NOVA SCOTIA TEMPERANCE ACT VERSUS THE SCOTT ACT

Mr. F. L. Milner, Barrister, of Amherst, Makes Fair
Comparison of the Two Acts

1. All alcoholic drinks prohibited.—The Scott Act prohibits the sale of all liquors that are intoxicating. The new act prohibits the sale of all drinkable liquids containing alcohol and names rum, brandy, whisky, gin, wine, ale, porter, table beer and lager beer concerning which no proof of alcohol is necessary.

2. No "Personal Use" Clause.—Under the Scott Act Halifax dealers can legally ship liquor into Scott Act counties for "personal use." Under the new Act they cannot legally send it into N. S. Temperance Act counties.

3. Illegal Prescriptions.—Under the Scott Act a physician who prescribes liquor for other than medicinal purposes is liable to a fine of $20 for first offence and $40 for subsequent offences. Under the new Act prescriptions can be given to persons whom the doctor visited professionally within three days (unless the patient live three miles away) and the punishment for violation is $50 for first offence and $100 or two months for second.

4. Jail Penalty after First Offence.—Under the Scott Act the penalty for first offence is $50 or one month; for second $100 or two months; for third not over four months. Under the new Act the penalty is $50 or one month for first offence but is three months for second and subsequent offences and the inspector is himself liable to a penalty of $20 if he does not regularly proceed from first to second or subsequent offences.

5. Only One First Allowed.—The conviction may be had in any case as for a first offence, though there have been previous convictions. The new Act provides that no conviction shall be made as for a first offence where a subsequent offence has been duly laid and proved. Amendment 1911. The inspector who knowingly and wilfully violates this is liable to penalty.

6. Search Day or Night Without Warrant.—Under the Scott Act a search can only be made with a warrant and in the day time. Under the new Act any inspector, constable or peace officer may day or night search without warrant any place where liquor is reputed to be sold or he believes it is for sale.

7. Safeguarding Court Records.—Under the Scott Act it is difficult to on affidavits of facts, be destroyed. No such provision in Scott Act.

17. Heavy Fine for Incorporated Companies.—An incorporated company for first offence is fined $50, for second $200, for third and subsequent $500. New Act.

18. Duty to Question Drunks.—It is the duty of the magistrate to examine those arrested as drunk or drunk and disorderly as to where and from whom they got the liquor and refusal to answer shall constitute contempt of court for which the party may be committed to jail. Under the present law this can be done only in case of one arrested as "drunk and incapable."

19. Enforcement.—It is made the express duty of the council and every member and the police and temperance committee and every police officer to enforce this Act, and take necessary proceedings to punish offenders. New Act.

20. No Compromises.—No magistrate, inspector, council or officer shall have authority to remit or compromise any penalty. New Act.

The new Act is much more effective and workable, and temperance people should work for its adoption in Scott Act counties.

I consider the foregoing a fair comparison of the two Acts.

Barrister at Law, Amherst.

Dear Sirs,—This fall I got thrown on a fence and hurt my chest very bad, so I could not work and it hurt me to breathe. I tried all kinds of liniments and they did me no good. One bottle of MINARD'S LINIMENT, warmed on flames and applied on my breast, cured me completely.

THE WEEK'S WAR NEWS

French Forces in Defending their Positions Inflicted Heavy Loss on Enemy

PARIS, July 4.—German troops in close formation last night, attacked French forces defending the Angres Ablain road to the north of Arras but were dispersed after suffering heavy losses, according to the French official statement issued this afternoon. A German battalion, the statement adds, attempted to storm the village of Fey, five miles west of Pont Mousson and the Moselle River, but was forced to retire after reaching the French wire entanglements. The text of the statement follows:

"In the region to the north of Arras the enemy last night attacked in close formation our positions along the Hollow Road from Angres to Ablain, which is to the north of the highway running between Aix Roulette and Souchez. Our assaults were dispersed and driven back by the fire from the French barricade, and from our machine guns and they suffered heavy losses.

"In the Argonne infantry fire and cannonading did not cease at all during the night. Along the road between Binerville and Vienna Le Chateau, as far as Le Four De Paris, the only activity consisted in some local infantry engagements.

"In the region of Lafontaine, there has been no change in the lines, either German or French.

"On the front at La Haye, the Germans, following a very violent bombardment, endeavored to attack our trenches at about midnight. To the north of Reginville the fire from our barricades prevented the forces of the enemy from spreading out."

Russians and Germans in Naval Engagement

STOCKHOLM, via London, July 4.—Despatches regarding the naval engagement in the Baltic on July 2nd between German and Russian war vessels state that a German cruiser squadron and the mine-layer Albatross sailed northward a short time prior to the fight for the purpose of laying mines on the Russian coast. The Albatross lost touch with the remainder of the squadron during a fog, and suddenly found herself among Russian warships.

A battle began between the Albatross and the Russian ships, and shortly afterwards a German cruiser came to the help of the Albatross, which was beset by four cruisers. The German ships were obliged to retreat towards Swedish territory. The Russians keeping up furious fire, pursued them so near the coast that the population of the Island of Gothland could easily see the projectiles striking the water. The Albatross was hit by 25 shots and ran ashore on the nearby coast. The German cruiser escaped southward.

By this time another German squadron arrived on the scene and put the Russians to flight. Owing to the fog it was impossible to tell the number of ships in this German squadron.

WAR BRIEFS

Germany is short of paper. The removal of duty on foreign paper is demanded by publishers. Present price, they say, is virtually prohibitive.

German agents are now in the United States, trying to stir up trouble through labor leaders, and also by buying up stock in factories making munitions of war, or buying out the factories.

Respirators taken from German soldiers are marked 1911, showing Germany's intention four years since to use poisonous gases in the war for which she was preparing.

Garua, an important naval station in German West Africa surrendered unconditionally after five days fighting. The Anglican Synod in Toronto started a "Follow the King" Club, to aid in the suppression of intemperance.

The miners at Crows West Pass Coal mines struck because German and Austrian workmen were kept on, in spite of their demand that they be refused work.

Four descendants of Garibaldi who were with the Allies in France and gained much popularity, have now joined the Italian army. The people of Rome greeted them with much enthusiasm.

The Norwegian War Insurance Bureau announces that Norway has lost twenty-nine vessels during the war, at the approximate cost of seven and a half million of dollars.

A German Red Cross Mission on its way to Constantinople has been detained, because several German officers were concealed in the cars. The cars were found to have double sides and to conceal quantities of dynamite.

The King of Italy has issued a pardon to all deserters and other military delinquents who will join the colors.

Great Britain's daily war bill, for her own purposes, and in helping her Allies, reached fifteen millions of dollars.

The Italians have found that the Austrians are following the Germans in the use of poisonous gases.

A number of female enemy aliens are now interned at Spirit Lake, by the Canadian Government.

Two of Premier Asquith's sons, serving in the Dardanelles have been wounded, but expect to return to duty before long.

Six months imprisonment and fines of ten thousand dollars were imposed on the two iron merchants of Glasgow, for supplying iron to Krupps and other German firms.

The Socialists of Germany are saying that Belgium must be free again, no matter how the war turns.

Sir John French has recommended many Canadians for distinguished service.

MINUTES OF TOWN COUNCIL

The regular monthly meeting of the Town of Bridgetown was called by his worship the Mayor and held in the Council Chamber on Monday evening the 5th day of July A. Beeler, at an election to be held on Friday the 2nd day of July instant, pursuant to the resolution of the Council passed at its last meeting, had been duly declared elected by him on the day fixed for the election, they being the only two candidates elected.

Crowe on account of concrete sidewalk in front of his store on Queen Street, per agreement with street committee, $31.45.

The Clerk reported that the tenders had been called for the Sewer Debentures for $5000.00, and that they had been sold to Messrs. F. B. McCurdy & Co. of Halifax at 98.77 per cent. they being the highest bidders therefor, and that he held a check for the amount, and it was thereupon resolved that the Clerk deposit the money in the Bank of Nova Scotia on interest in a separate account to be called "The Bridgetown Granville Street East Sewer account."

H. B. Hicks addressed the Council complaining of the condition of the main sewer outlet on Queen Street near the bridge, which runs under the ware rooms of J. H. Hicks & Sons, and requested that the same be changed as it was in a very unsanitary condition.

Resolved that the matter be left with the Sewer Committee to look into and obtain all possible information relative thereto, and to report at the next meeting of the Council.

The Clerk read the agreement he had prepared between the Town and Messrs. Beeler & Peters for the Sewer Construction on Granville Street East, and the same was approved by the Council, and it was thereupon resolved that the agreement be signed by the parties thereto, and that the contractors be ordered to commence the work not later than the 19th instant, under the time of said agreement.

FIFTY OF THRILLS IN AERIAL WARFARE

Volumes might be written, if all the facts were known, as to the innumerable thrilling adventures and narrow escapes which have been incidental to this aerial warfare throughout.

