How sweetly, through the rifted haze, The golden light on Bethlehem flows Around the boy, whose white flocks graze, Beneath the olive boughs.

And while his glorious songs ascend. Oh, how the tones that freight the breeze And evening's changeful colours, blend

He sings of when the cloven tide Made way for Israel's pallid bands,-Of the long march o'er deserts wide Of yellow, drifting sands,-

Of Sinai's summit wreathed in flame, Where the gray-bearded leader trod, And, with his awful message, came All radient from his God.

In tenderer mood he sings again Life's heritage of joys and fears And sympathies, which other men Do only speak by tears,

He stops; no longer thrills the song, That grows more sweet as evening glooms, Amid the olives' dusky throng, And snowy myrtle blooms.

Oh, still sing on, thou shepherd-boy! Still burden the rejoicing wind; Ecach strain of sorrow or of joy Thou singest for mankind.

Each voice that from thy soul departs Shall sound beyond thine age and clime And in the depths of human hearts. Shall vibrate through all time.
