follows :

I have here the account that was given of the investigation and of the interview with Mr. Wells respecting that.

And then I read the account of that interview with Mr. Wells as reported in that case. I did not say Wells had made an affidavit or who had made it. I gave an account of the evidence that was given as to that statement, and that is the statement and there is no question Wells made that statement in conversation, if that evidence is true.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is begging the question altogether. I did not accuse him of stating it. What I say is that he ought to have stated the source from which he got his information.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I did—the report.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman did read from the report, but the House must understand that he did not tell us that this statement was made by the vice-president of this very company. Had that been done we would have understood it and the impression would not have been left upon the minds of the members who listened to his speech that this statement had been made by Mr. Wells under oath during the investigation. That is what I complain of. I did not say that the hon. gentleman stated it was under oath ; neither can he draw the inference from what I have already said that I made any such statement. I am not a lawyer, in the habit of cross-questioning or brow-beating witnesses, and consequently I must let the hon. gentleman understand distinctly that I do not desire to impute to him an intention to mislead. I say he did mislead by the manner in which he dealt with the question and I think it was extremely unfair ; and if this man Wells ever comes here I shall endeavour, for my own justification and for the justification of the government of which I was then a member, and I think in justice to members of parliament who are impugned by the statement of Mr. Eldridge, to find out who those parties relly were. I understood the hon. gentleman from de Salaberry to say that parliament should not take steps to interfere in this matter and that the companies were not entitled to any relief. If this Bill had for its object the relieving of the company of any of its responsibilities to the shareholders, I would give it my most strenuous opposition, but I understand the object of the Bill whatever the principle of it may be, is to give some relief to those policy-holders whose policies are still in existence, and if that can be done by any means—I think it ought to be done by a private Bill—every member of the Senate would lend his aid to relieve them. It is not relieving the company, as I have already pointed out. The assured accepted the policies under certain rules, regulations and by-laws. If the policy-holders, through excess of assessments were obliged to cease payment, and thereby lose the advantages they expected to accrue to their families at their death, and if we can come to their relief by passing a law enabling the company to give to each policy-holder a regular policy which would cover the amount that they have paid and continue their payments as in the regular life companies, I think it is our duty to do it. That is not relieving the company, because, if we refuse that concession, then the company will continue and each policy-holder that exists now will be obliged, through excessive assessments, to cease paying and will be wiped out and the whole amount of receipts upon the policies covering $48,000,000 will be left in the hands of the company without any relief whatever to the policy-holders. I think it would be a great mistake, and it would be the duty if the Bill goes to the committee—and I do not object to that because it is the best way to try and accomplish the object we all have in view—it will be the duty of the committee to make such regulations as will be equitable to the policy-holders, without any concern whatever for the company. If the charges which have been made on the floor of this House be sustained by the committee appointed to investigate the affairs of the company, then I take it to be the duty of the government to cancel the company's license at the earliest possible moment. I go further; in order to prevent difficulties in the future, I trust the government will take the responsibility upon itself of repealing that section in the present Act which allows this class of insurance to be carried on. I hold in my hand a copy of the 'Economist,' a publication which deals exclusively with this question, and any one who has received this last number will find facts and figures given in reference to a number of these companies, showing that they are all dwindling down, and the unfortunate policy-holders are gradually dropping out, until millions are dropping down to thousands, and the result will be in a very short time that the whole of them will be wiped out of existence. The sooner parliament sets its face against that class of insurance, the better it will be for the public.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN moved the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

INSPECTION OF IMMIGRANTS.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—Before the Orders of the Day are called I wish to bring to the notice of the government an article in this morning's 'Citizen' which reads as follows :

DEPORTING PHYSICAL WRECKS.

Quebec, June 4,—Dr. Bryce, medical commissioner of the Department of Interior, has arrived in the city to inspect the medical branch of the immigration department in this city. This morning he visited the new house of detention at Savard park and examined the numerous cases of trachoma confined there for treatment. One immigrant named Dorish Rus, adjudged insane, who came out in the SS. 'Tunisian,' will be returned to England this evening on the same vessel, as well as twenty-five, at least, of the Syrian immigrants out of the forty-five detained among the passengers that came to the port by the French steamer 'Malou,' when she leaves for her return trip to France. A conference is to take place today at the hospital between Drs. Bryce, Howe, Potvin and Gauthier, after an examination of the trachoma parties, when it will be decided now many of them will be deported.

What I wish to ask is, what is the reason that those patients effected with such an abominable disease as trachoma are allowed to come across the ocean at all ? Why is there not an inspection before they come on board the steamers, and why are they not kept on the other side of the Atlantic ? Their associating with other immigrants coming across on the same steamer is probably the source of a good deal of danger. I think the government should provide means by which they should be prevented from coming across the Atlantic at all, which would also save the expense of returning them again.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As ships leave very many ports in Europe, Antwerp, Liverpool, London and various other ports, it would be almost impossible for the government to place agents at all those points in anticipation of an emigration from each particular city or town. I think there is an inspection at Liverpool. At every port where it is anticipated that there will be any considerable migration, there is an agent, but it would be quite impossible to place agents at all the ports in Europe to watch for objectionable emigrants. The United States may do it to a limited extent, but they rely largely on the examination made either of immigrants coming into the United States via Halifax or St. John or immigrants landing at New York or Boston. Those are the main ports. It would be very desirable not to bring those unfortunate people across the Atlantic, but it may not be feasible to prevent it except from certain ports known and recognized from which steamships sail with emigrants —ports such as Liverpool.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—On every one of those steamers there is a physician, and he should be authorized to prevent such emigrants going on board at all.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—There ought to be very pointed reference made in all pamphlets issued by Canada encouraging immigration to this country to the fact that if people come here with diseases such as have been referred to, they will be sent back to the port from which they embarked. I can understand the difficulties in the way of an examination at the port of departure; it would be very expensive to appoint immigration inspectors at so many ports, but the next best thing to do is to publish in all immigration literature the fact that diseased immigrants will be returned to the ports of departure.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My recollection is, that when last session, or the session before, the Immigration Bill was being discussed, it was strongly urged upon the government the necessity of imposing penalties upon masters of ships, should they permit diseased immigrants to be brought to this country. There is no reason why such penalty should not be imposed and collected and the owners of the ships made responsible. It is idle to say that we cannot surround our immigration system with the necessary safeguards. Penalties of this kind are imposed upon masters of ships with reference to other matters, and there is no reason why the government, if they give proper consideration to it, should allow diseased immigrants to be brought into the country. I would suggest to my hon. friend the Secretary of State the propriety of giving some consideration to that phase of restriction. The government is certainly possessed, in the law officers of the Crown, of sufficiently good legal talent to work out a Bill of that character, and I am satisfied that it would act as a very salutary protection in the future against this kind of thing which has been taking place year after year.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—There is a penalty already provided against steamship owners who bring unsuitable immigrants to the ports of this country. They are obliged at their own cost to return the immigrant who is declared unfit, to the place whence he came. There is always that check on the ship-owners. I understand there is a very strict clause in the contract between the government and the steamship companies that bring immigrants from the north of Europe. They have a certain bonus for all immigrants they bring, and they are obliged under the contract to return all unfit immigrants, and even to have them inspected before they leave for Canada. As the hon. Secretary of State has said, immigrants who will be found unfit, will find their way to this country, and although there is very strict supervision over immigration into the United States, at the ports of embarkation as well as at New York and other United States ports, still a number of the arrivals are weekly or monthly returned to Europe, and I suppose we cannot expect our experience to be different from that of our neighbours.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would point out to my hon. friend that the ship-owners, in the meantime, collect passage money from those immigrants. The cost of their deportation as against the cost of embarkation does not amount to anything of consequence. The very fact of this occurring from year to year should exemplify to the satisfaction of everybody that the existing restrictions are not effectual. We find the medical fraternity pointing out year after year that numbers of diseased immigrants are being brought to this country by shipping companies and scattered from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and it is time that we adopted a system which would really be restrictive.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is a good deal of force in the remarks made by the hon. Secretary of State as to the difficulties which present themselves in checking undesirable immigration at the ports of departure; but there was an effective system in operation a number of years ago. Every ship ascending the St. Lawrence was obliged to report at quarantine, where a thorough examination of all the passengers took place. If there was any contagious disease on board the vessel or any immigrants that could be classed amongst those prohibited from coming into the country, they could be prevented from landing. The difficulty with the ship-owner or captain would be this: the passengers might all have passed medical examination at the port of embarkation, and disease might break out during the voyage, of which he could have no possible knowledge. If the quarantine regulations in the St. Lawrence were rigidly enforced, in cases where disease is found on board a vessel, and the vessel held until the danger of contagion is obviated, and then the captain of the vessel be compelled to take back all emigrants who are found unfit, the difficulty would be overcome. Why that regulation is not rigidly enforced, I cannot understand. There is great danger in bringing immigrants afflicted with disease as far as Quebec or Montreal and then turning them loose to scatter disease all the way from Quebec to Port Arthur and other western points. I do not know whether those regulations are still enforced or not; if they are not, they ought to be, and if they have been repealed, they should be re-enacted and rigorously enforced.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The regulations are still kept up, and I fancy they are enforced with even greater strictness than in former years. The same gentleman has been at the head of the service for a great many years. Among the diseases with which Assyrians are particularly affected is a disease of the eye. I do not know whether it may break out after they have passed the examination, but certainly the examination is made at quarantine. But immigrants are coming in from all quarters. Many come through the United States, and they are allowed to pass through the United States ports, when their destination is Canada, and we have no way of making an inquiry until the medical man has had an opportunity to see them.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS.—With reference to what the hon. leader of the opposition says, there are really two systems in operation in Canada. There is the ordinary quarantine system under the control of the Department of Agriculture, by which vessels with contagious diseases on board are examined and reported to the quarantine officers. In addition to that, at all the ports, Halifax, St. John, Montreal and Quebec, there are medical officers of the Immigration Department to examine every immigrant. Of course it is quite possible that some one or two, or perhaps a dozen, may escape observation in the course of a season, but there is a very rigid inspection by medical officers of the department, and the moment a man is found with the disease he is put in one of the detention hospitals, and the ship that brought him out is compelled to carry him back. As the hon. gentleman for Montreal said, it is quite an infliction upon the ship-owner to take the passenger back, and although it is quite possible—I have not made the calculation to which the hon. gentleman from Calgary refers—that it may be profitable to bring a man across the Atlantic and then to take him back, yet the ship-owners do not care to do that, nor the ship masters either, and as far as possible they avoid doing it. There is quite a check on the importation of disease, but I do not say there is an absolute prevention, because that might be impossible. Sometimes this disease of the eye will develop three or four or five days after the emigrant has left the old country, or perhaps after he has landed in Canada. However, there is a much more rigid system of inspection in force than one would infer from the discussion which has taken place just now.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (B.C.).—Take the case of the emigrants who are sent back to England diseased, and the authorities refuse to permit them to be landed there. In such an event the captain would be between the devil and the deep sea. He could not land them at either place. It is quite clear the only way is to prevent them being taken on board the ship. All the ships carry doctors and they can inspect the emigrants and see that they are free from disease before they are allowed to embark. Deporting them does not obviate the danger. Those men being cooped up with hundreds of others for days on board ship might impart that disease to them. The only way to stop it is to make the steamship companies liable to certain penalties if they carry these persons out here. I hope the hon. Secretary of State will confer with his colleagues and see that there is something done, because we do not want the country flooded with those people. Deporting of them does not obviate the difficulty. They spread contagion in the ship and going back to England they spread contagion again, being cooped up with other people on their return.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN.—With reference to this disease of the eye, there is a form that sometimes occurs in this country, which is called granulated eyelids. But this malignant type, trachoma, brought in by immigrants is contagious. There is no stage of incubation about this at all. If a man has it you see it. If you do not see it he has not got it. It is quite easy to determine the question by looking at the man. There is an intolerance of light and a discharge from the lids. It is not the eyeball which is affected, but the membrane covering the eyeball. The matter streams out and glutinates the lids together so that there is an intolerance of light and a peculiar expression about the face that any one could determine. What the hon. gentleman from Victoria suggests I think is the proper way to prevent it; that is, to prohibit shipping masters from taking such persons on board. That can be easily done. If you inflict a fine or punishment on the owners of the vessel there is no hardship at all about compelling them to make a rigid inspection. The United States government do not allow such immigrants into the United States and take care that emigrants are examined at the point of shipping before embarkation, as I understand it. I do not know whether Canada has adopted that system or not, but if you want to prevent the introduction of disease like trachoma there is no use trying to do it here. It might escape the notice of ordinary practitioners who have not seen persons afflicted with the disease. They might think it was an ordinary case of inflammation of the eyeball. I believe the only sure way is to inflict a penalty on the ship-owner. If the steamer carries a physician he would be responsible, and the captain would order him to examine the emigrants. He would make sure there was no diseased person on board and in that way would prevent the introduction of trachoma as effectually as we prevent the introduction of small-pox which can hardly be placed in the same category, because small-pox might be in process of incubation some time before it is discovered. There will be no difficulty about trachoma if we have a thorough inspection of emigrants before they embark.

BILLS ASSENTED TO.

His Honour the Speaker informed the Senate that he had received the following communication from the Governor General's Secretary:—

Office of the Governor General's Secretary,
Ottawa, June 6, 1904.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Mr. Justice Sedgewick, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chambre this afternoon at 4 o'clock, for the purpose of giving assent to certain Bills which have passed the Senate and House of Commons during the present Session.

An Act respecting the Vancouver, Victoria and Eastern Railway and Navigation Company.

An Act respecting the Canadian Fire Insurance Company.

To these Bills the Royal Assent was pronounced by the Clerk of the Senate in the following words :—

In His Majesty's name, His Honour the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General doth assent to these Bills.

The Deputy Governor was then pleased to retire, and the House of Commons withdrew.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (100) An Act to amend the Pilotage Act.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Bill (103) An Act to incorporate the Canada Artillery Association.—(Hon. Mr. Templeman.)

Bill (112) An Act to amend the Act respecting the Navigation of Canadian waters. —(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

LEAD BOUNTIES BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (127) An Act to amend the Act providing for the payment of bounties on lead contained in lead-bearing ores mined in Canada. The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN moved that the Bill be read the second time on Wednesday next. He said: This Bill is practically only applying the Bounty Act of last session to the financial year beginning the first of July last. The Act was interpreted as applying the bounty to the financial year. It is correcting merely a technical error.

The motion was agreed to.

SECOND READING.

Bill (J) An Act for the relief of Eliza Robinson.—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Cobourg.)

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (3) An Act to amend the Criminal Code (1902). He said: Under the criminal law there are certain cases where an accused is permitted to elect whether he shall be tried by a jury or by a presiding justice or magistrate. There is no provision in the law for a case of minors, persons under 16, and this simply enacts that in those cases the parents or guardian, or any one having charge of the accused, shall be consulted first, on the basis that a person of perhaps ten, twelve or thirteen years would not be in a position to judge whether he ought to be tried by a jury or by the presiding magistrate. It is felt that it would be only right that the magistrate should allow the parent or guardian to be consulted.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (56) An Act to amend the Criminal Code (1892). He said: Subsection six of section 902 of the Criminal Code provides a very severe penalty, $80, on a magistrate or justice of the peace who omits or neglects to make a return at the proper time, and to pay in the fees that he may have received belonging to the county or municipality. The object of the present Bill is to widen that and to provide that:

> Every justice who upon, or in connection with or under colour or pretense of, any information, complaint or judicial proceeding or inquiry had or taken before him, exacts, receives, appropriates or retains any fees, moneys or payments which he is not by law authorized to receive or to be paid.

The present law simply provides for the case where the trial has been had and the magistrate has imposed a penalty, and he has failed to pay it to the municipality. This is a little wider, as hon. gentlemen will see.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Is the penalty increased?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No; the penalty is the same.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why did not the government go a little further, and provide that such a justice should not have jurisdiction hereafter to try cases? It seems monstrous that a justice of the peace should exercise jurisdiction after committing such an offence.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume some cases of the kind have been brought to the attention of the department. The suggestion of the hon. gentleman is a very good one, but we have made no change in the law since it was codified in 1892.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You are not going far enough.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I should think it would be a matter of course that the commission of a justice of the peace would be withdrawn in a case of the kind. We cannot settle the disqualification of parties appointed by the local executives, but it goes without saying, and as a matter of course, I suppose, that a person condemned under such circumstances would have his commission withdrawn by the minister having charge of the administration of justice in the province.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—While the federal government could not interfere with the commission, it could clearly say that such a justice should not exercise jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

KING'S SHILLING LEGAL TENDER BILL.

SECOND READING.

The Order of the Day being called :

Second reading Bill (E) An Act to make the King's Shilling a Legal Tender in Canada.—(Hon. Mr. Domville.)

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON, in the absence of the Hon. Mr. Domville, moved the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have advised the hon. senator who has charge of the Bill that I fear it is not a Bill which the House would adopt. When he brought the subject to the notice of the House, it certainly was received with a good deal of sympathy. It seems rather hard that a British subject arriving at Halifax or St. John, who has nothing but British shillings in his pocket, should not be able to buy bread or obtain other necessaries with it ; but, on making inquiry, I find that the hon. gentleman was not quite correct in assuming that provision had not been made for cases of the kind. On inquiry at the Department of the Interior I have received an answer which was addressed to the Finance Minister, as follows :

Referring to your verbal inquiry of this morning, I beg to state that the department has made special provision for the exchange of money at the immigration buildings at Halifax, St. John and Quebec. This work has been intrusted to Mr. G. D. Martin at Halifax, to Mr. J. M. Robinson at St. John, and to Mr. James Macnider at Quebec. In addition to free office accommodation in the immigration building, these parties are granted a certain yearly allowance for their work.

I send you herewith a schedule showing the rates of exchange in force at these ports, I may point out that under our present arrangements brokers are bound to give the immigrants Canadian or foreign currency at the lowest rates of exchange, and notices are posted on the walls of the immigration buildings giving the value of foreign coins in different languages.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—What is the rate for the shilling that is quoted there?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Twenty-two cents.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—That is a very large discount. It is worth twenty-four cents.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The rates of exchange are reasonable. They seem to have gone very fully into the question of exchanging European coins. Ample provision seems to have been made.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Is that rate under the ordinary rate that the banks charge ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understand it is the same as the bank charges.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Are these private money exchanges ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are authorized by the department, and paid a certain sum, and get office accommodation, and the rates of exchange are posted up in their offices—the rates at which immigrants arriving may exchange foreign coin for Canadian currency.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—The British shilling passes at the banks for twenty-four cents.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Where provision of that kind is made it would be a very serious matter to interfere with our Currency Act, and would only lead to very great disturbance. It is better that provision should be made for the exchange of coin at a fixed value, and it cannot be contended that the rates quoted for these small sums are at all excessive. It would be rather a grave interference to make the British shilling an exception and interfere with the Currency Act of Canada. I do not suppose under any conditions it would involve the deluge we have had of American silver at various times in our history. We all know, those who have memories running back forty or fifty years, the trouble we had at one time to get rid of United States currency. Sir Francis Hincks was the particular statesman who had to deal with it and he wrestled with it for years. It was only by very decided measures being taken that finally Canada got rid of United States money, and then established a Canadian currency. Now that we have the Canadian currency we ought to keep it unimpaired.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. Secretary of State has not met the question before the House. The Bill has no reference whatever to the value of the exchange or of the coins to which the hon. gentleman has referred. The question is whether the King's shilling is at the present time legal tender even for twenty-two cents in Canada ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is what the Bill proposes to provide for. It provides for setting a value upon the English shilling, and that it shall be a legal tender for the face of that value which is put upon it by law. That is what you would have to provide for. You would have to restrict it, no doubt, if you did adopt the principle of the Bill ; you would have to provide for the amount of silver which would constitute a legal tender. In the Consolidated Statutes, chapter 30, provision is made setting a value upon the English sovereign, and also upon the United States eagle, but there is nothing whatever said about English or United States silver. Under the old law, introduced by Sir Francis Hincks, to which the hon. gentleman referred, and which I remember very well, provision was made to reduce the value of United States silver 20 per cent. That remained the law for a number of years, until we got rid of what was termed in those days 'The silver nuisance.' It was just after the civil war in the neighbouring country, and Canada was flooded with the United States currency. In looking at the statutes, I find that the clause regulating the value of the United States silver was repealed. I think the government ought to take it into their serious consideration to see that there is a sufficient quantity of Canada silver minted to supply the requirements of the country. One cannot travel on any railroad or steamer in the country and have a bill exchanged without getting half of the silver in United States currency.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—That is so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have laid it down as a principle always to refuse it, and if everybody else would do the same thing we would soon get rid of it. Across the line our silver and even our bills will not be taken, except in a few places where they have a good deal of trade with Canada. In New York I have had to allow a discount of ten per cent on a Bank of Montreal bill, and even on Dominion notes. In some hotels visited by large numbers of Canadians they will take our money without discount, but it is generally refused. If it be possible, without too great interference with our own currency laws to do so, I think the value of the English shilling should be made known to the people, and that it should be made legal tender to a certain extent, say $5. I would again impress on the hon. Secretary of State the importance of calling the attention of his colleague, the Finance Minister, to the necessity of having a much larger amount of Canadian silver minted for circulation. The banks, I believe, will not take United States silver, except at a discount. I can understand the difficulty very well in places on the border, but so long as the people of the United States refuse to take Canada silver we should refuse to take theirs except at a discount. If the circulation of the United States currency in this country increases, as it seems to be increasing, some measure will have to be adopted to prevent its circulation or it will displace our Canadian currency.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am entirely opposed to legislation of this character. Canada is peculiarly a silver-producing country, and very little encouragement is being given to the development of our silver resources. The hon. gentleman who introduced this Bill was led away, I think, by sentiment in its introduction here. But this is something more than a matter of sentiment. Canada will be depriving itself of a very substantial revenue. Our silver coins are worth scarcely more than 50 per cent of their face value in silver. And the government of Canada by admitting——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Our silver ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, our silver; by admitting English specie of this kind at practically par value would be depriving ourselves of the advantage of coining silver sufficient for our circulation, and thus losing almost 50 per cent in the matter of bullion—and particularly as we are about building a mint, I say we should reserve to ourselves the exclusive right to make legal tender, particularly in silver.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I quite agree with what the hon. gentleman has said, and I would say with reference to the question suggested by the hon. gentleman who preceded him, that I should like to know exactly how far the doctrine of retaliation which he suggests—although he did not like to use that word—would be carried. How much would we get for our 25 cent silver coin in London ? How many places would he get in London to take it at all? How much would he get for our Dominion four dollar bill or two dollar bill in London, and how many places would he be able to pass it? And, therefore, if the idea is that because the Canada four dollar bill will not be received in the United States, except at a large discount, and some places not received at all, or used in circulation, then what is the difference between the treatment it receives there and in England ? Therefore, if we refuse a United States coin, why should we not also refuse an English shilling, when the English people will not take our Canadian coins? If the matter of sentiment is to be considered, it ought to be a Canadian sentiment. If the matter of sentiment is introduced at all, I think we are carrying it a great deal too far. We have our own coin as a legal tender; let us use our own coin and leave the coins of other countries to find their own value.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I want to mention one incident which is rather humiliating. At the post office at Victoria I have seen an English shilling refused and a five cent United States nickel taken at its face value. If we have any patriotic feeling we should give preference to our own money, and we should not refuse the English shilling or half crown, if we accept United States money.

Hon. Mr. McSWEENEY—In to-night's 'Free Press' there is an article signed by Mr. E. J. Darby, which reads as follows :—

Editor 'Free Press.'—Having made a purchase yesterday, amongst the coin I offered in payment was a British shilling, of 1896, which was accorded the value of only 20 cents. To this I objected saying that at the least it was worth 24 cents, but without avail. I had accepted it previously in change as 25 cents. I would respectfully ask : 'Why American paper $1 silver certificates should be accepted at par and British coin within the empire in this capital of the Dominion be subject to a discount of 25 per cent' ? The sterling exchange table gives the value of a British shilling as $0.24·3. In view of the fact that our Canadian bank bills are refused on the other side of the line except in frontier towns, why should we cast a stigma on British coin within the empire.

E. J. DARBY.

Ottawa, June 4, 1904.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—I am inclined to think that the instance mentioned by my hon. friend from Victoria must have been a mistake. The British shilling is common in circulation in the city of Victoria, and is taken at the banks and all public institutions and by the public generally as freely as the Canadian 25-cent piece, and is taken for 25 cents. I never heard in all my life of a British shilling being refused in the city of Victoria. Probably the one offered by the gentleman to whom my hon. friend referred, was a bad coin, or might have been refused for a special reason.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Does the hon. gentleman know that five-cent United States nickels are taken at the post office?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Certainly, they are taken everywhere in the city of Victoria.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I know equally well that the English shilling was refused.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I must say I am disposed to sympathize somewhat with the hon. senator from Rothesay in this matter—to make the English shilling legal tender for 25 cents, though I do not wish to urge it in the face of the statement the Secretary of State has made. However, I do think we should introduce some legislation that would put a stop not only to the inflow into Canada of United States silver, which is generally taken at par, as has been stated by the leader of the opposition, but United States silver certificate bills that are also in circulation and are taken at par. I do think that we should not permit that to go on to the extent it does, in face of the fact that you cannot pass a Canadian bill, as has been already stated on the other side of the House, in the United States outside of the border cities, except at an enormous discount.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Nor can one in England.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—No, perhaps not, but, after all, there are a great many favours and considerations that we receive from England that we do not get from the United States. There are a great many things that we are indebted to England for that we are not indebted to the United States for. If the United States ever treated us with the measure of liberality that England treats us, we would be willing to accept their money on reasonable terms, but they do not do it. We owe them nothing. They do not do anything that would induce us to accept their 25-cent silver coin at its face value, nor their bills either. I say we should have legislation to put a stop to the circulation of United States silver and bills in Canada. You cannot cross into the United States and pass Canadian money anywhere unless at a discount, except at Buffalo and Detroit, and border towns where they take it because they know it is as good as gold. I have travelled through the states to the Gulf of Mexico, and out in those western states you could not pass a ten dollar bill for one dollar. They do not take Canadian money anywhere. I have been on a street car when the conductor refused to take a 25 cent piece for a ride and I had to borrow from a gentleman who recognized my difficulty, until I got my money exchanged. That is how our money is treated in the United States. I say we should have legislation to meet that condition. I sympathize with the Bill to make the King's shilling legal tender in Canada, because I revere the stamp on its face, and I do not like the idea of Canada refusing to accept it at par; at the same time if we decide to have a mint of our own—and I fully agree that we ought to have one—we should encourage the circulation of our own coin. I agree also with the view expressed by the hon. leader of the opposition when he said that a good supply of Canadian silver of all denominations should be provided and put in circulation, half dollars, 25 cents and 10 cents, and we should discount the circulation of United States silver, else we shall be forced, as we had to do years ago—to declare the value of a United States 25 cent coin to be 20 cents and a half dollar to be 40 cents. The result of that policy after the United States rebellion was, the silver currency was called in and recast into Canadian money. I think out of courtesy to my hon. friend from Rothesay, who is absent attending a funeral, that we should adjourn the debate until he can be present.

Hon. Mr. COFFEE—In a matter of this kind we should go very slowly. We all know that in the province of Ontario it would be a very serious matter for the business community if we put a large discount on United States money. Excursions from the United States come to London, Hamilton, Toronto, and other places, bringing with them a considerable quantity of United States money, and in passing through our cities these visitors, especially the ladies, make a great many purchases, and if we placed a large discount on United States currency these people might button up their pocket-books and not spend anything. We must remember also that United States currency is very easily negotiated and English currency is difficult to negotiate. With reference to people going to the United States, we all know that in Ontario a person who has a bank account can go to his bank and deposit a certain amount of money and receive in return United States currency. That has been my experience. I can get United States currency, $50 or $100 at any time from my banker in exchange for Canadian currrency. I think if we prohibit the circulation of United States silver in Canada it will be a serious matter.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I hope my hon. friend did not misunderstand me. All I spoke of was the circulation of silver and silver bills. The ordinary issue in the United States is all right. We all know that.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—I do not think the matter requires legislation. It is in the hands of every man to do as he pleases. The man who accepts the United States silver gets something which he thinks is worth what he is parting with.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The law is plain. Under our Currency Act, we provide a value for gold and then provide for the coinage of silver and copper, and then we declare:

> That no other silver, copper or bronze coin than those which Her Majesty causes to be struck for circulation in Canada or in some province thereof shall be a legal tender in Canada.

You cannot prevent people taking United States bills if they chose to do so, but you need not accept them. You can say 'I do not regard that as money.' It cannot be proffered as legal tender for a debt or purchase, but if people chose to take it you cannot interfere with their doing so; and the freedom of action rests with every individual. Referring to the Bill under consideration, the only reason given by the hon. senator for pressing the matter was because, he explained, the British immigrants had no way of exchanging their silver and gold coin for Canadian money. I have given the House evidence that provision is made at Halifax, St. John, Quebec, and wherever immigrants are arriving, for the exchange of foreign coins, not only British but French, German and Norwegian.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But that provision is not made by the government. It is done by private brokers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was a provision made by the government. The parties who act as brokers are not allowed to charge more. We give them a small fee and they cannot charge more than the figures I have given. It is all on the same scale, taking the sovereign at $4.86 as a basis.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The law defines what a sovereign is.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, that is the basis. The law does not recognize the British shilling or German franc as legal tender, but for the convenience of the emigrants arrangements have been made to facilitate the exchange of coin. That is the only possible excuse for a Bill such as we are now discussing and when I explained this Bill to the hon. senator who introduced it, he said at once : 'I will drop the Bill, on the explanation you give.' I said the government could not allow a Bill of that kind to pass. You are going to interfere with the currency of the country. If a British shilling is to be admitted, then the sixpence, and the threepence, and all the smaller coins must be admitted, and in the same way you would have just as good a right to take the coins of other countries that emigrants are bringing to this country. Each country endeavours to preserve its own currency intact. Canada is the only country that takes a larger view of it, and we do it because we are adjoining the great republic, and it is a matter of convenience for our people to take it. I have refused it, but you can pass it on the street cars and in the shops. The banks will take it, and the only reason why the banks take it is for the convenience of their customers. We all have knowledge of the conditions existing in the states, and if we want to cross the line, we must provide ourselves with United States bills. It is a convenience to have them. It is very unneighbourly of course. I said, in conversation with an American gentleman : 'Our bills are gold; yours are only silver and worth sixty cents a dollar.' I can remember very well when our dollar bills were taken at a value of two dollars and forty cents on the other side of the border.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Just after the civil war. I have frequently thrown down a ten or twenty-dollar bill and bought ten or twenty dollars' worth of goods, and got a large amount of change as well.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Silver was at a premium at that time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no use fighting against it. Simply provide yourself with United States money, when you go to the United States. Nobody need take it in Canada, nor the silver coin of any other country. It is certainly our duty to stand by our own coinage and our own currency. I, therefore, move that the Bill do not now pass.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Our situation is similar to the situation all over the world. Every country has its own currency, but for convenience sake and to accommodate business on the border in each country you will have Italian money taken in Switzerland and you will have it taken on the borders of France. It is so all over the world. I do not see any reason, when we have our own national currency, why we should be carried away by a sentiment to alter our system and make it different from what it is all over the world. I think the Bill should be withdrawn.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We have drifted away from the point at issue. My remarks were exclusively confined to the circulation of United States silver. The hon. gentleman from Toronto lays down the principle that because you cannot pass Canadian bills or silver in England, that therefore you should take the United States bills and silver. I remember very well, when in Honolulu, offering an English sovereign to pay for goods I had purchased there, and they would not look at it. The Yankee who was with me said : 'I have been all over the world, and it is the first time I have known an English sovereign refused.' That verifies what I have said. Every country has its own laws and its own mode of doing business. I should like to see a larger amount of Canadian silver mined in our own country and for our own circulation, and then the people will refuse to take that which is not worth its face value, the Yankee silver. United States paper currency is altogether a different thing. That is issued upon an entirely different basis from the silver coin. I do not think it is quite as safe as our own, but it is issued upon a different principle altogether, and the United States bill there is worth a dollar, while the silver is not. Gold and Canadian silver currency, just at the time of the American civil war, were worth a great deal more than 40 per cent premium. I remember travelling in the west once and handing out a five-cent piece to buy a newspaper, and a man who had been in the west said: 'I have not seen a piece of silver for two years. I wish you would give me that.' I handed him the coin as a relic of the past. I repeat, that while it would be impolitic to pass this Bill, for the reasons pointed out by the hon. Secretary of State, there is the other point that I think it well that people would act upon the principle of refusing to accept foreign coin in payment for a debt. My hon. friend from London says he is afraid the United States people would not spend their money if we adopted that plan. Has that ever prevented a Canadian from going to New York or any other foreign place? If he takes Canadian money to the United States or any other country, he goes to a broker and gets his money changed and pays the discount.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—What is the difference between the broker taking that money and the United States people taking it?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am simply saying what the practice is, and I am showing that the United States people coming into this country would do what we are obliged to do when we visit the United States. I should like the hon. Secretary of State to point out under what provision the government get the authority to declare what a broker shall sell or buy exchange at. If they give any such authority, it is certainly, unless I am gravely in error, usurping a power for which they have no authority. My hon. friend can open a broker shop in this city, and if he wants to change money he can charge what discount he pleases. Any private individual can do that; but there is no authority, so far as I know, that gives any member of the government power to define what the rate of exchange shall be, or at what rate you shall accept United States, English, German, or any other silver coin. If there is any law of that kind, I should like to know where to find it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no law of that kind, and all the government do is done for the convenience of the people, for their own protection, in order that they may not be fleeced. They might go elsewhere and the broker might offer them fifty cents for their dollar, or twenty-five cents, for that matter. The government thought proper to protect the people, and therefore the immigrant can exchange his money for Canadian currency at the rates which I have read. We thought that was the proper thing to do, because otherwise the immigrants would be fleeced. The government order the highest possible value to be given for these moneys consistent with the exchange.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—To whom did they give that order?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They employ at those points persons whose duty it is when an immigrant lands in Canada to see what foreign money he has, and to say to him: 'If you want to have it exchanged, we can exchange it for you at these rates.' It is simply to insure that they receive full value for their money. It is advertised and put up in the shape of notices. I read a letter stating that there were agents at all those points, and they have the notices up at the various points where immigrants frequent, and they are told that they can exchange their bills for Canadian currency.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Might I suggest to the Secretary of State that this Bill should not be dropped in the absence of the gentleman from Rothesay?

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I beg to move that the Order of the Day be discharged, and that it be placed on the order paper for Thursday next.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—I desire to say one word on this matter of legalizing the coin of any other country. I see no reason for legalizing the British shilling in this country any more than any foreign coin ; but that is not the matter I wish to speak upon. It is this question as to the treatment of our neighbours to the south of us. Any one who knows—and I think we all know as to the conditions or the style of paper that is issued by the two countries—will make a very distinctive difference between the two. The government is responsible for every bill issued by the United States Treasury, and therefore the bill is an entirely different article from that which is issued by the banks of Canada, and it is simply absurd to presume for one moment that each and every individual in such a great country as the United States knows the value of the bills issued by our banks. It is simply absurd to say that we receive bad treatment in the United States. What are the conditions ? One hon. gentleman said : 'You cannot go to the United States and use our currency at all.' That is not the case. You can go through New York and the other states of the union, and in any place where our banks are known our bills are taken ; and you will find, where they are posted in that respect that they have a list of our banks, and once they get that list if the bill is one that is approved of it is accepted. I had a very striking illustration of the matter myself. I went to New York without a single dollar of United States money. It was an oversight on my part ; I usually take United States money with me. I returned from New York at a loss, so far as exchange was concerned, of 25 cents. It was only in one place that I had any exchange to pay. Supposing you have a little exchange to pay, is it not absurd to presume for one moment that no country has the right to charge exchange on our money ? You cannot go down to one of our banks and make a draft on New York without paying something. There is some exchange one way or the other.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Even on a draft to Montreal.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—Yes. In dealing with questions of this kind let hon. gentlemen entertain as much antipathy as they please to the United States, but let us be perfectly fair in financial transactions. So far as my knowledge goes, there is no difference between the two countries in regard to that matter at all, excepting this, that when we are receiving a United States dollar, every Canadian knows its value, but in offering our bank notes in the United States the same knowledge does not exist there, because many people of that country do not know the standing of our banks. I simply desire to make these few remarks to express my opinion as to discussions of this nature. We should deal with them fairly on their merits, and not make insinuations which are not warranted against any country.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—One word in reply. In New York, Buffalo, Boston, possibly in Portland and those New England states, Canadian money is accepted; but I contend that when you go west or south you cannot use Canadian money; they will not take it at any price. If you go to Houston, Oklahoma, San Antonio, Galveston and Kansas City you could not get a night's lodging for a Canadian ten dollar bill. I admit that what my hon. friend says may be true, because Canada has very close business relations with New York. It is not to be wondered at that our money should be taken in New York, but when you go beyond Chicago and get into the interior of the states, the people there will not take a Canadian five-cent piece or a dollar bill. You might go to a broker and make an exchange, at a heavy discount. I went to a broker and he offered me eight dollars United States money for a ten dollar Canadian bank bill.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—What guarantee have these people that our Canadian bank bills are safe? Did the hon. gentleman present a Villa Marie Bank bill ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—No.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—How would a merchant in the south or western states know whether the bill was good or not? They have no guarantee that the bills are good.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I want to repudiate the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Ottawa, when he attributed to those who took a different view from himself either prejudice or dislike to the United States. In dealing with this matter I try to deal with it on the principle which he himself laid down, what I consider to be a common sense view, without any animosity to our friends across the border, and if he attributed that prejudice to myself I must say that he is labouring under a misapprehension, as he is in most of his free trade ideas.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—The repudiation of my hon. friend was entirely unnecessary; he was not in my mind and would never be in my mind in making such a statement.

The motion was agreed to.

INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.
DEBATE CONTINUED.

The Order of the Day being called:

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading Bill (H) An Act further to amend the Insurance Act.—(Hon. Mr. McMullen.)

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I want it to be distinctly understood that in anything I have to say upon the Bill before the House, with regard to the New York Mutual Reserve Life Association, I entertain no animosity whatever to that institution, that my sympathies are entirely with the policy-holders, who, unfortunately, were led into accepting insurance in that company. As I stated before, the parliament of Canada, unfortunately, in 1885, made a mistake when they accepted from that company a deposit clothed them in a legalized garb and licensed them to go out and do business with the people of Canada. It was said by the promoter of the Bill that these people were invited to come to Canada to do business. My hon. friend was not in parliament at the time, but I fancy if he had been here then he would not venture to make such a statement, because there was no invitation. They came to parliament. They not only came once, but they came a second time and asked parliament that they should bestow upon them the dignity of being recognized by the government, and accepting from them a deposit of fifty thousand dollars, and in return for that deposit that they should be authorized to do business within this Dominion. As far as I am concerned, I have no antipathy towards this company, but I feel that the House, in justice to itself, and to its own dignity, should not proceed with this Bill until such time as the committee that we have appointed to investigate and report to this House have a fair and reasonable opportunity to make that investigation and that report. I think we should not do ourselves the injustice of doing one thing one day and virtually the next day undoing it. If we should now pass the second reading of the Bill what would we be doing? We would be ignoring the action of the Senate a few days ago in appointing a committee to investigate and report to this House the peculiar incidents that have led up to the disastrous financial condition in which the company is placed to-day.

That committee is clothed with authority to hold an investigation and directed to report to this House. What would be the use of the committee proceeding to hold an investigation if we were to now give this Bill a second reading and refer it to the committee, in the face of the fact that the special committee is actually taking steps to carry out the instructions of this chamber? I certainly think this Bill ought not to be proceeded with until the committee has had a fair opportunity of reporting its finding to the House. There is another feature of this Bill to which I decidedly object. Objection has been raised by others—I had my own—that the Insurance Act, on which rests all stock in insurance companies, should not be amended to make it a vehicle to give this company, a new standing in Canada. If it is financially embarrassed; if disasters have overtaken it, if the policy-holders are in such a position that they do not know what is best to do, the better plan is to bring in a Bill exclusively for the relief of the policy-holders of the New York Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company, and not attempt, by an amendment to the Act, to give the company a standing again in this country. If we press this Bill we shall be inviting every assessment company in Canada, to look forward for relief in the same way if anything should happen to render such a step desirable or necessary. There are many other assessment companies in existence in the Dominion that stand well to-day, but unforeseen difficulties may arise. They may get into cramped financial position, suffer losses, or quarrel among themselves, as, I believe this Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assurance has done, and may squander their resources.

If they do, with this Bill as a precedent, they will come to parliament to get relief by an amendment of the Insurance Act. Now, we should not encourage that. The law that regulates joint stock companies and the law that regulates assessment companies, should be separated by a clear line of demarkation. The one should not be allowed to interfere with the other. The law that regulates joint stock companies should not, under any pretense, or for any purpose, be made to apply to assessment companies. If assessment companies want relief, let them come and seek it by a private Bill, and I am sure the Senate will give its very best consideration to any Bill introduced in the interest of the policy-holders. What does this Bill propose to do ? There are a certain number of policy-holders of this company in Canada. The Bill offers to these policy-holders an alternative. If you are a policy-holder in the New York Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, the company by this Bill say to you : You have to consent to an impairment of your policy to an amount that the average contributed by you by way of assessment for the last fifteen years would secure for you a policy in an old line company. That is, supposing you held a policy of $2,000 on which you have paid an average assessment of $30 per year for the last twelve or fifteen years, you would secure a policy at the age of thirty of about $1,400 at the present scale of charges. Now they say 'We will cancel your policy of $2,000 and issue a policy of $1,400 and will carry that for you at the average of what you were called upon to pay for the last fifteen years.' The average, say, was $30 per year. The man entered the company when he was thirty ; he is now forty-five. Now, how much of a policy in a joint stock company will $30 per year get when a man has reached forty-five, or what per cent would he have to pay on a policy at forty-five in a regular company ? He would have to pay $48.30 for $1,400. What does the New York Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association propose to carry them for ? They purpose by this Bill to carry them for $30, and to pay that policy when it matures. Now, if the old line companies have all they can do to pay a reasonable interest to their stockholders and pay their policies when they mature on a charge of $48.30 per $1,400, how can the New York Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association carry a policy of $1,400 for $30 a year ? I say it is impossible. The financial basis on which they proposed to work renders success impossible. They cannot meet their obligations when they mature, on a basis of that kind. They say they have on deposit $228,000 in the hands of the Dominion government. Now they purpose setting aside two-thirds of that, about $150,000. What are they going to do with the rest ? They admit they have $8,000,000 of insurance in Canada. What reserve should they carry on $8,000,000 insurance for policies under the old line all life system? They should carry at least $80,000 for every million ; that would be a very low estimate. They have $8,000,000 in risks, and their necessary reserve under this calculation would be $640,000. They have only $150,000. How do they propose to put up the money ? They ask by this Bill that they be empowered to mortgage every man's policy for a proportionate sum to make up the balance between what is necessary to get them their license and the sum they propose to provide themselves. As I say, they propose to put up $150,000 ; their necessary deposit with the government is $650,000 ; then they propose to ask, by this Bill power to mortgage the policies for $500,000, a proportionate share against each policy of the eight million dollars, and that will stand as a charge against the policy. I have read over this circular that the company have sent out to the different policy-holders, and I must say that a more misleading document I have never put my eye on.

Take the first proposition in the third clause. They say :

> The principle of this Bill has been approved by the Canadian Department of Insurance.

I was amazed when I saw that. I went to the Insurance Department and saw Mr. Fitzgerald and asked : 'Is it true that you have approved of the principle of that Bill ?' He said: 'No, we have not, all that we have done is this—we have acquiesced in the introduction of the Bill. We are willing that it should be introduced, with the hope, perhaps, that something might be brought out in the interest of the policy-holders ; but we have never sanctioned nor in any way approved of the Bill.' I was given a new idea with regard to the mortgaging of a policy.

Clause seven refers to the second method. The first method is a reduction or impairment of the policy from $2,000 to $1,400. The second proposition is, if you do not want to impair your policy, that you pay a sum equal to the amount that you would have to pay in one of the old line companies, deducting the amount of the assessments you have paid from the gross amount you would have had to pay in a stock company. Now let me go back to the proposition I made before. I have said that about the average assessment in the New York Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association on a policy of $2,000, commencing at the age of thirty, would not be more than $30 per year. I question whether the average payment would be as much as that, because they commenced at a low rate. They carried some policies at as low as $1.10 a month, which would be $13.20 a year, so the average will not exceed $30. If you had gone into a stock company at the age of thirty for an all life policy of $2,000, you would have had to pay $40. Now you have to pay $12 more with the accumulated interest every year for the fifteen years; that is $180 saved, and in addition to that the accumulated interest, which would come to pretty nearly half that amount, making $270 you would have to pay, in addition to all the assessments which you have already paid. Then you would start with a policy of $2,000 on the system that along with the money you paid in assessments altogether, the average of that would be the amount they would require you to pay until such time as your policy matured. With regard to that let me draw your attention to the seventh clause of the circular which is as follows:—

> If you chose the latter method to which I have been drawing attention, the reserve required by the Insurance Act can be a charge against your policy, bearing interest at 4½ per cent, with no personal liability on your part to pay such charge.

I ask any hon. gentleman, if that is not a misleading statement? They say, we will charge to your policy a sum sufficient to make up your proportion of the $500,000, in addition to what is in the hands of the Dominion government now to enable us to secure our license to go on, and we mortgage your policy, along with the others, but it is no charge against you; it is something you are not going to be asked to pay—there is no personal responsibility. Well, where does it come in? I will tell you where; it comes in that four and one-half per cent from that date to the time the policy matures, and when the man dies the money is deducted from his policy. In the very next clause they say:

> But if you chose to relieve yourself, if you prefer a policy without a charge, you may at any time pay it off in cash.

That is a liberal offer, is it not? If you do not want to have the mortgage continue, you can pay it off in cash, and in the previous portion of the same paragraph they say 'there is no personal liability against you at all to pay this money.' Now, I contend, that when an insurance company dealing with the public are forced to ask for new tariffs they ought to be plain, explicit and honest, and give those who are doing business with them an opportunity of judging what their intentions are. These principles that they lay down have about each a catch, no matter which way the man holds his insurance. But let me point out another thing; all the policy-holders in the New York Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association are included in these two classes. They all insured upon the assessment plan. They have paid for twelve or fifteen years on that plan; now the company comes down and asks to be placed in a position to deal with these people only on two grounds, and what are they? Either they must submit to an impairment of their policies to an amount which, if paid, would have got them a policy in an old line company, or pay a sum in addition to all they have been paying, to bring them up to the amount they would have had to pay if they had gone into a joint stock company in the first place. These are the two propositions; what proposition is there for the man who says, 'I do not want to be forced into either of these two conditions; I do not want to take a new policy, I do not want my policy impaired.' There is no place for him in this Bill; he is shut out, all he has paid is gone. He must take one or the other of these propositions, or be shut out altogether. Is that fair legislation? Is it fair to legislate away the $228,000 now in the hands of the government, and say to men who have been paying their money 'We will close you out unless you take one or the other of the two positions offered under the provisions of this Bill.'

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I do not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I think he has entirely misunderstood the Bill. It contains nothing compulsory whatever. It is entirely optional with people to take advantage of it or not. The man who wishes to keep on paying assessments can do so as long as he likes. His contract is untouched, unless he chooses to take the option—he has the privilege of paying assessments necessary to carry his policy.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—There is no provision in this Bill which warrants the hon. gentleman in making that statement.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, there is.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The Bill deals with only two classes ; I defy the hon. gentleman to deny that. What are the two classes? First, those who will submit to an impairment of their policies, and, second, those who will consent to pay an increased sum to bring their contributions up to the rates under the old line life system.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I am quite sure the hon. gentleman does not want to mislead the Senate, but if he will only look at the first opening lines of the section, he will see distinctly that there is nothing whatever in this Bill that says a policy-holder's rights under the present contract shall cease at all, but the words show it is purely optional—the amount of each policy shall, at the option of the assured, be either so-and-so or so-and-so. He has the right to remain as he is. He can exercise any one of three options, not two, as stated by the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I cannot see it as the hon. gentleman sees it, but if he can explain to the satisfaction of the House that there is any provision for those who will not take one or the other of the options which this Bill provides for, I should like to point it out. I have read the Bill and cannot see any provision whatever for those who do not take one or other of these positions. There is another provision in the Bill, to which the insured has to consent. He has not only to consent to an impairment of his policy to bring it down to a sum that he could have got insurance for in an old line company, or pay an increased sum equal to what he would have had to pay if he had been insured in a joint stock company; but he must consent, by this Bill, to pay 5 per cent upon the amount of insurance that he has paid each year to meet expenses. My hon. friend admitted that Canadian policy-holders had $22,000,000 in this company. Supposing that is cut down to $20,000,000, and that they receive an ordinary rate of assessment of $30,000 for each million, 5 per cent on their annual income will yield them $33,000 a year for expenses. That is the amount that those who come under either one of the conditions provided for here would have to pay.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that anybody has stated here that the present amount of insurance is $20,000,000?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The hon. gentleman said $22,000,000.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Pardon me, I said it was at one time $22,000,000, but that it has now fallen to $8,000,000.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—We will take it at $8,000,000. The average payment, as I have said, is $30,000 per million; that will be $240,000 a year as the income for the $8,000,000. On that the policy-holders would have to pay five per cent, which would yield $12,000 a year. One thousand dollars a month will be collected out of those who contribute the money to meet the yearly payments upon their policies. That $12,000 a year would not go into the funds to meet maturing policies, but would be used to meet the expenses of the executive only. That is the proposition of the Bill. Now in the eleventh paragraph of this circular that the company have issued they say :—

> According to the plan proposed by the Bill your share of two-thirds of this deposit (that is the deposit with the government) will be apportioned to you in paid-up insurance, or if you choose the option providing for a charge on your policy, in reducing the sum charged.

Now I should like to know if it is possible for any ordinary insurer to understand that provision. It says the policy to be issued to you will be apportioned to you in a paid up insurance, or if you chose the option provided for, a charge on your policy in reduction of such charge.? Any ordinary person would fancy, reading that paragraph, that it was the intention of the company to issue a policy for a certain paid up amount, according to the sum already contributed to the New York Mutual Reserve Fund. There is actually no such intention. The statement is misleading, because it is not the intention to issue paid up policies for the amount that these people have paid in. I am perfectly willing to do all I can for the policy-holders, but I object to giving legislation to this company on the lines of this Bill, and perhaps in ten years have them rapping at the doors of parliament for another measure of relief. We made a mistake in 1885; let us not repeat it now. If this company is to be set upon a basis authorizing it to continue its insurance business here, let us be sure that it is upon a basis that we can fairly hope that by reasonably good management it will be prepared to meet maturing policies, and if the basis it proposes is not of that kind, then I contend the Senate would not be doing justice to the policy-holders if we grant relief in accordance with the provisions of this Bill. I fearlessly assert that it is absolutely impossible for this company to meet maturing obligations on the lines laid down in this Bill. I am interested in a joint stock insurance company and am director of that company, but I am not hostile to this company. All I want is that when this company renews its conditions and re-enters the insurance field and asks for new insurance, that its position will be such that it will have at stake an amount of money that will secure to those who take insurance in the company, and those who now have insurance, that when their policies mature, their money will be there for them. That is the duty of parliament, and that is my desire. The company in which I am interested has $400,000 of stock subscribed, and $100,000 paid up. At the last annual meeting, after making provision for every obligation, including re-insurance of every man and woman that holds a policy in the company on the old line basis in a good stock company, and after providing for the amount of money paid in by the stockholders, $100,000 in cash, we have a respectable surplus still left; but what would be the condition, in our case, if anything happened that we had an enormous number of deaths? Every stockholder on our books would have to pay up to the last dollar of his stock. We have $300,000 stock that has not been called in. That is liable to be called in any day if the necessities of the company should require it. If a number of deaths occur, and we have not the money to meet the payments we have to call on the stockholders to the last dollar subscribed. What is the condition of this company, it has no stock—not a dollar; all they have is simply the deposit that they made with the government here, and they ask, as I said before, to mortgage all the policies to raise a sum in addition to enable them to get their license. I decidedly object to any life insurance company being placed in that position. I object to clothing them anew and sending them out to do business with the people of Canada. Let them form a joint stock company. If they come to parliament and say: 'We are going to ask our stockholders to contribute in the way of stock one-half of their entire policies—say that they have eight million dollars, as the hon. gentleman from Rothesay said, get the men who hold these policies to agree to sign a contribution of one-half of their policies in stock, and on that agree to pay ten per cent; that would be four million dollars. Ten per cent on four million, would be $400,000. Take that, along with the one hundred and fifty thousand, and they could make their deposit with the government and get their license. If any man who becomes a stockholder is unable to pay the ten per cent on his stock, and is allowed to let it stand a charge against his policy in that case, then what kind of company have you? You have a company with four million subscribed capital, with ten per cent paid up, and an amount as subscribed capital upon which you can fall back if your company, of necessity, has to do it in order to meet its maturing obligations. That would be a basis upon which the policy-holders would be safe. Were I a policy-holder, I would be quite willing to take that position, and you would have something then to rely upon, but in that case the stockholders would control the company. They could put in whom they like as managers and directors and presidents and everything else.

I do not know whether that would suit the present incumbents or not. They might say: 'No, we do not want that: we want things to remain as they are and just go on in our present shape.' I say that would be a solid basis upon which to start anew. But we have an insurance department here; we have an eminent man at the head of the department, Mr. Fitzgerald, a man high up in the business of insurance. Let the company go to Mr. Fitzgerald, or to the Minister of Finance or the deputy, let them lay down a scheme whereby a reasonable and safe relief can be offered to the policy-holders of the New York Mutual Reserve, and after they have matured that scheme, bring it to us and we will give it our very best consideration; but to come here with a Bill that has received the sanction of nobody, unless the promoters of the company—they are the only persons and the solicitors who have advised the Bill—and ask us to pass it and give it a second reading and go into committee and possibly frame a Bill that would grant them relief under it—I say, as one, I am not prepared to do that. We want them to show a reasonably good basis upon which they ask to go out and do business with the people of this country, and unless they do that we are not discharging our duty to the policy-holders and the people of Canada in passing this Bill. We must see that we do not repeat the error of 1885. It is time we should take that stand. I think I have covered almost every point in the Bill. I have endeavoured honestly to point out what I consider the peculiar provisions of it. I declare it to be, in my humble judgment, an exceedingly imprudent Bill for this House to undertake to pass. In the first place, it is imprudent because it is interfering with the law relating to insurance companies on the assessment plan of this Dominion, in asking to graft upon that law a provision that will let this company out of its present dilemma, and it is unsafe because we are opening the door, by the passage of this Bill, to all assessment companies to come here and ask for relief if any disaster overtakes them such as overtook the New York Mutual Reserve Life. In the third place, the financial basis on which they ask to be permitted to go out and do business with the people of this country is not such as would warrant this House, nor warrant the superintendent of insurance, to come to the conclusion that they could fairly hope to meet their policies at maturity. They have no rest account. They have no stock. They have nothing behind them whatever to meet maturing obligations. If an extraordinary or even an ordinary number of deaths took place, they would in a short time find themselves in the same dilemma in which they are placed to-day. We should not start them anew unless their financial position is such that we would feel justified in recommending the people of this country to do business with them, and that the policy-holders who have been in that company could look forward fairly to getting their money when their policies matured. On the other hand, this five per cent that they propose to collect, shows clearly that the executive is looking very sharply after their own interests. They are not willing that their salaries should be paid in the ordinary way. They are not willing to trust to the board and the policy-holders for their annual income, but they want to be placed in a position that five per cent shall be paid by every policy-holder upon his annual payment, in order to provide a sum that will directly enter the pockets of the executive, of which they have absolute control themselves. Let the company sink or swim, the officers are sure to be paid as long as the contributions are made from year to year to meet the maturing sums upon the policies. That is another feature of it, that I do not like. In the last place, I say if they are going to be put in that position, let them come before the House as a joint stock company. Why do not these wealthy men in New York form a joint stock company and contribute two or three millions, or say a million of stock, and on that million pay up say twenty-five per cent, which would be $250,000, and apply $150,000 of the amount that is here and get their license in that way? Instead of doing that, they are taking all the money standing to the credit of the poor policy-holders, and by this Bill are asking power to mortgage their policies as well to enable them to raise these moneys. I do hope that the committee, as one of the matters for investigation, will give thorough, careful attention to what were the causes that led up to the present financial condition of that company and report fairly and fearlessly to this House when they have done so, and if they find that the company met with disaster of an unusual character and that their embarrassment was brought about by unforeseen disasters which they could not overcome, I am perfectly willing to show them consideration. But if the company have sacrificed the money of the people, if they have abused the powers with which they were clothed in 1885, and if they have squandered the resources of the association, I say they do not deserve consideration at our hands only so far as it is in the interest of the policy-holders, for I do sympathize with those who were unfortunately inveigled into insuring in this company and after being bled from year to year, are now told after fifteen or twenty years that the company have no money to pay maturing claims, and there is nothing left but to mortgage their policies for a sum that will enable the company to get a license, and the policy-holders must consent to pay five per cent upon all the money paid in year after year to enable the executive to run a little longer. The policy-holders are told the company have no money to do the work and they do not want to put a dollar into the institution. That is virtually the language of the Bill. I hope, after the special committee have done their duty and reported to the House, that the Bill will receive the consideration it deserves, and as a matter of justice and courtesy to that special committe, I hope the second reading of this Bill will not be proceeded with until they have made their report.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN moved the adjournment of the debate until Wednesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND COMMITTEE.

CONSIDERATION OF REPORT POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Consideration of the second report of the Select Committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York.—(Hon. Mr. Cloran.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I ask that this report be allowed to stand. There may be a discussion upon it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why should there be a debate ? The House has referred that matter to the committee, and it is necessary that the usual course shall be pursued. If the government is going to oppose the grant of a certain amount of funds to carry on the investigation we will know what they are doing.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN.—The committee cannot proceed until this question is disposed of. We are in a peculiar position. We have come to a decision not to assume the position of prosecutors but to act in a semi-judicial position and remain absolutely impartial, and the committee wish that the company and other interested parties should be represented. It will be absolutely necessary, under these circumstances, to have counsel, and I cannot understand why the Secretary of State should desire the delay.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Secretary of State has a duty to perform in this matter. The motion is a motion of want of confidence in one of the most important departments of the government. I made inquiry if the committee had called on Mr. Fitzgerald, the head of the department. One would suppose that out of courtesy to the gentleman charged with the administration of insurance, that the committee would have called on the head of the department to ascertain if there was any justification for the action they proposed taking. I understand they have not done so.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Action has been taken in that matter, not only with reference to Mr. Fitzgerald, but also to the Minister of Finance, who recommended the committee to employ counsel if necessary.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think my hon. friend is entirely mistaken, but I do not propose to discuss that. All I can say is that under the law the duties that this committee propose to assume are specially applied to and reserved for the Department of Finance, to the Treasury Board and the official who is at the head of what is called the Insurance Branch. I hold the law on the subject in my hands, and his duties are clearly defined. When there are any inquiries to be made, they are to be made through him. He is the proper channel. I suggest that the committee should call Mr. Fitzgerald before any further expense is incurred, and if, after hearing his explanation, it is found that it is going to be in the interest of the policy-holders, it would be then for the House to consider whether the appeal for counsel should be entertained. At present,

I am not disposed to acquiesce in the resolution, because it is a very unusual thing, unheard of in fact, except when moved as it was in years past when the government had an adverse majority in the chamber, and inquiries were made by the House which ought directly to have been conducted by the government of the day. I am not going to enter into a discussion of it, but, as I said before, no possible good can arise from this inquiry. If any good was going to result the committee would require a number of experts, and the inquiry must extend over a considerable number of months. It is certainly not an inquiry that can result in any benefit whatever for the unfortunate policy-holders. I should ask therefore that this motion stand until Wednesday.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I think if this committee are to do any business, the sooner they get at it the better. The session is progressing, and we cannot remain here all summer. We have done nothing yet. If we follow the advice of the hon. gentleman from Wellington, that we are to do nothing with the Insurance Bill until the report of the special committee shall have been presented to this House as the result of the investigation, we are not likely to receive it until the last days of the session. It will then go to the Commons, and no legislation to relieve the policy-holedrs can be put through this session. I think the government ought not to throw anything in the way of the investigation that is to take place. The second reading of this Bill should be postponed from day to day until we have the report from the special committee. I do not feel like voting against that Bill, because I do not feel that I have enough evidence to satisfy me that that Bill perhaps may not be the very best Bill that can be presented to this House for the relief of the policy-holders, and under the circumstances I think it would be judicious to defer the second reading of the Bill until we have the report of the committee.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If the head of the Insurance Department has not been called before the committee, it is owing to a letter received from the Finance Minister. We consulted with the Minister of Justice in regard to counsel. He was quite willing but said that matter pertained to the duties and responsibilities of the Finance Department. We immediately went into communication with the Finance Minister, and we received a letter which is in the hands of the Law Clerk, which letter stated that the Interior Department and the Finance Department would have nothing to do with the investigation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Why call them, when they would have nothing to do with it? The letter wound up by saying that if counsel was necessary it was for the Senate to say so. The committee come before this House and say that it is absolutely necessary under the circumstances, in view of the position the committee will take, and I would not preside over the deliberations under any other condition—that is to assume a semi-judicial position, that is, to be perfectly fair to both parties. I do not see why the hon. Secretary of State objects to counsel.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I have nothing to say with reference to the position the hon. gentleman takes, that he wants to sit on that committee in a semi-judicial capacity; but it is quite refreshing to hear that statement as coming unanimously from the committee, because one member. of the committee is the gentleman who laid the indictment, one who was willing to risk his seat and reputation in making out the case. He brings the charges against the company, and all he wants is an opportunity to lay his evidence before the committee. I should be surprised if the House concurs in the statement the hon. gentleman makes, that he wants to sit as a judge in this matter and not as an accuser; but I will not dwell long on this phase of the question because the hon. gentleman from Rothesay is not here. He accused me personally of having an open mind on this question. He had no open mind on this matter; he had a closed mind. This is not the state of mind which is proper for a judge sitting upon a case, but I will pass to another feature of the situation. If this committee, which contains two members of the bar of the province of Quebec, does not feel that it is strong enough in that line, (it is no doubt very great modesty on their part), I would press them not to maintain the position and would suggest that the committee might be enlarged and some hon. gentlemen from this body could be added, before we employ counsel to help the gentleman who has all the evidence in his hands, who belongs to the committee, and who only asks that he should be given a chance to lay all that evidence before the committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The position taken by the hon. Secretary of State is that this is a direct attack upon the government of one of the departments. I do not understand that it is so. This company may have complied with every provision of the law, so far as it comes within the jurisdiction and investigation of the superintendent of insurance. They may have done all that. I believe they have. I do not believe there is a member of the Senate or a member of parliament who has greater confidence in Mr. Fitzgerald than I have myself from experience with him, and when I made inquiry some time ago as to the state of this insurance company—that is during the last session of parliament—he assured me that every provision in the Canadian law had been complied with by the company. It was upon that distinct understanding I voted for the investigation. The charge made by the hon. senator from Rothesay is not against the department. If I understand it, it is against the action of the company as it has been carried on in the past, and the misrepresentations which had been made to those persons who had taken out policies. No charge has been made, so far as my recollection carries me back, against any officer of the Finance Department or Insurance Department, and, upon that principle, the charge is that the company had conducted its affairs in a manner that should receive the condemnation of the people of Canada. Mr. Fitzgerald has fulfilled to the very letter his duties. I believe, in regard to this company, and—speaking for myself, and I think I am speaking the views of those gentlemen who voted for the committee, they never had the remotest idea of casting any reflection upon the Finance Department or the superintendent of insurance. I can say to my hon. friend, the chairman of that committee, that he has but one course to adopt when he wants any officer of the Finance Department, and that is to issue a summons to him to appear before the committee, and he is obliged to come. It makes no difference whether he says 'I do not want to have anything to do with it.' You have the power in that committee to compel the attendance of any official of the government, even from the minister down, so that he need not be at all backward in issuing his summons demanding his presence before the committee. I am quite satisfied when Mr. Fitzgerald comes there he will repeat exactly what he said to me, that so far as complying with the terms of the Act is concerned this company has complied with every provision in that Act, but it is not his duty to go outside to inquire as to how they conduct their business or as to how they secure their policies. No man would take that position if the responsibility was thrown upon his shoulders, so that the reason given by the Secretary of State has no basis or foundation in fact, and I think he will come to that conclusion himself.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The law is clear and definite. It is the duty of the superintendent to visit the offices of companies that are suspected of not keeping up their reserve. He is obliged to do it. If it appears to the superintendent that the liability of any life insurance company, including matured claims, and the full reserve and reinsuring of outstanding policies are not kept intact, it is his duty to call attention to it and to take action. It is his duty, in the first place, because he has the right to examine the books and the officials, to make the most minute inquiry—all the inquiry that this committee could make; and all I intended to convey to the House was that Mr. Fitzgerald ought first to be called before the committee. If the senator who made these charges were present, he would probably be able to explain to Mr. Fitzgerald the particular charges that he intended to establish, and Mr. Fitzgerald might be able to throw considerable light on them. It may be that he himself may have investigated. It may be he might have foreseen what has actually occurred. I think there was a great deal of misconception connected with this unfortunate company, and I suppose a good deal of it might be cleared away if Mr. Fitzgerald were called and examined in the first instance. If, after he has given any explanation that may be asked for, the committee still insist and believe that the inquiry can result in any good to the policy-holders. I will not oppose it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I think there is a misconception here. We are not to investigate the official relations between the insurance department and the company; those were all right, as far as the books show. The charges are on different grounds. It is a serious charge against the company, and the charge is the malversation of insurance moneys. That is the sum and substance of it, and for the sake of the policy-holders and the company I hope that the charge is not well-founded, that all the money that has been gathered in has been honestly distributed, and the question is, is this company now seeking new legislation entitled to it? If their administration is honest and fair, give them all they are entitled to. We want counsel to prepare a plan of investigation. We do not want to sit as prosecutors. We do not want to be forced to put leading questions to witnesses, or to examine them to extract the proof from them.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Who has accused the company of malversation?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman from Rothesay made the statement on the floor of the House.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Does he not sit on that committee?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes, but he stated before the committee that his duty was done.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Does he not declare he was ready to establish his charges?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—He takes the position that any honourable member would. He says: 'I have done my share of the work; now you will have to do the remainder. I am not going to sit here as an accuser. I have accused them before public opinion, and the Senate and I will accuse them no longer.'

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—So that from the position of accuser, he passes on to the bench?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Somebody has to accuse.

The motion was allowed to stand until Wednesday.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND moved the second reading of Bill (34) An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like an explanation.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The Bill is simply authorizing the company to accept the amendments to the new contract which has been entered into. It is simply giving the company the right to accept the amended contract which has been made with the government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would it not be better to postpone this Bill until the contract has been ratified. The other measure has not passed yet.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—If the Bill is rejected, this measure would fall to the ground; but we can, notwithstanding, send it to the committee. We can take the second reading to-night, and it will go to committee in the ordinary course.

The motion was agreed to.

The Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY BILL.

MOTION FOR SECOND READING RESCINDED.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Owing to an inadvertence yesterday, Bill (34) An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, which had not been reported upon by the Standing Orders Committee, was read a second time. I desire to call the attention of the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill to that fact, so that it may be corrected to-day by moving that the motion for second reading yesterday be rescinded and that the Bill be placed on the Orders of the Day for some future time.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—In compliance with the suggestion of the hon. gentleman, I beg to move that the motion carried yesterday for second reading of Bill (34) An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Company be rescinded and that the Bill be placed on the orders of to-day for second reading to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

LIGHTHOUSE KEEPER AT CRANE ISLAND.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

When was Mr. Joseph Painchaud appointed keeper of the lighthouse at Crane Island ?

What were the motives of public interest which determined the Minister of Marine to dispense with the services of this old employee ?

When was Mr. Joseph Painchaud notified of this decision of the Minister of Marine ?

Was a complaint brought against Mr. Painchaud ?

By whom ?

Of what was Mr. Painchaud accused ?

Was the complaint in question communicated to Mr. Painchaud with a request to answer it ?

If in the affirmative, what was the answer of the accused ?

If in the negative, why did the Minister of Marine, before acting, refuse Mr. Painchaud the right to disprove the accusation brought against him ?

Did Mr. Painchaud ask for an inquiry, and why and upon whose recommendation was it refused him ?

Is it the intention of the government to afford Mr. Painchaud an occasion to disprove the accusation of which he is the victim, or is it to be understood that the policy of the government, at least in the present instance, is to chase out of its employment an employee with forty-three years of service, without any form of trial, and to cause him to lose the pension to which he had a right ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The minister of the department to which the motion has reference suggests that the hon. gentleman should move for papers and they will be brought down.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Shall I bring it in the form of a motion ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will accept this as a motion for papers.

THE SAVARD PARK.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

1. Has the government acquired, in the course of the spring, in the suburbs of Quebec, a property or a part of a property known under the name of the Savard park ?
2. What was the extent of this park ?
3. What is the extent of the part acquired by the government ?
4. How much has the government paid for the part bought ?
5. Has the amount agreed upon been paid in full, or has a part thereof been retained to meet the payment of the hypothecs with which the property in question might be charged ?
6. In what proportion ?
7. How much still remains to be paid ?
8. From whom was this property bought ?
9. For what object ?
10. How much has the government spent, and how much does it propose to spend, above the purchase price, to put this part of the property in a state to receive the sick persons who are to be sent there ?
11. What class of sick persons does the government intend to send to this hospital ?
12. What is the staff of such establishment, and how much a year does it cost in salaries ?
13. What are the names and residences of the physicians whom the government has appointed to this establishment ?
14. What is the annual salary of each of them ?
15. How much, in the estimate of the government, is the annual maintenance of such establishment going to cost ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answers are as follows :

1. Yes, part.

2. We have no information in the department as to the total area of this park.

3. Three acres and the buildings.

4. Purchase price, including two buildings, $14,000.

5, 6 and 7. The sum of $8,000 was paid on account, leaving a balance of $6,000.

