To put on a mustard plaster is not at all difficult, but to do it in the best way requires some care and skill. In the first place, remember never to give a cold mustard plaster to a patient. To a weak or sensitive person the shock is often great. Either mix with very hot water, or, better still, have a plate put where it can get warm while you are mixing. Having everything ready at hand, mustard, flour and a spoonful of molasses, with a bit of old muslin or linen-an old handkerohief is the bes thing for the purpose. Stir the mustard and flour together first, making the plaster stronger or weaker with mus-tard as you have been directed. Value of Toes In Walking The idea that the lesser toes are necessary in walking is generally entertained, and it has been a surprise to European physicians to learn that amputation of all the lesser toes of both feet has been followed by complete receivery and the restoration to usefulness of both the feet operated upon. The feet healed slowly after the operation, but very steadily and without unpleasant om-plications. The operation was perform-ed, and in a little more than a year and a half the patient danced all night and experienced no inconvenience whatever on account of having only one toe on each foot. She rides a wheel, plays tennis and enjoys every sport that girls of her age are fond of. The cause of the trouble was originally chilblains, which was neglected until it produced con-traction of the muscles with the meet intense pain, which was at times se severe that she could not enjoy the necessary amount of sleep. Surgeons are of the opinion that a great deal of need-less suffering is endured which might be relieved by extremely simple operations on the feet.—New York Ledger. It is Right, New.

The St. John Globe says :--"Northumberland" sends a letter to the Globs, publication of which at the present moment is not advisable. The present moment is not advisable. The Globe in its attitude in regard to previncial politics has but one object, and that is the advancement of provincial interests upon lines which will give the best results in the way of good government. The matter can be best argued upon principle and without severe attacks upon individuals. The tendency of public opinion in the province in regard to the management winds of the showed the absurdity than province in regard to the management.

The synopsis is a comprehensive survey of the liquor question as affected by legislation in the various states, and it yields instruction to those who are interested in this important problem, The laws devised by the different states vary from prohibition in Maine to almost anything in New Jersey. They indicate how each state has, in its own way, tried to solve the problem of controlling and restricting the traffic in liquor, and they show, norsover, that the liquor laws of the states are as varied as the divorce laws, each state enacting such legislation as seemed proper for it, without regard to the legislation While Mr. Lyman does not assume anything more than the facts and statutes he records his opinion, as a fair deduction from the different laws, that "the principle of local option in connexion with high license is growing in favor in all parts the country, while absolute prohibition on the wane. CHAPTER XXII.

'THE MYSTERY OF WALCOTE MANOR. The murder of Pierre Turrian soon spread over the whole country. It contained those incidents which attract and hold popular attention, and for some days following the discovery of the body all the newspapers everywhere dealt with it.

The disappearance of Sir Jaffray's wife, the garbled accounts of the manner in which Pierre Turrian had left the manor house, the apparently complete absence of any conclusive proofs of how the deed was done and the social position of the people interested made "The Mystery of Walcote Manor," as it was termed, a nine days' won-fact of Lela's disappearance as strong presumptive evidence of her guilt, and in many papers the fact was commented whatever of the writer's opinion.

the country, and portraits of Lola in all degrees of unresemblance appeared in all manner of daily and weekly papers, while pen portraits of the most conflicting kinds abounded everywhere. "If Lady Walcote knows nothing of she not come forward and explain her conduct?' asked one writer. 'It is not we, who but point out the facts, who do her injustice, but she herself in not making public an explanation," suggested another. "The law of this country very rightly holds all persons innocent until they have been proved guilty, and it is far from our intention," insinuated a third, "to attempt to reverse that proper attitude in the present case, but Lady Walcote and those friends who are advising her in this critical time must see that she and they are accepting a very heavy responsibility in not clearing up exactly her relation to this most inscrutable affair.

To do this he

But when all was said and done and questioned there was nothing came out that really damaged Lola except the one fact that she had gone away under cir-cumstances which no one could under-knew the facts great curiosity and com-ment were aroused by the dagger and the bracelet. It was the latter which made the mystery complete, and Inspector Borderham himself was most battled by this. As he said over and over again, he himself had found the bracelet. Not a soul knew of its having been found until he got to Walcote manor and took it out of his pocket, and therefore he was most emphatic that the only course was to accept the position and look for the person who had done the deed among those who could have access to Leycester Court. For Sir Jaffray himself the time was one of the most distressing trouble, and his disappointment when Lela was not said on the third day after the discovery of the murder. "She has made away with herself in her sorrow and madness."