In the way of sensational falls two may be mentioned as especially noteworthy. One of the best known British aviators, Mr. E. C. Hucks, was flying against a sixty mile an hour gale, at a height of six thousand feet above the German lines.

PULP PRODUCTION INCREASE DESPITE THE WAR

Some economists have termed this the "paper age" from the increasing use of paper in all walks of life. This being the case it is gratifying to know that Canada is one of the great paper countries of the world.

Since 1910 the pulpwood consumed in Canadian mills has a little more than doubled. The consumption in 1910 was 598,487 cords and in 1914 was 1,224,376 cords.

Quebec is still the leading province in pulp production, having 31 active mills out of a total of 66 mills for all Canada. Quebec produced 65 per cent. of all Canadian pulp in 1914.

A LIVE STOCK MARKET'S POLICY

Following the announcement which recently appeared in the press, announcing that the Honourable Mr. Burrell had initiated a comprehensive markets propaganda in the Live Stock Branch of his Department, an explanation respecting the details of that policy will be of interest. The scheme involves—

1. The Organization of an Intelligence System which shall provide for—

(a) Statistics of Animal Population and of Production:

Co-operation with the Census Branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce and with the Provincial Departments of Agriculture in the collection and analysis of statistics of animal population. Gathering current data as to the exact situation in the country respecting breeding and feeding operations, the supply of feed, the condition of stock, when heavy marketing may be expected, the districts from which the largest supplies may be available and the districts in which a shortage exists.

(b) Information Regarding the Home Market.

The collection of definite and reliable information regarding market demand in the several provinces of the Dominion, current prices in the leading market centres and to conditions governing provincial trade in meats and other live stock products.

(c) Information regarding the Foreign Market.

Through agents of the Branch, through the foreign service of the Department of Trade and Commerce and from such other sources as are available, the gathering of adequate statistics and data to make possible an intelligent interpretation of trade conditions in foreign countries, exporting and importing, with the view of assisting our live stock interests to develop foreign trade, to adjust their operations to the requirement of foreign demand and to take advantage of such outlets as may from time to time appear for the profitable sale of live stock products.

(d) Distributing information to the producers:

The dissemination of this information in such an effective way that they may be able intelligently to anticipate market demands, to seize opportune periods for the profitable disposal of their stock to adjust successfully their operations to the trade situation as developed by local and foreign requirements and to equalize the production in the several provinces, thus providing against the alternate glut and shortages which have in the past invariably tended to upset trade balances and defeat the expectations of the breeders.

2. The Organization of Farmers for Co-operative Action in the Sale of—

(a) Their Eggs and Poultry:

The successful demonstration given in Prince Edward Island of the co-operative sale of eggs suggests the need and wisdom of extending the system now in operation to all the provinces in Canada and of its further elaboration as required by varying local conditions and in the development of interprovincial and foreign trade.

(b) Their Wool:

The policy to be pursued in this work must closely adhere to the principles followed during the past year but it is hoped that means may be devised which shall secure to the growers the commercial advantages of deferred sale when the market warrants the holding of the product.

(c) Their Lambs, Hogs and Cattle:

It is proposed to initiate the co-operative sale of live stock in accordance with the principles followed in the work already undertaken.

Note.—It should be made clear that in the prosecution of this program it is not expected or intended to involve the Department in any commercial obligation, the farmers' associations, as a matter of deliberate policy, assuming full and complete responsibility in the transaction of their own business and, ultimately, in the executive administration of their own organization.

3. The Promotion of Sale by Grade and Payment according to Quality.

It is widely recognized that the sale of produce on a flat rate basis, for example in the case of hogs, invariably inflicts a penalty on the progressive farmer.

mer and in effect provides a premium for low grade goods. Evidence is not wanting that a well directed effort by the Department would favourably influence buyers and merchants toward an acceptance of standards and the rating of prices on a basis of market merit.

4. The co-operation of all interests in the Development of our Live Stock Trade.

Under a Markets' Policy, the Department may usefully endeavor to have itself recognized as a medium for the adjustment of differences between the producer, on the one hand, and the packing, transportation and financial interests, on the other, and an organization through which co-operation may be effected by these great industrial bodies in building up Canada's agricultural trade.

At the outbreak of the war the British navy was the most formidable in the world, says Arthur Ballard, in the Outlook, New York. But the admiralty was not content with this initial superiority. There is to be a new navy to match the new army. When the shipyards get to running smoothly, the navy will complete and put into commission one submarine every three days, one torpedo boat or destroyer every week, and one super-dreadnaught every month.

A Morning With Nature

[Written for the Monitor]

The woods were made for the hunter of dreams.
The brooks for the fishers of song;
To the hunters who hunt for the gun-less game
The streams and the woods belong.
There are thoughts that mourn from the soul of the pine,
And thoughts in a flower bell curled;
And the thoughts that are blown with the scent of the fern
Are as new and as old as the world.

It was the morning of the first of June in the Annapolis Valley in Nova Scotia where spring came late this year. The weather was glorious and at 5.30 a. m. we started out to spend the day with nature on the North Mountain. As we came out of doors the chebec was calling from the trees on the lawn, and we stopped to look at him and to wonder if some day he will not either jerk either his head or his tail off in his efforts to tell clearly and vigorously his name to all passers by. With gratitude to chebec for telling his name with such clear enunciation, and wishing that some of his not easily determined relatives would adopt the same custom, we pass along the road over the meadows. The clovers have not yet fully expanded their trilobate leaves from sleep and the dandelions have not yet shown their gold to the sun. A bobolink, that gay harlequin of the meadows, sends down a flood of his "mad music" from a tree and passes on into the meadow grass. He loves the meadows along the Annapolis River where his mate builds her nest and rears her brood. From the meadows on either side of the road, grey in great patches with the pistillate blooms of the plantain leaved everlasting, comes the incessant, faint, grasshopper-like trill of the Savannah sparrow. The grass seems full of them and undoubtedly this is the most abundant sparrow about our fields. That other lover of the fields, the vesper sparrow, despite his name, tunes his lay in the morning. Plainly it comes over the fields: "Look-look-see-see, me-me-me-me-me-sing." The vesper is the accomplished hymnist of the fields and is heard to best advantage in the evening. Along the road we often meet him, perching for a moment on a stake, then flying ahead on our approach, and repeating this performance several times, and always revealing in flight the two white outer tail feathers which serve as identification marks. Now and then a song sparrow mounts a shrub or stake by the roadside, shows the black blotch on its breast, sings its sweet song, and with vigorous pumps of its brown tail flies down into a thicket by the fence. Away from over the distance sounds the clear unmistakable note of the white-throated sparrow, calling out to farmer Peverly: "Sow-wheat, Pev-er-ly, Pev-er-ly, Pev-er-ly." At this time when the sons of Canada are reddening the fields of Flanders with their blood, we listen with patriotic pride as the bird sings according to some: "Swee-o-e-t, Can-a-da, Can-a-da, Can-a-da." In Prince Edward Island the white-throat is commonly called the "Kennedy bird", and its song is interpreted as: "Poor Tom Ken-ne-dy, Ken-ne-ed-y." What befell poor Tom we know not, but the bird still continues to express its sympathy in its song. High over head soars the American goldfinch with undulating flight, dressed in his sable and gold, sowing the air with sweet music, a care-free rover with as yet no thought of nest-building and family cares like the other birds at this season.

Approaching the slope of the mountain, draped with the delicate green of the half unfolded leaves of the maples, birches and beeches, the call of a flicker floats down to us. Since early in April his familiar spring notes have been heard. We love this unconventional woodpecker who refuses to follow the beaten trail of his fathers. Instead of digging borers from the trees like a conservative woodpecker ought, he sits over there on an ant hill breakfasting on ants. He is as often seen on the ground as on the tree trunks, and, being an original genius, seems to have aspirations to make the most of himself and to rise to something higher than a woodpecker. His near relative, the little downy woodpecker is here beating his tattoo on a resonant limb as he pauses from diligently seeking for the destructive wood borers, and thus performs a most valuable service in our forests. The woodpeckers are the little policemen who guard our trees from the depredations of the borers. On the side of the mountains robins are hopping over the ground, cocking their heads now and then to see a worm or perhaps listen to his wriggling in the earth, seizing him and having a little tug of war to get him out of his hole, and then away with him to the hungry nestlings. The robins are busy hunting breakfast for their brood. From dawn till dark they keep it up, and it has been estimated that a single robin will eat about fourteen feet of angle worms in a day. With four nestlings to provide for, the domestic labors of the robin are by no means insignificant. Small wonder she is out on the mountain side so early to get her worms. While watching the robins a purple finch tumbles on quivering wings into a tree top, singing his glad warble. This bird loves the far-famed orchards of the Annapolis Valley which he fills with his music while he feasts on the petals of the apple blossoms.

