THE MORALE OF THE MUSIC MARKET.

Political economy does not apply to the fine arts. These are trades; but it is an exceptional commerce, and its rules and laws are caviare to that most useful multitude, the public. Take the music market for instance; and it will be seen how little we have made up our minds as to the proper mode of dealing in it.

Here, in Liverpool, this week, we hear every one complaining of the prices demanded for the tickets to the Jenny Lind concert. Every one complains, but a sufficient number go to make the appreciation of the managers pay; and that fact is the logical answer to the complaint. In all markets the merchant asks as much as he is likely to get; and John Jones has no right to be offended because a Storrs and Mortimer, a Hauberg or a Mayer, puts a fancy price upon an unobtainable brooch, or an inaccessible bracelet. But, it is said, the dealer does not get the price—the article, and not the seller, pockets all the money. After all, this is as it should be; the manager is only the middle man—the real dealer is the singer. Middle, Lind, and not Mr. Sudlow, imparts the gratification, (at least to a great number of people) and the principal, not the agent, is entitled to whatever money is going.

It would be well, however, to remember that artists are dealers, traders in natural advantage; and that if there is anything wrong in the music market, it originates with them. There are bulls and bears even in the coulisses.

Mlle. Jenny Lind gets £500 for an hour's exertion. That was her price; the manager of the concert had to charge her tickets accordingly; and the hall filled—perhaps because the tickets are so high and the whole affair will be very fashionable. It is not an exclusively English weakness to pay these prices; proper nations are equally affluent, when it is part of the business of fashion to be extravagant; and if great artists prefer England to other countries, it is not because we can afford to pay these prices for a longer season. It may be that—looking to the average of human rewards—seeing that presidents of republics and premiers of monarchies think after hard work, £5,000 per annum a fabulously high reward; that Lord Chancellor, to-day and night for about £200 a week; and that some two million of our people are in workhouses—it may be—provisionally summing up these observations, that Mlle. Jenny Lind is too well paid. Grist, the last season, has netted more than Lord Colton; and Songstad has cleared a larger sum than Lord John Russell; Mario goes to the continent richer than Lord Brougham—who, in appeal cases, represents, day after day, the whole House of Lords, in the Court of Appeal. Jenny Lind, had she not come from some whim, preferred singing in Sweden and Germany, would, in London, have cleared more than either Grist or Songstad.

And it is here there seem some evil:—that one prima donna gets the other instance—four or thereabouts; and because Jenny Lind gets £500 from the Philharmonic Society for a single concert, it may be that she undertakes to sing shortly for the same society, now refuses to accept the same unless on the same terms as her rival—a suggestion to which the society is not in funds to accede. If Madame Songstad cannot get such a price—that is to say, if she does not "draw" sufficiently to remunerate the manager, she is decidedly wrong to ask it; for though she may deem herself quite as excellent a singer as Mlle. Lind—and, in fact, may be a much better singer, in the varied range of operatic music—yet, if she be less attractive, less aided by a fashion of the moment, she must be paid less. But this is an evil which soon corrects itself. Songstad and Grist, in London, are paid nearly as high as Jenny Lind, because, through a whole season, and when the future of the first season is over, they draw nearly as well; and the constant is made by a manager now and then, but it is never made twice; and artists, great and small, are paid just for what they bring into the treasury—this something or nothing, the percentage upon the capital employed and commission proportionate to the risk. Neither artist nor manager is to be blamed for high prices: if there be any fault, it lies at the door of the public.

Before deciding there be any fault, even here, we must determine whether or not the public eagerness to see and hear such an article arrives in a genuine love of music and real admiration of a great voice. Speaking of the mass of the public, such a supposition is obviously absurd. Men "do not care about music," "can't afford it"—but they pay the money and go; and if they do not get the worth of their cash in unalloyed enjoyment, they at least console themselves with the reflection that they are not next morning in a worse position than their neighbors in respect to small gossip and useless news. A provincial concert-room, like a London opera-house, is filled because it is a place where there is a certain class of life can see and be seen, talk and be talked to, bow and be bowed to, and, likewise, keep themselves abreast of the world. There must be first rate singers to serve as an excuse for being there, but the good singing or fine music, is, in truth, but secondary reason for the attendance. In the case of Mlle. Lind, there is not only the appreciation of a very excellent vocalist, but there is immense personal interest to stimulate public curiosity; and, whether it is the result of a clever system, or mere native natural artlessness, it so happens that everything Mlle. Lind does tends to enhance that attractiveness which is irrespective of her vocal merits. She came to England just at the right time, she left England just at the right time; she goes to America at the right time, and she appears at two concerts in Liverpool just at the right time. Very many flock to her concert because they believe her to be the best of living vocalists; but the majority go—because the majority go. If Mlle. Lind gauging her attractiveness with this pay less for our pleasure. For this is certain—that if we got the artist to be reasonable—Grist to be disinterested—Songstad to forget that she has to acquit her fortune for her husband, or Jenny Lind to be oblivious of the fact, that the more money she makes the more she can give away in charity,—for, according to the orthodox version, this is all Middle Lind does with her money—if all this were done, we should still have to change the nature of the Bunnes and Barums—not a very probable project. Thus it is evident, if we are to make any alteration, it must be in respect to ourselves.

