We also stated in the most positive man ner that in point of efficiency and attendance our schools stand as high as those of any other municipality in the country. The Advertiser in its second article has not the hardihood to dispute this, or to reaffirm the charges it preferred on Friday, which sought to cast a slur on their standing, and by implication on the efficiency of the at his store, West Market Square. teachers. shrive him and prepare his soul for its passage.

He was pale; and a subdued sorrow in the expression of his eyes, as now and again they turned from the face of the friar to the loophole by which the sunlight gleamed in upon the dark chamber and lingered upon it, indicated that his resignation was not obtained without a struggle and a severe one. The regret with which he quitted life was painfully expressed in one little action.

It was close upon the hour when he was to be led forth; a ray of sunlight streamed into the cell forming a slanted column of light that fancy might have pictured as a path upward. At sight of this Gilbert suddenly rose from his chair, and tenderly, yearningly stretched out his hands until the ray of light touched them and brightened them.

Then one big sob and he sunk back upon

Then one big sob and he sunk back upon his chai.

The friar had raised his bead from the illuminated missal he had been reading from and watched this movement. The good man's eyes glistened with pity.

'You still cling to life, my son,' he said, shaking his head sadly.

'Ah, father, forgive me, but it's hard, hard, hard, when the heart is so young, to quit the world, to close the eyes for ever to the warm sunlight, and lie down in the cold earth. And to die in this way!'
He shuddered and covered his face with his hands.
The friar compassionately remained silent for several minutes; he felt that only the bitterest anguish had wrung the words from the man.

Then he rose and laid his hand kindly upon the shoulder of the condemmed.

"It is cally the body, my son, that lies in the cold earth,' he said in a low voice, 'the sold rises to the source of sunlight.'

'Thank you, thank you, father; I am so weak, you see, although I had accepted your good counsel in faith and thought myself-resigned. But there, I am better now. You shall see that my step is firm and my face calm as if I walked to a post of honour.

Gilbert clasped his hands tightly together and turned his face to the dark side of the cell so that his thoughts might not be distracd by the light, with its whilsperings of the world, its ambition and strife.

Very soon he had regained his self-possession, and when the drum beat in the square without he rose perfectly calm.

The voice of the holy father, monotonously repeating the usual exhortations of the occation, sounded drowally in his ears, like the hum of bees; and listening to it and trying to occupy himself with obedience to the words, he still heard every other sound with acute distinctness.

There was the steady tramp of feet in the passage ouside; the halt, the grating of the bolts, and the slow opening of the massive door when the guard appeared waiting for him.

The officer in command summoned him

He observed a duetly, and took his place without a word. There were four soldiers behind and four in front. The friar walked by his side; and, with head erect and firm tread, he marched out to the daylight once by his side; and, with head exect and firm tread, he marched out to the daylight once again.

They passed across the square, and were joined by the arquebusiers. Then slowly, with the muffled drum beating before them, they marched to the Esplanade.

There the whole force of the Castle was drawn up, forming three sides of a square. Behind the soldiers, and perched at every available stand-point, crowded the citizens, from whom arose a murmur of commiseration as the condemned appeared, for his may be some and the stand-point, crowded the citizens, from whom arose a murmur of commiseration as the condemned appeared, for his may be suffered their sympathy at once. The rumour of unfair treatment suddenly obtained a strong semblance of truth; and the crowd immediately accepted the semblance for the fact. The murmur of sympathy passed down the Castle hill, and at the foot took shape and passed back from hip to hip in words of discontent. A name, too, was whispered amongst the crowd; at the sound of which some looked scared, others doubtful, and my if humoured. The name was that of Angus, and it was associated with the deed about to be performed as he main cause of it all—whether the deed was just or wrong. None seemed to know by whom amongst them the name had been first pronounced and associated with the event of the day.

But one may form a fair guess as to the origin of the whisper when it is known that the faction of Arran was represented in the crowd; and it was of some import that the growing distrust of the ambitious Douglas should be fostered.

The murmurs of the people served only to quicken the Governor of the Castle to the corclusion of the work in hand.

Dr. Johnson, when in Aberdeen, saw for the first time the operation of rough-casting the walls of a house, and put various queries about it to the workman. At last he apologized by observing, "But I fear I'm in your way." Whereupon the old wag, handling the brush so as to be spatter the Doctor liberally with lime, replied areful. "Na fant a bit of verse replied areful." Na fant a bit of verse in my way, if ye're no in ye're ain."

The Cattle Plague.

A New York telegram informs us that the pestilence which has been making such terrible havoe of the cattle in the States has, as far as that neighbou is concerned, almost disappeared. There is no doubt very prompt measures were adopted by the authorities of the city to prevent the spread of the disease, all the cattle that arrived were rigidly inspected and the infected animals at once separated from the healthy ones. Although arated from the healthy ones. Although the plague has broken out in several places it appears to have committed the most fearful ravages among the herds of Illinois, and so long as it rages there much yet remains to be done, although its violence may have been subdued in New York. A day or two ago we were told that the dreadful pestilence had made its appearance at no greater distance from us than Paris. The report we learn was on the authority of the Hon. D. Christie, and it was stated that several animals had died. But the cause of death could scarcely have been the plague or we would have heard more about it since then. If the order prohibiting the importation of cattle from the States be rigidly enforced there is little danger of the plague showing itself hereif it be not here already. At least so a person would judge if reliance is to be placed on the report of a Commission appointed by the U. S. Department of Agriculture to investigate the nature and causes of the disorder. The report is as follows:—1st. That the disease is communicated from cattle from Texas, Florida, and other portions of the Gulf Coast. 2nd. That such disease is itself unknown in Texas or the Gulf Coast. 3rd. That the cattle communicating it are not only apparently healthy, but are generally improving in condition. 4th. That while local herds receiving the infection nearly all die, they never communicate the disease to others. 5th. That either a considerable increase in elevation, or a distance of two or three degrees of latitude from the starting-point, is necessary to develope the virus into activity and virulency, and a further progress of two degrees of latitude and a few weeks in time, is sufficient to eliminate the poison from the system. 6th. That the Texas cattle, removed to other missmatic sections, as the Mississippi botoms up to the 36th parallel, communicate on infection into the local herds. 7th. Medicine has thus far been of no avail. It concludes that this disease cannot become general; that it can exist only with the mo avail. It continues that this theese con-not become general; that it can exist only with the movements of Texas cattle, which should be regulated or suppres-sed; and that it does not result from travel, but from climate causes..

A New Planer.—On the 16th inst. Professor Watson, of the Detroit Observatory, reported that he had discovered a new minor planet. He says it shines like a star of the tenth magnitude, and on the morning of its discovery, Sunday, it was situated as follows, Right ascension 358 degrees and 25 seconds; declension 48 minutes south. Its apparent motion is now West, by North 34 seconds of time in the right ascension, and 4 minutes of arc in declination.