8. From Mr. Elzéar Savard.

9. For a detention building and hospital for sick immigrants.

10. It is estimated that the cost of repairing and fitting up the buildings will be about $14,000.

11. The persons to be treated in this hospital are those who may be rejected under the medical regulations of the department at the seaports and who may be found to be afflicted with minor contagious diseases such as trachoma, favus, and any other diseases which, in the opinion of the medical officers, are sufficient to require the deportation of such immigrants if they, or the transportation companies bringing them to Canada, are not willing that they should be treated.

12. The staff of the hospital includes the medical superintendent, matron, two interpreters who also act as guardians, a messenger and a female servant. The estimated amount required for their salaries is about $3,400.

13, 14 and 15. The physician in charge is Dr. A. Gauthier and his salary is $100 a month. The cost of the maintenance, annually, of the establishment will depend on the amount of work that will be required, but the transportation companies are required to pay a rate which is estimated to be sufficient to cover the whole cost of maintenance.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the hon. gentleman say that six thousand dollars has yet to be paid ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is it because the money has to be paid to other parties ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The reasons are not given. There may be some cause for it of which I have not been informed.

THE MARTELLO TOWERS AT QUEBEC.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

Does the government know that one of the Martello towers at Quebec, the one which stands on the historic ground where, on the 13th of September, 1759, the battle known under the name of the battle of the Plains of Abraham took place, is now used by the Ross Rifle Manufacturing Company to serve as a pedestal for an enormous and unsightly tub, in which, in summer only, the water accumulates which the company needs for the purposes of its factory ?

Has the government ever given its authority for such a use of military properties for industrial purposes ?

Were the military authorities consulted upon this subject, and is it also with their knowledge and with their approval that this part of the fortifications of Quebec has been granted or leased to the Ross Rifle Company, and that the very roof of the tower has been pierced in order to permit the construction of the carpentry which serves as a base for the tub in question ?

When was this permission given ?

Upon what conditions and for what length of time ?

As a matter of fact, was the consent of the Mayor of Quebec asked for beforehand, and was it obtained ?

Is it the intention of the government to cause the unsightly addition which the Ross Company has made to the Martello tower to disappear as soon as possible, this being of no utility to the company, at least in winter, thanks to the rigour of our climate ?

Is it equally the intention of the government to withdraw the use of these historic towers from the industrial operations of a private company, and to preserve intact towers which are an ornament for the old city of Quebec ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The minister considers that these questions are not in parliamentary form ; that the questions ought to be put direct ; there should be no innuendo. preamble or insinuation. The hon. gentleman has introduced opinions and conclusions of his own which, perhaps, the department might not share, and he should therefore remove those particular phrases from the question and put it in a more direct shape and he will get a reply.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Will the hon. gentleman point out what the infractions of the rule of parliament are ? Perhaps the minister will have no objection to answer the questions which are put in the right form ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume the objection is to the insinuation that the Martello towers have been degraded by having a 'tub' placed on top of them.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY I cannot call it anything else but a tub.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman has given his own conclusion ; perhaps he will put the question in a more direct form and I will try to get it answered. The hon. gentleman says that the Martello towers are.

Now used by the Ross Rifle Manufacturing Company to serve as a pedestal for an enormous and unsightly tub, in which, in summer only, the water accumulates which the company needs for the purposes of its factory ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The only thing I can drop out of it is the part which states that it is used to accumulate water, but I cannot describe it better than by calling it a tub. Perhaps I can meet the minister's view by calling it a reservoir.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know the esthetic term that would suit my friends in the department.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I will try to meet the wishes of the hon. Minister of Militia.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is the usual practice, in the other House, as hon. gentleman know, to put questions direct without any deduction or expression of opinion. The hon.

gentleman expresses an opinion of his own in this question. The better way is to ask the question—direct—for what purpose it is used, and in what way the Martello tower is being used. I need not suggest to my hon. friend; he can very readily frame a question which the department will have to answer.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I want to know from the government if they propose to leave that tub—or shall I call it reservoir there. That is the principal question. However, I shall put the question in a form to meet the wishes of the Minister of Militia.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I would suggest to the hon. gentleman to put his questions in a more direct form.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I shall do so.

THE TRANS-CANADA RAILWAY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired:

Whether the Trans-Canada Railway Company has made overtures to the government to obtain a subsidy to aid in the construction of a railway from Quebec to Port Simpson?

What is the nature of the subsidy asked?

What is the amount per mile and for how many miles?

Has this request for subsidies been recommended by any one, and by whom?

Does the government intend to grant the aid asked for?

Have any negotiations taken place between the government and the Trans-Canada Railway Company or any party whatever with the view of inducing the Trans-Canada Railway Company to give up its charter for any part of its line intended to become a part of the National Transcontinental Railway?

As a matter of fact or policy, will the National Transcontinental Railway travel over the ground and serve the country the Trans-Canada intended to cover?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will take this as an order for papers and I ask the hon. gentleman to let it stand.

The inquiry was allowed to stand.

THE FAST LINE AND THE WINTER PORT.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired:

Are there at present, or have there been since last session, any negotiations going on on the subject of the establishment of a fast line of trans-Atlantic steamers?

With whom have these negotiations taken place?

On what basis?

What Canadian port has been designated as the terminus of ocean and river navigation in summer, in connection with the establishment of the fast line?

Which is the winter port?

What speed are the ships of the fast line to have? What draught of water?

At what date approximately, or at least in what year, will the first vessel of this line make its first voyage?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There have been no negotiations since last session of parliament.

THE ROSS RIFLE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired:

Has the Ross Rifle Company sold any rifles to the government?

When, in what quantity, and at what price?

How much, on the average, in the past, has been the cost of the purchase of each rifle of the different models which have been placed in the hands of the Canadian Militia since confederation?

Does the government know, and can it inform us of, the price of the fire-arm with which the American infantry is armed to-day?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, there are none actually delivered. There was a contract to deliver a certain number of them—100,000—and the price fixed was $25 each rifle, but none have so far been delivered.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—My inquiry goes a little further. I should like to know the average price of the different models of rifles which have been issued to the Canadian militia since 1867, and the price paid in the United States for rifles which they are putting into the hands of their militia.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know if the department would be informed as to the last question. Perhaps it would be as well to let the inquiry stand.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes, and communicate the question to the department.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have already done so, and that is the only answer they gave me, that no rifles had been delivered—that there had been a contract to deliver rifles and that the contract price was $25 for each rifle.

PETITIONS RE GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC BILL.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.) rose to:

Direct the attention of the Honourable the Secretary of State to the advisability of placing before the Senate, necessary to an intelligent understanding, before the second reading of the Act to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act, copies or the originals of all requests and petitions by provincial governments, municipalities, boards of trade, mercantile men or associations, manufacturers, steamship companies, producers and raisers of cereals, horses and cattle, and by the purchasers of such products, showing the necessity for increased transportation facilities, and praying for the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

He said: I think the hon. Secretary of State will consider this a reasonable request that all petitions and questions from different bodies, from provincial governments, municipalities and transportation companies, should be laid before the Senate before the discussion on the Transcontinental Railway is proceeded with. It is a very important matter that we should know, because some of us oppose that scheme and we would like to ascertain on what foundation it has been supported. I have no intention of making any quotations in regard to this matter, but the Montreal 'Gazette' of to-day has fallen into my hands, and I see that in Montreal the Transportation Commission is now sitting, and it met the boards of trade, and mayor of Montreal and a number of commercial men and the chief thing they pressed on the commissioners was with reference to increased harbour facilities and elevators and things of that kind in the improvement of the harbour. Then they go on to the question of transportation direct, and they state as follows:

It was urged that because of the improvement of the Erie canal, which might divert to Oswego traffic passing through the Welland canal, the deepening of the Welland canal was no longer advisable and that instead the immediate prosecution of the work of deepening and canaling the French river should be most energetically advocated; that it should take precedence of all other works in connection with transportation routes, and that the canalization of the Ottawa river should be proceeded with to give an alternative all-water route from North Bay. The cost of deepening these rivers to accommodate vessels drawing 20 feet would be about $85,000,000.

The only reference to the Grand Trunk Pacific is as follows:

That the board, which, as stated in its resolution of December 10, 1902, favours the extension of the Grand Trunk system westward from Northern Ontario to the Pacific ocean, advocates the early completion of such extension.

There is no reference in that resolution, or that opinion of the Board of Trade of Montreal to the continuation of the road from northern Ontario—that is Lake Nipissing or North Bay down to Moncton.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That reference, which my hon. friend has read, was before the present scheme was brought to the notice of parliament; it was not evolved for some six or eight months after that. That reference which my hon. friend is quoting from when the Grand Trunk Pacific first proposed to build a line from North Bay to a point at the end of the road was in 1892. I am not aware that there are any communications. I shall make some inquiries about it, but there were none, within my knowledge, in the various sources from which my hon. friend has quoted. If there are any I will be very glad to bring them down.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I wish to see what foundation the government is proceeding on, and I think if the government had waited until the commission reported it would have been a wise thing.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (116) An Act respecting certain patents of the Canadian General Electric Company and others.—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Toronto.)

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (8) An Act respecting the Nova Scotia Permanent Benefit Building Society and Savings Fund.—(Hon. Mr. McDonald, C.B.)

Bill (104) An Act respecting the Tilsonburg, Lake Erie and Pacific Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Wilson.)

Bill (57) An Act to incorporate the Interprovincial Railway Bridge Company of New Brunswick.—(Hon. Mr. Domville.)

Bill (93) An Act respecting a certain patent of E. A. Small.—(Hon. Mr. Mitchell.)

Bill (90) An Act to incorporate the Bessemer and Barry's Bay Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Gibson.)

Bill (60) An Act respecting the Kettle River Valley Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Templeman.)

APPOINTMENT OF J. B. JACKSON.

RETURN LAID ON THE TABLE.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I beg to lay on the table of the House the return ordered by the House on June 1, with reference to the appointment of Mr. J. B. Jackson. The Order in Council is brought down, but the recommendation to council is not among the papers furnished me. It was considered confidential. I said that was the practice. In this case it makes no difference, because I know it was simply on the recommendation of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I dare say that will give all the information I require, but the reasons advanced for not producing the recommendation would make one infer that there was a division in the cabinet as to the propriety of making the appointment, which I have no doubt there was, owing to the character of it.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Wednesday, June 8, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUEBEC GOLF CLUB.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

1. Has the government leased to the Quebec Golf Club the exclusive use of the Cove Fields ?
2. At what price per year ?
3. When does the lease expire ?
4. Is it the intention of the government, on the expiration of the lease, to lease anew the same land to the same club, with the same exclusive reserve, or to offer it in a general manner to any person who would like to lease it on the same conditions of payment and of maintenance, but with the obligation to keep it open and accessible to the public of Quebec ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answers are as follows :

1. Yes, subject to the department resuming possession in the event of the land being required for military purposes.
2. $200.
3. 1st May, 1916.
4. This matter will be considered in due time.

DISMISSAL OF LIGHTHOUSE KEEPER AT CRANE ISLAND.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General; praying that His Excellency may be pleased to cause to have laid before this House a copy of all documents, papers and correspondence relating to the appointment of Mr. Joseph Painchaud to the keepership of the lighthouse at Crane island, of the complaints brought against him, of the dismissal of that officer, and of the requests for an inquiry made by him, and of the refusal of the department to grant them.

The motion was agreed to.

FRENCH VERSION OF MILITIA ORDERS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY rose to call the attention of the House to the following facts :—

I. On the 9th of April, 1902, Honourable Mr. Landry made the following inquiry :—

'Honourable Mr. Landry inquired of the government—

1. In what year were published the last regulations and orders for the militia of Canada ?
2. Has the French version of these regulations ever been published, and in what year ?
3. If such version has never been published, why ?
4. Does the government intend to put at the disposal of the French officers of the Canadian militia the French version of the aforesaid regulations, and when will it be distributed ?

Honourable Mr. SCOTT—The answer sent me by the department is as follows :—

1. 1898.
2. No.
3. Because the issue was a provisional one.
4. Yes, shortly.'

II. On the 9th of June, 1903, after having repeated the above inquiry, Honourable Mr. Landry put the following question :—

'When will the French officers of the Canadian militia be expected to be put on a foot of equality with the other officers of the Canadian militia, in getting the French edition of the regulations and orders for the militia of Canada' ?

The following answer was then given :—

'Honourable Mr. SCOTT—On the 9th April, 1902, orders had been given for the immediate revision of the regulations and orders, and it was the intention to have copies in the French issued as soon as possible thereafter. The revision was practically complete in the early autumn, when the work was suspended in view of the intention to revise the Militia Act during the now current session. As the new Militia Bill will not be proceeded with during this session (1903), instructions have been given to complete the revision of the regulations and orders commenced last year, and to bring it up to date, and new regulations and orders, both in English and French, will be published and issued to all concerned with the least possible delay.'

And that he will ask the government—

A year having elapsed since the above promises have been made, and the French officers of the Canadian militia having never had the French version of the last regulations and orders for the militia, when does the government of Canada intend to do justice to the French element of our Canadian militia ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT. The work of revising the regulations and orders has been advanced as far as it is possible to do so before the new Militia Bill becomes law. As soon as this is done the work will be completed, and a French edition will be at once prepared.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Do I understand the French edition is prepared concurrently with the English edition ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume so, because it says 'and a French edition will be at once prepared.'

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But the other one is finished ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are waiting now. There will be some changes and the other one will have to be revised when the new Militia Act comes into operation. And when that is done the French edition will be circulated.

POLITICS IN MILITIA APPOINTMENTS.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called I should like to direct the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to the following article in this morning 'Citizen' :—

A MILITARY SENSATION.

Lord Dundonald's Speech at Windsor Banquet. Deplores the interference of politicians with the appointments to the Canadian volunteer force—The condition, he says, is intolerable.

Toronto, June 7.—The 'World' this morning publishes the following sensational story under an Ottawa date :—

A Montreal officer who was present at the military dinner at the Windsor Saturday, stated here to-day that Lord Dundonald's sensational speech, although carefully written out and intended for publication, had been carefully suppressed by the Montreal newspapers. This is what the general said :

Hon. Mr. LANDRY.

When a nation is in peril the commanding officer has the supreme control of the military appointments, and he is responsible to his country for its efficiency in war. In time of peace, unhappily, through political intriguers, we are in their web, and appointments are made without regard to military efficiency and to the great peril of the nation's safety. Officers in command of the forces of this country should not be selected because of their particular politics, but unfortunately this is the case

A most flagrant instance of political interference has recently come before me in connection with the appointment of officers in the new eastern townships cavalry regiment, the Scottish Light Dragoons. The commanding officer of the corps had selected officers because of their apparent fitness from a military point of view. The names reached me and were sent to council, and gentleman, what do you think happened ? The list having my approval was returned with the name of one officer stricken off, and initialled by the Minister of Agriculture.

The gentleman whose name was stricken from the list was Dr. Pickel, the mayor of Sweetsburg, and warden of the county of Missisquoi, a man chosen of the people and well qualified to serve his King and country. His political colour was not, however, that of the Minister of Agriculture, and consequently he was not considered fit to serve his King in the military force of Canada.

'If,' said Lord Dundonald, 'the Hon. Sydney Fisher has been as well versed in soldering as in agriculture, he would have better understood the responsibilities of officers, and this would not have happened.'

After making a few more remarks, the general said : 'It is intolerable that my recommendations, made in the best interests of the force, should be so grossly interfered with by any minister, not connected with the department.'

Lord Dundonald's speech was greeted with tremendous applause.

Lt.-Colonel Whibbard also made a speech in which he endeavoured to shield the Minister of Agriculture, saying that it was difficult to suppose that Hon. Mr. Fisher would be guilty of such an act.

It goes without saying that the speech is the talk of both Ottawa and Montreal.

I have no doubt my hon. friend has seen this article, and that he is in a position now to give us some information on the subject. I want to know if the major general has made the speech which I have just read, and, if so, whether the statements therein contained are facts ? I want to know if it is true that the Hon. Mr. Fisher has dropped his plough to pick up the sword and whether the Minister of Agriculture in this country is stronger than the Minister of Militia ? I want to know if the Minister of Agriculture has interfered in a matter which belongs to another department, to the extent of deciding that an officer who has served his King and country is not fit to do so any longer if he happens to be opposed to the government of the day ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When I read the morning paper I saw that there was an announcement about a military sensation, but as I belong to the peace party I rarely read speeches from military men. I certainly did not read a single line of that article, and the incident to which the hon. gentleman has referred is new to me. It is the first time I ever heard of it. I should, in the first place, doubt the authenticity of the report, and until Lord Dundonald himself assumes the authorship of it, I would be unable to make any comments whatever.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would ask the hon. gentleman to bring under the notice of his colleagues the fact that a speech purporting to be delivered by the major general has been read in the Senate, and to ascertain whether it be correct or not. If correct it shows an interference with the Department of Militia on the part of a minister of another department which under the circumstances, would be unjustifiable. I do not pretend to say, however, that even the Secretary of State would be exempt from responsibility for the action of his colleagues on this or any other matter unless he repudiated it. The charge is of such a grave character that in the interest of the force itself and of the community as a whole, we should know whether a gentleman occupying the high position that Lord Dundonald holds has made such a statement. I shall not give an opinion now on this question. I have good reason to know, from past experience, that whether this be true or not there are many instances of a somewhat similar character in which politics has had more to do with the appointment, the promotion, and the removal of officers, than their efficiency. And here is a statement purporting to have been made by the highest military authority in the country that he recommended a certain gentleman, who, from the position he holds in the county of Missisquoi, must certainly, to say the least of it, be a respectable and reputable man, and he is struck off the list of officers on account of the political opinions that he may hold. Such an act is enough to destroy the efficiency of the military force in the country, and if the force cannot be managed and controlled without introducing the question of politics, it is high time that the country expressed an opinion of a character which would bring condemnation upon any minister who interferes in the manner in which the Minister of Agriculture is alleged to have interferred in this case. I could give instances of capital officers, men who had served in the volunteer force for years, men who were efficient in every particular, having been rejected and refused commissions, and it is not only believed but known that it was on account of their political complexion. I know further that when certain politicians of the other House came to Ottawa and represented to the Minister of Militia that a certain young man was desirous of being employed in the service of his country on the active force, he did get a commission but it was not until after that member of parliament had represented to the government that he, his father and his own relations, belonged to the Liberal party. Now, from my personal knowledge of that young man I can say that he was as capable and as worthy of having a position in the militia force as any man in Canada. He stood high in the profession, and passed the very best examinations, and I do not wish to be understood as objecting to his appointment. I think it was a worthy appointment, but what I object to is that no appointment to any of those battalions was made or could be made until it was represented that the man to be appointed belonged to the Liberal party. If we have trouble with any other country we should not have to depend upon one party exclusively, whether it be Liberal or Conservative.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And in a matter of this kind, if there is any question that should be impressed on the minds of the people of Canada, it is the idea that we are a unit in the defence of our country, and no matter what our political views may be we pride ourselves on being British Canadians as has been amply shown during the trouble in South Africa and on other occasions. A man's political complexion and views have nothing whatever to do with that fealty which he owes to the country in which he lives, and to the sovereign who governs the country. I speak somewhat warmly on this question, because I have been during the larger portion of my life connected with the volunteer force, and when the Conservatives were in power I laid down the principle very strongly, when approaches were made to me when acting as Minister of Militia, to have promotions and appointments decided upon the question of politics, I put my foot down upon it as firmly as I possibly could, and declared that no question of politics or religion should ever influence the department while I had anything to do with it, in the appointments to, or promotion in the volunteer force; that merit alone and service would be the only principle that should guide the department while I had anything to do with it. I urge upon the Secretary of State, and I do it in all sincerity, to bring this question under the notice of his colleagues, and if it be shown that the major general's statement is correct, then it will be for the country to condemn the minister who interferes in the manner in which he did for the reasons which he alleged, and in justice to Lord Dundonald, if he did not make that statement, it should receive a contradiction or an explanation at the earliest possible moment.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I do not believe that it is the proper time to discuss the administration of the Militia Department on a simple incident that arises through the publication of a partial report of a speech made by an employee of the government in the city of Montreal.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Who is the employee?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I will mention the name presently. Hon. gentlemen need not be afraid, it is Lord Dundonald. An expression has fallen from the lips of the hon. leader of the opposition, upon which I wish to comment, and it is that a grave charge has been made by the reading of this newspaper report. I agree with him to the extent that a grave charge has been made, and I should not like to condemn the party who is charged with the offence mentioned in that report until I know that he accepts the responsibility for the offence. Lord Dundonald is accused of having made an after dinner speech in which he condemned a minister of the Crown for his action in the administration of the Department of Militia. I do not see how the report referred to could bear the signature of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, except that he would be representing for a time the Minister of Militia himself, and I cannot admit for one moment that an employee of the government, whoever he may be, would have such a dull sense of his duty as to criticise his employer and a minister of the Crown in the way that is mentioned in that newspaper. I should not admit it for one single moment. There are other ways for an employee of the government to show how dissatisfied he is with the administration of the department. It is for him to sever his connection with that department, and I credit Lord Dundonald with enough common sense to feel that if he wants to sever his connection with the Department of Militia, he would have taken another mode than the one he is charged with having taken, because it goes without saying that it would simply mean the departure, the abrupt departure of Lord Dundonald from the service of the Dominion of Canada.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am not surprised at the observations which the hon. gentleman has addressed to the House, for the reason that when I read the paper this morning I felt a very great deal of surprise at the outspoken nature of this declaration by Lord Dundonald. I saw this report yesterday in some other paper, not the 'Citizen.' It appeared in the Montreal press yesterday, and this morning it was reproduced in the 'Citizen,' and it occurred to me that my hon. friend the Secretary of State would be eager to get on his feet when he met this House to-day to make some explanation with regard to this most extraordinary statement of the action of his colleague the Minister of Agriculture who is residing at Ottawa at this moment. I think it extraordinary that my hon. friend did not communicate with him and ascertain the facts with regard to this statement. I agree with my hon. friend that it does seem rather extraordinary that Lord Dundonald should have spoken so openly, if he did so as indicated in the newspaper report. We have details and names given, all the particulars ; everything is there in a detailed way and it is of such importance, dealing with the military question in this country, that I must express my very great surprise that the Secretary of State did not interrogate his colleagues before he came to this House and did not cause inquiry to be made as to whether Lord Dundonald made the statement, or whether the Minister of Agriculture had interfered with the administration of the Militia Department to such an extent as is indicated in that report. It has now gone two days without contradiction, and the assumption is that there must be a very large grain of truth in the charge, otherwise the statement would not have been made and we would not have been left without a contradiction either from Lord Dundonald, the Minister of Agriculture, or the leader of the government in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not propose to add anything to what I have said. I stated truthfully—and I think the hon. gentleman is not observing the ordinary courtesy in such matters—that I saw nothing of the article. When I saw the heading of Lord Dundonald's speech I did not read it. I never heard of it till it was mentioned by the hon. gentleman, and I am not going to discuss a hypothetical question as to what should be done. I know the action that would be taken if the facts were true.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I want to say that I regret very much if there is a justifiable foundation for the report that has been published in the 'Gazette.' I agree largely with the views that have been expressed by the hon. leader of the opposition when he says that in defence of our country we should not know either Grit or Tory and if any minister of the Crown, in the discharge of his duty, permits himself to be actuated by political spleen in either rejecting or choosing officers for the militia I would say at once that he is not fit for his position. I can hardly believe that the Minister of Agriculture lent himself to what is charged. I earnestly hope that it is not true. I hope that whenever the matter comes to be fully explained that it will be found there were some other reasons than simply that this officer was a Conservative, for the course the minister took, if he did what is charged. I hope, for the credit of the Crown and the government, that no minister would be small enough to be actuated by mere political spleen in such a matter, and for that reason and that reason only to scratch a man's name off the list when he is recommended by Lord Dundonald for a certain position in the militia. I hope it is not true. I hope the hon. Secretary of State will inquire into the whole matter and be able to report to us that the statement made by Lord Dundonald is largely overdrawn. I should like that to be the result. If it is not the result, if Mr. Fisher is guilty of what is charged I can only say that I am exceedingly sorry that any minister should lend himself to such a transaction.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I take exception to the words used by my hon. friend from DeLormier (Hon. Mr. Dandurand). I think that he did not select his language carefully. My hon. friend on the other side (Hon. Mr. Landry) had a perfect right to call attention to this matter. I have been in the militia, and know that while I served under the Conservatives I got fair-play from them, although they knew that I was fighting them every inch, and I think the Liberals of this country are prepared to do the same. If a mistake has been made, well, sometimes people will make mistakes, and too much importance should not be attached to after-dinner speeches. When my hon. friend calls Lord Dundonald an employee I take exception to that word.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—What is he ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—He is sent out here by King Edward of England.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, he is our paid employee.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman does not understand the question. He takes up too many questions in a wrong way in this House when he does not understand them and he is evidently not posted on this. The leader of the opposition has been a colonel of a regiment and a minister of the Crown, and he knows that there is a royal warrant governing the position of the general commanding here, and if we ask England to send us a general officer, it does not follow that he is an employee. Who is the general commanding officer ? Did he sit here and blow off wind when there was war in South Africa ? No, he fought through the war and proved himself a most successful general. Politics should be set aside in a matter of this kind. Let us all remember we are part of the British nation, and it is our duty to stand by His Majesty's commanding officer in Canada. I know very little of Lord Dundonald personally. I have never met him socially, and merely exchanged greetings with him, but he has come out to this country covered with laurels gained in fighting the Boers. Many generals did not succeed in that war.; he did, and when he has been sent here to command our forces, I say to refer to him as an employee is an insult. He is not hired. What does he get here ? Not a fraction of what he got when he was in England or what he would get if he were in the east. He comes here to do his best for Canada and for the empire, and to speak of him as an employee, as if he was simply a clerk in the civil service, or as a man we hire to-day and send away to-morrow is unwarranted, and I am sure no hon. gentleman in this House would endorse such language. My hon. friend may smile ; I have seen him smile on other occasions, and perhaps before we are through here there will be some more smiling ; but this honourable body ought to ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw that word 'employee.' In case of war, parliament disappears and our forces must then defend our country as best they can and conduct the war to the best of their ability. The hon. Secretary of State answered the inquiry very appropriately ; he had not looked into the matter. I do not know whether it needs looking into. We know that after-dinner speeches sometimes do not mean anything. I am sure my hon. friend from DeLorimier will regret hereafter, if he does not already regret, that he has thrown a slur on a British general who has fought for the empire and is covered with medals and with honours for the services he has rendered.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I see no odium in the expression 'employee.' We are all to a certain degree more or less employees of somebody. We are here ourselves as employees of the people of Canada. I think it is a high honour to be a high salaried officer of the Dominion, and that is the position of Lord Dundonald whom we can appoint or dismiss when we please.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman says he is an employee here. I am not. I am an employee of nobody.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—I think we are making a little too much of this discussion. You will notice this report is not given by any of the newspaper men of Montreal, but by a private individual who reports it without giving his name. Therefore my opinion is that there is no truth in the report, and that the whole thing will be contradicted.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (106) An Act to incorporate the Chicoutimi and Northeastern Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Domville.)

Bill (109) An Act to incorporate the Montreal, Nipissing and Georgian Bay Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Toronto.)

Bill (K) An Act respecting the Northern Bank.—(Hon. Mr. Watson.)

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (68) An Act respecting the Hudson's Bay and Northwest Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Toronto.)

Bill (91) An Act respecting the Toronto and Hamilton Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. McMullen.)

Bill (105) An Act respecting the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Casgrain, Windsor.)

Bill (44) An Act respecting the Berlin, Waterloo, Wellesley and Lake Huron Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Merner.)

Bill (96) An Act to incorporate the Crawford Bay and St. Mary's Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Templeman.)

Bill (48) An Act respecting the Nicola, Kamloops and Similkameen Coal and Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Macdonald, B.C.)

SECOND READING.

Bill (103) An Act to incorporate the Canadian Artillery Association.—(Hon. Mr. Templeman.)

NAVIGATION OF CANADIAN WATERS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (112) An Act to amend the Act respecting the navigation of Canadian waters. He said: The object of this Bill is to amend section 14 of chapter 79, which provides the signs and signals to be given by the different ships. It is merely a matter of detail. There have been a good many collisions of late, and the object is to make such changes as to avoid in future collisions which experience has shown may be avoided. It is a mere matter of signals.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

BOUNTIES ON LEAD ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN moved the second reading of Bill (127) An Act to amend the Act providing for the payment of bounties on lead contained in lead-bearing ores mined in Canada.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is this an amendment to the Bill which was passed last year?

Hon. TEMPLEMAN—No, there is only one clause providing that the payment of bounties may be made from a certain date. It is to clear away an ambiguity in the law passed last year.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Does it extend the time for payment.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—It does not affect the law at all; it is only making it clear that a bounty is to be paid from the beginning of last financial year instead of from the time of the passing of the Act.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILLS.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills passed through Committee of the Whole and were read the third time and passed.

Bill (3) An Act to amend the Criminal Code, 1892.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Bill (56) An Act to amend the Criminal Code, 1892.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

DEBATE RESUMED

The Order of the Day being called:

Resuming the further adjourned debate on the motion for the second reading Bill (H) An Act further to amend the Insurance Act.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN said: As hon. gentlemen will remember, last evening I moved the adjournment of this debate on account of the absence of the hon. senator from Rothesay. I have very little to say in regard to the Bill and its merits at present. Probably if I were not in the position which I hold to-day in regard to the company, I would have a good deal to say owing to representations made in the matter by highly interested parties, such as the united association of insurance agents in Canada, who have written me protesting against the passing of this Bill on very strong grounds. I will not detail them here now. I have had also representations from many of our leading citizens throughout the Dominion, stating that the Bill is more or less of a cover for the wrong-doing of the past. Whether that is true or not I am not in a position to say, consequently I will not discuss the merits of these representations to-day, but my position in regard to this Bill is this: As far as I can see, it is a measure proposed for the relief of the company. Now, if the company is in a sound position, doing good, legitimate, profitable business for the policy holders there is no need of this Bill. If the company is in another position, one where wrong-doing can be legally and rightfully charged, then I say that the presentation of the Bill now before the House is exceedingly premature in view of the action already taken by this honourable body. This House has decided by a vote that an investigation into the affairs and the position of this company, as far as it does business in Canada, is absolutely necessary. A few days after that decision a Bill is presented to this House to decide and conclude what should be done before the investigation is held. It is like a physician recommending a remedy before diagnosing the case. The duty of the House is, not to pass the Bill before the case is diagnosed. We have to find out the evil, and if no evil exists there is no necessity for the Bill. If there is evil in the administration of the affairs of this company, this Bill will not remedy that evil. The men best authorized to speak in regard to that question are the insurance agents of this country, and in a public meeting in Quebec last week they unanimously passed a resolution denouncing the Bill, so that, under the circumstances, I, as a senator, contend that the presentation of the Bill is premature. It is an argument used by the friends of the measure, that it can be amended in committee, and the evil remedied there. Why suggest the remedy before the evil is known ? That is the question which this honourable body will have to settle, so that as far as I am concerned in the matter I contend that this Bill is premature to-day. I am not prepared to discuss the merits of the Bill, owing to the position I hold as chairman of the committee appointed to investigate the matter ; and in regard to that committee I say that we are not there to find a verdict for or against the company. The sole duty of the committee is to ascertain the facts, to ascertain the position of that company in Canada, and find out what they have done with the money paid to them by the Canadian policy-holders. That is our only duty in relation to it, and why such agitation should arise about this matter is more than I can understand. The company may have nothing to suffer by the investigation. If the facts that will be ascertained are to the credit of the company, the company's credit will be benefited throughout the insurance world. If the facts are against the company the sooner they are made public the better for the policy-holders of Canada and throughout the world. That is the position I hold. The committee of investigation are simply there to ascertain facts, and when they have ascertained them, they will report to this honourable House, and the Senate will take the course that ought to be taken.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I hold a most unfortunate position before this honourable body. I came here in good faith to protect the policy-holders of Canada. Month after month has passed by and I have been met with every obstacle. As my hon. friend has just said, if there is no wrong-doing what harm is there in the investigation ? When a celebrated case occurred in the United States and a man was charged with bribing the government at Washington, what did he say ? He asked ' How can there be a funeral if there is no corpse ' ? There was no corpse and therefore there was no funeral. But my hon. friends who are opposing me, are treating me and the bleeding policy-holders as if we were trying to defraud this country, as if we were not asking simply for our rights, and to my mind it is peculiar that the company should have so many advocates or so many people defending them. Are they not a corporation that have been attacked right and left ? Have they not been fighting in the United States and turned down right and left, but all of a sudden, in our Canada, our own Canadian home for Canadians, we find this representative body, the highest body in Canada, endeavouring to shield the company from something. Why shield them? I know it is the duty of an advocate to make the best case he can for his client, but we are not advocates here and we are not employees. We are here to legislate for the people of Canada, and it will be a very great mistake if by any sophistry or any wire pulling or any work that I will not designate as I might designate, this inquiry should be defeated ; but if that is done then let the Senate take the responsibility before Canada. Let them be in a position to stand forth as I can and say to the people, ' I have worked for you. I have done my best.' If hon. gentlemen who think as I think that there should be an investigation, strictly within parliamentary lines, and we are defeated in our object, what will the people say ? Where is the Senate ? The Senate is doing good work ; the Senate is endeavouring to protect us, and how are we defeated. Wire pullers are at work all through the corridors night and day. Members have been button-holed. I say it fearlesly. I have never asked any hon. gentleman whether he would support my motion or not. I left it to them as independent men to do what they thought to be right. What made these wire pullers button-hole hon. members? Are hon. gentlemen here as advocates ? Yes. They are here as advocates but not for great corporations, not for individuals, but for Canada who sent them here. If Sir J. Macdonald appointed senators on that side of the House he did so thinking they had the public confidence, and on the same line when Sir Wilfrid Laurier sent members to this House he sent them believing they would work in the interests of Canada and not as advocates for any special company or special cause. Now we are brought down to this Bill. What does it mean ? My hon. friend said I was taking up the time of the House. I have taken up no time. They have taken up the time burking me—I withdraw that expression because it is not parliamentary—but what they have done has been in a large measure to frustrate my efforts on behalf of the public. What does the Bill propose to do ? Why was it brought in ? I am not blaming the government. The hon. gentleman told me there is an insurance law on the statute-book, and that the government had compelled this company to conduct their business strictly as the statute allowed them and they could not go any further. Therefore, the government stands aside and if the required deposits are made the department stands aside. But if a Bill is needed in the interests of policy-holders who should be responsible ? The government of the day should bring it in. If that insurance law is wrong—I do not say it is wrong or right, because you know conditions change in a number of years and it becomes necessary sometimes to change a law and it may be necessary to-day, why should my hon. friend undertake to do it himself ? Why should he be the champion. Did I not give notice in the Senate that I would bring in a Bill last year. I was not allowed to go any further. I withdrew it. I started again this year, but my hon. friend, like Sampson pulling down the pillars, steps in before me and says I will do it. The people will ask why is the government not taking up this matter and why is the hon. gentleman bringing in a Bill that nobody wants ? The insurance companies had their meeting recently in Montreal, and at that meeting they passed resolutions condemning this Bill in every respect. They said it should never pass, and they sent copies of the resolution to this honourable House and to the government. The insurance companies, the public, the actuaries and those gentlemen who understand the whole business declare it to be a fatal Bill to pass. Who does want it ? The government wash their hands of it ; it is so reported in the debates if we may refer to it. The Secretary of State announced that the Bill was going to be introduced but he took it back and said he had made a mistake, and now my hon. friend from Toronto presents a Bill and says 'I am going to give you a Bill gratuitously.' Who is he championing ? The government will not have anything to do with his Bill, and the insurance people will not have anything to do with it, and the poor unfortunate policy-holders say you are going to rip us right up the back with it. Who is it for ? The hon. gentleman from Victoria says 'Oh, why not wait, to hear ? Why send this Bill out broadcast ? Why adopt it in the House without knowing anything ? I will tell you what the effect will be. I hold in my hand a circular, sent broadcast through the country, which says that this Bill is acceptable to the Insurance Department, and they send out proxies for members to vote yea or nay. They say this Bill is going to meet the case and the poor unsophisticated policy-holders will sign proxies everywhere, believing that this document which has been sent to them is in the right direction because it has the official stamp and signature of the government. Is that not deception ? I am an unfortunate policy-holder in this association and I have just received a notice to pay my premiums and what does the notice say ?

The new business of the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company from January first, 1904, to May 23rd, 1904, equals the new business from January 1st, 1903, to July 25th, 1903. The company is two months ahead of 1903 ; date for date the gain in new business amounts to three million dollars. The members are the company and its prosperity is their prosperity.

My hon. friend made an apology for them in this respect, that they had gone into business under certain conditions and the times had not been prosperous and the business had not worked out as they expected it would work out and they were entitled to the relief of being able to load up these policies and charge what they liked, and then they come out with this circular, the ink on which is barely cold, congratulating the company on its prosperity. I stand here as the advocate of the policy-holders, and why should we be opposed by the hon. gentlemen, and why is he going to force a Bill on us that we do not want which virtually wipes us out ? I can understand what might drift through my mind if I were doing it. I might say to the public 'I have saved you; it is true parliament should take the Bill, but they would not accept it. They only take the name of it; but if you look at the Bill as passed by the House you will see I have been your salvator mundi, and this other cheap jack from Rothesay—we wipe him out.' On the other hand the public will say. 'How did you take this thing up and why did you not abide by it? Why did you not allow them to go on? The company will send out circulars "Parliament met, and the attack was a determined one against us but the government knew better. They give us a Bill. It has gone to a second reading." And that is put in their circular to the policy-holders to dupe them into supplying more money for the directors to spend. I can give my hon. friend the details of that Bill. There are more lawyers than one. There are lawyers of the House as well as in the House who know what they are talking about. We were somewhat forewarned as to what was going to occur by the brief that was placed in my hands. This brief is not asking parliament to do something, but it starts out by a blackmail against Mr. Wells who was at one time vice-president of the company. Is that something to influence this House? Will they be deceived by drawing a herring across the track? What has the blackmailing to do with it? The hon. gentleman who had this brief and dropped it on the floor will not claim it. They have not claimed it until to-day, and I am prepared to prove on oath by gentlemen within the sound of my voice that this brief is altered in the handwriting of Mr. Eldridge, the president of the company. I think Mr. Eldridge was closeted with some gentlemen this morning. I do not say they were senators, and he gave them a brief in which he tells them what they are to do at the last. He is instructing them. I think the hon. gentleman said the other day that the company had nothing to do with the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Does the hon. gentleman say they had nothing to do with it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The company had nothing whatever to do with the Bill in the inception of it.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Has the insurance company nothing to do with this Bill to-day?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have explained.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Tell me now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The insurance company are in no way responsible for the Bill. I am responsible for the Bill and I explained how it arose.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—It is on somebody's shoulders now. We have been trying for two months to get that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will explain it after awhile.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I accept what my hon. friend says that he is responsible, and therefore not the government—he personally is responsible.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not separate myself from the government.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I do not understand the hon. gentleman; he is the representative of the government here. Do I understand it is a government Bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will make my own explanation.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Now we have it in a quasi official position. It is getting a father at last. Where does the hon. gentleman come in? There is the Mikado and the Ticoon. It is like Jinks's baby—without a father. Hon. gentlemen, there is no joke about this thing. It is too important for anybody to abstain from threshing out its merits, and nobody need be afraid of the result. As to this brief, perhaps my hon. friend is offended at my reading the brief, as it is his Bill. It was picked up off the floor and brought to me. The Bill calls for considerable attention. Hon. gentlemen must feel that this is an important matter and must ask themselves, are they serving God or Mammon?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I wish the hon. gentleman to understand perfectly that I said the origin of the Bill was due to myself. I had nothing to do with the drafting of the Bill. I had hoped the Bill would be framed in a way to relieve the unfortunate policy-holders, and that was my sole motive. I said the details could be examined when the Bill went to committee.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I accept my hon. friend's position. I am not here hired by the company or the public. I am not an employee. I am simply here in the interests of the public, and I hold the trumps. I want no more cards. I hold the trumps—I hold Canada. I have behind me 56,000,000 people who have been swindled. I am advocating the rights of 56,000,000 of people—not 20,000,000 as has been stated in the debate. My hon. friend was wrong in his details. When we got to millions it made no difference which either it was 20 or 60 millions—get the man off, the millions amount to nothing. What is the effect of the Bill ? First of all you are asked to break a sacred contract by an Act of parliament. Will you do that ? Will you break my contract and the other man's contract because a Bill is brought in by my hon. friend from Toronto ? Are you going to break my contract and allow these people to take away my rights and the rights of millions of people ? I do not think it is reasonable to ask it. I am sorry to see that the company have got into the condition in which they are. If they had our consent it would be good policy to get such a Bill passed as would put them in a shape which would suit them, but we would not accept it. When they secured their legislation in New York under the Registration Act, they registered as a company on the level premium system, and they offered to take us in, but we said no, we will not go in with you. We made a contract for a policy on the assessment plan ; we made a contract with the Mutual Reserve Life Association of New York, but you start another company under another name and you say we must come in and take the conditions you choose to offer.' Who are the people ? The managers. How do they get the management ? Simply because they are in control. Hon. gentlemen might say: 'Why don't you get control ? You are all policy-holders ? Every policy-holder has a vote. Why don't you get control ? I stated in the House the other night that we could not get control, because when Mr. Harper died he had all the proxies of all the policies in his possession, and what is more, Mr. Burnham stated that Mr. Harper had willed all these proxies to Mr. Burnham, and that Mr. Burnham with those proxies controlled the situation ; they were in the citadel and could do what they liked. They signed this document and stated that Mr. Harper never made a will giving proxies to Mr. Burnham, and he goes further and says Mr. Burnham never used them. This is made on honour to the hon. gentlemen of this House. Every one of them has a copy signed by Mr. Burnham and Mr. Eldridge and Mr. Camp, saying they never had proxies willed to them, and never used them. I am prepared to prove that Mr. Harper willed the proxies to Mr. Burnham, and that Mr. Burnham used those proxies to keep himself in power. Who is he ? Nothing but an official of the company, but their strength is so great and their power so omnipotent that they were able to control that company and they control it to-day, and they turn to the unfortunate policy-holders and say, 'we will bleed you to death. We will load you up with calls that bring your policy down to nothing. We will call so much money from you that it will ruin you to pay it, or we will give you an alternative of getting out and we will take the money.' Supposing the policy-holders are wiped out, what will the trust be ? Where will the fiduciary trust go ? It will go to whoever will take it, and we who have paid our money and in good faith insured with them, have no redress whatever. Where can we go to obtain a remedy ? We come to the Senate and ask this honourable body to help us. We do not bring politics to bear on it. We do not say what nationality we are, but we ask you to give us justice. Is there any harm in that ? Why do they attack me ? They have been attacking me behind my back in the corridors, making all sorts of charges which are not correct, because something has to be done. They are in difficulty ; they are in their death throes, and something must be done for them. Why whitewash them ? As my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Cloran) has said, if they are all right they do not require it. They say the hon. member from Rothesay does not know what he is talking about. If so, parliament will have said the Mutual Reserve Association is all right, and the company can say : 'We are licensed to rob, cheat, swindle'—that is the first part of their Bill

It is to compel policy-holders to get out. If we stay in, what then ? It has been stated around the lobbies to-day, 'you are robbing the company.' There is no company ; so many gentlemen have agreed to stand together and to assess one another, and to pay off claims as the policy-holders die. There are no stock-holders. We cannot get hold of them, and now we are trying to save what there is out of the wreck, and we are met by the cry, you are ruining somebody—that is to say, the policy-holders are ruining the management, who cannot have all the money they want to spend ; they cannot hire counsel to defend them all over the world ; their job is gone, and they plead with the House to save them ; and in doing so, they bring up all sorts of false issues to try and influence votes in the Senate. I do not suppose the hon. Secretary of State wants to endorse this company. I cannot see what his object would be in doing so. He says the company consulted him.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No ; I said when I heard the hon. gentleman's observations, I was very much touched with them. I saw it meant ruin to a great many people, and I got hold of the solicitor of the company and said : 'You must do something ; this company must make some reparation to the people who are suffering, and I suggest you return to those who are still members of it something of what they have paid.' I did not promote the Bill, but I suggested some lines on which the Bill ought to be prepared —that they should give some money to those who have been paying assessments.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman met the solicitor ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend might have said further that the solicitor waited on him. How otherwise could he have met the solicitor ? If this Bill becomes law, it will do just what I have stated—it will wipe us out. The Mutual Reserve has spent thousands of dollars to induce members to give up their present contracts for other contracts provided for in this Bill. In December, 1903, less than one-third of the members in Canada had consented to make a change. This Bill goes further ; it makes parliament a party to the illegal transactions of the Mutual Reserve in Canada and elsewhere. I know I am up against some very sharp lawyers. I do not know how many are engaged in this thing, but he who runs may read. They argue : 'When you took a policy in that company you must have known what you were doing. You made a contract, and what have you got to say, as would be said in the law courts, in defence of your finding fault to-day ?' Our defence is very simple. We fall back on the statute which I hold in my hand. It says :

> No portion of any moneys received from assessments or for death claims shall be used for any expenses whatever, and every notice of any assessment shall truly specify the cause and purpose thereof.

Every British subject is supposed to know the law, but we may ask why, after devoting our money to other purposes, have you permitted them to do so ? Why bolster them up now ? We took our policies under subsection 4 of clause 39, having faith in the integrity of all parties, and we find that the money has been taken illegally and used elsewhere, contrary to the provisions of the law of our country.

Are you going to legislate for the past, and say that those who have broken the law, who have taken our money and used it to organize a company elsewhere, when they find they are in deep water, when they find they cannot swim any longer, when there are judgments against them everywhere ; are you going to come to their relief ? We have asked for a committee to look into this matter. We say that we have been robbed and cheated by these people : that we cannot get redress anywhere, and we ask you to look into our case. It is really laying a petition before the Throne. This House, in its goodness, has granted us a committee to investigate. A charge is made to-day that I am on the committee as a judge. Judge of what ? What finding can I bring in ? All that the committee can do is take evidence ; we cannot manufacture evidence. If we attempted to do so, there are hon. gentlemen on the floor of the House now who would see that no manufactured evidence is brought in. At any rate, this branch of parliament, in its wisdom, consented to the appointment of a committee, and the public of Canada are looking to the Senate to help out the policy-holders who are the victims of this company. If you can bring in a Bill that is any good we will accept it cheerfully, but we are not prepared to have a Bill chucked in as was done the other day. We are told to take the preamble; we do not want any preamble. We can bring in a Bill ourselves, and in such shape that it will be satisfactory to this honorable body. You are passing a Bill which is tantamount to saying that the company have complied with the law. If they have complied with the law, why give them legislation to use with the public? Perhaps my hon. friend may tell me now that if the policy-holders were to accept this Bill and policies were issued under it, what would the present policy-holders get in any individual case? How much would he be loaded up with, or how many premiums would he have to pay to keep his policy alive? If they do not accept either one of the propositions, how much would they get if their policies were cancelled? If I had brought a Bill before the House I would have shown that. I would have provided that a gentleman insured in that company, in changing his policy would get so and so in the new policy, but that has not been provided in this case. It is a herring dragged across the trail by this company. Look at their statement! So sure were they of their premises, so well had they done their work, so carefully had they—I will not use the word canvassed; I must keep within parliamentary bounds—so carefully had they done their work, that when they issued this pamphlet, which every member has seen, they were sure that they had influence in parliament, directly or indirectly. They said in clause 7, page 36:

> Had the resolution of inquiry been adopted and referred at once to a committee of this honourable Senate, bearing on the necessity of such an investigation, the company would gladly have presented its facts to such a committee.

This is a tissue of falsehoods from top to bottom, as I shall be prepared to show, and before this honourable body had acted upon the motion to appoint a committee, so sure were they that they had a power behind the Throne which would allow them to do anything they liked in this parliament.

that they issued this statement to every hon. gentlemen and told them that my resolution was not to pass. This was issued in advance of the decision of the House. They are well accustomed to this work; they have been accustomed to lobbying in Washington. They could not use money here as they have used it elsewhere. My hon. friend presents a Bill which he says is in our interest. We do not want the Bill. We say it will ruin us. Supposing you pass this Bill and confiscate our rights, what is our legal position? You have broken our contract, we cannot go before the courts and ask for redress. Why? Because parliament is legalizing everything this company has done. We say they have acted illegally, have committed every possible rascality and now this House is asked to give them a Bill which will white-wash them and they can go on and rob without restriction. Therefore, aside from breaking our contract, you are asked to legalize violations of the law which I have just read. Why all these Herculean efforts? There is nobody dying here. I had supposed that when I brought this matter up I would have had the unanimous support of hon. gentlemen. I did not suppose I was to have legal talent arrayed against me; I did not suppose I had to fight at Ephesus. Of course the details of this measure are hardly worth exposing now, because if the Bill goes to committee we will fight every detail of it. I am now opposing the principle of the measure. It is vicious to ask us to pass a Bill in advance of the investigation by the special committee. The committee must report with great care, and as quickly as possible, and they will do so unless impediments are thrown in their way. It is quite possible that some hon. member may move to load up the committee and embarrass us again. When I submitted my motion to the House, a good many spoke favourably of it, but when the vote was taken, they voted us down by one of a majority. They had a perfect right to do so. We ask for a committee, and they said we will not grant a committee. We will not allow these people to be investigated. You are interfering with the anointed, so to speak. I shall not be surprised to see a motion in this House to enlarge this committee. First they wanted the committee one way, but they could not get it; then the House granted a committee the other way, and I shall not be surprised if a motion is made to change the committee again. I am going to fight this thing and see it through, whatever pressure may be brought against me or whatever the circumstances may be. If this honourable body will allow me to move that the debate be adjourned until the report of the committee is presented, then the House will be in possession of the facts and will be able to deal intelligently with the case. That is better than putting the cart before the horse and giving a remedy before they know the nature of the disease. They shall have an accoucheur when the time comes. Just now it is premature. If I am to be turned down I know the people of Canada will say that I have made a good fight, that I have done my duty according to my light. It will be a regrettable day for Canada if the people feel that because of strong influence men can be found—I will not say in this House—ready and willing to defend this company, right or wrong. If that should happen, the Senate will have forfeited the good opinion of the people of Canada. I move, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Bolduc that this debate be adjourned to a reasonable date, until the report of the committee can be brought in showing the result of the investigation.

The SPEAKER—That is an unusual motion, and I should like to have it in writing.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My motion is as follows:

That the debate be adjourned until the 4th July next, awaiting the report of the investigating committee.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I should like to secure the attention of the House a few moments, while I make some observations on the subject which we have had under consideration. In doing so, I do not wish to be represented as an apologist of this company. Of course I have known something about them. I have never had any interest in them. I have not favoured their methods of insurance, and more than that, I never favoured other companies who have adopted similar methods. In the first place, when the subject was brought under our notice by the hon. member for Rothesay, I felt really something ought to be done. The condition of the policy-holders who were paying under the assessment principle meant ruin. The only chance to escape financial ruin was to die early. Those who lived any length of time must necessarily have to throw up their policies and sacrifice anything they have paid. I thought something might be got out of the wreck. It might not be very much, and therefore I asked Mr. McMurchy, who is the solicitor of the company 'Why cannot the company come forward and make some offer which will result in allowing something to people who have already paid money into the company.' 'The company,' he said, 'have long since ceased to issue policies on this basis; they have not issued any since 1899. The system has been condemned, and the policies they issue now are on what they call the straight life.' 'Now,' I said, 'Give those who have kept up their insurance, a policy for the value, at all events, of the payments they have already made.' 'Well,' he said, 'the company would be quite willing to do that.' That was the origin of it. I had nothing whatever to do with the drafting of the Bill. I understood when the Bill was drafted it was submitted to Mr. Fitzgerald, the superintendent of insurance, and that he made very many material alterations. There was in the original draft only one option; he changed that to three that parties would have a right to take up. The Bill, as I understand it, is entirely permissive; it rests with the policy-holders themselves to accept it or not. A gentleman who had a right to give an opinion suggested to the solicitor that he should consult the policy-holders, send them a copy of the Bill and ask them if they would like to have a Bill of that kind passed. I am informed that a very large proportion of the answers received were favourable; that they saw the folly of trying to pay those assessments, and would be glad to accept policies on the straight life principle. I do not know the extent or numbers of the answers. I have not gone into details. I only know those general facts which have come under my observation. It is possible there may have been frauds in the past. There have been frauds in all those companies. The system is a rotten one; it ought never to have been sanctioned by the parliament of Canada. It was a terrible mistake and if we can in any way correct it now we should do so; but it is not this company alone that is affected. There are four or five other companies which must come to grief one of those days, and, if we are to interfere at all, I think it should be after calm judgment and advice, that the law be changed that some arrangement should be made by which all companies will issue only straight life policies, because the system on which the mutual association companies are founded is a rotten one. There is only one company that manages to gather from time to time large acquisitions of three or four hundred people, and in that way they can keep going. You can keep it going so long as you get a large number of young and vigorous lives; but the moment membership comes to a standstill the company must perish. There is no chance of its existing. I do not know anything about the management of this company. It may have been good or bad, but in all the cases which have come under my notice, so far as assessment is concerned, there had been stealing. There is every inducement to defraud. They have large percentages for agents and management and so the very vitals, the money paid in, is consumed by the management. In 1877, we consolidated our Insurance Act. It was threshed out thoroughly, and a very excellent Act was put on the statute-book. I had charge of the Bill myself. In 1884, a proposition was made to alter the law to allow mutual companies to come in on what is called the assessment system. It was vigorously resisted by every one who had any experience in insurance companies. It was opposed by Mr. Cherriman, the head of the Insurance Department. It was stated that a gentleman who held a high office in this company came here and lobbied for a change in the insurance law. I can understand promoters lobbying for a Bill of that kind, because every officer of the company would have opportunities to make himself rich. Mr. Wells came that year, and a Bill was brought in but it failed to pass. Sir Leonard Tilley, who was then Finance Minister, in addressing the committee in the House of Commons said he felt it his duty, in considering the Bill, to read a memorandum put in his hands by the inspector of insurance. That memorandum was an absolute condemnation of the principle of assessment companies. In moving that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider a resolution to amend the law, Sir Leonard said:

> Perhaps I shall best explain the nature of the Bill and the necessity of it by reading a memorandum which has been placed in my hands by the inspector of insurance.

Then Sir Leonard read the memorandum in which the superintendent of insurance set forth a number of conditions that he thought should be adopted before considering the application, and generally condemned the system. The resolution was reported. It got no further than the House of Commons that year. The next year, I presume, Mr. Wells put in an appearance again, and pressed for his measure. Mr. Cherriman again reported, and he has marked it in italics. If any hon. gentleman chooses to look at it, it will be found in the insurance report of 1884. In the preface, page 28, he says:

> I have put in italics the alterations and the additions made to the original Bill and beg to disclaim any responsibility for them.

He then gives in italics the objectionable clauses, and makes a number of other comments that are not favourable to the Bill. It got through the House of Commons, and it came up to the Senate in July, 1885. I make those observations in order to show that even at that remote date, public attention was called to the weakness of mutual insurance companies at that time. People were warned over and over again, but there is always the temptation to get something good at a cheap rate. People imagined they were going to insure their lives for a sum at which it was absolutely impossible on any sound basis to obtain the results they sought. Our Mr. Wark spoke very strongly on the subject. In the debates of 1885, page 1178 of vol. 2, he spoke as follows:

> They induce individuals to insure under their management with the assurance that nothing more would be taken out of the proceeds than was actually necessary for the management of the affairs of the company. A stock company whose officers are appointed by the stockholders are guarded against any unnecessary expenditure, whereas these companies have no check upon them. They may appropriate whatever they think proper towards salaries and expenses, and the insured, who are scattered all over the country, are not present at the meeting. The directors write to the insured for proxies and re-elect themselves. I have had some transactions with the Union Mutual Company of Maine. Some years ago the inspector or commissioner—I do not know what the title is—of Massachusetts threw some doubt upon the position of this company and it left its business to a number of individuals connected with insurance in different states.

He goes on to describe the enormous expense connected with a small company of that kind in which he was interested. He says:

I have had myself $55 returned at one time, and it got down the next time to $22 and a few cents, and I believe that the next year there was nothing divided at all, whereas I was assured in the policy that the profits would be increasing from year to year because I paid a very high premium.

Mr. Dickey also spoke on the subject, and quoted what he thought would be a safeguard. He quoted the clause introduced in the Consolidated Insurance Act, of 1877. Mr. Dickey says he thinks that with this clause in it, it might safely go. He reads the clause as follows:

The Finance Minister may from time to time, instruct the superintendent of insurance to visit the head office of any company licensed under this Act and incorporated elsewhere than within Canada, and to examine into the general condition and affairs of such company; and if such company declines to permit such examination, or refuse to give any information necessary for such purpose in its possession or control, its license shall be withdrawn.

Then Senator Poirier took a very strong stand and spoke as follows:

Our laws are very strict with regard to stock companies, which are called old line companies. They have to make a heavy deposit and have a large reserve. Before they can get a permit to begin business they must deposit $50,000 with the Minister of Finance, and, further, they have to deposit additional sums as the Minister of Finance and the superintendent of insurance think proper, and we know that some strong companies have deposited with the government as much as $750,000. I believe that is perfectly right, and that we should protect the people who insure, because that business is not well understood even by lawyers, and laymen who do not understand it at all, should be protected. I approve of rigorous measures being adopted, but under this Bill those measures would only apply to companies which are already safe and which have capital in some cases amounting to $30,000,000 or $40,000,000, while the assessment companies having no assets whatever, are permitted to enjoy all the benefits of the law while they incur none of its charges or obligations. Again, I think that is not right. We ought to protect our people and protect the regular companies doing business on sound principles, against companies which have no assets whatever and cannot even be brought before a court of justice to compel them to meet their obligations—companies represented by respectable men some of them, but others having at their head men who have not a cent of their own invested. If such companies should fail, as I could prove they almost all invariably do, because their basis is a false one, they ought to be required to bear the same burdens as regular companies. They should not enjoy all the privileges and be subject to none of the responsibilities imposed by the law upon stock companies.

Another gentleman who spoke very strongly was the late Senator Ogilvy. He objected to the Bill because it contained some clauses that were most vicious. He said:

Many of these companies, when they are started have not the least background to work on. Take a stock company which has to deposit $50,000 with the Finance Department, and you have not only the security of the stockholders, but you have also the security of the deposit. Now these mutual insurance companies pretend to insure for almost nothing, which everybody knows cannot be done, and they go on doing a business that kills the regular insurance companies, and does not at the same time protect the interest of the people who are insured with them. I could mention more than one case in Canada already where policy-holders have come to grief, simply because this was not done. I hope the Minister of Justice, with his usual care of all Acts that are introduced here, when the Bill comes before us again will look into it most carefully and see that provision is made for a proper deposit before such companies are allowed to go into operation at all.

That was pretty good warning as to the folly even of recognizing those mutual assessment companies. Mr. Wells seems to have been very successful however. He managed to get the law put on the statute-book. I hold in my hand the last number of the 'Economist' for the month of May. They seem to entertain a much better opinion of this Bill than my hon. friend does, but before referring to that I will just read some of the comments they make. They quote the Bill and they say:

Each holder of an assessment policy shall within sixty days after the date of the license, give notice to the company which of the options he selects, and in default of such notice he shall be deemed to have selected the first.

This proposed legislation has, doubtless, been framed as a measure of self preservation by some of those connected with assessments who are far-sighted enough to anticipate the inevitable. But the question will naturally arise, if the assessment system of life insurance is impossible as a permanent success, why was that not discovered long ago by the actuarial and financial experts who are supposed to advise those members of the government who are not deeply versed in these matters?

And he goes on to discuss the Act of 1885. When the Bill of 1889 was brought up there was another discussion and he says:

It does seem curious to me that the government should allow these assessment companies to go forth and do business in Canada, stamped with the sanction of the government, when their own superintendent of insurance tells them that the principle upon which they do business is not one which he can recommend, which is purely experimental, and he does not know whether it is sound or not.

Sir Richard Cartwright also strongly criticised the form of the Bill, and he quotes a number of gentlemen of high integrity who condemn that system also, but this paper does not hesitate to say that it is a mere matter of time when they must come down. They further say:

The I. O. F. of Canada, an assessment society which operates under Dominion incorporation, has insurance in force of over $228,000,000, but its accumulated funds only amount to some $30 per $1,000 insurance in force. Assessment societies should be compelled to provide the proper reserve for each policy each year and also submit a valuation of their assets and liabilities to the Insurance Department, in order that policy-holders may be protected.

They also quote the Ancient Order of United Workmen, and they say:

The A. O. U. W. of Ontario, which has over $72,000,000 insurance in force, is on the eve of collapse. Some thirty-five Canadian assessment insurance societies have already gone to the wall.

So that this company does not stand alone. This company has maintained its footing, but they have seen the folly of it and declined to issue any mutual policies since 1899. I think this question is a very important one. I did think of sending this Bill to the special committee, though not as representative as I should like to have seen it. It is not the proper way to deal with a large subject of this character, and on that account I took strong objection the other day to the formation of that committee. I considered that the Banking and Commerce Committee, as a representative body, embracing a very large number of members of this House was a better committee, and I felt if they could make some suggestion it would receive the consideration of this chamber, and that is the sole reason for my action. My hon friend interpreted my action as an endeavour to sustain this particular company. I am doing nothing of the kind. I am simply calling attention to the general principle. The company seems to have recognized the fallacy of insurance of this sort, and have long since ceased to do business in Canada on that basis, and I know that no possible good could arise by a report of the committee, because there is no report they could make. They could perhaps damage the company, and in that way make it perhaps impossible for them to allot any compensation to the unfortunate policy-holders that are caught in this net, but in matters of contract between the company and the policy-holders that is entirely within the prerogative of the provincial legislature. We have no power to disturb a contract existing between the policy-holders and the company, and therefore, we could accomplish nothing. No good could be gained. It is a matter of notoriety. I think I have given abundant evidence that all these companies were extravagantly managed. The temptation was very strong. They got a large amount of money on a percentage basis to carry on the affairs of the company, which money went to the management. Those highest in office probably got the most, therefore it did not seem to me if the committee was delegated to point out how relief could be obtained, that they were seeking the right method of doing it. I think there has been a great deal of misrepresentation. This company has been conducted probably on very much safer and better lines than other companies. I am speaking merely of the system, and not of the merits or demerits of this particular company. I am speaking entirely of the principle upon which the mutual assessment plan is based. The representations which have been made from time to time by the hon. Senator from Rothesay, I think have been exaggerated. I do not think the hon. gentleman seriously believed the statements he made, because it seemed absolutely impossible that the absurd proposal and statements that were put before me here could be true, because there are certainly people near headquarters that would have discovered this who would not have allowed it to go on, and the only effect of an investigation by the committee that I can see, would be to still further weaken if possible or throw discredit upon this company. If the company are willing to come to the aid of the policy-holders, surely it is our duty rather to encourage them than to discourage them. If this Bill is rejected they will not be affected by it at all, it is not especially in their interests. They have a contract with the policy-holders. Those who chose to continue and meet the inevitable will perhaps continue from year to year. Those who are wise will sacrifice all they have paid at the present. If by getting the company to accept the amounts they have already paid and issuing to them a new policy, I maintain their position will be so much improved. It will be a certain advantage. They will not get back what they expect. No doubt about that. They cannot recover it. There is no way to recover it. This is a mutual company: who are you going to recover against—your mutual friends? It is not a stock company. You cannot even get at the deposit here; that fund cannot be touched unless the whole thing goes up; then it will go into court. That is the only solution of the matter. But as each policy-holder leaves this terrestrial sphere, those who are still holders of the policies here are assessed according to the various amounts, as in any assessment society. It sprung out of a simple condition of affairs. Benevolent societies were established by persons who knew each other, and they each contributed to a fund, and while they were all honest and true to each other, the fund was not wasted, and the funeral expenses were paid to the widow and something besides; but later on a different condition of things arose when the business was enlarged and the chances for fraud and the chances to take the money increased. They said: The policy-holders have to depend upon each other to pay the death claims, but as far as the fees that are paid are concerned they are small, individually, and they go to support the management of the company.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I cannot find anytirely from the statement made by the hon. gentleman from Toronto. I do not profess to one of these three options, they cannot remain out.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I draw my opinion entirely from the statement by the hon. gentleman from Toronto. I do not profess to know anything about the details of the Bill. This Bill may be changed when it goes to committee. Probably when Mr. Fitzgerald goes over it, he will make certain changes. I understood he said that further changes might be made in committee, but as far as the principle went, it was the only thing that could be done. There was no other channel open, no other method that could be applied, and I cannot understand how hon. gentlemen will look at it in any other light. I am not in any way responsible for the details of the Bill, I have not taken any interest in it. I thought we might consider it when it got to committee.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I should like to ask why it is made a part of the General Insurance Act. It invites other companies to come in and take advantage of the provisions of this Bill, whether good or bad.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Let me say with reference to the question as to the option about continuing on the present plan, perhaps it will be more convenient if I make an explanation of the subject in addition to the explanations made by the hon. Secretary of State about the introduction of the Bill, because it arises out of that. After the suggestion was made by the Secretary of State, which I learned of before, about a Bill to embody certain proposals that would give some measure of relief to the policy-holders, a Bill was prepared and was submitted to Mr. Fitzgerald, as I was informed, and then presented to me, and I was asked if I would introduce that Bill. I read the Bill, and said that if it had the approval of the superintendent of insurance I would be quite ready to introduce it, but I should like to speak to the superintendent of insurance about it. An appointment was made, and I saw the superintendent on the subject. The result of the interview was that a suggestion was made by myself as to further options that might be given to the policy-holders, and those were considered by the superintendent of insurance and adopted, and upon that the Bill was framed in the form in which it is now presented to me, and I was asked then to introduce it. I saw him personally again before introducing it and—I wish the hon. gentleman from Wellington to understand this now—he informed me distinctly that he approved of the principle of the Bill, and after what has been stated by the hon. Secretary of State, I think that it will be perfectly plain that he did, and when I suggested to him the possibility of there being other options given, as for instance, the option that they should continue on the assessment plan, his answer was that that and other matters of detail could be considered in the committee and probably other changes would have to be made. That is the way in which it was, and that is the reason I suggested that it should go before the Banking and Commerce Committee. On that same day the conversation occurred, and within a few hours the Bill was presented to me here, so that I understood when I was making the statement about this Bill that it was not to be considered that the principle of the Bill was thoroughly affirmed but that it was simply to pass the second reading and go before the Committee on Banking and Commerce, where the whole subject of the relief could be considered at large, and there every kind of option could be given that could be suggested. I therefore understood that the whole matter, including the option to remain as you are, the three options that are presented in the Bill, and not the two spoken of by hon. gentlemen, were understood by the statement I made before the House, and that is the way in which it was. I did not give the details of the different interviews, because I did not think it was convenient, but there has been so much insinuation and so much suggestion made that the Secretary of State thought right to make the statement he has made, and I think it right I should make this explanation. As to the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Victoria, if he will take the trouble to look at the Insurance Act he will find that any company doing business on the assessment plan may obtain a license here on the conditions which are prescribed by the Insurance Act. Many companies have availed themselves of that privilege, and are doing business here now—several at all events. Then he will find that by an amendment that was effected in 1899, supplementary power was granted. The supplementary power that was granted was one by which a company doing business on the assessment plan, under the provisions of the Act as it then stood, might go into the business on the level premium plan as we call it, or fixed premium plan, and in that case, that it should make its deposit in respect of the fixed premium business separate and distinct from the deposit in the hands of the government, and that was to continue in the hands of the government in respect of the assessment plan business, and it was provided that if a company had done that it should cease to take new business on the assessment plan and should do business only on the general plan. It will be seen, therefore, that it is that particular clause of the Act that we are striking at here, and one of the matters I intended to submit, and I think I stated that in the House—was whether they should not also recommend a repeal of the section which enables an assessment company to do the regular line business. But I did not wish to tie the House or myself to a principle of that kind in the Bill, which I have not fairly worked out and on which life insurance companies have not generally been heard. That is why it is a necessary amendment to section 42 of that Act.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I thank the hon. gentleman for the explanation, but the Act does not deal with a case of this kind of quasi insolvency.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is there not an arrangement being made by this Bill, to pay the clients of the company less than they are entitled to ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Not at all. It is a proposal for the relief of the company, to save the assured from being subjected to very heavy assessments.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend cannot be serious in that ?