To this complexion must all the meditation upon the music market come at last; and when we have got thus far, we perceive this very plainly—what the world has consented to for such a very long time, cannot do much harm—that if there were any great evil itself—and that, in short, the grovellers are great bores and there's nothing whatever to complain about.—Liverpool Journal.

JENNY LIND—TICKET AUCTION.—Notwithstanding the copious fall of rain on Saturday morning last, hundreds of people were seen mending their way towards Castle Garden, to attend the auction for the sale of choice seats and tickets for the first concert of Mlle. Jenny Lind, to be given Wednesday evening next.

The severe rain storm no doubt damped the ardor of many, but notwithstanding we estimated that there were between 4000 and 5,000 people present at the opening of the auction. The greatest excitement prevailed. Mr. Leeds, the auctioneer at the appointed time mounted the platform which extended about 10 feet in front of the stage. Loud calls were made for diagrams. Mr. Barnum, then mounted the platform; his appearance was greeted with the most enthusiastic applause. He said that he requested that any charge for admittance had been asked, and that no one was more surprised at the circumstance than himself when he heard of it. He further said that he had no right to the house until Monday, although he had it by courtesy.

After his apology to the audience, Mr. Barnum announced that no seat whatever in any part of the house had been reserved, with the exception of a few seats for the Press.

Mr. Leeds made a statement of the rules and regulations of the day, which had been adopted, immediately after which the exciting struggle for the first choice commenced.

"How much for the first ticket, with the privilege of ten seats at the same price?" "Twenty dollars," was the first bid, and from this starting point the excitement became very great. "Twenty-five," "Thirty," "Thirty-five," "Forty," and so on until it reached "Two hundred and twenty-five," when Mr. Genin, Hatter, was declared the successful bidder.

The competition for this ticket was very spirited, as there were many desires of getting it. The announcement of Mr. Genin's success was received with enthusiastic applause.

The second choice brought $25, and was taken by Mr. Tomlinson. The sale then proceeded, when the tickets were sold in the following order:—Mr. Howard, "Twin," 4 seats, including tickets, each, $25; C. G. Edge, 2; Irving House, 4; 15; Mr. Lawrence, 2; 13; Irving House 5; 12; Mr. Benjamin 2; 12; W. Hall & Son 3; 12; Mr. Wilson 2; 10; Hall & Son 2; 12; Irving House 10; 10; Irving House 10; 10; Mr. Shaw 3; 13; Mr. Starr 2; 11; Hall & Son 2; 10; Johnson 2; 11; Hodges 2; 11; Hall & Son 2; 10; Irving 2; 10; Raymond 3; 11; Hall & Son 8; 10; Irving 10; 10; Taylor 2; 10; Chapman 2; 10; Leeds 1; 10; Private box 4, each $35.

About 2,500 tickets were sold, from the sale of which from 25 to $25,000 was realized. The utmost satisfaction is manifested at the fairness of Mr. Barnum in placing the seats at auction, and not allowing speculators to purchase over ten seats at a time. The tickets which were sold on Saturday will be delivered at Castle Garden this morning after 3 o'clock; and the shilling remaining to the purchasers of tickets.

Mr. Le Grand Smith, late proprietor of the Mansion House, Albany, has been appointed treasurer by Mr. Barnum.

A DUCK STAKE.—I and brother Honoe, and two other togs, was out on a hunting next week, and we drove nine woodchucks into a stone heap, and kilt ten out obde nine before they got in."

MOFFAT'S VEGETABLE LIFE PILLS AND PHENIX BITTERS.

The high and varied celebrity which these pre-eminent Medicines have acquired for their invincible efficacy in all the diseases which they profess to cure, has rendered the usual practice of purging not only unnecessary, but unworthy of the name which they bear; their good effects testify for them, and they derive not by the faith of the credulous.
