Legal Decisions

1. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the Post Office—whether directed to his name or otherwise or whether he has subscribed or not—is responsible for the payment.

2. If a person orders his paper discontinued, he must pay up all arrears, or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and collect the whole amount, whether the paper is in the office or not.

3. The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers and periodicals from the Post Office, or removing and leaving them uncollected for 12 months, is evidence of intentional fraud.

POETRY.

A New Leaf.

He came to my desk with quivering lip
The lesson was done—
"Dear teacher, I want a new leaf," he said,
"I have spoiled this one."
In place of the leaf so stained and blotched
I gave him a new one all unspoiled,
And into his sad eyes smiled—
"Do better now, my child."

I want to be the throne with a quivering
The old year was done—
"Dear Father, hast thou a new leaf for me?"
He took the old leaf, stained and blotched,
And gave me a new one all unspoiled,
And into my sad eyes smiled—
"Do better now, my child."

The lady looked very dubious.
"It's not usual for me to take in ladies unaccompanied," she said slowly, glancing from Constance's face to the portmanteau. "You see—"

Constance lowered her veil, and was turning with a heavy sinking heart to the cab, when the lady said:
"But perhaps you can give me a reference?" and she looked at the beautiful face and quietly dressed figure hesitatingly.

Constance shook her head.
"I have no friend in London," she said, mastering her voice sufficiently to keep the tears out of it; "I have just come from the country, quite unexpectedly."

The lady shook her head.
"I'm very sorry, miss," she said,
"but we make it a rule. We're very particular, you see—"

Constance looked her head and went back to the cab, and the door closed.
For a moment her presence of mind forgot her, and she tears rose to her eyes and blinded her.

The cabman's voice recalled her to herself.
"Anything the matter, miss?" he asked, roughly but not rudely.
Constance looked up at him and tried to smile.
"I do not know where to go," she said. "I am quite alone, and—"

The cabman comprehended the difficulty at once.
"Ah, I understand, miss. Yes, it's rather awkward, especially in this season, if you was old and ugly," he was going to say, but paused—"If you was an old kind of person, it wouldn't matter, it is awkward, Lemme see," and he took of his hat and scratched his head. "If you ain't particular set on a hotel, and could put up with a respectable quiet lodging—"

"Oh, yes, yes!" Constance made haste to answer. "That is what I should like, somewhere very, very quiet."

"Jump in, miss," he responded promptly; "I know the very place as'll suit you. It ain't so well as this, but I'll answer for it they know a lady when they see her, and won't treat her as if she was respectable." Don't you be upset, miss; it's all right!"

The man's attempt at encouragement and sympathy cheered her, rough though it was, and she got in and allowed him to drive her away. But the homeless, helpless aching of her heart!
What words can describe it?

"They left the more fashionable thoroughfares and dived into a network of quiet streets, eventually stopping before a house in a long road curved like a bow."

The cabman got down from his perch.
"You wait here, miss," he said, as he rang the bell. After a few minutes parley with some one in the passage he came back to her with a quiet smile of triumph.

"All right, miss. Here you are.
You'll be comfortable enough here, I'll answer for it. You see, I know the lady as keeps it. She was a nurse at a hospital where I was once; broke my arm. She's a good sort, and a lady like yourself, miss."

Constance went up the short flight of steps, and saw a woman whom the cabman, with the quick perception of his class, had rightly described as a lady. She was young, scarcely of middle age, indeed, with a rather pretty face, with that expression of subdued sadness which speaks of past trouble, and was dressed in black. Constance and she stood for a moment regarding each other, then the woman's face relaxed into a softer and welcoming expression which brought an intense feeling of relief to poor Constance, who was dreading another rebuff.

"You wish to have a room, miss?"
said the woman.

Constance answered in the affirmative.

"But I am quite alone," she made haste to add, "and I can't give you any reference, and—I know no one walk in," and she went and brought a middle-aged woman, in a brown stuff

Several men raised their hats as he passed and he raised his, but without bestowing any particular notice on the crowd, and making his way to the carriage, stepped in.

The servant followed; the footman put up the step, and the carriage drove off, one of the two boys in the crowd raising a shrill hurrah!

Rawson Fenton! The object of a popular opinion in London! And when she had seen him last he was a penniless adventurer in the wilds of Australia.
How had this extraordinary change been brought about? For a moment or two she stood recalling the scene of their parting. She remembered the scene as vividly as if it were occurring before her. At that moment the hissing of the fire, her father's fancied discovery of the secret of the Jasper rock. Could there have been any truth in it? Had Rawson Fenton availed himself of the secret, and gained possession of the treasure of opals?