Hon. Mr. KERR—And therefore it is not because this company is in insolvency. It is not so at all. If the hon. gentleman will read the statement embodied in the petition presented by the company to this House, it will be apparent that its financial position is not at all one of insolvency ; that, on the contrary, it has its reserve for the full amount required by the Act ; and, in addition to that, it has a surplus of some $466,000. That statement is before the House, so that there is an entire misapprehension in talking about insolvency; and I am not surprised, because so much has been said about the company, and said without any proof, here on the floor of the Senate, and after reading the statements on both sides, I am not surprised with any one running away with the idea that it is insolvent. But it is not so.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—It is insolvent.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It did a large business, but, by reason of dissensions in the management of the company, its business was reduced, so much reduced that they saw the necessity of going into regular life business. I desire to disabuse the minds of hon. gentlemen altogether about that. If it were an insolvent company, the Finance Department would have to take charge of it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is the proposed arrangement not more for the benefit of the company than for those who pay assessments and dues?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I have always thought this should be a separate Bill, perfectly free from general insurance legislation.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—One word in explanation of the position the hon. gentleman from Toronto assumes. I am very glad he has offered his explanation to the Senate. I took the point that there were only two options in the Bill to all those holding policies. He challenged my statement on that point; and now, by his statement, he virtually confesses that I was right; and I was right, because there are only two options in the Bill. He says it was the intention—and I have no doubt it was—to put in an additional option, and he might possibly have been under the impression it was put in; but when I made the statement that there were only two options in the Bill, I was undoubtedly right.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the chair.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not propose to take up much time in discussing this question. It has been very amply discussed for many weeks past. I have not had the pleasure of being present in the House during the whole of this debate, but I have heard my hon. friend from Rothesay on several occasions putting forward his views, and have also heard other hon. gentlemen discussing the question, and there has probably been nearly all the discussion that will prove serviceable upon the subject. My own view with regard to the Mutual Reserve Company is simply this: They have, in my opinion—and that is no new opinion at all, because I have held it for many years—carried on business in Canada on a fallaceous principle. There may have been mismanagement and wrongdoing; there certainly has been quarrelling in the management, but I attribute the present unfortunate position of the Canadian policy-holders in that company more to the fallaceous system on which the company have been doing business than to any other cause whatever. My hon. friend from Rothesay, during the addresses he has given in this House on the subject, has directed his attention very much towards exposing the management of the Mutual Reserve Company, and he has incidentally—I do not imagine for a moment that he started out with any such object—impeached the Finance Minister and the department of insurance very seriously, because if matters have been as bad as he says they are, and the insurance department has been apathetic and has not performed its duty towards the company and the public, no more serious charge could be laid against the Finance Minister and the department of insurance. For my own part, I am free to say that I believe not only the present Finance Minister, but former finance ministers and the department of insurance all through, and the parliament of Canada, if you like, have something to answer for on account of having legalized and continuing to legalize these assessment companies doing business in Canada. I believe that a very great mistake was made when that was done, and we are now reaping the consequences of our folly. I will go further and say, although I do not want to be an alarmist, I fear we are still going the same way to a certain extent, and that a great deal of what is called insurance in Canada, which is apparently turning out all right, will one day cause a great deal of trouble, such as has occurred with the Mutual Reserve and other assessment companies. I think that the insurance department and the Department of Finance are really open to charges of neglect of duty, inasmuch as they are not taking up this question more seriously. There is less excuse for them to-day than there was for the government and parliament of Canada in 1885, when this system was allowed to be introduced into Canada, because they have so much before them in the way of evidence of the evil effects of assessment insurance, and therefore they are more culpable in many instances where they have failed to interpose their power to curtail, or restrict, or entirely prevent the operation of fallacious insurance in the country. But I conceive that at the present moment we have a duty to perform, even more serious than that of exposing the affairs of the Mutual Reserve or other companies following fallacious methods of insurance, or of impeaching the Finance Department, or the department of insurance; we have a duty devolving upon us, and that is to do the best that can possibly be done at this moment for the relief of Canadian policy-holders in connection with this company, or it may be in connection with other assessment companies. That is a point on which I should be inclined to criticise the hon. member from Rothesay; I notice that his efforts seem to have been directed very much more in the line of exposing the affairs of the Mutual Reserve Company, and of criticising incidentally the department of insurance, than it has been in the line of suggesting some relief for the Canadian policy-holders. The course which my hon. friend has pursued in this House during the last two or three weeks has made it still more imperative on this parliament to deal with the question of relief for the Canadian policy-holders, because the effect of this discussion will be very disastrous indeed upon the interest of these policy-holders. I predict that if parliament goes on exposing wrong-doing, and turning inside out the affairs of this company in a manner most discreditable to them, the effect of it will be that nearly all those who hold policies on the assessment plan in that company will, probably, before the year is out, or before very long at all events, allow all their policies to lapse. If nothing is done, after all the attention that has been called in this House and the press to this company, and the many bad things said about their operations and their system of insurance,—if parliament rises without finding some measure of relief the effect will be that as much of this insurance will be dropped in a few months as has been dropped in as many years. The hon. member from Rothesay has the right, as a member of this House, to discuss matters of this kind as he has done. It will always be the right and duty of members of parliament to use their positions and influence for the purpose of exposing what they consider wrong-doing, but the effect of the course he has pursued, and the attention he has directed to the subject will be such as I have indicated, unless some remedy is provided at the present session of parliament. The motion which my hon. friend made to postpone the cosideration of this Bill until the 4th July is one which it would be very unfortunate indeed for the House to adopt. The committee which has been struck to investigate this company was not instructed to devise any measure of relief, yet it is proposed to postpone the further consideration of this Bill until the 4th July. At that time this House will have been nearly four months in session. Members will be very weary and anxious to get home. There will be, as there is always at the close of the session, a great rush of measures from the other branch of parliament, and the effect will be that ample consideration cannot possibly be given to any measure of relief if the consideration of this Bill is postponed until the 4th July. The result will be that we will part without having done anything in the way of applying a remedy. I have not given the matter as much consideration as I ought. I have looked at it casually, and I am not sure that we can give any ample or adequate relief. At all events it is our duty to see what we can do. The Bill which the hon. member from Toronto has submitted to the House may be very imperfect. I understood him to say that it could be improved and changed in very important particulars. We should, therefore, allow the Bill to be read the second time, and sent to a committee composed of hon. gentlemen who are most conversant with insurance questions, including the members of the committee that has already been struck for the purpose of investigating the affairs of the company. If we were to do that the superintendent of insurance could be brought before the committee, and his and other expert opinions elicited. We would have the advice and assistance of some of the ablest gentlemen in the Senate. They would put their heads together, and try and find some remedy for the policy-holders of this company. To my mind, there are two options distinctly set forth in this Bill by which a certain measure of relief would be given to policy-holders on the assessment plan in this company. I think there would have to be some other provisions also. It seems to me indispensable at the start that we should take no man's legal rights away.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It should be open for any policy-holder in this company to refuse or accept any of these options and to continue to contest any legal right which he thinks he has against this company. We should in addition to that, if any policy-holder prefers to remain in the company on the assessment plan, permit him to remain there if he so desires and take his chances, and we might give him also the options that are contained in the Bill submitted by the hon. gentleman from Toronto. We might be able to do much more than that. However, I only indicate some points that have suggested themselves to my mind. For the reasons which I have given, and which I do not care to amplify at any length just now, we should not agree to the motion to postpone the consideration of this Bill until the 4th of July, and we should give the Bill a second reading without committing ourselves to its principle. I am not going by my vote for the second reading to commit myself to the principle of it. It is a well recognized rule that such a course can be and very often is pursued. We can send the Bill before the committee and other propositions may be brought up, and it will be found later on whether any adequate remedy can be given the Canadian policy-holders in this Mutual Reserve Company, at the same time that will not interfere with the investigation which the hon. gentleman from Rothesay is pursuing with regard to the management of the affairs of the company. There will be no clashing as far as I can see, and I therefore desire to intimate that if the House does not agree to the motion to adjourn the debate until the 4th July, that I shall move for such a reference as I have indicated, to the committee for the purpose of endeavouring to devise a remedy for the position in which the policy-holders of the Mutual Reserve Life Association are placed in Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman had better move the amendment now.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I rise to offer an amendment to the motion made by the hon. senator from Rothesay. I move, seconded by the Hon. Mr. McMullen :—

That the second reading of this Bill in regard to the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association be postponed for eight days.

I was very much astonished to hear the hon. senator from Marshfield introduce into this debate even the slightest suspicion of politics.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Politics ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes. We have been discussing this question during his absence for the past two months, and I have listened to all the speeches and have never understood from the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Rothesay that he wished to impeach the Minister of Finance or his department.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—He did it all the same.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN.—The hon. gentleman says he did it just the same, but those who supported the hon. gentleman from Rothesay took very good care, and I myself took very good care to say that the Finance Department had nothing whatever to do with this investigation. If the company had violated the law of Canada governing its relations between itself and its policy-holders, and the department did not take steps to enforce respect for the rights of the policy-holders, then the department would be at fault : but that is not the charge made by the hon. member from Rothesay. The charge is one of internal economy with which the department of insurance has nothing to do. The department of insurance simply has to find out whether the company doing business in this country is fulfilling and obeying the provisions of the Insurance Act, and, according to appearances, this company has done all that, so that the administration of the insurance department, whether under the Conservative government or under the Liberal government, is not called into question at all. We admit, on both sides of politics, that the Mutual Reserve Life complied with all the provisions to the letter—I will not say to the spirit of the law; but what I understand the hon. member from Rothesay has charged is this, that there has been mismanagement of the funds paid by Canadians into the treasury of the Mutual Reserve Life Fund Association. There is the whole question. What has the insurance department to do with malversation of funds? That pertains to the police department either of New York or of this country. Neither the insurance department nor Mr. Fitzgerald nor any other officer has a right to go to the company and say: 'You are stealing $100,000 a year, or your secretary is paid $10,000 a year;' or 'you are paying $50,000 illegally to your general manager.' No officer of the department has a right to search for proof of anything of the kind, and that is the charge which is made by the hon. member from Rothesay, that the funds of this company, that is, the money of the policy-holders, has been paid to a board of directors, who are expending and distributing this money illegally.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman has not studied the law.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—What is the law?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The law is that the insurance department have a right to go and examine the books in New York if they like. And if the company refuse to expose their books and every paper in the office their Canadian license can be withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—When I moved for papers, the hon. gentleman said they were not within their purview, and the government could not get the information. I asked for information at the start, and the hon. Secretary of State said they could not get it. Now he says they have right of access to the books and papers of the company, and if they have, they should know what is going on.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They knew what was going on.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I can readily distinguish the difference between the position taken by the hon. member from Rothesay and that of the hon. Secretary of State. The inspector of insurance certainly has right of access to all the books of the company; but when an officer of a company steals $100,000 he does not enter it in his books.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—He puts it in his pocket.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is why a committee of inquiry is necessary. I understand that the inspector of insurance has a right to go through all the transactions of the company, but he is not empowered to say to the officers of the company that they have done this or that wrongfully; he has to take the books as they are, and that is why a committee of inquiry is required in this case. I have nothing to say against the stability and honesty of this company whatever. I know absolutely nothing about this company; I am ignorant as a child in regard to its transactions. I am perfectly willing to accept light from both sides, but I cannot understand why such zeal, why there is such agitation in the corridors, and on the floor, and in the rooms of hon. senators on behalf of this company. What is the hon. senator from Rothesay seeking? He is seeking for protection of the policy-holders. This company, during the past fourteen years, has carried some $46,000,000 of insurance in this country. Canadians, like the hon. senator from Mille Iles (Hon. Mr. David) and the hon. senator from Rothesay (Hon. Mr. Domville), have paid anywhere between $2,000 and $5,000 a year to this company, and have been unable to meet the extortionate assessments. The result has been that the business of the company, which was between forty-two and forty-six millions, is now only eight millions of dollars. Under such circumstances is the Senate called upon to give the company new legislation to force the remaining eight millions to drop out, as so many Canadian policy-holders have had to do? I cannot understand all this zeal in behalf of the interests of the company. If the company is in as good a condition as they say it is—and I know nothing about it—it will bear investigation. All I know is the tidings of suffering that have been brought to my notice within the last two months. Are they true or not? That is what the committee have to find out. This committee, as far as I am concerned, is not appointed to devise a remedy for the situation. We are not here to protect the company or the policy-holders; we are here to ascertain the facts and report them to this honourable House, and the House after digesting the facts can say what remedy is required to meet the situation. There is the whole question. I have no feeling against the company or the policy-holders. As far as I am concerned, I see no necessity, at present, to decide upon the Bill. I am not opposed to the motion of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield. It may be wise, prudent and necessary, but the first thing I consider this honourable House ought to do is to ascertain what the evil is, and then apply the remedy. I simply wish to explain the position I hold before the House.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I wish to draw the attention of the House to three points in connection with this matter. In the first place, I think it will be generally admitted that it was unfortunate that parliament, in 1885, amended the Life Insurance Act in such a way as to give this company the status they have had before the public as a company licensed under the law to do business in Canada. I think that is admitted on all hands. We should guard against making any mistake now. Let us carefully investigate the causes that have led this company to the position they now occupy before parliament. They tell us that the assessments they have been collecting were too low to enable them to carry the risks they undertook to carry, and they ask us to legalize two acts, first to impair the policies so that the average sum that was paid by those who held policies in the company will secure them policies on the old line life system for a fixed amount, or to legalize them in calling upon the policy-holders to increase the amount that they have contributed in the last ten or fifteen years in the way of assessments, by asking them to put up a lump sum that will bring the amount that they have paid altogether for the years they have been insured for, say $2,000, up to what they would have to pay if they were insured in one of the old line companies. Now these are the two propositions. What does the committee want to do? The committee say, 'before we clothe the company with that power, let us find out if they can prudently and properly use the money they have collected up to the present time from the policy-holders. Have they squandered it? Have they sacrificed the money? Are they obliged to come to parliament by reason of the profligacy and extravagance that has characterized the management of the company for fifteen years? Is that why they seek relief?' Is it not just to the policy-holders that we should know whether the company's skirts are clean, whether they are in a position to come before parliament and ask for legislation of that kind, and we cannot know that until the committee has made an investigation and reported. I have said that we made a mistake in 1885; we should not have attached to the Insurance Act an amendment that allowed this company to do business in Canada. It was a mistake then; let us now rectify that mistake? The hon. Secretary of State told us this afternoon that there are numbers of assessment companies doing business in Canada and that the probable end of all those companies is that they will have to go to pieces. Here is a door opened by the amendment that is now introduced to give relief to the New York Mutual Reserve Company, an invitation to all the other assessment companies to come to parliament if they get into a tight financial position and ask that relief be given them also. That will be the result of legislation of this kind. As I said before, let us sacredly guard the legislation that regulates stock insurance companies in which the people of this country are investing their money with the hope that after doing so for a lifetime their wives and children will have something to depend on after their death. That legislation is more sacred than any other legislation on the statute-book of Canada to-day: more sacred even than our banking legislation. If assessment companies ask to be legalized to do business, let it be by separate legislation, so that the people of Canada will know that we have not touched the Act which regulates stock companies. Let them know that we will treat these assessment companies on their own merits when they come to us and not by an amendment to the Insurance Act. These are the facts; let us get to the bottom of the facts. If men have abused their position, if witnesses can prove to the satisfaction of this House that that company has abused its powers and has squandered the money of those insured in it, the best thing we can do is to take the policy-holders out of their hands by an Act of parliament and distribute whatever assets they have amongst those who are entitled to the money. If these reports about their condition are not true and they deserve consideration, and if it is considered best in the interests of the policy-holders, to put the company in a position to continue doing business, we can govern ourselves accordingly, but let us know first whether they have been guilty or not guilty of wrongdoing. We want to see whether they have a clean sheet; if they have, let us treat them fairly and generously, but until we know that, I, as a humble member of the House, am not prepared to support the second reading of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I want to make an explanation with regard to the charge of having introduced politics into the discussion. What I did say was, I knew that the hon. gentleman from Rothesay did not intend it, that it was incidental, but nevertheless his line of advocacy in the House was an impeachment of the department.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I did not impeach the department at all.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon. friend the Secretary of State understood the hon. gentleman as I did, for on Monday last he said:

> The motion is a motion of want of confidence in one of the most important departments of the government.

And he further said:

> I am not disposed to acquiesce in the resolution, because it is a very unusual thing, unheard of in fact, except when moved as it was in years past when the government had an adverse majority in the chamber and inquiries were made by the House, which ought to have been directly made by the government of the day.

So my hon. friend the Secretary of State read my hon. friend's course precisely as I read it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The discussion has taken such a wide range that the affairs of the committee are getting mixed up with the legislation which has been proposed by the hon. senator from Toronto. I have under my hand, and later on will take the liberty of reading to the House, the opinions of the Associated Insurance Agents and Presidents of all the companies in the Dominion of Canada. Surely their opinions ought to carry some weight in this House. With regard to the proposed adjournment of this discussion I wish to impress on the House that I agree entirely with the idea of my hon. friend from Marshfield. The putting off of this Bill until the fourth of July is something which this House should be very slow to adopt. This legislation which is before the House has nothing to do with the alleged mismanagement of the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance. Its object is to prevent a recurrence of the mismanagement, if there has been any. Now, how are we to frame a Bill of that kind unless an opportunity is given to the gentlemen who know something of the insurance business to be heard. I am bound to say, and every hon. gentleman in this House will admit, that the experts in the insurance business should at least be given a hearing, and that is one of the reasons why I supported the Bill when it was introduced by the hon. gentleman from Toronto and the motion to send it to the Banking and Commerce Committee. It was for the express purpose of allowing the gentlemen who are opposed to the legislation as introduced to state their objections. We do not want to legislate without having information from these gentlemen, if their opinions are worth having. I am not here to vindicate the Mutual Reserve Association. I have not sought, nor do I wish to stifle investigation, but I say do not so mix up this Bill with the alleged misconduct of the insurance company that the members of this House will not know whether they are voting for the Bill or to condemn the company.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.) Whose Bill is this?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The Bill is a public Bill in the interest of the insured people of Canada, and I quite agree with my hon. friend from Wellington, so far as this Bill is concerned, that no more important legislation can come before this House. A man may be a shareholder in a bank or in a joint stock company, and if the business or the management of the company does not suit him, he can sell out his stock, but once become insured in a life insurance company he is there as long as he lives and he cannot withdraw from it. In view of that fact, this House ought to go slowly in the matter of insurance legislation, and I want to emphasize what my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island has said, that the sooner legislation to prevent a recurrence of what has taken place with the Mutual Reserve is put on our statute-book, the better for the country and the better for the insurance companies all round. If we postpone this Bill until the 4th July, hon. gentlemen know that towards the close of every session members are anxious to get home, and legislation does not receive at the hands of hon. members of this House that careful consideration which it would have when Bills are dealt with at an earlier stage of the session. The insurance agents, all those who are affected or are rather interested in the insurance business in Canada, have held a meeting and the president of the association sent me a letter with a copy of a resolution which they sent to the Hon. Mr. Fielding, calling his attention to the fact that while they had no objection to the Bill as proposed by my hon. friend from Toronto, if it was dealing simply with one company, and with one company only, and if these gentlemen who are interested in the Bill can convince the committee that it is simply dealing with that one company, then provision should be made for that one company only, so that other companies cannot take advantage of it.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—How can it be termed a public Bill if it is only dealing with one company ?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I am not going to dispute that. I am going to show the House that the insurance agents of the Dominion look upon it as a public Bill. The insurance companies, through their representatives, have drafted a resolution, a letter, which they sent to Mr. Fielding as the head of the insurance department, calling his attention to the belief which they hold, that this Bill of my hon. friend from Toronto, is dealing entirely with one company and if it is dealing only with one company, and if it is only a private Bill. If it is a public Bill, it must be disposed of in this House and it cannot go to committee. Then if the House is to dispose of it, how are we to get the benefit of the advice and experience of men who have devoted their lives to the life insurance business ? Surely the Bill should go to some special committee, in order that we may get the opinion of these men.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Do these gentlemen by any resolution or act of theirs approve of this Bill ?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—If the hon gentleman will bear with me I will read what they say. I have three or four letters from different people, but they are all practically along the same line. I have the authority of the gentleman who is president of the Life Officers Association, and I shall read his letter, showing his consent to lay this matter before this honourable House. It is dated 17th May, 1904, from Hamilton and reads as follows :—

The Federal Life Assurance Company,
Hamilton, Can., May 17, 1904.

Hon. William Gibson,
The Senate, Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Gibson,—As promised, I inclose herewith a copy of a letter signed by myself on behalf of the Life Officers' Association and addressed to the Honourable Mr. Fielding in reference to Senator Kerr's Bill. Kindly make such use of it as you may deem to be in the best interests of our companies.

I inclose a second copy.

Yours faithfully,
DAVID DEXTER,
President.

2 encs. (Letters).

He is president of the Life Officers' Association. This letter which was inclosed is dated from Toronto, May 16th, addressed to Hon. W. S. Fielding, Minister of Finance, Ottawa, and reads as follows :—

The Canadian Life Insurance Officers' Association, Toronto.
Toronto, May 16, 1904.

Hon. W. S. Fielding,
Minister of Finance,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—On behalf of the Life Assurance Companies, members of this association, I have been asked to lay before you the following views in connection with Bill 'H' introduced into the Senate by the Honourable Mr. Kerr, Toronto, entitled 'An Act further to amend the Insurance Act.'

1. The Bill is introduced on behalf of, and can apply to the business of only one institution, the Mutual Reserve Life Insurance Company, formerly known as the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York ; yet it has been framed in such a way as to give the impression that it is of general import. This association considers that the introduction into the General Insurance Act of provisions such as are contained in the Bill in question, giving power to change the amount of the policy, alter the premium, and entirely reform the contract, would convey an erroneous impression to the Canadian insuring public, and to the insuring public of other countries where our Canadian companies are seeking business, in regard to the stability and standing of our regular companies, and of life assurance in general in Canada.

2. The association is also of the opinion that the General Insurance Act should not be made the vehicle to give relief to any one institution in particular. If this be allowed to be done in the case under consideration, it would appear that it may form a dangerous precedent.

3. The members of the Canadian Life Insurance Officers' Association would respectfully express their regret that there has been included in the General Insurance Act legislation dealing with assessment assurance, inasmuch as it has afforded an opportunity for those who advocate assessment assurance to urge that that class of assurance and regular life assurance being legalized by the same Act, were in fact the same, and, as a consequence, many people have been deceived thereby. Should further legislation on the subject of assessment assurance be introduced into the General Insurance Act as proposed, it appears to this association that it will have the effect of aggravating this impropriety.

4. The association ventures to suggest that whatever legislation parliament deems it advisable to grant in the premises, such legislation should be in the nature of a private Bill, so that it will be unmistakably known to apply only to the society seeking it—the Mutual Reserve—and thus, that sound life assurance shall not be injured or prejudiced thereby.

Yours very truly,

DAVID DEXTER,
President.

All I have to say in conclusion is that I support the recommendation of my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island, that this is a subject which should be dealt with without any further delay, and that it is not for the purpose of burking any inquiry. It is the duty of parliament, whatever legislation is necessary to safeguard the rights of the assured of the people of Canada, that steps should be so taken by the Senate with the least possible delay.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Does the hon. gentleman say he is prepared to endorse that resolution ? Is he prepared to vote for the second reading of a Bill that is condemned by the resolutions of the insurance associations ?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I am prepared to vote that the Bill be referred to a committee.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then the hon. gentleman endorses the principle of the Bill ?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I do nothing of the kind. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to explain, I want this legislation to be put in shape by men who understand the insurance business, and not to be done haphazard by hon. gentlemen in the House who have not given the matter enough attention, who perhaps do not know the intricacies of life insurance. I am not at all prejudiced against the company, nor am I in its favour ; but what I desire above all things is that the hon. gentleman who has introduced this Bill should be so assisted by the people who are interested and who are affected thereby, as to make that Bill as workable as possible, and I think there is the greatest danger to the assured, to the people of Canada, if we postpone the consideration of the Bill till the 4th July, delaying it to such a late period of the session that no matter what kind of legislation should come down, if there is any evidence of the other end of the House closing up, members of this House would not remain and give the matter the consideration it deserves.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am afraid there is some misapprehension on the part of several of the members of this honourable House on the question now before us. There seems to me to be an impression that there are objections on the part of several members of this House for an investigation taking place in connection with the affairs of the Mutual Reserve. As far as I have been able to ascertain—and I have had occasion to discuss the matter with several of my hon. colleagues—I have not found one who has expressed any objection to an investigation taking place, and for my part I declare that I am in favour of an investigation, because it is important that it be ascertained, even as a matter of information for parliament, whether the insurance law has been abused or not. I am in favour of an investigation, because a proper investigation is necessary for the purpose of ascertaining what is the remedy which should be applied ; but because I am in favour of an investigation it does not follow that I am in favour of what I consider would destroy the interest of a large portion of our community who have interests at stake in that company. I have had occasion to say during a previous debate on this subject, that I was also against the Bill if it were to be passed in its present state. I have stated some of the reasons why I would be opposed to it, and shall take the liberty of repeating them, and adding other reasons. I am against the Bill because it is made to apply, as it is drafted, to all assessment insurance companies, and therefore permitting them to change the conditions of their contract with their policy-holders. I would be against the Bill as regards the policy-holders in that very Mutual Company, because in its present shape the Bill would change the conditions and the relations between the company and the policy-holders without the consent of the policy-holders. I am against the Bill in its present shape, because, to my mind, it does not contain the proper provision to afford relief to the parties who are interested in the company. Because I am against the Bill as framed it is not a reason why I should vote against it receiving its second reading and being sent to a committee, who will ascertain whether a remedy is required and what should be the remedy, and I think that it is absolutely necessary that it should be done, unless we come to the conclusion to sacrifice in cold blood the interests of a large number of people who have considerable at stake in this company. I ask hon. gentlemen if the matter is to be treated in the spirit in which it was approached by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay—that is, as a matter of vengeance against the company——

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I call my hon. friend to order. He has no right to accuse any hon. gentleman of making a motion in the spirit of vengeance. I ask the hon. gentleman to retract that.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I say the hon. gentleman from Rothesay, to my great regret, has approached the subject with passion, and he has——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. Will the hon. gentleman sit down? The hon. gentleman imputes motives to the hon. gentleman from Rothesay: he has no right to do so, and I ask the ruling of the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE.—I refer to the remarks we have heard this afternoon from the hon. gentleman from Rothesay, imputing that a large number of members of this House are influenced by a desire to cover this company instead of protecting what he deems to be the interests of the policy-holders. I do not say that the hon. gentleman does it knowingly, or with any bad motive.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman said vengeance.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I say that the manner in which he approached the subject, even with the good faith with which, I have no doubt, he acted, was not calculated to best serve the interests of the shareholders in that company.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman should withdraw the words he used when he said the hon. gentleman was inspired by a spirit of vengeance.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—And passion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I ask the hon. gentleman if he will withdraw that expression; if not I will ask the ruling of the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have just explained.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, there has been no explanation.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I do not doubt the good faith of the hon. gentleman, but I take his words as they were pronounced in this House, and I say that the hon. member had no right to impute bad or illegitimate motives to a number of his colleagues.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I ask the Speaker's ruling.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—The hon. gentleman meant to use the word revenge. As a Frenchman, he may not understand the niceties of meaning of English words. Vengeance is a good deal stronger than revenge. Vengence belongs only to God. 'Vengeance is mine' saith the Lord, 'And I will repay.' I say no good man with any good nature would hesitate to withdraw such an abominable word as vengeance.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Either word is out of order.

The SPEAKER—There has never been any decision by the Speaker on the use of the word vengeance; but we have a rule which forbids the use of words calculated to irritate and annoy, and I trust the hon. gentleman from DeSalaberry will withdraw that word.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have no objection to abide by the decision of the hon. Speaker.

The SPEAKER—I do not positively decide.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have explained in what sense I used the expression, that I did not intend to impute any bad motive to the hon. gentleman, but to refer to the manner in which he addressed this honourable House. I think that we should be jealous in maintaining our liberty to promote such legislation as we think is fair, and the hon. gentleman from Rothesay has no right to lecture, and to impute motives to the hon. gentleman from Toronto, as he did for an hour or more this afternoon. For my part I must resent language of that kind. I believe in the honour of every hon. gentleman in this House, and I am sure there is not an hon. member who can be approached or button-holed by any company or the representative of any company, and I am sure the hon. gentleman from Toronto, as he explained, took charge of the Bill at the request of the officers of the government, so to speak, or of the superintendent of insurance. He has explained to the House in what way he did so, and I think he did not deserve the aspersions which were cast on him by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay this afternoon.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I never referred to the hon. gentleman from Toronto at all. It is a very unfair attack to make against me. I said they were button-holing them all round. I could produce half a dozen gentlemen on the floor of the House that have been button-holed. I never mentioned the hon. gentleman from Toronto. If the cap fits—I did not put it on.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The hon. gentleman could not put it on my head because I have not button-holed a member or asked a member.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Supposing that the investigation is made by the committee and it be ascertained that the company has been robbed to any extent, what will be the result of that investigation?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Stop them from robbing further.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—What will be the result of that investigation ? If no remedy is applied, the result will be to discourage the policy-holders and to induce them to let their policies lapse and it will be a dead loss for every one of them. In making an investigation we should study whether remedies can be applied to the evil, and decide what are those remedies, and this can only be done by proper investigation and by a committee which will have, not only the entire confidence of this honourable House but which will have the entire confidence of the country. The country has its eyes upon this honourable House. This is a question of very large importance, and I hope this honourable body will rise to the occasion and deal with this matter with calmness and with judgment, and in such a way that its action will commend itself to the attention and will receive the approbation of parliament and of the whole country. Now, whether the session lasts a month and a half or two months, it is not too long to study the question which is now before us, to properly mature it. I believe we have no time to lose, and I am in accord with the suggestions which have been thrown out. I believe the Bill should now receive its second reading, it being well understood that we do not accept the principle of the Bill nor the details of it. For my part, I repeat, that I would vote against the Bill in its present shape, and if I were to find that the committee who are to be intrusted with the consideration of the Bill with a view to amending it as it should be amended, wanted to shirk their duty or to cover the company or refuse to hold the investigation I would vote against the measure.

But I am sure that we can find in this honourable House a committee composed of men of experience who will, with the hon. gentlemen who have been already appointed on the other committee, take the trouble to make a proper investigation and devise the proper means to come to the rescue of these policy-holders. I have said on a previous occasion, and I repeat it, I believe that the remedy should go to the extent of not only protecting the present policy-holders but also trying to revive the policies of those who have been compelled, so to speak, to allow their policies to lapse, and this, I think, may be achieved by making different classifications. It is well known that in every large insurance company there are a number of classes. They insure on the fifteen or ten year plan or on the tontine plan, or on the regular life, and I cannot see why we cannot treat the parties who have dealt with this company as different classes of policy-holders. Take, for instance, those who come under the regular system of policy, who have insured since 1899—they are perfectly secured by the deposits made with the government. Treat as another class those who hold policies under the assessment system; and treat as a third class those whose policies should be revived on such terms and conditions as would be fair to all the other policy-holders. At any rate, whether this be practical or not, it can only be ascertained by proper investigation, and when that investigation takes place, experts in this insurance should be consulted, so that what we do will be in the true interests of and will be fair to all parties concerned. But it is a question which cannot be decided lightly, and before a serious investigation has taken place. For these reasons I would be in favour of enlarging the committee or of referring the whole matter to the Banking and Commerce Committee, or enlarging the committee in order that they may make a more thorough study of the whole question, and the committee should have not only the duty of making the investigation but also of drafting the Bill as a measure of relief.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—After the remarks which have fallen from the hon. gentleman from DeSalaberry, on behalf of that committee I beg to tender him the resignation of one member already, if he has a more competent and more fair person to put on it. I refer to the hon. gentleman from Stadacona. The hon. gentleman has stated that he wanted a more fit and proper committee to investigate.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Oh, no. I appeal to hon. gentlemen; I never said anything of the kind! I made no suggestion of anything of the kind! I did not say anything against the committee that has been appointed. I said that the committee should be composed of strong elements——

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Stronger men certainly.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I say that the present members should remain on the committee. I said that those who are already members should remain so, but we have for instance Senator Cox.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—He can't wait.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—A man of large experience in insurance business. Will it be denied that he would not be a valuable addition to a committee having to deal with that subject? And we have a number of hon. gentlemen here who have been for years in this honourable House, and with all the confidence that I have in the committtee which has been appointed, I think if it was increased to nine members instead of five that it might be an advantage and that its report would have still greater weight with the country.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I accept the explanation of the hon. gentleman, as far as it goes, but I want to tell him right here that this committee was not created by the Senate for any such purpose as he is pleading for to-night. This committee was appointed for one sole purpose, simply to hear evidence on both sides and report the facts to the Senate. Does the hon. gentleman think, young and inexperienced as I am, that I would undertake to organize or be chairman of a committee called upon to frame a law? Not at all. But I was quite capable of presiding over a committee appointed to hear evidence and report it. All I want is ears; I do not want much brains to do that. The committee do not need to be experts or actuaries or presidents of railroads to report evidence. They have simply to sit there and call witnesses, and when the facts are placed before the committee to report them to the House. If the hon. gentleman alluded to the committee, I do not speak on my own behalf, but I wish to say that hon. members like the hon. senator from Stadacona and the hon. gentleman from Missisquoi and the hon. gentleman from Rothesay are not chickens in this House.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I did not say anything of the kind.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman wanted a fit and proper committee, and he repeated it three or four times, and I as a member of that committee will not sit silent and hear that expression used in reference to the hon. gentleman from Stadacona. If this committee were appointed to draft a Bill to amend the Insurance Act it would be altogether different; but this committee is simply appointed for one purpose, to ascertain the facts and bring them before the House. I have no feeling in the matter but I do not want to stand by and hear hon. senators on the committee charged with incompetence and belittled. I do not speak on my own behalf. I can tolerate that for some years to come. Probably it will be different when I am older.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Cobourg)—I wish to protest respectfully but firmly against any further delay in the discussion. To adjourn the further consideration of the Bill until the fourth of July, as suggested, is out of the question, and as far as I am concerned to adjourn it for one week is out of the question. Time, according to my notion of life is very valuable. We have a great deal to do yet and we have not done very much this session. I supposed when I came to the Senate with my knowledge of the Dominion parliament, that about four months would be the normal length of a session, and my own view was that we ought to do all the work of parliament within three months. Now that we are relieved by our constitution of doing the work of the several provinces. I must say that I have been very much discouraged, from my experience of last session, and so far of this session. I fear we will not be able to bring our sessions within any reasonable length. We are now on the last week of the first three months of the session, and to postpone this Bill for one week would look to me like an unreasonable and wicked waste of valuable time. Some hon. gentlemen who have spoken have, according to my humble view, exhibited an undue and unnecessary degree of warmth in discussing this matter. I was just picturing to myself how I would be treated by a judge if, as Crown prosecutor, I were to present a case against the accused with the energy these charges have been pressed against this company. The company may be guilty or not guilty; I shall reserve my decision until I hear the evidence. I do not care very much who is the author of the Bill now before the House, but this one thing I shall be careful of, that before it finally passes the Senate it shall be a Bill of this House, and if in its present form it is not a proper Bill, it is within our power to make it so. I have listened to the discussion this afternoon and evening and am more and more convinced that the course I should like to have seen followed when this matter was before the Senate on a previous occasion was that not only this inquiry, but the Bill itself, should have gone to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and now in taking the view I want to point out that that committee is a large committee. I have every confidence that they will do their duty, and if, in the course of this investigation and consideration of the provisions of this Bill, they find it necessary to refer certain portions of it to a sub-committee they can do so and facilitate the work and economize time in that way. For these reasons I shall vote in favour of the second reading of the Bill to-night, in order that valuable time may not be lost. I want it distinctly understood—and you must give me credit for this—I am not here to consider what is the interest of the company or the motives of any hon. gentleman. I impugn no man's motive. I believe that the special committee is composed of high-minded, honourable men, every one of them, although I opposed the reference to that committee for the reason that I thought the Banking and Commerce Committee was the proper body to which it should be referred, and I have serious objection to the multiplication of committees unnecessarily. We have standing committees enough to deal with all the questions that come before them, and these committees if they think fit can appoint sub-committees; but what I would beg of hon. members, whether they are in favour of, or against this Bill, that they should speak in a more temperate and moderate tone, and not assume that everybody who does not take a certain view is influenced by bad motives. We all have good motives, and those motives are to secure justice to everybody, no matter who may be affected. For these reasons I shall vote for the second reading, and then to have the Bill referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, so that that committee can get to work and consider it, and, if it is not satisfactory, to prepare another Bill which will contain such provisions as will meet the case, and when it comes before this Senate for further consideration that such a Bill will be presented as will meet the views of the majority of this House and that justice may be done in the premises.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I should like to know where we stand at present. Do I understand that the motion before us is to postpone the second reading of the Bill until to-morrow week ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I moved an amendment to have this matter postponed for eight days, so that the committee can investigate and report.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—If the motion means to postpone the second reading of this Bill until the 4th of July, I certainly must vote against it, because it means no legislation this session for the relief of the policy-holders; but if it is only for this day week, I do not know that it will make any material difference and for that reason I am prepared to vote for the amendment to the amendment.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—With the permission of the House, I should like to withdraw my amendment and accept the proposition of my hon. friend to postpone the second reading of the Bill, for one week.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I understand the amendment has been withdrawn and that the proposition now is to postpone the matter for eight days. What better position will that put us in ? I have listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion, a good deal of which has been irrelevant to the subject before the House. Some hon. gentleman spoke at length and never referred to the motion before the chair. But it has been suggested by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield that it is his purpose to move, after the second reading is carried, that the Bill be referred to a committee to be composed of some members of the House along with the members of the committee of investigation, and to refer the investigation and the Bill itself to that committee with instructions to report a Bill that will give such relief as they deem can be given to the policy-holders.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We cannot do that.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—If the House should resolve on that, it appears to me that the committee who take the time and trouble to collect and weigh evidence, will be in a position to give any relief that may possibly be given by suggesting a remedy to this House, and that remedy can be furnished by the Bill of the hon. gentleman from Toronto. There may be nothing of that Bill reported but the title, but it will come from the committee in a shape acceptable to the Senate and will afford some measure of relief. The Bill of the hon. gentleman from Toronto has been objected to as a public Bill and as a private Bill, but some sort of a Bill must be introduced to give relief to the policy-holders. An investigation has been authorized by the House and the committee has been appointed. I am sure from the speeches we have heard in this House by members of that committee we can safely say they are not going to sit on the bench with gentlemen of open minds. I do not think a man who can make speeches such as we have heard in this House can divest himself of the strong feeling he has against the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association and make a fair report.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Judge of what ? We are to report evidence.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—There is sufficient evidence in the minds of those gentlemen, as any one who reads their speeches can see, to condemn the company. I think that the Bill ought to be read the second time, and then I shall be prepared to support the motion of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield to enlarge the committee and refer this Bill and the investigation to that larger committee, and they will have time to consider it thoroughly and report suitable legislation. There is another point to be gained; if this company have complied with all the regulations imposed on them by the Insurance Act, it may be necessary to let this Bill take the form of a public measure and provide such legislation for the government of insurance companies in the future that no company doing an assessment business will hereafter fall into the condition of this company. We have a right to guard against that. For harmony and for united effort on the part of the Senate, it appears to me the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield is the only one to adopt, because we know that it is a question of whether the proposed amendment will carry or not. Nearly every motion in connection with this investigation has been decided by close voting; the Senate is about divided equally on the subject. If the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield and the hon. Secretary of State is accepted, we have practicaly a unanimous opinion to send this Bill to a committee, and if that can be done we shall have the best possible results from any action the House may take in connection with the matter.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I rise with some degree of hesitation to make observations on this subject. I have refrained from participating in any way in the discussion which has extended over a considerable length of time, having very serious doubt as to the course which should be pursued; but since listening to the discussion to-day I have satisfied myself as to the course I should follow. When the hon. gentleman from Rothesay introduced his motion to investigate the administration of the Mutual Reserve Fund Association, the fundamental reason advanced was that redress should be given to those who suffered wrong at the hands of that company, and, as I understand it, that has been the central idea in every step taken up to the present time. My hon. friend from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Cloran) tells us that the only thing which the committee was delegated to do was to inquire into the honesty or dishonesty of the administration of that company clearly eliminating from the scope of the inquiry the element of redress. It seems to me the paramount question and the only question which would warrant this chamber in dealing with the matter is to solve the difficulty which has been presented as to how redress can be given to the policy-holders.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Why did not the Senate say so in the first place ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understand that the question of redress is entirely outside of the scope of that committee, and the point which I am endeavouring to make is this : notwithstanding the investigation and report which may be made by the committee, no matter whether that report may find that the administration of the company was honest or dishonest, capable or otherwise, that report can in no way affect the redress of the policy-holders. That being the case, it naturally occurs to ones mind what is this chamber going to do with reference to the paramount object of this legislation, namely, that redress shall be found for the policy-holders.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I should like to ask the hon. gentleman if it should come out in the investigation before that committee that there was mismanagement of the affairs of that company, would it not to some extent affect the legislation which might be suggested by the Committee on Banking and Commerce ? For that reason we want to have an investigation into the question to some extent before we decide upon a measure.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The question propounded by the hon. member from Alexandria (Hon. Mr. McMillan) is quite a reasonable one, but permit me to say that should this investigation result in no finding, would not the idea be a deeply seated one in the mind of every hon. gentleman in this chamber that legislation is necessary to assist the policy-holders in obtaining redress with reference to this company. We have listened to many disquisitions on the science of insurance, and on the evils of the assessment system. The hon. Secretary of State this afternoon went back almost to the days of confederation, and traced down to the present time the evils which have been pointed out by statesmen on different occasions that would result under the assessment system. This being the case, and the insurance branch of the Finance Department having pronounced that it is desirable that some legislation should be introduced at this session of parliament, for the purpose of assisting the policy-holders of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, then I think we may eliminate from the question before us the proceedings of the investigating committee. It appears to me that is an entirely different branch of the question now at issue. This being the case, I must confess that according to my view of the subject, the redress will in no way trench upon the duties of that committee, and in no way invade the duties which have been cast upon them. Therefore, it is a very fitting question for this chamber to consider, if it would not be advisable to refer this Bill to the Select Committee on Banking and Commerce. Now, I do not mean to say I am in sympathy with this Bill. If the hon. senator from Toronto had introduced a blank piece of paper for the purpose of complying with the forms of this chamber, so that the question might be brought before the Committee on Banking and Commerce, we would not have entered upon a discussion as to whether there are defects in the Bill or otherwise. I, therefore, think we have to consider this Bill as blank, that the matter will be entirely dealt with by the Committee on Banking and Commerce. I can very well appreciate the difficulty of framing a Bill at the present time to meet the requirements of the situation. In the first place, we have the insurance companies objecting to the form of the Bill as introduced, and I think the reasons which they have advanced are logical and sound; but I do not think the insurance companies of Canada should be in any way tainted by the administration of a foreign company, provided that the allegations which have been made as to maladministration should be established. On the other hand, we have the policy-holders objecting to the form of the Bill. They have formed their own conception as to how far this Bill will infringe upon the rights they already possess. I can readily appreciate the difficulty of one sitting down to frame a Bill under the circumstances to which I have alluded, which would be acceptable to all parties. I am, therefore, of opinion that the Bill, entirely irrespective of the provisions embodied in its four corners, should be submitted to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. That committee should secure the services of some disinterested insurance expert, and should go fully into this matter, entirely irrespective of the mismanagement of the company in question; that they should take into consideration the facts or the figures now before the insurance branch of the Finance Department and that they should work out a solution as I have no doubt insurance experts can, due regard being had to justice being done to both parties. Under these circumstances I am in favour of supporting the reference to the Select Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH—The discussion on this question has taken such a wide range that I shall merely say a few words to explain the vote I am about to give. I do not want to commit myself to the principle of the Bill; yet if by sending it to a committee we are to get the assistance of expert insurance men in perfecting the Bill, it may come back in such a form that hon. members who would now oppose it as it stands could support it. With this distinct understanding, I am willing to vote for the second reading of the Bill. I feel that it applies only to the Mutual Reserve Company and that the investigation applies to the company only. Therefore, I do not see why there should be any objection to sending the two matters to the one committee. If the select committee which has been appointed feel that they have not been given authority to report any form of redress for the policy-holders, let their duties be enlarged. If we think it advisable to enlarge the committee let us do so, but this Bill which applies to the company which is to be investigated should be dealt with by the same committee. We want to ascertain the condition of the business of the New York Mutual Reserve Company, and, at the same time, to see if we can give redress to the policy-holders of that company, and for that reason it would be well to have both dealt with by the one committee. I shall, therefore, vote for the Bill without committing myself to its principle.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—I do not quite understand how any one can vote for the second reading of this Bill without committing himself to the principle of it. Enlarge the present committee if you like, increase their powers so that they can report a Bill to this House after they have made their investigation, but I do not care to commit myself to the principle of the Bill, in its present form.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I should like to give an intelligent vote on this matter. Charges were brought against this company early in the session, charges of a very grave character, such as would damage any company if proved. The object of the hon. senator from Rothesay was to obtain a committee of investigation. After this matter had gone on for a time a Bill was introduced to amend the Insurance Act. It was a post hoc—I do not know whether it was propter hoc, I take it it was. I do not believe there would have been any Bill to amend the Insurance Act had there not been a proposition to investigate the Mutual Reserve Association. The two things must be disassociated by any one who wishes to give an honest vote. First the company is charged with crimes which no company could commit without forfeiting public confidence. No Canadian would like to have such nefarious offences condoned in any way. The company must either be acquitted or punished. If they are acquitted the Bill can be passed if they wish for it, but if punishment is to be meted out to them proportionate to the crimes with which they are charged, no Bill will be necessary. Having given the committee a commission to find out the truth and nothing but the truth, when they report to the House it will be time enough to say what you will do with the Mutual Reserve Association. A man need not be an insurance expert to make an investigation of this kind. Crimes under the head of Insurance, are not of a peculiar character; they are frauds and criminal acts which are known and committed over the wide world, I am sorry to say. I have no feeling whatever against the company, and would be glad to see them continue doing business, but I feel there is a very important responsibility resting on every member of this House. Here is an opportunity for the Senate to show that it is impartial, that any one can come here and obtain at the hands of the House just and honourable treatment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island expressed the opinion that a member who votes for the second reading necessarily commits himself to the principle of the Bill. That was the practice of parliament some twenty or thirty years ago. Whenever a Bill was read the second time it was understood that those who voted for it committed themselves to its principle. That idea was abandoned long ago, and any one can vote for a Bill, of this character on the second reading, with the distinct understanding that if it is not amended in committee to meet his views, it is his privilege and duty to vote against it. The hon. gentleman who introduced the Bill, stated himself that he was not wedded to all of its provisions, but he was prepared to accept any suggestion or amendment that might be made by the committee to which the Bill might be referred, and which would tend to accomplish the object he had in view, namely, the better protection of the policy-holders, and not, as he said himself, in the interest of the company. I am fully in accord with those who have spoken in that way—I am not in favour of every provision in the Bill, and I hope that it may be so amended as to accomplish the object we all have in view, to afford better protection to those who are in the unfortunate position of holding policies in that company. The motion before the House is that the Bill be read the second time. Then there is an amendment by the hon. member from Rothesay to postpone the consideration of the second reading until the 4th July.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I withdrew that and said I was willing to accept the subsequent amendment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman cannot withdraw his amendment without the consent of the House. His amendment was to postpone the second reading until the 4th July. Then there is an amendment to the amendment by the hon. senator from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Cloran) to postpone the second reading for one week. Then the hon. gentleman from Rothesay said that if the feeling of the House was in favour of the last motion he would withdraw his amendment and let that of the hon. gentleman from Victoria be substituted, leaving any one else to move an amendment to the amendment if he pleased. That I take it to be the position of the matter at present. The proposition made by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield was simply this, that should the Bill be read the second time it should be referred to an enlarged committee, consisting of the five gentlemen who were appointed a special committee, and to add four or five members to it, and enlarge its powers to consider not only the charges preferred by the hon. senator from Rothesay but also the provisions of the Bill should it receive its second reading. After the discussion, and the feeling which it elicited I venture to suggest that the Bill receive its second reading at once and then, as suggested by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, be referred to an enlarged committee or to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. I frankly confess I rather approved of the suggestion made by my hon. friend at first, but after hearing the discussion I think it would be better to accept the suggestion made by my hon. friend from Kingston (Hon. Mr. Sullivan), to let the investigation as to the character of the company go on and let us treat the Bill exclusively upon its merits, irrespective of any information that may be elicited by that committee or how far they may be able to implicate the company in wrong-doing. Let that stand upon its own merits, and even if they are wrong then let us deal with the Bill with a view to the relief of the policy-holders, so far as we can, and also the relief of those who have allowed their policies to lapse after having paid in a large amount of money, if such a thing can be done. I have already expressed my views and very strongly too as to whether this is a public or a private Bill. However, those views were not accepted by the House, and the Speaker took the view that it was a public Bill, and I must confess, if I may say so—perhaps it is a little irrelevant—that on the face of the Bill as it stands before the House, the Speaker was quite right, in giving the decision he did, although I took the other view. I take it that all he could do would be to come to a decision upon the character of the Bill as it is presented, although we all know it has but one object, and that is to deal with one particular company, as no other companies of that character have been interfered with. I hope the House will get rid of it in the way that I have suggested. Let the committee go on with this investigation. If they have not power enough, give them full power, give them what they ask, solicitors to assist them, and if it be considered to the advantage of the investigation that the committee should be enlarged do it and do it upon its merits, and let us have the second reading of the Bill to-night. For these reasons I should vote against any amendment for the postponement of the second reading; we should have the second reading now or defeat it altogether.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—In view of the statement made by the leader of the opposition and having moved the amendment, I am quite prepared to accept the view of this honourable body in regard to that matter. I moved that amendment at the request of several senators who had ideas in regard to the time that this investigation should take place and the Bill brought forth. I am quite prepared as a member of the committee of investigation to have this Bill referred to any committee of this honourable House, whether to the Banking and Commerce or to our committee or to an enlarged committee; so that if the hon. member who seconded the amendment will consent I will withdraw my amendment and allow the main motion to go.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I certainly cannot consent, for the reason that I would be acquiescing in an act that I condemned.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I am surprised to see the mover of that amendment withdrawing it now, after we have discussed it for three or four hours. Nothing has transpired in my estimation to justify him in retiring from the position he took. He certainly was serious when he moved it, and why should he withdraw it now? It is rather trifling with the Senate.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The reason was on account of the statement made by the hon. leader of the opposition that in voting for the second reading of the Bill now, nobody was committed to the principle of it and it did not amount to anything.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Even if that were the case, everybody is supposed to know the law and my hon. friend was supposed to know that. Ignorance excuses nobody as the latin saying goes. The question is pretty well mixed up now. I desire to give an intelligent vote on this question, but matters are so mixed up that I do not know where the cart or the horse is. It strikes me the cart is before the horse. The object of the Bill of my hon. friend from Toronto is to deal with the Mutual Reserve Company, and that has been made clear by the protest from the other companies. Therefore, let that Bill be on the face of it a public Bill; it is to all intents and purposes a private Bill, brought before this House purposely and exclusively to deal with the Mutual Reserve Fund Company, and if I understand it to save that company from disaster if possible. If the company can justify its course I will vote for it being saved, but as matters stand now, are we to deal with that company intelligently before we have the report of the committee which is now investigating the affairs of the very company which we are about to justify by the passing of this Bill. I am of opinion that we should not mix up matters any more, and that we should take a vote on the question which was brought up and which we have discussed sufficiently. I will object to the hon. gentleman's amendment being withdrawn at this stage, and I will vote in favour of it without committing myself, for the reason that I wish, when this Bill comes before the House, to give as intelligent a vote as possible, and I find that even with the best of will to do so I cannot do it now.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I may be wrong, but I do not share the opinion expressed by the hon. leader of the opposition when he says that the second reading of a Bill does not affirm the principle of it. We have a standing rule—I think it is No. 42—which says that the principle of a Bill is debated at the second seading. What is the principle of this Bill ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—No principle.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The Bill brought before us to-day is a Bill to amend a public Act. It is to impose on all the insurance companies in the country certain amendments. That is the principle, but nobody is standing up for that principle. Where is the member who is in favour of that principle ? Where is the member of this House who could stand up and say that he is for that principle. Every one who spoke on the Bill took great care to say they would not accept that principle but would confine the Bill to one single company, yet we are asked to vote for a Bill the principle of which is to extend to all insurance companies doing business in the Dominion—a public Bill. That is the principle, and hon. gentlemen who are voting for a second reading, accept the principle. Bourinot states the rule as follows :

The second reading of the Bill is that stage when it is proper to enter into the discussion and propose a motion relative to the principle of the measure..

The Senate has a rule on this subject, No. 42, which reads as follows :—

The principle of a Bill is usually debated at its second reading.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Debated but not decided.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What is the result of a debate? It is a vote. It is a decision.

Hon. Mr. KERR—It is a vote for second reading. That is what the vote is, but it is not necessarily adopting the principle of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—When is it adopted?

Hon. Mr. KERR—When it becomes law.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—When does it become law ?

Hon. Mr. KERR—When is receives the assent of the Governor General.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We are only committed when the Governor General acts. That is the consequence.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I have answered several questions.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Not in a very bright way.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I think that observation applies to the questions.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I rise to a question of order. Sit down.

Hon. MEMBERS—Order, order.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from Stadacona, I understand, is speaking on a point of order.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am raising a point of order.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from Stadacona, as I understood it, was addressing the House upon a question of order.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—No, no, a question of law.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—My point of order is that the hon. member has no right to use the expression in reference to the hon. member from Toronto, that he had not answered the questions in a bright way.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I did not mean polite when I used the word bright. There was no polish in that, but if the hon. gentleman objects I will say in the most bright way. Bourinot further says :—

The Commons have no rule on the subject, but the practice of the House is always to discuss the principle of a Bill at this stage. Any member may propose as an amendment a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to or differing from the principles, policy or provisions of law or expressions of opinion as to any circumstances connected with its introduction or prosecution or otherwise opposed to its progress.

This quotation from Bourinot shows in a very distinct manner that the principle of the Bill is discussed, debated and resolved at the second reading. It is not like a private Bill which is sent to a special committee, where discussion takes place and where the principle is adopted only when the Bill is all accepted. We adopt the preamble afterwards. But, in considering a public Bill, as soon as you come to the second reading you are bound to accept or reject the principle, and if you do not accept the principle you have a way to get out of it, to move an amendment, which is directed against the Bill. If hon. gentlemen want to refer that Bill to a committee and to save the principle, why do they not bring in an amendment stating that they want, that the Bill be read the second time with such and such provision, putting aside the false principle which is advocated in this Bill, because everybody knows that the principle which is advocated is a principle which is accepted by nobody in this House. Therefore, when the second reading of the Bill is proposed, I shall vote against it because I do not want to commit myself to the principle of supporting a public Bill brought before this House in order to amend the law so that the law as so amended should afford relief to a single company.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—One word only, and that is that I wish it distinctly understood, as I stated at the opening, that in asking for the second reading of the Bill, I do no ask any member to commit himself to the principle of it. In all deliberative assemblies, in the House of Commons and in this House it is a common practice that a Bill receives its second reading without the members of the House being committed to the principle of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If I may be permitted for a moment; the rule to guide us in this matter lays down no such principle as that which the hon. gentleman has indicated in his reply to the remarks which I made. I have great respect for the industry and research of my hon. friend. The rule which guides us reads as follows :—

The principle of a Bill is usually debated at its second reading.

That is quite true, but that does not say that if you vote for the second reading you thereby pledge yourself to details or to the principle, and all the hon. gentleman has read in Bourinot is exactly in the same line as that rule. But I repeat again that the practice has been in the House of Commons, and I am sure my hon. friend will remember that if he will only tax his memory, that which I laid down, that when you object to the details of a Bill which may involve a certain principle, you state that objection in the House when you give your vote. You have no objections to having the Bill considered, but you let the House understand that you are not pledging yourself by that vote either to the principle or details of the measure.

The SPEAKER—Is it the pleasure of the House to permit the hon. gentleman from Rothesay to withdraw his motion ?

The motion of the hon. gentleman from Rothesay was withdrawn.

The House divided on the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Cloran), which was lost on the following division :—

The Bill was then read the second time.

MUTUAL RESERVE LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.

SECOND REPORT ADOPTED.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN moved the adoption of the second report of the select committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York. He said :

This report has been before the House for the past three or four days, and, after the discussion which has taken place to-day, I do not think for a moment that there will be any further hesitation on the part of the House to grant the request of the committee for counsel.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have just one observation to make, and it is that I think no counsel who has been previously engaged for or against this insurance company should be engaged on the present occasion. It will command greater respect if some eminent counsel who has never been connected with the company be engaged to conduct the investigation.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—I beg to ask the Senate to relieve me from service upon the committee in the face of what has transpired. It is more evident to me now than it was at the time the committee was appointed that no good result could possibly come from the investigations of that committee. No matter what the finding may be, it is utterly powerless to offer any remedy, and, in view of that, I think it is due to myself and it is due to the Senate that I ought to ask to be relieved from further service upon the committee ; I therefore ask the Senate to relieve me from the committee.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I rather think that some members of the Senate are somewhat disappointed in the proceedings which have just taken place. We were informed by the hon. member from Marshfield that he was prepared to move that the committee of investigation be enlarged, and that this Bill be referred to it. I fancy a good many members of the House voted for the second reading with the undertsanding that he would move such a motion. He has not done so and the House is entitled to some explanation from him.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—That is why I voted as I did.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Had my hon. friend raised the point at the right time I would have given an explanation. An effort was made, in which I took part, to endeavour to enlarge the committee. I made several efforts, and others did the same, but it was found that no agreement could be come to as to the names to be added to the committee. The hon. member from Rothesay had views on that subject which he would not yield. My idea was that there would be an agreement to enlarge the committee and when I found no agreement was possible, it was suggested that the Bill, should be sent to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—After making the statement he did make to the House the hon. gentleman should have explained that before the vote was taken.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Several hon. gentlemen intimated that the Bill should be sent to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. My view was not to prevail more than that of other senators.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—In my opinion the Bill has been referred to the proper committee. From the remarks made by hon. gentlemen on the other committee it is clear that if this Bill had been referred to them with additional members, it would involve the retirement of some members who acted on that committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The motion is the adoption of the report. The Bill has already been committed, and the discussion is altogether out of order.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I am simply making an explanation. My understanding was that inasmuch as these gentlemen offered to withdraw from the committee if there was any increase of their numbers, the only proper committee to deal with the Bill was the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Before the motion is put, we had better have some understanding. A prominent member of the special committee has announced to the House that the efforts of the committee are practically useless. If that is the case I am disappointed, because I feel that there should be a searching investigation into the affairs of the company, and if possible some relief given to the policy-holders. We have put our hands to the plough, and I do not think we should stop now and leave undone what we should do in the light of the statements which have been made. I, like my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Hon. Mr. Watson), understood that an arrangement had been arrived at by which a strong active committee would be arranged for, and submitted to the House to be voted on with the possibility of the House accepting that committee and including in it the original committee of investigation, with, if necessary, enlarged powers, and have placed at their disposal means to make the most searching investigation. Now we are asked to supply counsel for what? As far as I can see that committee is of such a character that it would practically be of no advantage to this investigation. If that is the case, would it not be better to concentrate our efforts on the Banking and Commerce Committee and have a searching investigation made by that committee or a sub-committee, if you will, but made at any rate. Something should be done to produce practical results for the money we are going to expend in employing counsel and bringing witnesses—some results to the policy-holders of the company who are asking for relief at the hands of the Senate.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman could move to postpone the consideration of the motion.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The motion has been carried.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman has no right to reflect on the chair; the motion has not been carried.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I cast no reflection on the chair, and I allow the chair to cast no reflection on me.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The chair has a right to inform the House what position the question is in at any time, surely. Would it not be well to take time to consider this matter and put it into shape so that we may attain some practical results. I believe the suggestion of the Speaker is good, inasmuch as the arrangement which I understood to have been made, to appoint an active committee has fallen through, to let this matter stand until another day to see what is best to be done.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—It is only keeping us back.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The hon. gentleman complains of our keeping it back. The hon. gentleman has been keeping the House back for a whole day to prevent the passing of a Bill.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman has no right to impute motives to me. I say his statement is not correct.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I am making a statement of facts which can be borne out by every member of the House, that the hon. gentleman has kept us this whole afternoon and evening for only one purpose, namely, deferring the consideration of the Bill, the only means apparent by which the policy-holders of this company can get the slightest relief. Therefore, it ill-becomes the hon. member to complain that he is being delayed, when his own action has had the most marked effect in that direction. I have already suggested to the House that we had better reconsider some of our actions in connection with this matter, with a view of having an investigation, and getting such relief as it is possible to obtain for the policy-holders of the company. I therefore move that this matter be deferred until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. member must give notice of that motion.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I second this motion, for the reason that has been given by the hon. member from Killarney (Hon. Mr. Young). I attach a great deal of importance to a proper investigation being made. It is a matter of indifference to me whether the investigation is made by one committee or another, but it should not be made by two committees, and steps should at least be taken to have the investigation made by a sub-committee of the Committee on Banking and Commerce jointly with the committee that has been appointed. The committee which is intrusted with bringing about the remedy surely is a very important committee, and it cannot very likely come to a conclusion as to what is a proper remedy without making a thorough investigation. I therefore second the motion, in the expectation that by to-morrow we may devise the best means to insure this proper investigation by the committee, and the obtaining of the proper remedy.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I did not wish anything I may have done here to be at all misunderstood. I certainly did understand that a motion was to be made by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield for the enlargement of the special committee, and that this matter should be referred to that committee, but after learning that he had, out of deference to the views of some members, determined on not moving that way, I saw him and he was good enough to say that was the conclusion he had arrived at, because many members had expressed the opinion that the question should go to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. I feel it my duty to redeem the promise I made on moving the second reading of the Bill. At that time I asked the House to vote for the Bill without being committed to it, and if that were done I would move that it be referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. I have redeemed the promise I made, not with any idea of interfering with any proposition which might be acceptable to the House to deal with the matter, either by an enlargement of that committee or in any other way, but while I am on my feet I may as well say——

The SPEAKER—Is the hon. gentleman speaking to the motion before the chair ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Yes, the motion before the chair is to adjourn the debate. It seems to me, therefore, it is pertinent to call attention to the situation of the matter. We have given the Bill a second reading and referred it to the Committee on Banking and Commerce for consideration. We have before us the report of another committee. That committee stands in the position that a principal member of it, one of the oldest members of the House, has expressed himself in a way that we all heard a few moments ago. In addition to that we had an expression of opinion from the chairman of the committee, who explained to us with a great deal of deliberation two or three times, that that committte had only one duty to discharge, and that duty was confined to ascertaining whether there had been fraud or dishonesty in the management of this company. I wish to call his attention to the instructions which that committee has, and I think you will find that he has not read them, or, at all events, if he has, he does not state them correctly here. The resolution on which that committee was appointed was for the appointment of a select committee of five to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York and Canada. All the charges we have heard in support of that motion are frauds committed outside of Canada. They have nothing whatever to do with the present conditions of the company in Canada, and that is what the committee has been appointed to investigate, and they are now asking for authority to employ counsel. The Senate will see that the duties of that committee are confined to that. One important member of the committee says he can see no good result from the prosecution of that committee's labours. Under the circumstances, having regard to the view of the hon. member who has expressed himself so with reference to the committee, there should be some time taken for consideration of what we are doing.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am very much astonished to find the hon. senator from Toronto making such a fine distinction in regard to the powers of this committee. They are appointed to examine into the position of the company in Canada. He knows we cannot go to the United States and examine its condition there, but we can force the company to bring their books here. Why should he want the committee to limit the investigation to the condition of the company's affairs in Canada. Their business is transacted in New York and he knows very well that this House never wanted a committee appointed simply to investigate the management of the company in Canada. I am fullly aware of the instructions given by this House ; they are to inquire into the position of the company, the relations between its directors and its policy-holders, and if that position is an honest position, the result of the investigation will redound to the company's credit and advantage. If this investigation shows that the position of the company is not an honest one, then it will be time for parliament to take action, so it is really a question of honesty on one side or the other. The position is very clear, and the committee appointed by this honourable body with those instructions, have come to the Senate, and asked permission to employ counsel. The senators composing that committee cannot spend eight or ten hours a day looking into the records of this company. We are not here for that purpose, and it is for that we require counsel. We do not want to go into an investigation of facts that do not pertain to the question; we want to be guided by a lawyer, and it has been unanimously decided by the committee to ask the House to sanction the employment of counsel. The House has not refused it, but certain members seem to hesitate to entrust this committee with counsel. If there is anything wrong, revoke the committee, but it is not right to treat the committee as it is being treated by some hon. members of this House. It is not fair, and it has never been done before. If there is anything against the committee let it be said above board. Otherwise I do not see why hon. gentlemen seek by delays to refuse counsel. I do not think the majority of this honourable body will back up the demands of some hon. gentlemen in that respect. We have delayed now two or three weeks on account of this hesitation on the part of the Senate to take action. I humbly ask that the House take action now. With regard to the attitude of the hon. gentleman from Missisquoi (Hon. Mr. Baker) he said he did not believe in the constitutionality of the committee. He did not take twenty-four hours to consider that.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—I did not take twenty-four minutes.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I was surprised when he said so in committee. Why did he not say so in the House and not allow the Senate to make a nomination which was to become void soon afterwards ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The only question before the House is whether the committee shall have power to employ counsel to assist them in the investigation. I cannot understand how a delay until to-morrow, or any other time, can change the opinion of any one as to the propriety of giving them that power. I know that in former committees when they asked for assistance of that kind it has never been refused, but if the Senate is of the opinion that they should not go to the expense of employing counsel, they had better say so. If they do it will be tantamount to frustrating, to that extent, the investigation which has been ordered. I have been on committees of this kind and I fully concur in the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Cloran) that no individual member of a committee of that kind can devote his whole time and attention to an investigation of all the intricacies which will arise in such inquiries. If we desire to have that investigation thorough and proper, we had better consent and pass this motion at once.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—We should pause for a few hours before we decide to leap into this matter, and for the reason we have a committee that is somewhat disorganized. We have the hon. gentleman from Bedford asking leave to withdraw from it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That does not disorganize it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We have been going on with four members all the time.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It seems to me that from now until to-morrow we might be discussing the advisability of enlarging the committee by increasing its number.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—What has that to do with counsel.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Then we will have a new committee, practically an enlarged committee, who will decide upon the course they will follow, and perhaps when we propose three or four or five names, amongst them some senators of the legal profession, a majority of that committee may decide it does not need counsel, that it has enough legal light. They may decide that they need an actuary rather than counsel, and it seems to me that if we adjourn till to-morrow we would devise a plan by which we could add to that committee some members of this chamber who did not belong to the Committee on Banking and Commerce and the Committee on Banking and Commerce might, upon the enlarging of this special committee, delegate a sub-committee of the Banking and Commerce Committee to that committee to do joint work and make a joint report.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No, we cannot do that.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND.—It seems to me we have everything to gain by adjourning the question until to-morrow, so that we may have a conference and decide upon the best course to solve the question we have before us, that relief may be had for the present policy-holders who are all they have before the committee; there are no shareholders, nothing but policy-holders, and we are all bent upon doing something to come to the rescue of the policy-holders who are paying heavy rates and who seem to need relief and who are incapable of getting it.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE.—The hon. gentleman has made a statement here. If he will allow me to state to this House what he told me this morning as to employment of counsel, I will repeat it. I will not repeat it unless he does.

Some hon. MEMBERS—No, no.

The amendment was declared lost.

The report was then adopted.

SECOND READING.

Bill (34) An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Dandurand.)

CANADIAN GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON moved the second reading of Bill (116) An Act respecting certain Patents of the Canadian General Electric Company, Limited, and others.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. gentleman explain the purport of this Bill?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—This is simply for the extension of the time for the importation of the patented article; the patents are in force. The parties are manufacturing them as fast as they can, but these patents being new and it is important that great care should be taken in the manufacturing and exploitation of the article, the time for importation will expire and unless it is extended they will forfeit their patents by the importation in the meantime.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are the articles with which this deals now manufactured in Toronto?

Hon. Mr. KERR—No. Similar power was given to the other patentees, the Parsons Company, a few days ago, by the Senate.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This Bill is not printed, and of course it should not be proceeded with.

The Order of the Day was allowed to stand.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that the House do now adjourn.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I want to raise a question of privilege. During the debate that took place on this question of the Mutual Reserve Fund Company, it was intimated by the hon. gentleman from Toronto that a certain party in New York had made certain declarations concerning the government and parliament and the committee of the House of Commons. The statement will be found on page 231 of the 'Debates' and reads as follows:

I then took up the memorandum and said to him again: 'Now, this is what you want paid, the amounts contained in this memorandum, together with an equivalent to a year's salary, and the association is to thereafter have your good-will,' to which he replied 'Yes, but that he would not make anything out of it, that he had spent lots of money that was not contained in the memorandum, that he had paid all the costs of the legislation in Canada that passed the law by which the association procured its license to do business in the Dominion, for which he had never been repaid. That there had been good round sums paid out; that there were members of parliament, of the committee, and of the government that had to have good sums, that it cost him over $10,000, that he had found all the money excepting for the last Bill for a small amount.

In view of that declaration made, and in view of the fact that the gentleman who is charged with making that statement is in the city, I move, without giving notice, as it is a question of privilege, that an order of this House do issue for the attendance at the bar of, this House of J. G. Wells of New York to answer such questions as may be put to him relative to these declarations that he is alleged to have made that there were members of parliament, of the committee, of the government, that had to have good sums; that it cost him over $10,000, that he had found all the money excepting for the last bill for a small amount.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Is it a notice of motion?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, it is a question of privilege, and if the hon. gentleman will look at Bourinot at page 424, he will see that questions of privilege need no notice. The rule is as follows:

Questions of privilege will always be considered in the House without the notice necessary in the case of a motion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is understood.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Who is reflected upon in this matter?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am reflected on. I was a member of the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Did the hon. gentleman receive any money.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We will find that out.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It is the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is the House of Commons and parliament.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Does the hon. gentleman really think it is important?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is a question of privilege, and I give notice and I want to have this gentleman brought to the bar to ascertain if this statement is true or not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If every idle observation made outside of the House twenty years ago is to be revived and investigated by us it will take up a lot of time.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Why could he not appear before the committee.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I should like to know whether the paper the hon. gentleman read from is authentic, or is it merely an allegation. It does seem to me that the hon. gentleman is trifling with the dignity of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—There is no reference to the Senate in the matter, and no reason for the Senate assuming anything in the matter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am very much astonished to hear the remarks of the hon. gentleman who usually speaks tersely and straight to the point at issue. Here is an affidavit made by the vice-president of the New York Mutual Reserve Company in which he states distinctly that Mr. Wells told them that he had expended $10,000 in order to secure certain legislation, to use a very plain expression, in the purchase of members of parliament. of the committee, and of the government. Now, I happened to be a member of the committee that dealt with that question and also a member of the government and a member of parliament, I take it for granted that the Senate is a part and parcel of parliament. Parliament does not consist exclusively of the House of Commons. We are just as much an integral part of parliament as the House of Commons itself, because nothing can be done without the concurrence of both Houses, and the sanction of the Governor General, and here is a direct reflection on the honour of parliament. Why should this motion be opposed, when the man who, it is alleged, made this statement, the vice-president of the company with whom we have all the time been dealing, is in town? Why this motion should be objected to is a puzzle to me. I am very anxious individually and on behalf of the committee and on behalf of parliament and the government, to have this gentleman brought before the bar of the House in order that we may ascertain what he has to say in contradiction or in support of the statement alleged to have been made by him.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Which bar does the hon. gentleman mean?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If he comes here and states that he did spend that money, then, I, as a member deeply interested in this charge that has been made, would like to know from him to whom he gave that money and whom he purchased, and the country should know it. The newspapers have discussed this question; they have discussed it not from the point taken by the members here, but they have said that a serious charge was made against the then Minister of Finance, Sir Leonard Tilley, and that it was unbecoming on the part of the hon. gentleman from Toronto to read such a statement impugning the honesty of a man like Sir Leonard ? I do not think the hon. gentleman believed a word of it. Then let us have Mr. Wells' version of it. It is not going to cost anything except the issue of a summons, and that will not be much. In justice to the parliament of Canada, and in justice to those who were members of the parliament at that time ; in justice to the government and in justice to the members of the committee who dealt with this question, there should be no objection to summoning Mr. Wells to the bar of the House and let him answer for himself, and if he has made that statement and is unable to sustain it, then let us deal with him by committing him to the tower for the remainder of the session.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Here is an incident that is said to have occurred in 1884 or in 1885. The vice-president I think is dead. Now, Mr. Wells will deny it. No doubt about that. And what better situation are we in ? Are we going to call the man who heard him say it ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You may if you like.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Eldridge is in the city.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then let us have both men up, if you must persevere, but I do think it is beneath the dignity of the Senate. A matter that occurred twenty years ago is not worth taking up. Nobody would believe Wells if he came forward and swore to it.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I would.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was a member of parliament at the time. I think I should have some interest in it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman did not get any of the money.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not at all afraid of my reputation at the hands of a gentleman like Mr. Wells, and I think no other hon. member need be.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—While admitting the position taken by my hon. friend is logical, that the situation is indeed serious and grave, I feel like treating the whole thing with absolute contempt. They have never had enough money diverted from the public funds and from the policy-holders in that company to buy any member of this or the other House or affect their votes. The accusation is too far in the past, and comes from too low a source to affect us to such an extent as to justify us in calling either of these men to the bar to justify their malignity towards this or the other House. I will vote against the motion.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Lest the House should decide to reject the motion that has been made, I take the opportunity of stating that I am most anxious that a full investigation should be held by having Mr. Wells before the bar of the House and questioning him as to the truth of the statement that is contained in the allegation which has just been read. My hon. friend the Secretary of State pooh-poohs the whole thing. He says it was twenty years ago. But the press throughout this Dominion have come out recently and quoted the very words and what more have they done ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—And Wells will deny it. What position are you in then ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Are we not entitled to the denial ? I was a member of that committee, and sat in parliament, and was there when this legislation was passed, and my name is published in the press today as one of those who is charged with having been bribed, bought, approached.