Now we have reached the forest of second growth hardwood on the mountain. The tide of warbler migration is at its flood. The woods are full of warblers. From almost every tree comes the song of one of these little birds. Eagerly they are breakfasting on the flies and other insects that infest the trees. The American Redstart is surely the most abundant. Through the trees this brilliantly colored bird floats and flashes, darts up and down for flies, opens and shuts his tail like a tin; but gaudy fan, and keeps singing his song the while. Appropriately have the Cubans named this bird "Candelita", meaning the little torch that flashes and flames in the gloom of the tropical forest. The male in his gorgeous suit of black with salmon on breast, wings and tail, as he flashes among the branches has not inaptly been likened to a "wind-blown firebrand, half glowing, half charred." This warbler always commands our admiration not only for his beauty but also because he cannot be mistaken for any other of his tribe, a rare virtue among warblers. The more modestly dressed female may be readily distinguished by the dull yellow which replaces the salmon of the male. Another brilliantly colored warbler that is fairly common, is the magnolia warbler. Possessed of the virtue of coming down to the low bushes, he gives a fine opportunity to inspect his coat of many colors, white and black and yellow, with bluish grey on the crown. The white band across the middle of the tail is a sure mark of identification. He is a most distinguished looking warbler, and, being somewhat confiding, is always a welcome discovery among the bushes. He has been with us since May 20 and will nest among the coniferous trees on the mountain. Down from the trees comes the wiry "see-see-see-see" of the black and white creeping warbler. Training our opera glasses on the tree from which the faint song issues, we soon see a little black and white bird, the zebra among warblers, creeping zigzag up the trunk and along the branches. His name, unlike so many of his names applied to birds, is thoroughly descriptive both of his dress and of his manner. Black and white he surely is, and unlike his warbler relatives, creeps about trees after the manner of a nuthatch or brown creeper, but without the former's love to run head first down a tree trunk and without the latter's plodding regularity in his search for insects and larvae. From a high evergreen there floats to our ears the distinct and easily recognized song of the black-throated green warbler. Bradford Torry hears in that song the words "Trees-trees, muring trees", but whatever we may hear in it, it is a characteristic song not easily mistaken for any other. From the groves we hear it throughout the summer.

While straining our neck to get a good look at the inverted black V on the breast of the black-throated green, a junco flies up from our feet. Soon the nest of grasses with a lining of long hairs is disclosed on the side of a little cradle hill. A small root arches out in front of it, and, together with dried leaves, forms a canopy for the nest which contains four dull white eggs, the larger ends of which were blotched with brown. The parent birds utter cries of alarm and distress. Seating myself by the nest I await developments. Soon the cries of the juncos bring other birds on the scene. The black-throated green warbler that I was striving to get a good look at came down on a limb to within two feet of my opera glasses. A black and white creeping warbler stopped searching for insects and hopped around within a few feet of me, trying to express his sympathy or satisfy his curiosity. A magnolia warbler called to see what the trouble was. Soon these had satisfied their curiosity or tired of expressing their sympathy for the juncos and left. But pair of ovenbirds continued to fly round and round me, the male with the feathers on his head erect. We had plainly heard his sharp crescendo ringing through the woods as he sang, "Teacher, teacher, teacher, teacher, teacher, teacher", on rising scale and intensifying shrillness. Now he was flying but a few feet away from me or walking along a limb and showing his beautifully speckled breast and olive-green upper parts. This pair lingered longest and at last walked leisurely away. And no prettier pedestrian ever set foot on the forest floor, no fairy ever tripped through the forest aisles with greater grace. Finally we rose from our place beside the nest, saying to the still agitated juncos: "Much ado about nothing." What a pity the birds cannot discriminate between their friends and their enemies.

Other varieties of warblers were in evidence but not in any great numbers. The chestnut-sided warbler, always rare enough with us to be regarded as a lucky discovery, was noted. A single female was seen nervously flitting about the lower growths. On a willow in full bloom by a little spring we discovered a northern parula warbler. The whole tree was a-buzz with insects. As we watched the warbler he came down to the lower branches and almost peeped into my field glasses. A bumble bee flew around him but he had no desire to snap him up as he did the flies. In fear he flew from the bee. Last May we watched a pair building a nest in a bunch of usnea lichen. This warbler is bluish grey above with a yellowish patch on the back which makes identification easy. Only one myrtle warbler was seen on the lower slope of the mountain high up in a spruce. His four yellow patches on either side of the breast, crown and rump make him easily recognized. He has been with us since May 2, being one of the earliest warblers to arrive in the spring.

Passing out into the carriage road that crosses the mountain, a male ruffed grouse ran across the road in front of us. He seemed innocent of family cares as he ran over the dry leaves and disappeared. In the deciduous trees along this road we came upon a bird rare enough in these parts to make the day a red letter one for us. Three male rose-breasted grosbeaks delighted us with their joyful morning carol. The males with their rosy breasts and black and white plumage were plainly in evidence, but the brown, sparrow-like females were not noted.

Now we have reached the lake that supplies the town with water. Along its edges the shad-bush, commonly called "wild pear", hangs out its white banners. Just back from the lakeside the hobble-bush sureads out its great clusters of white bloom which resembles the head of the garden hydrangea. The flower cluster is surrounded with a circle of large white blooms which are neutral and exist only for show. Yet they are by no means useless to the plant as they are the banners it hangs out to attract insects to the work of cross-fertilization. Under the trees in the cool woods the goldthread stands up its little white flower from its golden yellow, thread like roots which give the plant its name. This little plant is interesting because of the ingenuity it shows in having transformed its petals into nectaries. The yellow clubs with a tiny cup-like depression on the larger end are really petals. While the hobble bush transformed its outer circle of flowers into showy advertisements to attract insects, the goldthread has changed its petals into tiny nectaries to spread out a feast of pollen to attract insects to carry its pollen from bloom to bloom. Leaning over the water of the lake, is the cassandra or leather leaf. The leaves are leathery and the waxy white flowers are arranged in the axels along the upper branches. The Rhodora spreads out its purple blooms about the lake. This plant purples the bog lands of spring. The mountain holly was ready to open its insignificant blooms by the lakeside. While admiring plants about the lake, a pair of Maryland yellow-throats hopped out of a clump of meadow-sweet and uttered a scolding "chack". On the stems of the spiraea the black-masked male warbler hops nervously about while his unmasks and nudescript lady retires behind the screen of the thicket. From the thickety borders of the lake the yellow-throats send up their song, "wicity, wicity, wicity, wicity", which is given with much force and energy. Over the lake comes the call of a spotted sandpiper, "wet-fee, wet-fee," as Van Dyke writes it. Here to the rusty grackle or blackbird has found his chosen haunts.

While the woods were vocal with bird songs that attracted our attention the silent flowers were not overlooked. Beautiful tufts of the woodland blue violet looked up at us with modest and hopped around within a few feet of me, trying to express his sympathy or satisfy his curiosity. A magnolia warbler called to see what the trouble was. Soon these had satisfied their curiosity or tired of expressing their sympathy for the juncos and left. But pair of ovenbirds continued to fly round and round me, the male with the feathers on his head erect. We had plainly heard his sharp crescendo ringing through the woods as he sang, "Teacher, teacher, teacher, teacher, teacher, teacher", on rising scale and intensifying shrillness. Now he was flying but a few feet away from me or walking along a limb and showing his beautifully speckled breast and olive-green upper parts. This pair lingered longest and at last walked leisurely away. And no prettier pedestrian ever suckle with its thin leaves and yellow flowers drooping in pairs. A relative the beautiful garden honeysuckle, this straggling shrub bears but scant resemblance to the distinguished members of its family. Beneath the shade of the hardwood trees the yellow Clintonia lifts up a spike of usually three greenish yellow flowers above the large glossy green leaves. Its name was given in honor of a former governor of New York, DeWitt Clinton, who was a naturalist. Another common flower of the spring woods is the twisted stalk with its bright green leaves arranged along both sides of the graceful forking stem. Turning over the stem we discover the rosy bells of bloom, each set at the end of a bend stock which gives the plant its common as well as its scientific name, Streptopus roseus, meaning rosy twisted-stalk. A name that is descriptive of a plant is much to be preferred to tying the name of a governor of a state to a beautiful woodland flower, even though that governor was interested in plants. The false Solomen's seal was spreading out its wand of leaves but its flowers had not yet opened. The bane-berry was holding up its cluster of foamy white flowers. The bunch berry had spread out its four petal like bracts below the flower cluster and its tiny blooms were just beginning to open. The advertisement was thus out before the goods were arranged on the counter for the insect customers. The pretty little smilacina or false lily-of-the-valley was in bud.