She put the suggestion from her with a weary smile. If her father had really made the discovery it must have died with him. Rawson Fenton could not possibly have learned it from his father; and he, Rawson Fenton, was too ignorant of chemistry to discover it for himself.

Besides, there were so many ways nowadays in which a man could be suddenly rich. It was no uncommon thing for a man to land in Australia without a penny, and become possessed of thousands in a few months.

She had always considered Rawson Fenton clever, and it should be no surprise to her that he had grown rich.

The porter put her into the cab.

"Where to, miss?" he asked.

Constance paused a moment.

"Ask him to drive me to some quiet private hotel, please," she said, trying to speak with easy self-possession.

The cabman looked rather surprised, as well he might, and, raising the trap door, asked:

"East or West, miss?"

"West, please," answered Constance at hap hazard.

The cab drove off after a moment or two of consideration on the part of the driver, and went in the direction of Kensington; and Constance, wondering listlessly whether her fate was taking her, looked upon the London streets with that sensation of loneliness and helplessness which only the homeless and friendless ever fully know.

She stopped presently in front of a quiet-looking house, with "Private Hotel" painted over the portico, and she got out and rang the bell. A maid servant opened the door, and in answer to Constance's timid—"Can I have a room, if you please?" surveyed her and the portmanteau with critical regard.

"If I see, miss," she said, "if you'll walk in," and she went and brought a middle-aged woman, in a brown stuff

THE WOMAN'S COLORED FAINTLY

and the woman's colored faintly in sympathy.

"I think I understand, miss," she said; "I am not afraid about the money, and will you come in, please?"

Constance paid the cabman, who refrained from asking her more than a fare and a half, which was generous of him, considering that she would have paid three times the legal amount without a murmur, and she went inside the house. The lady had her face plainly furnished, but by no means uncomfortable sitting room, and motioned her to a chair.

"Do you want the room for long,
miss?" she asked.

Constance raised her veil, and at the sight of the lady, beautiful face the lady gave a very faint start of surprise and admiration.

"I don't know," said Constance.
Then she went on, her color coming and going. "My name is Grahame.
I am a governess, and—shall want a situation. I have some money for the present," she took out her purse with trembling fingers, "I will pay in advance."

"If you will give me a sovereign, it will be sufficient."

Constance laid the coin on the table.
"I will show you your room," said the lady.

Constance followed her up the stairs to a small, but clean and neatly furnished room.

"It is very plain and simple," began the lady, but Constance stopped her.

"It is very nice, and quite, quite good enough," she said. "Will you please tell me your name?"

"My name is Merry, said the woman.
"I am a widow, and her voice sank a little."

Constance's heart went to her instantly. "I am so sorry," she said in her low, sweet voice.

Mrs. Merry's face flushed slightly.
"Thank you, Miss Grahame," she said gently. "Yes, I have seen some trouble, and," she glanced at Constance's black dress.

"It is for my father," said Constance.
Mrs. Merry nodded.

"The world is full of trouble, especially for us women," she said. "But I will go and get you something to eat, while you take your things off. You look tired and as if you wanted rest."

Constance sighed and sank into a chair as she took off her hat.

"Tired? Yes, I am very tired."

Then she added, as if in explanation: "I have come up from Buckingham-shire—"

But Mrs. Merry displayed no curiosity, pardonable though it would have been.

"Yes! Let me recommend you to lie down and rest for a little while.
The house is a very quiet one, and you will not be disturbed," and she left the room.

Constance took off her things, but sat gazing out of the window upon the long row of backs of houses. Rest!

How could she rest with her brain in a whirl? She could do nothing but think and think, and try to realize that a few hours ago she was at Brakenmore Castle, and that now she was in a London lodging-house, friendless and alone!

CHAPTER XII.

Mr. Rawson Fenton leaned back in his luxurious, unlined carriage, and the high-spirited horses bore him through the station gates and along towards the west, the turn-out attracting attention and remark at almost every yard of the way.

Passing Hyde Park, it pulled up before one of the large houses in Kensington Park Gardens. The footman dropped down from his perch, the hall door opened and revealed the better and two more footmen, and the great man walked quickly into the hall, followed by his secretary with the dispatch-box.

Besides the servants there were three other persons standing or sitting in the hall, and they moved forward as Mr. Rawson Fenton entered, as if they had been waiting to get a word with him.

But with a bow to the right and left, and a "How do you do? Excuse me for a moment," he passed through them and up the broad stairs.