Some hon. MEMBERS—No, no.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Yes, the statement is that the committee were bought. I want the fullest investigation. I think it is but fair to those who were members of that committee that that investigation should be held when Mr. Wells is here.

My hon. friend the leader of the opposition was there as well as myself. There are a few of us left. The hon. gentleman who made the motion was there. Why, in justice to us, should not that man when he is here, be asked to come before the bar of the House, and if he says that the statement made by him is true, then we want to know the particulars. We want to know what he has to say about it. And Mr. Eldridge is here, let him come also and clear up the whole matter. We do not want to bear the stigma.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It will be the first time, I think, in the history of this parliament that we shall be conducting an inquiry from our seats, and questioning witnesses behind the bar.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. Let him read back and instruct himself.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Here is a committee, vested with powers to employ counsel, and make an investigation, and it happens that that Mr. Wells is mentioned in the declaration of the hon. gentleman from Rothesay and will be one of the principal witnesses to appear before that committee.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend is anticipating the committee; that is not right. He is accusing me and defending the company to a certain extent, and at the same time anticipating what we are going to do.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I am defending nobody, great or small, and I have already stated so, and I think the hon. gentleman should take my word for it and not, by innuendo or otherwise, repeat such an assertion. I say there has been a committee appointed to investigate the affairs of the Mutual Reserve Company. Mr. Wells is here to testify before that committee, and I take it from the declaration of the gentleman from Rothesay that Mr. Eldridge is here in the city also, so that the two parties who are connected with this declaration will be heard before that committee, and, if they have any witnesses to bring, they will produce them and examine them and cross-examine them if they want to. Why should we duplicate that inquiry by bringing those parties before the bar and give such importance to an affirmation in which no one in or around parliament takes any stock?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It was considered of sufficient importance by the hon. member from Toronto to read the declaration to this House and give it publicity it never had before, and the journals of the two larger provinces—I am not in a position to say what the maritime provinces have done, because I have not read their newspapers—but the journals of Ontario and Quebec have commented on the statement of Mr. Wells and have left the impression on the minds of many persons who have read them that there was corruption.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Does the hon. gentleman not think that the investigation will be more complete and easier before the committee than before the bar of the House?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, it will not, because if they come before the bar of the House the reporters of the different newspapers and our own reporter will be here, and it will receive a publicity that it would not receive if it came up before the committee for investigation.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The question before the House is on certain charges preferred by the hon. gentleman from Rothesay. He stated that the charges were made, and he read from a letter of Mr. Wells certain statements and allegations respecting this company which were the subject-matter of an investigation which had been made by the Insurance Department of the state of New York upon precisely the same charges, made by the same person, and couched in the same language, and I called the attention of the House to those charges, that they were the same charges that had been investigated already by that department, and that the department had reported against the truth of the charges. In order to identify the charges, I pointed out that the charges were made by the same Mr. Wells, and he was identified by the affidavit that was made before the commissioner, who reported upon it, and I read the extracts from the report as to what was contained in certain papers that were before the superintendent. Now, if that contains any charge against these gentlemen who were named as having been recipients of $10,000 at the time, it seems to me that is a much more important matter and requires a very different kind of investigation from that which it would get by summoning some one to the bar of this House and getting an answer yes or no. If it is of sufficient consequence to be taken up in the interest either of the House or any individual member of it, or any one who has been a member of this House or a member of parliament who is entitled to an investigation here in any way, then it should be done in a manner which will enable the investigation to be thorough, searching and not merely a whitewash by an answer being made at the bar of the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What does the hon. gentleman mean by a whitewash ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—By an answer being given at the bar of the House giving a negative to any such statement.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why should he not be permitted to give a negative to it ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Supposing he did, what would that amount to ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It would settle the question.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It seems to me it would only open the matter.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—All right let it be opened.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I think it would be unbecoming to the dignity of this House. It would be unworthy of the men who stand charged to have that simple kind of whitewash at the bar of the House, and to say that would be an end of the matter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—To whom does the hon. gentleman refer when he talks about whitewash ?

Hon. Mr. KERR—I mean anybody who stands charged with being the recipient of the money.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then when a man makes a statement that another man made the charge and that man denies it, that is a whitewashing of the members of parliament. That is what you say ?

Hon. Mr. KERR—No.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then take the responsibility. Let the world know what this man has to say with reference to that. If he says the statement made by Mr. Wells is perjury, then the world can judge of the truth of the two.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I was a member of parliament, unfortunately, at the time this was said to have occurred, and, while I have as much respect for the dignity of the House, even if the affair occurred years ago, I think it would be entirely improper to call Mr. Wells to the bar of the House to make a denial when Mr. Eldridge can be called as a witness on the same question. The one man's word may be as good as the other, and it may be that Mr. Wells, in order to make up his expense account, made that statement and if parliament wishes to be seized of all the facts, why not appoint a commission or grant to this committee full powers to send for Eldridge and Wells, and have them face to face, not simply to accept that denial of Mr. Wells. Perhaps Mr. Wells would not be as brave before Mr. Eldridge as he would be before the bar of the House. I do not know either of them, but I think the proper course would be to hear Eldridge as well as Wells.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the other man denies it, let it go on record. He may not deny it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Does the hon. gentleman propose summoning Eldridge ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, we have Eldridge's statement.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—What a farce it would be. Wells would say 'no,' and that would be the end of it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—why does the hon. gentleman refuse an opportunity to the one man——

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Mr. Wells is an honourable gentleman, and he must not be reflected upon by anticipating statements as to what he will say.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We know all about that.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Eldridge has been here hobnobbing for the last two months and we can get him.

Hon Mr. WATSON—Supposing Eldridge says that Wells told him he spent $10,000 at that time, and Wells denies it, what better position are we in ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is for the House to say.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I was a member of the House of Commons at the time, and I do not wish that any person should come here and say that he did spend $10,000 twenty years ago to secure legislation. I do not think it reflects upon my character at all, and I never heard anybody suggest that I received a portion of it. It is certainly trifling with the privilege and dignity of the House to ask Wells to come here and be examined on the matter when any one can gamble everything he owns that he will say he did not make that statement. He is in the city and can be examined, and if it is necessary that that portion of his evidence should go to the public it can be reported and published.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—When the statement was quoted, I thought it a most improper one for the hon. gentleman to read to the Senate in advocacy of his cause.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I am sorry the hon. gentleman thinks so.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I do not care whether the hon. gentleman is sorry or not, but I thought it was very improper. There are hon. gentlemen here who are interested in this statement, and they ask that the man be put on oath before the Senate and asked whether he made that statement in New York, and the statement that he will make before the bar of the House will have the same publicity as the statement forged by Eldridge and quoted by an hon. senator in this House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Who will believe him ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—They will believe him as well as the other man.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Our committee will not receive the same publicity in regard to these matters. It will be buried in the report, and I think it is only fair to the hon. members of this House and parliament that a straight denial on oath shall go on record in the records of the Senate in regard to that statement. It is not a slight matter, and as the hon. gentleman from Wellington has said, it has been taken up by the Ontario press and it is quoted that parliament has been corrupt not only to-day but in the past.

Hon. Mr. JONES—It appears to me that if the gentleman named Mr. Wells is to be examined before the House, and there has been some evidence to warrant an hon. member in stating in the course of the debate that a certain Mr. Eldridge had made an affidavit that such a thing had happened, then it would seem to me if we want to get at the facts we ought to have Mr. Eldridge before the bar of the House to begin with, and question him. Probably we would learn from Mr. Eldridge of some other gentleman who had heard this remark or seen this statement, or had seen an account rendered to this insurance company, or such further information as would enable this House to judge of the relative merits of these two gentlemen should we find that they disagree. For that reason it would seem to me that if it is desirable to have the statements of these men for the purposes indicated, we ought to have it in such a way as would leave no doubt in the minds of the people of the country, those who, under present circumstances, might think there was something in it, that the whole matter had been sifted by the Senate, and we knew the conditions and that there was simply nothing in it, or that there was something in it. We ought to feel satisfied about that. Now, we have one gentleman, Mr. A——, who says that Mr. B—— says so and so. B—— is brought before the House and says : "I did not say it,' it does seem to me that that will not be very great evidence to go before the people of Canada to clear the members of the other House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What better evidence could you have ?

Hon. Mr. JONES—Fortunately I was not a member of this or the other House at the time, but I do not feel that any gentleman who was a member of either House would think that the conditions are such that publicity of the denial is needed to clear this House or the other House from an insinuation that is quite beneath any hon. gentleman to make, and it is making a great deal too much of it possibly. But if it is worth while to make anything of it, it is worth the while of this House to make so much of it, that we will have a better idea than we would have if we only asked A—— if he had said to B—— so and so, and if so was D—— present ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—One has already sworn to it.

Hon. Mr. JONES—Let us have the man who swore to it. We might get the accounts from the company's books. That would show the money had been received by the man whom he swore rendered the statement, and in that way we might get some information that would be of some benefit ; but I do not think a plain bald denial would count.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—The question interesting to the members of this House or the country is not what A—— might have told B—— or what B—— might have told some body else, or not what Wells told Eldridge. The question that came up in the debate, and the question reported in the papers was that Wells had paid $10,000 to corrupt members of parliament of Canada. The fact that Mr. Wells is in the city makes it right and proper that he should be brought before the bar of this House to declare under oath if he paid ten thousand dollars to members of parliament, and, if so, to whom it was paid. It is not a question whether he told A—— or B——. It was stated Wells paid this money and if he is brought before the bar of the House he can be asked if he paid it and to whom.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am surprised at the hon. leader of the opposition attaching any importance to that statement. I am sure that it does not deserve any consideration.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then it should not be brought before parliament.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—At all events, if any importance is to be attached to it, I think that the proper course would be for the committee to look into it. The chairman of the committee has stated that they are going to have the books of the company brought before the committee. Let them go into the accounts and ascertain whether there was $10,000 or anything else charged in the books for the purpose of securing legislation in Canada, and let them examine the matter and be in a position to make a report to this House as to whether there is anything in the statement or not. If we proceed as suggested by the motion, we will require to have every question authorized by the House before it is put, and answered by the witness, and, as has been properly stated, the question is not as to whether such a statement was made, but as to whether any sum has been paid for the purpose, and that can only be ascertained by the books of the company where we can see if anything has been charged.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—I must take exception to the remarks of the hon. gentleman. I fail to see that that would be any value whatever. If the vice-president of that company, to cover up certain acts of his own, entered a charge in the books that would be no evidence. It was stated that Wells paid that money. He is in the city at the present time, and the proper way would be to bring him before the bar of the House to declare if he paid it, and to whom.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Companies do not generally enter those things in their books.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the hon. leader of the government should take another stand in this matter. Here is a question which reflects on the hon. members of another government, and members of this House. A grave accusation has been made by those parties and I think the hon. leader of the House, who is the guardian of the honour of parliament, should take the matter in hand himself. As the proposer of the motion I am willing to withdraw and let him make the motion as a government motion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think I am quite as sensitive of my own reputation and honour as any hon. gentleman in the chamber. I was a member of parliament at the time, and I certainly think we are making a great deal out of a trifling affair. Mr. Wells will make a denial. No one will believe him unless you cross-examine Eldridge and compel him to bring forward other witnesses, which leads to an interminable inquiry. It is not a matter the Senate can undertake, and it does not comport with the dignity of the House. I felt humiliated when I heard we were going to inquire into a charge made by a person in New York twenty years ago. Nobody outside will believe the statement of Wells.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Why was the accusation made in the House? The hon. gentleman did not protest at the time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I paid no attention to it at the time. I said to the gentlemen around me, 'It is a perfect absurdity. I knew all about the circumstances at the time, and the charge was an absurdity.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. minister is not very complimentry to the hon. gentleman from Toronto.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Well, nobody paid any attention to it in the way in which my hon. friend takes it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman can speak for himself, but not for others.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I am just going to say a few words in the way of fatherly advice at twenty minutes to twelve. This House should not hesitate, if a member feels aggrieved, whether the incident occurred one year or twenty years ago, to afford an opportunity to clear that member of an accusation which he resents. So far as an opportunity is concerned, I am heartily in accord with the gentlemen who have spoken in favour of having it cleared up. As to the method proposed, I must say that it is a most inconvenient way of dealing with a matter of this kind. When we had an investigation a few years ago into a matter affecting the honour of this House we adopted the very businesslike course of referring it to a special committee, and, in that way went over the whole ground and examined the matter carefully and arrived at a report which we presented to the House. I wish to point out one little matter in connection with the practice, which hon. gentlemen will see is a very inconvenient and cumbersome way of dealing with a witness. At page 164, referring to a witness after he is brought before the bar of the House, Bourinot states:

> As a matter of correct practice, when a member asks a question it should be put to the House, and it being agreed to, the witness must answer distinctly and audibly, as soon as he has read it. In case a member objects to a question on any ground, he must state his objections, and the Speaker will decide. If the evidence of a witness cannot be completed in one day, his further attendance will be postponed till a future time.

The SPEAKER—That is in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—On page 63 the heading is:

> Power to summon and examine witnesses.—Procedure—The Senate and the House of Commons have undoubtedly the right, inherent in them as legislative bodies, to summon and compel the attendance of all persons, within the limits of their jurisdiction.

That paragraph deals with the Senate, the House of Lords and the House of Commons without making any distinction.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is a distinction in the second paragraph.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The procedure is laid down that the question has to be agreed to by the House and submitted to the witness, and I submit that is a very cumbersome way of doing business. But would it not be better, inasmuch as there is a committee with power to examine witnesses under oath, that a special day be set apart and have those men summoned before that committee as we did in the other case, a special day being set apart to clear up this one point? I think you will have the matter in better shape, a more thorough investigation and more satisfaction to hon. gentlemen, because I am one of those who believe that there is no foundation whatever in the charge and that when you have examined the witnesses in the way I suggest you will have better results, and it will be more satisfactory to all concerned.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. gentleman mean the committee that has been appointed or a committee of the House?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I said the committee already appointed, inasmuch as they are clothed with power to examine witnesses under oath, and I would set apart a special day and gentlemen who feel aggrieved could appear with counsel and have their witnesses examined as they saw fit and clear up the whole matter. That would be my suggestion.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This charge against the parliament of Canada is alleged to have been made by one of these gentlemen who have been hurling all kinds of accusations against each other in New York in reference to the affairs of this Mutual Reserve Life Association. I do not think, from the attention I have given to their recriminations and accusations against each other, that they are entitled to a very great amount of respect. I have very little doubt whatever that this statement was made. I have very little doubt about that, but I have no doubt whatever that it was false, that this person lied when he made the statement, and I have very little doubt that he would come to this House and swear he never said it. That is my appreciation of him. I think, possibly, that it would be well that we should adjourn this debate and have time to think it over. I move that the debate be adjourned.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I wish to answer the hon. gentleman who has just quoted Bourinot at page 164. I think he forgot to read a part of the quotation he wanted to make, and it would be fair that I should read it to the House. This is what Bourinot says :

> When the witness appears, at the bar of the House, each question will be written out and handed to the Speaker, who, strictly speaking, should read it to the witness ; but on certain occasions a considerable degree of latitude is allowed for the convenience of the House, and questions put directly by members have been supposed to be put through the Speaker.

That portion was omitted.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Go on.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not see why the hon. gentleman omitted that part. All the obstacles foreseen by the hon. gentleman may be removed, and his objection falls to the ground. I have no objection at all to add to my motion to have the other party examined at the bar. The accusation was made in this chamber and sent broadcast through the country, and we want the reparation to have the same publicity as the accusation.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I move, in amendment, that Messrs. Wells and Eldridge be both examined before the committee which has the matter in hand.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman has no right to make a motion.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Why ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Because the hon. gentleman has spoken.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I do not want the hon. gentleman to dictate to me. I know my rights in this House as well as the hon. gentleman. I am responsible to this House for my own conduct and not to the hon. gentleman ; he is not my keeper, nor does he require to suggest to me when I should get up in this House or sit down. I am quite within my rights to move the amendment to bring these men before the committee, where they can be sworn and examined by the counsel that the committee may appoint. He is one of the judges and ought to be able to conduct the examination of these men, and it may be found that Mr. Wells may have said this, and it may be Mr. Wells may have paid out this money, and in order to give some excuse for spending the money he blamed it on the government of Canada. If the honour of parliament is to be maintained, let us do it in decency and bring the matter before this committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I presume, from the position taken by the hon. gentleman from Lincoln, that he believes Mr. Eldridge.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—No, I said it is possible Wells may have got the money.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman said that he would not believe Mr. Wells ; are we to understand he believes Mr. Eldridge ?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I said nothing of the kind. I would not give a snap of my finger for Mr. Wells' denial ; it amounts to nothing. We ought to have Wells and Eldridge before the committee together.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Nobody objects to that. But if the hon. gentleman would not give a snap of his finger for Wells' denial, the inference is that he would believe Eldridge. The hon. gentleman boasted of his knowledge of parliamentary procedure, as well as the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, but I question whether that motion, to authorize the appearance of any witness before a committee which has been appointed by this House to make an investigation would be ruled in order. The power rests with the committee, and unless the House has some other instructions to give the committee a motion of that kind would be unprecedented. I do not think it is necessary to discuss the question as to the mode and manner of conducting the examination. Most of us know pretty well what it is. I had a severe task of that kind a great many years ago. Many questions were suggested by myself and others which had to be put through the Speaker, and when the Speaker would put the question some hon. gentleman would rise and say: 'That is not a proper question to put,' and the House would have to decide whether the question should be put or not. It came up particularly in the Reil matter, and many of the questions that I put were ruled out of order and I had to combat all the lawyers in the House, being only a layman; but I did then as I usually do, I tried to enforce whatever opinions I had, and the object I had in view was successfully accomplished. I cannot understand the position taken by hon. gentlemen of the Senate on a matter of this kind, a statement which reflects upon the honour of parliament. I am surprised that the Secretary of State should take this position, and that he should be followed by almost every hon. gentleman who supports the government, in order to prevent a man who is alleged to have made a statement which is damning in its character, making a denial of that statement because they say they would not believe him under oath. It matters not whether we believe him or not. The statement has been sworn to by one person. Let us have the statement of the other and I have no objection that both men should be called, as the hon. gentleman from Toronto suggests.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—My hon. friend should not impute motives to me.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not impute motives.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The hon. gentleman said that because I would not believe Wells I would necessarily believe Eldridge. I stated before the hon. gentleman took that stand that I knew neither of them, and I am not in a position to judge as between them, but what I do say and what I think for the object which the hon. gentleman had in view it would be better to have both these men properly summoned before the committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Nobody objects to that.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—And I simply say, as far as I am personally concerned—and I believe as far the the country is concerned—that the mere denial of Mr. Wells before the House would be insignificant in comparison with an examination before the committee.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I do not wish to say a word. I feel like the sexton in the church when the audience was reduced to himself. He told the minister when he left him the key, that when he got through he could lock the door. I was going to suggest to the hon. gentleman from Lincoln that instead of voting against the adjournment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, he could simply leave it to the hon. gentlemen who feel aggrieved. Here are two gentlemen speaking with sincerity and they feel deeply the insult and imputation cast on their honour. A man's honour is the greatest possession he has, and these gentlemen, who are not ordinary members of parliament, they are not of the rank and file either in the House of Commons or in the Senate, are entitled to some consideration, more particularly the hon. leader of the opposition. I think he is pre-eminently entitled to the consideration of this House, and if he says he feels aggrieved by the statement that has been made public, and suggests that this method ought to be taken to give him satisfaction, I do not see why on earth we should not accept, even though we may not feel that it is quite in accordance with what we think correct practice; still in view of his great services he should be conceded the request which he seems to think the better way to bring this man before the bar of the House.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER—The motion of the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island is out of order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. I claim the hon. gentleman from Lincoln had no right to move that amendment; he had made his speech and he had no right after having resumed his seat to make this motion.

The SPEAKER—He made the motion when standing up in his place and then he sat down to reduce the motion to writing, which I think is perfectly correct. The motion is in order.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The rule provides that when the Speaker decides a question of order he shall cite the rule upon which he does decide.

The SPEAKER—Rule 20 reads as follows:

A senator may speak to any question before the Senate or upon a question or an amendment to be proposed by himself or upon a question of order arising out of the debate.

The hon. gentleman has done that? I do not see what the question is.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has the hon. Speaker acceded to the request I made. When the Speaker rules he cites the rule upon which he gives the decision. If the Speaker decides that the hon. gentleman from Lincoln did not speak before making the motion then we understand the ruling.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I did not speak before the motion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman did two or three times.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I think my word is as good as the hon. gentleman's.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—It could be decided by reference to the stenographer. If the hon. gentleman spoke for two minutes it would stand in the way of his moving an amendment, and if he had made a speech and sat down, according to the rules of the House, and the House of Commons and the House of Lords in England, he has now no right to make a motion.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I spoke on the second reading of the Bill. I said nothing more until I moved this amendment.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—If the hon. gentleman spoke on the second reading of the Bill then he made his speech and he cannot make this motion.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The hon. gentleman must take the hon. member's word.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I refer to rule 28.

The SPEAKER—Rule 28 reads as follows:

The Speaker stands uncovered when speaking to the Senate and if called upon to explain a point of order or practice, he is to state the rule applicable to the case.

I was not called upon to explain anything. I simply ruled that the hon. gentleman from Lincoln had not spoken.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman from Stadacona raised a point of order stating that the hon. gentleman had no right to make the motion on the ground that he had spoken. Then I turn to another rule, which declares that a member can speak only once to any question, and the principle is laid down by all the authorities, Bourinot and Todd and all the other commentators, that no one can move an amendment after he has spoken to a question, and the fact that a member rises and then sits down deprives him of the right of speaking again or of making a motion. I think my hon. friend from Killarney who has had a great deal of experience as Speaker of the House in Manitoba will corroborate my construction of the rules.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Quite correct.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the Speaker rules the hon. gentleman had not spoken before, and that he was within his right, I am not going to question it.

The SPEAKER—The hon. leader of the opposition is rather fond I think of reflecting on the decisions which I make.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I deny that, and the Speaker has no right to impute motives to me. The Speaker has no more right in this House than any member of it, and has no right to stand up and say I am desirous of reflecting—

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Order, order.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am in order.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No, the hon. gentleman is not in order when the Speaker is on his feet.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, I am quite right and when the hon. gentleman has more experience he will know it.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken; I did not reflect on him. I simply said he was rather fond of differing from the decisions which I make.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I deny that, and it is an improper statement to make, and it is not true.

The SPEAKER—I am in the judgment of the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And so am I.

The SPEAKER—I have been a member of this House for twenty-seven years, and I have never known a Speaker to be treated in the manner in which I have been treated.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think any Speaker has ever acted as our hon. Speaker has.

Some hon. MEMBERS—Order, order.

The SPEAKER—That was by the way. I say that the only question—and I am in the judgment of the House again—that the only question that was raised was whether the hon. gentleman from Lincoln had spoken or not. I did not hear the hon. gentleman speak, and I took the hon. gentleman's statement; and, not having spoken, he had a right to move the amendment, and there was no necessity for pointing out any rule. It was simply a question of fact, and I took the hon. gentleman's statement and the evidence of my own senses.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—After which we had a lesson from the hon. leader of the opposition.

The amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Lincoln was carried.

The Senate adjourned.

TRANS-CANADA RAILWAY COMPANY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired:

1. Whether the Trans-Canada Railway Company has made overtures to the government to obtain a subsidy to aid in the construction of a railway from Quebec to Port Simpson?
2. What is the nature of the subsidy asked?
3. What is the amount per mile, and for how many miles?
4. Has this request for subsidies been recommended by any one, and by whom?
5. Does the government intend to grant the aid asked for?
6. Have any negotiations taken place between the government and the Trans-Canada Railway Company, or any party whatever, with the view of inducing the Trans-Canada Railway Company to give up its charter for any part of its line intended to become a part of the National Transcontinental Railway?
7. As a matter of fact or policy, will the National Transcontinental Railway travel over the ground and serve the country the Trans-Canada intended to cover?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answers are as follows:—

1. Yes.
2. The subsidy asked for the government to guarantee interest on bonds to the extent of $20,000 per mile first mortgage bonds for thirty years for 450 miles from Roberval to James Bay; also $3,200 to $6,400 per mile for 35 miles from Port Simpson eastward.
3. No. 2 answers No. 3.
4. Quebec Board of Trade, St. John Board of Trade, and other bodies.
5. By Act 1st, Edward VII., chap. 57, 1903, 100 miles granted a subsidy from Roberval towards James Bay.
6. This department is not aware of any negotiations having taken place.
7. Cannot say.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE moved the second reading of Bill (No. 86) An Act to amend the Criminal Code, 1892, respecting the punishment of Fraudulent Debtors.

He said: This Bill is an exact copy of the Bill which was passed last year by this honourable House, but it was passed too late to be considered by the House of Commons. It was taken up at the beginning of the present session and passed in the House of Commons. The provisions are borrowed from the imperial Act. It is for the purpose of requiring merchants who buy on credit to keep proper books of account. The Bill contains only one clause.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Might I ask my hon. friend if this Bill was introduced in the House of Commons as a government measure?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—No, it was introduced by a private member in the other House.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (67) An Act respecting the Ontario Accident Insurance Company.—(Hon. Mr. Coffey.)

Bill (I) An Act to amend the Act respecting the jurisdiction of the Exchequer Court as to railway debts.—(Hon. Mr. Beique.)

KING'S SHILLING LEGAL TENDER BILL DROPPED.

The Order of the Day being called:

Second reading Bill (E) An Act to make the King's shilling legal tender in Canada.—(Hon. Mr. Domville.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I gave a full explanation of this Bill and the objections to it when it was up last week. Out of courtesy to the hon. gentleman who promoted it, the Bill was allowed to stand over until he was present. I had intimated to the hon. Senator from Rothesay that the government did not think it wise that the Bill should pass, inasmuch as it was going to disturb the currency of the country and that provision had already been made to meet the cases that he brought to the notice of the House, that persons landing with foreign money would be able to exchange it at offices which had already been provided at Halifax, St. John and Quebec. In view of that fact I suppose the hon. gentleman will allow the Bill to drop.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I am only too glad to accede to the suggestion of the hon. Secretary of State. My object was to enable people arriving in this country to get their money exchanged at fair rates, and to protect them from sharpers. The hon. gentleman assures me that they will be protected from sharpers when they land, and I am therefore willing to let the Bill drop.

The Order of the Day was discharged.

NORTHERN BANK BILL.

SECOND READING POSTPONED.

The Order of the Day being called:

Second reading Bill (K) An Act respecting the Northern Bank.—(Hon. Mr. Watson.)

Hon. Mr. LANDRY said: I call the attention of the House to the fact that this Bill is not printed in either language. I have not offered any objection to the second reading of some of the Bills on the orders which have not been printed in French, but in this case the Bill has not been printed yet.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—If the hon. gentleman objects I must only let the Bill stand.

The Order of the Day was discharged.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (106) An Act to incorporate the Chicoutimi and Northeastern Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Domville.)

Bill (109) An Act to incorporate the Montreal, Nipissing and Georgian Bay Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Toronto.)

Bill (116) An Act respecting certain patents of the Canadian General Electric Company, Limited, and others.—(Hon. Mr. Gibson.)

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the House adjourns, I would ask the hon. Secretary of State if he has had any opportunity to confer with the Minister of Agriculture on the question which was raised in the House yesterday concerning the speech of Lord Dundonald?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The subject has been considered, and the report in the paper has been investigated. It is under consideration now, and at a very early period the House will be informed of the result.

The Senate adjourned.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, reported Bill (34) An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company.

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER—In the absence of the hon. gentleman from de Lorimier, I beg to move that the Bill be read a third time on Thursday next.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I direct the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to this special Bill. It is a Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Bill, to confirm an agreement that the hon. Secretary of State will bring up on Tuesday next. That agreement has not yet been passed upon by the Senate, and this is a sort of snap judgment on that Bill. Not only does it seek to confirm that agreement, but it varies its conditions. It asks for new conditions, although the agreements are not yet before us for ratification. I shall read the Bill, and send it over to the hon. Secretary of State that he may read it for himself. The first clause of the Bill reads as follows :—

1. The agreement bearing date the twenty-ninth day of July, one thousand nine hundred and three, a copy of which forms the schedule to the National Transcontinental Railway Act, and the supplemental agreement between His Majesty, represented by the Honourable H. R. Emmerson, Minister of Railways and Canals, and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company (hereinafter called 'the Company'), bearing date the eighteenth day of February, one thousand nine hundred and four, a copy of which forms the schedule to the Act of the parliament of Canada, passed at the present session.

Well, the Act is not yet passed. The clause continues :

And intituled 'An Act to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act,' and the execution of the said two agreements respectively, is hereby confirmed and declared to be valid, subject to the provisions of the said Acts.

It declares those agreements, which have not been ratified by parliament, as being valid. It does not stop there but it adds amendments by reducing the capital stock from two millions to one million and it also takes power to issue bonds for certain purposes, to pay for rolling stock and pay contractors and other things of that kind. It also has conditions about making necessary agreements for mortgages and agreements of other kinds, and to make fresh agreements with the government. I think the whole thing is ill-advised and out of place. Why not wait till the main Bill is passed. I believe the intention is to delay the third reading of the Bill now before the House until the main Bill is passed, but what is the occasion for it.

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER—I made a motion for the third reading for next Thursday, but it is well understood that the motion will not be pressed until the Bill in question shall be passed. If there is reason to postpone the third reading still further, there will be no objection.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It will pass by Thursday.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD—But it contains a statement not in accordance with the facts. It confirms an Act supposed to have been already passed at this session of parliament.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That Act is not yet passed ; and it will only speak from the time it passes. It does not speak from this date, and if the third reading is postponed until after the other Bill has been passed there can be no objection. I have not had an opportunity to look at the amendments. My hon. friend does not propose to bring it up until Thursday and it can be postponed again.

Hon. Sir ALPHONSE PELLETIER—It can be deferred till a later date if necessary.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The Transcontinental Railway Bill is set down for second reading on Tuesday. If it is gone on with it will be passed before Thursday, surely.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Not much. I don't think.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Thursday or three months hence.

The motion was agreed to.

THE PEAT FUEL INDUSTRY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN inquired:

In view of the dependence of a large part of Canada upon a foreign country for its fuel supply, as demonstrated by the recent fuel famine, is it the intention of the government to take measures to encourage the peat fuel industry?

If so, in what form?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The subject has not yet been considered by the government. I think there have been several petitions presented, and several ministers have been interviewed, but no action has been so far taken, and therefore I cannot anticipate what the judgment of council may be. I will call the attention of my hon. colleagues to the question put by the hon. senator from Wellington, however.

AN ADJOURNMENT.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN moved:

That when the House adjourns to-day it stand adjourn until Tuesday afternoon at three o'clock.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is really nothing on the order paper for Monday but one order, and I see no object in bringing the hon. gentlemen until Tuesday.

The motion was agreed to.

THE CHIEF FRENCH TRANSLATOR.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved the third report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I am surprised at the salary fixed for the chief translator in paragraph 9 of the report. My recollection is that the salary fixed was $2,100, but I see in this paragraph it is $2,200.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The salary agreed upon was $2,200.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—The committee recommend the appointment of a gentleman whom I do not know to the important position of chief French translator. We do not know anything as to his qualifications. He produced a letter from Mr. McGee, the clerk of the Privy Council, but I do not know that Mr. McGee is an expert in the matter of translation. A letter was also produced from Sir Wilfrid Laurier, which certainly deserves consideration, but, if I am correctly informed, the gentleman who is recommended for the appointment is an officer in Sir Wilfrid Laurier's department. We know how these letters are sometimes obtained. A kind hearted man does not refuse such a letter when applied to, but I do not think that in this case it should be accepted as evidence of the young man's qualifications. He has not been a translator. It is due to the French members of this House that the man appointed to the position of chief French translator should be competent, and that can only be decided after he has undergone an examination. A few years ago the House of Commons had complaints about the translation of the Commons 'Hansard' and they decided that all translators should be subjected to an examination. It has proved beneficial. In this case also I should like the Senate to take the same course. I therefore move:

That this report be not now concurred in but that the same be referred back to the committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts with instructions to have the applicants for the position of chief translator of the Senate submitted to an examination as to their qualification for the work.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—This matter was very fully discussed in the committee yesterday morning. The hon. gentleman from St. Boniface suggests that any person might get a letter such as was presented to us by Mr. Lelièvre, from the Prime Minister as an act of kindness. This honourable House will not for a moment believe that the premier would give a letter recommending this gentleman as translator to the Senate unless he was competent to fill the position, because, in a sense, the Prime Minister is responsible really for the translator. I have no personal knowledge as to whether Mr. Lelièvre is competent to fill the important position of French translator, having no knowledge of French myself, but I am assured by gentlemen who ought to know what they are speaking of, that Mr. Lelièvre is a very competent man for the position, and it appears to me that he being in the service and under the notice of the Prime Minister of Canada and the clerk of the Privy Council, who both recommend him, for the last nine years, it ought to be a sufficient guarantee to the committee and to this House that he is competent to perform that work. If, however, he should prove to be incompetent, which I think is very unlikely, I have no hesitation in saying as a member of the committee that I would be quite prepared to rescind his appointment and appoint somebody else to the position ; but until that is demonstrated to the Senate or to the Debates Committee, who would probably have more immediate supervision of his work, I would strongly urge that his appointment be confirmed. The Debates Committee will be in a position very shortly to know if Mr. Lelièvre is competent, because I understand he undertakes the duties which are assigned to him practically at once. The same suggestion was made in committee that has been made in the House to-day, and it was voted down by a large majority. It was suggested that there should be a sort of competition between the applicants. So far from any demand being made to appoint any one else to the position, the only name which was suggested was the one mentioned in the report. I therefore feel that the House ought to take it for granted for the present that Mr. Lelièvre is competent to fill the position and that the report should be adopted.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I cannot let this occasion pass without testifying to the ability of Mr. Lelièvre, although I have had nothing to do with his nomination. I have known Mr. Lelièvre for many years as an expert stenographer and typewriter in both languages.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—That is not a recommendation.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—He is an expert stenographer in French and English, and has had control of the premier's correspondence in both languages for the past seven years. His ability and knowledge of translation, especially translation, is quite extensive. He has been translating the documents of the Prime Minister for the past seven years and that ought to be ample guarantee that he is capable of discharging the duties of a French translator. As the chairman of the committee has said, if Mr. Lelièvre is incompetent I have no doubt he will himself at once withdraw, or the committee will ask him to resign. So far as I have known the gentleman as a secretary and translator of the two languages, from French into English and English into French, it would be very hard to find a better man.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—The question of the appointment of a translator in this or the other House, and especially the appointment of chief translator, is very closely allied with the privilege of using French in parliament. It is a saying that unless a book is written in good French it is not a French book. You can call it mick-mack ; some call it by other words. I do not want hon. gentlemen to infer that the person who has been recommended here as chief translator is not capable, but I mean to say emphatically, that if he is qualified to occupy the position, he is able to do what no other man in this or any other Dominion could do, stand without preparation at the head of a department whose duties require a special training. It is not sufficient to know how to read and write English and French to be a translator. It is not sufficient to have been in the habit of writing letters in French or in English or of translating them from one language into the other, or to be a stenographer or to be a typewriter as my hon. friend suggests. Something more essential is needed, the proper training, and that training applies not only to one branch of literature but it applies to every matter that comes before parliament. First it applies to law. There are a great many lawyers and LL.B.'s and so on in this House. Who of us would undertake to translate such a thing as a Bill involving heavy damages and actions at law ? Who is there among us that could undertake to put into the hands of the King's Printer the translation of our laws ? I have taken precautions to know whereof I speak and I am informed that this gentleman has never translated laws. Yesterday I was speaking with the law officers of the House. Of course they have no observation to make but I know from experience about the difficulties to be met with in translating laws, and putting on record a book that stands as the original in French as well as in English. In the province of Quebec, they have the French translation of the laws and it is as much the law as the English text is. All our laws come before us in English, and they have then to be translated into French.

Is any man capable of doing that sort of work who has not had a special training ? I have been in the other House, and I can assure hon. gentlemen that in the Commons there was only Mr. Coursolle, the chief translator, who would translate the laws and he had as assistant one other translator especially trained to help him when there was too much work before him. He would not confide to the other translators, who are first rate men, writers many of them, the translation of laws ; he kept that duty for himself and he trained one assistant specially for the work. We have before us the letter from Sir Wilfrid Laurier recommending this man, but we all know how kind hearted he is. He wrote a letter stating that Mr. Lelièvre had given him satisfaction, and I believe he has. We have another letter from Mr. McGee, but Mr. McGee is no judge of what the French language is, or what the French law is. I saw Mr. McGee myself, and asked him about Mr. Lelièvre's translation. It appears this man has not done any translation for the last six or seven years. I say even a man of letters, a writer could not undertake the work, but Mr. Lelièvre is not even a writer. I am somewhat acquainted with the literature of this country and I have never seen in the newspapers or in any of the reviews one line from the pen of this gentleman. He may be a good writer but the proofs are wanting. As I said, even if he were a good writer, which I am unable to establish that would not be sufficient to entitle him to come in among our translators and occupy a position not at the foot of the ladder, but at the top, there not only to translate himself but to revise the translation of others. He has not only the laws to translate but any report or reports that may come before us from the minister who may happen to represent the government in this House. There is nothing more difficult to translate than the specifications of contracts for public works and railroad matters, and all those things come within the purview of the translators here. Is any man capable of doing that class of work or giving information and guidance to those under him who has not had a special training ? Then there are the fisheries reports, the agricultural reports, and the militia reports, all which require technical training. In the other House translators are appointed not exclusively for each class, but more particularly for all branches, with a chief that only qualifies for the position after a long service. Mr. Coursolle, though a Liberal in politics, was appointed translator by the Conservative government. Why ? Because of his especial qualifications. That is a position where politics should not enter. I would rather have the French language in the Senate abolished than have it go before the world improperly written. Not longer ago than yesterday I read in a newspaper that in Italy they say we talk patois here. We are not talking patois we are talking good French, possibly as good as they do in France. There is no reason why we should not write it as well. But in order to do that we have to choose men to represent us that have the capacity to do so. That question of capacity has so impressed itself on the members of the other House that two years ago when they had to appoint a translator for the 'Hansard,' the chief there, Mr. Larose, insisted on having the candidates for the position pass a competitive examination. There were nineteen applicants, I am told, and most of them lawyers. Many of them have their names before the public as writers; but only one of them proved to be very capable—some very incapable—more than half only passable, and only one out of nineteen was judged qualified for entering with honours on the translating staff. What is being done in the departments before promoting an employee to the position of chief clerk ? They exact examinations for promotion. We are asked by the committee to appoint a gentleman against whom I have nothing whatever. I believe him to be a gentleman with a good average knowledge of French and English, and in other respects I have heard him spoken of in complimentary terms. I have known him for a long time. He is all right as far as that is concerned, but what we ask is a reasonable proposition. We ask that he give us proof of his capacity as a translator, and if he does I shall not raise any objection to his appointment. If he can justify his claim I will bind myself to vote for him. If instead of a Frenchman representing a French minority in this chamber, things were reversed and my English friends were in the minority and were asking me to support the standard bearer of their language to represent them, I would stand by them because it would be a reasonable act and a respect that should be paid to a language such as the French or English language or in fact any language in the world. We are not asking to reject this report. It may be all right. If the gentleman will go before Mr. Coursolle and Mr. Boucher and one senator, and submit to an examination, though he may not be absolutely capable, if he has ordinary capacity I will vote for him. But I desire to have my objection recorded, so that if the proposition that I was almost amused to hear should be carried—that is, if he should not prove competent that we should dismiss him after he has lost the position he now occupies, which gives him $2,000 a year, he would only have himself to blame for it. I would dismiss him as incompetent if he failed in his examination. But I would not care to have an official dismissed after he is once appointed. I insist that before he be appointed he should be thoroughly tested. He should not be appointed at the risk of being turned out of doors if found incapable.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I desire to say a word in justification of my vote on this matter. In the first place, the officer is a French officer, and it has been the habit of the Committee on Contingencies to leave the appointment of French officers to the French members of the committee. We had several names presented to us besides the name of the gentleman contained in the report. That name came with the endorsation of Sir Wilfrid Laurier that he was a fit and proper person for the office of chief translator of the Senate. It came also with the endorsation of Mr. McGee that the gentleman had discharged all his duties satisfactorily in his office, and was well qualified for the position. In addition to that, the motion was made by a leading French gentleman on the opposite side of the House, the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière, and seconded by a leading French gentleman on this side of the House, the hon. gentleman from Stadacona. I said, under these circumstances, the gentleman has a high position now and the confidence of the Prime Minister, and we all know that the patronage of the House is now controlled by the government, and it must go to the government side of the House, as it went to the Conservative side when we had a majority. When I saw that the gentleman was recommended by the Prime Minister and by Mr. McGee and the motion was made by the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière, a French gentleman, and seconded by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, I said: 'I have no choice left but to support this gentleman as the most eligible name presented to the committee.'

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—In addition to what the hon. gentleman from Richmond has said, I may say that there was no other name proposed before the committee. I knew nothing of the four gentlemen who had applied for the position—I was entirely guided by the fact that the motion was moved by the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière and seconded by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona. In addition to that, we had a certificate from the Clerk of the Privy Council as to this gentleman's qualifications, and also the recommendation of the Prime Minister, and no one disputed either of the statements that were made by these gentlemen in the letters sent to the committee. If there had been any other name proposed, it would have been in the judgment of the committee to have decided between them. But as there was only one name proposed, what was the use of asking to send this gentleman to a committee to find out whether he was competent or not? Under these circumstances, as far as my vote is concerned, I shall stand by the recommendation of the committee.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—The fact that no other name has been proposed does not amount to anything. There were four or five applications before the committee, and it was moved that every one of them should undergo an examination and prove he was qualified to occupy the postion. That motion was rejected, not by a large majority, but by a sufficient majority to let us see that it was quite useless to propose any other name, so we did not propose any other name, because we have no objection personally to the gentleman that has been recommended for appointment. All we want is the most competent man to do the work, because it is important work. If he is able to undergo an examination, why should he not do so? That examination will prove his qualification, and then there will be no more objection to him. All we want is qualification. The fact that he has been translating letters from English to French or French to English is no evidence of his qualification for our work, because, when he translates in that way, he is under the supervision of the party who has dictated the letters, whilst in this work he will himself have to control and revise the translation of others. There is no comparison between the two works. Since this appointment seems to have been made on account of the recommendation of the Prime Minister, I may say that the action of the Prime Minister in recommending him before the committee is quite questionable. It amounts to this, that the Prime Minister is making the appointment for the Senate, and I must protest against that interference. For these reasons, I think that the amendment should be carried.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understand this gentleman has been for the last seven years with Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and before that was employed in the Privy Council office. and I think it is a most proper and natural thing for Sir Wilfrid Laurier to give him a certificate. Whom would you ask for a certificate? Would you ask some one who had no experience of his ability? He is a barrister of the province of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Let him go through the examination, and prove himself to be qualified.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend knows he is proposing something which has never been done before.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—It has been a misfortune.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Because it was by promotion in the case of Coursolle and the training was beyond a doubt.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not want to say anything about dead men, or the translators of the past, but if anything has been severely criticised in former years in my hearing it has been the translation in this chamber.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—And we want to avoid that in future.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We should not follow a better recommendation than that of the gentleman who had seven years' experience with him.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I)—I believe the gentleman who filled that office before had very long experience and training in it, and I understand he has been an officer of the House for forty-three years—and an employee of the province of Canada before confederation. His salary at the time of his death, I believe, had been increased to $2,400 a year, and that does not seem an unreasonable salary for a gentleman of his ability, who had been that length of time in the position, but to put a young man in there and give him almost the same salary which that gentleman was receiving after his long experience and training, is something very unreasonable. I believe if we are to put a young gentleman without any previous experience as translator at the head of a department of that kind, he ought to begin somewhere about the same salary that the late translator had, say fifteen or twenty years ago and not to begin almost with the extreme of salary that was allowed that gentleman, because it was coming near the end of his tenure of office when he would have to resign and his salary on that account was raised somewhat in order that he should have a larger superannuation than he would otherwise have been entitled to. I believe that this system of raising the salary of young persons going into office, and, as soon as they go in, putting them over the heads of those who have been in the department and giving them almost the same salary as the head of the department had before, is a vicious principle, and that not only in this particular office, but in regard to all the employees of the parliament of Canada, there should be some much better regulation than we have with respect to salaries. There should be a fixed scale which should not be departed from, for it does not seem very just and reasonable that employees of the Senate or of any department of the government should be allowed to button-hole a senator who happens to be on a committee which has the regulation of their salaries or the recommendation of the amounts they are to receive, for the purpose of getting their salaries advanced. This matter should be regulated by the Senate generally and the scale fixed, and that scale should not be departed from.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have another fact to add to this discussion and it is this : The gentleman whom the committee has selected has been in the service of this country for the past twenty-two years, employed under Sir John Macdonald's government in 1882, and has been occupied in the translation of the proclamations and other official documents of the Privy Council, difficult documents to translate, documents that have to be carefully prepared to go before the world. He was taken out of the translating department of the Privy Council and brought into the office of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and has been there employed as his confidential secretary in both languages, and I think that is quite sufficient to prove that he is able to fill the office to which he is now called.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Since the hon. gentleman refers to the documents translated from the Privy Council, I will mention something which I would not have otherwise referred to if the hon. gentleman had not brought forward that fact. I will ask the hon. senator if this gentleman who has been appointed was the translator of the speeches from the Throne recently ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No, not lately ; he has been private secretary.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—For the past few years the speeches from the Throne have been so badly translated that we could not send them abroad. We would have been ashamed of the translation.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It must not be insinuated that Mr. Lelièvre ever translated the speech from the Throne.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, he never had anything to do with it. They are under my control.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—The claims that have been advanced by the hon. gentleman from Victoria division, of long service, would certainly apply with much greater force to the other applicants for the position. There were other applicants who have been much longer in the service than the gentleman whom the committee has appointed, and some of them would be entitled to promotion to the office. Although I was not so much interested in that question as our French senators, I came to the conclusion that this gentleman who was likely to obtain the employment was the least competent of the applicants. It was for that reason I made a similar motion to the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface, that all the applicants should be submitted to an examination, and that whoever passed with the highest merit should be appointed. It was suggested then that the committee would simply decide, from the salary that should be paid, that we wished to secure the very best man for the position ; to give him a fair salary, but not to make the decision until there was an examination. I suggested the names of some leading senators, or, if they wish, to ask Mr. Boucher from this chamber and Mr. Coursolle from the Commons, who are both capable translators and capable of deciding to report which would be the most competent man. There are also other reasons why I think that report should be referred back to the committee. If the Secretary of State had been present at that committee some other matters which passed would scarcely have passed then. There is to be a special meeting of that committee next week to decide upon the salaries of several messengers and employees of the Senate, and I considered that there should be no advances made at this last meeting. All these matters should be considered by a special committee. A majority of the committee thought otherwise, and the matter should be left over until the leader of the House could be present. For that reason, I second the motion of the hon. gentleman from St. Boniface, that this report be referred back to the committee.

The Senate divided on the amendment, which was lost by the following vote :

SECOND READING.

Bill (K) An Act respecting the Northern Bank—(Hon. Mr. Watson.)

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (78) An Act respecting the Ottawa River Valley Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Domville.)

MUTUAL RESERVE LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS gave the following notice of motion :

That he will move that the select committee appointed to investigate the position of the Mutual Life Association in Canada be enlarged to twelve members by the addition of the following honourable senators : — Honourable Messrs. Cox, Watson, Wood, Lougheed, Béique, Gibson and Sir Alphonse Pelletier.

He said : I think it is important to have the number of the committee increased. The subject which the committee has been appointed to deal with is very important, and it is desirable that it should be conducted by a larger and more representative committee. The committee is too small. It consisted originally of five members, but Mr. Baker having declared his intention not to act, we are reduced now to four. The inquiry will probably last some time, and all the members of the committee may not be able to attend every meeting. Therefore, in order to have the work of the committee properly carried on, I think we should have its number enlarged, and for that reason I give notice that I shall move on Tuesday next that the number be increased by seven.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Under the circumstances, it would be very much better if the House would agree to accept the notice of motion as a motion. Otherwise it will simply defer the matter for two or three days longer, and I understand there are witnesses now in the city who have come along distance, and it will mean considerable expense keeping them here, whereas if we adopt the motion now the committee can go on without delay. The resignation of Mr. Baker was not accepted by the House, and, therefore, he continues to be a member of the committee. I felt from the very beginning that the committee named was not a representative one, and would not give satisfaction to the Senate or to the public outside. That opinion has been confirmed by the circumstances which I understand occurred today, so I should recommend strongly that the House accept the notice as a motion and enlarge the committee. The House will feel very much safer in having a larger committee. The gentlemen already appointed are not superseded, and Mr. Baker will no doubt act when the committee is enlarged. His objection was that he did not care to act on a small committee.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Does the hon. gentleman represent the unanimous opinion of the committee ? Does the hon. gentleman from Repentigny make his motion after conferring with his colleagues and getting their approval ?

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS—I do not represent the committee.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—No other member of that committee is present, and it seems to me that it would be better to let matters stand as they are.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—There must be a notice of this motion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There must be a notice if any one insists upon it, but the constant practice is in an emergency to waive notice. it is simply taking advantage of a technicality to postpone this inquiry. A number of witnesses are here, and they must be paid for their time. There is no doubt that the motion will be adopted by the House, and I suggest that it be allowed to go now.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—All the members of the committee, except the hon. gentleman who gave the notice of motion, are absent; therefore, I insist that notice must be given.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The hon. Secretary of State has remarked that it would facilitate the working of the committee if the motion were allowed to pass at present. I was going to suggest that if the motion were adopted as a matter of convenience, Bill (H), which was referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee by this House, should also be referred to this enlarged committee, so that they would deal with the whole matter. It would be the more business way of dealing with it, and the Bill might come back in a shape to afford relief to those having the greatest interest in this matter, the policy-holders in the company.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—The hon. gentleman from Repentigny (Hon. Mr. Legris) has given notice that he will make his motion on Tuesday next. If that is allowed to go not much time will be lost The House will not sit to-morrow or Monday, and if the motion is adopted on Tuesday the enlarged committee can meet the following Wednesday. It would be unfair to take advantage of the members of the committee who are not present to-day. I understand my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Legris) has made this motion without the knowledge of the other members on that committee. This matter is surrounded with so much mystery, I think the House, in justice to itself, should accept the notice given by the hon. member for Tuesday next. I object to the motion being made to-day.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from Montarville (Hon. Mr. DeBoucherville) has objected.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I give notice that on Tuesday next I will move that the order referring Bill (H) to the Banking and Commerce Committee be rescinded, and that the Bill be referred to the enlarged special committee to consider the position of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York in Canada.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday next at three o'clock.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Tuesday, June 14, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

NEW SENATOR.

The SPEAKER informed the House that there was a senator waiting to be introduced.

Hon. Mr. Thos. Ruben Black of Amherst, N.S., was introduced into the Senate by the Hon. Mr. Scott, Secretary of State, and the Hon. Mr. Templeman. The assistant clerk having read the commission, Mr. J. J. McGee, Clerk of the Privy Council, proceeded to administer the oath.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. I want to know what is the meaning of the ceremony that is taking place now, and why do we depart from the old custom.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will explain to my hon. friend. The Clerk of the Senate stated he had very important business in Montreal, and asked whether or not we could spare him for to-day. I told him I thought so. The Clerk of the Privy Council holds a dedimus potestatem to administer the oath at any time. The oath could have been administered outside, but I think it should always be administered in the Senate, and the precedent has usually been followed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Did the hon. Secretary of State say there were precedents for this procedure ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said that I presumed he might have been sworn outside but that the precedents all led to the swearing within the Senate chamber, and I hope that that will continue to be the practice, but there is no manner of doubt about Mr. McGee's power to administer the oath.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose that should be with the consent of the House ?

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I think not. I think it is regular, but it ought to have been explained to the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend from Richmond is quite right. I probably should have announced in advance the proceeding which was to take place. I can quite appreciate hon. gentlemen noting it is being something very unusual.

The Hon. Mr. Black then signed the roll.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before we go further, I think we should ventilate the matter a little more. Bourinot says :

The practice of introducing new senators is invariable in the upper chamber. The Speaker will state to the House whenever the clerk has received a certificate from the clerk of the Crown in Chancery that a new member has been summoned to the Senate. He will then inform the House, 'Hon. gentlemen a new member is without ready to be introduced.' The new member is then introduced between two senators, and presents at the table Her Majesty's writ of summons, which is read by the clerk and put upon the Journals. He will then subscribe the oath before the clerk, who is one of the commissioners appointed for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the usual programme. The clerk is one of the commissioners appointed for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But the authority says he will subscribe the oath before the clerk by repeating the words after that officer. We have here acting as an official a gentleman who is not on our staff, and I do not know under what authority a stranger can come here and take a place at the table.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume that the Governor General could be here and administer this oath. My hon. friend does not dispute that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not know.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Well, I do not hesitate to say he could. I do not think my hon. friend would take exception to it. Mr. McGee is the deputy of the Governor General for this purpose under dedimus potestatem, and holds a commission for that purpose. I think my hon. friend will not persist in pressing any objection.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I merely ask that it be entered in the minutes that such a procedure be not considered as a precedent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will see that that is done. The clerk has now received instructions and will see to that. It is not to form a precedent in the future. Mr. Chapleau, the clerk, as I have said, had business of some importance in Montreal, and could not be present to-day. It would have been much better if he could have been here, but I said I thought we could get on without him under the circumstances. I knew that Mr. McGee held the power for the purpose of swearing a senator.

The SPEAKER submitted a certificate from the Clerk of the Privy Council that the Hon. Mr. Black had made and subscribed the oath administered to senators on their introduction to the Senate.

Hon. Mr. Black then took his seat.

THE FRENCH STEAMER 'LE MALOU'.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General ; praying that His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House a copy of all reports made, since the opening of navigation, to the Department of the Interior on the subject of the French steamer 'Le Malou,' and more particularly a copy of the report of Doctor Potvin concerning this vessel.

The motion was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF THE SENATE RESTAURANT.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. MILLER moved :

That the clerk do place on the table of the House a statement of the disbursements and general expenses of the Senate restaurant during the five years next preceding December 31st, 1903.

The motion was agreed to.

HUDSON'S BAY EXPLORATION.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved :

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General ; praying that

His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House :

1. A statement showing, in so many distinct columns, the names and surnames, the age, rank, the domicile, the origin, of all the officers, sub-officers and men of the crew of the ship sent in 1903 to explore Hudson's Bay.

2. The name of the ship chartered for this expedition, its tonnage, the name of its owner, the price assigned for its service, the duration of this service.

3. The term of service of each of the men (officers, sub-officers, sailors. &c.) who composed the crew of this vessel.

4. All the correspondence relating to this expedition, including therein the instructions given.

5. A copy of each report made by the authorities on board from the commencement of this expedition.

The motion was agreed to.

THE LORD DUNDONALD INCIDENT.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to ask the government if there is any truth in the rumour which is being circulated to the effect that His Excellency the Governor General, Lord Minto, has refused to sign the dismissal of the Major General. I suppose that parliament will be entitled to have that information before the newspapers of the country, and therefore I ask the question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not aware, in fact I can speak very confidently, the Governor General has not had submitted to him any papers involving the question my hon. friend asks me. By that it is not to be understood that they may not be submitted to him. I merely say that up to the present time nothing of the kind has occurred.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Do we understand that the matter is to be submitted to the Governor General here or to the proper authority in England ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—To the Governor General.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose the hon. gentleman will take advantage of the opportunity afforded by the question I have asked to give to this House the information he promised with reference to that Dundonald incident.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Just as soon as anything definite has been done I shall be glad to inform the House of the facts.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The House is not in possession of anything except what we have seen in the papers, although the hon. gentleman has promised us some information.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Just so soon as any definite action has been taken, it will be communicated to the House.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Then there is another question of a personal explanation. On Wednesday, June 8, I brought up, as a question of privilege, the statement of Mr. Wells and Mr. Eldridge, and moved that Mr. Wells be brought before the bar of this House to answer any questions that might be put to him. A debate took place with reference to that matter. I do not want to refer to the arguments brought forward during that debate, but I want to refer to a particular incident that took place. Members of this House took part in the debate and at a certain point my hon. friend from Lincoln (Hon. Mr. Gibson) made a motion in amendment, and that motion was to refer that question to the special committee that had been appointed for the examination of all matters in connection with the Mutual Reserve Life Association. I raised a point of order on that amendment. I said that the hon. gentleman from Lincoln had no right to make a motion because previously in the same debate he had made a speech on the question. The hon. Speaker of this House, speaking ex-cathedra, told us the hon. member had not made a speech, and that my point of order was not well taken. I therefore submitted. Since then the printed report of the 'Debates' has been issued, and if hon. gentlemen will look at page 365 of the unrevised edition they will see my motion. I indicate the page, so that hon. gentlemen may see what follows. On page 366, Mr. Gibson made a few remarks that I do not consider as speeches. The hon. leader of the opposition, the hon. Secretary of State, the Hon. Mr. Poirier, the Hon. Mr. Dandurand, and the Hon. Mr. Kerr, all made speeches on the motion I placed in the hands of the Speaker ; then at page 369 the hon. gentleman from Lincoln (Hon. Mr. Gibson) made a speech which is to be found in the second column of page 369. Afterwards the Hon. Mr. Watson, the Hon. Mr. Cloran, the Hon. Mr. Jones, the Hon. Mr. Owens, the Hon. Mr. Béique, the Hon. Mr. Landry, the Hon. Mr. Scott, the Hon. Mr. Young, and the Hon. Mr. Ferguson, made speeches. After that the hon. gentleman from Lincoln (Hon. Mr. Gibson) said :

I move, in amendment, that Messrs. Wells and Eldridge be both examined before the committee which has the matter in hand.

That is to be found at the bottom of page 373 and the following debate then took place :

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman has no right to make a motion.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Why ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Because the hon. gentleman has spoken.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I do not want the hon. gentleman to dictate to me. I know my rights in this House as well as the hon. gentleman. I am responsible to this House for my own conduct and not to the hon. gentleman ; he is not my keeper, nor does he require to suggest to me when I should get up in this House or sit down. I am quite within my rights to move the amendment to bring these men before the committee, where they can be sworn and examined by the counsel that the committee may appoint.

The hon. gentleman was asserting his right. Further on at page 375, we find the decision of the Speaker. He says :

The motion of the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island is out of order.

We will not discuss that point. Then the report continues :

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. I claim the hon. gentleman from Lincoln had no right to move that amendment ; he had made his speech and he has no right after having resumed his seat to make this motion.

The SPEAKER—He made the motion when standing up in his place and then he sat down to reduce the motion to writing which I think is perfectly correct. The motion is in order.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The rule provides that when the Speaker decides a question of order he shall cite the rule upon which he does.

The SPEAKER—Rule 20 reads as follows :

A senator may speak to any question before the Senate or upon a question or an amendment to be proposed by himself or upon a question of order arising out of the debate.

The hon. gentleman has done that ? I do not see what the question is.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has the hon. Speaker acceded to the request I made. When the Speaker rules he cites the rule upon which he gives the decision. If the Speaker decides that the hon. gentleman from Lincoln did not speak before making the motion then we understand the ruling.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I did not speak before the motion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman did two or three times.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I think my word is as good as the hon. gentleman's.

Then further on Mr. Gibson said :

I spoke on the second reading of the Bill. I said nothing more until I moved this amendment.

Further on the hon. Speaker said :

Rule 28 reads as follows :

The Speaker stands uncovered when speaking to the Senate and if called upon to explain a point of order or practice, he is to state the rule applicable to the case.

I was not called upon to explain anything. I simply ruled he had not spoken.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman from Stadacona raised a point of order stating that the hon. gentleman had no right to make the motion on the ground that he had spoken. Then I turn to another rule which declares that a member can speak only once to any question, and the principle is laid down by all the authorities, Bourinot and Todd and all the other commentators, that no one can move an amendment after he has spoken to a question, and the fact that a member rises and then sits down deprives him of the right of speaking again or of making a motion. I think my hon. friend from Killarney who has had a great deal of experience as Speaker of the House in Manitoba will corroborate my construction of the rules.

And that great authority (Hon. Mr. Young) answered 'Quite correct.' Then the report continues :

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the Speaker rules the hon. gentleman had not spoken before, and that he was within his right, I am not going to question it.

The SPEAKER—The hon. leader of the opposition is rather fond I think of reflecting on the decisions which I make.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I deny that, and the Speaker has no right to impute motives to me. The Speaker has no more right in this House than any member of it, and has no right to stand up and say I am desirous of reflecting——

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Order, order.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am in order.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No, the hon. gentleman is not in order when the Speaker is on his feet.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, I am quite right and when the hon. gentleman has more experience he will know it.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken ; I did not reflect on him. I simply said he was rather fond of differing from the decisions which I make.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I deny that, and it is an improper statement to make, and it is not true.

The SPEAKER—I am in the judgment of the House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And so am I.

The SPEAKER—I have been a member of this House for twenty-seven years, and I have never known a Speaker to be treated in the manner in which I have been treated.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think any Speaker has ever acted as our hon. Speaker has.

Some hon. MEMBERS—Order, order.

The SPEAKER—That was by the way. I say that the only question—and I am in the judgment of the House again—that the only question that was raised was whether the hon. gentleman from Lincoln had spoken or not. I did not hear the hon. gentleman speak, and I took the hon. gentleman's statement; and, not having spoken, he had a right to move the amendment, and there was no necessity for pointing out any rule. It was simply a question of fact, and I took the hon. gentleman's statement and the evidence of my own senses.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Does the hon. gentleman want all that quotation republished in the 'Debates'? The debate took place last Wednesday, and we ought to have some sense of the dignity of the House and not republish remarks so recently made.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman does not know what I am coming at.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—And nobody else does.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What I want to point out is this: I raised a point of order which was set aside—why? Because the hon. the Speaker and the hon. gentleman from Lincoln (Hon. Mr. Gibson) stated that the hon. gentleman from Lincoln had not made a speech on the subject which I presented. The report which I have just read shows that he did make a speech, whereas the point of order which I raised was not sustained on the ground that he had not spoken. The ruling was on the question of fact, and I want to state to the House what the facts were. I know the Speaker is liable to be mistaken, as we all are; we are not all infallible, but I want to point out that those mistakes of the Speaker occur too frequently where I am concerned.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I have not a copy of the 'Debates' from which the hon. gentleman is quoting, but I was under the impression, and am still under the impression that I had not spoken. However, the hon. gentleman and some others are so apt to interrupt those who address the House that one has frequently to sit down to hear the interruption before proceeding with his remarks. I sat down on the occasion referred to, as the Speaker knows, to put the resolution in writing and had not finished my speech, when the hon. gentleman raised the objection. If there is any member of the Senate who violates the rules of debate more frequetly than another, it is the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, because he speaks on every occasion half a dozen times if necessary and he is the last one who should raise such an objection. I am sorry that the rules of order are not better observed, and that frequent interjections require a speaker to sit down often before he has concluded his remarks. If there was an interlude between my remarks and my motion, it was because the hon. gentleman objected to my speaking on the motion for the second reading of the Bill. The fact is, the discussions upon the Bill and on the investigation of the Mutual Reserve Company had been so mixed up that I venture to say only those who have given the closest attention to what is going on could tell when the debate was on the Bill of the hon. gentleman from Toronto, and when it was on the subject of the inquiry into the condition of the Mutual Reserve Association. In consequence of the irregularity a great many unnecessary things have been said on both questions. I have taken the ground from the beginning that I have no desire to stifle inquiry, and that it was only right that the Bill should go to a committee where those interested could be heard. That was my only object in speaking on one side or the other of the matter. I trust that the hon. gentleman from Stadacona will see that I did not act in bad faith.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not impute motives.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I thought I was quite within my rights in moving the motion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I took the trouble to look at the record to ascertain the facts. The hon. gentleman was mixing up the remarks he had just made on a debate on the motion for the second reading of the Bill and the motion made by the hon. senator from Stadacona to summon Mr. Wells to the bar of the House to be examined. The two motions were quite distinct. The only misunderstanding between the hon. gentleman and myself was that when I stated that he had spoken upon the motion to summon Mr. Wells to the bar of the House, he made a pretty pointed contradiction and added that his word was as good as mine. I shall not discuss that question. I am quite satisfied that the hon. senator from Lincoln never intended any reflection upon me when he made that statement. I am equally certain that he believed what he said when he made that statement. I shall not find fault with the Speaker's ruling, nor shall I refer to the unpleasantness between him and myself. I regret those incidents as much as he possibly can, but I repeat what I said then, there is nothing on the record to show that I was taking an unnecessary course or reflection upon the Speaker or his ruling. I simply asked a question. If hon. gentlemen will turn to page 369, they will find that the hon. member for Lincoln (Hon. Mr. Gibson) made a speech on a motion of the hon. member from Stadacona (Hon. Mr. Landry) to summon Mr. Wells before the House. He does not say one single word in all those remarks about moving an amendment. He discussed the general principle of the Bill and sat down. Then I find no less than three pages of debate took place in which Messrs. Cloran, Watson, Jones, Béique, Landry, Scott. Young, and Ferguson, discussed the question—not the second reading of the Bill but the motion of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona. Then the hon. member from Lincoln rose to make his motion, and the objection was taken that he was out of order, having already spoken on the subject. I am satisfied that it was all a misunderstanding. I follow as closely as possible what takes place in the House, and I was convinced at the time that my statement was correct, that the hon. gentleman had spoken, and that a debate had intervened between his speech and the amendment. I have no dispute with the hon. gentleman from Lincoln. I do not think there are two senators who have a greater respect for each other than the hon. gentleman and myself, and that has been the case ever since we have known each other as members of the other House. With the confusion that prevailed during the debate and the constant interruptions—I am no more guiltless in that respect than others—I am not surprised that the Speaker, unless his attention is rivited on every word uttered, should be under the impression that when the hon. gentleman from Lincoln sat down he did so to write his motion. Even if that were the case, according to the authorities, he had no right to rise again and make a motion after the debate had taken place.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is just what I am complaining of, that the hon. gentleman does interrupt. I have given the facts as they are stated in the official report. I am reflecting on no one, only I should like to call the attention not only of the Speaker but of the Senate to the fact that some of the remarks which I made in last Wednesday's debate are credited to the Speaker. He read the 28th Rule, and added: 'I was not called upon to explain anything. I simply ruled he had not spoken.' There he stopped, then the following remarks were mine. It is not the fault of the reporters that my remarks were put in the mouth of the Speaker, but I hope they will make a note of this and see that it is corrected in the revised edition.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I think it is due to my hon. friend——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman said I was not in order because I spoke so often. He is not now in order himself, and should sit down.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—As I have been accused I have a right to reply.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, there is nothing before the House.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I want to explain.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Get it explained by another member.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I am going to explain my position.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order; there is nothing before the House.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The hon. gentleman never does bring anything before the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order—there is nothing before the House, and the hon. gentleman has already given his personal explanation. He has no right to speak again. I ask the Speaker to decide.

The SPEAKER—The point of order is well taken.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I rise to a question of privilege. I do not want to detain the House but I have been accused of breaking the rules of the House——

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is only a way of eluding the Speaker's decision. The hon. gentleman is not in order.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I am in order.

The SPEAKER—There is a way by which the hon. gentleman can be put in order.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I move the adjournment of the House. What I wanted to say is that my hon. friend who leads the opposition interrupted me before I finished my remarks——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not want to be captious, but I rise to this point of order: can the hon. gentleman make an explanation of what took place on a question of privilege? The hon. gentleman rose to a question of privilege.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Surely——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am asking the chair whether that is a question of privilege. I do not object to an explanation.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I think I am entitled to be allowed to explain.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman should wait for the decision of the chair. I can tell him how he can put himself in order.

The SPEAKER—I really do not think the hon. gentleman can make it a question of privilege, but there is a very common way by which he can put himself in order.

Hon. Mr. BAKER—For the purpose of overcoming the difficulty I move the adjournment of the House.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I have already moved the adjournment.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the hon. gentleman should wait until the question is put.