The ferns were unrolling their crosses in the woods. An abundance of Christmas fern grows on the mountain. Its evergreen leaves were spread over the ground with the young fronds uncurling among them. That other rock-loving fern, the polypody, was everywhere clothing the rocks with its evergreen fronds. The lady fern was in some cases well expanded. Around the lake the osmundas were flourishing. Under the deciduous trees we came upon the beautiful Virginian grape fern. It raises its delicately dissected ternate frond of light green on a long stipe. The same frond bears the fructification on a differentiated portion. It is also called the rattlesnake fern from its fancied resemblance of the spikes of fruit to the rattles of a snake.

At ten a. m. we left the woods and returned home. The dandelions were lavishly "fringing the dusty road with harmless gold." Eaves swallows were busy repairing their nests under the eaves of a barn by the road. Near the town, English sparrows were doing scavenger work among the horse droppings on the street and occasionally tumbling in a melee of love and war in the gutter. Near the house a male yellow warbler presented himself on a thorn bush, showing the reddish brown streaks on his under parts. A chipping sparrow flew into a spruce across the street where she had her horse hair lined nest. We ended our morning with nature with the purple finches singing in the tree tops as we entered the house.

Cape Breton and that Sort of Thing.

In 1829 the British Government appointed Sir James Kempt Governor of Nova Scotia, and instructed him to carry out the annexation of Cape Breton, which had previously had a governor and military establishment of its own. The feeling against this union was very strong among the Cape Bretoners and several attempts were made to prevent it. As late as 1843 a petition with this object in view was sent to Queen Victoria, in which it was affirmed among other objections, that the attempt to unite Cape Breton to Nova Scotia was "a violation of all law, humanity and good faith." The matter was submitted to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council who decided against the petition, and Mr. Gladstone, who at the time was Under Secretary of State, communicated the decision to Lord Falkland, then acting governor.

Since the union no part of Nova Scotia has witnessed such great changes as Cape Breton, especially that part known as "the Sydneys," including Sydney, North Sydney, Sydney Mines, Glace Bay, The Dominions and New Waterford. Ten years ago the site of the latter town was a primeval forest. At present it is a town much larger and more populous than Bridgetown. With Sydney as a centre, a radius of eight to ten miles embraces a population estimated at between fifty and sixty thousand people, of a great variety of nationalities. One may hear on the streets of any of these towns, especially during the evening hours, a very Babel of languages, and may see on the signs in the business districts names as unpronounceable as some made familiar to us by the present war.

The traveller to the Sydneys by the I. R. C. meets with a new experience at Mulgrave. This town is approached by hills so high that the train cannot run directly into it, but skirts along their side, and then backs down to the station. It is then divided into sections and put on board the Scotia to be conveyed across the Strait to Hawkesbury. The Scotia contains three sets of rails, which can take nine passenger cars side by side, or twenty one box cars. The transfer from the land to the boat and again from the boat to the land is made very easily by powerful machinery. This is a great convenience for freight and especially passenger traffic, as passengers are able to retain their seats undisturbed, instead of being obliged as formerly, to leave the cars and enter others waiting for them on the other side.

Another notable change is that made in the direction of the road. Formerly the train stopped at North Sydney Junction and backed down to North Sydney, then returning to the Junction went on to Sydney. Persons going to Sydney Mines were obliged to go there by tram or other conveyance. But, the road has made a detour northward, and now reaches Sydney Mines, then North Sydney, and finally Sydney. This change increases the time to Sydney twenty to thirty minutes, but it is on the whole very beneficial.

It would require a book, and that a large one, to tell all about the industries conducted in these neighboring towns. Indeed, only a specialist or specialist could do so. Of course, coal is at the bottom of them all, both literally and figuratively. The town of Sydney Mines is situated directly over the coal beds, which also extend and are worked a considerable distance under the Atlantic.

A visitor to the Steel Works at Sydney would first make application and sign his name at the office. Then a guide is given to him and again, as he enters the gate leading to the works, he must sign his name for identification. Passing on he will observe the long rows of blazing furnaces, each one capable of holding five tons of ore. When properly melted and fused, the molten masses are run into molds, and when sufficiently cooled are laid hold of by great clamps and carried onward to be, when required, reheated, drawn out, cut into sizes according to their intended purposes, by buzzing wheels, which make the sparks to fly on every hand, and pass through them as easily as a knife on the dining table passes through a piece of bread. These pieces are again heated and passed through machines, one after another, until they come out as rails, spikes, bolts, rods, wire, or other manufactures. When the blast furnaces are opened to receive their ore or to give out the molten mass, one standing fifty feet away after getting a glimpse of it is glad to turn his eyes from the glare and the heat. Most of the men who manage these operations wear green glasses as a protection to their eyes. On reaching the long wharf and looking at the vessels which are being loaded and others lying in the stream, one observes that a good many of them have been made for service on the great lakes, and are sent here because so many of the steamers usually employed in the coal trade have been called to other service occasioned by the war. These lake boats are quite large but they are not fitted for ocean service. It should be remarked that the precaution taken in admitting visitors to the Steel Works is not so much occasioned by fear of German spies as by fear of accident. A want of careful outlook might easily lead to injury from some part of the great machinery. The visitor to the Steel Works is not likely to hear anything said, or to see anything directly suggestive of what is being done in the manufacture of shells for army purposes.

In another part of the city a large establishment is engaged in the manufacture of war material of which little or nothing has found its way to the papers. Coal tar out of which so many useful articles are taken, such as aniline dyes, creosote, flavoring extracts, et cetera, also contains benzole. The establishment mentioned makes out of the benzole several high explosives such as are employed in the shells which are now a necessary part of the equipment of an army. Cape Breton, with its many lakes, rivers, and bays, which by short canals, like St. Peter's, might easily be divided into a large number of islands, and with its great natural resources on the land and under the land, as well as in its waters, is one of Nova Scotia's most valuable assets.

The Election of July 8th

Full instruction is given in this issue of the Monitor respecting the Election of Thursday. The points in which the Nova Scotia Temperance Act is superior to the Canada Temperance Act are clearly put, and the man who believes in total abstinence from intoxicating drinks will not fail to be convinced of his duty at the Polls, and to be there to do it.

Miss Shaffner is receiving the congratulations of her friends as the winner of the first prize for all round efficiency in the junior classes of the Academic Department. She was successful in leading in all subjects. Mr. Curtis, managing director of the college board, in making the presentation, congratulated Miss Shaffner on her success, and stated that a great deal of hard work devolved upon the winner of this prize."

DROWNING ACCIDENT AT CLEMENTS POINT

A double drowning accident occurred at Clements Point yesterday morning by which two boys, Noble Kennedy and Elmer Long lost their lives. The lads had gone to Durling's Cove to bring a sail boat into Clements Point. After coming into the course of the river a heavy squall struck the boat and capsized her. When the boat was righted the body of Kennedy was found entangled in the rigging. The body of Long had not been recovered as we go to press this morning.

If I had but an enchanter's wand— if I could destroy tomorrow the desire for strong drink in the people of England—what changes would we see! We should see our jails and work-houses empty. We should see more lives saved in twelve months than are consumed in a century of bitter and savage war. We should transfigure and transform the face of the whole country.—Joseph Chamberlain.

Russia has been sober for the brief period of the war, and her criminal statistics already show the wisdom of the Czar's action in banishing vodka from the land. In thirty-three precincts of Moscow for the first half-year of 1914 there was an average of 896 criminal cases a month, while for the first "sober" month there were only 406. Crime was thus reduced 54.7 per cent.—Selected.

Business Men

The other day I met the finished product of the liquor traffic. He was lying in the gutter. He had no hat—the hat trade was suffering. His coat was full of holes—the tailoring trade was suffering. He had holes in his boots—the shoe trade was suffering. He had no socks—the hosiery trade was suffering. He had no shirt—the linen trade was suffering. I could hardly mention a useful industry in the country that was not affected by that man's inebriety.—Selected.

Probably the largest outing party in point of numbers ever held at Hampton, was the annual picnic of the Bridgetown and Centrelea Sunday Schools held at that place on Dominion Day. It is estimated there were over 300 in attendance. The outing was thoroughly enjoyed by old and young despite the fact that a heavy shower of rain shortened the day's program. The School of Providence Methodist Church had their annual outing at the same resort yesterday.

What might have been a serious accident was narrowly averted by the presence of mind of one of our local merchants, Mr. K. Brooks of Paradise. ### AEROPLANES SAVED THE ARMY OF SIR JOHN FRENCH FROM SURE ANNIHILATION

British military aviation had undoubtedly attained a greater degree of organization before the war broke out than at one time appeared possible, or indeed that was realized by the British public. Like every other department, of course, its personnel and equipment was not based upon a scale in any sense commensurate with the magnitude of the gigantic war with which the nation was suddenly confronted, but nevertheless were ready and complete enough to astound by their effective work, every man who was not already aware of their inspiring capabilities. At the very outset of the campaign they saved the British Expeditionary force from extinction, for if his aviators had not warned him in time, General Sir John French would not have known of the oncoming of immense German hordes charged with the Kaiser's express command to wipe out the "contemptible little army." As everyone knows, the memorable retreat from Mons was strenuous enough as it was, and ranks as one of the greatest of military achievements; but in his historic despatch, Sir John French could not conceal his satisfaction with the services which his gallant flying men had rendered, while General Joffre awarded the British Flying Corps the decoration of the Legion of Honor forthwith.