"There is nothing to suggest that, nothing more than there was two days ago," replied Beryl, thinking secretly that it could perhaps be the best ending for them all.

"Yes, there is the fact that she has not come back," he answered. "If, which heaven forbid, she did this deed in her madness and any knowledge came to her afterward of what she had done, she would do one of two things—either come back at once and own the full truth or lay violent hands on her own life. I know her."

"There is time for her to come back yet. Suppose, as you say, that she did this in her delirium. She may yet be wandering somewhere in the same state and may know nothing of what has news of the man's death. She could not fail to hear of it if she were alive. I tell you she is dead, and if her end were peful it is best so." He sighed heav-"It is an awful thing that I should ever have to say that about her, but I would rather see her dead than mad, and she must be one or the other, or we are all out of our senses.'

Beryl did not answer this at once. but sat thinking out the problem as it showed in the light of her own knowl-"We may all be out of our senses in that respect, Jastray. We may be judging her without cause." "I would to God that I could think "I would give my life to feel sure of it, but I can't Beryl, I can't. I have tried to piece the things together that you and I know and to find in them anything but the proofs of her deed, and I can't. Look at the things as I wi they lead me nowhere but to one conclusion. There is not a man in England who if he knew what we know would not think what we think. I don't understand the thing. I can't, except on the one supposition that she is mad, and it breaks my heart to think that." He paused, but Beryl did not break the silence.

"The thing is all so horribly complete! I have talked it over and over with Gifford, trying to get from him a suggestion that may point in another direction, but all his regenuity cannot offer a hint that the evidence doesn't utterly smash. It is perfectly clear that she left the manor house before this she left the manor house before this man was killed. It is quite as certain that he wrote to her the letter telling her to meet him. It is clear again that she get the letter, and that she did go to see him, and just as clear that she was there and drepped that bracelet in the struggle with him and used that degree and then on the top of all dagger, and then on the top of all comes this absolutely inexplicable flight. It would all be different if only she were here. If she would some here and lay her hand in mine and tell me she knew nothing of all this, I would be-lieve her and hold out for her innecence against the whole world, mad or same. But she doesn't come. And yet I hate thought that, mad or same, she could even think of taking this man's life.

And the strain of it all is enough to myself and the people who may be sup-posed to have done it, and what isn't known officially can always be contra-dicted. And if it were ever known to Beryl thought it best to let him speak freely and without interruption.

"There is only the one thing that I of misapprehension, done anything of the kind and wanted to cancel the arhave often mentioned to you that I can't fathom-whether there was any sort of rangement nothing would be easier, supposing it is not officially known. understanding between Lola and that brute. I have thought sometimes—in Publicity, therefore, would be a huge mistake in all interests. No, no, Sir fact, Gifford suggested the idea to me— that he may have had some kind of hold Jaffray; if this thing is ever to be traced, the tracing will have to be done quietover her, something that-but, there. I won's try to think in that vein. I wish to heaven I'd had the beggar out and shot him before he caused all this

"The says in her fetter," he said. halking beek suddenly to the thought

"You'll be at the inquest, Sir Jafray? And I suppose there's no possibil-ity of any mistake having been made, of any hoax having been played upon you and Miss Leycester in the matter of that dagger and bracelet. If it is possible in any way, I really think you ought to make some inquiries. It would be well to be able to give the lie to that "I shall be at the inquest," answered Then the police inspector went away, and the baronet turned to Beryl, feeling vary uneasy at the unexpected tune matters had taken in regard to the re-placing of the dagger and the bracelet.

"HER LADVERSY, SER SAFFRAY!"

For some time after the police inspector's departure neither Six Juffray nor Beryl spote a word, both being evereeme with astonishment at the hints which Inspector Borderham had an ace of telling me when something I said stopped her. What a tactless, blundering dolt I must be! If I hadn't checke her, all this misery and tragdrapped.