The SPEAKER—Moved by the Hon. Mr. Baker, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Wood that this House do now adjourn.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Before the House adjourns I should like to make a few remarks. I do not want to make them in a contradictory spirit at all, but merely to point out to my hon. friend who leads the opposition, for whom I can say honestly I have the same high regard as he expressed very kindly for me a few moments ago, that when I was speaking on the subject of summoning Mr. Wells to the bar of the House the other day, I said:

> I do not know either of them, but I think the proper course would be to hear Eldridge as well as Wells.

To this Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell replied:

> If the other man denies it, let it go on record. He may not deny it.
>
> Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Does the hon. gentleman propose summoning Eldridge?
>
> Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, we have Eldridge's statement.
>
> Hon. Mr. SCOTT—What a farce it would be. Wells would say 'no,' and that would be the end of it.

So that there was a controversy between the hon. gentleman who leads the House and the hon. gentleman who leads the opposition, and before I could get in my amendment half a dozen hon. gentlemen had spoken.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I do not wish to prolong this discussion, but it emphasizes an experience that many hon. gentlemen have had in this House and from which the leaders in this chamber are not exempt, and that is, interruptions are made when a member is addressing the House which sometimes interferes with his consecutive line of argument. Not very long ago the hon. Secretary of State was speaking on this matter when an hon. gentleman asked a question across the floor of the House, not of the hon. Secretary of State but of an hon. gentleman on this side of the House, and that hon. gentleman stood up and made a speech, and spoke till six o'clock and closed off the hon. Secretary of State, who, out of kindness, did not wish to call him to order. As a result the argument he was making was somewhat incomplete. But what I wish to say is, that this discussion to-day emphasizes what I have on former occasions called to the attention of the House, the necessity for a revision of our rules so that the hon. Speaker, when we wander so far away, as we frequently do, from the ordinary rules of debate, will be charged with the responsibility of bringing us back to the ordinary parliamentary procedure which should govern any legislative body.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I fully concur in the remarks of the hon. gentleman, and I have discussed the question with him before, as to the propriety of taking the step which he has suggested. In fact I might go further and say that I had a motion prepared for that purpose, but circumstances arose which prevented my making it. I should like the hon. gentleman from Lincoln to understand the matter. The only question that arose upon the point of order raised by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona was that the hon. gentleman had spoken.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I had not finished.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. gentleman persists in that statement when the facts are against him I have no more to say.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE OFFICIAL REPORTS OF THE DEBATES.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before the Orders of the Day are called I wish to call the attention of the Debates Committee and also of the House to a difficulty that I see that this House is subject to with regard to the distribution of the Debates. An hon. gentleman spoke a few moments ago of not having a document in his hand which other hon. gentlemen were using, and this caused me to look into the matter and I find that the unrevised debates of the House are not placed on the members' files. I know they are distributed. We get them through the post office, but I could not get a copy of the report that was the subject of controversy this afternoon in this House. I had to borrow one from other hon. gentlemen who were using it. It does seem to me that the unrevised debates should be placed on our files here. The latest that we have is the revised edition for Tuesday last. The House met on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday. The unrevised had been distributed amongst the members, but for three days they had not been placed on file here. My opinion is that the unrevised issue should be put on file, so that in the event of anything coming up we would have them in our hand. I do not see why a sufficient number should not be furnished, and the pages be instructed to place them on file, so that we should have them before us.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is another irregularity which I will bring to the attention of this honourable House. On Friday last the Hon. Mr. Young gave notice that 'On Tuesday next I will move that the order referring Bill (H) to the Committee on Banking and Commerce be rescinded that that Bill be referred to the enlarged special committee to consider the position of the Mutual Reserve.' That notice was given on Friday last. If we look at the Orders of the Day we see that the notice given by the hon. gentlemen is put down for Wednesday. I do not know how the change was made, or who had authority to make the change, but surely if the hon. gnetleman gave notice for Tuesday it ought to appear to-day.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The hon. gentleman is quite right. When I read the motion I had not written it out, but I made the motion and was writing it at the same time for Tuesday; but the Secretary of State called my attention to the fact that Tuesday would be a very busy day, as apparently it is, and asked would not Wednesday do as well. I said yes, and I repeated Wednesday, and that is why the matter was changed, so that it is no fault of the officials. It is my fault.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I call attention to the fact that Hon. Mr. Legris, a member of the committee, made a motion for Tuesday. The hon. gentleman sits at one end of the House and the hon. gentleman from Killarney sits at the other end of the chamber. We happened to be in the House a few moments before this happened. We knew nothing about it and thought it very strange that the change had been made.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—With regard to the unrevised debates to which the hon. gentleman from Marshfield refers—speaking as a member of the Debates Committee, but not by any authority—hon. gentleman will remember that there was a slip or proof sheet furnished to each member. Hon. gentlemen thought it would be more convenient to have the unrevised edition promptly. As I understand, the practice of the House was that hon. gentleman were not absolutely bound—not like the House of Commons—by the utterances in the unrevised edition, or slip furnished them. There was liberty to correct that slip, and it was not until the revised edition came that hon. gentlemen could be held to be bound by the report of a debate. Now, it will make a change in the practice of the House if the unrevised edition is filed in the way in which it is suggested, and one would like to know whether in doing that we depart from the practice of the House and hold the member bound to the unrevised report of a debate ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The suggestion was that, in addition to what was put in the post office for us, duplicate files be made of the revised and unrevised edition, so that members would have both copies of the issued debates up to date.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In distributing this unrevised edition formerly it was sent to each member's room in an envelope. Now they are distributed through the post office. I think we should go a step further and put them on file. I think members should be fairly bound by what appears in that edition.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Then an order had better be issued to the party whose duty it is to do that work, to have it done.

The SPEAKER—Perhaps the House will indulge me a moment. I wish to make one statement. I have not seen either the revised or the unrevised edition of the debates which took place, and if there are any errors it is quite without my knowledge.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (61) An Act to incorporate the Thorold and Lake Erie Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Domville.)

Bill (104) An Act respecting the Tilsonburg, Lake Erie and Pacific Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Wilson.)

Bill (57) An Act to incorporate the Interprovincial Railway Bridge Company of New Brunswick.—(Hon. Mr. Domville.)

Bill (90) An Act to incorporate the Bessemer and Barry's Bay Railway Company, as amended.—(Hon. Mr. Gibson.)

Bill (60) An Act respecting the Kettle River Valley Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Templeman.)

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY BILL.

SECOND READING.

The Order of the Day being called :

Second reading Bill (72) an Act to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Before this matter is proceeded with, I should like to call the attention of the House to rule 46 and ask the hon. Secretary of State if this rule has been complied with ?

The SPEAKER—The rule cited by the hon. gentleman reads as follows :

The Senate will not proceed upon a Bill appropriating public money that shall not within the knowledge of the Senate have been recommended by the Queen's representative.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I want to know if it has been recommended. Can the hon. gentleman give us documents showing that it is proceeding with the consent of the government ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Bill has been approved of by His Excellency. It is not usual for me to produce in this chamber the authority of His Excellency. It is the first time I have ever heard the question raised. It is always accepted in the other chamber as a matter of course.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY. Does that rule mean anything ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The practice in the other House is simply for the government to bring down a message or state that they have the authority of the Governor General for proceeding with the Bill. The hon. gentleman's memory is not good on that point ; my hon. friend who has just spoken (Hon. Mr. Landry) has called attention once or twice to the same point in the House. It may have escaped the hon. gentleman's attention.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move the second reading of Bill (72) An Act to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act. Towards the close of last session it was my duty to submit for the consideration of the senate a Bill for the construction of another Transcontinental Railway. I do not suppose that any of us anticipated that within the year that the measure, then approved of by parliament, would be again submitted for our consideration, owing to the shareholders of the Grand Trunk, which became a part of the Bill, not having approved of it. The arguments used against the measure when it was before the senate last year were two; one was that the government was not in possession of sufficient information to justify the construction of that railway, that before proceeding with so important a matter a survey should be made and information should be given to the public as to the approximate cost of the undertaking. Another objection urged that the Bill was conceived so largely favourable to the Grand Trunk Railway that it was not in the interests of Canada to enter into the agreement. The latter argument was very extensively enlarged upon, and it was pointed out that Canada was practically furnishing the funds, and that the Grand Trunk was doing very little. The agreement, as I said on a former occasion, had been reached when the directors of the Grand Trunk Railway. Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson and the other directors came out to Canada a year ago, and they discussed the various clauses of the schedule in the agreement with the government, and it was thought that a contract had been reached which was fairly reasonable to both sides. It was shown pretty conclusively that the money cost to this country was a comparatively small sum; that is, if any value is to be attached to the guarantees of the Grand Trunk Railway. When the question came up to be submitted to the shareholders in England, they took a different view of it. Whether they were influenced by the arguments of my hon. friends opposite and by the statements of the press that the project was premature and ought not to have been launched at the present time, or whether they had recollections of the millions of money that had been lost in the Grand Trunk Railway when they first constructed their line in this country some 40 or 50 years ago, I cannot say, but it was quite evident that a very determined idea existed amongst the body of the shareholders to reject the proposal. I have under my hand here extracts from papers that were addressed to the body of the shareholders by hon. gentlemen who had very large interests in the Grand Trunk Railway, giving their reasons for objecting to the proposal. One was Mr. Allen, who was at one time a director of the company, who writes as follows.

> Having served the Grand Trunk Railway Company from October, 1891, to my resignation in December last, and having witnessed and been a party to the great skill of Mr. Hays in raising the company from an almost bankrupt condition to its present state of prosperity—(applause)—and having a large interest of my own, and, as a trustee, to safeguard—and I may tell you that the interest is close upon £50,000—I have objected from July 24th last to proceed further with the Grand Trunk Pacific scheme without having a great deal of necessary information afforded to the board, and believing firmly, as I do, that the scheme, if carried out, will gradually ruin the Grand Trunk, I have come to the conclusion that it is my clear duty to the proprietors to let them know some, at all events, of the facts on which I have based that belief.

That view was shared in by other members of the Grand Trunk board in London, and by the shareholders. Mr. Allen was a director and a shareholder, Mr. Merlin also had very strong objections, and he put his views in the form of a letter as follows:

> I speak as a shareholder who is interested in something like £10,000 worth of the junior securities, the third preference, which, after having been in the wilderness for a great number of years, is just now merging, and I do not see that, while we are in view of something like full and due dividend, we should replunge into a wilderness which is very much unexplored—(Hear, hear)—which is very much farther north, and in which there is a very much heavier fall of snow in the year. Now, sir, with regard to the agreements, I have read them very carefully, and I think you, as a board, have taken a risk upon yourselves, and have not put any upon the Canadian government at all, excepting a rental for the first seven years on the eastern part of the line, and interest on the western part for another seven years. Now, why did not the board take the eastern part and allow the government to take the western part, especially the Rocky mountains part? (Hear, hear.)

It will be seen from those utterances that the view taken by the shareholders in London was not the view taken by many of the people's representatives in Canada. They regarded the project as one that was going to seriously injure the financial standing of the Grand Trunk Railway, and so it became evident that the agreement approved of by this parliament last year would not be confirmed by the shareholders unless very considerably modified; therefore proposals were made to the government of Canada, beginning about the month of January last. I need not go over them, because they were afterwards boiled down to the schedule attached to the Bill now before the House ; but they asked many conditions that the government of Canada could not accede to. Negotiations continued for a period, I presume, of about two months, not in the shape of formal papers and letters, but usually in the shape of representations to the Grand Trunk Railway Company in Canada and personal communications with members of the government in Canada, and the result was the schedule now attached to the Bill before parliament. The question arose when the Grand Trunk Railway declined to accept the Bill of last year, whether it was better to break off negotiations or continue them in the hope that, by some modifications, a satisfactory agreement on both sides might be arrived at. What largely influenced the government was the fact that the Grand Trunk Railway was an existing corporation. It connected with all the cities and towns in Ontario, and with nearly all the villages. It had 4,000 miles of railway already built. It connected with the leading centres of population in Quebec, and the advantage of having a railway with its branches already in existence, ready to furnish the main line with traffic at once on the opening of it, were so great that it was decided it would be far better to accede in some particular, so long as it was considered at all reasonable, than to break off the negotiation. One can remember that for some years after the Canadian Pacific Railway was first opened the line was extremely unprofitable, simply because it had no connections. The Canadian Pacific Railway adopted the only policy open to them that would lead to any success, and that was the construction of branches through the older portions of the Dominion. Their energies were directed towards building branches and connecting with the centres of trade and population, not only in Ontario and Quebec, but also in the maritime provinces, and hon. gentlemen will, therefore, realize the advantage of the new transcontinental line having connections with the centres of population. The manufacturers in Ontario, those located in villages and so on, could make a contract with the Grand Trunk Railway over the main line to the Pacific without having the traffic subject in the way of rates to the control of any other railway, and, finally, the agreement as now presented to parlament was settled upon. Taking it up and explaining it, I think if my hon. friends have given it any attention they would find that, after all, the amendments in the contract amount to very little indeed. We must remember that those gentlemen in London cannot have the hopeful idea that we entertain in Canada of the rapid development of the great west. The past history of the Grand Trunk Railway was so full of misfortunes and losses that one does not wonder at the hesitation they exhibited in entering into the new arrangement. I shall go over, seriatim, the changes that have been made in the original contract, and point out how they differ from the modified ones that are now presented for the approval of parliament.

The 10th section forms the first paragraph of the present Bill. That is extending the time for the completion of the western division from December, 1908, to December, 1911. That is a difference of three years. One year has already passed, although the time has not been lost to the Grand Trunk Railway. They never ceased their explorations and surveys in the interval, in the hope by the management that an arrangement would be arrived at. It would be the interest of the Grand Trunk Railway to complete the line as rapidly as possible, and those who have given any attention or thought to the subject and who know the advances they have already made, not only in explorations, but in actual surveys, in the location of lines, can readily understand that the time limit first fixed will not be exceeded. I would not be at all surprised if the line would be completed in a much less period than the date mentioned. Hon. gentlemen will recollect that the Canadian Pacific Railway finished their road very much within the time fixed by the agreement made with the government of the day, and, therefore, although acquiescing in the extension of three years, we can readily believe that the road will be built within the time first mentioned for its construction.

The second change has reference to the deposit of five million dollars. Hon. gentlemen will recollect that it was to be held by the government until the road was completed, or if the five millions would complete that western division, then the government of the day was authorized to pay out of the five million dollars from time to time sums of money that would enable the road to be completed within that period. The Grand Trunk people seem to think they will finish their line before the government can finish its line from Moncton to Winnipeg and, therefore, they ask that, although the eastern division may not be completed, that if they have completed the western division, and have supplied fifteen million dollars worth of rolling stock, that then the government shall be authorized to carry out the original intention of paying to them the five millions of money or such proportions of it as they require from time to time to complete their line to the western division. No one can object to that, especially as it is subject to the condition that an allotment of five million in value of the rolling stock shall in the meantime be marked for the eastern division. It is not a very serious change, and I think no one can readily object to it. The third is that pending that construction of the eastern division, which is nineteen hundred miles long, Moncton to Winnipeg, that it may be presumed that portions of that line will be completed before the whole line is finished. The Grand Trunk management wish to make it a condition that they shall be entitled to lease any portion of the completed line and to use it on conditions no more oppressive than the terms that are imposed for the rental of the full line when completed. That has been acceded to, with the stipulation that the commissioners who have charge of the construction of the eastern division, have the absolute control and that the running of the trains on the Grand Trunk Railway must be subject to the approval and on such conditions as the commissioners choose to dictate, the idea being that those portions of the eastern division that may have been finished will necessarily have been used by the contractors who are completing unfinished portions of the line east and west. There will be no conflict in the running of the trains, and it is a matter that is very easily arranged ; therefore no one can reasonably object to that proposition. The fourth paragraph makes it clear that while guaranteeing 75 per cent of the cost of the western division, the thirteen thousand dollars per mile that the government are going to guarantee is not to be changed.

There is no more than $13,000 per mile to be granted on the prairie section. On the mountain section where the board in London think very great difficulties exist, they argued that the spirit of the arrangement was that we should guarantee their bonds to the extent of 75 per cent. We limited that to $30,000 per mile on the assumption that the line would not cost more than $40,000 per mile from the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains to the Pacific ocean. The distance is an indefinite one, being from five to seven hundred odd miles, depending entirely on the construction of the term, 'base of the Rocky mountains.' It will probably be a gradual slope, and it will be for those authorized under the Bill to say where the mountain section really begins. As that was the spirit of the agreement, and as the government is convinced to-day that the road will not cost over $40,000 a mile, there seemed to be no substantial objection to our meeting the shareholders in that particular, and carrying out the spirit of the agreement that was originally entered into of guaranteeing their bonds to the extent of 75 per cent. It may be proper to say that the route through the Rocky mountains has been pretty well known for the last twenty-five years. If hon. gentlemen will consult Sir Sandford Fleming's reports of 1877 and also of 1880, they will find there both the Pine River and the Peace River passes are fully explained. Accurate surveys were made at that time. Under Mr. Mackenzie's plan, hon. gentlemen will remember the line was intended to have passed by the northerly route, and it became necessary, even at that early day—in 1873-4-5-6-7—to make exhaustive surveys to find a line through the mountains to the Pacific coast, and both the Pine River Pass and the Peace River Pass were accurately surveyed, and probably it was the knowledge that Sir Sandford Fleming obtained of the topography of that country which warranted him in making the references he gave in the pamphlet published by him, which was submitted to this House, last year, as to the feasibility and the cost of a line through the Rocky mountains. It is very well known that the altitudes are very much less on the proposed line than they are on the lines further south, but as you go north towards the extreme limit of British Columbia territory, the mountain section narrows gradually all the way from the 49th parallel up to the Peace River Pass. I could not exactly name the number of miles in difference between the width of the mountains at those two points that will be traversed by the new railroad, but I am quite safe in saying there is a very material difference in the breadth of the mountain ranges near the 49th parallel and at the Peace River Pass. Therefore the cost of reaching the Pacific ocean by the Transcontinental Railway is very much less—I could not at the moment quote figures—than the cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway had to submit to in building by the more southern route. I might say here, although I only know it inferentially from reports of surveyors, that the cost of the line from Edmonton to the Pacific via the Peace River Pass is less than $37,000 per mile. I certainly was somewhat surprised to find that one of the engineers who had been over the route felt himself justified in giving the opinion that the road would cost between thirty-six and sixty-seven thousand dollars per mile; that is, including the prairie land that extends beyond Edmonton, which I suppose would embrace perhaps 300 miles of the distance to the base of the Rocky mountains—taking the mileage from Edmonton to the coast at 1,066 miles, the cost is estimated at between thirty-six and thirty-seven thousand dollars per mile. That would show that we were amply justified in guaranteeing the 75 per cent of the bonds, because the cost will be actually less than the figures on which we were predicating our conclusions.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the mountain section begin at Edmonton?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Nearly one half of that would be prairie country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, they do not call it so, according to the reports I have seen. Last year, from the examination I made then, I was under the impression that the Rocky mountain section—I think I gave the figures to the House—was less than 500 miles; but the more recent surveys show that it is longer, because it is not a direct line, but is rather circuitous. If it is to go to Port Simpson, it must go by the Skeena river, a tortuous course to get through the mountains, that is, to get the best grades. The grade they hope to get is surprisingly low. I was quite astonished at the statements of the engineers; it was a grade that none of us could have anticipated. Of course it was known that through the Pine river or the Peace River Pass a feasible route for a railway could be got. Sir Sandford Fleming reported twenty-five years ago that it offered a cheaper and easier route than the one selected by the Canadian Pacific Railway; but as exploratory surveys have gone on it has been found that after they get through the pass a number of routes are available, and a considerable saving in the cost of construction may be effected there by following the course of the rivers. So that, after all, in agreeing to guarantee the bonds for the 75 per cent, Canada is not assuming a greater liability than we anticipated at the time the original agreement was submitted to parliament last year, and it did not seem to be a point worth arguing. I presume that a factor in alarming the shareholders was the financial fall of the funds. It was a very unfavourable time to float any loans on the London market, as hon. gentlemen know. Consols had fallen to a lower figure than they had reached at any time since the Crimean war, and the condition has not been improving, owing to the large loans that Japan and Russia are placing on the market and owing to the fearful waste caused by the contest between those two nations.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is the hon. gentleman quoting from recent surveys?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was informed by a gentleman who saw a report of one of the surveys—that is my authority—a gentleman who had been through to the Pacific. I think there is an hon. member present who will refer to it more fully, and state the name of the engineer and give details. I am only now alluding to it inasmuch as it rather fortifies the argument that I wish to make, that in agreeing to guarantee 75 per cent we are not exceeding the limit set last year; that is, we limited the responsiblity on the bonds to $30,000 per mile, assuming that the line would cost no more than $40,000 per mile, and I say that while the limit of responsibility is undefined, from the best knowledge we possess practically, we feel morally sure that the limit of last year will not be exceeded—that is, we shall not have to guarantee bonds to a larger amount than the $30,000 per mile as fixed last year.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the hon. gentleman say that that section now, according to the last surveys, is 1,066 miles ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Those are the figures which have been furnished me, from Edmonton via the Peace River Pass to the coast. The Pine River Pass would be shorter, but the figure through the Peace River Pass, as I understand, by the most recent report, will be the distance I have named, 1,066 miles. The Pine River Pass is further south and would be more direct, but it is a question whether the grades are as favourable—it depends entirely on that. If the mileage is offset by easier grades, it would be far better to take the line with the most favourable grades than a shorter line with heavier grades.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is there any probability of those reports being laid on the table ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman knows the parliamentary usage is when public documents are referred to, that they should be laid on the table of the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am quite aware of that, and therefore I qualified my remarks. I said they were got through a roundabout way, reports sent to the Grand Trunk Railway office. Probably the Grand Trunk Railway Company would not permit them to go out until they were verified. I do not profess to say that they are absolutely reliable : I give them as the best information I could obtain. I sought, of course, with a view to discussing this Bill, to get all the information available, even though it is not in an authorized shape, explaining to the House that it is not absolutely reliable. It is only an approximate after all, but still, so far as the distance is concerned, I think it may be taken. It seemed rather more than my previous conception of that distance. I suppose the explanation is that through the Rocky Mountains the line is more winding. I do not think, therefore, that we ought seriously to object to that concession. They must spend 25 per cent, and we have the first mortgage. Their 25 per cent will be a good security for us, that is looking at it from the standpoint of those who are so sceptical about the success of the road that it will eventually fall into the hands of the government. There are no probabilities of that ; the prospects of the road are brightening every day. The grades that that road will secure will be away and beyond the grades of any road crossing the continent—far beyond. Hon. gentlemen will be surprised when the final papers are before the public.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman is now speaking of the mountain section ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Of all the line, but particularly of the mountain section. The grades of the mountain section are much less than anything we could have anticipated.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But this is not applicable to the line east of North Bay ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will come to that presently. We are now speaking of the mountain section. I am explaining the change in that part of the contract, which obliges the government to assume an unlimited responsibility so far as guaranteeing the bonds is concerned. Before we had a limited responsibility. We were not bound to guarantee the bonds beyond $30,000 per mile ; now we are bound to guarantee the bonds for 75 per cent, whatever it may be ; and I am endeavouring to show that from the information I have been able to obtain the responsibility is not in any way increased ; that, as a matter of fact, I doubt whether the $30,000 per mile will be exceeded. I do not think it will.

The next change is in the sixth paragraph of the schedule which provides that the government is not to exercise the right of foreclosure for nonpayment of interest as provided in sections 41, 42 and 43 until the default is equal to five years' interest. Hon. gentlemen will recollect that, in the schedule of last year, the company was not liable to be disturbed in any way ; legal proceedings could not be taken against it under the mortgage held by the Crown, until there had been a default for a term of three years. They ask that that three years shall be made five, and that not until an amount equal to five years' interest on the western division was in arrears and unpaid, should any proceeding be taken by the Crown to assert its sovereignty over the road. For seven years after the line has been built they pay no interest on our proportion of the guarantee. That is, our gratuity to the road. Now they ask, in addition to that seven years, that they shall have five years more, not five years further concession, but in the event of the receipts over the running expenses not amounting to a sufficient sum to pay the interest on the bonds, we shall not take any actual proceedings to dispossess the company from the road until a sum equal to the default for five years shall have happened. That seems to be such a remote contingency that there ought to be no reason for our refusing it, because if any one gives attention to the prospects of the road for seven years from that time—that will probably be fourteen years from now, in the year 1918—it is clear that with the extraordinary development through the northern section of this country in that period of time this railway will be a paying enterprise. With all the visions of eastern trade, and with the mining industry developed, the possibilities are great. It must be recollected that this road will pass through the very richest portion of British Columbia, the northern part of the Cariboo district, which was the first portion of British Columbia that gave to the Pacific province prominence as a gold-bearing country. The only reason the miners left that section of the country, that is the majority of them, was simply owing to the fact that it was almost impossible to get in supplies. It was not accessible, they could not reach it from the south, east or west, the cost of supplies was so large. Now, this line runs right through these mining districts. Hon. gentlemen know that the Atlin district lies north of this, and the Atlin district has been shown to possess wonderfully rich gold areas. The rivers practically teem with gold. Those who have gone into that section of the country and have used modern appliances have found no difficulty in getting the gold out of the sands of the rivers.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is, taking the Pine River Pass route ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—All through that country. The Pine River and the Peace River both run through a very rich mining district. I think where Cariboo Cameron had his first mine was not far south of the Pine River Pass. The Peace River Pass is considerably farther north, but I have understood it is equally rich, and recent developments there and discoveries have confirmed that opinion. There is this further condition which hon. gentlemen will note, and it is a marked concession, that is, if after the interest for five years is not paid and the government of Canada has to pay it for a term of five years, we are then warranted in taking possession of the road and placing a manager in charge. If we cannot agree upon a person, then an independent authority names the person who is to take charge. Then it is provided that they have to issue second mortgage bonds ranking after those guaranteed by the government, and in order to give any value at all to these bonds it must be made to appear that if the road is a failure, if it becomes necessary for the government of the day to take possession of the road, some consideration should be given to the holders of the second mortgage bonds, and therefore it has been agreed that the manager in chief, whoever is in charge of the road, in allotting the receipts over and above the running expenses and keeping the line up, must give 75 per cent to the government of Canada and 25 per cent towards the payment of the second mortgage bonds to give them some degree of value. When the road, which, it is presumed, sometime or other will be able to pay its own way and yield a return of the interest, the government is to be recouped in the deficiency that may have arisen owing to that distribution of the receipts from the road. That contingency is remote. After the road has been in operation for seven years, if we have any hope whatever or any belief in the success of that country, if we see any prospect whatever of a trade with Asia, we surely cannot be sceptical that the road will be able to pay interest on the bonds after that period. It will be, comparatively, a small sum and I do not think any of us need have any doubt whatever on that subject, therefore I see no reason why we should not readily acquiesce in the request of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. Otherwise hon. gentlemen will see that the power of the first mortgagees to take possession of the road, practically kills the value of the second security. The Grand Trunk Railway Company has, unfortunately, had a very hard experience of just such contingencies. I can remember very well, and I fancy my hon. friend from Belleville (Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell) will remember too, how years ago the great difficulty of the Grand Trunk Railway Company was to get value for their securities. They were put on the market at fifty cents below their face; the company only got value for one-half. I remember how they tided over a difficulty that led them to issue bonds secured on the postal moneys the government paid them for the carriage of the mails. We allowed a special class of securities to receive the interest by payments that the Postal Department was making for the carriage of the mail. I mention that simply as an illustration of the misfortunes, so to speak, that the Grand Trunk Railway encountered in its earlier years. Canada got the benefit of the Grand Trunk Railway. Some few people got fortunes out of it, but those who put their money into it in the first instance lost the whole of it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Are there not six classes of preference stock of that railway now?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know. One gentleman from whom I quoted said he held third preferences. I mention it as an instance showing the experience the company had, and they naturally consider that second mortgage bonds with the power the government of Canada had to assume possession of the road if there be default for five years' interest, destroys the possibility of getting a reasonable value for second mortgage bonds, and therefore we ought not to hesitate in allowing them that privilege, because I do not think the contingency will ever arise. I should be sorry to have so little faith in the future of this country as to believe that fourteen years from to-day a road built on the advantageous line the Grand Trunk Pacific is to follow, would not be able to pay handsome dividends, not only the interest on all it cost, but something in addition on the stock. I would not hesitate for a moment to express that opinion and, if it were necessary, I could quote facts that would confirm one in that conclusion.

I have referred fully to the distribution of the moneys in case it becomes necessary for a manager to be appointed after the expiration of seven years. I now come to that portion of it which refers to the stock. A great deal of criticism has been uttered in reference to the issue of stock, because, it was said, and said with a great deal of truth, from the experience we all have, that railway stocks put on the market usually command but a fractional part of their face value, and that if the road becomes a good paying concern the holders expect to be paid interest at 100 cents on the dollar. This, of course, refers to paragraph 37 of the Bill itself. Under the modified proposition the Grand Trunk Railway Company will now be permitted to make such a disposal of $25,000,000 as the company may deem expedient, provided the company hold such a majority of that stock as will enable them, practically, to control the enterprise. The excess over what they need to give them control of the board of directors, they may dispose of as they please. Since the passage of the Railway Act of last session and the appointment of a railway commission, one may have less hesitation in acceding to a proposal of that kind, because the attention of the people of this country has been called on many occasions to the method pursued of allowing companies to issue an unlimited amount of stock, and then, when the line became a success, allowing the holders of that stock, which, perhaps, may have cost them ten, fifteen or twenty-five cents on the dollar, to claim dividends on the face value; and so last session in passing the amended Railway Act a clause was introduced to provide that:

309. The board may from time to time, by notice served upon the company, or any officer, servant or agent of the company, repuire it, or such officer, servant or agent to furnish the board, at or within any time stated in such notice, a written statement or statements showing in so far, and with such detail and particulars, as the board requires, the assets and liabilities of the company—the amount of its stock issued and outstanding—the date at which any such stock was so issued—the amount and nature of the consideration received by the company for such issue, and, in case the whole of such consideration was not paid to the company in cash, the nature of the service rendered to or properly received by the company for which any stock was issued.

It goes on to provide that the commissioners, in regulating the traffic, shall take into consideration the actual value received by the company for this stock on its first issue. Now that is a new feature. We all know very well that the leading railways of the country, including the Canadian Pacific Railway, were allowed to sell a considerable amount of their stock at 25 cents on the dollar, and a good deal of criticism has been expressed at them claiming dividends on the full value by those who do not take into consideration that it was a risk, a risk that few people were willing to undertake. Even years after, when some of the stock was put on the market, they still were unwilling to do it, so that the circumstances there were somewhat singular. This question has been a very live one and has been discussed time and again in parliament and out of parliament, and we felt that it was better that the public should know that when stock of this kind was put on the market, in fixing the tariff charges afterwards, consideration should be given to the value received by the company for the stock so issued, and if issued at a very heavy discount that that should be taken into consideration ; that stock which only cost the holder 30 or 40 cents on the dollar should not receive a dividend at 100 cents on the dollar.

The next change is in the tenth paragraph of this Bill and amends paragraph 21 of the contract, which provided if the government did not decide at the expiration of fifty years to operate the eastern division, the company should have the first choice on such terms as might be agreed upon for a renewal of the lease, and it further provided that if it was then decided that the government should take it, paying more for it, that the Grand Trunk Railway should have running powers over the road. There seemed to be no reason for refusing that, more particularly as the schedule attached to the Bill of last year, and which is not disturbed in that sense, made provision that the road from Moncton to Winnipeg was practically to be a trunk line open to roads—all roads to have the privilege of going over it. The Intercolonial is specially mentioned in the Act of last year as having a right to use the road on equal terms with the Grand Trunk Pacific, so that the Intercolonial Railway can, on paying its proportion of the three per cent rental to the government, or deducting it, will have the right to use the road equally with the Grand Trunk Railway. They will have a right to run their trains from Moncton to Winnipeg on terms of equality with the Grand Trunk Railway. So that the House will see that that has been pretty well provided for.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—That covers the eastern section, of course.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, the government section. There is a further modification which is contained in section 11 of the schedule of the Bill before parliament, and that is, if at the end of fifty years the government assumes control of the eastern division, and in the meantime the Grand Trunk Railway Company, as the lessee, shall have built any branches, the government will be bound to take over the branches at their cost to the company, deducting out of the cost any subsidy that may have been given at any time by the parliament of Canada towards the construction of those branches. Those are the material changes. The next is providing for the ratification of the contract by the Grand Trunk Railway shareholders.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does not that apply altogether to the eastern division ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, only to the eastern division. The western division will belong to the company. The other sections of the Bill only correct a clerical error where thirty-five was inserted instead of twenty-five in the Bill. Of course, this question of guarantee is the material one, and in forming an opinion whether the people of Canada are assuming any serious responsibility in the guarantee they make, I think one has to look forward to the time when this road is completed. Seven years from now we may all fairly estimate that the population in the Northwest Territories and British Columbia will be a couple of millions, considering the rapidity with which the country is filling up. There is no reason why the migration into that country will lessen. We have now information that cannot be contested, that the wheat lands of the Northwest and British Columbia are unexcelled by those of any other section of the world. Migration has been slow to our Northwest because of the difficulty of convincing the world that the country to the north of the United States had such virgin soil, and could produce the finest wheat in the world. It is possible that portions of Siberia may equal it, but it is admitted that the grain of Manitoba in quantity and quality cannot be excelled anywhere else, and in few countries can it be equalled. As that fact is becoming more generally known, the people of other countries are flocking into Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, and therefore I think I am perfectly safe in saying that seven or eight years from now the population in that part of Canada will be two millions.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Well, we hope so.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, we hope so. But I think our hopes are founded upon a pretty substantial basis. One cannot foresee that the present rush of settlers into that country is going to cease. At the present time it would appear as if that western country is to have more than a usually good crop. As years go on they seem to understand the nature of the soil and character of the climate and year by year the people of the country, at all events those who live in Manitoba and the Northwest, have greater faith in the future of the country, and I do not think we are discounting it unduly in saying that in seven or eight years from now the population will be two millions. Up to the present time the population that has gone in this year is upwards of 750,000. That immigration is not likely to diminish as years go on, therefore one is pretty safe in saying that there will be a large population there within that limit of time. Necessarily building this road must draw people. The circulation of the large amount of money that will be expended in the construction of the road and the employment given to the people who go in there will encourage immigration. The money comes from a source where it will always be ready at hand. The money will be got on the cheapest basis that any money has ever been supplied to a railway, excepting the government railways and the government guarantee of the Canadian Pacific; but the money will be obtained on the very best basis. The contracts will be for cash. The road ought to be built certainly cheaper than any ordinary road, and taking into account all those facts one's confidence both in the future of the road and in the future of the country cannot be said to be exaggerated if the views such as I have endeavoured to place before the House are entertained. The hon. gentleman referred to the eastern division and asked whether my remarks in discussing the cost of the road had any reference to the eastern section.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—And the easy grades.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said it had not. Mr. Sifton has a geographer as he is called in the department. He sent him to see Mr. Stephens, the chief engineer of surveys on the eastern division. Hon. gentlemen are aware that the Grand Trunk Railway has for two years been endeavouring to find the best line from North Bay to Winnipeg and they have made a pretty exhaustive examination of that country. We had some information of it before from the surveys made for the road that the company that was organized at Quebec for building a line from Roberval to Norway House on a more northerly route probably than the transcontinental road had made; at all events, we got a great deal of information from the surveys and explorations that they made. However, Mr. Sifton sent his geographer to see Mr. Stephens to get from him any information as to the grades of the road so far as they had laid down their line. The following is what he communicated to him:

During the summer of 1903 preliminary surveys were made of the line between North Bay and Winnipeg, and location surveys were made of a large portion of the line between Winnipeg and White Earth lake, about 200 miles. The extraordinary wet weather not only interfered with the work and movements of the survey parties but made the carriage of supplies extremely difficult and expensive. Enough work has been done, however, to show that it is possible to get a line from Winnipeg to the point at which the North Bay branch diverges from the main line, with grades not to exceed 0·4 per cent, which is equal to four inches to the hundred feet. That is a comparatively level line. I do not know that there is a road in Canada that has any better grade than that.

Then he proceeds:

And not more than four per cent curves.

Then Mr. Stephens proceeds to say that:

On the final location he can reduce most of the 0·4 per cent to 0·3 per cent and he can shorten the line. All curves are compensated and the line is in every way a more favourable one than the Canadian Pacific through the corresponding sections. In general terms it follows the valley of the English river to Lac Seul.

That is the height of land between the source of the St. Maurice and Winnipeg. An hon. gentleman who has given it some consideration tells me that the elevation above the sea at the source of the St. Maurice—I may say the line from Quebec will follow the St. Maurice river up till the plateau is reached—will be 800 feet above sea level. Winnipeg is 800 feet above sea level. So that commencing above Quebec and also at Winnipeg the levels are the same. There are undulations, and the highest point is Lac Seul. Then the report continues :

Thence to the Ogoki branch of the Albany river ; thence, in almost an air line, to Opazatika lake. From this point it will probably follow a little to the south of and parallel to a base line run by Messrs. Niven and Speight, in about latitude 49° 30', for the Ontario government. From the interprovincial boundary line it will probably run south-eastward to the head waters of the St. Maurice ; thence down the valley of the last named river ; thence across country to Quebec.

First 100 miles from Winnipeg can be built for $25,000 per mile ; that, between the 100th and 350th miles, will cost $35,000 per mile, and between 350th and 530th miles, $30,000 per mile. From the 530th mile eastward to Quebec cannot be estimated with any degree of accuracy, till further surveys are made, but Mr. Stephens considers $30,000 per mile ample. He also stated that all these estimates were liberal estimates and that the road should easily be constructed at these figures. The $30,000 estimate for the main line through the 'clay belt' may seem high, but it is largely due to the heavy cost of getting in supplies. For the reverse reason, the cost of the Quebec-Moncton section—other costs being equal—should be correspondingley reduced.

He puts the outside figure at thirty thousand dollars per mile. Hon. gentlemen, I presume, are pretty familiar with the cost to this country. I submitted an opinion last year which I thought was a reasonable one, showing the actual cost that it would be to Canada. Of course it can only be an estimate. I have had occasion, however, to modify that somewhat, and change it, but rather in the direction of increasing it than reducing it. It is only good for what it is worth, and, therefore, I do not profess to give it except as the judgment I have formed after studying all the sources of information that were available and the reports I have been able to arrive at. I take the figures given by Mr. Stephens. That is, $30,000 per mile for the whole line. Some of it would be less and some more.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—That is Moncton to Winnipeg ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that any surveys have actually been had of this line from the point where the branch to North Bay will deviate from the main line eastward ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No further information on that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—We are just in the same position now as we were in last year.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No more information than we had before.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—About 1,400 miles?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. The actual distance of the point of intersection from the branch of the main line eastward to North Bay—this intersection of the main line apposite North Bay, from that point to Quebec is less than 360 miles. That is the point of intersection from the main line running eastward to North Bay—from that point to Quebec. That is a train going to North Bay and a train going to Quebec, the train from the point of intersection would have 355 or 360 miles I think—the extra distance to Quebec would be only 357 miles.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But this point we are referring to must be west of the Quebec boundary, where the branch will deviate in going to North Bay. It must be very much west of the Quebec boundary.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, the boundary line runs north from Timiskaming, and my recollection of the map is that North Bay is not very much west of that.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But this line will not run due north, surely ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They will not run a direct line to North Bay. They will run a branch from their main line.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I certainly understand that they will not go all the way to Quebec boundary before they will start with the branch to North Bay. I imagine they will start on that branch perhaps 150 miles before they reach the Quebec boundary.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—All I have for it is Mr. Stephens' figures and calculations.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is referring to what is supposed to be the Grand Trunk branch from North Bay. Does the hon. gentleman know the Grand Trunk are not going to build that road ? The Ontario government are building that road with a proposition to lease it to the Grand Trunk ; it is the same line.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know whether the line running north from Timiskaming, which the Ontario government are building on the west side of Lake Timiskaming——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Two years ago the Ontario government took an appropriation from parliament to build a road up to Timiskaming, and after the transcontinental railway scheme had been confirmed by parliament a Bill was passed last session of the legislature that took another appropriation for extending the line until it intersects the main line of the transcontinental.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Their present contemplated line to North Bay, and the line they propose to build under the charter are different lines. They would have to deflect the line south if they were running from Winnipeg to North Bay; but their main line will be considerably to the north, and the figure I am giving is from the point of intersection of the line running from North Bay northward.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Lake Abitibi ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I could not say.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Does that mileage include curves and so on ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, that is the actual mileage of the line when constructed. I will give the House the figures, assuming on the knowledge obtained last year, putting it down at the $30,000 a mile, the cost will be $57,000,000 ; add to that the interest on the payments that will be made from time to time—that is on the interim bonds—because, as hon. gentlemen will recollect, the permanent bond issue will not take place till the roads are finished, there will be an interim bond issue, and adding the interest which, under the charter of last year, the government were authorized to do as part of the construction of the line—adding six million for the interest of the payments from year to year, assuming they run over a period of seven years, the actual cost would be $63,000,000. That would be $1,890,000 a year. and for the seven years, $13,230,000, until the road was rented. On the prairie section we only guarantee the bonds. It is presumed the prairie section will pay the interest, but in order to give the mountain section the advantage of the prairie section in the agreement that is made, that is considered part of the western section ; and, therefore, hon. gentlemen will see, taking the profits that will necessarily arise on the prairie section, the loss, if you can say there will be a loss, on the mountain section during the seven years will be therefore minimized, because you have the rich and the lean end to which hon. gentlemen referred. I will say a word or two in reference to the observations made that the company is practically doing nothing, that the government is doing everything. There seems to be a misconception in the public mind that the Grand Trunk are not practically contributing any large sum. On the prairie section the cost is put down at $25,000 per mile. That would be $27,500,000 on 1,100 miles of prairie. If you deduct the government guarantee of $13,000 per mile, which would be $14,000,000, it leaves a balance of $13,200,000 the company must expend, a sum nearly equal to the amount of the guarantee. Will hon. gentlemen contend that where you have the security from the parties of the completed road for an amount equal to your advance, that you are not amply secured?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Did I understand the hon. gentleman's calculation is that the prairie section of the road is to cost $35,000 a mile?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I said $25,000. That has always been estimated at $25,000, I do not think it will cost as much, but the figures that I have given to the House are extreme figures.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—How many miles does the hon. gentleman estimate that at ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Eleven hundred miles. It may be more or less. We cannot tell, but if there is any dispute about where the prairie section ends and the mountain section begins, it is to be left to arbitration. However, that would show that the Grand Trunk would be obliged to contribute $13,200,000 on the prairie section. On the mountain section we give a very much larger proportion—we do not give it but we guarantee the bonds to a much larger proportion.

My figures are much in excess of the figures of some hon. gentlemen. I probably am wrong in that. The same engineers said that the mountain section would extend further than calculated, but I put it at 706 miles, and I put the cost at $40,000 per mile, which is the extreme limit. Hon. gentlemen will remember that I read from the report of one of the engineers who said it should be between $36,000 and $37,000 a mile. He qualified that, however, by saying it would be the line from the coast to Edmonton, so that the calculation would give the benefit of the prairie section for three or four hundred miles, whatever it might be ; but that would still strengthen the view I took that forty thousand dollars per mile is a reasonable sum to name for the building of the mountain section. Their portion that they would have to spend over and above the guarantee of the government would be $7,666.000. They would have to spend also in rolling stock, fifteen million. So that the Grand Trunk Railway Company have to contribute over $35,000,000.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—How many miles are estimated as the distance from Winnipeg to Edmonton ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Seven hundred and sixty-six.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I suppose the company would only pay interest on that amount. The money would be borrowed to build the road ; they only pay the interest.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But they have to raise the $35,000,000, wholly independent of the government guarantee. That is their share. We do not help to raise it. There is the $13.000.000 on the prairie section. We guarantee their bonds only to a certain limit, and they have to issue bonds and raise the money for a sum equal, practically, to the amount of the bonds that we guarantee ; so that the hon. gentleman will see they have to raise, wholly apart from the government assistance——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It would only cost them the interest on that for the year.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But they have to raise that money. Of course they would pay the interest on it afterwards, but they have to raise it. They raise it without our aid and assistance. They have to raise $7,500,000 or more for the mountain section, and they have to contribute the $15,000,000 worth of rolling stock, which is of course all cash. That is $13.860,000 for the prairie section, making nearly $36,000,000 of security that the people of Canada have for the construction of this road, so that hon. gentlemen will see from that point of view we are amply guaranteed and protected. No one would hesitate about that. If a man is spending a thousand dollars on a property one would not hesitate to advance him another thousand, because you have the value of the property and the value of the improvements he has put upon it, so that there is really no risk in it. If the company fail in the end to pay the interest on this beyond the limit we fix, the road reverts to the people of Canada. Under the circumstances, I think there has been a good deal of misconception both in the press and in the discussions that have taken place elsewhere and abroad in reference to the relative sums that are being contributed by the people of Canada and by the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway, and therefore there is all the greater reason why, in our subsequent negotiations with them, we should take a favourable view of the proposals that have been finally agreed upon. None of them are really very serious. The only substantial, serious one—and that I do not refer to as very important, is where we agree to guarantee an amount unlimited under the 75 per cent basis on the mountain section, but. as I said before, we have not exceeded $40.000 per mile. If it exceeds that amount at all it will be a very slight sum, and our guarantee is no larger than we had contemplated. When we limited the guarantee to $30,000 per mile, we did not consider it was going to cost the company any more. The company said 'Oh, it will cost us a great deal more. The mountain section will be difficult to build.' Naturally, all capitalists were timid in entering into a large project of this kind. As one gentleman said, he was only paying on the third preference now, and he was afraid he was endangering the Grand Trunk proper by going into this project. However, wiser counsel prevailed, and they have approved of the contract that is now submitted to parliament. I have no doubt that hon. gentlemen recognize the proposal as one conceived in the best interests of Canada, that the road is really a necessity, that it will have traffic from its very origin, the change in this country in seven years will be so marked. Just consider the fact that Mr. Fielding has announced in his budget speech that the revenue this year was over $71,000,000. That is, it nearly doubled in seven years. In 1896 I think it stood about $36,000,000, not quite double but very nearly. Do hon. gentlemen suppose it is going to remain at that figure ? Do hon. gentlemen suppose that our revenue, by the time the road is finished, will be any less than $100,000,000 ? Not a bit of it. There is not the slightest doubt of it, that whoever is Finance Minister at the end of ten years will be able to announce that the revenue of Canada is upwards of $100,000,000. What are we to do with it ? Is it to pay off our national debt for the benefit of posterity, or is it to develop the country we own ? We possess a magnificent country to the north. We know it has timber on it, and that it is rich in mineral wealth, and we would be recreant to our duty if we failed to open up that country. The slur in the past has been that Ontario and Quebec were a mere fringe of country along the United States border and that our trade was all going there because we were in such close contact with that country. We certainly should have an ambition to add some depth to our country. Then take it from a military point of view. A good many people look at it from that aspect, the enormous advantage it would be to Great Britain if in future it becomes necessary to send troops through Canada. We can pass them through a section of the country two or three or four or five hundred miles from the frontier of Canada. There was time when our neighbours to the south of us, even in peaceful times, declined to allow us to pass troops through their country. They objected to it. We were powerless to induce them to do so and we had to build the Sault St. Marie canal for ourselves. Canada is in receipt of a large revenue today, and we count on a rising revenue in the future. I say that we would be wanting in loyalty to our country if we hesitated for one moment to pass this Bill to authorize us to proceed with the construction of this railway.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL moved the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Wednesday, June 15, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

MONARCH LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. DRUMMOND, from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported Bill (69) An Act to incorporate the Monarch Life Assurance Company, with amendments. He said : I move concurrence in these amendments. I desire to explain that the first of these amendments deals with the power of the directors to delegate their powers to a committee, which is struck out, and the second amendment strikes out the exemption in clause 38 of the company's Act, which gives the company power to lend money to shareholders and directors.

The motion was agreed to.

SALE OF ROSS RIFLES TO THE GOVERNMENT.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

1. Has the Ross Rifle Company sold any rifles to the government ?
2. When, in what quantity, and at what price?
3. How much, on the average, in the past, has been the cost of the purchase of each rifle of the different models which have been placed in the hands of the Canadian militia since confederation ?
4. Does the government know, and can it inform us of, the price of the fire-arm with which the American infantry is armed to-day.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answers are as follows :

1 and 2. The Ross Rifle Company entered into a contract for the delivery of 12,000 rifles at $25 each.

3. $18.25 for Lee-Enfield rifles in 1896 ; the new L. E. rifles now being manufactured for the British army is quoted at about $20.

4. The government does not know.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am not a member of the government, but I have the information.

MUTUAL RESERVE LIFE ASSOCIATION COMMITTEE.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS moved :

That the Select Committee appointed to investigate the position of the Mutual Reserve Life Association, of New York, in Canada, be enlarged to twelve members by the addition of the names of the following senators :—The hon. Messieurs Cox, Watson, Wood, Lougheed, Béique, Gibson, and Sir Alphonse Pelletier.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before this motion is put, will the hon. gentleman give us a little further explanation as to the necessity of that move, and the propriety of it, or the etiquette, perhaps it may be called ?

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS—I do not see the necessity of more explanation than I gave last week when I gave notice of this motion. I think every one in this House will understand at first sight that this committee is too small in number. It has been appointed with five members and one of these five has declared his intention not to act on the committee, and we have been proceeding without him. We have only four members acting on that committee, and the question under consideration by the committee is so important, that I think it is but fair not only for the interested parties but also for the members of the committee to have its number increased. Any one of us may be absent from time to time, and as we are only four, our committee would be very small. I think the interests involved in that inquiry are so large that it is only fair to pass this motion. We have never seen such an important committee formed with so small a number. For those reasons I thought it was no more than just to have that committee enlarged in order to investigate the whole question in such a way as will give satisfaction not only to this House but to the country at large and to the interested parties.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The explanations just given by the hon. senator, a member of this committee, are quite proper, as far as they go. I may say, as chairman of that committee, I believe I speak the feeling of all its members, when I say we have no objection to an enlargement of the committee, but the circumstances surrounding this demand are quite peculiar. The members of this committee ask themselves why this late action when it could be taken in the first place. One of the peculiar circumstances of this demand for an enlargement of the committee lies in the fact that on Friday afternoon, when this House was about to adjourn, when the Speaker was about to leave the chair, this notice of motion was given. From the debate that then occurred on this notice of motion, the impression was left on the House, that the demand for this enlargement was made on behalf of the committee.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS—Not at all.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The impression was so strong that the hon. senator from Manitoba (Hon. Mr. Bernier) had to ask the question :

Does the hon. gentleman represent the unanimous opinion of the committee ? Does he make this motion after conferring with his colleagues and giving their approval ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—What is his answer ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The answer is 'I do not represent the committee.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—But when he gave the notice of motion, his attitude left the impression on this honourable House, that it was with the sanction of the committee, and it required an inquiry from the Hon. Mr. Bernier, the Hon. Mr. DeBoucherville, and I think the Hon. Mr. Macdonald (B.C.), to make it clear. Another peculiar circumstance in connection with the demand is this, that the hon. Secretary of State insisted that this notice of motion should pass as a motion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was given as a notice.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes, and at that time, as I understand, the hon. Secretary of State wanted it adopted at once.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Members of that committee were in the House until the last Order of the Day was called, and, under the impression that the business of the House was finished, we left the chamber, and in our absence this notice of motion was given, and this proposal to adopt it was made. Had it not been for the timely questions of the hon. gentlemen whose names I have mentioned, the motion would have probably carried. I have consulted authorities, and I understand that this is a most unusual proceeding, unheard of in parliamentary procedure. It is unheard of in any judicial court such as they want to make of this committee. Our committee is not a judicial body. It is simply a court of inquiry, a commissaire enquêteur. We have no powers to act judicially ; we have simply to ascertain the facts in connection with the administration of that company and report them from time to time to the Senate. During that debate the committee was held up—and I am speaking here not for myself but for my colleagues who form the committee—I will not say to ridicule, but held up in a sense of disrespect, because we were told plainly in that debate that this committee was not satisfactory, that we were unable to give satisfaction to the senators and to the public. What do they want a large number of members of this honourable House on this committee for ? The duties of the committee are simply to collect the facts and report them to the House. Now, on behalf of that committee, I strongly object to the language used during the discussion that day. The committee do not assume an infallibility in the matter ; we have no judgment to exercise. Consequently I do not see why all this zeal is displayed. The committee is quite capable of listening to the witnesses who shall be called before it, and why the committee should be subjected to a procedure which has never obtained in this House or any other legislative body, is more than we can understand, and I express the sentiments of my colleagues on the subject. If the committee is to be enlarged, it should be properly enlarged—that is the word that has been used several times, and I therefore suggest that in addition to the names mentioned in the notice of motion the following be recommended to the committee. Hon. Messrs. DeBoucherville, McSweeney, Robertson, Bernier, Sullivan, McMullen, and Wilson. This is a suggestion ; if it is not accepted it will be my duty to move an amendment to the motion. In the name of the committee I thank the hon. senator who saw fit to intervene and prevent this notice of motion from taking effect as a motion, as it was proposed to do, on Friday last.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was not present at the committee, and have not had an opportunity of hearing the mode in which the examination is being conducted. I, however, saw in two evening papers of this city what I thought was a remarkable exhibition of how to suppress the truth. I met members of this chamber who told me after they came out that it was a perfect travesty of justice, that the counsel for the company was there and wished to cross-examine Mr. Wells, but was refused permission to do so. Mr. Eldridge was produced as a witness on the part of the company ; the usual course is for the counsel calling a witness to examine him first, and the counsel on the other side to cross-examine him. The counsel for the company was refused the opportunity of examining in chief the witness produced by the company.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I may be wrong. I am simply stating what I have read and heard; I shall be very glad to hear it disproved. I did think it was scarcely comporting with the dignity of this House that an examination should be conducted in the manner in which that was described. Mr. Eldridge, I understand, asked the committee to adjourn for an hour to allow him to produce two witnesses from New York, who were to arrive in the city within an hour, for the purpose of confirming his evidence, who it was said had heard Mr. Wells make similar statements to those that Mr. Eldridge had communicated to the committee, and his request was denied. I am only speaking from hearsay, but I see several gentlemen present who were in that committee room, and I ask them, for the information of the House, to state frankly the opinion they formed as to the manner in which the witnesses were examined. Mr. Aylesworth the counsel for the company was not permitted to take any part. In the examination of Mr. Eldridge, it was the counsel that was engaged by the committee that conducted the examination. I think it is very unfortunate that the desire to elicit the truth was not entertained in this particular case. We know very well that a witness can make a statement and cover up the truth in an examination in chief, but under cross-examination the weakness of his statement will become apparent. That is patent under all the jurisprudence of this country. This committee was appointed to inquire into and inform the House of the facts connected with the administration of the affairs of this insurance company. It did seem to me, speaking frankly, that the desire was to prevent the facts from appearing. I should like hon. gentlemen to state frankly their views on the subject, as I have done, because I do believe the opinion formed outside of the manner of conducting the proceedings in the committee is not at all in keeping with the honour and dignity of this chamber.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I forgot to mention the point that the hon. Secretary of State has raised. I had it marked, and I am glad that he has raised it. He talks about the dignity of the Senate. I think the dignity of the Senate would be consulted if criticisms of this kind were not based on mere hearsay.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is very unfortunate that the leader of this honourable House should rise from his seat and impugn the honour and integrity of that committee.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I speak from reports in the papers.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The report by which we are to be judged is on the table of this House. If we are to be judged, and our actions are to be weighed in the balance on hearsay evidence, I think it is not consulting the dignity or the honour of the members of this House. What was done before that committee was done in the interests of justice, and according to the instructions given by this honourable House. We could not assume powers that this Senate has not given to us. Mr. Aylesworth appeared, it is true, but the committee could not take upon itself a right that the Senate itself had not. These two men Mr. Wells and Mr. Eldridge, were summoned to the bar of the House. No counsel could come before this Senate and speak on behalf of those witnesses. A witness before this bar has not a right to counsel, that is, to express his views before the Senate. He may consult with him, as I told Mr. Aylesworth at the time. I said 'You have all privileges, all rights, all powers to have your client consult with you, but you have no more right before this committee than you would have before the bar of the Senate.' That is the position we took, and that was the position that was unanimously endorsed by the committee ; so that when criticism is levelled at this committee on hearsay evidence, and on ex parte evidence, of newspaper reports, I say it is not a proper position ; that it is dealing unfairly with your committee. This Senate has by a majority voted the appointment and constitution of this committee, and the committee is quite capable, quite willing and quite prepared to stand by the honour and dignity of the Senate, and to stand by the rights and the interests of the public. That is our position and I am astounded at the attitude taken by the hon. leader of this House. We do not deserve such treatment ; we do not deserve to be told that our action was a travesty of justice.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is not a proper expression.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That was the opinion outside at all events.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The opinion that should be formed by the responsible leader of this House should be based on the documents before the House and not on the evidence given by attorneys of the company or of other interested parties who were in touch with the company. We are not trying the company by any means. We are simply ascertaining the facts, and I hold that neither Mr. Wells nor Mr. Eldridge had any more right to be represented on that committee than before the Senate by counsel. Then my hon. friend the member from Stadacona (Hon. Mr. Landry) and the hon. gentleman from Rothesay (Hon. Mr. Domville) endorsed that position.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Hon. members know the position which I have taken in this matter, and they know that I have given credit to the hon. gentleman from Rothesay for having done what he has done on behalf of the policy-holders of the Mutual Reserve Company. He has undertaken an energetic campaign to do justice to those who are interested in that company. I should not like to say anything which would displease him, because I think he deserves the commendation of the public, and especially of the members of this insurance company; but when a respectable member of the committee, the hon. gentleman from Repentigny (Hon. Mr. Legris) rises in this chamber and makes such a motion to add to the committee, and when he gives as one of his reasons for so doing that the committee which was composed of five has been reduced to four, because one of the hon. members of that committee, the hon. senator from Bedford (Hon. Mr. Baker) has resigned, he must have good reasons. He would not do that unless he thought that the committee would have more weight, and would succeed better in the task which it has undertaken if the committee was enlarged as he suggests. I do not see how we can, under such circumstances, reject the motion of the hon. gentleman. As a matter of fact the committee was composed of five: the hon. gentleman from Bedford resigned, leaving only four. Taking into consideration the position pointed out by the hon. gentleman from Repentigny, as a matter of fact the committee will be reduced to three. Now take the position one hon. gentleman occupies on that committee. He ought not to be there and he has not the right to be there, and he says he must be there. We cannot refuse, however, to take into consideration the objections made to the hon. gentleman from Rothesay, so that really the committee would be reduced to three. I think that under such circumstances the committee can lose nothing by having other hon. senators added. What harm will be done? If I were in the position of the hon. gentleman from Victoria and the hon. gentleman from Rothesay I would be the first to come forward, especially after finding two of their numbers have resigned——

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We have accepted the motion of the hon. senator. We do not oppose that.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—If everybody accepts the proposition, there is no use talking on the subject. In the interests of the policyholders, in the interest of the Senate, and in the interest of the committee I must vote for the motion made by the hon. gentleman from Repentigny, and I do not see how the hon. members of this House can refuse to accept that proposition.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I do not know whether the Secretary of State will allow me to repeat a few words that passed just now. If he will, I shall use them and deal pretty cleverly with them, but if not I will not use them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman can use his own discretion.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—We do not appear to have any discretion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The House has already given too wide a discretion to the committee.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend must be patient. This matter has caused a great deal of anxiety all round, and my hon. friend must remember that the eyes of Canada are on this investigation. I do not want to refer to any unfortunate matter that may appear in some paper. Get Saturday evening's paper and read what it says about the Senate. I would rather have taken that question up and defended hon. gentlemen in this House from that attack. I would not have spoken as my hon. friend the Secretary of State has done. He said 'I felt from the beginning'—beginning of what? The asking of an investigation, not to try them, not to condemn them, not to hang them, but in the interests of the policyholders to investigate what the company were doing, whether the management is honest, or whether we are being wronged. I spoke for the country, yet my hon. friend says the committee is not important. Of course I take all these statements cum grano salis, because I know people get excited. I know a man's wishes run away with his mind sometimes; not in this case though because the hon. Secretary of State can have no wishes in it. He is in this House an impartial juror, just as I am or the hon gentleman from Toronto. We are impartial jurors, and why make this statement ? He said 'I felt from the beginning that the committee named was not a representative one.' Will my hon. friend explain this matter ? What is a representative committee ? Is it a committee that suits one party or is it a committee that suits somebody else's taste, or is it a committee moved in this House by some hon. gentleman which this honourable House thinks fit to accept and to pass judgment upon by adopting the motion and having that committee appointed ? He says the committee was not a representative one. Was it to be all of one character, or was it to be all of another ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I wanted to send it to the Banking and Commerce Committee, as a representative committee of this chamber.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—And when that was voted down, some hon. gentlemen voted to give us no committee at all, and they went further, they endeavoured to stop us from getting counsel. What position would we be in if we had no counsel with us, and what condition would this committee have been in if I, who had made these charges in the House, which I think have been fairly proved to-day, and which will be printed and put before the House—what position would I be in if when that committee met they had nobody before them to argue the case, nobody to state what the charges were founded on. The committee would simply have said 'There is nothing before us; there is no counsel to conduct the case, there is no criminal indictment, and there is nobody here to present the plaintiff's side of the case.' My hon. friend said it was most unprecedented. Will the hon. Secretary of State turn to the trial of Warren Hastings.

Hon. Mr. McDONALD (C.B.)—He does not remember it.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—He remembers it well, and I could give him many other instances under British practice. When we had the British North America Act brought in, it was based on the authority of England, an unwritten law, but a precedent. My hon. friend says—and I want to attach a great deal of importance to this—that his opinion has been confirmed by the circumstances which have occurred. What circumstances have occurred ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I gave them.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman said it was hearsay evidence ; that he read it in the newspapers. Does my hon. friend believe everything he reads in the newpapers ?

Hon Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I do not. As a lawyer of high standing, the hon. gentleman would know that in a court of law a newspaper report would have no standing whatever.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend will recollect I said there were hon. gentlemen present now who were in the committee room, who could confirm or deny my statement. I shall be glad to have them deny it, if it is possible for them to do so.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend is putting witnesses on the floor of the Senate against this committee. This committee has reported, and their report is held up. When they ask for counsel the report is held off. The committee have reported—it has not been confirmed yet—I think it is wise it is not—yet hon. gentlemen are asked—and a most unfair proposition it is to ask any hon. gentleman that was present in that room, merely listening to what was said, to come and testify against a committee appointed by this House. Will that course commend itself to the public ? Never. The public are wondering to-day. I would hesitate to say on the floor of this House what the public are saying on the streets. I would never say what they say, but they are talking and you cannot keep them from talking ; they will talk. I never objected to any enlargement of this committee. All I sought was to have the best means adopted to put the policy-holders of this company in Canada in the proper shape as regards the Bill that the company attempted to refer to us. I did not think that Bill was in keeping with the motion I had made. We did not ask for that Bill. We did not seek to cast any reflection upon the government, or to say that the government or the department had not done their duty. We only said 'There are certain facts in our hands, and, as we cannot get justice anywhere else, we ask the Senate to look into it to see whether those charges made by myself on behalf of the policy-holders of Canada are correct or not. It cannot be wiped out; it will not be wiped out, and it shall not be wiped out. We shall have those facts if Rome has to fall, whoever Rome is. Mr. Aylesworth asked to have the investigation postponed because he had not his witnesses here. Every courtesy was extended to Mr. Aylesworth this morning. He said he knew nothing about the case, and was not able to go on with it. If he could not go on to-day how could he have gone on the other day? The charge was made that we were delaying the investigation. We are not delaying it. We are pressing all we can, to get through with the work, but we are met all round with objections. One says cui bono? I have forgotten my Latin. He says cui bono? and what is it? That no good would come out of the investigation, and that the policy-holders were to be imposed upon by a Bill to amend a public Act of this parliament. The hon. gentleman is like Jacob in search of a father. He had a mother but could not find a father for the Bill. My hon. friend attacks me at every stage. He attacks me because I am trying to help our friends although he is not interested in it, as he says, in any way directly or indirectly. But I should judge from his speech that every move he makes is opposed to this investigation. That is the way I judge it..

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not on a fair basis.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Not on a fair basis my hon. friend says, and yet he voted against any committee.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I moved to refer it to Banking and Commerce Committee, and let them exercise their discretion.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—And then the hon. gentleman voted for no committee at all. When we asked for counsel it was with very great difficulty we got the order. I hardly think my hon. friend is doing himself justice. He used some words to me just now which I do not want to repeat to the House. My hon. friend from Mille Isle is perfectly correct in what he says. My desire has been in the public interest and the interest of the policy-holders to have a most searching investigation of the affairs of this company. If that is the intention, in enlarging this committee, I see no objection to it, except that, wisely or unwisely, reflection has been cast on the personnel of the committee as it now stands, and this action confirms it. Then by referring the Bill from the Banking and Commerce Committee back to the special committee, would the hon. gentleman not be casting a reflection on the Committee on Banking and Commerce? The public press has already commenced hostile criticism on the difficulty we have experienced so far, and if it should happen that we are unable to get to the bottom of this business and place before the policy-holders the exact state of affairs, whatever that may be, there would be no other conclusion arrived at outside of this House than that it was most unfortunate. That is most guarded language.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—What is the hon. gentleman reading from?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I am speaking from copious notes. There will be no other conclusion arrived at outside of this House than it was most unfortunate we have not been permitted to continue our investigation without this motion which is now flung upon us. I do not find any fault with the hon. gentleman from Repentigny, for I believe he is acting in good faith. I do not believe he even drew the resolution. I think it was placed in his hands, and it is not his writing.

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS—The hon. gentleman is mistaken about it being placed in my hands.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—But the hon. gentleman did not draw it?

Hon. Mr. LEGRIS—No, no.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Then it was placed in the hon. gentleman's hand. But my hon. friend is doing what he considers best in the public interest in presenting this motion. I regret exceedingly that the notice was sprung on the chamber at such a late hour. I had just left my seat, as I thought the Speaker was about to adjourn the House, and I think the hon. gentleman, being one of the committee, should have notified the committee that he proposed to adopt this course before submitting his notice of motion. I do not think I can say anything more about it, except to explain that I have no objection to putting these gentlemen on the committee. But, while enlarging that committee, why exclude a lot of other hon. gentlemen who would have been on it if the Committee on Banking and Commerce had been directed to look into the matter ? I think I should ask my hon. friend the Secretary of State to withdraw his insinuations against me.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have made no insinuations ?

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—My hon. friend says he has made no insinuation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman for five or six weeks was attacking the company and making representations the truth of which the company denied. It seemed to me it was not in harmony with what was reasonable or equitable that the man who made those charges should sit on the committee that was to try the company.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—The hon. gentleman says I have been five or six weeks attacking the company. I have communications that I have been carrying on with the department for two years on those lines, and I could get no satisfaction. I tried the company for satisfaction. I never came to this honourable body until I was armed with authority by the policy-holders. It is not a personal matter of mine ; there is no intention to ruin the company—in fact, there is no such thing as a company, it is an association of gentlemen who agree to assess one another at so much a year to meet the death claims of the fraternity. What I did say, and what I am trying to lay before this honourable House, is the fact that the association has got into the hands of a directorate that we cannot turn out, who are bleeding us to death, and they are endeavouring to get the Senate to protect them. I can only say I am sorry that I should ever be forced to believe that there is an attempt to take such action as would make the public of Canada and the unfortunate people who are insured in this association, believe that no redress can be obtained here and that an effort is being made to stifle inquiry. I do not assert that, because it is unparliamentary ; but I say it would be most unfortunate if the public at large should get that impression.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—My hon. friend from Rothesay seems to take the position that every hon. gentleman who expresses himself in opposition to the views which he entertains himself is antagonistic to him and the objects which he desires to attain.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—No.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—So far as I am personally concerned, I dissent from that position. In any vote that I shall give, or statement I shall make on this question, I shall be actuated by one consideration alone, and that is to do the best that can be done for the unfortunate sufferers holding policies in the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association. There is, perhaps, no member of the Senate, who is a warmer friend of mine than the hon. gentleman from Rothesay. I entertain for him nothing but the very best of friendship, and I hope I shall always do so, and that he will never consider me as being opposed to the inquiry he is making. All that I desire is that the inquiry shall proceed on a sound basis. Holding those views myself I am bound to hold that these are the views of every member of this House, and I have seen and heard nothing that changes my views so far as that is concerned. I think it is highly improper to attribute motives to hon. senators.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—Now what do we desire. The Senate of Canada is on its trial before the people in dealing with this very important question. Let us not be carried away by any feeling of sentiment. Let us be influenced solely by a desire to do what is right and deal with this matter in a straightforward and judicial way.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—With reference to what took place just before the adjournment last Friday, with due respect to my hon. friend who addressed the Senate a short time ago on that question, he (Hon. Mr. Cloran) did not put the matter fairly before the Senate. I should like to ask him what other opportunity had the hon. gentleman from Repentigny to give notice of motion except on the motion to adjourn the House ? The session was short. Now, what did he say on that occasion ? He said that the matter before the committee was much larger and more important than he had anticipated. So large that he, for one, felt, one member of the committee having already retired, that a larger number of senators should share the responsibility of the investigation. The hon. Secretary of State simply said that in order to facilitate the inquiry, and proceed more rapidly, it would be better, if it was agreeable to the Senate, to let the notice of motion be passed as a motion immediately. Did the hon. gentleman press the question ? Not at all.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—He could not; two members objected.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—An hon. member on the other side simply made the suggestion that as some of the members of the committee were absent perhaps it would be better to let the motion stand until their return. His suggestion was accepted at once. There was no objection raised at all. So far as this discussion to-day is concerned, if the same rules prevail in the Senate that pertain to the House of Commons, it is not in accordance with parliamentary practice to discuss in the Senate that which has taken place in a committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—While that is the case, it has always been the right of a senator to take cogizance of what the newspapers say. Now, I was present at the committee, and I must say in all candor that in my opinion the newspaper statements were justified by the conditions that prevailed on the committee. As to the question of enlarging the committee, those who are opposed to the smaller addition, in my opinion reflect upon the members of the Senate in this way——

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—We do not object; we have already said that we accept it.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—I am quite aware of that. But in one breath the hon. chairman opposed the enlargement of the committee by three members, because he says it is already sufficiently large, and in the next breath he suggests the addition of several other names. I should like to know what consistency there is in that ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I said I did not object on principle, and that is the attitude of the committee. We are prepared to accept not only seven, but to accept fourteen. That is our attitude.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—I do not raise an objection. I am simply speaking on the general principle that a reasonable enlargement of the committee is in the very best interest of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—That is what we say.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. member from Russell (Hon. Mr. Edwards) said that as a matter of principle we should not refer to what has taken place in one of the committees of this House. Yet he rose for what purpose ? Just to state what did take place. Where is the consistency? The only excuse for his assertion is that he does not know what did take place in the committee. The committee was appointed to inquire into the condition of the New York Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association in Canada; subsequently when a question of privilege was brought before this House a new order was given to that committee and that order was——

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I submit a point of order. The hon. gentleman is going wide of the motion before the House. The motion is to enlarge the committee. We are not discussing the powers of the committee, or what they did or what they have not done. The question is, whether the committee is to be enlarged.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am going to raise another point of order, and in order to explain my point of order I must read what I am about to read now. I am going to oppose the motion because it is not in order.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Well, let us have the point of order !