As the British aviators began, so they continued, and the history of their achievements is one long record of deeds of gallantry and daring. First by these exploits large numbers of young men passed through the schools and were enrolled as pilots, while the manufacture of aeroplanes was pushed forward in every available factory. The efficiency of the flying contingents at the front has not only been increased accordingly from month to month, but the outstanding feature of the aerial warfare has unquestionably been centred in its scientific no less than its military value. Whether voluntarily or under orders, flights have been made, and with conspicuous success of a kind which had never been attempted.

—From "The Aeroplane in Warfare," by Charles L. Freeston, in the July Scribner.

FANATICS, FANATICS

To the Editor:—

The Board of Trade of the City of Pittsburg at its annual meeting passed the following resolution without a dissenting voice:—

Resolved that this organization realizing as never before the increasing burdens of taxation caused by the liquor traffic in this country as so conclusively shown by the figures given by the census of the United States; realizing the gain morally to the citizenship of our country by a material reduction of saloons; realizing that it is poor economy to allow the granting of liquor licenses which annually grind out a grist of humanity for which we must increasingly pay an unnecessary tax; realizing the economic loss to the country through the inefficiency of the individual and recognizing the fact that more than 47,000,000 of the population of our country already live in a territory from which liquor has been banished by the sovereign will of the people;

Be it resolved that this organization place itself on record as favorable to the passage of a bill now before Congress submitting the question of national prohibition to the several State Legislatures that the question may be settled in harmony with the will of the people.

According to some people the Board of Trade of the City of Pittsburg must be composed of a lot of fanatics. If so, the number of fanatics who think as they do is increasing with great rapidity.

HUNTING AND FISHING

New Booklet Issued by Canadian Government Railways—Guide to Fishing Resorts of the Maritime Provinces.

"Hunting and fishing" is a concise and comprehensive guide to the numerous hunting and fishing resorts of Quebec and the Maritime Provinces, issued by the Canadian Government Railways. The foreword says:

While Quebec and the Maritime Provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia were the earliest settled portions of Canada, they still remain its best big game territory—in fact, the latter statement could be extended so as to include the whole of the North American continent, and there would be no exaggeration. There are hundreds of square miles of forests and barrens where the moose, caribou, deer and bear roam as free as did their kind a hundred years ago—nay, in the case of the moose, caribou and deer, they are distinctly better off than were their forebears, owing to the strict enforcement of the Provincial game laws, which is also accountable for the marked increase of these denizens of the forests in recent years.

What has been said of this country as a great region for hunting, is equally true of it with regard to the fishing. Although many of the noted streams are under lease, there are still opportunities for salmon fishing, while there is no lack of the best angling for trout. With such a stretch of coast line it will readily be understood there are innumerable opportunities for deep sea fishing. This sport not only includes the ordinary specimens of the finny tribe—cod, haddock and mackerel—but the more exclusive dwellers of the deep, such as tuna and sword fish.

Excellent wild fowl shooting is to be obtained. Duck, partridge and plover, woodcock, snipe, are plentiful and the fall shooting of geese, duck and brant are worthy of special mention.

The guides are well organized and can properly outfit and equip parties for an outing that may last two or three weeks or more, having chains of camps furnished with everything the hunter may require, and the necessary camp wagons and canoes. And this vast game and fish preserve is so easy of access. The sportsman has but to glance at the map, trace the line of the intercolonial Railway from Montreal to its Atlantic terminal, note how the country is intersected with rivers and streams, and virtually select the station on the line from which to make his excursion into the woods.

The object of this booklet is to help in the selection. The sportsman will be told the kind of game and fish to be procured, and how and where to procure it, the guides and their charges, the best outfitting places, the hotels and boarding house accommodations, the fish and game laws of the various provinces, customs regulations, and useful hints as to the proper equipment. Should further information be desired, and he will write the General Passenger Department of the Canadian Government Railways, every endeavor will be made to obtain the sportsman's requirements.

Just One Glass, and What Came of It

[Written for the Monitor by Clara L. Saunders]

"Why do we need to discuss, or think of temperance in this quiet and peaceful country?"

Let me answer your question by asking another. "Why do the nations prepare for war in time of peace? Why is so much time and money expended on war implements; and so many men drilled and kept at the doors of our country?" Why you say to keep the enemy out, or in subjection. Rightly answered. Now come with me, if you will and let me show you a few pictures of another enemy harder to keep out and subdue than the people of other nations. So subtle, so cunning, that he creeps in almost unnoticed, until some one feels the sting of his bite; and woe to those who are bitten. This enemy I speak of is King Alcohol—and if he once gets boy or man, girl or woman in his toils, it is ver, very hard to get away from him; he has so many ways of attacking us that it requires all our efforts to keep him away.

On a beautiful summer day, a noble ship was ploughing her way across the ocean. All on board are enjoying the delightful breezes, the blue sky, and watching the sparkling water. It all looks so peaceful, so secure; and hearts beat high with hope, as they think of the meeting with loved ones, at the end of the voyage who are eagerly awaiting them. For several days these favourable conditions continue; but a change is coming. The Captain is seen looking through his glass and issuing orders to the crew; everything is made tight and snug, those who do not know the weather signs look on in wonder, as everything looks as usual. But soon a little puff of wind comes across the water followed by another, until in a very short time the wind has risen to a gale. Clouds which seem to have sprung up from nowhere, have blotted out the bright sun, and now all looks gray and dark. The passengers on deck are ordered below; hatches are battened down; while the good ship rolls, and groans, in her efforts to battle with the elements. What a change in such a short time. Some of the passengers are praying, some are too frightened to do aught else but sigh and moan. As the weary hours drag slowly along, the Captain and his men are doing their best to keep the ship on her course. The storm grows worse; the waves run mountains high; the Captain looks with an anxious eye toward the place where he thinks he ought to see a light for the night has closed in dark so early. No stars are to be seen; nothing but a velvet like blackness. In vain he tries to see the beacon light, but no bright ray comes across the dark waters, telling of his whereabouts; the storm grows wilder, while the good ship groans and pitches in the terrible seas which threaten to engulf her.

We will leave the good ship battling with an angry sea, and go on shore, which is alarmingly near. Had the Captain but known, but as no warning ray of light shows over the angry waters to show him his danger, he was steering in a blind way.

At the opening of our story, as the good ship was sailing over a sun-lit sea, with prospects of a speedy and happy arrival at her journey's end, the light-house-keeper, at Rocky Bluffs, took advantage of the calm and beautiful summer day to row to the mainland, to transact some business which needed to be attended to. As he set off on his journey, he waved a good-bye to wife and child, and sent his boat skimming over the shining water, little dreaming he would never come back again, and that long days and nights would be spent in bitter remorse; but we must not anticipate.

As Jerry Crofton neared the mainland, and drew up to the wharf, it was with a happy heart he fastened his boat and snatched off toward the busy part of the little seaport town.

The trip was a rare treat to him, for it was only on calm, bright days, he was allowed to make the trip. But this day was so beautiful, and Nature seemed to be in a very good humor indeed, that no one dreamed of a storm being so near. After transacting his business, which had brought him to town, he was walking along the street thinking about returning to the light house, when he met a friend whom he had not seen for years; and who must needs show his pleasure at seeing him by inviting him into the public house for a social glass. Now Jerry knew he was supposed to keep away from all such places of danger, under pain of dismissal from his employers; but as there was no one about who would give him away, he decided he would just go in and have "one glass", just for old acquaintance sake. It could do no harm, surely, just one little glass. Thus he reasoned—and then he would go right away home. The exercise of rowing his boat over the water to his home would offset the effect of the liquor. Alas for man's reasoning. As the fiery liquor passed his lips its fumes seemed to enter his head, and seemingly set his brain on fire. And said to relate, not only one glass but several were drained; till at last setting down his empty glass, with a shaking hand, he turned to go out. But scarcely had he left the door of the saloon, when he was met by an officer, who seeing his condition, ordered him to "come along with me." In vain Jerry tried to explain that he must go home, but the halting manner in which he spoke and his unsteady gait proclaimed his unfitness to fulfill his duties whatever they were. And the officer ordered him to "be quiet there now, or it will be worse for you." And so poor Jerry is hustled along as fast as his unsteady legs will carry him, till he is at last landed in the police station where he is locked up in a cell and allowed to sleep off his debauch. He knows nothing of the awful storm that is raging, but sleeps on regardless of the awful tragedy which is taking place so near, and which is caused by his taking just one drink to be sociable.