Some of the persons thus disappointed resumed their seats, others went out,

and the woman's colored faintly in
sympathy.

"Not much use waiting, I suppose," remarked one of them.

"No," replied the other. "He looked busy, but one can't tell," and he shrugged his shoulders. "He may come down or send for us. That's the worst of these big men. You can't tell how to take them."

"Yes; and I want to see him on a matter of importance," said the first man.

The other smiled.

"So do we all, I expect," and he glanced over his shoulder at the waiting group.

"Have you known Mr. Fenton long?" asked the first to invite conversation.

"Not very long. I should be singularly privileged if I had."

"Ah, you mean that—"

"That no one, at any rate here in England, has known him very long. The people abroad, out in Australia and elsewhere, may have done, perhaps; though for that matter no one seems to be well posted about his antecedents."

"Everyone knows that he is a wonderfully successful man."

"That goes without saying," said his companion glancing round the spectacle hall, with its evidence of wealth in the shape of costly pictures, insignificant hangings, and rare china. Of course. But few persons know how it was all made."

"He is one of the marvels of the age," said the first, rhapsodically.

"Quite so, and that in an age when there are so many marvels. Yes, Mr.
Rawson Fenton is one of the great men of this, the Victorian era."

"They tell me that he must be worth a couple of millions at least," said the first.

The other shrugged his shoulders and smiled.

"Very likely. Perhaps more. It does not much matter."

"No?"

"No; so long as a man possesses the power of handling large sums of money it does not signify how much he really owns. Rawson Fenton may be a mil-<

THE ACADIAN.

WOLFVILLE, N. S., MAR. 20, 1896.

Britain and Her Sons

A German writer recently endeavored to show that the British Empire is not a strong power. The assumption is based on two unsupported statements which imply that the colonies are not truly loyal to the Empire. It is said that the British Empire is neither British, for the colonies are on the watch for an auspicious moment to secede, nor an empire, since the orders of the central power are disregarded as soon as popular opinion in the colonies is opposed to them. From this point it is argued that in the day of her greatest need Britain will be deserted by the colonies she has protected from their foundation. The weakness of this judgment is that it does not take into account the essential British characteristic of pride in the race. The colonies at times have their little family squabbles with the parent Government, and the magnificent continents which are the colonial sons of Britain demand all the rights and privileges of freedom and liberty, and like a prudent parent, Britain grants these rights to the mature and lusty sons who are engaged in developing their respective corners of the heritage that Heaven has given to the Anglo-Saxon race. Instead of weakening the bonds that bind the colonies to the Mother Land, this action tends to draw them closer together, just as the father is endeared to the son who has been cheerfully given his portion of the patrimony when he was able to govern it wisely. And when the day of trial comes, as it doubtless will, the widely separated sons of Britain will be found rallying to her defence just as would the sons of the wise father who has given them the largest individual liberty, if disaster should threaten him.

That elder son of Britain who over a century ago cut loose from the family circle, has in the development of his own domain shown the rest of the household how their affairs can be harmoniously conducted for all time. The British Empire is now in an evolutionary condition leading up to a Federal union, and there are not wanting signs that the elder brother will before many years join with those to the East and the West in forming a grand English speaking confederation that will be the glory of civilization, because it will exercise a dominating influence over the whole world. When this day arrives the golden era of peace will have dawned.

Acadia College Graduates in Boston.

The fourth annual reunion and banquet of the New England alumni association of Acadia University was held at the United States Hotel, Boston, recently.

At the business meeting, reports of the officers were presented, that of the treasurer showing a surplus of $1,000 in the treasury. The sum of $200 was subscribed, to be applied to the alumni professorship. The following officers were elected: Rev. Robert MacDonald, Writton avenue Baptist church, president; Rev. Leander A. Palmer, Swampscott, vice-president; Benjamin A. Lockhart, Boston, secretary; Charles H. McIntyre, Boston, treasurer; M. C. Smith, Boston, J. E. Eaton, Boston, Rev. Ralph M. Hunt, Jamaica Plain; Austin T. Kempton, Boston, directors.

The retiring president, Rev. George B. Titus, of Everett, presided at the banquet, and, after reading letters of regret from J. W. Longley, attorney general of Nova Scotia; Rev. Alexander Blackburn, Cambridge, Hon. Stephen Salisbury, of Worcester, and others, introduced as the first speaker Rev. Chas. A. Eaton, formerly of Natick, and now settled in Toronto.

