I've coveted for quite an age A certain thing I've seen: A "Patent self-adjusting-gauge naton machine; Self-acting in the truest sense; Absurdly low in price; The labor-saving is imm One trial will suffice."

I've seen 'em daily advertise For many seasons past This much-to-be-regarded prize.

I've got the thing at last! The merest infant understands Its working, so they say; It does the work of twenty hands It's coming home to-da

No human creature would believe-I'm sure you couldn't bring Your mind to possibly conceive-It's such a simple thing!

You've just to touch a single spring, They tell me, only one,
And then it's in the fullest swing-And, lor! the work is done!

And-see! they've sent it quickly, too; I see it at the gate, With seven men to bring it through, And one to guide them—eight.

They couldn't take it round the side; It wouldn't do at all; The wheels were just an inch too wide

They've put it in the hall. (THE NEXT DAY.) I'm glad I rose at break of day, For seven hours I've been Attempting to learn the way To work the new machine; They've sent directions-not c I freely own-but look! You see they make a very nice

MY COUNTRY BEAU.

"With all my dignity, my noble husband is a credit to me, you say. Let me tell you about it.'

So said the wife of one of our most eloquent Eastern divines in answer to the remark of a dear friend who was spending an evening with her, at the beautiful and elegant parsonage home. The following is the story shetoid:

I was born and brought up in a flourishing city of the West, and although it was but a few hours' ride to the shady groves and supply farms of the contract.

groves and sunny farms of the country, I had grown to the threshold of womanhood ere I visited a farmhouse. It was on the occasion of my Uncle John's first trading visit to the city, a new railroad having diverted the grain market from having dayerted the grain market from its old course, that my first visit was de-termined upon. He lived thirty miles from the city, "right out in the woods," as he assured us; and you may be leve it as he assured us; and you may behave it was a grand adventure for me.

The very first week a reception was given in my honor by a neighboring farmer, 'my uncle's now commodious country residence being at the time in an unfinished condition. It was a country dance," and some of the country customs into which I was initiated that evening were truly astonishing to me About eleven o'clock, at the time whe those living near made their adjenx, those living at a distance being invited, with myself, to remain all night, I obleft unreplenished, till at last only the light from the capacious fireplace showed me that each lassie in the corner en reinforced by a laddie who seemed just to her mind, judging by the refusal gave him. But when I thought close proximity which they assumed to humiliate him, I reckoned without ward each other. Just then Cousin Will my host, for Will heard me through ward each other. Just then Cousin Will Cmy host, for Will heard me through —who was only a cousin by courtesy, my aunt being his stepmother—came to me and asked if he could "sit up with me" that evening. Not exactly knowing the great pleasure it gave him to know personally one of whom he had heard so much; our conversation, in common with that of the other couples, being carried on in an undertone, to prevent con-fusion probably. After a while the flame on the hearth gave a last flicker and expired; and just then I felt Will's arm passed quietly around my waist.

"Oh, ho!" thought I," this is a part of the programme I had not anticipated; but I will see if I cannot give a little light on the subject, and find out if the custom is general." So, without re-pulsing him, I gave a sly poke at the fore-stick with the toe of my slipper, and a brilliant flame shot up; at the same time I felt Will's arm suddenly removed, and noticed suspicious flutter among other couple within the radius of the

I then complained of being cold-of course I was chilly or I should not have been so solicitous about the fire—and declared my intention of retiring, which had the effect, I being the belle of the evening, of breaking the party up at least two hours sooner than usual, I have no doubt. Ah! that "winding up spark," as they called it, was quite a novelty to me; but I soon saw through it, my dear, sooner, perhaps, than was intended by the aid of that blazing chunk.

But this was not the last of Cousin Will by any means, for his fine bay horse became quite a frequent visitor at my uncle's stable. He was a splendid fellow (Cousin Will I mean, not the horse), or, as old Professor Specimen of our natural science class would have said, a most perfect animal" as far as form and features were concerned. But alas the intellect, the best part of our order of the animal kingdom, was utterly untrained. In other words, Cousin Will was an unmitigated greenhorn. But, you probably know by experience, my dear, how hard it is for most young dear, now hard it is for most young ladies, real natural young ladies—I do not mean the old young ladies—to get along without the admiration of the other sex. Well, I am afraid I encour-

It was the night before my departure for home, and when Will called, as usual, my uncle's maily, as if by common consent, found other occupation for their time, and thus left us in solitary possession of the "best room." "I am sorry you are going away," he began; "I don't see how I shall ever get along without you, Sadie." My uncle's folks called me Sarah, but I had taught Will to use the less plain diminutive.

"Oh, I guess that will be easily man-'I replied, in as light, a tone as I could summon, for I scented a proposal. and I really liked Will too mortify him by a refusal. And what a figure he would cut among my city friends, to be sure, with his uncouth manners and decidedly provincial vernacular.

But although Will was what the Hon. Augustus Fitz Fanfoodle would have denominated "decidedly, aw, out of style, you know," yet he had a spirit brave and strong enough to face any fate and conquer it, too, generally. So all my maneuvers, which would have thrown a gay party in the drawing-room beyond, city gallant entirely hors du combat, only precipitated matters in this case, for he looked me gravely in the face and said, as he took my hand—he had never presumed upon any greater familiarity since the lesson I gave him at the party—"I will not allow you to put me off with triffing, Sadie; I love you, and although I know you have known it all along, I do not choose to let you leave the neigh-

This by way of balm for the wound my what he meant, I consented, and we took our seats just in front of the fast expiring fire.

So good-bye! I will call to see you when I come to the city," and he was gone before I had time to deny him the Cousin Will began by assuring me of privilege he had arrogated to himself.