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The question before the House is to enlarge the committee and I am giving reasons why it should not be enlarged. In giving those reasons I am replying to an attack made against our committee. The House is asked to enlarge the committee because, as constituted now, it is not a proper one. That was the assertion made by the hon. Secretary of State last Friday.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—That is not the reason given by the hon. member who introduced the motion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is no reason given.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Yes, there was a good reason given.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rose on the 8th of June and moved:

That an order of this House do issue for the attendance at the bar of this House of J. Douglas Wells, of New York, to answer such questions as may be put to him relative to declaration he is alleged to have made, that there were members of parliament, of the committee, and of the government, that had to have good sums, that it cost him over $10,000, that he had found all the money, excepting for the last Bill, for a small amount.

Then, after debate, the Hon. Mr. Gibson moved in amendment:

That all the words after 'that' to the end of the question be struck out, and the following words be substituted instead:—'Messrs. J. Douglas Wells and — Eldridge, of New York, be summoned to appear before the select committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, of New York, in order to answer such questions as may be put to them, relative to declarations alleged to have been made by Mr. Wells, that there were members of parliament, of the committee, and of the government, that had to have good sums, that it cost him over $10,000, that he had found all the money, excepting for the last Bill, for a small amount.'

These instructions were given by a vote of this House to the committee, so the committee had, besides the object for which it had been created to investigate the company, a positive commission to investigate that special case. The committee was ordered to get those two witnesses before them to answer such questions as might be put to them, and the special meeting of the committee was simply to examine those two witnesses. It was not for the purpose of investigating the affairs of the New York Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association. The first thing that happened when the committee opened was the appearance of an attorney who came in the name of the company. We told Mr. Aylesworth that it was not the company's business we were going into that day, but an inquiry into an accusation brought against the parliament of Canada, not by the company but by Mr. Wells himself. We told Mr. Aylesworth that he could not appear on that occasion for the simple reason that we were not investigating the company's business but examining two witnesses on the subject I have mentioned. I am very sorry that the hon. member did not understand our real position. If he had understood it, he would not have made the speech we have listened to to-day. The hon. Secretary of State did not understand it either. When the hon. gentleman from Repentigny gave his notice of motion, the hon. Secretary of State said:

Under the circumstances, it would be very much better if the House would agree to accept the notice of motion as a motion. Otherwise it will simply defer the matter for two or three days longer, and I understand there are witnesses now in the city who have come a long distance, and it will mean considerable expense keeping them here, whereas if we adopt the motion now the committee can go on without delay.

And that in the face of an adjournment of the committee until the next Wednesday, and in face of the fact that there were no witnesses here. The two witnesses who had been summoned to appear before the committee had been heard and discharged. There was not a single witness in attendance, but the hon. Secretary of State, in order to obtain the consent of the House to have the notice of motion put as a motion, made that statement.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was not aware at the time that the committee had adjourned until the following Wednesday.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—So I see by the speech the hon. gentleman made, and that is what I am complaining of. If he had known the facts he would not have made that speech. The accusations brought against the committee in the name of the Mutual Reserve Company have no significance at all, because on that day we were not investigating the condition of their business, but the accusation alleged to have been made against members of parliament by Mr. Wells. For that purpose there was no necessity for an attorney, and especially an attorney for the company, because the company had nothing to do with it. The motion before the House to-day must be considered by the members of the committee as a motion of want of confidence. It can bear no other construction. If the hon. gentleman from Repentigny had had confidence, we would have discussed that question together in committee, and, having arrived at an understanding, we could have submitted to the House a motion expressing the views of the committee. But the notice of the motion now before the House was presented to the House in our absence, and an attempt was made behind our backs to have it passed. I resent the motion therefore, and if it should be adopted I shall feel obliged to retire from the committee. The point I want to raise is this, and it is why I have read the motion which was carried on a division in this House; there were two motions, one moved by the hon. senator from Rothesay to appoint a select committee, and an amendment to refer the matter to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce. The House divided on that amendment, and the names of those who voted are recorded in the minutes. Then a vote was taken on the motion to appoint a select committee to investigate the affairs of the company. I shall read the names of those who voted against the motion.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I rise to a point of order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am speaking to my point of order.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman has been speaking for fully fifteen minutes, and is altogether out of order. He is not dealing with the question now before this honourable House. He is referring to past debates, which are not germane to the question, and one who is so particular about enforcing the rules of the House should respect them himself. I ask for the ruling of the chair.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am speaking to the point of order.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I ask for the ruling of the chair.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am speaking to the point of order, and the hon. gentleman has no right to rise and interrupt me. The names given here are those of the members who voted against the motion to appoint the committee.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—By announcing that he intends to raise a point of order, the hon. gentleman thinks he can abuse the rules of the House as he has been doing for the last fifteen minutes. I ask for the Speaker's ruling.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am going to speak on the point of order. The hon. gentleman does not state his point of order.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I stated the point of order, that you were——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has no right to address me personally.

The SPEAKER—What is the point of order?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—My point of order is this; the motion before the House is that the committee be enlarged by the addition of seven members. I raise the point that among the names of those mentioned by the hon. member in his motion are members who voted against the formation of the committee, and I contend they cannot now be put on that committee the appointment of which they opposed.

The SPEAKER—Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to cite the page of Bourinot where that is laid down.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I spoke from memory. I cannot give the page now.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Let us have the authority.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, I will not.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—My experience of procedure is not as great as that of some of my hon. colleagues, but I wonder if it has not been the practice for a member who raises a point of order to first state what the point is before speaking upon it; because a member can make an hour's speech and say he intends to raise a point of order. The House would not be seized with the point of order, and the hon. gentleman might himself be convinced, by the time he finishes his speech, that he should not raise it. Has it not been the practice in the Senate when a member rises to discuss a point of order to state the point or order before giving his explanations and argument upon it?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I rise to answer the imputations against our committee and I wound up by saying that I wanted to raise a point of order before the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Beique) thought of raising his point of order.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I would like to ask the hon. Speaker, when the hon. gentleman from Montreal raised the question of order could not that question of order be discussed? I do not think anyone would object to that? The hon. gentleman from Stadacona has also raised a point of order, and in doing so he has discussed the point of order raised by another hon. gentleman, and the hon. gentleman from DeLorimier seems to think that because a point of order has been raised, we must all submit without discussing it. The hon. gentleman is discussing his own point of order, and he is discussing the point of order of the hon. gentleman to-day that the point of order the hon. gentleman from Quebec is discussing is not germane to the point he had raised first. I do not agree with the claim of the hon. gentleman from DeLorimier that the matter ought to be stopped there.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from Stadacona has not cited any authority for his question of order; I should feel better pleased if he had. But I understand the point of order to be this; that any member of the Senate who voted against the resolution to refer this question with respect to this insurance company to the committee of five, is debarred now from voting on the resolution to enlarge the committee.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, not from voting on the resolution, but from being a member of that same committee. Two of the members in the motion that is put before the chair who are asked to be added to the committee have already voted against the formation of that committee. I say that those two persons cannot form part of the committee and, therefore, the motion is not in order, because it contains names of persons who cannot be members of that committee.

The SPEAKER—A rule is invoked to the effect that a member who is opposed to the object for which a committee is appointed cannot be a member of that committee. The hon. gentlemen who voted against this motion to refer the matter to this committee of five, were not necessarily opposed to the investigation. Some of them voted in favour of a motion to refer this subject for investigation to our Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Subsequently.

The SPEAKER—And the probabilities are, that if the motion had been to refer this question to the committee, constituted as it will be if this resolution now before the House passes, the hon. gentlemen would not have voted against that resolution. I do not think that the point of order is well taken.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—As it seems clear that the general opinion of the members of this House is that the committee appointed to make the investigation into the Mutual Reserve Fund Association business, with the addition of the names now mentioned in the motion before the House, will not be large enough, I move that the following names be added: Hon. Messrs. DeBoucherville, McSweeney, Robertson, Bernier, Sullivan, McMullen and Wilson.

The amendment was agreed to.

The motion, as amended, was carried.

INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

MOTION DROPPED.

The Order of Day being called:

That the order of the Senate of the 8th instant, referring Bill (H) intituled: 'An Act further to amend the Insurance Act,' to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, be rescinded, and that the said Bill be referred to the select committee appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association, of New York.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I wish to drop this motion. I understand that the Bill which was referred some time ago to the Committee on Banking and Commerce has been taken up by that committee and some progress has been made. Therefore, having no other object in view than to serve the best interests of the policy-holders, I wish to drop it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I object.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—And if the Committee on Banking and Commerce, in their wisdom, see fit later on to ask this House to have the Bill transferred to the special committee, it will be in their judgment to recommend to the House what they see fit. I ask the House to allow me to withdraw the motion.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I object.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I hope the House will acquiesce in the proposal of the hon. gentleman from Killarney, and allow the Bill to go to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. It was a suggestion of my own, and I thought the Banking and Commerce Committee would be able to give it a thorough investigation and decide what was best. If, when that Bill is before the committee, it does not appear that it has the support of the policy-holders, I should like, as I am somewhat responsible for the Bill, to have the Bill withdrawn. If the hon. gentleman on my right here (Hon. Mr. Domville) represents, as he says he does, the policy-holders——

Hon. Mr. DOMVILLE—I am not lying.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—And they do not consider this Bill is in their interest, then I should certainly ask that the Bill be withdrawn. It is not promoted in the interests of the company, but solely in the interests of the policy-holders ; and, therefore, if they do not desire it, I do not wish to have any connection with it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think if the hon. gentleman who has that motion on the order paper wants to dispose of it in the way he suggests, the only thing to do is to put it to a vote as any other question. He has no right to withdraw it.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Why, certainly.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I took a very strong stand the other day as to this enlarged committee, when the hon. gentleman from Marshfield suggested a few days ago that that enlarged committee should conduct the investigation and deal with the Bill. At that time the Bill was referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee. Notice of motion was given to rescind that order and refer it to the committee conducting this investigation, with the understanding that the committee was to be enlarged in numbers. Taking that stand, and still believing that that committee could handle that matter, the Bill was taken up in the Banking and Commerce Committee. Though not a member of that committee, I was present to-day at the meeting, and I know they are dealing with it, and consequently I do not very well see how we can take it out of their hands.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—I want to ask the Speaker is there a rule by which we can rescind that motion ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We can negative a motion.

The SPEAKER—There is no motion to rescind. The universal practice in this House, and, I think, in all legislative bodies, is that if an hon. gentleman gives notice of a motion, and when the time comes he does not wish to proceed with it, he says 'dropped.'

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It was only a notice.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I am asking under what rule can we rescind the motion ?

The SPEAKER—I am simply saying that the hon. gentleman does not propose to go on with the motion to rescind. There is no rule, except a general rule, that a legislative body can pass practically almost any resolution it pleases which is not forbidden. There is no rule which forbids the rescinding of a previous resolution, and there are numerous precedents both in our parliament and the parliament of Great Britain, where previous resolutions have not only been rescinded but expunged from the journals.

The motion was dropped.

DEBATES INDEXES.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. WOOD inquired :

Is there an index of the Commons and Senate 'Hansard' debates printed during the session?
Are senators entitled to copies ?
Have copies been distributed this session ?
If not, how are they to be obtained ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is not under the control of the government. It is under the control of the Debates Committee and Printing Committee. It is not a matter the government would know anything about. If there is any hon. gentleman present who is a member of the Debates and Printing Committees they might throw some light on it but I know nothing of it.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The reason I am asking this inquiry is that I was endeavouring to find a statement which I understood had been made in the House of Commons debate. I looked for it in the reports and failing to find it, I asked an hon. member of this House to tell me where I could find it. He told me that an index of the debates was published in the House of Commons, and I could get one at the distribution office. I applied there and was informed by Mr. Davidson that the index of the debates in the House of Commons was published weekly, and a copy was distributed weekly to each member of parliament and each member of the Senate. I replied that I had not received any, and on further inquiries I cannot find that any member of the Senate had received any. I made inquiries in the House of Commons and found an index there, and understood that some members of the House of Commons are furnished with an index. If the chairman of the Debates Committee can give me the information I should like very much to find it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—There are no indexes made of the debates in the Senate during the session ; the index is only made at the close of the session when the volume is published.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I am asking for the Commons index.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I have no jurisdiction as far as the Commons is concerned. Our debates committee is merely for the Senate and not a joint committee for the Commons; so that I have no authority to answer the question with reference to the Commons.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But the chairman of the Printing Committee, by which the distribution office is controlled, has authority, and, I think, it is desirable we should be furnished with these pro tem. indexes. I never saw one until the other day. They would be useful in looking over the debates. Many of the members of the House of Commons have these pro tem. indexes which are published and use them.

Hon. Mr. McKAY (Truro)—I think if hon. gentlemen will examine their boxes in the post office where the revised debates are they will find the indexes in that box.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I never found mine.

Hon. Mr. McKAY—I got mine.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The attention of the committee has been directed to the want of a general index which has not been printed since 1900, and the committee in their report to-day have asked the concurrence of this House as well as the House of Commons to get a general index printed. The indexes are printed from time to time, and there is no reason why we should not get copies as well as the Commons. We have no control over them beyond the fact that they are printed at the Bureau. If the hon. gentleman is not receiving his copies he might look and see if they are not with his other papers.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not wish to complain, but I should like to ascertain what officer of the House is responsible for the distribution of Bills and other literature within the chamber ? I would point out that there is not to be found at the desk of any hon. gentleman a file of the various returns which are printed and brought down from time to time of either the House of Commons or of the Senate. Take, for instance, the Bill under consideration to-day, the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill, I doubt if any hon. gentleman has on his desk or on his file the various returns that have been brought down by the government upon this question. When reference is needed, we have to send a messenger to the distribution department, and, after considerable trouble, secure those documents. It seems to me the officers are not so busily engaged that some of them should not be charged with the proper distribution for the convenience of members, of all documents which hon. gentlemen will be called upon to consider from time to time. I do not know who is responsible for it, but certainly every convenience should be had for members to be placed in possession of all the literature that is presented to parliament, and they should be on our files. We should not be submitted to the trouble which arises from time to time in our vain endeavour to obtain the documents.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill (42) An Act respecting the Sprague's Falls Manufacturing Company, Limited.

Bill (79) An Act to incorporate the Thompson River Improvement Company.—(Hon. Mr. McHugh.)

Bill (119) An Act to amend the Canada Temperance Act.—(Hon. Mr. Lovitt.)

DISMISSAL OF LORD DUNDONALD.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to ask the Secretary of State if he would be kind enough to give us some information in reference to the Dundonald-Fisher incident.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Since I answered the question of my hon. friend yesterday, an Order in Council has been approved by His Excellency as hon. gentlemen know, and I now place it on the table. There are other papers in connection with it that were called for in the House of Commons and they are now being collected and printed, and at the earliest possible time will be brought down to this chamber contemporaneously with the House of Commons. That is the correspondence and the various movements in connection with the controversy that are not set forth in the minutes of council. It is only proper hon. gentleman should be in possession of the papers themselves.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Permit me to ask the hon. gentleman if the Colonial Office will have to be apprised of the action of the government before Lord Dundonald is relieved of his office ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is not necessary. The Order in Council has already been communicated to the Earl of Dundonald, and he has been notified by the head of the Militia department that he is no longer an official of that department.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Are there no steps to be taken with the Colonial Office ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Nothing at all.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They will be advised. A minute of council will be forwarded to the Colonial Office.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But that has not been done yet.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it has.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before we pass from this question, which is a somewhat serious one, and which seems to be a grave departure from the course pursued by all governments, could the hon. gentleman inform us how and by what authority this report of the sub-committee of the Privy Council and the adoption of it by the Privy Council, found its way into the newspapers before it was laid before parliament ? If I understand the duties of a minister of the Crown, he takes a very solemn obligation not to divulge anything that takes place in the council, not even to parliament unless with the approval of the Governor General. The hon. gentleman, I think, is as well aware of the fact as I am, and this Order in Council appears to have been passed only yesterday. It was hurried down to the Governor General, and we are not informed in this document whether the Governor General had approved of it or not. But we have the action of the Privy Council. We infer from the publication of this document that they appointed a sub-committee to consider and report to council the action of Lord Dundonald and the speech which he had made in Montreal. That sub-committee, after considering the whole question, made a report to council. That report was adopted by council and the first thing we learn of it is, next morning, when a copy of the document signed by the clerk of the Privy Council, Mr. J. J. McGee, appears in the newspapers. It is somewhat surprising to me how that document became public property until it had been laid before parliament by the authority of a minister of the Crown, with the permission of the Governor General himself. We have this document and we have the report. We have the adoption of it by the Privy Council and we have it signed by the clerk of the Privy Council and published in the newspapers, but there is no information given in the document laid before us as to whether the Governor General had approved of it or not. It may have been given to the newspapers, for aught we know, before the Governor General had seen the report or it may not. My hon. friend shakes his head. I did not say it was, but I say we have no knowledge to the contrary. All we have to do is to deal with the facts as they appear in the newspapers and as they are given to us. I presume that the hon. gentleman has had on the table of the House, just now the same document that is published in the morning newspapers, a certified copy ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The document laid before parliament is not certified by anybody, and, consequently, is not as official as the report published in the papers; nor have we any statement that the Governor General had approved of the Order in Council. There is no evidence in that document that the Governor General had approved of it. Why is there not a certificate of its correctness by the clerk of the Privy Council? I should like to know how this became public but I do not propose just now to enter into the merits of the question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This minute of council has just gone through the same formula as all other minutes. The subject was referred to a committee of council, and they reported to council, and the report of that committee was adopted by the council with some modifications or changes. At the time I spoke yesterday on the subject it had not been presented to His Excellency ; it was subsequently presented to His Excellency and he approved of it and the minute as we now have it was appproved by His Excellency. It was approved by His Excellency before being given to the press. It would have been very improper to have given it to the press in advance of that. That is perfectly clear. As to the necessity for laying it before parliament before giving it to the press, that rule is not invariably observed. There is no reason why it should be observed unless it is some document parliament has specially asked for, that was in course of preparation, but the moment this document was approved by His Excellency it was open to the public and no longer a secret document in any sense. Like any other minute of council, it could be given to the press. I did not notice that it was not certified. In my anxiety to get it to-day I did not wait for that proceeding. There is, as my hon. friend knows the usual printed document and the certificate of the clerk of the Privy Council. I notice that that is not attached. In the hurry to get the copy before the Senate I did not wait to have the head nor the tail added to the document but nevertheless it is the minute of the Privy Council approved by His Excellency.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We accept the statement of the hon. gentleman as to the acceptance and approval of the minute, but that is not the point I desire to bring to the attention of the House so forcibly or clearly. The hon. gentleman knows that some years ago an ordinary report of a department was not permitted to be given to the press or made public until it was laid on the table of parliament and then he will remember I dare say—if he does not I do—of the government having been severely chastised and complained of for giving a report of one of the departments, say the Trade and Commerce, for instance, or any of the reports to the public before it was laid on the tables of the House of Commons and the Senate.

It was only by a special resolution of the House of Commons that permission was given to the departments to circulate their reports before the meeting of parliament. It was suggested by Mr. Charlton, who argued in favour of it in this wise, that a voluminous report such as the Trade and Navigation returns were at that time, should be in the hands of members of parliament before the session in order that they might deal intelligently with questions connected with the trade of the country. Permission was given and in that way the reports have been circulated to members before the meeting of parliament. But here is a document of a much more important and serious character than a departmental report. I must take exception to the statement of the hon. Secretary of State, that it is a usual thing to give out these documents to the press before they are communicated to parliament. I do not say that he is not correct, but I have never known in my long experience in public life any such step having been taken. We know that even in the case of a disagreement which leads to the resignation of a member of the government he is not permitted to divulge what took place, yet here we have a document dealing with one of our highest officials rushed into the press before the representatives of the people know anything about it. It seems to me it has been done because of the over anxious desire of the government to throw a further insult upon an eminent military officer who has occupied a very important position in Canada. But being a 'foreigner' I suppose we must accept it as the ordinary courtesy and etiquette which characterize the members of the present government towards this 'stranger.' I will give my opinion on this document when the papers are before the House. If this is to be a precedent, we do not know in the future what secrets of the government are to be divulged, or what policy may not be made public if there is anything to be gained by the government in doing so. I think it is a vicious practice, contrary to the fundamental principles of responsible government, and I should hold, and do hold the person who gave that document to the press as not only responsible but as having violated the solemn duty he owes to the Crown and the country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend misapprehends the true situation. This minute of council is in no way different from any other of the twenty or thirty minutes of council that we pass at every meeting of the cabinet. This is not a subject that parliament is first entitled to, unless it happened to be a paper ordered by parliament. The order only went into effect last evening after the signature of the Governor General. It was then open to the public; there was no secrecy about it. The document was open to everybody from that moment like every minute of council. Once minutes of council are passed whether to remove officials or to carry out any other order of the government, the moment they receive His Excellency's sanction, they are no longer private—they are given out without any hesitation. In no particular has there been any deviation from the rule that has existed for a century, in regard to this minute of council. The fact that Lord Dundonald is higher than a colonel or major does not alter the principle of it. He was an official of the government of Canada, a very high official at that, but it did not alter the position he held in regard to his removal; he could be removed at any time by this government for cause.

Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not discussing that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We can no doubt discuss that with greater advantage when all the papers are brought down. I have given instructions to have them collected and printed as soon as possible.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—It seems to me there are two questions involved—what should be done when parliament is sitting, and what should be done when it is not sitting. When the parliament is not sitting, there is no great harm in publishing these Orders in Council, but when parliament is sitting it is only right, and it should be so considered by the government, to let parliament know first any important Order in Council that may be passed.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC RAILWAY SURVEY.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the Secretary of State whether he would be kind enough to lay on the table of this House the memorandum by the geographer of the Department of the Interior, based on Mr. Stevens' surveys of the Grand Trunk Railway and from which my hon. friend quoted yesterday, for the information of members.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will ask the Interior Department to send it over. I saw that Mr. Sifton had referred to it in his speech in the House of Commons. It was there I got it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Mr. Sifton at the same time said: 'I will lay a copy of the report on the table for the information of the House.' I presume he did so. We are entitled to the same courtesy.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will see that it is done.

BOUNTIES ON LEAD ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on (Bill 127) An Act to amend the Act providing for the payment of Bounties on Lead contained in Lead-bearing ores mined in Canada.

(In the Committee).

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—This Bill, as I briefly explained at the second reading, is simply to make it clear that the bounty under the Act of last session applies to the fiscal year beginning the first of July last. The Act, as it will be remembered, was passed at a late hour of last session, and there is some doubt as to whether the bounty could be paid, beginning at the end of the last fiscal year. This is simply to make the fact clear that the bounty begins at the end of the last financial year and continue for five years.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—Is it a fact that the bounty is now paid on lead ore mined or exported from Canada ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—No bounty has been paid on any lead exported out of the country. I am advised that the amount of bounty earned by the miners of British Columbia for ores mined and smelted in that province will amount for the present financial year to about $200,000. That is all of the present bounty that can be absorbed for ore mined and smelted in the province. There is a request that ores mined and concentrated in the country might for one year be permitted to be exported to a limited extent, but no action whatever has been taken on that request of the mine-owners of the province.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand that the request is that a bounty be paid on ores as they come from the mines ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—No. I have seen in the press that application has been made to the government to permit a portion of the bounty to be paid on ores mined and concentrated to probably 65 per cent lead.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And exported in the concentrate form.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—And exported in the concentrates for one year, as it is now altogether impossible for the smelters of the province to take care of the ores at present mined in the province, the smelting facilities being in process of enlargment at the present time. Nothing has been done in respect to that application, and consequently I am safe in saying that no bounty has been paid on ores exported from the province. This Bill is simply explanatory.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—My reason for asking the question I put just now is that I received yesterday a letter from a gentleman interested in mines in British Columbia stating that he and the miners there were very much pleased to see that the government had passed a measure authorizing a bounty to be paid on lead mined in British Columbia when exported from the country. I was rather surprised, for I had not seen that any action of the kind had been taken by the government, and I thought the parties must have been misinformed. I shall be in a position. when replying to this letter, to say that they are mistaken.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—There is no question, the proposal was made to permit a portion of the $500,000 to be applied to lead ores mined and concentrated in the country for twelve months. I understand from the newspapers that the proposition has been endorsed by the mine-owners of British Columbia and the boards of trade and other influential bodies. No action whatever has been taken in respect to that application. What action may be taken in the future I am unable to say.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—While the policy of the past government and of this government has been to encourage the refining of ores in this country, I hope that the concession which has been asked by the miners will not be acceded to, and for this reason : The bounty is to be paid for the purpose of encouraging the refining of ores in Canada. If the bounty is to be extended to ores that are simply reduced to matte, and then exported, the refining will take place in the United States, and I do not think the government ought to recognize a principle of that kind. My hon. friend says that has not been considered yet. It is a question of encouraging industries in the country, which is the policy of this government to a much greater extent than it was the policy of the old government that established the national policy, and who were characterized as robbers and thieves for having adopted that policy. Mon hon. friend from Russell (Hon. Mr. Edwards) nods his head because he approves of that. I have only to say in reply to that nod, that I hope he will apply the same epithets to the gentlemen who have gone much further than the old Tories did, and that when the question comes up he will be no respecter of persons. I should like very much to hear him condemn the present government in the same way he condemned us. He may condemn them, call them legalized robbers and denounce the whole system as vicious in principle, but if the government want his vote they can always have it.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—I would consider for whom I would vote, for those who are carrying out the present policy or for those who advocate a much higher protective policy. I do not hesitate to say, I have always said it, that every dollar that is taken from the people by protection is legalized theft, whoever does it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I should think my hon. friend would support a party which honestly advocates protection rather than a party which denounces protection but carry out a protective policy.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—My hon. friend the leader of the opposition has not quite appreciated the position of the lead mining industry. He seems to be of the opinion that the bounty is paid on lead refined in Canada and that if we permit any portion of the matte to go abroad it will be refined there. As a matter of fact, the bounty is paid to leading mining and smelting that produces matte. There is a further process of refining which separates the metal contents in the matte, putting the silver in one bar, the lead in another, and separating the gold and copper also. That industry, I am very pleased to say, is being carried on at the town of Trail, in British Columbia, very successfully indeed, and we are having there to-day a steady increase in the electrolytic process of refining lead, silver and copper ores, the first successful application of that process to lead and silver ores made anywhere in the world. The bounty, however, is only paid on the production of the matte. Our smelter men can, when they smelt the ores and produce the matte, ship that matte out of the country to-day, but the Trail refinery handles its full capacity, 20 to 25 tons a day at the present time and the balance has to be shipped out of the country for refining. There are four processes, mining, concentrating, smelting and refining. We pay the bounty on the third process. The application of some of the mine-owners is that in the event of a portion of the bounty being unearned, it may be paid on matte exported to a small extent for one year until the smelting facilities are increased to such a capacity as to take care of all the ores produced in the country. That, I understand, is the application.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—On what do you pay the bounty? Is it on one hundred pounds of matte, or one hundred pounds of lead in the matte as may be determined by assay?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—The bounty is paid on the pure lead in the ore, as ascertained by assay.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Has the bounty led to the refining of this ore almost entirely in Canada or does the larger proportion of it still go to the United States or other countries to be refined?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—The capacity of the only refinery we have in Canada up to the present time is twenty or twenty-five tons a day, and as the output of our mines may be twenty-five to thirty thousand tons per annum, necessarily a considerable part of the matte must go out of the country to be refined. The surplus that we do not refine ourselves is refined outside of the country.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—How does the hon. gentleman account for the absence of refining industries or plant, particularly where you grant such an encouragement as is embodied in the Bill? If they have the raw materials on the ground, it seems to me it would be natural to suppose a plant should spring up in that immediate vicinity for the purpose of refining the ore.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—Quite true, and hon. gentlemen will remember that the refining industry in Canada is of comparatively recent growth. The mining and smelting processes are carried on extensively, just as they mine and smelt the nickel ore at Sudbury and put it in the shape of matte and send it to the United States for refining purposes. The refining industry started a few years ago to experiment with what is known as the electrolytic process. It was carried on by the Canadian Pacific Railway people, and Mr. Eldridge, the manager, has successfully demonstrated that the minerals may be economically separated by that process. They produce absolutely pure lead by that process, and are now rapidly increasing the capacity of that refinery. It was experimental at first, and, I understand, they purpose extending it in the near future. I have information to the effect that the refinery in British Columbia is to-day putting in a plant for the manufacturing of lead pipe of all varieties. The capacity of the plant will meet the consumption in Canada of all classes of lead pipe, and in the course of a month or two, all the lead pipe required in Canada will be made at the refinery, because they can ship it to the eastern market just as cheaply as the pig lead. Thus, by the paying of this bounty we have had a rapid increase in the development of mining and smelting in the country. It requires some months to get closed up mines reopened and started again. The bounty Act was passed in October last, and it is only from that time that the effect of the bounty can be dated. But its effect has been beneficial indeed. The refinery is increasing its capacity and the manufacturing of lead pipe which was never attempted in Canada before, will be carried on. In the course of a month or two every inch of lead pipe used in Canada will be made there.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why does the government not convert that bounty into a duty ?

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—That would open up a large question. You can put on all the duty you like, and it would not have the same effect. One-half of the lead would have to be shipped abroad. We can produce, without the opening up of any new mine, double the amount of lead that is used for all purposes in Canada by simply extracting the ores from the mines at present developed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The producers asked for a duty.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN—They asked for a duty at first, but I do not think there is a mine-owner in British Columbia who does not approve of the bounty system.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—If half of the lead goes out of the country in the concentrated form, and a very large proportion is shipped as ore, that does not indicate the good effect of the bounty. My hon. friend thinks the good effect is coming, and that the lead mining industry will receive an impetus in the future ; but if it be a fact that we produce vastly more lead in Canada than is required for our own use in the country, I think it is all the greater reason why we should have imposed a duty in place of having recourse to a bounty. Had we done that, there would be no danger of the consumers in Canada being mulcted with too high prices, because there was such a surplus of Canadian lead that there would have been competition amongst our own people in supplying it, and if that had been the remedy supplied, I am certain we would not have to wait long, if we would even have to be waiting up to this time, to have brought about this state of affairs when all the lead produced in Canada would be refined in our own country.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

Hon. Mr. TEMPLEMAN moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time, and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.
THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on (Bill 86) an Act to amend the Criminal Code, 1892, respecting the punishment of Fradulent Debtors.

(In the Committee).

On clause 1,

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I should like to call the attention of the hon. gentleman who has charge of this Bill to this point. It would seem to me that the principle of this Bill is perfectly right. I do not see any reason why a person doing business and cannot show that the failure to produce books or to keep books properly was not due to an intention to defraud his creditors should not be liable under the provisions of the Criminal Code ; but I do not know why we should draw the limit at $1,000. A smaller amount than that, I should think, ought to bring the merchant whose business was found in an insolvent condition under the penalty of the law. And the absence of these books must embrace a period of five years ; that is allowing the small dealers, who are, perhaps, the most liable to do wrong in this respect, to escape altogether unpunished, and it will only reach the larger class of dealers.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I must call attention to this fact : that this Bill was passed last session by the Senate in its present shape, but it was at the end of the session and too late to be taken up by the House of Commons. Now, the House of Commons have taken up the Bill in exactly the shape it was passed by the Senate last year and it has been sent to this House. As far as the thousand dollar provision is concerned, I think the hon. gentleman last year made a remark to the same effect as he has to-day. We must, of course, settle upon an amount of some kind, and we thought that last year $1,000 would be a fair amount. People were carrying very small business, business which does not involve a credit to an amount of $1,000, and it might be hard on them to expect that they would have to go to the expense of keeping books, and we thought that $1,000 would be a fair amount to mention in the Bill. I am speaking from recollection. I drafted the Bill last year, and it was borrowed from the imperial Act which has been on the statute-book a great many years, and, speaking from recollection, I think the amount under the imperial Act was larger than $1,000. I have in mind that it was $3,000. As far as the five year provision is concerned, if the Bill passes, it will compel the trader to show that he has kept books for five years, and of course it is more difficult than if he had only to show he had kept books for a year. He is bound to show he has kept books for a reasonable period before his failure, so as to be able to justify for the losses which his creditors are called upon to bear.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I cannot quite appreciate the five year clause or the absence of keeping books. It seems to me the greatest frauds in mercantile business are those perpetrated under an elaborate system of books. I recall the Whitaker Wright frauds in London, in which the most elaborate books were kept. I cannot appreciate the value of books being kept for five years, or any particular time. It seems to me if the debtor cannot satisfactorily explain what has become of his estate, it should be within the discretion of the court to say whether a fraud has been perpetrated upon the creditors or not ; but the most fraudulent debtor can appear before the court and submit his books and no matter how enormous the fraud may be he can say : I do not come within the clause because here is the elaborate set of books which I have kept for five years.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman will agree with me that this is not intended to relieve a debtor who has occupied the position which has been stated by him. It is providing an additional remedy against such debtor, and last year when I introduced this Bill I called the attention of this honourable House to the fact that this law has been asked for by boards of trade throughout the whole Dominion. I mentioned the names. It has been asked for by the Board of Trade of Montreal, by the Chamber of Commerce of Montreal and by one hundred other boards of trade, in fact, in all other parts of the Dominion. It is deemed by mercantile men that this law is very much needed. They meet with debtors who have kept no books at all, and it is incumbent upon them in order to punish the debtor, as the law now stands upon the statute-book to prove that he has embezzled money or committed fraud, and if he has kept no books it is very difficult to follow him up. With this provision on the statute-book, and with the guarantee that the mercantile man will keep books, it will be much easier than it has been in the past to follow up the transactions of such a man.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The reason I feel disposed to criticise it is that you artificially create a crime out of a man's negligance. It may not be wilful, because he may not be able to keep books, but you make a man's negligence in the matter of keeping books a period of years a crime. Frauds are just as various as the vagaries of the human mind. It is utterly impossible to lay down principles on which you could decide what constituted fraud in every case and in that respect the legislation may be somewhat pernicious. There may be no criminal animus on he part of the debtor. He may be unfortunate, and yet, owing to the bare fact of his not having kept books, you say according to law that he has committed a crime. There may be an utter absence of fraud. He may have no intention of defrauding his creditors, and I presume in that way you eliminate the power or discretion of the court to deal with each case of fraud upon the facts attending it.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The hon. gentleman will bear in mind that this law does not introduce a new principle. As I have already stated, this law has been on the statute-books of England for over twenty years, and on the statute-book of France for a great many years, therefore we are following the example of two countries which, as a rule have good legislation. It is not only by reason that he has failed to keep books that he will be liable to be condemned. This is another remedy—unless he be able to acount for his losses to the satisfaction of the court or judge and to show that the absence of such books was not intended to defraud his creditors, and I think it is but reasonable. Men who do business with other people's money should place themselves in a position to be able to account for the money, and it is but reasonable to exact that that should be done and if they do not place themselves in a position to do so, it is not right to punish them as being guilty of fraud.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (P.E.I.)—I should be disposed to strike out the words 'five years' from that clause altogether. I would not put in the time at all. If it is to be made a criminal offence that a merchant is not able to pay his creditors, it should be so whether he has kept books or not. In my early life I knew a man who was in business for quite a number of years, and did rather an extensive trade on credit, with a great many people, and never kept a book and could not write his name if he was required to do so. He kept his accounts in his head, and was able to settle with all the people who had dealings with him, and that business went on for quite a number of years and was closed up to the satisfaction of every one. I am aware that he did business to an extent of much over $1,000.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I quite concur in the desirability of passing a Bill of this kind, but I should like to ask the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill whether it is worded exactly the same as the English Act to which he refers, is worded.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I am quite sure that I did compare it, but I have not compared it since last year. From recollection I am sure it is the substance of the English Act.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The reason I ask is this, that the words 'for five years next before such inability'. can be construed in two ways. It may be the trader would bring himself under the law if he had not continuously, during the five years, kept these books; or it might be if he had not at some time during the five years kept the books. I think it would be desirable to make that clear. If the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill looks carefully at it he will see it is capable of these two constructions. It may be that he has not for five years continuously kept books or that he has not for some time. It is desirable that the meaning should be made clear, and if the contention is that he has continuously kept the books, I think the period of five years is too long.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—These points were raised and discussed last year, I think the meaning of the clause is that he shall have kept books continuously during the five years previous to his insolvency, and I know from recollection that it is founded on the English Act.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND from the committee reported the Bill without amendment.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY INVESTIGATION.

FOURTH REPORT OF THE SELECT COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN, from the Select Committee, appointed to investigate the position in Canada of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association of New York, presented a fourth report, recommending that the quorum be reduced to five members. He said: As a matter of fact, we find it difficult to get a quorum of ten, and the committee think it advisable to ask the House for permission to reduce the quorum to five. It will mean that the investigation can go on whether there are five, fifteen or twenty members of the committee present. It is necessary that the motion should pass at once, as the committee is sitting daily.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—In connection with the report, I beg to move that the evidence taken before the committee be printed and distributed to the members of this House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think it was decided that this evidence should be printed in our votes and proceedings. The House acquiesced in that demand when we made it some three days ago, and it was understood that the evidence would be published as an appendix to our minutes, so that all members of the House would have an opportunity to read it. I do not know if further orders were given.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—This request is made for the reason that if the evidence goes into the minutes of the House, it will make a bulky document—50 or 60 pages a day. If it is printed independently and distributed among the members of the House it will serve the purpose. The intention was to have the evidence of Mr. Wells and Mr. Eldridge printed in the minutes, but no order has been given with respect to the evidence I am now speaking of.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think the better way would be to print it independently, because it might delay the issue of the Votes and Proceedings. It requires a motion from the chairman of the committee.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have made that motion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will give instructions to give it priority over the other work, so as to get the report as promptly as possible.

The motion was agreed to.

RIO JANEIRO LIGHT AND POWER COMPANY, LIMITED, BILL.

PETITION RECEIVED.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto) presented a petition praying for leave to present the petition of the Rio Janiero Light and Power Company, Limited, for an Act of incorporation.

The petition was read at length at the table.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto) rose to present the petition of the company for an Act of incorporation.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is there no proceeding to intervene between the reading of the first petition and the presentation of the second ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I apprehend this petition will now go to the Standing Orders Committee to be reported upon. The first petition I presented showed that the notice was short.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—By the first petition the petitioners asked leave of this House to present a petition. Is that first petition acceded to ? What is to be done to have that permission ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—A motion should be made that the prayer of the first petition be granted.

The SPEAKER—The usual practice is that the petition for leave to present a petition is sent to the Committee on Standing Orders.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—In that case the hon. gentleman could not present his second petition now.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I move that the petition be received. A similar petition was presented in the House of Commons and leave was granted to the petitioners to present a petition for a Bill. So I apprehend there will be no objection to granting the prayer of this petition.

The motion was agreed to, and the second petition was presented.

THE MARTELLO TOWER AT QUEBEC.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired :

1. Does the government know that one of the Martello towers at Quebec, the one which stands on the historic ground where, on the 13th of September, 1759, the battle known under the name of the battle of the Plains of Abraham took place, is now used as a pedestal for a large tub for the accommodation of the Ross Rifle Manufacturing Company ?
2. Has the government ever given its authority for such a use of military properties for industrial purposes ?
3. Were the military authorities consulted upon this subject, and is it also with their knowledge and with their approval that this part of the fortifications of Quebec has been granted or leased to the Ross Rifle Company, and that the very roof of the tower has been pierced in order to permit the construction of the carpentry which serves as a base for the tub in question ?
4. When was this permission given ?
5. Upon what conditions and for what length of time ?
6. As a matter of fact, was the consent of the mayor of Quebec asked for beforehand, and was it obtained ?
7. Is it the intention of the government to cause this addition to the Martello tower to disappear as soon as possible ?
8. Is it equally the intention of the government to withdraw the use of these historic towers from the industrial operations of a private company, and to preserve intact towers which are an ornament for the old city of Quebec ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answers are as follows :

1. The government is aware that a tank has been erected on the Martello tower.
2. No special authority, but the land is under lease.
3. No.
4. No special permission.
5. The lease to the Ross Rifle Company is for ninety-nine years.
6. Yes.
7. The matter will be considered.
8. The matter will be considered.

THE PEAT FUEL INDUSTRY.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. McMullen inquired :

In view of the dependence of a large part of Canada upon a foreign country for its fuel supply, as demonstrated by the recent fuel famine, is it the intention of the government to take measures to encourage the peat fuel industry ?

2. If so, in what form ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The matter is under consideration of the government. No answer can be given at present.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

The Order of the Day being called :

Resuming the adjourned debate on motion for second reading (Bill 72) An Act to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act.—(Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell).

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before the hon. gentleman from Belleville proceeds, I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State if he has the memo. which was to be procured for the use of the House ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was not able to see Mr. Sifton to-day. I do not know where he is. The memo. is quoted in Mr. Sifton's speech in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Only partly.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am very sorry I could not get it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It was laid on the table of the House of Commons, and the Senate should be similarly treated.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If we send for it they may be able to let us have it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is unfortunate that we have not this report before us, if it would cast any light on the character of the country through which the road is to pass. Whether it be short or long it would be impossible for me to make any comment on it during the time I am expected to occupy the attention of the House on this subject. For that reason it is a pity it had not been laid on the table as it might have changed, to a certain extent, the remarks which I shall feel it incumbent on me to make. However, as it is not here we shall have to wait until the hon. gentleman can procure it or a copy of it, in order that those who may follow me in this debate may have the advantage of the information which it contains.

I feel somewhat diffident—I dare say that remark will create a smile in the minds of some—in addressing the House on this subject, and for this reason: there has been so much said about it on both sides, in parliament last year, and in the public press, that it would be scarcely possible for me to advance any new ideas upon the subject. Still, in order that the opinion of senators may be placed upon record, I deem it my duty to give the views which I entertain, and which, I think, are entertained by a large number of the people of Canada on this subject. I must compliment the hon. Secretary of State on the mild and gentle manner in which he approached this subject during his speech of one hour and one-half. One would be lead to believe from the manner in which he treated the subject that his heart was not in it. He did not throw that life, energy and vigour into the discussion of so important a subject as this, that would lead those who listened to him to the conclusion that he really had a conscientious conviction of the propriety of going on so prematurely with an undertaking of such a gigantic character. I have not so much fault to find with the hon. gentleman for what he did say in his speech as for what he left unsaid. He made no reference whatever to that portion of the line to which very strong objections have been taken, and, certainly, which the Grand Trunk Railway Company, as it exists to-day, have no desire to have anything to do with, that is the road from Quebec to Moncton. Perhaps it was just as well that the hon. gentleman did not refer to that, as he might have found some difficulty in defending the construction of a portion of the road which is to all intents and purposes to parallel the line already owned by the government. It is true that we have a very favourable and glowing account of the prosperity of the country, in which we all rejoice. He also advanced a very singular argument in connection with the cost of the road. He impressed upon the minds of hon. senators, to as full an extent as he could, that the mountain section of the road would be constructed for a much less sum than any calculation which has been made, or which experience tells us a road of that character can be built for.

Then, in order to leave the impression upon the minds of those who listened to him that the Grand Trunk Pacific, instead of getting concessions which are to be made under this Bill and the greater responsibility which would fall upon the shoulders of the Grand Trunk Company in its endorsations of the bonds and guarantees, if the road across the prairie section should cost a much larger sum than has been contemplated by any one who has ever made any calculation, those sections of the road in the mountain which are to be guaranteed to three-fourths of the total expense by the government are represented to be comparatively small—only ten thousand dollars per mile more than a sum which the hon. gentleman contends will have to be spent upon the prairie section or to that amount plus that which is guaranteed by the government upon the prairie section. However, the hon. gentleman may have thought possibly, in advancing arguments of that kind that there was no one on this side of the House or even on his own side of the House to draw the conclusions which I have drawn from his utterances on this point. I shall leave other portions of the hon. gentleman's remarks to those who may follow me, and confine myself as nearly as possible to the position in which the country finds itself at the present moment. We remember distinctly at the last session of parliament, when this question was first mooted by the premier, that he advanced as reasons why the road should be proceeded with immediately, without waiting for surveys of those portions of the road of which no one had any knowledge, that it was absolutely necessary in the interests of the company that the work should be commenced immediately ; they could not possibly wait until the proper surveys had been made. One of the reasons that he gave was that there was a danger that the bonding system which exists between the United States and Canada would be abrogated, and if abrogated there would be no means of reaching the Northwest Territories with the trade which must flow in there from the east and west. A year has rolled by and fortunately there has been no abrogation of the bonding system by the United States. Our trade relations with the States are going on as peacefully as they ever did, and to those who have given any thought to the subject we must come to the conclusion that it is an absurd—if I may use that expression—an absurd argument to advance in favour of the premature construction of this road that the bonding system which is of such great advantage commercially and pecuniarily to the United States will ever, unless war is declared between the two nations, be annuled. The United States are not disposed to abrogate any understanding that exists between their neighbours or foreign countries if it is going to injure the trade of their own people. Another argument that was strongly advanced, not only by the premier but by an hon. gentleman in this House, was that it was necessary to construct this road in order that we might be able to reach the Northwest Territories with troops and munitions of war in case of trouble with countries to the east or south. I am sure we all rejoice at the fact that we are living in the same peaceful condition that we were when these predictions were made, and those who know anything of the geography of the Dominion must feel that this road if constructed for a stragetic purpose would be utterly valueless and useless. Why was the Intercolonial Railway constructed along the south shore of the St. Lawrence river ? Those who know anything of the history of the country are aware that the British government insisted upon the road taking the northern route in order to be as far away from the United States frontier as possible. Had the will and the wishes of the Canadian people at that time been carried out, which was strongly advocated by the late Sir Leonard Tilley and others, particularly in the province of New Brunswick, the road would have been built by the valley of the River St. John and not where it is located now. That northern route was selected for the express purpose of accomplishing that which an hon. senator of this House and the Premier advanced as a reason why this transcontinental railway should be built, though the eastern section from Quebec to Moncton must necessarily run very close to the borders of the United States, and therefore for military purposes would be utterly useless. We are living peacefully with our neighbours, and I hope we will long continue to do so, and that neither of these roads will ever be required for military purposes. Therefore if the road is built at all let it be built where it will be of some use to the country and can be utilized for the purposes for which its construction has been advocated. But apart altogether from the reasons advanced by the hon. gentleman, there were other reasons equally weak as the ones to which I have referred but which I shall pass over for the present moment. The great argument advanced at that time was the absolute necessity for proceeding at once, and members of the Senate will remember how ministers boasted that provision was made in the contract, and the conditions were such, that it was impossible for the Grand Trunk Railway Company to set the agreement aside ; that they would be compelled to go on. Let us see what the premier said upon the question of the security which the government had for the commencement of the construction of this road. We find that the premier declared that :

> The Grand Trunk Company could not default upon the eastern section because if it defaults upon the eastern part it defaults upon the western section also. It cannot default upon one part without defaulting upon the whole, and therefore they cannot deviate from it.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Very tight.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We will see how tight it was presently. Then the Minister of Customs, Mr. Paterson, in his stentorian voice declared that :

The government plan is there in black and white, signed by men of repute, signed by the ablest railway men in the world, and, consequently, they could not deviate from the conditions or delay the commencement of construction at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Fisher, Minister of Agriculture, the hon. gentleman who has under his charge at the present moment the formation of the militia force and who has been so successful in that respect (let me hope he will be more successful in matters which pertain more particularly to his own branch of government), declared that they had :

A clean cut proposition signed by a reputable corporation of great resources, which is going ahead with the proposition as rapidly as possible.

That is pretty strong language, but we fail to learn that they have yet commenced, so far as this line is concerned, any operations whatever. It is true that they have had surveyors and engineers upon the road between North Bay and Winnipeg, the route that they desired to build when they made the first proposition to the government to connect their own system passing through Ontario and Quebec with the great trade of the Northwest ; but they had not then begun construction, nor am I aware that anything else has been done towards the construction of that road than the surveys to which I have called attention. Then the Finance Minister followed in somewhat the same line, and he declared that they had taken means to make the company live up to the bargain. He said :

They had a clear cut contract with the government, that the government had not been content to have the Grand Trunk behind the scene, but it required that the company should be in it and of it and form the whole thing.

These were the boastings of ministers which would leave the country to believe that it was impossible for the Grand Trunk Company to depart from the terms of the bargain which had been made. Well what do we find ? The very first deviation from that bargain, or shall I say violation of the bargain, was the fact that that important condition in the contract which provides for a deposit of a large sum of money was never complied with. The first intimation we had of the fact that the five million dollars had not been deposited with the government was a telegram from Ottawa to the 'Globe', as follows :

Ottawa, 19th December, 1903.

The following official statement was issued to-night by the government :—

The Grand Trunk Railway deposited £1,000,000 of their guaranteed stock as security for the carrying out of the agreement entered into last session between the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, subject to the ratification of their shareholders at a general meeting. Inasmuch as the contract requires cash or government securities for the deposit, legislation will be required to confirm the acceptance of the securities which have been deposited, though such securities are worth to-day more than par and their value is unquestionable.

The Grand Trunk Railway people knew when this deposit was made, or the proposition to make such a deposit was made that it would be in direct contravention of the law which was placed upon the statute-book giving them power to issue these bonds. We all remember the discussion in the Railway Committee upon this question. The power to issue these bonds was given to the Grand Trunk Company for a specific purpose, and until the law was changed by parliament to relieve them of that responsibility, these bonds could not be deposited with the government in the place of money or for any other purpose than that for which the issue was authorized. Then we find that Mr. Hays made this declaration :

The securities deposited with the government are better than the cash equivalent. They were deposited because of convenience, not because of any failure to raise the money. There was a delay of a few days, but the time allowed by the government was rather limited. Neither have we violated any moral obligations to the shareholders of the Grand Trunk, or broken faith with the government. The Grand Trunk possessed these securities for the purpose of the company, and they were utilized.

I am very much afraid that our friend the manager, the second or third vice-president of the Grand Trunk, had been studying Russian diplomacy when he made statements of this character. He said they did not violate their obligation to the government. The provision of the contract is that they shall deposit money or approved security. Were these securities as good as the money ? In the first place the money was not deposited, in the second place the bonds had not been approved, and even if they had been approved by the government they could not be deposited in the manner that the company suggested, in lieu of money, for the reason that they were permitted to issue these bonds only for a specific purpose, and consequently he makes this covering provision, that it is to be submitted to the company's shareholders, a matter to which I shall refer hereafter. The bonds of the Grand Trunk Railway Company may be, in the opinion of Mr. Hayes, as good and better than money, but I think most people will prefer to take the money, and then they will know precisely what it is worth. I instance this merely to show first, that the boasting of the government was just so much wind and nothing more, that the Grand Trunk did not comply with the provisions of the contract in making the deposit, and, consequently, there had to be delay. What is the excuse given by the parties who defended in the lower House this delay in making the deposit ? One reason was that the money market in England was not in as favourable a condition to raise money at the present time as it was a year or two ago, or as it was hoped it would be in the future. Now, we all know that this is the fact, because we know that the Finance Minister, in making arrangements for retiring the debentures which are coming due, in England, and to issue other securities and bonds at a lower rate of interest than they are bearing at present, had to delay the placing of those bonds on the market to the amount I think of some twenty millions sterling, owing to the fact of the tightness of the money market. Any one who has paid attention to that fact will confirm the statements which I have made, and which were made in the lower House upon this point. So much for the boasting of the government, and the declaration that the Grand Trunk had fulfilled the conditions and complied with the provisions of the first agreement, and also, I might say, so much for the cause of delay. Then we have the question of route. I place very little value indeed upon the partial statement made by the Minister of the Interior in the lower House—that one officer, Mr. White, went to Mr. Stephens, who had been in some portion of that country and asked for his views upon the question of route, as to its feasibility, and so on. He gave them an extract, as I understand it, from the report which he had made or proposed to make. That is the document referred to by Mr. Sifton in his speech upon this subject. We have not got that here at the present moment, and consequently I do not propose to refer to its contents. We will have it probably before the debate closes, when some hon. gentleman can use it, but we have a most amusing description of that portion of the country which has never been surveyed. We have quotations made by the premier from works written by the Jesuit Fathers. Any one who has read Parkman's history of the travels, the persecutions, if I may use the expression, and the hardships endured by the Jesuit Fathers who first explored the northern part of the country and the southern part of the country, knows very well that those gentlemen never went over the route where this road is likely to be built. They confined their travels to those portions of the country which were—shall I say uninhabited or shall I rather say those portions of the country where the Indian tribes were located, and every one knows that every Indian tribe locates itself on some stream or on the shores of a lake and, consequently, these Jesuit Fathers to whom I am referring just now, went up the different rivers, the Saguenay, the Ottawa, and others that are mentioned here. Others who were explorers rather than missionaries, went to the south of the lakes until they reached the Missouri and also the Mississippi. It is only necessary to read the quotations, to come to a conclusion as to their absurdity, and their total irrelevancy to the subject of the route of the Transcontinental Railway ; but they are so interesting in their character and so pleasing to read that I crave the indulgence of the House to repeat them here, in order that they may go on record for future reference, so that the people may see what the premier of this country advanced in favour of taking a northern route of which nobody knows anything at all. He quoted from one of the works written by Samuel de Champlain. who devoted himself to the task he said in hopes of finding an easy passage to the sea. Cavelier de La Salle lost his life in the attempt. I have never learned myself that La Salle went by the northern route.

If my recollection serves me right, he took the southern route and if you go to Chicago to-day you will find a statue in one of the parks there erected in memory of this explorer and in honour of the discoveries which he made in the Mississippi and Ohio valleys ; and yet La Salle is quoted as evidence to show there is a good route three or four hundred miles to the north of us. I think I could tell who furnished that information, and I would suggest in future that those who prepare speeches for some of our public men should refer to documents which have some relevancy to the subject which they propose to discuss. Then another man, La Verendrye, is quoted as follows —

Samuel de Champlain devoted years to the task in the hope of finding a passage to the sea. Robert Cavelier de La Salle lost his life in the attempt. Another man, LaVerendrye, took an overland journey to reach it by exploring the prairies, and his two sons, on the 1st January, 1743, were the first Europeans to cast eyes upon the Rocky mountains. LaVerendrye himself lost his life like Robert Cavelier de La Salle in the attempt to get to the Pacific ocean. After the country had passed under the sovereignty of the British crown the task was resumed by Scotch traders established in Montreal, and in 1793, Alexander Mackenzie was the first white man to reach the Pacific ocean across the mountains by the overland journey. Many private individuals subsequently attempted and performed the same feat. The last of them was Captain Butler, of the British army, who in the winter of 1872 crossed the continent from Fort à-la-Corne at the forks of the Saskatchewan by way of the Peace river to the Pacific ocean.

It is not necessary for me to say that the discoverer of the Mackenzie river did not go by the northern route, but ascended the Ottawa river and followed in that direction until he reached the Pacific ocean. Going a little further we have another quotation from Father Albanel, in which he says :

On the 23rd and 24th of June we found a less mountainous region. Its atmosphere is much milder, and its fields are beautiful ; and the soil would bear abundantly and be capable of supporting a large population if it were cultivated.

At page 205, another quotation is made from the record of that pioneer missionary :

I can assert that on the 15th of June there were wild roses here, as beautiful and fragrant as those at Quebec.

But perhaps I could inform the hon. gentleman he need not have gone 300 years back to find out this fact. I have myself, in my own garden at Belleville a rose bush in bloom which I pulled up on the banks of the Yukon a thousand miles northwest of Dawson. I kept it for six weeks in my trunk and then planted it, a year ago last fall. I do not advance that, however, as an argument in favour of constructing a railway in that far northern country. One can readily understand the effect on vegetation of the four or five months of daylight in the Arctic regions, but that is no evidence that such a country is suitable for the settlement of civilized people. Then follows another paragraph which would be well to put on record :

On the 19th we arrived at Makanomirkic—that is, ' the bears' fishing place ! ' It is a flat region with very shallow water, and also extremely rich in fish—small sturgeon, pike and whitefish having their haunts there. It is a pleasure to see the bears walking on the shores of this piece of water, as they go catching with a paw now one fish and now another, with admirable dexterity.

I say nothing of the abundance of wild fowl in the region. On the island of Onabaskouk, if the savages are to be believed, they are so numerous that on one place, when the birds shed their feathers at molting time, any savages or deer coming to the spot are buried in feathers over their heads, and are often unable to extricate themselves.

You will observe that the reverend gentlemen threw the responsibility of this last statement on the savages. Now let me ask in all seriousness whether stuff of that character would justify the construction of a road through a country of which we know nothing ? If you look into the matter you will find that one of the travellers whose reports have been quoted by the premier went up the Saguenay river and did not traverse the country where it is proposed to build this railway.

Let me refer now to the difference between the present contract and the contract which was entered into and confirmed last year. If we are to accept the assurance of the hon. Secretary of State, there is no material difference between the two agreements. In fact his references to them were as childlike and bland as ever fell from any heathen Chinee. One would suppose that parliament was asked to take no responsibility beyond that assumed last session, or at least an additional responsibility of such a trifling character that no Canadian who desires to see the development of this country should object for a moment, and yet it will occur to every one of us, if the interpretations put upon the two contracts by the hon. Secretary of State are correct, why did the shareholders of the company in England demand fresh concessions in connection with any securities which the Grand Trunk Railway Company might issue, in order to prevent if possible any expenditure which would interfere with the dividends to be declared on the Grand Trunk Railway stock ? That I think is the very best answer, if we went no further, to the position taken by the hon. Secretary of State. He read an extract from the letter of Mr. Allen, who opposed not the scheme so much as the fact of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, in which he had invested money and had a good deal of interest, having anything to do with it, and he very gravely advocated the building of the mountain section as well as the eastern section from Moncton to Winnipeg by the government. The House laughed when that extract was read, but it was not unreasonable on the part of Mr. Allen. If he found the government so liberal and pliable as to enter into an agreement to build the most difficult part of this transcontinental road, a portion of which nobody believes will pay for years, and which the Grand Trunk Railway takes precious good care not to assume the responsibility of paying interest upon, even at three per cent for many years to come—it is not unreasonable that the same directors should say if the people of Canada are so anxious to have another transcontinental road let them build the western portion as well as the eastern portion of it. He is a man, it strikes me, who is as capable of looking after himself as most men who are involved in these great enterprises are. There seems to be this great difference between these two bargains. The government in one place surrender the power to fix the liability in issuing the bonds for the construction of the road, and they give those powers to private capitalists to sell bonds to any amount at whatever price the market will pay for them. The amount of bonds to be guaranteed by the government is limited on both sections. They also surrender all control over the fixed charge on a road which the people are helping liberally. That power is relinquished and turned over to the control of the board of directors. That is one change in the arrangement. Then on the mountain section bonds can be issued to an unlimited extent. Under the old agreement the government guarantee on the bonds could only be to the extent of $30,000 to the mile. The change in the second agreement is that instead of guaranteeing a certain percentage on $30,000 per mile, the country is bound to guarantee three-fourths of the total cost of the road, no matter what it may be, and there is no provision that the bonds shall be sold at par. If bonds have to be issued for the construction of the road, and they are sold at ten or twenty per cent below their face value, the government would have to endorse whatever amount of bonds would be necessary to complete the road. The agreement is different in that respect.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend will remember that the government control the bonds. The company cannot take guaranteed bonds and put them on the market without the approval of the government. It must be done through the Finance Minister.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not say they could. What I stated was, that, in the original agreement, the government of Canada bound itself to endorse bonds to the extent of $30,000 per mile on the mountain section of the railway. In the amended agreement they bind themselves to endorse the bonds to the extent of three-fourths of the cost of the construction of the road through the mountain section, whatever it may be.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The liability is unlimited.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And these bonds, as I stated before, may be placed upon the market at a discount of twenty per cent. It will require just so much money to complete the road, but no matter now many bonds may be issued the government endorse them to the extent of three-fourths of the cost of the road, and I will show in a few moments by figures what the result of that would be. Then we find, going a little further, that the promoters will not only have these enormous powers in issuing the bonds, but they also are given a large block of common stock to sell or dispose of as they see fit. Now, that was not a provision of the old contract. They were obliged to keep a large proportion of these bonds in their own possession. They are allowed to dispose of twelve millions of this stock, and no price is stipulated at which they shall be sold. It need not represent the investment of a dollar by the Grand Trunk Railway in the enterprise ; but notwithstanding that fact if the stock is put upon the market and the road ever earns anything, dividends will have to be paid on that stock which cost them nothing. The truth is that the bargain makes it possible for the promoters of the line to build and own a great railway without putting one dollar of their own money into it. The building of the line, and the supporting of its fixed equipment, is to be defrayed by a bond issue. The rolling stock can be financed by the formation of a rolling stock company. Then there will be left twenty millions of preferred stock to supply working capital. Back of that there is twenty-five millions of common stock for which one dollar need not be paid. The Secretary of State, in referring to this point, stated that in the Canadian Pacific Railway contract twenty-five millions of stock was practically given to the promoters and they sold it at twenty-five or thirty cents on the dollar. That may be true, and I think it is, but the circumstances under which that road was built and the circumstances surrounding the construction of this project are so totally different that the provisions found necessary in those days are not essential now after the great Northwest and Manitoba have been developed to a considerable extent and are supplying enormous quantities of freight. A writer in discussing this question used the following language, and it is put so clearly that I take the liberty of reading it :

> We are to spend, at a modest estimate, $72,000,000 on the undertaking. This will mean an addition to the taxation for interest of $2,520,000 a year. If the Grand Trunk should decline to accept it as a gift—and it is at liberty to do so under the new contract—we shall have eighteen hundred miles of railway, duplicating in one province a road we already own, passing through the least favourable and most distant portions of two other provinces, and having no western connection, on our hands.

Now let me point out what, from calculations which have been made, will be the result of the changes in the contract. None of us can say the exact mileage of the road ; therefore we must take figures which have been given as to distances, and base the calculations upon them. It is supposed that the prairie section will be one thousand miles, and for the construction of that portion of the railway the government, under the first contract, pledged itself to endorse bonds to the extent of thirteen thousand dollars per mile. Then there is supposed to be five hundred miles in the mountain section, to aid the construction of which the government pledged itself, under the first agreement, to endorse bonds to the extent of $30,000 per mile, a total of fifteen million dollars. Both of these guarantees for the prairie section and the mountain section would involve a liability on the part of Canada of $28,000,000.

Now take the second contract, and with the same estimate of distances as a basis, see what the liability will be. It will depend altogether upon the amount which it costs to construct the road. That cost may be $30,000 per mile. The other night my hon. friend gave us an estimate of $40,000 per mile. We know from past experience that in the mountain section and some portions of the prairie section, where they have large gullies and rivers to cross, it will cost much more than $40,000 a mile In Prince Edward Island the government have built a narrow gauge road at a cost as shown by the figures laid upon the table last session, of over $28,000 per mile, and that in a country where there are very few difficulties except one large river ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That statement of cost does not include the bridge.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—So much the better for my argument. If in a country which presents few engineering difficulties, it has cost $28,000 a mile to build a narrow gauge road which is not yet finished, what is it likely to cost to construct the mountain section of this Transcontinental Railway ? We know that the Canadian Pacific Railway spent over $100,000 per mile for the construction of some portions of its road. We know that a portion of the road under their contract has not yet been completed and that the government withhold one million acres of land grant that they were to receive until the grades of that portion of the line are brought to the standard provided in the contract, and the Canadian Pacific Railway has not yet brought it up to that grade. I mention this to show that the calculation of $40,000 per mile for the mountain section is, to those who have paid any attention to the subject, almost an absurdity. The government, under the old contract, agreed to endorse bonds for $30,000 per mile for that section; under the new contract they agree to endorse bonds to the extent of three-fourths of the cost. Let us suppose that the first calculation of the cost of the mountain section, $48,000 per mile, is correct; the guarantee of the government would be $18,000,000 instead of $15,000,000, or a total for the two sections of $31,000,000 instead of $28,000,000. If the cost of the road should be $60,000 per mile for the mountain section, which is not at all improbable, the government guarantee would be $22,500,000, or a total of $35,000,000 instead of $28,000,000. But let us take another calculation, a higher one, a calculation based on the cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and we get at the total liability assumed by the government. If the road should cost $80,000 per mile, the government would then be liable for $43,000,000 under the second contract instead of $28,000,000 as under the first. It will be seen by these figures that the country is assuming a much vaster responsibility than has been, to quote a very eminent man—vaster than ever was contemplated, and that the explanation given by the hon. Secretary of State would have been better confined to the roses which, he suggested. may be found in June in the Arctic regions. The directors, under this bargain, can issue just as many bonds for the construction of the mountain section as they please. And if they can sell the bonds at par then we would know that every hundred dollars would have to be guaranteed to the extent of three-fourths by the government. But if they sell the bonds at seventy-five cents, then you can readily understand the additional liability incurred by the government in the endorsation of these bonds.

Now, what is the country assuming in the way of liability for this great transcontinental road? I desire to be fair in discussing this question. I admit if the road, when built, pays the interest on the money and running expenses, then the government liability ceases to be of any great consequence. My hon. friend nods his head. Whether the road will pay or not is best answered by the fact that the agreement provides that the Grand Trunk Railway is to hold the eastern portion for seven years without paying anything, and the new contract extends that time, and then there is the option of a renewal for fifty years longer. If they have any unproductive branches built during the time they can throw those on the government and we are obliged to take them, while the company can keep all the paying branches; yet we are told that there is no material difference between the two contracts. My impression is that the shrewd managers of this company know very well what they are doing, and when they went to England to urge the shareholders to accept the contract they knew it was of much greater benefit to the company than the old one. Now, let us look at the total liabilities which we are likely to assume. The estimate for the construction of the road from Moncton to Winnipeg is $75,000,000. The interest during the construction of the road will be $9,000,000, which brings up the cost to $84,000,000. For seven years no rental will be paid by the company and the interest during that period adds another $17,640,000, or a total for the eastern section of the line of $101,640,000. This for the government end, the portion of the road which is to be leased to the Grand Trunk Pacific. To this direct outlay there is to be added the bond guarantee obligations assumed first on the Quebec bridge, and, secondly, on the western division of the railway. They are as follows: Quebec bridge bonds $6,678,200. The interest during construction for a year and a half, supposing it to be finished in that time, will be $300,510, or a total for this bridge of $6,978,719. How much the promoters and the stockholders of that bridge will put into their own pockets they will be best able to tell us after the work is completed. I think that is a point to which the people of Canada ought to give special attention.

Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson estimated the cost of the whole road at $50,000 per mile. I suppose he might be accepted as an authority upon that question; and if he is, his estimate is just $10,000 per mile more than that of the hon. Secretary of State. From past experience, and what we know of the construction of other roads, we must come to the conclusion that the estimates of both gentlemen are below the mark. The guarantee will therefore be on the mountain section $18,750,000, and on the prairie section $9,750,000, or a total of $28,500,000. Taking all these items into account, the government has undertaken obligations and liabilities on the eastern extension to the extent of $101,640,000; Quebec bridge, $6,978,719; and western division, $28,500,000. or a total, according to these calculations (and I think they are under the mark), of $137,118,719.

Let me call the attention of hon. gentlemen for a few moments to the position of the Grand Trunk Railway Company in reference to this road, and they will see that there has been displayed an astuteness on the part of the manager of that road which is commendable to one upon whose shoulders the responsibilty rests of managing an enterprise which will yield dividends to the shareholders. The original proposition of the Grand Trunk Railway Company was for aid to build a road from North Bay to Winnipeg, and thence to the Pacific coast. That was a commendable ambition on the part of the Grand Trunk Railway. That would bring a certain portion of the output of the Northwest Territories and Manitoba to the Grand Trunk Railway system in the older provinces. No one could find fault with a proposition of that kind, but Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson tells his shareholders in England that the government would not permit them to do that, but insisted in tacking on to the scheme an eastern section, and refused their application unless they assumed certain responsibility in connection with that portion of the line from Winnipeg to Moncton. I am not going to discuss now the terms upon which the Grand Trunk Railway Company desire to build that road, or the aid which they ask from the government. We do know this, that the government declared that no further land grants should be given in aid of the construction of the road. The country had no knowledge, directly or indirectly, of the request made by the Grand Trunk Railway Company for aid to construct that road until it was found necessary to produce the document in the lower House to show that the contention of the opposition in the House of Commons is bearing fruit in the country—that is, that the Grand Trunk Railway Company was desirous of building a road which would impose upon the country much less liability than the scheme which they have been compelled to accept by the government. Notwithstanding the fact that this document was not produced, I do not know that it makes a very great deal of difference in the argument, but it was not produced, although the premier had declared that all the documents had been laid before parliament, and he made that statement without equivocation or mental reservation, and the only excuse he gave for withholding that document was that the proposal, though it was for a grant of so much money and land in aid of the construction of a road, was marked confidential. It is something new in this country to receive a document, presented by a powerful corporation like the Grand Trunk Railway Company, asking aid for a public work, to be marked 'confidential,' and even if it were a confidential document, we know that in the past confidential documents have been laid before parliament. Take that pamphlet which the Postmaster General issued and circulated, which was full of private and confidential letters. There was one of mine that I wrote to Sir Adolphe Caron in reference to a contract and which was marked 'private.' It was a matter of perfect indifference to me whether it was published or not, because in writing a letter for a friend I asked the government to extend a contract if it could be done in the interest of the country. If all confidential letters were of that character, I do not think much could be made out of them.