Mr. Eaton brought the greetings of his Toronto brethren.

Prof. E. M. Keirstead of Acadia University brought the special message of that institution to the association.

Prof. Rush Brees, of Newton Theological Seminary, spoke on "Newton's Year of Acadia." Rev. A. S. Gumbert gave a breezy discourse on "Denominational Fellowship," and Rev. Herbert MacDonald spoke of "The Influence of Small Colleges on Character and Friendship." The closing speaker was Rev. B. W. Lockhart of Manchester, N. H., one of the oldest "grads" of Acadia.—Boston Globe.

We received last week a somewhat remarkable circular purporting to be from the "Canadian Republican Association." Just what this organization is, we do not know. No signature is attached, and no clue given as to who the originators of the grievances, which are so graphically depicted in the document, are. The authors, whoever they are, have become disaffected with the way affairs are being conducted both in the Mother Country and Canada, and make a heartrending appeal to Canadians who love their country to unite and form an independent republic, such as the United States. From their utterances we should judge that the "Canadian Republican Association" was a gang of Yankee Irishmen out of a job. Canadians are as a rule conservative, and suspicious of innovations, so we think our excited friends will have to wait awhile. In the meantime they might amuse themselves by starting a little "Fenian raid" or something of that sort.

The Meteorological Report for February says that in the Maritime Provinces generally the depth of snow this winter is less than last, especially in Prince Edward Island, where there is 16 in.

Canadian Statesmen.

HOW THEY ACT WHILE ATTENDING TO THEIR DUTIES IN PARLIAMENT.

It is a mistake to think that the act which led to the confederation of the various provinces in 1867 has attained no higher meaning in the life of the Canadian people than that of a constitutional union. It carries with it a meaning of far deeper import—a union of hearts whose offspring is crowned by patriotic aim and purpose. Of course it would be idle to say that the Canadian people are a unit on questions of vital interest to the life and growth of the Dominion. The geographical interests of Canada are so varied that there must necessarily be at times some friction and clashing of provincial needs and ambitions. This is the case at Washington; this is the case, too, in so small a confederation as the cantons of Switzerland.

A stranger visiting the gallery of the Canadian House of Commons is struck with the dignity and decorum which mark the proceedings, and around even the warmest and keenest debates. Parliamentary procedure being rigidly adhered to, there is little room for unseemly encounters, which usually grow out of uncooled for personalities in the heat of a discussion. Sometimes, however, when the house has been sitting for hours, wearying with the prolixity and incoherency of some member from "way back" suddenly, as if through unity of desperation, the usual dignity of the house is relaxed, and grave members from Montreal and Toronto play the schoolboy and outvie one another in shouting blue books at the heads of lumbering and inoffensive members. Of the 215 members that make up the House of Commons, 10 per cent. are below mediocrity; 20 per cent. of them occupy the plane of mediocrity; 40 per cent. possess admitted ability, and the remaining 20 per cent. are men of commanding talents.—Donohoe Magazine.

Recently the people of Madrid and other sections of Spain were greatly alarmed by the sudden appearance in broad day of a very brilliant meteor. It is estimated as having been 20 miles above the earth's surface. There was a tremendous explosion, with a concussion, which did much damage to the houses. The meteor was perhaps half a mile in diameter, rushing at the rate of 20 miles a second. The moment it reached the atmosphere its face became white hot and the heat caused the explosion which terrified the people. None of the fragments have been discovered. Had the meteor struck Madrid it is a shroud of the city would be left.

Since H. H. Holmes, the arch-murderer of Benjamin F. Pitel and 21 others, has become convinced that he is to be hanged, he has changed completely. He is no longer the cool, self-possessed man that he was before and at his trial. He is now consumed with fear at his approaching death. Before and during his trial Holmes absolutely refused to see a clergyman, but now he is exceedingly anxious for spiritual consolation. His air of bravado is all gone. The governor thought Holmes should have at least 60 days in which to prepare for death, and selected the time accordingly.

During the floods in Maine, a Bangor gentleman wanted to send a despatch from that city to Portland, a year on the bridge at Benton direct communication with Portland was impossible, but the Western Union got the message through all the same. It was telegraphed from Bangor to North Sydney, C. B., then to Heat's Content, N. F., thence to Valencia, Ireland, thence to Land's End, Eng., thence to Dover, thence to Brest, France, thence to St. Pierre, Miquelon, thence to Duxbury, Mass., thence to Boston, and thence to Portland.