As Jerry Crofton lies sleeping the sleep of intoxication, his distracted wife is trying to light the lamps in the tower of the light house to warn the ships which are watching for its warning rays. As the after-noon began to wane, Lucy Crofton gazed from the windows with tear filled eyes at the unmistakable signs of a bad storm was only too plain to be seen. How fast the daylight was deepening into night, and still no little boat was seen coming over the ever rising waves which were each moment dashing their spray higher and higher, while the roar of the wind was well nigh deafening to the terror stricken woman watching, watching in vain for her husband's return. When she thought of the unlighted lamps in the tower, she determined to try and light them herself. Looking toward the cradle, where her sleeping baby lay, she breathed a prayer to God to help her do her duty and succeed in lighting the lamps. It was a situation to appall the stoutest heart for she would have to leave her sleeping babe alone, and go up those narrow, winding stairs, which always gave her that sea sick feeling; and now feeling herself all alone in the light house in the terrible storm which seemed to threaten to hurl them all into the seething water dashing so madly against the rock-bound island on which the light house stood. But knowing the danger to the ships, and also to her husband if the light fails, she is nerved to the supreme effort to do or die. A strange calm has come over her spirits, and she thinks now only of the great need of quickly getting the light shining over the angry sea. But as she gets part way up the narrow stairs, her courage fails her, and she hastily returns below, to find her babe smiling in her sleep. Ashamed of her weakness, she once more climbs the stairs, and succeeds in reaching the top. As she lights the lamp she is startled to hear a loud boom, followed quickly by another coming over the angry sea. As the light shines out over the waters, there is seen a large vessel only a short distance from the shore. Too late the beacon-light shines out revealing their terrible position so near the cruel rocks, which like so many hungry sharks, are waiting for their prey. Who shall blame the brave woman, who tried at least to save the ship with her precious human freight? Is all the blame to rest on poor weak Jerry Crofton? Are your skirts clear in your power to put down the possibility of getting the awful stuff? Not until you can say that you can point the finger of scorn at the too many Jerry Croftons.

But to return to the ship which is every moment coming nearer to the doom which awaits her. On she comes, her decks crowded with white faced men and women, while little children sob and cling to those powerless to save them. The crash comes at last, breaking the back of the good ship, as it were, and hurling the hundreds of men, women and children into the seething waters, where some meet an almost instant death while others are clinging to bits of wreckage, for a time, to be washed away and dashed against the cruel rocks, a moment later. A few are fortunate enough to make a safe landing on the island where Mrs. Crofton does all in her power to make them comfortable. But her heart is heavy with dread of what she knows not. What can have happened to her husband is a mystery.

The long night is over at last; showing the sea dotted with bits of wreckage and floating bodies of those who only a few short hours ago were alive and happy, expecting to meet their friends, but now are cold and still in death, with no friendly hand to tenderly cover the faces of the dead. No flower strewn grave is their lot; but down at the bottom of the mighty sea, which in its wrath has swallowed them up, they lie, fathoms deep, there to await the summons at the last day. "Mourning friends, who can comfort you? None but God." But some say, (Continued on page 7)

"Why did God allow it?" Why did the storm come and cause the ship to go down with all her precious souls? My friend, stop for a moment and consider: why does God allow fire and water when they are so destructive? They are good servants but very bad masters. And so gentle reader we must keep this demon "strong drink" which will unfit us for any place of trust. Again you say "but what has that to do with the wrecking of the ship?" Ah, no, my friend. If Jerry Crofton had only gone back to his home, after transacting his business, he would not have met the friend who proved his ruin. The probability is that he would have had the lights on in time for the Captain to see it and save his ship and all on board from the cruel rocks which battered his good ship to matchwood, and caused the death of those who had put their lives in his hands. And that is not all of this sad tale, by any means. Jerry Crofton, for "just partaking of that fatal glass" was sentenced to a term of years with hard labor, which broke the heart of his wife, who did not live to see him come out of prison, leaving her darling babe to the tender mercies of strangers.

"Just one glass" thought Jerry Crofton that day, "it cannot harm me, and any way the effects will all be gone before I get home." Ah; are you are far too wise not to see to the you sure, my reader of that? I think never ending results of that "one glass" which looked so innocent "but at the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." The far reaching results of that "one glass" will continue as long as time shall last.

A miner rode into Santa Fe with ays pepsia one day, consulted a doctor and took his prescription to my druggist friend to be made up.

"Well, how much?" said the miner when the prescription was finished.

"Let's see," said the druggist. "It's $1.10 for the medicine and 15 cents for the bottle. That makes—"

He hesitated, afraid he might have forgotten something, and the miner said impatiently:

"Well, hurry up, boss. Put a price on the cork and let us know the worst."

A farmer who had never seen an automobile was mowing hay in a field near a roadside, when his mowing machine broke down. While the farmer was trying to fix his machine, a man came along in an automobile which also broke down just a few yards from the farmer. "What is that?" asked the farmer, pointing to the automobile.

"That," said the chauffeur, "is an automobile, but it won't go. And what is that?" he added, pointing to the mowing machine. "That is an ought-to-mow-hay, but it won't do it," said the farmer.

Brown (whose new cook is worse than the last): "It was you who recommended that new cook to my wife, wasn't it?"

Jones (with diffidence): "Yes, old man."

Brown (vengefully): "Then I must ask you to come home to dinner with me tonight."

CHAPTER X. (By Ethel A. Fitch)

After a few moments of impatient waiting Percy was ushered into Martel's office. That official greeted him with a hearty handshake.

"Sorry to have kept you waiting, Mr. Van Ness, but I am most frightfully busy."

"They keep you busy, eh?"

"I should say so. There seems to be an epidemic of crime recently. Brief as my stay in your city was, I have had reason to regret being out of town."

"I have some very good news for you concerning Parrish; but first of all may I ask you if Hogan is a large man?"

"Yes he is. I released him, or rather his escape was stage managed (this in confidence of course) day before yesterday. You see I do not want Hogan so much as I do Parrish. I don't mind telling you that if I could land Parrish it would be such a great feather in my cap that I would be practically sure of re-election. You know how necessary it is for an official to do brilliant work in his first term of office. Now this Hogan has a dog-like affection for Parrish. He would not give him away at any price. He will go to Parrish at once just as a piece of iron goes to a magnet. So I let Hogan off, and I have two men shadowing him. I hope to catch Parrish in this way."

"Parrish is already caught," said Percy. "I should have advised you by telegram, but I was coming to Boston anyway and I wanted to have a chat with you. He had the audacity to come back and try to rob our house. Fortunately we have a clever Irish girl who has been with us for years. Though bound and gagged by Parrish, she managed to free herself and telephone for aid. Fortunately also our cook has an admirer on the police force and I verily believe that he must have been roosting on our back door step so quickly did he come in answer to Norah's summons. Even at that Parrish might have got off had he not had the misfortune to fall down stairs and be swiftly and literally 'rat upon' by our cook, who weighs a trifling two hundred pounds. I did not go with him to headquarters, so I suppose that the New York police do not know what a big fish they have caught."

"Oh yes, they would know alright," exclaimed Martel. "I did not leave New York without giving them a description of Parrish. They have his photo and his record, but they have not got him. I did not interrupt your story, Mr. Van Ness, because I found it most interesting; but evidently you do not read your morning papers."

He handed Percy the New York Herald. "Read that."

On the front page Percy read: "Famous burglar attempted to rob Van Ness mansion in broad daylight yesterday. Was arrested by Sergeant Ryan but afterwards escaped. Believed to be none other than the famous Jim Parrish, alias Redwood, alias Jennings—known as Gentleman Jim—wanted in Boston and elsewhere."

"Good gracious," exclaimed Percy. "How did that happen? Ryan is as big as an ox. He should have been able to take a man with handcuffs on to the police station."

"It is another case of the triumph of mind over matter," said Martel dryly. "Read on."

Percy hurriedly read the paragraph. It stated that just as Ryan was putting Parrish into a closed, cab preparatory to taking him to headquarters, that latter turfed on him and from the elevation which the step of the cab afforded him, brought down the handcuffs with a stunning blow on the head of Ryan, whom the paper stated was still unconscious in the City Hospital.

The driver of the cab was unable to state in which direction the criminal had fled. Bridget's story and Norah's story—a brief one—were both given. The paper stated that all the members of the Van Ness family were out of the house at the time. Percy was relieved to notice that the reporters had not troubled or had been unable to learn how Parrish had effected an entrance; and also that no reference was made to a likeness between himself and that worthy, although a long description of Parrish's appearance was given and a reward offered for his apprehension.

"He surely will be caught!" exclaimed Percy. "Where could he go with handcuffs on?"

"It would seem so," said Martel. "But Parrish always seems able to accomplish the impossible."

"You don't know where Hogan is now, Chief?"