Now, what was the intention of the Grand Trunk Railway Company? I repeat it was to secure for their main line through Ontario and Quebec to the sea-board a share of the traffic of the great west. Mr. Hays, when in London, addressing the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, pointed out that it was absolutely necessary to have connection with the west to enable the road to earn sufficient money to continue paying the dividends which had been paid since he had taken charge of the company. He says:

> Ladies and gentlemen, if I thought I could assure you that these dividends on the first, second and third preferences to the extent they have been paid would continue, then I would not be here to-day advocating this new enterprise.

If he was to continue to pay the dividends to the shareholders which he had been paying during the last two or three years he pointed out to them the absolute necessity of securing trade from the west, or it could not be done. Then he goes on to say :

The Grand Trunk to-day—

And I wish every member who takes an interest in this would listen to this argument advanced by the manager of the Grand Trunk Railway. He says :

The Grand Trunk to-day is drawing from the country—the Northwest—that we are now seeking to enter, and seeking to tie up to the system—

What system ? Their own system, the Grand Trunk system—not the Grand Trunk Pacific system. He continues :

—a very large portion of its traffic which we stand to lose if we do not embrace this enterprise. We cannot hold it. We are to-day handling from fifteen to twenty million—last year it reached twenty-four million—bushels of grain which came across the lake from Lake Superior down to our ports, feeding the whole Grand Trunk system throughout Ontario, and this gives us the whole of the way from Montreal, thus contributing a very large portion of our earnings. We cannot hold that to our system if we do not take some means of fastening it to us.

The fastening of this twenty-four millions, which will be duplicated in the future it is to be hoped and more than duplicated, cannot be held to their present system unless they make a connection in the west in some way and not allow the traffic to pass over the Grand Trunk Pacific transcontinental road. If the cars of the transcontinental road are to be loaded with wheat in Winnipeg or at any point westward of it and goes straight from Winnipeg to Quebec and Moncton, it will not add one single red cent to the receipts of the Grand Trunk proper.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And consequently Mr. Hays was desirous of adopting a system which would secure the continuance of that trade and increase it. He says :

That business to-day gentlemen is given to us by our competitors. It is not collected by the Grand Trunk Railway itself.

Mr. Hays knows he was getting that through the aid of either the Canada Northern or the Canadian Pacific Railway and it would have to be delivered to them at their ports at Midland or at Goderich or some other point where they have ports on Lake Huron or the Georgian Bay. Then he continues :

Now, we have another rival in that same territory, which is competing with us to a certain extent now, that brings the grain down to the lake, and conveys it by water across from Port Arthur and Fort William to those Ontario ports of ours. That line we do not control, and there is no likelihood or possibility of our controlling it in the near future.

That is the Northern road, because the Canadian Northern not having an eastern connection or any means of carrying the grain properly from Port Arthur eastward delivered it over to the Grand Trunk instead of the Canadian Pacific Railway Railways boats. Mr. Hays says :

And that railway is making its connections with the United States lines to the south of St. Paul and Minneapolis up to Winnipeg, and drawing this grain and traffic, which is not only today feeding the Grand Trunk very largely, but is the only direction in which we can look for an increasing traffic. That traffic will be lost to us if we do not tie it up.

That is, unless they have connection with these lines, they will lose the traffic, is really his entire argument in connection with that. Now let me point out how he proposes to secure that traffic for Grand Trunk Pacific Railway ? They asked in the first place, for a contribution from Ontario to build a road from North Bay to connect with the transcontinental line. They also asked for aid to construct a line from Thunder Bay or from the harbour of Nipigon or from Port Arthur—most of you are aware that the Nipigon is just below that—northwestward to connect with the trains of the transcontinental line. What have they secured ? The Ontario government declined to give them any aid to construct the line from North Bay to connect with the transcontinental line, and why ? The Ontario government is building, out of its own resources, a government line from North Bay to Lake Temiscamingue. That was commenced before the transcontinental scheme was propounded, or the contract which was entered into by the Grand Trunk Company and the government took place. As soon as the first contract was made between the Grand Trunk Railway and the country for the construction of the line from Moncton westward to Winnipeg, the Ontario government took another appropriation, at the last session of parliament, to continue the Temiscamingue road, the road from North Bay to Temiscamingue, northward or northwestward until it would join the transcontinental road, and intimated at the same time that as this would connect Ontario with the great west by that means, they were justified in expending that amount of money in the anticipation of leasing it to the Grand Trunk Railway Company or the Grand Trunk Pacific Company as soon as it was built. They did not stop there. They complied with the application of Mr. Hays, the manager of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and appropriated at the last session of the Ontario Legislature a bonus of $2,000 per mile and 6,000 acres of land for the construction of the road from Port Arthur or the mouth of the River Nipigon with the transcontinental line, thus giving when these two roads are built, a direct connection between the great producing Northwest and Manitoba and whatever trade may come through the Rocky mountains from the eastern countries Japan, China, or any other country on the Pacific, giving a direct connection with the Grand Trunk Ontario system to the sea-board, wherever they may think proper to take it, and as their line runs to Portland rather than to a Canadian seaport you may take it for granted, in view of the declarations made by Mr. Hays and Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson, that they are going to carry that freight over their line as far as they possibly can until they reach a seaport, so that Mr. Hays' scheme and his proposition are being accomplished as directly as it is possible to secure the carrying trade of the Northwest over the whole Grand Trunk system. There is no hiding the fact. The facts are before us. I am not finding fault with the Ontario government for what they did. They were desirous of connecting Ontario with the great Northwest, and, representing Ontario, they believed it to be the interest of the province, and so did the opposition at the time because they did not oppose it, to connect Ontario with the whole western carrying trade and bring it into and through their own province, and it has been accomplished in this manner by the astuteness of the managers of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. They have skill, they have much knowledge of railway building, and a sufficient knowledge of the benefits of the carrying trade, so much more than the ministers with whom they were negotiating that they succeeded, I will not say in bamboozling the government, because that would not be right but they succeeded in accomplishing that which they originally intended to accomplish, and that too without any great expense to themselves. What has the Ontario government done to assist them in securing that trade? They have given cash bonuses to that road to which I have called attention, of nearly a million dollars and a land subsidy calculating it at two dollars an acre, amounting to two million two hundred and sixty-eight thousand dollars, making a total subsidy of $3,824,000. Had the original proposition of Mr. Hays on behalf of the Grand Trunk been carried out I hesitate not to say that Ontario would have been relieved of this expenditure and the expense to the government of the country would have been infinitely less. As further evidence of this fact, Mr. Hays stated on the 25th December, 1903 :

> That our first object would be to get the east connected with the great lakes for the summer traffic, and then to give Winnipeg connection with the east. The people of the west want more railway facilities, he said, and he intended to give it to them as quickly as possible.

There can be no doubt whatever not only of the intention but the desire of the Grand Trunk to secure this traffic. Now what we have to consider in dealing with this subject is how far the schemes which have been instituted, and how far the schemes that have been developed, will result in securing the carrying trade to Canadian ports, or whether the connections which I have pointed out will be made with the Grand Trunk proper in securing the trade of the great west will inure to the benefit of Canadian shippers. Take the United States papers and you will find that they look upon proposition of carrying everything to to Canadian sea-board by the proposed transcontinental road as an absurdity. The Boston 'Advertiser,' Boston commercial men and others look upon the declaration as worse than absurd. The Boston 'Advertiser' treats the subject in this way—and it is worth while to place it upon record, to see that our neighbours are interested very heavily in securing the carrying trade of Canada as far as possible to their own ports—the 'Advertiser' publishes the following:

> While the Laurier government talks about the use of Canadian ports by this road New England is not alarmed. The new road, when built, must hand its freight over to the Grand Trunk, and the latter will carry the freight wherever there are the most steamships to take it. It is true that the Canadian government has signed contracts with the new company to have the Canadian ports used as much as possible, but the new company does not control the entire haul. And when the cars switch from the road of the Grand Trunk Pacific to the Grand Trunk, the latter has the say as to the destination, in many cases. If the New England ports have the best facilities, the biggest fleets, the road will do its best to work along that line. The export business is not a matter of sentiment. The very fact that no contract has been made binding the Grand Trunk in the future is a pretty good sign that the Canadian government is building the new eastern line rather to catch votes than with much idea that the export business will be taken away from the ports of this section for very long.

That is the view taken by United States writers, and by those who know very well what the result of the construction of this road will be.

There is much more that I might add on this subject were it at all necessary. I have gone over the different points that have struck me as being the most vulnerable at as rapid a rate as possible, and have pointed out that there is a very great difference between this contract and the agreement entered into last year. The liabilities of the country are greatly increased. I have pointed out what the object of the Grand Trunk Railway Company was in asking to connect their system with the great west, and, I repeat, that I look upon that as a commendable policy on the part of the Grand Trunk Railway. I have shown that their connection with the Northwest Territories by means of the construction of a road ending at Port Arthur or North Bay and by the leasing of the Ontario government road would bring their whole system in communication with the Northwest, and enable them to secure, not only the trade which they have had up to the present time from other roads, but also additional traffic from the Northwest. It would also enable them to place steamers on the upper lakes and do what the Canadian Pacific Railway is doing, carry wheat from the head of Lake Superior to their roads in Ontario. It is to their interest to carry that freight to their own port on the Atlantic, and where their interest lies they will devote their energies and direct their attention to securing dividends. Let us suppose for a moment that in winter they could carry the grain, as they say they will, from Winnipeg to Quebec. What is their position when they get it to Quebec? Unless they are compelled by the owners of the grain to send it on to Moncton, they will carry it to Portland, because the distance from Quebec over their own line to Portland is only eighteen miles longer than from Montreal to Portland. Is it at all likely, therefore, that they will carry that freight to Moncton unless means be taken, which are not provided for by this Bill, to have the traffic carried to our own ports? The Grand Trunk Railway has been able to secure by this new road, and by the aid it is receiving from the Ontario government, trade over their own line through the whole province of Ontario and nearly the whole province of Quebec, to the coast and to the detriment of the transcontinental road, which they will control for many years without paying anything for it.

Now, what should be the policy of the government? It should be the construction of a road by which the products of the great west will be carried to a Canadian seaport, and, what is of equal importance, that they shall control the rates. They would thus accomplish the great object which this country has in view, the building up of the great Northwest and securing an outlet for the traffic of that section of Canada in our own country. We have now an outlet to a very limited extent. For twenty-five years this country was agitating to secure a winter port on the Atlantic. It was only when the late government granted a bonus to shipowners to visit the port of St. John during the winter that partial success was attained. I had the honour of being at the head of the government at the time, and when the proposition was made to me I pointed out to a deputation from the city of St. John that that could not be accomplished, nor would I be justified in recommending to my colleagues any appropriation or subsidy to ship-owners to call at the port of St. John until they could assure the government that the Canadian Pacific Railway was ready and willing, and would bind itself, to carry the freight that came from the Northwest, and was delivered to them at Montreal, over what is called the short line at the same rate that the Grand Trunk Railway charged to carry the same freight to Portland. I said, if you will give me that assurance I will have grounds upon which I can conscientiously recommend to my colleagues the granting of a subsidy. The Canadian Pacific Railway manager, though the route to St. John was a couple of hundred miles longer than the line to Portland, gave the assurance that they would carry the freight at the same rate to St. John for which the Grand Trunk carried it to Portland, and on the strength of that the recommendation was made to council and the grant was made. That was the beginning of the establishment of a winter port in Canada, and it has been going on ever since. It is true the present government have expended a large amount of money in the construction of elevators and in the extension of the road into the city of St. John, but as the Intercolonial Railway route is a good deal longer by the way of Moncton, the freight has gone the other way, and by the return laid on the table of the House it is shown that the construction of this elevator in the city of St. John has not been as great a success in diverting the grain-carrying trade to that port as it was anticipated it would be. But the initial step taken was successful to a very great extent, as I think hon. gentlemen from New Brunswick will acknowledge, in establishing a winter port in the maritime provinces. If the proposition which is before us to-day was to carry western traffic direct to a Canadian seaport, where we could ship in vessels the products of the great west to European markets, there would be some reason and sense in it, but the proposition is to send the freight to Moncton. You would be just as far off a seaport then as you are now, by the Intercolonial Railway, and after you get the freight to Moncton you must either send it on to Halifax or come back again westward to reach St. John. I am not surprised that the people of Halifax should accept this contract, but why those who desire to have St. John the winter port for Canada should consent to it, I cannot understand. There is but one way to my mind to make this project advantageous to Canada. The country is now committed to the payment of nine-tenths of the whole expense of constructing this great transcontinental railway; why not pay the other tenth and own the whole road? I daresay I shall be told that when I addressed the House on this subject last year I was opposed to government ownership. Per se I am opposed to government ownership, for reasons which I could give, but when we find a government who pretend to have an objection to government ownership spending millions in order to extend the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, such a charge would come with very bad grace from them. If we desire to secure for Canadian seaports the output of our great Northwest, then we should own the road. The predictions of Sir Charles Tupper as to the effect of building the Canadian Pacific Railway were laughed at, but they have been more than fulfilled, and if the prophesies of the hon. Secretary of State are to be fulfilled within the next eight or ten years, we will require two or three more avenues by which to bring out the produce of the great west. The members of the present government while pretending to be opposed to government ownership, have in the past advocated it very strongly, but very often when a member of parliament enters the cabinet his opinions undergo a change. The strongest advocate of government ownership in the country is the gentleman who is now Minister of Railways. I shall read what he said upon this question for the sake of putting it on record. Now, of course, being in the cabinet, he is obliged to declare himself opposed to government ownership. My own conversion is of this character; if we are to build the road and pay nine-tenths of the whole cost of construction, we had better add the other tenth and own the road. It does not follow that, owning the road, we should therefore run it. It can be operated successfully, if separated from what the Montreal 'Witness' calls that 'cursed partisanship' which prevails at the present time. I have here figures showing the result of government ownership in Australia. While the roads there were managed by the political parties, they were run at a loss to the government. A clever Canadian has gone to Australia in the person of Mr. Tate, a son of one of the chief justices of the province of Quebec, and the figures which came under my notice the other day, clipped from Australian newspapers, show that since he has had control the road has not only been paying running expenses, but the interest upon the outlay and something to spare besides. If that can be done in one country it can be done in another. Remove the cursed influences that have surrounded the working of the Intercolonial Railway—and I am not attributing it all to one party, I have seen enough to understand the difficulties that present themselves while it is under the control of the government—and I say a railway can be owned by the government and the government can dictate to the commission where the freight shall be taken and the rates for which it shall be carried. Put these roads in the hands of the Grand Trunk Railway Company or the Grand Trunk Pacific Company, and it will not be six months until there is a combination between them and competing roads to put up the rates. Look at the experience of Manitoba. We had almost a rebellion there at one time because the agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company prevented the building of a competing road. The restriction was removed, and an arrangement was made with the Northern Pacific to construct a road from North Dakota into Winnipeg, tapping the trade of the great west and Manitoba. Within six months a combination existed by which these roads bound themselves to charge no less for the carrying of traffic than the Canadian Pacific charged. I saw that agreement which was entered into, in the hands of the Governor, before the road was built at all. What has the present government of Manitoba done? It has taken that road out of the hands of the Northern Pacific, and put it into the hands of the Canadian Northern, with the condition that they control the rates and that the rates shall not exceed a certain amount. The result has been a saving to the farmers of Manitoba and the Northwest of hundreds of thousands of dollars, I might say millions of dollars, and it is only the beginning of the saving which will result from a policy of that kind. Had the road remained in the hands of the Northern Pacific or of any other company, without these restrictions, there would have been a combination of the railways as to the rates which they should charge. Therefore it is only reasonable that a new policy should be adopted, and that the government having to build the road should own it and control the ports from which the products of Canada should be shipped to European markets, and what is of infinitely greater importance, control the rates at which the freight should be carried.

I said I would read the views expressed by the present Minister of Railways before he entered the cabinet. In speaking on this subject on April 25, 1902, the hon. member for Westmoreland (Hon. Mr. Emmerson) said :

> The Intercolonial Railway has been one of the most splendid assets that the government of Canada has ever possessed. . . . . When the fathers of confederation framed the British North America Act they recognized the fact that it was essential for the consolidation of these provinces that there should be an iron band connecting the provinces which then constituted the Dominion of Canada. . . . . The idea must have been dominant in their minds that in the future, as our Dominion came into its vast western territory, it was quite as essential that that road should travel beyond the lines of the St. Lawrence and go west and unite whatever might then be the provinces of Canada. . . . . I venture to say that the Intercolonial Railway will yet prove to be one of the richest dividend bearing concerns in this great Dominion. . . . . That it will one day justify the efforts of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) to make this railway worthy of this great Dominion. He found it a tramway and he has left it a railway. He has equipped it in a manner which I need not describe. This is but one evidence of the value of the efforts which the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) has been putting forth to make a railway out of what seemed to be the intention or the result of an intention to sidetrack at least a portion of the Intercolonial Railway. . . . . If the terms of confederation are to be carried out in their entirety that the Intercolonial Railway shall be extended, it shall crawl further west year after year until possibly it shall extend to the prairies of the west, and our seaports shall be the ports whence sail the rich products of the great western country.

That is pretty strong language for a member of the cabinet who now professes to be opposed to government ownership. It brings to one's mind Dante's motto at the entrance of the infernal regions :

'All hope abandon ye who enter here.'

Has the present premier paraphrased this motto and posted on the lintels of the door of the executive chamber as a qualification for all who enter his cabinet :

'All principles abandon ye who enter here.'

The quotation is so applicable that even the hon. Secretary of State smiles. Of course the Minister of Railways has no opinions now, but this does not apply solely to Mr. Emmerson. There is not a member of the cabinet who has not swallowed himself from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet. There is not a principle they advocated in the past that they have not violated in practice. They have gone back on their principles, and I congratulate them on having done so. We had an evidence of it yesterday. Our genial friend from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Templeman) extolled the principle of giving bounties, which had been denounced by the Reform party in the past as the most iniquitous system of protection, but he pointed out to the House yesterday the stimulating effect the bounty on lead has had on the mining industry in British Columbia and I congratulate him on the results which have followed the example set him by the Conservative government. Under the circumstances as I have given them to the House, and the reasons why, at the present moment I will support a policy of government ownership of the road as we have to build it, I propose to test the opinion of this House on the following resolution which I have the honour to move, seconded by my hon. friend Mr. DeBoucherville :

That the Bill be not now read the second time, but that it be resolved, that in the opinion of this House it is inexpedient to commit the country to the proposed enormous obligations upon the terms and in the manner set forth in the agreements proposed to be ratified by this Bill, thereby adopting a policy which will impair the power of Canada to deal effectively with the transportation problem on other lines for many years to come ; that if such obligations are to be assumed, the road should be built, owned and controlled by the government in order that Canadian seaports may be assured for the outlet of all freight and government control of rates be secured.

TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

DEBATE CONTINUED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Resuming the adjourned debate on motion for second reading (Bill 72) an Act to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act, and the resolution of the Hon. Mackenzie Bowell in amendment thereto.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière) said: I deeply appreciate the honour done me of being entrusted with the reply to the leader of the opposition, in this, in my opinion, the most important measure which has engaged the attention of parliament since confederation. It is the largest enterprise I know of—the largest railway construction that has ever been contemplated by this government; therefore I deeply appreciate the honour done me. I may say at once that I had some hesitation and a good deal of diffidence before assuming this task, but I believe it is the duty of any hon. gentleman in this House who by inclination, training or some slight technical knowledge of some public question, to devote his efforts towards giving to the House the fruits of his labours. I shall at once deal very briefly with the amendments to the contract, and ask this House why we are again considering this Bill. Why are we amending the contract passed last year? If as has been represented by the leaders and press of the Conservative party, the agreement was not to benefit Canada but to benefit the Grand Trunk Railway Company, why was it rejected when it was sent over to England and submitted to the shareholders of the company, by one of the ablest men in the management of the company? Why did the shareholders not credit the evidence of the Conservative party, that they were getting such immense advantages.? The fact remains, that the meeting of shareholders rejected the agreement. If the Grand Trunk Railway could derive such advantages from the contract is it evidence of that fact that the shareholders, for fear of losing such an opportunity, did not at once sanction the agreement? The president and board of directors were almost unanimously in favour of the contract, but one of the shareholders, an old director of the company, Mr. Allen, absolutely refused to have anything to do with the agreement, saying he refused to plunge once more into the wilderness; that the Grand Trunk Railway Company had lost enough money in Canada, and they were not going to enter into this new enterprise. He sent a memorandum which was read by his own son at that meeting, giving the reason why the Grand Trunk Railway shareholders should not ratify the agreement as it stood then. It reminds me that last session I was discussing this question with some friends and showing that were I a shareholder in the Grand Trunk Railway, I would look at it twice before I would accept the contract, and I gave my reason. I happened to do so within the hearing of a high official of the Grand Trunk Railway, and he asked me to refrain from giving those reasons when I had the honour of addressing the Senate last session on the subject. He said that Mr. Hays would have enough difficulty in getting the shareholders to ratify that agreement without throwing obstacles in his way. But I find that many of the shareholders in England entertained the same opinion, and at the meeting held to consider the question the same arguments that I had used were urged by the shareholders against the ratification of the agreement. Mr. Merlin, a large shareholder in the Grand Trunk Railway Company, said that he found after reading the contract carefully and submitting it to business men in London, that the Canadian government was assuming little or no obligation, and I invite the attention of this honourable House particularly to this fact, that the business men of London view it very much as our Finance Minister views it.

The first amendment to this agreement is an extension of time from five to eight years. The agreement stipulated that a deposit of $5,000,000 had to be made. We know how timid capital is, and capitalists, before putting up their good money, wanted to make sure, as business men, that the company should have time to complete the enterprise. Suppose the construction of the line took a few months longer than the five years, the company would be at the mercy of the government, and therefore they asked for this extension to eight years. In doing so they acted as business men, not with the intention of taking the full number of years, not with the intention, after building the greater part of the road and paying out 75 or 80 per cent of the money necessary to complete it, of allowing that large investment to lie idle any longer than they can help. It will be to their interest to complete the road as expeditiously as possible. Therefore, I do not consider the extension of time of much consequence; and, as the hon. Secretary of State said, this amendment is of very little consequence indeed.

Then they asked the right to operate portions of the railway as they are constructed. That is a reasonable request. What would be done with those portions of the railway if they were not operated? It is not the policy of this government to operate the railway. Our hon. friends in the opposition have changed their ideas lately about railway operation, and would have the Transcontinental operated by the government. But it is not the intention of this government, as voiced by the Finance Minister, to operate the road, and therefore it is right to allow the Grand Trunk Pacific Company to operate the parts as they are built, and all the more so as the Grand Trunk Railway Company would have to pay for the whole of the rolling stock. They would be operated without any expense whatever to the tax-payers of Canada.

The amendment relating to the prairie section is very slight. While this agreement was being presented to the Grand Trunk Railway shareholders, the financial market of the world was depressed, and it was feared that these bonds would not bring one hundred cents on the dollar. Therefore, it was asked that should these bonds have to be sold at a somewhat less rate than their value provision should be made for it. But I must remind the House that the bonds cannot be sold except with the sanction of the Finance Minister, which means the sanction of the government of Canada. If the bonds were to be sold at, say, a loss of 10 per cent, I am not prepared to admit that the bonds will go at less than par. I have more confidence in the credit of Canada than to believe that 3 per cent bonds, guaranteed by the government of my country, will bring less than par in the market of the world—of course, not under extraordinary circumstances, such as we see to-day, when consols are lower than they have been for half a century. Even admitting if it is necessary to issue more bonds to complete the $13,000 per mile, supposing they sold at 10 per cent below par, it would mean that much additional guarantee, not actual money paid out, in order to give a substantial guarantee, as was intended, of thirteen thousand dollars per mile. Now, as to the mountain section, the hon. gentleman opposite has criticised that part of the agreement very much—that is the section from Edmonton to the Pacific. He stated that there was no limit to the government guarantee, but he must see there is this limit—the limit of the actual cost of the road, and the government engineers will have to say whether or not the road has cost so much per mile, as in the case of any company applying for the double subsidy. The government engineer will go over the road, and the government are perfectly justified in saying, we will guarantee the bonds on a road costing $40,000 a mile—that is guaranteeing the bonds for $30,000. The hon. gentleman opposite made a great deal of the fact that it appeared to him the estimate of the cost of constructing the road through the Rocky mountains was too low. I am not at all prepared to contradict him on that point; but I call his attention to the fact that in the distance from Edmonton to Port Simpson, some ten hundred and sixty-six miles, there are some three hundred miles of prairie, and naturally the construction would not cost anything like as much on that prairie section as it will on the mountain section. That would reduce the average over the whole of it. I am told there are parts, at the summit, near the Peace river and near the head waters of the Skeena river, for one hundred miles, where the cost would be $50,000 per mile, other parts $31,000 per mile and other parts in the neighbourhood of $40,000, and then the prairie portion which will not cost anything near that, and will bring down the average cost for the whole of the road from Edmonton to the Pacific coast. Again, taking the Passes, the Pine river or the Peace river, or the Skeena river valley, there is a great difference in the cost of constructing a railway line in that part of the Rocky mountains, as compared with the route traversed by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Everybody knows there is an enormous difference in the elevation of the mountains. Everybody knows there is great difference in the approaches of these passes; everybody knows that from Edmonton up to the foot of the Rocky mountains, is a continuous slow rising grade, so that when you arrive at the Peace river, you are then at quite an elevation, and you have arrived at that elevation without any abrupt break in the surface of the country. Therefore, the government in agreeing to guarantee bonds to the amount of thirty thousand dollars per mile on the mountain section are not venturing too much, for I do not believe that amount will be exceeded. Granting that it might cost $36,000 or $37,000 or $40,000 per mile, counting the prairie section in with it, at $40,000 a mile all over it would only leave what the government agreed to guarantee in its original arrangement at $30,000 per mile, so that I do not think we need have any fear as to that point, and, as the hon. Secretary of State has said, it is a matter of small consequence. It is urged that the government was compelled to agree to these amendments. The government found themselves face to face with this proposition; either they had to agree to these amendments or give up the idea of having the Grand Trunk build the road. There was no other alternative. So that I think the government made a very good bargain with Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson and Mr. Hays and the other gentleman, in the face of a good deal of opposition.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—What is the length of the mountain section, according to the hon. gentleman's calculation?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I gave the total distance from Edmonton to Port Simpson at 1,066 miles. I said there was a prairie section from Edmonton in a northwesterly direction for three hundred miles, leaving 766 miles for the mountain section. I may also call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that if there is any dispute about the exact point at which the mountain section should begin and the prairie section should end, provision is made in the agreement that a board of arbitrators will be appointed to determine where the $13,000 guarantee shall end and the $30,000 guarantee shall begin. The hon. leader of the opposition should remember that it is not the first time that the government of this country has applied to the Grand Trunk Railway to build a transcontinental road. I might say--and it is a matter of history now—that the colleagues of my hon. friend, Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Charles Tupper, Sir Leonard Tilley and Sir Adolphe Caron, approached the Grand Trunk Company before they entered into an arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway. But they were not as fortunate as the present government; they did not succeed. I stand to be corrected, but I have been informed that the gentlemen I have named went to London and tried in every possible way to induce the Grand Trunk to do for them what they are doing to-day for the Laurier government. That was before they entered into the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway. We have heard people express surprise that this Grand Trunk Pacific scheme should have come back to parliament, and yesterday, when the hon. leader of the opposition referred to the Canadian Pacific Railway, he said it was a project of a different nature. It was not the same thing at all. I admit there is some difference, but the Canadian Pacific Railway Company came back, and it came back after having received twenty-five millions of the people's money, after having received twenty-five million acres of land, after having received 614 miles of constructed road, after having received surveys from one end of the line to the other; and more than that, they had received also exemption of duties for anything that they required to import from the United States or anywhere else for the building of that road. They had received also exemption from land taxes, and, more and more, they secured a monopoly. They were exempt from any railway competition; and, more and more still, until you would think by that time they had been given the earth and all within and beneath it, they were given the right to charge their own prices for any business they did in the Northwest or anywhere the line went; and it was a case with the merchant or settler of having to pay what the Canadian Pacific Railway chose to charge or not use the railway at all. What are we doing with the Grand Trunk Pacific? The government has retained absolute control of the rates. If the tax-payers are called upon to pay any money to this enterprise, they will have absolute control of the rates. The Canadian Pacific Railway came back after having received all these advantages to which I have referred, and we all remember that famous crisis when Mr. William, now Sir William Van Horne came to Ottawa and asked for a loan of thirty millions of dollars, and Sir John A. Macdonald, knowing that he had done so much for that company, hesitated and said: 'I have gone so far that I am really frightened to go one step further.' The Minister of Railways, the Hon. Henry Pope, refused to help them, and Sir William Van Horne went in despondency to the Railway Department for assistance. At that time Sir Charles Tupper also refused to help them. He thought the government could not give any more. They had given the company everything they could. But Sir Francis Smith insisted that they must be helped ; that the government could not afford to let the enterprise go down. When Sir Francis Smith received a knighthood about this time, and it came out in a letter published over Mr. Van Horne's signature, in a Montreal paper, that Sir Francis Smith had saved the Canadian Pacific Railway from bankruptcy. The money was loaned to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and every dollar of the money was returned. and the scheme was carried out. This is not the first time that a railway company, better endowed than the Grand Trunk Railway, has come back to parliament. Take the Algoma Central ; a great fuss has been made about a loan of $2,000,000 by the Ontario government, although I think the security is good and every dollar will be repaid. The hon. gentleman has spoken of transportation. He has also made the assertion that the grain would not be carried, especially in the summer months, over this new road. This transportation question is of such importance, and the members of this House, interested as they are in public questions will, I believe, grant me a few moments in which to discuss this important question of transportation. It is not such a complicated matter as people would imagine. It only requires a little consideration and a little attention, and one who has given some study to the subject might explain it. I do not pretend that the all-rail route from the west can compete successfully with water carriage. Every one knows that it is cheaper to carry freight by water than it is by rail. That is an axiom, and I will tell hon. gentlemen that on a long voyage, say across the Atlantic, it will cost one-tenth less to carry freight by water than it will by rail for the same distance, and in inland waters it will cost one-sixth less than by rail. That is once you have a cargo in the hull of a ship, but there are other considerations. This is not a question of an all-water route, far from it. Taking Brandon as your starting point, you have a haul by rail of five hundred and fifty miles, or thereabouts, to Port Arthur. You have then to take the wheat from the cars and put it in an elevator. You have to pay something for the storage. You have to wait until the vessel comes and you have then to load it, and it goes across the lake to Depot Harbour or Port Colborne, and you have to tranship again. If you are going to use the canals drawing fourteen feet of water, or you have to go to Depot Harbour and send the wheat over the Canada Atlantic Railway where it is taken to Coteau and there it is tranferred to barges and taken down to Montreal, or it is given to the Canadian Northern and taken around by Hawkesbury and Grand'Mère down to Quebec. All these transhipments cost money and cause delay. That is only during the summer months, and you must remember that you have to carry the grain crop out of Manitoba in a month or six weeks. You can commence shipping about the 15th October and you cannot continue much after the end of November, a period of six weeks. Then navigation closes. If you keep the wheat back until the following spring, what does it cost you per bushel ? It costs a cent per bushel per month. If you keep it six or seven months it costs six or seven cents a bushel. You require to have elevators in which to store the wheat, and these elevators to store away this quantity of wheat so held back, would cost some $20,000,000. Somebody would have to pay interest on that large investment. I must call the attention of the House to the fact that transportation by rail has undergone an immense change. It all depends upon the grades that are obtained. On a practically level road, we know that a locomotive can haul an immense quantity. In fact, supposing you have a grade of three-tenths of one per cent, or four inches per hundred feet, or sixteen or seventeen feet to the mile, a locomotive will do exactly twice the work that it could do on a one per cent grade, or fifty-two feet to the mile. Tables show that there is no advantage in having a road more level than three-tenths of one per cent, because the necessary energy required to start a train on a level track is sufficient to pull a train up a grade of four inches in a hundred feet. Consequently if the Canadian Pacific Railway can haul grain at twenty cents per bushel a modern road will do it at ten cents. I do not want to disparage the Canadian Pacific Railway, but we must remember it is no longer a modern road. It was badly located. If the engineers had been sent to find a bad location for a road I stake my reputation that they could not find a worse one. From Ottawa to Mattawa, and from there to Sudbury, and Sudbury to Port Arthur how many miles can you find along the line that are occupied or tilled ? Then take from Sudbury to Sault St. Marie, how many miles of good land will you find ? How many settlers can you find there? The road has been in operation twenty years, and you can find no settlers. The main reason for the location of that line where it is was that for a time they had this policy of water stretches, and the idea was that they could use Lake Huron and the Georgian bay to reach Port Arthur ; therefore they commenced by building from Winnipeg to Port Arthur. From Winnipeg eastward as far as Port Arthur, 110 miles was easy enough, and a good enough country, but extending to Port Arthur they had to cross the range of mountains on the north side of Lake Superior and enter into a very poor country, which is not settled to-day after the road has been running through it for twenty-five years, and then instead of abandoning that line and going eastward from Winnipeg they started again from Port Arthur and hug the shore of Lake Superior, a very difficult place to build a railway, and when the authorities of the Canadian Pacific Railway tell us they cannot haul grain over their road it is no surprise to any one who knows anything about the business. But if they had a modern road with the same gradients we have on the Grand Trunk Railway they could do the business for half the money and could compete with the water route. There is another way to look at it. Take the price of a train assuming you start from Brandon and go to Quebec. Every one knows the average price of a train is 95 cents per train mile. Well, supposing it was even $1.50 per train per mile, which is an excessive figure for 1,600 miles, it would be $2,400 and that train would transport 60,000 bushels of wheat from Brandon to Quebec for $2,400. Any one could make the calculation and see for himself. I am almost ashamed to tell you how cheaply it could be done, but any one can calculate it. Hon. gentlemen opposite say : 'Improve your waterways.' A gentleman who was very prominent in the government at one time says : 'Improve the waterways, improve the rivers and canals, that is the best way.' Hon. gentlemen know very well to whom I allude —Hon. J. Israël Tarte. He has advocated that policy against the building of a railway. The other day the transportation commission was sitting in Montreal, and Mr. Robert Meighen, president of the Lake of the Woods Milling Company, a good friend of the hon. gentlemen opposite, an excellent friend, came before the commission, and what did he say ? He said : 'Gentlemen, not one cent should you spend on the canals, the canals are antiquated, and you must change the climatic conditions of Canada if you are going to work on canals. Canals are a thing of the past. Build up your railways.' And I consider Robert Meighen's opinion, as far as that question is concerned, at least equal to the opinion of Mr. Tarte. I do not say that Mr. Meighen approves of the National Transcontinental Road. He does not approve of that, because he is too good a Conservative to think that anything good could come from this side of the House. But there you stand, with two different opinions from men who have given some thought to the question. But when I speak of this railway with a grade of four inches to the hundred feet, hon. gentlemen will say : 'That is not possible ; no railway is built like that. You cannot point to a single road in Canada with grades like that.' If hon. gentlemen will only inquire for themselves they will find that the Grand Trunk Company of Canada have so lessened their grades that they have to-day a road on which, going east, there is no grade between east Toronto and Montreal of more than four inches in 100 feet or seventeen feet to the mile. There is a grade leaving Toronto going to York or east Toronto, steeper than that, but the heavy trains are made up on the east side of Toronto after the grade has risen from the level of the lake.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Was that the condition of this road since its construction, or is it only recently that it has reached that state ?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I am saying that they have improved their grades to such an extent, and if any hon. gentleman going to Toronto in daylight would ride from Trenton to Toronto, a distance of a little over 100 miles, he would see a train disappearing below the horizon. You will not lose sight of the train until it gets out of sight, like a ship at sea.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—The train broke down altogether when I went on it.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Hon. gentlemen can see what a modern road is. In some places the right of way is 500 feet in width, and they have actually pierced through the hills and filled up the hollows. Take the village of Trenton; the Central Ontario Railway passes underneath the Grand Trunk Railway, and the Central Ontario Road is some 20 or 25 feet below the Grand Trunk Railway, which comes from the west through an elevation, and the company have actually filled in over a mile and one-half, and pierced the hill on the east side of Trenton, and where they used to have steep grades they have a level road and double track, and that is the kind of a road, that, according to the agreement, must be built by the Grand Trunk Railway under this contract.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—What did it cost per mile?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I am glad my hon. friend is asking that question. I was forgetting to explain that. With the facilities we have to-day for building railways with steam shovels, you do not see, except in wet places, men taking the shovel and putting the earth in a wheelbarrow, running it up a plank and dumping it to make an embankment. Perhaps you may see a few two-horse scrapers, but the cuts are all made with steam shovels and with a train, and the earth is moved for ten to fifteen cents a yard, where it used to cost 25 to 30 cents, and sometimes more, and it is not the idea of building a road to see how little earth you must move and how cheaply you can build it, but how cheaply it can be operated, and with large locomotives. It is simply marvellous to observe the cheapness with which the earth can be handled. Then another way of figuring the cost of transportation of wheat taken from Brandon to Quebec, putting the train at $1.25 per train mile plus one-third for hauling the empty cars back, and adding two or three cents for profit, the cost per bushel would be less than eight and one-half cents per bushel from Brandon to Quebec. Last summer the rail and water route from Brandon to Quebec was fifteen and one-half cents. After the reduction it was still ten cents per bushel. I am quite willing to admit that if you were to deepen the Welland and St. Lawrence canals and give them a depth of twenty feet, then you would carry cheaper by water, but you would double the national debt, and you would still have to store your wheat during the winter season. If we have 100,000,000 bushels of wheat stored during six months, at one cent per bushel per month, it will amount to nearly $6,000,000, which would be good interest on the railway itself, and if the hon. gentleman will allow me, I would say that Mr. Charlton, in the other House, made a wonderful speech. I read it carefully last year, and I thought he exaggerated to a great extent. I really thought that it was not possible to build a road on such grades, and haul grain or any other freight at any such rate. After the information that I gathered since last session—and I have taken every opportunity to inform myself—I read that speech over again, within the last ten days, and I must say I find it to be substantially correct. It shows what care this wonderful man has given to that question, when twelve months ago he could have made a speech which is a credit to himself and to the party to which he belongs.

A great deal has been said about the construction of this road and a great deal of fuss has been made about the length of it between Winnipeg and Quebec. The other day the hon. Secretary of State was explaining, when he was interrupted, that it was a fact that from Winnipeg to North Bay the distance by actual measurement is 1,043 miles. The Grand Trunk Railway Company have themselves had that line surveyed. A transit has been over it; it has been chained and levelled.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Will that be all main line?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—The proposition was they were to build from North Bay to Winnipeg and thence westward to the Pacific ocean. But it was thought by the government that it would be better not to go to North Bay at all, but to extend straight from Winnipeg on to Quebec. The objection was raised that it would add greatly to the length of the line, but it is not so. The total distance of the new route from Winnipeg to Quebec would be 1,400 miles, while the distance from Winnipeg to North Bay is 1,043, leaving a difference of only 357 miles.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—In the other House, the supporters of the Bill made the distance 1,475 miles.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I am sorry for them ; I measured it carefully on the map.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The minister said so.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—They should have consulted me. Now, supposing you were to go to North Bay, what would be the consequence if you wanted to continue from North Bay to Quebec ? You would have to go from North Bay to Toronto, 180 miles ; from Toronto to Montreal, 333 miles, and Montreal to Lévis, 180 miles—a total distance of 1,740 miles, whereas the difference between the route from Winnipeg to North Bay, and Winnipeg to Quebec is only 357 miles. If you are to take the route by the Canadian Pacific Railway you would leave the Grand Trunk Railway at North Bay, and the distance would be 1,596 miles, so that the transcontinental will shorten the route by 196 miles. That, allowing 10% for curvatures, because the line from Lake Abitibi to Quebec has not been run yet. If you measure it on the map, as the crow flies, between Quebec and Winnipeg you will find that it is very little over 1,200 miles ; but allowing 10 per cent for curvature it brings it nearly to 1,400. I am devoting my attention principally to the portion of the line which interests the tax-payers, that is the road from Winnipeg to Moncton. Because from Winnipeg westward the government is simply guaranteeing a portion of the cost of construction, and before the government can become liable, the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Grand Trunk Railway also, with its $187,000,000 assets, must become bankrupt, so there is no ground to apprehend that the government will ever be called upon to make good their guarantee for the western sections. The location of the road from Winnipeg eastward to Lake Seul, from Lake Seul to the north of Lake Nipigon, and thence eastward to the north of Lake Abitibi ; from Lake Abitibi to the headwaters of the St. Maurice, and then southward down the valley of the St. Maurice to Grand Mere and to Quebec. There is a reason for the deflection from the headwaters of the St. Maurice southward, because there the line crosses the Laurentian range. Taking it from the headwaters of the St. Maurice river to the other extremity of that immense plateau, you find that there is very little difference in level. Winnipeg is 800 feet above the sea and the headwaters of the St. Maurice between 800 and 900 feet, and there is no mountain range to cross. The highest point is Lake Seul, the waters of which are 1,140 feet above sea-level. Allowing 60 feet for the shores of the lake at the point where the railway will pass, you have an elevation there at the rail of 1,200 feet, and as the distance from Lake Seul to Winnipeg is some 400 miles, it gives an average grade of about one foot to the mile. Then coming east from there, a distance of some 800 miles, you would descend another 400 feet, or six inches to the mile. Therefore, it will be seen that there is no easier route for a railway, because you are running in the basin of the Hudson Bay and James Bay, all rich alluvial soil and a level country. The reports which surveyors give of that country are all to that effect. You have, for instance, the line run for 200 miles immediately west of Lake Abitibi by the Ontario government. They have run the line east and west and taken levels at many points. The ground is slightly undulating, but about the same level all the way, so it will be exceedingly easy to build a line under those conditions. An hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart), in the other House, said that it would take two and one-half years to complete these surveys. Why the work has been going on for nearly that time now, and an instrumental survey has been made from North Bay to within seventeen miles of Winnipeg. Naturally the company would not like to locate its line through the thickly settled country in the neighbourhood of Winnipeg and into the city, where they would be held up for the right of way. They will not say precisely where they will enter or leave Winnipeg until the last moment. In the wilderness it is all very well to locate the line at once, but in thickly-settled districts it is better not to locate the line until the company is ready to build. I have seen plans of the survey east of Winnipeg, and it is open for any other senator to see them if he wishes. I went to the Grand Trunk Railway offices in Montreal with the permission of the officials, and was given access to these plans. I have seen the plans for 248 miles of the line coming east from Winnipeg. On the division line between Ontario and Manitoba it passes through the roughest country on the route. The work will be rather heavy, but the grades have been kept down within that limit. I have had the plans and profiles in my hands made on the same scale as those that will be deposited with the Department of Railways and Canals—400 feet to the inch. The horizontal plans give the contour lines showing the elevation all through. On the profiles the quantities of each section are given—so much rock, so much earth, &c., and the estimated price for the work. They were shown to me on the authority of Mr. Hays himself by the chief engineer, Mr. Stephens, and I spent two days examining them.

Hon. Mr. MacKEEN—Are these recent surveys ?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Quite recent. They are still coming in all the time. Then a survey has been made westward, from Winnipeg to Edmonton. They have had an instrumental survey through the Rocky mountains, by the Pine River Pass, and another by the Peace River Pass. The distance by the latter route to Fort Simpson is 1,066 miles (from Edmonton to Port Simpson). By the Pine River Pass it is a little shorter, but the grades are much better by the Peace River Pass. Very little is said about the construction of the road from Edmonton to the coast, but there is an outcry when it is proposed to build a line through Ontario, Quebec and the maritime provinces. It seems to be the opinion of many that we of eastern Canada can get along without railways, but there is no complaint when it is proposed to build thousands of miles of railways in the Northwest and in the Rocky mountains where nobody lives at present. The grades and curves of the line from Edmonton westward are very easy, the grade on the eastern slope being only 26 feet to the mile, except at the summit where it will be 1¼ per cent or 66 feet to the mile. On the Canadian Pacific Railway the grade in some places is as high as 200 feet to the mile, and they have safety switches in order to protect the trains from accident. Nothing of the sort will be necessary on this new road. I see the hon. member from Sarnia (Hon. Mr. Vidal) is listening very attentively and I am proud of it. He will know the difference between the load which an engine can haul on the Canadian Pacific Railway with grades such as I have mentioned, and what an engine can haul on the Grand Trunk Pacific with grades such as I have mentioned, and what an engine can haul on the Grand Trunk Pacific with the grades I have described. Down the Skeena river, which is in the nature of a canyon, the grades will not be quite as favourable as on the other parts of the line through the mountains. The valley of the river is very narrow and curves up to six degrees will be necessary. The ruling curvature on the eastern slope of the Rocky mountains will be five degrees, and in some places four degrees. East of Winnipeg the curvature is very slight, the country being so level that the maximum curvature for a great part of it will not be over two degrees.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—Are the figures which the hon. gentleman has given to the House official ? Taken from reports of engineers deposited in the Department of Railways and Canals, or are they only figures furnished by some of the engineers employed on the survey ?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I have already explained that I obtained them myself at the Grand Trunk Railway offices in Montreal, with the full authority of Mr. Hays and Mr. Wainwright. They are the plans prepared for the use of the Grand Trunk Pacific and on which the contracts can be let. The quantities are actually marked on them.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Are those plans deposited with the Department of Railways here ?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Not yet. The Bill has not been passed yet.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—When were they made ?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Quite recently, and some are going on still. For instance, take the line north of Lake Nipigon. Where it has been run it describes quite a curve, and lies between 30 and 40 miles north of the lake. Finding the levels at both ends of this long curve about the same, the engineers have decided to shorten the distance. There is no object in following the valley of the river, and they are now making a string to the bow, and they are shortening the line some 30 miles at that point and touching the extensive waters of Lake Nipigon.

The hon. member from Hastings has no faith in the resources of that part of the country, although he told us that he had gathered roses at a point 1,000 miles further north. I cannot believe that the Great Architect of the universe could have made this immense stretch of country to be of no earthly use. We must remember that until recently that country has been almost a closed book. There has been more said about it within the last two years than there had been within the previous fifty. The eyes of the people of Canada have been turned towards it; information has been collected. The only means of access to that country up to the present time has been by bark canoes in summer, and dog-sleighs in winter, and there is a question in the minds of the Conservative party whether we should continue to depend on such primitive means of access to that country to open it for settlement. From the reports of engineers and explorers it is clear that a large proportion, perhaps a larger proportion, will be fit for agriculture, than of the country in the immediate vicinity of Ottawa. The reports prepared by the Trans-Canada Railway Company, show that there is a great extent of good land—I see the hon. gentleman from Marshfield smiling.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I am smiling because the hon. gentleman is referring to a country hundreds of miles away from the section to which he refers.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—The Trans-Canada was to pass south of James Bay, and not far north of Lake Nipigon. We know what an immense tide of population has set in to the Northwest. If it increases in the same ratio in the future the pivot of population will be disturbed. The older provinces in the east will cease to control, and the Northwest Territories will possess the power unless we bestir ourselves in the eastern provinces. It is time we opened up our northern country, and with the construction of the transcontinental lines I believe we will see as many settlers pouring into that part of eastern Canada as into the Northwest. The west, as I have said, has some 5,000 miles of railway. Why deny the east a couple of thousand miles of railway built with government assistance? Why should the government hesitate to build this line from Winnipeg to Moncton? They have a tenant for their property for fifty years. Would any hon. senator hesitate to build a house, a store, a warehouse, an elevator, or anything whatever, if he was sure of a tenant to occupy it for fifty years? They are assured of three per cent on the money they invest. The opening up of Manitoba and the Northwest has had the effect of depreciating the value of farms in Ontario and Quebec. Manitoba has been opened up largely with money from Ontario and Quebec, and the effect has been to diminish the value of property in those two provinces. Why not now, when the country is prosperous, have northern Ontario and northern Quebec opened up to settlement? We have seen the premiers of these provinces here seeking a readjustment of the provincial subsidies, and I see the hon. gentleman from Mille Iles (Hon. Mr. David) has a notice on the paper dealing with that question. The opening up of the north will have the effect of enriching these provinces. Supposing there are only two townships in depth on each side of the line, that will give twenty-four sections per running mile, or 15,000 acres of land per running mile on a good railway line. You cannot get land so situated for less than $3 an acre. Putting it at a minimum of $2 an acre for the good land, you would have $30,000 per mile going into the coffers of these provinces, thus solving this vexed question of increasing the provincial revenues. The provinces would have money to improve their educational facilities and increasing their expenditure on public improvements, and you would keep the pivot of population where we in the east at least should like to see it remain. But we are told there are no resources in that country, that there is no good timber. I would read something about the forests through which the line will pass. First, we know it is the natural home of pulp wood, and pulp wood will do as much for Ontario and Quebec as pine did in its palmiest days. The country is full of pulp wood, and with our immense water powers we can be the paper makers of the world, and that will be a great source of revenue. A great part of the material for the construction of the road will be found in the country—the ties, timber for trestles, and perhaps a great deal of material for permanent structures. It will only be necessary to import rails and explosives ; the rest will be found in the country itself, and, as I have just explained, a large proportion of the cost will be met and paid for by that country itself. Now, as to the timber you find in that country, white elm and white pine as far north as latitude fifty-two, which is one hundred miles or more north of this line. You find red pine equally far north, black ash up to latitude 53, cedar and black pine up to sixty, balsam, balsam fir, canoe birch, common poplar in enormous quantities and as large as ten inches in diamenter, balm of Gilead, tamarack and also black spruce, excellent for spars and masts of small boats, white spruce, which is a great rival of our pine, and which is in great demand in England and sells for nearly as much as pine—you will find all these in abundance up to latitude 62, or 700 miles north of the average location of this line. You will find on Carry lake white spruce 29 inches in diameter, two feet from the ground and it is quite common 18 inches in diameter. The lumber alone would pay for the building of the railway. If that country was given to a syndicate they could not hasten fast enough to open it up with a railway and give value to their property. Surely the government of Canada is able to do what an ordinary syndicate would be glad to do. I shall not weary the House with the description of the mineral wealth of that country, but we know that it contains great quantities of hematite, iron, coal, copper, mica, and on the Isinglass river there is a beautiful quarry of mica which was opened in 1685 showing how long that country has been known. It is evident, therefore, that people went there not merely to gather roses but to mine for mica. That was about the time that Father Albanel visited that country. The sooner we open up that region the better, and take possession of our northern heritage.

I now come to the question of government ownership. The hon. member from Hastings said last night—and he followed it up with a motion to the same effect—that he wants the railway owned and controlled by the government. That means, I suppose, operated by the government. That reminds me of a speech the hon. gentleman made in the House last year. It will be found at page 1384 of last year's debates. He said on that occasion, 'I am opposed to government ownership of railways and I pray to Heaven may God protect us from the financial results that would accrue should the railway be run by the government.' Such was the prayer, and I join with him on this occasion in the prayer which he made in all sincerity last year. The hon. gentleman continued—'The Intercolonial Railway would be better run by the Grand Trunk Railway, or by the Canadian Pacific Railway in every way.' The Lord evidently has heard his prayer, because the government will protect us from the dire results which he anticipated from government ownership. The hon. gentleman from Hastings has been converted. Well, praying always brings conversion.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It was a very moderate conversion.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—Some hon. gentlemen say that his conversion was simultaneous with that of Mr. Haggart of the House of Commons. I do not know whether these two gentlemen like each other so much that they absolutely entertain the same views on all questions. The hon. leader of the opposition in the other House had a project for a railway. It was a great project, but it did not meet with the nourishing sunshine of public approval, and by unanimous consent it was committed to limbo, the quiet abode of the souls of those who died before being born and baptized. The idea was to continue the Intercolonial Railway to Georgian bay and following the coast of Georgian Bay to the Canadian Pacific Railway, then acquire that portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway on which the company say they cannot carry grain with a profit, as far as Port Arthur ; from Port Arthur either taking the Canadian Northern or the Canadian Pacific Railway to Winnipeg, and after that I do not know where he would stop with his project, but I suppose he would not go beyond Winnipeg. That was for his winter route. Then he had a summer route. This winter route would be no good in the summer time; the grain would come via Lake Superior in the usual way as it does to-day. That project, as I have said, did not meet with favour; it was discredited. Had that been carried out, and had the Canadian Pacific Railway been able to unburden that unprofitable portion of their road on the tax-payers of Canada, they would at once have built on the present location of the government portion of the Transcontinental Railway. If they had not built it, it would have been constructed by Mackenzie and Mann. Their chief engineer, Mr. Sinclair, when I asked if he was going to built it, said: The government are going to build where we would have built, north of the Laurentian range, and through that level country. If Providence would but permit me to waft away the roseate mist which dims the horizon of the next two decades, so that hon. gentlemen could gaze with your own eyes beyond the Laurentian range over that incomparable and boundless region of rich alluvial soil, the future home of millions of christian people, then might you exclaim like the ancient prophets, of biblical lore: What is this new Canada rising from the wooded wilderness surging from the primeval forest? It bears upon its brow the mark of immortality. It is clothed in the brilliancy of the northern lights. Where did she beget these numberless sons of many tongues who are not the fruit of her womb? Canada is born again, richer and more youthful. People of the Orient are turning their hastening steps towards her fertile fields. Let the nations rejoice and be glad that by this modern steel avenue, the best that the genius and engineering skill of the 20th century can devise, immense new dominions have been thrown open for the husbandry of mankind, the advancement of civilization and the betterment of the world. Such will be the consecration of the political task of Canada's foremost citizen, of Canada's most gifted son, of Canada's greatest Prime Minister, Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière).

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—In his opening remarks to this House to-day the hon. senator from de Lanaudière said that he felt very much indebted to the hon. leader of the government for having chosen him to reply to the able speech of the leader of the opposition. I must say that I feel proud myself to have the honour of replying to the hon. gentleman selected to make the speech which we have just heard. I am not in a position to use as many figures as he quoted, not having, as he had, access to the plans and profiles in the hands of the Grand Trunk Railway Company—not only plans of the portion to be built by the company, but also of the portion to be constructed by the government. I am not surprised that the hon. gentleman had free access to the plans and profiles for the portion of the road to be built by the company, but I am surprised that the figures of the explorations which have been made for the section to be built by the government have not been laid before parliament, although it is in session. They have been given to the hon. gentleman while they have been denied to everybody else.

Hon. Mr. THIBAUDEAU (Rigaud)—They were not denied.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—The hon. member from de Lanaudière has devoted a good deal of time to those figures, and also to discussing the Canadian Pacific Railway. He mentioned also that he had been told by a high official of the Grand Trunk Railway Company to refrain last year from giving facts in connection with this project, because the effect would be to frighten the shareholders in England and probably serve the interests of the country. I must say the hon. gentleman followed that advice last year very carefully, because I did not find in his long speech on that occasion a solitary phrase in support of the interests of the Dominion. All he said was favourable to the Grand Trunk Railway Company; and this year again, while we have heard a great deal from him about the facility with which the prairie and mountain section can be built, and a little about the facility with which the eastern section can be built, the greater part of his speech was devoted wholly to advocating the interests of the Grand Trunk Railway. I am not going to deal very extensively with the question of railway transportation, though the present is a proper time to discuss it. Last session, however, the debate on the subject was so long, and this year the discussion has been so extended, that I shall mention only a few facts to show why I think it better that the government, instead of building a railway and handing it over to the company, should adopt a better means of developing this country. There ought to be no antagonism between the west and the east on the truly great question of transportation, for what will benefit the west must benefit the east, and vice versa, what will benefit the east must of necessity help the west. The great question to-day is, how best to develop the great Northwest and transport the products of that country to the lakes and thence to the sea. We have the experience of the United States; why not profit by that experience? Before embarking in a scheme which will tax the revenues of this country for some fifty years to come, we should pause and see what our neighbours south of the boundary line have done. We find that they have abandoned the carrying of grain by rail and have gone back to water transportation. They have railways better situated than ours to compete with water carriage. They have the New York Central, for instance, a four-tracked road; and yet that line has had to abandon the attempt to compete with water transportation. More than that, we have now the evidence that instead of carrying their grain through their own country, the greater part of the western grain is carried from Duluth and Chicago by the St. Lawrence route and shipped from Montreal. I have here a report by Consul Edwards, of Montreal, relating to that question. It was published in the Ottawa 'Evening Journal' of last March, and is as follows:

> The removal of the tolls on the Canadian canals has resulted in a heavy movement of grain over the Canadian lake route and thence down the St. Lawrence, as the exporters can now handle corn for 3 cents less a bushel than by the part-lake and part-rail route to Boston.
>
> The Montreal Board of Trade reports up to August show that during the year 1903, 9,000,000 bushels of wheat and 4,500,000 bushels of corn have passed through the port of Montreal, as against a little more than 1,000,000 bushels of wheat and 4,000,000 bushels of corn shipped from Boston.
>
> The matter has drawn attention to the channels in which Canadian grain at present moves to the sea-board. A striking fact is the importance of the Canada Atlantic route, from Depot Harbour. From a pamphlet compiled by the 'Northwestern Miller,' the information is gleaned that last year there was shipped from two Canadian Lake Superior ports, Fort William and Port Arthur, 35,525,798 bushels of grain. Of this total, 13,500,654 bushels, 38 per cent, was shipped to Buffalo and Port Huron, the balance—62 per cent—going to Canadian ports, as follows:—

	Bushels.
Owen Sound	1,308,160
Midland	8,316,972
Depot Harbour	3,515,760
Point Edward	192,904
Meaford	972,684
Goderich	2,759,484
Kingston	4,985,176
Total	22,051,140

The following is the grain drawn from Duluth to Canadian ports:—

	Bushels.
Owen Sound	102,000
Midland	1,633,000
Depot Harbour	3,591,000
Meaford	1,065,000
Quebec	574,000
Goderich	100,000
Kingston	58,000
Port Sarnia	19,000
Total	7,142,000

In addition there was also handled 813,000 bushels of flaxseed.

Chicago shipped extensively to Canadian ports as follows:—

	Bushels.
Montreal	254,000
Depot Harbour	4,691,000
Port Sarnia	2,349,000
Midland	3,707,000
Collingwood	2,366,000
Meaford	186,000
Goderich	271,000
Other Canadian ports	81,000
Total	13,985,000

Altogether these two United States ports (Duluth and Chicago) shipped to Canadian ports 21,129,000 bushels of grain, as compared with 13,500,654 bushels shipped from the two Canadian ports (Port Arthur and Fort William) to American ports, in other words, almost 20 per cent of the grain crop of the United States shipped by water from these two leading American inland ports passed through Canadian waterways. The points shipped directly to are of interest. They were:

	Bushels.
Midland	13,736,972
Depot Harbour	11,797,760
Kingston	5,043,176
Goderich	3,130,484
Port Sarnia	2,368,000
Collingwood	2,366,000
Meaford	2,223,684
Owen Sound	1,410,160
Quebec	574,000
Montreal	254,000
Point Edward	192,904
Other Canadian ports	81,000
Total	43,171,140

These figures show that 48 per cent of the grain making use of the Canadian transportation routes was grown in the United States.

Those people in England who are talking of how the United States could shut out Canadian grain from United States ports might take note of the foregoing facts.

If it had been possible to carry grain by rail, instead of shipping it by Canadian water routes, our neighbours would have taken it on their own railways.

We know very well that their railways are much better situated than ours can be in the wilderness some 300 or 400 miles beyond civilization. We are not sure of the grades or curvatures. There will not be any local traffic, and I think it is a fallacy to believe that it is possible to carry grain by rail from Winnipeg to Quebec. I am of opinion that before pledging the credit of this Dominion to the extent of between $150,000,000 to $170,000,000 we should wait till we obtain further information. I say that the country has been plunged into this agreement, the premier refusing to accept the advice of the most expert railway men in this Dominion; and when I say that, I have the authority of no other than Sir Wilfrid Laurier himself for the assertion. We know that Mr. Blair has been opposed to the scheme. He resigned from the cabinet, refusing to share the responsibility of an agreement which he considered detrimental to the interests of the country. During the present session, when Sir Wilfrid Laurier was asked why Mr. Blair had been chosen chairman of the Railway Commission, Sir Wilfrid's reply was: Because Mr. Blair was the most experienced and the best expert in railway matters that we had in the Dominion. How can we reconcile the fact that Sir Wilfrid Laurier admitted that Mr. Blair was the best informed man on railway matters in this country, with his refusal to take his advice? Then he chooses Mr. Emmerson to succeed Mr. Blair as Minister of Railways. The hon. leader of the opposition stated yesterday what had been Mr. Emmerson's ideas on this question, but I suppose when Mr. Emmerson was sworn into the cabinet twice, first as a member of the cabinet and next not to open his mouth during this long debate because he might be inclined, in the heat of the debate, to speak against the government. That is the only explanation I can offer. I stated a while ago that the only cheap mode of transportation of grain was by water. We have the experience of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Nobody can deny that the Canadian Pacific Railway is administered by men who have no superiors in railway matters, if they have equals. What do they do? Do they carry their grain from Winnipeg to Montreal or Quebec? No. The grain is carried to Port Arthur, is unloaded there, loaded in barges and shipped to Midland, Depot Harbour, and all the other ports which I have mentioned on the great lakes. Do hon. gentlemen believe that, if it were feasible to carry grain by rail, the Canadian Pacific Railway would not do it? In many cases the grain that has been carried by the Canadian Pacific Railway is transferred from the barges to the Grand Trunk or Canada Atlantic. Do hon. gentlemen believe for one moment that if it were possible to carry the grain by rail that the Canadian Pacific Railway would not carry it directly from Winnipeg to Montreal? Although at present we have only the one water route, by the Welland canal and the St. Lawrence, it draws many million bushels of grain from the west in the United States. If the government instead of expending the large amount which they are going to expend to build railways which are of no necessity whatever, would construct the Georgian Bay canal, what would be the result? Not only would that canal carry all the grain from the Canadian Northwest, but we are sure that three-fourths of the grain from the United States would be diverted to that route. There was a meeting of the royal commission on transportation in Ottawa the day before yesterday, that famous commission, which was appointed to advise the government what they should do to improve our system. When that commission was to be appointed every body expected that nothing would be done by the government in the way of a transportation policy before we had a report from that commission. The commission was appointed only after the government had pledged the country to an expenditure of about $150,000,000 without any profit to the country, and now the commission is travelling. After the government has adopted its policy, why incur the expense of a royal commission travelling through the country examining witnesses and taking their advice and evidence. What is the use of it, when they have already decided that they will not follow that advice? This commission was here the day before yesterday and Mr. Wisner, one of the most competent men. I am told, on railway and navigation transportation, gave his views about the Georgian Bay canal. The report reads as follows:

Mr. Wisner in opening generally gave his views on the necessity generally for waterways. He said $100,000,000 was now being expended to improve and extend the Erie canal which runs from Buffalo to Albany and New York. It was a costly undertaking and he did not think it would answer all the needs of the great grain transportation problem.

He says further:

The Georgian Bay canal from the mouth of the French river to Montreal would be 425 miles long. There would be four miles of locks and approaches, 40 miles of canal section, and 74 miles of improved river channels, 300 feet wide at the bottom, and the balance—307 miles—open river and lake section. In connection with the scheme under consideration, the amount of canal section to be constructed would be so small that considerable expense could be economically incurred, as the canal outlet is in Canadian territory. The freight carried would be not only grain but other commerce as well.

Mr. Wisner has put the total cost of that canal at about $75,000,000. If the government are not willing to build the canal themselves I believe they have already received an offer from a powerful company offering to build it for a small guarantee on the cost of construction. If the government decline to build that canal, why should they not encourage a company to build it? Instead of taking this means of solving the transportation problem they build a railway and hand it over to a powerful corporation—because I do not consider that the Grand Trunk Pacific Company is to be considered at all—they are only there to represent the Grand Trunk—the two companies are one—Instead of coming forward to parliament themselves, the Grand Trunk have simply put up another company, for one reason, only, and that is to escape almost all the responsibility. It was not for any other reason, because when the scheme was presented to this House it was stated that the reason the government insisted on having an agreement made with the Grand Trunk Pacific was that there were some strong, influential men at the head of that company, that there were business men at the back of it having all the necessary experience, men in whom we might have confidence. It is quite true that the gentlemen who are at the head of that Grand Trunk Pacific Company are wealthy and men of experience. At the same time they are very prudent and very careful men. When that charter was granted, it was by section 6, if I remember correctly, stipulated that the amount to be subscribed before there was a complete organization would be $2,000,000, on which ten per cent was to be paid. It was not a large amount for such a wealthy corporation, but what do we find to-day? Instead of subscribing to the extent of two million, we have before us a Bill, which is to be read a third time on Thursday next, to reduce the amount to one million dollars. Is that a proof that they have great confidence in the scheme? Is it a proof that they have no fear that perhaps some portions of the line may not turn out to be as profitable as they expected, and that if the government after having leased their road for several years without collecting one cent of revenue, ask to be recouped the interest, they may find the company is not in the position to pay one single cent. What course will the government have but to take back that road after the five years, the terms for which they have a right to use it without paying rental, and five years more, a road which will have been completely wrecked, without recourse against the company except for the $1,000,000 invested.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Ten per cent paid.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—Twenty per cent paid. I say that the premier acted in a very curious manner. Without any pretense whatever he refused to take the advice of his Minister of Railways. Who were the men who were to advise him? The men who had the greatest interest in having the best of the bargain. Instead of taking the advice of his Minister of Railways, the right hon. premier went straight to the Grand Trunk offices and obtained advice and information there. I do not believe it is doing any injustice to Sir Wilfrid to say that his profession and his training were not such as would qualify him as an expert on railway matters. He may be a very brilliant man, but nobody can say positively that he has had any experience in railway construction, and we cannot be surprised that having refused the advice of the only man in his cabinet who could give him advice, he made a bad bargain. The hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière has stated as proof that the first agreement was not in favour of the company the fact that some of the stockholders of the Grand Trunk opposed it. I am not surprised at that, when all the directors and stockholders of the Grand Trunk Railway found how easily it was to treat with the premier of the Dominion. I do not wonder at all that they decided to demand a great deal more, knowing that a man of so small experience would not be in a position to refuse, and in support of that contention we would have some little evidence. At a meeting held in London on the 8th day of March last, the president, Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson, after having spoken against a motion for adjournment of the meeting for further consideration spoke as follows :

> But the idea of adjournment is out of the question, I am afraid, and for this reason : the parliament of Canada meets the day after tomorrow for the special purpose of accepting.

So that, not only the president of the Grand Trunk Railway Company had power enough over Sir Wilfrid Laurier to make any contract he would choose to make, but he had a right to ask Sir Wilfrid to convene parliament for the sole purpose stated by Sir Charles of accepting that rich proposition. I wonder why Sir Charles did not add that he had commanded Sir Wilfrid to order his followers to accept all the agreements that would be submitted to them. Lord Welby, at the same meeting, after having spoken strongly in favour of the new agreement with the government, stated as follows :

> And further than that, we have got an indispensable condition connected with it ; as the result of the long and intricate negotiations, we have driven, I may say, the Canadian government into becoming absolute partners with us in the expenditure on that mountain section. That means that we have made their interest one with ours, and we are assured, therefore, of their hearty co-operation and assent to any proposition on our part.

That means not only that they have succeeded in obtaining from the government certain concessions but they have driven the government to accept certain conditions. It is not surprising then that Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson would say publicly in that meeting that parliament was convened for the sole purpose of accepting that new agreement. We heard the hon. leader of the opposition state that nothing had been mentioned of the extension from North Bay to Quebec or Moncton. I have heard almost all the speeches made, and I must confess that I could not find a word speaking of the extension from North Bay to Quebec and Moncton, so little cared the Grand Trunk for that part of the railway. It was ably stated yesterday that the Grand Trunk Railway has no object at all in working that part of the railway. Their only interest is to open the prairie section, and then, as soon as the government will have built from Winnipeg down to Lake Abitibi. (The Ontario government is employed at the present moment in building a railway from North Bay to Lake Temiscamingue and then they take power from the legislature to build from Lake Temiscamingue to Lake Abitibi), then as soon as that railway from Winnipeg is built by the government to Lake Abitibi, the Grand Trunk Railway will be in a position to rent that portion of the railway from the Ontario government and will have a connection there with their railway system. Besides that, the Grand Trunk Railway Company has a charter, I believe, from Port Arthur to Nipigon Bay, to join the main line on the National Transcontinental Railway. For that line they have been subsidized to the amount of $2,000 a mile by the the Ontario government, besides 6,000 acres of land per mile. They will surely expect a large amount from this government, and according to what has been done they are sure to get it. Then the Grand Trunk Railway will be in the best possible position to manage all their traffic from the west down to the great lakes and connect with their railway system. I repeat that the Grand Trunk Railway is so disinterested in that portion from North Bay to Quebec or Moncton, that we do not hear one single mention of it in the reports of the public meeting when they addressed their shareholders as they were addressed on the 8th of March last. You have heard from the hon. leader of the opposition what Mr. Hays stated about the connection of their part of the railway with this railway system, indicating in a precise manner that they did not care at all to encourage the other part of the scheme but later on in his remarks, Mr. Hays made the following statement.

One shareholder a minute ago, in speaking of the obligation the Grand Trunk was to assume in this connection, seemed to have the impression that his interests, whatever they may be in whatever class of securities, were jeopardized from the outset, and I fear that there is a general impression arising entirely from this misunderstanding. The Grand Trunk Railway is not going to be called upon under its guarantees for one cent for eight years after this enterprise is started—after the construction of the line is commenced— the cost of the line during construction being added to capital and provided out of capital, and the securties which the Grand Trunk will guarantee will will not be issued for eight years, and then after that eight years have rolled by, you have seven years yet on the mountain section, a part on which there seems to be some doubt. There cannot be the slightest doubt as to what the returns will be from the prairie section, but on the mountain section you have seven years without any claim at all, three years after that only a claim on what is earned, making therefore before the mountain section becomes anything of a burden on the railway, eighteen years.