Sure enough, the next fall when Unck John brought his grain to market Cousin Will came to our city with him. Uncle cation alone cannot give, nor the lack of and at a seasonable hour called at our door. I was expecting him, and had the servant instructed. Poor fellow, he was too honest to understand fashionable tricks, so when he was told that "I was not at home," he took it as literally true, and turned sorrowfully away. But on

> had been to me. He saw through it in time, however, and that, too, without kicking a chunk, and determined that I should be at home when he called again. It is not necessary to make a long story out of a short one; so I will tell you forthwith that Cousin Will went to college, chose the ministry as his pro-fession, and proved himself so satisfac-tory in the work that he had a call, at an enormous salary, for a preacher, to a church in an Eastern city where I was visiting at the time. You smile; well,

*When the sérvices were over he whispered to the usher, who immediately came forward as though to open our other sex. Well, I am afraid I encouraged Cousin Will to somewhat higher aspirations than I was just exactly prepared to answer; for he was, by far, superior to any other young man whom I met at my uncle's, and the result was just as you have foreseen, perhaps; if I did not fall in love with him he made up for all deficiencies on my part by falling desperately in love with mg.

The same forward as though to open our perhaps was the might a monuncement appears every day, or almost every day, in the Herald, and its orm is never varied. Mock Auctions in New York.

A New York correspondent expose one of the disreputable business enter-orises of the great city as follows: This is the carnival season of the mock furni-ture auction. The extent to which this business is carried in this city is amazing, and the boldness with which the same old frauds are advertised every line and imperfection is retained. day in the year is equally astonishin Imagine a young married couple who have been economizing for some months to buy a lounge or bookcase. The idea strikes them that there must be people who have a lounge or a bookcase to get rid of, and they turn to the Herald, the great mediator between thousands of people who want things and those other thousands who have got the things which the anxious thousands desire. thousands who have They take up the column of "Furniture" or "Auctions." He must ton arms, all seorched and charred to have been a man of very artistic tastes, blackness by the heats of the long, silent for he has no less than eighty-nine oil paintings by ancient and modern masters - exactly eighty-nine - and Steinway pianos, and a fairly bewildering assortment of furniture of all sorts in satin and silk and all manner of beau tiful stuffs—furniture enough apparently for a steamboat. And here is another rare opportunity: "A private family, breaking up housekeeping after only six months' use of furniture, will," etc. Here, again, is a prodigal variety of household goods: "Three pianofortes, four round Steinway pianofortes"—I am quoting from an actual advertisementmagnificent upright piano, also grand seven and a half octave pianoforte"-nine pianos in one house! He faltered, and almost failed for a moment, then rising far above me is one house in West Twenty-third street, near Sixth avenue, which has been advertised as "a private residence," in which an auction of "the household furniture" is to take place, for eighteen years to my personal knowledge. you reiterate that familiar wish that Dickens were still alive. A practiced eye can pick out at a glance the hired bidders, who have been sitting about on chairs in matronly shawls and standing about with the air of business men just dropped in to pick up a bargain, for no one knows how many years. Think of growing old in such a queer business—bidding six days in the week, for ten years, on marble-top washstands and fraudulent black-walnut wardrobes! The semblance of actual residence is carefully preserved in these strange places. THE ERA OF RETRENCHMENT.

Before the elections in September last the N. P. party charged the Mackenzie Ad The St. Andrews Standard. ministration with extravagance in the matter of clerks and their salaries. They asserted that a far greater number of clerks instead of 13 Heads of Departments with paying them without further delay. an additional number of clerks and an increase in the cost of every Department, except that of Agriculture, & As examples of the way in which the public money is equandered, we give "a few items. The House of Commons asked for twelve extra clerks or writers, heretofore paid $4 per day. A return laid before the House shows that seventy-five were employed- six times as many as were needed, eight of them re ceiving $5 per day. Then, to quote from a letter of the reporter of the St. John Telegraph, who seems to have closely the session, "there were fifty-one sessional messengers employed, being again twice the usual number. These are paid from $2 per day to $3.00 apiece for the session. Then there is a staff of twenty three pages at $1.50 per day each; in the service. This is nearly twice the number ever before empleved. The total number of employes of the House of Commons is above two hundred and twenty-a regiment almost. Thus, the Government of the day, after finding fault with the extravagance of the late ministry, have cooly placed two clerks where there was one before, two messen gers where there was one, and two pages where there was one! This is the kind of economy that is being practiced at Ottawa in order to tide over the hard times andrestore the equilibrium between the revenue and expenditure." We were promised by the men in power an era of economy and retrenchment, and we have got it with a vengeance !- Herald

The season for sowing roots, says the American Agriculturist, lasts from May months intervening a variety of crops may be sown. The first in the season-is mangels, of which there are several varieties. The smaller kinds of these, although they do not yield so heavy a crop as the larger kinds, are more desirable on account of their higher feeding value. Several yellow-fleshed varieties of mangels have been introduced of late, which are very promising for our cli-mate. Webb's Yellow Kinyer Globe, and the yellow-fleshed Tankard, are the most popular varieties of these. The flesh of these is less watery and more solid than that of the Mammoth Red. Sugar beets furnish the second crop, and may be sown as late as June; of these

Dr. E. B. Foete, in his Health Monthly, says the tenement-house reform inaugurated in New York is a good movement, but that while "well-to-do people generally are becoming wild over the plans for delivering the poor from their ill-ventilated apartments, their own houses, lecture-rooms, churches, places of amusement, etc., are choked with foul air. In most of our large churches, in cold weather, more attention is given to warmth than to the purity of the air. As a rule, the lecture-rooms of our medical colleges, which ought to be models in this respect, are as bad or worse than a cheap show-room; nor can you go into a counting-room or other business place on a January day and not find that-more attention is given to heat than to ventilation—the thermometer often marking eightly degrees or over."