London Canadian Gazette: Nova Scotia has enjoyed what the president of its Fruit Growers' association calls "another successful year in this important and profitable industry." From sales of fruit and berries together the growers of the province will pocket over a million dollars. Despite a 20 per cent duty, she marketed 50,000 barrels of apples in the United States at prices ranging from 25 to 50 per cent above those obtained for United States fruit.

The New Brunswick Government has introduced a bill to increase the per capita school tax from thirty to fifty cents which will swell the aggregate of county school funds, throughout the Province by about $64,000. It is intended, it is said, to take over all liquor licenses from the municipalities, and that it contemplates asking the Legislature to borrow $400,000 for the public service.

As the Co-operative Farmers lost all its subscription, mailing and account books in the late disastrous Sauxez fire, the proprietors hope that subscribers secretary of Agricultural Society and canvassers will kindly forward duplicate orders for the same, giving name and address in full. As the printing department was not damaged the next issue of the paper will be out on time, so it is hoped that subscribers will lend their assistance in making up the mailing books. Mention of the date of securing the first issue of the paper would be an additional favor.

J. P. BIGELOW.

Wolfville, Jan. 1st, 1896.

From Ocean to Ocean.

The ocean to ocean pedestrian, Berard Greathed, has been for these two days the guest of the American House, laying over to take in the surrounding country. He is due in Halifax next Saturday to pour into the Atlantic Ocean a bottle of water which he has brought from the Pacific Ocean. The ceremony of the occasion may be called a "welding ring" event, as no doubt it is the first time that water across the continent. He is tall, ruddy-looking, aged in the early thirties and weighs 215 pounds. He has the erect bearing and step of an officer.

There has occurred a very peculiar affection of some of the toes attended with discoloration through the same step, tie to tie, the whole distance of the C. P. R. route.

The gentleman is genial and highly entertaining to all who will pay their respects to him. He expects yet to visit the most of Nova Scotia in order to have knowledge of her agricultural resources, as he not only intends to write of his accomplished journey; but to lecture in Great Britain and to interest the farmer emigrant to locate in this Province, rather than to travel farther west into the continent. He will probably visit Wolfville and the garden valley in a short time. To-day he proposes a visit to the Jersey dairy farm of B. W. Chipman, Secretary for Agriculture, by invitation, at Millers, Hants Co. It is a reminder of his birthplace, which was at Milford, Hants Co., England, yet his boyhood days were spent in Rouen, Normandy, France.

SPECIAL COTTON DYES.

Beautiful and Brilliant Colors in Diamond Dyes that will not Fade—Mixed Specially for Cotton and Mixed Goods—Simple and Easy to Use—Absolutely Fast—Best in the World.

Cotton is a vegetable product, while wool comes from an animal, and hence the two are so different that it requires a different kind of dye for each.

The special fast cotton colors of Diamond Dyes, such as Turkey Red, Brown, Pink, Purple, Yellow, Orange, and a half dozen others, are prepared specially for cotton goods, and give colors that even washing in strong soap and exposure to the sunlight will not fade.

Do not risk your goods with the common and worthless dyes that some storekeepers sell. These crude dyes ruin your goods and cause a vast amount of annoyance. Ask for the "Diamond," use them according to directions, and you will dye successfully.

It is reported that J. A. Mumford, Esq., who is now in the U. S., has purchased the Hantsport Foundry and Machine Shop, and will soon be home to commence operations in the line of manufacturing.

Before the Nova Scotia Mining Society, in session at Halifax, Mr. R. G. Lewis read a paper on the Grand Lake coal deposits. Mr. Lewis, Jr., was elected president of the society.

Lots in Wolfville

FOR SALE.

The subscriber now offers to sell two lots of land, each 140 feet x 50 feet situated in the Town of Wolfville, Nova Scotia, for the sum of one hundred dollars (for the two lots).

The said lots were conveyed to the present owner by Deed dated the 30th

June, 1894, from "The Wolfville Fruit

Land Improvement Company, Limited," for the sum of two hundred and eighty dollars (in cash), having been sold by the said Company, by the aid of their plan supported by the testimonials of prominent and influential men of Wolfville, as choice building lots.

Each purchaser are respectfully referred to Dr. G. E. DeWitt, of Wolfville, the President of the said Company, for a description of the excellence and beauty (of the said building lots) which may not be apparent on inspection to a person not thoroughly acclimated in the "Land of Evangeline." The said two lots are described in the Deed as Lot

No. 17 in Block C and Lot No. 3 in Block H, on the plan of the said Company's lands on file in the Office of the Registrar of Deeds at Kentville.