Surely Mr. Hays must have known and read the agreement, because we are assured they have prepared themselves and must have understood the meaning of the new agreement which was made by the government. At any rate, I believe it was impossible to make a worse contract than the one made last year, and I am afraid the government has agreed to a still worse bargain. There is no word in the new agreement in favour of the government, and there are many conditions against the government. The company have an extension of time for building; the obligation that the government has contracted to guarantee the bonds is increased to an unlimited quantity, because notwithstanding the statements made by my hon. friend the member for de Lanaudière, I still believe that the building of that mountain section will be very expensive. The government will be forced to guarantee 75 per cent of the whole cost of that section, no matter what it may cost, and, as has been stated, supposing the bonds are sold below par it will further increase the obligations of the government. In order to make us believe that the construction of the railway on the east side of Manitoba is a very easy affair where levels would be obtained almost equal to those between Montreal and Toronto. he cited the fact that the government of the day has made an examination from Lake Temiscamingue to Lake Abitibi, but surely a gentleman of the experience of my hon. friend will not force on laymen like myself the belief that he will find the same levels across the mountain as he will on a line along the valleys. We have not had as much experience as the hon. gentleman, but we cannot believe that he will get the same levels by crossing mountains as he will in following the water-courses. I believe that in making this statement my hon. friend has wasted his time.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I said that was just what they were doing.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—The hon. gentleman was speaking of the road examined by the Ontario government from Lake Temiscamingue to Lake Abitibi. It does not cross the mountain. But the hon. gentleman was using that argument to show that there was no great difficulty in going up to Lake Abitibi, and on the rest of the line they would have the same result. Nobody of experience will believe that, even when it is stated by a gentleman with the vast experience of my hon. friend. I repeat that it is amazing to see the government building about 2,000 miles of railway and handing it over to the company without any consideration for about ten years, allowing them to use it five years without paying any interest, and to be five years in default without being able to force them by expropriation to give it up, and running all the risks of being obliged to take back the railway in very bad order. Supposing the company runs the road for fifty years, they still have the right to renew the lease for another fifty years. They have the right also, if they decide not to retain the road, to keep all the profitable branch lines and compel the government to take over those which are considered unprofitable. Why did the government consent to such a proposition? Why should even a man without much experience in railway matters accept conditions which are altogether favourable to the company and against the public interest? I dare say the ex-Minister of Railways would not have consented to such an arrangement, and I trust that in this House some amendments will be accepted which were rejected by a large majority in the other House, amendments which will render the Bill more acceptable to the country than it is now. One of these amendments which was rejected in the other House was to force the Grand Trunk Railway Company, in accepting the $25,000,000 bonds, to take them at par. All the friends of the government, without exception, voted against that amendment, so that the Grand Trunk Railway Company may secure those bonds for a mere song. In the first agreement they had no right to dispose of those $25,000,000 bonds, but now they may dispose of one-half of them, and they can realize whatever amount they please for the bonds, which probably will have cost them nothing. And in case the government should be called on to pay interest at 3 per cent, as stipulated, the interest on those bonds will cost nothing to the Grand Trunk Railway Company. They have a right now to dispose of $12,500,000, whereas last year they had no right to dispose of any. Who can say that next year another amendment will not be brought before parliament to give them power to dispose of the whole amount? From the way things were done last session and this session, no one can foresee what may be done in the future. Several amendments were offered to protect the interests of the country, but to no purpose whatever; they were rejected without exception. The only party that had a right to propose conditions was the Grand Trunk Railway Company. The representatives of the people had no right to interfere; it was a private affair between the government and the company, and every suggestion from any other source was rejected. Now, as to government ownership, I see in principle no great difference between the government and the opposition. The government undertake to build the railway from Winnipeg eastward. They have extended the Intercolonial Railway from Lévis to Ste. Rosalie, and have obtained running rights on the Grand Trunk Railway from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal. It was a good bargain for the Grand Trunk Railway Company. We must remember the help that was given the Grand Trunk Railway Company to build the Victoria bridge. Now, for the use of that same bridge, the whole cost of which we paid, we are obliged to pay almost all the repairs and a good round sum every year besides. What was the attitude of the Grand Trunk Railway Company when that bridge was built with the money of Canada? The first week after it was opened the Grand Trunk Railway Company took advantage of it to carry the freight which, in summer time had been shipped at Montreal for across the Atlantic, on to their own port at Portland for shipment. We know very well that the Grand Trunk Railway Company is more interested in the development of Portland than of any Canadian port. It has always been their policy to transport all the freight they could to and through Portland. In fact, the company has made that city, to a large extent, what it is to-day, having spent some fifteen or seventeen millions of dollars in that port. Naturally, they want to make as much money as possible. They are never guided by sentiment. They do not care whether they favour Canada or the United States, provided their shareholders get dividends. In 1855 the Canadian government loaned them some fifteen million dollars. I have no doubt most of that money was used to improve their line from Montreal to Portland, and to make some improvements in the port of Portland. How are we treated by that company to-day? That company, which has been so largely aided by the government of Canada, discriminates against Canadians. While their rate to passengers in the United States is two cents per mile, they charge us three cents per mile in Canada. They have never received a cent from the people of the United States to aid them in building their road while we have subsidized them liberally, and that is the way we are treated. It is evident all they care for is to take our money.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the chair.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC resumed his speech. He said: When the House rose at six o'clock I was going to discuss the advantages of having a railway owned and operated by the government as opposed to the idea of having the road built by the government and operated by a private corporation. When I say controlled and operated by the government, I mean railways built and owned by the government, should be operated by a special commission. I see no reason why the government should not find as competent officials as the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway have, to operate the railway in the public interest. We have the experience of many governments who own and control railways. Wherever a government has tried to operate a railway it has proved a failure, because we know all the influences which interfere with the proper administration of a line. I believe it is impossible for a government itself to operate a railway at a profit, but we have many instances of governments owning railways and operating them by commissions with great advantage to their people. The hon. leader of the opposition yesterday pointed to the results in Australia, which has 12,594 miles of railway. Last year the net revenue was £3,725,000 sterling.

When they started with the idea of building and owning their railways they tried to operate those railways as we are operating the Intercolonial Railway now. They found it was a failure, but as soon as they realized it was impossible for the government to operate a railway by themselves, they appointed a commission ; they selected a man having the necessary experience and ability, and now you see the administration and operation of government-owned railways in Australia is a success. I see in the work published by Mr. Edwards on the nationalization of railways, he mentions that Lord Carrington stated in 1898 that if all the railways of Australia were sold they would bring a high enough price not only to pay the cost of the railways but to pay the whole debt of Australia. This is good evidence that a road can be built by a government and operated successfully by a commission appointed by the government. We have also seen the result in Belgium. They started operating their railways in 1850. They did so at first with a great deal of hesitation, because they were in the same position as we were ; a great party was opposing the principle of government ownership of railways. We find that in 1850 the state owned 388 miles of railway against 166 miles owned by private corporations. In 1865 the government owned 469 miles of railway against 950 miles owned by private corporations. In 1884 there were 1,930 miles owned by the state and 1,780 owned by private corporations. In 1900 Belgium owned 2,513 miles of railway against 322 miles owned by private corporations. The net revenue of 1902 was $11,000,000 for that small part of the railway. The figures I have given I quote from Warring on the State purchase of Railways, page 13. I say that in Belgium, as in Canada to-day, there was great hesitation at first to embark in that serious undertaking, but the success which has been obtained in Belgium and Australia is a sure proof that we can do exactly the same thing here in Canada. In Germany, the state owns 29,437 miles of railway out of a total of 34,415, and I observe from newspapers that the government there operates the railway by commission with great profit and advantage to the country. In Russia the government owns 23,895 miles out of a total of 34,415. The net revenue was £14,800,000 sterling. In France and New Zealand a great part of the railways are owned by the state and worked with great profit. Now, when we have these figures before us, I do not see why we should not undertake to own and operate the railways we are going to pay for almost entirely. When we are going to spend about nine-tenths of the cost of the new Transcontinental Railway I see no reason why we should not pay for the whole road, own the railway and appoint a commission which would administer that railway at the same time with the Intercolonial Railway. I understand there was at first great hesitation in Canada about government ownership of extensive railways, but I notice that the men who were opposed to that idea last year are forced now to view it in another light. The agreement entered into between the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific Company has forced the issue before the people of this country, and now is not the time to say that we will defer the matter and see what can be done later on, because if no action is taken now we are debarred for perhaps 50 or 100 years from doing anything in the way of the proposition which has been discussed in Canada for several years past. I say that the choice is not with the people of this country to delay or postpone the consideration of that question because the issue has been forced before the public by the present administration.

On reference to the last report of the Department of Railways and Canals, we find that we have a total of 19,077 miles of railway in operation. Of that mileage the government owns 1,551 miles, which leaves 17,526 miles of company-owned railways. The subsidies granted to these private corporations by the Dominion amount to $167,007,344; provincial bonuses, $39,884,584; municipal bonuses, $12,661,527; loans to Grand Trunk, $15,142,633; without guaranteeing the interest, and other loans, $821,625, forming a total grant in the way of subsidies by the Dominion government, by the municipal corporations and local governments, of $226,517,713 to the railways of Canada. Besides that, railway corporations have obtained in land subsidies about 60,000,000 acres of land. If you figure out the proportionate cost per mile of those railways, according to the subsidies and the bonds, preferred stock and ordinary stock, you get an average of $65,350 per mile. I do not mean to say that that is the exact cost of construction of each mile of the railway, but when we make an addition of all the sums I have mentioned we must come to the conclusion that the railways of this country cost on an average $65,350 per mile. Why? Because bonds have been sold much below par. Some bonds have been sold from 10 cents on the dollar to 25 and 30 cents, and in many cases stocks have been watered to a great extent, but the fact is that the holders of these bonds and that stock expect to realize the dividends on those bonds and stocks at par, and the people will be forced to pay a little more for their freight and for their transportation, in order to provide dividends on stocks and bonds, which in several cases have not cost a cent to the organizers of those companies. If the government would build the railways in the future we would have no watering of stocks. The government interest would be the interest of the whole Dominion to make low rates of freight, to establish low schedules of rates for carrying passengers, and they could, at the same time, pay as large dividends as any private corporation who are bothered with stock which has been watered, who are bothered with bonds which they have to pay full value for now, and which have brought to the company only ten, fifteen and twenty-five cents on the dollar. That is the reason why, being forced to express my views now, I advocate that railways should be owned by the government, and operated by a commission appointed by the government. The railway to be built according to the agreement between the government and the Grand Trunk Pacific must be to the interest of all the provinces of this Dominion, but I say more particularly to the advantage of the west and the maritime provinces. Quebec and Ontario are less interested in the building of that line than the west and the maritime provinces, because the interest of the maritime provinces is that they must have a road which will carry the freight down to their ports, if they are to progress and become prosperous. If the farmers in the west hope to realize their expectations to have as low freight rates for the carrying of their grain as possible, they must have a road which is owned by the government, because if they have roads owned and operated by private corporations the result will be in the west as it has been in the United States, combines will be formed amongst private corporations, and they will squeeze the people from the west as much as they can, so that the farmers from the west are ten times more interested in the fact of the government owning that national railway than we in Ontario or Quebec are. It was stated last year that the building of the National Transcontinental Railway would benefit extensively both the provinces of Ontario and Quebec—that it would open a back country of which we know nothing. There may be good farming lands in that part of the country, but before entering into such a large expenditure of money more prudent men would advise the government to make explorations, not only with respect to the location of the line, but to examine as to the quality of the soil and the quantity of minerals and timber there, because I have met many lumbermen who have sent explorers through that district, and they all agree that on the height of land where the line is to be located there is no timber worth being worked at all.

The plea that this road might serve as a colonization road is to my mind an utter fallacy. We have roads running through the best districts, built by private corporations assisted by the Dominion and provincial governments, and those roads are built especially for the purpose of encouraging colonization. If we are to build a road under the pretense that it is to carry grain from the west we must build it as much an air line as possible. You cannot deviate from an air line if you are to have the road profitable for the carrying of grain. A road to be constructed for colonization purposes must be located where land is fit for cultivation, attractive to settlers and where you are sure to have a pretty large population before many years. You can, without the slightest doubt, leave the question to the local governments, who are directly interested in the rapid increase of their population, and who know better than we, who have not the slightest experience where to find the best districts possible for the locating of local branch lines which will favour colonization one hundred times more than the proposed National Transcontinental Railway. What information have we as to the quality of the soil which is to be traversed by this railway? None at all, except the writings of Father Albanel who traversed that country some 200 years ago and discovered a place where the birds were so numerous that the Indians exhibited very great temerity in going there for fear they should be buried in feathers, and where the bears were so very clever at fishing, walking along the shore and taking their choice of the pike, bass and suckers, with which those streams abound.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The Grand Trunk is a sucker.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—I regret that the offer made by the Grand Trunk Railway to build a railway from North Bay to Winnipeg and in the prairie section was not accepted by the government. If the government had accepted that offer by the Grand Trunk Railway they would have only been too happy to accept the ordinary railway subsidy, but we know very well that corporations who ask for subsidies generally demand double what they expect to receive, and if they had received the ordinary subsidy which is granted to railway corporations they would without hesitation have built the road. It may be said in that case there would have been no road from Quebec to Winnipeg, but we know that another corporation, the Trans-Canada Railway Company, which has a charter, at the head of which are some influential men, equal to those placed at the head of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway—fully equal in wealth, intelligence and energy, were prepared to build that northern line. These men have always been ready to build from Quebec up to Winnipeg or to Port Simpson, with the ordinary subsidies which are generally granted by the government, and the government would not have the responsibility of building a railway which is considered useless and impracticable by all business men in this Dominion. I have stated the interest of the farmers from the west in having the government build that road and own it and work it by a commission. If we consult the interests of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, can we expect for a moment that the Grand Trunk Railway will haul their traffic from the west, past their branch line from Lake Abitibi to North Bay, for the sake of benefiting New Brunswick or Nova Scotia—that they will haul it 500 or 600 miles further and incur double expense for the sole purpose of giving satisfaction to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick? Is there a business man who will dare to say that this will be the case? It is against the interests of the Grand Trunk Railway. The Grand Trunk Railway controls completely the Grand Trunk Pacific. They have a complete railway system which leads down to Portland, where they have a harbour on which they have spent many millions of dollars. Can a business man believe for one moment that through freights from the west to the ports of the maritime provinces will be the policy of the Grand Trunk Railway Company? To mention the matter is to answer it. Not a pound of western freight will be shipped through to St. John or Halifax when the Grand Trunk Railway have the power to prevent it, and they will be the controllers of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway. They will use their line from Lake Abitibi down to North Bay, and from North Bay their railway system which leads them directly to Portland in the state of Maine. This is my opinion, hon. gentlemen, and I do not believe it is possible to contradict me on that point. It is impossible to imagine for one moment that the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Grand Trunk Pacific Company will work against their own intertests. For these considerations, for the consideration also that the question of government ownership has been forced on the country by the present government, I believe that before giving a vote in favour of the 2nd reading of the Bill we should consider whether that Bill is for the advantage of the country, and I hope that the majority of this House will decide that if we are going to pay for a line of railway some 3,500 miles in extent we had better keep it and operate it by a railway commission. I give notice that if the 2nd reading of this Bill is carried in this House I am prepared at the 3rd reading to offer an amendment that this Bill shall not come into operation before it has been submitted to and passed upon by the electors at the next general election.

Hon. Mr. KING—As I have not been in the habit of trespassing at any great length upon the time of this honourable House, I may be pardoned if I speak at considerable length on the subject now under consideration. If I had to offer an excuse, I would say that from the standpoint of the maritime provinces I look upon this measure as the most important that has ever been submitted to the parliament of Canada. Before proceeding to deal with the main issue, I shall take the liberty of directing the attention of the hon. leader of the opposition to some of the remarks which he made during the course of that long and eloquent speech delivered a day or two ago in this Senate. I shall take the liberty of submitting a statement made by that hon. gentleman with regard to the winter port of St. John, and, if I state it correctly, I am sure he is not the man to take exception to an honest statement by an hon. member on the floor of this House. The hon. gentleman took to himself and the Conservative party, in the course of his remarks on that occasion, the credit for having promoted the winter port business of the city of St. John. The hon. gentleman must have forgotten that during the eighteen years that the Conservative party was in power, long after the Intercolonial Railway was built, that his government or the government of which he was a member, continued to subsidize steamers to the port of Portland, Maine. The hon. gentleman must know that while what he states is perfectly true—and I want here to repeat what I said last year, that in St. John I believe that the hon. leader of the opposition is looked upon by the people of that city, regardless of party, as one of the best friends of St. John. I will not charge the hon. gentleman with attempting to suppress the truth, but I will make a statement which I made last year, and, when I make it, I challenge contradiction ; and it is this : that never until a supporter of the hon. gentleman's government, a Mr. John Chesley, actually tendered the government his resignation, did the hon. gentleman come down and agree to subsidize a line of steamers to St. John. The hon. gentleman has said that he does not know that to be true, but that statement was made publicly in St. John at the last election that Mr. Blair contested in the interests of the Liberal party, and remains uncontradicted. I repeat that not until Mr. Chesley, a Conservative in St. John, placed his resignation in the hands of Hon. George E. Foster, I think it was, at all events in the hands of a member of the government, did the government come down and do what they should have done years before for the city of St. John. What are the other facts ? It is true that the building of the short line across Maine has been of great advantage to the city of St. John, but I am not prepared to give the Conservative party credit for the construction of that line across Maine. It is well known to every one who is conversant with the history of the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that that company got into financial difficulties. I occupied a seat on the floor of the House when they asked for a loan of thirty million dollars, and in order to secure that loan at that time the government were obliged to promise a subsidy for a line of railway from Montreal—not to St. John—it would be just as well to understand what was done, because this thing has been made use of by the Conservatives and will be used again in the near future—not to St. John but a line of railway from Montreal via Salisbury to within a few miles of Moncton. That was the policy of the Conservative party in regard to building a line in extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—This very question of building the road was discussed in the Senate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the loan of $30,000,000 that was made to the Canadian Pacific Railway at the time of their difficulties had anything whatever to do with the short line ? I understood the hon. gentleman to say that when the Conservative government granted that loan it was on condition that the company should build the short line to St. John ?

Hon. Mr. KING—It was not contained in the Act which enabled the government to advance that money to the Canadian Pacific Railway, but right along with it came the proposition to build the short line across Maine to Salisbury.

Hon. Mr. PERLEY—Six years after.

Hon. Mr. KING—It was completed six years afterwards. I think I know something about it. I was in parliament and watching the affair. I do not know as much about it as members of the government, but I know as much about it as the hon. senator who has been residing in the North-west for the last 22 years. The short line was built, and, as I remarked before, it has proved of great advantage to the city of St. John. We heard a great deal to-night about a winter port in Portland, Maine, which is going to do the carrying trade of Canada even if this transcontinental road is constructed, but I am proud to be able to bear out the statement which my hon. friend made the day before yesterday, that so far have the government succeeded, that if St. John does not occupy a foremost place on the Atlantic so far as Canadian trade is concerned, she occupies a good second place alongside of Portland. How has that been accomplished? It is worth while to inquire. I am not prepared to give any share of credit to the Conservative party for it, but I am prepared to give credit where credit is due. Let me repeat what I know, that in 1896 the present leader of the government in Canada, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, was an invited guest at St. John, at an exhibition, and I recollect that it was one of the largest representative gatherings that ever met at that place. Sir Wilfrid was asked to address the assembly at the exhibition grounds at St. John, and if every other word he spoke on that occasion has been forgotten, there were words uttered by him which are still remembered, a pledge given to the people of St. John, and not St. John alone but the people of the maritime provinces, and it was that his government would see to it that for the future every pound of freight that originated in the Canadian west should be shipped to Canadian ports both summer and winter, and he went further and said that the government would secure also for the Canadian seaports a large share of the traffic of the north-western states. I ask if that pledge has not been redeemed? Is it not a fact that for the last six or seven years that this government have been in power, that eight or nine line of steamers have been running to and from the port of St. John, carrying the products of Canada but not the products of Canada alone. A very large percentage of the freight supplied to those steamers is from the north-western states of the United States. Sir Wilfrid had a party behind him in the parliament of Canada who was prepared to assist him in carrying out the pledge he then made, and I am safe in saying that the action of the government is consistent with the promise made on that occasion, and that to-day, Sir Wilfrid Laurier is aiming to give to the maritime provinces and to Canada as a whole the only possible railroad that could develop trade to Canadian seaports in the winter time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. KING—I was surprised at the hon. leader of the opposition yesterday, trying to bolster up his arguments against this road by appealing to the people of the maritime provinces, that it was going to divert western traffic to Portland, Maine and not to our own port. I was surprised, and I asked myself the question, how are the mighty fallen when a gentleman like the leader of the opposition has to resort to a Yankee newspaper, the Boston 'Advertiser,' to back him up in his arguments against the Transcontinental Railway which the government are likely to build in the near future. I will not weary the House with reading the long extract referred to by the hon. leader of the opposition. It appears in the report of his speech, but I think it was entirely uncalled for. If that hon. gentleman with all his ability could not adduce arguments to sustain his case without resorting to Boston newspapers, then, I think, his case must be a bad one indeed. I am glad to know, in discussing this question to-night, that I did not have to take the position which I took last year or which our friends took last year. Last year, if I remember rightly, there was a difference of opinion as between the Liberals and the Conservative party as to the necessity for another transcontinental line. I will not say that some prominent members of the Conservative party did not approve of the building of the road, but I do say that the members of that party throughout Canada were largely opposed to its immediate construction and I do say that prominent members of the party showed strong opposition to the building of the line at all. To-day, as far as I can judge, the two parties in Canada are in perfect accord.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Oh, no. Do not run away with that idea for a moment.

Hon. Mr. KING—Does the hon. gentleman say there is no necessity for a transcontinental railway ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Admitting that would not be admitting ourselves to be in accord with the government.

Hon. Mr. KING—I was not saying anything about the plan or policy at all. I think the best evidence that another transcontinental line is needed in Canada, no matter what our Conservative friends may think, is that a man occupying the position Mr. Hays does in the Grand Trunk Railway, a gentleman who in Canada and out of Canada perhaps is one of the most able railway men that can be found, asserts the necessity of extending the Grand Trunk Railway from North Bay, out across a thousand miles of what our friends term a wilderness, to reach the Pacific coast. I believe it was a well-known fact that application was made to the government for a subsidy to construct a line like that. If the Grand Trunk Railway were willing to enter into a contract for a road like that, does it lie in our mouths who do not understand Canada as well as these gentlemen do, who get the credit of being sharp and able railway experts to say that such a road is not needed ? Therefore, I take it for granted that there is not very much difference of opinion in Canada in regard to the necessity for another transcontinental line. What did these gentlemen ask ? Not assistance to build a line of road from the Atlantic to the Pacific, but they ask the government to enable them to build a line of railway from North Bay, the terminus of a branch line, running up from Belleville or Toronto, I care not which; they ask to be allowed to extend their line via Winnipeg to the Pacific coast. I have followed very closely, both this year and last year, the debates in the other branch of parliament on this question, I have discussed these matters in the presence of gentlemen belonging to the Conservative party, and, reading between the lines, in most cases the plain and above-board feeling of the Conservatives of Ontario is that the government did not do right, when they did not accede to the wishes of the Grand Trunk Railway and assist them in building that line. What did happen ? Sir Wilfrid Laurier took charge of the negotiations himself, notwithstanding all that has been said to the contrary. I contend that he should have the most credit in that matter. In making the bargain which he did make, and which we are now about to carry out, so far as parliament can carry it out, he redeemed the pledge which I referred to a moment ago, that he would see to it that every pound of freight from the west should find an outlet at Canadian ports both summer and winter. Suppose that our Conservative friends who are so anxious to have all the grist in the west brought to their own mill, and who are also so anxious that not one pound should filter out by a road to the maritime provinces, supposing they should have their own way what would happen ? Why, Canada would have had a longer railway from North Bay, without going further north, to Portland, Maine, than the government proposed to build to reach St. John—I will not say Halifax, but St. John. Now, let me quote some figures. I will admit that in submitting figures there is a difficulty with regard to a portion of the line which the government propose to construct, but I think no one will claim for a moment that there is the slightest difficulty in ascertaining what the exact distance would be from Winnipeg to Portland via the proposed line—I mean by the line proposed by the Grand Trunk Railway themselves. If I am wrong in the figures which I submit to the House I am perfectly willing to be corrected. Winnipeg to North Bay, according to surveys made by the Grand Trunk Railway, is set down 1,043 miles. I am aware that this is some thirty miles longer than the present line of the Canadian Pacific Railway from North Bay to Winnipeg; but I am also aware that they felt it necessary to take an entirely different route from the route adopted by the Canadian Pacific Railway. They had been forced to go north of Lake Nipigon, and getting back from Nipigon to North Bay must have caused a lengthening in the line. That would lengthen the line considerably. I do not know about the figures given yesterday by the hon. gentleman from de Lanaudière (Mr. Casgrain), but it has been stated that they are the figures of the engineers of the Grand Trunk Railway. Then from North Bay to Toronto is 227 miles, Toronto to Montreal 333, Montreal to Portland, 297, making in all a total of 1,900 miles. That was the Grand Trunk's proposition to the government at first. Now, let me add to that 200 miles. You will ask me where I get that 200 miles. I will try and explain to you where I get it. I am confident that if the line from Winnipeg has to go north of Lake Nipigon and keep on a straight course it will be 200 miles north of North Bay where that branch line from North Bay would intersect the main line. Some fear, alarm, or suspicion has been expressed that even with this line built and handed over to the Grand Trunk Railway that it would be possible for them to divert traffic from 200 miles north of North Bay down to Toronto, or Belleville, which is a little nearer, and over their road from there down to Montreal and from Montreal to Portland. Hon. gentlemen will see that it is out of the question entirely. Take a correct map of Canada and measure the distance and you will find that the point of intersection of the main line north of North Bay is about equidistant from Toronto and Quebec.

Now in opposition to the proposal of the Grand Trunk Pacific, I want to place before this honourable House the government's proposal. I shall be told that I know nothing about it. I want to be fair in dealing with that question, and I want to do it in a way which will not be open to suspicion that I am trifling with facts and figures. I have watched the debates in the House of Commons and I have never heard a higher estimate placed on that road between Winnipeg and Quebec than 1,480 miles. I know my hon. friend gave the distance as somewhat less, but I am willing to accept the figures of the leader of the Conservative party in the House of Commons, and he puts it at, from Winnipeg via Nipigon to the city of Quebec, 1,480 miles. I am going now to talk of something I know personally, something I am not afraid to talk about. I have heard very much about the surveys made in New Brunswick forty or fifty years ago, before confederation, when the same Conservative party were in power, and in order to carry confederation they promised thirteen different lines in the province of New Brunswick, in order to deceive the people of that province. New Brunswick is not in the state to-day that it was forty years ago. It is not by any means a wilderness to-day, it is fairly well opened up with railways. From St. John, New Brunswick, which is, and ought to be, the winter port of Canada for freight, there is a line of railway owned and controlled and operated by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, starting at the port of St. John and running to Edmundston, a point on the very line indicated in this contract now before the House. Consult the time-table of the Canadian Pacific Railway and you will have no difficulty in arriving at the distance between those two points. Then take across the divide between the waters of the St. John and the waters of the St. Lawrence, I am not positive whether it is 78 or 87 miles, but I will quote an authority whom hon. gentlemen are fond of quoting in this House and elsewhere in this country, and who will be accepted and quoted as an authority from now on, perhaps for some time to come.

I am not taking exception to the fact that that gentleman does now, when he discusses railway matters, so far as he is acquainted with the facts, object to this project. Mr. Blair in that celebrated speech which the Tories of Canada used to swear by, says that a line can be got by the route I have indicated, which will be only 411 miles in length. That is not the line the government propose to build. The government propose to construct a line from Quebec, keeping south of the St. Lawrence, turning the promontory of Quebec to get to New Brunswick further south, striking Edmundston, and from Edmundston running to Moncton. But allowing that distance—I am speaking now of St. John as the terminus, I have no doubt there are lots of people who are prepared to stand up for the interests of Halifax and Nova Scotia—I am perfectly willing to accord fair treatment to a sister province, and I care not where the line is located through New Brunswick—if a line can be run through that province which will not rob St. John of her geographical advantages, and which will give fair-play to the sister city of Halifax, I am for that line; but failing to secure a line of that kind, it is in the interest of Canada to get to the nearest port on the Atlantic, and that is St. John. If that can be done without injustice to Halifax, I say that is the line.

It has been charged by hon. gentlemen opposite that in the location of this trunk line Halifax was being unduly favoured and that St. John was being discriminated against. I confess that at one time I had some fears that such might be the outcome. Those fears, however, have been allayed, for on referring to the speech of the Minister of Finance this session, speaking on Quebec and Moncton section that gentleman said:

> We are making the scheme larger because instead of starting from Edmundston, and using the Intercolonial down to Rivière du Loup, our policy is to start from the Quebec bridge, run through the counties of Quebec until you turn the corner of American territory at Edmunston and down through the centre of New Brunswick to Fredericton.

Now, I do not suppose any one will construe that to mean that Fredericton is to be the winter port—from Fredericton the line is to continue on to Moncton, passing through the counties of York, Sunbury, Queen's and Westmoreland, reaching the sister province of Nova Scotia over the Intercolonial Railway, connecting it with not only the Grand Trunk Pacific but also with the Canadian Pacific Railway system and securing to that province an advantage she was deprived of by the Senate of Canada years ago. I may be asked, what, advantage this will be to St. John unless the line is extended to St. John. I answer, none. But, does any one suppose that the splendid country which lies on the both sides of the St. John river will be allowed to go longer without railway facilities when it once becomes possible to combine the interests of a great transcontinental line with the local interest to be served on the route? And that the link in the line to which I have alluded will give the Grand Trunk Pacific access over its rails to Canada's winter port. It might be well in passing to say, that the Dominion government have carefully seen to it that the Dominion subsidy voted years ago for that line has not been allowed to lapse, and if required is still available. If it were necessary to insure the construction of the line referred to no local government would dare refuse to assist, considering the vast importance of the line. I may say, however, if not a single dollar of aid was given, the Grand Trunk Pacific would be compelled in its own interest, to construct this line. I may live to see the day when the reasonable hopes of a large number of persons living on the banks of that beautiful river may be realized. That line which I have been outlining to this House, from Winnipeg to Quebec, call it if you like what the leader of the opposition in the other House called it 1,480 miles, and Quebec to St. John, according to the figures given by Mr. Blair, 411 miles, give a total distance from Winnipeg to a winter port of 1,891 miles. You have a line from Winnipeg to St. John 300 miles shorter than the line controlled by the same company via Toronto and Montreal to Portland, Maine. I ask, hon. gentlemen, could a government do more to facilitate trade to ports in the maritime provinces than this government has done? I care not if you add 150 miles more to it—and that is giving you a good deal of latitude—you still have 150 miles of an advantage over Portland, Maine, by this new route. The hon. gentleman from Beauce (Hon. Mr. Bolduc) told us that it was the intention of Mr. Hays and the Grand Trunk Railway people, the moment they got this line running, to take advantage of that route by building up from North Bay to the intersection of the National Transcontinental Railway to carry everything over their own system to Portland. If I could believe for a moment, that they were fools enough to undertake a business of that kind, then I would say the government of Canada were fools to have anything to do with them. But they know better. I want to give some figures. Of course hon. gentlemen opposite will tell me that they have no proposal to make. I know they are all at sea this year on this question, but fortunately we have them committed, unless they are prepared to throw over the leader of their party. Take their proposition of last year, which the press of their party still advocate. So long as they continue to advocate it, there is no harm in tying them down to it in this House.

They say we want a line from Winnipeg to Fort William, 426 miles, Fort William to Sudbury, 555 miles, Sudbury to Scotia Junction, 105 miles, Scotia Junction to Coteau, 294 miles, Coteau to Montreal, 39 miles, Montreal to St. John via the Intercolonial Railway, 740 miles, making a distance of 2,150 miles by the route proposed by the opposition, compared with 1,891 miles by the government system. Does anybody belonging to the opposition believe that the people of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia are fools ? Do they take them to be insane ? I should like to ask hon. gentlemen what they have been agitating for ever since confederation—for something which has been denied them by the Conservative party ? They have been agitating to bring the trade of the great west to ports in the maritime provinces. The time has come when they can point to a government and party in Canada without an opponent to the scheme in their ranks. We find in the other House, every member of the Liberal party standing up in support of this scheme, not only last session, but this session again, We are glad there is a great west in this country, as well as a great east. We are glad that the new element which is pouring into that western country is prepared to do for us what the Tories of Ontario have denied us. We are prepared to fall back upon the people who are settling in that great west and ask them to do us justice. In this matter of the location of the road they have a splendid opportunity ; they have a government that is willing, and that means a great deal, and to-day are in the happy position of being able to hold out the hope to the people of the maritime provinces that in the near future their hopes, which had been doomed to failure in the past, will be realized. The hon. leader of the opposition, in the course of his remarks, pointed to the fact that his government was able to promote the trade of the port of St. John by a railway longer by 200 miles than the Grand Trunk Railway line to Portland. I am not disputing that. It is true, but he said that was brought about by a simple agreement between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the government of which he was a member. I ask why it was that a contract which meant so much for the people of St. John should be left to a mere word of mouth bargain ? I am glad to know that the Canadian Pacific Railway have honestly adhered to that bargain, as I believe the Grand Trunk Pacific people will adhere to their bargain, but I want to call attention to the difference between the two contracts . I am anxious to make this particular phase of the question plain, because I happened to be in St. John last winter during the election in that city, and I knew the unfair arguments that were made use of there. I do not want to be considered as saying that the people of St. John are more ignorant than people elsewhere, but there were unfortunate incidents connected with that election. The press, which should have kept the people informed of the facts, failed in their duty, and the people of St. John were not as well informed as they might have been. I want to be careful, because I know this remark of mine will be taken up by the opposition press and distorted and misrepresented. I searched in the city of St. John for a copy of this contract, and could not find one in the hands of anybody there--not a single copy of the contract which we are discussing to-night. The newspaper controlled by my hon. friend from St. John (Hon. Mr. Ellis) made reference to it, but the organ of the government, the morning paper there, was against us, and the facts were concealed. But the principal argument made use of in St. John at that time—I am not going to say that it turned the election—was that as this contract was worded, the trade of the west might be diverted to Portland, Maine. I have shown that it is not probable that the Grand Trunk Pacific would take the freight from North Bay to Portland, Maine, but I admit that it would be possible, as was stated by the leader of the opposition, to divert the traffic when it reaches Quebec, as Quebec is nearer to Portland than to St. John, by some eighty or one hundred miles. I admit if there was nothing in the contract to compel these men to do justice to the people of the maritime provinces, they might evade the contract. I am not lawyer enough to know whether the agreement would be binding on the company or not, neither do I care to argue that point. I am quite prepared to rest my case on an altogether different basis. Let me read what the contract does contain. There is first the 42nd section, which is as follows :—

It is hereby declared and agreed between the parties to this agreement that the aid herein provided for is granted by the government of Canada for the express purpose of encouraging the development of Canadian trade and the transportation of goods through Canadian channels. The company accepts the aid on these conditions, and agrees that all freight originating on the line of the railway, or its branches, not specifically routed otherwise by the shipper, shall, when destined for points in Canada, be carried entirely on Canadian territory or between Canadian inland ports, and that the through rate on export traffic from the point of origin to the point of destination shall at no time be greater via Canadian ports than via United States ports, and that all such traffic, not specifically routed otherwise by the shipper, shall be carried to Canadian ocean ports.

If it stopped there, I would not be so sure that if the company wished to evade it, they might do so; but section 43 further provides:

The company further agrees that it shall not in any matter within its power, directly or indirectly advise or encourage the transportation of such freight by routes other than those above provided, but shall, in all respects, in good faith, use its utmost endeavours to fulfil the conditions upon which public aid is granted, namely,—the development of trade through Canadian channels and Canadian ocean ports.

Now, just for the sake of argument, let us admit that it would be possible under that contract for the Grand Trunk Pacific to take every pound of freight after it crosses the Quebec bridge to Portland, Maine. I should like to ask you where the people of Canada would be ? First of all, where would the government be, who have given their pledge to the people of the maritime provinces that they would see to it that every pound of freight originating from the west should find an outlet through Canadian ports on the Atlantic in the winter-time. No government that held office in Canada could get a baker's dozen of votes in a county in New Brunswick that would not at once come to our rescue and insist on the Grand Trunk Pacific living up to both the spirit and the letter of their contract ? You tell me it could not be done ; I say it could be done. If I am not wrong—and I am not wrong—there is a provision in that contract, and before I go further it might be just as well to say what I have to say on this point to make it plainer. We heard a gentleman who spoke on the other side say something about government ownership and control of railways. We have not heard anyone venture to advocate government ownership and operation of railways, and I am not surprised at that. I should like to ask these gentlemen if this project does not provide for government ownership and control ? To whom will this railway from Winnipeg to Moncton belong, when it is built? Who owns the line which it must tap at Moncton to reach St. John and Halifax ? The government of Canada. Now, suppose the government of Canada finds that the Grand Trunk Pacific Company are of the character our friends represent them to be, and that they are not living up to their contract, but are taking the freight originating in the west to Portland, Maine—a practice that has been going on ever since Canada was a Dominion—there are three remedies I would apply. If I am wrong, I am willing to be corrected. The first I would apply would be this : I would say 'gentlemen, take your freight to Portland, Maine, but remember we own the Intercolonial Railway, and also the Transcontinental, and representing the people of Canada, we will put a rate over your line that will bring you to time.' What is the government's position, supposing they start a fight of that kind ? They start with half a million dollars to their credit. The Tories say this road will cost from Moncton to Quebec sixteen million dollars, and the contract provides that the Grand Trunk Pacific must pay a rental of three per cent on that road. That amounts to $480,000 a year. The government starts in with $480,000 a year to their credit, the Grand Trunk Pacific with $480,000 a year to their debit and before the company can have a dollar to show to their credit for hauling freight over that 297 miles to Portland, they must earn $480,000. Do you think the Grand Trunk Pacific will act the foolish part our friends predict ? If I could believe it, I would vote want of confidence in my people for having anything to do with them ; but there is no danger. With the consent of both parties in parliament, the Mackenzie & Mann road has been largely subsidized. What are these gentlemen aiming at ? Their object is to establish another transcontinental line. More than that, they have a charter from the terminus of their road at Quebec, right over identically the same country, through New Brunswick, on which the government is building. Suppose the government want to get even with the Grand Trunk Pacific, they say to Mackenzie & Mann, ' gentlemen, put your trains on our track; we will give you as good terms as we give the Grand Trunk Railway,' and I venture to say the time is not far distant when, if they can get a monopoly of the trade to those ports, small as it may appear to some compared with the trade to Portland, they would be only too glad to accept the offer. But I am going to point out a very much more effective remedy than those to which I have already alluded. In Canada the Grand Trunk Railway has been for the last thirty or forty years handling fifty to seventy-five per cent of the goods imported from abroad to Ontario, Quebec, the Northwest and British Columbia. Do you tell me that the people of Canada would not at once change the tariff and provide that the preference on goods coming from Great Britain will only be granted when they are imported direct through Canadian ports summer and winter ? If you admit the truth of what I say—and I challenge any one to deny it—would it not prove an effective remedy and compel the Grand Trunk people, if they were disposed to break their agreement with Canada, to come to time within 24 hours ? You would only have to state your purpose, to have them come down.

Our hon. friends agree upon another thing, and that is, that a good thing for Canada would be a preference for Canadian products in the English market. Some of us, I hope all of us, may live to see the day when politics will assume such a shape in the mother land that Mr. Chamberlain, or whoever happens to fill his place, may have authority from the people of Great Britain to negotiate a treaty with Canada for the admission of Canadian products into the English market on better terms than the products of foreign countries. Suppose that time comes, do you tell me that either the government of Canada or the government of Great Britain would consent or dare to consent or be safe in consenting to an arrangement which would not at once settle this question, that so long as that preferential tariff existed, all goods in order to get the preference must be shipped through Canadian ports ? I ask, if these last two remedies were applied, would it not have the effect of making the grass grow in the streets of Portland, Maine.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Could the parliament of Canada pass such legislation as that ?

Hon. Mr. KING—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Certainly they could not.

Hon. Mr. KING—They passed the German surtax, and the government that passed the preferential tariff and got permission from England to do it, and also the dumping clause in the present tariff, is a government that can do anything that is in Canada's interest. The Conservative party could not do it, and would not do it if they could. Now, I do not believe that it is worth my while to follow that subject any further. I do not know how well I have satisfied hon. gentlemen opposite or even my own friends, but I feel myself on pretty safe ground. I am sure the hon. senator from Marshfield will take the ground that the government could not put their own trains on that road and retain in their own hands the $480,000 rental which the Grand Trunk Railway will have to pay for the road whether they use it or not.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not understand the proposition at all.

Hon. Mr. KING—Probably the hon. gentleman does not want to understand it. I will try to make it plain. As hon. gentlemen must be aware, if the Grand Trunk Pacific are permitted to operate the government section of the road from Winniueg to Moncton, it is under an arrangement by which they are to pay a rental of three per cent on the cost of its construction. Now, I am prepared to say, and I ask the hon. gentleman if he is prepared to deny, that that applies to the Quebec-Moncton section as well ?

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—It applies to the whole of the eastern section.

Hon. Mr. KING—Then if that is the case, and the section cost sixteen million dollars —and when the hon. gentleman speaks he will probably say twenty million dollars— three per cent on sixteen million dollars would amount to $480,000, and the government will collect that from the Grand Trunk Pacific.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I do not know. That is a question I am not clear about. We have serious doubts whether they will pay that regularly or not.

Hon. Mr. KING—Well, suppose the Grand Trunk Pacific failed to pay, where would we land? We would have a road from Moncton to Winnipeg built by a government which has managed the affairs of this country honestly and economically for the past eight or nine years, and if the Grand Trunk Pacific are unable to carry out their obligations, the road would fall back into the hands of the government, and we would have what the amendment provides for now, nothing more or less than a government-owned and controlled railway.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The contract provides that it shall not fall back into the hands of the people of Canada, but shall be managed by an agent who shall distribute the proceeds.

Hon. Mr. KING—That is exactly what the amendment proposes, that it shall be managed by a commission. We propose to entrust the management of this railroad to a company, who have for a number of years past shown their ability to manage railways in Canada—to the hands of one of the ablest railway men in the Dominion—and if they fail to meet our expectation we have a chance for redress. Now, a word on government ownership and control of railways. I suppose if it were not a fact that in the beginning of confederation the Intercolonial Railway was made a part and parcel of the terms of confederation, no party in Dominion politics to-day would have ventured to suggest government ownership of railways. It is a fact that we have some hundreds of miles of government railways, and that the people of the maritime provinces appreciate that fact. I know the feeling has taken possession of the minds of a good many people in the western part of Canada that we are proud of that road simply because it affords us exceptional low rates. That is a great mistake. A great deal of the money lost on the Intercolonial Railway has been lost through our attempting to do an export trade over the line. It ought to be patent to every one that a road which has to be run in competition with a road heavily subsidized, and 250 miles shorter, cannot be expected to pay. I say, moreover, that while the road has lost money, to the people of Canada, it has been of immense benefit to the Dominion. I know it is the fashion in this debate—and I was sorry to hear the leader of the opposition resort to it here—to belittle the argument advanced by the leader of the government last year when introducing this Bill, and when he said that if we desire to obtain a favour from our neighbours, we must be independent of them. I will not describe the transcontinental as a military road, and I do not intend to say that it has brought terror to the hearts of our American neighbours; but, I do say that the construction and operation of the Intercolonial Railway has been, perhaps, the means of preserving to the people of Ontario and the North-west an outlet to the ocean ports, independent of the United States all these years. There have been times since confederation when our United States friends, if the chance had presented itself, would have taken advantage of it. I do not depend on them. Let me illustrate what I mean. Last fall, at a hotel in St. John, where I was staying, there were four gentlemen from New York who were making large investments in New Brunswick in coal lands. At dinner, one of them, the president of a coal company, said: 'I notice your country is extremely prosperous'? I said 'yes, we are feeling very comfortable in Canada just now.' He said: 'You are better off than we are.' I said: 'Yes, we feel that.' He said: 'I suppose if things continue as they are going now you will follow our example?' I replied, 'What do you mean,' He said: 'You will be proclaiming your independence.' I said: 'Yes, we are getting ready for that now.' He said: 'I am glad to hear it.' I said: 'Do not misunderstand me, we are getting ready to declare our independence of you, but not of Great Britain.' That is my idea of building a road through Canadian territory from the Atlantic to the Pacific—it will make us independent of our American neighbours. If they remain on good terms with us, we are willing to remain on friendly terms with them, but so far as our people of the maritime provinces are concerned, we are not losing sleep over that. If to-morow, our neighbours were to close down on transportation in bond through their country, they would, of course, for a time, do some injury to our interests, but everybody knows that it would be the means of forcing the trade of all our western country to the ports of the maritime provinces and the St. Lawrence. Now, that is not a remedy which I suggest would be applied on our side, nor do I wish to say a word to-night which would bring about a condition of affairs like that, but I have no hesitation in saying, to repeat what was said by someone better able to express the view than myself. 'In order to retain the favour of our American neighbours we want to be intependent of them.' Considering our experience with regard to the Intercolonial Railway, I am surprised to hear our friends of the opposition moving in favour of government ownership, control and operation of railways. On my way here a few days ago, I happened to pick up the Montreal 'Gazette,' which I consider the ablest organ of the Conservative party in Canada, and I read an article referring to the cost of the Intercolonial Railway, which was as follows :

This table shows the cost of the Intercolonial to the country during the four years in which Hon. John Haggart was minister of railways.

1893	$1,934,617
1894	1,946.270
1895	1,974,218
1896	2,011,686
Total	$7,866,791

Under Liberal management :—

1897	$2,005,092
1898	2,049,719
1899	1,872,572
1900	1,912,809
1901	2,612,164
1902	2,125,888
1903	2,118,277
	$14,696,551

Now, do not understand me as saying that the deficits have been that much ; I think the calculation is a fair one, because the rate of interest added to the expenses on the road and everything considered, shows that no one can dispute the figures. We have the Intercolonial Railway. We appreciate in the maritime provinces that we have the Intercolonial Railway. Those who have looked into the matter carefully do not believe that the building of this line through New Brunswick will interfere with that road—that is, they do not believe it will detract from it. It is my candid opinion, living in the province of New Brunswick and doing business there, that instead of injuring, it will help that road. If it is true that in the next ten years we are to have one and a half to two millions of people in the west, and will then be exporting wheat to the amount of two or three hundred million bushels, then what would happen? If no more should be attempted on the Intercolonial Railway—if not so much should be attempted as has been tried in the past to force trade over that road which the road was never intended to carry, the very fact that this new line will insure the carriage of a large volume of trade through New Brunswick, to the Intercolonial Railway at Moncton, and furnish traffic for that road to its termini at Sydney and Halifax, will mean in the near future, that portions of that road will have to be double-tracked. It is true that the portion of the road from Moncton north may, to a certain extent, be interfered with, but the people residing on the north shore will feel just as safe as they ever felt, in the hands of a party in Canada that has managed that road efficiently and has put it in a condition surpassing any road in Canada. The party that has done that in the last eight years is a safe party to trust with the road in the future, and the people of the north shore have nothing to fear, because if the revenue from the Moncton section should not be as great as it was before, it will be more than made up by the large receipts from the other portions of the road to Halifax, Truro, Sydney and St. John. Just one word more with reference to the Grand Trunk Railways first proposal. I want to call attention to the conditions that these gentlemen made with regard to the trade of the maritime provinces. In section 8 of that application they say :

8th. That in order to provide for connection with the Atlantic sea-board all year round and through an all-British territory route, your petitioners will be prepared to enter into an arrangement with the government for an interchange of traffic, or other satisfactory agreement, with the Intercolonial Railway at Montreal, or to consider such other proposal as the government may submit.

They do not say they are willing to make the Intercolonial Railway a part and parcel of their system, but they do say they are willing to do what they are bound to do now, nothing more or less. If I am not wrong, they have a traffic arrangement with the government of Canada to-day under which they agree to hand over certain traffic to the Intercolonial Railway at Montreal. We know that the quantity of that traffic is not large, but they are operating to-day on their own rails. When they use the line from Winnipeg to Moncton their trains will run on a line owned and controlled, if not operated, by the government. In reading the speech of the leader of the opposition in the other chamber, there was something which attracted my attention, and if I could not endorse very much of what that hon. gentleman said with regard to the proposition now before us, there is one thing on which I did agree with him, and that is the following :—

> The people of Canada, if they realize their own strength, are and will be greater than any corporation—greater than all corporations. They may not have the same organization or the same capacity to combine, but their power when exerted to the full is at all times irresistible.

That is a doctrine which I fully endorse, applying to the matter now under consideration. If the Grand Trunk Pacific people attempt to evade the contract solemnly entered into between the people of Canada and themselves, with regard to the operation of that road in the interest of ports in Canada, I am sure that the whole people of Canada can find a way of protecting themselves as readily in a matter of that kind, as in the case to which this argument is pointing. We are told that this Transcontinental Railway is to be an issue at the polls in the next election. I, for one —I have no right to speak for any one else in the maritime provinces but myself—invite the opposition to meet us on that ground, and I have no fear of the result. We are satisfied that the time has at last come when in Canada we have a government which is prepared to do us justice in the matter of transportation. I would say to our western friends who are disposed to appeal to the people on this question, that in my opinion the people of the maritime provinces have nothing more or less to expect than if a majority of Conservatives should be returned to parliament the Grand Trunk, and the Grand Trunk Pacific will get from them what was denied to them by the Liberal party. If the people are so unfortunate as to confide in the Tory party they will wake up after the elections and find that we in the province of New Brunswick are sold, as we were at the time of confederation.

I feel that I ought to apologize to this House for speaking at such length, but the subject under consideration is, to my mind, one of vast importance to the province which I have the honour to represent. Let me say another word with reference to the ports in the maritime provinces. Take a map of Canada, and look at the little purple spot at one end of it called New Brunswick. You see an immense strip of territory extending three thousand miles west of it: that territory will be wider by two or three hundred miles if this project goes through, and the only outlet for the products of that region is through the province of New Brunswick, through that narrow strip of land between the boundary of Maine and the St. Lawrence. I ask if the people of Canada can afford to trifle with a matter of this kind ? Is it not in the interest of Canada to stand nobly by the winter ports of the maritime provinces ? See what is going on to-day in the far East ? What are Russia and Japan fighting about ? Why is Russia pouring out her blood and treasure, if it is not to secure what we already have in the maritime provinces, a winter port. We have our Vladivostock at Quebec, a harbour frozen six months of the year. Down at Halifax and St. John, we have, without spending a dollar, our Port Arthur; and my advice to my hon. friends, Liberals and Conservatives, is to do justice to the people of the maritime provinces and retain to them what is worth more to them than millions. What would all Canada be worth without that purple spot on the map, New Brunswick ? Could you induce capitalists to invest a dollar in this railway without it ? If there was any uncertainty as to whether our neighbours in the United States could shut us off and deprive us of an outlet to the sea, could you go to the markets of the world and command a dollar to build even a government railway ? You could not get enough money on your credit, which we all think so much of, to pay for the survey of the line. I beseech of you, not that I fear the result of the vote on this contract, not that I fear that this contract will not be carried out and lived up to honestly by both parties—but I ask you again to remember that you have a greater interest in the winter ports of the maritime provinces than some of our friends realize.

Hon. Mr. WOOD moved the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned.

THE SENATE.

Ottawa, Monday, June 20, 1904.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Before proceeding with the Orders of the Day, as I see the Chairman of the Debates Committee in his place, I should like to get information from him as to arrangements made with the special reporter on the floor of the House with regard to the reporting a synopsis of the debate. I was under the impression, until to-day, that the arrangement was that we paid a gentleman, who I presume, is connected with the Montreal 'Star', thirty dollars a week, during adjournments and sittings of the House, for furnishing a synopsis of our debates to the papers generally, and especially to the Montreal 'Star,' and that it was an understood thing that we were to get a publication of the synopsis in the Montreal 'Star.' I find, however, that that is not the case. I think it would be very desirable if a good synopsis of the report of this House should be given to the papers. A very prominent gentleman in the House of Commons met me on Saturday, on the pavement, coming up to the House, and he said to me: 'Now you have the Grand Trunk Pacific Bill before the Senate, I hope you will give it a good investigation and a thorough overhauling there.' I said: 'What is the use of giving it an overhauling in the Senate? We are not reported by the papers of either party. We have a reporter paid to prepare a special report but the papers will not take the special reports for which we incur the large expense of $30 per week.' Last year it amounted to $1,000. We had on Friday last the Grand Trunk Pacific bill under consideration and I think I am safe in saying that we had three very able speeches from two members on the government side of the House, and from one member on this side of the House, and the following is the synopsis of these three speeches in the Montreal 'Star.' The bare resolution given by Sir Mackenzie Bowell is printed, and underneath it says: 'Senators Casgrain of Quebec, Bolduc and King, continued the debate, which was adjourned.' That was the synopsis of these very able speeches from both sides from the different standpoints. If we cannot get any better synopsis of the debates published, we should not continue the large expense we are incurring, which is a charge upon our contingencies. I would remind the hon. leader of the House that he has often spoken of the extravagance of our contingencies.

I would like him to point out a greater extravagance than this in connection with our contingencies for years past. We get no actual value for the amount of money here paid. I repeat, I was under the impression all time that the gentleman doing this work, being on the staff of the Montreal 'Star' was to furnish that paper with a fair synopsis of the debates in this House, but where is the use of preparing the reports for the press, if none of the papers will publish them? I think the press, on both sides of politics, is making a great mistake, because a very prominent member of the House of Commons told me recently that there are many people in this country who would like to hear what the senators have to say on the important subjects now before the public, and it is unfortunate that reports of the debates in this House do not appear in the press. The only way we can have our speeches reach the public is through the official reports of our debates, but that is not circulated as the newspapers could do it. The circulation of the official reports must always be very limited if you have to depend solely on private circulation of the debates. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman from Montreal if he could tell us the terms which the gentleman on the floor of the House has made with the committee. Does he incur any responsibility in obtaining the publication of the synopsis which he makes, in the 'Star' or in any other paper? If he does not, what is the good of the synopsis?

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—The special reporter has been continued as heretofore with instruction to prepare a synopsis of the debates in the Senate in a very concise form, and to supply it to every paper that wishes to publish it. He has not been intrusted with that work as a representative of the Montreal 'Star' or of any special newspaper, but as a special reporter employed by the Senate, and he has to file a synopsis of our debates and that synopsis is open to the inspection of any member of the Senate. It is for the hon. gentleman to see whether the work is properly done, and if it is, and it is found that the press does not publish the synopsis, then it will be for the Senate to consider whether this work should be continued or not; but, as far as I am aware, the special reporter has to this day performed his duty. I have not examined his later reports, but I have done so before and found that they were properly made in a condensed form, in such a form that they could be published in the press.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Some years ago, we found that the Senate was not properly reported by the press, and it was resolved to secure the services of a special reporter to see if the work could not be improved. For a time, the newspapers did publish a little more than they had formerly given, but for the last few years they have gone back to their old habit and are ignoring the Senate. The special reporter prepares about fifteen or twenty copies of his report and hands them over to the various representatives of the press here. It rests with the managers of these papers to publish the reports so supplied or not. It does not depend on the reporter. We thought at first that the system which we adopted would effect an improvement, but experience has shown that it does not, that the newspapers do not publish the reports furnished to them. It is for the Senate to say whether the synoptical report should not be dispensed with for the present.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—This is a subject that we are very familiar with. It is many years since we had our attention first directed to it in this House. The reporter cannot be held responsible, in most cases, for the failure of the newspapers to publish his report. His duty is to furnish a fair synopsis to the representatives of the press at the capital. That is the requirement of the Senate, and there is a very strict provision as to how early in the evening the Senate report shall be handed to the newspaper correspondents. Some hon. gentlemen, when they fail to find reports of their remarks in the press, blame the reporter employed by this House, or the representatives of the press at the Capital. Sometimes, the report is cut down after it reaches the press correspondents here, and then it is shortened still further at the office of publication, and thus a speech which has been summarized, perhaps very drastically, by our own reporter, in the first instance, may be subsequently cut down by the representatives of the newspapers here, and afterwards cut down still further.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Or, perhaps, thrown in the waste paper basket!

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Or it goes to the wastepaper basket. Now, we cannot possibly help that. Sometimes, pretty fair reports of what happens in this House appear in the press. On other occasions this House is absolutely ignored, as was the case in the very important and interesting debate of Friday last. It is useless for hon. gentlemen to find fault with or criticize the newspapers. They publish just what they consider interesting to their readers. I noticed that when this Transcontinental Railway Bill came up in the Commons some members of the press said that nothing new could be said about the railway Bill. We have said something of the same kind in this House, and it has been my own opinion. When the speech of the hon. Secretary of State and the speech of the leader on this side of the House were delivered, a leading paper published not far from this chamber said, that nothing new had been said on the subject, and just left it there. I feel that probably the members of this House are as capable of throwing new light on the subject as the newspapers are, but it is their misfortune that the matter was thoroughly threshed out before the Bill reached us. I have not investigated the matter myself, but I have been told that the summary of last Friday's debate is not on file in Mr. Soutter's office, as it should be. I have tried to see it since my hon. friend raised the question, but it is not there, and that is not complying with the order of the House. Somebody is to blame for it, and must bear the responsibility. On other occasions, when I have been reported in the press in such a way that I found it difficult to connect the report with my observations, I have examined the summary furnished by our reporter, and found that he was not to blame, that the report had passed through several hands, and finally appeared in such a form that I could hardly identify my own speech. I have just one criticism to offer of the work of our special reporter, and it is this : on several occasions my remarks have been summarized in this way : after one or two points were noted, he proceeded to say : 'Then the hon. gentleman proceeded to make some lengthy observations on some other question.' Now, I say with all due deference and all kindness of spirit to our reporter, we do not pay him to make comments on our remarks, whether they are long or short, wise or foolish. He is in some way or other to give the public an idea of what we say, without any comments of his own. I say this in no spirit of fault-finding, but his duty is to report what we do say, and not make any comment on the length or wisdom or politeness of our remarks. As I remarked a moment ago, I have not yet got the summary of last Friday's proceedings. I am told on good outhority it has not been filed. That is not right, some explanation to hon. gentlemen so that it could be laid before the Senate.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I do not raise this question on my own account, because of late years I am not in the habit of troubling the House much, not as much as I did some years ago, and therefore I do not make it on my own account. It is a delicate thing to make a complaint of this kind personally, but it is because others are interested in it that I call attention to it. After the manner in which the report of Friday was inserted in the 'Star', several hon. members have spoken to me about it. My hon. friend on my left took a great deal of trouble in preparing his speech in reference to his own province, and a great deal of research hunting up statistics, and did not get a single line in the synopsis. That is not satisfactory. The last time I spoke at any length was on the address. I spoke for over half an hour and my hon. friend the leader of the House was good enough to come over and speak kind words to me on that occasion. I found that I just received two or three lines in the report supplied by our special reporter, but I was treated much better than the three hon. gentlemen who spoke on Friday. I got a whole paragraph to myself, while they are huddled up into a paragraph of hardly two lines and a half. But the point is this ; if these reports are not published by any papers what is the use of going to the cost of having them prepared ? That is the point.

Hon. Mr. COFFEE—I think the hon. gentleman is quite right in calling the attention of the Senate to this matter, because certainly the reports that have appeared in the press during this session have not been satisfactory. If we are to pay thirty dollars a week for a summarized report of the proceedings of the Senate in the daily papers we should get something for our money. I hope the Chairman of the Debates Committee will shortly call the committee together for the purpose of considering this matter. We do not know just whose fault it is at present. I am inclined to think it may be the fault of the newspapers, but there is a point about it to which I wish to draw your attention. Reports for the daily papers that reach the editorial rooms between seven and half past nine or ten o'clock every night, have a good chance of being published ; but matter of extraordinary importance comes in after ten o'clock, between ten and twelve or one o'clock. They then get the midnight despatches, and when they find a lot of copy on hand the custom is to cut down almost everything except news of the utmost importance. They have to do that in order to get to press. I think if our reports are sent to the leading papers between seven and nine o'clock every evening we would have more satisfactory results. On account of our adjourning at six o'clock, I think it would be quite feasible to get reports of our proceedings in the papers before eight or nine o'clock.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It seems to me, the whole question has resolved itself into a very narrow compass : that is, whether we should continue an expense for which we receive no benefit. The Chairman of the Debates Committee will remember that last year I called his attention to this fact. I found no fault with the reporter. I upon one or two occasions went to the clerk's office to see what kind of synopsis were made, and as a rule, I found them to be tolerably fair condensed reports of what took place, although nothing appeared in the papers. We may talk till doomsday, but we cannot control the newspaper. No one knows that better than my hon. friend who has taken his seat, and the only question that this Senate has to consider is whether, under the circumstances, we should incur an expenditure of a thousand or fifteen hundred dollars a year for which we receive no return at all. There have been occasions upon which I found fault with the reporter in regard to some matters which have been discussed in this House, and the reporter and the then Usher of the Black Rod thought it was a question that ought to have been discussed with closed doors, and therefore it was not mentioned. They were to be the judge and not us as to that. I informed the gentleman at that time responsibility was assumed by the Senate itself, and if it were wrong let it be made public and let those who brought such matters before the House assume the responsibility and take the blame. That was their duty. I quite concur in the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, that the duty of the special reporter is to report what is said in as condensed a form as he possibly can, giving a fair synopsis, but it is not for him to criticise as to whether a speech is long or short, or whether it is to the point or not to the point. I was not so badly treated as some of the three gentlemen who spoke. I had an unusually lengthy report of what I said on Thursday. A whole column was devoted to me, somewhat to my surprise, and if that were a synopsis by the reporter, it was a tolerably fair one, I must say, to condense into a column a speech occupying the length of time which I occupied in this House. I have no fault to find with that, but I do think the committee should come to a decision as to whether we should continue paying a thousand or fifteen hundred dollars a year for which we receive no return at all, not through the fault of the reporter, but simply because the newspapers do not think proper to publish his reports.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—In justice to the officers of this House, I am asked to make an explanation for them. When this debate began I at once sent a message to Mr. Soutter's room, asking to be favoured with the summary of the report of Friday last. The messenger returned to me saying he could not find Mr. Soutter, that there was no person there, and he was not able to get it. I mentioned it to Mr. Stephens at the table, and he said he would undertake to have it brought here. He did so, and he saw Mr. Soutter, but they misunderstood each other. Mr. Soutter thought the request was for the unrevised debates of Friday last, while my desire was to get the summary report as furnished by Mr. Holmden. It was reported that there were none on file, that that document was not in Mr. Soutter's office, and therefore I made the statement to the House which I had a right to make. I now find that it was a misunderstanding between Mr. Soutter and Mr. Stephens, and that there is quite a lengthy summary of the debate of last Friday on file. I have been furnished with it. It is on my desk. I have not read it, and do not know whether it is correct or not, or fair or otherwise. It contains seven pages of typewritten matter.

Hon. Mr. BEIQUE—I understand the synopsis is distributed among the members of the press at seven o'clock every day, unless there be a night session.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I had a talk with our special reporter on Friday, and I know very well that he had a large amount of material, enough to fill three columns, and in speaking of it he was lamenting that so much of that would not be published by the paper. I do not think the reporter is to be blamed at all.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—No one blames him.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—If the chairman of the committee wishes to see the synopsis I think the reporter will furnish it to him. Probably this discussion will have a good effect, and you will get a report to your heart's content for some time to come.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I have been looking through the file of the 'Citizen' newspaper published in this city, in which some report of the proceedings in the chamber should be found, but I fail to see any report or reference to the debate of Friday last. Perhaps we should pass a vote of censure on the 'Citizen' for not publishing the debate, because we pay for a number of copies of the 'Citizen.' However, there is one matter which has not been pointed out, and that is in reference to what a newspaper publishes, and why they publish it. I think if hon. gentlemen were fair to themselves, and fair to the reporter, it is only right to say that newspapers only publish what they think the public are interested in, and it ought to be a lesson to a number of hon. gentlemen who did make remarks, that their public utterances in the Senate are not appreciated by the public, because the press do not see fit to publish them.

A QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before the Orders of the Day are called, I should like to call the attention of this honourable body to the fact that the House was sitting on Friday, and that my name does not appear among those who were present.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—What does the rule say about that?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman thought there was no rule in regard to it. The rule reads as follows:

> The time for the ordinary meeting of the Senate is at three o'clock in the afternoon, unless some other time shall have previously been ordered.

I was here from three o'clock till three-twenty.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Was the House sitting?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the House was not sitting, it was because the rule was violated? Then rule 7 reads as follows:

> When the Senate adjourns on Friday, unless otherwise ordered, it stands adjourned until the Monday following.

When the House adjourns, usually it adjourns till the next day, but on Friday it adjourns till Monday, and rule 3 states that we must assemble at three o'clock in the afternoon. The House adjourned on Thursday till Friday, according to the rules of the Senate, and I was here at three o'clock on Friday. I remained till three-twenty, and then took the train, but the House was not sitting. It was not my fault.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—That would be eight dollars off.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No. I attended two committees in the morning, and I contend that the House should assemble at three o'clock when our rule says so, and especially on Friday. Supposing I had not attended two committee meetings in the morning, and my business required me to go down to Quebec, and I left at three-twenty, I would have lost my pay for that day.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—But the hon. gentleman would have served his country.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose I could be recouped, either by the minister who leads the House or the hon. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The Speaker cannot take the chair until there is a quorum present.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Oh, yes, he can.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the hon. gentleman say that the Speaker does not say prayers until there is a quorum?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—That is the practice.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The House opens at three o'clock, and if there is not a quorum we ask the Speaker to call the members, and then if there is not a quorum the Speaker will go away.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY BILL.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before resuming the debate on the motion for the second reading of the Bill to amend the National Transcontinental Railway, I wish to call the attention of the government to a circumstance which I think is not satisfactory to this House. We were told last year, before this Bill came up for consideration, that there was no correspondence of any kind between the government and the Grand Trunk Railway Company with regard to this matter, and that verbal references were all that took place with regard to it. The Bill was passed last year and no correspondence of that kind was submitted to parliament. This year we again have the Bill before us as every hon. gentleman knows, and there has been a long discussion. The Bill was read a first, second and third time in the House of Commons, and just before the third reading the Minister of Finance produced a long letter from the promoters of the Grand Trunk Railway Company to the government of Canada dated November 1902, containing propositions for the building of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, proposals which throw great light upon the negotiations between the government and the company. This document was marked confidential, and that is given as the reason why it was not submitted to parliament before the measure came up last year, or up to the present time, and it is further explained by the Minister of Finance that the consent of the Grand Trunk Railway had been obtained to present it at that time in the way in which it was presented, and read by him on the floor of the House in his capacity as a member of the House. Now, I am not going to comment on the extraordinary fact that the government should make a mis-statement to parliament that there was no correspondence, when there was most important correspondence. I am not going to comment on the impropriety of covering up correspondence relating to a public question like this, and holding it back by the ruse of marking it 'confidential'; but I do comment on the fact that when the consent of the Grand Trunk Railway Company was obtained to make public use of this document, and the Minister of Finance did make that public use of it as a member of parliament, a copy of it should have been officially brought down, so that we would have been in possession of it in this House. It was only to-day I became acquainted with the contents of that proposition. I tried in vain at the distribution office to get a copy of it, and at last a friend told me I would find it in Mr. Fielding's speech. I submit that we should have that proposition as soon as ever the agreement to hold it as confidential was removed, and it should have been submitted to both Houses of parliament, so that it would become a record, which it is not now, except in the speech of the Minister of Finance. Although it is late, we have considerable time to discuss this Bill, and I would suggest that even now that document should be printed and distributed in this House, in such a way that every member could obtain a copy of it, and use it, and that it may become one of our sessional papers and part of the record of the transaction.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will see that the document is obtained, and printed and distributed among the senators, at the earliest possible moment. I thought it was dated in 1902, and not 1903.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—1902 I said.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was not considered as referring to the line as projected from Quebec to Moncton, and it had no connection with that. Everybody knew the Grand Trunk Railway wanted to build from North Bay to Winnipeg; that they were applying for government aid because they had applied for a charter. Hon. gentlemen took cognizance of that. I presume it was not thought actually necessary until the question arose as to whether it would not have been better to have given the charter to the Grand Trunk from North Bay, and then the correspondence was unearthed, but before that it was not really thought to be necessary. Whether it was confidential or not, I do not really know. It was not intended to be brought down. I understood it was a private letter to Sir Wilfrid Laurier. However, we will bring it down.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to have it translated in French and printed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Because we have sessional papers of last year which are not yet translated into French, and I will draw the attention of the hon. minister to the Sessional Paper No. 148, in connection with the Quebec bridge. That document was circulated last year. We each had a copy of it, but I tried since last year to obtain a French copy of it and went to-day to see if it was printed in French, but they told me it was never printed in French. I think, as a matter of right, we should have a French edition of those papers.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I hope my hon. friend will not wait until it is translated into French before it is brought down.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I hope the hon. gentleman will bring it down in a formal way, so that it will become a record ; distributing it among the members will not answer.

INTERNAL ECONOMY AND CONTINGENT ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

FOURTH REPORT ADOPTED.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved the adoption of the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Internal Economy and Contingent Accounts of the Senate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not propose to discuss this report, but I was going to ask whether the committee, in the re-arrangement of salaries, had considered the question of the salary of Mr. Gibbs, a gentleman who has been in the service of the Senate for over 20 years. I do not see his name mentioned there, and it struck me that it would be only fair to that gentleman to place him a step higher. He has reached the maximum position of first-class clerk, and I think he should be placed in the same position as other clerks who have not been in the service so long, and made a chief clerk, at an advance of $50 a year. I am not going to oppose the motion, but simply make that suggestion. The hon. Secretary of State, when the majority were on the other side of the House, objected that the committee were extravagant, and, I suppose, he agrees with this report. I am not objecting to the report, but I call attention to the fact that circumstances alter cases.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think there are only one or two small increases.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—There are three increases in the case of translators.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No one objects to that.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Mr. Trudel receives an increase of $200—from $1,300 to $1,500. Mr. Bouchard's salary is increased from $1,200 to $1,300, and there is another increase from $1,000 to $1,100. Another clause in the report recommends that the widow of the deceased Alfred Garneau be allowed one year's salary. A statement was placed before us that Mr. Garneau, during his life, had contributed about $900 in superannuation fees, and we thought, on account of his long services, that it would be proper to give his widow one year's salary.

The motion was agreed to.