"No not at this moment, but I will stake my fortune that he is either in New York or on his way there. Why do you ask?"

"I have good reason to think that he has made off with Maudie, a little sister of Parrish's whom the two vil-lans used to drag around with them. She was most kind to me during my sojourn here, and I want to find her. Can you let me have one of your men?"

"Certainly, certainly, Mr. Van Ness. I will give you Mr. Thornton. He is one of my best men—a Canadian—I think you will like him."

He pressed a bell. "Ask Mr. Thornton to step this way, please."

"Mr. Thornton is not in sir," replied the office boy.

"Oh that is too bad. Well he will be in at noon. Shall I send him around to your hotel?"

"Yes, if you will be so kind."

"Oh certainly, certainly. I wish you success."

And with a cordial handshake they parted. Percy walked the streets aimlessly for a few moments. He felt a little calmer now and a few rays of pure reason began to penetrate his mind. He called up Maudie's landlady by phone, she had heard nothing. Then he made his way to Jordan & Marsh's and proceeded to the corset counter. A tall red headed girl stood in Maudie's place. Her face was very familiar to Percy who had spent a good deal of his time during his disastrous two weeks in Boston hanging around Maudie's counter. She had a loud voice and considered herself very witty. She had greatly annoyed Percy by trying to sell him a certain kind of straight front corset which she said would suit his figure. "Say kiddo" she exclaimed at sight of Percy, "where did you get them glad rags? there can't no honest working boy dress himself like that. You must have gone wrong." "Can you tell me where Maudie is?" inquired Percy.

"Yes I can, sober face. A man with a dirty face came in here yesterday and told her that her brother was sick in a hotel in New York and wanted her to nurse him. She went off with him."

"Did she tell you or do you remember the name of the hotel?"

"No but I have a vague idea that it was the Metropolitan. Lizzie" she called to a passing cash girl, "what hotel was Maudie's brother at?"

"Don't know" replied the girl over her shoulder.

At this point customers demanded the red headed girl's attention. Percy asked different other girls near by, and received varying suggestions. One girl even suggested the Martha Washington, which caused a great deal of laughter as this hotel is for ladies only. Percy left the store without feeling very greatly relieved by the information he had received. The man he had no doubt was Hogan, but had he really taken Maudie to New York, or was she secreted somewhere about the city? The thought that she was in his power was maddening. Percy was unable to eat any lunch, and was very glad to see the detective when he arrived at 1 p. m. The latter was a wholesome looking clear eyed individual whom Percy liked at once. They discussed the situation at length.

"I am of the opinion" said Mr. Thornton at last, "that Hogan has taken her to New York. I believe that he will want to see Parrish. I suggest that we go there at once."

"I will follow your advice" said Percy. "Now what about the hotel?"

"The Metropolitan" said Mr. Thornton. "Is too swell a place for a boob gink like Hogan even if he had money, and besides it is perfectly on the level. I think that we may strike the Metropolitan off the list, but the name suggests another hotel of bad repute, the Metropole. It is down somewhere near the battery if I remember rightly. I suggest that we go there first."

"Just as you say," agreed Percy.

They took the first train to New York and proceeded to locate the Metropole Hotel. Leaving their taxi a few blocks away they walked casually into the office of what proved to be an unprepossessing place. "Lady named Parrish registered here?" asked Thornton.

"No" replied the proprietor, an evil looking Jew.

"We expected to meet her here," insisted Thornton.

The Jew made no reply, but pushed towards them a dirty register, which they examined with interest. Neither Maudie's name or Hogan's was to be found upon it. After a few minutes of hopeless waiting under the unfriendly glare of the proprietor they went out.

"Your hunch was wrong" said Percy. "Apparently" admitted Thornton. They went to a cafe in a more respectable locality and ordered lunch. While they waited Thornton read a paper which he had purchased and Percy sat distractedly musing. "Ah!" exclaimed Thornton suddenly, "here is a mention of our hotel. Lady injured yesterday at Metropole hotel by falling from window. Taken to St. Luke's Hospital. Name unknown."

"Any details," asked Percy.

"No, just the notice. Say! will you follow my hunch. Let us go to St. Luke's and see this lady. If we are mistaken it won't be much time wasted."

"All right" said Percy, "anything is better than doing nothing. They hastily bolted their lunch and proceeded to St. Luke's."

"May we see the lady who was injured at the Metropole yesterday?" asked Thornton of the matron. "Are you newspaper reporters?"

"Oh no, we feel sure that we know her." Very well She is not yet conscious."

They followed an attendant up an elevator and through corridors until they entered a darkened room. By the bedside sat a nurse. On the bed lay a slender form unconscious and almost motionless, swathed in bandages. It was Maudie.

Our story is drawing to a close. There were days when Maudie lay between life and death—anguish heart breaking days they were for Percy. Sometimes Van Ness Sr., stood beside the bed with his son and looked with grave sympathy at the unconscious girl. At length the day came when consciousness returned and with it pain. It was three weeks from the time that Percy discovered Maudie before she was able to tell him the story of her adventure. "Alph came into the store about two o'clock. He told me that Jim was terribly sick in the Metropole Hotel and wanted me to come to him. I don't know why I didn't have sense enough to ask to see the telegram which he said Jim had sent to him. If I had stopped to think I would have known that if Jim was sick he would be at a hospital and not a hotel. Alph had never lied to me, and I did not know it was in him to be so wicked. I guess I just lost my head. I left Alph at the store. He said he was not going to New York until the following day, as he had some business to attend to. I went to my boarding house to get my things. I did not see the landlady around and did not bother to look her up and tell her I was going or write a note because I wanted to catch that fast through train that leaves at three. I missed it. Alph Hogan must have been on that train. I took the next one. When I got to my hotel I thought it was an awful looking place, but then I thought Jim must have done something dreadful and be hiding here. I asked to be shown to Jim's room. There was no book to register in at the desk. As soon as I stepped in the room some one locked the door behind me and Alph Hogan grabbed me. I screamed. Nobody came. After a while I stopped screaming, and we had what Alph called a sensible talk. He said I must marry him. He would keep me there until I did. What else could I say? He went out then to get the license, locking the door behind him. I knocked and kicked the door and screamed, but nobody came though I heard people pass. I looked out of the window. The room was on the street only two floors up. It did not look far to the ground. I took the bed clothes and the bureau cloth, and the towels, and my undershirt, and made a rope of them. I thought this rope would bring me to about six feet from the ground and someone would see me dangling and come to my rescue. I tied the rope around my waist and the bed post, then I climbed out on the window and jumped. It is a dreadful feeling to drop through the air like that, and when I did stop with a fearful jerk, the pavement looked miles away. The worst of all was that my head seemed heavier than the rest of me and I had a dreadful feeling of standing on my head. I guess that then one of the knots must have given away. I don't remember anything else. Enough money was found on my clothes to pay for a private room so they put me here instead of in the ward the nurse tells me."

"Poor little girl!" said Percy. "You would certainly have been killed had you not fallen on a fat German saloon-keeper who saw you from across the street and rushed you to my rescue. I gave him a roll of bills that will make him feel that at least one German American is understood at this time."

"That is news indeed" said Maudie. "For his sake I would forgive even the Kaiser."

"And now darling" said Percy, "you must give me the right to protect you. Let us get married the day you leave the hospital."

"Percy, I think your father is just lovely, but what would your mother say?"

"I don't know; but surely darling you will not refuse on that account?"

"No, oh no. But Percy, I have been thinking. I have had so much time to think lying here. I am really well born. We had a family tree but no money; that is just why Jim is a crook. Our name is not Parrish but Fairfax. Parrish is just one of the names Jim took. I never liked it. He said we must never disgrace the old name. I have a maiden aunt, my mother's sister, my only living relative. She is as proud as Lucifer, and not so poor as we were. Why could she not come here and chaperone me, and I could be introduced to your set as Miss Fairfax, and your mother need never know."

Percy demurred somewhat at the delay involved, but Van Ness Sr., when consulted, said it was a capital idea. So it came to pass that as Miss Fairfax of Virginia, accompanied by her ultra aristocratic Aunt, Maudie was introduced to New York's "four hundred" and married Percy at a fashionable wedding which was one of the events of the season.

Of course they lived happily ever after, and Norah played an important part in their home. Alph Hogan was arrested very soon after Maudie's marriage and sentenced for various misdemeanors to ten years in Sing Sing. He attempted to escape after being in jail a year and was shot by a keeper. Bridget married Jerry as soon as he got out of the hospital, and the number of Irish Americans is increasing. Marion's broken heart healed quickly, and she has been twice married and twice divorced since the events narrated here took place.

As for Jim Parrish, after escaping from Jerry, he went straight to the back door of gambling house, not in the tenderloin, and his handiwork was filed off by a discreet gentleman of that establishment who asked no questions. He is now at large in the West and members of the L. L. C. going to the "Frisco" exposition are advised to wear their money in their stockings as Parrish will be there.

