Free Trade in England and America

Forty years ago, an eminent English statesman, impressed with the wonderful progress made by the Free Trade doctrine, ventured to make the prediction that within a quarter of a century, all commercial communities would have accepted Free Trade. Since then, over a decade has passed and how has it fared with Free Trade? On the 13th, at the Golden Club, Mr. Gladstone is reported to have stated that "Free traders must recognize with great disappointment, how much ground had been lost by their doctrine within the last 25 years. Militarism, which lay like a vampire over Europe, was responsible for much of the mischief, but not for all, because Free Trade had been the cause of the progress of the world. In the United States and in the British colonies, protection was applied not in America, not only to goods, but to persons, as was instanced by the treatment of the Chinese. The great republic had never accepted the doctrine of free trade. At one time, there had been a kind of qualified progress toward them, but this being checked, opinion became actually retrogressive."

The truth seems to be that Free Trade ideas received an almost universal assent in England, because it suited British interests. A maritime and manufacturing people want open markets to trade in; and Free Trade gave British commercial interests an enormous impetus.

The conditions were, however, different in America; the vast natural resources of the American continent in agricultural lands, in minerals, in water power, in forest wealth, etc., could not be developed for ages, as long as a foreign people controlled their market and supplied them with all their manufactured goods; American interests demanded protection, as much as English interests demanded Free Trade. We cannot expect the American policy to be relinquished, until their industries are sufficiently developed to enable them to hold their own in the markets of the world, against all comers. In some departments, this state of things is approaching. In the manufacture of steel rails, cutlery, cotton goods, etc., the American manufacturers are now excelling.

The time was, twenty years ago, when Canada seemed prepared to cast her lot commercially with the United States; that country, however, broke off reciprocal trade relations, and since that date, a new condition of things has grown up in Canada, that gives her new interests of her own. It has been proved beyond all doubt that General Middleton committed a breach both of civil and military law in taking the half-breed, Bremner's furs himself, and causing them to be his personal property and also in allowing his subordinate officers to do so. It is conducted not to be expected of a man who occupied the honorable position he did in England and who was commander of the Canadian forces. The government have now to settle the matter. Parliament has expressed its opinion and the disposal and punishment of the avaricious warrior will be awarded by the public.

Katie Tempest, Soubrette.

BY EMMA V. SHERIDAN.

Informed me that he was going to Europe. My heart had been filling up with light and laughter. Now it burst.

"Are you going to leave me?" I said. "Katie," he answered, feeling his way through the words, "there is nothing else for me to do."

"Don't you care for me at all that you break my heart so?" I cried, pushing my hands hard together; "am I the side of the house that you look at me as if you did not see me? What have I done that you should treat me as if you hated me? I will not have it! I'll go out and drown myself."

"Katie," said he steadily, "remember the promise you compelled me to make."

A great light flashed before my eyes. I stood up and reached out my hands. "Oh!" I said, "I see how I have been to people, for now my own heart breaks. You may hurt me as much as you like. I am no coward. Still I will tell you. I know I made you promise to be my friend and never to leave me. You are going to marry your cousin and go to Europe; but before you go I will tell you that I love you. It is right I should have to say it so—and for nothing—because I have always been cruel, and believed no one—but now I know it can be true. Though my heart breaks I am not afraid, and I say it again—I love you—I love you!"

The room went all around, and I began to fall; but a glad cry sounded, and my doctor's arms held me up, and my doctor's voice was saying: "My brave little girl—my darling—my Katie! You have come to me and I love you with all my soul, and I have from the first."

There is no more a Katie Tempest, Soubrette.

CHAPTER II.

A TURN IN THE ROAD.

"Don't, Daniel, don't!"

The vacation previous to her graduation showed still further changes in Daniel Hardy's life.

Not alone in her speech and dress, but in her views of her surroundings had she become something different from her former self.

She and Daniel were as much together as the shadow and the body, and she was as much his as the shadow was his.