Buryl was the first to speak and characteristically took the blame upon Oh, how I have cursed myself for that clumsiness!" he cried angrily. "I see no need for self reproach," said Beryl. "It would have been better "It is my fault," she said. "Ob, if she had been led to speak, but"— She left the sentence unfinished, and Sir Jaffray looked at her as though to

"It is my fault," she said. "Oh, Jaffray, I am so sorry!"
"No, no, Beryl; I ean't let you blame yourself. I ought to have seen what would certainly happen, though, now that it has happened, I am bound to say I am taken absolutely by surprise. Who can possibly have noticed that the things were absent for a time and then put back? At most there can only have been a few hours during which they could be missed. I wonder!" he cried and then stopped and exclaimed, "That is too dreadful a thought!"

"What is that?" asked Beryl anxiously.

"Can it be possible that any one can have seen Lola take that dagger out of the cabinet?"

"If there is any possibility," interrupted Sir Jaffray again, when his companion out him short etics more:

"Please, please, please allow me and do try to hear me patiently. If you do that, Bordesham will not hesitate one minute. He'll be off to the namest J. P. and get a warrant for Lady Welhote's arrest. At present he has absolutely arothing to go on, her the fact of her ladyship's absence and the circumstance that there was a quarrel on the merning of the day about her as the result of which you turned the Brenchman out be possible. Even if she did take it she would be cautious not to be seen." "It!" he repeated. "If! I wish with all my heart I could feel that if. What I fear is that in the frenzy in which she must have acted she would be utterly beedless of anything and anybody and not give a thought to the question whether she was seen or not. But that is not the point now. I am mad with myself for ever having brought your name into this most wiserable affeir name into this most miserable affair. The thing has been bruited all over the kingdom now, and to draw back seems as difficult as to go on."
"Why not go through with it?" asked

"Because we cannot. It is a sheer impossibility. So long as there was no question asked and the weapons remained to speak for themselves there was no serious responsibility. Heaven knows I had no intention of doing anything wrong. I know your object, Beryl, well enough, and I cannot tell you how inexpressibly grateful I am to you for it, but we have been wrong. We have tried to set the honor of our family before the truth, and new we see the result. I have tried to shield my poor, integrated wife, and I've secrified you instead. I've been miserably selfish just when I ought to have been most earnful to grant you."

"He knows," said Beryl.

"How do you mean?" asked the bar as an anonymous lever what a newspa-per penny a liner might hint for the purpose of geving up a senating, and if—excuse my giving you a fint—if you'll put on a liftle grander manner and tell him you are suggetfed he should let himself be fooled by an anonymous extragondant you may do a good dedit to decorrect." Beryl told him what Mr. Gifford had said to her about the absence of dust on the dagger and the significant way he Sir Jaffray listened with a gathering frown of regret and annoyance.

"Borderham may have suspected it even then," he said. "Those men don't even then, ne said. Indee men con't carry about faces like open becks. She was a little pussled by his conduct, and with a frown of perplexity on her forehead she sat for a minute or two thinking of it all. Then she smiled two thinging of Walls and marmured: to herself very slightly and marmured: "I'm glad I did it. Whatever happens that can't do anything very dreadful to they can't do anything very dreadful to me, and Jaffray must see I did it for his sake.'' Then she went up stairs to Lady Walcote's rooms.

the dagger, now," continued the inspector. "What would a coremer's jury make of that, I should like to know? Suppose I was to tell 'em all the facts—that the dagger was one of two just alike which you brought home from America, and that the brace-let was one of two hyperboles was one of two browth home inst At the inquest everything went as Inspector Borderham had anticipated. He offered just such evidence as he thought necessary, and the coroner summed up the case on the evidence presented. One juryman was disposed to question the desirability of not going in this crime, while Lady Walsote's were both lying where they had always into more of the facts, but the other 11, who had been drawn carefully from the been, one in the cabinet and the other in the jewel case. What do you suppose Walcote estates, took their oue from the foreman and declared themselves perfectly satisfied and gave their verdict in the exact terms the inspector had they would make of that? What could He stepped and looked at both his hearers in turn, as if waiting for them prophesied that they would.

"And new," said the inspector to Mr. Gifford and Sir Jaffray when it was all over and the courtroom was emptying fast—'mow begins the serious business of the investigation.' "You've had some anonymous letter, I hear, about the weapon," said Mr. Gifford, to whom the baronet had already spoken. "Do you mind my see-