THE HOLLANDER IS A PATRIOT— HIS ART HIS OWN

The Hollander is intensely patriotic. He loves not only his country and its institutions, but its very soil and the skies over it, its luscious fields and its windmills, its dykes and its ditches. He loves these with the ardor of one who has paid dear and continues to pay dear for his possessions. Now, to the painter these sentiments are all the more keenly felt because he is a painter. When he paints his windmills they must come against his own gray skies. His black and white cattle must graze in his own rich pastures and his willow-bordered canals must cut their way through his canvases. This is why so few Dutch painters live out of Holland. I can recall of but one painter of distinction who has chosen to spend his life away from home, and that is Matthys Maris, who lives in London. It is told of Jacob Maris that when he sought rest from his absorbing occupations he fled to the German Rhine, for he said there he was never tempted to take brush in hand. I once asked George Poggenbeck why he did not spend a season in America. "What should I do there?" he replied, with a shrug of his shoulders; "you know I cannot paint out of Holland." Because of their loyalty to their own country, many Dutch painters cannot understand why artists from other countries flock to Holland and insist upon painting windmills and willows and canals and Dutch interiors, themes they can at best know but superficially, catching only the outside of things, only what they can see. They argue: What can these foreigners know about our real life—our inner life—and if they cannot know that, why attempt to paint it at all? It is a very queer Holland that such painters carry away with them, they say. When Niehuys was in this country a few years ago he travelled from Washington to Philadelphia. It was in the autumn of the year. He tried to describe to a little group of us at the Salmagundi Club the glory of our autumn foliage, the inviting subjects that crowded his vision, the skies that were crying aloud to be painted, and, though he spoke English very well, he confessed he was unable to convey to us any idea of how he had been impressed. He thought Americans had no need to hunt for subjects in strange lands. From "The Field of Art," by A. T. Van Laer, N. A., in the July Scribner.

STOMACH TROUBLES QUICKLY CURED.

People go on suffering from little stomach troubles for years, and imagine they have a serious disease. They over-eat or over-drink and force on the stomach a lot of extra work, but they never think that the stomach needs extra help to do the extra work.

If these people would take Tonaline Tablets regularly they would be a great big help to the stomach in its strain of over-work. No matter what you eat or drink Tonaline tablets sweeten your sour stomach and stop gas belching in five minutes. The heaviness disappears, and the stomach is greatly aided in its work of digestion.

TONALINE

Tablets not only promptly relieve all distress, but if taken regularly will absolutely cure indigestion by building up the flabby, overworked walls of the stomach and make them strong enough to digest the most hearty meal. $1 for a 50 days' treatment.

Minard's Lintment used by physicians

Many women with disfigured complexions never seem to think that they need an occasional cleansing inside as well as outside. Yet neglect of this internal bathing shows itself in spotty, and sallow complexions—as well as in dreadful headaches and biliousness. It's because the liver becomes sluggish, and waste matter accumulates which Nature cannot remove without assistance. The best

Joker's Corner

A woman in much agony of spirit said she could not bring her husband to the meeting with her, because he was so decomposed.

New Girl—"What does your father like for breakfast?"

Little Mabel—"He always likes most anything we hasn't got."

Little Dick—"Johnny Wheeler has a new bicycle."

Father—"Another? What is he going to do with the old one?"

Little Dick—"He's going to sell it to me soon as you give me the money."

Tommy—"I want another box of those pills, like what I got for mother yesterday."

Druggist—"Did your mother say they were good?"

Tommy—"No, but they just fit my air gun."

Mamma: "What are you doing, Harry?"

Harry: "I'm counting. You told me when I got angry I should count a hundred."

Mamma: "Yes, so I did."

Harry: "Well, I've counted two hundred and thirty-seven, and I'm madder than when I started."

An Irishman knocked at a door one day and asked the lady of the house if she could help him, as he was hard up on the road. "Indeed I'll not," she replied, "and if you don't clear out of this I'll call my husband, who is a policeman, and he'll come and take you." "I quite believe ye, missis," retorted Pat. "He'd take anything when he took you."

Little Muriel, late for tea, hurried in to the house breathlessly, exclaiming: "Oh, Mother, don't scold me for being late! A horse fell down and a man said they would have to send for a horse doctor, and after I waited a long, long time, oh, Mother, what do you think! It wasn't a horse doctor at all, it was only a man!"

Mischa Elman tells a story of his early youth. He was playing at a reception given by a Russian prince, and played Beethoven's "Kreutzer Sonata," which has several long and impressive rests in it. During one of these rests a motherly old lady leaned forward, patted him on the shoulder, and said: "Play something you know, dear."—Argonaut.

Miss Varney was trying to illustrate to her youthful Sunday School Class the lesson, "Return good for evil." To make it practical she said:—"Now suppose, children, one of your schoolmates should strike you, and the next day you should bring him an apple, that would be returning good for evil." A little girl, sitting in one of the front seats, raised her hands. "Well, Elizabeth," said the teacher, "what is it?" "Then," said Elizabeth firmly, "he would strike you again to get another apple."

At the close of an engagement with the enemy, in which the casualties were severe, a party of "Tommies" was told off to bury the dead. While thus engaged, one of these approached his commanding officer, and said:—"If you please, sir, there's a German here who says he's not dead. What are we to do with him?"

"Well," was the reply, "they are such liars that, if he says he's alive, you may take it that he's dead; so just bury him."

The vote on the repeal of the Scott Act takes place on Thursday. In a community where it would seem there ought not to be one vote cast for its retention, grave doubts are being raised in some of the voter's minds who have not familiarized themselves with the Nova Scotia Temperance Act, as to the advisability of "voting against the law". The liquor interests, undoubtedly, or those interested in procuring liquor, have circulated the most ridiculous reports, in order to retain a law much more conducive to their gain (or loss?) than the Nova Scotia Temperance Act, which becomes law automatically on the repeal of the Scott Act. Rev. Mr. Grant was listened to with interest on Thursday evening as he explained some of the workings of the new Act and his earnest appeal to work for it.

OBITUARY

MRS. JOHN MESSENGER

There passed away on June 5th, Dorinda Messenger, wife of John Messenger, after a short illness of pneumonia, at the advanced age of 77 years. Mrs. Messenger was a hard working and industrious woman, and will be greatly missed in her home. She leaves to mourn their loss, one son and two daughters, Emma at home, Mrs. George Kelly at Upper Lake, and seven grandchildren. She has passed on to the brighter home above.

A London paper says: The parties of Canadian nurses who have arrived here are attracting much attention. Their uniform for the street is cut in the most gay and dashing military fashion, a smart blue dress with big brass buttons, red cuffs and decorations, a heavy military cloak and a Panama hat. The poor girls must be sweltered in the streets of London in the recent hot wave, but they bear their brilliant uniforms bravely.

INGLEWOOD SCHOOL

The school at Inglewood closed on June 30th. Owing to shortened time no public examination was held this year. The school has been in session eighty-six days during the last school year, twenty pupils being enrolled, six from the County Home part of the time. The average attendance during the year being 11.7, with averages of quarterly percentages 68.

Owing to several removals and weather conditions, with the usual laxness and no compulsory law enforced a few children are deprived of the foundation stones being laid for future usefulness. The work has been chiefly primary but none the less most important and let us beware lest in our ease and selfishness the question be put to us individually some day "who is thy neighbor." The children who have attended regularly have made very creditable progress and the initial and much needed art "industry" in a small way developed.

The grades at present stand thus: Kindergarten, those entering Grade One.

Allsworth Brown (White) Viola Shaffner (White) Harold Sims Minnie Sims Joseph Jackson Milda Allen Avilla Jackson Gordon Kelsey

Grade I to II. Wallace Sims Clifford Sims Frederick Jackson Hallett Brown (white) not graded Pauline Tyler (at school at Weymouth)

HYMENAL

HOFFMAN-SPROULE

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Lockhart Sproule of Nictaux was the scene of a very pretty wedding on Wednesday evening, June 23rd, at eight o'clock, when their youngest daughter, Miss Lydia Estella Sproule was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Mr. William B. Hoffman of Nictaux Falls. The ceremony was performed by Rev. O. E. Steeves, on the piazza, in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends. Immediately after the ceremony the bridal couple entered the room tastefully decorated for the occasion and stood under a handsome floral arch where they received the hearty congratulations of their many friends.

The bride looked charming dressed in white silk trimmed with embroidered silk and wearing a bridal veil.

The wedding march was rendered by Miss Hazel Steeves in a very proficient manner.

The young couple received many valuable and useful gifts. The choir of which the bride was a member, presented them with four handsome oak chairs. At a late hour ice cream and a dainty lunch was served, after which the happy couple took their departure for their future home at Nictaux South, with the best wishes of their relatives and friends for a bright and prosperous life. (Outlook please copy.)
